I wish to refer the opposition critics to an article published last fall in the economic business supplement of le Devoir économique. In the article there are predictions by experts, and I will quote the headline:

[Translation]

"The new Patent Act could mean 10,000 jobs for Montreal."

[English]

According to the author, François Côté, that predicts 10,000 employees in Montreal alone, based on spin-outs and development of related companies. For example, what is not included in the 3,000 jobs we are discussing are the several hundred jobs in manufacturing.

Incidentally, the Senate's amendments have made it impossible for a company called Delmar, in the City of LaSalle, which is apparently where Paul Martin Jr. will start his rise to greatness. I wonder if Paul Martin Jr. is aware that the Senate has put the kibosh on several tens of millions of dollars that were earmarked for the City of LaSalle for the manufacturing of fine chemicals. I wonder if he is aware of what his friends in Ottawa in the other place are doing to the city that at some future date he hopes to represent.

The fact of the matter is that the jobs are real, and they will occur. The Senate, and members of the Opposition, have stated that under the recommendation by the Senators, which they say is based on Eastman, the research fund has an incremental 10 per cent royalty on the generic companies. This is a type of tax because it does not go directly back to the owner, so it is not a royalty by definition. Under that 10 per cent it will create a royalty research fund which will be rebated to companies that do research. They say that fund will guarantee research jobs. That is why they support it.

First, that does nothing for the new Canadian companies. That money goes back to the multinationals, the people they purport to dislike. More significantly, what will that cost? We estimate, and the study is here and I will send it over, that that fund will generate about $200 million over the 10-year period.

The opposition parties state that they are following Eastman. I wish to refer them to Dr. Eastman's report, page 365, which deals with this recommendation for the research fund. Dr. Eastman says that in 1983 had that fund been in place there would have been an additional $4.6 million into the research fund. In other words, had that 10 per cent royalty been in place, which the Senate is recommending and the Liberals and the NDP are supporting, that would have generated $4.6 million in research.

In the same paragraph Dr. Eastman states that because that would raise the price of generics by 10 per cent this would induce a price increase in the competing brand name company by an equivalent amount that would result in increased costs to the consumer of between $26.6 million and $30.6 million.

In other words, to generate $4.6 million in research through this fund the consumer has to pay $28.6 million more, about six times as much. Under the scheme the Liberals want, for every $1 million which goes into research the consumer would have to pay $6 million. To generate the $200 million for jobs which the Liberals say will be guaranteed, the consumers will have to put up a mere $1.2 million. What kind of proposal is that? They say they are doing this to help the consumers when what they are proposing will cost consumers $1.2 billion to generate $200 million of research funds.

They say they are doing this on Eastman's recommendation. They have not read Eastman's report. It is on page 365 and is very simple and can be understood. They need not even read the whole page, it is in the first paragraph.

Anyone who claims that they are following what the Senate suggests or recommends in order to protect consumers does not know what they are talking about. Rather than protecting consumers they are hurting them.

The proposal of the Senate will not provide any money for medical faculties. Under Bill C-22, $400 million will go to our teaching hospitals, research institutes, universities and faculties of medicine over the next 10 years. There is nothing in the Senate proposal which the Liberal Party and the New Democrats apparently support which will do that. I repeat that it will do nothing for new companies starting up.

Biomira is a small company in Edmonton run by Dr. Gordon Politeski. They have 30 employees and are developing cancer diagnosis and therapy using synthetic carbohydrate cancer antigens. They are trying to raise some money. They are fairly successful. They have 30 Ph.D. or Masters students and hope to grow to 100. They say that without patent protection their growth will be restricted. If they do develop cancer therapies they are faced with the prospect of having them copied by somebody else.

In Dr. Politeski's notes he says that he is aware of one bright scientist at the University of Alberta who was forced to license a product very early on to a Japanese company because of lack of research dollars. He received $80,000 and the Japanese company recently licensed his product to a U.S. firm for $15 million plus royalties. What a tragedy. What a shocking waste of Canada's intellectual capital. The NDP and Liberals want to carry that on.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Andre: Why do they not go to the University of Alberta and talk to the scientist involved here, or to Dr. Politeski or anyone involved in this area and see if they can, in all conscience, carry on with this immoral campaign of theirs? There would not be the improved health benefits to Canadians under the Senate amendments which our proposal would produce.

I will relate another anecdote. We have heard arguments about whether this will be real research and whether there will be real benefit to health care. Let me tell you the cardizem story. Cardizem was a drug developed by a Japanese company, a so-called beta blocker to treat hypertension, angina and so on. Through clinical research in Montreal at a company called Nordic it was discovered that cardizem was a calcium blocker. To put that in understandable terms, every year in Canada about 20,000 people will have a heart attack of the so-called inner heart. Of those 10,000, will have a second heart attack within 30 days, and of those, 5,000 will die. Cardizem prevents the second heart attack.

There are literally thousands of people alive today because of this discovery in Montreal. Everybody involved in this says, "You ain't seen nothing yet, you ain't seen what we can do if you pass Bill C-22 and give us the resources to carry on the research we are doing in health care". In the heart area in particular, Montreal is one of the world centres. They have superb capability there. Under this Bill they will get tens of millions of dollars enabling them to hire more of the graduates of our university system and pursue this work and save untold numbers of Canadian lives. Faced with that track record how can anybody in this House vote in conscience without first going to Montreal, talking to those people, and seeing what will be put at risk by pursuing the policy of trying to kill this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: With regard to manufacturing in Canada, the Bill provides that if you manufacture the fine chemical in Canada, as opposed to importing it from abroad, you can introduce a generic copy after seven years. One manufacturer alone predicts that his company could employ several hundred people within the next few years if we give him that window of opportunity. None of those jobs are in the 3,000 we have talked about; we have not put those in that category, but there are several hundred jobs in one generic manufacturing company alone that have been put in jeopardy by the amendments from the Senate which the opposition Party apparently wants to support. How can they say that job creation must be a first priority in the country when they will not support this amazing job creation program?

There is the question of cost to consumers. I will repeat again, as I have already done so many times, that 7 per cent of drugs attract a generic competitor. On a value basis it is 20 per cent. That leaves 80 per cent on value or 93 per cent on number of drugs that are monopoly. Right now there is no federal oversight in terms of the price of those drugs. Under our scheme the Drug Prices Review Board will be examining those drugs and keeping the price increases of them at less than the cost of living. If that Board had been in place between 1969 and 1983 there would have been a saving to consumers in Canada of between $80 million and $180 million.

The Opposition dismisses that Board. Dr. Eastman, whose analysis they claim to support, albeit not totally because they have not read his report, will head that Board. He thinks it will be effective. We have policy review by Government and Parliament to ensure that it is effective. We will have annual reports so that parliamentarians can oversee it. In spite of all of that the Opposition and the Senate say it will not work.

How about the savings to provincial Governments in medical research itself? One drug, cimetidine, which goes by the brand name of Tagamet, is an ulcer drug which is fairly expensive. However, it saves net on hospitalization costs each year $130 million because people with peptic ulcers do not have to be hospitalized as frequently as a result of the discovery of that drug. So what if the provinces, through their drug plans, have to spend an extra $50 million on that drug each year if they save $130 million on hospitalization costs? It is a net benefit.

I will now go to the question of this process and whether the Senate has a right to veto the decisions of this House. There is no question that the Constitution and the House of Commons Act say that the Senate has a legal right to kill Bills. It has that right indeed, but I remind Members of the House that the Governor General has the legal right to do the same thing. By refusing to give Royal Assent the Governor General can kill any Bill we pass. However, there is a democratic tradition that the Governor General, as an appointed person, without the mandate of being elected, has no such moral right and the Governor General does not exercise such a moral right and would not do so. If she chose to do so, though I cannot imagine for what reason, there would be a tremendous constitutional crisis in Canada and we might no longer have a Governor General.

The Senate threatening to veto this Bill is acting in the same unconstitutional way as in the hypothetical case I just mentioned. There is no way that one can morally justify a non-elected body vetoing legislation.

Members of the New Democratic Party say the Senate has no right to exist. If the New Democrats and the Liberals say that the Senate has the right to veto this Bill, then they have to concede that it has the right to veto every Bill. They are saying that, as a Government, we in essence must have Allan MacEachen, the Liberal opposition Leader in the Senate, sitting at the cabinet table.

The Government Allan MacEachen supported was defeated in September of 1984. The people of Canada said that he and the Liberal Government of Pierre Trudeau no longer had a right to sit at a cabinet table deciding what is happening. However, the NDP and the Liberals say that he does, he still has the right to veto this Government's program, he has the right to veto the decisions of this democratically elected House.

I wonder how the NDP would get by this principle. This is the Party of principle; "We mean what we say and we say what we mean," they say.

Mr. Nunziata: You have lost the moral right to govern. You are at 25 per cent in the polls.

Mr. Andre: Oh, boy, now we are hearing from a genius. This guy says that the only way a Government has any right to legislate its program is if Gallup or Angus Reid says it is ahead in the polls. Otherwise it loses the right to govern. That is a fine democratic principle. Under that principle—

Mr. Nunziata: They don't trust your Government, they don't trust the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Mr. Andre: Under that principle, your leader no longer has a right to lead your Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, we cannot have two federal Governments. We cannot have one still led by former Deputy Prime Minister Allan MacEachen overruling the Government in this House. That is a principle that I do not think even members of the NDP could support. In fact, that is what they will be doing if they vote in support of what the Senators have done.

I would like to recommend that this House send the following motion back to the other place. I move:

> That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:
> Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.
> Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.
> Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.
> Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.
> Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.
> Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.
> Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.
> And, that:
> Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:
> (2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."
> Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:
> 31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying
> (a) the quotient obtained by dividing
> (i) $25 million by
> (ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by
> (b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.
> (2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.
> (3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Let me give a brief explanation of Amendment 10(a), the amendment we accepted. We had proposed that the Act shall come into force on a day set by proclamation. The Senate amended that to say that the subsections of the Act shall come into force on a day or days as set by proclamation. It provided the Crown with added flexibility. We do not really need it, but if the Senate feels that we should have that added flexibility, we accept that amendment.

We restored the provision for the $100 million to the provinces. I had become increasingly convinced based on evidence before committee, such as that about the Saskatchewan Pharmacare Program, that the provinces would not face increased costs due to this Bill but in fact would save money. However, a commitment of $100 million had been made. We will honour that commitment, but I would hope everyone in the House would agree that that money ought to go to medical research. We are paying the money to the provinces for medical research. It will be theirs to administers to the research communities in the way they see fit and we hope that that is in keeping with Parliament's commitment to research and development.

The other Senate amendment which we amended further had to do with the 10-year period of exclusivity. It was a case of two sets of lawyers disagreeing. The lawyer the Senate had hired felt that our definition was not precise. The lawyers in the Justice Department advised us that it was. We have come up with new wording which will hopefully satisfy the Justice lawyers as well as Mr. French, the lawyer the Senators hired for $800 a day.

That is the gist of the motion. I recommend it to the House. I have copies of the amendment. I will put them on the Table and make them available for anyone who would like to see them.

I humbly ask all Hon. Members to consider what is at stake, which is, Canada's reputation, jobs, research and development and Canada's health care system. I hope all Hon. Members consider as well the nature of the threat made by some Senators, though I hope the threat was not real, to our democracy. If the Senate can veto what the House of Commons does—

Mr. Nunziata: Why did you accept their amendments then?

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member asks why I accepted their amendments. I just spent an hour explaining that it would be too costly to consumers and too damaging to research and he was not here. He ought to read the speech I made and do a little bit of homework before he shouts across the House.

In the long run, I am sure common sense will prevail and Canadian scientists can breathe a sigh of relief and get on with finding new cures to the ills that affect mankind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF HITLER-STALIN PACT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, this Sunday, August 23, is Black Ribbon Day, the anniversary of the signing of the Hitler-Stalin Friendship and Non-Agression Pact in 1939. That treaty divided Poland between Nazi Germany and the Soviet Union, authorized the U.S.S.R. to take over Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania, and signalled the beginning of World War II just 10 days later.

On Sunday, the International Black Ribbon Day Committee in Toronto, together with similar committees across Canada, Britain, Australia, Sweden, France and the United States will hold rallies to remember the partition of Europe, honour the millions of people who lost their freedom behind the Iron Curtain, and give thanks for our own freedom.

All those who cherish peace with freedom should join with the International Black Ribbon Day Committee this Sunday as they call on the Soviet Union to live up to its repeated statements in support of peace and détente by renouncing the Nazi-Soviet Friendship Pact, something it has never done, and by honouring its Yalta commitment to allow free democratic elections in eastern Europe.

BILL C-22—ACCEPTANCE OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) concluded his remarks concerning certain Senate amendments to Bill C-22. Over the course of about 30 or 40 minutes he accused the Senate of being undemocratic and made a number of other disparaging comments. Having said all that, he then proceeded to accept a number of those amendments. One could conclude that the Minister was being somewhat hypocritical. First he says the Senate is undemocratic and useless and should not be amending House of Commons legislation. Then in the same breath he accepts certain of those amendments. That would lead one to conclude that the legislation was faulty and in need of amendment.

Not only that, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) also accepted Senate amendments to certain pieces of his legislation. Canadians can see through both the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. This legislation is not in the best interests of Canadian consumers.

SPORTS

BASEBALL—LITTLE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIPS IN TRAIL, B.C.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, this year the Canadian Little League Championships are being held in the beautiful city of Trail, British Columbia, the home of champions. The championships are being played out at the Andy Bilesky Park, named after the manager of the Trail Little League team, Mr. Andy Bilesky. He has coached more winning teams than anyone else in Little League history.

In this series there are six teams: Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, representing the Maritimes; Pinecrest-Ottawa, representing the Province of Ontario; Sherbrooke-Fleremont, representing the Province of Quebec; Edmonton, Alberta, representing the prairie provinces; Stewart Channel, representing the great Province of British Columbia; and of course the host team of Trail, British Columbia. As of last night there is a three-way tie between Stewart Channel, B.C., Glace Bay, Nova Scotia, and the host team, Trail, B.C.

They have set new records in attendance, seeing crowds in excess of 3,500 at the park. All three teams have a 4-1 standing going into the semi-finals today. Tomorrow the championship game should be seen by an estimated 5,000 people. Regardless of who wins the championship, I have every confidence that they will be excellent ambassadors for Canada at the World Championships in Williamsport, Pennsylvania.

INDUSTRY

FOOTWEAR INDUSTRY—DECLINE IN SHARE OF MARKET

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, when the Government dropped most quotas on imported footwear some 21 months ago, it predicted the shoe industry in Canada would thrive despite the change. Instead, as we predicted, and as The Financial Post reported this week, the change in policy "has dealt a crushing blow to much of the Canadian shoe industry".

The market share of Canadian producers has fallen from 41 per cent in December, 1985, to 35 per cent in December, 1986. The Shoe Manufacturers Association says the decline is continuing. Jobs in the industry have fallen by 11 per cent. For many small communities across Ontario and Quebec, the cost has been tragic. This shows what the Government's free trade, market-oriented ideas will create elsewhere in the economy.

The Government's strategy for the shoe industry has been to give up and retreat, instead of carrying through the restructuring process which we would have supported and which would have meant a modern effective future for this industry.

DISASTERS

EDMONTON TORNADO—RELIEF FUNDRAISING—TRIBUTE TO VOLUNTEERS' WORK

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the recent tornado that struck the Pembina constituency causing the loss of 27 lives and hundreds of millions of dollars in property damage has rallied the people of Canada to our aid with messages of sympathy to the bereaved and homeless. The disaster prompted spontaneous donations of food, clothing and funds from across Canada.

A major contribution to the relief fund was made through the sale of a commemorative edition of The Edmonton Sun. Some $300,000 will be raised through the combined efforts of the Sun newspapers in Calgary, Toronto and Edmonton, as well as Jasper Printing, RN Graphics and Intercity Papers by the sale of this special edition, and other activities.

The support received from all levels of government was gratifying. I wish to recognize in a special way the thousands of volunteers. Canadians have demonstrated once again their kindness and generosity. On behalf of the people of Pembina, I wish to convey our sincere gratitude to our fellow Canadians.

CARTOGRAPHY

ESTABLISHMENT OF INSTITUTE IN SHERBROOKE—IMPACT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, this week the Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) and the Minister of State for Forestry and Mines (Mr. Merrithew) made an announcement in Sherbrooke about some kind of institute for cartography. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there was a federal commitment, repeated by the Prime Minister in 1984 during the election campaign, that as a result of decentralization, an institute for cartography representing an investment of $100 million and 400 jobs would be established in Sherbrooke.

Mr. Speaker, this week, the Government tried to make us believe it was decentralizing. The fact is, however, that it is not decentralizing anything, and the new institute will be about as big as a Canada Employment Centre.

Mr. Speaker, the announcement made this week reminds me of someone who promises his wife a mink coat for Christmas and gives her a fake fun fur coat. The people of this area feel they have been cheated out of $88 million, and I urge Government Members—I see the Hon. Member from Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand)—to claim the difference. I think the area is short $88 million and the Laprade Fund is a good example of a case where the goods were not delivered and compensation was offered in the form of a fund, and I urge the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi and other Members from the area to ensure that the area gets its fund as well.

MINES AND MINING

OPENING OF WORLD'S LARGEST OPEN PIT GOLD MINE AT HEDLEY, B.C.

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, the OECD reports that economic growth in Canada in 1986 was the strongest among the major industrialized countries. Today I report more good news for Canadians.

On Monday I attended the official opening of the world's largest open pit gold mine at Hedley in the riding I represent. The $61 million investment in the Mascot Gold Mine creates hundreds of jobs for Canadians and demonstrates the new private sector confidence generated by the policies and actions of the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) Government. It is encouraging to note that this project went into production without one cent of assistance from either the federal or provincial Governments.

Socialist policies promoted by the NDP and their Liberal cousins are designed to discourage private sector activity, leaving everything up to big government. The Prime Minister's Government and the Government of British Columbia recognize that real job development can only be undertaken by private initiative. Mascot Gold Mines and the OECD report demonstrate that truth.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

UNEMPLOYED OLDER WORKERS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, there is one group of victims of Canada's recession of the 1980s who have not recovered and whom the Government is ignoring. I am speaking of the growing group of older workers who have been without work for more than a year. Last year these people made up 7.7 per cent of the unemployed. This year they make up 9.3 per cent.

• (1110)

Many of these people have seen their lives devastated after years of work by being laid off and finding themselves unable to find another job. Studies indicate that the toll on the emotional health of individuals and on their family lives is very great.

In the past these people might have had some help from the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, but that program has come to an end. In the 1986 Budget, the Conservatives promised a program of adjustment for older workers. Like so many Conservative promises, this one turned out to be a hoax and now older unemployed workers are paying the price.

The Labour Adjustment Benefits Program is discontinued and the program of adjustment for older workers has not started.

It is not good enough for the Government to blame the provinces. The Conservatives ended the only program helping older workers. It is time for them to deliver on their promise to create a new one.

GOVERNMENT APPOINTMENTS

APPOINTMENT OF GERALDINE KENNEY-WALLACE TO HEAD SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced this morning the appointment of Dr. Geraldine Kenney-Wallace as chairperson of the Science Council of Canada.

Dr. Kenney-Wallace is Professor of Chemistry and Physics, and Chairman of the Research Board at the University of Toronto. She is an international authority on lasers and non-linear optics.

Educated at the Royal Institute in London, and the University of British Columbia, she is the author of over 80 research papers. She is currently a member of the Science Council and of the Premier of Ontario's Advisory Council on Technology.

She has held Sloan Foundation, Guggenheim, and Steacie research fellowships, and Noranda and Sigma XI lectureships.

In addition to her impressive academic credentials, she has a special talent for promoting public awareness of the importance of science and technology. She is an eloquent spokesperson on the role of science and technology in the lives of contemporary Canadians.

She is an important addition to the science and technology team that this Government is putting together. I, as Chairman of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, join with others in the House in welcoming her to her new responsibilities.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ATTENTION NEEDED FOR NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on behalf of the native people not only of my riding but across the country. They realize that at the present time the Native Economic Development Fund is frozen, that the northern development agreement has not been signed by the Government, that special ARDA is frozen.

There is a backlog of thousands of houses needed on Indian reserves across the country. There are no water and sewage facilities on many of those same reserves. It takes five years to get a new school on the planning list of Indian Affairs. Nursing positions are left unfilled in northern remote reserves year after year. They have been left out of the Constitution. They are Canada's forgotten people and it is time we paid more attention.

THE ECONOMY

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAYING ADOPTION OF BILL C-22

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Since 1969 or for almost twenty years, manufacturers of generic drugs have had a chance to become competitive on the drug market. During that time, they decided to compete with 7 per cent of the drugs currently available on the market.

What about competition and prices for most of the drugs on the market, in other words, the other 93 per cent?

Canadians have the right to ask the Government of Canada whether this is really being competitive and whether the Patent Act of 1969 provided a real solution.

Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Senators are opposed to the Bill adopted by the House of Commons, and especially to the appointment of a drug prices review board. Are the Senators afraid the legislation proposed by the House of Commons will offer better protection of intellectual property, allow investment and research financed by the private sector and provide for fair prices for consumers, or is this a vast petty politics operation?

INDUSTRY

FILM INDUSTRY—DISTRIBUTION POLICY—PROPOSED LICENSING SYSTEM

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, last February the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) announced with a great deal of fanfare a new Canadian film distribution policy. Unfortunately, that film distribution policy has still not seen the light of day.

Pressure from the Hollywood majors has prevented that very enlightened policy from being tabled in the House. Fear and pressure have been brought to bear and I would hope that the Minister's wish to see a flourishing Canadian distribution industry, which is presently dominated by affiliates from Hollywood, becomes a reality.

Canada is treated as an extension of the U.S. market. The legislation proposes a licensing system which would allow Canadian companies to have access to international films other than those that are produced by the Hollywood majors. It is an enlightened policy and I sincerely hope the Minister of Communications will have the courage to stand up to Jack Valenti, to the Hollywood pressure and, in the face of free trade, still present her new film distribution Bill to this House.

THE ECONOMY

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAYING ADOPTION OF BILL C-22

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, ever since our Government decided to proceed with Bill C-22, a number of distinguished voices have been raised across this country, including those from Quebec which I know best. I am referring to Dr. Yves Morin, the famous cardiologist, Dr. Michel Chrétien, Director of the Institute for Clinical Research in Monteal, Mr. Jacques Gagné, Dean of the School of Pharmacy at the University of Montreal, Mr. Michel Bergeron, Director of the Department of Pharmacology at the University of Montreal, researchers at the Armand-Frappier Institute, and many more.

Mr. Speaker, I think the Liberal position is untenable. First of all, the position taken by Montreal Members who made long speeches against the Bill and then stayed away from the House when the Bill was put to a vote. Second, the position taken by the Liberal Senators who in the course of their proceedings are trying to introduce amendments that would be a disaster for consumers, Canadian researchers and our young scientists.

I think it is obvious that in this debate, the Liberal majority in the Senate is playing a distinctly partisan role. Canadians have a right to expect a better performance from those who are appointed to sit in the Upper House.

DISPARITY IN REGIONAL GROWTH

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, we noted yesterday and this morning the Government congratulating itself on the OECD report. However, I must point out a very serious matter that is also included in that report. It noted that the starkness of regional growth disparities in Canada was unusually pronounced in intensity last year.

The concern expressed in this report is very important to Canada's growth and development. It obviously calls for very strong and stern measures to encourage growth in the regions, more than has been encouraged by the recent announcements of the Government in western and Atlantic Canada. I would expect that the Government would respond more strongly.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

BILL C-22—AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He is fully aware that the report done by Dr. Eastman and released in 1985 stated very clearly that, as a result of the 1969 Bill brought in by the previous Liberal administration, Canadians saved approximately $211 million annually. The Minister is also aware that under the present legislation he is now putting forward to the House, there are no guarantees for jobs, no guarantees for research and development, and that the only guarantee is that Canadians will have higher prices for prescription drugs.

Why does the Minister persist in trying to put through this piece of legislation when millions of Canadians, as represented by six provincial Governments, including his own Government in the Province of Alberta, are against this legislation and want Members of Parliament to amend it accordingly?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): As the Hon. Member knows from committee, and the evidence adduced there, had Bill C-22 been introduced in 1969 as opposed to the amendments then made, the savings to consumers in 1983 would not have been $211 million. They would have been between $230 million and $360 million.

Bill C-22 provides more protection to consumers than does the 1969 amendments. So if it is consumer interest about which the Hon. Member is primarily concerned, and dismisses all the other considerations of research, high tech jobs and international obligations, then he should, even on that basis alone, be supporting Bill C-22 because it provides more protection for consumers than did the 1969 amendments.

JOB GUARANTEES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister knows very well that it is he and his Government who are abdicating their responsibilities to consumers, Canadians, and to people in research and development, by not providing guarantees under the legislation. Perhaps the real reason for pursuing this particular piece of legislation is contained in a letter the President of the United States wrote to one of the United States Senators. He said: "We will want to make sure that the outcomes provide for comparable treatment for American and Canadian investment—"

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Come on. Where is the question?

Mr. Dingwall: "—and intellectual property rights in both countries". Is it not a fact that the Minister one day in the House of Commons denied pressure from the Americans and the next day there is pressure? Is it not a fact that the United States of America is calling the tune with regard to this piece of legislation and you are abdicating your responsibilities—

Mr. McDermid: You are flogging a dead horse.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair very reluctantly interrupts a lead question, but I have to ask all Hon. Members to refrain from using the personal "you" in the exchanges. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the guarantees of jobs about which the Hon. Member talks, I have gone over many times in the House, but repetition does not seem to work with that Hon. Member in terms of his acknowledging their validity. I remind the Hon. Member that virtually the entire research community in this country, people involved in pharmaceutical and medical research, and so on, accept that these guarantees are significant, and in fact are looking forward with great anticipation to the jobs and research opportunities which will come from this. They are there. There is the review. There are the annual reports that will be made to this House.

I guess more significant is the royalty fund about which the Hon. Member talked. If he reads the Eastman report, page 365, he will see that for every dollar of research provided to that fund, the consumer will have to pay $6.20. That was the ratio in 1983. So the guarantee procedure that the Hon. Member and his Senator friends are advocating has guaranteed the cost to consumers of a lot of money for negligible research.

PRICES REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that all the groups which appeared before the standing committee were clearly in agreement that amendments to strengthen the Act, for guarantees for jobs in research and development, were acceptable to them. The Minister knows that. So let us not have any falsehoods.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: With regard to price, the Minister has said that the Prices Review Board will control prices. He knows that constitutionally it has been challenged. Second, he knows it has no authority to act, only to react. Why is the Minister telling Canadians that he has in the legislation a review mechanism which is going to control prices when in fact he knows it will not control prices one iota?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been over this so many times, it is hopeless to deal with that Hon. Member. However, I remind the audience that—

Some Hon. Members: Audience?

Mr. Andre: —the House, that Dr. Eastman, who has agreed to head up this board, concludes that the board will be effective. I do not see how the Opposition can say we should rely on Dr. Eastman on this point but not on that point. I do not know how they bridge that intellectually.

As to the Hon. Member's comment that all witnesses before the committee felt the way he claims, that is plain false and anyone can see that by looking at the record of the committee hearings.

EFFECTS OF BILL C-22—REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DEMAND GUARANTEES FROM FOREIGN MULTINATIONALS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in the past few days, Government Members have been showering us with figures. Depending on who is speaking, economic spin-offs range from $500 million up to as much as $1.4 billion. The Minister mentions between 1,000 and 3,000 jobs. In fact, every speaker, including the blue jay from Lévis, has different figures. We are also in favour of job creation.

What I want to ask the Minister is this: Considering that the Members of his own Government do not agree, either on the amount of investment or the number of jobs created, does he not think he should immediately call the bluff of the big foreign multinationals and make sure he has firm commitments, not empty promises?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the commitments made are as firm as is the Opposition's resolution not to be dissuaded by facts and evidence from their political opportunism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I am in receipt of a telegram from—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I received a telegram from Mr. Michel Hamelin, President of the Executive Committee of the Montreal Urban Community. They feel that as far as they are concerned, these unfounded changes would be a threat to the creation of 1,300 jobs and to major investment in this country.

[English]

So the people in Montreal, in the urban area, recognize these jobs are real. They are looking forward to them and they wonder why the Liberal Party is trying to frustrate the creation of these jobs in Montreal.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT DEMAND GUARANTEES FROM FOREIGN MULTINATIONALS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): The Minister has just given us an example of the discrepancies we have observed. I say to the Minister that he is going to let the foreign multinationals bleed Canadian patients for the sake of their shareholders outside Canada. He can brag all he wants about the jobs that were promised, but he cannot table a list, he cannot table investment amounts, he has no firm commitment, and in that case, as soon as the legislation is passed, the companies will be able to do as they please.

I am asking the Minister why, instead of fighting the Senate and acting tough, he does not act tough with the multinationals and demand specific guarantees?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable, and one can understand the admonitions that are in Beauchesne about raising questions about subjects under debate, because every one of these points was covered between ten o'clock and eleven o'clock this morning. If the Hon. Member paid attention to the debates, looked at any of the committee studies, or paid any attention, he would see that every single thing he said is absolute garbage.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister, I see, is given to his usual understatement.

THE ADMINISTRATION

CODE OF CONDUCT—INTRODUCTION OF REFORM PACKAGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): In the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. The Acting Prime Minister will know that many months ago the Government promised to introduce a package of reforms concerning conflict of interest, the tendering process, and the financing of political Parties. The people of Canada are still waiting. It has been more than seven months since this promise was made. Will the Acting Prime Minister assure the House that we will have this package of reforms introduced in time to be put in place before the next election?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under very active consideration and action has been taken with respect to lobbyists. We had hoped that the recommendations of the Parker Commission might be down soon and, if there were any recommendations included in that report, that could be taken into consideration as well. However, I can assure the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party that this is very much a priority with the Government. I think I can say an announcement will be made within the next weeks or months.

POLITICAL PARTIES

INDIVIDUALS AND FINANCING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): This is a priority for Canadians. More specifically, with respect to the financing of political parties, is the Minister prepared to guarantee that the Government will table a Bill that would allow only private individuals to make donations to political parties?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is overlooking the fact that much has been done to open up the process, the scrutiny of Order in Council appointments and a number of other things, including parliamentary reform. Consistent with the openness of this Government, further action will be taken.

• (1130)

I can assure the Hon. Member that, and I simply want to repeat it, this matter is very clearly under active consideration. There is a Bill before the House now having to do with the Canada Elections Act and certain reforms thereto. However, I hope that all Hon. Members will have a chance to review this legislation so that we can bring it forward very soon.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Minister's answer with interest. I wish it had been pertinent to the question asked.

Considering that one province in Canada has moved in an important and progressive way on the question of financing political Parties, is the Government prepared to consider legislation that will be put in place before the next election, that will restrict to individuals only the right to make financial contributions to political Parties?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure if that is a firm position of the New Democratic Party or not. Surely in the course of consideration of the legislation that is currently before the House that will be considered in due course. If that is the position that his Party wants to put forth, then it can be considered, I suppose, at that time.

Mr. Broadbent: We want to hear your position.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER INQUIRY REPORT

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the report of the Parker Inquiry into the conflict of interest allegations against the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. The Deputy Prime Minister indicated that the Government might be looking to that particular report with regard to new rules and regulations with respect to conflict of interest.

Can the Deputy Prime Minister with some degree of precision indicate to the House when that report might be made public and tabled in the House of Commons? Can he also indicate what the total cost of the inquiry will be? We know that the legal fees for the former Minister to the tune of about $650,000 have been paid. I am sure that Canadians would like to know what the total cost of this particular inquiry will be.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the report has been completed. When it is completed and presented to the Government it will be presented and made public. I have no knowledge whatsoever of whether the report is completed.

Mr. Lapierre: We are told that he has it.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member opposite says that we are told that the Minister of Justice has it. I think the Minister has made it perfectly clear that the Government has not received the report. I cannot tell the Hon. Member with any degree of precision and accuracy what stage the report is at, but suffice it to say that when it is presented it will be presented and made public.

PAYMENT OF FORMER MINISTER'S LEGAL FEES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister answered only one part of my question. He did not answer the other part. I am sure that the Government does have some answers with regard to the total cost of the Parker Inquiry.

Canadians are outraged that the Government of Canada decided to pay the legal fees of the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I have a letter from the Department indicating the reasons why the Minister's legal fees were paid. The letter states that the payment is being made "on the basis that the Commission is investigating the conduct of Mr. Stevens as a Minister" and therefore lies within established precedents. We all know that the inquiry was looking into the personal conduct of the Minister and that that excuse is a flimsy rationale for paying the legal fees of that particular Minister. Will the Deputy Prime Minister be using that same rationale to pay the legal fees of the former Minister of State for Transport?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is rather difficult to indicate to the House the cost of the inquiry when it has not yet been completed. Surely the Hon. Member would understand that.

With respect to the precedents, there are clear precedents established for the payment of legal fees. Payment to former Liberal cabinet Ministers has been made. That precedent has been established. Of course, that is the matter and that is the rationale which is taken in terms of making the judgment with respect to the Hon. Member for York—Peel.

BILL C-22—COST OF RESEARCH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The pharmaceutical companies will be given a 10-year monopoly by Bill C-22 when it becomes law on the basis of a promise that they will spend about $1.4 billion in additional money. Some 60 per cent of that additional research expenditure, however, will be written off at a cost to Canadian taxpayers.

Will the Minister confirm that, given this 60 per cent write-off and the increased prices of patented pharmaceuticals, in effect the taxpayers will be paying for substantially all of that research?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada, along with I think every other industrialized nation, provides that research and development is deductible for tax purposes. In fact most nations have more generous incentives. So one can say that, if one uses the logic that all money belongs to the Government first and foremost and any deduction from income therefore is a contribution from the Government to that effort, then on that basis the Government makes that contribution to research and development, whether it is in the field of pharmaceuticals, widgets, mousetraps or what-have-you.

Is it the position of the NDP that in fact research and development ought not to be tax deductible? If that position were implemented, then the small amount of research being conducted in Canada would turn out to be zero. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to think that out before he adopts it as his Party's position.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that drug profits are among the highest in manufacturing, with a 20 per cent average in 1985, and some as high as 50 per cent, transfer pricing, and now a 10-year monopoly. After years of profitable business in Canada how does the Minister justify this raping of the Canadian taxpayer for a group which, before 1969, would not do research and cannot be expected without firm commitments to do so now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Hon. Member does his sums I know that he has based them on a newspaper article this morning written by Dan Westell. What was incomplete in that study was that it did not look at the additional tax revenue from those 3,000 scientists being employed in Canada rather than overseas, the scientific people, and so on, in the high-tech jobs. Those are the spinout benefits of that. If the Hon. Member wants to do a tax balance on that he should consider all the factors.

As I pointed out many times in committee, a company that does not do research does not deduct that from its income. If in 1983 the companies had been spending 10 per cent of revenue on research as opposed to 5 per cent, then their return on investment would have been a normal industrial return. They show a higher return because they are taking that money out of Canada. We want it spent here in research and development which, incidentally, has the effect of reducing their income after taxes.

SHIPBUILDING

INDUSTRY'S SITUATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada has been asking the federal Government for assistance. Not only has it been denied this assistance but the Minister of Public Works has said that the shipbuilding industry should take a long, hard look at itself and perhaps pick a shipyard in the region that could close its doors forever.

This is a treacherous response to an industry that needs help badly and one that has been led to believe that help would be forthcoming from the Government. Why does the Government not take a long, hard look at itself and realize that its failure to keep its commitment is sabotaging the shipbuilding industry in Atlantic Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I too share the concern of the Hon. Member. I think he would also agree with the fact that there is some 60 per cent of over-capacity in the shipbuilding industry throughout the world, which has had a major effect in depressing prices in the industry. The Government has responded by providing a tremendous amount of work to the shipbuilding industry. Something in the order of 90 per cent or 95 per cent of the business done in the shipbuilding industry is provided by government contracts.

There has been some degree of rationalization in the Canadian shipbuilding industry. That has taken place throughout the world. It is simply in concert with the realities of the international situation. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will, as a Government, work with the industry in trying to pursue the course of rationalization in a manner which would not provoke undue dislocation.

ELECTION PROMISE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, during the 1984 election campaign the Government dangled over the heads of the people in Atlantic Canada that it was going to provide $75 million to develop shipbuilding in Canadian ports. Atlantic Canada has not received the benefit of that promise.

Why will the Government not keep its promise, create these jobs in shipyards in Atlantic Canada, and create the needed employment that has been looked forward to in Atlantic Canada as a result of the promises of the Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member in his good intentions might wish to prevail upon his Leader and his critic for defence matters, and persuade them to support the initiatives of the Government in terms of the White Paper in which the Government is calling for the building of a number of nuclear submarines.

This would provide some 55,000 person years of work. That is the manner in which the Hon. Member can help. Those jobs would be created in Canada for the shipbuilding industry. I urge that the Hon. Member raise that issue with his caucus and his Leader.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

ADMISSION OF ALLEGED WAR CRIMINALS TO CANADA—ROLE OF FORMER RCMP OFFICER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

In a recent study by Alti Rodal it was revealed that in 1983 a senior RCMP officer and member of the security service deliberately ignored federal policy and destroyed records to facilitate the entry into Canada of two alleged Nazi war criminals, one of whom was a member of the SS.

Will the Solicitor General confirm that this is accurate? Will he indicate whether or not this individual is currently a member of CSIS? If these allegations are in fact accurate, and this person lied to his political masters and destroyed documents, will the Minister not accept his responsibility and ensure that this person is fired from CSIS for these reprehensible actions?

Mr. Beatty: Who was the Solicitor General at the time?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can advise the Hon. Member that this incident occurred in 1983. The person was a member of the RCMP at that time, and an administrative decision was made to move him out of the area that dealt with immigration and screening, or anything to do with the area of citizenship.

I am advised that today he still does remain a member of CSIS, who transferred from the RCMP to CSIS. He is employed in an area that has absolutely nothing to do with immigration or citizenship matters.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely shocking that a member who was responsible for lying and destroying federal documents has not been disciplined whatsoever, but has merely been moved from one section to another.

BEHAVIOUR OF OFFICERS DURING VISIT OF INDIAN CABINET MINISTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): My supplementary question is with respect to two other members of CSIS. The Minister will be aware of the fact that the head of SIRC, Ron Atkey, has accused CSIS members of being amateurish in the case of a Sikh cabinet Minister, visiting British Columbia, who was shot and seriously wounded.

Will the Minister confirm that Ron Atkey did write a letter suggesting that CSIS members took a four-hour lunch break during the time that the Sikh Minister was seriously injured? What action will the Minister take on this matter? Is he going to shuffle them into another Department, transfer them to another city, or will he ensure that they are properly disciplined, if these allegations are well founded?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member well knows that the case involving the attempted murder of the Indian cabinet Minister is presently before the courts. As a matter of fact, the B.C. Court of Appeal has handed down a decision on the legality of the warrant. The matter has been referred back to the court. Since it is presently before the courts, it would be quite inappropriate for me to discuss it at this time.

Mr. Robinson: What's that got to do with discipline of CSIS members?

THE ECONOMY

OECD REPORT—UNEMPLOYMENT

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It relates to the quotes yesterday by the Prime Minister from an OECD report.

The Prime Minister did not quote statements in the report that Canada's unemployment rate is "high by historical standards, and compared to the OECD average", and "is likely to remain above its pre-recession level". This, Mr. Speaker, in the fifth year of recovery.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister tell the House if the Government really is satisfied with its record over the past three years, as the Prime Minister indicated yesterday?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, not only have we had endorsement from The Toronto Star of the effectiveness of federal government policies, but if the Hon. Member would refer to the editorial in today's Globe and Mail, it puts the whole thing into perspective. It outlines the effectiveness of Canada's economic programs developed by this Government which has created the "jobs, jobs, jobs" that our Prime Minister talked about during the 1984 election. I would suggest that the Hon. Member read that very objective article.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is nice of the Deputy Prime Minister to suggest I read the newspaper. I also read the report.

NATIONAL SALES TAX PROPOSAL

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The OECD report quoted yesterday also noted "a sharp decline in disposable income". It stated that Canada's higher than average inflation rate was due, in large part, to "indirect tax increases".

Since the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, and other groups, are also calling for up-front visible taxes, is the Minister now prepared to be open with Canadians and reveal the hidden part of his tax strategy, which is the national sales tax?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance will make his statements on national sales tax in due course. It is not for me to announce that on his behalf.

I might add that the slight increase in inflation that we have witnessed in the last few months can be traced, in some part, to the spending of the Ontario provincial Government. This has caused prices to increase rather than abate. I would hope that provincial Government could moderate its spending somewhat in order to help with this inflationary increase.

RIVER SAFETY

WHITE WATER RAFTING FATALITIES—STRICTER REGULATIONS

Mr. Fred King (Okanagan—Similkameen): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport, or in his absence to the Parliamentary Secretary to that Minister.

This year 12 persons have died in four separate river-rafting accidents in British Columbia. It seems imperative that the Department of Transport amend the Boating Restriction Regulations which are in place in British Columbia in order that permits for commercial river-rafting operations be required on all waters in that province.

What action has been taken in response to these tragic accidents to bring an element of regulated safety into the business of river rafting in British Columbia?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen for his question.

The Government has acted in this area. Indeed, the Boating Restriction Regulations were declared on August 14, and will be published in The Canada Gazette on September 2.

We also have agreement with the provincial Government of British Columbia to change the river-rafting standards. It is regrettable that again government has to move in because people do not use some sense of their own. The Government has acted.

FINANCE

CONSEQUENCES OF RISKY BANK LOANS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Can the Minister confirm that the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce received the approval of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and the Government to transfer about $850 million to its reserves against high-risk foreign loans, that this transfer will reduce taxes payable by the CIBC by about $400 million and that consequently, the Bank will probably not pay any income tax at all for the current financial year? Does the situation really warrant the Government's approving this change in the Bank's accounts that will mean the CIBC will not have to pay any income tax for the current financial year?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the tax provisions and the loss provisions that will be taken as a result of this loan experience mean the following for that bank: under current tax practice and consistent with tax reform, it will be taking its losses this year. If its experience should improve over time from what it projects, when the income comes into revenue it will be taxable. That is quite different from outright forgiveness which the Hon. Member's Party has often suggested. Under outright forgiveness there is a massive deduction. Banks will not pay taxes for many years under outright forgiveness, plus it is irreversible.

• (1150)

EFFECT ON TAX REVENUE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister confirms that there will be a very substantial write-off, which will, in fact, cut $400 million from the tax liability of the Bank of Commerce for the fiscal year 1987 and probably result in it paying no tax at all on its profits despite substantial profits on domestic business in 1987.

Does the Minister not agree that it is about time that we had a minimum tax on corporations, including the banks, so that they could write something like this off over a number of years, as was the previous practice, rather than forcing the taxpayers to pay all of these losses in one year?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see the accounting significance of what the Member is suggesting. Whether the banks take the write-off this year or over time, the effect in terms of tax revenues is virtually the same.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—EQUALITY RIGHTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday I asked the Prime Minister to dissociate himself and his Government from the suggestion that women's groups are opposing the Meech Lake distinct society clause because they do not want Quebec to be recognized as having a distinct society.

In reply yesterday, right here in the House, the Prime Minister once again expressed approval of the newspaper column by Lysiane Gagnon in which that view was strongly expressed. However, in front of the committee yesterday the Government's own Advisory Council on the Status of Women expressed concern about the equality rights provisions in the Meech Lake Accord.

Will the Government simply recognize the good faith of that point of view?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to that question again today because we want this matter to be put in the proper perspective. It was determined by the First Ministers that if there was an egregious error made with respect to the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord consideration would naturally be given to amendments to rectify that error.

Fortunately, there has been no indication to the present time, on the basis of our best legal advice, that there is such an error with respect to the rights of women or any other group in Canada, including minority groups. The best legal advice that we have, which is supported by very eminent authorities, is that women's rights in particular are in fact unaffected in a negative manner by the Accord.

As the Hon. Member knows, because he is participating, we have a committee which is doing very good work in examining all facets of this matter and hearing from well respected groups and organizations.

I thought the Prime Minister answered the Member's question very well yesterday in that he cast no aspersions with respect to motivation on the part of any women's group which has appeared before the committee. That is the situation and it should be accepted by the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has just told us that it was determined by the First Ministers that only egregious errors would be recognized and corrected. Whose Constitution is this? It is not the First Ministers' Constitution but the Constitution of Canada.

Various groups of Canadians are coming forward to express their views about the Constitution. Are they not entitled to try to improve the Meech Lake Accord, egregious errors or not? Are they not entitled to have a say? Are the views which are coming forward with so much support and so much good sense not worth considering?

To put it in one question, why will the Government not recognize that the Meech Lake Accord, as good as it is and as important as it is, is capable of being made better?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, it was not this Government which gave the country its process for amending the Constitution. It was the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part which set the process in place with respect to the amendment of our Constitution.

I think this particular amendment is a historic point in our history which should be supported wholeheartedly by all Canadians. The entry of Quebec into the Constitution is something which we as Canadians should applaud and support.

We naturally want to consider improving our Constitution. Indeed, one of the most important elements in terms of the agreement reached by the First Ministers was the provision that henceforth we will have an annual constitutional meeting among First Ministers at which improvements to our Constitution can be examined. This has never been the case before. The Government is giving more consideration to the sensitivities of our country than has any previous administration.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Minister.

TARIFFS

PIANO FACTORY—PROTECTION RECOMMENDED BY TARIFF REVIEW BOARD

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the last piano factory in this country in Clinton, Ontario, is facing closure because of competition from Korea. It took its case to the Tariff Review Board, won that case, and the Board recommended extra protection to the Government.

I would like to direct my question to the Minister of State for Finance. Why has the Government not yet moved to implement these recommendations in order to protect these jobs that matter so much to the small community of Clinton, Ontario?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for raising this issue. I hope to be meeting with the management of the company in Clinton in the next week to discuss this matter. There are problems with the business plan which concern the viability of this firm as well as tariff questions which have to be discussed.

LOAN GUARANTEES QUERY

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister also explain why a meeting which was set up with the Minister of Finance and this company was cancelled? Why has the Government rejected loan guarantees for this factory despite firm export orders which the company has for 1,200 piano sales to the United States? In short, why is the Government ignoring this small community's future?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we know that loan guarantees can be given when we know that a firm can be viable in the short term, medium term and long run. That is what we are trying to assess. Hopefully that will be done in the next week to 10 days.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY

CARRIAGE OF DANGEROUS GOODS—METRO TORONTO SPEED LIMIT

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the Parliamentary Secretary. On July 14 last a CP train carrying hazardous materials and travelling at a speed of about 40 miles per hour derailed in my constituency. Fortunately, the car that contained the hazardous materials did not derail.

One year ago, at the request of the former Minister of Transport, the present Deputy Prime Minister, CP Rail voluntarily imposed a 25 mile per hour speed limit on trains carrying dangerous goods on a portion of their track in Metro Toronto. Unfortunately, the derailment this time occurred on another portion of track where that limit was not imposed.

Will the Parliamentary Secretary give us his undertaking today that he and the Minister will immediately request CP Rail to impose a 25 mile per hour speed limit for all of their trains carrying hazardous goods through Metropolitan Toronto? If they refuse to do so, will he instruct the CTC to institute a mandatory speed limit of 25 miles per hour in this area?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that we never tire of the questions of the Hon. Member for York East and on this one he has certainly been persistent. The Minister is vitally concerned about this as, indeed, are all Members of Parliament.

As the Member knows, there is a task force studying the whole question of Toronto and the routes of tracks through the Metropolitan area, due to its explosive growth. I believe that task force is to report in March of 1988.

However, in the meantime I will, of course, consult with the Minister on this. I am sure the Minister will speak with CP because it may well be appropriate for that 25 mile per hour zone to be extended to cover the area within the Member's riding. We will certainly take that up and give it serious consideration.

EXTERNAL AID

MOZAMBIQUE—REQUEST FOR MORE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister knows only too well that front-line states in southern Africa are indeed on the front line and that in fact Mozambique in particular is being terrorized and has had its transportation and infrastructures destroyed by the South African forces. In fact, the Red Cross has made an appeal about that and has borne eloquent testimony to it.

Is Canada prepared to match its rhetoric beyond its emergency food aid and some $24 million from CIDA? Is it prepared to take some meaningful steps to bolster the economy of Mozambique which unfortunately receives one of the lowest percentages and rates of assistance from Canada's aid program?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Secretary of State for External Affairs just returned from a visit to that region of the world. I would certainly undertake to raise the Hon. Member's question with him. I think he will be in the House next week and I am sure that he would be only too happy to respond in a definitive way.

REQUEST FOR CO-ORDINATED MEASURES TO AID AFRICAN FRONT-LINE STATES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, while this tragedy in Mozambique is unfolding, Canada is not putting its money and its efforts where its mouth is and its visitors are. Does Canada have any firm, specific, concrete proposals to make before the Francophone Conference and the Commonwealth Conference for an organized, co-ordinated effort to get emergency medium and long-range aid, grants and expertise to these front-line states? Does it have any proposals for strengthening and diversifying their economies so that they do not have to depend on trade with South Africa?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, one of the purposes of the visit of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs was to get first-hand knowledge of some of these issues and to prepare himself for the two important summits which are to be taking place in Canada in the very near future. I am sure that, as a result of his fact-finding mission, he will have something positive to put forth at those meetings.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Canada's Nobel Prize winner, John Polanyi, describes the proposed flights of radioactive plutonium across northern Canada as being reckless given that an accident could constitute a hazard for thousands of years. In light of the extreme danger and urgency involved, has the Government taken the appropriate action to advise Japan and the United States formally that these flights will not be allowed?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member perhaps knows or will know as she continues her studies as a new Member, we do have a process here that involves an international component and a domestic component. No one has formally applied to Canada for anything at this point but if and when Japan were to do that, we would follow all the appropriate steps.

I can assure the Hon. Member that there is a very real concern as to the national interest of Canada when it is proposed that anything like plutonium or any other dangerous chemical be moved across the country.

TERRITORIAL SOVEREIGNTY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on March 23, 1987, the Secretary of State for External Affairs gave his assurance to the Hon. Member for Skeena that Canadian airspace would not be violated. Can the Hon. Member tell us what the Government's position is on this issue now?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is exactly the same. The territorial sovereignty of Canada will not be violated. If someone applies in the proper way, we will follow the proper process to decide what is in the best national interest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that the Hon. Member for Scarborough East has a single question. There will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Papineau and a single question from the Hon. Member for York West. That will close off Question Period.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO AND NORAD—IMPLICATIONS OF SUGGESTED CANADIAN WITHDRAWAL

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence and it concerns recent press reports about proposals from some quarters that Canada withdraw from NATO and NORAD. Has the Government studied the implications of such a move if by chance it ever took place?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have heard rumours myself that in some quarters this is being proposed. The effect of such a policy would be to cost Canada any influence in setting alliance policy for arms control or defence. It would drive up the cost to Canada of the air defence of North America by some $5 billion. It would also raise serious questions about what we would do with the army when we brought it home in view of the fact that it is unlikely that we would be invaded by land. We would either mal-deploy the army or else we would have to lay off thousands of soldiers.

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INTERVENE WITH CN ON REGIONAL TRAFFIC CONTROL CENTRES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I have a question for the very able Parliamentary Secretary.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ouellet: He is working so hard, in fact, on behalf of the Minister, that he should get his salary.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, after abandoning its tracks in Abitibi—Témiscamingue, after practically closing down the Point Saint Charles Maintenance Centre, the Canadian National is about to dismantle its regional rail traffic control centres and thus deal the Quebec economy another savage blow.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary ask the Minister to use his authority and inform this Crown Corporation that a decision of this kind is totally unacceptable?

[English]

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say nothing more than yes to that question. I would be happy to do so.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—COMMITTEE EXAMINATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. There are reports that the Deputy Minister of Justice is in strong disagreement with the Department of Immigration over the legal implications of the new refugee legislation, Bill C-84. Now the Department of Justice is refusing to come to testify before the committee that is studying Bill C-84.

Why is the Minister refusing to have his Deputy Minister and other officials come before the legislative committee studying Bill C-84? Is it because they are worried about the legal fallout and ramifications of Bill C-84? Will the Minister assure the House that he will permit his Deputy Minister and officials to come properly and freely before the committee studying Bill C-84 as every other government witness has agreed to do?

Patent Act

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will try to respond briefly to a very agonizing question. The Hon. Member obviously does not have his facts straight. I do not want to disabuse him of his notion with respect to the position of the Department of Justice. We have been working in collaboration with our colleagues in Employment and Immigration with respect to this important legislation. I can only say, and the Hon. Member will understand, that committees are in charge of their own destinies.

There has not been any attempt to avoid the issues. What I hear from the committee, and probably the Hon. Member would share this view, is that the witnesses and the Ministers who have appeared before the committee are doing so well that it does not need the help of the Department of Justice.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

Patent Act

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to participate in this debate. However, I am disappointed that the Minister of the Crown supporting this Bill is probably unavoidably—

Mr. Mazankowski: Just outside in the lobby.

Mr. Dingwall: He will be back? I accept the word of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

It is interesting to note that for a number of days we have had comments by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and of course the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) concerning the process that Bill C-22, amendments to the Patent Act, is presently undergoing. We have heard time and time again sentiments expressed by government Members which seem to be very consistent. Yet as time goes on we find their statements are not backed up by their actions. I believe the Minister has swallowed himself on Bill C-22. I believe the Prime Minister has also swallowed himself over the process involving Bill C-22.

For your listening pleasure, and for the record, I want to read what the Prime Minister of Canada has said about the legality and constitutionality of the Upper Chamber and its debate over Bill C-22. I quote:

> This is being choked off by a handful of non-elected Liberal Senators who are in turn in the process of inflicting very serious and perhaps irreparable damage to the scientific well-being of Quebec. This Act by an unelected, undemocratic group shall be resisted by every Quebecer, by every elected Member of Parliament irrespective of the side of the House he or she happens to be on. I tell you, there will not be a Liberal left or an NDPer left if this is the attitude they propose to display to the people of Canada.

Those were the words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada regarding the legality and constitutionality of the Senate in its debate on Bill C-22.

Logically one would automatically assume that any amendments coming from the Senate would not be accepted by the Minister. That is what he has said repeatedly on the electronic media. Yet some of those amendments have been agreed to by the Government. If there was ever an example of hypocrisy, of swallowing oneself, it has to be the behaviour of the Minister concerned and of course the Prime Minister.

To say for the last number of days that no changes by an unelected bunch of political hacks will be accepted and to then turn around and do the exact opposite, as has been done on previous occasions on other Bills, indicates to me quite clearly that the Government is trying to have it both ways. It wants to be in a position to criticize the Senate when it is to its advantage. Yet when the Canadian people cry out, as they have regarding these amendments to the Patent Act through a number of representations to the committee examining Bill C-22, you can see that the Government of the Right Hon. Prime Minister wishes to disassociate itself from such political hacks as Michel Cogger, Jean Bazin, Finlay MacDonald, Lowell Murray, and a number of other individuals. That is what the Government wishes to do.

I suggest, to be fair and reasonable, that the Conservative Government cannot have it both ways. It either believes in the legal and constitutional authority of the Upper Chamber or it does not. If it continues this kind of inflamed rhetoric, then the Prime Minister and the Minister should have the common decency to place before this Chamber legislation to reform the Upper Chamber.

We know the Prime Minister speaks with a forked-tongue. He says one thing and does the opposite. There are numerous examples of that. This is another undisputed example of the Prime Minister of Canada, aided and abetted by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who accepted some of the Senate amendments, contradicting themselves and practising another degree of hypocrisy.

There is such a thing in this country as a Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. It has been said by others that this is a Minister of corporate affairs, not one who, while perhaps legally authorized to do so, stands up to protect and enhance the rights of consumers. He is a Minister who is intrigued by corporate affairs and the web of connections in the corporate world. He is mystified by the international glamour of multinational corporations. Earlier today we saw the display of a Minister of corporate affairs who is concerned about protecting and enhancing the multinational fabric in the international world.

We heard a Minister of corporate affairs take another giant step in an attempt to perpetrate on Canadians his wisdom or expertise with regard to the constitutionality of a second chamber. The result was a clear, unequivocal message to Canadians that although he is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), his mandate has but one objective, to serve the masters of the corporate world.

His predecessors in previous Governments as well as his own saw their mandate as one to enhance and improve the rights and privileges of the Canadian consumer. This morning, we saw a despicable display by a Minister of the Crown. I say to him that he and his Government will pay the price for legislation that is fundamentally flawed. There were suggestions in the committee and in both Houses, as well as by individuals across the country, of ways and means to improve the Bill. However, the Minister has chosen to protect and enhance the multinational corporations.

I am sorry to say that I must hold the Minister responsible to those thousands of Canadians who want reasonable and affordable drugs, who want jobs in this country and want research and development. They want to see a Canadian pharmaceutical industry but we have seen the complete opposite from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I believe a Bill should be introduced to change the name of his portfolio to corporate and international affairs, to advance the right of Pfizer in the United States which had profits last year in excess of $600 million.

While there is nothing wrong with the profit motive, we are not in the business as legislators of seeing to one aspect of this industry, namely, profitability. We have signed an oath to represent the best interests of all Canadians and thereby try to establish a public policy that addresses the fundamental pillars of a pharmaceutical society.

Let me say to the Minister that some of the things he has said in this chamber are partly correct but, as usual, he has chosen his words carefully in order to portray, as inaccurate as it is, an image of what members of this Party are attempting to do with regard to Bill C-22. It was the New Democratic Party that wanted no changes to the 1969 Act on pharmaceuticals. It is the Tories and the Minister of corporate affairs who want to give more to the multinationals. Consistently, since the hearing process began in the House of Commons, throughout Question Period, through the debate, and even in the Senate, we have adopted a reasonable set of proposals predicated upon the recommendations of Doctor Eastman, an authority recognized by all Members of Parliament and all political parties. We have attempted to put reasonable proposals to the Government through the committee hearings. There were 48 amendments in the House of Commons which the Conservatives defeated. Now they want to do away with the amendments that members in the other House have taken upon themselves to return to us in the House of Commons.

I find it peculiar, if not somewhat extraordinarily unusual, that the Government would go to such great lengths in attempting to perpetrate a lie to the Canadian people. We have indicated what changes we want to the legislation. They are reasonable amendments, keeping in mind that we are a Party which is concerned about the well-being of Canadians and the prices they will have to pay for drugs. We are concerned about having more research and development take place in this country, certainly in Montreal and Quebec. We want to see jobs created. However, our Party and other witnesses have told the Minister time and time again that he is not heading in the right direction. He is only responding to one element of the process. It takes more than multinational corporations to develop a Canadian pharmaceutical industry. A Canadian pharmaceutical industry means multinational corporations operating here in Canada, as well as generic companies operating in Canada. It means the protection of consumers and more research and development that is not only conducted by multinationals.

Again, the Minister of corporate affairs has attempted to perpetrate another lie, that the generic companies are the only group we want doing research and development in Canada. We want the multinational corporations as well as the generic companies to do more research and development in this country, whether it be clinical research, basic research, innovative research, or a combination of those. That is our desire. But when one examines the Bill it becomes more clear that those objectives cannot and will not be met by that legislation. So you see, Mr. Speaker, there is a difference between the governing Party and our Party. There is also a major difference and distinction between our Party and the New Democratic Party with regard to the Patent Act.

The Minister of Corporate Affairs—I have now by virtue of an Order in Council in my caucus changed the name of his particular portfolio—has tried to share some thoughts with Canadians on the floor of the House of Commons. He would lead us to believe that on the issue of intellectual property rights, somehow we in Canada are the target of abuse by other foreign countries with regard to intellectual property rights affecting the pharmaceuticals. Let us look at that one realistically.

The raison d'Etat of a multinational corporation is what? The raison d'Etat of a multinational corporation is profit. There is nothing wrong with that. That is their mode of operation. It is profit, profit, profit and profit. Let us look not at figures that I, as an opposition Member of Parliament, would want to put on the floor of the House of Commons for debate, but let us look at the figures which are being given by a distinguished authority in the person of Dr. Eastman. Dr. Eastman submitted a report. From 1969 to 1983 under the old law—not Bill C-22—were the profits reasonable for these multinational corporations? Perhaps they were keeping in line with the manufacturing sector. The answer is that the most profitable sector in manufacturing was the pharmaceutical industry. It made unprecedented profits. The average employment in the manufacturing sector for that period was 4 per cent. In the pharmaceutical industry it was 29 per cent. That is not bad. It is a very profitable industry. The law said that if one invents a pharmaceutical drug in Canada, one must pay.

An Hon. Member: If.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member says "if" and then leaves the Chamber. I know he will be back. He will want to participate in the debate because he feels as strongly about it as I do.

If you are to use that particular drug that was invented by an individual, you had to pay a 4 per cent royalty. That is the system. That is how it works. The industry is profitable. Its profits are way up. Employment is up. It receives a 4 per cent royalty from those individuals who wish to reproduce its particular drug. That is not a very bad situation to be in. The Tories now say that over and above that we have to give the pharmaceutical industry a 10 year period of exclusivity; not a month, not two months, not three months, but 10 years. That is not so the industry will be just a little more profitable, but that it will be much, much more profitable.

In turn, these multinational corporations with headquarters in Switzerland and the United States are going to promise—not give us a consummated contract—that for all that money we have given them, besides the new additional 10 year period of exclusivity over the next 10 years, they will do some research and development. There is no written contract, no guarantee, none whatsoever.

It is the poorer people of my province, in my constituency, the poorer people in Manitoba and Newfoundland, the senior citizens in New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario and Quebec, the farmers of western Canada, the shipbuilding yard worker in British Columbia, the good people of Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta, who will now have to pay higher drug prices to profitable multinational corporations which will then become more profitable and which then will have a 10 year period of exclusivity, over and above, on the promise that maybe—but maybe not—they will do research and development.

In some parts of my constituency I know what the people would call that. The first four letters spell "bull". I am not going to say the last word because it may be unparliamentary, but that, too, is a four-letter word.

I would think that those of us who have the privilege of sitting in Parliament, of taking an oath to serve the best interests of the Canadian people, would look at such a situation and say, "Surely to God we would want to have as a bare minimum some guarantees of jobs, some guarantees of keeping the prices down and some guarantees of research and development". But what do we have? We have the multinational corporations getting richer and the Canadian people getting poorer as a result of this legislation.

I told you, Mr. Speaker, what is the policy of the New Democratic Party. It wants no amendments, no changes. The Tories want a period of 10 years exclusivity. I have said to the Deputy Prime Minister, as he knows, and I have said it in committee, that we favour a four-year period of exclusivity. We favour having the multinational corporations, as well as Canadian companies, pay a certain amount into a royalty fund for the purposes of research and development.

I even said to the Minister to keep an open mind. If he finds that the royalty fund I am suggesting is not in keeping with what he believes would achieve the objective he is trying to achieve, let us try to work something out to address that, but let us have some guarantees for jobs, guarantees in terms of the distribution of that wealth, because I know the good people of Alberta, like the good people of Nova Scotia, are getting sick and tired of the benefits of national public policy accruing to certain specific areas of this country.

With certain public will, and political will, I might add, we can change that sentiment and perception felt by the various regions of the country. The Government has chosen repeatedly and consistently to refuse that type of suggestion. I am dismayed.

• (1240)

When I entered Parliament I thought we were here to try to develop good public policy, to address the fundamentals of that particular sector. I thought we were here to try to improve the lot of all Canadians, and not just Pfizer of New York City whose profits in the first quarter of this year were in excess of $600 million.

Mr. Dick: How about in Canada?

Mr. Dingwall: I find the conduct and the behaviour of government Members to be despicable in view of the facts. The facts are there for all of us to examine and to read.

I would now like to return to the argument of the intellectual property right. Canada is the envy of the world when it comes to pharmaceuticals. I was down in Washington one month ago and I met with a Congressman by the name of Henry Waxman who heads up a subcommittee which looks into the pricing of pharmaceuticals in the United States. I met with Mr. Bill Haddad who was the chairman of the generic industry in the United States. They acclaimed Canada as having the greatest system. There are those in the United States who would like to adopt or at least examine more fully the prospect of adopting such a system in the United States.

I do not want to suggest to my good friend the Deputy Prime Minister that there is a pending law which is similar to the one in Canada—there is not. However, there is a movement, a serious movement to have put in place the type of law that we now have before us, inclusive of the amendments thereto. Consumer groups in the United States have acknowledged the tremendous piece of legislative work done back in 1969 which met the objectives of the Government of the day. Of all the Members of Parliament at that time, did the Conservative Party of the day vote against the Bill? No, it did not.

Mr. Nunziata: Who was the Prime Minister?

Mr. Dingwall: I believe the Prime Minister at that time was the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, if my memory serves me well, one of the greats, as my hon. friend from New Brunswick across the way acknowledges. Perhaps he is the greatest the Hon. Member says. I would agree with that, he is the greatest. The Conservative Party did not vote against the Bill at that time. Surely, it must have examined and decided at that point in time that that piece of legislation would not contravene any international legislation. Members opposite would lead one to believe that the present legislation, with the amendments of the Liberal Party, would somehow be in contravention of international convention.

A gentleman by the name of Roy Davidson, who was educated at the Universities of Alberta and Toronto, and who for many years was a senior administrator of the bureau of competition policy, and who for some time was the senior economic advisor in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, said the following. I think his words are worth noting, particularly in view of what the Government has been saying. He stated: "Compulsory licensing provisions of the Patent Act are not in contravention of the International Patent Convention of 1904". So when we hear the present Minister, whose title was changed as of 20 minutes ago to the Minister of corporate affairs, say that Canada is not in sync with what is happening internationally, he is wrong.

I asked the Minister in committee where the documented evidence is that says that we are in contravention of international law. There is no evidence, none whatsoever. It is an argument put forward by a weak Government which is bent on serving its political masters, namely, the multinational corporate sector that exists in Canada and throughout the world, and not the Canadian consumers.

After I heard the present Minister of corporate affairs say in the House that we are in contravention of the Bill of Rights I went to my law books. You know, Mr. Speaker, perhaps as Canada's most distinguished legal body—and I think that ought to be underlined in Hansard—that with regard to that argument, the Federal Court has said that Canada is not contravening international conventions with its compulsory licensing, not the Patent Act or the Bill of Rights. Let us not have any more of these falsehoods. Let us not have any more of these inaccurate, grandiose, 30-second clips by the Minister of corporate affairs, because that is not true at all.

That is the first point I want to make with regard to intellectual property rights. Let there be no mistake about it, Canada is not in breach of the International Patent Convention of 1904. Nor is it in breach of the Bill of Rights. As I found out from legal counsel in committee after questioning them extensively, it is not in contravention of GATT, not one iota. There is good law on the books now. I know that my colleagues to the left, the real left, would want me to make this point on their behalf. It is a spurious, fake, false argument to try to perpetrate against the Canadian people with regard to the law with which we are now dealing.

I was in Washington and spoke with legal counsel for Mr. Waxman who chairs that subcommittee. I spoke with Republican staffers as well as to Senators and Congressman. I was struck by the high cost of prescription drugs in the United States. They are phenomenal, absolutely phenomenal.

• (1250)

The law put forward in 1969 by a Liberal administration, and supported by the New Democratic Party, and the Conservative Party, has been working reasonably well for Canadians. It struck me even more I listened to the consumer advocate groups in the United States ask why the Canadian Government is now changing its laws to something similar to those in the United States? Does the Government not realize that consumers in the United States are paying phenomenal drug costs? Is that what the Government wants to do in Canada? I wanted to give an answer which would have supported my Government. But I believe that the evidence available, which has been submitted to committee, allows each reasonable individual to come to the conclusion that we will pay higher drug prices in Canada as a result of the Conservatives pushing through this Bill amending the Patent Act regarding the pharmaceuticals.

Canadians do not want any part of that. When the Minister suggests that 85 per cent of Canadians are on drug plans, he fails to mention that over 1 million Canadians do not have a drug plan. He fails to mention that it is the taxpayer who pays through the nose for the pharmacare program in his or her province.

I went to law school with an individual who has developed a great legal mind; I will not mention his name. He is now working for the Canadian auto workers union—a great guy. When he appeared before committee and the Members were questioning him he became somewhat insulted with the statement made earlier, and reiterated on that day, that union people should not be worried about C-22, as it does not affect them. He brought an important point to the attention of all Members, and I had hoped—perhaps hoping is too much—that Members opposite would have conceded the point, that when a union is negotiating a package of fringe benefits, whether it is salary, pharmacare, medicare, or whatever, there is only a certain size of pie. If companies have to spend much more money for pharmacare programs, it means there will be less money for the other things that are important to the rank and file union members.

Let me remind all Members that it is union members, through their hard-working constant toil as average working Canadians, who make the biggest contribution to this society. To say to them that they have to pay more for their drugs because the Government wants to see multinational corporations get fatter in profit is, to say the least, a bit unfair.

Why did the government Members on that committee not challenge that witness? Because he was right, that is why they did not challenge him. Now the Government would lead us to believe that it will not affect any Canadian. Although 85 per cent of Canadians are on drug plans paid for by taxpayers' money, over 1 million Canadians do not have a drug plan. Who will pay for them? The rank and file union card-carrying member will have to give up more in terms of bargaining with their employer, if they wish to maintain their pharmacare program with that particular company. Perhaps the Minister of corporate affairs and corporate interests does not refuse, but maybe he does not wish to share that with Members of the House, or indeed the Canadian people.

When we discuss intellectual property rights, let us be cognizant of prices. The Tory Government of Alberta believes there will be higher prices. The Governments of Manitoba, Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, and Ontario believe there will be higher prices. But the Minister states that they are wrong, they do not know anything. They are paying for a pharmaceutical program in their provinces. They come before our committee, and the second Chamber and give evidence. They say that drug prices will rise, but the Minister says, "No, you are wrong. I am right". The Minister of corporate affairs then turns around and says, "But just in case prices do go up, I am going to put $100 million in a sock over here. As the prices go up, you will receive a little compensation". That is pretty nifty. A constituent said to me, that is pretty sleazy.

The difference between the pharmaceutical business and when the Government was attempting to deindex the pensions of senior citizens is that then it was taking it directly. Canadians saw first hand what a grab bag this Government was, how tough it was, and how it was going to fight the President of the United States. It was going to take money from 70-year-old people. The Mulroney Government is real tough. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is real tough. But in regard to the the pharmaceutical business it decided to learn from its mistakes and be sleazier, by sucking it in from the provinces. Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, New Brunswick, P.E.I, Alberta, and other provinces will have to pay. That is the tough Brian Mulroney, the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada. That is the tough Canadian Government acting on behalf of our interests. I say that it ought to be ashamed. It now understands why the bottom has fallen out of its popularity since 1984. Its on a roller coaster which is going down, down, down, and down.

Some Hon. Members: Once more!

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, it is nice to hear the seals on the opposite side flapping. It is good to hear them because they know that what I say is the truth.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on! How is your Leader doing?

An Hon. Member: Down, down, down, and down.

Mr. Dingwall: Is that a question, Mr. Speaker?

• (1300)

You see, Mr. Speaker, that is the Tory agenda, to be tough, real tough, just like the Member opposite. I say to the Conservatives Members of Parliament and the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that they and their Government will pay the ultimate price when they have the intestinal fortitude to go to the people. I suggest that they should go to the people now. Let us have a vote to see what the people think of the actions and behaviour of the Conservative Party.

That would be the true test, but we know that they are trying to finesse this. They are trying to slide it through, to get it by. The Minister said, "Well, you know, we had 87 hours of debate. That has been very long". Why should it not be long, Mr. Speaker? If it is in the best interest of the Canadian people, why not debate the substance of the Bill thoroughly? That is what we are here for.

The Minister of corporate affairs—

Mr. Edwards: Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Dingwall: Corporate affairs. The Member did not hear that we passed an Order in Council changing the name of the Minister's portfolio. He is now the Minister of corporate affairs. The Minister has said that there is a big saving grace out there called the Prices Review Board that will protect all Canadians. Well, there is another eight-letter, two-word phrase that one could use. That is absolute and utter nonsense.

The Minister has before him a legal opinion from the Department of Justice saying that it is unconstitutional, but he will not table it because he knows that this is what it says. I challenged the Minister in committee saying that it was unconstitutional. A distinguished legal authority submitted a paper saying it was unconstitutional.

Let us keep in mind that profitable multinational corporations operating in this country since 1969 with employment at about 29 per cent as opposed to 4 per cent in manufacturing will now be given a 10-year period of exclusivity and the monitoring of a Prices Review Board. The first time anyone takes an action against them the multinationals will get a writ from the court to prevent that review board from operating. It will be in the court for a month or two months or two or three years. That is what the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Conservative Government are doing. Are they not wonderful in trying to protect consumer interest?

The other thing about this Prices Review Board, Mr. Speaker, which you would appreciate enormously as a legal scholar—

Mr. Kempling: You're not a legal scholar.

Mr. Dingwall: I object to the Member not agreeing that the Speaker is a distinguished legal scholar. I object very strongly.

Mr. Kempling: You are not a legal scholar.

Mr. Dingwall: It should be noted very clearly that this board has no authority at all to act, none whatsoever. The only authority it has is to react after the fact. Once you get socked by the multinational corporations half a dozen times and report it to the Minister of corporate affairs someone may review what has happened.

Mr. Nunziata: That is shameful.

Mr. Dingwall: Is that not a beautiful, carte blanche power to print money? It is just unbelievable. The board has no authority. It can take one drug off the market if God comes down and sits on the rock and says to the people, "Tomorrow it will be sunny". The Government and the Cabinet are not concerned about the Canadian consumer. This is a Bill written for the multinational corporations.

Mr. Nunziata: Why?

Mr. Dingwall: In a few moments we will get to the question in a few moments of why they would write a Bill that way. Prices are going up and there is no mechanism to control them. The Government is doing away with the compulsory licensing system put in place in 1969. I must point out something that is probably more fundamentally disturbing and shocking about the Government. In July of 1984 the Right Hon. Prime Minister was walking down the aisle telling everyone that they were going to get rid of the regulatory bodies which unfairly fetter Canadians. Today the Prime Minister, like the Minister of corporate affairs, has swallowed himself again. He is putting in place a regulatory board, the Prices Review Board, something he said he was going to do away with in July of 1984. I have never seen such hypocrisy. However, Canadians have come to expect hypocrisy from the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Government.

The Prime Minister has swallowed himself again and again. The Government cannot be trusted. The Government attacks rather than supports the Canadian consumer. It hurts the Canadian consumer who will pay dearly as a result of this legislation. I wanted to bring those facts to the attention of Members of this House, some of whom are concerned with what is taking place in that particular sector of our economy.

There is much more to be said with regard to the structure of the law as it now affects Canadians under Bill C-22. When we began this debate, the Minister of corporate affairs indicated that we wanted to distribute economic benefit, research and development and jobs throughout the country. In the dying days of this week, the Minister no longer alluded to that. Somehow, there will be nothing for people in Brandon, Manitoba. There will be nothing in this Bill for people in Fort McMurray, Alberta. There will be very little if anything for the people of British Columbia. What about the people in Moncton, New Brunswick, or Corner Brook, Newfoundland? Nothing for them.

Mr. Kempling: How about Tuktoyaktuk?

Mr. Dingwall: Or the Yukon. So you see, Mr. Speaker, the argument that there would be a distribution of economic benefits throughout this country was falsely put.

That is not to suggest that the Government should be condemned for having a national policy which puts benefits in only one or two areas of the country. However, the Government should be condemned for promising during the election campaign and for repeatedly telling us in the House of Commons that that was one of the purposes of this particular Bill.

I am not confident that the benefits the Government says may go, and I underline the word "may", to Montreal or the Province of Quebec will ever materialize. There is no guarantee of those jobs. There is no guarantee that research and development will take place in the Province of Quebec.

We heard from witnesses who suggested different ways and means of achieving that particular objective. The Science Council of Canada said that the Minister supports the Bill wholeheartedly. That in itself is a bit misleading because the Science Council, when asked if it would support amendments to ensure research and development jobs, said that of course it did. That is its clear objective.

It is very clear that there are no guarantees whatsoever for research and development taking place and jobs being created anywhere in Canada. Unfortunate as it is, the Government is giving away much of the taxpayers' money in the hope, with the prayer and on the whim that maybe somebody out there will put research and development dollars into Canada.

If there was evidence before us which indicated unequivocally that the Government's behaviour would ensure research and development, perhaps one would want to look at the legislation in a more favourable light. However, there is no such evidence. There are no guarantees. In fact, the evidence is to the contrary.

Only some months ago, American multinationals were brought before a U.S. House subcommittee because of their failure to live up to their research and development obligations. I feel strongly that we are making a fundamental mistake in public policy.

The amendments I sought from the Government are ones which would ensure jobs, research and development and the protection of the Canadian consumer. After all, is that not what Canadian parliamentarians are supposed to do? Are we not supposed to take care of the interests of Canadians but not enhance through legislation the interests of only one segment of the economy, namely, the multinational corporations? I think it is wrong to do that. I have said so before and I say it again.

We have tried on numerous occasions to seek from the Government information about how this whole issue interacts internationally. It should be noted that when I was in Washington some months ago meeting with individuals in the industry, I met on the record with the Canadian Ambassador, a distinguished career diplomat. He shared with me the information that the pressure from the United States to amend our patent law was pretty substantial. In fact, if memory serves me correctly, there were a number of individuals who attended a meeting with the Canadian Ambassador in Washington where it was stated very clearly that this was a priority of the United States administration and that the United States administration wanted this passed and passed very quickly.

The President of the United States wrote a letter to the Hon. Bob Packwood of the United States Senate. I believe that Senator Packwood chairs the Finance Committee of the United States Senate. I would like to read from that letter to substantiate my thesis that much of this push to amend the Patent Act so it would be like that of the United States is in fact coming from multinational corporations in the United States. The President of the United States wrote the following to Senator Bob Packwood:

> Thank you for your outstanding leadership and assistance in gaining fast track implementing authority from the Senate Finance Committee yesterday.
> I am extremely grateful for the role you played throughout the process so that the necessary votes could be obtained. Although you are well aware of the significance I attach to this issue and the upcoming negotiations, I want to reiterate my concerns—
> I share many of the concerns expressed in the Senate Finance Committee over the past few days. Clearly, in the forthcoming negotiations—

Let us stop there. When talking about the forthcoming negotiations, the President is talking about the free trade negotiations with Canada. The President of the United States has this to say about them:

> Clearly, in the forthcoming negotiations we will want to make sure that the outcome provides for comparable treatment for American and Canadian investment and intellectual property rights in both countries. We will also want to eliminate or reduce tariffs imposed on our exports and to gain increased access to the government procurement opportunities in the Canadian market.

It seems pretty obvious to me that the United States administration has entered a process of negotiations with Canada in order to consummate a comprehensive free trade agreement, as we have been told by the Prime Minister. As an obvious precondition to that, Canada is now being asked by the United States administration to pass certain amendments to the Patent Act in order to keep it in line with the situation in the United States. I do not find that tactic to be in Canada's best interests. It is not in Canada's best interests to even contemplate amending the Patent Act while in the midst of the negotiations.

Will we continue giving away, as we have in the last number of months and years, things to the United States in the hope that we as a nation will be able to secure something concrete from the United States? I think that is a pretty fundamental flaw in Canadian government policy.

Let us keep in mind that we are dealing with a president in his second term who is often referred to by many journalists as a lame duck president. He has been totally taken up with the Iran-Contra affair. Yet Canada wants to give up, as a precondition to the negotiations with that President, millions and millions of dollars through increased prices of pharmaceutical products which will affect Canadian consumers. I think that is the wrong way to operate foreign policy.

While we are talking about foreign policy, it does not make sense in my view for Canada to try to operate foreign policy on the whim, if you will, of the President and the Prime Minister. It is all well and good to have good, close, personal relations, but that is not the be all and end all of foreign policy. That is not how it is done. You have to do it from a basic position of strength and with good, solid arguments. It seems to me in this particular case that Canada has fallen down badly on the issue of free trade. I had hoped the Government would change its ways but as we see over and over and over again, it is embarking upon this long lonely road to the detriment of Canadians.

The Minister has said in this House that a number of groups support the legislation. That is a fair statement. There are groups who support Bill C-22 without amendments. Yet again he refused or neglected to tell the House that a good number of groups who initially expressed approval also agreed that amendments ought to be made in order to improve the Bill and give it the strength it needs respecting research and development as well as guarantees over jobs. The Minister did not mention that six provincial Governments wanted the Upper House to make amendments to Bill C-22. Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta want changes, but the Minister, and the Prime Minister who is allegedly concerned about reconciliation with the provinces, are refusing the request of those provinces.

Then we have the Consumers' Association of Canada. They have a major role to play in this process and they appeared before the committee with a very good written brief. They are not in favour of Bill C-22 at all. The Canadian Hospital Association is concerned with the health of Canadians and they, too, are against Bill C-22. The National Anti-Poverty Organization, a group whose major responsibility is to assist those people who live below the poverty line, is against Bill C-22. The Federal Superannuates Association, a national body, is against Bill C-22 for fear, as evidenced in committee, that pharmaceutical prices are going to rise. The National Pensioners & Senior Citizens Federation, Green Shield Prepaid Services, and the Canadian Labour Congress are opposed to the Bill. The Canadian Nurses Association is opposed.

As you see, a great number of Canadians do not share the enthusiasm of the Government when it says this legislation will protect consumers, prices will not rise, and we will have more research and development and jobs. In fact, the majority of Canadians disagree whole-heartedly with the Government. The Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association and the Canada Council on Social Development are opposed to Bill C-22. Yet the Minister says everything is wonderful. He says the academic community is so enthused and enthralled by this Bill that they are supporting it. That is not true. We had a distinguished professor from Dalhousie University make a submission to the committee. Professor Antoft said he was not in support of Bill C-22. Yet the Minister would lead you to believe that this is not true.

I think we have to be a little bit more accurate. I am sure the Minister could find one or two individuals in these different groups who may be in favour of some aspects of the Bill. However, there are other groups of ordinary Canadians who are opposed to Bill C-22. Yet, for whatever reasons, the Government has chosen to ignore their sentiments. I find that pretty disheartening.

Members of Parliament do not have to speak for the banks because the banks have sophisticated lobbyists. We do not have to speak for the multinational corporations because they have sophisticated legal counsel to do that. We do not have to speak for some national organizations because their sole objective is to get across their point of view regarding government policy. However, we do have to speak out on behalf of those ordinary Canadians who do not have a lobbying organization to do it for them.

Members of the Royal Canadian Legion made a submission opposed to Bill C-22. I have received many resolutions from different branches of the Legion which say how unfair and improper it would be for the Government to proceed as it is proceeding today with this Bill. They also fear the tremendous impact of drug prices. They do not see any guarantee for research and development and jobs for Canadians who wish to become involved in that sector of our economy.

We even received briefs from the United Church of Canada and many church organizations across the country. But I guess they are all wrong as well. Are they wrong because they are ordinary people? Is it because they belong to organizations that perhaps do not have the wealth or the number of lobbyists such as the PMAC organization in Canada?

I find it rather disturbing that Members of Parliament would choose to ignore the cry from thousands upon thousands of Canadians about this Bill while, on the other hand, they have acted with due haste to appease their counterparts in the United States by passing Bill C-22 prior to a free trade agreement.

Consumers wanted a Minister who would speak and act for them. Instead, they have a Minister of corporate affairs who chooses not to speak for them and chooses to act against them.

Other evidence has been made available. It is from an internationally acclaimed American whom we hoped to have come to the committee. However, due to procedural and secret motions by the Government, if you will, we were prevented from having him appear. I am talking of Ralph Nader.

Many people may ask why we would refer to an American and want to involve him in a debate on a Canadian subject. During our committee hearings we heard a very forceful presentation from PMAC, which is the group organized to service and lobby on behalf of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturing Association in Canada. The individual who made that presentation was an American citizen residing in Canada.

When we attempted to get others before the committee who may have come from the United States, we were told that we would not be able to do so. The Government did not want to hear from Bill Haddad or from Congressman Henry Waxman who heads the subcommittee on the high price of pharmaceuticals in the United States. Yet, at the same time, the Minister tells us that the procedure we will be using in Canada when Bill C-22 is adopted is more in line with what is taking place in the United States. It would only seem right and just that we would want to at least hear from individuals, consumers, senior citizens, consumer advocate groups and even multinational corporations in the United States if we were moving toward a system similar to that in the United States. However, we were not allowed to do so and only heard from one group, represented by an American citizen.

I want to quote Ralph Nader because I think what he said is significant. In an open letter to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), he said: "The Canadian Government is close to making a very serious mistake by choosing corporate wealth over the Canadian public's health".

This person has been concerned with issues affecting consumers. We have seen Mr. Nader's very able work and presentations concerning the automobile industry in this country. I suggest to those Members who do not wish to hear anything about consumer groups in the United States that he had a very major impact on increasing the safety of our automobiles in Canada.

He stated in his open letter to the Prime Minister and on national television that we had a pretty good system and that the Government was giving up large sums of money to the multinational corporations in return for a whim or promise that they will provide new jobs and research and development.

Canada looks quite stupid and naive in the eyes of many countries. We are on our knees to the United States, from a foreign policy perspective, in order to consummate a free trade agreement. While we are on our knees, we dip into our pockets and say, "Take it all" as it relates to pharmaceuticals and the high cost of prescription drugs. While we are giving the money away, the multinational corporations are getting much larger profits. Not only are they getting much larger profits, they are being given a ten-year period of exclusivity in return for a promise to do certain things in the next ten years.

Canadian foreign policy with respect to trade and trade irritants is a joke among many countries. It is not hard to understand why. It is one thing to negotiate, but the Government is giving up a system about which Bill Haddad of the United States generic industry said: "You are the envy of the western world".

I do not distrust multinational corporations. It is a matter of accepting one's role as a legislator and one who is concerned about public policy. It is only fair, reasonable and objective. The Government of Canada should get off its knees, put its hands back in its pockets, and say to the United States: "There will be no changes to the Patent Act as you have requested, but we will change it to what we believe is in the best interests of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry".

I find the activities of the Government, our Prime Minister and those who have surrounded him in this process, to be very un-Canadian and completely unfair to Canadian interests. Ministers of the Crown come into this House and refer to the generic industry as scavengers. That is not only insulting but downright rude and ugly. Generic pharmaceutical companies employ people. They have deadlines to meet and debts to pay, and, yes, they have to pay a royalty, a fee, to the inventor of a particular product.

Profit is not a dirty word, but protecting consumers ought not to be a dirty word either. Guaranteeing research and development ought not to be a dirty word. But it seems, from the evidence produced by the Minister of corporate affairs and by the Prime Minister, that their one motive, their one principle of operation, is to assist multinational corporations in gaining larger and larger profits. We give away. We get nothing in return. In the interim we sock it to the Canadian people through the backdoor of provincial Governments which have to pay higher drug costs.

I do not want to have a major confrontation with the United States. I do not think it is necessary. But as a sovereign nation, as a country, we have to be counted. We should not be tough on our senior citizens. What a joke this Government is. It wanted to deindex the pension of my grandmother and all grandmothers. It wanted to deindex people on fixed incomes. That takes a lot of intestinal fortitude. It failed because the Canadian people rose up in arms against the Government. But now the toughness of the Right Hon. Prime Minister is seen once more. He is saying to widows, to people on fixed income, to people whose particular job is not protected, that they will have to pay a higher price for drugs. He is saying to labour and to union people that they must pay higher premiums for the benefits they wish to receive from their collective agreements. Perhaps someone should have sat on the President's knee and whispered: "No, no, no", instead of: "Yes, yes, yes, Ronnie, Sir". It is terrible that Canadian parliamentarians have to say these things in this Chamber. But the issues are fundamental. They are substantive. They go to the core, in my view, of Canadian sovereignty and what this country is all about.

I do not want Canada to start breaking international agreements. I do not want Canada to be out of sync with other nations. But the Minister of corporate affairs has refused to acknowledge, or display to the House, that there are countries throughout the world who have a different policy in relation to the pharmaceutical industry, such as Japan, for instance. One cannot walk into Japan as a multinational corporation and operate overnight. They have to co-venture with someone in that country. India has different patent laws than most countries. The period they give, I think, is six years to seven years of exclusivity. But Canada goes on its knees, money in hand, and says: "Here, take it all".

Mr. Daubney: That is unbelievable.

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member opposite says it is hard to believe. I know it is hard to believe.

Mr. Daubney: Your misrepresentations are hard to believe.

Mr. Dingwall: But the Hon. Member is pretty tough. He, like his Leader, can sit in this great Chamber with its beautiful furniture and be very tough. But I will bet you, Mr. Speaker, that when he has to knock on doors he will say: "It really was not me in favour of that Bill. It was the Prime Minister. It was not me. I was there behind the curtain but I was there". It will be a different story then. So I tell every Member opposite not to try, as Members of the Government, to perpetrate in the next election—

Mr. Nunziata: A fraud.

Mr. Dingwall: I would not say a "fraud". The fact is that they never stood up to be counted for Canadian interests. They are sitting on their hands doing nothing.

Mr. Daubney: I am in favour of it. It is good for Canada.

Mr Dingwall: The Hon. Member from Ottawa does not want to accept the fact that, like the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada, they speak with a forked tongue. They say one thing when they are on the hustings and do another thing when they are in the boardrooms of this country.

Mr. Nunziata: That is the Conservative way.

Mr. Dingwall: That is the Tory way. Aid and abet at any cost the multinational corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Kempling): Order. I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but I would ask him to withdraw the remark he made about the Prime Minister.

Mr. Dingwall: Sure. It is withdrawn. Thank you, Mr. Speaker, generous soul that you are.

This situation created by Members opposite is very obvious. They want to sit in this Chamber and talk about helping consumers, as do many Hon. Members, but when it comes to the facts or to the point where legislation is on the table which could assist and help Canadian consumers, they hide behind the fear of a breach of the international convention, which has never happened. It is a fear that we are not in sync with what is taking place in the United States. I have never seen such belly-flappers. I have never seen such seals who would flap to the tune of the Right Hon. Prime Minister. I have never seen a Government that goes on its knees as much as this Government does. Every Member opposite will have to answer for this.

• (1350)

Canadians wanted a Government that would represent their best interests and not go abroad to embarrass Canada. This Government has embarrassed Canada and Canadians. I guess the proof is in Decima or Gallup whose poll results show undeniably that Members opposite are on a roller-coaster going down, down, down. Members opposite had an opportunity, and they still have it, to do what is right, to vote against Bill C-22. I for one would stand in my place to applaud them if they were to do that. They still have an opportunity to do what is right.

Mr. Nunziata: But do they have the courage?

Mr. Dingwall: As my distinguished colleague asks: "Do they have the courage?" Do they have the courage to represent Canadian interests? Do they have the courage to represent their constituents? Or will they continue to accept the directives given to them by the President of the United States? Some of them probably cherish the idea that Canada might become the fifty-first state of the United States. I do not. I think their behaviour is somewhat despicable.

Ralph Nader made some comments which the Minister has yet to address—

Mr. Daubney: I thought we weren't supposed to listen to Americans. Be consistent!

Mr. Dingwall: The Hon. Member says: "Be consistent". He ought to be consistent. It was his Party, approved and affirmed by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington, who accepted pressure from multinational corporations to change the Canadian law and to make it in tune with the American law. All we have asked for on this side of the House is for some degree of discussion and dialogue with those individuals in the United States who are familiar with that legislation. That request has been refused. Why has it been refused? What are they afraid of? It is obvious what Members opposite are afraid of. It will be confirmed that we in Canada will pay higher drug prices, that our provincial Governments will have to pay more.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: Hon. Members opposite can shake their heads all they want. The fact of the matter is that a Tory Government in the Province of Nova Scotia has said that Nova Scotians will pay $25 million more as a result of Bill C-22. Those are the facts.

Some Hon. Members can be hoodwinked by the multinational corporations and by senior members of the Cabinet as to what this Bill does. The fact of the matter is that ordinary, average Canadians will have to pay the price in terms of higher drug prices in Canada. What will they get in return? They get a promise that there may be economic development and jobs. How many jobs will be created in Calgary; Fort McMurray; Brandon, Manitoba; Moncton, New Brunswick; Summerside, Prince Edward Island; Bathurst, New Brunswick? Not one. Members opposite have the unmitigated gall to suggest that we are only hearing one side of the argument. Yes, we are only hearing one side of the argument, and that is the multinational side.

Mr. Redway: Sit down!

Mr. Dingwall: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to participate in the debate?

Mr. Redway: Sure I would. Another filibuster by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Dingwall: It is not a filibuster. The Hon. Member should know that the Minister of corporate affairs took a full hour to explain how his Government wants to enhance, aid and abet the multinational corporations. That is what he did. I think I should get reasonable time to stand in my place and to speak on behalf of consumers of the country who are not being protected or enhanced by the Government of the day. They are being raped by the Government of the day. Money is being taken out of their pockets as a result of the actions that this Government will put in place. That is what will happen, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps I could be helpful to my colleague who is speaking on Bill C-22 and invite him to turn the page. He is repeating what he started out to stay at the beginning of his speech. He may need to go on to the next page.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) has the floor for the next three minutes for today.

Mr. Dingwall: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would have thought that Members opposite would have wanted to stand in their places and say: "Yes. We have finally seen the light. We now agree that Bill C-22 ought to be defeated". I thought the Hon. Member from British Columbia would have done that. But knowing the brainwashing, the arm-twisting that has gone on, knowing that government consultants have been working day and night, knowing that PMAC has been around to all the various Members, particularly members of the committee, and knowing that the pressure that the Prime Minister has placed on caucus members, I can understand—

Mr. Dick: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the Hon. Member aware that the only speech given in the House in the last 15 years which was longer than his was one given by the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez)? He was defeated in the election that followed his speech. We hope that the same thing will happen to the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). I encourage him to continue.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his observation. I suggest this to him. Perhaps he would avail me of the opportunity and we could have in my constituency, since he seems to be so concerned, a public forum and a debate with regard to the provisions of Bill C-22. Would the Hon. Member consent to that? I hope that he will.

• (1400)

In conclusion, this Government has abdicated its responsibilities to Canadian consumers. It has gone on its knees to the United States. It has refused to accept the fact that Canadian consumers are being hosed by multinational corporations as a result of Bill C-22.

I call it two o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being two o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--PRIVATE BILLS

[English]

NUCLEAR LIABILITY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved that Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act (limitation period), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act, deals specifically with Section 13 of the legislation that passed through this place in 1970, and was proclaimed in 1976. It is a reasonably easy Bill for Members of the House to understand, and it removes 21 words of the section which states:

> and in no case shall any such action be brought after ten years from the date the cause of action arose.

My Bill eliminates those words, which refer to the statutory limitation and which I think I will be able to demonstrate over the next 20 minutes are not in the interest of workers in the nuclear industry or of the Canadian public.

I began work on this Bill six years ago with the Canadian Environmental Law Association. Even though it took six years to reach the floor, I am pleased that it is finally here. I hope that members of the Liberal Party and whichever member of the Government speaks, will allow sufficient time for a vote to be taken on this, so it can go to committee and come back to the House to become law.

Currently there are 22 nuclear reactors operating or under construction in Canada in Ontario, Quebec, and New Brunswick. Bill C-215 is designed for the protection of workers in the nuclear industry, and those who might be advertently or inadvertently exposed to radiation. It is also for the protection of the rights of those who could be exposed should there be an accident at some point in relation to one of our nuclear facilities, or the waste that is stored at various sites in the country.

The legal liability question is an enormous one facing the country. It is presently set at $75 million, which as anybody in the House will know is completely insufficient to deal with even a very small amount of litigation. The 10-year statute of limitation on actions from the date of the cause of action, precludes the overwhelming majority of workers who would be exposed to a long period of low body loadings of radiation, or those who may be exposed to higher doses at some point from taking any action. As we have learned from a variety of studies I will be referring to, most cancers related to the nuclear industry appear more than 10 years after the date of exposure.

Earlier this year the U.S. Congress took this issue very seriously. They voted almost unanimously to raise the liability in relation to U.S. reactors from $705 million U.S. to $7 billion U.S. A recent study commissioned by the U.S. Government and conducted by Sandia National Laboratories found that the possible damage from a nuclear accident in most areas of the United States would likely run in the neighbourhood of $420 billion.

According to the Porter Royal Commission, the risk of a reactor accident in Canada is 100 times higher than the official industry estimates. The likelihood of a Candu accident in our country now runs to about one in every 500 years.

There has been growing concern and focus on this issue. There have been a number of lawsuits that I will be referring to later.

Earlier this year Dr. Harry Griffiths, Chief of Radiology at Toronto General Hospital, swore an affidavit before the Supreme Court of Ontario concluding that radiation from reactors can cause cancer as well as genetic mutation and birth defects.

The benefits of lifting the 10-year statutory limitation are for all Canadians, particularly in providing greater safety for the workers and those who could be exposed as a result of closer scrutiny both by inspectors and other agencies such as the insurance agency.

It would have been great, Mr. Speaker, if there had been no Chernobyl or Three Mile Island. But they have occurred, and it is time for Canada to start conducting the type of scrutiny that has long been required.

One of the documents that I will be referring to is the catalogue of medical effects from Hiroshima and Nagasaki. Although these studies are still incomplete, it is probably the most thorough medical study that has been done in the history of the nuclear age. It catalogues studies of intrauterine effects on children who were born with severe mental retardation, small head size, and so on, beginning at exposures as low as 50 rads. Growth retardation and cataracts have been tracked now for more than 40 years. Cancer and leukemia became noticeable and measurable by about 1950 in relation to those who were being tracked by medical experts. And by 1960, thyroid cancer started to be tracked. A number of other cancers have been tracked and catalogued during the 1960s, 1970s, and 1980s. It is quite clear from the long-term medical studies that have been done that many types of cancers related to radiation do not appear for 20, 30, or 40 years.

This experience led to an article in the August, 1985 Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists. It is a short quotation but it sums up the medical information from Hiroshima and Nagasaki. It reads:

> The experience of the atomic bomb survivors presents the most significant possibility that the exact relation between radiation dose and cancer incidence can be derived from human data.

A great deal of work has been done in this country recently in articles and other activities by David Poch, a lawyer who works for Energy Probe in Toronto. Mr. Poch made some important observations that were run in The Vancouver Sun on January 20, 1987, and I quote:

> Union Carbide, CP Rail, and other industrial giants involved in risky business face the sobering reality that if they harm a community or its inhabitants they're on the hook for the damage caused.
> That is to be expected. Canadian law—quite sensibly—makes industries liable for their negligence.
> But courtesy of our federal government, there is one glaring exception to the rule—the nuclear industry.
> Members of this fraternity can lie, cheat, steal, fabricate safety documents and engineering specifications, and knowingly sell faulty products to unsuspecting utilities without facing any civil liability—
> To compound the public's protection problems, Canadian insurance companies protect their solvency by excluding coverage for nuclear accidents in every homeowner insurance policy—
> An inevitable side effect of the act—
> That being the Nuclear Liability Act, Mr. Speaker,
> —because it lets the risk makers off the hook—is to remove important incentives to accident prevention. Not only do GE and Westinghouse have less incentive to be careful, but the insurance industry is less likely to scrutinize nuclear companies or to suggest safety improvements, as it does in other sectors.

Mr. Poch has hit the nail on the head as to the problems that are created by having a lack of scrutiny in the industry. The liability limits and the statute of limitations place all of the risks on the communities at large, the workers at large, and the Canadian taxpayers.

The possibility of willful deception is something that has to be addressed. Every other industry in Canada must face the reality that if it damages property and injures or kills Canadians, it is on the hook for the damage caused.

Some excellent studies have been done in relation to various recent nuclear disasters. Of course, the most recent on this continent was the Three Mile Island. Work has been done by a person by the name of Molholt in the United States. There is an excellent quote here in relation to studies that were done by a limited number of people where attempts were made by the nuclear industry and certain state agencies to discredit, but they are now recognized as being accurate. I would like to quote again from an article by David Poch that was published in Harrowsmith. It says:

> Molholt's work confirms a doubled infant mortality rate and a tripled neonatal hypothyroid rate in areas downwind. "We took 17 incidents of the metallic taste, burning skin and so on and plotted them against the wind rose—the chart of where the winds were blowing during the worst emissions," Molholt says. "Sixteen of the 17 cases correlated precisely to radiation releases from Three Mile Island. In the long run, it seems, people are the most reliable dosimeters."
> Marjorie Aamodt says, "The state held our study a year, doubled our statistical base, did all the manipulating they could and still came up with a cancer rate of almost 2 1/2 times normal."

It is clear that in the United States, the U.S. Congress has at least recognized the need for greater liability coverage. In this country, we have failed to recognize the need for a massive extension of the period within which lawsuits can be brought against an agency responsible for an accident because of the long latency period of cancers. The liability level in the United States was at $75 million. It is now at $7 billion U.S. per reactor. That is certainly an interesting distinction among the responses of respective legislatures to the rights of our respective citizens.

• (1410)

Surely industry must be held responsible for the risks that they create for the workers and for the public. Present financial and time limitations are more than just inadequate, they are counter-productive. Risk assessments should be done, for example, by the insurance industry and by federally appointed and hired inspectors who have a much broader and more significant mandate.

The consequences of a nuclear accident are no longer conjecture. As a result of the Chernobyl accident there are 31 dead and medical estimates of 10,000 serious genetic abnormalities and so on.

On May 9 of this year a federal judge in the State of Utah ruled on the U.S. Government's negligence in relation to open air tests of weapons done from 1951 to 1962. The judge, Bruce Jenkins, said the following:

> Employees of the Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), working in the 1950's at the Nevada test site, failed to warn the nearby populace adequately about the dangers of fallout exposure. They subsequently failed to monitor the fallout exposure adequately. They also failed to inform the populace adequately about "well-known and inexpensive methods" to minimize the damage once fallout exposure had occurred. "As a direct and proximate result of such negligent failures—(the government) unreasonably placed plaintiffs or their predecessors at risk of injury," the judge said. Only one of the ten cancer victims survived.

On April 27 of this year, precisely one year to the day after the Chernobyl accident, Energy Probe and 11 others filed an application in the Supreme Court of Ontario asking the court to strike down the Nuclear Liability Act for many of the reasons that I have put on the record today. I would like to quote the remarks of Norman Rubin on the day of the filing of that suit. He said:

> We believe that by reducing or eliminating the nuclear industry's civil liability for accidents, this law removes an important incentive for the industry to reduce the risk of a Canadian Chernobyl. The industry keeps telling us 'It can't happen here,' but they insist on financial protection just in case. We want them to put their money where their mouth is.

Energy Probe alleges that the Nuclear Liability Act reduces security of the person and denies victims of a nuclear accident equality before the law. Joining with Energy Probe in the effort are George Martin from the Nuclear Insurance Association of Canada, Dr. Douglas Alton, staff radiologist from Toronto, Dr. Rosalie Bertell, Dr. Ursula Franklin, Dr. Harry Griffiths, Dr. John Hepburn, Dr. Dermot McLoughlin, Dr. Stan Segel, Dr. Hari Sharma, Dr. David Suzuki and Dr. Lynn Trainor, all of whom have backgrounds in one way or another with chemistry, physics, radiology or genetics. They join in challenging the propriety and appropriateness of the Nuclear Liability Act as it now stands.

The lawyer representing the case is Clayton Ruby, certainly one of Canada's most brilliant and best known barristers. His remarks are worth having on the record as well. I quote:

> This law has created one set of rules for the nuclear industry and a different set for everyone else. It allows GE or Westinghouse to supply nuclear plants with defective parts without any financial liability whatsoever should those parts fail and cause an accident. Every other industry is forced to stand behind its products. But in the case of the nuclear industry, where an accident could kill thousands of people and cause billions in property damage, the public has been stripped of its right to its day in court.

In Mr. Ruby's view, this loss of fundamental justice is contrary to Canada's Constitution and should be struck down. Once that happens it is anyone's guess whether the industry will want to stay in operation.

> The industry has always claimed the public was irrational to fear reactor accidents, and it may decide to show the world that there's nothing to fear by putting its own money on the line. Or, as I think more likely, the nuclear industry will conclude that a serious accident is too likely to bankrupt the industry, and turn its formidable skills to more productive uses.

Even as recently as yesterday we saw what kind of response the nuclear industry makes to concerns raised, even by its own watchdog agency. Earlier this year, in a document drafted by Atomic Energy of Canada, federal regulators made a number of recommendations which are now being pooh-poohed by the nuclear industry as being unnecessary.

However, allow me to point out the following recommendations that were made. The document shows that concerns about the safety of Candu reactors were raised by the Atomic Energy Control Board, the agency charged with watching over Canada's nuclear industry. The document, titled Current Safety and Licensing Issues and presented to a meeting earlier this year, recommended that the Canadian nuclear industry make 13 changes, including additional complex research into reactor behaviour, installation of extra safety equipment, making minor but significant changes to reactor designs, and changing some operating procedures.

For example, the federal regulators are proposing the installation of new equipment to prevent the build-up of hydrogen that they say could cause a fire at the Gentilly-2 reactor operated by Hydro-Quebec and the Point Lepreau reactor operated by New Brunswick Power Corporation.

However, the nuclear industry, through Roger Humphries, an official with Atomic Energy's Candu designed headquarters responds as follows:

> If we're going to survive as a commercial entity, we have to be careful not to increase the cost of our product without increasing the safety.

When it comes to the issue of safety, if the regulatory body is making recommendations that it feels are necessary for the safety of the workers in the facility or for the communities nearby, then surely there is an incumbent responsibility on those in charge of the Candu reactor sites to ensure that those changes are promptly and properly implemented, not set aside.

The stall on this rather simple amendment to remove the statute of limitations of 10 years is ludicrous. The workers at those sites are provided with all kinds of protective equipment and the body dose loadings which they get are generally very low and over a very long period of time. The evidence with regard to the latency period of cancers now demonstrates that the kinds of cancers which those workers might get would appear over a very long period of time. That existing clause precludes them from ever having a day in court or any right to financial compensation to assist them or their families in the future.

In terms of accidents it is very clear that that clause should be removed because it would be almost impossible for those exposed at the time of an accident to have their case properly heard before a court. In fact, I agree with the arguments of Mr. Ruby and Energy Probe that the Nuclear Liability Act is contrary to the intent of our Charter.

This matter has been dealt with in a variety of ways, perhaps most energetically by the Canadian Environmental Law Association. However, it has been allowed to lag seriously. I have a letter of September of 1981 from Marc Lalonde, the then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who wrote to Ms. G. Patterson of the Canadian Environmental Law Association advising CELA that he, as Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, supported the proposed change that I am introducing here today, but said the following:

> Dear Ms. Patterson:
> Thank you for your letter of July 22, 1981 on the subject of revisions to the Nuclear Liability Act. I can assure you that we have not been neglecting this subject and in fact have come to the conclusion that we agree with the intent of your proposed amendment.
> However, our experience of operating with this Act for the past five years has shown up other areas where amendment is equally desirable. Discussions have been initiated by the AECB with other affected federal departments aimed at pulling together a complete package of these proposed amendments.
> As for the time at which these would be introduced to the House of Commons it would be misleading to be very optimistic when I consider the history of the original Act and the extensive legislation program already ahead of us.

That was six years ago that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and his Department agreed that the step about which we are talking today was necessary. If it was necessary six years ago, it is even more necessary today. I think the epidemiological evidence which I have put very briefly before the House, the studies of the effects of Hiroshima, Nagasaki, Chernobyl, Three Mile Island, and the problems that this entire Act faces in being contrary to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, do not leave too many arguments, I would hope, to be dispelled either by the Government or the Liberal Members who might speak.

I hope that during this hour, we will have an opportunity to vote and send this Bill to committee so that something good can be done for Canadians. I hope we will be able to take something out of a piece of legislation passed by this House in order to make the country safer for the workers and the public generally.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me to speak on Private Member's Bill C-215 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act (limitation period).

Those in the House, in my constituency and in the media who know me will be astounded to realize that I have become an instant fresh-frozen expert on nuclear energy. However, that seems to be a lot better than becoming an instantly fresh-fried victim of a nuclear accident.

The survivors of Chernobyl and Three Mile Island know that. Those Canadians, including myself, who are almost frantic about nuclear energy or who have heard and read about its frightening powers, those of us living and of future generations, can well sympathize with the thrust of the Hon. Member's Bill.

As an example of this, the fear of radiation in any form scares the hell out of my own family. Only this past week, I convinced my wife that a microwave oven was safe. As a result, the cubic-foot monster will enter our home later this afternoon.

If my 15-year-old son Liam were standing in my place right now, I am sure he would urge the banning of the entire Atomic Energy Control Board and would shield himself from everyone who comes in contact with the Canadian nuclear industry. I hasten to add that that will not be necessary. I hope to assure my son and others that they should not over-react.

I can understand why Canadians might wish to over-react concerning the safety of nuclear energy, but we have come to know both the benefits and the risks of nuclear energy. The benefits of economical, reliable, convenient nuclear-generated electricity must be utilized in cognizance of the related risks, as we have been reminded by the Chernobyl incident. We as legislators must ensure that Canadians enjoy a very favourable risk-benefit balance by providing effective legislation to both ensure the safety and security of nuclear energy and to provide for emergency planning and liability compensation should that ever be required. That is always a concern and a worry.

The Atomic Energy Control Act constitutes and empowers the Atomic Energy Control Board to ensure that nuclear energy is exploited with careful and thorough consideration of the health, safety and security interests of all Canadians. In this respect, the record of the Atomic Energy Control Board and of the regulated Canadian nuclear industry is exemplary. In the unlikely event—and I would urge the Hon. Member for Skeena to listen to that word "unlikely"—that anything should occur in Canada, the Nuclear Liability Act provides the means of compensating Canadians and neighbouring Americans in the case of claims resulting from personal injury and property damage. As the Hon. Member will be aware, since its implementation in 1976, there has not been a single claim made under the Nuclear Liability Act.

The Nuclear Liability Act, as are similar Acts in other nuclear nations, is based on the concept of absolute liability of the nuclear plant operator. The operator is absolutely liable for damages no matter what the cause of the incident giving rise to the damages. Such an approach avoids long delays in the addressing of claims as may result from legal proceedings to determine responsibility and liability for the incident giving rise to the damages. This absolute liability extends up to a limit of $75 million for each designated nuclear installation and extends certain time limits with respect to the bringing of claims under the Act.

Such dollar and time limitations are necessary to define clearly the boundaries of the operator's absolute liability. Claims in excess of $75 million give rise to the establishment of a nuclear damage claims commission which addresses such claims and which may recommend their compensation from the Consolidated Revenue Fund. How much more justice could there be for Canadians than that? The absolute liability of the operator and time limitations to that absolute liability were designated to create a liability structure which fairly and effectively serves the interests of both the potential claimant and the nuclear plant operator.

The Nuclear Liability Act provides for several time limitations on the bringing of actions. No person may bring an action for injury or property damage more than three years after the earliest date upon which the person had knowledge or ought reasonably to have had knowledge of the injury or damage. In the case of a claim for loss of life, it may not be brought more than three years after the death of the person. Where conclusive evidence of the death of the person is not available, the claim may not be brought more than three years after a court order is made presuming the person to be dead. However, in no case may a claim be made more than 10 years from the date the cause of action arose.

In summary, there is an absolute limit of 10 years from the time that the damage or injury occurred and a limit of three years from the time a person knew or ought to have known of the injury or damage for the initiation of a claim under the Act. It is the 10-year limitation from the time the damage or injury occurred which is the subject of the Bill we are debating this afternoon.

At issue is the proposition that a 10-year limitation period is not adequate for the manifestation and identification of longer-term radiation-induced injuries such as cancer. Indeed, it is generally accepted and medical experience confirms that a long period of time may elapse between a serious radiation exposure and the manifestation of a radiation-induced injury such as cancer. This period of time may be as long as 30 years or more and is quite likely to exceed the 10-year limitation period currently defined by Section 13 of the Nuclear Liability Act. Consequently, persons who may be injured by radiation exposure resulting from a nuclear incident may be excluded from the bringing of claims by the latency period of the radiation-induced injury such as cancer.

The Hon. Member's Bill proposes not that the 10-year limitation period be extended but rather that it be abolished completely. As such, the proposal overlooks the fact that there must be a fair and just balance struck between the interests of the injured claimant and those of the absolutely liable nuclear plant operator. Although abolishing the 10-year limitation period would be very much to the advantage of potential claimants, it may significantly and unfairly extend the absolute liability of the nuclear plant operator and leave him in an open-ended situation against which he may not be able to indemnify himself.

In the interests of balance, fairness and justice to the potential claimant and the nuclear plant operator, I believe that the period of limitation should be finite and should be set at 30 years. In view of the current medical knowledge and experience in the field of radiation-induced injury, this would permit injured parties to lay claims in most cases. Should any potential claims be identified after the 30-year period, they would be expected to be very few in number and could be dealt with through the normal court process. Such a 30-year limitation period has already been adopted in several other nuclear liability jurisdictions including West Germany, Austria, Belgium and Denmark. In addition, the U.S. has already increased its absolute liability period from 10 to 20 years and this is expected to increase further in the future to the international norm of 30 years.

I believe we should defeat this motion. I believe a fair, balanced and effective approach would be to extend the current 10-year limitation period to 30 years. It would well serve the interests of both the potential claimant and the nuclear plant operator and would make our legislation consistent with the developing international norm.

Furthermore, and in conclusion, I believe such an amendment would be made as part of an over-all review of the Nuclear Liability Act currently being completed by the interdepartmental working group referred to earlier. Such an approach will ensure that the review and amendment of the Nuclear Liability Act is done in a comprehensive and consistent manner so that the effectiveness of this very important piece of legislation will be enhanced to the greatest possible degree.

I thank the Hon. Member for Skeena for his earlier comments and I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to speak on behalf of the amendment suggested by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), and to support it completely.

I welcome the statement made by the government Member who said that the Government favours a 30-year liability period. If the Government is of that mind, then why not send this Bill to committee? If a modification has to be made, I am sure the Hon. Member for Skeena would at least consider it. Anything suggested by the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) would be preferable to the situation that exists with the Nuclear Liability Act as it presently stands.

No one argues with the fact that we have not had a claim under this Act and we all consider ourselves fortunate. However, that is no reason for delaying the protection of Canadians in the future. After all, we have not had a nuclear war yet, but we still have billions of dollars being spent on deterrent forces.

We have to be careful that we do not become blasé about the potential danger of a nuclear disaster originating at one of our nuclear stations. Our protection under this Act is woefully inadequate as it presently stands. As the Hon. Member for Skeena said, the maximum liability is $75 million. This is not enough by any stretch of the imagination to protect the safety of Canadians. No one will be able to be compensated adequately if they are injured in any way in a nuclear accident. Surely they are entitled to more protection than the Act presently gives them.

The Hon. Member's motion proposes:

> —and in no case shall any such action be brought after ten years from the date the cause of action arose.

I want to speak to that from two points of view. First, the 10-year period is woefully inadequate, as the Hon. Member said. He acknowledged that the Government is considering extending it. In the U.K., for instance, there is a 30-year period. The U.S. has increased it to 20 years or three years from the time the injury became apparent, whichever occurs first. There is now legislation before Congress to remove the 20-year limitation and make it three years from the time the injury became apparent. That is a very significant point. As has been said here today, it may be years before an injury resulting from a nuclear accident becomes apparent. It could be as long as 30 to 40 years according to the testimony of experts in this field. I would say that it is compulsory that we consider this point today and send this Bill to committee.

What is our position in Canada? Not only do we have an inadequate period of time, 10 years, but it is 10 years from the date the cause of action arose. We know it could be 30 or 40 years after the accident before a problem showed itself. Obviously the way it is now is inadequate because people will not have the opportunity to make a claim after they become aware of the injury. Certainly the Government is studying this question, but how long do we have to wait? On May 12 I asked Mr. Robert Blackburn, Director of Planning and Administration Branch of the Atomic Energy Control Board about this and he said:

> The Act provides a 10-year limitation period as Mr. MacLellan refers to. This is one of the issues currently being addressed . . . It is a generally accepted fact that the latency period for radiation-induced cancer can be considerably longer than 10 years. It could be 30 years in some cases. The interdepartmental working group is very much aware of that. We are making use of the medical information. That is one of the key issues being reviewed and we hope to make a recommendation.

When I asked when we could expect such a recommendation he said:

> We expect to have a report which would include that recommendation before the Atomic Energy Control Board, the five-member board, at its next meeting on June 17.

We are now past that date by over two months and the matter remains unresolved. We cannot continue to have this stalling on this very important matter. We have to come to grips with it. This Bill must go to committee and I support the Hon. Member completely.

There are others who have said, "Well, we have limitation periods for all injuries". The statute of limitations says six years. That is for personal injuries which arise through the normal course of events, through unforeseen situations. Here we have a government-sponsored energy creating device which has been put in place in the interests of the Canadian people. This is not a hit or miss situation. This is an organized program. As such, the people of Canada have the right to be completely protected from any ill effects which may arise therefrom.

It is not sufficient, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth said, to say we need a definitive amount so the producers of nuclear power can be assured of a maximum amount for which they would be liable. All nuclear stations in this country are run by Governments. Governments have no right to put a price tag on the safety of Canadians. Governments have an obligation to protect Canadians as much as they possibly can. If something goes amiss, the health of Canadians is put at risk or in fact damaged, then Government has an obligation to compensate these people as much as it possibly can. It is not right to place a maximum of $75 million on that compensation.

We have talked recently about the defects of the Candu system as detected by the Atomic Energy Control Board. We have talked about the fact that AECL has been reluctant to make changes that would fix these defects. In this day and age it is incredible that we would be even having a dialogue about this. They say we have to make changes to correct the defects and we are saying we do not think these changes are necessary. This is all in the spirit of negotiation. It is in the spirit of risking the safety of Canadians, that is what it is. This seems to be the thrust right through the whole piece. The safety of Canadians is not important. Money is more important. Yet money will never compensate Canadians for a nuclear accident.

We have to be cognizant of the fact that such a situation can occur. Not only do Canadians deserve reasonable compensation but it is important that the Government recognize its obligation. Only through doing so with a reasonable liability period and a reasonable maximum liability will the Government take as seriously as it should its obligation to make the nuclear system in Canada as safe as it can possibly be.

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I listened to the speech by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) as well as that given by my colleague. The Hon. Member for Skeena quoted a letter by Mr. Ruby of Energy Probe, and quoted another letter in which it is alleged that the suppliers of material for nuclear reactors in Canada and, I assume, in the United States, are lying and deceitful, that the merchandise they are selling is faulty. I think those allegations, which were not made by the Member for Skeena, but which he read into the record, are most serious. If he believes that that information and those allegations are correct, then I, as a Member from British Columbia which has a well known stance on nuclear reactors, would urge him to bring that information to the attention of the Minister responsible and, indeed, to all his colleagues in the House. If such an allegation is correct, it means that we are playing with the lives of Canadians and we must either prove or put to rest those allegations once and for all.

The intent of the Bill is to expand the time frame of liability with respect to exposure to radiation. That is not an unusual request. The evidence introduced by the Member for Skeena would suggest that there is a very good read out on that disastrous occurrence at Hiroshima.

I suggest, however, that there is a difference between the radiation impact of that nuclear explosion and the events of Chernobyl or what might flow from a minor but nevertheless deadly leak at some other reactor.

When considering the time factor of 30 or 40 years, we must also consider a number of other factors, including the protective clothing that is worn today. For instance, in the field of radiology in the medical profession, no longer do we see those who use fluoroscopy not wearing protective gloves. The loss of the tips of fingers was not unusual. I had a professor in Toronto who had lost the tips of all his fingers from fluoroscopy.

The blush of blood vessels in the face is another example of what happened to physicians who were not fully aware of the hazards of radiation. The protective apparel worn by physicians and technicians in radiology today has yet to prove whether it is serving its full purpose.

On the other hand, how does one demonstrate that a CA of the lungs or CA of the prostate is due to radiation or due to an aging process, taking into account the age of the patient? We have to understand when that 30-year period will begin, in terms of the age of the patient.

I agree with my colleague that a 30-year limitation is a consideration we should study. I understand that the Government is in fact in the process of discussing that very matter.

Increasingly in Canada, we have come to know both the benefits and risks of nuclear energy. The benefits of economical, reliable, convenient, nuclear-generated electricity must be utilized in cognizance of the related risks. We have been reminded of that by the recent incident at Chernobyl. We as legislators must ensure that Canadians enjoy a very favourable risk-benefit balance by providing effective legislation to both ensure the safety and security of nuclear energy and to provide for emergency planning and liability compensation should that ever be required.

British Columbia is blessed with an abundance of hydro-electric power and the capacity to generate hydro-electric power by virtue of our massive lakes, rivers, streams and mountains. I believe we are also blessed by the fact that almost unanimously, the people of British Columbia have rejected the nuclear power source.

Of course, that is not always possible in reality. Therefore, we have seen the need for a CANDU reactor in areas of Canada where no other option is available other than thermal generation through coal, which we know produces acid rain.

The Atomic Energy Control Act empowers the Atomic Energy Control Board to ensure that nuclear energy is exploited with careful and thorough consideration of the health, safety and security interests of all Canadians. It is in that respect that I am particularly concerned about the opening remarks of the Hon. Member for Skeena with respect to equipment, parts and parts replacement. In the unlikely event that a major nuclear accident should occur in Canada, the Nuclear Liability Act provides the means of compensating Canadians and neighbouring Americans in the case of claims resulting from personal injury and property damage. Since its implementation in 1976, there has not been a single claim made under the Nuclear Liability Act. One has to be concerned about the limit of $75 million when one considers the possible impact upon the United States. We saw the impact of a combination of bad judgment and ignorance which resulted in that terrible incident at Chernobyl. It displays the possibility that such an accident could have a spill-over effect to another country.

The Hon. Member's Bill proposes not that the 10-year limitation period be extended, but rather that it be abolished completely. As such, the proposal overlooks the fact that there must be a fair and just balance struck between the interests of the injured claimant and those of the absolutely liable nuclear plant operator. Although abolishing the 10-year limitation period would be very much to the advantage of potential claimants, it may significantly and unfairly extend the absolute liability of the nuclear plant operator and leave him in an open-ended situation against which he may not be able to indemnify himself. That is why I made reference to the age of the person when exposure might occur.

I recognize that the Hon. Member's suggestion is a possibility, but a balance must be struck. A possible fair, balanced and effective approach may be to extend the current 10-year limitation period to 30 years. This would well serve the interests of both the potential claimant and the nuclear plant operator and would make our Canadian nuclear liability legislation consistent with the developing international norm. Further, I believe that such an amendment should be made as part of the over-all review of the Nuclear Liability Act currently being completed by the interdepartmental working group, which was referred to earlier. It would be useful for the House to examine carefully the results of that report. Such an approach will ensure that review and amendment of the Nuclear Liability Act is done in a comprehensive and consistent manner so that the effectiveness of this very important piece of legislation will be enhanced to the greatest possible degree.

I thank the Hon. Member for Skeena for drawing this matter to our attention. I am confident that the committee will handle this in the most appropriate way.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, as you know, I welcome this opportunity to discuss Bill C-215, an Act to amend the Nuclear Liability Act. However, since in fact, several Members examined the Bill and have prepared their comments, I would like to ask your permission to yield to the Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards), who also worked on this Bill. I will only comment, for the time being, that I do not think it would be appropriate to adopt this legislation, first of all because the impact may be significant within a period of more than ten and not more than thirty years. I do not think it is particularly urgent to adopt this Bill today. I know a committee of experts is now working on recommendations for the Government. I would now suggest that the Hon. Member for Edmonton South be allowed to present his own comments.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) for his kindness.

I am very pleased to have this opportunity to debate the Bill of my honourable friend and so-called cousin. The Government acknowledges that a few of the existing provisions of the Nuclear Liability Act are of some concern to various parties. Many Members know that a federal Government interministerial task force is examining some aspects of the legislation. That being so, it would be premature to endorse Bill C-215 at this time.

The Nuclear Liability Act, adopted in 1970 and proclaimed in 1976, provides for funds to offer financial compensation to citizens for injury or damage resulting from an incident in a nuclear plant, a very unlikely occurrence.

• (1450)

[English]

The Act alters the normal burden of proof for a claimant by establishing that a duty is owed by the operator, thus eliminating the claimant's need to prove negligence to claim for damages. A claimant need prove only that the injury or damage was caused by the nuclear incident for which the operator is liable, thereby avoiding much unnecessary litigation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, part of the intent of the Act is to ensure that funds are available to provide financial compensation to third parties for injuries or damages suffered as a result of a "nuclear incident". At the same time, the Act provides protection to the operators by limiting their related liability. It limits the total amount payable by the operator in respect of damages arising from a particular nuclear incident to $75 million. Larger amounts may be authorized by Parliament.

In addition, the Nuclear Liability Act protects persons other than operators. For instance, it protects the suppliers of fuel and parts used in nuclear reactors by restricting to the operator any liability due to a nuclear incident and by preventing the operator from taking legal action against these other people with respect to such liability.

When the Governor in Council is of the opinion that it would be in the public interest to provide special measures for compensation following a nuclear incident, Part II of the Act becomes operative and a Nuclear Damage Claims Commission is established. The commission is empowered to examine and settle claims resulting from a nuclear incident and which are transmitted by the Governor in Council.

[English]

The Atomic energy Control Board administers the Act. The board designates the nuclear installations that are subject to the Act, determines who is the operator of the nuclear installation by issuing a licence pursuant to the Atomic Energy Control Act, and determines the amount of basic insurance fixed with the approval of the Treasury Board.

At the time it was proclaimed in 1976, the suggestion was made that the Act be reviewed after five years to determine if any changes would be desirable in light of experience in its administration. In 1982, such a review was begun, even though there had not been a claim under the Act.

An interdepartmental working group, as we are aware, consisting of representatives from Justice, Finance, Treasury Board, insurance, Energy, Mines and Resources and the Atomic Energy Control Board first developed a broad-ranging series of questions concerning the Act and then formulated replies to the questions. These replies were not necessarily the final opinion of the working group. However, they were designed to stimulate public response. The resulting consultative document was issued for public comment, and a number of replies were received. None raised questions or issues not already considered by the working group.

As a result of the public input, the working group is currently reconsidering the original series of answers to its questions with a view to making recommendations to the President of the Atomic Energy Control Board later this year.

In its final report, it is likely that the working group will conclude that the Nuclear Liability Act is conceptionally sound and that its purpose and scope are generally still appropriate. However, a number of contentious questions will still have to be addressed, including whether the $75 million limit on the amount of prescribed insurance is still appropriate, and should the limitation period for claims be extended from 10 years to 30 years in order to include cases of delayed cancer, many of which will not appear for 10 years. Should the Act continue to cover normal emissions or should it be confined to nuclear accidents? Should self insurance be allowed under the Act? These are fundamental questions which I am sure my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena, is most interested to know the answers to.

In their final report the task force will probably conclude that the Nuclear Liability Act was properly drafted and that its purpose and scope generally remain relevant. However a number of contentious questions will have to be answered, for instance:

-Is the $75-million insurance coverage provided under the legislation still adequate?

-Should the 10-year time limit for filing claims be raised to 30 years to take into account latent cancer cases, many of which do not become discernible during the first ten years?

[English]

Mr. Edwards: I am sure that Hon. Members of the House will agree that since the matter of extending the current limitation period for claims set out in the Nuclear Liability Act is already under examination, I say with great regret that it would seem inappropriate to support Bill C-215 at this point in time.

The Minister, I am told, awaits with interest the recommendations of the Atomic Energy Control Board. While it is acknowledged that subsequent recommendations by the board to the Government for amendments to the Act may present concerns to some parties, you can be assured, Mr. Speaker, that the interests and safety of the Canadian public will be of paramount importance throughout this entire process.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 42(1) the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

COMMUNICATIONS AND CULTURE

PRESENTATION OF EIGHTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture has the honour of tabling its Eighth Report.

[English]

Your committee has considered the Order in Council nominations of Louis R. Sherman to the post of full-time member and vice-chairman of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission and Beverley J. Oda to the post of full-time member of the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission. They were referred to the committee on June 26, 1987 and August 13, 1987, respectively.

Your committee has examined the qualifications of these persons and finds them to be competent to perform the duties of their posts.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today it is again my duty to present a petition concerning the Government's plan to tax food, and I am delighted to hear that the Conservative Caucus also objects to this tax on food and has joined us in trying to persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to change his mind and drop this regressive concept. The petition reads as follows:

Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

And whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life and imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youths and students;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

[English]

OPPOSITION TO NEW SYSTEM OF TAXATION OF NORTHERN BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by residents of northern Manitoba. In their petition, the undersigned citizens of Canada avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a petition. In the opinion of the petitioners the new system of tax deductions for northern residents has been unfairly applied leaving out many northern communities such as Thompson and Mabowden, and that the taxing of northern benefits is heavy-handed and complicated, taxing away benefits intended to compensate employees for loss of other amenities.

The petitioners call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to reconsider the system of tax measures when studying tax reform as promised in the Budget.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions. The first petition deals with the Post Office and indicates that the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs, deterioration of service of the Post Office and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadians. It goes on to outline this in more detail.

• (1110)

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of the Canada Post Corporation and to abandon its policy of closing rural post offices and cancelling rural postal routes.

I have petitions which measure approximately two inches in height, petitions which are printed on legal-sized paper. I wish to make note of the fact that we have received at least 15,000 petitions from the Province of British Columbia, as well as other petitions from the rest of Canada. The petitions are still coming in. I hope that the Government is listening.

CANADA POST—TWICE DAILY DELIVERY IN DOWNTOWN WINNIPEG

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the second petition deals with a more local matter. It is from Winnipeg. It indicates that Canada Post Corporation plans to cut delivery of mail to businesses in downtown Winnipeg to once a day instead of maintaining the present practice of twice daily delivery. The volume of mail delivered to these businesses is on the increase. Twice daily mail delivery is needed to ensure efficient operation of the businesses in downtown Winnipeg. It is unacceptable that postal service be reduced at a time when postal rates have been increased.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to insist that Canada Post Corporation continue to provide twice daily mail delivery to businesses in downtown Winnipeg.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all the questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration from Friday, August 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Minister intervened with remarks regarding the amendments put forward by the Upper Chamber. I want to take a few moments today to share with you, Mr. Speaker, some of my thoughts with regard to the Minister's expressed statements, as well as his sentiments, with regard to the acceptance or lack of acceptance by Canadians concerning the formulation of Bill C-22.

It is somewhat ironic that the Minister's statements on that particular day for whatever reasons, intentional or otherwise, did not focus on the fact that six provincial Legislatures were against Bill C-22 and in favour of the amendments put forward by the Upper House. The Minister went on at length to explain that in his view countless Canadians from coast to coast were in support of Bill C-22. What the Minister failed to do was to give a great deal of specifics to that point, and I make one example. He made reference to the fact that Dalhousie University is in support of Bill C-22. Contrary to what the Minister has told the House, we had a very reputable and distinguished Canadian from that university appear before our committee who clearly spelled out his objections to the Bill. I believe it is on the record of the committee. He made some very sincere recommendations on how to improve the Bill, how it ought to be changed. Nevertheless, the distinct impression was left by the Minister of corporate affairs that that particular university was in complete harmony with Bill C-22.

Early on in the debate, particularly at committee stage, Canadians were told by the present Minister of corporate interests that the benefits to Canadians with regard to research and development would be overwhelming, indeed. I am trying to paraphrase the words the Minister used but I think the gist of his thesis at that time was that all provinces and territories would benefit substantially from the promises—and I would like to underline the word "promises"—from the multinational corporations as they relate to research and development. Unfortunately, if one were to accept in a hypothetical sense their promises as being guarantees and then look at the abstract as to where the moneys would go or not go, I think Hon. Members would readily agree that the economic benefits, if those were to occur, would certainly not be spread in an equal way across the country.

I was waiting for the Minister to stand in his place as the Minister of corporate interests and tell us the number of new jobs and the amount of research that would take place in the Province of Newfoundland. I thought he might have a comment or two with regard to how those alleged economic benefits would help the community of Corner Brook, Newfoundland. I thought he might stand in his place and talk about the number of new jobs that would be created in Stephenville, Newfoundland. I thought that perhaps he might have been a little bit more explicit in telling us the plans that his friends in the multinational corporations have for erecting new companies in Goose Bay, Labrador, or in St. John's, Newfoundland. But, for whatever reasons, whether it be with respect to time or his refusal to acknowledge that no benefits, or very few, will accrue to that province, the Minister of corporate interests decided not to share with us where those benefits would go in the Province of Newfoundland.

Even better, I was hoping that the Minister, who has said many, many times that economic benefits would accrue across the country, would tell the good people of Lunenburg County, Cumberland Country, Cape Breton County, Guysborough, Halifax and Pictou Counties in Nova Scotia about those benefits and the new jobs, and how many would be created in their province. When we consider New Brunswick I was waiting with bated breath to hear about the number of jobs that would be created in that province. We know that because of the day of reckoning—election day—which is so imminent in the Province of New Brunswick, the Minister would want to do something for his colleagues in that province and tell us where the research and development dollars will go, the amount of dollars and the number of jobs that will be created.

We were wondering how many jobs would be created in Westmorland—Kent and in Moncton, how many would be created around that very distinguished and prestigious university, Mount Allison University, and how many would be created in Saint John, New Brunswick and other communities throughout the province. But, again, the Minister of corporate interests was not able, or shall we say not willing, to share with the House where this new grandiose sum of money would be invested in the Province of New Brunswick.

With three elected Members of Parliament in Prince Edward Island out of a total of four we were hoping that the Minister would avail himself of the opportunity to say to the people of Atlantic Canada that there might not be much in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, but perhaps there would be a tremendous number of economic benefits in Prince Edward Island. I checked the press releases that had gone out and I did not find that the Hon. Member from Charlottetown, or the Hon. Member for Malpèque (Mr. Gass), or the other Member of Parliament from P.E.I., had made any announcements to their constituents in terms of the benefits of research and development, jobs, and economic spin-off. Perhaps some will yet come. The Minister has previously changed his mind on certain benefits of Bill C-22, perhaps he will change it again. The Minister will not guarantee, but he will promise that perhaps something may occur.

I thought that the Minister would have availed himself of the opportunity to spell out to the people of British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba where the benefits would accrue in those provinces.

There is a great university in Brandon, Manitoba. Mr. Stanley Knowles, is the Chancellor of that university, a distinguished honourary Member of the House, and former member of the New Democratic Party. I thought that the Government would have spelled out the opportunities for their colleagues and friends in Manitoba and where the benefits would accrue in that province. There are very few, if any, benefits if one assumes that the promises would be realized, or that the promises would eventually become guarantees.

We have heard a great deal in terms of new jobs in Ontario and Quebec. I do not think that any Member begrudges those two provinces the new jobs, new wealth, and economic spin-offs that may accrue. What is disturbing is that it is a mere promise, there are no guarantees. There are no guarantees on the level of expenditure for research and development, with regard to the number of jobs or with regard to the types of jobs that may be created. We are asking the Government to put in some guarantees to legitimize some of its more grandiose sentiments, and to convince the Canadian public that what it is doing for the multinational corporations will bring some economic benefits to Canadians.

The Government is giving one element of the pharmaceutical industry an extended monopoly provision for approximately 10 years. The fact is that from 1969 to 1983 the pharmaceutical industry in Canada was the most profitable of any manufacturing sector in our economy. During that period the growth in employment of the manufacturing sector was approximately 4 per cent. In the pharmaceutical industry it was 29 per cent. The pharmaceutical sector in Canada had astronomical profits in the 300 to 400 percentage range. That was operating under the old law. Now the Government wants to give the pharmaceutical sector a further 10-year period of monopoly.

There is something wrong when all that is given away, and in return Canadians only get promises of additional research and development, additional jobs, and that prices will not rise. We also get a promise from the Minister that benefits will be distributed equitably throughout the country. We also get a promise from the Minister that as a result there will be more research and development in Canada. But where are the guarantees? Are Canadians to give up a good system in return for mere promises? Surely the Minister must realize, notwithstanding his desire, tenacity, and enthusiasm to satisfy the interests of his friends in the multinational corporations, that he has a further, if not greater obligation to consumers and the public that he must have a better deal, a better package for Canadians.

This morning I raised my concern about the fact that six provincial governments are opposing and want further changes to Bill C-22. I had hoped that the Minister would have taken their concerns very seriously. The Minister has made repeated reference to the Province of Quebec. The Minister states that there is a resolution from the Quebec Legislature which asks that we pass Bill C-22 quickly, because it believes much research and development, and jobs will be created in that province. I have no desire to enter into a confrontation with my colleagues from Quebec, regardless of what side of the House they are on. But I say to them, through you, Sir, and to members of the Government, that we on this side of the House want to see research and development, and jobs in the Province of Quebec, but we also want to see guarantees and undertakings by those corporations that things will be done as promised, and that Canadians will not have to pay higher drug prices in return for that mere promise. That is our substantive argument with regard to Bill C-22 and how it affects the Province of Quebec.

Surely as Canadian politicians and legislators we want to ensure that Canada has the best public policy affecting pharmaceuticals. Perhaps I am wrong and there are some Members who do not want that. Perhaps Members from British Columbia do not want to have research and development in their province; perhaps they do not want to have more jobs. I do not know, but I do not think that. The fact remains that all of us have to be concerned with the entire national picture. I would hope that our colleagues in Ontario would not expect the Province of Newfoundland, and the taxpayers of that province to pay higher drug prices for their families, their children, their senior citizens, and a variety of citizens on the mere promise and whim that at some future time in the 10-year period there may be more research and development, and jobs created elsewhere.

I think it is evident that as it now stands, the Conservative Government's public policy is shady and does not serve the best interests of Canadians. When we examine the statements of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about reconciliation and better federal-provincial relations, what better judge of the success of those goals than having six provincial Governments saying that the Government's public policy does not serve the best interests of Canadians? We must consider those representations by the provinces seriously.

Furthermore, we should consider what we heard from the Province of Saskatchewan. Initially, Saskatchewan was publicly opposed to Bill C-22. There followed a provincial election and the awarding of $1 billion for agriculture programs to that province. Then mystically, Saskatchewan came onside to support Bill C-22. I do not know what brought about that change and I am not saying that $1 billion from the federal treasury convinced Saskatchewan to support Bill C-22. Others have suggested precisely that, but I am not. However, we witnessed a totally different phenomenon at the committee hearings when we were greeted by a senior deputy minister from the Province of Saskatchewan who placed so many qualifications on Bill C-22 for it to be improved in various ways that any logical person could see that Saskatchewan was reverting back to its original position of opposing Bill C-22. Quite rightly, of course, the astute deputy minister had to announce that government policy was to support Bill C-22 but with some 11 pre-conditions in terms of changing the legislation.

Let us consider Nova Scotia. I do not use that province as one of those opposing the Bill but let us consider what happened in that case. The Minister of Health for the province stated that it would cost Nova Scotians some additional $25 million.

Mr. Robichaud: It is not supposed to cost anything.

Mr. Dingwall: The Member is absolutely right. The Minister of corporate interests told us the other day that it would not cost Canadians anything. But that is not what we were told by the Tory province in Nova Scotia.

However, at approximately the same time there was talk about funding for Sysco modernization. Let me make it perfectly clear that it is not my suggestion but that of some others in Nova Scotia who say that once the Sysco modernization funds were announced there seemed to be a change of heart in the Nova Scotia Government with respect to Bill C-

22. The media had a difficult time finding people to substantiate their claim of an additional cost of $25 million. As well, the Minister of corporate interests vowed to stay away from any comments about the situation in Nova Scotia. At the same time, there was a litany of announcements ranging from money for Pictou industries to funding for a variety of programs in Halifax. I suggest it is quite obvious to most Canadians that a major power play was underway.

It is my belief that the new Government in British Columbia, being interested in jobs and more money for research and development, would have seen through the major omissions in Bill C-22 as did six other provinces, and perhaps Nova Scotia and Saskatchewan. I thought it would want to correct those omissions in order to reap some of the benefits for its province. However, there were only a few opposition MPs, including the House Leader for the New Democratic Party, who repeatedly raised the major omissions in this Bill. Government Members of Parliament from that province sat on their hands and agreed that the most profitable sector in pharmaceutical manufacturing needed another 10-year period of monopoly.

The Minister stands in his place to talk about the overwhelming support for the Bill. If he were here in the chamber I would tell him to be more candid and specify the areas of support and the rationale for that support. I think it is clearly evident that provincial Governments definitely do not support higher drug prices.

What did the Minister do? The Minister stated from the outset, through the committee stage and during the discussions in the Upper Chamber, that the Government would provide $100 million to lessen the impact if, in fact, there were higher drug prices. Either the price of drugs will rise or they will not, but the Minister tells us that he will provide $100 million. When I asked the Minister how he arrived at that figure of $100 million, he did not have any substantive answer but simply said that it is a cushion that the Government will provide to assist the provinces if prices increase. The Minister stated that consistently from January through to the early part of August. Now the Minister of corporate interests tells us a different story. The Government will no loner provide $100 million to assist provinces vis-a-vis price increases.

The Minister echoed the words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister who condemned the Upper Chamber as a bunch of political unelected hacks. I take strong exception to that statement. Lowell Murray happens to come from my constituency in Nova Scotia and I do not think he is a political hack. I am at odds with the Right Hon. Prime Minister when he calls a native Nova Scotian like Findlay MacDonald a unelected political hack. I think it is pretty degrading for the Right Hon. Prime Minister to say that about individuals in the Upper Chamber, particularly when he does not have the intestinal fortitude to do something about this unelected Chamber other than to talk rhetoric with some of his followers during his political gatherings across the country. He does not have the intestinal fortitude to change a situation that can only be changed by a Prime Minister.

Do you know what the Minister of corporate interests did, Mr. Speaker? Imagine this. He accepted recommendations made by a bunch of unelected political hacks in the Upper Chamber. After saying that they were so terrible, he has now accepted some of those recommendations.

Is he going to give $100 million to the provinces for the purposes of increasing the prices of pharmaceutical drugs? No, he is not going to do that. The Minister is so confident that the multinational corporations will do research and development that he will give $100 million to the provinces, not for the purpose of price increases but for the purpose of providing additional research and development. If there has ever been hypocrisy practised in the House of Commons by any Minister of the Crown, it has been by the Minister of corporate interests whose total concerns are escalating and enhancing the profits of multinational corporations at the expense of every-day Canadians.

It is one thing to say to the provinces, "The hell with you". That is what Bill C-22 is saying. It is another thing to say to Parliament, "We believe prices will rise, therefore we will give the provinces some money," and then turn around and do the exact opposite with that money. It is another thing to refer to the Upper Chamber, as the Prime Minister and the Minister of corporate interests have, as a bunch of political hacks but to do nothing but denounce it on national television and at every political gathering they can muster. They have said to Canadians from coast to coast that they will accept no amendments, no changes, they are in it to the end, but the Minister of corporate interests came into the House and swallowed himself completely by accepting amendments. I find that behaviour to be absolutely against the best interests of generating good public policy in Canada.

How can we believe the Minister when he says now that the multinational corporations will give x millions of dollars when in the space of six months, the Minister flip-flopped not once but twice on two major, substantive issues concerning Bill C-22 and the Upper Chamber. I am absolutely astounded that the Minister could walk into the House and still feel that he could assume his responsibilities as Minister protecting Canadian consumers. It is absolutely unbelievable.

The provinces, by and large, are against this Bill. Some are against it for different reasons, but they are against it. The Minister of corporate interests has changed the legislation substantively and is hoping that Canadians will now believe him. I do not think they will.

If there is any indication that Canadians do not believe the Minister of corporate interests, we should go back to the polls for a moment since it was the Minister, not I or my colleagues to the left, who brought up the polls. This is unfortunate because I do not think that national political Parties should be overly concerned with what the polls are saying on a day-to-day basis. However, it was the Minister of corporate interests who brought them up. He ought to look at what Decima is telling him about the trust in both his Leader and his Party. He should find out where Gallup says that particular Party is when it comes to general acceptance by the population. Of course, other pollsters have said the same thing.

It was the Minister of corporate interests who raised the issue of polls. Canadians from coast to coast know that this Government is not a Government to be trusted, particularly with regard to Bill C-22 and how changes to the Bill will affect consumers.

Since I have already talked about the provinces, let me talk for a few moments if I may about the organizations other than Dalhousie University to which the Minister alluded as being in support of Bill C-22. The Minister said that these organizations are supportive of Bill C-22. In part, the Minister of corporate interests is correct. However, when I or my colleagues to the left asked questions of these organizations at committee stage, it became very clear to many observers that amendments ought to be sought in order to strengthen the Bill and achieve the objectives about which all three political Parties were talking, namely, jobs, research and development and protection for Canadian consumers.

I remember a distinguished group of representatives from western Canada who had indicated to the committee that they were supportive of Bill C-22. When it was brought to their attention that the Bill did not contain a definition of research, they were quite surprised. I asked them, "Did you read the Bill?" They said, "Well, yes, you know, we are not lawyers but we have examined the contents of the Bill and we think it is okay". I said, "Did you see any provisions in that Bill to guarantee that research and development by those multinational firms will take place?" They said, "No, we didn't, it wasn't there". I said, "That's right, there are no guarantees". I said, "Did you see any guarantees about the number of jobs that will be created?" They said, "No, we didn't see any of those either". I said, "What guarantees did you see in the Bill for protecting consumers and the prices they will have to pay?" They said, "Well, we really don't know what its powers are, but there is such a thing as the Patent Medicines Review Board. Is that not supposed to keep prices down?"

Many groups came before the committee with good intentions, accepting the word of the Minister of corporate interests, not consumer interests, that these objectives were contained in the Bill. Those objectives were jobs, research and development expenditures, and a pricing mechanism. Once they became aware of the major omissions, they wrote to the Minister of corporate interests saying they agree its objectives are laudable but he has an obligation to put something in the Act to guarantee Canadians that this will be done. That has never taken place.

In 1984 the Tories said they were going to do away with some boards and regulations. Now they are adding another board and putting more regulations into play. Say one thing and do the opposite. We have come to accept that sort of conduct by the governing Party.

At best the constitutionality of the price review board is in serious question. It would be interesting to send a copy of that Bill to the Canadian Bar Association meeting at the Congress Centre this week. I am sure they would come to the same conclusion I have, that it is unconstitutional. I challenged the Minister. I said if he believed it to be just and appropriate, table the legal opinion to verify it. He will not do it. You would think if someone had a strong case he would want the Canadian people and, in particular, opposition Members to see what judicial interpretation the Department of Justice and his Department are giving to that legislation.

As I said to the Minister and his legal counsel in committee, at the first opportune moment, when this board attempts to exercise its authority against the multinational corporation, it will end up in Federal Court where it will remain for months and months if not a year or two before the court renders a decision nullifying any effect this board might have.

First, it is unconstitutional. Second, the board is not in a position to act, it can only react. You know, Mr. Speaker, because you are a distinguished parliamentarian, that there is quite a distinction between acting and reacting. This board can only react after it has received complaints, or provincial Governments interfere, and then it has the responsibility to investigate. What can it investigate? It is not allowed to go outside the boarders of Canada to obtain information or evidence regarding a particular company. If your corporate head offices are in New Jersey or Switzerland all you have to do is mail your file there and the Canadian Government cannot investigate whether you are transfer pricing or whether you have given the appropriate information regarding the initial cost of a particular drug. It is an absolute and utter joke. We are not looking at days, weeks or even months, we could be looking at years in dealing with a price problem.

What has happened here is very sad. The Minister has said no to committee members; he has said no to countless witnesses; he has said no to consumer advocate groups; he has said no to provincial Governments, and he has said no to legal experts—no changes will be made. Let there be no mistake about it. He is the Minister of corporate interests. He is going to embellish and enhance multinational corporations. That is what his portfolio is all about. He told the committee one thing, to which my friend from Windsor—Walkerville will probably refer, but he tells the House something different. I want it to be known through you, sir, that I am not suggesting for one moment that he is intentionally misleading the House. What I am suggesting is that in the Minister's pronouncements he has conveniently forgotten certain specifics.

I should say at this point that a number of groups who are against Bill C-22 have also said they could live with it if certain amendments were made. I want to make it perfectly clear that the amendments put forward in committee, on the floor of this House, and in the Upper Chamber have been consistent. Given the economic framework within which the multinationals operate, we do not believe Bill C-22 as put forward by the Government should pass. We cannot support the Bill with a 10-year price protection without guarantees for research and development and quality jobs across this country.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, this has been an exhausting and, at times, acrimonious debate on Bill C-22. Upon reflection, perhaps I have contributed to that acrimony. However, in all good conscience I make no apologies. Someone somewhere has to stand up for those Canadians who cannot now afford the cost of prescription drugs.

In his own testimony before the committee and in his speech in introducing this legislation the Minister said that 85 per cent of Canadians are covered by drug programs. He failed to say that those drug programs are paid for by the Canadian taxpayer. He also failed to say that over one million Canadians have no drug plan whatsoever.

Notwithstanding the tenacity of Members opposite who tried to intimidate a number of witnesses in committee, we heard a number of witnesses who came before the committee say that they are welfare recipients and that some of their drugs are paid for by the municipality which pays their welfare, but that there are a good number of drugs for which they must pay themselves.

Someone must stand up for those individuals. Someone must stand up for Canadians who do not have lobbyists, as do the banks and pharmaceutical companies. Someone must say that this law is unjust. It flies in the face of providing good public policy for Canadians, whether for the senior citizen in Nova Scotia, the person on compensation in New Brunswick or Newfoundland, or the widow or welfare recipient in Prince Edward Island, Ontario or Quebec. Regardless of who those individuals are, the Government is doing a major injustice to them all.

The Government is telling the Government of Alberta and the Government of Manitoba that it does not care, that it does not give a damn what they say, that it is going to go ahead with its plan for higher drug prices with no guarantees of research and development jobs. It is responding to the conditional approval which the Government of Saskatchewan has given to this Bill by saying that it is not going to accommodate the request of the Government of Saskatchewan. It is saying to the people of British Columbia, Ontario and Quebec that there are no guarantees of jobs or research and development, that it will go on a whim and prayer that sometime in the next ten years there will be some new jobs in research and development.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not apologize for standing up for those people. They are just as important as the lawyers, doctors, and other organizations which have paid lobbyists to act on their behalf. I want to thank you, Sir, for your co-operation and the courtesy that you have displayed to me while you have been in the Chair. I think you know deep down that I feel very strongly about the substance of this Bill. I believe very strongly that the Government of Canada has abdicated its responsibilities to the people of Canada. More important, Mr. Speaker, I believe that on judgment day, which is not all that far away, the Canadian people will give the Government its due, and I can assure you that it will not be a vote of confidence, but will be a vote in opposition to the governing party and particularly the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the Minister of corporate interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question? Under Standing Order 55(1) the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond had unlimited time with no provision for questions or comments. Speeches from now on will be limited to a maximum of 20 minutes with provision for a question and comment period.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I realize that I have only 20 minutes during which to express my Party's opposition to Bill C-22. It is perhaps appropriate that we allow the Official Opposition unlimited time to develop its thoughts. It is quite evident that such a length of time is required. The previous speaker is somewhat like Beethoven attempting to finish a symphony. We never know when it is going to end.

The New Democratic Party has not found it necessary to engage in the verbal athletics, as has the Official Opposition, in order to express and manifest its support for those in the country who oppose this legislation. As you well know, Mr. Speaker, Members of the New Democratic Party tabled petition after petition from the people of this country in opposition to Bill C-22. Therefore, we do not need two days in which to indicate to the Canadian people our opposition to this legislation and the reason for our opposition to it.

Quite basically we are opposed to this legislation because it is wrong. We are opposed to it because it is unnecessary. We are opposed to it because it does not recognize the various needs which must be addressed, not only those of the multinationals but those of the old, the poor, the taxpayer, and the health system of the country.

This Bill proposes to change an arrangement which originated in 1969 and introduced compulsory licensing. At that time brand name drugs had to face competition from generic drugs which have the same pharmaceutical properties. That change in Canadian patent regime resulted in considerable savings to Canadians. Let us remind ourselves that at that time Canada had among the highest drug prices in the world. Several commissions studied the matter and reached the conclusion that the only appropriate way of dealing with the problem was the compulsory licensing arrangement which we have had since then.

Let us also remind ourselves that since that time the multinational drug companies operating in this country have had the highest profits of any manufacturing sector in the country. During that time employment in the pharmaceutical industry increased by 29 per cent more than employment in that sector in the United States where there was complete patent protection. During all of that time and before 1969, in spite of obscene profits, the multinational pharmaceutical manufacturers did not a whit of basic research in this country. We are expected to believe that by returning to the pre-1969 situation, and by virtue of a promise, they are going to keep prices down, do research in this country, and create jobs. Anyone who believes that believes in the tooth fairy. Much more, such a one probably believes that the promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be kept. We know that that would be a peculiar set of beliefs.

I listened with great interest to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) who talked at great length about what a significant impact this legislation will have on scientific research. We heard him say as well that all scientists would back this legislation because it will produce increased research opportunities and innovations. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that as a practising scientist up until the day I was elected to this place, I have never heard such an nonsensical view of the real situation in this country with respect to science.

It is certainly true that government after government—and this Government is no exception—has refused to make the kind of commitment to basic research that is necessary for this country to thrive. To suggest that Bill C-22 will change that situation indicates nothing but a complete misapprehension of the real world or a deliberate attempt to mislead. The Government is trying to defend the indefensible to a country in which the vast majority of people who have addressed themselves to the issue of Bill C-22 have spoken in opposition to it.

The Minister recited a long list of those who are supposed to be unequivocally in support of Bill C-22. Let us just take a couple of examples of those the Government purports are in favour of Bill C-22. The Minister tells us that Dr. Stuart Smith of the Science Council supports the Bill, and that must be interpreted to mean that Bill C-22 is seen by Dr. Smith as the only possible approach to securing research investment in the pharmaceutical industry. But what in fact did Dr. Smith say? He said, "To summarize, Science Council members agree some research is better than none". That is a clear reference to the fact that these companies, who have given the Minister their promise, have not been doing research to any significant degree and any improvement in that situation by whatever mechanism, whether the Eastman mechanism or the Bill C-22 mechanism, would be welcome in that context.

Dr. Smith goes on to say, "We commend the Government that intellectual property will be better protected". But there are any number of approaches to improving the protection afforded to intellectual property. One way of protecting intellectual property is to see that the originator is paid royalties. The issue then becomes, how much in royalties? One could also protect to an appropriate degree—that is, in balance to all the other demands which have to be met on behalf of the people—by affording four years of exclusivity as well as some other regime of royalty payments, as Dr. Eastman has suggested.

As Dr. Smith observes, there are some deficiencies with respect to this Bill in social costs. He states:

> We have some concerns about social costs. Mostly we worry that Bill C-22 does not by itself, or with any other policy, really bring about a change and improvement in Canada's pharmaceutical industry or its international balance of payments.

Does that sound like an unequivocal endorsation of Bill C-22, Mr. Speaker? Of course, it does not. It was not Dr. Smith's intention that the Minister stand here and say that the head of the Science Council is four-square in favour of Bill C-22.

The Minister also said that the University of Manitoba supports this Bill. My colleague telephoned the University of Manitoba and, as one might expect, because there should be common sense involved in the notion that a university would support this legislation, that university did not endorse this legislation.

We could go through the entire list of those associations the Minister says support this legislation and we would find the same degree of equivocation among most of them, with the exception of the Pharmaceutical Association of Canada. Of course, it supports anything that would get these people, that is the multinational pharmaceutical industry, mostly American owned, to put more money into this country for research.

Having made reference to the long list of so-called supporters referred to by the Minister, I have to say that the Minister has said a great deal about the inappropriateness of the Senate's attempt to significantly amend this legislation. The position of my Party is clear. It has always been clear. The Senate, as it is presently constituted, deserves abolition. If the Government feels that the Senate should be abolished, the Prime Minister has the support of my Leader and, presumable, if they can work it out, the support of the Liberal Party. So let us get on with that. But let us not call into question what is obviously true. There is a constitutional power of the Senate to deal with this issue.

Having referred so constantly to the undemocratic nature of the other place, it has to be said that the other place accorded more opportunity for those who are opposed to this Bill to speak than did the Government. It was a shameful performance on the part of the majority members of the committee who held hearings on this legislation that witnesses who expressed themselves in opposition were badgered. Their time was limited. The Hon. Member from Burlington, in his remarks to those who expressed themselves in opposition to this Bill, could only be regarded as a poor reflection on this House, and manifestly undemocratic in his behaviour with respect to the process. Therefore, in my opinion, we have the silly situation that we, who regard this House as the place where democracy has a voice, are in the position that it is the Senate which provides those in opposition to the bill the greatest opportunity to express themselves.

What came about was a recommendation by the Senate to amend this Bill along the lines of those recommended by the Eastman Commission. The Eastman Commission carried out the most thorough study of drug legislation in the history of this country. It is a study which is respected around the world. The Eastman Commission said there should be some change in the present arrangements, that there should be four years of exclusivity, not 10 years, and there should be a specific mechanism for ensuring that research would be done, not a namby-pamby promise on the part of an industry which, in making the promise, knows that it has joined with the Government in misleading the Canadian people about what really is afoot.

When we consider tax concessions for research, the new arrangements for matching funds between industry and NSRC for funding university research, the increasing average age of the population and therefore the increased demand for pharmaceuticals, and when we look at the projections of the increases in rates of expenditures for research over the last five or ten years, what we must conclude is that by 1995 there will be an additional $1.3 billion more spent on research, so-called, in any case, whether or not this legislation is passed. In addition to that sum there would be something in the order of $2 billion spent on additional capital expenditures. This translates into an empty promise in the sense that that promise was based on a set of facts that would have existed whether or not Bill C-22 is passed.

Let us consider the type of research that will be done. Is this investment of the kind that will establish the concerted centres of excellence in the country that will pursue basic research? My colleague, the Minister, talks a great deal about basic research. He knows nothing about basic research if he thinks that what the drug companies will do is basic research. If he wants basic research, then he should put some more money into the universities to keep the promise made by the Prime Minister that the rate of investment in research would reach 2.5 per cent of the GNP. That is how basic research is increased. There are very few companies, certainly not American, Swiss, British or German ones, with their centres in their home countries which will disperse their research efforts in Canada. It is an unreasonable proposition to make. Thus we have a mixture of complete misunderstanding of what basic research is all about, and an attempt to use what was already there as justification for what should not be.

I talked about the role of the Senate in at least allowing the Canadian people to speak. I omitted to mention that the Government was far more anxious to listen to those from outside the country than to those within it. We had the President of the United States, the Vice-President of the United States, who is a former Chairman of Pfizer, we had Pratt, the Chairman of the President's Advisory Committee on Trade, who is also a big wheel in a drug company, we had American after American come up here and say, "Look, better pass this Bill or there will be no free trade deal". In short, it was one of those concessions that one might have made, I suppose, during the course of bargaining to gain something from the Americans. But we gave it away.

As I said before, the President said, "Look, you will have to do something about drug prices up there in Canada. You will have to stop providing cheap drugs to sick people." The Prime Minister said, "Yes, sir". But when Bill Haddad wanted an opportunity to express the point of view of the generics from the United States, his input was rejected. When Ralph Nader said, "Look, my God, don't allow to happen in Canada what has happened in the United States," that was rejected. When Henry Waxman, a distinguished Congressman, made a similar warning it was also ignored.

This is a Government with selective ears. It is a Government that refuses to listen. It is a Government that could have had a well thought out proposition for protecting consumers, for stimulating a measure of research, not on the basis of a promise, but on the basis of a mechanism that would make that promise come true. But, no, it wanted to play a fast one on the Canadian people.

This is a Government that is characterized by the vast majority of Canadians as being fundamentally dishonest, lacking in credibility, in a hurry to do but slow to listen, a Government that has sold its credibility because of its own failings. It has an opportunity through a reconsideration of Bill C-22 to bring what it does into closer agreement with the will of the people.

While we in the New Democratic Party would have preferred that there be no legislation before the House at all, it is surely an inherent part of the democratic process that a government be willing to listen to all sides and to achieve through that traditional mechanism of politics and reasonable compromise a piece of legislation that would be far less offensive to Canadians and our own national welfare. But I guess that is not possible for a Government that takes its orders from Washington.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, sitting in my office, this morning, I could not believe the kind of paranoia in which the Hon. Member was indulging. I couldn't believe he was saying he is against creating 1,700 jobs in Montreal. Where is his colleague, the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Toupin)? He should be sitting next to him to give him advice. Where are his colleagues? How will they dare show their faces in Montreal at the next election? How will they be able to justify rising in the House of Commons to say they were against 1,700 jobs? How can anyone be against that? Mr. Speaker, I think it is obvious that the Socialist Party . . . I think they are more than socialist, they are almost communist. We have now reached the point that if we listen to what the Hon. Member is saying, obviously everyone is going to leave. They are going to go to the United States or somewhere else, because it will no longer pay to invest in Canada.

Does anyone realize what it costs to send a young person to university to study pure science? We have young graduates coming out of university and they want to do research. Is there any room for them in Canada, in Montreal or Toronto? No, Mr. Speaker, there is not. They go off to the United States. The Hon. Member is being paranoid when he says we are adopting this Bill because of the Americans. No, Mr. Speaker, it is not because of the Americans, it is because this Government believes the private sector is in the best position to create jobs. This Government believes that jobs must be made available, and that we need research and development to discover new drugs.

I would like to ask him a question. Is this a kind of tactic on the part of socialists with communist leanings, to ensure, there will be no more companies in the pharmaceutical industry doing any research in Canada so that in the long term, we will have to go communist?

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, it really is amazing that this Hon. Member of the "PCP" Party would stand before the House and again utter the accusation that has already been such a terrible embarrassment to the Conservatives. The Hon. Member would declare that because the New Democratic Party stands for the average Canadian, and because it has a reputation among the vast majority of Canadians for fighting for justice for the ordinary Canadian, and seeing justice for everyone, that that is communistic. I saw a smile come to your face, Mr. Speaker, when those words were uttered.

• (1230)

Mr. Andre: He always smiles.

Mr. McCurdy: I am afraid that he has plenty to laugh about from that side of the House.

Let me address the substance of some of the other things stated by the Hon. Member. It is astounding that ignorance could be so well organized in a grammatical sense. I wish to advise the Hon. Member that I understand well the situation of students in science in the universities of this country. I spent 25 years struggling to get enough research funds in order to make it possible for Canadian students to do research that was first class. In the same manner as this Government has failed, previous governments failed to address the issue of funding basic research. Basic research is not done by the corporations.

Let me give the Hon. Member a quick kindergarten lesson in science. The genetic code was not discovered in the laboratories of Pfizer. Transduction was not discovered in the laboratories of Sandoz. The structure of the ribosome was not discovered in a corporate boardroom. All of those discoveries were made in universities. When companies finally patent a medicine or a pharmaceutical it is based on the fundamental discoveries that are carried out in the laboratory by scientists who will never earn as much as Tim Raines. When the Minister suggests that this legislation will make a professional baseball player out of a scientist in terms of how much money he receives for research, that argument reduces the whole subject to the level of the ridiculous, in the same manner as did this Hon. Member.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party is very aware of the need for research and of the future of our young people. I quite agree that in some universities, some extraordinary discoveries have been made.

However, perhaps we should explain to Canadians and recall how research services and science centres work in our universities. We have many young people studying with excellent professors. Of course, these young people take part in certain discoveries and some kinds of research. But why are these students in our Canadian universities so active? Because they hope that one day, when they come out of university, they will be able to find jobs in the private sector so they can earn a decent living to support their families.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's unconscionable opposition to this Bill will take away every hope these young people ever had of being able to work in their own country, to help their country and to become world leaders. Unfortunately, the Hon. Member would rather take the narrow view and thus make our young people go to other countries so they can develop their talents and make their contribution to mankind.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Again, I am afraid that we see the typical politician's ignorance of what motivates a scientist. A scientist does not become a scientist, that is, the type of scientist that does basic and fundamental research, the type of scientist that lays the foundation for the discoveries that occur in drug companies, or elsewhere, motivated by contract levels such as those found in baseball or hockey. Scientists are motivated by curiosity, a love of learning, being the first to discover something, and being part of an enterprise that has as its goal the understanding of the universe. If we think that something needs to be done to encourage scientists, then give them an opportunity to do research.

Do not be misled by the notion that the universities in this country are collectively first rate. They are not. In those criteria applied to judge the level of scientific enterprise, we rank eighth, ninth, and tenth among western industrialized nations. If we wish to create opportunity for our young people, we had better make sure that our scope is wider than some nonsensical promise from the pharmaceutical manufacturers of Canada. We should make sure that the Prime Minister keeps his promises to create more investment in scientific research, and raise scientific expenditure to the level of 2.5 per cent of GNP by 1990. Keep those promises, and we will keep our students here.

Miss MacDonald: And where will they go to work?

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to direct a question to my hon. friend. Does he agree with me that the reason why the Hon. Member equated our Party with Communism is because of the desperation of the government Members when they realize how far down they are in the polls, particularly in Quebec?

Mr. Lewis: Looking at you gives us all hope.

Mr. Orlikow: Obviously that Hon. Member across the way did not see the poll results that appeared in The Montreal Gazette which showed that the NDP has more support in Quebec than anywhere else. The people of Quebec approve of our proposals for a fair tax policy. They approve of our proposals that the rich are paying too little and the poor are paying too much, and they approve our proposals for universal child care. They reject the proposals of the Government. It is not Communism that they are worried about, it is the Conservative Government and its failure to keep its promises.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Although the Hon. Member's time has expired, I will allow a short rebuttal.

Mr. McCurdy: My colleague raised the delicate matter of the necessity soon to arise of that Hon. Member requiring another job. Having this opportunity to rise once more in reference to that Member's previous intervention, let me address the issue of research jobs in Montreal. It is absolutely incomprehensible to me that anyone who is serious and knows the facts, or who has any knowledge whatsoever of the record of multinational corporations in keeping promises would put her bets on a promise when there is a possibility of having a mechanism such as suggested by the Eastman Commission that would ensure that research would be done in this country. That mechanism is far more likely to lead to something other than broken promises and jobs in Montreal than Bill C-22. I would suggest that the Hon. Member break her habit and read the report of the Eastman Commission.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the new policy concerning patents happens to be one of our Government's policies which may very well prove to be one of the most beneficial to this country.

This policy has several objectives.

One is to turn Canada's pharmaceutical industry into a leading innovating sector through significant increases in research and development investments.

The percentage of sales invested in Canada by research and development firms has been rather low in the past, particularly when compared with that of such countries as the United Kingdom, Switzerland or the Federal Republic of Germany. In addition, prospective research investors do not particularly favour Canada because the drug industry has no guarantee with respect to the protection period it can expect to have for its patented products, something we want to rectify through this legislative measure.

Drug industry growth and competitiveness rest entirely on the discovery and development of new products, and on improving existing treatments. This is why it is imperative that it be allowed to benefit from its own research or make others benefit from it.

Low investments in Canada are a serious problem, especially when we consider that a country's economic expansion is geared to research and development. It is indeed one of the basic components of sustained economic expansion, and Hon. Members would know that industrial expansion is the cornerstone of this Government's economic recovery strategy.

The amendments to the Patent Act will change the present situation. The new policy represents a true research encouragement by widening patent protection. Bill C-22 will ensure that the pharmaceutical industry will enjoy for the medecine it has discovered an exclusivity period which is long enough to allow it to recover its research investments. The prospect of making profitable investments will certainly encourage researchers to develop new and efficient drugs which will benefit all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the innovative firms have promised to double their investments. This commitment means that research and development over the next ten years will increase from the current 4.9 percent of sales to 10 percent. This represents an additional $1.4 billion. This will bring to $3 billion the total amount which the industry will spend in research and development activities in Canada, not only in clinical research, but also in basic research.

Employmentwise, this increased research activity will create 3,000 new jobs in Canada for our high technology graduates. Our universities, hospitals, private research establishments everywhere in Canada, not only in Quebec and in Ontario, as was suggested these past few days, but everywhere in Canada, will benefit from this increased research. It is foreseen that up to 30 percent of the amounts provided for will go to these establishments and still more significant amounts will go to regions other than Quebec and Ontario.

On the medical level, one could not overemphasize the benefits from increased research. From the beginning of this debate, highly reputable people in all spheres and especially that of science have voiced their support. Through their representations, Mr. Speaker, these medical authorities are not seeking monetary benefits. They are concerned, through their research, with discovering new drugs to improve the quality of life for Canadians. In the January 13 issue of the Le Devoir newspaper, Dr. Morin, a famous Quebec cardiologist, was reported as saying:

> Beyond the principle of protecting intellectual property rights, the 1969 ordinance caused irreparable damage. Twenty years ago, Montreal was one of the major medical centres of the pharmaceutical industry. We have tried the utmost to chase it away.

When he appeared before the Legislative Committee, Dr. Michel Chrétien stated, and I quote:

> One of the major openings for these students entering the field of biomedical research is the pharmaceutical industry. However, this industry has had to limit its research staff, again because of the 1969 legislation. Young people have every reason to be concerned and reluctant . . .

to enter this field of study.

Dr. Chrétien pointed out that, of the hundred or so who have graduated of the Montreal Clinical Research Institute since 1967, none now works in the Canadian pharmaceutical industry. Four of them hold important positions in France, in Switzerland and in Germany, but not here. Dr. Chrétien closed by saying that, as a biomedical scientist, he is in favour of amending the Patent Act to provide new stimulus to pharmaceutical research and make our industry internationally competitive.

Then, Mr. Gagné, from the University of Montreal, pointed out that opponents of the bill have never mentioned the months of hospitalization which could be avoided thanks to better drugs.

Mr. Speaker, the health of all Canadians will be improved, and this means that the costs incurred by our health system will be significantly reduced. The more we delay passage of this Bill, the more the benefits from this piece of legislation will be long in coming. Canadians will be the ones to suffer, particularly because the development of new and more effective treatment will be delayed.

Many reservations have been expressed about whether or not the innovative industry will respect its commitments for research and development. I can assure the House that this policy will result in an unprecedented increase of research expenditures.

The innovative industry has already provided concrete evidence of its good faith. Several companies have already announced publicly, even before passage of this Bill, investments amounting to over $700 million. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that the promised amounts will be invested only after the bill is adopted.

The expenditures involved will affect fundamental research as well as clinical research and facility development. Here are three examples:

—$132.9 million will be spent over the next ten years in Alberta research centres, universities and hospitals;

—the Terry Fox Foundation and the Wellcome Foundation Ltd. will finance a biotechnical research centre at a cost of $40 million;

—the Upjohn Company in Toronto will provide $30 million for biotechnical research over the next five years and spend $22 million on capital projects.

I want to emphasize that innovative firms have no incentive whatsoever not to honour those commitments. They have everything to lose, starting with their reputations. Once their reputations are tarnished, it would be almost impossible to regain the public's and the Government's confidence.

In conclusion, I would like to say a few words on the mechanisms chosen by this Government to ensure that innovative firms honour their commitments. First, there is the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board which must submit to Parliament a yearly report including the percentage of research and development expenditures versus sales figures, not only for the overall innovative industry but also for each of its member firms. This is a most powerful tool which will inform us regularly on the performance of individual, innovative firms.

The legislation also provides for two formal reviews of the policy, to ensure that it serves the interests of Canadians. The first review will be made by Cabinet at any time after the expiration of four years after the Act comes into force. Parliament will make the second review, after the expiration of nine years after the Act has come into force. On those two occasions the Government will therefore be in a position to reduce or abolish the protection period if innovative firms have not met their commitments.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I do not understand the position taken by the Opposition on the Bill. On the one hand, the New Democratic Party is trying to sow fear and concern among seniors and the ill, when we know that group is completely covered by health-care programs. During their awareness campaigns directed to those people, they took this opportunity to fill their Party's coffers. On the other hand, strangely enough, they did not try to do the same thing in Quebec, because in Quebec the Senior Citizen's Federation along with a number of other agencies—and that Federation has over 200,000 members—support the Bill. As far as the Official Opposition is concerned, there is really nothing to understand. After repeated pressures at the time from the pharmaceutical industry—that was after 1969 and until 1980—the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Hon. André Ouellet, launched a process to review the act. The Liberal Party, if it were consistent with itself and its ideology, should support Bill C-22. If they do not support the legislation, they will show once more they do not know what they are doing and on many issues have no set policies.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Parliamentary Secretary who has referred to the old, the sick and the general public who need protection. I should like to call her attention on clause 41 of the Bill which deals with the establishment of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board. I should like her to tell us exactly what powers this Board will have to control and, if necessary, roll back the prices of medicine, according to this Bill which she supports.

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, there has never been in this country a board of this type to try and monitor price increases. For the first time in this country, such a board will be—

Mr. Caccia: In 1977.

Mrs. Bertrand: Moreover, Professor Eastman, who may be the force behind the whole review of this problem in Canada, has accepted to chair this Board and stated before the committees that he did so because he believes in this Bill and trust that Canadians will be properly protected against price increases.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary has failed to answer my question and made a statement which is not historically correct. I should like to call her attention on the fact that there was a price control board in Canada in 1977. I should like the Parliamentary Secretary to tell me what powers this Board will have to control and monitor prices under Bill C-22. What are its control powers.

Mrs. Bertrand: As I said earlier in my remarks, the Board will have every year an opportunity to review what is going on, the progression in the pharmaceutical industry. Also, every five years, the Government will have an opportunity to reconsider this policy, while every ten years, Parliament may review this Bill to see whether innovative companies have met their commitments in the area of investments, their research investment level and, finally, determine whether the prices paid by Canadians for their drugs is reasonable.

[English]

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I noticed that the Parliamentary Secretary, in listing the benefits of this Bill, indicated that the Terry Fox Foundation was about to expend certain moneys assisting in research. I wonder if the Parliamentary Secretary knows that the Terry Fox Foundation is engaging in research presumably funded by donations from across the country. Is she putting it forth that that is one of the benefits of this Bill?

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly the Hon. Member's question, no, I do not think that at any time I ever questioned the incomparable contribution of Canadians, what the Canadian people contributed to the Terry Fox Foundation. What we know is that the Foundation is preparing—or rather the pharmaceutical industry is preparing to support that Foundation, as Canadians did.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's presentation. I assume from her comments that she is in support of proceeding with the legislation without the proposed amendments. She is also interested in the research that the multinational drug companies will do as alleged by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre).

I wonder if the Hon. Member plans to support the Government's position of taking the multinationals at their word that they will do research and development. Would she not think it appropriate that we should have something a little stronger than simply the word of some of the principals of the companies involved?

We expect that Canadian consumers who require prescription drugs will pay higher prices in the future. I do not think there is any question that existing drug prices will increase and I think that even the Government's own research would indicate that, because of a total lack of competition for many years, certain drug companies could literally charge whatever price the market will bear. Of course, that price would be in excess of what it would normally be if there were competition.

I would ask the Hon. Member, believing in her integrity, if she does not find it somewhat disconcerting that she is being asked to support legislation that promises research but in fact requires no commitment to do research other than some vague references to the fact that research will take place? Of course, when I say research, I am referring to something far beyond market research, something far beyond determining what kind of a bottle or package would sell more prescription drugs than others. I am referring to real research. Would she not like to see a commitment in the legislation that a certain percentage of the revenues raised by drug companies because of this exclusivity be spent on research here in Canada?

[Translation]

Mrs. Bertrand: Mr. Speaker, on a few occasions, together with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I attended press conferences held by a number of pharmaceutical corporations and in fact, looking at the commitment, the confidence of those people, the seriousness of their comments—and had I known I would have to answer that question I would have quoted them . . . Those people had left Montreal, those companies had left Canada and they are now coming back and are so happy to see finally that the legislation will come to pass, that we cannot help trusting them.

I think that from the minute the Bill is implemented, the next day those millions and billions of dollars will be announced. So I do not see why we would not trust an industry that used to be prosperous in Canada, that was chased away because of the 1969 Act and that is now preparing to announce a $1-billion investment effort, and above all the creation of so many new jobs for our young scientists and researchers.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period of questions and comments has now ended.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

STUDENTS' ENTITLEMENT TO POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, hundreds of native Indian students acquired Indian status under Bill C-31, passed by this House two years ago. Those students are entitled to post-secondary education assistance from the Department of Indian Affairs. However, they have been told they may not be able to go to school next month after all. There is no more funding for them at this time, although they are being told efforts are under way to obtain the necessary funds. They are being told to wait until Ottawa makes a decision. In the meantime they are in limbo.

They cannot leave their home communities to look for apartments because they do not know if they will receive funding. They risk losing their places in the courses in which they have enrolled. They cannot wait any longer.

They must know now whether they can go to school and they need the answer immediately. Therefore I urge the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) to end this uncertainty and waiting. Give the students the assurance today that they will be able to go to school and not be let down. I ask, sir, that these students be encouraged rather than discouraged.

SCIENCE COUNCIL OF CANADA

TRIBUTE TO OUTGOING CHAIRMAN

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, Dr. Stuart Smith steps down at the end of August as Chairman of the Science Council. He has been an eloquent spokesman for science and fully understood the linkage between research and the market-place, the need to develop a knowledge intensive society, and he had an enormous capability for communicating to the general public the importance of science.

Last week he cited some of the accomplishments which he had encouraged and shaped: the creation of a Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology in the House of Commons; the creation of a basic framework for a national science and technology policy; the creation of a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology; establishment of a space agency as announced in the Speech from the Throne; and encouraging more science in the high schools and more young women in science.

Dr. Smith, the former Leader of the Liberal Party in Ontario, believes that science and technology have risen substantively on the list of government priorities, and he is reported as saying the present Conservative Government in the last 18 months has listened to him far more than the previous Liberal regime. I ask all those in this House to join me in thanking Dr. Smith for his enormous contribution to Canada and we wish him well in his new endeavours.

IMMIGRATION

POSITION OF EVANGELICAL FELLOWSHIP OF CANADA ON PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, last week we heard from the Canadian Council of Churches, through its inter-church committee on refugees, the stand of the major Canadian denominations, Roman Catholic and Protestant, against Bill C-84 as it presently stands. We heard from them before on Bill C-55.

Now we hear from the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada. I have this telegram which says:

> World Relief Canada, which serves as the refugee re-settlement arm of the Evangelical Fellowship of Canada, an association of 23 evangelical protestant denominations, strongly urges our Government not to pass Bills C-55 and C-84 as originally proposed. While we agree that abuses of our national largesse need to be prosecuted, we request that Parliament carefully consider amendments to the Bills which will strengthen fair treatment of bon fide refugees, and protect Canadians who helped them out of compassion and conscience.

IMPORTANCE OF BILL C-22 TO QUEBECERS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, last week, the mayor of Montreal officially gave his support to the patent legislation. The Montreal Chamber of Commerce has also made very positive representations. All Quebecers, and particularly Montrealers, understand that this legislation means 1,300 jobs and $700 million in investments.

As for the eventual users, the chronically ill, senior citizens and, the injured, they know how important it is to have effective medication. This is why we need research and development and the amendments proposed in the patent legislation.

The Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) is too weak to put pressure on the Senate. As for the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), what is he doing to defend the 1,300 jobs in Montreal and the $700 million in investments? If he is leader of his caucus for Quebec, he should clarify his position and put pressure on the Senate.

The same goes for the Leader of the socialist party (Mr. Broadbent). He and his party, who have always been against the Senate—you Socialists are too quick to applaud—suddenly decided to support it last week. Now, the socialist Leader prefers the Senate to the health, the jobs and the industries of Quebecers.

Canadians will remember this, Mr. Speaker.

TAX REFORM

PRESSURE TO REJECT TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) that the debate on Bill C-22 is not over. However, I am rising today to ask Canadians and Quebecers to continue to sign the petition which is now going around Canada to ensure that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will not impose a tax on food in his tax reform.

Mr. Speaker, we are having so much success with this petition throughout Canada that, very belatedly last week-end, the Quebec Conservative caucus asked this same Minister to impose a sales tax throughout Canada, but to make sure, as the Federal Liberals have been asking for months, that this tax will not apply to food products. I thank these new supporters of our campaign. I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that, since we are now in agreement, our campaign will continue because we cannot affort to relax with this Government as we know that it acts only under pressure. We shall therefore keep up the our pressure, Mr. Speaker.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

EXCLUSION OF HAY PRODUCERS—IRRIGATED LANDS ISSUE

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, the Special Canadian Grains Program helped to correct partially the intolerable situation created by the subsidy war between the EEC and the U.S. Farm Bill and will undoubtedly save hundreds of our farms, but it also hurt many farmers.

For example, many Canadian hay producers are on the verge of bankruptcy because the subsidies paid under the Grains Program enabled barley and green feed producers to sell at a reduced price to the feeders.

Second, the first payment failed to recognize the difference in yields of grains grown on stubble, on summer fallow, and on irrigated lands. This was partially corrected in the second payment when payment was made for the increased yields on irrigated lands providing the water was supplied by an irrigation district. The program refused to pay for the increased yields on lands that were irrigated by farmers who irrigated their lands through a co-op, an association, or privately, even though they grew the same crops and had similar yields and the same input costs. This is absolutely unfair and is infuriating hundreds of farmers.

Fairness is the essence of this Government's program and these unfair decisions should be corrected immediately.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PLIGHT OF UNINSURED DEPOSITORS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, one of government's most vital functions is to maintain the integrity of our financial systems. Confidence in financial institutions underpins the operation of the capital markets and payment systems and confirms the credibility necessary to support the value of our currency. It is also important that Governments ensure that depositors are made clearly aware of the security of their deposits and the risks attached thereto.

With regard to the collapse of the Principal Group empire, many of the depositors have alleged that they were misled into believing that their deposits were 100 per cent safe and secure. We now know that such was not the case.

I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to consider the proposal recently put forth by the Consumers' Association of Canada that, when depositors make an uninsured investment, they sign a waiver indicating that they are well aware that it is not covered by insurance.

While Governments cannot insulate consumers from shoddy or shady practices by financial institutions, they can reduce opportunities for such activities and minimize the financial damage caused by unscrupulous investment counsellors.

LABOUR RELATIONS

CALL FOR LEGISLATION TO END RAIL STRIKE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the rail strike will cause incalculable damage to the nation, particularly to the economy of western Canada which relies so heavily on the bulk shipment of commodities such as grain, coal and potash.

Prairie farmers could ill afford the Thunder Bay and Vancouver closures and they certainly cannot afford this latest episode. Canada simply cannot afford to fritter away all the good economic progress achieved over the past three years—solid progress evidenced by the fact that 865,000 more Canadians are working today than three short years ago.

Strikes and lockouts are primitive, archaic weapons whereby the few can visit untold misery on the backs of all Canadians. Surely the time has come to find a better way to resolve labour-management disputes in essential services without these stoppages which hurt all Canadians.

I urge the establishment of a parliamentary committee to study alternatives and make the appropriate recommendations. In the meantime, I urge legislation putting an early end to this sorry, unnecessary, and yet all too common situation.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

FUNDS NEEDED TO ESTABLISH TOXICOLOGY CENTRE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the long and sad saga of the Guelph-Toronto Toxicology centre goes on. The funds for this centre were cut from Environment Canada's budget in November, 1984, as you may recall. All of a sudden, in August, 1987, $12 million is found by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), not for a toxicology study centre but for a pest-control research facility in London, Ontario, to study biological and other pest-control programs aimed at reducing the reliance of farmers on pesticides in the long run.

• (1410)

This is good, but one wonders why the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) cannot find the funds necessary for the development of the long overdue Guelph-Toronto toxicology centre. Toxic chemical contamination is becoming a fact of life, particularly in the Great Lakes Basin, which affects the population living around it. What we badly need is a centre to study the effects of toxic chemicals on human health.

Canadians are wondering why the Minister of the Environment and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) cannot find funds to launch the Guelph-Toronto toxicology centre. Can it be attributed to ineptness?

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

COMMENTS AFFECTING PRIVATE INDIVIDUALS

Mr. Gerry St. Germain (Mission—Port Moody): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House today to draw to the attention of the Canadian public a situation which I feel is totally and unequivocally unacceptable. What I am referring to are the actions of some specific Members of this House who blatantly and repeatedly abuse their parliamentary privileges. They take advantage of the immunity granted to them by this House to viciously malign private citizens who have absolutely no means to defend themselves.

These character assassinations destroy the lives of not only the individuals but also their families and children. In many cases apologies are required after the fact, but this will never undo the damage.

I am referring directly to two recent incidents involving the defaming of two Petro-Canada employees and two members of CSIS, where I know this to be the case. On behalf of these people I would like to send a simple message to the fair-minded and honest citizens of our great country. When you hear degrading comments and slanderous remarks, do not take them at face value but consider the source.

Finally, I would like to apologize to the individuals who have fallen prey to the likes of those who use such cowardly and underhanded means. I refer to the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that while there is a lot of latitude used in Statements by Members and, in general, something that is a complaint can, of course, be mentioned, but it is not appropriate to identify a particular Member.

FISHERIES

ESTABLISHMENT OF WATERSHED MANAGEMENT-BOARDS URGED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans has been on the chopping block since the 1984 election. No other Department has lost so much of its budget. The slashing of staff, budgets and research is leading to chaos in our commercial, sport and food fisheries.

There is an urgent need for watershed management boards involving all user groups, especially on the Skeena River. The pressure on some wild stocks of salmon and steelhead has reached the breaking point. Many runs, in fact entire races of these anadromous species are becoming extinct.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) does not blink at giving the Reichman brothers a $1 billion tax holiday with the "little Egypt bump" on Gulf Oil, $1 billion to bail out the Northland and Canadian Commercial Banks and a $1 billion tax holiday to the big banks for their mismanagement of loans outside Canada. What about our fisheries? How about a break for those who derive their livelihood, their sports activity and food from the seas and rivers?

Time and again the Minister has been asked to establish a process to bring all fishing sectors together in the spirit of avoiding resource conflicts and possible confrontation. No initiative has been shown. While the Minister holidays and negotiates lower flows on our rivers, steelhead and salmon runs disappear. Once again what western Canadians prize in our fisheries this Conservative Government neglects and destroys. How about a "blink" for our fish?

BILL C-22—CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION'S SUPPORT

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, most of the opposition to Bill C-22, the patent drug legislation, has been based on the falsehood that consumers will be adversely affected. The Liberals and New Democrats have been practising political opportunism of the most despicable kind. They are preying on the fears of seniors and the ill. However, it is important to note that there is a lot of support for the Bill as passed by the House of Commons in May.

This morning, in Charlottetown, the General Council of the Canadian Medical Association, which represents 43,000 Canadian doctors, passed the following resolution unanimously:

> That the Canadian Medical Association declares its support in principle for Bill C-22 as a measure which in the long term is likely to benefit the health of Canadians.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, those who work in the health care field, and can offer an objective opinion, support Bill C-22.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—EFFECT ON NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, Canadians woke up this morning to the very unwelcome news that the national railways were shut down due to striking unions.

This is bad news for the people of northern Ontario, as it is for others across the country. The resource based industries of the North depend greatly on the rail service. In the riding of Timiskaming the iron ore mine of Adams-Sherman, which has 800 workers, ships pellets to Hamilton. Lumber mills across the North and the Ontario Northland Railway, which is a regional railroad, are also heavily dependent on rail service.

I trust that the Government will act to ensure a speedy resolution of this labour dispute. We would like to see all Canadians back on track.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

COMMEMORATE STAMP—REFUSAL OF ANGLICAN CHURCH'S APPLICATION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a short statement to make with regard to the Post Office and to its commemorative stamps program.

Most Canadians would have been shocked, as I was, to read that the Anglican Church was denied a commemorative stamp, an historic stamp. I cannot for the life of me figure out why. Other major churches and institutions have been accorded such stamps. The Post Office has given these stamps for many different purposes, so why could it not add one more stamp to the historic stamps it will issue this year? Why is it at least appearing to discriminate against the Anglican Church? I find this difficult to understand.

I hope that the Government will take the Post Office president by the collar, shake him up a bit and say: "Pay a little attention to the people of Canada and stop being deaf when people bring their concerns to you and ask you for a small action that could reflect the historic events of our country".

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—POSSIBILITY OF SETTLEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, last week when I asked what the Government intended to do to avoid a rail strike here is what the Minister of Transport had to say as reported in Hansard at page 8167:

> —the Government has no intention of intervening unless that becomes absolutely necessary on behalf of the public interest—

Now that the Government has allowed the situation to deteriorate into a full-scale national strike, now that commuters have to scurry around in the morning trying to find alternative ways to get to work, now that grain, coal, sulphur and other commodities are piling up in warehouses instead of moving, and now that tourists are stranded across the country, may I ask the Minister if he does not think that it is time to act decisively "on behalf of the public interest", to quote the Minister again?

What does the Government intend to do to try to get an early negotiated settlement of this strike? For example, does the Government intend to modify or to extend the mandate of the mediator? What else does the Government plan to do to settle this matter?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment on the entire litany of my colleague opposite. I can inform the House that, considering the framework of the recommendations contained in Commissioner Stanley's report, and the assistance of mediator Carson, I am deeply concerned and disappointed at the parties' abdication of their responsibility to come to a settlement. Notwithstanding that, earlier today I summoned the negotiating teams of the parties to Ottawa to start negotiating again with the help of mediator Carson and my Associate Deputy Minister Bill Kelly in a final attempt at mediation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I am certainly not encouraged to see that it is the Minister of Labour who is in charge of settling this strike. We all remember his record on the postal strike.

• (1420)

DEREGULATION OF TRANSPORT INDUSTRY—WORKER LAY-OFFS

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, the transportation deregulation program of the Government has already resulted in lost jobs without adequate provision of measures to have the workers adapt. The Government does not appear to realize that this has caused grave concerns with the workers and has embittered labour relations. This is making a settlement of the strike very difficult.

I would like to ask the Government, or perhaps the Minister of Transport, whether they think it is high time that the Government thought in terms of reviewing its deregulation program in order to bring a more humane approach to lay-offs of employees, as this is making the settlement of the strike very difficult. I would like to see it settled with a negotiated settlement before it takes its toll on the Canadian economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Because of the fact that my hon. colleague does not seem to know exactly which question to ask, he asks about 10.

With respect to my record, I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he is against negotiated settlements as occurred in the Post Office?

RAIL STRIKE—MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, last week we were told that the Government has no intention of doing anything about the rail strike until it becomes absolutely imperative to do so. Now that we are in a strike situation, now that people have to seek alternate means of transport to get to work in the morning, now that such basic commodities as wheat, coal and others are being stockpiled in warehouses instead of being delivered, I would ask the Government what it is going to do since the time to consider public interest—as the Minister said last week—has come indeed. Does the Minister, who spoke to the mediator this morning, intend to change and extend his mandate? What measures will the Government take to prevent the rail strike from dragging on and doing irrepairable harm to the Canadian economy?

Hon. Pierre Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should send my colleague a copy of the Canada Labour Code just so he will know exactly how the collective bargaining process works. From the outset, even when the Canada Post issue was making headlines, he has been urging the Government to intervene. The Government intervenes when and as provided under the Canada Labour Code, and I already asked my colleague whether he was against the collective bargaining process. To be more specific, I should like to quote the last sentence of the telegram I sent to both parties, and I quote:

[English]

> I urge you take advantage of Mr. Kelly's expertise in the railway industry, as well as his mediation skills, and discharge your responsibility to terminate this dispute through collective bargaining.

CANADIAN NATIONAL'S CORPORATE PLAN—PROPOSED REDUCTION OF WORKFORCE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In looking at CN's corporate plan we see a massive reduction of 25 per cent of its workforce over the next five years.

How can the Minister expect the union leaders to agree to sign a collective agreement that does not give the workers job security?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is the obligation of the management of Canadian National, as it is of the management of CP, to manage the company in the best manner they can, given all the circumstances that they have to face.

It is well known in the railway industry that there has been a reduction in the number of people who work in the railway industries in Canada, the United States, and other countries as the nature of the transportation system has changed. Trucking has become more competitive, shipping has become more competitive, therefore management has had to deal with that regrettable situation.

CN has indicated that in the future it will have to be very careful with respect to how many people it employs, and attempt to increase productivity. All of this helps the shippers of Canada, helps to make Canada competitive, and helps to make Canadian products competitive. It helps to sell grain abroad at a competitive price. The hon. gentleman knows this.

As to security under the contract, there were provisions in the contract that are still in effect that deal with that question. It is now a matter for negotiation between the parties, and I don't think I should say anything further.

OPPORTUNITY TO ESTABLISH PROGRAM TO ASSIST EARLY RETIREES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just taken the Pontius Pilate way out, and I think it is unacceptable that he should shift the entire responsibility for the loss of 12,000 jobs on to CN.

Would the Minister be prepared to provide immediately an early retirement program for railway employees who will be directly affected by the massive deregulation imposed by the Conservative Government? This early retirement program has already been tried previously and successfully by the former Government in the case of textile and footwear industry employees, who were laid off because of changing conditions.

Could the Minister accept his responsibility and do something for the railway employees?

• (1425)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my responsibility, as I conceive it, is to see that the parties are left to negotiate in good faith, to reach a settlement as quickly as possible with respect to this collective bargaining dispute. That is the system of law that was left to us by the previous Government, and with which we agree.

The Minister of Labour has described the efforts he is now making to call upon additional mediation, which I heartily support. It is not my duty and responsibility to intervene for cheap political reasons, to make it appear that we are taking some action that might be very damaging to a long lasting and permanent settlement to this dispute.

JOB SECURITY ISSUE—EFFECT OF LAY-OFFS ON OLDER WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In recent labour disputes, whether it was Air Canada, CBC, Canada Post, or right now with CN, job security has been the issue. I do not believe it is a cheap political shot to ask the Minister where people who have worked for CN for 25 to 30 years and are now fifty or sixty years old will get work.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the House and anyone who is fair minded will recognize that CN is one of the leaders in the area of job security in Canada, and when it has been put in the unfortunate situation of having to lay off or terminate employees for various reasons, it has been among the most generous employers in Canada. There is a system in effect now by which certain provisions go into effect if one has, I believe, eight years service and is laid off. CN has nothing to apologize for. I know it will want to improve that system as time permits and its economic position permits. It has already indicated that. That is a matter that is now subject to mediation and collective bargaining.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Considering that the Crown corporations I mentioned in my first question have been negotiating against job security, what is the Government's position with regard to what those Crown corporations should be doing in terms of negotiating job security? I am sure most Canadians want an answer to that question.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our position is to encourage CN to be as generous as possible with respect to employees who have to be given notice that they can no longer continue to work for the company for various reasons. That was demonstrated in the Moncton case, for example, but frustrated by certain parties that did not co-operate to settle that issue. We will continue to encourage CN to do that. I am sure it will do its best to see that there is a fair solution.

Oral Questions

TRADE

IMPOSITION OF UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH IMPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade I will direct my question to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister is fully aware that on Friday the United States announced the imposition of up to a devastating 85 per cent tariff on potash exports to that country, which will have an effect upon $350 million worth of exports and affect up to 4,000 jobs in New Brunswick, Saskatchewan and other provinces.

The Minister for International Trade said the reaction of the Canadian Government was only one of disappointment. Does that mean the Canadian Government is in effect agreeing with the United States' determination of this matter, or does it intend to fight through every possible avenue and recourse, and not cave in like it did in the softwood lumber case in which it imposed a tax on ourselves and set a precedent that has resulted in this kind of further action being imposed on Canadian producers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, certainly the Government is very disappointed and is reviewing the case very carefully. I think the Hon. Member is aware that this is one step in a very complicated quasi-judicial process, but I think it is fair to point out that all this leads to the fact that we do need a comprehensive trading arrangement.

This decision is a product of the current trading relationship we have with the United States and we are trying to confront this issue in the broadest possible sense by working out a solution which would be encompassed in a framework that would provide a comprehensive trading relationship between our two countries with an adequate dispute resolving mechanism. The Hon. Member should be supporting that initiative rather than picking holes in it.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I only want to point out to the Deputy Prime Minister that it appears that the more we negotiate, the more we get hit by American trade actions which are having an incredibly damaging effect on all parts of the Canadian economy. So much for the negotiations when all we do is pay the price and they get the benefits.

SUPPORT FOR PRODUCERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister if the Government intends to provide any form of contingency protection for the potash producers in order to ensure that they stay in business and continue their operations, or is in fact any support that might be provided prohibited under the proposed free trade negotiations in which the Government is presently engaged?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister for International Trade has pointed out, she and officials will be working very closely with the Government of Saskatchewan, the potash companies and all those involved to try to work together toward presenting the best possible case.

There is simply no question about the fact that there is a strong protectionist sentiment in the United States, and I know my hon. friend across the way shares some of those political views with his colleagues south of the border. What we in this country need more than anything, and it is becoming clearer every day, is a comprehensive trade arrangement with a dispute resolving mechanism that can see these kinds of issues resolved once and for all.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, what the people of Canada need is a Government that will just for once stand up for their interests in trade with the United States. Apropos of that, I would like to ask the Minister a specific question. Since this is damaging to an industry that exports about $500 million worth of products each year and affects the people of New Brunswick as well as the people of Saskatchewan, what is the Government of Canada planning to do concretely on a bilateral basis with the United States to get it to reverse this totally unjustified whack at another Canadian export industry that happens to be doing very well in fair competition?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think it should be pointed out that this was not an initiative taken by the U.S. Government, it was an initiative taken by the industry. It is the first step in a long series of steps through a very complicated quasi- judicial process. As I indicated to the previous questioner, the Government of Canada stands very solidly in support of the Canadian industry, the Government of Saskatchewan and individuals in trying to put the best case forward on behalf of Canada and the potash producers of Canada.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister knows very well, this follows a long series of unfortunate and unfair decisions on shakes and shingles, tubular steel, softwood, pork and a whole range of products. The last time a major decision was made against us was on the softwood issue. The Government then said it would protest the American decision at GATT. Instead of doing that, it caved in and, in a masochistic way, imposed a self-inflicted punishment on Canadians in order to mesh with the American decision.

Since the Government promised it would take the earlier unfair decision to GATT and it did not, will we get a concrete promise now about what the Canadian Government will do to protect potash producers? Will the Government deliver on that promise?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it is rather interesting that the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party would have rather seen the $600 million flow to the United States than stay in Canada. That is certainly contrary to the views of this Government and the views of most Canadian Premiers.

While the Hon. Member seems to take great satisfaction in bearing bad news, may I just point out that the Canada West Foundation which has just done a study on the trade negotiations has indicated that in the Province of Saskatchewan, about which the Hon. Leader of the NDP seems to be concerned, a comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States would produce about 55,000 new jobs. It also points out that failure to secure an agreement would cost the Canadian economy some 350,000 jobs. Why does the Hon. Leader of the NDP, not get on with it and support the protection of Canadian jobs and the Government's initiatives? I think the workers of Canada would laud him for his efforts.

GOVERNMENT PLANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this Party favours an approach that has worked quite well, and that is to deal with the United States on a multilateral, multinational basis in order to get fair trade all around the world and not just a special deal with the United States that is bound to work to our disadvantage.

Since the Deputy Prime Minister has expressed concern for the impact on the workers of Saskatchewan and New Brunswick who will potentially be affected by this, and I have no doubt that he is quite genuine about it, what plans is the Government considering putting in place if worse comes to worst and there are significant lay-offs in this sector of those two provinces as a result of this unfair American decision?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader is a lecturer in a classroom yet he does not understand a few lessons from an ordinary layman like myself. I have tried to point out that the Canada West Foundation has indicated that a free trade arrangement would save some 350,000 jobs in Canada and produce some 55,000 new jobs—

Mr. Broadbent: I will give you federal studies that show the opposite.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Chamber of Commerce, the Economic Council of Canada and other organizations like that share the same view. I am not trying to argue that black is white, but obviously the Leader of the NDP is.

I would like to point out that in connection with the reference to GATT, the Minister has indicated in a press release that we will be reviewing the Commerce decision, particularly with a view to ensuring that it is consistent with the United States' obligations under GATT. I think that should respond to the earlier question raised by the Hon. Member.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—POSTPONEMENT OF MEETING WITH PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Speaking of studies, the Government's own study from its Department of Regional Industrial Expansion shows that a lot more industries and a lot more jobs would be hurt than would be helped by the Government's free trade initiative.

If the Prime Minister is so convinced that the provincial Premiers support what he is doing, why has he unilaterally and without consulting with the provincial Premiers postponed a meeting with them to consider a draft text of a free trade agreement from an agreed on date of September 8 to September 14? If the Prime Minister has made such a postponement, could it be that deep in his own heart he realizes that giving the Premiers enough time to study any draft text of a free trade agreement would show that it is not a good deal for Canada and should not be proceeded with?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose my hon. friend would want to square the comments he has made with those made recently by Premier Bourassa, the Liberal Premier of Quebec, who said that the absence of a free trade arrangement would mean the irreversible decline of Quebec in Canada economically. When the free trade initiative is supported by the Premiers as it is, I think my hon. friend would do well to listen to their voices and to the objective studies.

My hon. friend referred to the Economic Council of Canada which predicted a net increase of some 350,000 new jobs in Canada and a decline in unemployment, particularly in our far-flung regions. This is why we are seeking so actively a free trade initiative. It means jobs and prosperity for Canadians, particularly in those areas that have not had the kinds of low unemployment rates we have been able to bring to southern Ontario, for example. I know my hon. friend would want fairness to prevail in employment.

Regarding the time, we are seeking an occasion on which the First Ministers can review carefully, in all the time required, any trade arrangement, if indeed we conclude one. We are looking for a mutually acceptable date.

• (1440)

STUDY BY PREMIERS OF DRAFT AGREEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, is it not true that if the meeting the Prime Minister is going to have with the Premiers to look at what could be a draft of a free trade agreement does not take place until September 14 it will leave only some three weeks, or about fourteen working days, for the Premiers to consider a matter very vital to Canada because the deadline for presenting such an agreement to Congress is October 5? How can the Premiers be expected to give such an important matter adequate study?

Is this not another example of how the Prime Minister and his Government are trying to ram through an issue vital to Canada without permitting full and proper discussion by the Premiers and the Canadian people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Thunderous applause.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): It is hard to hear me over that applause.

Mr. Ouellet: We can do it again if you want.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I find the concern about what might be in a free trade briefing to be a little ironic coming from my friend inasmuch as he and his Party turned down the opportunity to receive a full confidential briefing from Ambassador Reisman. For someone to say he is interested in getting the facts, and then does that, means that he is trying to be on both sides of the issue, as his Party invariably seeks to be.

He asks whether three weeks are ample time to consider a proposed free trade arrangement. My hon. friend seems to think this will be the first time the First Ministers have seen the document.

Mr. Axworthy: That is true.

Mr. Mulroney: Our last meeting lasted seven or seven and a half hours. Meetings before that lasted hours. There have been dozens of ministerial meetings and I understand many dozens of meetings between officials. Various Premiers, including Premier Peckford and Premier Getty, have commented on the fullness of the information and the celerity with which it is transmitted to the provinces. The Premiers are fully informed of what is going on and I can assure my hon. friend that at the next meeting, and any other meetings required, they will have full access to all information and lots of time to make up their minds on its value to Canada.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF REPORTED CORRESPONDENCE ON CANADIAN POLICY WITH RESPECT TO AUTO TRADE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have here copies of correspondence between the Office of the U.S. Representative for External Trade and Congressman John Dingwall. This correspondence, although it is a year old, is proof of a concerted attack on key elements of Canada's policy on the automobile industry as reflected in the Auto Pact.

Could the Minister confirm that is indeed the case?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, is the Hon. Member referring to a report, which is about a year old, raised by the CBC? If so, that is a bit of an old news item and there is really nothing new to add. This had to do with an exchange of correspondence between the U.S. trade representative and a Michigan Congressman concerning duty remission arising out of the Canadian Auto Pact. This matter was debated to some extent a year ago and nothing has changed.

The position of the Canadian Government is the same. We have not raised the Auto Pact. Neither has the U.S., I am advised. If issues surrounding the Auto Pact are raised which would improve Canada's position, of course we would be prepared to sit down and talk about it.

DUTY REMISSION SCHEME

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, let me make clear that the reference was to the calling into question of the Canadian duty remission scheme. Will the Canadian Government, during the free trade negotiations, accept the American position that in order to have such a pact the duty remission scheme must be cancelled? That scheme was intended to produce and has produced Canadian jobs.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, this issue was raised about a year ago. Nothing has changed since that time. The position of the Canadian Government is quite clear. We have not raised the Auto Pact. I am told the U.S. has not raised the issue. If proposals are made that would enhance the arrangement and be in Canada's interest, certainly that would be the case.

The Hon. Member's Party was invited to sit in on a confidential briefing requested by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. His Party refused. I think it is really inappropriate to try to hammer out a very complex arrangement on the floor of the House of Commons.

TAX REFORM

IMPOSITION OF TAX ON FOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question was meant for the Minister of Finance, but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of State (Finance).

Inspired by the initiative of the Leader of the Opposition, the Rt. Hon. John Turner, thousands of Canadian men and women have signed petitions this summer urging the Government to withdraw its proposed sales tax on food. Over the weekend the Quebec Conservative caucus finally saw the light and came out against this food tax.

Better still, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said, and I quote: "When we live in a democracy we must take the wishes of the people into account, otherwise we would not be acting democratically but quite stupidly." Can the Minister of State (Finance) tell me whether the Conservative Government has shelved its plan to tax food, or has it decided to act stupidly, as the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said?

Mr. Prud'homme: Poor Marcel, he has put his foot in it again—

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we never maintained that we were going to tax food, never! I deplore the fact that the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), for example, should renew his scare tactics campaign. What we want is an honest debate on the tax reform.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, nor did they ever say they would not tax food, and that is the point.

[English]

Conservative times are hypocrisy times. You must beware of that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Minister cannot fool Canadians all the time.

Mr. de Cotret: You certainly tried.

Mr. Gauthier: I want a straightforward answer. Canadians in general do not want a hidden consumer tax. They do not want a tax on food. We have been tabling petitions to the Government asking that food not be taxed. Will the Minister get up and categorically deny that the Government intends to put a tax on food?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has made it clear on a number of occasions that this Government has not confirmed in any way that it is going to tax food. What it has confirmed is that the federal sales tax system is in disrepair, as it has been for decades, and we are going to change it for the better.

TAX ON FOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question dealing with the same matter is directed to the Prime Minister.

Considering that the Quebec Progressive Conservative caucus has endorsed the position of my caucus and has stated its opposition to a sales tax on food, is the Prime Minister aware of the fact that 93 per cent of all Canadians are opposed to a food tax and can he assure them that the government will not introduce a sales tax on food?

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member is somewhat late in asking such a question.

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis is asking me to point out to the Hon. Member that he is late. It is done.

The Minister has already answered the question. The Conservative caucus has taken a stand on the matter during the weekend as any political organization is entitled and indeed has an obligation to do so. It would perhaps be interesting to know where does the NDP caucus from Quebec stand on Bill C-22. There are 1 300 jobs in Montreal waiting for the answer of the New Democrats on a vital project for Quebec and Canada.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSURANCE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Despite the comments of the Minister of State for Finance the Government is considering a sales tax on food which will add $400 a year to the cost of living of the average Canadian family.

In view of the opposition of 93 per cent of Canadians and that of his own caucus in Quebec, will the Prime Minister now assure that his Government will not impose a sales tax on food? That is the question Canadians want answered.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just, no doubt inadvertently, misled the House with the direct statement that the Government is considering a sales tax on food. That is false.

The Government put out, as it ought to in a democracy, a White Paper dealing with a very complex issue. We set out some options for consideration and debate by parliamentarians and all Canadians. They are to be addressed, but not to be distorted and deformed as my hon. friend has just done.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—SUPREME COURT'S OPINION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York-Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Prime Minister. So far, recognized groups have proposed amendments to the Meech Lake Accord but all have been rejected by the Government. Today, the Supreme Court of Canada has revealed its opinion—the same as that of the Official Opposition—that the Meech Lake Accord should be amended to allow the Territories to submit lists of candidates, including judges and lawyers, for the Supreme Court of Canada. Does the Prime Minister also reject the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should put his question in the proper context. I do not agree with the premise of the question. Not having seen the total report and having read only the press reports on the report of the Canadian Bar Association, I would not draw the same conclusions.

The reality is that the recommendation of the Canadian Bar Association had to do with eligibility of members of the Bars of the Northwest Territory and Yukon. Our position has been clear. We consider them eligible for appointment. That, purely and simply, is the situation which faces us with this report. If the Supreme Court judges agree with us, I am very grateful.

NOMINATIONS TO SUPREME COURT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister will look into precisely what has been recommended. As I understand it, it has indeed been expressed as the opinion of the Supreme Court of Canada that the territories should be able to submit lists directly.

Is the Government prepared to accept that very sensible suggestion so that, like the provinces, the territories can suggest names to be considered by the federal Government for appointment?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members will know, this is the subject of litigation at the present time. The position of the territories is before the courts, initiated by them. I think it is highly improper for us to be commenting on issues before the courts.

I have indicated our position which has been set forth by counsel on behalf of the federal Government which sustains the position I have articulated. I think we should now leave the matter to the courts to resolve the exact legal position.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SOFTWOOD LUMBER TARIFF

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and is with regard to the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber bound for the U.S. This is the largest self-imposed fiscal penalty in world trade history and costs our largest industry and largest source of balance of trade $600 million a year in penalty.

Is the Prime Minister suggesting to Canadians that, following the signing of a free trade agreement with the United States, he will lift this self-imposed penalty against our softwood lumber?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to a self-inflicted penalty. Under one proposal this $600 million a year was going to go into the coffers of the United States. Under the proposal worked out by the Government in co-operation with the provinces the $600 million remains in Canada very much under provincial control and, in large measure, to improve the situation of our forests and our competitiveness. Surely as a British Columbian my hon. friend knows that and would agree with the thrust of that action.

In larger terms, objective studies indicate that a free trade arrangement with the United States of America, while not perfect, would bring 300,000 or 400,000 new jobs to Canada. I think that is highly desirable. In addition to that, if we are successful, it would normalize a situation and would allow the resolution of disputes such as the one my hon. friend has mentioned which, in the normal course of a better trading arrangement, would not arise.

We are pursuing this with such vigour, first, because we believe that the prosperity of Canada and the creation of jobs for young Canadians depend very much upon this kind of initiative. Second, it would eliminate the kind of capricious action taken in the past. However, I think a wise Government has managed to keep the proceeds of that here for reinvestment in Canadian forests.

REQUEST THAT TARIFF BE REMOVED

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Prime Minister. It is a very simple question. Up until January 1 of this year we always had unrestricted free trade in softwood lumber with the United States. If the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States reach and sign a free trade agreement, will the Prime Minister then lift this 15 per cent self-imposed tariff off Canadian softwood lumber bound for the United States?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend can correct me if I am mistaken. He seems to speak disapprovingly of what was done with regard to the softwood lumber issue. My understanding is that that was very much endorsed by the IWA in British Columbia and the provincial members of the New Democratic Party in his province. It was endorsed as well by all of the Premiers and the Government of Canada. It clearly met national objectives which were, at that time, to resolve a very strong irritant and to keep the money here in Canada for reinvestment in our forest area.

Can the matter be resolved in the future? Obviously the object of concluding a comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States is to eliminate irritants and the kinds of capricious actions which we have seen in the past which continue to debilitate our relationship and preclude the possibility of further trade arrangements. If we are successful, as a necessary follow-up we would want to try to deal with each one of these irritants to make the situation even better than it can be under a trade arrangement.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LENGTH OF PRISON SENTENCES—GRANTING OF PAROLE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. At 1.40 a.m. on June 30 Members of this House made a most difficult decision regarding capital punishment. The reinstatement of it was rejected.

I have a question for the Minister of Justice about the concerns of Canadians with regard to the lengths of sentences of a number of prisoners. Many people feel the sentences are too lenient. They are also concerned about the situation of parole being granted too soon.

Canadians really want a safer society. What does the Minister of Justice plan to do about these two important issues?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question, particularly because it affords me the opportunity of indicating that, even before the vote on capital punishment, the Government had been taking initiatives to improve our system of justice in Canada and ensure that it is receptive to the requirements of a modern society.

We have before us for consideration the sentencing commission under which I have undertaken wide consultations with provincial Attorneys General, the Canadian Bar Association, the Federation of Law Societies of Canada, and Canadians generally, asking for their input. We also have our Standing Committee on Justice and Solititor General undertaking a very extensive review of the question of parole, and it will indeed be dealing with the recommendations, I take it, of the Canadian Sentencing Commission. So we are, as parliamentarians, responding positively to the challenge. I know the Hon. Member will take a leading part in the consideration of these issues.

IMMIGRATION

AMENDMENTS TO PROPOSED LEGISLATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. I received today a copy of the minutes of the Conservative national caucus meeting of last Wednesday which include a number of recommendations and comments made by Ministers and Members of Parliament. Under the name of the Minister of Employment and Immigration, it states that the Minister told his Government colleagues regarding Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 that: "We will not accept amendments that will weaken Bills".

How can the Minister be advising his government colleagues that he will not accept any amendments at the very same time the legislative committee was receiving very moving testimony from leading authorities across the country suggesting that, while cutting abuse is a legitimate concern, it should not be done on the backs of real refugees, on the civil liberties of Canadians and in terms of our United Nations commitment? Will the Minister show more respect for the views of Canadians and concede that amendments are needed and will be made?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think my friend would like to impress the House in referring to what I said. He just had to read the newspapers or watch television to see that I always said that I will not agree with amendments which could weaken Bill C-84. I repeat what I said. But I think it is more than useful to hear, and we have to hear, what we heard in committee from witnesses because we believe that we can improve this legislation in terms of the way we word it. However, once again I tell the Hon. Member today that if he wants me to say that I will agree with anything that would give more chance to abusers to come into this country, I will not say that.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER ACCEPT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, judging from the looks of the Prime Minister after he conferred with his national caucus chairman, it is not a simple matter of simply having read the newspaper. This document clearly suggests that despite the recommendations by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the Civil Liberties Association, the Canadian Bar Association, and churches from across the country, this Minister and that Government were not prepared to listen to those recommendations. So much for the accessible, open government promised by this Prime Minister back in 1984.

I suggest to the Minister that he would be doing the legislation a service by keeping it out of the courts—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member, who has had an extensive preamble, could put his question very succinctly.

Mr. Marchi: Given that this piece of legislation unamended will be tied up, making this policy chaotic in the months and years to come, will the Minister not agree today on the floor of the House of Commons that amendments are required and that the Government will embrace or initiate such amendments tomorrow in the legislative committee?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it would give me far more satisfaction if my honourable friend had told me exactly what his Party's position is on this matter.

I think everyone realizes that there is an urgent need to deal with a situation where there is daily abuse of Canadian legislation on refugee determination. Whatever the Hon. Member may have to say about the various positions that are taken across this country and which I am following carefully, I repeat that my honourable friend has the right, and he has been availing himself of that right, to move amendments within the parliamentary framework. We are now having hearings before the Legislative Committee. I will be there myself tomorrow, and I will listen to his recommendations.

That does not change the substance, however. I will not entertain amendments that will allow people to abuse the system. I think that the recommendations we receive, whatever they may be, should reflect the two considerations that are contained in the preamble to the Bill: To respect the rights of genuine refugees and deter those who abuse the system. I repeat: That will not change.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by,

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the speech delivered on Friday by the Minister of corporate affairs—and perhaps he should be renamed Minister of multinational affairs—is one which deserves—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) has the floor.

Mr. Caccia: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, the speech given in this House on Friday morning by the Minister of corporate affairs is one that deserves attention, study and definitely a rebuttal. I was stunned to hear the Minister imply in his speech that this piece of legislation, once approved, would protect Canadians from price increases in drugs and medicines. As can be seen in Hansard of August 21, page 8282, the Minister stated with respect to Bill C-22:

Under our scheme the Drug Prices Review Board will be examining those drugs and keeping the price increases of them at less than the cost of living.

That is quite a statement. Imagine, Mr. Speaker, a Minister of the Crown committing this piece of legislation to the extent of protecting Canadians from drug price increases. I looked at the Bill to find the basis for such a statement but nowhere could I find a clause in Bill C-22 that would corroborate that particular statement by the Minister.

Proposed Section 41.18, with respect to the Patent Medicine Prices Review Board, contains a lengthy description of what this Bill will do. It is over two pages long and includes a description of the powers of the board, specifically proposed Section 41.23(4), but nowhere in the Bill is there a scintilla of an indication to justify the Minister's statement that drug prices would not increase more than the cost of living. In fact, nowhere in the clause with respect to the powers of the board is there an indication that this particular board would have powers to control prices. Proposed Section 41.23(4) in the Bill states:

> The Board has, with respect to the attendance, swearing and examination of witnesses, the production and inspection of documents, the enforcement of its orders and other matters necessary or proper for the due exercise of its jurisdiction, all such powers, rights and privileges as are vested in a superior court of record.

That is all. Nowhere in this clause are powers given to the board to control prices, let alone the power to roll back prices.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in light of this, how can the Minister of the Crown make the promise to Canadians that price increases will not be greater than the increase in the cost of living? Nowhere in this Bill are these powers given to the board. The only power given to this board, according to the proposed legislation, is to review. You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker, that the power to "review" prices is just what the word means. It means to review prices. As indicated in the Bill, it is necessary to report probably once a year to Parliament and to the Minister the result of one's reviews. But this board has not been given the power, anywhere in the Bill, to control or to roll back prices once the legislation comes into effect.

It is no wonder why, when enumerating the individuals and organizations who are in support of this legislation, the Minister could not include such important organizations as the Consumers' Association of Canada. He could not include in his list of supporters, who were, by the way, mainly individuals and organizations interested in international trade, the Canadian Hospital Association. Nor could he include the Canadian Anti-Poverty Association or the Canadian Council on Social Development. He could not include the National Pensioners & Senior Citizens Federation on his list. I ask Hon. Members why he could not include these organizations. Why could he not include the Canadian Drug Manufacturers Association which has written to you, Mr. Speaker, and to every Member of Parliament since last October? Why could he not include that organization? It was for a very clear reason. These are basic, fundamental organizations which are not in favour of Bill C-22, for understandable reasons.

I submit that one of the basic reasons is that there is no power given to this board to control the prices once this law comes into effect. All that it can do, and this is where the Minister did not indicate to the House the facts as they are, is review the prices, as its name implies, and nothing more. It is a very poor thing for a Minister of the Crown to create an impression by making a statement in the House of Commons that is so far removed from the facts.

I suppose that is one of the reasons why on Friday the Minister could not include among those who support this measure your own provincial Government, Mr. Speaker, which is not in support of this Bill. That Government certainly cannot be considered to be composed of a bunch of rabid socialists, as you well know, Mr. Speaker. He could not include the Government of Manitoba. Nor could he include the Government of Ontario. He could not include the Government of Prince Edward Island. Not only that, he could not include two other Tory governments; he could not include the Tory Government of Prince Edward Island, as I mentioned, or the Tory Governments of Newfoundland and New Brunswick. That makes six provincial Governments which are against the legislation we are now discussing.

That should send a message to the Minister. It should indicate that these provincial governments are preoccupied with the impact of this particular legislation on the consumer, the average person, and, of course, on the prices of pharmaceuticals. If it has an impact on prices then it means that those provincial Governments have come to the conclusion that proposed Section 41.23(4) gives the board no power. It gives it the power just to call witnesses and to take a matter under investigation. But this board does not have substantial, fundamental and important powers for the protection of the public, namely, controlling prices and, where necessary, rolling them back. Therefore, support for this Bill may be an indication to Members of the House of how weak it is, particularly since six out of ten provincial governments are not in support of it.

An interesting letter was sent to us last December from Vancouver by the Building and Construction Trades Council in which the Secretary-Treasurer of the Council included a copy of his letter to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in which he states:

> On behalf of our members and other wage earners in our communities we are extremely disturbed by the proposed amendments to drug patent legislation.

He goes on to state:

> There can be no doubt that the effect of these changes will be to increase drug prices to the consumer. Since most working people have received little or nothing in the way of wage increases in the last few years and since hundreds of thousands of working people continue to try to exist on Unemployment Insurance payments, increases in the price of drugs, which would represent cuts to the present incomes of all Canadians—drugs, an absolute essential for many of our people—would represent a cruel and unjustified hardship.

One can well understand the reason why a letter such as this has been sent. It is why I took the first opportunity this morning of asking the Parliamentary Secretary to indicate to us where in the Bill there is the power to control prices. She was not able to answer that question because she cannot find that assurance in the Bill; It is not there. That matter has to be put on record and has to be brought to the attention of the public in a clear manner now that we are again debating it.

I would now like to deal with another passage of the Minister's speech which he gave the other day. He said that the Senate is threatening to veto this Bill. On the one hand he says that the Senate is threatening to veto the Bill while on the other he says that he has a number of amendments he would like to negotiate with the Senate. One cannot negotiate amendments with the Senate, as the Minister proposed on Friday, and then at the same time the Senate is threatening to veto the Bill. That is not what the Senate is doing.

The fact of the matter is that here we have the Senate exercising its constitutional rights and duties, as it has done with other Bills. It has done quite well in that respect. In other Bills when it has come forward with a number of amendments, the Government has accepted them. Consistent with that role in the past, which is constitutional and which is within the right and the responsibility of the Upper House, the Senate has come forward with a number of amendments resulting from a number of public consultations. In doing so now it has put to the House of Commons these amendments which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the nerve to describe on the one hand as a veto, while accepting certain of them on the other hand. The Minister of corporate affairs cannot have it both ways. He cannot call this action by the Senate a veto, and at the same time consider accepting certain amendments in to the Senate package.

The Senate has proposed a number of measures which indicate its perception of the public feeling today concerning the matter of drugs. In essence, it put forward a number of recommendations that were contained in the Eastman report which would protect the public in a manner that is better than Bill C-22. It would allow the Canadian manufacturers of generic drugs to produce drugs in a shorter period of time after they have been developed by a single company, namely, after four years instead of after ten years as was proposed in the Bill. This will permit greater competition, and the lowering of drug prices.

This is the essence of the Senate proposal, as far as the consumer is concerned. The Senate is also preoccupied with jobs. It seems to me that the Senate has made an eminently reasonable proposal for the development and the creation of jobs. As the Minister of corporate affairs has claimed, it is not a measure that will deny jobs to Canadians. On the contrary, the set of proposals that emanated from the Senate would permit the creation of jobs in Canada.

The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) in his speech on Friday made reference to the 48 amendments that he put forward in committee on behalf of the Official Opposition. Having fought for the amendments, and having lost them, it is quite understandable that those 48 amendments could not be lost and forgotten. Evidently, the Senators became aware of this enormous exercise and effort on the part of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. The Senators have picked up some of the cause. Through the Upper Chamber, they did what was not possible to achieve in the Tory dominated committee which studied Bill C-22. In that respect, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond did a phenomenal amount of work in pioneering the 48 amendments.

When a piece of legislation triggers a large number of amendments, it means that it is a poor piece of legislation. It is not only a partisan, momentary aberration to oppose, these amendments were well thought out. They were announced at second reading in the House by the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond. They were carried out in committee, but only to the point of proposing them because they were voted down. The Senate action has to be seen within this broader context.

We would like to see a piece of legislation that does not favour only the interests of the multinationals. That is the fundamental point that must be kept in mind. We have fought, as has the Senate, for legislation that looks beyond the interest of the multinational corporations. We would like to see a piece of legislation that looks at the pharmaceutical industry, at manufacturing in Canada, with an opportunity that goes to other active elements in the pharmaceutical sector which are not multinational corporations. There are many of them, and they have to be taken into account. It is important that we at least attempt to pursue and defend the interests of the non-multinationals. They are employers of some considerable extent. They represent a number of Canadians who have to see a future opportunity by way of legislation that also guarantees and continues their reason for existence.

In essence, Bill C-22 is an ill-conceived measure. It has been debated back and forth for several months. I can understand the frustration of the Minister of corporate affairs in seeing his measures not accepted. But the message for him is that perhaps his legislation is not acceptable. It is not in the interest of the public, and it needs to be changed.

I am sure if the Minister were reasonable, flexible, and looked at the proposals one by one from the Senate, and considered those that are in the interest of the consumer, and the people who ultimate have to buy these drugs, he would see the merits of preserving the character of the Canadian system.

Comparing our system with the system that prevails south of the border, which was so well described by Ralph Nader when he appeared on television the other day, Mr. Nader stated the merits of preserving the character of the Canadian retail and price structure system, and not adopting the system that prevails south of the border. Mr. Nader criticized the system in the United States when he said that they would rather have the Canadian system for pharmaceuticals and protection of the consumer, and not see Canada follow the system that presently dominates in the United States.

For all these reasons, we are very critical of the position taken on Friday by the Minister of corporate affairs. The Minister is giving the public the wrong impression as to the powers of the prices review board. It cannot be found in the existing legislation. The Minister is criticizing the Senate for having done something that is perfectly constitutional. Not only is it constitutional but, as a Chamber of sober second thought, it is its duty. The Minister is also critical of the Senate for having provided the House with a set of amendments which ultimately would protect the interest of the average Canadian consumer.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White).

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate this afternoon, but at the same time I am sorry that it had to take place in the first instance.

As it was passed by the House on May 6, Bill C-22 took a balanced view of the pharmaceutical industry. It provides for increased research and development, and chemical manufacturing, and continued growth of the generic companies. Bill C-22 is also committed to increasing consumer protection, and protecting provincial health care budgets.

Under the recent amendments proposed by the Senate, the current situation would change very little, if at all. The status quo would be maintained, which was confirmed by a memo sent to the Liberal caucus from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall). More importantly, Canadians would be deprived of the eventual benefits that would result if the original Bill C-22 was passed by the House. Indeed, the protection of individual and provincial health plans included in Bill C-22 has been completely ignored in the Senate proposals.

There have been many concerns raised over the impact of Bill C-22 on the prices of drugs. Specifically, someone stated that this policy will remove generic competition from the pharmaceutical market-place. Several months ago, a Minister of the Crown from the Province of Manitoba wrote a letter to the editor of my local paper in Swan River which stated that Bill C-22 would prohibit generic drugs in Canada. Such a statement from a provincial Minister of the Crown in Manitoba is clearly and completely false and untrue. Any such claims are simply not true. According to the legislation, all generic drugs on the market prior to June 27, 1986, will continue to be available. Any comments to the contrary are simply not true. In addition to those drugs, about 40 more could be subject to generic competition over the next five years. I emphasize that these drugs could be available because the profit motive comes into effect. If one suffers from a condition that requires a particular drug which is not a best seller, then a generic copy will not be available because the only motive that drives a generic company is the profit motive. If the drug is not rich enough it will not attract a generic competitor.

One must also remember that there is nothing in this policy that would cause the price of drugs now on the market to increase. Quite frankly, consumers will not suffer because of this legislation.

This will be especially true in the area of improved health care. It is very important to note that as current as this morning, the General Council of the Canadian Medical Association, meeting in Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, passed the following brief unanimous resolution which states: "That the Canadian Medical Association declares its support in principle for Bill C-22 as a measure which, in the long term, is likely to benefit the health of Canadians".

Under Bill C-22 as passed by this House, new drugs and new therapies will be introduced earlier. The need for hospitalization will be reduced and perhaps even the need for surgery will be reduced because we will have new drugs to cure old problems. An example of this is the drug Cimetidine. It was first marketed under the name Tagamet by Smith, Kline and French. It has been estimated that the introduction of Tagamet has saved up to $130 million in surgery. It is very important to consider that there will be many other drugs that will contribute to the health care of Canadians.

It is also important to note that Smith, Kline and French has been brutalized by the present system of compulsory licensing. It has had to close plants and has lost millions of dollars in sales and has lost Canadian workers.

This decreased need for hospitalization because of new and better medication will be even more important over the next several decades as baby boomers become seniors and place substantially heavier demands on our health care system. It has been estimated that by the year 2000 the average drug store will depend on senior citizens for 75 per cent of its business. This must be kept in mind as we discuss Bill C-22 and its benefits for the health care system.

The discovery of cures and treatments for diseases afflicting Canadians, especially our seniors, is essential to our well-being. With the increased research and development under Bill C-22, Canada will play a larger role in the field of medical discovery.

Canadian consumers enjoy fair drug prices mainly because of the purchasing power of the provinces, which buy 60 per cent of all the drugs in Canada and provide coverage for almost all our country's senior citizens. I should also note that this downward pressure on prices will continue in the market-place under Bill C-22.

Without some improvement in our country's health care system, provincial Governments will be faced with an even heavier burden for hospital care. Amendments such as those proposed by the Senate recently would impede improvements to the well-being of Canadians and, in turn, lead to higher costs for taxpayers.

Bill C-22, as it was passed by this House on May 6, takes into consideration all of these aspects. First, it provides the incentive for research and development which will enable Canada to benefit from new world class technologies in the fields of bio-tech, medicine, and health care.

Second, it strengthens consumer protection by ensuring that all patent drug prices are reviewed, not only those for which there is generic competition. If one goes to a drug store in Canada and randomly picks 100 drugs off the shelf, 93 of them would have no generic competitor for the reason I stated a few minutes ago. The only motive that drives the generic company is profit and, at present, only 7 per cent by volume and 20 per cent by dollar value are rich enough to attract generics.

The drug prices review board will be established to monitor the price of all patented drugs, not just that 7 per cent that are best sellers and rich enough to attract generics.

Under the current policy, consumers have no way of knowing whether they are paying a fair price for that 93 per cent of drugs that have no generic copy. Without the establishment of the drug prices review board, prices would be higher than they might otherwise be.

Doctor Eastman, who prepared the report some three or four years ago, will be the head of that board. During his testimony to the legislative committee that was considering Bill C-22, Doctor Eastman also said that he was confident that the drug prices review board would be beneficial to Canadian consumers.

The provinces will also benefit from the original Bill C-22. For instance, Bill C-22 proposed transitional payments of $25 million a year for the first four years of the policy, leading up to its first full review by Cabinet. This is additional security against any adjustment that may be made to provincial drug plans and ultimately additional security for those individual consumers who are covered by provincial plans.

The legislation that was sent to the Senate recognizes the importance of the provincial role in health care and the provision of drugs at reasonable prices to all Canadians.

The Bill allows for the establishment of an advisory panel which will be made up of persons from a variety of backgrounds. This panel would make recommendations on appointments to the prices review board. Furthermore, the board is required to notify the provincial Ministers of Health of any hearing the board will hold.

The provinces also have the statutory right to present evidence to the board. As the largest purchasers of medicine, they are, therefore, guaranteed a voice in the proceedings.

As well as protecting the provinces and consumers against unduly high drug prices, Bill C-22 will direct research and development expenditures to every region of Canada. For instance, as a result of the new policy, the innovative sector has recently announced commitments of almost $800 million to be spent on research in hospitals, universities and research centres across Canada over the next ten years. The $800 million is not an investment in just one facility. There will be more than $200 million in Quebec, upwards of $80 million in British Columbia, at least $70 million in the Maritimes, about $100 million in Alberta, $250 million in Ontario, and approximately $50 million in my home province of Manitoba. Chemical manufacturing, which will also be stimulated by these provisions, will add to these figures.

The New Democratic Government of Manitoba has been vehemently opposed to Bill C-22. In my opinion, it has been opposed for purely political reasons and it is nothing but a political opportunist. In fact, one of the Ministers of the Crown in Manitoba recently told a group of researchers at the St. Boniface Hospital in Winnipeg that Bill C-22 is doing the right thing, but the NDP could not resist the political opportunity that presented itself in this situation. In my opinion, that is despicable.

Bill C-22 would provide a policy that does not rely on government grants or government subsidies and takeovers. It is the private sector at its best, doing what it does best. This new policy is another step in the Government's efforts to promote sustained economic growth and job-creation while providing for the protection of Canadian consumers.

On the other hand, the Senate proposal uses the status quo of generic copying as the only way of lowering drug prices. Unfortunately, this system does not adequately protect all individuals. It is important to reiterate that generic companies only copy those drugs with a high sales volume and they do no research. Another witness who appeared before the committee, Doctor Chrétien, a clinical researcher from Quebec, said that generic companies do zero research. The few dollars they report as going into research are going into nothing other than quality control.

In fact, with the Senate amendments, companies will be able to charge whatever introductory price they wish for new drugs because generic companies take at least four to five years to copy a product. They wait that long until a market and profit has been established for a particular drug. In addition, some drugs never face competition because they are the so-called orphan drugs that are not big sellers and do not attract generic competition. Therefore, consumers of these products do not benefit from the compulsory licensing system as it exists today.

The Senate has also recommended that the royalty rate paid by generic firms be increased to about 14 per cent from the current 4 per cent. This measure could lead to an immediate 10 per cent increase in the price of generic drugs and a corresponding increase in prices of equivalent brand name products.

As well, the royalty scheme proposed will generate only a very small amount of money for new research and development. In fact, the Eastman Commission of Inquiry estimated that if the royalty fund had been fully mature in 1983, about $6 million would have been available for distribution for new research and development projects. That $6 million is only one-fifth of the total increase in costs. It is an insignificant portion of the $1.4 billion increase in research and development that could result from Bill C-22.

The Senate proposal focuses almost entirely on drug costs. While this is very important and is recognized in the original Bill C-22 by the extension of consumer protection, there was no consideration by the Senate committee of the impact of new medicines on reducing hospital costs. I mentioned this earlier and referred specifically to Tagamet and its $130-million-per-year savings in now unnecessary stomach surgery.

The 1985 report of the Eastman Commission stated that the royalty proposal would have cost over $30 million in 1983 alone. Those costs would have been borne directly by consumers and provinces. This is clear evidence that the Senate proposal is not cost-free as some people would have us believe. To summarize that, in fact, for every $1 generated by the Senate's royalty fund, consumers would be paying an extra $6.20. That increased cost to consumers would amount to over $1 billion in the next 10 years.

In conclusion, I would like to say that I am very disappointed that the Senate, after such a considerable delay that threatens the viability of already-announced investment plans, continues to take a position on Bill C-22 which gives such little regard to the facts. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there has been substantial discussion of the cost estimates of Bill C-22 among the many interested parties. The Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association and members of the Opposition in the House of Commons have quoted exaggerated estimates which have little basis in reality.

Indeed, officials of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs have estimated the savings due to continued limited compulsory licensing would have been about $166 million in 1983 if Bill C-22 had been in effect since 1969. This estimate uses the same criteria as that used by Dr. Eastman in his report. However, the drug prices review board would have added between $60 million and $200 million in additional savings to the savings from modified compulsory licensing. There will therefore be a net saving to consumers by monitoring the prices of all prescription drugs.

The Government has taken great care to design a pharmaceutical policy that will result in the maximum benefit for Canada and for Canadians. I am very confident that Bill C-22 as it was passed by this House on May 6 incorporates every element needed for this to happen.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member several questions. First, why does he take the advice of the multinational drug companies as to what will happen instead of listening to organizations representing a majority of Manitobans? These organizations have indicated very clearly their opposition to this Bill. I refer him to the positions taken by the Manitoba Organization of Seniors, the Manitoba Federation of Labour, the Manitoba section of the Consumers' Association of Canada, and an organization with which he should have very close contact, Keystone Agriculture, an organization which represents all the farm commodity groups in Manitoba. Keystone Agriculture has expressed its opposition to this Bill as well.

Six provinces have now joined that opposition. All of those provinces have pharmacare programs under which the provinces pay all or a substantial part of the prescription-drug costs of their residents. All of them have made it very clear that they have looked at the figures and done their estimates and that the cost to their programs will be increased very substantially.

Second, does the Hon. Member not realize that the drug prices review board will have very little power to do anything about prices since the vast majority of prescription drugs will be produced in the countries in which they are researched including the United States, Switzerland and Great Britain? Does he not realize that the transfer prices they charge their Canadian subsidiaries have no relationship at all to the real cost of the drug? They can charge anything they want to their Canadian subsidiaries which will be packaging the drugs and the drug prices review board will not be able to have any say about that at all. It will have no way of determining whether or not the real price is being charged to the Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked two questions and I would like to deal with them in that order. First, he mentioned the many groups in Manitoba that opposed the Bill. I think I could safely say that groups like Keystone Agricultural Producers and the Manitoba seniors are using the same figures that are being used by the NDP and its Leader, figures that have no basis in fact. In committee, we asked them—

Mr. Orlikow: They must be pretty stupid, eh?

Mr. White: I sat here quietly while you asked your question. I would appreciate the same respect. I asked the Hon. Member in committee for some proof of where these figures came from, and found that they had no basis in fact. They were pulled out of the air. It cannot be proven where they come from.

Some of these groups back in Manitoba quite rightly were concerned because of some of these figures. However, that is why my contention all along has been that these groups have been exploited by the Opposition. That is political opportunism in its worst possible sense. Opposition Members have been preying on the fears of these poor people.

In his speech on Friday, the Minister mentioned several of the groups and experts who feel that Bill C-22 will be beneficial to consumers and to the health care of Canadians. He mentioned the Medical Association, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Science Council of Canada, Dr. Michel Chrétien, the Clinical Research Institute and the Canadian Association of Retired Persons. I could spend 10 minutes listing the groups and experts who believe this Bill will be beneficial.

The Hon. Member's second question dealt with the drug prices review board. The Hon. Member said that it will have very little power. I submit that under our present system, 93 per cent of drugs in Canada have absolutely no price restrictions. They can be priced at any amount. There is no way that we can regulate or control those prices. I would think the Hon. Member would welcome a system that will try to keep those prices down.

Dr. Eastman who headed the commission back in 1983 will head the board. He is optimistic that it will be effective in controlling prices. Rather than being such a pessimist, I would think the Hon. Member would say that he approves of the Bill, let us try it for four years so that we may control the prices of these 93 per cent of drugs which do not attract generic competitors. I would think he would welcome such a move.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who in most circumstances is a very sensible man, has spoken about opposition Members drawing figures from the air. By his own admission, the figures about the amount of money to be invested in research on which this legislation is based come from the air. Those figures come from a promise.

Even that promise amounts to very little because, as has been pointed out, if one projects expenditures by the pharmaceutical industry between now and 1995 based on trend lines already established, they would be at about the level promised by those who are trying to gain support for this legislation. Many figures are drawn from the air, but they are not drawn from the air by members of the New Democratic Party or those who are in opposition to the legislation. They are drawn from the air by those who support it.

We have heard a great deal about research and development. I know that the Hon. Member, being a sensible man, a well informed man and a fair man, would have taken the time to investigate thoroughly what amount of money promised, within that limited context I described before, will really go to basic research. I do not mean clinical trials nor do I mean researching new packaging for pills, new colours or something that will make medications more palatable. I mean basic research, the kind of research that will lead to new discoveries about the mechanisms by which viruses affect cells. How much research will there be into nerve transmission mechanisms? How much fundamental research will be done in the way in which nucleic acids and proteins function and how those functions become disturbed? How much research will there be into the understanding of that disturbance, making it possible to design drugs on a well-informed, scientific basis? What guarantee is there that the promise will be kept that there will be great breakthroughs through investment by multinational corporations who have their centres elsewhere?

Mr. White: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member talked about figures coming out of the air. As far as the Government is concerned, the $800 million figure has not come out of the air, it has been coming out of the air waves. These companies have made the commitment. If the Member would study the Bill he will see there is a four year review and teeth in the Bill to deal with those companies which have not met their commitments. As to the figures I used about the saving resulting from the drug prices review board, we used the same criteria and the same basket of drugs used by Dr. Eastman in his report and plugged in Bill C-22 as if it had been in effect from 1969 through 1983. We did not pull those figures from the air. It is using his criteria, his formula, and the figures are accurate.

As to research, clinical versus basic, I know from the industry that clinical research in pharmaceuticals is very important. Some very important discoveries have been made. Basic research is important but in the pharmaceutical and biotech industry, clinical research is very important. I cannot predict what the breakdown will be, but I can give three quick examples of what compulsory licensing has done to drive our scientists out of Canada.

I was speaking to a researcher at the St. Boniface Hospital in Winnipeg who told me about two researchers at the University of Manitoba who discovered two new compounds and packed their bags and left the country to develop them further because of our compulsory licensing laws. A scientist in Ontario developed a naturally occurring substance which lowered blood pressure. This was a major breakthrough. He packed up his bags and moved out of the country because of our compulsory licensing system. Those are the people we want to keep in Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions and comments period has expired. Before recognizing the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Harris), I must tell the House what questions will be raised tonight at the time of adjournment.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Banks and Banking—Request for publication of report forwarded by Inspector General of Banks—Government position; the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin)—Air transport—Proposed transportation of plutonium through Canadian airspace—Territorial sovereignty; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Municipal Affairs—Upgrading of infrastructures—Government rejection of request for funds—Government position—Cost of upgrading.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND-CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below. And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I rise today to speak to the House of Commons as the representative of the people of the constituency of St. John's East.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am proud and pleased today to address Members of the House of Commons on behalf of the people of St. John's East.

I intend to improve my knowledge of French to be more at ease when addressing this House.

[English]

It is of great significance to me that my first full speech in the House of Commons deals with a Bill such as this. I believe there is a lesson for all Newfoundlanders in this Bill and the actions of the Government. I was born six months before the Confederation of Newfoundland and Canada in 1949. I am very conscious that I am here as a Newfoundlander as well as a Canadian to fight to ensure that all Newfoundlanders get their fair and just share of the fruits of this great nation. I am also here to ensure that they get a fair and equal opportunity to use their talents and energy to better themselves, their families and their country.

For several hundred years before we became part of Canada the people of the communities of St. John's East struggled against a harsh and demanding environment in order to make a living, mostly from the sea in the great fishing and sealing industries which existed off our coasts and in Labrador. They also struggled against their economic masters, the great fish merchants of the west country of England, the multinationals of their day, and the fish merchants of Newfoundland, their local counterparts. The fish merchants determined the price they would pay fishermen for their fish. These same merchants often being the only source of supply, would also decide the price of food and other supplies sold to fishermen. This system benefited the few and neglected and kept down the many. As a consequence of this economic relationship, Governments of Newfoundland have also been in a position of subservience to other countries and other interests.

While Canada was experiencing a level of maturity constitutionally in 1931, Newfoundland was going through a very severe economic period. In its relationship with the mother country, as England was then known, the Newfoundland Government, not the people of Newfoundland, gave in to its demands to give up self-government. Newfoundland had self-government for 100 years. In 1933, it gave up self-government as a result of the recommendations and demands made upon it by the international financial community.

In 1949, Newfoundlanders joined in Confederation with Canada. That was done with the hope that being a part of the great nation of Canada we would together be able to create our own destiny, decide our own future and determine our own priorities. What we now have before this House is legislation which is a direct counter to that.

The people of Canada have spoken about this Bill. Since 1969 we have had legislation and a format for the control and availability of drugs which was the envy of other parts of the world. Drug prices in Canada, compared to those in the U.S., improved considerably as a result of that legislation. A report prepared by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs showed that in 1969, drug prices were 9 per cent higher in Canada than in the U.S. In 1976, they were 21 per cent lower than in the U.S. That shows that the legislation created the opportunity for generic drug companies to make available to Canadians in need these beneficial drugs at a lower price.

We have also heard much talk about employment and jobs flowing from the legislation before us. During a similar period, that is 1967 to 1982, employment in the drug industry in Canada rose by 28.8 per cent. In the U.S. during that same time, when they enjoyed the absence of compulsory licensing, employment rose by 22 per cent. So we have a decrease in drug prices and an increase in employment in Canada during that period.

Given these facts, how can we explain why the Government brought in legislation that turns the benefits of the 1969 legislation around and goes back to what we had before? How do we explain the fact that it makes available to the multinational drug companies a monopoly on the use of patents for drugs necessary to the health of Canadians?

As a newcomer to the legislature I made it my business to do research and prepare for this speech. I found out a number of interesting things. Perhaps I will bore the House with a certain bit of naivety. There is a history of efforts by the multinational drug corporations to influence the Government of Canada. It appears to have been very successful. It goes back to a very powerful cartel of multinational drug companies which, over the last 15 years, have attacked the generic companies in Canada and the United States. These companies have stopped at nothing in attacking generic drug companies.

I have before me a report contained in Consumer Reports of August of this year entitled "The big lie about generic drugs." This is the big lie being promoted by the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association in the United States. This comprehensive article says that with increased competition in sight from generics in the United States, beginning in 1983 the major pharmaceutical firms opened a campaign of disparagement, which continues to this day, confusing and frightening doctors, pharmacists and patients alike. When Ayerst Laboratories, which operates in Canada as well as the United States, realized that it would soon face competition from a generic version of its drug called Inderal, a hypertension drug which was one of its most profitable drugs bringing in sales in excess of $350 million per year, it started a propaganda campaign aimed at both doctors and pharmacists.

It told doctors that one ought to use Inderal because of its proven therapeutic efficiency, but that with the generic alternative the chance existed that the patient's response may be compromised. It warned the doctors of the possibilities of law suits from patients. They sent a letter to pharmacists discussing pharmacists' potential liability if the cheaper generic version were dispensed instead of Inderal. The letter warned of troublesome, expensive lawsuits which would generate adverse publicity.

The Food and Drug Administration in the United States called this false and misleading. It said it served only to confuse and intimidate pharmacists into dispensing only Inderal. This is the kind of activity these companies undertake in order to discredit generic drug companies. It is reported that pharmaceutical manufacturers spend approximately $9,000 per doctor per year to convince them to use their drugs. This is an incredible amount of money to be spending on propaganda and promotion of drugs.

It is not surprising that these companies have supporters within the medical profession in these debates. These companies attempt to promote their drugs by taking doctors on trips to introduce them to their new drugs. Various other perks are granted to physicians in order to induce them to be sympathetic to the drug industry.

I am sure the House is well aware that as part of this campaign the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association took the opportunity to lobby intensively the Government of Canada, Members of Parliament, officials of the Department and Ministers. The former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Ms. Judy Erola, said that the war got absolutely furious, that the lobbying was perhaps the strongest she had ever seen. Ms. Erola replaced the previous Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who was pushing for changes in the drug legislation as a result of lobbying efforts.

As of March 30 of this year, Ms. Erola became the President of the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada. The most formidable and strongest lobby that the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had ever seen had found a spokesperson in Ms. Erola after she ceased to be the Minister.

In bowing to the wishes of the multinational corporations the Government is assisting these corporations to increase their massive profits. The profits of these companies are, by any measure, outrageous. On January 6 of this year, the Globe and

Mail reported that shareholders could be in line for a bonanza from major pharmaceutical companies which, cash rich from drug sale profits, were buying back their own shares and considering an increase in dividends.

"The major reason for the growing generosity of pharmaceutical concerns toward their shareholders is that they are sitting on piles of excess cash from their booming business. Some of those funds amount to more than $1 billion, which can be a drag on the balance sheet in the current low growth, low interest rate environment." The excess $1 billion which is lying around is a drag on the balance sheet. These are the kinds of profits which these multinational drug companies have lying around and must do something with.

In the United States they are recognizing Canada's example in controlling the use of new drug discoveries. Henry Waxman is the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Environment of the United States House of Representatives Committee on Energy and Commerce which conducted hearings into the issue of drug prices and generic drugs. His subcommittee issued a report showing that prescription drug prices in the United States increased more than 79 per cent during the past six years. The industry had spent only one out of every three dollars of that increase on research and development. But the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is asking us to give the industry more money, which we will not recover in research and development. All we have is a promise and nothing else.

The Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) referred to the Minister of Consumer Affairs for Manitoba of acting like a political opportunist when he opposed the legislation. I ask the Hon. Member if he considered the Minister of Consumer Affairs and the Minister of Health for the Province of Newfoundland to have acted as political opportunists when they criticized the Government of Canada for its legislation?

The people of Newfoundland were told for many years by the Party in power in Newfoundland that when we the Newfoundland Provincial Government and the federal Government are of the same political persuasion, we will see the kind of development Newfoundland needs to take its rightful place in Confederation. The Minister of Consumer Affairs of the Province of Newfoundland advised members of the committee that in June of 1985, he was first presented with the federal proposals to amend the Patent Act. At that time he outlined the province's concern that they would have a significant impact on drug prices in Canada, especially in Newfoundland and Labrador. On May 22, 1986, he wrote to the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs advising him of his Government's strong opposition to the federal Government's plans to amend the Patent Act.

There were further proposals given later to the Government in June, and in September when they were again discussed, the Government of Newfoundland considered the argument put forward by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. After consideration, the Government of Newfoundland would still not support the amendments. The concern expressed was for the impact on the consumer due to the expected drug price increases, and the lack of commitment of the federal Government to any definite job creation and business development plans for the Province of Newfoundland as a result of these amendments.

The Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs said in the House this afternoon that there is nothing we can do except have faith in the promises—

Mr. Lewis: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will be very generous as will, I am sure, the House, since this is the Hon. Member's maiden speech, and allow him another minute to wind up. He is now eight or nine minutes over his time. I hope I will receive unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member to finish.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member has another minute to finish his speech.

Mr. Harris: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank Members of the House. In view of the comments made by Government of Newfoundland to the Senate committee, it seems that this is not an attempt to take cheap political shots at the federal Government. There are serious objections to the Bill. I would ask the House to consider a statement by Dr. Twomey, the Minister of Health for the Province of Newfoundland, who is also a physician. This is important because we have heard that 10 years is needed in order for the drug companies to make enough profit to pay for their research. Mr. Twomey stated:

> As a physician, I know that the therapeutic lifetime as the drug of choice of most drugs is probably around 10 years. When a drug has been on the market for that long, there are usually changes in the formulation, and an entirely new drug in the same therapeutic class will appear on the market, which does essentially the same thing, but probably is deemed to be marginally more therapeutically beneficial for the particular disease or disorder.

That seems to me to indicate that once the 10 year monopoly period is up, it could be all over for a new drug, and the generic companies which are trying to produce cheaper drugs will be out of the door, in any event. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister admitted in the House this afternoon that the problem seems to be that we can do nothing but trust the drug companies and take them at their word—

Mr. Lanthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Even if it is the Hon. Member's maiden speech, he is not allowed to refer to the absence of a Member of the House of Commons.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not believe he did.

An Hon. Member: He did not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe the Hon Member referred to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Mr. Harris: The Parliamentary Secretary is still in the House, I believe.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope the Hon. Member would wind up.

Mr. Harris: We are told we can do nothing but take the drug companies at their word. If the Government is powerless to do anything about these multinational corporations, and can do nothing but take them at their word, then I would ask it to support this side of the House in doing something about it, as we will surely do.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: If I had an advice to give my hon. friend who is making his maiden speech in the House of Commons, Mr. Speaker, it would be not to make the mistake of having his speech photocopied and distributed among his constituents, for in view of this recent attack against multinationals, he would run the risk of being asked whether multinationals should stop investing in Hibernia oil? Whether Exxon, Esso, Texaco, Shell and all the other international investors should be asked to stop investing in Hibernia oil, since the Hon. Member for Saint-John East (Mr. Harris) does not agree with multinationals.

On the other hand, he stated that he was born six months before Confederation. He is not that old. I had the pleasure of visiting Newfoundland and I know, as a Quebecer, that that province may not be the luckiest. It has tremendous problems unemployment-wise. He has been very lucky and able to attend university. As one who has "made it", however, does he not feel that other young people in his own community or province should have access to higher learning and be able to work in Newfoundland in the development of medicine or advanced technology? What he is suggesting, for all practical purposes, is to destroy Bill C-22, prevent young people from attending universities, stop university professors from receiving support from multinationals who would invest money in various universities to keep professors in their present positions, to make it possible for young people to study and develop advanced technologies. He said no, to refuse that to Canadian citizens would be bad. What do you propose, my dear colleague? That all young Canadians remain copiers and cheaters! Is that what you are proposing for our Canadian youth?

If I may give a little advice to my young colleague in the House, Mr. Speaker, it would be from now on to think twice before advising the young people of this country to remain cheaters and copiers.

[English]

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I will respond to both comments. First, my comments were not directed against multinational investment in general. Multinational investment is good for Canada. It is needed in Canada. But it is the kind of investment that has to be done—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: Careful. Your colleagues are wincing.

Mr. Harris: —in the way Canada determines not decided by the multinationals by twisting the arm of this Government. It is in that context that the multinational corporations have appeared to be successful in telling the Government what to do.

• (1620)

With respect to multinational investment in Newfoundland and to my own success in achieving university education, as my hon. friend said, I hope that I will be able to use that education to fight for better things for all Newfoundlanders and for all Canadians.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment my hon. friend on his maiden speech in the House and to wish him well on behalf of all the members of the Government.

I would like to ask him a question about NDP policy. Traditionally, the policy of the NDP has been to oppose the Senate and, in fact, to abolish it. Last week the House Leader of the New Democratic Party was quoted as saying: "We would assume that the Senate would see the wisdom of stopping this Bill as well". He then went on to say: "But the fact is that they do some good work some of the time". Does the Hon. Member support the new position of the New Democratic Party that an appointed Senate should have the right to veto this legislation or, in fact, any legislation passed by this democratically elected House of Commons?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, I do not think that it has ever been the position of the New Democratic Party, either before or now, that the Senate has the right to veto legislation passed by this House. I think that the Hon. Member must know that the New Democratic Party is very realistic about these matters. The Senate is in place at the moment and it has sent these amendments back to the House. We debate them because they are before us.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to join in congratulating the Hon. Member for his maiden speech in the House. I thought he did a very credible and excellent job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: A refreshing change from that side of the House.

Mr. Young: We can all learn a few lessons. We certainly received a few today from the Hon. Member.

I would like to follow up on an earlier question that was asked. I seem to recall that perhaps in May of this year I happened to be in the Province of Nova Scotia. At that time the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) landed on the shores, so to speak, and announced that if this Bill were passed, all kinds of jobs in research and development would be created in Nova Scotia for young people. Immediately the Minister of Health for the Province of Nova Scotia, who shares the same political philosophy as the people over there who are trying to inflict this piece of legislation on the Canadian people, turned around and, in response to that statement, said: "Well, look, hold on for just a second. First, everything that we have seen coming from the multinational corporations has been promises. Second, they have not been talking about research and development but, rather, clinical research, which is an entirely different proposition. Third, since there is hardly any, if any, pharmaceutical production established in the Atlantic provinces, you are proposing that if the money appears at some future time, and we are not sure about that, all it would do is perhaps train a number of young people in the universities of Nova Scotia. But once they graduated there would be no jobs for them in Nova Scotia".

I want to ask the Hon. Member this simple question. If the Government is serious about providing jobs for the high number of young people who are unemployed in the Atlantic provinces, would the Government not be far better using what power it has to establish industries in the Atlantic provinces so that young people when they come out of university at least have the opportunity for employment in that hard-stricken area of the country?

Mr. Harris: Mr. Speaker, it appears to me that the Government is dependent upon the decision-making of the multinational corporations with respect to where they will place jobs, and where jobs ought to be does not depend upon the will of this Parliament or the people. If the Government used its power and its ability to establish job programs to benefit the areas of Canada which need it most, then I think the same money could go further and benefit the people of the Atlantic region.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, of course I am tremendously pleased to rise today in this important debate on Bill C-22. As a Quebecer and a Canadian, I would like that we assume once more our rightful place in the research and development of pharmaceuticals. I do not want to see another flight of foreign capital away from that industry. I do not want to see any more our young university graduates having to go abroad when our education system and their parents spent a lot of money so that they could study in our universities right here in Canada. Let us be realistic—when we invest, we want that investment to yield a return. It is rather embarrassing that a large country like Canada, exporting as it does 80 percent of its goods to other nations, does not protect the inventions of our Quebecers, our researchers, our scientists.

Quebecers understand that, except that I wonder if the New Democrats, the Liberals who are sitting here today—I think that some are from Quebec but they were not here when the time came to vote. The others do not know Quebec. They claim to know Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you right now that although I speak some English, I do not claim to know Ontario. But I do know Quebec and I know what is good for Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer to an editorial by Jean-Guy Dubuc that appeared in La Presse, from which I would like to quote one paragraph if I may:

> Only Liberal Senators did not understand what is at stake in the debate. Even Quebec senators are willing to forget Quebec's interests in order to defend those of Ontario. It is not surprising that the Senators have even convinced the Leader of the Opposition, Mr. John Turner, who supports them without seeming to know—or perhaps knowing only too well—that the Liberal Government had promised the Quebec Government to amend the legislation when Mr. André Ouellet was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Now, Quebecers and all Canadians will have to pay the price of the Liberal vendettas.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to see the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) in the House. I had the pleasure of sitting with him on the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform. I can tell you that I learned much from him on that committee. He has a lot of experience, knowledge and common sense. I think that he will be speaking after me, perhaps to tell his colleagues in the Senate and even on the other side of the House to take some tranquilizers and get a bit of rest.

As a matter of fact, since we know that some Senators like to sleep outside the Senate Chamber, it would perhaps not be a bad idea for all the Liberals to take tranquilizers and go to sleep at the door of the Senate. The Senators could—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. One has to be respectful even though it is the Chamber of sober second thought. I hope that the Hon. Member will take that into account. The Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault).

• (1630)

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I am greatful to you for calling me to order and asking me to show respect to the Upper House. In this case, I will be so to speak respectful, Mr. Speaker.

To return to what I was saying concerning my friend from Papineau, Mr. Speaker, I will certainly remain until the end of his speech, because I am sure that, as a sensible man, he will tell his colleagues that the infusion of $1.4 billion would create nearly 3,000 jobs over the next ten years. I suggest that because of his habitual eloquence, the Hon. Member for Papineau and former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will make an extraordinary speech in support of the Government and its Bill C-22.

Mr. Speaker, it is also suggested that the Senate report which is here before the House would not succeed in stopping the brain drain. Thousands of students and scientists would continue to leave Canada to seek opportunities elsewhere. It is too bad!

Mr. Speaker, if I were a parent today—unfortunately, I never had children, something I regret—and if my children were attending university, and studying pure science, I would ask mysel serious questions. I might suggest to them to make another option, because the opportunities for promotion in Canada are few and far between.

Mr. Speaker, my Argenteuil—Papineau constituents whom I was pleased to meet all summer long do not quite understand. As you know, not everyone can boast of knowing our Parliamentary system. It is difficult for someone to understand how come we on this side of the House, who are the elected government, are not capable with 211 Members to pass a piece of legislation. You know the average citizen wonders why, and this is the reason why for a number of years we have been talking of reforming the Senate, which I respect as you suggested I should do.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate's proposals jeopardize all the efforts made by this Government to change the structure of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry. If adopted, the Senate's proposals would mean that pharmaceutical firms would keep on importing from abroad the active ingredients and simply mix them, or even import the final product and only do clinical tests in order to comply with the requirements of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker, the exclusivity periods proposed by the Senate make no distinction between pharmaceuticals that are entirely invented and manufactured in Canada and products that are simply imported. The Senate's proposals now before us do not do any good on any count. They do not stimulate research activities or grant adequate protection to Canadian innovators.

Mr. Speaker, this Government has a duty to afford special protection under Bill C-22 to pharmaceuticals that are invented and manufactured in Canada, and this for a number of good reasons. First, it is a matter of fairness to inventors.

Mr. Speaker, if I was an inventor—or should I say an "inventress"—I would be frustrated at not being able to do any research. I would be frustrated at having studied in our great Canadian and Quebec universities but not being in a position to use my knowledge for my own country—the country that gave me those vital instruments, our universities—and at not being able to contribute to the progress of that country. We must afford the same degree of protection to inventions in the pharmaceutical industry as to any other invention, Mr. Speaker. Drugs are an basic necessity and we must therefore do all in our power to protect and reward investigators who develop drugs which improve the quality of life of all Canadian men and women.

Mr. Speaker, as one prominent journalist put it: it is well worth two or three cents more a pill. Yes, it is well worth it!

Secondly, affording better protection to drugs invented and developed here in Canada is a stimulus to fundamental research since it is here that investigators must initiate the discovery process. That is how we could make the Canadian pharmaceutical industry a major field of innovation.

My friend the Hon. Member for Papineau (M. Ouellet) represents a riding located in the Montreal area, Mr. Speaker, one from which foreign capital has fled to other provinces and even to other countries. This is because people believed that our Quebec language legislation, Bil 101, would be detrimental to business interests.

Mr. Speaker, in an aside I must say that it would be awful if the New Democrats came to power. The Montreal economy is just beginning to recover. Just try to imagine, Mr. Speaker, what we would look like if the New Democrats, with their way of thinking, were to say no to free trade and did not want to protect the wonderful opportunity the Bill before the House affords our researchers.

Mr. Speaker, with such a protection for drugs invented and developed here, how could Canada not attract capital investment as well as manufacturing facilities? Companies which will invest in Canada will be able to recover their costs adequately. We must also remember that our Canadian researchers will be strongly encouraged to stay in Canada instead of leaving our country to go to our main trade partners.

Mr. Speaker, a researcher, an inventor who works for a large manufacturing company, particularly a drug manufacturer, earns quite a lot of money. He is not a low income earner. He is well paid. It means that this man who is involved in research and his family contribute directly to other important sectors of our economy. They are good consumers who support other small and medium businesses around them. So if all these great scientists with big earnings leave to go where it is financially and intellectually more rewarding, the loser is not only the drug industry, but the whole regional economy.

For a long time, scientific groups doing research in Canada have been hoping for a Bill which would encourage Canadian discoveries. They were not the only ones, Mr. Speaker. I wonder how caucus members can be against the premier of their own province, against all the ministers from the province of Quebec that we represent in Ottawa, against all the companies which probably contributed to our election, whichever side we are on, how can they be against all these people? I wonder.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, most of the medical discoveries done in our universities and research institutes are bought by foreign companies which develop commercially products invented in Canada. This is a shameful and unacceptable situation which has to be changed.

Our Prime Minister said we should do something and we did, Mr. Speaker. The proposals of the Upper Chamber bring us back to a situation which had been denounced with the utmost vigor by our best scientists.

I repeat, Mr. Speaker, a country which wants to be at the leading edge of technology . . . You will recall that three or four years ago the Premier of Quebec said: "We are living in a period of technological change. We have to face the music." The time when Canada was only able to sell to its American neighbor is over. We have now access to much larger markets. Think of the nations of Asia and the Pacific, Mr. Speaker. Here is a very interesting market. Mr. Speaker, consider all the potential investments if, as a nation, we are intelligent enough to protect the intellectual property of our researchers as well as the inventions of the companies.

Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that if in any field ... Consider for instance our designers in the clothing sector, our designers in other commercial undertakings. Very few people like to have their ideas copied by others. Somebody spends a fortune to come up with a new product, it has hardly been marketed and practically overnight others are producing copies. If I were an investor in that field, you can understand why I would not be in too much of a hurry to get my money out of the bank to invest more. On the contrary, I would be tempted to go and see what is happening elsewhere, which is exactly what others did. They invested elsewhere.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I emphasize the fact that Canada has every right to rank first in pharmaceutical research and that our researchers are entitled to more protection for anything they invent in this country.

Bill C-22 confirms this, and any amendment which could be made would deny these rights.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly hope that everyone will be sensible, that our friends in the Upper and Lower Chambers, in front of us and beside us will sleep peacefully, read everything that has been said, listen to everything, and change their minds. We changed our minds ourselves in the past because Canadiens told us that we had perhaps gone a bit too far. Canadians are now saying that the Senators and our Liberal and NDP friends opposite are going too far about Bill C-22. It is now time to be reasonable and to approve Bill C-22, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi).

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), who has commented on the behaviour of the Liberal Senators who are blocking this Bill, why exactly the Conservative Senators abstained from the vote and even left the Senate Chamber to avoid having to vote. Were they afraid to vote against this Bill? It is a fact that the Conservative Senators did not vote, Mr. Speaker. Why is this? This is what I am asking my hon. colleague.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I am quite surprised to hear that the Conservative Senators did not vote on this Bill. Perhaps it was for a technical reason. I can say, however, that we are fortunate in having in the Senate a great scientist from Montreal, Senator David, a great Canadian and Quebecer, who was a member of the Senate Committee. Senator David, the director and founder of the Montreal Cardiological Institute, is a great man and a great Quebecer. He supports Bill C-22 as a doctor and as the founder of one of the major cardiological institutes in Quebec. He is a man of sense and we should be listening to people like him.

• (1640)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland). The Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will be recognized after the Hon. Member for Portneuf.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague from Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault). I have here a copy of a statement by a distinguished Canadian scientist who says that the price of drugs represents 5 percent of the cost of health care in Canada. And I will quote a few lines from his text which he read. He says: All acute, subacute and chronic illnesses which have no cure contribute substantially to the other 95 percent of health care expenses.

I would like to know first, whether my colleague from Argenteuil—Papineau shares that view of a distinguished scientist who happens to be Senator Paul David and, second, whether she would explain to our colleagues opposite and our somewhat testy Liberal senators the facts concerning those figures submitted by Senator David.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault). However, we are now getting into the realm of what is happening in the other place. I do not think that should happen in this Chamber. I will permit the Hon. Member to answer very briefly, but I hope Hon. Members will not participate in asking questions about what is happening or not happening in the other place.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I understand very well your intervention but you will have to admit, your Honour, that we find ourselves in an embarrassing situation since we are precisely discussing amendments introduced in the other place. Therefore I do not know whether we should or not deal with that matter ... As to the question asked by my colleague from Portneuf (Mr. Ferland), and I thank him for it, Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that Bill C-22 has some merits in that it strikes a delicate balance between various key elements, such as research, development, intellectual property, employment, the industrial sector, health care, and consumer protection. Obviously I agree with my colleague from Portneuf as regards that distinguished expert.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Hon. Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault), who severely criticized the Senate for doing its job. As you know, the Senate is a place where the regions of this country are represented and where regional rights are supposed to be defended. I think the Senate has given serious consideration to Bill C-22 and that the recommendations it proposes seem reasonable. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, considering that her main emphasis, namely that the purpose of the Government in tabling Bill C-22 would be to create jobs in Canada and promote more and more research and development in the pharmaceutical industry, which we agree is not something that is commonly done in Canada . . . The multinationals usually do this at Headquarters, in their own countries, either in Holland or the U.S. or elsewhere. They don't have to do it in a country with a market of only 25 million, and they haven't yet. Since the Hon. Member knows as well as I do that the multinationals have promised $1.4 billion within the next ten years—we are talking about thousands of jobs to be created as a result of these investments—I would like to ask her what guarantees she has that the multinationals will make those mass investments in Canada, totalling $1.4 billion over ten years, and how many jobs they are going to create? And could the Hon. Member perhaps tell me whether she has firm assurances, in writing, from her Government that these companies will keep their word? And if they don't, what will happen to this legislation which, as we know, tends to favour the multinationals considerably?

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, I hold my Hon. friend from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) in high esteem. I admit he has had better days than today in his parliamentary life. He has opened the door for me and I am going to answer him. He told me that the Senate had done its duty. It most certainly did not. I am sorry. The Senate has not done its duty. Its function is to examine bills coming from the House to prevent errors of interpretation within the bill itself. It is not to torpedo what the House has accomplished. Quite the contrary! The Senators did not do their job. They travelled all around at the expense of Canadian taxpayers, including those of my Argenteuil—Papineau riding. They spent some $300,000 or $400,000 travelling across Canada. It is a fine way to leave the Upper Chamber and to travel, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question and comment period is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Papineau has the floor.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part today in this debate on Bill C-22 dealing with drug patents. I am all the more so because, while I was Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in 1983, the Liberal Government of the time had looked into this very complex and important issue. I must say that the Members of this House and the other place who belong to the Liberal Party have never declared themselves against changes to the current legislation. As a matter of fact, we were the first to propose a review of the present system. The recommendations which appear in the Eastman Report, an independent commission created by the former Government to find out about what is true and false in this area, seem to us to be quite reasonable, because they set a balance between the interests of consumers and the need to increase research within the pharmaceutical industry.

Unfortunately, I have to say that once more the Conservative Government has chosen to be overly generous with the Americans.

Recently we were told by General Motors that this Government had made them an offer they could not refuse for keeping their plant in operation in St. Therese. In other words, from what General Motors told us, they had the choice either to stay in St. Therese or to close the plant. But the Government offer was so generous that they were left with no choice. They took the money and stayed.

It is precisely this kind of generosity with the Americans that once again we are blaming the Conservative Government for with regard to pharmaceutical products.

As Liberals, we are not against changing the law. However, we object to undue concessions to pharmaceutical companies.

The Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) has quite a list of questions put together by the department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to be asked of those who participate in this debate. But when asked a while ago, what kind of safeguards had been obtained with regard to investments and jobs, the Member for Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) preferred to remain silent in her seat. Because there are really no safeguards. The Member for Portneuf can goof-off all he wants behind the curtains, but if he has any proof, it should be tabled in the House. We will listen to him and even applaud him. Except that he has absolutely no proof that the multinationals will make the required investments.

We feel the Government chose to go much further than Professor Eastman's recommendations. It chose to tilt the scales in favour of the multinational pharmaceutical corporations, to the detriment of the Canadian generic drugs industry and Canadian consumers. We feel this is deplorable because fundamentally, what we Liberals have always been striving for is a balance between the real and pressing need for increased drug research and the corresponding need that those drugs be made available at prices that people can afford, and this we have a duty to ensure.

This is why we are supporting the Eastman Report's recommendations and this is why we, Liberal Members in this House, are of one mind with Liberal Senators who want to amend the bill to guarantee that the investments promised by the multinational corporations take place, that the jobs promised are created, and also that prices remain at levels that consumers can afford.

And that position of course is different from that of the New Democratic Party who want no change—they want the status quo. Of course, the short term status quo as supported by the New Democratic Party might be of benefit to consumers, but it would provide no incentive for the drug industry to develop new drugs.

But we say: Drug companies are willing to invest, they are ready to create jobs. Hurrah! Let us use that opportunity, let us amend the act. But let us not be blind to the point of thinking that drug corporations will deliver all the goods if we do not have a legislation with teeth. And unfortunately, the current bill does not provide the formal guarantees we are hoping for. And there lies the basic difference between the government's position and ours. We agree that the act has to be amended, but we believe the government is going too far when making a 10-year concession to the drug corporations—that is excessive in our view. The Eastman Report recommends four years and a 14 percent royalty. Obviously, those who engage in research, those who invest considerable amounts to put a new product on the market must meet their costs. It is absolutely essential that, in order to continue bringing new products onto the market, pharmaceutical firms be afforded a degree of protection which allows them to meet their costs and turn a reasonable profit. The Eastman Report tells us, based on an objective, in-depth evaluation of the issue, that four years are enough protection to allow the drug industry multinationals not only to meet their costs but to attain reasonable returns on their investment. So what does the Government do rather than leave it at four years? It gives them ten years. In other words, pharmaceutical firms are given an extra six years which, we contend, is based on no good reason and is not justified.

This situation is of great concern to us since we know that at the Irish Summit, the 1985 meeting between the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, President Reagan had insisted that Canadian patent legislation be harmonized with American legislation before the initiation of the free trade negociations. We also know that Mr. Clayton Yeutter, President Reagan's trade adviser, has stated that he would suspend the free trade talks if Canada did not honour its committment to give better patent protection to American multinationals.

And finally, we know that the American pharmaceutical industry had in hand a preliminary version of the bill we are now studying, Bill C-22, even before it was tabled in this House. What we are saying then is that the Conservative Government has caved in to the influential American lobby, that the bill in its present form goes too far and is far too generous for the pharmaceutical industry.

And there is no better proof of that than to recall that in the first version of the bill as tabled by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Côté), there was a provision intended to encourage inventors of patented products to manufacture them in Canada whereby they would be protected only if the drugs were manufactured in Canada. And so what happened between the first and second versions? That clause has vanished.

I see that you are preparing to put an end to the debate. I would simply want to quote the following from the document presented by the former Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Hon. Member for Langelier:

• (1650)

[English]

"Incentives for development of fine chemical manufacturing industries in Canada will be given in the legislation, but there will be a loss of exclusivity for innovative firms on new drugs unless they manufacture the fine chemical ingredients here in Canada."

[Translation]

Well, that is the problem. Between the first bill of Conservatives and the second bill of the present Minister, that important but embarrassing clause for American drug companies was removed. It disappeared. And in our opinion, it is more evidence of the Conservatives' submission, their kowtowing to American interests.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it five o'clock, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Peterborough (Mr. Domm) on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—WITHDRAWAL OF BILLS C-201, C-202, C-203

Mr. Domm: Mr. Speaker, I have three Private Members' Bills on the Order Paper which deal with capital punishment. I do not know whether I could be considered lucky or not but one of them has been drawn again for debate in this House tomorrow afternoon at five o'clock. I would like unanimous consent to the withdrawal of Bills C-201, C-202 and C-203, all of which call for a return of capital punishment. Given that Parliament resolved the issue with a vote against returning capital punishment, I ask for unanimous consent to withdraw all three Bills including the one scheduled for Private Members' hour tomorrow night at five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the Hon. Member have consent to remove the Bills from the Order Paper?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Orders discharged and Bills withdrawn.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, have the Table Officers seen fit to schedule a new Bill for that hour tomorrow? If so, can we have notice of which Bill will be called for debate?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Private Members' Business tomorrow will be second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-258, moved by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved that Bill C-223, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act (primacy of the Act), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to take part today in a debate on a bill I introduced on October 14, 1986 and which is one of a series of bills I tabled in the House over the last ten years or so.

Bill C-223 we are considering tonight seeks to recognize the primacy of the Official Languages Act, to make that Act supreme over any other statute. I am introducing that Bill because the matter is important, Mr. Speaker, knowing full well that in a bill tabled as recently as June 25, 1987 Hon. Members will have the opportunity to discuss this fall, I presume, the Government agrees to grant the Official Languages Act a qualified primacy, so to speak, but some primacy nonetheless over Canadian statutes, or the law of the land.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain why the Official Languages Act should explicitly contain a clause that guarantees its primacy over all other legislation.

When the legislator includes the concept of primacy in an Act, he confers on this Act a quasi constitutional character because it is thereby clearly distinguished from other Acts while, as we know, remaining subject to amendment or repeal by the same legislative authority from which it received this primacy. The effect of primacy is to make the Act supersede any provisions of any other Act that are inconsistent with the former, unless otherwise stated. That was the purpose of Bill C-223, and that was also the purpose of many other Bills I shall not mention here but which have been considered in the House from time to time and, I must admit, have always been postponed indefinitely because, as I was told at the time, it was too much, too soon. Too much, too soon has become a very familiar refrain for people like me who have taken up the cause of official languages. We are always being told: You are in too much of a hurry and you are asking too much.

I must say that the Government—this Government did not originate the concept but it tabled the Bill and drafted it—I must say that Bill C-72, which will be before the House for second reading in the fall, proposes that the primacy of this Act shall apply to the first five parts of the Bill in question. There are shortcomings and there are sections which I will certainly try to have amended in order to broaden the scope of the legislation and extend its primacy beyond what is being proposed, but on the whole, Mr. Speaker, we are pleased, and I am even quite satisfied with this major step forward embodied in Bill C-72.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should provide some brief historical notes in the few minutes I have at my disposal. As you know, the Official Languages Act was adopted in 1969, after an extensive national debate. It started with the B and B or Laurendau—Dunton Commission. At the time, the Commission went around the country, trying to find a way to resolve the crisis that was troubling Canadians, a crisis which, I hope, has now more or less died down, and I even hope it will disappear altogether.

But in a few minutes I will have the opportunity to remind you that even here in Ontario today we still experience difficulties when trying to make some people understand that the official languages of this country, English and French, do not in any way prevent either group from asserting its rights. Whether I do so in French or whether I do so in English does not take anything away from the other group: it can assert its rights in its own language. Francophones outside Quebec—and that includes me—assert their right to exist in French in Ontario, or in British Columbia for that matter, and I would hope that a country which claims to be basically bilingual, with two official languages, would show full respect for the aspirations of its minorities in the various provinces. This is sometimes difficult because it is not easy to defend oneself, to fight to have one's own schools, to have one's school rights recognized, to have one's rights respected before the courts, and to have one's rights in the legislative assembly.

Remember Alberta where an individual was denied the right to speak in his own language. Remember that before the courts today, in both Eastern and Western Canada, Canadians sometimes find it difficult to appear and give evidence in their own language, French, just as it has been difficult now and then for some anglophones in Quebec to understand and to be able to use their own language everywhere when they wanted to do so. Mr. Speaker, because of this ongoing evolution over the last 20 or 25 years, we now have today before us, after 18 years, a new piece of legislation containing what is in my opinion an important clause which asserts the primacy of the Act.

When the Official Languages Act was passed in 1969, it was a great step forward. For the first time in Canada, we recognized that we have two official languages, and implemented legislation to ensure the equality of English and French in federal parliamentary institutions.

While certain problems with the 1969 Act have come to light and brought the Government to introduce a new bill, Bill C-72, we must not forget that the 1969 Act has been the major instrument in changing public attitudes as concerns official languages.

It is because of the evolution in attitudes especially, and of the action taken by some Governments that the 1969 Act has become outmoded and needs to be brought up to date.

When the Liberal Government of the time adopted the Act in 1969, our Constitution had not yet been patriated. The rights of official languages minorities to be taught in their own language throughout Canada did not exist, neither did the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and so on.

While we say that the 1969 Act needed to be amended, this does not mean that the problems were identified by the Conservative Government. Since its passage in 1969, the Act has been examined in depth by the Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons and applied in all federal Departments. The Official Languages Commissioner examines how this is done and reports each year to Parliament.

It is by applying the Act and looking at the results that we were able to identify weaknesses. For instance, the concept of bilingual districts has never been implemented because it was restrictive and seemed unnecessary, while the language of work concept, which is vaguely defined in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, quickly became one of the main problems with this legislation. The amendments to the Act have therefore been identified thanks mostly to the reports of the Joint Committee on Official Languages. Indeed, four of the main reports of this Committee contain recommendations for amendments to the 1969 Act. These are the first, fourth and fifth reports of the Thirty Second Parliament, tabled in July 1981, June 1982 and April 1983, as well as the second report of the Thirty Third Parliament tabled recently.

Given that Bill C-72 contains most of the proposed amendments, it would seem appropriate to sum them up in order to put this debate in context and give credit, in particular, to the joint committee which worked very hard and submitted amendments which I consider contructive and which will reinforce the Act.

The first report of 1981 proposed two changes, first the repeal of all clauses dealing with bilingual districts and second the inclusion in the Act of the expressions "where numbers warrant" and "active offer of services".

We should recall that 1981 was a year of constitutional negotiations. The reference to numbers comes from the desire to harmonize the Act and the constitutional document. As to the active offer of services it will be embodied in the Act of 1987, in Section 27.

The fourth report, in 1982, added three new subjects. First a section to clarify the question of the language of work, a recommandation made by the committee following contested decisions of the courts. I recognize that the Act of 1987 took that into consideration since it defines the language of work and its application in Sections 33 and 34. But the Government did not invent anything, it merely reproduced the parliamentary resolution of 1973 on the language of work, passed by this House in June 1973.

Then, again to clarify the Act, following the courts' rulings, the committee recommended that it should be made binding and declaratory, which means it should contain provisions making its implementation compulsory. It would therefore establish rights—we could for instance before the courts ask for compliance with the Act. The 1987 Act implements part of that recommendation in Sections 75(1) and 76(1). I need only remind Hon. Members the issue of airline employees and the whole disruption that was brought about by the court ruling that Section 2 of the Official Languages Act was only declaratory and not binding. This caused us many problems and we are trying to amend and strengthen the legislation, as I said earlier, in order to make it binding and declaratory.

Finally, the Committee insisted on the inclusion of a section regarding the fair participation of both language groups in this country, which is covered by the preamble and Part VI of the 1987 Act, Bill C-72. As regards the fifth Report of the Committee, one of its main recommendations concerns the recognition of the supremacy of the law. To some people, that issue was settled by the fact that Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter of Rights were enshrined in the 1982 Constitution Act. In fact, as the Charter is enshrined in the Constitution, it will render inoperative those provisions that are inconsistent on any other rule of law, in view of the supremacy of the Constitution. Incidentally, the wording of the Charter is almost exactly the same as Section 2 of the 1969 Official Languages Act.

In other people's view, the law will always be the interpretation framework for judges who try to determine the spirit and the intent of the law. If the law is not specific enough, the very vague safeguards provided for in Section 16(1) of the Charter will prevail. There have been many court rulings to this effect. In fact, the Deputy Minister of Justice confirmed it when he appeared before the Committee in March, April and May 1982.

Thus, to protect the provisions of the Official Languages Act, it is essential to include a clause that clearly asserts the intent of the law to give that act precedence over any other act, order, decree, by-law, rule or regulation.

Mr. Speaker, these events summarize the evolution of the issue from 1969 to 1982, when the problem of the primacy of the Act was recognized and identified. I am not saying that this problem occurred all of a sudden in 1982. What I mean to say is that from 1969 to 1982, the issue was examined from every angle and the courts rendered their decisions. It is a long process of interpretation and identification of the problem, as well as determination of the remedy which has made the primacy of the Act a central and even significant issue in Bill C-72 which was introduced by this Government.

Mr. Speaker, I was involved in various capacities in this process. As an Hon. Member, as a Member of the Committee on Official Languages, and as chairman of this Committee. As an Hon. Member, I introduced a number of private bills calling on the House to adopt the principle of the primacy of the Official Languages Act. In 1984, I introduced a couple of bills, including Bills C-203 and C-223, all of which were seeking to establish the primacy of the Official Languages Act, thereby giving it a quasi-constitutional character, since all other legislation had to be subordinated to it, just as ordinary legislation are subordinated to the Constitution.

I do not want to repeat the need to establish the primacy of the Act, for I have dealt enough with it from the start, preferring to show how Bill C-223 would provide in some cases a better protection than the provisions of Bill C-72. For instance, Clause I of Bill C-223 provides for the implicit repeal of any provision of a law of Canada in case of conflict, unless the notwithstanding clause applied. Moreover, Clause 11(1) made it an obligation for the Minister of Justice to examine every regulation to ascertain whether any inconsistency existed. The primacy sought through Bill C-223 is aimed at the subject matter of the Official Languages Act and not at the whole legislation. More specifically, it is to Section 2 that this primacy should have been provided.

Clause 79 (1) of Bill C-72 provides also that the primacy of the Act will be limited to certain provisions of the legislation, more specifically Parts I to IV which supersede all conflicting provisions of any other federal legislation or regulation.

Such a procedure namely the reference to explicit rather than implicit content, as in the case of Bill C-223, has advantages as well as disadvantages. On the positive side, this difference will dispel some of the doubts felt by judges because they will know exactly what the legislator was referring to when he granted the primacy of the law. Conversely, this leaves no room for a wider interpretation by the courts. Thus, although Bill C-223 is general in its application and covers the Canadian Human Rights Act, section 79 (2) excludes it explicitly, and also excludes its rules. It so happens that in some sections of the Canadian Human Rights Act, for instance those providing that race, ethnic or national origin are grounds for discrimination, section 3 of the act, or section 7 concerning discrimination in hiring, and section 8 concerning job applications, advertising and, may very well, Mr. Speaker, contradict the Official Languages Act.

Linguistic rights could therefore be weakened due to the removal of discriminatory motives since the Canadian Human Rights Act is excluded from the primacy clause in Bill C-72.

Furthermore, the fact that Part VI in Bill C-72 is excluded from the paragraph concerning primacy could cause problems relating to representation, equal participation, language of work and language of service. For instance, there could be conflicts between the provisions of the Public Service Employment Act and those of the Official Languages Act. If that were to be the case, the Courts probably would decide in favour of the Public Service Employment Act rather than the Official Languages Act, because there is a rule that an Act of specific scope takes precedence over an Act of general scope, as is the Official Languages Act, because it will be remembered that Justice Deschênes in the Gens de l'air case in 1977-78 ruled it was an Act of general scope.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the situation as regards the primacy of the Official Languages Act has changed a lot since Bill C-72 was put in place. As I just said, the latter includes very specific provisions as to the primacy of the Act. I am quite pleased about that, Mr. Speaker. However, any specific provision eventually includes loopholes because of its very specificity. This is why it is useful to have legislations of a more general scope that become interpretation cases allowing the Courts to enjoy more flexibility, to be more open-minded in interpreting the law. Such is the thrust of Bill C-223 now before us. While being of general scope, it could complement the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the Official Languages Act.

Moreover, Bill C-223 includes provisions that are used—as I say, it charges the Minister of Justice with the responsibility to look at any proposed regulations.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I urge all Hon. Members in this House to support the Bill. I believe it is essential that we make two amendments to Bill C-72, and they are in Bill C-223—one to give primacy to the Act, and for which I hope I have the support of Hon. Members, and another to charge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) with the responsibility to review any regulations to ensure that there is no inconsistency with any act voted by this Parliament. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I thank all Hon. Members for their attention.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Argenteuil—Papineau): Mr. Speaker, we are here to discuss the bill tabled by my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The bill is entitled An Act to amend the Official Languages Act and its basic purpose is to assert the primacy of the Official Languages Act which is now in force. Mr. Speaker, all those here would agree, I believe, that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has spared no effort to improve the status of official languages in federal institutions. I would like to congratulate him personally since I have had the opportunity on two or three occasions to sit in for a member of the joint committee on official languages and can therefore say that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is a relentless fighter on the french language issue. I would therefore take this opportunity to congratulate him personally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Bourgault: Mr. Speaker, the issue of the primacy of the Official Languages Act over conflicting rules in other Acts has been abundantly discussed in the past. Already, in 1978, the then Commissioner of Official Languages advocated that primacy in his annual report. Subsequently, a series of bills much to the same effect were tabled, as it happened most of them by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. Meanwhile, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms took effect. It enshrines the basic principles of the present Official Languages Act and gives them special status since they are encompassed in the supreme legislation of the country.

On April 24, 1986, during the second reading debate on the last of the bills introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, Bill C-203, an Act to amend the Official Languages Act, which dealt also with the primacy of that act, the importance of the matter had been acknowledged to a large extent. However, it was also emphasized a debate on this complex matter would not be appropriate at that time. Let me borrow from the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), my colleague on this side of the House and co-chairman of the Standing Joint committee on Official languages, the words he said then, and I quote:

> —it would be premature at this stage to go the supremacy route alone, since in-depth studies undertaken by the Ministers most involved in language reform, at the request of the Prime Minister, should very soon result in a number of proposals that will allow for consideration of all aspects involving the Act and its application.

As you know, that examination has been undertaken, the work has been done and we now have the pleasure of having before us a complete bill on the official languages. Bill C-72 gives meaning to our linguistic duality, covers all important aspects in the language field and provides us with a strong and durable legal base. It applies to all Canadians irrespective of their ethnic background or mother tongue, and whether they belong to a majority or a minority. It shows a strong will on the part of the Government to bring about a true and profound renewal of our language policy. It dovetails with our commitment of national reconciliation. In short, it has, I believe, all the necessary elements to answer the expectations of Canadians in this regard, even those of my friend from Ottawa—Vanier. In fact, that Bill on official languages provides, in Section 79, for the primacy of the main clauses of the Act over those in other federal Acts or Regulations that might be inconsistent with them. And that is not all.

In the administration of justice, it guarantees better access to federal courts by reasserting and defining the right of a defendant to use one or the other official language. The Bill also provides for a better access of the public to federal institutions by strengthening the right of Canadians to communicate with and receive services from these institutions in the language of their choice.

As to the language of work in federal institutions, the Bill specifies, for the first time, the right of federal civil servants to use either one of the two official languages at work. Moreover, the Government commits itself, in that Bill, to guaranteeing equal opportunities of employment and promotion in federal institutions to all Canadians, regardless of their ethnic background or mother tongue, and to seeking in these institutions a distribution of staff which reflects the distribution in Canada of English-speaking and French-speaking communities.

As for the Francophone and Anglophone minorities in Canada, the Government is determined to promote their development. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to underline once again the Meech Lake Accord which recognizes the distinct character of Quebec. If we want to engage in an exercise in semantics, we all know that the specific character of Quebec means its language. The Secretary of State will play a major role in this regard as his mission will be to coordinate federal efforts in this area, for instance through co-operation with the provinces and the private and voluntary sectors.

The position of the Official Languages Commissioner will be maintained. His role will still be to ensure that the spirit and letter of the Act are respected, but he will have more effective tools at his disposal.

Finally, one of the major strengths of this Bill is the provision of legal redress. Those Canadians who feel that their linguistic rights have been violated can take their case to the Federal Court. This Bill is good for both French and English Canadians. This cannot be overemphasized. The Official Languages Commissioner will also have the possibility of legal recourse.

Mr. Speaker, one man who deserves credit for the introduction of Bill C-72 is the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

We have as Prime Minister someone who is completely and perfectly at ease in both official languages of our country. It is rare for a Prime Minister to master completely both official languages. I am proud to be a member of his team.

I believe that these few words are enough to show that Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada, is a major piece of legislation which the House will soon be able to examine. We can easily conclude that the Bill introduced by my Government on June 25 both encompasses and surpasses that introduced by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier. I therefore believe, Mr. Speaker, that, for the moment, there is no need to proceed further with consideration of Bill C-223 and that my Hon. friend for Ottawa—Vanier should certainly have made this clear and should perhaps simply have asked, as others have done before, that his Bill be withdrawn, as the Government has tabled a Bill which meets more than adequatly and even more substantially all the aspirations of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, who is a great defender of the French language in the beautiful province of Ontario.

• (1730)

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is with a certain sense of pride that as a Private Member one has an opportunity to respond to a Bill such as Bill C-223 put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). This is one of the best examples of a Member of Parliament, working in co-operation with the joint standing committee concerned with a special issue, in this case the primacy of the Official Languages Act, being persistent. As my hon. friend across the way indicated at the beginning of her speech, for many, many years the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has put forward arguments year after year about the need to move in this direction, along with others in the House. He has done so once again in Bill C-223.

As a result of his persistence and as a result of his constantly reminding Parliament and his colleagues of the need to move on the whole matter of official language primacy, the Government in its wisdom has introduced Bill C-72. On June 25, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) introduced for first reading Bill C-72, an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada. That Bill is really a major step forward. Again, I think it is important at the outset that we indicate very clearly that these particular initiatives, Bill C-72 and Bill C-223, are of no threat to anyone in our country. They are a complement to Anglophones and Francophones. They are complements in terms of enhancing the status and role of those who wish to speak English and those who wish to speak French, or both, in Canada. Therefore it is a clear indication of the maturity and maturation that our country is going through to begin serious consideration of Bill C-72 sometime this fall.

I want to take off my hat, figuratively speaking, to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for once again reminding us through Bill C-223 of the importance of establishing the primacy of the Official Languages Act. Establishing primacy is like giving a quasi-constitutional status to the Official Languages Act in that it will take precedence over other statutes. Other laws will be subordinate to it when it comes to matters of language.

When one recalls the passionate and thoughtful debate that occurred in 1969 when the Official Languages Act was originally passed, one will recall that all sides of the House felt strongly about this issue and believed that it was certainly in the best interests of Canada. Now, through the establishment of primacy of the Official Languages Act, I think we will advance the cause and therefore make very clear in all parts of the country how seriously we feel about the primacy and role of English and French in Canada. We still have some way to go.

As my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier indicated, not long ago in the Province of Alberta a Member of that Legislature, the Member from Lac La Biche, Mr. Leo Piquette, rose in the House and asked a question, through the Speaker, in French. In a sense he was chastised for that particular act. There has been a great deal of debate following that action in terms of the appropriateness of that particular move. What it did was to place on the public agenda discussion of the issue and, again, to advance the cause. We have learned from that. From what I can gather, the matter is now before the Legislature of Alberta. Out of that will come a reasoned debate and, hopefully, a reasoned decision.

I do not want to belabor this point but I think that it would be appropriate to take a moment or two to refer to Bill C-72. I do this out of no disrespect for my colleague regarding Bill C-223. I believe that his Private Members' initiative which resulted in the introduction of Bill C-72 will see the real discussion and debate probably in a legislative committee or, perhaps, in a reference to a joint standing committee of the House of Commons and the Senate.

Bill C-72 is an Act respecting the status and use of the official languages of Canada. For our purposes this afternoon I will simply read the purpose of the Act since it would be appropriate for those listening and watching. The purpose of the Act is the following:

> —to extend the present laws of Canada relating to official languages to
> (a) ensure respect for English and French as the official languages of Canada and ensure equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all federal institutions, in particular with respect to their use in parliamentary proceedings, in legislative and other instruments, in the administration of justice, in communicating with or providing services to the public and in carrying out the work of federal institutions;
> (b) support the development of English and French linguistic minority communities and generally advance the equality of status and use of the English and French languages within Canadian society; and
> (c) set out the powers, duties and functions of federal institutions with respect to the official languages of Canada.

In terms of a purpose that is, obviously, a laudatory purpose. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has indicated, his Bill actually advances in some cases Bill C-72. It goes beyond what Bill C-72 covers. For that reason, his mentioning those areas in his Bill today will assist us in improving Bill C-72 when it comes forward for second reading and for discussion and amendment in legislative committee.

I am pleased to be part of the process that now works toward the establishment of the primacy of the Official Languages Act. It will set to rest a great deal of concern and wonderment that we have seen in the past when it was asked what, in fact, did take primacy, the Official Languages Act or some other statute. This, along with the passage not so much of Bill C-223 but the eventual passage of Bill C-72, will solve that issue once and for all.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that I join the debate on Bill C-223. First I should like to make a brief remark concerning the sponsor of this Bill. The tenacity of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)—since 1969 he has been relentlessly drawing the attention of the House to the important issue of the primacy of the Official Languages Act—deserves special mention. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier belongs to that group of illustrious people who for a number of years have been faithfully advocating full respect for the equal status of the official languages in this country. One of my eminent colleagues, the Hon. Member for Charlevoix (Mr. Hamelin), called them defensores fidei linguaeque in an earlier debate on another legislative measure of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in April 1986.

Shortly after the Official Languages Act was implemented there was a growing awareness of the need to ensure the primacy of this statute over other federal legislation. Not only was this opinion expressed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, the Standing Joint Committee on Official Languages and the Commissioner of Official Languages, but it is also the position of this Government which clearly stated its views on this question in Bill C-72. As a matter of fact, clause 79 of the Bill guarantees primacy by providing under subclause (1):

> In the event of any inconsistency between Parts I to V and any other Act of Parliament or regulation thereunder, those Parts prevail to the extent of the inconsistency.

Parts I to V of the Bill are as follows: I - Proceedings of Parliament; II—Legislative and other instruments; III—Administration of justice; IV—Communications with and services to the public; and V—Language of work. These are the substantive parts of the Bill which derive from the constitutional rights and obligations set forth in sections 16 to 20 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We will have an opportunity to take a closer look at clause 79 in the near future when the measure is referred to a parliamentary committee, but I think the objective sought by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier in his own Bill has been achieved to a large extent, a fact he would be prepared to acknowledge.

Bill C-72 tabled on June 25 meets in fact many other aspirations that have been expressed by the Canadian public, the Official Languages Commissionner, the Standing Joint Committee and language groups for the past 18 years since the implementation of the Official Languages Act.

The brief description of the main elements of Bill C-72 that my colleague has just made was surely sufficient to convince you that we have introduced a substantial reform. It shows how seriously this Government takes its national reconciliation policy under which the Official languages reform falls.

The Government has honoured the commitment it made in the Speech from the Throne of October 1986 and on many other occasions to make the Official Languages Act consistent with the provisions of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend all my colleagues who since September 1984, have allowed the use of French to increase in the House from 7 per cent to almost 21 per cent.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, we are coming closer to the Canadian reality. At least 27 to 30 per cent of the Canadian people are French-speaking. I think it is important, Mr. Speaker, that we can continue in the House to develop that expression and to allow Canadians throughout the country to benefit from the French language as such. But it is also important to keep on developing as well both official languages throughout Canada.

One of the main objectives of that reform was to make the Official Languages Act consistent with Sections 16 and 20 of the Charter. Language rights that are set forth in our Constitution are the foundation of our national language system. On these strong basis we are going to build a modern system.

Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier will agree that Bill C-72 meets most of his concerns and objectives and that he will be very pleased to cooperate with us for a speedy passage of Bill C-72.

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-223 has already been explained at great length since the beginning of this debate. It is, of course, about the primacy of the French language, as already stated in Section 2 of the Official Languages Act, 1969, over any conflicting rule in other federal legislation . . . of course, Mr. Speaker, all this has been said so many times, and again today by the two Hon. Members who spoke previously, and of course in committee and in the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

We know the Charter of Rights and Freedoms makes no direct reference to this provision, and now we have Bill C-72 which in English, and I will have to quote from the English text, is An Act respecting the status and use of the Official Languages of Canada. This legislation starts as follows—and I will quote the English text because that is the text I have before me and I would rather not give you a translation that would not be the official one:

• (1740)

[English]

> Whereas the Constitution of Canada provides that English and French are the official languages of Canada and have equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all institutions of Parliament and Government of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I think this is quite clear and that it would be very hard to misinterpret this clause. I would like to mention at this point that Bill C-72 was tabled in the House of Commons by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) and given first reading on June 25 of this year. This first provision of Bill C-72 is mentioned more specifically in Clause 2, and here again I will quote in English because I only have the English text:

[English]

"to extend the present laws of Canada relating to official languages".

[Translation]

This means that this legislation, Bill C-72, will reinforce all pertinent legislation to ensure that both official languages are used by the Canadian Government and Parliament in their general administration and all their instruments.

Mr. Speaker, the same Bill contains a provision that is quite clear and which I will not translate but I would like to quote it to remind people of the full impact of Bill C-72. It reads as follows, and I quote:

[English]

—ensure respect for English and French as the official languages of Canada and ensure equality of status and equal rights and privileges as to their use in all federal institutions, in particular with respect to their use in parliamentary proceedings, in legislative and other instruments, in the administration of justice, in communicating with or providing services to the public and in carrying out the work of federal institutions.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, after sitting a number of times on the Official Languages Committee, I realize that it is still a fairly difficult business, especially for French Canadians, to ensure that while certain laws may be favoured by the majority of Canadians and thus compliance may not seem as problematic, nevertheless we must not forget that although the minority may not have numerical clout, it does have equal status and that we have two official languages in Canada. Mr. Speaker, that is of course why, in Clause 79 of the Bill, it says clearly that in the event of any inconsistency between Parts I to V and any other Act of Parliament or regulation thereunder, those Parts prevail to the extent of the inconsistency. Let me explain, Mr. Speaker. The aim is to ensure that the status of both official languages is complete and that we, French Canadians, both outside and inside Quebec, may use the French language in total security, just as English speaking persons would be ensured the opportunity to speak in committee, in a committee that would be held in Montreal or Saint-Polycarpe or Saint-Télesphore or anywhere in Quebec, even if the majority is French-speaking, at that point, Canadians can speak both on Parliament matters and on Government matters or on any of its acts or regulations in the language of their choice.

Mr. Speaker, it is understood that the very clear intent of parts I to V is indeed to ensure that the rights and privileges and obligations of the English and French languages are respected on a constitutional basis. Part I and Part V, which deal with parliamentary procedure, legislative procedure and other procedure and other parliamentary instruments, with the administration of justice and also, in the same section, very clearly, in order not to leave any loophole in that legislation, that list a whole range—as others that I am now listing, communications and services to the public, working language—it is clearly understood that all this will naturally lead to a clear, outright and final expression, that the principles put forward in Sections 16 to 20 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms are completely respected, both in English and in French.

Mr. Speaker, the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is supreme in Canada, to the extent that any law which is not consistent with the principles and provisions of the Constitution must be declared to be inconsistent with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and as such it has no effect. The text is quite clear in this respect. Therefore it stands to reason that the Official Languages Act is a statutory and constitutional statement that protects the rights and obligations which in case of conflict must prevail over any federal legislation or regulation whatever, again be it parliamentary or executory within the government generally. It is very broad in scope, in the sense that all anglophones in Canada can expect to get good service in Quebec City, Gaspé and Montreal, and that a francophone can rightfully enjoy his privileges and be well served in Vancouver, Toronto and Montreal.

However, Mr. Speaker, we must remember that all amendments to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms which apply to federal institutions require the consent of Parliament and of the ten provincial legislatures. It goes to show how serious this is. So all provisions of the Official Languages Act and of the Charter are not subject to the "notwithstanding" clause and as such express the exception procedures already established in section 33.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, all these rights are already deeply anchored in the constitutional rights set forth in the Official Languages Act.

Let me point out here that this complex case which had been covered since 1969 under general statutes is now specifically defined so that all Canadians can feel at ease in the operations of both their Parliament and their government. We French-speaking Canadians can consider this as an important step on the part of the Progressive Conservative Government to ensure that we can express our privileges, our rights and our obligations in the language of our choice in our beautiful Canada.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, it pleases me greatly to take part in this debate with my colleague the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who, in my parliamentary experience, is a staunch and able advocate of bilingualism.

• (1750)

[English]

I appreciate this opportunity to speak on the subject of Bill C-223, which proposes to amend the Official Languages Act of 1969. I do not wish to dispute the principle of primacy that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) proposes to inscribe in the Official Languages Act. However, I do want to add some remarks.

[Translation]

It would be going against the grain of Canadian history to deny the capital importance of the official languages debate in shaping our national identity.

[English]

I agree with my colleague, the author of the Bill, for whom Section 2 of the existing language legislation is crucial to our collective equilibrium. The wording of this section of the 1969

Act has become part of the essence of Canada's linguistic duality. That wording has now been basically entrenched in Section 16 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

In the Bill tabled by the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) at the end of June, the principle of primacy has in fact a much wider scope than the legislation which my colleague would like us to adopt. Earlier today, my colleague read Clause 79 of Bill C-72 which would give the five substantive parts of the Official Languages Act primacy over any conflicting federal legislation other than the Canadian Human Rights Act. Clause 79 of Bill C-72 contains no notwithstanding clause while Bill C-223 presented by my colleague does.

Our Bill does not restrict itself to giving primacy to the Official Languages Act since it contains numerous measures to improve the equality of status of the two languages in a large number of fields. I refer to proceedings of Parliament, preparation and publication of federal legislation, and certain other things.

I think it is important to put on the record the comments of the Hon. Member who has long been at the forefront of the battle to improve the status of English and French in Canada. When Bill C-72 was tabled at the beginning of the summer, my colleague probably realized why the careful preparation of the proposed legislation took some time. Let me quote the remarks of the Chief Whip of the Official Opposition as he referred to Bill C-72:

> I am pleased to acknowledge that this Governement, building upon initiatives of the previous Government and in an effort to ensure consistency with the Charter of rights and freedoms and to meet certain other requirements, has come up with a bill which I find constructive. And I must say, in a non-partisan vein, that the bill meets a great number of its intended objectives.

[English]

> I think I have tabled about ten Private Members' Bills. I find them here.

I do not believe we could have any better advocate on behalf of the Government's legislation, Bill C-72, than the Hon. Member. When the Bill goes to committee I am sure we will have his assistance in proceeding with that legislation.

Adjournment Debate

BANKS AND BANKING—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT FORWARDED BY INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, on August 18, I put a question to the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin), asking him what action he would take with regard to the overcharges placed by the banks on farmers across Canada in the early 1980s. I asked this question specifically because a number of farmers have found that they have been charged exorbitant amounts of interest over and above that to which they agreed on the original notes they signed when the banks switched fixed-rate notes to floating-interest-rate notes.

Several such cases have already gone to court and rulings have been made in favour of the farmers. In some cases, out-of-court settlements have been made involving hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Many months ago, in the early spring, the Minister referred the matter to the Inspector General of Banks, who is now the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, and I understand that that report was made available to him in late June. So far, the Minister has not made the report of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions available to the House. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will do that this afternoon on his behalf.

The other issue at stake is that a number of farmers who believe they have overpaid hundreds of thousands of dollars in interest have gone to their banks to receive copies of their liability ledgers or lists of notes they signed in the early 1980s. Before 1982, it was the practice of most banks to use a fixed-interest-rate-note form when lending money to farmers, and in fact, those are the legal documents and the ones that are binding in court. However, when some farmers have asked their bankers for copies of their liability ledgers, they have been told that they must pay as much as $500 just to see their documents.

I find it incredible that a bank doing business with a valued customer, business in many cases involving tens and hundreds of thousands of dollars and large interest payments, would not want to make those documents readily available. In any case, the banks are not making them available and many farmers are having difficulty proving their cases.

The House of Commons Agriculture Committee heard testimony from a lawyer who does a lot of business with farmers in southwestern Ontario, Mr. Larry Rider. He indicated that it was a very common practice for banks to switch from a fixed rate of interest to a floating rate of interest during the recession when interest rates were climbing dramatically. He said that he was sure that many farmers had paid exorbitant amounts of interest. Earlier I referred to two such cases. One was a court case in which some $250,000-worth of interest was awarded to the farmer. In another case in Alberta, some $240,000 was returned to the farmer in an out-of-court settlement.

I believe the Minister of State for Finance should call the bankers and major financial institutions to ask them to make these documents freely available to their valued customers, including farmers and some small businessmen, so that they can handle their cases in an open, direct, honest and above-board manner. This matter is of national significance because tens of millions of dollars of interest payments are at stake.

It seems to me that unless the Government releases the documents of the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and clarifies exactly where this whole matter is going, it should appoint a royal commission of inquiry to deal with this matter which affects many, many farmers and small businessmen who may have been overcharged large amounts of money.

It is very difficult for a farmer, unless he is extremely well off, to sue the bank because of the legal costs involved. As well, there is the danger of his credit being cut off. It is therefore essential for the Government to set up a commission of inquiry to clarify this matter, and then put in place some mechanism whereby the banks and other financial institutions make restitution to the thousands of farmers who were overcharged for interest during the early 1980s.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, since we were just talking about official languages I will be pleased, as a matter of courtesy, to answer the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) in his own language.

[English]

This issue of overcharging farmers by banks has been raised in this House on several occasions and has also been the subject of considerable public debate and attention in recent months. The debate centres on the past practice of chartered banks and other financial institutions relating to the past administration of their past floating rate loan portfolios. The proposition has been put forward that interest in excess of rates set out in loan documentation, signed by farmers and other businessmen, was illegally charged by banks to their customers. These claims arise from a long established administrative practice formerly engaged in by banks until their loan documentation was revised in the seventies and the early eighties. The practice consisted of documenting loans carried on a floating or variable rate basis through fixed rate demand promissory notes. That is, a customer who borrowed on this basis would execute a promissory note at the then prevailing interest rate and would be asked to sign new notes as rates changed. Over time, many banks ceased having new notes signed, for administrative ease, but notified clients of the new effective interest rates.

The banks no longer document floating rate notes on this basis but have developed and introduced floating rate promissory notes. It is understandable that the former practice might lead to confusion on the part of the borrower as to the interest due on his loan. That is, is the floating rate or the fixed rate applicable? The issue in alleged cases of overcharging is whether the borrower knew and had agreed to the rates he was being charged. This is basically a legal question that raises issues of interpretation of the arrangements or contracts between the borrower and the lender. The proper forum for the resolution of disputes of this nature, which the Government has been saying all along, is the court system. Only a judge has authority to weigh evidence in a particular case, find facts, and order proper redress. The Government cannot act in the place of the judiciary, and only the judiciary can determine whether in a given case a farmer or other customer was overcharged or not.

SMALL BUSINESS—NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, on August 19, 1987, I asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) about the fate of the Native Economic Development Program. This program began in 1984 with a budget allocation of $345 million over a four-year period. It offered great hope to aboriginal groups that finally there was a serious commitment by the Government to advance the self-sufficiency of aboriginal communities and individuals by providing long term adequately funded business opportunities. In the first three and a half years, only 40 per cent of the funds were allocated. As I understand it, the program has been extended by one year to March, 1989. There then remains one and a half years to disburse the 60 per cent remainder of the committed funds.

The Minister answered my question by stating that a number of projects were being funded by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. However, that was not my question.

Following the discovery two months into the fiscal year that the entire budget of the DRIE funds had been expended, a freeze was put on all DRIE and related programs, the Native Economic Development Program being one of those. It, of course, specifically addressed the needs of aboriginal communities. Although agreements signed with ministerial approval do seem to be honoured at the moment under the Native Economic Development Program, other applicants to this program are being told at one bureaucratic level that a freeze is on and at another that it is not. It appears that the serious mismanagement of the one program, DRIE, is resulting in the further mismanagement of another.

It is well known that over a century of colonial rule has destroyed the traditional land-based economy of Canadian aboriginal people. Aboriginal people are not asking for hand-outs. They are asking, and have been encouraged to ask, for assistance in developing small businesses which are relevant to many of the rural communities in aboriginal situations as well as assistance with financial institutions which will facilitate the capitalization of such businesses when traditional lending institutions will not. They have received a mish-mash of programs operated by various ministries focusing on short-term training and job creation and rarely resulting in enabling a stable, long-term economy to develop.

In fact, in the Government's own paper of July, 1987, entitled Consultation Paper on DRIE Native Economic Programs, they admit that to date the Government has been unsuccessful in addressing the economic needs of aboriginal communities. It says: "Efforts have resulted in only term employment at low wage levels".

The Native Economic Development Program offered at least one answer to this problem, but it now seems that aboriginal groups are the first to take the fall for the Government's admitted mismanagement of the DRIE program. The Government has offered promises and little money and now promises consultation and less money. Consultation is always useful, but not if it is simply another substitute for action.

In fact, in a briefing note to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) of July 23 it is indicated that on July 30 the Cabinet was to decide the future of native economic development programs, and this before a six-month consultation process with aboriginal people had even begun.

I dare say aboriginal people may be some of the most consulted people in Canada and have received some of the most apathetic action on their expressed concerns. It is no wonder that they have lost faith that their interests are being taken seriously by the Government.

We are talking here about people's lives, about whether the trapper, the fisher, the trucker, the store owner or the construction company can get started, hire people, and begin to address the extremely high rates of unemployment which exist in many aboriginal communities.

The House was recently told by the Government that the Canadian economy is doing pretty well, that jobs have been created. My question is simply oriented to ensuring that aboriginal people share in this. We cannot say that the Canadian economic situation has improved for all Canadians if a large segment of our population is left out. It is time for the Government to give some straight answers to aboriginal people.

My questions were really quite simple. While the Minister did confirm on August 19 that projects are being approved, I do understand that $43 million is unexpended under the Native Economic Development Program in this fiscal year. I further understand that, given the audit on the Department, Treasury Board authority is required to expend this amount and that the matter will be brought before Treasury Board on September 15.

Will the Minister confirm this information? Will he undertake, on behalf of aboriginal people, to do his utmost to ensure that this year's full allocation for native economic development programs is secured in addition to ensuring that the $345 million for the Native Economic Development Program is spent according to a previous commitment made?

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am really embarrassed and sorry, but I cannot answer the Hon. Member for Yukon (Mrs. McLaughlin) who was taking part tonight in her first adjournment debate, as we were not prepared to answer such a question. I think there has been some mix up in the answers which have been prepared. However, we have taken note of her question which, by the way, matters a great deal to me since I am of Indian descent on my mother's side. I can guarantee the Hon. Member for Yukon that we will answer her in writing very shortly.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS—UPGRADING OF INFRASTRUCTURES—GOVERNMENT'S REJECTION OF REQUEST FOR FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION—COST OF UPGRADING

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some months ago at its most recent meeting, the Federation of Canadian Municipalities, having had a study done on the state of the infrastructure of most of the municipalities, particularly the large municipalities in Canada, including the state of the roads, sewers, sidewalks and water supply, realized that these services were deteriorating at a tremendously rapid rate. Given the sharp increase in the numbers of people living in our cities, it was felt important to bring to the attention of the federal and provincial Governments what was happening and to propose a plan to deal with this situation before a crisis arose.

As I drive around the City of Winnipeg I see sewer breaks, roads which have collapsed, sidewalks with large holes. I am sure other Members of Parliament see the same in their cities so I understand the needs outlined by the Federation. Healthy municipal services contribute to a healthy economy. Good roads are essential for getting employees to work and products to market. Industry, which this Government says it wants to encourage, needs the water systems to keep working and machines to keep operating. Bridges and sidewalks are equally important for the movement of people and products.

Studies have been done which show very clearly that if we leave these things too long, the cost of repair becomes astronomical. It costs almost three times as much to repair these facilities after 25 years as it would be to repair them after 15 years.

The municipalities have, in most cases, deferred the necessary maintenance of their roads, bridges, sewers and water distribution systems not because they are unaware of the problem but because of economic pressure. The revenue from taxes, federal and provincial funding and municipal taxes, have been inadequate to do the work which should be done.

It is estimated that what needs to be done would cost about $12 billion in the next five years. What is proposed is a three-way funding, a third paid by the municipalities themselves, a third paid by the provinces and a third paid by the federal government.

That is a lot of money, but it was pointed out that to a large extent this cost would be self-financed because it would provide 280,000 person-years of work. Jobs would be created and the cost would be recovered through increased taxes paid by these people, through lower unemployment insurance payments and lower social assistance costs.

It makes eminent sense to me, and the proposal received the support of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and the support of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). I was shocked when I asked questions of the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to hear their very quick rejection of this proposal. They say they are not interested subsidizing municipalities. I find that very strange since they are prepared to subsidize provincial government infrastructure. In the regional development plans which are agreed on between the federal Government and some of the provinces, there are sub-agreements to fund highways and other projects. The projects about which the municipalities have talked are just as important. I would like to give one illustration of what this means.

I express my amazement that the Minister of the Environment, who comes from Prince Edward Island, does not realize, or does not know, about the tremendous problem in cities such as Halifax and Dartmouth. There are 200,000 or more people in those cities. They simply dump their sewage into the harbour. His own Ministry has estimated that only 13 per cent to 14 per cent of all the sewage in Nova Scotia is treated. How can a Minister from Prince Edward Island be so blind, so callous and so uncaring about a situation which exists just a few miles from where he lives?

This is a problem which is of tremendous importance. I urge the Government to stop thinking about the balance sheet for the immediate present and to think about the long-range consequences of not taking action. I think that the proposal made by the Federation of Municipalities makes eminent sense. It would bring benefits to the municipalities, lower unemployment and reduce our costs for dealing with the unemployed. It is one which the federal Government should give careful, sympathetic and early consideration to rather than the kind of brusque brush-off it has given to it.

• (1825)

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have the answer to that question, but first of all I would like to emphasize my interest for that subject, first as an engineer by profession, and second for having represented the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) at the Federation of Canadian Municipalities.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to comment briefly on the position of the Government regarding the financing of municipal water and sewer systems. As my colleagues would know very well, for some time now the Canadian Federation of Municipalities has been asking the federal Government to pay over the next five years one third of an outlay which might be as high as $15 billion to help finance the municipal infrastructure and its replacement. Nearly half this amount would be earmarked for improving water and sewer services.

In 1980 the previous administration abolished a program of assistance in this field when financial restraints raised the issue of federal assistance in a field of provincial and municipal jurisdiction. Although this is still the case, new evidence at the international level leads to believe that not only are such grants inadequate from a constitutional standpoint and somewhat financially ill-advised, but they also can prove to be ecologically irresponsible.

I should like to draw the attention of the House to a recent publication of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development concerning the rates for water services. During a two-year study the OECD Environment Committee gathered data from 24 permanent member countries and became a strong supporter of the principle that the user should pay the cost directly. Another one of their conclusions is that the adoption of this principle would produce highly acceptable results from an environmental point of view.

This Government, our Government, firmly believes that the most viable and the most valid long-term solution to the many water problems in Canada lies in realistic rates, both in the literal sense, which means charging an adequate price for water used, and in a more general sense, and that is respecting the wide variety of values which water may represent and on which no rate can be set.

I also wish to mention a recent study of the American Waterworks Association which indicates that among the ten industrialized countries surveyed, Canada charges the lowest price to its industries. Canadian industry as a whole pays about one quarter the amount paid by the European industry for its water and about half the amount paid by our American neighbours.

You can be assured that the federal Government will assume fully the responsibilities conferred on it by our Constitution. However, it will promote the application of realistic guidelines for water; it will manage its own facilities and play a leadership role in the development of new techniques and the transfer of information; but it will certainly not propagate the idea of bad financial and environmental management by creating a national subsidy program in this area.

Mr. Speaker, this problem is completely outside our jurisdiction, and the proposal advanced as a possible solution is impractical and even reprehensible from an environmental point of view.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 6.25 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

VETERANS AFFAIRS—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with respect to two motions which I will put, with consent. I think Your Honour will find that there is unanimous consent to adopt them. I move:

That, the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs be authorized to travel to Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, for a period of three days during the month of October in relation to its mandate under Standing Order 96(2); and that the necessary staff do accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT—AUTHORIZATION TO TRAVEL

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the second motion is as follows. I move:

That, the Standing Committee on Transport be authorized to travel from place to place in Europe between September 24 to October 11, 1987, inclusive, for the purpose of studying the impact of airline deregulation on the Government's policy for the ownership and management of airports, airport facilities, safety, and airline concentration and privatization; and rail and bus passenger services and that the necessary staff accompany the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have unanimous consent to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today it is again my duty to table petitions from members of my constituency who visited the Byward Market this summer and with whom I met to discuss the plan of the Government to tax food, as proposed as an alternative in the White Paper produced by the Government. The petitioners object to that measure.

The petition states that whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed upon Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular, on medical and dental supplies, snack food, candies and soft drinks, and whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing a general tax on goods and services, including food, and whereas food constitutes a vital element to everyday life, and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, for example, the aged, families, unemployed, low-income taxpayers, and youth; therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT—ENFORCEMENT OF PROVISIONS

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table a petition on behalf of Canadian citizens who support the initiative of Mr. David Bader, the Director General of the Canadian Herbalists Association of British Columbia, who wrote to the Health Minister concerning unfair selective enforcement of the Food and Drugs Act vis-à-vis the health food industry.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 165.

[Text]

CAPE BRETON DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—ARBITRATION CASES

Question No. 165—Mr. Murphy:

From January 1, 1986 to May 1, 1987, were any costs incurred by the Cape Breton Development Corporation in arbitration cases and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): From January 1, 1986 to May 1, 1987, costs incurred by the Cape Breton Development Corporation for arbitration cases were $137,378.77.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The question enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed, from Monday, August 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitons are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, when I interrupted my speech yesterday at five o'clock, I was saying it might be appropriate to provide a few historical notes. During the fifties and sixties, there were many complaints because Canadians felt that the price of drugs was too high. Eventually, the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission held an inquiry on the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs, under Section 42 of the Combines Investigation Act. I can assure the House that this was an exhaustive inquiry and that the recommendations contained in the report subsequently published by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission were quite significant. I shall quote the findings of the inquiry.

> Consideration should be given to the establishment, under the auspices of the federal government, of an authoritative publication giving all necesary particulars concerning new drugs—

> As the Commission believes that close control exercised by patents has made it possible to maintain prices of certain drugs at level higher than would have obtained otherwise and that such patent control has produced no benefits to the public of Canada which would outweigh the disadvantages of the monopoly, the Commission recommends that patents with respect to drugs be abolished. In the opinion of the Commission this is the only effective remedy to reduce the price of drugs in Canada.

We must remember that the government's decision at the end of the sixties to amend the Patent Act was made following an inquiry conducted by the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission which had clearly ruled that the price of drugs in Canada at the time was too high and that steps had to be taken to force the companies to reduce the price of drugs in Canada. This means that people were aware of the high prices of drugs that enjoyed patent protection and that at the time, these prices were judged to be too high.

In fact, other studies made at the time as well reached the same conclusion. A Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate made a similar study and reached the same conclusions, and so the Government's action followed recommendations made by the competent authorities whose duty it is to determine competition levels in Canada, as in the case of the Restrictive Trade Practices commission and a recommendation, unanimous at the time, made by Members and Senators of the Parliament of Canada.

Our present system which sets limits on the rights of companies under the Patent Act was at the time approved unanimously by all political parties in the House and in the Senate.

I have heard some Conservative Members say that we condoned plagiarism, that we let generic drug companies copy the discoveries made by pharmaceutical firms. So we did. So we did, but with the unanimous support of all Members, including the Conservative Members who sat in this House in the late 1960s. There was one basic reason why the system was set up: we wanted to make sure that the already inflated drug prices in Canada would decline.

To the Conservative Members who maintain that certain countries enforce regulations to protect inventors of pharmaceutical products for 17 years and even more, my response is that in such countries as England, France and a few other European countries the drug companies may indeed be better protected than our own Canadian firms, but then these companies are subject to much stricter price controls.

Unfortunately the federal Government has no authority to enforce price controls because they come under provincial jurisdiction. When we are told that the patents of a drug company in France are protected over a much longer period of time than is the case here in Canada, I say fair enough, but you conveniently forget to point out that this drug company simply cannot market its products unless it has reached an agreement with government authorities concerning a fair price which will enable it to earn a fair return on its investment, a fair profit.

What we in the Liberal Opposition are concerned about right now is that Canada does not have any control over drug prices. So we are going back to the old system. To put it another way, the Government has decided to bring us back to those days when drug companies were much better protected than they are now, to the extent that they would not have to face competition from Canadian generic drug companies before ten years.

Well, we believe that this ten-year protection is excessive under the circumstances, the more so because there is nothing in the Bill to guarantee that the companies will keep their prices at an affordable and reasonable level for consumers.

Unless it is amended along the line of the proposals put forward by Liberal Senators, this Bill will be toothless. It will have no power to compel pharmaceutical companies to keep their promises, namely to make investments, to create jobs and especially to keep drug prices at levels which are affordable and reasonable for Canadian consumers generally. Well, this Government would like us to trust blindly the pharmaceutical companies and positively give them "carte blanche" for the next 10 years, without really knowing whether they will do any actual research in Canada, create as many jobs as they say they will and especially maintain reasonable prices.

We feel that the Minister, regardless of his good will, is placing himself in a position of vulnerability with respect to the pharmaceutical industry, because his Bill lacks the means to force these companies to deliver. And that is what makes the whole difference with this Government which wants to amend the Patent Act to allow the pharmaceutical companies to benefit more from their research and earn a higher return from their investments.

We fully agree on the need to amend the Act to make it possible for these companies to recover at least their investments. But we just cannot agree on this excessive protection. There was a commission of inquiry and Professor Eastman, who examined this matter thoroughly, found that a four-year protection was quite sufficient. As a conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I ask again the same question as yesterday: Why does the Government insist on giving these additional six years to the pharmaceutical companies? To what extent does it hope to convince us that these six years are absolutely essential to attract invesments into this country? We feel that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is much too generous with the pharmaceutical companies, while his first responsibility should be to protect Canadian consumers, and not to demonstrate so much generosity towards the pharmaceutical companies. It is all right to amend the legislation to allow for a fair return on their investments, but not to give them "carte blanche" to grow fat and rich at the expense of Canadian consumers during the last six years of protection they would enjoy under this Bill.

Those who think that the Liberal party is against investment in the Montreal area are greatly mistaken. We support investment by drug companies in the Montreal area. It is indeed because we support that kind of investment that we want the legislation to be quite clear and binding. It is not. The companies may in the first months of the new system invest some funds in research, but there is nothing in the legislation that compels them to carry on their efforts in the area of research during the 10 following years, during which they will be given a protection that in our opinion is very generous, even too generous and dangerous for Canadian consumers. This is why I hope that the Government in its wisdom will reconsider that decision and will accept the amendments that were proposed in good faith in the interests of Canadian consumers by the Liberal senators.

Mr. Blais: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to make a few comments. It is always a surprise to hear the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), who had no qualms telling us, and I quote: "We support investment in the Montreal area". I find no word to characterize, I see no logic in that way of thinking . . . Although I have been trying over these last few months to follow the logic of the Official Opposition on that issue, I have not succeeded yet.

When we refer to creating new jobs in the Montreal area, and this is what my comments will deal with, we referred to 1,300 jobs because we banked on the jobs that were guaranteed to us by the companies. And this they did not tell us behind close doors—they did so officially, they said it to newspapers, they made a commitment. And as I read in Le Devoir économique . . . Drug industry people in the Montreal area are not referring to 1,300 jobs, they are expecting up to 10,000 new jobs in the drug industry, to once more give our young Canadian scientists—not only from Quebec but from across Canada an opportunity to work in that industry. This they had been denied for some years. Scientists have to move down to the United States, they must emigrate abroad in order to find work. So they are digging in, they have the gall to suggest we did not put enough teeth in our bill. This in my view is showing a form of bad faith, because it is the first time in more than a decade that a Government decides to take a firm stand in that area and ensure that the Canadian Government is no longer a cowboy, a freelancer in the global drug industry.

This country was operating in a totally opposite direction from other nations in that area. I would understand it if Members of the Official Opposition remained silent on that, especially those from the Montreal area. If I were in their shoes I would hide in shame. But no, they are here. They are responsible, but they blame us for not fully accepting the Eastman report, as if we should always accept a report that is submitted to us. But in the same breath they reject the Macdonald report, a report chaired by a former Liberal minister who recommends that we increase trade with the United States. There is no logic in that attitude.

I would like to know, Mr. Speaker, how they can openly tell us Quebecers, us Canadians, that preventing those kinds of investment to be made soon in the Montreal area, those brains . . . Certainly the Hon. Member has young children as I have. We must provide work for them. There is work now in various fields, but in the industrial sector, in the high technology, in research and development, what do they have to suggest to stimulate research and development in the Montreal area? For our part, we do not merely have an assumption, but a confirmed assurance. People in the Montreal area—not politicians, but the entire medical profession expect some ten thousand jobs. I will conclude my comments with that.

My question is as follows: What do they have to suggest? What guarantee do they have? They told us that the first budget of this Government would result in the loss of 200,000 jobs and after less than three years, 900,000 jobs have been created. What is their logic? How can we believe those people? What is your position? What is your answer? What do you have to offer to the Montreal area?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I find such demagogy regrettable on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary as it clearly shows his ignorance.

These are the facts. The Patent Act was amended to allow compulsory licencing because drug prices were higher in Canada than anywhere else in the world. When this legislation was passed, it was passed not only by the then Liberal Government, but also with the unanimous consent of all Conservative Members of Parliament.

The Liberals are therefore not to blame for developing in Canada a new system which was certainly different from other systems in the world. The Government had the courage at the time to tell the pharmaceutical multinationals: We have had enough, you are exploiting the Canadian people by selling your drugs at excessive prices.

We developed a system to protect the Canadian consumers. The pharmaceutical companies are now saying: We are willing to create jobs and to invest more in research in Canada if you remove the compulsory licencing system. As for us, we are saying that we are willing to accept this offer and provide the guarantees and protection which the drug companies say they need to make these investments. However, in return, we want the companies to make some firm commitments and we want them to keep these commitments.

As for the Parliamentary Secretary, he is willing to trust blindly in the pharmaceutical companies even though they exploited consumers in the past. There is no clear stipulation in the bill that these investments will take place or that the pharmaceutical companies will maintain reasonable prices and not bring about excessive price increases as they did in the past.

The Parliamentary Secretary says that he wants a system which will allow the pharmaceutical companies to invest more in the Montreal region, and I quite agree with him. I would like the pharmaceutical companies to invest more in research in Montreal. However, the world situation is such that the Canadian market is very small compared with the American and European markets, and the fact is that the pharmaceutical multinationals carry out their research in well-established centres. Much of this work is now carried out in Puerto Rico, where it costs much less to operate, and via Puerto Rico, the multinationals have free access to the American market. The pharmaceutical companies have also moved much of their operations to Ireland, where they have obtained major concessions, because of which they can operate at a very low cost and have access to the European market.

It does not take long to realize that Canada is not in the same position as Ireland and Puerto Rico, and that whatever research can be carried out in Canada will be minimal compared with world research in pharmaceutical products, unless the text of the legislation contains specific guarantees to force the companies to do research in Canada and create jobs.

This is what we are asking, and this is what the Bill does not do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux).

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in this debate. I shall not speak any longer than necessary this morning to Bill C-22, since my Conservative colleagues have already spoken on the subject, and I may refer more particlarly ot the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who was eloquent, as always, in his speech last Friday. My colleagues have already put forward a number of arguments, all of which are extremly convincing and favour the passage of Bill C-22 as proposed by the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not repeat all these arguments, but nevertheless, I wish to add my voice to those that are urging the House and especially the Senate to adopt this important piece of legislation as soon as possible, for the sake of the thousands of jobs that would result, jobs whose future is now being threatened by Opposition Members who refuse to listen to reason, and why, I frankly don't know. We are ready to accept constructive criticism, but when we have an Opposition that criticizes for partisan purposes, and that is particularly true of the non-elected Liberals in the Senate, that we cannot accept.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to refer to a specific case that has strengthened my personal convictions in favour of Bill C-22, and it is the case of Hoffmann-La Roche whose now vacant buildings are located in my own riding of Vaudreuil.

The history of this case reflects the devastating impact that, slowly but surely, the Liberal Government's amendments to the Patent Act of 1969 have had, an intolerable situation, Mr. Speaker, that our Government is now actively trying to improve. I would like to quote, in passing, a few paragraphs from an editorial by Albert Juneau published in Le Devoir this morning. I am using this particular editorial, Mr. Speaker, because it happened to appear this morning, but I could quote from many others published in recent months. I quote:

> The Liberal Senators have launched their defence of the average consumer with unusual zeal, in their parliamentary skirmishes against Bill C-22 concerning drug patents. Their partisan tactics fool no one but say a great deal about the state of health of the Liberal Party and the Upper Chamber—
> Through their exaggerated juxtaposition of the foreign multinationals, especially the U.S. companies, and the poor Canadian consumers, the Liberals are undermining the debate and ignoring what is really at stake.
> The basic principle underlying Bill C-22 is that drug patents should again be issued with ownership rights similar to those which prevail in other major industrialized countries. Back in 1969, the Liberal administration had brought in an important amendment under which protection granted new drugs was reduced to a year and a half, whereas our main trading partners kept the widely accepted 17-to-20-year standard. The Government was hoping to force a decline in prices and promote stiffer competition between so-called innovating companies—research and development oriented—and generic medicine manufacturers who "copy" and market the new drugs.
> The new legislation increases to seven years the protection period granted any product for which a mandatory licence has been issued (it would be ten years in the case of imported products). For their part the Liberals suggest that the maximum monopoly period be four years and that the current 4 per cent royalty paid by generic manufacturers to research firms be raised to 14 per cent.
> It is difficult to understand why the Liberal Senate is fighting tooth and nail against the elected House of Commons to try and gain a few years protection, when impact studies on the Government legislation clearly demonstrate that Canadian consumers will come out winners—
> To the industry, especially the innovative companies, this Bill provide incentives for research and development investments. The 1969 amendments did not prove beneficial to Canada which now ranks behind poorer nations such as Italy and the United Kingdom as far as drug research and development is concerned. Quebec, where half of the research and development spending is concentrated in Canada, has severely suffered because of such memorable closings as Ayerst and Hoffmann-LaRoche in 1982. Since then, Quebec scientists and politicians have been unanimous in their efforts to have the legislation amended.
> While stubbornly confining themselves to idle chatter, the Liberals are unfairly stopping a Bill which is acceptable both to the consumers and the industry.

• (1140)

[English]

In its brief to the chairman of the Eastman Commission created by the former Liberal Government to study the pharmaceutical industry in Canada, Hoffmann-La Roche, or Roche Canada as it is better known, explained in detail how the 1969 amendments to the Patent Act adversely affected its operations, resulting in the loss of jobs and millions of dollars for research and development in Canada, in the Province of Quebec, and in the riding of Vaudreuil.

The 1969 amendments to the Patent Act under the then Liberal Government had a dramatic impact on the sales of Roche Canada's major pharmaceutical products. Since the beginning of the 1970s Roche Canada's viability steadily deteriorated to the point where it began to incur substantial losses. Indeed, in the early 1980s Roche Canada lost millions of dollars on its operations. Management therefore decided that massive and immediate cost reduction measures had to be instituted to stop the ever increasing deficits. One of those cost reduction measures announced in November, 1982, consisted of the complete and permanent closure of the company's plant in Vaudreuil, Quebec, effective in the summer of 1983.

The closure of Roche Canada's Vaudreuil operation resulted in the loss of close to 80 manufacturing jobs and about the same number of related jobs. The reduction in Roche Canada's activity led to a corresponding reduction in its contribution to the Canadian economy as a whole. This is of course not to mention the very severe economic impact on the local economy of my riding and its surroundings.

But let us return to the here and now, Mr. Speaker. Another article, which appeared last fall in the Le Devoir économique section, foresaw the creation of 10,000 jobs in the Montreal area due to the direct and indirect economic fallouts from Bill C-22. Mr. Speaker, how could we understand and accept the bickering from non-elected Liberals in the Senate when a great many prestigious groups and personalities both in Quebec and the rest of Canada are urging the Government to go ahead with its Bill? I refer among others to Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa, to Mayor Jean Doré, to the Armand Frappier Institute, to the School of Medicine of the Montreal, Sherbrooke and McGill universities, the Federation of General Practioners of Quebec, as well as a great many others, Mr. Speaker.

As the member for Vaudreuil I support the immediate passage of Bill C-22 as introduced by the Government. Several innovative pharmaceutical companies are located in my Vaudreuil constituency and nearby ridings, including the Dollard and Lachine constituencies, and they provide a great many jobs which, in turn, bring important economic spinoffs for our region. And those research and development jobs are for our university graduates who have no other choice today than to expatriate themselves, when we could give them the opportunity to work at home and make people around them benefit from both the economic spinoffs and the impact of their research which we need for reasons fully explained previously. We cannot do without the millions of dollars in investment and jobs which will be created in our region with the passage of Bill C-22. And by region, I mean of course more particularly the Vaudreuil area, but also the province of Quebec and the entire country. I therefore encourage all those who want to prevent the passage of the bill to stop and finally listen to reason.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, both the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) indicated they support the idea of making the economic climate better so that these companies will invest more and produce more jobs. One would think we are dealing with some poor, under-financed, hard done by companies. Last week The Globe and Mail printed a couple of interesting articles about these supposedly poor companies. Let me just put on the record some of the facts they reported. I quote:

> Canadian subsidiaries of multinational pharmaceutical companies are among the most profitable businesses in the country—
> —even under that patent regimen, many of the multinational drug companies already make a level of profit rarely reported by other Canadian manufacturers.
> The financial statements of 10 pharmaceutical companies were sampled for 1983 and 1984.

I am sure Hoffmann-La Roche was one of them. It continues:

> Their return on shareholders' equity—a common measure of business success—averaged 25 per cent in 1984 and 23 per cent a year earlier, which would put the companies near the top 25 in the Report on Business ranking of 1,000 companies.
> One of them, Wyeth Ltd., reported a return on shareholders' equity that would put it in the top 1 per cent of the ROB 1,000.

How much more do we have to give these companies to persuade them to invest in this country? If we want to give incentives to produce jobs, would we not be better off giving them to companies like Bombardier, Northern Telecom and Canadian General Electric, all of which have major operations in Quebec, and all of whom employ thousands of workers? None of them make the kind of return on investment which the Government wants to give these multinationals.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I will make sure to let the people of Vaudreuil know exactly what the Hon. Member has just said. It will be interesting for those people. They saw the erection of an eight-storey building in Vaudreuil by Hoffmann-La Roche. The company started operations there and then, because of the 1969 amendments, closed it down and put the workers on the street. People had to leave their jobs because of the impact on research and development by those companies the Hon. Member says are rich. That will be a lot of comfort to the people who lost their jobs in Vaudreuil. Those companies are prepared to create good jobs in research and development for our young graduates who grow up in ridings such as mine. They go to universities, obtain diplomas, then have to go elsewhere in order to making a living. They cannot contribute to our economy in research and development. I will mention that to my constituents.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour, who is an honest and conscientious Member of the House, would certainly not leave on the official report of our Debates statements which are absolutely unfounded.

He has just made two. First, he claimed that the 1962 legislation was the reason behind the closing in his riding by the Hoffmann-La Roche Corporation of their Vaudreuil facilities. That was only an excuse! No impartial observer in Canada would claim that this is the real reason why this company decided to leave. It was just an excuse. It was a decision made in a particular context and which was used by the company to comply with a management decision taken outside Canada. Those who were working for this company in Canada did not want the plant to close. Such decisions made by multinationals abroad affect the economy and the labour situation in Canada.

When we rely exclusively on multinationals for the economic survival of our country, we are most vulnerable, and there are situations such as that one where business executives residing outside Canada make decisions which have serious consequences for the Canadian economy.

Unfortunately, this Bill has not enough teeth to ensure that decisions such as those made in the past by business bosses abroad would not be repeated.

The other thing I should like to bring to the Minister's attention is a statement made by Sir John A. Macdonald, the first Conservative Leader of his Party, and I quote:

• (1150)

[English]

> There would be no use of an upper House if it did not exercise, when it thought proper, the right of opposing or amending or postponing the legislation of the lower House. It would be of no value whatever were it a mere chamber for registering the decrees of the lower House. It must be an independent House, having a free action of its own, for it is only valuable as being a regulating body, calmly considering the legislation initiated by the popular branch, and preventing any hasty or ill-considered legislation which may come from that body.

It is obvious that Sir John A. Macdonald recognized to the Canadian Senate the right to consider a bill introduced in this House and the right to amend the legislation.

Now the Minister of Labour, when suggesting that the Senate is filibustering, is leaving out a step. I hope that he will have the decency of acknowledging that he is anticipating the facts.

The Senate up to now has carried its duty which is to consider a bill from this House and to suggest amendments, as has often been done in the past. The Senate has not yet gone beyond its duty. We are considering a motion to return the bill to the Senate without the amendments which it has proposed.

It will be only after the House has taken its decision and the bill is returned for a second time before the Senate that the Minister may say whether the Senate is filibustering or exceeding its constitutional mandate. He cannot say such a thing at the present time because up to now the Senate has only been performing its duty, that is to consider the bill and suggest amendments. It did not yet say whether it will insist on those amendments. It has only submitted them to this House. It is quite an important difference which the Minister should accept.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, I take good note of the Hon. Member's comments, and although I do not wish to enter into an exchange of compliments, I feel obliged to reciprocate because the Hon. Member, who has a long experience of this House, usually performs very serious work that is appreciated by all Members in this House.

This being said, Mr. Speaker, I will be the first to be pleased and admit I was wrong if there is no obstruction in the Senate, because this will mean the legislation is passed in its original form, as proposed by this Government.

So I will be pleased if indeed there is no obstruction as the Hon. Member suggests, and I sincerely hope so because I believe the legislation as proposed is good for Canada as a whole, good for Quebec in particular and most certainly for the constituency of Vaudreuil, where Hoffmann-La Roche used to be located, and of course we could discuss at length all the pros and cons of a decision that was taken during those years. But the 1969 Act is very high on the list of reasons for the Hoffmann-La Roche decision, as the people in the constituency of Vaudreuil very well remember.

Mr. Speaker, as to the quote made by the Hon. Member, I take good note of it. I will read it again with much attention. I remember the following terms, "hasty or ill-considered legislation". It is my view, Mr. Speaker, that—

[English]

If there is one piece of legislation which is not hasty, it is Bill C-22. As far as being ill-considered, after debate in this Chamber and in the other place the Government thinks that its version is the best one. We do not think it is ill-considered. I hope the Senate comes to that conclusion. If it does, I will congratulate it and apologize for thinking that perhaps it may have caused de l'obstruction, monsieur le Président.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I was not surprised that the Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall), who led off this debate for the Official Opposition, took almost three hours to explain the Liberals' position. After all, they have a lot of explaining to do. It was the Liberals, when they were in Government, in fact the Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), when he was the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who opened this whole can of worms.

Let us have a brief history lesson, Mr. Speaker. Until 1969 Canada had the second highest prices for prescription drugs in the world. The only country that had higher prices was the United States. There was a great deal of complaint, very justifiably and understandably. A number of studies were done, and during the Liberal regime a parliamentary committee held lengthy hearings and finally made a report which led to the change in the Patent Act laws in 1969 as they affected prescription drugs.

From 1969 until the present time, instead of having the second highest prescription drug prices in the world we have had among the lowest. The successor to the Hon. Member for Papineau as Minister of Consumer Affairs, Mrs. Erola, who has now taken a very well-paid job as a lobbyist for the multinational drug companies, buckled under to pressure and appointed Professor Eastman to conduct a study. Professsor Eastman conducted that study and reported, fortunately or unfortunately, after the Government had changed and we had a Conservative Government. Professsor Eastman said essentially that the system had worked well, that we had saved the Canadian consumer, either directly or indirectly through public and private prescription drug insurance plans, hundreds of millions of dollars, but that we could improve the system.

He said that we could extend the period for exclusivity for the companies which developed the drugs by a few years, that we could increase the royalties which the generic companies had to pay for the right to produce generic drugs, but that aside from that the system was working quite well.

Instead the Conservative Government buckled under completely to the pressure of the multinational companies and the pressure of President Reagan who made it a condition of even talking about free trade that we change our regulations. The Conservative Government brought in legislation. It ignored almost every important recommendation made by Professor Eastman.

The Minister talks about the support for this Bill. It has some support, about which I will elaborate in a moment, but what the Minister did today and my hon. friend for Dauphin—Swan River (Mr. White) did yesterday was to say that those people who do not support the Bill do not know what they are talking about.

Who are these people who oppose the Bill? It would take me all day to list all the groups and organizations, but I will summarize who they are. They are labour organizations, seniors organizations from one end of Canada to the other, the Consumers' Association of Canada, and farm groups such as Keystone Agriculture in my province of Manitoba which represents all the farmers who produce various commodities except grain. As well, six of the ten provinces told the Government that they have considered its proposal and believe it will cost their pharmacare plans tens of millions of dollars.

Of course, there are some who support the Bill, including some medical researchers. It is not surprising that they support the Bill because they are so starved for research funds that they are prepared to take funds from anyone who will provide them.

I remind Members of the House that when the Conservatives were in opposition, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) attacked the Liberals, saying that it was unacceptable and inexcusable that we were one of the lowest investors in scientific research and development among the industrialized countries. He promised that when a Conservative Government took office it would move quickly to invest 2.5 per cent of Gross National Product for scientific research and development.

Let us consider what has actually happened. Instead of the 1.9 per cent of GNP that we were spending when the Liberals were in government, we are now spending 1.3 per cent under a Conservative Government that promised to spend twice that amount. Obviously, scientists are moving to the United States. Why would they stay in Canada when there is no work for them and the Government has made it very clear that it will not invest or force the private sector of the economy to invest the kinds of funds which are necessary?

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) talked about Hoffmann-La Roche in his constituency of Vaudreuil. Let me tell the Minister what the Government did to my city of Winnipeg. There was an agreement between the former Liberal Government of Canada and the Province of Manitoba to build a centre in which scientific research could be done in the City of Winnipeg. The agreement was concluded and the building erected. The building is virtually empty because the Conservative Government, in its desire to hold the line and reduce the deficit, cancelled the money for the funding needed to operate the centre.

We must understand a number of points. First, we have heard repeatedly from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), and now from the Minister of Labour and the Parliamentary Secretary, about how many jobs will be produced if and when this Bill is passed. There is not a single word in the Bill requiring the companies to produce the jobs that they have promised. There is not a single clause or a single word in the Bill providing penalties for the companies if they do not produce the jobs they have promised. In fact, there is nothing in the Bill that would require any company to do anything. The Bill does not even stipulate that those companies which produce jobs will get benefits and those companies that do not will not get benefits. There is simply a general assumption in the Bill that everything will work. All the organizations and groups which oppose the Bill have said that is unacceptable.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs continues to talk about the amounts of money and expenditures on research and development that will be made. The Minister tosses around figures of hundreds of millions of dollars like they were confetti. Yet the figures add up so fast that he is unable to keep track of them. For instance, on August 15 he claimed that $900 million would be invested. That required two additional amounts of $280 million and $130 million to be added to the PMAC figure of $553 million. The figures are meaningless when he can simply pull them out of the air as he sees fit and then threaten that this investment will disappear if the Bill does not pass, as the Minister of Labour said a few moments ago.

It is this combination of promotion and blackmail that tries to obscure the very real issues associated with drug industry research. One does not achieve real basic medical research by spreading the money out in dribs and drabs. Instead, it should be put into establishing a major medical research centre which we do not have.

The pharmaceutical manufacturers themselves have said that it can cost up to $100 million to make a major breakthrough and produce one real new drug that will treat an important illness, such as cancer, heart disease or stroke. Does anyone really believe that in Canada, with our small population of 25 million and a very limited market, any drug company will really invest up to $100 million in the hopes of producing one new drug? That is nonsense. The drug companies will simply continue their past practice of experimenting with a drug to derive a new variation which they can sell in competition with another company and thereby have an edge for a few months or years.

The Government would have us believe that it was only after the 1969 legislation that a situation developed in which it was not profitable for the drug companies to invest in research. Let us consider what happened before 1969 when we did not have this legislation. I challenge anyone on the government side or someone from the drug companies to tell me and Canadians the name of one major drug discovery that was made in Canada before 1969 when, according to the Government and the industry, this terrible legislation destroyed their ability or desire to do research?

There was one major discovery which has saved hundreds of thousands, if not millions of lives. That was the discovery of insulin. Yet lo and behold, insulin was not produced by one of these multinational corporations but was produced in a laboratory of the medical college of the University of Toronto. I suggest to the industry and the Government that if we want real research done in Canada, let us give the universities and scientific community, particularly the university medical and biotechnology researchers, the opportunity to do so.

I wish to deal for a few moments with the question of the supposed inability of these drug companies, these poor drug companies, to do research. I wish to put on the record some of the facts we learned, or should have learned, that appeared in two articles published in The Globe and Mail on August 21 last. The first states in part:

> Canadian subsidiaries of multinational pharmaceutical companies are among the most profitable businesses in the country, but taxpayers may end up footing much of the bill for the increased research the companies are promising . . . even under that patent regimen, many of the multinational drug companies already make a level of profit rarely reported by other Canadian manufacturers.

In a sample for 1983 and 1984—

> Their return on shareholders' equity . . . averaged 25 per cent in 1984 and 23 per cent a year earlier, which would put the companies near the top 25 in the Report on Business ranking of 1000 companies.

How much more do we have to give them before they will agree to do anything? The article raises another important question, that is, the whole question of inter-company transfers. The article points out:

> The money that multinational drug companies take out of Canada often flows in ways other than the normal dividends a subsidiary pays to its parent.
> That is a big figure in itself—in one recent two-year period, 10 companies sampled paid dividends totalling almost $60 million a year, about equal to the industry's Canadian spending on research. But further huge amounts also move through other intercorporate arrangements.
> These transfers, which include royalties paid to the parent ($20 million a year in the period studied) and fees paid to the parent ($9.5 million) are a cost of doing business for the subsidiary, and therefore have the effect of reducing profit.
> But the biggest factor—and one that Revenue Canada is disputing with some companies—is transfer pricing—
> Transfer pricing is a way of shifting money within related companies to move profits out of high-tax areas into more favorable jurisdictions. In a typical transaction, the Canadian subsidiary would pay an offshore affiliate an inflated price for the raw material used to make a prescription drug. This over-high price becomes a cost to the domestic company, cutting its profit and therefore its tax bill.

I digress for a moment to remind Hon. Members that these are among the most profitable companies in Canada.

> In the 10-company sample, eight multinationals' total purchases from related companies totalled more than $250 million a year. The two other companies did not give exact figures, but one said it was "dependent" on a related party and the other said a "majority" of its business was with related companies.

I know that I have just about used up my allotted time, Mr. Speaker. Revenue Canada has been looking into this inter-company transferring for years. In fact, at least one of the companies settled by paying over $650,000 to Revenue Canada. We are talking about very wealthy and powerful companies. They do not need this legislation if they really want to do research. They are already making very high profits. The extent to which we subsidize them must be cut back. We should be doing more for other companies which employ more people, many more people than these companies, and which should be getting help so that they can do research to make them more efficient and better able to deal with competition.

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments on what the Hon. Member has just mentioned in his speech. Since this morning I have been listening to what the Hon. Members from the Liberal Party and The New Democratic Party have to say, and I am wondering if those people believe that Canadians can only be carters of water and drivers of screws. While we have before us a bill intended to help our professionals in the field of research, they are proposing that we create employment to keep people busy driving screws and carting water. That is what makes us different. We believe, and I personally believe, that we have, here in Canada, enough trained and capable people to do research. That is my first question.

Here is my second question. He argues that we are yielding to American pressures and that this explains why we are adopting such a bill. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is quite the opposite. When the Liberals adopted the Act some years ago, our research scientists left for the United States. It seems to me that this was to the advantage of the United States. What we want to do today is to make up for that lost time and keep our investigators in Canada. I cannot see how one can insinuate and make the Canadian people and Hon. Members believe that the Americans are twisting our arm. I think it is quite the opposite. On the contrary, we want to keep our professionals here, we do not want to send them to the United States.

That is what I have to say. If no research on drugs is done here in Canada, what will happen? It will be done in the United States, in Europe or elsewhere. Which does not necessarily mean that we will be getting our drugs any cheaper. We simply want the research to be done here, at home. If we were doing research on drugs in Canada, we might get better drugs, we might be able to give better treatment to our senior citizens, our sick people. Then, why stop doing pharmaceutical research, when we are doing some on farm tractors or on automobiles? This is as though research on drugs to get good medicinal products to treat our patients was forbidden. In my opinion, this opposition is utterly ridiculous.

Let us talk, for instance, about generics. When we produce generics, we only copy, and it is not by copying that we will create new drugs. So it is totally ridiculous to say that we should encourage generics, in other words encourage copying.

I would like to ask anyhow to the Hon. Member who just spoke why he keeps misrepresenting the facts. In reality, I do not think he, himself, believes what he is saying. He is misrepresenting the facts. I met older people in my riding last week who told me that because of Bill C-22 drugs were going to go up more than 20 per cent, but he knows very well, and it is in the Bill, that we provided for a board to keep prices in line with the cost of living.

My question to the Hon. Member is this: Why does he keep making misrepresentations to our sick and elderly people by telling them that the price of drugs is going to go up 20 to 25 p. 100?

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, the people in this House who are misrepresenting the facts are not the members of the Opposition but the Ministers and Conservative Members of Parliament. If the Hon. Member had taken the trouble and the time to look through the Eastman Report he would have seen the figures produced by the last real study done on drug prices and costs in this country. He would have seen that the people of Canada have saved about $300 million a year, and I am speaking from memory, in terms of the price of prescription drugs because of the legislation which we have in place. The suggestion is false that we are opposed to medical research. The Hon. Member should have listened when I was speaking, but I remind him that the present Prime Minister promised that under a Conservative Government we would move quickly to spending 2.5 per cent of our Gross National Product on scientific research. Instead, we are presently spending 1.3 per cent of the Gross National Product, which is only half.

• (1220)

The private multinational corporations do not need to be subsidized to do medical research. Stop starving the medical research council, which is what the former Liberal Government did and the present Conservative Government is doing. Give the medical researchers who are working in our universities the money to do research and they will do research and not move to the United States.

I wish to say one last thing in respect to misrepresentation. There are two sides to any argument, and there are two sides to the debate on this issue. I wish to point out two misrepresentations by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Perhaps the Minister did not have his facts straight. The Minister has stated several times in the House and outside that Dr. John Polanyi, our most recent Nobel Prize winner, supports this Bill. That is not true. Dr. Polanyi has urged increased support for scientific research. Dr. Polanyi did not say anything about this Bill.

In the House the other day the Minister stated that the University of Manitoba supported this Bill. That is not true. I have spoken to the Vice-President of the University of Manitoba, and that university has made no statement. Some medical researchers who are working at the University of Manitoba have supported the Bill, for the reasons I earlier indicated. But the University of Manitoba has not given its support to this Bill. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should not be misrepresenting the facts and claiming support for the Bill from groups and individuals who have not supported the Bill.

Mr. Lewis: The House will know that the New Democratic Party has traditionally been opposed to the Senate. In fact, in the past some Members have suggested that the Senate should be abolished. However, last week the New Democratic Party reversed its position in the words of the House Leader, and I quote from The Globe and Mail, "We would assume that the Senate would see the wisdom of stopping this Bill as well". The House Leader then went on to say, "But the fact is that they do some good work some of the time".

My question to the Hon. Member is, does he support the new position of the New Democratic Party that the Senate, which is an appointed body, should have the right to veto this legislation, or any other legislation passed by a democratically elected House of Commons? In other words, does the end justify the means?

Mr. Orlikow: The Hon. Member knows the position of our Party.

Mr. Lewis: Last week or this week?

Mr. Orlikow: I listened to the question of the Hon. Member and I did not interrupt him. I would ask him to give me the same courtesy.

The New Democratic Party has always supported the idea that the Senate should be abolished. The Senate is part of the parliamentary system. Unfortunately, unlike any other second chamber in any other democratic society in the world, the Senate has almost equal rights to those of the elected Members of the House of Commons. It has the legal right to amend, approve, or reject any legislation enacted by the House of Commons. That is its legal right. But does it have the moral right to veto, block, or stop the legislation passed by the House of Commons? I do not believe so, and I do not think that my colleagues believe so. The Senate can exercise this right legally, and constitutionally. The former Liberal Government and the Conservative Government have not challenged this right until today. But if the Senate exercises its right, the New Democratic Party will respond at that time in the manner it feels it should. I can assure the Hon. Member that the manner in which we will respond will be very clear and will be in line with the position that we have always taken.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of respect for my colleague from Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) who, I believe, is one of the senior Members of the House. He has given us an explanation concerning the Senate, but I have the impression that his younger hawkish colleagues are forcing him to provide this kind of explanation because, unless I am mistaken, all New Democrats have always turned down appointments to the illustrious Upper House. Be that as it may, does he not believe that if the NDP were consistent with itself it should indeed be supporting this Government's Bill C-22, given the fact that he, for one, does not have any use for the other place?

Second, how is it that the Party to whom he belongs, drawing inspiration from the likes of Karl Marx, Lenin, Trotsky and others, would choose to endorse the Senate position aimed at doing away with the kind of consumer protection which for the first time would make it possible to gain full control over generic drugs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. Debate. The Hon. the Minister of State for science and Technology (Mr. Oberle).

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in response to the previous question, I explained my position and the position of the New Democratic Party with respect to the Senate.

The Senate is there. We did not create the Senate, and we did not appoint the Senators. The Senate has the duty and the right to consider Bills passed by the House of Commons. It exercised its right and moved a number of amendments. We believe that some of those amendments, if approved by this House, would improve the Bill. To the extent that the Senate improves what we consider to be a bad Bill, we support those amendments.

If the House of Commons was presently in debate and rejected those amendments, and essentially passed the Bill, as was done at an earlier stage, and then the Senate does not accept the Bill, as I have already indicated, we will deal with that situation if and when it arises. I can assure the Hon. Member that we will not be any more sympathetic to the Senate in this case than we have been in any other.

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I almost missed my turn to debate this issue. On the way from my office I was held up by a large demonstration in front of the Chamber; it is presently ongoing, and Your Honour should be apprised of. There are at least 1,000 young people there who are demanding that politicians who held prominent positions of another age free up the debate of this House and proceed with the passing of this legislation. These young scientists and engineers out there are demanding jobs.

Naturally, as the Minister of State (Science and Technology), I am interested in their message. I am sure you would assume that at one point I would wish to say a few words on Bill C-22 because this debate does concern science and technology. This debate does concern research and development. This debate does concern Canada in the 21st Century. This debate is about using science and technology and research and development to carve a niche for Canada in the new age and to overcome some of the historic problems of regional alienation and a lack of resolve in this critical area of science and technology.

The world is changing in a very dramatic fashion. Some say it is the dawning of a new age. Every single person in our country, every nation in the world, will determine its place in the 21st Century by the way it responds to the challenges and trends which are out there. The socio-economic well-being of entire nations is being determined by what is happening.

I have heard it said that over the next 30 years we will experience as profound a change in our socio-economic conditions in western civilization as we have experienced over the last 200 years of the industrial revolution. Just imagine what that means, Mr. Speaker. Can one even contemplate what that means? How do we respond to this? How do we prepare ourselves for these changes?

We are designing new rules. New norms and standards are being created every day, and each one has to measure his or her own performance, and nations have to measure their performance in accordance with these new rules and the trends that are measurable throughout the world.

Since we pride ourselves on being one of the seven most important industrial nations in the world, we too have to begin to play by the rules which have been established by the people with whom we compare ourselves, by the general rules of the western world of which we are such an important part. Certainly, this Government intends to stay in the fast current, to stay with the leaders, to man the new frontier with the very best, because we have the potential to do that. We have the energies and resources to do it and we shall not disappoint future generations by depriving them of their opportunities to be with the best in the world.

We must compare our performance with those with whom we compete, and they are the best in the world. We must play by the rules we have collectively established. Clearly, what is known at this point is that knowledge, intellectual capital, shall be the currency of that new age. It is no longer the land it was in the agrarian age. It is not energy as it was throughout the industrial revolution. It is knowledge and intellectual capital. The rules that are being established in accordance with the management of this capital, who has the right over it, who can accumulate and who can claim ownership, have already been established in the international market-place.

There are really two sets of rules established. They are not new. Those rules were established in the agrarian revolution and the industrial revolution and they are consistent with the trends we are experiencing now.

Our socialist friends, of course, would like to play by a different set of rules where we have collective farms, collective ownership of capital and the right of the collectivities to manage the economy in a central way. Those are not the rules of the people with whom we compete in the world. They are not the rules of the people with whom we share the responsibility of making the world a better place to live, the western civilization, where private enterprise and private initiative are very important and salient factors.

Our socialist friends have other ideas, and that is understandable. But what is not understandable is the confusion of our Liberal friends. That is not understandable. They lament the fact daily that our performance in research and development and science related activities lags behind that of all these world leaders. I agree it does in many different ways.

Spending comes to mind. It is true, sir, that we are spending significantly less, that is, in terms of a percentage of the Gross National Product, than do the United States, France, Germany, and the European Community, generally, particularly Japan. In fact, we are spending perhaps just a little over half of what these countries are spending on science and technology. My socialist friends have cried that we should be spending more; massive amounts of new money should be contributed. The Liberals are saying that as well. The Liberals had 20 years to plan ahead.

Let me just draw you a profile of what we found when we arrived here three years ago, Mr. Speaker. We found absolutely no planning, no reading, no recognition of the trends that were clearly established at that point, the trends that will establish the role of a nation like Canada in the 21st Century. There was no forward planning. There were no resources set aside for science and technology or for research. More importantly, the apparatus of government was not arranged to respond to these new trends and priorities.

So what did we do? First, we had to plan ahead and develop a vision for Canada. We had to work with the other players, with the provinces, so we sat down with the provinces. It took us two years to develop a national policy for science and technology. It was not a policy that came out of this place, or out of some historic discussions in some back room. It was a policy signed by 10 of the provinces, the two territories and the national Government. It is a focus for Canada, a vision for Canada. It was signed in March of this year in Vancouver.

We have a national strategy called "Innovaction" which lays out a clear focus of where we want to go and what we must do to respond to the challenge. We established a Standing Committee of this House of Commons on Research, Science and Technology for the first time. We established a central co-ordinating agency to manage the $4.2 billion the federal Government spends annually on science and technology to ensure that we do not duplicate our effort, that it is properly co-ordinated so that we use our scarce resources to lever private sector activities.

In our international comparisons we found as well that the effort of the federal Government was not at all bad. It was quite respectable when one compares what the federal Government spends in Canada with what the U.S. Government spends in the United States, particularly when one considers that over three-quarters of the expenditures in the United States, for instance—and that holds true for France, although not so much for Japan—is spent on defence related research and development activities. So there is quite a profound difference. We do not spend that much money on defence. We have perhaps other priorities.

We did find that we have a lot of catching up to do. We have to mobilize our resources. First, we needed to know what we wanted to spend our additional resources on. We needed to reorganize the apparatus of Government to ensure that we have the proper advice. As you know, sir, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed a council of the most prominent prestigious people in the country. It is a council which advises him personally on matters related to science and technology. That council has been meeting now for a year and is coming up with all kinds of interesting solutions and suggestions.

What have we done in the area of spending? My friend said this morning we have done nothing, that we are doing less now than we did when we came on stream. Let me put the record straight, as I did the other day. We are hearing the lament that we are not making any progress in finding new resources. Well, Sir, I made a comparison between the period since our mandate, the last three years, and the three years preceding our mandate. We have achieved an increase in spending in research and development and science related activities, that is the total national effort, including the private sector and universities. The provinces are spending very little; it is mainly the federal Government. In real dollars; that is, discounting inflation, we increased our effort by 21 per cent. That is very respectable. With the incentives we have put in place, and by our removing some of the obstacles, business has increased its effort by 23 per cent in real dollars.

The National Research Council had these drastic cuts. My friends will tell us every day we slashed our spending, but there has been a 23 per cent increase in allocation to the National Research Council in the last three years over the three years preceding.

Then we put in place provincial subagreements in order to get the provinces involved in this national thrust. There was an increase of 40 per cent in the worth of science and technology subagreements. That is very respectable in light of this other compelling priority of which we are not ashamed, and that is to bring our fiscal house into order and to quit mortgaging the future of the next 10 generations.

There is one other overriding and compelling urgency and obstacle that stands in the way of our objectives and that is the lack of a management regime, an investment climate and a regulatory environment within which the private sector would play its rightful role in the scheme of things. This, of course, is because of the antiquated patent laws and the antiquated ways we manage our intellectual capital under the Copyright Act and other such Acts. It is in that area where we are now moving as quickly as we can because we are not dealing only with pharmaceuticals, we are dealing with computer software as well.

We lose jobs every day because computer software companies cannot do research in Canada. When they are finished, they have to patent their findings in other countries. Until we reward people and permit them the right to keep some of the fruits of their labours, we will not get research in the pharmaceutical industries.

We know what will happen when Bill C-22 comes into force because of some of the initiatives that have already taken place. Almost every week I am invited to attend press conferences at which major companies announce the establishment of labs in Canada, and particularly in the Montreal region which has become a centre for the pharmaceutical sector. There will be at least 3,000 jobs and $1.4 billion in new investment. That is how to improve efforts in science and technology and R and D.

Try as we might, the federal Government, even if joined by the provinces, would not be able to respond to the challenges. That response requires the mobilization of our combined energies and resources. It requires the intellectual genius that resides in Canada. Every citizen must know what is happening in this new world and must be prepared for it. Every sector of the economy including traditional industries must become knowledge-intensive in planning and must use new technologies to improve efforts.

Our science and technology strategy is geared toward the revitalization of traditional industries including the forestry, mining, agricultural and fisheries sectors. Those are traditional industries which have been the basis of the prosperity we have enjoyed. The federal Government is playing a key role in important research in all these areas.

We must revitalize the regions that have become so dependent on primary resource industries. We must permit them to retain and improve their competitive postures in world markets. As Hon. Members know, commodity prices are under serious pressures as the technological revolution produces all kinds of substitutes for traditional materials with which we build our automobiles and homes. We must use technologies to stay on the cutting edge of technology. We must convert and add value to our resources and the refining of them.

Our national strategy on R and D and new technology is also designed to develop new technology-intensive industries. No longer will it be good enough for Canada to import 80 per cent of all the construction machinery and equipment that is used in the resource sectors. Entire sawmill systems are imported from Finland, Germany and the United States. However, we export 80 per cent of all the products of our aerospace industry. What a source of pride that is for all of us. We have ignored important opportunities we can now cash in on as we plan our new strategy in science and technology.

The challenges are great. The opportunities are unlimited. We cannot afford to allow a group of people who held prominent positions and served the country well in another age, but who are now sitting in the Senate, respectful as we are of this great institution, to deprive the present generation and future generations of Canadians of their place in the sun. We shall not stand for that.

We must decide by whose rules we want to play to achieve our place in the sun and to stay in the fast current that is sweeping mankind toward this new age. We on this side have made our decision. We will build on the great tradition of Canada. We will remobilize and rekindle the entrepreneurial spirit that made this country great in the first place. In order to do that, we have to play by the rules of the western world, of which we are an important part, and not by any other rules. We have no choice.

The rules for patents and the protection of intellectual capital have already been established. All we want Bill C-22 to do is to put in place what every other industrial country already has in place. We cannot afford to be members of the club but play by our own rules. We cannot have it both ways.

Members of the NDP and the socialists would think that we can have it both ways. We do not think so. Nor do we want it to be that way. We want to get on with the job. I would hope that at least Liberal Members would see the wisdom of this approach, would look ahead to the 21st century for a few minutes and would get on with the job.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the remarks of the Minister of State (Science and Technology) (Mr. Oberle). He seems to be able to compute new figures right on the floor of the House of Commons. He said that the figures used by Statistics Canada indicating that the amount of research and development under the Conservative Government is at 1.3 per cent of GNP are wrong and that in fact while the Liberals were in office, the Statistics Canada figure of 1.7 per cent of GNP was wrong. How does he manage to say that the Conservatives are spending more real dollars on research and development when Statistics Canada does not agree with that?

Second, would the Hon. Member outline for the House the regional breakdown of these development dollars; how much of this mythical $900 million per year or whatever it would be that is to be spent by the multinational drug companies would be spent in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, the Northwest Territories, Yukon or Prince Edward Island? I am sure the Minister of State (Science and Technology) has those figures at his fingertips. How much will be spent in the regions of Canada?

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to give the Hon. Member a lesson in mathematics. The comparisons of which I spoke are usually made in accordance with the performance of a country in terms of its Gross National Product. It is quite true that in that comparison, we have not improved. In fact, we kept roughly—

Mr. Fulton: Downward.

Mr. Oberle: No, there has not been a decline but we kept the percentages at about the same rate. The Hon. Member forgets that we had the largest growth in national industrial and economic performance of any other of the major industrial countries in the world. With a growth of 3 per cent and 4 per cent in the Gross National Product, which is at just over $500 billion, and calculating that back, we have not been able to mobilize enough resources to keep pace with that spectacular growth.

Mr. Fulton: That's right. It's dropped 30 per cent.

Mr. Oberle: It is massive, spectacular growth. All the reports from OECD indicate this growth rate will continue and Canada will be the leader in industrial recovery. We pride ourselves on that.

To keep pace with spending as a percentage of that growth is very difficult. What I am saying is that in real dollars we have increased spending. Comparing the three years we have been in power and the three years prior to that, it increased by 21 per cent. The National Research Council had a 23 per cent increase in its allocation over that period.

Mr. Fulton: What about regional spending?

Mr. Oberle: Now that my hon. friend from Skeena understands that, I will go to regional spending.

It is true that certain regions of the country have certain strengths. A group in Montreal looked at this very seriously and it predicts that in one region of Quebec, Montreal, 10,000 new jobs will be created. The 3,000 jobs I am talking about are the pure science and research jobs. There are more spin-offs in that exciting area than in any other industrial activity. That region will benefit most and I make no apologies for that. This is where the regional strength is.

There is strength in Vancouver as well with the Terry Fox Foundation. There is strength in Montreal. There is strength in southern Ontario. There are even pockets of strength in the Atlantic provinces. We are looking at the national effort here. Do not bring out that red herring of proper distribution. When you give it to the private sector they will do the right thing. Let us unleash the genius which resides in UBC and the University of Victoria and so on. You will see what happens out there. The regions will all have their place in the sun with proper management.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, no other issue deserves more attention than Bill C-22, and I believe that it is a good thing for the House to be asked to examine it further because of the amendments proposed by the Senate.

The Government is always repeating that the pharmaceutical companies have promised to invest some $1.4 billion within the next ten years and to create a number of jobs.

We also know that six Canadian provinces have asked the Government not to go ahead with Bill C-22, as have a number of important witnesses, such as the Canadian Consumers Association and too many others for me to list them all in the short time at my disposal. As for the six provinces, that is Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario, Manitoba and Alberta, they object to Bill C-22 because, first, this Bill will result in higher prices for drugs in Canada, and second, the Government has no written guarantee from the companies that they will indeed invest.

Representing as he does a Government which is—how can I put it—so little in possession of the truth, and which has lost all credibility within three years, how can the Minister expect Canadians who object to this Bill to trust him when he says that he has guarantees even though he has nothing on paper and there is nothing in this Bill to guarantee that a single job will be created or one cent invested?

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Judy Erola says so.

Mr. Gauthier: I do not believe her.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, you would not wish me to recite the litany. My colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), read a page and a half into Hansard—

Mr. Gauthier: I can read in those who are opposed if you want.

Mr. Oberle: —of all the groups, associations and provinces which have openly declared themselves in support of this Bill. Neither would my hon. friend want me to repeat all that has been said about increasing prices. That myth has been dispelled. There will not be the predicted increase in drug prices. The drugs affected are 7 per cent of all drugs being sold. The other 93 per cent are for specific illnesses. There is not a great consumer market for them so obviously those who copy drugs are not interested in that. They leave that to the people who do the research. They can produce those drugs even though there will never be any real commercial benefit.

What about the written guarantees from industry? I can tell my hon. friend that we just happen to have faith in the private sector and the entrepreneurs of our country.

Mr. Gauthier: In God we trust; all others pay cash.

Mr. Oberle: We just happen to believe in private enterprise, unlike the Liberals. Where are the great Liberals of the past? They have reduced themselves to a little rump of the socialist party sitting opposite.

Have faith, my friend, in the pioneers of this great country. They built this nation on the principle of free enterprise and personal initiative. We just happen to have that faith and we will be proved right once again. We predicted that by playing a smaller role in the economy we would revitalize it and all the signs are pointing in that direction. We are registering the largest growth—

Mr. Gauthier: That is not your fault.

Mr. Oberle: —in the economy than any other industrial country. Yes, it is our fault because we rekindled the spirit and removed some of the barriers which were put in place by the Liberals.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment the Hon. Minister on laying out what a bright future we have in medical research once the Opposition stops blocking this motion. If any of them were to take the time to talk to the 1,000 people now demonstrating on the Hill in favour of this Bill, they would probably change their minds.

I want to ask my colleague a question about the new-found policy of the NDP. Traditionally the NDP has been opposed to the Senate. In fact, they want it abolished. Quite recently, last week in fact, the NDP House Leader announced a reversal of that policy when he said we would assume that the Senate would see the wisdom of stopping this Bill as well. He went on to say that the fact is they do some good work some time.

How does the Hon. Minister feel and how does he think the people in his constituency would feel about an appointed Senate blocking the will of the democratically elected representatives of the people, Members of this House of Commons?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister has one minute to answer.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer this question. I monitored very closely the speeches of our friends in the NDP and I am reminded of the concept developed, that politics is the science of expediency. When it is expedient for the NDP they can even defend the Senate.

I was in the riding of my hon. friend for Skeena for three days a couple of weeks ago and talked to the Chamber of Commerce in Kitimat which passed a resolution asking for his resignation. That demonstrates the faith he has in small enterprise, in growth in jobs, and the great potential in the great riding that he represents.

Mr. Fulton: When are you going to the Senate?

Mr. Oberle: I have no ambition to go to the Senate. The Senate exists and it is exercising its right, but it is time it saw the error of its ways and allowed us to get on with the business of the nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

INVITATION TO GOVERNMENT TO PROTECT CONSUMERS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, it is really sad to see what is happening to the debate on Bill C-22. Today, we have employees from the multinationals at the door. It is easy to get 1,000 people when the company pays for their buses and day off. Next week, the generics are going to pay 1,000 of their own employees to come and demonstrate.

The Senate is conducting its own protest. The Conservative Government is doing its own thing as well. But is anyone paying attention to the average consumer? Who is protecting the poor souls who can't get a free ride from the companies to come and demonstrate? Who is going to ask the views of Mrs. Solange Denis, who told the Prime Minister: "Charlie Brown, you lied to us!"?

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to be responsible and not give in to blackmail by the multinationals, to adopt the resolutions or amendments proposed by the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner), to protect consumers, to protect the jobs in Quebec, and please stop this circus!

ENERGY

HIGH PRICE OF GASOLINE IN EASTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Norman Warner (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, recently certain parts of eastern Ontario have experienced unreasonably high gasoline prices. These higher prices are driven up by the major oil companies which either directly or indirectly control most of the retail outlets. These high prices may be great for the major oil companies' profits, but they are not acceptable for the consumer. The small group of major oil companies are abusing their oligopoly's power.

Crude oil prices have declined in recent weeks and, unfortunately, it is without optimism that I wait for reduced pump prices. The present free market system is not working. Perhaps we should be looking at radical changes for the industry. Perhaps the time has come for total divestiture legislation so that independent retailers will allow the free market system to work for the advantage of both retailers and consumers.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

LOW-LEVEL FLIGHTS IN LABRADOR—ASSESSMENT REVIEW PANEL—MINISTER'S RULING

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to register my concern about the recent ruling by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) with respect to the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Panel that was set up to examine the effects of low-level flying in Labrador. The Minister ruled that the panel set up to study the environmental consequences of this low-level flying could not recommend against it, that it could only make recommendations with respect to how the effects of the flying might be mitigated.

It seems to me, leaving the question of the actual environmental effects of low-level flying aside, that the ruling of the Minister jeopardizes the very notion of environmental assessment. Surely if we are committed to assessing the environmental consequences of something we have to be open to the possibility in theory that the environmental consequences will be so bad that the people charged with that assessment could recommend against doing it.

I think a very bad precedent has been set, Mr. Speaker. Will the Government take this same attitude toward nuclear submarines in the Arctic? Are all things military to be exempt from environmental assessment to the point that these panels will be told that they cannot recommend against the very things they are being asked to assess?

DIEPPE RAID COMMEMORATIVE VISIT

Mr. Joe Reid (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, last August 19 I was one of several privileged to make the "return to Dieppe pilgrimage" under the leadership of the distinguished Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees). We walked on the beaches and looked up at the formidable cliffs as did nearly 5,000 Canadians 45 years ago, but the circumstances were oh, so much different. On that date 45 years ago, over 900 Canadians died and about 2,000 more were sent to spend the rest of their days during the war in prisoner of war camps.

• (1405)

Their actions were to contribute greatly to the final liberation of Europe. We were able to witness firsthand the joys of the people as they experienced that freedom on the beaches and in the towns. We felt the warmth and gratitude of those same peoples as they cheered us as we marched through the streets, and as we stood together at the several markers and memorials to recite those words "We will remember them". Long live Canada!

NUCLEAR ENERGY

REACTOR SAFETY RECOMMENDATIONS—REACTION OF ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, last week it was reported that the Atomic Energy Control Board has put forward proposals for improved nuclear reactor safety, including additional research into reactor behaviour, installation of extra safety equipment, minor but significant changes to reactor designs, changing some operating procedures and improving decommissioning plans. A spokesman for AECB said that costs and exposure of workers to radiation are taken into account in the safety proposals.

However, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is resisting such proposals, citing high costs, technical arguments, and potential difficulties in selling and building future reactors as reasons for inaction, and in most cases is seeking compromises.

As a Crown corporation with a monopoly on nuclear reactor design, public safety for present and future generations should be Atomic Energy of Canada's highest priority.

Therefore, I urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to instruct Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to reconsider the proposed safety recommendations in this light and to put a moratorium on new nuclear plant construction in Canada at least until the dispute on public safety is resolved.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION TO END WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the current conflict between CN and CP rail workers and management highlights the need for a new approach to resolve labour-management disputes. Strikes and lockouts in this segment of the transportation industry are outdated and costly, not only for the parties in dispute, but for all Canadians.

When we consider the total cost of the current strike to travellers on vacation, commuters who have difficulty getting to and from work, as well as the thousands of employees of VIA Rail who are now laid off, the price is too high.

In addition to this, the movement of commodities is brought to a halt. Western Canadian grain farmers, already faced with dwindling prices, will not tolerate this during harvest. Grain must move.

I commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) for the action he has taken and urge him to prepare the necessary legislation to bring an end to this present situation if negotiations break off again without a settlement.

BILL C-22—DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw attention to the fact that there are a number of demonstrators with regard to Bill C-22 outside on the Hill. For the record, I want to say how happy and delighted I am to see a great number of individuals from the Province of Quebec and the Province on Ontario on Parliament Hill, drawing attention to perhaps one of the worst pieces of legislation that this country has seen, Bill C-22.

I am delighted that these demonstrators have taken the opportunity to focus attention on a very major issue affecting all Canadians. I want to thank them, on behalf of our Party, for drawing to the attention of Canadians the real problem of Bill C-22, which is that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) once again is on his knees to the multinational corporations hoping to assist, aid, and abet multinationals, as opposed to trying to help protect senior citizens in this country with regard to the high cost of prescription drugs. I want it to be known that I appreciate the attention that the demonstrators are drawing to this very important issue. Hopefully the debate will continue and we will defeat Bill C-22.

LEADER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Now hear this! This month, a Member, on behalf of his NDP colleagues, requested in a letter a private, confidential briefing on the free trade negotiations. The Hon. Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) forthwith sent an invitation to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), which the leader of the socialists immediately declined, stating in part that to attend the briefing "would seriously restrict "him" in carrying out his obligations as Leader of the NDP".

• (1410)

Say that again! Hearing the true facts on free trade would seriously restrict the NDP Leader! It would zipper up his lips! He could no longer get ink in the socialist press with piffle like: "Free trade will destroy Canadian sovereignty"; "Free trade will cost us jobs"; "Free trade will give away the rest of Canada"; "Free trade will completely obliterate the automotive industry in Canada"; et cetera, et cetera.

You are right, Mr. NDP Leader, the truth would restrict you and your Party. What a pity!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, now for a little of the truth.

I want to sound an alarm, not only for the demise of rural post offices but for the demise of rural Canadian life. The Post Office is on a forced march again with a scorched-earth policy to close down rural post offices—a definite threat to rural life in Canada. This is taking place right across the country.

It is being done without adequate consultation. The consultations are being rushed rather than taking the 90 days which they are supposed to take. People are not being given the option of keeping their existing post offices. This follows from a notion of centralized economic planning as it affects rural Canada rather than a decentralized approach which is sensitive to community life. It is imposing upon rural Canada poverty wages, one-fifth of what the people who run those post offices earn today.

This centralized, insensitive, destructive approach to rural communities has to stop. It is time that the Government woke up and started to listen to rural Canadians.

DEMOCRACY

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): A few minues ago, Mr. Speaker, we saw a demonstration in a democratic country, a demonstration for democracy in front of the halls of democracy. Montrealers and Quebecers came to defend 1,300 paying jobs, jobs for intelligent people, that the future holds in store. Why? Because of a Senate full of Grits from Quebec, Mr. Speaker, which is challenging our democracy.

I wonder where the Leader of the New Democratic Party was, when he was needed to defend our democracy, Mr. Speaker. Where was the powerless Liberal Leader? Where was his Quebec Lieutenant, the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau)? And where were the other Liberal Members from Quebec? The Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine-East (Mr. Allmand), for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre), for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Isabelle), for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens), for Laurier (Mr. Berger), for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi), for Richmond—Wolfe (Mr. Tardif), for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), for Saint-Léonard—Anjou (Mr. Gagliano), for Saint-Maurice (Mr. Grondin), for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin), for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone)? Were they hiding in the quarters of an arrogant Senate overcome by Trudeaumania, Mr. Speaker?

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

INVESTMENT PLAN PROPOSED BY CANADIAN FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in November, 1984, the Tory Government abolished part of the Regional Industrial Development Program which allowed the development of municipal infrastructures. We know that many municipalities have older infrastructures but due to the lack of financial resources and government programs, they cannot make the required improvements. Therefore the situation is worsening.

According to a review made by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities, a sum of $15 billion will be required before the end of the decade to bring the present facilities back to a satisfactory condition. The Federation has therefore proposed to the federal Government an investment plan for public works that would provide maximun economic benefits and thousands of jobs. Needless to say, my party through its leader has supported the project deemed essential to the survival and the cleaning of our lakes and rivers.

As for the Ontario Liberal Government, its response was to implement a new program called Lifelines which will enable Ontario municipalities to receive financial assistance for waterworks and sewage disposal systems. However, it cannot act alone. The federal Tory government must show some leadership with respect to that issue and has a duty not only to support but also to implement the investment plan proposed by the Canadian Federation of Municipalities.

BILL C-22—DEMONSTRATION ON PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we live in a democratic society. Canadians have the right and the duty if they so feel to express their views on any subject, to write, to phone or to talk to their Members of Parliament. I support that right.

We have today a demonstration outside this building by people who have come here to urge Members of Parliament to support Bill C-22, and they have every right to do that.

• (1415)

Mr. Orlikow: Members of the House should know that the people who are outside are employed by drug companies. They were given the day off from work to come here. At least one company closed its operations for the day. Their expenses for coming here were paid for by the drug companies. There is nothing wrong with that, Mr. Speaker, they have every right to do that. But Members should know the conditions under which they are here. They were paid for and supported by the multinational drug companies.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS FOR LAID OFF WORKERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Our grain sales are in peril, the western Canadian economy is in jeopardy, there are 30,000 commuters stranded in Toronto, and another 15,000 in Montreal. The Government of the Prime Minister must take responsibility for the situation, because in its haste to achieve deregulation of the transportation industry, it failed to put into place adjustment programs for the workers who necessarily lose their jobs.

I ask the Prime Minister why are there no programs to provide adjustment assistance for workers who are losing their jobs in the railway and other transportation industries, which is a fundamental cause of this particular strike?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the Leader of the Opposition is incorrect factually.

I will refer to CN, as it is a Crown corporation. CN has a program which is certainly one of the best in all of the industry in Canada with respect to job security and employment security.

A person with a minimum of eight years service with CN, who is laid off as a result of technological, organizational, or operational change, is eligible for guaranteed employment. I will not go into all of the details.

A person with a minimum of two years service with CN is eligible for employment security under the income maintenance agreement which includes retraining to become qualified to fill other vacancies within the railway, lay-off benefits, severance pay, early retirement if the person is the correct age, and the rest.

Within CN there is already quite a generous plan to cover these situations.

DEREGULATION OF INDUSTRY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport made similar arguments and a similar speech before the rail workers in Moncton, and it did not solve the problem. The Minister did not deliver.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the railway system in Canada is having difficulties because of the Conservatives' poorly implemented deregulation process. The Government could have averted this situation by providing for ways to help workers affected by deregulation. It is one of the most important themes voiced during this strike.

If the Government and the responsible Minister introduce back to work legislation, will they at the same time announce and implement programs aimed at helping workers adjust to the deregulation-provoked situation?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this situation of the railways has no more to do with deregulation than the hon. gentleman has to do with the moon. No one likes to hit someone when they are down, but in any event the whole process of deregulation was started by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry in 1984.

The facts are that in North America the nature of the transportation system is changing and, with deregulation or without, employment in the railway industry has been decreasing. That is because the railways no longer carry the same percentage of traffic they carried in the past, and I can give a number of other reasons. It is not deregulation that causes this situation. We have a situation where the parties are now bargaining. There is mediation. Why the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition would attempt to stir this all up at this particular sensitive moment is simply beyond me, but I can understand the trauma he is suffering from at the moment.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I could be provoked into examining the Hon. Minister psychologically but that would take too long, would be too uncertain, and too indeterminate.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): The Minister can exercise his usual bravado in attempting to skirt around the answer, but he has a responsibility for having ducked the fundamental reason why the parties are at loggerheads at the moment, namely, the failure of the Government in the railway industry, the trucking industry and the airline industry to provide sensible programs for worker adjustment so that the convulsions necessarily following upon deregulation could have been anticipated so that the workers concerned could have had a feeling of security.

That is an issue in this strike. That is an issue the Government has to face. When will the Minister announce some programs for adjustment of transportation workers? And when will he restore some of the programs the Government has already cancelled?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition seems to be annoyed at me because my picture was in the paper today lifting the arm of a certain person who shan't be named because of the effect it might have on his temper.

The hon. gentleman also forgets. What was he doing all the years he was a director of Canadian Pacific? Why did he not introduce these revolutionary policies? Why is he waiting for the Government? He had his opportunity when he was a director of CP.

This is a matter of collective bargaining and for collective bargaining. We are proud that our Crown corporation, CN, to whom we delegate to the board of directors, the capable management and the right to manage that corporation. It is a leader in this area in Canada, and we can be proud of it. If it can improve its system and survive economically, it will do it.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—JOB SECURITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

While the Minister of Transport is talking of collective bargaining, could the Minister of Labour indicate whether a bill has already been drafted to force railway workers back to work without giving them any job security guarantee?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that the both sides have been meeting since 9 o'clock this morning in the presence of mediator Carson and Bill Kelly, my Associate Deputy Minister.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the two sides to reach a negotiated agreement. But I can also assure the House and all Canadians that, if ever I have reasons to believe that these negotiations are likely to fail, I will be ready to act.

RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—EMPLOYMENT GUARANTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to put to the Minister. He says he is willing to act. Could he give us the assurance that if he must introduce a bill, that bill will not force railway workers to return to work without giving them the job security that is absolutely necessary in the circumstances?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that right now, parties are the masters of their own fate at the bargaining table, and I encourage them sincerely to come to a negotiated settlement.

TRADE

CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—U.S. OFFICIAL'S MEMORANDUM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I now have a U.S. Commerce Department memo from William Cavitt who is identified as co-ordinator of the U.S.-Canada free trade area negotiations, in which he says:

> —the negotiations are focusing on those programs which provide financial assistance to a specific firm or industry. The U.S. negotiators are asking the Canadians to end these subsidies at both the federal and the provincial levels.

Will the Prime Minister confirm this U.S. focus and will he admit that small businesses in sectors from Newfoundland to British Columbia would be severely damaged by this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the fact that apparently he has a memo from some United States functionary in regard to free trade talks and he asks for a comment. I would have thought that he would have wanted to comment on the report the Economic Council of Canada released this morning which indicates that a free trade agreement with the United States would produce 350,000 new jobs in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I would urge my hon. friend to look at the report which indicates a positive impact in just about every sector of our economy. Moreover, this very significantly produces large economic gains in a balanced way across the country.

We are trying to make sure that the tremendous growth we have experienced is shared more equally. We want to see Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick get the kinds of breaks that are now prevailing in southern Ontario and elsewhere in the country.

I know my hon. friend would want to join the Government of Canada and Ambassador Reisman as he pursues his initiatives in Cornwall this week in supporting the kinds of concepts endorsed by the Economic Council of Canada. He should perhaps pay a little less attention to information coming to him from American functionaries.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, in fact I have read the council's report, commented on it already, and identified it as hocus-pocus which has no basis in fact whatsoever because its assumptions are completely false.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put his question, please?

SERVICE INDUSTRIES

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a supplementary question with the Prime Minister by going back to Mr. Cavitt who, in this memo, indicates very clearly that services, especially in sectors like the insurance industry, are a key focus of concern, something which the Economic Council ignores.

• (1430)

Will the Prime Minister not concede that focusing on services will hurt women's employment especially because 83 per cent of their jobs are in the service sector?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was an article on August 1 by Linda Diebel of the Montreal Gazette which began as follows: "When Victor Fingerhut of the U.S. speaks, New Democrats listen."

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: "Mr. Fingerhut is a prominent Washington consultant and adviser." I urge the Hon. Member to stop celebrating everything coming from the U.S. and start believing in Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know Mr. Fingerhut but he sounds like a nice guy.

I just want to tell my hon. friend that before he dismisses a study by Judith Maxwell of the Economic Council of Canada he should look at the impact of free trade by 1995. It says that the GNP will be up as a result of a free trade agreement by 3.3 per cent. Inflation will be down by 5.7 per cent. Productivity will increase by seven-tenths of a per cent. Real wage rates will be up by 3 per cent. Disposable income will be up by 3.1 per cent. Income up by almost 7 per cent. Unemployment down by 1.3 per cent. That has to be good news, even for the New Democrats and Mr. Fingerhut.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member and the Right Hon. Prime Minister have read to each other enough Economic Council reports so we can get to a specific question and specific answer.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL REPORT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister now admit that the Economic Council report to which he referred as endorsed by the Council has not been approved by the Council, was not put before the Council's governing board, and therefore is not an official statement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —of the Council whatsoever?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it becomes official when Mr. Fingerhut approves it.

This is a very serious matter. Judith Maxwell is a very distinguished Canadian economist who heads the Economic Council of Canada, an organization which for some decades has been known for its impartiality and professionalism. It has produced a report which says the Economic Council of Canada has just completed new research indicating that free trade with the U.S. could create as many as 350,000 new jobs in Canada by 1995. Surely that should be good enough as at least a modest ray of optimism even for someone like the Hon. Member who persists in failing to realize that jobs depend upon the kind of arrangement we are seeking with the U.S.

TAX REFORM

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT PERSISTS IN FOOD TAX

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to my friend the Right Hon. Prime Minister. According to a Department of Finance survey, 71 per cent of Canadians oppose this Government's option to tax bread, milk, butter.

I have here, Mr. Speaker, on the initiative of the Official Opposition, petitions with 25,000 signatures that were collected in a very short period of time. They come from across Canada, and those people also oppose your option to tax bread, milk and butter. Over the weekend, the leader of the Quebec Conservative Caucus said it was stupid to uphold a decision to tax bread, milk and butter.

I have a very simple question for my Right Hon. friend the Prime Minister: Can he explain why he insists so obstinately on taxing food, when the majority of the people oppose that?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my hon. friend yesterday I specifically answered that question raised by one of his colleagues, the Hon. Member for Papineau. The answer has already been given.

But since he is now in this House today, he might perhaps tell us where he stands on the matter of non-elected Liberal Senators who are now in the process of denying Montrealers 1 300 jobs and $700 millions of investments.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Prime Minister's question, if he wants to solve the problem in the Senate, let him stop bragging across the land and table in this House a bill on an elected Senate, and I will support that.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT WILL NOT DENY POSSIBILITY OF TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): To get back to my question, now that the problem of the Senate is solved, the people, Canadian families are against its option.

Will the Prime Minister now have the courage to tell Canadians and Quebecers alike why he still intends to slap a tax on bread, milk and butter? Why not say right now—sooner or later he will backtrack as in the case of old age security pensions—that there can be no question of taxing bread, milk and butter?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, now there is an interesting and momentous statement on the part of the Hon. Member.

Yesterday I replied to the question of the Hon. Member for Papineau. The question, the suggestion was false yesterday, and it is still false today.

Still, important statement from the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie. He fails to respond to the claims of people in Quebec and Ontario with respect to the 1,300 jobs and he is asking me to introduce a bill to abolish the Senate.

Mr. Malépart: An elected Senate!

Mr. Mulroney: I have already proposed to the House, in March 1985 I believe, I have formally said so and I repeat today that if I had the support of the Leader of the Opposition, the Liberal leader, we would be in a position to proceed immediately with the abolition of the Senate. The NDP leader has endorsed my position, but the Liberal leader withheld his consent because he would rather keep the non-elected senators.

[English]

THE SENATE

ABOLITION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. On the weekend he indicated that in the discussions leading up to the Meech Lake Accord he had suggested to the Premiers that the Senate be abolished. The Premier of Ontario is reported to have said in response that: "He mentioned it as a throw-away comment, more or less out of the blue. Nobody took it particularly seriously."

In light of the comments he has just made, is he serious about abolishing the Senate? If so, can he explain to the House and the people of Canada if he intends to pursue this with the Premiers at the first opportunity?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in response to, I think, a question from the Leader of the NDP in February or March of 1985 in this House I said that if we could have the approval of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition we would proceed that very day or the very next day with regard to a resolution abolishing the Senate. As I recollect, the Leader of the Opposition declined to provide his consent at that time, I think for obvious reasons.

With regard to the First Ministers' Conference, the question of the Senate arose and, without any disparaging allusions to any of the good people who sit there, I put forward the view that I believed that at a conference like that we should consider the abolition of the Senate and/or its reconstitution in a more democratic manner. I put that out for consideration by the Premiers. At the time they thought that there was some value in it but that perhaps, because of its complexity, it ought to be referred to our first constitutional meeting.

If my hon. friend is speaking on behalf of his Party, and if the Leader of the Opposition will undertake today to meet so that we can arrange for a resolution to go before both Houses to provide for the abolition of the Senate, I can assure him that I will bring it in as quickly as I can.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTRODUCE ABOLITION MOTION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. He knows, as he has indicated, of the very clear support of our Party for abolishing the Senate. The Government brings in resolutions, motions, and Bills weekly. Would he demonstrate his leadership on this issue and bring a resolution to the House of Commons, at its earliest convenience, to begin the constitutional ball rolling which would eventually result in the abolition of the Senate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is as fervent as he says he is in his clear support for abolishing the Senate, why is he supporting the Senate in its frustration of the House of Commons on Bill C-22?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: You are the one who is supporting it.

Mr. Mulroney: I think Hansard will reflect that I put forward the matter for consideration by the House. In fairness, my hon. friend's Party responded quickly to that. My recollection is that the Leader of the Opposition was disinclined to follow through at that time. It may very well be that there will be a change of mind.

Since that time I have undertaken with the First Ministers a constitutional process which we believe will lead to a very informed and improved Senate. That was a year and a half after we first raised the matter in the House of Commons. The First Ministers agreed with that process. We are now engaged in it, and will follow through with the full support of my hon. friend.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER INTRODUCE MOTION TO PROVIDE FOR AN ELECTED SENATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a proposition for the Senate. I will direct a question to the Prime Minister. He knows that a resolution to abolish the Senate would not gain the consent of the provinces. He has already talked to them about that and they treated the question as a facetious one.

Two years ago the Prime Minister neglected an opportunity when he had his then Minister of Justice bring a resolution before the House which was debated only two hours, one hour by the then Minister of Justice and one hour by myself, during which time we put forward the proposition for an elected Senate.

The Prime Minister has made Senate reform through abolition, election, or changing the nominating process, virtually impossible through the unanimity clause in the Meech Lake Accord.

The Prime Minister does not need my consent or that of the NDP or anybody. He has a huge majority in the House of Commons. Would he accept my offer to bring in a resolution for an elected Senate which would give the regions of the country better representation in the Parliament of Canada? If he does that he will get our unanimous consent immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this gets more and more interesting.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)): More and more relevant.

Mr. Mulroney: I think that is a very interesting suggestion. Because of its seriousness it requires—

Mr. Fulton: Backpeddling pretty fast.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is clear that the Leader of the Opposition feels, as I do, that the Senate is being abusive of the House of Commons.

Mr. Ouellet: No, no.

Mr. Mulroney: I will be happy to respond to that. I can assure the hon. gentleman of my good faith and that of the Leader of the NDP. Perhaps as an indication of his good faith, his leadership, and his commitment to true Senate reform, he could instruct the non-elected Liberals in the Senate today to pass Bill C-22.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT MEECH LAKE ACCORD BE REOPENED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has an opportunity to introduce a motion at any time. I have suggested to him that abolition of the Senate will not gain the consent of the provinces.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Does MacEachen agree?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, the Liberal caucus is on record in favour of an elected Senate as is the Liberal Party. If the Prime Minister brings in a resolution to that effect and can assure us that he will reopen the Meech Lake Accord to make it possible—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another condition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Under that Accord the unanimous consent of the provinces is now necessary. If the Prime Minister can bring his provincial counterparts onside he will have our support 100 per cent here and 100 per cent in the other place in favour of an elected Senate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is an historic and significant announcement by the Leader of the Opposition. He says that he can deliver 100 per cent of those Liberal Senators. I think that is good news for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Your bluff has been called.

Mr. Mulroney: More seriously, I hope my right hon. friend will reconsider his suggestion, of which he seemed to speak approvingly, that this would necessarily involve the reopening of the Meech Lake Accord.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have unanimous consent.

Mr. Mulroney: That is a very disturbing comment by the Leader of the Opposition. He apparently looks forward to Thursday with some concern.

Mr. Nunziata: Quit being a jerk. You can't abolish the Senate without changing the Accord.

Mr. Mulroney: I think Canada has appreciated the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition, the Leader of the NDP, and the Leader of the P.C. Party with regard to the Meech Lake Accord.

In 1985 I proposed in this House, and was supported by the Leader of the NDP, the complete abolition of the Senate of Canada and was ready to bring in a resolution that day. I am still resolved to that. If my hon. friend will support the abolition of the Senate we will do that and attempt to persuade the Premiers that that having taken place we can reconstitute together an elected Senate which is much more representative of the people of Canada and much more democratic. However, that would require a substantial change in the position of the Leader of the Opposition.

SENATE REFORM—LIBERAL PARTY SUPPORT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is an interesting exchange. The Leader of the Government has suggested that he can bring unanimous provincial consent to bear on this issue, which provincial consent he needs under the Meech Lake Accord. He has also made it far less likely that we will get any meaningful Senate reform because he has transferred the appointment process to the provinces.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That's a falsehood. Why don't you tell the truth, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When he had an opportunity to advance a style of Senate reform in this House two years ago when the then Minister of Justice introduced it he did not proceed with it despite the co-operation of this side of the House to move toward an elected Senate. If he will give us some meaningful Senate reform and an elected Senate, he will have this Party 100 per cent behind him. He must bring the provinces onside as he now needs all the provinces onside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, with regard to Meech Lake we were able to bring all of the provinces onside representing the entire country and four different political Parties, three of which are in the House of Commons. I think that is a tribute to the maturity of all Members of the House and the leadership of all political Parties.

I think it is imprudent of the Leader of the Opposition to start suggesting amendments to the Meech Lake Accord. I think that runs counter to everything his Quebec Leader has said.

Mr. Nunziata: How can you abolish the Senate if you don't amend Meech Lake?

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will ask the Right Hon. Prime Minister to complete his answer and, while doing so, I would ask all other Hon. Members to listen to the answer and extend the usual courtesy.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I think the record will show that in 1985 I proposed the abolition of the Senate. Inasmuch as the Leader of the Liberal Party did not respond, we then proceeded further to the Edmonton declaration last summer to begin the Meech Lake process, which resulted in a new constitutional accord which has been endorsed by the Leader of the Liberal Party, the Leader of the Opposition. That process, in itself, carries with it a provision for constitutional meetings, including the item of Senate reform.

Inasmuch as the Leader of the Liberal Party failed in 1985 to give us the approval, I was then, as Prime Minister, obliged to bring this matter forward to the constitutional conference of the Premiers. It is now on the agenda.

I have publicly committed, here in the House and elsewhere, to bring forward a comprehensive project for Senate reform—

Mr. Lapierre: Bring it.

Mr. Mulroney: —including the election of Senators. Meanwhile, because it speaks to the notion of democracy and our desire for more democracy in the other House, I think my right hon. friend could provide leadership to the country in regard to his perception of a democratic Senate by instructing the non-elected Liberal Senators to respond to the will of the elected Members of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—COMPLIANCE WITH CHARTER OF RIGHTS AND FREEDOMS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. As the Minister knows, several reputable Canadian legal authorities have warned that Bill C-84 most likely offends against the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms by infringing both on the rights of refugee claimants in Canada and on the rights of Canadians who help them.

Therefore, has he or his senior Minister obtained a Justice Department report stating that Bill C-84 does comply with the Charter and, if so, will he table it in the House? If not, why not?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this kind of myth has been perpetrated by the Hon. Member, that somehow this Bill offends the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms of Canada. That contention is false. The fact is that we have been working in the Department of Justice with my colleagues in Employment and Immigration to make sure that this complies, each provision of the Bill complies with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Due process is involved in this particular legislation and provides for government under the rule of law and under our Charter. I wish the Hon. Member would not mislead the country by posing the question over and over again.

REQUEST FOR REFERRAL TO SUPREME COURT

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, if everything is as right and shipshape as the Hon. Minister has just stated, then in view of the widespread doubts by constitutional authorities across the country, will the Minister refer this Bill to the Supreme Court immediately for an advisory opinion as to whether it is constitutional?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we have a House of Commons in which people are entitled to put forward their points of view. This is the place where policy decisions should take place. We should not try to transfer our responsibilities to the courts. A vast majority of Canadians want a fair and effective immigration policy. Why does the NDP stand in the way of the majority of Canadians in this particular area?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. This morning the Minister of State for Immigration stubbornly and arrogantly refused to amend proposed Section 95(1) and Section 95(2) which would make a priest or any other Canadian genuinely helping refugees liable to huge fines and/or imprisonment. Given that the churches and organizations do not encourage or condone refugee abuse, why did the Government place under the letter of the law a priest or nun offering humanitarian assistance in the very same category as the sleazy smugglers and consultants? Will the Prime Minister, for the sake of Canadian sense of justice—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Marchi: —make an eleventh hour intervention to distinguish legally between the abusers who should be punished by the law and the thousands of Canadians who legitimately aid refugees and should not be treated like potential criminals?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, for the last ten years it was not an offence to counsel or transport people to our border points. It was an offence to evade the legitimate border controls.

Nobody is above the law. The law must be respected by all. We will stop abuse. We will stop profiteering, stop racketeering, and we will finally have a process that is fair and just and gives an open determination to everybody in need of protection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-84 is Rambo-style legislation which makes Ronald Reagan look progressive.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: In view of the hour, I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question directly.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): It is before the committee.

Mr. Marchi: Take it easy, Joe, you are before a lot of things.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am ahead of you.

Mr. Marchi: I want to ask the Minister—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order.

Mr. Ouellet: You are not the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question clearly and briefly.

Mr. Marchi: My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Given that constitutional experts have predicted innumerable court challenges, why does the Minister refuse to tender and make public the Department's legal opinion on the constitutionality, as has been done with previous legislation? Rather than trying to drag the piece of legislation to a slow and agonizing death in the court system, why does he not refer a judicial review to the Supreme Court of Canada immediately so that this House and Canadians can afford themselves of a proper constitutional response, rather than having—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Marchi: —this piece of legislation become tied up in six months time?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I like to receive the benefit of advice from people, but not from somebody who has recommended, as a matter of public policy on behalf of the Liberal Party of Canada, that we create detention camps for refugees and immigrants coming to this country.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This Bill is in accordance with the provisions of the Charter of Rights and all the safeguards incumbent in that Charter. If the Liberal Party wants to fly in the face of overwhelming public opinion to have an effective immigration and refugee system for the benefit of refugees and immigrants in this country, then it better lie on his shoulders.

RIGHT OF ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs or to the future Minister of Health.

Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry are worried about their future and that of their industry. Does the Minister recognize the fact that these representatives have democratic rights?

[English]

Can he assure the people of this industry and all Canadians that the Government will make all efforts to provide some $600 million in investment in the Montreal area and to create some 1,300 jobs to which the New Democratic Party and the Liberals are opposed?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time in my 15 years around here when there have been picket signs in support of the Government and opposed to the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: They should be there. Because of the undemocratic actions in the other place and the shameful support of those actions by the New Democratic Party and Liberal Party, there is a possibility that this Bill could be killed, putting in jeopardy their jobs and the future of high tech research and development in this important area in Canada.

I hope many more thousands of Canadians come out and tell the NDP and Liberals that they should stop jeopardizing Canada's future in this way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Some time ago the Minister promised genuine consultation before the closure of any rural post offices. A new pattern of consultation is emerging now. A good example is in Wilno, Ontario. In Wilno, the post office meets with families individually rather than in public meetings. There, a response is demanded in two weeks rather than in the 90 days required. There, the keeping open of the existing post office is not an option. There, members of communities are not allowed to opt for the continued operation of their existing post office.

• (1500)

Would the Minister characterize this type of approach to consultation as intimidation and economic blackmail, as people in rural Canada are calling it? If not, what does he call it?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, of one thing I am sure. It is that the Hon. Member's description of what is happening is totally false.

As indicated, the country is changing. Demographics are changing. We are becoming more urbanized. There is a need to get with it and to recognize that we are nearing the end of the 20th century. We have to make alterations to the way the mail is delivered in order that we can continue to deliver the mail, improve service and keep the price of stamps down.

There is a commitment that there will be at least 90 days' discussion with the people and MPs affected before any changes are made. There have been some slip-ups in one or two cases. I have instructed the Post Office, and it has already taken action, to delay, to ensure that there is that full 90 days of discussion. But it is up to the management of the Post Office to manage and to do it effectively and sensitively. I have every confidence it will continue to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has referred to what I said as being entirely false, but that is exactly what he did in the community of Wilno in Ontario.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF OFFER MADE TO NEW POSTMASTER

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg—North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister is this: When the Post Office offers the new Postmaster one-fifth of the revenue for the same work as before, does the Minister think this is a genuine offer or an offer that is doomed to fail?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Post Office has a mandate from this House, approved by the New Democratic Party when the Crown corporation was created, to operate in a fiscally responsible way and to operate as efficiently, as effectively, and as productively as possible.

The Hon. Member seems to be suggesting that the Post Office should continue to pay way higher than market prices, higher than necessary, and continue to deploy services that are no longer required because of changes in demography. Apparently, any change to the New Democratic Party represents a frightening prospect which it wants to avoid at all costs.

Mr. Keeper: It is an attack on rural Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will have noted that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition asked three questions in the second round. In view of the hour that leaves one question for the Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, that is a logical conclusion.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PAYMENT OF MATERNITY BENEFITS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour.

As he is aware, for some time now I have been concerned about the fact that women on maternity leave and people on child care leave who are entitled to paid benefits by their employers are not receiving those benefits. We have asked for remedial legislation. I would like the Minister to affirm to the House that that will happen, and happen soon.

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated to my hon. colleague, as a matter of fact by letter dated July 30 if my memory serves me right, that is one option being looked at. It is being studied, and I will be consulting with the Hon. Member very soon to look at the consequences that such a change might bring.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3,

4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of section 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Prime Minister is still here. Before speaking about Bill C-22, I would like to challenge him to solve a problem. Bill C-22 is not a problem caused by the Senators. If the Prime Minister has the courage of his convictions, since he has said that he has no need for the support of the Opposition with his majority, let him table his Bill in this House and we shall debate it.

As for Bill C-22, it is not a matter of having a debate between the House of Commons and the Senate. What is sad in this whole debate, Mr. Speaker, is that if we look at today's demonstration—I have nothing against the demonstration; I went to meet those people—we find that they are all employees of the industry, and it is no surprise to learn that they were given a day off and sent on a luxury bus to Parliament Hill. I am not blaming those people for having accepted to make this trip to save their jobs.

The next thing we shall hear in this fight about patent protection, is that, next week, the generic companies will put up some money, close up shop and give a day off to their employees so that they can come here in luxury buses and demonstrate on the Hill.

In fact, this is a job war between two types of companies, the multinationals and the others, and if the latter had the opportunity to become multinationals, they would behave just like the first. However, what we have to remember as Parliamentarians and representatives of the Canadian people, is what the consequences will be for Canadian men and women.

In this case, we are talking about the health of individuals. Everyone in Canada supports research, not only scientific research, but all kinds of research. If we want to promote research, instead of financing the Western banks when they go bankrupt, instead of giving money to the rich, we should put back some money in university research, create jobs and innovate to cure the sick and give them back their health.

However, the Conservative Government says: No, here is what we are going to do, the multinationals have asked for a ten year protection, and we are going to give in to blackmail and do as they wish. We, Liberals, refuse to do so. This is not how we operate. Such a simple concept as saying that it would be better to increase taxes on everything to create jobs, something as stupid as saying . . . A PC Member may rise and say: Well, since jobs are being lost in the funeral home industry, we are going to encourage euthanasia to create jobs. Come on! As if this was a principle upon which we could play with people's health, Mr. Speaker.

Instead of stubbornly maintaining its position or organizing a demonstration . . . I referred to the representatives of multinationals. These people know what bargaining is all about. They should say: What is this all about? Now, there is no protection. While I am talking, the people of the Conservative Opposition could protect jobs, they want us to cry out . . . When you abolished the quotas to protect jobs in the footwear industry, was it because they were not university people? Are you going to protect these jobs because they are university people? They are certainly well paid. But when you were asked to protect the jobs of the men and women working in the Quebec footwear and textile industries, either in the Eastern Townships or in some Ontario regions represented by Conservative Members, you said: No way. We are negotiating free trade with the Americans.

But now, there are big American guys with pockets full of dollars who say that you have to protect the brains. But whose brains? This depends on the years you have spent in school.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we, as Members of the Liberal Party, have a position. It is my friend the Hon. Member for Saint-Michel who was the first to open the debate on this issue. Also, the previous Liberal Government had requested an independent inquiry by specialists who claimed that, to protect research, security, create jobs and prevent undue increases in the prices of medicine, a four-year protection was enough. All additional years on top of the first four were what is called "gravy", additional money in the pockets of multinationals.

I am not here to blame multinationals, for the heads of such corporations are sincere. They say: Claude, I have that much money to invest. But we remember that not so long ago, some oil multinationals in Western Canada told this Conservative Government: If you change the energy policy, we are going to invest so much money. Everybody was honest and sincere at the time. Then suddenly the oil crisis occurred and they said: Sorry, I just cannot.

Right now there is nothing in the legislation as put forward by this Tory Government that guarantees jobs to Montrealers, of which I am one. And I know very well the new jobs that will be created will not necessarily be for people in my constituency of Sainte-Marie. But I am here to defend the interests of the people in Sainte-Marie, and if I bow to the multinational corporations blackmail, or on the other hand if I yield too much to generic companies, I will not protect consumers in my constituency of Montreal—Sainte-Marie and elsewhere in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister who was supposed to be a top-notch mediator could have taken this opportunity to prove his talent, because since the beginning, almost three years now, it has been failure and catastrophe. Mediator my foot, the outcome was nil. But it is my feeling and my deep conviction that in order to protect the interests of consumers, which comes first, and when we refer to consumers we are referring to people who buy, not candies but drugs because they have some ailment. This is a matter of survival. I know this is not a great concern of Conservative Members, because they even slapped a 12 per cent tax on drugs, even on syringes used by people with diabetes in order to survive.

Certainly we must have compassion. It is of vital importance to ensure that those people can afford to buy drugs. Some will suggest this is a matter for provincial governments. But who pays for Provincial Governments, who pays for employer-employee health insurance? The middle income taxpayer always gets clobbered. Three million Canadians are not protected by any form of insurance. Today, I beg the Prime Minister to sit down with the multinationals and say: Just one minute! You had your way with me once when I was President of Iron Ore. You had me close down the place and tip-toe out of the picture, but this time I won't be had.

In the bill—you're asking for 10 years; at present you have nothing, so let's opt for a middle course. Let's make a deal, let's negotiate. We'll go for five years in the bill. And five years down the road we will review the impact on consumers, the impact in terms of profitability and job creation. At that time and given that experience, we will be in a position to reconsider our decision and either renew for another five years, increase the protection to seven years or decrease it to three years. It seems logical to me and probably to managers of corporations and I even invite my friend Robert Bourassa, from Quebec. I know for a fact that Ti-Louis Laberge does not sleep around with the multinationals just to generate employment, and neither do Mr. Larose and Jean Doré, the Mayor of Montreal. I know these people well enough to know that they want to protect employment, yes, but not if it means choking to death those who suffer from illness in Quebec. That is how I feel and I invite the Conservative Members, who are quick to jump on the bandwagon as we remember from the old age security de-indexation saga. These fellows had really found their way to the heart of all senior citizens. I recall that the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand) had said at the time that the Government was not bound by its promises. Not telling the truth to just about anybody was of no great consequence. But today, 79 percent of the population does not trust that Prime Minister any more.

There is something else I want to say. The Senate has a role to play in that matter. There is no doubt in my mind right now that the Senate accomplished a part of the job they are assigned under the Constitution. The Conservative Government is the one to blame. The Prime Minister has been making statements in every part of the country. He has bragged in Alberta, he has bragged in Quebec: "We will abolish the Senate, we will do such and such a thing to the Senate." Back here, he behaves like a lamb and does nothing. One day, he talks of abolishing the Senate. But what are we to make of a Prime Minister who says the Senate is an undemocratic institution? His chief negotiator on constitutional affairs is a senator. Because nobody was brilliant and competent enough in the Conservative caucus for that job, the Prime Minister had to seek somebody from an undemocratic body. When one does not believe in an institution, one does not appoint to it friends such as Bazin and others connected with the whole Oerlikon affair. How can we explain this and how can the people trust a Prime Minister who does not speak clearly and frankly? That is why I invite those Members over there who are reasonable to bring the Prime Minister to his senses.

I think a large majority of Quebecers are for it. I do not want to be dishonest, to play the same game as the Prime Minister and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and try to make believe all Quebecers are in favour.

I could give you a whole list of people and organizations on record as being squarely and totally against Bill C-22, like the NDP. I do not share that view. I can take my responsabilities.

However, you cannot, as the Conservatives claim, make people believe that all associations of senior citizens or consumers are for that Bill. It is not so. If Hon. Members do not lie, they are poorly informed. There are people who totally disagree. But the vast majority—I was at the Economic Summit in Montreal, but neither the Hon. Member for Beauce (M. Bernier) nor the Hon. Members from Alberta were there. At this Summit were members of municipal governments, union representatives, senior citizens that I know very well, and officials of the provincial government. In principle, people for Metropolitan Montreal, and I support them, are for job creation, for protection of job creation.

But job creation in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, is called Space Agency. We do not necessarily want jobs immediately if it means higher prices for those who are sick. There are other actions that the Government should have taken to create jobs in the Montreal area. The situation has been going on for three years: Montreal East is in ruins, the shipyards are desperate. The Government wakes up suddenly. As a Montrealer, I cannot accept it for the good of the whole population of Montréal—Sainte-Marie, I cannot support the Conservative Party and allow that 10 year protection.

All the experts have clearly shown that a five-year protection for patents is more than enough for the companies to recover their investment. Second, in spite of all that has been said and with the best will in the world, and I believe that these people do want to invest, there is no guarantee that they will. We all remember the promises made by the Conservatives. Who can still believe the Prime Minister?

We all recall the de-indexation of old age security pensions. The Prime Minister had sworn that he would re-establish full indexation of old age security pensions, and he did the exact opposite. The same happened for family allowances. A report of this Government stated that the changes to the family support programs such as family allowances and the child tax credit would not be used to reduce the deficit. It was written in black and white. We had the word of the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Once more, we were misled. The Minister of Finance took nearly $2 billion from the family support programs to reduce the deficit. Then, there was the case of the banks which went bankrupt.

Even more recently, the Government has talked about imposing a tax on food, that is on bread, milk and butter. As I said earlier, according to the polls, 71 per cent of Canadians are against this idea. Within a very short time this summer, 25,000 people throughout Quebec and Canada signed a petition asking the Government to abandon this idea. Even the members of the Conservative caucus, not because they believe in this, but because they know that the public has put pressure on them to do so, have asked the Prime Minister to give up this idea.

Once again, we see the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) dragging his feet, unable to state clearly his options and unwilling once more to take action. But I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the national petition and awareness campaign is not over yet as far as we are concerned. If the Prime Minister had clearly stated today his opposition, we would have ended that campaign but now, we are going to keep it up throughout Canada.

And as I travel all across the main regions of Montreal to speak about patent and job protection, I can see that it is not the people who are complaining and are asking for that protection. Of course and it is quite understandable that those company owners should ask for that protection. What I dislike in this debate is the fact that—and it is normal in the case of competitors of that company that they too should ask for a lesser protection—one of them is trying to hoodwink us but I was not born yesterday and I know that for those people, money is the bottom line—and it goes for both sides, and the only thing they are interested in.

But for us, as parliamentarians, our role is not to make a choice between those companies. I agree that with their free market philosophy this is how the Conservatives would put it. I would like the Conservative members who will later comment and ask questions to tell us why in the regions of Quebec, Beauce, the Eastern Townships or the South shore, they did not fight to maintain jobs and the protected quotas in the shoe industry? Why didn't they fight for and protect the interests of their constituents who were asking for it? Why are the Conservatives crawling before the multinational drug companies and giving them that ten year protection?

We know perfectly well that drug prices will go up because the Government would not otherwise pay back several million dollars to provincial governments. In fact, where there is a provincial drug plan the provincial or the federal Government will have to raise taxes and taxpayers will end up footing the bill anyway.

Mr. Speaker, I did not hear many Conservative Members from the Montreal area—in fact those who still behave themselves have kept pretty quiet and the rest are involved in scandals. I wonder how many of them have not yet been dragged in some shaddy deal?

I would like the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) to tell me, for instance, how many senior citizens in his area feel that as in the case of the proposal to de-index old age security pensions, government members wanted to make us believe that senior citizens were for it. But when the Prime Minister backed down, everybody admitted to be against it . Well, I am suspicious of anyone who on two or three occasions has already, unintentionally, perhaps because of poor judgment, misled the Canadian people. Following public meetings and demonstrations, finally, the Government had to recognize that the Official Opposition was right.

Next week, on September 4, this Government will celebrate its third anniversary. I realize that those three years have been passing too fast for those in power. I also realize that those three years have been disastrous. But they have been particularly bad for the people.

If the university report is any indication, low and middle income families are the people who have been despicably attacked and deprived of a sizable portion of their purchasing power. This Bill as it is now drafted, Mr. Speaker, would strike another hard blow at these people, again the elderly and middle income families.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that when the provincial Government of Quebec pays for drugs, most of the time the list of drugs covered includes only generic products. This is something the Conservative Members should keep in mind.

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) poses as the champion of the poor, yet now that we want to promote a sector of activities where wages are high, where we seek to push them higher still, the Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie keeps saying that we are working against poor people. Mr. Speaker, Mr. Bourassa, the Premier of Quebec and Quebec's Opposition Party voted a unanimous resolution in Quebec's National Assembly on Bill C-22. The Hon. Member said earlier that Mr. Bourassa was his friend. That may be true, but the feeling may not be mutual.

Mr. Speaker, I just don't understand those Liberal and NDP Members who are trying to defend the poor and at the same time prevent jobs from being created. I don't know what they can be thinking of. Maybe they think jobs and money grow on trees. As far as I know, jobs and money come from the private sector. They keep telling us we are helping the multinationals. That is not true. We are helping people, men and women, to find jobs in areas where they can earn a decent salary, a very decent salary, instead of trying to find jobs for the poor. I think Canada is a country where there is more to do than just draw water and tighten screws on the assembly line. Canada also has an educated labour force that is capable of doing research and development. That is what we are trying to promote, and that is how this country is going to get rid of part of the poverty that exists today. We have to look at the fundamentals instead of just skimming the surface and trying to use the poor as a way to criticize the Government. We want to raise the standard of living of everyone in this country.

The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie is not addressing these fundamental issues honestly. He refuses to acknowledge that we as a Government are acting in good faith by promoting well-paying jobs. Just because we want to help people in Canada get better salaries, that does not mean we are playing favourites with the private sector and the multinationals. I think it is better to have research done in Canada than in the United States or Europe.

Well, in the area of medicinal drugs, the competition is international. If we want to maintain our competitive position and create jobs in this country, we must carry out research here. We should not abandon all this research to other nations. That is what the Liberal Party did some ten years ago. It allowed all investors, inventors and researchers to move to the United States or elsewhere. As the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) reminded us this morning, when the Liberals adopted this legislation about ten years ago, they completely cleaned out the buildings in Montreal West, buildings which have remained completely empty ever since. It is entirely unacceptable. And this mistake, of course, the Liberals today are unwilling to accept it, and they do not want to admit to the Canadian people that they did make mistakes.

Well, they are now caught at their own game. Of course, we are defending ourselves on this level. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, it is the Liberal Party, with its majority in the Senate, which is paralyzing the democratic system. And all this issue of the Senate interfering with the discussion is nevertheless an excellent example of what is happening today and demonstrates to Canadians that our democratic system is somewhat outdated.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I thank you very much and I ask the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie to be honest and to explain to the Canadian and Quebec people why he is so anxious to keep only small jobs in Quebec. He should be proud to say that at last in Quebec our people are going to get involved in advanced technology and earn reasonable salaries, thereby making it possible for the Quebec economy to function better.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, I am greatful to the Hon. Member for Longueuil for his comments. They give me an opportunity to reply. I know that we have remarkable brains and competent people in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

However, I should like the Hon. Member for Longueuil (Mr. Leblanc) to tell me why he supported his Minister when he cut funds allocated to research, not only medical research but also applied research, high technology and robotics. Why is the member, who knows that we have trained young people who are capable of leading research projects, why is the Hon. Member for Longueuil encouraging the Tory Government, the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Côté) to cut funds allocated to research?

Secondly, I should point out to the member for Longueuil that we agree on minimum protection. He was misleading the Canadian people, because he is uninformed, when he said that the Quebec Legislative Assembly has supported Bill C-22. The Legislative Assembly supported a principle which is the protection of patents and not Bill C-22 as such but some kind of protection against the brain drain at the level of research and we agree on that issue. However we disagree when the government—and I wonder if the Hon. Member can tell me what are the reasons—wants to crawl and grant a 10-year protection.

If we granted five years, companies would do some research introduce new products and after five years it would be reviewed. Those people would have the same benefits but it would be a wiser decision than if we stupidly sell ourselves short and grant a 10-year protection.

I conclude on the answer to his other question dealing with democracy and the Senate. Could the Hon. Member for Longueuil tell me, since he does not believe in the Senate, why he supported his leader when the latter appointed Mr. Bazin to the Senate? Since he was elected, that prime minister appointed seven or eight senators. When you do not believe in something—why did he waste taxpayers' money? Those people earn some $45,000—the seat, the secretaries. If I do not believe in an agency, I will not appoint someone there because what is involved is Canadian taxpayers'money—all that for pork-barrelling.

Second, again for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Longueuil, why—and I conclude on this, Mr. Speaker, why did his Prime Minister appoint a Senator as Minister? Is it because no one else is competent enough? But when you do not believe in an agency, when you do not believe in the people who are there—sorry, one does not appoint them to that kind of function.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are two minutes left to the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland).

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, as the saying goes, often one had better be deaf rather than hear what the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie (M. Malépart) just said. I wonder if his constituents will be very happy to hear what he just suggested. The Hon. Member referred earlier to the Space Agency, which involves some 40 jobs, while we are talking of some 10,000 jobs in the Montreal area, many of which would be for young people whose parents laboured on small wages so that they could get degrees, so that they could have a better life. Here is what the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie in effect just said to his own constituents: Look, it made no sense labouring all your lives. Send your children to the United States. This is what the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte Marie just said, Mr. Speaker.

It is unacceptable that a Member claiming to represent a poor constituency, a constituency of workers, people who led hard lives, tell his constituents their children should live the same kind of life. Certainly people in Montreal—Sainte-Marie will not be pleased to hear that their Member of Parliament does not defend their young people, those 10,000 jobs in Montreal. That is unacceptable from a Montrealer, a Francophone, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, this is really sad; and I sympathize with the people in Portneuf who are aching to elect someone who deserves to represent them.

What happened when his government closed down the Gulf refinery in the east end of Montreal, when his Government tried to close down Vickers, Canadian Steel Wheels and all that? The Member for Sainte-Marie, acting with and on behalf of his constituents, fought hard to protect those jobs. But for the Hon. Member, It is not quite the same: he thinks that jobs can be created at the expense of sick people. Why does the Hon. Member nod when his Minister slashes funds allocated to universities where young people could do research and earn good money? The Conservative Government simply washes its hands and is attempting to have the sick pay for employment creation. This is not only unacceptable, it is inhuman.

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate this afternoon because today is the day on which, for the first time in very many years and, according to one expert who has been here that long, for the first time in over 15 years, there has been a demonstration by Canadians as positive, constructive and democratic as the one we see held in front of the House of Commons today.

Mr. Lapierre: And paid for by the multinationals.

Mr. Layton: I want to congratulate the men and women who have taken the time to come to Ottawa, the five or six hours by bus from Toronto or the two or three hours from Montreal, to demonstrate before this institution that they have rights as well and that—

Mr. Rossi: And so did the elderly people when they came around.

Mr. Layton: The activity of our Senate is totally unacceptable. The people are telling us to quit stalling and pass Bill C-22.

It is a pleasure and an obligation to participate in debate on Bill C-22, the Patent Act legislation. My riding of Lachine in the Montreal region is home to 42 per cent of the Canadian pharmaceutical industry. In fact, 48 per cent of all pharmaceutical research and development is done in the Montreal area. I would love to take my colleagues on a tour of some of the very fine facilities which have been built and established in the west end of Montreal.

Over the years, the international community has seen Canada as a place where it is good to do business. It is ready to do business here but today it sees that any research and development work done by our scientists in our laboratories will be discarded. It is no wonder that the best of our graduate students will look for employment elsewhere.

Montreal depends on this industry and its growth. Driving down Highway 2-20 or the Trans-Canada Highway, one cannot help but appreciate the presence of the pharmaceutical industry, such good corporate citizens as Nordic Labs, Merck Frosst, Sandoz, Ciba-Geigy, Burroughs Wellcome, Beecham Labs, Pharmacia, Rhone-Poulenc, Ayerst McKenna and others. These companies have collectively pledged to invest nearly $600 million in capital and research if Bill C-22 passes. This is an immense investment in my riding.

Mr. Lapierre: Put it in the Bill, put it in the Bill.

Mr. Layton: These companies are not—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would hope that the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) who has been here for a long time would at least give the Hon. Member the courtesy of listening to his speech. There will be questions and comments afterwards and I will be glad to recognize him at that time.

Mr. Layton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. These companies are not all U.S. multinationals as claimed, they are from Switzerland, Great Britain, Germany and France. They are international companies that have invested here in Canada. All these companies are saying that Canada should come up to speed with respect to its patent protection legislation, to provide the kind of protection for intellectual property which is the standard in the western world. However, we are not proposing this legislation for them. Bill C-22 when passed will be for Canada and for all Canadians.

Health care in Canada will be improved. Three thousand high-tech jobs will be created over the next 10 years if this Bill passes. Research and development that has never been done in Canada will now be done here. The brain drain of our young generations will end. New patent protection for inventors will cause more innovation throughout Canada.

As I met with and spoke with many of my fellow Canadians in front of the House of Commons at noon today, I heard comments like the following: "Save my job", "Copycats cost jobs", "What about the health of Canadians?" "Why must I go south to pursue a career in the pharmaceutical industry?" "R and D will save our brains", "R and D will save our lives". One lady was going through the crowd singing a poem that had been written. It went:

"On top of the Hill, an old senator stands. He should stop being foolish, and say after me: Save our jobs, Mr. Turner."

• (1540)

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Sing it!

Mr. Layton: I do not remember the tune, fellows, sorry.

These statements come from real people, seniors, people with families, young students looking to the future. With its provisions for price controls and assurances of investment in new facilities and equipment for R and D, how can anyone claim this Bill is not good for them? We owe it to future generations to provide them with a high-tech environment for research and development in this field so they can remain in Canada and pursue their future goals.

How can we allow a non-elected politically appointed body to block a Bill passed by this duly elected House of Commons? It is vital to development of the industry. The Senate is in effect choking drug investment in Canada. Some 1,300 new jobs are projected for Montreal alone. These are the most challenging and rewarding kind of jobs, the kind of jobs Montreal and Quebec desperately need.

In a report prepared by the consultative committee on the development of the Montreal region, Chairman Laurent Picard, who was our guest at the constitutional committee this morning and spoke about the importance of the Meech Lake Accord, said that the development of the biotechnological and pharmaceutical sectors was most important for the future of Montreal. I ask the opposition Parties and the Liberal Senators from Quebec, how can they stand in the way of this legislation which is so critically important to Montreal? They will have to answer to the people of our region, indeed Canadians from all regions where research and development is being done and where many jobs and opportunities are at stake.

One of the most important, if not the most important, reasons that our Government, led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), want this legislation passed is to improve health care benefits for Canadians. Consumers are not going to suffer because of this legislation. On the contrary, they will benefit. This is especially true with respect to improved health care. This Government is deeply committed to maintaining a system that gives Canadians access to the medical care they need. Nothing in the original Bill opposes that sacred principle. In fact, it encourages the type of research that will lead to discoveries of drug therapies for diseases that are still a major cause of death today. Bill C-22 will speed development of new therapies. It will improve the quality of our health care system and reduce hospital care.

The Senate committee's proposals will result in a much smaller increase in R and D. The Senate proposed royalty pool would not bring Canadian expenditures up to world levels. Moreover, money from the so-called royalty fund would go primarily to the largest companies as opposed to hospitals, universities and small biotechnology firms. That would mean far less clinical research in Canada and fewer occasions for health care professionals to learn about and work with the new medicines, and consequently less opportunity for Canadians to benefit.

Canada has a real opportunity in Bill C-22 to participate in the exciting discoveries being made in many areas but only if the Senate proposals are rejected. All Canadians will benefit. The sick will benefit from improvements in therapy and the healthy will benefit from the reduction in health care expenditures which are often the result of pharmaceutical improvements.

A recent poll shows that 82 per cent of Canadians support the pharmaceutical Bill. Close to 3,000 energetic Canadians are with us today on Parliament Hill demonstrating that support. Yesterday the Canadian Medical Association gave its overwhelming support for the Bill. The Canadian Kidney, Diabetes and Cardiovascular Associations all support the Bill. The Montreal Board of Trade and Chamber of Commerce support the Bill. Why is it only the Senate and the Opposition, trying to gain political points at the expense of Canadians and future jobs, who do not want this Bill?

Let us adopt a new system, one that protects consumers by regulating prices of all drugs as well as protecting existing jobs and creating new ones. That is what Bill C-22 does. The drug prices review board will use the Consumer Price Index as part of the law in establishing allowable drug prices. Use of this indicator would have saved Canadian consumers between $50 million and $200 million in 1983 alone, not only on generic drugs but also on drugs for which there are no generic equivalents. The board will monitor prices of all patented drugs, not just the price of drugs subject to generic competition which represent only 20 per cent of the drug market. As a result, under the new law more drugs will be monitored to ensure fair prices.

Our Government will review the new policy after four years and Parliament will conduct an in-depth study and review in the tenth year. In addition, the drug prices review board will submit annual reports to Parliament on the progress of this policy.

It should be noted that over 85 per cent of all Canadians and almost 100 per cent of senior citizens are covered by private and public health care plans which pay for most, if not all, of the cost of their prescription drugs. My riding of Lachine is made up of many senior groups and youth groups. This Bill will help both of them with better health care and benefits for the sick and a chance for Canadian technologists to have a high-tech Canadian job in years to come.

As a representative of the Montreal region, I cannot allow any further delay of this Bill. Economic development and actual lives may be at stake. I strongly urge all of us in this place and in the Senate to co-operate fully and endorse a Bill vital to Montreal and all Canadians. Let us not make lost jobs a bitter pill to swallow. Let us pass C-22 without further delay.

As a final note, and this comes from the experience of meeting the people who take the time to come up to express themselves on Parliament Hill, Canadians have a right to be proud of their pharmaceutical industry and the people who work in it. Those who visit the centres where our pharmaceutical products are prepared and packaged note the care and concern for the cleanliness and perfection of their processing. They are a key part of our national health care system and as good as there are anywhere in the world. Our pharmaceutical industry has made a wonderful and remarkable contribution to all Canadians, but particularly to our senior citizens who quite naturally depend more and more on the system and its life-supporting products. Let us pass Bill C-22.

[Translation]

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon Member for his speech and tell him at the same time that I am very disappointed to see how easily he has bought the arguments put forward by foreign multinationals.

The Hon. Member throws around figures about thousands of jobs; he is talking about 3,000 jobs, his colleague the Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) about 10,000 jobs and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about 1,300 jobs. You know, Mr. Speaker, I think Conservative Members are all mixed up in their figures. They are mixed up because they have no strong commitment from any pharmaceutical company.

I invite the Hon. Member, instead of attacking the Senate who is really warning the Government about the imminence of a fatal mistake for the Canadian population, to learn rather from the wisdom of the Senate and negotiate more firmly with the foreign multinationals.

I think the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) went overboard in his comments on our drug industry, because 95 per cent of drug patents granted in Canada are foreign patents. They say they are not passing this legislation to please the Americans, Mr. Speaker, but you know as well as I do that this legislation was specially requested by the President of the United States, that the bill is a form of blackmail in the free trade talks, that the Americans made it a condition and that the Government is bending over backward to oblige them.

Mr. Speaker, if this legislation has so many good points, then I don't see why the Government does not put its agreements with the multinationals directly in the legislation. Why doesn't the Government make . . . You know, these things are negotiated. With the protection the Government is going to give the foreign multinationals, they will be able to make exorbitant profits. The companies claim they will reinvest those profits in Canada, but this Government is too weak-kneed to demand specific commitments.

I wish more companies would locate in the riding of Lachine or elsewhere. However, if I were the Member for Lachine, and we know the location is well suited to this kind of industry, I would demand that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs produce something in writing, not just pretty speeches. That is why this legislation is inadequate and incomplete, and I would ask the Hon. Member for Lachine why he does not demand firm commitments. He would be able to go back to his riding and tell his constituents: Sure, drugs will be more expensive but we will have economic spin-offs A, B, C, and D. Today, he is merely echoing the demands of the multinationals, without really knowing what he is talking about and what it means for his riding.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Shefford asked about investment guarantees. There are, I admit, plans and projects that are ready to be implemented. We don't need guarantees because there is a procedure for regulating projects as well as prices. A kind of control.

We have the assurance that the industry is ready to act. We have a Bill before the House, and we must give them the right to invest. As an engineer, I realize a vacuum was created in recent years, and nature detests vacuums. There will certainly be investment, and some of it is guaranteed.

[English]

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question and make a comment. The Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) said that we should put in the legislation the commitments of the drug companies. Can he tell us one piece of legislation which has ever been passed in this House which contained that sort of thing? I do not think he can. I have been here a lot of years and have never seen that happen.

Furthermore, the Member knows that the pharmaceutical companies have to make an annual report to the House and that there is a four-year review by Cabinet and a ten-year review by Parliament. I am quite happy with the commitment made to us by the pharmaceutical industry.

In addition, the Member for Shefford said that 95 per cent of the patents issued in Canada go to people outside of Canada. That is the very reason for this legislation. We want this legislation so that more patents can be issued in Canada. I do not know of one generic drug company that spends five cents on research and development in Canada.

I would like to make a comment on prices as well. I have heard it said many times by members of the Opposition that the prices of drugs will go up. I would like the Member to name the drug, tell us what the price is today, and tell us where it will go. The Member for Shefford does not know what the drug is because the drug has not yet been developed. He does not know what the price is because it has not yet been established. How can he say that the price will go up if the drug has not yet been developed and the price has not yet been established? Would the Hon. Member for Lachine (Mr. Layton) comment on that?

Mr. Layton: The Government received a major report on the drug industry from Dr. Eastman in which he made many proposals, many of which are included in the Bill. It is of particular interest to me that the very doctor who undertook the study and declared that certain things ought to be done is willing to serve as the chairman of that drug prices review board.

What better assurance can we have of an honest commentator than the very man who recommended these changes in our pharmaceutical law? In the future, Canadians will continue to be as proud as they are today of the pharmaceutical industry which will continue to invest and produce products which give us a better life.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate my colleague for Lachine (Mr. Layton) and say that he knows what he is talking about. Earlier, the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) made a joke and said that a figure of 10,000 jobs in Montreal was a bit ridiculous. However, I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Shefford that he should read the many articles which have been written about this in the Montreal newspapers, because when we speak about 1,300 jobs in Montreal, we are talking about 1,300 direct jobs in research activities, but when you have 1,300 scientists, you also have all the people who work with them, the technicians and so on, and this means whole teams of people who work around the scientists themselves.

When the pharmaceutical industries speak about 1,300 jobs, they mean 1,300 direct jobs, but to those have to be added all the indirect jobs, and we all know that, in high technology, there is a much greater number of indirect jobs than of direct jobs.

I would like to know what my colleague from Lachine thinks about the position of the Liberals and the New Democrats in refusing to have a price review board for all generic products.

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, to reply to my colleague, it seems to me that members of the Opposition, and this includes the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, have always been afraid that the controls provided under this Bill would not be applied. I find it typical that they would refuse to have confidence in the performance of our leaders. As for me, I am confident that the price review board will do its job for all Canadians. I am confident that this method of accounting to Parliament will guarantee reasonable prices for all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment my hon. friend on his comments. He certainly understands the essence of why we are trying to pass Bill C-22. My hon. friend will know that there has recently been a change in NDP policy. The New Democratic Party used to be against the Senate and wanted it abolished.

Mr. Fulton: Still are. Abolish it.

Mr. Lewis: Just last week the House Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Riis) was quoted as saying: "We would assume the Senate would see the wisdom of stopping this Bill as well". He then went on to say, "—but the fact is that they do some good work some of the time".

How does my hon. friend think the people in his riding will feel about the New Democratic Party's proposition that the unelected appointed Senate should have the right to stop this particular Bill and in fact any Bill passed by the democratically elected House of Commons of this country?

Mr. Layton: Mr. Speaker, I can say without any hesitation that the residents of my riding are as shocked and upset with the performance of the Senate in this regard as are the 3,000 people who paraded in front of the Parliament buildings today. They represent a mass view that there is the right in our parliamentary system for the elected majority in this country to govern, and it is not for the Senate to obstruct.

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart)—Unemployment Insurance—Inquiry why elderly worker with collective pension plan is penalized—Inquiry why there are two classes of elderly workers in Canada—Inquiry why certain category of elderly workers is penalized; the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—High interest rates charged to credit card users—Intervention by Illinois State Treasurer; the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher)—Refugees— Reports of possible arrival of Tamils from Germany.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the comments of my hon. friend with respect to the Senate are fascinating. Logically, I expect that there will be no further appointments to this devastating, undemocratic, difficult and unacceptable body in the future. I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be deeply disappointed. I am sure that the Prime Minister's friends will be even more deeply disappointed. I am interested to hear this strong position put by the Hon. Member.

The question of the Senate is very much a red herring as we carry forward this debate. The reality is that the Senate has typically, throughout our parliamentary history, occasionally brought back amendments to the House of Commons for us to consider. We have accepted amendments in some cases, such as in the case of transport deregulation Bills earlier last week. Of course, the Government accepted those amendments from the Senate without any of these diatribes against the right of the Senate to operate within our present constitutional framework.

I say to the Government, as it starts to play with fire on this issue, that there is a serious possibility that it will get itself into constitutional problems from which it will be very difficult to extricate itself. It is the Government's choice to make this debate about a piece of legislation which is, itself, most devastating for most Canadians, a debate about the constitutionality of the Senate. I believe it is playing with fire and will live to regret it.

With that as a prelude, as trade critic for our Party, I want to say a few words about the connection between this Bill and the free trade negotiations which are taking place. First, let me say that it is quite clear that the pressure which started from the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada began well before the election of the Government. For instance, I have a copy of a detailed study on pressure groups and the federal Government, looking at the case of pharmaceutical lobbies and compulsory licensing. It is written by Mario Iacobacci. He makes it quite clear in this study that the previous Government faced a very strong lobby from the PMAC. That strong lobby has continued and we have seen more manifestations of it today.

It is interesting to note that the pressure being applied by the multinational drug companies not only took the form of pressure on Members of Parliament and cabinet Ministers through the PMAC, but took the form of pressure through the United States trade representative, William Brock at that time.

For instance, one source quoted in this study indicates:

> Brock's influence on this issue has been fairly strong. When it was raised at the recent Brock—Kelleher meeting, it was named as the first of three items on the agenda in terms of importance.

Let me reiterate that this pressure started well before this Government came into office. There is a remarkable quotation from the present head lobbyist for the PMAC, Judy Erola, who at that time was a member of the Liberal Cabinet. She indicated the following:

> When I came in it was a foregone conclusion that there would be changes to the Patent Act . . . If I had been in at the beginning I would not have had (compulsory licensing) reviewed. I would have looked at tax incentives . . . If I had been Minister before, I would not have entertained any changes to the Patent Act, but the can of worms had already been opened.

As the author of the study goes on to say:

> This exceptionally candid statement attests to the very important constraints that prevented at least this Minister, if not others, from dealing with the compulsory licensing issue in the way she deemed most appropriate.

It is important to recognize as well that this pressure from the United States to amend our drug patent laws has continued and has strengthened as the free trade negotiations have become part of the economic agenda of this country. For instance, if we look at the declaration from the Quebec summit of the Prime Minister and the President of the United States in March, 1985, there was agreement reached at that point on "co-operation to protect intellectual property rights from trade and counterfeit goods and other abuses of copyright and patent law".

In briefings which took place at that time, it was indicated that pharmaceuticals were one key part of what was being discussed in that particular item of the Quebec summit declaration.

Just as recently as this past weekend, we have had precisely the same kinds of indications in the press that make it quite clear that the United States is very interested in what happens to Bill C-22 and has tied that interest to what it is likely to do with respect to free trade negotiations. I quote from a story from The Globe and Mail which states: "Demonstrating resolve on C-22 will become important two months from now if the Canada-U.S. free trade negotiators come up with a tentative pact, which both Governments will then have to sell politically at home". The source for this article is then quoted as saying: "The White House isn't going to expend a lot of its political capital with Congress to sell a trade deal with Canada if we don't show we can pass a Bill like C-22 with our big majority". That very strongly suggests that what we have here in front of us is an example of quid pro quo.

We have a Government which prior to the fact is making commitments to the United States that it will carry out changes to our Patent Act in order to establish not what the recommendations of the detailed reports suggested but instead a 10-year monopoly on drug patents. In short, it will be 10 years in which drug companies, mainly from the United States but also from other countries as well—and I agree with the Hon. Member from Lachine on that point—will have the freedom to bring forward price changes which they can justify to a price review board. This will permit them to increase very, very significantly, I am certain, their profits and therefore the prices which Canadians have to pay, whether they pay them through taxes, medical care premiums or direct payments at the drugstore. That type of quid pro quo, that type of sell-out of our country, is simply not acceptable to this Party. It is something which we have fought throughout this debate from the moment it was introduced in the House until now. We will continue to fight it regardless of the fact that the amendments which happen to be the subject of discussion at the moment are from the Senate.

It is important to make several additional points in order to add to this sense of sell-out on the part of our Government. First, it is important to say that we have in front of us a Bill which does nothing to establish a monitoring agency which will see to it that the drug companies come through with the commitments which they have been announcing with such fanfare across the land. This includes companies which have made signed commitments, such as Firestone of the United States in the case of Hamilton, and which have backed off those commitments. What can we expect when we not only have nothing in the Bill in the way of commitments but we have nothing in it in the way of attempts to monitor the commitments which have supposedly been made?

Second, we have to look very hard at the question of jobs as suggested by the Minister and as suggested by the pharmaceutical companies themselves. In fact there have been detailed examinations of these jobs, the supposed 300,000 high-tech jobs which will be provided by this legislation. There are indications that in fact only 1,148 of those jobs will be jobs in the professional category in the industry itself. Another 652 will be classified as technical. One would expect that these would be reasonable jobs, but they are not high-tech jobs. Finally, 620 jobs turn out to be cleaning jobs, jobs for animal keepers, statisticians, clerks, et cetera. So much for the 3,000 jobs which have been promised by the industry.

So we do not really have a commitment which holds any water in terms of providing any faith to be placed in these companies by the Government or by the Canadian people. This Bill which has been with us for a long time makes me think of the fact that prior to its introduction Canada existed as a country which was a leader in the industrialized world. It was not the only country taking such a lead. There are other countries, such as Italy, whose pharmaceutical patent laws are much looser than those of this country. We were taking a lead to see to it that in an industry dominated by multinational companies it would be possible to give a fair break to the consumer and the taxpayer. That lead was an important example to the rest of the world with respect to what could be done. It could still provide an important example to the rest of the world of what could be done if we permitted compulsory licensing to continue with the same freedom which we have permitted in the past.

Members forget that there were repeated attempts made to deal with drug prices before 1969. It proved impossible to bring those prices down. But with the legislation which was passed to provide for compulsory licensing it proved possible to bring prices down for the consumer and to give to Canadian producers a chance to enter the drug industry despite the patent conditions held by the multinational drug companies.

I consider it a great shame that with this piece of legislation Canada is moving from being a leader, a leader attempting to obtain both research and lower prices for consumers, to being a follower, a follower of the United States. We are becoming followers of the United States in the context of an abject attempt to reach a free trade agreement, but also a follower in the sense of simply accepting what the United States has done in terms of patent legislation affecting drugs.

If it takes the Senate to force us to have another look at this Bill, this is the one occasion, and I hope it is the single occasion in my life, in which I have to offer praise to the Senate. I think that we have received a set of improvements from the Senate. Frankly, it is not a set of improvements which are exactly what I would like to see, but at least it is an approach which is better than the one taken by the Government.

I urge the House to take the Bill to defeat what the Conservative Government is attempting to do, and to give back to Canada a sense of leadership, independence, and freedom from pressure from the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in fact, for the past few weeks, we have witnessed an attempt on the part of both Opposition Parties to send the message to the Canadian people that the Americans are forcing us to pass this bill.

I think that Canadian women and men will not fall for it because they know better and they realize that promoting research and development in our country will only result in increased competition with R & D in the U.S. It is nonsense to believe that the Americans would be in favour of reducing research activities in this country. In my opinion, it is quite the opposite. The United States of America, as other nations, want to do research and development in their own country because it creates a great number of well-paid jobs. For instance, in my riding, there is a company called Pratt and Whitney where about a thousand people work on the assembly line while some 6,000 employees are involved in research and development.

Therefore, it is hard to believe that the U.S. would like us to do more research and development in Canada. And it is preposterous to try and sell that line to the Canadian people. Therefore I hope and I am convinced that Canadians will realize that the arguments put forward by the Official Opposition are utter nonsense and totally unfounded.

So, when we talk about price increases, let us remember that this bill provides for a board to review drug prices and to make sure that they will not increase faster than the cost of living. This is clearly provided for in this bill. It has been very well explained by the Minister and I cannot see why the Opposition still persists in misleading the Canadian people by predicting a 15 to 20 per cent price increase.

I wish that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) would for once tell the truth and read the wording of this bill exactly as it is. Let him speak the truth and stop playing politics.

This bill is very important for job creation. Our Party wants to create jobs, but we are prevented from doing it.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to say two things. First, our Party is not against research and development. Our policy is to encourage research but we also want the people to get their drugs at a reasonable price. I must say that they are many ways and systems to do and support research. I think that about 60 per cent of that research, is supported by Canadians as taxpayers. It is not a matter of being for or against research and development. We are in favour of research but we think that it is possible to have it done mainly by Canadian companies.

Second, I wish to raise the question of prices. As I said, there is an agency that will control price changes. But the important issue is the original price set by the drug manufacturer. If this price is set very high, it is very hard on Canadian consumers.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I am tempted to ask my usual question about the Senate, but I do not think that I will.

I note from the Canadian Parliamentary Guide that my hon. colleague has a Ph.D. Does he feel that a doctoral thesis should be protected by copyright, which is analogous to a patent? Does the Hon. Member believe that Ph.D. students should be allowed to use his research and quote extensively from his thesis without attribution or compensation?

If so, in what manner does my hon. friend distinguish from that proprietary right of a thesis, and the proprietary right of a patent?

Mr. Langdon: I fear that this indicates that the Parliamentary Secretary does not have a Ph.D.

It is not at all the pattern that people attempt to protect their Ph.D. thesis. In fact, if the Hon. Member wanted to inquire into my Ph.D. thesis, he would find that it was quoted in a fair number of places.

Mr. Lewis: Without attribution?

Mr. Langdon: Without any payment of royalty, or copyright coming to me.

Mr. Lewis: Without attribution?

Mr. Langdon: The point is whether there is any attribution of funds taking place. In the case of Ph.D. theses, of books, and of virtually anything that is intellectual property, it is quite possible for this intellectual property to be used by somebody else. Yes, with attribution, but not with payment. This is where the drug companies have managed to sell a snow job to the Canadian people by suggesting that it is intellectual property that they are selling.

• (1630)

An Hon. Member: To the Tories, not to the people.

Mr. Langdon: Just to the Tories, I concede. Certainly, to the Tories.

Mr. Lewis: It is not intellectual property.

Mr. Langdon: It is intellectual property.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is time for one short question from the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland).

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I see that my respected colleague for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) is always very loyal to his Marxist-Leninist-Trotskyist policy. However, I would appreciate it if he explained how come he, a great proponent of socialism, supports the Senate in its struggle to abolish the Review Board that would aim at controlling, for the first time in this country, 100 per cent of the value of generic drugs in Canada and would be chaired by someone whom the Official Opposition has been harping on about since the beginning, Dr. Harry Eastman.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, there was reference to socialism, Marxism, and now they refer to Marxism-Leninism. That is really something. But I can say, as a social democrat, as the representative of many people who want no price increase from this Government, as a Member of Parliament, I must state it is important to scrutinize all Bills that are introduced in this House. This Bill must be scrutinized if we are to protect our constituents. When I look at—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry, but the period for questions and comments is over. Debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin).

[English]

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the opportunity to participate in this most important debate. We are bringing to the forefront some of the most fundamental issues before the Government of Canada today. We are exposing some of the fundamental differences between our approach and that of the opposition Parties. We have before us a proposal by the Government to change the Patent Act with respect to the laws surrounding the production of pharmaceuticals. It has been passed by the House of Commons but blocked by the Senate which wishes to retain the status quo.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you could get out of this House right now and see a crowd of people before Parliament—more than two thousand people. I never saw a larger crowd. They are here to support Bill C-22. They know this represents investment and jobs, jobs in Montreal, Toronto, Edmonton, and across Canada. Those people are here to tell the Senate, those non-elected liberals, to stop obstructing the legislation. They want a pharmaceutical industry in this country, they want the research and development and the jobs this will create.

[English]

I support Bill C-22 because it will be good for the economy of Alberta. It will be good for Alberta universities and their research capabilities. It will be good for Alberta companies and for Alberta health care.

We have spoken in this House before about the importance of western diversification and the importance of introducing new industries in the West which will reduce our dependence on world prices of oil and grain. Bill C-22 is another piece of legislation which fits well into this Government's series of initiatives to encourage western research, development, marketing and industry.

My province has been making a concerted effort to diversify its economic base and to date has had limited success. Because Bill C-22 is so important to this diversification effort, it comes as no surprise that the Alberta provincial Government has been an active supporter of the Bill. It has chosen to focus its attention and its diversification efforts in the fields of telecommunications, petrochemicals and biotechnology because these are areas in which Albertans have already proven their capabilities.

Fibreoptics and cancer research are only two of the areas in which we excel. The provincial Government showed its commitment to biomedical research with the establishment of the Alberta Heritage Foundation for a medical research endowment fund created by former Premier Peter Lougheed.

The province has committed itself to research as one aspect of diversification. We, the federal Government, have committed ourselves financially to the diversification of the West, and we are now given the chance to commit ourselves again. Alberta has a strong commitment to biotechnology but we have not seen the success we would like to see in the growth and development of pharmaceutical research. Why is that? Bio-technological research is in the grey zone of drug patent law, so it is not inhibited in the same way as pharmaceutical research. Bio-tech firms differ from pharmaceutical manufacturers in that they manipulate existing biological materials rather than synthesize man-made chemicals.

Because there has not been patent protection, it has been difficult to transform basic research into products that can be sold on the market. We cannot sell our drug research to larger companies because they are not protected if they decide to sell what they can develop from that research. We cannot secure the type of investment capital that is needed in research because we cannot sell the research results which are generated.

As you see, Mr. Speaker, Alberta drug research companies are caught in a vicious circle. They cannot sell the results. They cannot get money. If they cannot get money, they cannot continue research.

If our fledgling drug research industry is to grow, we need the patent protection this Bill offers. If the federal Government will provide the patent protection, Alberta research centres can thrive. We have the technology, the scientists and the potential. All we need is the patent amendments that this Bill proposes.

Alberta's economic development Minister, the Hon. Larry Shaben, commented in the Calgary Herald on January 8 that this Bill will allow Alberta to build a petrochemical based drug industry. He said:

> We believe very strongly that there is a terrific potential which is close to being realized of establishing jobs—highly skilled jobs, manufacturing companies and capabilities in that area.

We are committed to those companies. There is an argument advanced by persons opposing this Bill that the Bill does not include safeguards, that it does not prescribe how companies must spend their research and development money, that it does not offer guarantees in legislation—

Mr. Riis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I looked around the Chamber and I do not believe we have a quorum to enable us to proceed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Let me see.

Mr. Riis: There does not seem to be a quorum.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Members behind the curtain, are they in the House or out of the House?

There is no quorum so I ask that the bells be rung.

And the bells having rung:

• (1640)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We shall resume debate as I see a quorum. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) has the floor.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I find it unfortunate, and I will not take it personally, that certain Members of the House chose to rush for the lobby and out of sight a few moments ago. It is rather childish behaviour—

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member, I would just like to say to the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) that he should not reflect on the presence or absence of Members in the House.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, rightly so, you have reminded the Hon. Member that he is not to comment on that. We could easily comment too by saying that a Government that has 211 Members could certainly keep a quorum in the House, but I think the Member—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Please allow me to finish. The Deputy House Leader may not have mentioned Hon. Members in particular but he surely did mention Parties and I think that is the equivalent of mentioning names.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for having kindly and gently reminded the Hon. Member that he should proceed with his speech. The rules are there at our disposal to use in any way we see fit. I think the Hon. Member should continue and we will listen to him, but we will apply the rules as well.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is debate, it is not really a point of order, and I would like to hear the speech of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). I do not think it is necessary to carry on with this. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West has the floor on debate.

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would think it important when debating a Bill like Bill C-22 that the opposition Parties, both Liberal and NDP—

Mr. Riis: That's not a point of order.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): — understand that we want the Bill to go through and that they agree with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is debate. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West has the floor on debate and I would like to hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Dorin: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, there has been an argument advanced by persons opposing this Bill that the Bill does not include sufficient safeguards, that it does not prescribe how companies should use research money or offer in the legislation guarantees for research and development.

The Minister has repeatedly outlined commitments of over $1 billion in research and development that will take place in Canada and that jobs will be created. People say that there is no guarantee that that will happen, but I say that we have more faith in Canadians and what Canadians will do than that.

Mr. McCurdy: You have faith only in the Minister.

Mr. Dorin: I also have a lot of faith in the Minister, if the Hon. Member would like to know. The Minister has been doing a very good job.

We heard those arguments back in the fall of 1984 and the spring of 1985 when we were proposing to deregulate the price of oil. The socialists said then that we should legislate conditions to go along with the elimination of the various penalties and taxes that they had helped to impose. The industry told us that those dollars would go into exploration, development and the creation of jobs, and we accepted that on good faith. The result was that in 1985, the oil patch had the largest year ever. Unfortunately, subsequent events were such that that could not continue.

We have learned a lesson from that experience which is relevant here. Again, there are commitments from Canadians wanting to do research and development, to build a pharmaceutical industry and to manufacture pharmaceuticals in Canada that they will go ahead with their plans and provide that investment and those jobs. We take them at their word, and we do not accept the arguments of the NDP that the Canadian industry and workers must be bound by legislation in order to see growth and prosperity. In fact, we believe the opposite is true. Given the appropriate environment and an amount of good faith from the Government, Canadians will respond in a creative and industrious fashion and we will see investment, research, development, jobs and, in this case, new drugs and new hope for the people of Canada.

We have seen that record referred to by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development which announced a week ago that Canada had the best job-creation record in the western world. It commented on the positive policies of the Government in that regard.

When we create a better climate for research companies, we encourage them to expand and to hire Canadian-trained researchers. We protect them when they want to market the products they have developed and we benefit from the economic and technological growth they create.

In summary, by helping these companies to grow, we are helping the western economy to grow. I cannot imagine why opposition Parties are opposed to growth in the economy and particularly in the western economy.

I mentioned that Bill C-22 is good for Alberta companies. I would like to talk about three Alberta-based companies and to outline benefits they will see if Bill C-22 is passed.

Biomira Inc. is an Edmonton company which spends $3 million per year on the research and development of a cancer vaccine. Its President, Gordon Politeski, knows that his company will benefit. If this Bill is passed, he plans to expand his research program, but if it is not passed, he is seriously considering relocating to the United States or another country which grants the patent protection which pharmaceutical research deserves.

Chembio-Med is 100 per cent-owned by the University of Alberta and has 50 employees. It is expected to grow quickly if the Bill is passed. Synphar Pharmaceuticals is a new company which has 20 employees. It hopes to grow to 250 by 1990. I mention these companies because they will be hiring at the scientist and researcher levels. These are levels where there were previously few opportunities. All three firms rely on the passage of Bill C-22 to expand.

There will be new companies as well. The Calgary Research and Development Authority, a group which is sponsored by the City of Calgary, the Chamber of Commerce and the University of Calgary, was formed to foster research and a research-based technology industry in that city. Mr. Croft, the President of that organization, explained to the legislative committee studying this Bill that biological and genetic research now being developed at the University of Alberta and the University of Calgary could provide the basis for a new high-tech sector. This could only occur after the system of allowing companies to copy new pharmaceuticals is changed.

I would like to refer to Mr. Croft again because one of his statements summarized the difficulties faced by Alberta companies. He argued that the inhibiting nature of compulsory licensing is demonstrated by the absence in Alberta of small pharmaceutical research firms, even though the province has become an emerging centre of other high-tech firms.

Bill C-22 is also good for Alberta universities. There is a commitment, dependent on this Bill, of $100 million to the University of Alberta and $32 million to the University of Calgary. Alberta has the third-largest amount of research and development expansion after Ontario and Quebec. Approximately 30 per cent of the money the passage of this Bill will bring into the economy will go to Canadian universities.

The Calgary Herald explained that Alberta hospitals, universities and research centres stand to gain $100 million in private grants for drug research in the next 10 years if this Bill is passed. Those are private grants, not government money. That is a tenfold increase over what is now being spent.

We can see the effect in how well Alberta universities can compete. The University of Calgary's researchers have a proud list of pharmacological projects, including research into anti-cancer drugs such as Interferon and new anti-diabetic agents.

Passage of Bill C-22 will be good for Alberta health care as it will be good for health care across the country. All Members of this House know the Bill does not affect drugs currently on the market. It applies only to drugs which may be invented in the future. I therefore find it reprehensible that Members of this House who know better are attempting to use scare tactics on senior citizens and others by suggesting that somehow this Bill will increase the cost of drugs they use. That is totally false. Any suggestion like that is an attempt to mislead the public. This Bill seeks to create an environment where we can increase scientific research and development in drugs and health care and build an industry to produce and sell those drugs.

It is useful to compare the original Bill and the Senate version with respect to jobs and cost to consumers. I know the Consumers' Association of Canada has not supported this Bill. I spoke to the President of that association, one of my constituents, earlier today. However, I would like to point out that the original Bill will result in a $1.4 billion investment in new research and 3,000 jobs. The Senate's royalty scheme would produce a fund of between $140 million and $225 million. Similarly, over 10 years, according to the Eastman report, the cost to consumers would be in the neighbourhood of $700 million to $1.1 billion. The Senate proposal does not include a drug prices review board. We can only conclude that the Senate's proposals are far more detrimental to the consumer than the Government's legislation and they have nowhere near the economic benefits of the original Bill.

This Bill is not about drugs, it is about jobs. We can allow research and development to be done in the U.S., Japan and Europe and buy the products they produce, or we can develop our own industry. This Bill is also about democracy and whether or not an unelected institution can thwart the will of elected representatives.

Some Hon. Members: Abolish it!

Mr. Dorin: I would like to continue but I think I have come to the end of my time. I thank you for this opportunity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Member several questions. First, can he explain to Members of the House why in the years until 1969, when we did not have this legislation which supposedly stopped the drug companies from doing research—and if I am wrong I would like to hear from the drug companies—there was not a single important drug for serious illnesses developed by any Canadian company? The only important drug until 1969 was insulin developed at the University of Toronto medical college. If they did not do it before, why should we expect them to do more after we pass this legislation?

The Hon. Member also referred to his constituent who happens to be the President of the Consumers' Association of Canada. Does he not find it strange that that association, labour unions, seniors' organizations, farm groups like Keystone Agriculture in Manitoba, are all so gullible, ignorant and incompetent that they have been taken in by the biased misinformation they are getting from this side of the House? Or is it that perhaps they are right and the only people who are wrong are the Government and the industry?

Mr. Dorin: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure why our record in the development of drugs prior to 1969 was so bad. I can tell you one possible reason, however, and that is that a lot of Alberta universities and companies headed by aggressive entrepreneurs are ready to go as soon as this Bill passes, and we did not have that then. A lot of Albertans are poised to do that development if no one else wants to. Certainly we have opinions from other people. There is a wide variety of opinion. However, we must remember that they represent not necessarily the broader national interest of the country but their own particular interest. All these associations put forward a position reflecting the vested interests of their members.

I am a member of the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs which is now studying tax reform. It is rare that I have to look beyond the cover of a brief to know what a given group is going to be saying and what position they are going to be taking. The Hon Member knows that. Those people are paid, appointed or elected to put forward the view from the perspective of their association. They are doing their job and I commend them for it. We in this House are elected to evaluate all those views and make a decision on what is best for the country in the broadest sense.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I joined with the rest of the House in dismay when my hon. colleague talked about the people of Alberta being industrious and my friend from Windsor—Walkerville, in the NDP, laughed.

I wanted to ask my colleague a question. He will know that the traditional NDP policy has been to abolish the Senate. Yet last week the NDP House Leader was quoted as saying: "We would assume the Senate would see the wisdom of stopping this Bill". He then went on to say: "But the fact is they do some good work some of the time". What does my colleague think his constituents will feel about an appointed Senate, with the support of the NDP, stopping this Bill which has been passed by the duly elected representatives of the House of Commons?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) has 30 seconds.

Mr. Dorin: I heard the rumour that they did good work over there. I suspect that when it happened I must have been out or in my riding. My province is at the forefront of calling for Senate reform, and any change from abolition on up would be a step forward.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Private Members' Business

June 10, 1987—Second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-258, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (war crimes and crimes against humanity).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) whose Bill has been called at this time, has a conflict. The conundrum is as follows: Bill C-258 which is now before the House deals with the same subject matter as Bill C-71 which, the House will recall, was given second reading on August 20, last Thursday. The legislative committee on Bill C-71 is meeting at this time and the Member cannot be in two places at one time. He thought it was his duty to attend the committee on the government Bill rather than pursue his own initiative, Bill C-258.

Therefore, I request that his Bill fall to the end of the order of precedence and that the House be adjourned.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, this being Private Members' hour it would be presumptuous of me to say that I am responding on behalf of the Government. However, I think I can safely say on behalf of members of my Party that we agree that the Bill was put forward by my colleague from the Liberal Party in good faith. The government Bill, C-71, encompasses all of the things in this Bill and goes much further.

In the spirit of co-operation, since we are trying to do the country's work, I wonder if my hon. colleague would see fit—

Mr. Riis: No.

Mr. Lewis: —to use this hour of House time to proceed with government business in order that legislation can be passed, or does he want to join my friend in the NDP and have a holiday for an hour?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, it would be presumptuous of me to call for the unanimous consent which must be given in order for the Government to proceed with Orders of the Day. Therefore, I will wait to learn what the indications of other Members of the House are.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) is not present to move the motion for second reading of Bill C-258 for which notice has been given, the order will be dropped to the bottom of the order of precedence.

Is there unanimous consent to carry on with Orders of the Day?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is not unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent to proceed with the adjournment debate?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—INQUIRY WHY ELDERLY WORKER WITH COLLECTIVE PENSION PLAN IS PENALIZED—INQUIRY WHY THERE ARE TWO CLASSES OF ELDERLY WORKERS IN CANADA—INQUIRY WHY CERTAIN CATEGORY OF ELDERLY WORKERS IS PENALIZED

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, after a debate which clearly showed once more the indifference and lack of concern of this Conservative Government for the Canadian people, I would like to come back to a question which I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) about the unemployment insurance benefits of older workers.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is important to remind the Members of this House and those Canadians who are now listening to us in their homes that, in the past, when an older worker lost his job, accepted early retirement to protect the jobs of younger workers and continued looking for work even though he received benefits from the pension plan to which he had contributed, he was also entitled to unemployment insurance benefits. Unfortunately, in January 1985, this Conservative Government decided to put an end to this practice, and without informing those who had applied for unemployment insurance benefits after taking an early retirement, the Government cut off their benefits.

After a hard fight of 17 or 18 months and with the support of thousands of older workers in the regions of Quebec City, Sherbrooke, Abitibi, Rouyn-Noranda, the North Shore, Montreal, and especially the Montreal—Sainte-Marie constituency, we were able to make the Government go back on its decision and reverse its position, just as we had done in the case of the partial de-indexation of old age security pensions

As of now, 46,000 older workers in Canada have been reimbursed the unemployment insurance benefits to which they were entitled and received an average of $10,000 each.

Unfortunately, and in this case, I asked my question to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), because of the silence and indifference of the Conservative and New Democrat Members who have done nothing about this issue, we have to continue our representations because there are 2,500 other workers in Canada who lost their jobs before January 5, 1986, and had accepted to take early retirement under the rules which applied at the time.

But unfortunately these people were known to have left their employers on December 31, 1985. New Year's is a holiday and the offices of employment centres are closed, so the Government does not want to do them justice quite simply because the men and women who went to see the Canada Manpower Centre staff to apply for unemployment insurance benefits were told by the officials: No, you are not eligible right now. Come back in three weeks or a month because you just got your severance pay. So they did come back, but today the Government refuses to reimburse them.

This is what I would like to know from the Member or the Parliamentary Secretary who will be answering my question: On the basis of what social justice principle does this Conservative Government maintain two classes of older workers? We have an older worker who has set aside part of his wages and transferred that part to an employer pension plan, and we have another older worker in another company who has saved up part of his income to contribute to a Registered Retirement Savings Plan. The result is that the latter is entitled to draw full unemployment insurance benefits, even if he is receiving $400 or $500 per week from his RRSP. Unfortunately for Canadians listening to us now who opted for early retirement, when they were hired, like our public servants and our military, they had to pay unemployment insurance benefits and contribute to an employer pension plan.

But when these people lose their jobs, and there are hundreds and thousands of people losing their jobs in the regions, they go to the Unemployment Insurance Office and they are told: No. The Mulroney Government will not give you your unemployment insurance benefits. The Conservative Government and Conservative Members say: No, we don't trust your word, we don't believe you. Go get another job. If you do find another job and you lose it, then you will be eligible. That is outrageous! It is completely outrageous, Mr. Speaker, to treat a worker like this.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister's Parliamentary Secretary would tell us why, on the basis of what kind of social justice, his Government is proceeding in this way. How can Conservative Members meet older workers and still talk to them without shame? And this decision does not apply just to today's older workers, it applies to all workers.

Today, Conservative Members were pulling out all the emotional stops to save jobs, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is time justice were done.

Mr. Speaker, you are telling me my time has expired. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary has good news—not for me but for thousands of older workers who are awaiting the Government's decision. I hope he says his Government will reimburse all older workers and eliminate this discriminatory treatment of our workers.

[English]

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to respond to the question raised by the Hon. Member on March 31 concerning unemployment insurance and pensions.

Pension agreements constitute an essential part of an employee's earning package. It is the Government's view that pension income is paid as compensation when regular earnings are no longer forthcoming and that persons who have retired from the labour market should not look to unemployment insurance as a supplementary source of income in retirement.

The unemployment insurance regulations regarding the treatment of pension income were introduced on January 5, 1986. However, as the Hon. Member will recall, on December 5, 1986, the Government announced its intention to amend the regulations. The Bill which the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) recently introduced in the House will enable persons in receipt of pension income to requalify for full unemployment insurance benefits if they take a job after their retirement and they work long enough to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits.

Furthermore, the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated to the House on March 18 that persons who had applied for unemployment insurance prior to January 5, 1986—those people who applied under the previous rules—will have their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits determined under the previous rules. It should therefore be obvious that the Government has bent over backwards to ensure that persons taking early retirement are treated equitably and fairly.

The Hon. Member implies that there is no fundamental difference between an employer-sponsored pension plan and a regular Registered Retirement Savings Plan. However, this simply is not correct. Pension plans are a term and condition of employment generally requiring contributions by both employer and employee to finance future pensions. Thus, they take the form of deferred employment earnings.

A Retirement Savings Plan, on the other hand, is based predominantly on a voluntary, individual savings decision. It is only one among many ways that an individual may accumulate savings.

I want to conclude by affirming the Government's resolve to treat all persons, including older workers, equitably and fairly under the unemployment insurance system while, at the same time, reinforcing the fundamental role of unemployment insurance as a scheme for temporarily replacing lost employment income.

REFUGEES—REPORTS OF POSSIBLE ARRIVAL OF TAMILS FROM GERMANY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on February 10 I asked the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) what the Government planned to do to prevent further abuse of our immigration and refugee policies. My question was in response to a large influx of Central Americans coming across our Canadian border from the United States and also because of rumours that possibly more Tamils would land on our shores.

The Minister replied that he would introduce legislation to clear up the problem and he followed through with his plan. Shortly after our interaction in this House, he announced a series of very responsible administrative changes to the refugee claims system. These revisions increased our ability to help genuine refugees while deterring system abuse.

At that time, the blanket policy on admissions and non-deportation which applied to certain countries was cancelled. As well, people coming from those countries whose citizens required visas to visit Canada were required to have transit visas if they were travelling through Canada en route to another destination. I was encouraged by these measures but continued to press for legislation to meet the increasing number of claimants.

As we all know, people claiming refugee status landed on our shores in July. The Immigration Act of 1976 stated that anyone in Canada, whether here legally or illegally, be given the right to a determination of their claim by the Minister, and a redetermination before the Immigration Appeal Board of any claim rejected by the Minister.

The Ministers of Immigration were bound by law to allow these people to stay in Canada. Cries of "Ship them back" were absolutely out of the question. Canada is a law-abiding country.

Just two months before this, Bill C-55, amendments to the Immigration Act of 1976, had been introduced. The Opposition Parties strongly opposed the Bill, saying that it was too tough. I agree that it is tough, but it is fair. Even more important, it is necessary.

My constituency office in Fraser Valley East was inundated with calls and letters from Canadians who feel that those aboard the boat were jumping the queue, making it even more difficult for legitimate refugees to be processed through the legal channels. They asked me to pass on the message that Bill C-55 must be passed, and I did so gladly.

As a sovereign country, Canada must have the right to decide who comes into our country. Our laws must be strong enough to prevent further abuse. Too many people are now claiming entry who are not genuine refugees. I am satisfied that Bill C-55 and the recent legislation, Bill C-84, the deterrents and detention Bill, will make it clear to all people that Canada cannot and will not permit this abuse to continue. We will stop bogus refugees.

As a result of the request of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to the Speaker of the House that Parliament be recalled, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 have been read a second time and referred to legislative committees for examination. I trust that my hon. colleagues on both sides of the House will recognize the importance of these two pieces of legislation and will not attempt tactics to slow down the process. We have to rationalize our law toward refugees as soon as possible.

Bill C-55 remains committed to genuine refugees in need of our protection by establishing an independent body, the Immigration and Refugee Board. Cases will not be referred to this board when claimants are returnable to a safe third country, or if they fail to establish a well founded fear of persecution by not providing sufficient support of their claim, or if there are significant doubts as to the credibility of the evidence supporting their claims for this status.

The deterrents and detention Bill introduced this summer will substantially increase the penalties for traffickers of human cargo to a 10-year jail sentence and $500,000 fines. It will also impose heavier fines and penalties on transportation companies that bring undocumented people to Canada. The vast majority of improperly documented persons do not come in by the boatload, but actually by Canadian ports of entry on scheduled carriers. This means that we will have one law and this law will apply to all groups who overstep the rules. We cannot have two sets of laws for one situation.

As we have often heard, many who arrive illegally do not have any documentation. The deterrents Bill will require claimants to remain in detention for up to 21 days rather than seven if they do not possess proper documentation. If necessary, additional detention can be required until identity is proven. Since many Canadians expressed serious concerns about the background of certain refugees, this Bill will give the Government the power to remove people who pose a criminal or security threat to Canada.

I believe that these two pieces of legislation, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, are absolutely essential and are supported by the majority of Canadians. It is imperative that we protect bona fide refugees. We must tell the world that Canada will continue to open her arms to real refugees but we will not allow our laws to be abused or thwarted, nor will we let our record of humanitarianism become a laughing matter.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to expand upon the reply given by the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to the Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) on February 10, 1987. I thank him for his comments on a subject that I know he holds very dear to his heart and on which he has worked very hard in our caucus.

In reply to the Hon. Member's question as to what we are doing to prevent further abuse of our immigration and refugee policies, I would draw the Member's attention to our recent efforts in this respect.

On February 20, 1987, this Government instituted control measures to stem the flow of illegal migrants posing as genuine refugees coming to Canada. These measures covered three primary areas. First, the cancellation of the existing blanket policy of admission or non-deportation of nationals of certain countries, which meant that all claimants, regardless of their country of origin, were treated in the same way. Second, the enforcement of existing provisions under the Immigration Act allowing us to better control the flow of refugee claimants from the United States. Pursuant to this measure, claimants remain temporarily in the United States until immigration hearings can take place. Third, the imposition of transit visas to stop illegal migrants from using the short stopover in Canada to claim refugee status.

These control measures, designed to discourage the arrival of economic migrants posing as genuine refugees, have been successful in that the number of arrivals has dropped dramatically. There were over 4,200 potential refugee claimants who appeared at Canada's ports of entry in February. This number was reduced to over 1,700 in March and stabilized at just over 1,600 in July, 1987.

The Government has also gone on to introduce two important pieces of legislation, Bills C-55 and C-84, which are presently in the committee stage, and to which the Hon. Member has alluded. His knowledge possibly exceeds mine in that area.

Bill C-55 establishes a new refugee determination system, indeed, a fair and efficient system which will result in the speedy resolution of refugee claims. This new Bill replaces the current eight-step process by a three-step system which will put an end to long delays and uncertainty for genuine refugees while speedily removing rejected claimants.

More recently the Government tabled Bill C-84 which embodies firmer deterrent measures designed to dovetail with Bill C-55 to provide immediate protection from abuse. The Bill strikes out the sources of the abuse by substantially increasing penalties for smugglers and strengthening security enforcement. Persons who arrive without proper documentation will be detained until their identities can be established; transportation companies carrying undocumented persons will be more heavily fined; and persons posing criminal and security threats will be swiftly removed.

With these measures we can better manage our borders, and deter abuse. We renew our abiding commitment that genuine refugees will continue to be welcomed in Canada.

CORPORATE AFFAIRS—HIGH INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO CREDIT CARD USERS—INTERVENTION BY ILLINOIS STATE TREASURER

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to try to get the Government to act on the rip-off which major banks, retail companies and energy companies are forcing on hundreds of thousands of Canadians, mostly, or almost all of whom are in low or middle-income brackets.

The interest rate on unpaid balances of credit card users charged by the banks which operate Mastercard and Visa, those who operate the major retail chains such as Eaton's, The Bay and Sears, and the gasoline companies, vary from 16.5 per cent to 28.8 per cent. On top of that many of these institutions have instituted a user-fee of $1 per month or a transaction fee of 25 cents per transaction.

These rates came into effect in the early 1980s when the prime rate set by the Bank of Canada was almost twice as high as it is today. At that time I suppose it was necessary for these companies issuing credit cards to set their rates in the 20 per cent or more range, which is what they did. The prime rate set by the Bank of Canada, the rates which banks charge and the rates which they pay to depositors have come down substantially. Yet the banks and the other organizations such as retail chains and energy companies have stubbornly refused to bring down their interest rates.

It took repeated speeches, repeated questions, an inquiry by the Finance Committee of the House of Commons, as well as a threat by the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) before the banks which operate the major credit card groups such as Mastercard and Visa brought down their rates somewhat a few months ago. The retail chains and gasoline companies simply ignored the complaints and the advice of the parliamentary committee. They are ripping off the public.

There are other groups which have done a much better job than the ones I have already mentioned. For example, credit unions in Saskatchewan and Ontario are offering a Mastercard tied to the over-draft rate of 12.5 per cent. This is 6.1 per cent less than the other credit card companies charge, except Canada Trust which recently cut its rate. As well, they charge no other fee. The credit card companies touted out all manner of excuses for not being able to cut rates. However, as I indicated, they did cut rates a fraction back in February. Just as soon as the bank rate went up a few weeks ago, the companies began to increase their rates.

The parliamentary committee which studied the question made a number of recommendations. I would like to refer to one, one to which the Minister of State for Finance should pay attention. This recommendation appears in the report of the parliamentary committee and is dated March, 1987. It is the committee's sixth recommendation. It states that although the committee recommends that ceilings on interest rates not be imposed at this time, present money market rates indicate that there should be a substantial downward movement in credit card interest rates and other related charges. In the event that major Schedule A banks do not take action, at least to the extent of the action taken by the Toronto-Dominion Bank, then the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) should investigate to determine if there is anti-competitive behaviour and take appropriate action.

I can tell the Minister what the action should be. The State Treasurer of the State of Illinois took action. He wrote to five or six of the major banks in his state, asking them to lower their interest rates. He told them that if they did not, he would move the state funds which the banks held to other banks. They complied and interest rates in February of this year in that state were at 13.8 per cent. Not only that, the Treasurer introduced a Bill into the State Legislature which provided for an amendment to an Act in relation to the rate of interest. It imposes a ceiling on credit card revolving credit interest rates at the amount of 3 per cent over the prime rate established by the largest bank in Illinois. It provides for such a rate to be adjusted every six months.

We could take the same action here. We could introduce legislation which would tie the interest rates charged to people who do not pay their unpaid balances when they receive their statements to a fixed percentage over the interest rate set by the Bank of Canada.

This is an important matter. Members of Parliament, people who are in the upper-income brackets who use credit cards, pay whatever balance they owe when they receive their statements. They are able to do that. But there are hundreds of thousands of Canadians who find that they cannot do that, and they let it ride. They are being hit with charges of anywhere from 18 per cent to 28 per cent. That is reprehensible. It ought not to be permitted. If the companies involved will not take action voluntarily, then I call upon the Government to bring in legislation which will prevent them from doing this.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention in this regard. I should point out that the Hon. Member has raised an issue that has been discussed many times in the House, namely, the spread between the Bank of Canada rate and the other lending rates in the market-place.

As the Hon. Member knows, on May 26, 1986, the House of Commons issued an order to the Finance Committee to study the present interest rates charged by credit card companies. The Finance Committee tabled its report in March of this year. The Government welcomes the report. At this time, I would like to commend the committee members for their efforts in reviewing this important topic.

The report contains seven recommendations. For most readers the report's principal findings would probably be that there was some room for the level of credit card interest rates to be reduced. Based on the information that was provided by the credit card companies, the House Finance Committee estimated that credit card companies could lower their charges to consumers by about 3 per cent through a combination of lower interest rates, user fees, and longer grace periods.

In April, the major banks lowered their customer charges along the lines of the report's recommendations. Some, but not all banks have recently announced that they will be increasing their credit card rates by just over .5 per cent in October. I would note that since April the prime rate has increased by 125 bases points, from 8.75 per cent to 10 per cent.

While there is undoubtedly a linkage between the bank rate and other interest rates, such as the chartered banks' prime lending rate and credit card interest rates, I would note that it is not an exact or inflexible relationship. The committee's report found that there is not a direct one-to-one relationship between short-term interest rates like the Bank of Canada rate, and the credit card rates. The rates charged by credit card companies reflect a number of considerations and influences. A change in the bank rate does not automatically warrant a change in the credit card rate.

The recommendations of the report deserve careful study. Hon. Members should note that several of the recommendations require federal-provincial consultations. In this regard, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) has established a working group with his provincial counterparts to review the whole issue of cost of credit card disclosure for all types of consumer lending, and the harmonization of federal and provincial requirements.

I believe that the House Finance Committee's report shows that credit cards perform a useful function, but that there is a need for more information so that consumers can take advantage of the existing competition in the market-place. I would remind the Hon. Member that the Government has already started the process of modernizing and strengthening our financial system.

On December 18, 1986, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) tabled the policy paper entitled "New Directions for the Financial Sector". The proposals will allow more players into the market-place, which will benefit not only borrowers but also savers who provide funds to financial intermediaries.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 5.33 p.m.

ROAD SAFETY

NEED FOR EQUAL PROTECTION FOR ALL AUTOMOBILE PASSENGERS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, 4,630 Canadian men and women lost their lives in 1985, and 258,000 of our fellow citizens were injured in highway accidents—262,630 road victims altogether. In the same year, 46,333 people died from malignant tumours and 58,331 from heart diseases. The road made more victims than these two illnesses combined.

Considering the money we spend on medical research to save lives, it seems to me that North American car manufacturers could easily install safety belts, an initiative which does not require research since the technology already exists.

Since 1969 European cars makers have been installing shoulder safety belts for rear-seat passengers.

I would urge all Canadian men and women to sign the petition I am circulating so that North American manufacturers will understand that time has come to provide all passengers—front—and rear-seat occupants alike—with the same protection in case of road accidents. The money saved in hospital care could be earmarked for research in and development of cures for heart conditions, cancer and other diseases.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

PERFORMANCE OF ABITIBI—TÉMISCAMINGUE REGION

Mr. Guy St. Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, August 21, 1987, was a memorable day for the people of Abitibi. About 1,500 people from various towns and villages in the area, as well as from New Quebec, applauded the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and his wife Mila, the Ministers from Quebec and Conservative Members at Saint-Sauveur Church Community Hall in Val-d'Or, where everyone was invited to a corn roast.

The Prime Minister praised the Abitibi-Témiscamingue region's record for the lowest unemployment rate in Quebec: 6.9 per cent compared with 18.6 per cent in 1984.

The Prime Minister and Mrs. Mulroney signed the City of Val-d'Or's guest book at the request of the Mayor, Mr. André Pelletier, in the presence of the aldermen. On the same occasion, the President of the CRDAT provided information on the most pressing problems affecting Abitibi-Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, our region has deserved the attention it has received from a Conservative Government and it will continue to receive that attention with Brian Mulroney as Prime Minister of Canada.

This is a Government that listens to the people.

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA TROLLER FLEET—SALMON CATCH ALLOCATION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) has praised the troll fleet in the Gulf of Georgia because it can be selective in the species of salmon that it harvests. He has said that it should be maintained. But his actions speak louder than his words.

This year's allocation of salmon was set below the minimum needed for many trollers to survive. Now, to add insult to injury, trollers are being shut down before they have been able to catch even this quota. In the meantime, other gear types are being allowed to fish for a good sockeye run. Trollers see this as rank discrimination that has nothing whatever to do with conservation.

In the interests of maintaining this small but vital section of our Pacific fishery I call upon the Minister to take a second look at the situation and to ensure sufficient allocation of fish and sufficient days' fishing so that the Gulf trollers can survive.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—ECONOMIC COUNCIL'S PROJECTION OF BENEFITS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, hardly a day goes by that a senior citizen on a fixed income does not complain to me about the high cost of living. Understandably, they do not believe the inflation statistics when they see prices increasing each week at the supermarket. Because of that seniors in my riding, and seniors all across the country, should take a careful look at the new study by the Economic Council of Canada which states that consumers would be the first to win from free trade with the United States. Lower import prices would give them more to spend.

The Economic Council of Canada has good news for Canadian workers as well. According to its report, free trade with the United States would create at least 189,000 new jobs, and possibly as many as 350,000. The manufacturing sector alone would gain 42,000 jobs.

The study goes on to state that free trade would stimulate our economy fairly and evenly across the country but, because of their size, Quebec and Ontario would net about 60 per cent of the economic benefits.

Let us hope that the CBC will inform Canadian seniors and workers about this new study instead of ignoring it as it has done up until now.

BILL C-22—PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND LEGISLATURE'S OPPOSITION

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Government of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has knuckled under pressure from the American drug lobby. Bill C-22 is another pawn, another attempt to get a free trade ride with a lame duck President. Senior citizens, the sick and the disabled will bear the brunt of this give-away.

On March 10, 1987, the P.E.I. Legislature unanimously passed the following resolution:

> WHEREAS the Government of Canada has introduced amendments to the Patent Act which will inexorably over time result in an increase in the price of prescription drugs;
> AND WHEREAS the Province of Prince Edward Island has recently introduced a Drug Cost Assistance Plan which strives to reduce the cost-burden of drugs for senior citizens;
> AND WHEREAS increased prescription costs will adversely affect this Plan and indeed all other citizens of our Province who require drugs from time to time;
> THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that this Assembly urge the Prime Minister in the strongest possible terms not to proceed with this Bill.

TRADE

ADVANTAGES OF FREE TRADE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the reputable Economic Council of Canada gave its official assessment yesterday of the bilateral trade talks with the United States. Signing the agreement would mean 189,000 new jobs. In addition, the ECC expects Canadians will become more efficient and more competitive, with, as a result, 350,000 new jobs. Of the 36 industrial groups recognized by Statistics Canada, 30 will benefit significantly from free trade. These benefits will also be felt at the consumer level. The ECC expects prices to drop by 5 per cent to 6 per cent.

When an organization like the Economic Council of Canada, a strictly autonomous organization with an excellent staff, speaks out in favour of our trade talks with the United States, adding its voice to that of business, and specifies the considerable benefit to the consumer, it is becoming embarrassing for articulate politicians to be against free trade.

Mr. Speaker, in the days to come we shall see whether the Liberals and the Socialists are indeed articulate politicians.

THE MINISTRY

ALLEGED PAYMENT FOR ARRANGING MEETING WITH MINISTER

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, last year a Conservative cabinet Minister resigned amid allegations that a $5,000 fee had been charged for a reception where Quebecers could get a chance to meet with members of the Mulroney Cabinet. Today it was reported that Bill Jarvis, President of the Progressive Conservative Party, had charged a fee of $1,200 to arrange a meeting between the Inuit Broadcasting Corporation and the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie).

Canadians are now asking why some people have to pay to get the ear of the Government when only yesterday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: We have had some difficulty before with statements by Members which amount to what could be taken as allegations of wrongdoing by any Member of this House. I have had to indicate that it is not appropriate to make those allegations in statements by Members.

I regret very much interrupting the Hon. Member. I do not know what more the Hon. Member might have had to say, but I just wonder if, under the circumstances, she would co-operate and perhaps consult with some of her colleagues, keeping in mind what I have said. Perhaps some of the substance of what she wants to bring to the Chamber could be brought at another time.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NON-COVERAGE OF DEMONSTRATION SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the mandate of the publicly funded CBC is to bring to Canadians accurate, fair and unbiased reporting of national affairs. I have observed many occasions on which the CBC has conveniently and with ulterior motives either ignored or exaggerated issues in a conscious effort to promote its socialist beliefs.

Never has there been a more blatant abuse of the CBC's mandate than that which was demonstrated yesterday by the CBC's deliberate choice to ignore the more than 2,000 Canadians demonstrating in support of Bill C-22.

CBC TV made a deliberate decision to remain silent and prevent Canadians from being properly informed of a major national event. This irresponsible, biased approach to reporting is totally unacceptable.

This lack of accountability falls squarely on the shoulders of the President of the CBC, Mr. Pierre Juneau, and for this reason I demand his immediate resignation.

TAX REFORM

INVITATION FROM LIBERAL PARTY TO OPPOSE TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, a poll conducted on behalf of the Department of Finance shows that 71 per cent of Canadians are against the proposal of the Conservative Government to tax bread, milk and butter.

We are campaigning to make people aware of this issue, and to date 25,000 people have signed a petition urging the Conservative Government to drop this project.

Last weekend the pathetic Quebec Conservative caucus asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to reconsider this stupid idea. Since the Prime Minister has refused to withdraw this measure and wants to go ahead with his suggestion aimed at taxing bread, milk and butter, I would simply tell all Canadians that the Liberal Party is pursuing its awareness campaign and urging them to sign petitions to force the Government to reconsider such an idiotic decision.

BILL C-22—SENATOR'S REPORTED OPPOSITION TO GOVERNMENT SPONSORED LEGISLATION

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, the passage of Bill C-22 has been blocked for the time being by the Senate. The Senate says that if this Bill is passed, drug prices will rise. The Senate says that innovative drug companies cannot be trusted to bring forward the money for jobs and for the research and development which they have promised. The Senate says that a generic drug industry cannot survive side by side with an innovative industry under this Bill. These are false and misleading statements. The Toronto Star today reports the real reason for the Senate's rejection of Bill C-22.

• (1415)

Senator Philippe Gigantès, Deputy Liberal Leader in the Senate, has said, and I quote:

> I will continue to oppose any legislation that might make Brian Mulroney look good.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Horner: If that is the logic behind Mr. Gigantès' action, then it is clear that he knows implementation of Bill C-22 will not only make this Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) look good, it will make them look great.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: Canadians will not be hoodwinked by a small group of Liberal-appointed Senators who have no right to frustrate the will of the electorate and in the process kill the chance for progress in medical technology and jobs all across Canada. We are on to you, Senator!

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—MINISTER'S POSITION CRITICIZED

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, as we all know, the Parties involved in the rail negotiations are still meeting and I am certain we all hope a settlement can be reached. However, I want to register my disappointment with the remarks yesterday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) who appeared to take sides on the issue when he came to such a spirited defence of the existing job security arrangements at CN. It is those very arrangements that the rail unions want improvements in and they are bargaining over that.

It was very inappropriate in my judgment for the Minister of Transport to appear to take the company side. It gives one pause as to just what kind of back to work legislation we might get if it comes to that.

I also want to say it was unfortunate that the Minister tried to maintain that what is going on with the rail strike is unrelated to deregulation. In their arguments at the negotiating table the railways themselves are saying this is related to deregulation, and for the Minister to say otherwise shows either a great deal of incompetence, or something else.

NON-COVERAGE OF DEMONSTRATION SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, it was gratifying yesterday and equally so today to see the thousands of people out on the lawn of Parliament Hill demonstrating in support of Bill C-22.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Such a visible show of support on the Hill for the efforts of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Government is unprecedented in my time here. Even so, CBC TV did not consider it newsworthy enough to report on The National news last night. That would have enabled Canadians across the country to see this kind of support.

Mr. St. Germain: Socialist International.

Mrs. Collins: I can assure my colleagues that, but for the great physical distance between British Columbia and Ottawa, the people of my province would also be here to demonstrate their support. Why? Because British Columbians know that hundreds of jobs will be created in that province as a result of Bill C-22. They know these will be the best kind of jobs, research jobs in the high-tech pharmaceutical industry. Already over $121 million has been committed for pharmaceutical research and development in British Columbia.

It is frightening to think that these investments are in serious peril because opposition Members and Senators delay and dilly-dally with this vital legislation. Let the Members of the other place open their ears and hear the chants on the Hill, from British Columbia to Newfoundland: Bill C-22 must go through!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUESTION PERIOD

THE SENATE

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

We on this side of the House are in favour of an elected Senate. The New Democratic Party advocates the abolition of the Senate. What formula does the Prime Minister support at the present time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the formula mentioned in Part VI of the Meech Lake Accord where it is provided that annual conferences of the First Ministers shall be convened once a year, commencing in 1988. Section 2 reads as follows:

• (1420)

[English]

> (2) The conferences convened under subsection (1) shall have included on their agenda the following matters:
> (a) Senate reform, including the role and functions of the Senate, its powers, the method of selecting Senators and representation in the Senate;

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is desperately climbing back to high ground. On April 19, 1985, in an interview with The Globe and Mail the Prime Minister said he opposed an elected Senate. On June 7, 1985, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice introduced a motion to limit the powers of the Senate. The Prime Minister refused to take part in debate on that motion and then killed it at the end of the day.

Yesterday in this House in the space of 15 minutes the Prime Minister said he wanted to abolish the Senate, reconstitute it, abolish it again, abolish it quickly, follow the constitutional process, improve the Senate, abolish it again, then that he wanted it on the agenda for a constitutional conference, and then that he wanted to reform it. Finally, at the end of the afternoon, he said he wanted to elect it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Even for the Prime Minister that is a tour de force. Would he tell us briefly what his position is at this moment, 2.22 p.m?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are counting the hours, are you, John?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that enumeration sounded as confused as Michel Robert's position on the leadership of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When the President of the Liberal Party was in the private sector he was a member of the Macdonald Commission and in favour of free trade. On July 12 he wanted to—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Gauthier: The Senate is the question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister would save those remarks for a question which deliberately raises the issue. Perhaps he could come back to answering the question the right hon. gentleman asked him.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I apologize, but inasmuch as the Leader of the Opposition was suggesting the existence of alleged contradictions in my position, I thought he would welcome the reference to Mr. Robert who has made some very grave and serious implications which bear upon the Meech Lake Accord.

Some Hon. Members: Order, order!

Mr. Ouellet: There is a question of privilege here.

Mr. Kaplan: This is a real class act.

Mr. Waddell: Tell us your latest position on the Senate. That is the question.

Mr. Mulroney: The Member for Vancouver—Kingsway is asking for the latest position on the Senate. I would like to appoint him, because the NDP is trying to squeeze him out of his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister has clearly answered the question, but it was not the question put by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister recited the Constitutional Accord signed at the Langevin Building. Under that Accord he is obliged to fill Senate vacancies from a list presented by the provinces.

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to keep his word to his provincial counterparts and appoint to the Senate the people they present to him? Or is it his intention to keep his word which he gave yesterday to the House of Commons that he will abolish the Senate? Or will he keep his word to the regions of the country that he is in favour of an elected Senate? Which two of those three promises does he intend to break?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend was present in the House when I was asked by the Leader of the NDP on March 5, 1985, the following:

> —will the Prime Minister give us his assurance today that he will propose to the provinces the correct, democratic action, which is to abolish this abominable institution?

That was in reference to the Senate. I responded that I would give that assurance—

• (1425)

Mr. Broadbent: It is a good description.

Mr. Mulroney: It is a good description by the Hon. Member. I responded that:

> I would give that assurance to my hon. friend if the Leader of the Opposition would stand up right now and say he seconds that motion.

That was on March 5, 1985, and the Leader of the Opposition remained in his seat and declined to give the kinds of approval—

Mr. Gauthier: He spoke on it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I spoke on it in this House. You did not.

Mr. Mulroney: They asked a question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: I was asked a question about it. I responded two years ago in regard to the House. Since that time, because nothing had taken place, the Edmonton round began. The First Ministers suggested that the constitutional conference be devoted to bringing Quebec into the Constitution. In the course of that major effort, which has been supported by the three political Parties in the House of Commons, we managed to agree upon a formula which brings Quebec into the Constitution.

A second provision of that provides for Senate reform pursuant to objective criteria that we set out. As a result of that, the Edmonton meeting of First Ministers having been held last year, the meeting of the Premiers will take place in Fredericton and I have written to the chairman: "Now that the process of ratifying the constitutional Accord is underway, I want to advise you formally that I shall put forward, on behalf of the Government of Canada, a comprehensive proposal to reform the Senate at our first Constitutional Conference to be convened prior to the end of 1988".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell my hon. friend—

Mr. Ouellet: It is a speech. This is Question Period.

Mr. Mulroney: If I may just conclude, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it interests the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, I would be happy to instruct the House Leader of the Government to meet with the House Leaders of the Opposition Parties so that, prior to the next constitutional conference, the Parliament of Canada can put a united front together in terms of Senate reform which I think would be in the interest of all Canadians.

ELECTED SENATE PROPOSAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we have another example of a new dance craze in the Conservative Party. It is called the Senate shuffle; one step forward, three steps backward, and 15 steps sideways.

The Prime Minister confirmed in his last statement that his position is that he wants to abolish the Senate. In light of that statement that he just made 50 seconds ago—he should not forget it that quickly—when one considers that three out of four of the western Premiers, including two Conservatives, the all-Party Senate and Commons Committee, as well as the Committee of the Alberta Legislature have come forward with major proposals for an elected Senate which more effectively represents the regions, why does the Prime Minister insist upon this position of abolishing the Senate when he knows an elected, accountable Senate is absolutely essential for the full participation of the western regions of the country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend misstates the case very substantially. I proposed in the House of Commons my own preference, supported by the Leader of the New Democratic Party, which was in 1985 that we proceed collectively at that time to abolish collectively the other House.

Since that time, pursuant to a request of the First Ministers, I got together with them on behalf of all parliamentarians of Canada and sought a new formula which would unite Canada, and it was called the Meech Lake Accord. Everyone in the House, by and large, supported that.

Because the Liberals refused to deal with the Senate in 1985, when we reached the Accord in 1987 one of the provisions in that allows for First Ministers to deal with Senate reform at our first constitutional conference in 1988. Surely, if the Member from Winnipeg is supportive of the Meech Lake Accord, he will support the second proposition in the Meech Lake Accord which is Senate reform at the next meeting in 1988.

• (1430)

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is turning a dance craze into a whirling dervish. Now we don't know where he stands on anything.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think I probably speak on behalf of all Members in indicating to Hon. Members that it is my feeling that the preambles are getting very lengthy indeed.

Mr. Ouellet: What about the answers? Come on.

Mr. Speaker: I shall be watching them. I am sure that, if the preambles are shortened, Hon. Ministers will co-operate in shortening the answers.

PRIME MINISTER'S MESSAGE TO PREMIERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Let me put a very straightforward question to the Prime Minister, something he probably—

Mr. Crosbie: That is unusual.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are incapable of doing that.

Mr. Axworthy: I know we won't receive a straightforward answer, but let us try. The Prime Minister said yesterday he wants to reform the Senate. Is the Prime Minister prepared today to telex the provincial Premiers, who are meeting this weekend in Saint John, clearly stating that this House will go on record, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said yesterday, in endorsing a Senate reform package with an elected Senate more effectively representing the regions? Will the Prime Minister telex the Premiers asking if they are in agreement with that position and then we can get on with the business of making sure the regions of this country are effectively represented at the national level?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend had been listening to the answer, he would have heard in response to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition I have already done that. I have conveyed the message to Premier Hatfield who is chairing the conference of Premiers on the process of ratifying the Constitutional Accord now under way:

> I want to advise you formally that I shall put forward, on behalf of the Government of Canada, a comprehensive proposal to reform the Senate at our first Constitutional Conference to be convened prior to the end of 1988.

That I have said very often will be the kind of proposal which, I can assure my hon. friend, will make the institution more democratic, and which I think he would agree would stop the kinds of statements we saw today where Senator Philippe Gigantès said that he will continue "to oppose any legislation that might make Brian Mulroney look good".

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: That is a shame and disgrace to parliamentarians and to the Liberal Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Only a few minutes ago the Prime Minister indicated his desire for a Senate reform that would reduce the powers of the Senate. At the same time, the Leader of the Opposition has made it clear that his party is against the concept of an unelected Senate. The Premiers are having a meeting during the weekend in Saint John. Considering the objectives of all three Parties, would the Prime Minister send the following clear message to the Premiers at Saint John: That we, gathered here in the House of Commons, wish to adopt the motion presented by the former Minister of Justice and that the Prime Minister supported a few moments ago. We can immediately adopt this resolution, whose purpose is to reduce the present powers of the Senate. Thanks to this motion, we could immediately start the very important process of Senate reform.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask my hon. friend to remember that considering the fact that we are committed to the Meech Lake Accord—we made that commitment on June 3—there are certain procedures to be followed. And that is perfectly normal.

I have already advised the Premiers that acting on behalf of the Canadian Government, I intend to table a comprehensive proposal on Senate reform. Furthermore, today I have advised the House Leaders of the other Parties that the Deputy Prime Minister is prepared to meet with them to find out whether we can agree on a formula, perhaps unanimously, for tabling this constitutional proposal. It will be a great day for Canadian democracy, and I invite my hon. friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, to pledge his co-operation.

[English]

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SEEK SUPPORT OF PREMIERS TO CURB SENATE POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows that the process about which he is talking is one that can in fact take a number of years, even if it is begun in good faith by the Premiers of the provinces and the Parliament of Canada. I would like to suggest to the Prime Minister something that could be attractive to all the Premiers now, all of whom are on record, to my knowledge, as opposing the existing powers of the present Senate, as are the Parties in the House of Commons.

Since it requires only seven of the Premiers to agree at this point before the Meech Lake Accord is agreed upon, will the Prime Minister make an immediate request to the Premiers, independent of the Meech Lake Accord agreement, to take action now, which they could do in the next 48 hours, to support the resolution that was introduced by the Minister of Justice two years ago and which then had the Prime Minister's support? That, surely, could be a major first step in Senate reform.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is right, it could have been when he and I agreed on it in 1985 and we could not get the Leader of the Liberal Party to agree.

Mr. Broadbent: We can do it. We can do it now.

Mr. Mulroney: No, no. No, it cannot today.

Mr. Axworthy: You have a majority.

Mr. Mulroney: It cannot today. The Leader of the New Democratic Party says this proposition would be attractive to all Premiers now. That is not the case.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why?

Mr. Axworthy: Why not?

Mr. Mulroney: Because, pursuant to the Edmonton initiated round the question of the powers and the future of the Senate came up at Meech Lake, and it was agreed unanimously during the course of that round that the Senate, indeed, would be reformed pursuant to an agreed upon clause that is in the Meech Lake Agreement. To violate that clause would be to violate the Meech Lake Agreement. So my proposal to my hon. friend is this—

Mr. Ouellet: Today you realized you were wrong yesterday.

Mr. Blaikie: Shut up over there.

Mr. Mulroney: My proposal to my hon. friend, who has been very consistent in this area, both of constitutional reform and vis-à-vis the Senate, is that he authorize his House Leader to sit down with the Deputy Prime Minister so we put together an unanimous package of Senate reform that the Prime Minister of Canada can then bring to the Constitutional Conference in 1988, which would be subject to parliamentary review and debate prior to the Constitutional Conference. It seems to me that would be very much in keeping with our democratic traditions and would be excellent for the House of Commons.

REQUEST THAT RESOLUTION BE PLACED BEFORE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, whatever happens down the road that will require, as the Prime Minister knows, unanimous agreement from all the provinces. Surely it is consistent with the spirit of Meech Lake, if I can put it that way, and consistent with the expressed will of the Premiers who have talked about this in public, if we pass a resolution in this House, supported by the Government and at least the New Democratic Party—we could do this within 24 hours—that would at least reduce the existing powers of the present Senate. That would be a first major step toward democracy. After that we could move toward the much more substantial reform about which the Prime Minister talks. Will he at least do that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend submits a resolution to reduce the power of the existing Senate. We have in train, now in place within months, a procedure which will allow us all to operate very profound and fundamental reforms of the Senate. I have asked my hon. friend today for his co-operation in trying to put forward a package that would be unanimous, representing all Members of the House of Commons, in view of the kind—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What?

Mr. Axworthy: What is it?

Mr. Mulroney: He asks what is it. I have already indicated, if my hon. friend will listen, that it is the intention of the Government of Canada to submit a comprehensive program for Senate reform which is a necessary corollary to our undertakings at Meech lake.

I point out to my hon. friend, who has been supportive not only of the idea of Senate reform, but supportive of the Meech Lake Agreement, something I think my hon. friend knows. Having signed the Agreement and having had that approved by all Members of this House of Commons pursuant to June 3, the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada have bound themselves to respect the provisions of that Agreement. That Agreement provides for comprehensive Senate reform to be considered by the First Ministers in 1988.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mulroney: That is what I plan to do. I hope I will have the full support of the Leader of the New Democratic Party and, hopefully, the Liberal Opposition.

• (1440)

PROVISIONS OF MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Why does the Prime Minister feel that today he is bound by the Meech Lake Accord, but yesterday he was not and he could propose a dramatic Senate change?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is baseless, inaccurate, and misleading.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

ABOLITION PROPOSAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Today the Prime Minister states that my Leader is not entitled to propose any Senate reform other than the Meech Lake Accord. Yesterday the Prime Minister himself proposed a totally different change: abolition. Why was the Prime Minister allowed to do it yesterday, and my Leader, and the Leader of the NDP not allowed to do it today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the matter of abolition came up in 1985, the Leader of the Liberal Party declined to endorse what the Leader of the NDP and I were interested in proposing.

Personally, I am very doubtful about the value of a non-elected Senate, particularly when it is causing the loss of thousands of jobs in Toronto and Montreal.

I want the Liberals to deal with that anti-democratic feeling in their own Party first.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in respect to trying to understand the position of the Prime Minister with regard to Senate reform, I remind him that yesterday he stated to the Leader of the Opposition that he was prepared to "—undertake today to meet so that we can arrange for a resolution to go before both Houses to provide for the abolition of the Senate—"

That was the position of the Prime Minister yesterday. Why is he preoccupied today with a process which he says is in train that yesterday he was prepared to derail completely? Why one position yesterday, and another today?

This is a very serious matter, and I think that the House and the people of Canada deserve a more coherent response from their Prime Minister.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is no problem with the abolition of the Senate. There is no problem whatsoever. The Leader of the NDP and I discussed this at length in 1985. What the Leader of the Opposition said yesterday—

Mr. Ouellet: The same old record, repeat the same things as yesterday.

Mr. Mulroney: I would invite you to check Hansard.

What the Leader of the Opposition was referring to yesterday was a reform project, and replacing the Senate with an elected Senate. That is at variance with the undertaking of the Meech Lake Accord, wherein we have agreed with the provinces to meet in 1988 to reform the Senate in that manner.

If we have the undertaking of the Leader of the Official Opposition, because yesterday he said that he would deliver the Liberal Senate, and if he is prepared to say today that he will deliver the Liberal Senate in support of a resolution which will result in the immediate abolition of the Senate, that is something that I would be very interested in having the House Leaders meet to discuss immediately.

CURBING SENATE'S POWERS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): The Prime Minister has acknowledged that the process which he has in mind may take some time. There will be a constitutional conference in 1988. There is no guarantee that there will be unanimous agreement at that conference, therefore the process could go on for some time.

Why is the Prime Minister unwilling to consider the proposal of the Hon. Member for Oshawa that the House take steps within its power under the present amending formula which would only take seven provinces constituting 50 per cent or more to limit the powers of the Senate, which the Prime Minister now states that he wishes abolished and replaced? Why can that measure not be taken in the meantime?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated already my support of the idea of the Leader of the NDP. I have responded fully in regard to the abolition. I would be happy to discuss this with the First Ministers. I raised it myself. I put forward for the First Ministers' consideration the abolition of the Senate, and I was prepared to come back to the House of Commons and seek your permission and endorsement, inasmuch as the Leader of the NDP and I had already had that discussion.

In terms of the abolition of the Senate, I believe in its present capacity it is undemocratic, and it does not reflect the needs and the values of the people of Canada. I was ready to propose its abolition at that time. Since that time, with the support of all Members of the House of Commons, I signed an undertaking in terms of Senate reform for the future.

I am happy to bring forward a program of Senate reform. I invited the Leader of the NDP, and the Leader of the Liberals to delegate their House Leaders in order that we could bring forward a comprehensive program for Senate reform.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—PREPARATION OF LEGISLATION TO END WORK STOPPAGE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Yesterday the Government gave notice of legislation to deal with the rail strike. Does this mean that the Minister has lost hope of a negotiated settlement?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): On the contrary, Mr. Speaker.

JOB SECURITY ISSUE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): If the Minister believes and has hope that there will be a negotiated settlement, what types of munition has he given his chief negotiator, Mr. Kelly, who is very well-known and very experienced in this area? I have been informed that the feelings of the workers are that Mr. Kelly is in an impossible situation, because he has absolutely no room to manoeuvre.

Will the Minister indicate to us if Mr. Kelly has in hand, or in his pocket, a deal that will allow the workers the same type of employment security that exists, for instance, in the Ontario Northland Railways for their employees?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to repeat an answer that I gave yesterday to a similar question. I gave the answer in French, so I will read the translation:

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that right now, parties are the masters of their own fate at the bargaining table, and I encourage them sincerely to come to a negotiated settlement.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET NEGOTIATORS PRIOR TO INTRODUCING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Labour. I too hope that negotiations will conclude successfully.

Yesterday in the House the Minister of Transport gave a very passionate defence of the present CN position on job security. Workers feel that they are in jeopardy in terms of getting an impartial and fair piece of legislation through this House.

If negotiations break down, will the Minister guarantee to meet with both sides prior to introducing legislation in this House?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat the answer that I gave a moment ago.

The parties are at the table, they have their own fate in their hands. I encourage them to come to a negotiated settlement. If they do not, I will act quickly.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): The words of the Minister of Transport make it difficult for both sides to feel that they will get a fair shake from the Cabinet.

I again ask the Minister, not to delay legislation, but to assure both sides that they will have an audience with him prior to his introducing legislation in the House. Will the Minister do that?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think that the best fair shake the parties can have is the one they presently have at the table where they have their own fate in their hands, and where they can negotiate the terms of their own collective agreement. I encourage them to do that. If they don't, and if they fail, I will act quickly.

AIR CANADA

FUTURE OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the future of Air Canada.

Last spring the Minister responsible for privatization told the House that Air Canada was under consideration by the Government as a target for privatization. At that time the Minister promised the people of Canada, and the management of Air Canada, that a decision would be forthcoming this summer.

In light of the urgent need for the management of Air Canada to make plans for fleet replacement from now until the year 2000, can the Minister of State for Privatization, or indeed the Prime Minister himself, tell Canadians and the House what decision the Government has made with respect to Air Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to explain to the House a decision on Air Canada, because none has been taken.

As I have pointed out to the House a number of times, the situation in regard to Air Canada, as with Petro-Canada and Radiochemical Company is under review. We will make a decision when consideration has been given to all relevant issues.

These are complex matters, and they are important to many people, including the company. We will make the correct decision when we are ready to make it.

• (1450)

PRIVATIZATION—REPORTED PRINTING OF BROCHURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer sounds like the Prime Minister's description of his position on the Senate—somewhat confused. Will the Minister be forthright with respect to this question? The fact of the matter is Air Canada has printed 25,000 brochures explaining the Government's decision to privatize Air Canada. Obviously there has not been a decision made here. Either one was made and it was reversed, or Cabinet has not made a decision.

In the event that the Prime Minister has vetoed the position of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of State for Privatization in consideration of looking consistent on this question, is the Government prepared to subsidize Air Canada, to rebate to Air Canada the tremendous cost and expense it has incurred in printing brochures to explain a position which has now been reversed by the Prime Minister of Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I am not employed by Air Canada. It prints brochures as it may see fit. I am the Minister of State for Privatization. I have answered the question already. I would be very interested in knowing where the Hon. Member stands on this issue.

THE SENATE

CURBING OF POWERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Prime Minister. A few minutes ago in reply to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill the Prime Minister suggested that he would be prepared to consider a proposal I made earlier, namely, that a request go to the Premiers to look at taking action now under the existing amending formula which would require just seven provinces to agree to the resolution that the Government itself introduced to reduce the existing powers of the Senate.

Would the Prime Minister clarify that suggestion since the Government proposed it, since we are in agreement with it, and I hope that the Official Opposition would agree? Is he now saying that he would be prepared to have this message relayed to the Premiers who will be meeting tomorrow, to get their response to that quite specific kind of reform of existing powers?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have indicated to the House that I have already written to the Premiers indicating the intention of the Government, as agreed, to bring forward a comprehensive proposal in regard to Senate reform.

Because of the interest in the matter, most recently yesterday and the day before, I indicated that, clearly, a comprehensive, unanimous expression of the House of Commons is better than one arrived at unilaterally. Thus I have instructed the Government House Leader to be ready to meet with the Opposition House Leader and the House Leader of the New Democratic Party to work out the modalities that would perhaps give rise to an expression of opinion on this important matter. Therefore, as Prime Minister of Canada I could go forward on behalf of all Members of Parliament to express a single view of the reform of the Senate which, clearly, all of us want.

POSITION OF PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to question the Prime Minister's sincerity on this very important subject. However, considering that the Government has expressed its will on the limited type of reform that I am now addressing, and for which I have indicated our support; and considering that even with the goodwill of all the parties concerned it could take a number of days to discuss a more comprehensive resolution, will the Prime Minister please contact the Premiers to see if they will agree to this simple resolution? All they have to do is say no. They are meeting there for two days.

If they believe that it is inconsistent with Meech Lake, which I do not, then they can say no. Or, if seven of them believe in limited and specific restriction of powers of the Senate, and if they want to move in that important way toward democracy, then all I can say is that all Canadians will be cheering them on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the various discussions that I have had with the First Ministers there is general agreement on one thing. It is that the present Senate as constituted is profoundly undemocratic and must be reformed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: And Bill C-22 proves it!

Mr. Mulroney: I think that what we see going on today with Bill C-22, the Senate depriving the creation of thousands of jobs in Ontario, Quebec and across the country, is an indication of the anti-democratic nature of the Senate.

Mr. Keeper: So do something!

Mr. Speaker: I think all Hon. Members would want the Chair to try to guide the answers back to the actual question, although the matter which the Right Hon. Prime Minister raises has of course been the subject of exchange. I think that the question that the Leader of the New Democratic Party put was fairly clear. I think that the Right Hon. Prime Minister has met that question.

MULTICULTURALISM

APPLICATION TO ESTABLISH TELEVISION STATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for multiculturalism. In the minutes of the Conservative caucus agenda of last Wednesday, August 19, under the name of his own Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Duvernay, it states:

> The request from MTV which is before the CRTC should be blocked. This action would be viewed favourably by Quebec ethnic groups.

Given that the Toronto MTV application endeavours to establish a nation-wide multilingual, multicultural television station, and without getting into the particulars of the application, can the Minister tell the House whether or not he agrees with the views of his Parliamentary Secretary who advocates that the Government politically block this application? Can he explain why ethnic groups in Quebec would oppose such a broadcasting initiative?

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I was not at the caucus meeting last Wednesday. I do not know the material to which the Hon. Member refers. Since he has the minutes perhaps he could send them over to me. I will take a look at them and if there is any wisdom or light I can shed on the question he has raised, then I would be only too pleased to do so.

VIEWS ATTRIBUTED TO PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister was not at the caucus meeting I would like to address a question to his Parliamentary Secretary. The Parliamentary Secretary said yesterday in a public interview that he agrees and does not retract the comments which are clearly attributed to him in the minutes of that caucus meeting. Therefore, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary whether his views to block the CRTC application reflect the views of the Government and the Minister of Communications? If so, do you not think that it is most inappropriate for you to interfere politically with the—

Some Hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will simply help here a bit. First, when the Minister is here it is not appropriate that the Parliamentary Secretary answer. Second, I know that the Hon. Member does not intend to use the personal pronoun "you" in his question. However, the question is there, the Minister is here, and I would ask the Minister to see if he can answer it.

Hon. David Crombie (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again I have to say that I do not have the material. I have not yet spoken to the Parliamentary Secretary. The only thing I can suggest is that the Hon. Member may want to exchange caucus minutes with me, and I will do what I can with respect to conversations between those who are involved.

With respect to the substance of the matter, the matter is of course an important one and I will take it under that light and within that consideration.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. This evening in Edmonton thousands of angry Principal Group investors are meeting to demand a full and public inquiry. They want to get at all the facts concerning the role of provincial and federal Governments in the collapse of Principal Group.

Since the Governments of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and British Columbia have all rejected calls for a public inquiry, is the Minister prepared to do what the investors want and establish a public inquiry to investigate fully the collapse of Principal Group?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, absolutely. The Government of Alberta is conducting a public inquiry. It is a full and open public inquiry. I gather the Premier of that province has gone further and said that if in any way the Government has made some mistakes it will act in such a way as to compensate.

ALLEGATIONS OF MISREPRESENTATION—PROGRESS OF INVESTIGATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the inquiry that is occurring in Alberta is restricted. I will address my next question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

On August 12 the Minister of State for Finance assured me that he would inform the House shortly of the results of an investigation concerning the allegations of misrepresentation. Is the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs now prepared to tell us if that investigation has been completed and if charges are being considered?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the Marketing Practices Branch under my Department conducts these investigations under a mandate given it by Parliament, not by me. It has involved the RCMP in this investigation. It had indicated two or three weeks ago that it was expecting to be done by the end of August and it will be making recommendations or not making recommendations to the Attorney General based on that investigation. As the Hon. Member understands, I have no right to interfere with that investigation and I do not intend to do so.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

ONTARIO'S LIFELINE PROGRAM—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Finance. As the Minister probably knows, sewers, beaches and the general water quality across Canada are badly in need of attention. Since its election, the Government has paid no attention to them at all.

Recently the Government of Ontario asked Ottawa to participate in its Lifeline Program, a program designed to clean up our waters, by assuming one-third of the costs of the program. Ottawa said no. Will the Minister reconsider Ottawa's negative decision and ensure Ottawa's participation in Ontario's Lifeline Program to the extent of one-third of its costs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not directly aware of the details of this Lifeline Program to which the Hon. Member has referred. In his preamble he referred to the broader question of municipal infrastructure. I think the position we made clear in this House is very well understood and I do not think I need to make any further comment on that.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this is a very disappointing answer. It is my understanding that the Ontario Minister of the Environment has put this proposal to the Government of Canada through the Minister of Finance.

If the Minister of Finance can find money to subsidize nuclear submarines, surely he can find money to repair and improve the quality of water. Therefore, my question simply is why is water quality not a major priority of the Minister?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, water quality is a a major priority of the Minister of Finance and of this Government. I think the Hon. Member has put into his question a number of elements that relate to the broader question of municipal infrastructure. I am quite prepared to look at the Lifeline Program and its constituents to see whether things do qualify for federal funding. However, if it falls under the question of municipal infrastructure, that question has been raised on a number of occasions and I think the Hon. Member is aware of the position taken on it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East will have a single question and that will be the last one in Question Period.

CHILD CARE

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Why is child care such a low priority of the Government? Why have there been so many postponements? First there was the postponement from June 30 and then the "Dear Shirley" letter. Now we understand that the Minister has sent messages to provincial Ministers asking for another delay. What is the problem? Why can we not at least have the Minister table the national objectives for child care, or does he not have any?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, child care is not a low priority of the Government. That has been stated very clearly, not only in terms of a program the Prime Minister has very clearly endorsed and led, but additionally there are moneys being spent at the present time. We know that the amount must be increased and these issues are being dealt with by Cabinet. I think fair-minded people recognize their complexity in terms of provincial jurisdiction and the ability to pay which varies from province to province. These considerations are being examined very clearly. It is a high priority on the Minister's agenda. It is not a low priority for us, it might be for her.

Miss MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the fifth report, dated April 27, 1987, is entitled "An Interim Report on the Recommendations of the Task Force on Broadcasting Policy: Specialized Services and some Proposed Legislative Amendments", and the sixth report, dated May 6, is entitled "Recommendations for a new Broadcasting Act".

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEE ON BILL C-71

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Hon. Member for Québec-Est (Mr. Tremblay), the Chairman of the legislative committee on Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976, and the Citizenship Act, I have the honour to present the Bill to the House without amendment.

This is an historic moment. While it is over 40 years late, this Government had the moral courage to study the issue of alleged war criminals living in Canada through the Deschênes Commission and to present Bill C-71 to provide legislation to prosecute any war criminals or those who have committed crimes against humanity in the past or who do so in the future.

PETITIONS

REQUEST TO CHANGE ALLEGED DISCRIMINATORY PROVISIONS OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGULATIONS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions on behalf of the residents of the Labrador coast and the communities of Nain, Rigolet, Makkovik, Hopedale, Postville, Cartwright and Cape Charles, all calling upon the House and the Government to change the discrimination which now exists in the unemployment insurance regulations; whereas, fishermen on the Labrador coast cannot continue to collect unemployment insurance benefits up until the time they go fishing, namely, the beginning of July, and must forsake those benefits in the middle of May. The petitioners call upon the House to change this discrimination.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is again my duty today to table a petition signed by residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that our Honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. The petition reads as follows:

Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed upon Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack food, candies and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing a general tax on goods and services, including food;

And whereas food constitutes a vital element to every-day life, and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, for example, the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, and youth;

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

REQUEST TO REJECT BILL C-22

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have here petitions with a total of 406 signatures, including 161 from the Asbestos and Danville area, 25 from Sherbrooke, 80 from the Montreal Metropolitan area, 109 from the cities of Toronto, Scarborough, Almonte, Kingston, Brampton, Etobicoke in Ontario, and finally 26 from Calgary in Alberta.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table these petitions so that the people who have signed them an add their voices to the attention of a great many Canadian men and women and ask the Parliament of Canada to turn down Bill C-22 which would certainly increase the prices of medicinal drugs.

CHILD ABUSE—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATIVE ACTION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by a large number of residents of Burnaby, Richmond, Delta, Vancouver and North Vancouver. They were particularly inspired by my constituent Pat Stephens, who raised serious concerns over the present provisions of the Criminal Code regarding child abuse. They ask that more severe sentences be given to offenders, that all child sexual abusers be tested for AIDS, that authorities forward information regarding child sexual abusers and their new addresses to the Police Department of the city they move to, and that a minimal amount of time elapse between the laying of charges and the date of sentencing, thus lessening the emotional strain on the victims of such abuse. My petitioners call upon Parliament to take effective action on this important matter.

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF ISOLATED TAXATION BENEFITS

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in my continuing efforts to have isolated taxation benefits extended to the communities of Meadow Lake, Dorintosh and Rapid View in northwestern Saskatchewan, I have not only the duty but the honour to present 10 further petitions containing hundreds of signatures of residents of those communities who call upon Parliament to consider the extension of isolated taxation benefits to those communities which should be included in the new schedule when it is tabled.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis), in light of the remarks of the Hon. Member who tabled the report from the legislative committee on Bill C-71 respecting war criminals, whether the Government is prepared to call that Bill for third reading today. We in this Party are prepared to proceed immediately with third reading of this important legislation without further debate. I have discussed this matter with my friend and I hope the Opposition House Leader would be prepared to agree as well.

Mr. Prud'homme: We are on Bill C-22 now.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I agree with my friend. In keeping with the normal practice I will be glad to discuss this matter with the House Leaders of the other two Parties, and if that is agreeable to them, we will proceed to do something as soon as possible.

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I said on the resumption of Parliament for this so-called emergency session, it is clear the real reason we were called back, only for the thirteenth time since Confederation, has nothing to do with the refugee situation. It has everything to do with the absolutely obscene desire of the Government of Canada to bow to American pressure to amend our drug patent legislation and dramatically raise drug prices in order to maintain the free trade negotiations with the U.S. That is the reason and it is a cop-out, as well as a cave-in to the American pharmaceutical industry and the U.S. trade negotiations.

[Translation]

It is indisputable that Bill C-22 before the House, as introduced by the Government, will increase by several hundred million dollars a year the prices paid by Canadian men and women for their medicinal drugs. That is an indisputable fact. No matter what the Government and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (M. Andre) may say, they cannot change that fact. Well, as we could have expected, the Government is trying to have us believe that the prices will not increase, while we all very well know that they will.

[English]

Does the Government really think that Canadians were not listening when the leading authority on this issue, Dr. Harry Eastman, stated repeatedly that there is no doubt whatsoever in his mind that drug prices will rise as a result of this Bill? Let me quote from his November, 1986, interview on CBC's As It Happens. Dr. Eastman had this to say:

The entry of generics which push down prices would be somewhat delayed and therefore the average prices would be higher than they would be under the present legislation.

The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) says that is not true. When pressed he repeatedly makes an argument that what we contend is very narrow and highly misleading. He says that under his Bill the cost of new brand name drugs will not be higher than they are now when they first come on the market. His argument is that if last year someone invented a new brand of pain-killer and brought it on the market at $5 a bottle, then invented another brand the following year and brought it on at $5 a bottle, and so on, there is no increase in price. However, when we talk about increased prices we are not just talking about the initial market price of brand-name drugs, we are talking about the total cost of drugs to Canadians. If a generic manufacturer can make the same kind of pain-killer and sell it for $1 a bottle instead of $5, that means the consumer pays less. That is what is at issue here.

Under this Bill the generic manufacturer will not have the opportunity to produce a drug and sell it to Canadians for seven to 10 years. The consumer will have to pay the higher price for the brand name product until that period elapses. Yet the Minister continues to say that giving patent protection of seven to 10 years, which prohibits the manufacture and sale of cheaper generic drugs during that period, will not increase drug prices. That just does not hold up.

[Translation]

The Minister claims also that the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, provided for under this Bill, will prevent prices from increasing. But how will it achieve that? The Board will only have the power to set prices which are reasonable and in line with international prices. Well, just now, our prices are generally lower than international prices; for instance, they are two to five times lower than those paid in the United States. With such a criterion in the Bill, it is more than likely that the prices will increase instead of coming down. Moreover, when the time comes for the Board to review the price of a drug developed, say, in the United States or Switzerland, it will not be able to investigate the research costs of this foreign maker. It will have to take the word of pharmaceutical companies, those same companies it has been mandated to monitor.

A number of other studies reached the same conclusion as Dr. Eastman in his report, namely, that extending the duration of the patents will increase the prices of medicinal drugs.

[English]

Even the United States trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, has admitted that drug prices will go up. On the CBC's The Journal on November 19, 1986, he said:

In some cases maybe this will raise the price at the retail level of some of these products.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, some estimates put the cost to Canadians of delaying generic competition at upwards of $5 billion over the 10 years from 1988 to 1997.

An analysis of the various estimates completed in July for the special committee of the Senate on Bill C-22 by the research bureau of the Library of Parliament says that prices will go up. Add to that the Minister's announcement that he intended to provide $100 million to the provinces, originally to cover increased drug prices in the pharmacare and medicare programs but now amended to go to the provinces only if the money is spent on research and development. What was that $100 million for if not as a result of his own anticipation that drug prices will go up?

The Minister says that he has studies which prove that drug prices will not change. We asked him in the House of Commons where those studies are; to produce them and give us the facts. I submit that if the Minister had a single scrap of paper to prove his contention that drug prices will not go up he would have plastered it on every billboard in the country. The truth is that he has no such evidence to back up his argument.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister's answer to that is that with longer patent protection there will be more research done in Canada and, therefore, more jobs. He says that is the reason he has brought in this legislation. Let us look at the experience in the United States where brand name drugs are given exclusive monopoly protection for a 17-year period. Their prices are now two to five times as high as Canadian prices.

The New York Times of July 28, a newspaper to which I am sure the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pays close attention after its recent article on him, reports that the head of the Senate Sub-committee on Anti-trust Monopolies and Business Rights is planning hearings this fall on the drug companies' possible anti-trust violations.

U.S. legislators, Congressmen and Senators, have told the brand name manufacturers of the United States that if they do not control their prices more realistically, Congress will consider imposing legislation similar to that which we introduced in Canada in 1969.

It is claimed that higher brand name prices are necessary to fund research and development of new drugs. With regard to that, listen to what representative Harry Waxman, Chairman of the United States Sub-Committee on Health and the Environment, had to say with reference to a study of the 25 largest companies with two-thirds of all prescription drug sales in the United States. This is a quote from the Wall Street Journal of July 20, 1987.

For the years 1982 to 1986 we found that revenue gains due to price increases were three times greater than their total increase in research and development expenditures.

We also found that companies spent as much on marketing as they did on research and development. The conclusion is inescapable. The recent price increases are not producing new drugs, they are filling corporate coffers.

If that is what is happening in a jurisdiction with a 17-year monopoly protection, how does the Minister claim he will get research and development in Canada with seven to ten-year protection? The answer is that he is not and he knows he is not.

I have a confidential document produced by our embassy in Washington under what it calls the U.S. Corporate Liaison Program. It is a report on meetings between senior embassy staff in Washington and representatives of the United States industry. One company interviewed was Pfizer Incorporated, one of the largest brand name drug manufacturers in the United States, indeed in the world. This is what the Canadian officials report that the company told them in the course of those discussions.

Firm welcomes proposed Canadian Patent Act amendments but feels they would still fall short of what is called for. Accordingly, it would unlikely make early commitment to significant additional activity in Canada.

The Minister says that 3,000 jobs will be created. The Prime Minister said the same thing yesterday on the Hill before the employees of those pharmaceutical companies. However, according to a study made by the Canadian Drug Manufacturers' Association, the Bill could result in the loss of 9,000 jobs throughout the economy. It would mean a net loss of 6,000 jobs.

He says that under the present rules, the large drug companies do not make any research in Canada but that they will do some if the Bill is passed. How can the Minister say such a thing, say that will happen if his Bill is passed, when he knows full well that even before the 1969 amendments, there was very little research and development work carried out by multinationals in Canada? He even states that he has commitments worth $1,4 billion from drug companies.

However, I have read the Bill. There is no mention of commitments to invest in research. None whatsoever. Those agreements will remain confidential, just like the reviews on which the Minister bases his assertion that prices will not change.

Who is the Minister trying to fool?

[English]

Why does the Minister reject the royalty fund proposed by the Senate following the Eastman recommendations? Under that scheme, generics would pay a 14 per cent royalty for the use of brand name discoveries which would be available after four years. The funds would be paid back to the brand name companies for proven research. What better guarantee that money would go back into research for new drugs? The Minister rejects that plan in favour of the United States style system which has been proven ineffective in creating new research and new drugs.

One must ask oneself why the multinational companies are spending millions of dollars in a lobbying effort here and in the United States to get this legislation passed. That is not a difficult question to answer. They want to shut out the generic competition because generic competition means less money for them.

When I was the first Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Department having been set up under the Prime Ministership of the late Lester B. Pearson, I had the privilege to begin the process which led to the changes to the Patent Act of 1969 which the current Government is attempting to reverse with this Bill.

We brought in the Act from which the present regulations derive because drug prices in Canada were exorbitant, as they are now becoming in the United States. Our drugs were among the most expensive in the world in 1969. We wanted more competition in this sector in order to bring down prices. We succeeded. Today, our pharmaceutical prices are among the lowest and the most affordable in the world and even the U. S. Department of Health has studied our legislation to see if it would not be worthwhile to adopt similar legislation to lower drug prices in the United States.

It is well worth noting, Madam Speaker, that in 1969, more competition did not bring about less research. In fact, there was an increase in research activity and according to the study done by Dr. Eastman, during 1983, Canadians saved 211 million dollars thanks to competition from generic drugs. The Minister contends that he has another study which shows that, had his bill been in force in 1983, Canadian consumers would have saved almost an equivalent amount. But, then again, he has not made this study public.

• (1530)

[English]

One of the Minister's most pathetic arguments in defending this Bill is that Canada is considered an international pirate. He said that we are stealing other people's ideas. He tells us that our current legislation is incompatible with our international treaty obligations. However, Roy Davidson, a former economic adviser in the Minister's own Department, says that is simply not true.

As Dr. Davidson points out, we are not contravening international patent conventions to which we are signatories. Nowhere in that convention does it say that discoverers or inventors are entitled to a monopoly on the production of their invention, as would be the case for 10 years with the Minister's Bill.

Some countries give no patent protection at all. Japan requires foreign firms to co-venture with domestic firms in the marketing of new drug products. Britain and some other European countries rely on centralized purchasing power to regulate both price and industrial benefits. France and Belgium have strict price controls on pharmaceutical products. Each nation attempts to prevent the exploitation of higher drug prices in its own way and in its own jurisdiction.

In 1969, we opted in Canada for compulsory licensing in order to promote competition. And this is what happened. However, the Minister's Bill would put Canada in a unique position in the world as far as drug prices are concerned. Manufacturers will be under no obligation whatsoever to invest in return for the long term protection they will be getting. They will not have to make additional research and development expenditures. There is no obligation, therefore no guarantee.

During the 40 years before 1969, when the current Act went into force, including when I was in charge as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, foreign corporations enjoyed the kind of protection provided for under Bill C-22. But no new drugs were produced in Canada in those 40 years.

The simple truth is those international corporations will keep on doing their research in their own countries, as they always did, and the Bill will do nothing more than help them increase their profits on the backs of Canadians by restricting competition.

Such has been the experience before the current Act came into force, and I predict such will be the experience if the legislation is passed by this Parliament.

Madam Speaker, who indeed will benefit from the Bill? Not Canadian consumers, that is for sure, but rather the large multinational corporations in the drugs industry. There is absolutely no doubt about that.

We must ask ourselves this question: Why would multinational companies spend millions of dollars to have this Bill passed, to lobby here and in the United States? The reason is clear, they want to make more money.

As underlined by Dr. Eastman, research and development will probably never amount to much in Canada, given the limited size of our domestic market. Remember that we account for only 2 per cent of the world market.

The Liberal caucus and Party have always supported Dr. Eastman's recommendations. They are positive changes to the present Act designed to encourage research and at the same time alter prices. The recommendations of the Senate are based—through the Liberal amendments proposed in the House—on Dr. Eastman's recommendations and we subscribe to them. We consider it necessary to strike a balance between protection of intellectual property and prices paid by consumers, and we believe that Dr. Eastman did just that in his report.

[English]

We have heard a lot of rhetoric from the Prime Minister and various Ministers about how an non-elected Senate is attempting to thwart the will of the people. In one breath, the Prime Minister say, "They have no right whatsoever to change our legislation". Then in the next breath his Minister accepts Senate amendments on the transportation legislation. The Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs accepts one amendment in total and two others in modified form. The Government can be selective, accepting some amendments from the Senate, as it is doing in this so-called emergency session, and reject others when it chooses and, in doing so, say that the Senate is not exercising its constitutional prerogative.

The Prime Minister speaks about confrontation between the two Houses. There has been no confrontation between the House and the Senate at all as yet. There have been some very uncharacteristic remarks made in the House about the quality of individual Senators. Such remarks are ordinarily not allowed by the Chair in either Chamber. However, there is no confrontation at the moment. That is sheer hypocrisy. The Senate has exercised its constitutional prerogative to amend a Bill of the House of Commons and send it back here.

The Prime Minister had an opportunity to propose to the Premiers a curb on the Senate's power during his negotiations at Meech Lake. He had the opportunity two years ago to curb the powers of the Senate. I debated this issue with the then Minister of Justice on June 7, 1985. The Prime Minister did not proceed with that resolution and there was only one day of debate. We replied on that occasion that we were interested in real Senate reform which would go to the heart of the issue. We wanted an elected Senate to represent the regions of Canada and achieve a better equilibrium from our Confederation.

It is sheer hyprocrisy to suggest that there is confrontation and that a non-democratic House is abusing its role. It is the kind of silly, inflamed rhetoric we hear from the Prime Minister whenever he gets into trouble.

Consider the charade we went through during the last two days about what the Prime Minister wanted to do with the Senate. Yesterday, he was going to abolish it, reform it, elect it. Suddenly, he recognized that he made a deal with the Premiers and did not have that unilateral maneuverability any longer. He had to return to the Premiers to honour his commitment.

Today, I asked him if he will honour that commitment to the Premiers to allow them to appoint, honour his commitment to the House to abolish the Senate, or honour his commitment to the regions of Canada to propose an elected Senate? There is sheer confusion and sheer hypocrisy.

When the Prime Minister proposed that phoney abolition offer two years ago, at that time the provinces had to approve it seven out of ten, with 50 per cent of the population. I knew that and thought it was absolute subterfuge and an absolutely cynical, hollow offer.

When the Prime Minister, in his exasperation and phoney impatience, brought a resolution before the House of Commons, we debated it. We were ready to reform the Senate and adjust an equilibrium in our Confederation. The Prime Minister did not address the issue, did not attend the House on that day and speak to the issue. The Minister of Justice and I each had a one-hour dialogue and that was the limit of the Government's effort to deal with the Senate.

It is a cheap attempt by the Prime Minister to take the focus off this disastrous Bill and to take some shots at the Liberal majority in the Senate. It is a bluff and a smoke-screen designed to draw attention away from this bad legislation.

The issue is not a constitutional one, certainly not yet. The issue is whether this Bill will raise drug prices for Canadians, whether it will really encourage research, or whether it is one of the great shams proposed by the Government against the consumers of Canada. The Prime Minister is as interested in talking about reform of the Senate in substance as he is about talking about the substance of this drug Bill, which is not at all.

When talking about the behaviour of Senators, the Prime Minister used very uncomplimentary language. Let us consider how all those Tory Senators responded when presented with these amendments and recommendations of the Committee in the Upper House. How did they demonstrate their leadership and exercise their role in acting for the Prime Minister and people of Canada on this important legislation? They abstained from voting. They ducked. They did not oppose, they did not propose, they did not vote for, they did not vote against. If I were allowed this language in the House of Commons I would say, "What a derogation of constitutional responsibilities".

Even the New Democratic Party, which advocates the abolition of the Senate, is willing to compromise that long-standing written constitutional position and its Party proposals and, in this case, cheer the Senate on on this particular issue. They agree with us about the merits of this Bill. This Bill simply raises drug prices for Canadians and increases profits for the multinational companies. I commend the NDP for having weighed their two conflicting beliefs against this Bill, against the Senate, coming out in favour of the best interests of all Canadians, which is to amend this Bill in the manner suggested by the Senate, and as suggested by our Party when it was before the House of Commons.

Our position is quite clear on the jurisdiction of the Upper House. We want an elected Senate. We want fundamental reform, but as long as the Senate remains a nominated Chamber, as long as it remains a non-elected Chamber, no matter who appoints them—giving the Premiers the powers of appointment is no significant reform—at the end of the day the elected House of Commons must prevail. That is a clear position of the Liberal Party.

But we have not reached that point, the end of the day. I would urge the Minister to look at a compromise, to look at these amendments once again and consider the arguments that have been made, the study made in the other place and the extensive debate here in the House. I urge him to weigh the interests and give intellectual property and patent rights adequate protection, whatever research and development that may bring, but at the same time achieve a balance and equilibrium for the Canadian consumer, for the aged, the sick, the handicapped and for the four million Canadians who do not enjoy a drug plan, those people who really face the brunt of this legislation.

Why are the recommendations of Dr. Eastman and those of the Senate being rejected? It is for one simple reason. The American multinational drug companies do not like it. An earlier version of this Bill reflected the Eastman report. A summer elapsed and this new Bill was brought in which reflects further discussions with the Americans and the pharmaceutical companies south of the border. It was also brought in to accord the priorities of the American negotiators in the free-trade negotiations. American multinational drug companies are forcing the U.S. administration to make passage of Bill C-22 a condition of the trade talks. The Government has caved in to that pressure. It has been completely spineless. It has changed its original Bill to Bill C-22 in order to accommodate the American pharmaceutical companies and the American trade negotiators. I find it absolutely shameful that this Government and this Prime Minister are willing to sell out our poor, our sick and our disadvantaged just to improve the profit margins of the multinational drug companies.

The Minister says that even if prices go up, it does not really matter because they are all covered by provincial drug plans in any event. What a spurious and deceitful argument. What about the four million Canadians who are not covered by drug plans? What about the millions more who are only partially covered? What about them? "To hell with them", says the Minister. "To hell with Canadian taxpayers who are going to foot the bill to pay either directly for increased drug prices or indirectly through increased taxes to cover the increased cost of drug plans under provincial legislation".

This Government should hang its head in shame when the leading consumer protection advocate in the United States, Ralph Nader, feels obliged to speak across the border and tell the Canadian Government that what it is doing with this Bill will only hurt Canadian consumers and increase profits for the large multinationals. But the Minister and the Prime Minister have repeatedly denied that there is any connection between the trade talks and this legislation, even though the joint communique issued at the Shamrock Summit lists intellectual property as the one of the areas of discussion. Even though the United States trade representative, Clayton Yeutter, lists Canadian drug patent legislation as an irritant which, and I quote from the National Trade Estimate, 1986 report on Foreign Trade Barriers, Office of the United States Trade Representative, at pages 54-55, "costs U.S. pharmaceutical interests significant lost revenues each year".

It also states:

> The United States continues to raise its concerns at senior Government levels. It urges speedy submission of modifying legislation to address serious U.S. concerns about the inadequacy of Canadian patent protection in this area.

That was right at the top of the list of irritants which the United States wanted to remove as a price for free trade negotiations with the United States.

The President of the United States in his letter to Senator Packwood, that great "Dear Bob" letter which we have often quoted in the House of Commons, dated May 8, 1986, said: "Dear Bob, thank you again for your forceful efforts in preserving our fast-track proposal for a Canada free trade agreement". Senator Packwood from the State of Oregon came along and voted for the fast-track but he had made a deal.

The last paragraph of the President's letter to the Senator reads: "We fully realize that lumber and other pending trade irritants must be resolved before we submit to the Senate the results of the comprehensive negotiations". Right at the top of that list of irritants is the pharmaceutical industry's demands for this legislation.

How clearer could it be? Yet the Minister and the Prime Minister say there is no connection. That is sheer nonsense. The Parliament of Canada is now in emergency session to meet Washington's timetable. This is the first time a legislature of a sovereign nation was every called into emergency session just to abide by and conform to the wishes of another nation.

The Government can deny it all it wants, but that is the truth, and what a shameful truth it is. Despite the attempts of the Government to hide the facts and cover up its real intentions, and to confuse Canadians on these trade talks, it is now becoming clearer every day that it has been the Government's intention all along to risk Canadian economic, political and cultural sovereignty in return for a free trade deal.

The Americans may be many things but they are not stupid. A Yankee trader is still a good Yankee trader. They know a good thing when they see one, and boy did they see a good thing when this Government got elected and the Prime Minister went down to New York. I am sure we all remember. He put on his black tie and told all those American bankers and investment brokers, "Hi guys. My name is Brian Mulroney. I am Prime Minister of Canada and I want you to know that Canada is open for business again". The next day he returned to the House of Commons and I said to him, "That is terrific. We are open for business again. I never thought we were closed. We may be open for business again, Prime Minister, but this country is not up for sale", and that is what we are saying to the people of Canada.

Canadians know that the Government wants a free trade deal at any cost. The plan was simple, get the Prime Minister and the President together, put on the black tie, a few handshakes, a few songs, a few limericks, a nice meal, a nice show and that will keep those simple Canadians happy, especially the Prime Minister, who seems to be pretty easily impressed by anything that happens south of the border.

At the same time the U.S. dangled the carrot of a free trade deal in front of the Prime Minister. It put the heavy hitters to work behind closed doors to get everything it wanted before the deal was signed. It wanted to eliminate the National Energy Program, and what it considered to be the restrictive provisions of the Foreign Investment Review Act, before the deal was ever begun, before it was ever signed. The Americans know the Canadian Government is not going to put up much of a fight because apparently the Government of Canada needs the free trade deal. How will the Prime Minister of our country ever be able to explain to Canadians why he received so little and gave away so much?

The Americans could not believe their good fortune. Here was a Government which was willing to give away all of its best bargaining chips, FIRA, the National Energy Program, even before the negotiations started. The Government has been willing during the course of these negotiations to sell out industry after industry. First it was our lumber industry, then our book and publishing industry and now it is the turn of the drug industry at the expense of the Canadian consumer.

On March 16 I asked in the House what would be next on the Tory sovereignty sell-out; oil and gas, steel, or potash? Potash is the next industry on the block. The preliminary decision of the United States to impose an 85 per cent countervailing duty on Canadian potash is the latest pressure tactic. That measure could wipe out the Saskatchewan industry. It could prevent Manitoba from getting in the game. It could wipe out the development in New Brunswick.

We expect the same "fearless" performance, to use the word of the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney), whose great victory was to impose a 15 per cent export duty on our lumber industry at the request of the Americans, despite the fact that in 1983 we had won an identical case. Despite the fact that the underlying premises and facts had not changed, the Government of Canada lost its nerve and surrendered. It pleaded guilty before the trial and withdrew our case. The only difference between now and 1983 is that in 1983 we did not have a weak Government that was preoccupied with preserving a free trade deal at any cost.

I would advise the Canadian potash industry to be very wary of offers of help from the Minister for International Trade.

This Bill as proposed by the Government is bad legislation. It does not do what the Government states it will do in terms of research and development. It does not create more jobs. It does not give Canadians a new and larger variety of drugs. It only raises prices, and increases the profits of the multinationals.

Obviously the Government hopes that in the flurry of publicity that it has created by the incompetent handling of the refugee issue, Canadians will not notice that the real motive for recalling Parliament for this emergency session is to pass this drug Bill. It is a cynical act by a desperate Government caving into the sovereign extraterritorial power of the United States.

I urge upon the House and the Minister a full consideration of the amendments that we proposed in the House, and the amendments proposed by the Senate and returned to us for reconsideration. These amendments would give a fair balance between research, jobs, and development on the one hand, and yet preserve stability in the drug price structure for the benefit of those Canadians least able to protect themselves; the aged, the chronically ill, the sick, the handicapped, those who cannot protect themselves and who depend upon Parliament to step up and call upon the Minister one last time before the end of the day to listen to reason and common sense, listen to the facts and the arguments, and be reasonable and accept our amendments.

• (1600)

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Madam Speaker, I, too, am very pleased to be able to make a few comments on this excellent Bill C-22.

A moment ago the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) referred to the few years' experience he had in the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, of which he may have been the first Minister.

I, too, had this experience, Madam Speaker, and the opportunity to study in detail first the effects of the Liberal Party position on that project or the measures that date back to 1969, and particularly the Eastman project which was announced and launched in 1983. Madam Speaker, the Eastman Committee was set up precisely because the Party recognized that changes were needed. Changes were necessary because the evidence showed at the time that the existing legislation substantially reduced the number of jobs, and moreover, that it was causing a major outflow of the investments related to the pharmaceutical industry to other countries. Naturally, we all remember the most recent decision of this industry in Quebec when the Hoffmann-LaRoche company had to close down because of the inaction of the previous Government.

This is why it is important to make some changes. This is why we have introduced Bill C-22. First, because we firmly believe in the principle of protecting intellectual property. We believe that the time has come to align our patent rights on international practice, as patents are recognized throughout the world in all industrialized countries. To my knowledge, Canada is now virtually the only industrialized country where a company cannot always obtain patent rights for new drugs under the compulsory licencing system. To a certain extent, Canada is the only country where drug prices are controlled through intellectual property, and I believe that this must change.

If all countries had legislation as regressive as ours, no new drugs would ever be developed. Bill C-22 will bring back patent protection to a seven to ten year period, as we have already pointed out, and transform the Canadian pharmaceutical sector into a first-rate innovative industry, which will generate an important increase in investments and jobs in the area of research and development.

As it is, Madam Speaker, the Senate is not prepared to extend that kind of protection to our multinationals; naturally, they stand accused of making profits at the expense of consumers. But here is another point of view as expressed by columnist Lysiane Gagnon in the August 22 issue of La Presse, and I quote: "The major drug research laboratories are multinational companies. Why? Because applied research is very costly, of course. On average, they spend $100 million over 10 years to develop and market a new drug, not to mention the time they waste working on risky ventures. No wonder there are no small- and medium-sized businesses or co-operatives in state-of-the-art research."

Well, Madam Speaker, our Senators would be quite satisfied with maintaining the status quo by granting drug manufacturers a four-year protection. The rationale underlying these amendments to the Patent Act is the creation of a climate likely to promote research and development in the drug industry. Indeed, as I said a moment ago, we want to stem the brain exodus towards foreign lands. Thousands of students, young researchers, and scientists are leaving Canada precisely because they cannot find jobs here and have much more challenging opportunities elsewhere.

I also referred to the massive inflow of capital investments we can expect once Bill C-22 becomes law. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has been saying this everywhere: Canadians can look forward to investments in the order of $1.4 billion over a 10-year period, and this, I might add, in all regions of Canada, be it in Quebec, in Ontario where the main activities of the industry are located, or in the other provinces.

In 1995, research and development spending will total over $600 million annually. We must realize the impact this Bill will have on the future and health of Canadians. We must also remember that more than 30 per cent of the amounts to be spent on research and development will go to universities and research centres. The funds will also be used to coordinate our research and development efforts.

As I said earlier, every region in this country will benefit from the tremendous economic spin-offs. For instance, Nordic Laboratory in Montreal will receive $45 million. Universities and research centres in Edmonton and Calgary will receive $132 million. Hospitals and universities in Halifax and St. John's, Nefoundland, will receive $82 million. These are considerable amounts that will be distributed across our regions and benefit every Canadian who wants to dedicate his energies and efforts to this work, as well as our young people in the regions.

However, in the other place, the Senate is proposing a fund that would total no more than $25 million, which money would be redistributed to the companies, not to universities and research centres.

Bill C-22 also means creating 3,000 jobs for scientists, as I mentioned earlier, jobs for researchers, jobs for young men and women, for young Canadian graduates. Over 1,200 jobs will be located in the province of Quebec. The protection provided under Bill C-22 for new drugs will not only benefit research and development, it will also expand the volume of manufacturing and exports in the Canadian drug industry.

As for generic drugs, it is said that the Bill will mean the end of the generic companies. Madam Speaker, our new policy will promote the manufacture of new generic products by making it attractive for the generic firms to manufacture the chemical ingredients used in the manufacture of drugs.

All import licences already granted to generic companies will be automatically converted to manufacturing licences. Generic companies will thus be able to manufacture the product directly. It is also very important to remember that all generic products now on the market will continue to be sold. When people say that Bill C-22 will increase the price of drugs, they are simply trying to fool Canadians. The impact of this Bill will certainly not be to increase the price of drugs. Generic companies will also be able to continue and expand their exports. Generic products represent only 7 per cent of the drugs sold in this country. So what happens to the 93 per cent that are not protected and are free game? That is why we want to create a price review board so that we can reassess and monitor the prices of these drugs, for the benefit of the consumer.

Now, Madam Speaker, Canada takes up only 2 percent of the world medicinal drugs market. Well, by favoring new investments, we will rank among such nations as Japan, Italy, the United States in terms of research investments, innovations and new technology development.

Canada, therefore, will be recognized as a country which welcomes investments, not only in the pharmaceutical industry, but also in many others.

If I may, Madam Speaker, I should like to mention that during 1986, Canada has experienced, in terms of foreign investments, its best year ever. Foreign investments in the order $6.8 billion have resulted in the creation of new jobs and fostered new investments, due clearly to a favourable economic climate and the new confidence which has taken hold of Canadian citizens and businessmen.

Again, Bill C-22 follows this philosophy which our Party adopted in 1984.

In the area of consumer protection, it should be emphasized that this policy, as I mentioned earlier, will continue to control the prices of drugs which are already sold in various drugstores, and to make sure that the future prices remain reasonable, there will be a fully independent Patent Medicine Prices Review Board which would be chaired by Dr. Eastman, the same man who carried out a study of the whole pharmaceutical industry. This organization will therefore be established.

Well, the Senate is against the creation of such a board and would rather entrust the control over the prices of these generic products to the free competition of the market-place.

Madam Speaker, that is not the way to protect Canadian consumers. As I said, 7 percent of patented medicine are subject to the competition of generic drugs. Canadians, therefore, have no way of knowing whether they are paying a fair price for the remaining 93 percent of these drugs when they are purchasing them.

So we are saying that the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board will review the price of all prescription drugs to provide that protection to consumers.

In formulating that policy, my Government has strived to reconcile the need to increase industrial research and development with the need to ensure the availability to Canadian people of pharmaceutical products at fair prices.

On the other hand, the report of the Senate committee means the status quo. Whatever means are used by the opposition and the Senate to present the matter in a misleading light, the only important thing for them is to obstruct the passage of the Bill.

I can also point out that in the press today, especially in the Toronto Star a non-elected Senator once again clearly mentioned—and this should not be accepted or tolerated by Canadians—that he will continue to object to any legislation which could be beneficial to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). That is the kind of views put forward by our non-elected Liberal Senators in opposing a fair Bill. It is absolutely unacceptable.

When we put together the various elements of Bill C-22, we took research and development in consideration. Why? Because it is essential for Canada to redirect its future on the basis of the new technology taking research and development into account.

Job creation also is a major aspect. Three thousand jobs will therefore be created by this legislation by 1995. And, as I mentioned earlier, not only in Quebec or Ontario but in all Canadian regions. When we say that regions in this country are disadvantaged and that we must address those regional disparities, well, this is the result to be achieved by Bill C-22.

Let us also refer to investment. I referred to $1.4 billion's worth of investment. That kind of investment is important not only because it creates jobs but because, in addition, fundamental research will put the ingredients in place to enable Canadians to occupy, as I said, a better place internationally.

Let us also refer to health care, Madam Speaker. It is clear this legislation recognizes the need to protect health care, but it also provides that in the future, there will be an increasing need to protect, to discover new drugs. And Canada must play its role as a nation. Bill C-22 ensures that.

Let us refer also to consumer protection. I referred to the review agency, Madam Speaker, which will go to industrialized nations, measure the effects of those prices, the impact on our prices, our Canadian pharmaceuticals, and will act where needed. There is a protection mechanism for consumers because when a new product is marketed, after four years the company would have to meet standards, criteria that are set up. And protection will continue to be extended if these criteria are met.

Therefore, Madam Speaker, such protection is consistent in all respects with the Government's commitment to ensure at all times not only that the consumer is adequately supplied with health care products but that these products are available at prices which are fair and comparable to those of any other country.

Finally, I believe that any forward thinking industrialized country must care about protecting its intellectual property. Not to do so would be inconceivable. Even the Liberals before 1983 had recognized the necessity of reviewing this obsolete and regressive legislation. Why was the Eastman Commission established? Why was it asked to review the pharmaceutical industry? Obviously because the legislation was deemed faulty, Madam Speaker. So now the Liberals are putting forward amendments which will bring us back to the same kind of legislation we have had since 1969. Surely, this is not the way to give our young Canadian men and women a reason to be optimistic and confident about their future.

It is precisely by addressing such important issues as intellectual property, patent protection and the safeguarding of inventions that we will give Canadians better protection and a brighter future.

Therefore, I must say once again how pleased I am to note that this legislation is agreeable to the National Assembly. Hon. Members will recall that the Quebec National Assembly has concurred in the Bill in an unanimous vote and has thereby clearly expressed its wishes. Those who vote in that legislature are elected representatives and we will neither allow nor tolerate that non-elected Senators oppose a Bill which meets the wishes of Quebecers and Canadians.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I agree with the Minister that there are a number of issues before us, one of which is the non-elected Senate blocking the House. However, the other issue is the price of the drugs themselves.

I do not know if the Minister is familiar with one of the best articles that was written on this subject in Consumer Reports magazine. The article is talking about the United States and reads:

> The brand-name companies dominate the $25-billion annual market in prescription drugs. They barrage legislators, doctors, pharmacists and consumers with an unrelenting message: Generic drugs are low in quality and may harm you.

Sounds exactly like parts of the Minister's speech. The article goes on:

> Few distortions in the history of commercial propaganda have cost consumers more money than that one.

The article goes on to point out that a brand name drug like Valium costs $27.47 per hundred whereas the generic drug, Diazepam, costs $8.49. The article lists example after example of this.

As a Conservative, is the Minister not in favour of competition? If he is, why is he trying to restrict competition with this Bill? Does he not agree that the people who will really be penalized are Canadian consumers who will have to pay more for drugs?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): It is becoming quite obvious, Madam Speaker, that the Hon. Member does not understand much about the contents of Bill C-22.

First, I would like to say that Bill C-22 is certainly not destroying competition. This is a balanced Bill, which protects intellectual property, and this is vitally important, as I have already said. How will this be done, Madam Speaker? By allowing the generic companies to continue manufacturing for export.

This means that the drug will still be there and that these companies will continue to develop as they have done in recent years. It usually takes from seven to ten years for a generic product to reach the market. We want to continue to allow generic companies to market equivalent products. Thanks to the control agency, if the price of a drug is too high or if the pharmaceutical companies do not meet the criteria set out in the legislation, they could lose their patent protection and a generic company could be invited to introduce its own product on the market.

It is a mistake to believe that drug prices will increase because of Bill C-22. People who believe that do not understand the Bill. There is nothing in this Bill that could remove generic products now on the market. Prescription drugs now sold in pharmacies will continue to be available to Canadians. This is what we have to realize and what the Hon. Member has failed to understand.

I therefore invite him to reflect further and to examine the situation more closely.

[English]

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, the Minister indicated that not all generic drugs would be removed from the market. The fact is that the generic equivalent of Zantac will be removed from the market under this legislation because of the retroactive provisions of it. He says further that there will be no increased costs to patients as a result of this legislation.

How does the Minister explain that the Government has provided in this legislation for $100 million to compensate the provinces for the increased costs of drugs to taxpayers as well as consumers? When one considers the pattern of transfer pricing used by the multinational pharmaceutical manufacturers, how in the world is he going to guarantee that the initial cost of a new patent drug will not be as projected, that is twice the cost of a new drug, in the absence of generic competition?

During the course of his response to my colleague he also said it takes seven or eight years for a generic to be ready for the market. It has to go through a procedure of licensing and notices of compliance. That would mean, presumably, up to 17 years would go by before a generic could enter the market. Surely he understands that that kind of protection will unavoidably mean increased prices. In any event, if it takes seven or eight years for a generic drug to get on the market, as the Minister says, why in the world do we have this legislation, given that at the end of 10 years a new drug has to give way to its replacement?

[Translation]

Mr. Côté (Langelier): Madam Speaker, I would suggest that my colleague has already acknowledged the need for a new legislative measure designed to promote research and development. It has become ever more obvious that Canadians must be able to shop for products to protect themselves, the kind of products which will be marketed to protect their health. The Senate committee has come up with alternate proposals, including a royalty fund which will keep increasing precisely because these companies will be making much higher payments. Since the money will come from existing drug companies they will benefit from the economic fallout. This will not do anything to boost the investments which are also important to Canadians.

Now then, if the amendments proposed by the Senate were adopted, universities and research centres would also be deprived of most of the products which are available, not to mention the sum of nearly $400 million involved in the numerous research projects.

So this is just one more indication that our Bill meets the expectations of Canadians. The first thing to do is to consider what has been proposed in Bill C-22: equity provided under the Bill, lasting consumer protection, and promotion of generic products. What happened after the previous administration announced its intention to review the drug industry and set up the Eastman Commission? A sharp increase in licence applications, regardless of market conditions. As a result the generic companies are given a golden opportunity for expanded production. I repeat that the Bill provides for that kind of equity and, if I can put it this way, it will maintain the generic drug industry in a sector of activity which will leave it free to compete in the best interests of Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Thank you, Madam Speaker, for again giving me a further opportunity to enter this debate over what the Government is attempting to do to a policy which has been seen by most Canadians as both fair and good for Canada.

Before I begin my few remarks I want to say to the Minister and government Members that in my view and that of many in Canada there is absolutely no consensus in this country which would encourage the Government to do what it has been attempting to do for the last year and several months. In fact, if there is a consensus in Canada it is that the Government should leave what has been a good policy for Canada and Canadian consumers as is.

I want to say at the outset that the Government has absolutely no one to blame but itself for the fix it finds itself in today as between this House and the Senate. I say that because of the way this whole issue has been handled by the Government from day one. The entire process has been questionable. In that respect I think it would be useful to remind ourselves how Canada's present policy came about. It did not come about by a fluke or accident or mistake. It came about because of some very good, sound and solid reasons.

We must look at what the multinational drug companies were charging Canadian consumers for pharmaceutical products prior to 1969. It has been said time and time again, and the Government refuses to recognize it, that prior to 1969 Canadians were paying among the highest prices in the world for pharmaceutical products. It was because of those unacceptably high prices, and many called it price gouging at the time, that the Government of the day was forced to respond to the concerns expressed. The first response was in 1961 when the Restrictive Trade Practices Commission examined Canada's policy on pharmaceutical products and the price gouging that was going on. It studied the matter, heard witnesses, and concluded that the reason was that the multinational corporations held a monopoly on drug pricing in Canada. That commission was the first to recommend that the Canadian Government end that monopoly by removing patent protection on pharmaceutical products. The Government of the day did not respond to those recommendations.

The pressure still existed so again in 1963 Mr. Justice Emmett Hall headed a royal commission into the pricing of drugs. He came to the same conclusion; the reason drug prices were so high was because the companies enjoyed a monopoly in the market-place. He recommended that patent protection be removed from pharmaceutical products in order to force prices down.

As things very often go with Governments, no action was taken on those recommendations, probably because of the tremendous pressure being placed upon the Government by the multinational corporations. However, in 1967 the Government finally asked an all-Party House of Commons committee headed by a Conservative Member named Harley to study this. That House of Commons committee concluded the same as had every other study group, that there was a monopoly practice in place in Canada which was detrimental to the interests of Canadian consumers. It recommended to the Government of the day that patent protection be removed for pharmaceutical products.

After all those studies, commissions, debates in the House and public pressure, in 1969 the Government of the day finally removed patent protection for pharmaceutical products. That ended the monopoly on pricing structures which those multinational corporations had enjoyed up to that time. Interestingly enough, it permitted Canadian manufacturers, the so-called generic drug manufacturers or, as the Government likes to call them, copiers of drugs or burglars or thieves or whatever, to get into the field, pay the multinationals a 4 per cent royalty for the use of their drugs, and force Canadian drug prices down from the highest in the world prior to 1969 to among the lowest in the world today.

The multinational corporations have never accepted that policy since 1969. For years they not only pressured the Canadian Governments of the day to revert to patent protection but also hauled the generic drug manufacturers into the courts and dragged them through lengthy litigations. This has been well documented. It is not something I dreamed up. In many cases they made it so costly for the generic drug manufacturers to defend themselves in the courts that they were hopeful that they would drive them into bankruptcy and out of business. That has been well documented and has never been denied by the multinational corporations.

It is interesting to note that of all the cases the multinational corporations had before the courts they did not win one. Not one case was won by the multinationals. It was out and out harassment of those Canadian companies, primarily by American producers, that caused those legal actions.

The pressure was still on then as it is today. In 1981, the Economic Council of Canada reviewed Canada's policies and concluded, 12 years after the policy was adopted, that it was a good policy for Canadian consumers. That is another independent committee which made that judgment and those recommendations.

Later on, in 1981, the Canadian Institute for Public Policy did a further study of the pharmaceutical industry and concluded that Canada's policy was the correct one. Not satisfied with that, an internal committee of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs did its own study into Canada's policy. That committee concluded that Canada's policy was a good one for Canadians.

As I said earlier, Madam Speaker, Governments being what they are, the Liberal Government of the day did not have the moral fortitude to tell the multinationals once and for all that the policy was good for Canadians and they should get lost. Instead it appointed Professor Harry Eastman to conduct yet another study into Canada's policy. We all know the results of that study. It is widely recognized, even by those who oppose his recommendations, that Professor Harry Eastman conducted the most intensive and thorough investigation into the pharmaceutical industry internationally.

After all of that, Professor Eastman tabled his report in the House of Commons, I believe in 1983. He concluded a number of things. For example, in 1983 alone, Canada's policy had saved Canadian consumers approximately $213 million on drug costs. He said that every previous commission recognized that a company should receive compensation for its efforts in developing a product. Those commissions concluded that the total cost to the pharmaceutical industry for research and development amounted to 4 per cent of total sales.

Therefore, Harry Eastman said, as previous commissions had, we should continue to pay the multinational companies 4 per cent royalties for all drugs copied by the generic drug manufacturers. He said as well that the approval process through the Department of National Health and Welfare to bring a new drug on the market was very cumbersome, and he made some recommendations on how that process could be speeded up. However, he said essentially that the policy should not be changed.

All of the studies since 1961 have recommended that Canada's policy should be as it is today. Therefore, why did the Government suddenly charge ahead, ignoring all these studies, the most recent one done in 1983, and introduce legislation through Bill C-22 which contains absolutely no reflection of the conclusions of all those studies?

One can conclude several things. The first conclusion is that it did so because of the tremendous pressure which was placed on Canada primarily by the multinational corporations based in the United States through President Reagan.

The Government denies that, but there is sufficient evidence available which clearly shows that that is the case. At the Shamrock Summit which took place in the Province of Quebec in 1985, President Reagan made that key demand as a prerequisite to agreeing to negotiations on a free trade package. That is the only reason we are faced with this legislation today. It is not to keep Canadian consumers happy but to satisfy a demand made by the President of the United States that a made-in-Canada policy for the benefit of Canadian consumers should be changed because he did not like it.

Regardless of the contents of this Bill, on that basis alone I would fight what the Government is trying to do. It is a direct attack on the sovereignty of this nation and its right to make its own policies on behalf of Canadians. I find that totally offensive and I think most other Canadians do as well.

The Government has made much of the fact that there will be a prices review board established and that prices will not increase. It is stating that we are simply trying to scare Canadians. That is the usual rhetoric we hear from Governments when their position is extremely weak. They try to attack those who oppose the Bill.

It was not only I or other members of the New Democratic Party who said that. Professor Harry Eastman said that it would be extremely difficult for a prices review board to determine whether or not a drug company is charging too high a price once this legislation is passed by the House. There are a number of reasons for that assertion. Professor Eastman said:

> A major problem with the price indexes for a large number of commodity groups is the difficulty in accounting for changes in quality of products.
> This is an especially troublesome problem for the pharmaceutical industry in which, each year, several new products are introduced in the market-place as fairly direct competitors with an existing array of products.

He says:

> —the price index does not capture any increase in the price of the new product relative to the old product even in those frequently encountered situations in which the old and the new drug have roughly the same therapeutic value to the prospective patient and thereby are, for practical purposes, the same product.

Eastman said further that separating out changes in the quality of a given drug is so exceedingly difficult that it is rarely accomplished. As a consequence, drug price changes "may inappropriately register changes in quality".

After he examined the situation even further, he said:

> What is clear—is that the changes of price of particular products are not at all a satisfactory indicator of expenditure changes that have as their source decisions by the manufacturer. In addition to deciding on the price of particular products, the manufacturer can also quite clearly decide to introduce a new product that is therapeutically little different from the old product and, furthermore, can set a price for the new product significantly higher than that of the old product.

In other words, it is a common practice within the industry that a pharmaceutical drug that is intended to do a certain thing is marketed, and once the market is saturated, they simply change the fine chemicals in that drug, give it a new name, charge a higher price and market it under a different name. The two products are exactly the same but the company can jack up the price for the fine chemical change in the old product.

Another practice of the companies was referred to by my colleague, the Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), in a question to the Minister who spoke before me. It is referred to in some detail by a fellow named Stanley Adams in a book entitled Roche versus Adams. Stanley Adams was an employee in the pharmaceutical industry in the United Kingdom for many years. He was blackballed because he took on the pharmaceutical companies. I will not bore the House with the details because I am sure other Members of the New Democratic Party will want to speak on it.

In conclusion, I do not think the prices review board will work. Every provincial Government in this country with the exception of one, I believe, have said that prices will increase at great detriment to consumers if this Bill goes through.

Affordable drugs are an integral part of our health care system in this country. The issue is not one of copying a mouse trap, as the Minister calls it when referring to intellectual property. If the Bill goes through it will make drugs much more expensive and, in my view, will weaken the medicare system in this country. In many cases, people who rely on drugs in order to participate in the mainstream of Canadian society will no longer be able to afford them. I think that is a crying shame.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I am sure my colleague heard the Hon. Minister for Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Côté) utterly fail to respond to the questions I posed to him following his rather confused presentation. I am pleased that my colleague addressed some of the questions I raised.

I would be very interested to hear what Mr. Adams said about the pricing policy of the pharmaceutical industry. I hope the Hon. Member will take as much time as is available to him to answer that question about just how the pharmaceutical companies, through pricing policies, contrive to rip off the consumers and provincial and private drug plans.

Mr. King: What did Mr. Fingerhut say?

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I am pleased my colleague asked that question. Adams said:

> Transfer pricing had two advantages. It enabled the company to avoid a large amount of taxation, and it allowed them to overcharge without appearing to do so. It worked like this. If a Roche manufacturing company needed to buy raw material from the parent company in Basle to make the finished article, then the raw material was not, as you might think, provided at cost or cost plus a certain fixed level of profit. No. First Roche headquarters had to decide what the world market price of that product was, or in other words just how much they could sell it for and still be sure of having buyers. Then they had to look at the different levels of taxation in the various countries, and then they had to decide, bearing that in mind, just how much profit they wanted each individual company to show, if any.
> Once they had made that decision, which obviously depended on how high or low the taxes on profit were, and on the political situation in any given country at the given time, then, and only then, Roche headquarters set the price the subsidiary had to pay them for the material they wanted.

That is one of the reasons, incidentally, that the federal Government has yanked a number of multinationals before the courts in Canada. It is because of the way they have been using the pricing policy to force Canadian taxpayers to subsidize them at the other end. Even the Government, which has come to be the hero and chief spokesperson for the multinationals, recognizes itself that there is something wrong with those pricing policies, mechanisms and structures. How it can do that on the one hand, and, on the other, say that it will have a prices review board that will be able to provide the necessary protection for Canadians in what they pay for future drugs, is totally beyond me.

Even Professor Harry Eastman has concluded that it would be impossible for a prices review board to control price gouging because of all the various factors involved.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member a question, but I heard a Conservative Member yell: "What did Fingerhut say"? Mr. Fingerhut is an American pollster.

I do not know what he said but I know what Angus Reid and Gallup said. Fifty-eight per cent of the Canadian public said that they opposed the Bill, 32 per cent agreed with it and 11 per cent were undecided. I imagine Mr. Fingerhut found the same thing, that the Canadian public opposes this Bill because it is a cave-in—

Mr. Fennell: Not in my riding.

• (1650)

Mr. Waddell: You are caving in to the American multinationals. You are letting the American multinationals and the American President push you around. You are increasing costs for Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Waddell: You are ripping off the old people and showing absolutely no guts in the face of this presidential—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Waddell: I have a question, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member knows that he should address his colleagues through the Chair.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Madam Speaker, I will.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure also that his colleague has heard the question and may want to answer.

Mr. Waddell: Could I put the question? I did not have a chance to put it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I thought there were quite a few questions in fact in the statement made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). However, I will allow a very short question after a long comment.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you, Madam Speaker. The question is simply this; the Hon. Member used to be the health critic of our Party and was very active in the debate on the indexing of pensions. He dealt with some of the older people in the country through that debate. He has expressed concerns that the medicare system would be affected. I wonder if he could tell us, through you, Madam Speaker, given that our population is aging, what kind of effect this will have on the future of our health care system with an aging population?

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, that is one of the real concerns in this legislation. The Minister himself has pointed out that most Canadians should not be too concerned because they are covered by provincial health care plans, insurance plans or a number of other insurance schemes. However, I want to point out that provincial Governments which have looked at this legislation have concluded that the increased costs to their treasuries will be such that they may have to take a look at whether they can continue to carry these programs. That is a source of real concern for many senior citizens.

Provincial Governments get money in just the same way as the federal Government, from taxpayers. They are going to have to take a look at whether they can continue to carry these programs, and if they cannot, they will have to increase provincial taxes in order to continue paying for them. If they do not want to go that route, they are going to have to take a look at whether they are going to place a deductible on drug care programs. They are going to have to find some way of surcharging seniors who presently have free drug coverage. It will have to be the same for people who are on some kind of income-support system. Disabled persons very often receive some kind of assistance from provincial Governments.

Will the provincial Governments be able to continue to provide that coverage if it becomes so expensive under these legislative changes? That is a source of great concern for many people.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on this matter. Normally we would hear next from a Conservative or a Liberal, but they do not seem to want to speak on this particular Bill.

Mr. Fennell: We said it all to the people out front earlier.

Mr. Waddell: This is a government motion to reject Senate amendments. I think the position of the New Democratic Party is quite clear. We have always opposed Bill C-22. We favour the existing system of compulsory licensing of generic drugs. We think this is a bad Bill. We thought so at the time the Bill was passed by the House. We believe it means increased drug prices. The Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) mentioned the figure from the Eastman report of $213 million in one year. We think there is a tremendous lobby out there of multinational companies which have put great pressure upon this Government. We regret the Government has caved in to this lobby. We know this is what is called a "trade irritant" to the United States, that is, President Reagan and the Americans have taken the side of the American companies, and the Government has caved in again to the United States on this matter, as it has caved in on most matters dealing with the United States. For all those reasons we have opposed Bill C-22.

The Senate has blocked the Bill. We do not believe in an appointed Senate and, therefore, we believe the Senate should let the Bill pass after the House of Commons has in fact reviewed the matter. However, I think this process is working as a sober second thought. We feel that the Government should listen to the arguments from the other side and to the Canadian people, who I do not believe support this Bill. In fact, I will go further. I believe this is probably the worst Bill brought in by the present Government. It is a Bill which turns back the clock. The Hon. Member for Beaches gave the history of the great struggle of this Parliament to break free from the drug lobby and to bring in legislation in 1969 which took Canadians from a people who paid the highest prices for drugs to a people paying some of the lowest prices for drugs. Why are we trying to change that? It seems to me that it is a terrible mistake.

I do not understand the position of the Liberal Party with respect to this Bill. I believe the Party is split on the Bill. I know that Judy Erola, who used to be a Minister for the Liberal Government, has now taken a job as head of the drug lobby group. I see that as very unfortunate. I see a split between the Liberal Senate and the Liberal parliamentarians which may have something to do with the leadership question. Be that as it may, I ask the Government to take another look at this particular Bill.

What do the Senate amendments do? First, they basically accept the Eastman report, which is the report of Professor Harry Eastman of the University of Toronto in 1985. The first recommendation is that the exclusivity period of seven, eight and 10 years granted by Bill C-22 be now cut to a flat four years. In other words, there would not be this long period of exclusive patents. I think it is rather ironic that the Conservatives, who are supposedly in favour of competition, do not realize that granting eight, nine or 10 years exclusivity, is another way of granting a monopoly. What we are in fact doing is granting monopolies through the process of this so-called patent protection.

The second recommendation of the Senate is that any retroactivity in the Bill to June 27, 1986, must be cut out. The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) pointed out that by putting retroactivity in this Bill, it will in fact mean that some generic drugs will have to be removed from the market.

Mr. Horner: Wrong.

Mr. Waddell: The third recommendation is that the drug prices review board be eliminated on the grounds that in any event the board will not have much effect on the price of drugs.

Mr. Horner: No generic drugs will be removed.

Mr. Waddell: With respect to the price of drugs, a subcommittee of the United States Congress, chaired by Congressman Waxman, summarized its findings, and I quote:

• (1700)

Most of the money generated by the recent enormous price increases—

Drug prices have been increasing at approximately 12 per cent per year in the United States.

—is not going to fund research and development. Between the years 1982 and 1986, drug price increases produced revenue gains of $4.7 billion. During the same period, research and development expenditures rose only $1.6 billion—or about a third of the revenue gains from price increases.

Congressman Waxman also states:

In short, the money was arriving in bucketloads, but was going to research and development in spoonfuls.

That is the record of the drug companies that purport to lobby and propose so much to the Canadian Government.

Fortunately, the Senate has stated that a pharmaceutical royalty fund should be created. This will pay patent holders a royalty of 14 per cent based on 4 per cent for promotion costs, and a second portion set originally at 10 per cent but varying in the ratio of world research and development undertaken by the multinationals, and the development expenditures to world sales of prescription drugs. Again, this is a proposal to set up a fund that would try to make good the promises of research and development.

The first three of these proposals are clearly supportable. There is considerable argument in the generic industry whether a 14 per cent charge recommended by Eastman is justifiable. Generic manufacturers point out that they must do their own R and D to meet Health Protection Branch regulations. They think a higher than 4 per cent figure could be justifiable, but no one has proved it to them yet. This is their position. The 4 per cent figure was set by the Commissioner of Patents on the first compulsory licence, and has not been varied since.

The Senate struggled with implementing particular amendments, after having had the full process of travelling across the country and in an unhurried fashion listening to witnesses.

If this were a wise Government, it would take a second look at the Bill and implement some of those proposals. It would receive some popularity in the country.

The conclusion must be that the Senate version of Bill C-22 is a better one than the one presented to the House. It allows the compulsory licensing system to work with far fewer impediments than the Government's Bill, and it presents a method of specific reward for companies based on actual research and development work undertaken. The Government's Bill simply offers the drug companies a massive blank cheque in the form of 10 years of exclusivity, whether or not they do the research and development. It has no sanctions for ensuring that the research and development investments are made. Therefore, that is why we oppose the Government's Bill, and would urge the Government to adopt some of the Senate amendments.

I wish to deal with the matter of research for a few minutes, because we keep hearing about all the research that is going on. The Senate version restores the emphasis on lower prices that the Government has sacrificed. It sought to make some guarantees that higher royalty payments to the brand name companies would actually result in research and development. It is interesting to note where the research is carried out. As I understand it, the real research in drug development is done in the home country of the large multinational drug companies, for example, in the United States or in Europe. The research that we get in Canada is limited research. It is market and clinical research, but it is not the type of deep research that the Government states it could be. There is much authority for that view. Many articles have been written.

A group called the Medical Reform Group of Ontario advised the House of Commons committee that it takes 200 to 300 people working at the same location to create a good centre for basic research, and that none of the pharmaceutical companies now operating in Canada has anywhere near that capacity. Therefore, there is not the capacity, plus it is not natural for them to do it in Canada. It is done at the home base of the multinational corporations.

The Minister stated in the House that $900 million would be invested. This is what one would call a form of boosterism and blackmail in order to have the House rush through with this Bill. I do not believe the argument on research.

The argument on jobs is an interesting one. The bait is that there will be 3,000 high-tech jobs for graduates. The Minister should look at the analysis of his own Department; it contradicts the Minister. Documents obtained by Southam News under the Access to Information Act illustrated that out of the magic number of 3,000, only 1,148 will be employed by the industry in a professional category. According to the documents, a further 541 will be employed extramurally, probably in universities and research institutes. A further 652 are classified as technical, which means lab technicians who could have an undergraduate or community college standing. There are 620 others who turn out to be, in the words of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, "Managers, cleaners, animal keepers, statisticians, and clerks". Therefore, the 3,000 high-tech, high quality jobs for Canadian scientists and biochemists over the next 10 years are not there. The companies plan to employ 1,148 professionals, or 38 per cent of what they have led people to believe.

One has to ask, what is the Government's real agenda? I think that the Government's real agenda is to make the United States happy and to remove this so-called trade irritant because that was part of the free trade deal. I listened to the question addressed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in the House, and he virtually has admitted as much. That is the Government's real agenda. It has an unpopular Bill. There are a small amount of people who are employed in the industry who naturally are in favour of the Bill. The public is not. Why would the public be in favour of a $400 million or $500 million increase in drug prices? Why would we go from some of the lowest prices in the world to some of the highest? The Government does not have much support.

I wish to conclude by bringing a couple of matters to your attention, Madam Speaker. I wish to read a letter that I have received from one of my constituents, a Mrs. G. Rowlands, who lives on Fleming Street in my riding. She states:

> I am a widow in my late fifties. I live on less than $450 a month. Fortunately, I am in good health, but my husband's drug bills for the past nine years were on an average of $150 to $200 a month, using generic drugs. If he had not been covered by pharmacare on D.V.A, we would have had a very hard time indeed.
> I know people, however, who are under 65 and pay for their own drugs, as I do. Can you imagine the difficulty in covering these escalated costs on a limited budget?

That is what the real world is like. People are struggling to pay this type of drug Bill. We have an aging population, which means that we will have to pay more. The Government comes along with a Bill which will not increase jobs. We will have research that is clinical and market oriented, and not basic research. There is much authority for that position. There have been many hearings and many quotes. The jobs will not be created. Prices are rising. It is a pay-off to the Americans. In short, it is one of the worst Bills that this Government has brought in, and the Canadian people will hold the Government accountable at the next election.

Mr. Horner: I listened attentively to the Hon. Member who made a great number of points which were full of holes. The Hon. Member talked about jobs not being there. We know that these jobs are there. Let us review what has happened with this Bill. It was introduced and went through first reading, second reading and into a lengthy study by a legislative committee. The study went on and on and on. I sat in on the hearings and I know what the committee went through. The Bill was given third reading and sent to the Senate for Royal Assent.

What did the Senate do? It decided that it would study the matter and then sent it back to the House. Senators changed the Bill around. They said that we could not have 10 years' exclusivity. They said that we had to go back to four years but give a 14 per cent royalty and so on and so forth. That is all history. However, the truth is now coming out. The truth is now coming out with respect to what the real reasons are behind that move.

Today, in an article in The Toronto Star, the Deputy Leader of the Liberal Party in the Senate, Senator Gigantes is quoted as having stated, "I will do anything that I possibly can to stop a Bill that makes Brian Mulroney look good". I think that is a very poor reason for trying to stop a Bill that will bring about research and medical technology. I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that the parent companies—

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Fill the Senate full of concrete.

Mr. Horner: I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that the basic research is done in the parent companies. Ciba-Geigy has an office in my riding of Mississauga North. That company's basic research is done in Basel, Switzerland, where its head office is located. The company has 1,000 researchers there. Would it not be very nice if some of that operation were decentralized and carried out in Canada?

I do not expect that large research facilities will be built in Canada right away, but the pharmaceutical companies—and we have to show some trust in them—have pledged $1.4 billion over the next five years. That will produce 3,500 jobs in research for university trained people. I really cannot see how the Hon. Member can state that we will not produce these jobs.

Hon. Members will remember that back in 1984 the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that we would create jobs at a faster rate than they had ever been created before. Members of the Opposition said that that was false, that we would lose 150,000 jobs. However, the latest reports state that we have created jobs at a rate of over 25,000 per month and, lately, as high as 40,000 per month.

Mr. Rompkey: In Ontario!

Mr. Horner: The Hon. Member says, "In Ontario". I will grant the Hon. Member that Ontario has prospered and is prospering. I will also tell Hon. Members that the spin-offs are coming now in other areas. We are doing things in eastern Canada and in western Canada that have never been done before. How can the Hon. Member stand up and say that this is a bad Bill when there are 2,500 people walking on Parliament Hill today? I am sure he has never, ever seen 2,500 people walk in support of a government Bill in the time that he has been here, and I believe he was elected in 1979. He has never, ever seen 2,500 people walking in support of a government Bill. The CBC will report that when 150 people protest against a government Bill it is a massive display. So what will happen now? We get 2,500 people in support of a government Bill and the CBC reports about finding a box on the bottom of the ocean—absolutely ridiculous!

I would like to ask the Hon. Member to comment on his statement that the cost of drugs will go up and about the aging population. I will grant the Hon. Member that we have an aging population. But with an aging population we must have the research to supply the medical technology to look after such a population. How will we have research to do this if we do not have a Bill that gives some protection and some exclusivity to the companies that are doing the research? I would like to hear the Hon. Member's comments on that matter, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. With respect to the people who are demonstrating outside, I am glad they are. They are exercising their constitutional rights to demonstrate. I point out that I understand that they work for the companies and are paid by the companies. Their expenses here were paid by the companies. So one has to take those matters into consideration. Inevitably, one has to balance the fact that some people will lose in some instances, such as a group of people, versus another huge group of people, namely the people who have to pay the increased drug prices, especially older people.

With respect to research and development, it is not only I who say that. Dr. Paul Gorecki of the Economic Council of Canada, who is perhaps the leading economist in the field of prescription drugs, expressed to the committee his scepticism about the projected doubling of research and development by 1990. He said that no data has been provided in this respect. He asked how real these assumptions are. Under what assumptions is the growth in R and D likely to occur, he asked. He also asked the following questions. Which companies will increase their R and D? Will the research be clinical or basic? Will market research be included?

I have not been saying that; it is being said by the expert in the field. With respect to the costs, the figures are there. They were presented to the committee and before the Senate committee and so on. They range from $300 million to $600 million in increased prices.

The Hon. Member and I both share the notion that we would like to see research in Mississauga, or anywhere else in Canada. Would it not be nice if some of the research that is now being conducted in Basle were to be conducted in Canada?

I think that the Hon. Member is being naive when he says that we have to show some trust in these companies. This is a huge lobby group. It has never kept its promises in the past. If we look at what the American committees have found out and at who is leading this movement as well as what is happening, I think Hon. Members will agree that the Government of the Prime Minister and the Hon. Member are naive in the extreme to get suckered into changing Canada's drug laws as a result of the pressure of the relatively small numbers involved in this lobby group.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to my hon. friend. I know that he did a tremendous amount of work on the whole question of the energy industry and how the oil companies shifted oil and increased prices by moving oil from one subsidiary to the other. I ask the Hon. Member if the report which I am about to read which appeared last week in The Globe and Mail sounds familiar to him. The article states that these companies, these great multinational companies whose profits are among the highest of any company in Canada, are involved in a system of transfer pricing. The article states:

> Transfer pricing is a way of shifting money within related companies to move profits out of high-tax areas into more favourable jurisdictions. In a typical transaction, the Canadian subsidiary would pay an offshore affiliate an inflated price for the raw material used to make a prescription drug. This over-high price becomes a cost to the domestic company, cutting its profit and therefore its tax bill.

The article then goes on to list a number of cases in which Revenue Canada has battled with companies. In one case one of the companies settled its dispute with Revenue Canada by paying $500,000 in lieu of taxes which it should have paid if it had not become involved in this very cute deal of inter-company transfers. Does that not sound very much like what the oil companies have done so successfully in rooking and bilking the Canadian people?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May we please have a short answer from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. There are parallels between the working of the multinational oil companies and some of the multinational drug manufacturers. We are not saying that they are bad people. But they work in a different interest. They work for the interest of their shareholders, which they should, in their own particular countries. But that does not happen to be in the interests of Canada, at least not all the time.

So we have had a history in Canada in which there have been higher than normal oil prices. We have had some restrictions in terms of competition. We have had research and development transferred to the United States. We decided as a people in the 1970s to try to Canadianize our industries, to try to get some control over industries in Canada. Now the Government is reversing that whole trend, not only in the oil industry but also in the drug industry.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Madam Speaker, debate on this Bill began last Friday. Today is the fourth day of debate. I think everyone would have to agree that it has been well discussed in the House. Outside the House, people have come to the front lawn of Parliament in the last two days to make the point that they would like to see the Bill passed.

One of the things that caught my eye about the demonstration was the signs some demonstrators were holding which said: "Copycats cost jobs". I think there is good evidence that this Bill will create jobs in Canada and will do the exact opposite of what the Hon. Member who just spoke said it would do. The Bill will create more jobs for Canadians, and that tells me that it will help Canadianize the industry.

The Bill has been before Parliament for 15 months. It has been discussed at length in committee. It has had 90 hours of debate in the House. Surely it is time the House took a decision.

I therefore give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) in relation to amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act, and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate be not further adjourned.

Mr. Waddell: Madam Speaker, does the Government not have any shame? The Minister is applying closure on the Bill. He is putting down the guillotine. What is the Government afraid of? Why is it afraid of letting the House of Commons and the public debate this matter? Why does the Government have to use its heavy hand?

Does this have anything to do with the trade negotiations with the United States? The Government is getting down on its knees genuflecting to the Americans.

Mr. Orlikow: Not its knees, its belly.

Mr. Waddell: Yeah, it gets right down on its belly. Does this not have something to do with the fact that this has to be put through for the American trade negotiations? Why is the Government making Canadians, and particularly old people like the lady whose letter I read in the House, pay higher prices? Harry Eastman and all the commentators said that the prices of drugs will go up, and the Minister should not deny that.

What is the real reason for this move? Is it because the Americans want the Bill? Why is the Government bringing in closure when there is absolutely no reason to do so?

The heavy hand of closure indicates a Government that is scared of Canadian public opinion and Canadian public opinion opposes this Bill. Canadians may not like what the Senate is doing, but separating the issues, they oppose this Bill because it means higher prices to be paid by Canadian people and it will not mean the kind of jobs that have been promised.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member made several interesting allegations. He wants to know what the Government is afraid of. The Government is not afraid of anything. Above all, the Government is not afraid to act on something that has been well discussed and whose benefits to Canadians have been well documented.

The Hon. Member should also know that the Bill will provide $121-million worth of investment in his own province. Surely that is something about which he should be concerned.

We must all be concerned about some of the illnesses that beset all of us as we get older. One of the things these amendments to the Patent Act will do is to find cures for some of those illnesses.

These amendments will give Canadians a chance to work in their own country and in their own chosen field. They will give Canadians a chance to be creative and productive in their own country. Surely that shows a Government that is not afraid but a Government that has taken responsibility and has acted.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister who just moved closure on this piece of legislation.

Mr. Lewis: He gave notice.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Yes, he gave notice, notice of a clear intention of the Government.

Day after day, the Government has accused the Liberal Party of being anti-democratic, of frustrating the will of an elected Government, simply because the Senate studied the legislation, as it should, and returned amendments to the House, as has been done time after time and as was done just last week on the transportation Bills, Bills C-18 and 19, in which case the Government approved them. Now the fact that our Party, through its Senate wing, is doing its jobs is called anti-democratic.

How can notice of closure be called democratic, especially at a time when the debate was winding down and it is obvious to everyone that this Bill will pass? Is that a democratic move by a Government that is accusing the Opposition of being anti-democratic? Let the Minister clarify what is democratic and what is not.

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, there have already been four days of debate on this Bill as it has been returned from the Senate. There were over 90 hours of debate in the House before it went to the Senate. There were extensive committee hearings on the Bill. There has been wide public discussion of the issue. Surely the Hon. Member is not suggesting that, considering all those things, what has happened is undemocratic in the sense that the people have not had a chance to make their views known. Any kind of common sense would tell the Hon. Member that, with the kind of exposure that has been given the Bill in the House, in committee and in the Senate, it is time for the House of Commons finally to make a decision on this very important matter.

In view of the amount of debate there has already been, I do not agree with the Hon. Member at all that this is undemocratic. We are doing what Canadians want us to do. We are exercising the responsibility that was given to us in the last election and, on that basis, the Government is not afraid of anything and above all is not afraid of acting on this Bill. That is exactly what we are doing.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I am sure the Minister's friend, Jack Penner, the President of Keystone Agriculture in Manitoba, an organization which has expressed its opposition to this Bill, will be interested in the comments of the Minister.

What is the difference between members of the Opposition refusing to go along with the views expressed by the people who are demonstrating outside—and they have every right to demonstrate—and the refusal of the Government and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to back down on the banning of advertising for tobacco? Members of Parliament from every Party have been receiving letters from people who work for tobacco companies and their advertising companies, but the Minister, quite properly, and virtually all members of the Opposition, agree with that Bill and are rejecting those representations made by those people who, for obvious reasons, are concerned about the Bill which will affect their economic security.

Mr. Horner: We're talking about Bill C-22.

Mr. Orlikow: I am talking about the Bill the Minister of National Health and Welfare has brought in to ban tobacco advertising. I am saying that the people who oppose that Bill for reasons which they understand and which we can understand, have had their representations rejected by the Minister and the Government, as they should be. I say we are giving precisely the same consideration to the representations being made by the people who were demonstrating outside and we believe even if they are adversely affected, which we do not believe they are, the welfare of the people of Canada as a whole would be protected by not passing the Bill. I ask the Minister: What is the difference?

• (1730)

Mr. Mayer: Madam Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member with a fair amount of care. We both represent ridings in Manitoba and I have a chance to travel with the Hon. Member a fair amount and have a high regard for him. I fail to see, however, the connection he makes between Bill C-51, which I think he is referring to, and the Bill presently before the House, Bill C-22. I guess you could make that kind of connection between any Bill, but I fail to see what it has to do with C-22. I guess if I wanted to be facetious I could ask what the Hon. Member has been smoking. I do that with a fair amount of affection and not to be discourteous. I do not honestly see the connection between that and his comments regarding the President of Keystone. I have had conversations with him and other members of that organization on their position concerning Bill C-22. We well know each other's views.

Mr. Orlikow: And they are different.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

• (1740)

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, to clarify the situation, I would like to say first of all that when the Minister answered my question a few moments ago, he stressed the time we had spent in debate on Bill C-22. I must say I agree with him on that score. The debate has been a long one. The Opposition, which is truly opposed to this Bill and wants to amend and improve it, spoke for quite some time.

However, that is no excuse for the Government to impose closure, to put a gag on the debate as it is doing now. What the Minister did not say, and I intend to do so now, is that we had given some very clear indications to the Government's representatives. The Minister should listen to what I am saying because this is something he ought to know. We gave very clear indications that we did not intend to make the debate go on much longer. We told the Government House Leader earlier today that when our Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), took the floor this afternoon he would be the last speaker on our side.

That being the case, why is the Government bringing in the steamroller, in the form of the most odious measure in our Standing Orders? The Government could have had the grace to wait until the end of the day and it would probably have had its Bill. Madam Speaker, I must admit this is hardly conducive to harmonious relations between the House Leaders of the various Parties.

The Parliamentary Secretary who is responsible for the business of the House seemed quite relieved when we told him that our Leader would be the last to speak. Maybe he didn't mention this to the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board who was asked to do the dirty work, to put the gag on this debate.

The Government could have proceeded otherwise. It could have used another section in our Standing Orders which provides for time allocation. No! In fact, I think the Government is showing his lack of confidence. Even with an overwhelming majority of 211 Members, it seems that the Government is not sure whether the Bill will be passed without applying closure.

The real reason is that the Government wants to look tough. This Government which for the past three years has been dragging its feet, unable to show leadership and trying to look tough during the Post Office strike and the railways strike, wants now to do the same with refugees. It looks as if the Government thought that within a month, by playing the tough guys they would manage to make up for three years of foot dragging, of lack of a certain steadfastness which is expected from a Government.

Mr. Gauthier: This is sheer hypocrisy.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): My colleague says that it is hypocrisy. I will accept that word which I do not use normally. I know that my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) has the reputation of being a fiery parliamentarian.

Let us go back to the position of my Party which will not change even if the Government applies closure. At the same time, I should like to clarify a point for the benefit of my colleague for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) who said earlier—and in fact, he has left the House and will not hear my remarks—that the Liberals have not stated their position.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would ask the Hon. Member not to refer to the presence or absence of Members of this House. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault).

Mr. Guilbault (Sainte-Marie): I withdraw those words, Madam Speaker. I usually follow the rules. Of course, to withdraw what I said will not bring the Hon. Member back to the House. In any event, he will be able to read Hansard tomorrow.

His statement a moment ago that Liberals are divided on the issue of Bill C-22 forces one to conclude that the Hon. Member has not been in the House for any part of the debate. The position of all Liberal Members and all Liberal Senators on Bill C-22 is the same, and I will inform my colleague who has not followed the debate, obviously, since he is asking me which position it is. Our position is very simple. It is the one Dr. Eastman put forward in his report. It provides for 10 years of exclusivity, not four. Not ten but four.

An Hon. Member: And what is your position?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): If the Hon. Member has something to say, why does he not stand up? Eh? What is the name of that guy who never stands up?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has the floor.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): You call to order those who often interrupt speeches.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques has the floor.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I do not think I am attacking anyone when I state our position. It seems to me I have a right to do so. That is precisely why I was elected.

I was saying that our position is the one that was arrived at after a long inquiry throughout Canada by Dr. Eastman and a number of experts who consulted many Canadians. We believe that four years of exclusivity for the multinationals which produce drugs are enough. We believe that royalties should be increased from 4 per cent to 14 per cent. An agency should collect these royalties and allocate the funds to the producing multinational companies which keep their promises, do research and development of pharmaceuticals in Canada and create jobs. This is our position, it is very simple.

If you look at the amendments we proposed in the House—they are in the Order Papers, printed in the documents—and compare them to those presented by the Senate, you will see that there is no difference of opinion amongst Liberals, they are essentially the same amendments. Those who listened to the speech of the Leader of the Official Opposition this afternoon will have no trouble understanding the position of the Liberal Party.

Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for some partisan reasons, will stubbornly continue to say: You are against jobs for Quebec.

Mr. Blais: It is true.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): As a matter of fact, I have just heard an echo from the other side which said: It is true.

The fact is that the difference in our position is quite simple. Instead of taking for cash or for granted that the drug multinationals will keep their promise to do research work and create jobs, we want guarantees. Therefore, we go even further than those who came to demonstrate here and told us to adopt Bill C-22, for it would increase the level of drug research in Canada, protect jobs and create new ones. I understand them. I agree when they want more research done in Canada, more protection for their jobs and new jobs created for other Canadians. However, I go even further. As I said in the House last Thursday, I do not see why I should rely more on the promises of foreign multinationals that I rely on those of the Conservative Party which believes blindly that the foreign corporations will deliver the goods.

Yet, I understand the position of multinationals: they want a 10-year protection. However, to obtain such a long protection, they will try their utmost not to commit themselves. They do not want us to legislate here guarantees which would force them to carry out research in Canada. Clearly, if they can avoid that, surely they are not going to complain. On another level, perhaps less serious, they do not want to give guarantees in writing either. If they can avoid that, they will. We heard a few speeches, a few words that were spoken. But even that would never have come, had they not been forced to do so.

Our position is to give fangs, to give teeth to Bill C-22, in order to have the assurance that research will be done in this country, jobs will be created in Canada, especially in the Province of Quebec I am representing here. It is therefore a complete distortion of our position to suggest, as certain Members in this House have done, that we are against job creation in Quebec. Only clowns can say that.

The three political Parties agree when it comes to increasing research in Canada. The three Parties agree on creating new jobs in research. The difference is, some Parties are ready to accept at face value the promises made by companies that are not even established in Canada, that have their headquarters elsewhere, in foreign countries. Our position is very prudent. It is to say: You claim that you are going to do research, that you will be increasing the level of research—good, we want legislative guarantees to that effect. And if multinational corporations in the drug industry are sincere when they suggest they want to do research, I do not see why they would oppose an amendment that was put forward and that would cast in concrete that obligation to do research. And indeed Senators returned to the House of Commons the same amendment we put forward originally.

The problem is, why does the Government refuse to put its money where its mouth is? The Government says: We want those companies to do research in Canada. But when we say to the Government: Take the steps needed through a package of amendments that is already there, amendments to ensure that this will happen, the Government's answer is: No, pass the Bill as it is. In short, the Government is telling us it is trusting foreign companies. Perhaps there are other reasons. Why is the Government rejecting that amendment? Is it under pressure from those multinational corporations that say: Look here, the Opposition is getting tired, they have been talking for a long time, in the end they will let it pass. Do not accept that amendment. Have no fear, we will do research. Were the American authorities themselves under pressure? We all know about the lobbying system in the United States, and I am not blaming the multinationals with headquarters in the United States for putting pressure on the American politicians and asking them to speak to us about it, because the Americans are well aware that the Prime Minister and the Conservative Party have promised to deliver a free trade agreement and must now do so as the Canadian Government would look rather silly if the free trade negotiations fell through. This is a pressure point or a lever which the American Government can use, and this might be one of the reasons why this Government refuses to accept an amendment which is otherwise extremely reasonable. When you want something to happen, you do whatever is necessary to ensure that it does. If not, you are faced with the present situation where the Government does not practice what it preaches. The Government says that it wants research and jobs, but when we suggest that it take the necessary action, it refuses to do so. I am beginning to wonder whether the Government is sincere in its desire to have more research activities carried out in Canada.

Madam Speaker, you do not have to be in politics for long to know that we have students in our universities who are learning how to do scientific research for the future. They chose science because they have the ability and the desire required and know that they will have stable and well-paid jobs. You do not need a dictionary to learn that. You do not need to have been a Member of Parliament for 20 years to understand that anyone who objected to this would not be re-elected.

I therefore believe that the Government is going far enough today by imposing closure without repeating the nonsense that Liberals are opposed to research and job creation, as though Canadians could be so stupid as to believe that the politicians would have the idiocy of telling people that they do not want them to have jobs.

An Hon. Member: There were 3,000 people.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I know that 3,000 people came. There is no need to repeat it. I saw them. However, I know that they came here in buses chartered by the companies. I know that these people came here to defend their jobs. I understand them. They were given a day off by their companies. It is not difficult to organize demonstrations such as that one.

Another thing I can tell them for instance is that I appreciate that they want to protect their jobs, but they should understand that some people can look a little bit further down the road, people who may have more experience in politics like some of us who have been here for quite some time and who have learned over the past three years that relying on the promises of the Party across the aisle is not necessarily the prudent approach.

Mr. Blais: You tell them that!

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): How much more time do you have left?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): I also learned a number of years ago that taking foreign companies at their word is not necessarily the most prudent thing to do. Notwithstanding the interjections of my friends, I have no problem continuing my remarks. I am fond of them because they goad me and this seems to keep me quite alert.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, I repeat that the Government is making another mistake when it seeks to push Bill C-22 through as is, without any guarantee, that it is making yet another mistake by imposing closure. As I said a moment ago, the Government proves that it has no respect for party agreements. We did not tell the Government that we had changed our mind, that overnight we had come to appreciate the full value of Bill C-22; we said that we had debated the measure, that we got our message across and made our views clear, and that we were prepared to vote as soon as our leader would have addressed the House.

[English]

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, I listened with great interest to the Hon. Member's remarks, especially at they concerned the Senate royalty fund.

I do not think he understands what he is talking about. According to page 365 of the Eastman Commission of Inquiry report, the royalty fund as proposed by the Senate would have raised $4.6 million for research in 1983. That is a substantial amount, but does not compare with the $1.4 billion that we will raise the other way.

The fund would have meant a cost to consumers of $30.6 million because of increased drug prices resulting from higher royalties. Over 10 years, using the same methodology, the total cost to consumers would have been $700 million to $1.1 billion.

When one considers another aspect, the Senate's proposal does not include a drug prices review board. There is no protection for consumers against these added costs. On the other hand, the drug prices review board as proposed by the Government, and supported by many different people, including officials in the Saskatchewan pharmacare program, is expected to save consumers hundreds of millions of dollars over the same time period.

The only conclusion I can reach is that the Senate's proposals are far more detrimental to the consumer than the Government's legislation. They come nowhere near the economic benefits of Bill C-22. How can the Hon. Member justify the Senate royalty fund raising $4.6 million for research at a cost of $30.6 million in increased drug prices? It does not make sense to me. It may be Liberal philosophy, but it sure is not ours.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, I will start with the second question. The Hon. Member asks why there is no price review mechanism in our position. It is simple to understand. There is no need for it. When one shortens the period of exclusivity and allows generic companies to begin copying the drug and retailing it at a lower cost after four years instead of ten years, the prices are kept down. Look at the experience in Canada when the period of exclusivity was removed and generics began copying and distributing at half the price. Prices went down. That is not difficult to understand.

Why would we agree with a price review mechanism that is proposed in Bill C-22 when it is only a review? There are no roll-back provisions.

Mr. Horner: There are teeth in it.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): There are teeth, but they are worn out. There are no real teeth.

Our proposal will make sure that prices do not go up. Therefore, there would be no need for a mechanism to try to push them down.

Everyone except the Tories understand that if you give a 10-year period of monopolistic exclusivity on a drug by a particular company, the price will stay up.

Mr. Horner: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I asked a question concerning the Senate royalty fund and the Hon. Member is not answering the question at all. I would like some instruction to have him answer the question, please.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): That is not a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault) was just about to answer the Hon. Member's question.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Fortunately, Madam Speaker, the Chair has more perspicacity than the Member who has just interrupted me.

Of course, the Senate's royalty fund . . . First, I must say one thing. I said this earlier and I will say it again now. Perhaps the Hon. Member did not understand. Perhaps he was doing something else when I started my comments. Since I was speaking in French, perhaps the Hon. Member had trouble with the translation.

I said earlier that the Liberal Party's position was basically that taken by the Eastman report. I did not say it was an exact replica of the report. There are a few differences, and the Hon. Member may have overlooked that. The mechanism we are proposing is not exactly . . . We did not take the report and make a photocopy and say: These are our amendments. We drafted our amendments as we saw fit. However, they are largely based on the Eastman report. That is why the Hon. Member . . . In any case, the Hon. Member did do his homework. He realized that there was a slight difference between the Eastman position on royalties and the position taken by the Senate. He should add: the position taken by the Liberals in the House of Commons as well. I don't know why he only saw the Senate's position, although he was here in the House when we moved our amendments. Maybe that is what the Hon. Member failed to see.

[English]

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, does the Hon. Member believe that we have had a fair debate on Bill C-22 in the House, considering the fact that at second reading, which was ended by time allocation, there were four occasions on which we spoke to the Bill? They were November 20, November 21, November 24 and November 25, for a total of 11 hours and five minutes. There was a total of 26 speakers, and time allocation was moved after only five speakers had spoken.

In committee, this Bill had 13 sessions with witnesses. Fifty groups were heard, with a 45-minute time limit. The Government severely limited the number of witnesses who could be heard. It dropped the offer to travel to other parts of Canada and rejected the possibility of having American witnesses who could testify about the American experience without generic drug legislation.

At report stage, this Bill was ended by time allocation after 10 hours and 12 minutes, and after only two out of 11 groups of amendments had been dealt with.

Third reading of this Bill was ended by time allocation and our Party, for example, only had two Members who were able to address the issue at third reading.

Does the Hon. Member believe that Bill C-22 has been given adequate time for debate in the initial stages and has been given adequate time for debate since the Senate amendments have been brought down for discussion?

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Madam Speaker, certainly we do not agree any more than he does that the Government was right in using time allocation. We resent those measures.

I just spoke against this horrible measure of which we have been given notice again today. We are certainly not very happy that the Government has done its best to reduce the number of witnesses before the committee. Certainly, more groups would like to have been heard and it would have been fair to give them an opportunity.

On the other hand, if the Hon. Member is asking me if our Party had time and opportunity to place its position completely before the House of Commons, before committee and, to please the Tories, before the Senate, of course we have had time. Of course our position is well known.

As I said earlier, we certainly had a chance to give our message and make our points known completely. Our position was that after our Leader spoke this afternoon we were ready to vote on the Bill. Perhaps that answers the Hon. Member's question.

Obviously, we could have done without time allocation at the other stages, and obviously we could have done without closure. Certainly we would have been more happy if more witnesses could have been able to appear before the committee. However, nothing appears to be perfect in this world.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) on a point of order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis) whether he could give the House some indication of the Bills or business that will be called tomorrow at eleven o'clock.

• (1800)

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would advise my hon. colleague that it would be the intention of the Government to continue debate on Bill C-22. If we could come to a reasonable arrangement on the number of speakers or on a debate which would finish before five o'clock, it may not be necessary to invoke the closure motion.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Speaker, in view of the failure in the final mediation attempt, and considering the public interest, I would suggest that the House Leaders meet immediately in order to discuss when this Bill should be read a second time. Hopefully the House Leaders will agree that we can proceed as of three o'clock this afternoon through all stages.

• (1110)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to meet with my counterparts to pursue the suggestion of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). Obviously we will want to look at the Bill. We received an unofficial draft of it about 10 minutes before the House opened. We are studying the Bill now but we will certainly want to look at the situation in light of the over-all public interest as well as in an effort to be fair to those concerned, particularly the workers involved in this difficult situation.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my caucus, the New Democrats, we are certainly prepared to meet as quickly as possible with the other House Leaders to examine the legislation. As the House Leader for the Liberals just indicated, we received a draft copy of the Bill a few minutes ago and it is being considered now. We will study and examine the legislation and look forward to meeting with the House Leaders as soon as possible.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government, we are ready to meet as soon as my colleagues have had an opportunity to examine the Bill to decide whether or not we can go forward at three o'clock. I would hope in the interests of moving ahead quickly that we can proceed at three o'clock. I am ready to discuss the matter with them at any time.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, it would be appropriate for the House to give the Chair consent, on the basis that there be unanimous consent that debate will proceed later this day. I make it very clear that that is on the basis of unanimous consent.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, we are dealing here with an important matter and it is essential that we have goodwill on all sides of the House. The House Leaders can meet. I do not think unanimous consent has to be given, and I think we will proceed in due course. We have to have some faith in the process and give the people here in the House some understanding. I do not see the need for unanimous consent to do what we have proposed to do. I really do not understand what we are doing here.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the intervention of the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). The position of the Chair was to make it very clear to both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party that, because there will be some discussions aimed at bringing on this matter later today, the Chair feels that that is what will happen, on the assumption, of course, that there is unanimous agreement as a consequence of these discussions. That was the only point I was trying to make. I did not want to put the Opposition in a position of being automatically caught up in a debate later today because the Chair received the unanimous consent of the House. That debate will take place if the Government and the two Opposition Parties can agree as to the terms. I think that is the understanding the Chair was trying to get across. Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CHILD CARE

CONCURRENCE IN FINAL REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly):

> That the final report of the Special Committee on Child Care presented to the House on Monday, March 30, 1987 be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, last March, following the tabling of the report from the Special Committee on Child Care, I submitted a request on behalf of the New Democratic Party for a motion of concurrence to the House. This was for the purpose of discussing the proposed report and its recommendations, along with our own minority report which we feel provided a very much better alternative for Canadians who urgently require child care. We have waited and waited for a government response.

We hoped that there would be a substantive response by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to the special committee majority report, the report of the Conservatives, but the Minister has not even had the courtesy to respond to the majority report of his own Members who were on that committee.

As I said yesterday in a question to the Minister, we feel that that is quite appalling, and it is an indication that the Government does not put a high priority on child care, together with the many delays that have taken place. I refer, of course, to the June 30 deadline when the Minister was supposed to have tabled the government response. Following that he asked for a further extension. Then by the back door—it was not even tabled in the House—we had a Dear Shirley letter two weeks ago which went to the Clerk of the House. We eventually got a copy of it but that letter really said nothing at all as to what was the Government's intent. It referred to certain strategies but did not indicate what those strategies would be. It did not even begin to spell out the Government's objectives for a national program for child care.

Yesterday I raised this matter again in the House. The Minister disagreed with my challenge that this was a lack of intention by the Government to take child care seriously and give it priority. But he has not come forward with any proposals, and he has told the provinces that there will be further delays. Why are there these delays, Mr. Speaker? What is the necessity to wait for so long? Why have we not had child care objectives tabled in this House so that the Parliament of Canada, particularly those of us who travelled across the country and heard so many witnesses, could respond to what is needed in the way of a real child care policy for the first time in the history of Canada?

One can speculate why there are the delays. It is very evident there has not been agreement in Cabinet. It is evident that there is a difference of opinion between the Minister of National Health and Welfare who hopefully advocates a very comprehensive child care system that is affordable, quality and available in all communities, and his colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), who undoubtedly does not want to put any money forward to proceed with the commitment made repeatedly by the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

We see this as another broken promise. Words are not enough. Prior to the last election campaign the Prime Minister made a major commitment on child care to women's groups, as did the Leaders of all Parties. He has repeated this promise, and in fact has said several times that he will see that the Conservative Government commits substantial funding to the development of a national child care program, and he has used the term "national child care program".

We have not heard from the Minister responsible for the status of women who should surely be an advocate of child care. When we challenged her on this many months ago, she said that we do not need to throw money at this problem, we want to know what the needs are. The Special Committee on Child Care spent a year and a half working, listening and documenting these needs and doing considerable research into them. Daycare advocacy groups from across the country, groups with a great deal of expertise, provided considerable information to the committee. We know what is needed. We need action that will provide a comprehensive national child care program in co-operation with the provinces.

I believe the Meech Lake Accord has made us much more aware of how important it is that the federal Government spell out national objectives for a child care program. This is the first social program that will be administered under the new Accord, and that Accord provides that the federal Government establish the national objectives and that if the provinces do not go along with direct funding for a program, they must at least have something in place that is comparable.

We believe it is very important that we debate these national objectives right now. We have also said repeatedly, long before the latest committee hearings, that the Government should put at least $320 million into child care services so that the present crisis can be dealt with, so that existing child care centres can be stabilized, so that fees can be reduced a bit making it affordable and so that trained child care workers can, for the first time in history, receive the decent wage which they certainly deserve.

We would also like to see a community initiative and a child care development fund. This is something the committee advocated, something that would provide new initiatives and would respond to special initiatives.

We know that it will take time to negotiate cost-sharing arrangements with the provinces. It is particularly important the the poorer provinces and the northern regions use a different cost-sharing formula.

Members of the New Democratic Party have advocated that the two levels of Government should share the cost of child care fifty-fifty in the next few years and that parents' fees should be 50 per cent. We realize that Provinces like Newfoundland are just getting started in this field, as are northern regions and particularly the territories. It is important that the federal Government put in more than its 25 per cent in those regions. We advocated a formula of 40 per cent and 10 per cent, so that there will be variable cost sharing.

The problem would really not be that difficult if the federal Government would accept the fact that it must take a leadership role. We do not want a child care program that is geared to the lowest minimum standard. If the Government continues the approach it has been taking with the provincial Ministers and tells them to decide what the national program should be, we will have a program of the lowest common denominator. The provinces will cut back on services that are essentially needed and that should be expanded and made affordable.

I know that people are concerned about the costs of child care and we want to take a look at that. The Conservative members of the Special Committee on Child Care made a pretty generous recommendation. They recommended that $700 million be made available initially for a child care program, but their child care program was not just a program. Most of that money would go to tax incentives and a very token allowance of something like $200 a year for a parent who would wish to remain in the home. That will not give a parent who wants to remain at home and do his or her own parenting any real choice.

That proposal also called for additional deductions in the form of tax credits for the cost of child care, but the problem is that it will not give parents any choice. If the services are not funded and if they are not of quality, accessible and flexible, there will be no real choice. The money Conservative Members of the committee would allocate would go primarily to informal kinds of child care that may be good in some cases but in other cases may be very unreliable and even damaging to children.

We do not agree that $700 million should be spent primarily on tax incentives. We have recommended not $700 million but $320 million. I would like my Conservative colleagues to take note of that because they are always saying that the NDP are the big spenders. We want the money to be invested directly into quality child care services. Making $320 million available to the provinces as quickly as possible would stabilize the present system, would help bring wages up and fees down and would also create 25,000 new spaces. It would mean that for the first time, children in certain regions would have available to them trained care-givers and licensed child care services. In areas where there are already developments, these would be improved and there would be quality non-profit services.

The Conservative Members of the committee would end capital funding for day care by 1990 so that there really would not be any incentive for expanding spaces. Yet under the recommendation made by Conservative Members of the committee, $1 billion would go to tax measures alone by 1992. This would go primarily to informal child care services. We feel that that would be money misspent.

Under our proposal, $600 million would be available by 1992 as opposed to $1 billion. It would be made available for quality, licensed, non-profit child care services that are flexible and adaptable to the needs of parents and developed at the grassroots level in local communities.

What then should be the long-term goal? Child care policy is really family policy and we desperately need family policy at the national level. We think that this policy should look not only at short and mid-term developments but should have a long-range goal. If we feel children are important, and I am sure we all do, we must plan for the real world in which we live today.

We know that the majority of women in the workplace who have young children need child care and we also know that that situation will not change. We know that the number of single-parent families usually headed by mothers is on the increase. These mothers desperately need reliable child care or they will have no choices at all and will remain on welfare for a good part of their lives if not forever.

It is vital that we plan now for child care and that the federal Government play a leadership role. It is vital that we have a national objective for child care that is clearly spelled out. Of course, the provinces have to develop standards. That is in their jurisdiction. We are talking about the broad principles as outlined in the Canada Health Act.

Let me take a moment to stress what we would like to see in the way of national objectives. A federal program should be comprehensive. Funding should go to encourage a broad range of services, including those for infants in some cases, family daycare homes, group care, and also support services for parents who are not in the workforce part-time. The federal Government must insist on quality. All services must be licensed and regulated. We found in the Northwest Territories, for example, that there was no licensing. I think they are bringing it in now; I certainly hope so. My colleague from the Yukon will agree that there, where we have an NDP Government, they were making strides, despite the desperate economic situation, to put territorial funding into good quality day care services.

Another principle is that services must be affordable. Cost must not be a barrier to access. We can do this initially by having a sliding scale fee system. It is hoped in the long term we will have a child care program as accessible as our health and education services. As in Scandinavian and many European countries, we see this as a very important service for families that should not be left to chance but planned with considerable government input.

Another principle is that services should be accessible. That is not compulsory, but accessible. There must be an appropriate service in rural communities. Native communities must be able to develop their own services and train their own care givers and do it in a way which reflects a good degree of cultural content.

Flexibility is another principle. Services must be adapted so that they meet the needs of working parents. We found timing was very important and that care has to be available for parents who were on shift work, for example. Most important, and this ties in with quality, federal government shared funding should go to non-profit services. Research was done for the special committee which proved that the non-profit services were of a much higher quality than commercial services. We are not saying that profit-making services should not exist. We are saying that federal funding should go to non-profit services because they are of a higher quality and are not skimming off money for profits. The money goes directly to paying the wages of care-givers and usually at a much better rate than profit-making centres.

Then we have the question of accountability. There must be regular monitoring and provincial standards spelled out—we hope the standards are high, not the minimum—along with financial accountability. We want to see parents very much involved in the related boards and committees so that they and the local communities have a real say in what is going to be suitable for them.

There are many other things I could deal with. We heard today that the provinces are very anxious about this, as are we. Manitoba and Ontario have their contributions ready to go and are just waiting to start on a good program. As I said before, and I cannot stress this enough, we must have national objectives. It does not cost one cent for the Minister to stand in this House and tell us what the federal government policy is on child care. What are the federal national objectives for child care? It is most important, yet he does not really seem to feel that this is necessary.

Another thing that we feel is very important, and we hope he would be working on it, is legislation. I think all Parties recommended through the special committee that there should be special child care legislation which would spell out the policy objectives of a national program. We would outline a financing formula and provide for a national secretariat. Everyone on the committee agreed that that was needed. There would also be a special fund for new initiatives and training of child care workers. We need the legislation. I hope all Parties will work together to ask the Minister and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make sure that before this session ends we have tabled for debate the objectives of a national program.

As well, there should be some up front money based on the existing system in the provinces, if necessary. I guess it would be necessary if they do not have programs developed in certain provinces. However, we would like to see that $320 million up front and made available now so we do not have to delay any longer. We could get on with stabilizing the present situation at least.

I appeal to all Parties to support us in this endeavour. Let us get on with something for Canada's children. Fall is coming and parents are going to be in urgent need of good quality, licensed child care.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments? Resuming debate.

• (1140)

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate on the Government's commitments and the report on child care.

First of all, I want to say that unfortunately, my colleague the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) was unable to be in the House to speak to this subject, although she worked very hard on this Committee. She is in hospital, and I can inform Hon. Members she is doing very well and there is no cause for concern. She has therefore asked me to take part in this debate.

I agree with the Hon. Member who just spoke on behalf of the New Democratic Party that the Conservative Government is to be censured for its attitude to our Canadian families. Considering the fact that, for three years, this Government has been promising—the House will recall that in the Prime Minister's speech, the family was the cornerstone of Canadian society... In every Throne Speech, this Government has promised to improve child care and to do something to help our families. However, after three years nothing has been done about child care, despite the hard work done by all members of the Committee who studied all aspects of the subject. Representations were made by Canadians, by people from across this country, by organizations and by people involved in child care. Even now, nothing has been done. Today, the Globe and Mail reports that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) told his provincial counterparts that he was not yet ready to table his national child-care plan.

Despite the various positions being taken today, the parties concerned have made their decision on child care. I believe that the reason the Hon. Member for Outremont submitted a minority report, dissenting from the position taken by the Conservative majority, was that the proposals made by the Committee, that is the proposals made by the Conservative Members on this Committee, failed to respond to the needs and expectations of Canadians with respect to child care.

Look at the situation today. Less than 10 per cent of our children have access to day care in Canada. I suggest Hon. Members look at their ridings, and whether the riding happens to be my own, Sainte-Marie, or in Vancouver, the Maritimes or Ontario, in one of our urban centres or the Yukon or rural areas, every time we met with community groups, and this was clear from their testimony, we were told there was a lack of daycare services and also a lack of quality standards.

The Liberal Party's position is very clear in this respect. We wanted the Government to table its plan immediately and start a negotiating process with the provincial Governments, because this is very important—we are talking about provincial jurisdiction—the Government must immediately table a comprehensive plan for child care in Canada, with the condition—and this is where there is a difference between the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party—that parents must have a choice. We absolutely object to what the New Democratic Party is proposing which would prevent parents from choosing where they send their children for daycare. The New Democratic Party is strictly proposing an institutionalized child care plan. In practical terms, this would mean that a person in the riding of Sainte-Marie who has a job and who wants to let the third neighbour down the street look after her child, will not be entitled to financial compensation to pay the cost of having this third neighbour providing this care. She would have to send her child to a government-run day-care centre. I think all Canadians must be against this proposal by the New Democratic Party.

The proposal made by the Liberal Party is clear, precise and simple, and meets the needs, expectations and demands of various interested groups and the Canadian people generally. First of all, through refundable tax credits, it makes it possible for Canadian families and women who want to continue their career to choose between sending their children to a well-organized public daycare centre, or to a private one, or even entrust them to the next door neighbour. Moreover, it is absolutely essential, in order to increase the number of openings—simply adopting the principle without making sure that the number of openings is there to meet the demand would not be enough—that the federal Government should release large amounts of money, for this Conservative Government did not hesitate to use $1 billion to help a number of banks facing bankruptcy.

Now, Canadian families and taxpayers are asking the Government for help. Canadian women want to continue their careers and be provided with effficient, fair and high quality daycare services, making it possible for them to continue to work and raise their children. To achieve this goal, the federal Government should provide the provincial Governments with large amounts of money to improve and expand the daycare systems which exist in the various provinces. But minimum standards should be established by the federal Government and accepted by the provinces. Nothing would prevent, in Provinces such as Quebec, as the Bourassa Government has just announced, the Minister responsible for the status of women to set higher standards.

In its assistance program, however, the Federal Government should provide funding and set criteria not only on the number of openings, but also on the quality of locations, to avoid being simply provided with a daycare network, without any security or education guarantee, and without enough money to provide facilities to meet the needs of growing children.

Together with the Provincial Governments, the federal Government should initiate as soon as possible an awareness and financial assistance campaign to set up daycare networks in the workplace.

It is essential that Canadian employers who often ask for tax credits, whether it is the large financial institutions, multinationals or various government levels, launch an action plan. There lies the power of leadership, such is the request made by the Liberal Party, by my colleague from Outremont. The federal Government must suggest and urge that steps be taken, set up criteria, sensitize employers as well as employees, either large corporations where possible and also allow small and medium-sized businesses, where it may not be as easy, to set up childcare services. This is the reason why a free choice policy is essential.

Unfortunately, the committee report submitted and concurred in solely by the government majority is rather mitigated. It contains pious hopes. It does not meet the needs and expectations of our Canadian families and the concerns of women in that area.

On the other hand, we cannot over-emphasize the warning against the proposal made by the New Democratic Party. Once again, I say those positions about childcare services, either that of the New Democrats, the Progressive Conservative Party or the Liberal Party clearly show their leanings. In the report, the Tory Party does not really believe in child care. However, a program must be offered, one is announced but in fact they hope nobody will use it. It is more or less the same situation as with public housing assistance programs the Conservative Government now has in place. Those programs exist, but your heart is not in them because they cost so much. It is obvious . . . The Conservatives put forward proposals that are watered down and half-hearted because they have no choice politically, but let us not forget they previously agreed to de-index family allowances, lower the income that made one eligible for the full child tax credit, and authorized the Government to take away more than $1 billion from Canadian families to reduce the deficit or bail out banks, nor must we lose sight of the recommendations made by Conservative Members and the Government's inaction in that area. The social injustice minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, did absoluting nothing.

It was more of the same when time came to protect the interests of senior citizens. He was nowhere to be found. That is another matter he is holding up. The implementation of a good daycare program is not held back by the provincial Governments but by the internal quarrels between the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Surely there is someone else mixed up in this who does not know what he is doing.

The NDP stands at the opposite end; they have suddenly decreed that all children should be treated the same way. They must be kept in the same square box and educated in the same manner.

This is unacceptable and the Canadian public will not accept this recommendation. We have to fight against this because it certainly seems simplistic to have a free universal system. It might look fine, but you have to think about what it means. For instance, in the Gaspe Peninsula, in rural regions, you can have 10 families in the same sector and only one person who has to drive to work in another village. It would be unrealistic to organize a daycare centre to take care of two children in one region or village where there are about ten families. This is why it is essential to maintain freedom of choice and the tax credit for people in such regions.

What possible objection could the New Democratic Party have if a mother decides to place her child in a popular daycare centre in her own area or with a private sitter? She has the right to choose. She would be refused reimbursement because she has decided to go to a private daycare or to leave her child with a neighbour three doors down, maybe with a single mother with two young children who cannot go to work herself. Receiving some money to take care of the child of a neighbour would help her and help her neighbour too. Why should there be any objection to that? We have to oppose such a concept, and I trust that the NDP will change its position in this regard because I find it just as unacceptable as its position on defence.

Madam Speaker, in my opinion, the proposal of my colleague for Outremont, who has been working very hard for three years, travelling throughout the country and consulting people, is very clear and specific. This proposal would meet the needs and the expectations of the public and would be a practical and realistic way of meeting our objective of having a quality national daycare service under the jurisdiction of the provincial Governments. This proposal would provide tax credits for low and middle income families, maintain freedom of choice, and most important, increase the number of places available in daycare centres.

The debate is now open, but there is a very real fear, as my colleague for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) was telling me. There are popular daycare centres in his constituency and he told me that he met those responsible and that they need money for equipment and to meet educational requirements. They need funding to improve the premises and this is where the Canadian Government for three years has not been meeting that need. There are still other families in the constituency of Papineau, in the constituency of Montreal—Sainte-Marie or others, in Montreal districts. There is no room and no money, the province does not have enough money to open up another daycare centre in an expanding district where there is a need for some 60 child care places. Everyone is waiting unfortunately—everyone either believed erroneously or was misled by this Conservative Government—everyone is waiting for the famous policy.

The Government stated in a Throne Speech that family is important, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told Members of Parliament they would have to discuss the implementation within the shortest timeframe of an effective child care policy, but some three years later nothing is forthcoming, so we are getting fed up. And today we learned the Minister of National Health and Welfare is still postponing a decision with provincial Governments on that issue. This is something I had not thought of. My colleague for Saint-Denis brings to my attention that this is because Tory Members refuse to accept a change in our society. This boils down to what I was saying at the beginning of my remarks. Reading the majority report by Conservative Members, they referred to child care centres because they had to. But for them it would be better not to put a cent in that—left to themselves, they would not bother about it. They could not care less.

Thank God, I know Conservative Members are not all of that brand! It is therefore my hope that those who have a minimum of social conscience will wake up and speak to their Minister about social injustice in Canada, they will tell the Minister of National Health and Welfare: look, this has to move. It has to move urgently, because every day lost, every month lost, and we are now talking about every year lost may jeopardize mothers' career plans. Each time they delay increasing the number of child-care services to meet the needs, well every time, perhaps one single-parent mother in some area, whether Vancouver, the Atlantic Provinces, Ontario, Quebec, or my constituency, that person, because she cannot find child care, quits her job, loses one or two years, and after that everyone knows it is difficult to return to the labour market, to retrain.

This is why I think the situation is really urgent. I think that indeed in the Meech Lake negotiations there is a meeting with provincial Premiers. I suggest that the federal Government was wrong, for it should have been prepared to co-ordinate this action with the provincial Governments; in Quebec, Premier Robert Bourassa has already set up a daycare system to which he has announced improvements.

I conclude, Madam Speaker. If the federal Government continues to make cuts in its equalization payments, Quebec will have to reduce its health services and will be unable to go ahead with its daycare scheme. The Quebec Minister of Finance, Mr. Gérard D. Lévesque, had every reason to trust the Prime Minister. He should have listened to me; I could have told him right away to be very careful. He thought he was going to get money under the policy announced by the Prime Minister.

As you are signaling that I have already run out of time, Madam Speaker, I will conclude by saying that I wish the Conservative Members would exert pressure so that . . . It is absolutely necessary . . . It is simple. In case there are Conservative Members here who do not know what to say to the Minister, they should simply tell him this: Take and implement the Liberal policy, and our children will be well taken care of, our women will pursue fine careers and everybody will be happy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Edmonton South (Mr. Edwards).

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. He is in favour of a so-called free-choice policy. I noticed a leftist tone in his speech. It is not surprising. He said a simple and distinct policy and perhaps—

[English]

I think what we have before us is a piece of social engineering that is an endorsation rather than free choice, put forward by the Liberal Party. Has the Hon. Member studied with any care not only the statements of the Minister on the matter but also the recommendations of the committee on child care?

We recognize the changing nature of the family unit. I do not think anyone denies that changing evolution in our society, and whether or not we judge it is immaterial because we have to recognize it as a reality. Does the Hon. Member recognize that the fundamental principle laid down by the committee on child care in its majority report, and as embraced by the Minister himself, permits maximum free choice?

For example, does the Hon. Member not acknowledge that the committee recommended replacing the child care expense deduction by a 30 per cent child care expense credit, increasing the ceiling for claims from $2,000 to $3,000? Did he not notice that this committee, with the majority of members from the government side, proposed to introduce a refundable child care tax credit for families with children under six years which are not eligible for the expense credit of $200 for the first child, $100 for the second child and $50 for each additional child?

Did the Hon. Member not endorse, or even notice, that there was a proposal to replace maternity benefits with parental benefits and to increase the benefit period from 15 weeks to 26 weeks on a gradual basis over the next five years? Does he not also acknowledge that there was a proposal to introduce an initiatives and research fund, that a new child care secretariat be established?

• (1200)

Does he not acknowledge that the putting in place of these excellent recommendations will require much delicate and involved negotiation with the provinces and with all the experts in the field so that the end product will not only provide the maximum of free choice for Canadian parents and children, but also a system which responds in the ultimate to the requirements of various regions of this country? Thus it is truly humane, truly generous, yet one which the country can afford. I would appreciate the Hon. Member's response to those questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's questions. First, on the matter of being somewhat to the left or calling for social measures, I do not feel at all ashamed to be somewhat to the left, to call for social measures, and I am proud Liberals established a social program and a universal health care system which benefits the people, a drug plan and pension plans. I am proud of that, and I will always fight Conservatives who want to de-index or cut those programs, as I think we have shown.

On the other hand, I am pleased with the enumerations concerning the report. That is part of the proposals put forward by the Liberal Party. Maybe he did not know it had been proposed by Liberals. But what he is forgetting, what is being ignored, the essential aspect in my view is that we are in agreement on freedom of choice. I agree with him that the NDP opposes freedom of choice, they oppose parents having a choice, they support dictature from the top, but where I disagree with Conservatives on the matter of freedom of choice is this: You have freedom of choice, but there is nothing to choose. What is lacking is the political will, the complete program, the funding—funds are needed to increase the number of people's child care networks. If funding is provided for the premises, the physical facilities, this will mean that in order to provide people with freedom of choice, there must be enough places in terms of the people's child care networks, if you want, that would be managed in the form of co-operatives, in terms of private networks, plus adequate tax credits. On that I think we are in agreement as to the tax credit formula for those who want to keep their children at home.

I will conclude by repeating that I disagree with the Hon. Member mostly because the recommendations do not provide sufficient funds to increase the number of places. What the Government deserves to be blamed for however—and I invite the Hon. Member to blame his Minister and Prime Minister at his earliest convenience—is the slow pace of negotiations. When an elected government, a majority government, a government that is in charge wants things done, it wastes no time in tabling a plan before the provincial governments and telling them that, on the basis of consultations across the country, Canadians want child care services. When the time came to negotiate unemployment insurance or medicare, there was a Liberal Government in power capable of leadership. There were some who opposed those measures, some New Democrats who wanted to go further to the extreme left, some Conservatives who pulled to the right, but someone showed leadership and took the common sense, middle-of-the-road position, the one the people wanted.

So we sit down at the table, we discuss with the provinces and we come to an agreement, as the Liberals managed to do. But nothing is moving right now, they are just going through the motions and the Government has yet to show unmistakable, clear and definite resolve. Had there been any kind of resolve at the bargaining table, the Prime Minister of Canada would have stated: Here is what we have in mind for the people of Canada in terms of daycare. This is negotiable, but that is not negotiable. The best example I can give you relates to the tax reform. Everybody is in favour of tax reform. You people are saying: There is an option, maybe we will tax bread, milk and butter, but we are not quite sure yet. We Liberals say: We support the tax reform, but there can be no question of taxing bread, milk and butter, no way. That is clear. That is leadership, and that is what is lacking on the Conservative benches.

[English]

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I am very interested to hear the Hon. Member recommending to the Conservatives that they use the Liberal pamphlet for a program for child care. It does not seem to me that the Liberal proposal is very much different from the special committee report, except that it is much more confused; it is very confused indeed. I would just like to give a few examples, as I recall them. I do not have the pamphlet before me.

The Liberals talk about wanting to have a national child care program. Yet, like the Conservatives, they want to put most of the money into taxes. We know that if most of the money goes into taxes, there will be no money for developing a very sound quality child care system across this country. The Liberals also want federal dollars to go for profit-making child care. They want it to go for commercial child care. All the groups that know about child care programs have said this would be a very unsound expenditure.

The Liberals are also confused about what provincial jurisdictions are. They want the federal Government to impose standards. The Province of Quebec, I am sure, would be the first to object to that. That is not the role of the federal Government. The federal Government should have a policy and a national objective. The provinces should develop standards.

The Liberals want to have a new Crown corporation. I cannot understand what on earth that is all about. They want to fund through a Canada assistance plan and keep daycare a welfare service rather than making it available to families regardless of income. I would like the Hon. Member to talk about this and to explain what the difference is between his Party's policy and the Conservative's policy, except that it is much more confused.

Again, I would like to challenge the Hon. Member. Since he does not have any real positives on his side, all he can do is attack the New Democratic Party. I fully documented that we are for very flexible, comprehensive child care programs that give considerable choice, and which are developed by parents and communities according to their own needs. To say that the NDP is against free choice is a lot of baloney.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Indeed the time allotted for questions and comments has expired. Still I will give the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) one minute to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Malépart: Madam Speaker, in view of the lapse of time since then, I can understand that my colleague may not recall what I have said at the time. If she reads Hansard, she will find out that she has misunderstood the Liberal position. I can give her a document which explains our position quite clearly. Contrary to what she has said, we want to finance the agencies directly so that they can improve their equipment. We trust the parents. I am not blaming the NDP Member for not having confidence in the parents, but she would rather trust the institution. This is what the NDP would rather do. However, we in the Liberal Party believe that it is up to the parents to choose. The money should go to the daycare centres, but I believe that the NDP Member . . . I would be willing to go to her constituency and find out for myself, but the population will never accept that the parents be told where they must place their children.

[English]

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Madam Speaker, it is with pleasure that I rise to speak to the motion before the House, that is the follow-up of the child care report. There are a few things I would like to review.

As the committee put together its report, it was careful to draw to the people's attention that we are very keenly aware of provincial and territorial jurisdiction with respect to families and children, and of the provisions and regulations of child care services. As the people of Canada know, as our Confederation was put forward, questions of health and education come under provincial jurisdiction and it is the federal Government's role to assist in financing where it can.

• (1210)

The Minister and Cabinet are deliberating to put together our response to this matter. This means that the Minister has to work with his counterparts in each of the provinces and territories. For this reason it will take a little longer in terms of putting a reply together.

Our friends in the NDP would have us believe that it is very simple to put together new policies. But when we are dealing with a matter involving something as important as children we must ensure that we are careful. We also must make sure that our policies will assist parents, since the responsibility of bringing up children in Canada is the responsibility of parents—it is not a responsibility of the Government. The Government is an extension of the people of Canada. But what should be done with children is the responsibility of the parents themselves.

As we travelled across the country we did not find a consensus as to how a solution should be brought about. People did suggest that they wanted to be able to have a say as to what will happen with their children. Our Liberal counterpart was quite right in pointing out that the New Democrats said that the Government should be doing these things and that the Government is the one that knows best. We know that the Government would not do a very good job of bringing up children, if that was left entirely up to it. Thus the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) does a disservice to the House and to the people of Canada, particularly those who have put together child care in their homes and who have made it their career. The Hon. Member does those folks a disservice to say that they are inferior to the non-profit organizations.

Ms. Mitchell: Read your own research.

Mr. Belsher: There was no evidence to show us that their care was inferior to that of the care given by non-profit organizations.

I would like to review some of the recommendations that are in the report. I will give some reasons why the recommendations were phrased and put forward in the way that they were.

One of the main recommendations is to replace the child care expense deduction with a 30 per cent child care expense credit and to increase the ceiling with respect to claims from $2,000 to $3,000. This will assist people who are able to make these claims and who have receipts for the care that they have obtained for their children. An expense deduction allows equal treatment for all people. It does away with having a greater influence for one person as opposed to another.

In replacing the maternity benefits with parental benefits we have recommended that the benefit period be extended from the present 15 weeks to 26 weeks but that this be done on an ongoing basis. It would take several years for it to accrue to that. We realize that businesses have to adapt to this over a period of time. Whenever we talk about operating grants or giving grants these would go to licensed child care givers. The reason we say licensed child care, as has been pointed out this morning, is that licensing is a responsibility of the provinces and the territories. We did not specify that it had to be to non-profit organizations. That is something the provinces could do themselves, or they could choose not to do it.

Nevertheless, as we went across the country we discovered that in several provinces more than 50 per cent of the child care that was already in place in those provinces was given in private centres and not furnished by non-profit centres.

The informal child care used by a great many parents where one of the homemakers is working part-time is something that is used extensively across Canada. At the moment much of that care is not part of the licensed system. However, we recommend that where people want to avail themselves of the various programs which fall under the jurisdiction of the provinces or the federal Government that licensing is essential.

In putting together our recommendations we wanted to make sure that the federal Government was cognizant of the needs of the children of Canada and, also, that we shared in the responsibility of supporting the roles of the parents. We wanted to ensure that we did not usurp the role of the provincial and territorial Governments in terms of their taxing and spending powers. Therefore we recommended that the existing child care expense deduction be replaced by a child care expense credit of up to 30 per cent.

For parents who choose to stay at home and who, I should add, have never asked for any help from the Government, we recommend that an alternative refundable child tax credit in the amount of $200 for the first child, $100 for the second child and $50 for each subsequent child be introduced for families with children up to five years of age. This is to provide financial recognition to families in which one spouse remains at home to care for the children.

These two items alone would cost the federal Government over $400 million per year, but is directed to parents who are taking on the responsibility of looking after their own families, those who are not looking to the Government to provide services for them.

Another principle established by our committee is that we should continue to share the cost of child care regardless of the care style chosen by the family. Once again, it must be recognized that families are the primary care-givers. After all, it is the family which knows how the needs of its children can best be met.

Another principle we encouraged is the development of flexible child care options. Again, this is to give parents a choice.

In order to improve the quality of child care we recommended that a new secretariat be established within Health and Welfare Canada to administer the family and child care legislation and to monitor the implementation of the Government's response to our recommendations and to work with the public in private and non-profit sectors to encourage initiatives in the field of child care.

Throughout our tour across Canada people came forward from many different stations of life. Above all, what they said was, "Please, do not recommend a universal fully-funded day-care system for all the country". They expressed the feeling that this would be detrimental to the welfare of our country. This recommendation is made so that the flexibility of how parents care for their children not be usurped by the Government placing tremendous amounts of money into that sort of a system.

The Cooke task force report was brought in last spring. It recommended a very elaborate system which would cost the federal Treasury up to $11 billion a year when fully implemented. Our New Democrat friends state that their recommendations were not costly. But they would lead to real cost. As we wait for the response of the Minister and the Government on how they will deal with this, working in conjunction with all of the provinces, and making sure that we respect the roles of the provinces and the territories, we can rest assured that all these considerations will be taken into account.

• (1220)

I applaud the Minister for not rushing in, giving a quick, snappy response on something that is so vital to the country.

Mr. Taylor: I wish to compliment the Hon. Member who just spoke on his excellent address. In my view, he was speaking for the majority of people in Canada.

I believe that the best care a child can receive is from the mother and the father in the home. If that is impossible, then I have no objection to using public money to look after the children of those who have to go out to work and who cannot afford to do anything else. That is a logical, proper use of public money. I have no sympathy at all for the idea of providing child care for the rich at public expense. Those people can well afford to look after their own children. We are not giving half enough attention to the mothers and fathers who stay at home and look after their own children.

I wish to ask the Hon. Member to comment on the consideration given by the committee to the mothers who stay at home, look after their children, and in so doing provide a tremendous service to this nation.

Mr. Belsher: I thank the Hon. Member for his pertinent question. We recommended that approximately half of the money go toward the people who are caring for their own children. One of the main parts of our recommendation was $200 for the first child, $100 for the second child, and $50 for the third child. That sum goes to anyone who does not claim the other deductions, the people who are caring for their own children. We estimated that that could cost the Treasury up to $400 million.

The Hon. Member points out a very important part of the recommendations, something that people across the country exhorted us to do, that is, if at all possible, to assist those who wish to care for their own children.

Ms. Mitchell: I have two questions, Madam Speaker, but first I wish to comment on the last point of the Hon. Member for Bow River (Mr. Taylor). The Hon. Member objected to child care for the rich. Does the Hon. Member realize that the child credit of $200 per year for the first child, and $100 for the second will go to the rich? This recommendation will cost millions and millions of dollars. It will go to the bank manager's wife; it is a universal recommendation. That seems to me to be contrary to the usual Conservative philosophy. It goes to all parents regardless of income. It costs $400 million, which is a great deal of money. We say that it is nice for all families to have an extra $200 a year, but perhaps a better way to do this would be by reindexing the family allowance.

Mr. Taylor: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I will have no chance to answer what the Hon. Member has stated. The Hon. Member should be directing her questions to the Member who spoke, and not making comments on questions that other people have asked.

Ms. Mitchell: Perhaps the original speaker would like to comment on that point.

The question that I wish to ask the original speaker goes back to my comments about where we presently are with child care. I know the Hon. Member is extremely sincere and concerned, as we all were on that committee, that there be some movement forward, and that the federal Government which has made such a strong commitment through the Prime Minister take a major leadership role.

Does the Hon. Member feel that there should be national objectives spelled out? If so, has he talked to the Minister about this? What does he think should be in those national objectives which, under the new Accord, will be essential for funding a national social program?

Does the Hon. Member feel that there should be a child care act? What is he doing with the Minister in attempting to have some action in order that this can be tabled in the House and we can debate it? That would still give time to work out the details with the provinces.

Mr. Belsher: The two main points are whether or not the federal Government should go ahead and act on its own, and not worry about what it can work out with the provinces. I feel that it is better for the federal Government to work out, in concert with the provinces, what will happen in child care, rather than saying to the provinces, "Here it is, take it or leave it". A consensus on what can be done by the provinces and the federal Government collectively will be a far better method.

The Hon. Member asked whether I feel that there should be a child care act. Yes, I feel that eventually there should be. We should be adding to what is in place with regard to the CAP system, that part of it which is now under the Department of National Health and Welfare that does not have any ceiling in the way that it can be used. Every province has access to it. Every province can bill the federal Government for the 50 per cent share that it has expended on child care. That is already in place and those parts can be built on.

In the provinces I would also like to see a phasing out of the "all or nothing" situation that exists when a person is using the CAP system. In that manner, if a person has a job which is at the lower wage scale, that person does not lose all of the ability to claim for child care expenses, and possibly will lose only a portion.

Presently, care-givers, and particularly parents from single-parent homes, must choose whether it will pay them to take a job and lose the child care expense credit that they are able to claim. We have had many cases where people came forward and clearly demonstrated to us the hardship they suffered by having to make that type of choice. I would like to see greater flexibility in the use of that system.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young).

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): At the outset I wish to express my appreciation to the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) for giving the House an opportunity to discuss this extremely important matter by placing the motion before the House. Of course, from our point of view it would have been far more productive to be debating proposals put forward by the Minister, which we expected to be doing much earlier than this, rather than the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East which she felt she had to put on the floor to get this discussion going.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East was a member of the Special Committee on Child Care, and she has been raising the issue in the House and requesting the Government to respond to that report in a concrete and positive manner. The last time the Hon. Member raised the matter in the House was on August 12 of this year. Again she was calling on the Government to bring forward a national strategy on child care, and at the very minimum to advise the House what that strategy was likely to be.

• (1230)

The Minister, unfortunately, has still not responded to that, except by a letter provided to the chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care, which is really not a response at all, Madam Speaker. It could probably be described as a political letter in which the Minister says absolutely nothing that would bring a national strategy on child care any closer to reality than it has been since the International Year of the Child, which I believe was in 1979. Not only this Government's response but the previous Liberal Government's response to that report are shocking, to say the least, because not one Government since that report was tabled in the House of Commons has given it adequate attention.

I am sure you and people listening to this debate, Madam Speaker, will be interested in hearing what the Government's response has been to date, notably in this letter forwarded by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to the chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care. It starts, "Dear Shirley". I will skip the first part, the niceties, and get into the meat, if you can call it that. It reads:

> At the time of the tabling of the Report, the Government indicated its appreciation for the work of the Special Committee. Having had an opportunity to study the Report carefully, I would like now to reiterate this support for the Committee's contribution to the consideration and development of a child care policy in Canada. As a result of this work, I believe many Canadians and the government have a better understanding of the key issues and concerns in child care as well as possible avenues for reform. Moreover, the Committee's Report and research have assisted us greatly in the development of the government's National Strategy on Child Care.
> At the present time, this National Strategy is undergoing extensive Cabinet consideration and is intended to be finalized for announcement soon.
> This Strategy will reflect a number of the recommendations of the Special Committee. It will also reflect the views of our provincial-territorial counterparts, as expressed in an intensive round of bilateral consultations with the provinces which occurred earlier this year. The Strategy will be subject to further negotiations with the provinces and territories. I am, therefore, not at liberty to reveal the details of the National Strategy on Child Care at this time. However, a comprehensive announcement, which I assure you will respond to many of the recommendations of the Special Committee, is expected early in the fall.
> In closing, I would like to confirm for the House and for all Canadians that this government is strongly committed to the economic equality of women and families, and to establishing a comprehensive, quality child care program for our children.
> Yours sincerely,

The letter is signed by Jake Epp.

When I read that letter it reminded me of the television program "Yes, Minister" which has a top bureaucrat who is a master at putting forward that kind of gobbledegook in order to confuse not only the issue but anyone who wants to have some kind of a response from the Government. I do not know whether that chap is presently working for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but if he does not, he sure has some kind of a clone working in that Department because the letter says absolutely nothing. It sounds good, but it says absolutely nothing. It certainly does not indicate that the Government is prepared to move on bringing forward a national strategy on child care.

In The Globe and Mail this morning, Madam Speaker, there is an article under the heading, "A new delay by Ottawa on child care irks provinces". The Minister is talking in that letter about carrying on extensive negotiations with the provinces. When I read this newspaper report, I was left with an impression that no one has told the provinces. Let me give you a few quotes from the article:

> Muriel Smith, Minister of Community Services in Manitoba, has replied to Mr. Epp's telex—

Which I assume was similar to this letter.

> —with one of her own stressing the urgent need for child care in Manitoba and calling on the federal Government to give priority to the day care issue.
> "I think there must be a great debate going on in the federal Cabinet," Ms. Smith said yesterday.
> Ms. Smith said she is concerned that further delay is feeding "great apprehension that we are not going to get a sound program."

The article goes on to express some concern by the Ontario Minister of Community and Social Services who has recognized, although he has done absolutely nothing about it either, that there is a great need for child care services in this country.

I have to say to you that while the Government seems to be giving token support to a national child care strategy, Madam Speaker, we do not see too many concrete results coming out of these nice statements the Government is prone to giving us.

The challenge facing the Special Committee on Child Care was to respond to the obviously urgent need of Canadian families for reliable care for our children. The recommendations of the government majority simply do not respond to the concern in the majority report that was tabled in the House of Commons. In fact, I think it is indicative of the work of that committee that there was controversy during the committee hearings considering its final recommendations to the House. There is absolutely no question, based on letters that I saw from the research staff—one of them resigned from the committee in protest—about the process being applied in that witnesses who came before the committee were not having their concerns addressed by the majority. In fact, most of the witnesses, if not all of them—I believe about 90 per cent who appeared before the committee—argued strongly in opposition to what the majority on that committee recommended. They did not feel that the recommendations being put forward by the majority reflected what the witnesses had been saying about what was required in a national daycare program, or would, if implemented, adequately provide the kinds of programs which they felt were not only needed but in great demand.

The Conservative majority has given priority to subsidies through the tax system and is proposing that this be in the area of some $400 million. All of us who have studied the report have found that the high quality child care services, which are much needed in Canada, will simply not come about.

I listened with great care to some of the questions being asked of previous speakers by members on the government side who hang their hats, as they like to put it, on giving parents free choice on the kind of child care services they want for their children. At the present time, most families do not have a choice; the choice is not there. There are literally several million kids in Canada who need daycare and who cannot have it because the space is simply not available.

The report of the Government's majority does not address that. It does not address the numbers of families who are at the low income end of the scale who simply cannot wait 12 months before they receive some kind of assistance from the Government under the tax proposals made by the majority on this committee. It is extremely difficult to live from day to day on say $10,000, $12,000, $15,000 a year. We should not ask families in that position to expend money on child care that would otherwise be used to feed the kids, put clothes on their backs and provide shelter. Some cannot do even that on that kind of income. They must spend additional money for child care in order to be allowed to participate in the workforce. Then they have to wait 12 months or even longer to get that money back. Actually, by the time they have filed their income tax returns and then waited for the Government to send the money back, we are talking probably a year and a half before they would receive any rebate from the Government under the majority recommendations of the committee. I think that is a totally unrealistic response.

It sounds good when the Government says it wants to give Canadian families a choice on the kind of daycare they want for their children. So do members of the New Democratic Party, but we want good child care and we propose to provide that good child care in a much better way than that proposed by the majority.

I listened with great care to what my good friend from the Liberal Party had to say. What did he say? He said they did not have a policy so they took little pieces from the NDP policy, they took little pieces from what the majority on the government side announced as policy and put it all together to make the Liberal policy. What kind of policy is that? They say, "If you want this, we will give you that; if you want a little bit of this, we will give you a little bit of that", but they do not have a clear stance.

I have yet to hear what Liberal Members think about this issue. All they can talk about is what we or what members of the Conservative Party have proposed. I have yet to hear what specific proposals the Liberals would put forward and I would like to hear that at some point in this exchange.

There is another matter at issue which falls outside of the usual notion of child care. The debate on this has been around for some little time, but it is now becoming more and more obvious that child care must mean a little more than what we usually think of as child care. I am dealing here with parental leave.

There was an issue raised in Toronto about a fellow whose wife had a child and was confined to hospital for some period of time because it was a difficult birth. This couple has other children and the husband was required to stay at home to look after them. Of course, since his own employer did not have a plan to provide him with an income during this difficult period in his life, he looked to the Unemployment Insurance Plan to see if he could receive any kind of income while he was in this difficult position. The Unemployment Insurance Commission told him that he could not. That to me seems to indicate a certain weakness in the Unemployment Insurance Act. If the Government is serious about the importance of the family in Canadian society, surely it has an obligation to enable parents to ensure that their family plays an important role in society.

One of the proposals put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East in her minority report entitled "Caring for Canada's Children, A Special Report on the Crisis in Child Care", was the specific recommendation that beginning in 1987, the 15-week benefit period available to natural mothers be extended to 17 weeks, by dropping the two-week waiting period, and that the level of benefits be increased to 66 2/3 per cent of salary up to the maximum insurable earnings. She went further and recommended that, beginning in 1988, the benefit period be extended to 26 weeks, that either parent be eligible for this additional nine-week parental leave and that the level of benefits be increased to 75 per cent of salary up to maximum insurable earnings.

The Hon. Member made that recommendation because of strong representations that were made to the committee, not only for parental leave for natural parents but also for those parents who adopt children. When a family decides to accept the social responsibility of entering into an adoption process to give a child a decent home and the love that only parents can give a child, surely to goodness that contribution to society should also be recognized. It is not a drain on the taxpayers' money or on the public treasury.

As all Hon. Members know, individuals and their employers contribute to the Unemployment Insurance Fund. People pay for that kind of insurance. They buy it, if you will, and when they need it, surely to goodness the Government should get rid of its ideological blinkers and do something to help meet this need that is not being filled under present arrangements. We are suggesting that that help could best be provided through the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and that is not an unreasonable suggestion.

Societal attitudes change over the years based on the needs of society. While it may be a new concept to provide this help, I do not think it should be a particularly difficult one to come to grips with. I think it is perfectly reasonable.

I would like to express my appreciation which I am sure is shared by Members on all sides of the House for the opportunity the Hon. Member for Vancouver East has given us to explore, discuss and debate the various ideas surrounding the need for a national child care strategy. I see that I have a minute or so left, but I know that the chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care wishes to say a few words to the House. I think I will end my remarks to give her an opportunity to do so. I look forward to hearing what she has to say.

Ms. Mitchell: Madam Speaker, I will make my question very brief because I too would like to give the chairperson an opportunity to speak. I would like to ask the Hon. Member who is from the Province of Ontario what his views are on the proposals of the Liberal Party, both provincially and federally, that child care should be paid for primarily through the Canada Assistance Plan in view of the fact that this plan is really a welfare program for low-income earners.

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, I personally think that providing funding under the Canada Assistance Plan would be the wrong direction to take. If we believe in the institution of the family, then we have to recognize that all of us collectively have a responsibility toward the family to lend what assistance we can.

My fear would be that if we were to provide money under the Canada Assistance Plan, we would stigmatize child care as something that could only be supported through the welfare system. I think that would be the wrong thing to do, not only because of the difficulties in finding adequate funding, but also because of the attitude that that would foster toward child care.

• (1250)

Mr. Halliday: Madam Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). He and I worked together for many years on other committees and I have a great deal of respect for him and the reasonable approach he takes to most subjects.

I recently received a proposal from a rural constituent who did a study in the County of Oxford and three neighbouring counties on the needs of rural children. It is a very interesting proposal and I want to get the Hon. Member's comment.

It is proposed that to serve rural children, who are often neglected, there be a licensed, non-profit, private home care agency established. It received some initial funding from COMSOC in Ontario. It was also proposed that once the agency has become incorporated, funds would be solicited through local service clubs, churches, agricultural groups, local businesses, and through the newspapers. Fund-raising activities would also be conducted.

Would the Hon. Member's Party agree there is room for funding from those sources in the community, bearing in mind the strong feeling the NDP has for the importance of the family and the community? Or, does he feel they should depend on funding from Governments alone?

Mr. Young: Madam Speaker, what the Hon. Member has said is indicative of the problem we have in day care. I had an opportunity several years ago to meet with some people in the farming community in Bruce—Grey. Child care was very much a part of the farmers' concerns. It was quite enlightening because I always considered child care to be an urban rather than a rural problem. Yet when you think about it, child care for the farming community is crucial. Many farm wives are deeply involved in running the farm.

While I think it is regrettable that this has to be done, I can appreciate the initiative of those people to fill an obvious need. I know where the Hon. Member is coming from because he and I have had lots of discussions on funding of various programs over the years, but I do not know how else to answer the question. I would hope in order to provide real assistance to that kind of group, with a national daycare strategy in place, perhaps some kind of community funding program could be encouraged. I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver East proposed that in her minority report.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Further questions or comments? Resuming debate.

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Lincoln): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate even though only six minutes remain before we adjourn. There are many things I would like to say about what this Government is doing, but I would rather take the time to speak to some of the comments made by members of the opposition Parties regarding what we have not done. I think it is important that these statements be corrected because they leave a false impression.

First, this Government has acted. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that child care was of great concern to our Government and action would be taken. The first parliamentary committee ever formed to study this issue was undertaken by an all Party committee. The committee sat longer than expected because of the number of people across the country who wanted to be heard. Even before we tabled our report on March 30 the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) had started to work with the provinces. His department and the provincial departments across the country started working towards a comprehensive approach to the needs of our children.

The comment was made that it should be on the table now. My colleague from Fraser Valley East (Mr. Belsher) talked about working with the provinces. I think the time spent working with our provincial counterparts and arriving at rules, standards and objectives, will mean that when the response is tabled a lot of the work will have been done. It can then be implemented far more quickly than would be the case if we took a broad brush approach without the required detail.

My friend from Vancouver East said that by leaving it in the hands of the provinces we will have the lowest minimum standards rather than the highest possible. That comment is very unfair to the provinces and the people in those provinces who have worked towards providing child care. Certainly there is a need for improvement in the standards, but saying that the lowest minimum would be put in place if we left it in the hands of the provinces is being unfair. This is a big country, but in the last three years we have brought it together with a good understanding between the provinces. The Meech Lake Accord is a perfect example of that. What other Government has been able to bring the 10 Premiers together and arrive at a consensus on a very important issue?

As well, the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) talked about the fact that our recommendations did nothing to help people who had to pay for child care and then wait to get the tax refund at the end of the year. He talked about very low-income families and how they could not find the money to pay for child care. Had he looked into the report he would have found that low-income families do not have to wait because child care is paid for either totally or partially. A family in Ontario can earn between $18,000 and $27,000 a year and have child care paid for. A family in the Province of Manitoba can earn up to $19,000 a year and have child care paid for under the Canada Assistance Plan. That method is in place and low-income families have the child care paid for and do not have to wait for their tax refund. In addition, the committee recommended that CAP should be used more to help low-income single parent and two working parent families. Working parents who pay for their own child care receive tax benefits. For example, a family earning $40,000 a year paying for child care receives $544 in tax benefits. Under the committee's proposal, changing the current tax deduction to a tax credit, that same family would get $900.

There are recommendations for low and middle-income families, and recommendations to recognize those who by choice and by sacrifice decide to stay home and look after their own children because they believe they are the best people to bring up their child, to instil values. All parents in Canada deserve and are entitled to that right and the Conservative Government will make sure that that right is recognized and protected.

Another suggestion by the Hon. Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) is that we failed to sensitize the public to the problems of child care. We held hearings in 31 cities, heard over 1,200 witnesses orally with an additional 800 written responses. We had newspaper coverage from coast to coast, in every province and territory. Those stories told the people of Canada what the problems were and what was being done. We have sensitized the people to the problem.

I might say as well that there has been a proposal from the Orient to start six new child care centres in British Columbia. The cover on their proposal is the cover from Sharing the Responsibility. That is where they got the idea and that is why they are coming to Canada to set up daycare centres.

I see it is one o'clock, Madam Speaker. Thank you for the time.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

TROPICAL RAIN FORESTS—ECOLOGICAL IMPORTANCE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you know, tropical rain forests cover approximately one-sixth of the earth's surface and are home for 50 per cent of all existing plant and animal species. One billion people depend on the rain forest ecology for their food, water and livelihood. Tropical rain forests provide one-third of the world's oxygen and trap one-half of the world's rainfall.

The rain forests are being logged and cleared at an alarming rate. Their destruction causes flooding, droughts and extensive soil erosion in tropical countries. In addition, their loss may affect global rainfall and contribute to the greenhouse effect. Scientists do not know how much longer we can continue to clear the rain forests before the effects are serious, global and irreversible.

During International Rain Forest Week, September 7 to 13, the Government of Canada should press the Canadian International Development Agency, the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund to promote and adopt policies which will protect tropical rain forests for the well-being of present and future generations.

LABOUR

ROLE OF UNIONS

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow a major event in the history of our labour unions will be celebrated in Jonquière. All workers at the Jonquière Alcan plant will pay special tribute to their founding President, Mr. Joseph Edmond Tremblay, who 50 years ago obtained the first union accreditation in the aluminum industry for employees at the Alcan plant in Arvida. This historic event has marked and shaped the economy and labour relations in our region.

These men, these pioneers joined forces in 1937 to improve working conditions and defend their interests. There have been some difficult times for workers and their families over the years. There were the strikes in 1957, 1976 and 1979. Whether the goal was wage increases, improved job security or better working conditions, over the years the unions have had a role to play and indeed have become major intervenors in our social and economic life. One may be for or against the unions, but they have become part and parcel of our economy and of Canadian society.

I want to pay tribute to these men and women at the Jonquière plant who defended the interests of their co-workers and fought to improve their working conditions.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

CRITICISM OF STUDY ON CANADA-UNITED STATES TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a very serious objection to make with regard to the politicization of the Economic Council of Canada by the Prime Minister's office. We certainly remember the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) telling the House on Wednesday that "the report of the Economic Council of Canada indicates that a free trade agreement with the U.S. would produce 350,000 new jobs in Canada". Yet a look at this report shows that it is not an Economic Council report but a discussion paper prepared for the Council by three staff members.

Further, an inside page of this study contains the following disclaimer: "The findings of this study are the personal responsibility of the authors and, as such, have not been endorsed by the members of the Economic Council of Canada". The Chairman of the Economic Council made the same point clear in her statement.

Clearly this support for free trade is not yet the Council's position which I understand is in preparation and is far more balanced than this particular study. Yet the Prime Minister went on to talk about "the impartiality and professionalism of the Council over the decades".

I suggest to him that if the Council is so easily manipulated in the face of the Government's free trade crusade, its impartiality is suspect and the organization may well have outlived its usefulness.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to remember that there is a 60-second limit on statements.

RAIL STRIKE—IMPACT ON ECONOMY

Mr. Walter Van de Walle (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, the rail strike is crippling the nation's economy. A prolonged strike will result in many businesses having to close their doors causing unemployment. The strikers are placing their own future in jeopardy as well as threatening the jobs of thousands and thousands of fellow workers in factories, mines, mills, manufacturing and processing plants, and shops. Daily tens of thousands of commuters are affected.

Seventy per cent of the railways' volume is in the handling of bulk commodities such as minerals, lumber and grains in western Canada. Think of the adverse impact the strike is having on the mining, forestry, and agricultural industries.

Farmers are having enough problems without having a rail strike. The Port of Prince Rupert is virtually out of grain. There is a heavy movement of grain scheduled for the West Coast. Canada stands to lose her reputation as a reliable supplier.

I commend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) for his unceasing efforts to keep the trains rolling. Workers, businesspeople and farmers in the Pembina constituency do not take kindly to strikes. The decisive action of the Government to introduce back-to-work legislation is timely and appropriate. Let us keep the Canadian economy rolling.

SHIPBUILDING

SUPPORT URGED FOR HALIFAX SHIPYARD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the shipbuilding industry in Nova Scotia is crumbling before our eyes. In July of 1984 the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to support the shipyard industry in Halifax, Nova Scotia.

Well, he got those votes because the people of Nova Scotia delivered.

• (1405)

Now, three years later, the Prime Minister has yet to deliver on his promises to support the industry. What's new?

The fact of the matter is that over 1,000 people are out of work and the shipbuilding industry is going down the drain because three years ago the shipbuilders put their trust in the Prime Minister and got duped. To add insult to injury, the Prime Minister sent the weak and meek Member of Parliament from Halifax in the spring to announce refitting programs which would begin in November, 1987. Now it has been changed to November, 1988.

On the other hand the Prime Minister has taken care of shipworkers in Quebec by pumping $750 million into their shipbuilding industry since 1984. Does the Prime Minister not realize that for his own questionable credibility—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Dingwall: —he should deliver on this promise?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

DEMAND THAT LIBERAL SENATORS AND HOUSE APPROVE BILL C-22

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, I just cannot understand the negative attitude of the Liberal Senators which goes against the economic development of Quebec in the pharmaceutical industry. Are they not concerned with investments in scientific research? We are talking here of over $1.4 billion for Canada and $600 million for Quebec, which would result in the creation of 1,500 jobs in the Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, I join with my Government, the Quebec Government, the City of Montreal, as well as our universities, Chambers of Commerce and the Canadian people whom we represent to indicate that we definitely support Bill C-22. As elected representatives, we are not going to let ourselves be intimidated by the Senators and this arrogant Senate with excessive power which the people have not elected.

On behalf of the Canadian youth, therefore, I urge Liberal Senators and my colleagues in the House to support Bill C-22.

SMALL BUSINESS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM—DELAY IN APPROVING PROJECTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, native groups, organizations and communities across Canada are struggling to achieve economic self-sufficiency and cultural self-reliance. Integral players in this process include native firms and native organizations embarking on new business ventures with the support of agencies, including the Federal Business Development Bank, Employment Canada, and the Native Economic Development Program.

The Native Economic Development Program ought to be providing not only financial support but also taking a leadership role in encouraging new native economic enterprises.

However, many proposals under the NEDP have been held up in the approval system, with bureaucrats contradicting each other as to whether or not funds for native projects are available or whether those funds are frozen.

The Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt), who is responsible for NEDP, has indicated there is no freeze. I call upon him now to show leadership and unplug the log-jam of proposals by taking special measures to move the various native business proposals into becoming business realities. Native people are anxious to get on with doing business.

RAIL STRIKE—EFFECT ON BRITISH COLUMBIA ECONOMY

Mr. Ross Belsher (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, the current strike by workers of the Associated Railway Unions is already having a detrimental effect on our economy.

In British Columbia, container traffic that we worked so hard to get going in the Port of Vancouver may be lost to the Port of Seattle and this time it might be even more difficult to recover. Train loads of bulk commodities such as sulphur, coal and potash are being held by shippers or at railway terminals.

Coal mines which are operating on close margins may have to shut down and lay off staff. These are but a few examples.

The main issue of contention seems to be the unions' demand for further lay-off protection. Already those who have worked eight years or more are protected against lay-offs resulting from technological, operational and organizational changes. I tend to agree with railway officials who say that further protection would be economic suicide.

Railway companies that are able to make a profit are better guarantees of jobs than a few words on a piece of paper. Let us get the trains moving again.

RAIL STRIKE—CRITICISM OF GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it is just that kind of speech made by the Hon. Member who preceded me that would give railway workers anxiety about what the Government has in mind through its present back-to-work legislation.

Railway workers and this Parliament are being asked to accept a pig in a poke. We are being asked to accept the idea that everything be consigned to compulsory arbitration when we do not know who will be the arbitrator.

The Government has abdicated any leadership when it comes to social and economic justice. It has set no guidelines, no minimums, no guarantees, and no instructions regarding the process. The Government has certainly indicated that very low on its list are the concerns the workers have expressed over the course of these negotiations, so I think we can expect that this back-to-work legislation will come in for a great deal of criticism.

PUBLISHING

INTERNATIONAL FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT—ESTABLISHMENT OF MECHANISM FOR CO-PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, very soon will start in Quebec the so-called International Francophonie Summit. I would like to remind Hon. Members in this House that at the bi-annual Convention of French-speaking Parliamentarians held in Marrakech, it was proposed that at the coming Summit, where all French-speaking nations in the world will be present, the agenda include the establishment of co-publishing mechanisms to enable French-speaking publishers from every country to obtain funding and to distribute and circulate books in every country, including France.

Moreover, Quebec proposed at the AIPLF's General Assembly in 1984 that the establishment of an International Francophone Fund for books and school, scientific and technical textbooks be discussed at that second Summit.

Mr. Speaker, it is my hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to whom a copy of the resolution was made available on the occasion of that bi-annual convention, will act as a spokesman for all the people who attended that meeting.

RAIL STRIKE—SUPPORT FOR LEGISLATION TO END WORK STOPPAGE

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, this morning our Government tabled legislation which, when passed, will end the railway strike which has paralyzed our country. I applaud the Government for its action. The people of Canada want a settlement to this problem and they want it soon.

The cost of this strike is enormous. In my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton, the petrochemical centre of eastern Canada, the losses are staggering. Two companies, Dow Chemical Canada and Polysar Limited, with Canadian head offices in Sarnia—Lambton, have informed me that, combined, their losses are well over a half a million dollars a day. Even more upsetting is the inability of Polysar and Dow to ship product which is causing critical problems for their employees and customers.

This strike could not come at a worse time. The petrochemical industry has just begun to recover after a period of severe downsizing and rationalizing. This situation presents another major setback to this industry which can be an engine of growth to Sarnia—Lambton and Canada. All the employers and employees of Sarnia—Lambton implore the opposition Parties to co-operate with the Government in enacting this legislation for a quick resolution of this very troublesome problem.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER ISLAND BAND'S FISHERY—DANGERS POSED BY PROPOSED MARINA CONSTRUCTION

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the people of the Tsawout Indian Band at Saanichton, British Columbia, on Vancouver Island, signed a treaty with Governor James Douglas over 100 years ago. In that treaty the band gave up certain of their rights in exchange for a promise they would have certain rights in perpetuity, including the right to fish.

The bay that fronts their village is now the site for a proposed marina which will devastate their traditional harvest of seafood. The band has applied to the Government for funds to fight against this proposed marina.

The funds the Government has given to the Tsawout Indian Band are miniscule. They do not begin to cover the court costs these people are facing. If the Government believes in the sanctity of treaties which were signed many years ago, it has a moral obligation to provide adequate funds so that the people of the Saanichton area can continue to preserve their historic heritage.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

NON-COVERAGE OF DEMONSTRATIONS SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, if the freedom of the press is limited or restrained, so is the liberty of the people who are denied some of the news. Behind the Iron Curtain the Communist Government controls the press and so the liberty of the people is likewise reduced. Here in Canada some media are themselves limiting the freedom of the press by editorializing the news or leaving it out altogether.

We saw an excellent example of this on Parliament Hill this week. Hundreds of Canadians marched and sang, carrying a multitude of placards, for the purpose of telling the people of Canada and the legislators that they supported Bill C-22. But CBC limited the freedom of the press by ignoring the story and thus reduced the liberty, the right to know what was happening, of the people of Canada.

As a matter of record, CBC has for a long time mocked the freedom of the press by featuring socialism and everything the socialists are doing, and thousands of Canadians are fed up to the teeth with financing CBC and receiving only the leftist side of the news, or no news at all.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

SECOND DAY OF NON-COVERAGE OF DEMONSTRATIONS SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mr. Stan Graham (Kootenay East—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, the biased reporting of the publicly funded CBC is showing again. Yesterday on Parliament Hill the massive demonstration by Canadians in support of the Government's drug Bill, Bill C-22, rose to 5,000 people plus. For the second straight day CBC TV totally disregarded its mandate of fair, accurate, unbiased reporting and instead chose again not to broadcast this national event.

This deliberate attempt to withhold information from Canadians is irresponsible, deceitful, and totally reprehensible. It appears that CBC TV will only cover issues which promote their own socialistic beliefs.

This irresponsible and biased approach to reporting is totally unacceptable. This lack of accountability and fairness falls squarely on the shoulders of the President of the CBC, Mr. Pierre Juneau. For this reason I again demand his resignation.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED ATTITUDE OF PRESIDENT

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, our democracy must be defended by public manifestations, but the CBC remains silent. Why is this? Canadians must know that the President of the CBC, after Cité libre, and after a defeat as a Liberal in a by-election, was rewarded by a series of appointments including that of President of the CBC, which position he has held for seven years.

On March 5, 1987, I asked the following questions to Mr. Juneau at the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture. What do you think about the distribution of political and operational responsibilities at the CBC? No comment. Does your corporation operate from a programming budget? Answer: Does not know and refers to the Vice-President, Mr. Cotsman. Has your corporation provided remedies for the $57 million deficit found by the Auditor General? Have you developed a parallel accounting system to avoid such incidents in the future? Answer: I do not know. Mr. Cotsman replied that no parallel accounting system had been developed. Does your corporation operate from a zero-base budget system? The President did not know and the Vice-President replied that it does not.

Mr. Speaker, not a single privately-owned corporation in North America would wait any longer before firing President Juneau as an incompetent and a parasite of the political system.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member, but his allotted time has expired.

THE PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it looks as if Conservative Members have become somewhat paranoid. They are now starting to blame the CBC for their troubles. It is obvious that today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has directed his back-benchers to start criticizing the CBC because it is not broadcasting what the Prime Minister wants it to broadcast.

If there is a problem with the Government it is with the Prime Minister himself. He always tends to blame the media when there is a dip in public opinion. Rather than blame the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, which is famous world-wide, perhaps Conservative back-benchers should start blaming their own Prime Minister for the dismal state they are in.

NON-COVERAGE OF DEMONSTRATIONS SUPPORTING PASSAGE OF BILL C-22

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, when a small anti-government demonstration takes place on Parliament Hill it is always big news on CBC TV. Not so if it is a pro-government demonstration. For some strange reason there was no CBC TV coverage of the thousands who demonstrated here on Tuesday and Wednesday in support of the Government and Bill C-22.

Many of yesterday's demonstrators came from my riding. They support Bill C-22. Ortho Pharmaceutical on Greenbelt Drive has committed to spend $10 million to research new therapies, and the Upjohn Company on York Mills Road has committed to spend $30 million on research in biotechnology and another $22 million on capital expenditures if Bill C-22 becomes law.

My constituents do not understand why CBC TV ignores them. According to a survey by Professor Peter Snow of Western University's Graduate School of Journalism, 37 per cent of Ottawa's press gallery feels closest to the NDP—

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—REVIEW OF POSSIBLE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

In the last number of days we have been trying to get some precision from the Prime Minister as to where he stands on the Senate. The results have not been rewarding. In the last two days the Prime Minister's answers on the Senate have added nothing but further confusion. Today I will try another subject and see if my luck is a little better with the Prime Minister. My question is on the free trade negotiations.

Would the Prime Minister tell us clearly what his parliamentary timetable will be for review of any agreement with the United States, for provincial meetings, and for the release of the background documents upon which the Government of Canada based its case?

We know already that some provincial Premiers find that what they know of the timetable is unacceptable. Would the Prime Minister now tell us how he intends to proceed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if indeed Ambassador Reisman and his colleagues are able to conclude a free trade arrangement pursuant to directives from Cabinet, then, as I have indicated, it will be brought forward for consideration by Parliament. There will be ample and full occasion for debate and consideration of it.

I have also indicated to the First Ministers, and I think we have established our bona fides in that regard, that there will be full consultation with them. The last meeting with the First Ministers lasted in excess of seven consecutive hours. All of them expressed satisfaction with the intensity of the discussion and the thoroughness of the briefing. Of course, I will make sure that the same opportunity is provided to all Members of the House, beginning with my friend, the distinguished Leader of the Opposition.

TIMETABLE FOR CANADIANS TO ANALYZE FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Americans will have three months to analyze a free trade agreement with Canada whereas, as things now stand, Canadians and Members who represent them here in the House have no idea of what the parameters of these negotiations might be. The Prime Minister has been refusing all along to make the basic documentation public, we are not in a position to weigh the pros and cons, and perhaps we too will just have to wait until October 5.

Will the Prime Minister now assure all Canadians that time will be set aside for the House and a parliamentary committee open to the public to analyze the agreement which will be unveiled on October 5? Will he also assure us that he will launch a public debate here in the House and refer the whole matter for parliamentary committee study once the agreement with the United States has been announced, if indeed there is an agreement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I have already said, if we are in a position to sign a free trade agreement, the House of Commons will have full opportunity to examine, analyze and debate the document in depth. First of all, it will be an important document which will deserve the full attention and care of all Members of this House.

As for the Premiers, we have already provided for meetings to consider each point. Some of the studies have already been made public. Quite recently, there was a study by the Economic Council of Canada which suggested that a free trade agreement would result in the creation of 350,000 new jobs in Canada. The Leader of the Opposition may have another opinion on the matter based on different studies, but he will be able to bring them out in due time, and I can assure him of the full co-operation of the Government. If there is an agreement, it will be put before Parliament and debated fully and vigorously.

[English]

APPEARANCE OF WITNESSES BEFORE PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, several provincial Premiers have already undertaken to the citizens of their provinces that there will be an opportunity within the Legislatures or the committees pertaining thereto for a full and complete legislative hearing, and for the Canadians who live in a province to appear with their reactions to any agreement.

Will the Prime Minister allow those hundreds of thousands of Canadians who will be affected by any arrangement with the United States, if that were to pass, and will he allow those Canadians who oppose such a deal, for example, farmers, auto workers, and those Canadians who are concerned about the independence and sovereignty of this country, to appear publicly before a committee of Parliament in order that this matter can be aired fully and fairly before he applies his majority to impose it?

• (1425)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed the other day, for example, that the Premier of Quebec, Mr. Bourassa, said that in his judgment, and in the judgment of his Government, a free trade arrangement with the United States was vital for the welfare of Quebec and Canada, and its absence would result in an irreversible economic decline of Quebec. So Quebecers—for example, Quebec farmers, industrial workers, I suppose, and others—are supportive of what we are trying to do.

The question will arise if an arrangement is concluded will it be submitted to the House? The Government House Leader will be available and will be meeting with other House Leaders if an arrangement is concluded, and will work out a mechanism that I am sure will satisfy all Members of the House.

Whether we can find a formula that will allow everyone opposed to a free trade arrangement to appear personally, I do not know. We certainly couldn't find a formula that would allow everyone in favour to appear—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: That would go on for years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: What my hon. friend is speaking to is the core of democracy, and I can assure him that we will respond fully to his requests in that regard.

CANADA-UNITED STATES AUTO PACT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Prime Minister. It has been reported that seven American Governors have asked Washington to renegotiate the Auto Pact. Will the Prime Minister today stand firm on behalf of Canada and insist that the Auto Pact is working well for both countries and should not be negotiated either as part of the free trade negotiations or otherwise? Will he make that statement today on behalf of Canada and Canadian workers?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I will be pleased to do so. I might remind the Hon. Member, and I think it is important that we keep this in mind, that the Auto Pact itself has within it a negotiating procedure. Section 4 says that if one party or the other wants to discuss it, they must. Article 7 in the Auto Pact says very clearly that if one party or the other wants to cancel it, that party can with one year's notice.

The Auto Pact is not on the table. We have not asked for it to be on the table, neither have the Americans. We are not negotiating the Auto Pact.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I must say that the Parliamentary Secretary in spite of his efforts has not given a very reassuring answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Will the Government make clear—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —that the Auto Pact has been responsible for hundreds of thousands of jobs in the United States as well as jobs in Canada and is, therefore, working equitably for both countries? Or, instead, is the Government ready to cave in on the Auto Pact as it has already on shakes and shingles and softwood lumber and as many Canadians fear it will on potash? Will the Government stand up for Canada and not laugh at Canadian workers and Canadian jobs? That is what it is doing. Speak up for Canada. Don't laugh at Canadian workers.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): I am sorry I wasn't clear in my first answer, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Maybe I should speak much more slowly for the Hon. Member so that the answer sinks in.

The Hon. Member talks about softwood lumber. We had the predictions from the Liberals and the New Democrats that there would be thousands and thousands of jobs lost. Exports of softwood lumber this year are up 34 per cent over last year—to Japan 27 per cent. The price of lumber has gone up. Our lumber industry is not closing down. It is doing very, very well despite the dire predictions. We protected Canadian jobs and will continue to do so in all sectors of the economy.

THE SENATE

POSSIBILITY OF CURBING POWERS BEFORE FORMING COMMITTEE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, he indicated that the Government wanted a parliamentary committee to examine the concept of Senate reform. I indicated that my Party would be prepared to seriously consider this proposal. Meanwhile, most Canadians, including even the parties here in the House of Commons, would like to see some aspects of the Senate's powers changed immediately.

Will the Prime Minister guarantee before the House that the Government's approach to this issue will include the resolution by the former Minister of Justice for a reduction in the powers of the Senate, before the Committee he referred to in his proposal is appointed?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a procedure for Senate reform is already in place. But yesterday I also said and I would like to confirm this today, that the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader is prepared to meet with the other House Leaders to consider immediately all the options for Senate reform.

I am informed the Minister was not able to do so yesterday because of urgent matters in the House. However, he is still available to meet with the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

• (1430)

[English]

REQUEST FOR PASSAGE OF RESOLUTION TO CURB POWERS OF SENATE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Prime Minister was referring to by asking if it was possible for the House Leaders to discuss this matter. So that I am clear and so that all Hon. Members are clear, is the Prime Minister willing to consider, before the committee reports on the broad question of Senate reform, allowing the Parliament of Canada to have the opportunity to debate and quickly vote on a resolution that would have the effect of reducing the current powers of the Senate along the lines proposed by the former Minister of Justice so that it could be acted upon by the First Ministers before the consideration of the Meech Lake Accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matter that should, in the normal course of events as agreed upon, come before Parliament for consideration is the Meech Lake Accord. I think my hon. friend would agree that after full parliamentary hearings have taken place and a report is made to the House, there ought to be a debate and full consideration of that historic document by all Members of the House of Commons. That would be following the timetable that all Members have agreed upon. At the earliest possible moment, I would expect that there would be a report to the House and Members of Parliament will be invited to consider it further.

In regard to any action on the Senate beyond that, I advised yesterday that the Leader of the Government in the House would be happy to meet with the House Leaders of the NDP and the Liberals to consider this matter further and to see what we might do in the context of parliamentary reform. A lot has been accomplished in this area through the partnership of the three Parties, pursuant, for example, to the McGrath Committee report. It may very well be that this initiative will lead to co-operation in other areas, but I think my hon. friend would agree that the Meech Lake process of hearings and considerations by the House of Commons ought to proceed.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER SUBMIT RESOLUTION FOR APPROVAL BY PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I understand what the Prime Minister is saying about the agenda of the Parliament of Canada which has the Meech Lake Agreement being submitted following the committee's report to Parliament for consideration. My question pertains to consideration by the provinces of a potential amendment affecting the Senate before the Meech Lake Accord is subsequently discussed and presumably ratified by the provinces that have agreed to it.

The Prime Minister knows that before the Accord goes into effect only seven provinces representing 50 per cent of the population would be required to amend the existing powers. Is the Prime Minister prepared to submit to the First Ministers an amendment under the present constitutional powers for approval by the provinces prior to their full consideration of the Meech Lake Accord?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend will know, it is complicated and challenging enough to get three political Parties from the House of Commons and 10 provincial Premiers representing four different political Parties to come together in the great national challenge which is to seek a formula which would bring Quebec into confederation. I thought and I still believe that that was the motive of Liberal, NDP and Conservative Members. It is important that that process, having begun and having brought some considerable results, continue. It is now before Parliament. Parliamentary hearings are ongoing as we speak, I understand. A report will be made.

It is important that we as parliamentarians carry through on the most important part of that agenda which is the bringing to fruition, if Parliament so decides, of the Meech Lake Accord. That will have responded to the fundamental aspiration of all Canadians which is to make Canada whole and bring Quebec back into confederation. That has been my objective and I have undertaken it with the full support of the Leaders of both opposition Parties, for which I express my gratitude.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—CONCERN OF WOMEN'S GROUPS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask some questions arising out of revelations made by Senator Lowell Murray on Tuesday about the way in which the Government has been handling the Meech Lake Accord. Would the Minister responsible for the status of women confirm that women's groups have been coming to see her to express their concern about the impact of the distinct society clause on the charter? Does she agree that those groups do have a valid concern?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that I have met with some women's groups. In fact, I met with them on, I believe, July 30 the first time and, because of the concern about the charter which we on this side of the House take very seriously, I asked Senator Murray to join me and hear what they had to say. They met with him again and they will be meeting with me again on Monday.

At this stage I may say that from what I have seen, I do not share their concern that sexual equality rights in the Charter have in any way been diminished. However, they are seeking new opinions and I am prepared to take a look at them, and will continue to meet with them.

APPOINTMENTS TO SENATE AND SUPREME COURT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on another aspect of Senator Murray's revelations I would like to ask the Prime Minister about the fact that there is no provision for the Territories to submit lists of names for consideration for appointments to the Senate or the Supreme Court of Canada. Is that a decision which was made by the First Ministers or was it the result of an oversight? It was one or the other.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr Speaker, I think the Meech Lake Accord speaks for itself. Furthermore, the Hon. Member knows that the question of the position of the territories is a matter which is now before the courts. In view of the fact that the territories have asked for a judicial pronouncement on this matter, it would be inappropriate for us to comment on it on the floor of the House of Commons.

I have said that the document speaks for itself. It was a carefully crafted, well worked out document which represented the considered opinions of all participants. In our submission it is also one from which all Canadians will benefit.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAIL STRIKE—REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET PARTIES INVOLVED IN DISPUTE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Yesterday I asked the Minister to meet with CN, CP and the affected unions prior to introducing back-to-work legislation. He did not do that. As a result, I believe the legislation is flawed.

Would the Minister now agree to meet with both sides in the dispute prior to appointing an arbitrator and doing that before the legislation passes this House?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think we should deal with this situation one step at a time. When we are in the debate we could perhaps explore that possibility, but until then I think we should begin the debate.

• (1440)

ARBITRATOR'S POWERS—PROVISION IN PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, this is Question Period and I am asking the Minister a question. One of the clauses in the Bill will give the arbitrator such widespread power that he or she will be able to extend the agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mazankowski: The question is out of order and you should know that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has, I think quite correctly, stated that the mood of the House is that the Bill is important. The Hon. Minister invited Hon. Members to join in the debate later on this afternoon. There is of course a tradition that Question Period is not the time to go into detailed examination of clauses in a Bill when the Bill is before the House. I am sure the Hon. Member would want to co-operate. The Hon. Member for Bow River.

AGRICULTURE

GRAIN FARMERS ACCESS TO PRODUCER CARS

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of State for the Canadian Wheat Board. The recent announcement by the Canadian Grain Commission to the effect that the number of producer cars will be reduced from 10 per cent to 5 per cent is worrying many western farmers. Is this cut going into effect and has the Hon. Minister any information on producer cars that will be of interest to western Canada?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Canadian Wheat Board)): Mr. Speaker, to clarify the situation, we have acted three times since we have been in government to increase producers' access to producer cars and also try to decrease the time producers have to wait. The Hon. Member should know that a producer can ship as much grain as he wants with board grain. Exporters at both Thunder Bay and Vancouver are required to take a minimum of 10 per cent of each shipment of canola from producer cars.

We have acted in three consecutive years to increase access to producer cars. We did it through consultation, which is a hallmark of this Government and the Prime Minister. That is in healthy contrast to what happened in the past, especially dealing with producer cars, when edicts were simply issued without contact or consultation with the groups affected.

SHIPBUILDING

ENUNCIATION OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In July of 1984 he promised Halifax shipyard workers that he would support their industry and come forward with innovative shipbuilding policies. There has been no policy and no meaningful consultation since that time. He must be aware that last week the Minister of Public Works indicated one or more shipyards in Atlantic Canada must be closed. That seems to be in direct contradiction of the Minister of Transport.

Who speaks for the Government of Canada? Is it the Minister of Transport? Or is it the weak and meek Minister of Public Works who is suggesting that shipyards in Atlantic Canada must be closed?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Minister whom the hon. questioner is now denigrating, is responsible for persuading me as Minister of Transport to arrange to have a major refit job on the ice-breaker Louis S. St. Laurent done in the Halifax yard. The design plans for that are now being worked on and when they are finished that work will go ahead in the Halifax shipyard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: We cannot proceed with reconstruction of that ice-breaker without first having design plans. I know that does not matter to the hon. gentleman because he never has any design in mind.

I suggest that the constituents in Halifax represented by the Minister should be considerably grateful for the fact that he has been able to accomplish this. He will be accomplishing a great deal more for them in the next year or two.

HALIFAX SHIPYARD—REQUEST FOR GUARANTEE OF WORK

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that in May of 1987 the Minister of Public Works announced a refit program for the Halifax-Dartmouth shipyard would begin in November, 1987. He has now flip-flopped and said he cannot honour that commitment. It may be honoured in November, 1988.

Can the Minister guarantee to the shipyard workers in the Halifax-Dartmouth area that their shipyard will not be closed and that he, in consultation with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, will provide to them the work involved in the rebuilding of the fishing vessel Hudson?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can guarantee those workers that insofar as is possible for the Government to accomplish it, their shipyard will not be closed. However, the Government cannot accomplish these things alone. There have to be other buyers of shipyard services and ships in Canada. We are doing everything we can to keep Canadian shipyards going. In addition, under our new defence policy, nuclear powered submarines will have to be constructed in Canada. There are, I believe, another six frigates.

Mr. Dingwall: Twenty-five years from now.

Mr. Crosbie: Not 25 years. This program has started. The Government has done everything it can to keep our shipyards operating and will continue, despite the nattering nabobs of negativism exemplified by the Hon. Member.

CHILD CARE

MINISTER'S PLANS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Yesterday he reassured us that the Government still sees child care as a priority and we appreciate that. However, the provinces, particularly Manitoba and Ontario, have programs ready to go and are anxiously awaiting a federal initiative. When will the Minister present his proposals or plans to the provinces?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has stated correctly the Government's commitment on child care, and specifically the commitments made by the Prime Minister on behalf of the Government and Canadians in general.

This issue is under discussion. That is not a new answer but it is an honest answer. I think we can conclude those discussions reasonably early. I want to get to the provinces at an early date as well. That is the best I can tell her and my provincial colleagues, and I have expressed that to them.

NATIONAL OBJECTIVES

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister his views on the whole question of the national objectives for a child care program. Does he believe it is a federal Government responsibility to present the objectives to the House of Commons? Can he also give us some indication of what he thinks are the fundamental national principles for child care?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, any Member who has looked at the child care field, both at present and where we want to move to, will recognize there are many issues involved. For example, there is jurisdiction. How can we come forward federally and provincially, along with the public obviously, with programs which are in the provincial domain but in which the federal Government wants to show leadership as well as moving forward on its social policy agenda?

The points have been made very clearly regarding affordability, quality and accessibility, in the special committee report. All of us recognize that. However, with all respect, while these issues are being discussed in a very forthright way, I hope she and other Canadians will understand it is better to work very diligently to get these pieces put together rather than coming forward with a plan which is seen by some as being unilateral or failing to cover the needs of Canadians in the future.

INQUIRY WHY GOVERNMENT DOES NOT RESPECT ITS PROMISES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I shall direct my question either to the Minister of National Health and Welfare or to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the national child care policy. For three years, this Government has promised us family assistance and child care policies. We have learned that the Minister of National Health and Welfare has written to his provincial counterparts telling them that, in view of the disagreements and the comments or restrictions of the Minister of Finance, the Government cannot introduce a national child care policy.

Can the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Finance explain the reasons for these disagreements? Why does the Minister of Finance not allocate the amounts necessary to meet the commitments of this Government after three years?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that Hon. Member has made a practice of trying to sow fear in Canadian society and making allegations which are totally groundless. He has made another one on the floor of the House of Commons just now in the form of a question.

Cabinet is very unified on this issue. We will come forward with a policy which I will present to the provinces, the public and Parliament. This will be done in a responsible manner and not in the way the Member has suggested.

I suggest that if the Hon. Member is interested in social policy he ought to start being positive rather than using fear which seems to be a major tactic of his.

[Translation]

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, we have just had an answer. There is no disagreement in the Cabinet. The Cabinet agrees to do nothing about the child care policy, just as it agreed to de-index old age security pensions. Whithout the Opposition, senior citizens would not have fully indexed pensions.

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL POLICY ON CHILD CARE—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is either for the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. Is there a leader in that party? Mr. Prime Minister, you made a firm commitment three times with your hand over your heart to the principle that the family is the cornerstone of Canadian society. When will you introduce a national child care policy? When will you do so instead of fine-tuning it as you are now doing?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member thinks we are terribly impressed by the increasing decibels of his voice, the fact is that we are not.

He says that the Government has done nothing on pensions. The Government changed the spouses allowance for widows and widowers. He opposed that. He was opposed to the Canada Pension Plan changes. He is opposed to the RRSP changes and the RIF changes. He is opposed to everything, even that which is positive.

The policy on child care is coming forward. Would the Hon. Member start being a little positive rather than using fear as the only means which makes him tick?

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

BILL C-22—INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL CARRY OUT INTENTIONS DESPITE SENATE OBSTRUCTION

Ms. Carole Jacques (Montreal—Mercier): Mr. Speaker, recently, several thousand workers in the pharmaceutical industry demonstrated their support for the Conservative Government and for the passage of Bill C-22 which will mean over one billion dollars in investment and the creation of thousands of jobs, especially in the Montreal area.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Does the Minister intend to maintain the present provisions of Bill C-22, considering the notorious, and I would even say immoral, obstruction of this Bill by the Liberal Senators?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. As the House is aware, debate on the motion I put before the House last week should have continued this morning. However, the New Democratic Party decided to support the Senate. They are trying to delay passage of this motion. Mr. Speaker, I hope the New Democrats realize they will have to smarten up and take a position that reflects their policies.

ENERGY

PRICE OF GASOLINE

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I would like to welcome him back to the House after his extensive and expensive travels.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: When the price of oil goes down it takes a long time to pass the lower gasoline prices on to motorists at the pump. Meanwhile the oil companies make lots of money on their retail profits. However, when there is a slight increase motorists pay increased prices at the pump very quickly, as is happening now.

Does the Minister consider that to be fair? If he does not, what will he do about it to protect the average Canadian motorist from being gouged by the oil companies?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my colleague that I just came back from St. John's, Newfoundland, where I had an opportunity to meet with my colleagues, the provincial Ministers of Energy who, for the second time, unanimously endorsed a joint communiqué with their federal counterpart, something which had not happened for eight years under the previous administration.

Second, I would remind my colleague that all the issues he is raising come under provincial jurisdiction, and I would be ill-advised to express my views in this respect.

[English]

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in February, 1987, the price of crude oil was $24 Canadian a barrel as it was in February, 1986. However, the price of gasoline in May, 1987, after a three-month time lag, was 45 cents a litre whereas in May, 1986, it was 41.8 cents a litre.

Why do Canadians continue to be gouged at the pump? Why does the Minister not think he has any federal role to play in protecting Canadian motorists? Is that not what being Minister of Energy is all about?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can only say that the first responsibility of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is to enforce the relevant legislation adopted by the Canadian Parliament. None of the statutes passed by the Canadian Parliament empowers the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to intervene in connection with gas prices at the pump.

Second, this Government's policy is market-oriented and has borne fruits, otherwise gas prices would be much higher than they are now.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

LOCATION OF SEA CADET TRAINING FACILITY

Mr. Morrissey Johnson (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, more than 60 per cent of all Sea Cadets in Atlantic Canada are from the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador. Due to this many people from the province, including myself, have been working hard to convince the Government to establish a Sea Cadet training facility in Stephenville.

I would like to direct my question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Why has the Department accepted recommendations to establish the facility elsewhere?

Hon. Paul Dick (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the final decision was made between Stephenville and Cornwallis. A consultant's report showed that the initial capital costs would be 62 per cent higher in Stephenville and that the ongoing costs would be 52 per cent higher. Cornwallis scored higher in eight of ten other areas as well and therefore the decision was made in favour of Cornwallis.

INVESTMENT CANADA

SALE OF WEST KOOTENAY POWER & LIGHT COMPANY TO UNITED STATES CORPORATION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Investment Canada is saying that the Minister's decision to approve the purchase of West Kootenay Power & Light Company from Cominco by Utiliticorp, an American corporation, was based on two things, Cominco's financial problems and Utiliticorp's business plan.

The Minister did not take into consideration at all the fact that Utiliticorp has violated Missouri laws by overcharging consumers and that Canadians are not allowed to own public utilities in the United States.

Why was the Minister in such a hurry to sell off Canadian public utilities that he did not even investigate the fact that Canadians could not own public utilities in the United States, something we were giving to the Americans, or do any kind of investigation whatsoever?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): First, Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to my colleague that this Investment Canada decision dates back to December, 1986. As it happened, we did review every aspect of this deal and, in light of the Investment Canada Act regulations, we tried to make sure that the net benefits to Canada are always taken under consideration in any proposed transaction.

In the case to which my colleague is referring, Mr. Speaker, the net benefits to Canadians were obvious.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, that was not taken into consideration at a meeting on March 13, 1987. Only those two points were taken into consideration.

I want to mention to the Minister that Mr. Jim Hubay of Kootenay Okanagan Electric Consumers Association says that he received a letter from the Minister which says: "Thus, before a decision is rendered, care is taken to ascertain that all the facts are available".

Mr. Speaker: I know that the matters the Hon. Member is referring to are important and form part of the general issue, but I would ask, especially considering the hour, that the Hon. Member put his question.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, care was not taken. Those facts were not taken into consideration. Why were they not taken into consideration, and why did the Minister not undertake his responsibility under the Act?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, we did examine every aspect of the deal. Better still, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to my colleague that the B.C. Public Utilities Commission also examined this transaction and found it to be in the best interest of all Canadians, particularly British Columbia residents. All aspect of the deal were indeed considered.

NATURAL RESOURCES

REPORT ON LOW SULPHUR WESTERN COAL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the report of the Intergovernmental Secretariat to the Action Committee on Western Canadian Low Sulphur Coal. Will the Minister indicate when that report will be made public? It has been promised for some time now. There are many people from British Columbia to Quebec who are interested in its recommendations. Will he indicate whether or not it will provide detailed plans that can be implemented by a government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the Hon. Member's ongoing interest in this very important matter. I will be meeting with the coal industry on September 14. I think progress is being made.

As far as the release of the report which the Hon. Member has mentioned is concerned, I will look into it and get back to the Hon. Member as soon as I can.

TAX REFORM

SALES TAX—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On May 8 the Minister said in response to my question about whether food will be subject to sales tax that his White Paper would be published on June 18 and, I quote from page 5890 of Hansard:

—that particular question will be answered fully.

Since the White Paper did not address that question, and the Minister declined to answer similar questions since, will he be kind enough to tell the House, especially now that his own caucus is asking the same question, when he will give information about his new sales tax?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member knows the answer to that question. I have made it quite clear. If she has read the White Paper on Tax Reform she will have seen that there is no proposal there to tax food. We have made a proposal for a change in the sales tax. We have put forward three mechanisms. We are now consulting with the provinces and others to decide what the mechanism might be. That process is taking place. I cannot give her a time as to when that process would be completed, but certainly it will not be too long.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the House that the time for Question Period has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the tabling of Bill C-85 this morning, and the subsequent discussions that have taken place since then between the House Leaders of the other two Parties and the Deputy House Leader of the Government, I think you will find agreement for the following proposition concerning today's business, and specifically dealing with Bill C-85.

The motion is as follows:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order, when the Orders of the Day are called later this day, the Order shall be the second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees;

Provided that:

1. Bill C-85 shall be the only item of business before the House until all stages of the Bill are completed;

2. This day's Private Members' Hour be suspended and the item scheduled for consideration this day be dropped to the bottom of the Order of Precedence;

3. This day's "Adjournment Proceedings" be suspended;

4. Should any recorded division be demanded, the provisions of Standing Order 13(4) shall not apply; and

5. The House shall not be adjourned until all stages of Bill C-85 are completed, whereupon the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Order reflects the consultations that were carried out earlier today. The Official Opposition is ready to agree to this Order.

While I am on my feet, I wonder if I could ask the Government House Leader to give a statement of government business that is ordinarily given on Thursday?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might do that after this matter has been disposed of.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, regarding this important matter and emergency situation, we are certainly prepared to support this resolution to begin the debate.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, with respect to further business for tomorrow and the following day, I would hope that we might engage in some discussions with respect to the disposition of Bill C-71 which has been reported back to the House. That would be followed by Bill C-22 and Bill C-84, which has also been reported back to the House. We will not necessarily deal with those Bills in that order, but perhaps we can work that out through informal discussions.

MAINTENANCE OF RAILWAY OPERATIONS ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour) moved:

That Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on second reading of the Bill now before the House, namely, the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act, 1987. The purpose of the Bill is, above all, to order a resumption of rail traffic so vital to the nation's economy.

As Hon. Members will be aware, four separate labour disputes involving the major national railway companies and unions representing their employees have recently reached a critical stage. One of these disputes has now culminated in a national rail strike.

The four disputes comprise the Associated Railway Unions which represent some 48,000 railway workers in nine separate unions who negotiate jointly with the Canadian National Railway Company and CP Rail; two smaller groups of railway shopcraft employees represented by member unions of the Canadian Council of Railway Shopcraft Unions which is negotiating separately with each of the two companies, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers negotiating separately on behalf of its members employed by Canadian National.

It is perhaps obvious but nevertheless important to point out that this Bill would not have been necessary had the parties to the railway disputes been capable of meeting their responsibilities under the Canada Labour Code, Part V by renewing their collective agreements.

Despite considerable conciliation assistance provided to them by the Government, they were unable to do so without a work stoppage. This work stoppage, principally involving a strike declared by the Associated Railway Unions at midnight on Sunday, August 23, has paralyzed rail transportation and brought key sectors of the Canadian economy into jeopardy. As I advised the parties in a telegram on August 24, the Government cannot, and will not, tolerate a shutdown of the nation's major transportation systems.

I have concluded that there is no reasonable prospect for a negotiated settlement to the current work stoppage. Therefore, I have absolutely no hesitation in introducing the present Bill into the House.

In addition to ordering a resumption of work, the Bill provides for a means of settling the labour disputes between the parties. However, before dealing in more detail with the provisions of the Bill, I would like to emphasize to Hon. Members certain factors which have convinced the Government that rapid and decisive action is required to terminate the current strike and to restore rail services to the Canadian public and the national economy.

[Translation]

Other than Canada, there are few countries in the world where economic and social history rests so heavily on rail transportation. The establishment of the rail link was an enormous contribution to the development and expansion of this country in the last century, Madam Speaker, and in more recent times it has enabled Canada to rank among the world's major trading nations.

The railways built Canada in times past and they continue to be its economic mainstay.

[English]

Despite significant advances in other modes of transportation, notably by road and water, Canada's railways still account for close to 40 per cent of all freight tonnage moved in this country. More importantly, the producers of some commodities are virtually tied to rail transportation in order to move their products to markets economically. Western grain farmers present an obvious example of primary producers who rely heavily on the railways as part of an integrated transportation network to carry their crops efficiently from the prairie elevators to domestic and foreign customers.

This Government has previously demonstrated its commitment to western farmers. This highly productive group faces uncertain and extremely competitive world markets. It does not deserve to have additional obstacles placed in its way.

The producers of other bulk products in western Canada and in other regions are also seriously affected by the disruption of rail traffic. Manufacturers, exporters, importers and just about every sector of the economy is in some significant way harmed by a cessation of rail services. Increasingly, commuters in our large urban centres have come to rely on rail passenger services to take them to and from their place of work.

In addition to the direct impact of the halting of railway transportation, there is immeasurable harm resulting from the so-called ripple effect of a rail strike. Industries which cannot obtain parts or ship their goods are required to shut down production and lay-off employees. It is this ripple effect of a rail strike which is perhaps the most damaging to the over-all economy. The longer a strike lasts, the more far reaching the impact on Canadians throughout the country.

Via Rail employees, who have renewed their collective agreements without work stoppages, have already been subject to lay-off. Seafarers on the Great Lakes system and in our coastal waters could be among the next groups to feel the effect as rail shipments cease to arrive at or depart from our ports and harbours. Longshoremen and other port workers will be similarly affected.

It may take somewhat longer for the impact to be felt in other areas of trade and commerce. However, the effect would inevitably spread throughout the production and distribution chain if a work stoppage is allowed to continue.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, this Government has invested too much effort to build a solid foundation for sustained economic recovery to let Canadian workers, Canadian producers and Canadian businessmen be the victims of the consequences of a lengthy breakdown of rail transport services.

It should therefore come as no surprise, Madam Speaker, to the parties concerned in the railway dispute, the Members of this House and the Canadian people that this Government decided to act quickly and table this Bill in the House, in order to put an end to a work stoppage that might prove disastrous.

It is only the fourth time in about 37 years that Parliament is being asked to put an end to a railway work stoppage. The last time was in August, 1973, exactly 14 years ago. At the time, Madam Speaker, despite numerous efforts to help the parties settle their differences, rotating strikes went on for nearly a month before they turned into a general work stoppage. After seven days during which the economy of this country suffered increasingly serious losses, the House was asked to intervene. This time, the Government did not wait that long. There were some local walk-outs in the Montreal and Toronto areas last week and also in Sarnia. A general strike was called to which we must put a stop.

Although we are acting quickly, Madam Speaker, one could hardly call our action precipitous. The parties had every opportunity to settle their differences and received all necessary help to that end.

[English]

In the Associated Railway Unions dispute, the previous collective agreements expired on December 31, 1986. Following notices of dispute filed by the parties in January of this year, a conciliation officer was appointed who endeavoured to assist the parties in the resolution of the dispute. Despite the officer's efforts, no settlement was achieved. On March 4, I appointed Mr. Douglas C. Stanley as conciliation commissioner. In the ensuing months Mr. Stanley met with the parties in an effort to conciliate their differences. As was the case at the conciliation officer stage, Commissioner Stanley was unable to assist the parties to resolve their differences and he proceeded to write his report and recommendations.

On August 10, I released Mr. Stanley's report to the parties, as I am required to do under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code. The report was subsequently made available generally and I am sure those Members who have read the report will have found it comprehensive. It was definitive with respect to wages, rejecting the positions of both parties, and instead recommending a settlement package already agreed to in other segments of the railway industry, such as Via Rail and the Ontario Northland Railway.

In recommending two annual increases at 3 per cent in a two-year contract, the commissioner commented that such a settlement was not unreasonable in relation to wage settlements being achieved in free collective bargaining. He was similarly definitive in other wage-related areas, rejecting the concept of a two-tier wage scale as demanded by the companies and recommending an increase in the night shift differential.

In other areas, notably contracting out and employment security, the commissioner was less definitive. Nevertheless, he suggested certain constructive avenues for pursuing the compromises and trade-offs required for settlement.

The initial reactions of the parties to the commissioner's report were encouraging. Reports indicated they regarded Mr. Stanley's recommendations as a useful basis for further negotiations. While the reported statements were guarded in some respects, it was reasonable to conclude that the parties found the commissioner's recommendations to offer a good framework for a possible agreement. These encouraging signs were enhanced when, on August 13, I was sent a joint request for a mediation assistance signed by the chairman of the Associated Railway Unions and the vice-presidents of the two railway companies responsible for labour relations.

I responded willingly to this request and on August 14 I appointed Mr. M. K. Carson, an industrial relations consultant, as mediator, pursuant to Section 195 of the Canada Labour Code. Mac Carson is a veteran of railway labour negotiations. A former railway employee and trade union official, he has some 15 years experience with the federal mediation and conciliation service and is well respected by the parties in this dispute.

• (1520)

Mr. Carson commenced his mediation meetings in Montreal on Monday, August 17, and worked constantly with the parties throughout last week. Although significant progress was made earlier in the week, it became clear on Saturday, August 22 that a settlement would still escape the parties prior to the expiry of a strike deadline set by the unions for midnight on August 23. Mr. Carson regretfully adjourned the mediation meetings and returned to Ottawa.

[Translation]

As my colleagues would know, Madam Speaker, the moment the strike was called on Monday I sent a telegram to the parties to convene their bargaining committees for a last attempt at mediation. Besides again offering Mr. Carson's services to the parties, I asked my Labour Associate Deputy Minister Bill Kelly to take part in the negotiations. Madam Speaker, I should think there is no need to remind Hon. Members that Mr. Kelly is fully conversant with railway issues and very well known as the federal Government's chief negotiator.

Mr. Kelly and Mr. Carson met with the parties in Hull on August 25, 26 and 27. This week Mr. Kelly led the mediation talks in his own characteristic way, keeping labour and management negotiators working hard through the night on Tuesday, late Wednesday night, and again today. Every single option likely to lead to a settlement was explored during the sustained and exhaustive mediation talks.

Madam Speaker, notwithstanding the urgency of the situation, the parties were unable to benefit from this ultimate opportunity to settle their differences and put an end to their conflict.

[English]

The conciliation and mediation activities to which I have been referring relate to the main dispute involving the Associated Railway Unions and both national railway companies. This dispute now involves a national strike. As I indicated earlier, there are other labour disputes currently affecting the railways. As in the case of the ARU, these other disputes involve renewals of collective agreements which expired on December 31, 1986.

While the ARU includes trade unions representing a large number of railway shopcraft employees, some shopcraft unions are negotiating separately with Canadian National and CP Rail under the auspices of the Canadian Council of Railway Shopcraft Unions. The Council has three member unions negotiating with Canadian National and five member unions negotiating with CP Rail.

Conciliation officer appointments were also made in January in these disputes. Again, no settlements were forthcoming at the officer stage and I appointed Douglas Stanley as Conciliation Commissioner in each of the disputes on March 4, 1987, the same date as his appointment in the ARU case. Mr. Stanley was not able to conciliate the disputes and I released his separate reports to the parties on Monday, August 17, with general release taking place the following day.

While the unions and the council have now acquired strike rights, they have not exercised them. Their members are now subject to lay-off as a result of the shutdown of railway operations.

A fourth dispute involves the International Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. While the brotherhood is negotiating as part of the ARU with CP Rail it has opted to negotiate separately on behalf of some 2,600 members employed by Canadian National. Again, the collective agreement in this dispute expired on December 31 last year.

A conciliation officer appointment was made last February and a dispute remained at that stage until Monday last, August 24, when the parties were informed that I would not be appointing a conciliation commissioner. The parties will acquire strike and lock-out rights at midnight on August 31.

I have made this brief review of the status of the other current railway labour disputes because it is very relevant to the Bill currently before the House. The Maintenance of Railways Operations Act, 1987 has been drafted with separate parts applicable to each of the four disputes concerned.

In the case of the Associated Railway Unions, the appropriate part would come into force on the day following that on which the Bill is assented to. The other parts would come into force on days and times to be fixed by proclamation. I intend to explain this staged approach later. Before I do so, I would like to outline the principal features common to all four parts of the Bill.

Initially, the Bill provides that each affected railway company shall forthwith resume operations of its railway and subsidiary services. Every employee shall forthwith resume his or her duties when so required. Each affected union and officers or representatives of these unions shall forthwith give notice to their members to facilitate the required resumption of railway operations and of employment duties. No railway company or any of its officers or representatives shall impede an employee from resuming employment duties when required, or in any way discipline any employee for having been on strike prior to the coming into force of the Bill. These provisions are designed to fulfil the main purpose of the Bill, that is, to restore the railway service operations that are of key importance to our economy.

Beyond the resumption of rail operations, the Bill provides for the extension of each relevant collective agreement and for the settlement of the collective bargaining disputes by arbitration. Initially, each collective agreement is extended for a two-year period ending on December 31, 1988, with provision for this term to be extended at the discretion of the arbitrator for a period of up to one additional year.

I have just mentioned the term "arbitrator". Hon. Members will note that the Bill provides that I should appoint such a person following the coming into force of the Bill or its various parts. The arbitrator will be required to decide all matters referred within 60 days, with discretion vested in the Minister of Labour to extend this period if necessary. The report of the arbitrator shall be prepared in a form that will enable its incorporation into the appropriate collective agreements. The agreements as amended will be deemed to have effect on and after January 1, 1987.

Arbitration as a final dispute resolution method will be found in previous Acts which Parliament has adopted to terminate work stoppages in the railway industry. The present Bill requires the arbitrator to determine all matters that remain in dispute at the time of that person's appointment.

I am aware that there have been suggestions from the opposition that the resolution of at least one of these issues should be predetermined by the House. Frankly, I believe that such an approach would represent an abuse of this House. Parliament is not a labour court and the House of Commons is not an arbitration panel. The conciliation commissioner's reports made it quite clear that there are several interrelated issues in dispute, the resolution of which would involve trade-offs. These issues cannot be severed or dealt with in isolation from each other. Any Member who believes that they can does not in my view understand these labour disputes or, indeed, the labour relations process.

[Translation]

It would, of course, be preferable, Madam Speaker, to make the collective agreements part of a negotiated settlement. However, the parties have shown they were incapable of reaching an agreement through the bargaining process. The decision-making powers the parties could have exercised in pursuing the requisite compromise to reach a settlement will now be handed over to a third party.

I would nevertheless urge the parties not to completely abdicate their responsibilities. It would be in their best interests to put forward a number of sound arguments to support their positions before the arbitrator I shall appoint and to co-operate fully with this person.

This would be the best way for the parties to obtain an arbitration decision that would fully consider their respective needs and aspirations as they affect the issues on which a settlement has yet to be reached.

I mentioned earlier that the four parts of this Bill refer to four disputes in the railway industry. Once this Bill is passed, only the first part, which concerns the dispute between the conference of Associated Railway Unions and the two main railway transportation companies, comes into force. This is the only dispute where there is a strike at this time.

The other parts of the Bill, Madam Speaker, will not come into effect until after their proclamation.

• (1530)

[English]

At this time it would be unthinkable to remove, from the parties to the other three disputes, the prospect of freely negotiating their own settlements. However, it would be equally unthinkable for the House to ignore the potential for further disruption to the nation's rail services which these disputes present. The economic damage which the present strike is inflicting would also arise and, in fact, it would be magnified by its cumulative effect, if railway operations were to cease as a result of further work stoppages.

Consequently, the Bill provides for the future termination of any work stoppages that may arise, and for settlement of the three other collective bargaining disputes in the same manner as will be applied more immediately to the dispute involving the Associated Railway Unions.

I take no particular pleasure in introducing back-to-work legislation. However, I have a duty to protect the public interest when it is threatened by the inability of private parties to settle peacefully their labour disputes. The present strike is inflicting considerable damage on the people and the economy of Canada. The damage increases each day the strike lasts.

I am sure that Hon. Members are receiving representations from those whose vital interests are being compromised by the current shut-down of rail services. They are demanding that the Government take decisive action to restore railway operations. The Bill that is now before us orders such a resumption of rail services.

It should come as no surprise to the parties that this Bill has been introduced. They have had sufficient time and assistance to settle their own differences. They have failed to do so. If they had any doubt as to the Government's resolve not to endure a damaging work stoppage, it should have been dispelled by the telegram that I sent to them on Monday.

The parties have proved to be unable to respond to that urgent call for common sense to prevail in a final attempt at mediation. As a general policy, the Government does not believe in interference in the collective bargaining process. However, the parties to labour disputes should be left under no illusion as to our determination to intervene when the public interest so dictates.

When the facts are clear that the parties have abdicated their responsibilities to resolve their own differences, and a grave threat to the national interest ensues, the Government will act with all appropriate dispatch.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Official Opposition in this House, I would like to say first of all that we intend to co-operate with the Minister, so that the Bill can be adopted as soon as possible and a strike that is paralyzing the Canadian economy can be stopped, also as soon as possible, and we can thus put an end to this economic bloodletting.

Second, I want to say that I sympathize with the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), who today has to table a Bill to pick up the pieces left by his colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). I noticed the Minister of Transport was in the House during the Minister of Labour's initial remarks. He is the one who should have been tabling this Bill and who should have put in place the mechanisms required to protect both the Canadian railway companies and railway employees. What we are seeing today is the result of action that was ill-prepared and ill-conceived and basically a threat to the future of Canada's railway industry. I am referring of course to the transport industry deregulation which the Conservative Government and the Minister of Transport imposed on us without any guarantee or any safeguard for several sectors of our economy, and particularly without any protection for the workers in that industry. Quite clearly, this strike was to be expected.

[English]

It was absolutely no surprise; indeed, there was plenty of advance notice and warning. Because the strike came with plenty of advance warning, we on this side of the House, the Official Opposition, say that it could have been averted. It did not have to happen.

I was listening to the Minister of Labour explain and describe the consequence of a strike. The Minister knew in advance that a strike was coming that would hurt and affect the economy. Indeed, he has received a number of representations which indicated to him that the strike was imminent, and that the strike should not be tolerated. I have a series of telegrams and letters sent to the Minister asking him to intervene, and intervene quickly.

I wish to quote a telegram sent to the Minister:

> Regarding the rail strike. 1. Strike started this morning will be devastating to economy of Canada, especially western. 2. Obvious the parties cannot settle the differences between them. 3. The Government of Canada must intervene now and settle dispute. No point in waiting.

We know that there have been a number of Canadian companies that have indicated to the Government their displeasure at the manner in which the negotiation was going on. These companies knew that the inevitable was to come; it was a fix. The railways have almost been squeezed out of business by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and his insistence in going ahead with deregulation. The two railways had no alternative but to try to save some money on the heads of the workers. They knew that by being tough and unreasonable with the workers, they would get the Government, which first of all made a big blow to the railway industry, to come forward and try to save them with back-to-work legislation. There were no negotiations. There was no good faith at all in the process.

Mr. Crosbie: It's incredible.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister of Transport can laugh. At least he has an interest in something, he is laughing a little.

Mr. Nunziata: It's no joke, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I am laughing with pity at you.

Mr. Ouellet: While we were discussing Bills C-18 and C-19 the Minister was absent. I am glad the Minister is here to listen to what we have to say, because we have repeated time after time that deregulation will be devastating to the railway industry, and the Minister did nothing about it. Today we are faced with a terrible strike.

I wish to cite what Dow Chemical had to say. They sent two letters to the Minister of Labour, and I am sure he has had a chance to read these letters:

> The Western Canada Division of Dow Chemical Canada Inc. at Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta is a major exporter—1.5 billion pounds per year of chemicals. We are also a major supplier to Canada's pulp and paper industry which itself is a major exporter.
>
> Western Canadian exporters have always had a tough time selling Canadian products abroad facing competitions from countries with ready access to ocean transportation lanes.
>
> One ace that Canadian exporters have had was their reliability factor—our Government is stable and transportation interruption has been minimal.
>
> Can we afford to lose this Ace?
> Our customers for Canadian goods abroad are facing the same economic realities that Canadian industry faces, and that means they must have their orders on time. Our division will lose $300,000 every day this strike continues and several times that in sales, but when you look over a list of Canadian exporters, Canada stands to lose much more in terms of future sales.

This is but one company explaining quite clearly its problems and difficulties when there is a railway strike.

• (1540)

All of this, I am repeating, Madam Speaker, could have been avoided if the Minister of Transport had been a little more sensible. All that the Government would have been required to do was listen to the unions, which came one after the other when we were looking at Bill C-18. The Transport Committee of this Parliament travelled across Canada and heard witnesses in every city it visited. One after the other told us that if the Government went ahead with Bill C-18 it would be devastating for Canadian railways. They gave examples of regulations in the United States and what happened after the Staggers Act was implemented there, which had tremendous consequences for the workers.

[Translation]

Of course the Government could have heeded these remarks since we were told quite clearly that deregulation of the transport industry would throw a lot of people out of a job. The workers told us that on the heels of deregulation in the United States American workers had been displaced, far from their families in many cases, just so they could hang on to their jobs, but that a great many of them ended up on the unemployment rolls.

[English]

But it was not surprising that the Conservative Government did not want to listen to union leaders. We know that it does not very often listen to workers. Conservatives prefer to listen to big companies. They gave billions of dollars to the oil industry. They gave away I do not know how much money through tax concessions to some big Canadian families.

Mr. Blaikie: Look at who is talking.

Mr. Ouellet: The Conservatives gave away almost the whole of our generic drug manufacturing industry to please the multinational drug industries of the United States and Europe. Now we have the consequence of their actions to please big Canadian shippers. On the backs of workers, the Conservatives have imposed deregulation in the transportation industry to please some big Canadian shippers. We knew the Government was not going to listen to the workers, but at least it could have listened to CN and CP. Certainly the Minister of Transport could have listened to his own Crown corporations whose representatives appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport. They indicated quite clearly that the plan to deregulate our vital transportation industry would put thousands of workers in the railway industries out of jobs. They told the Government not to go ahead with its plan to give American railways the chance literally to grab billions of dollars worth of business in the Canadian market without at least ensuring that Canadian railways had the same access to the American market. The railways told us, the Minister of Transport and the Conservative Members on the Transport Committee, that jobs would be lost if Bill C-18 proceeded. CN and CP told us that they would have no choice but to reduce the labour component of their costs if they were to survive American competition.

[Translation]

Again, the Minister of Transport refused to listen. He turned a deaf ear to the two railway companies and the railway employees who appeared before our Committee. Interestingly, an American expert, an impartial observer, appeared before the Transport Committee and told us a few things that should at least have attracted the Minister's attention and made him more aware of the risk involved for Canada's railway companies. Let me quote what Mr. Dempsey, President of the Association of American Railways, came and told us at a sitting of the Standing Committee on Transport:

[English]

> We do not have anything in the United States comparable, as you know, to your proposed competitive line rates. It might be, or it might not be, and I pass no value judgment on it, a good thing to have a rail system in the United States which is like the interstate highway system. It might be a good thing to have railroads compete with one another like supermarkets do. All that I can say about it without passing a value judgment is that it will wreck the system in the United States, it would just wreck it, that is all.

That is quite clear, Madam Speaker. The Minister of Transport with the advice of some officials, some—

[Translation]

—theoreticians who were never exposed to the practice and realities of trade and competition, some officials who dreamt up a way to settle the problems of the railways and, sitting behind their desks, tried to convince people that Canada's railway system had to be completely overhauled.

[English]

Therefore, this Government stupidly bought Mr. Thompson's advice and created a terrible mishmash in the railway transportation industry. There is no experience of the comfortable line rate brought forward by the Government in any other country of the world. This is fiction, an imaginative thing of Mr. Thompson's that has been bought by the Minister of Transport and is now being implemented in Canada.

The President of the Association of American Railways said that if such a thing were implemented in the United States it would wreck the system. I am telling you, Madam Speaker, it will wreck the system in Canada, which we are now witnessing with this strike. It is a direct consequence of the irresponsible decision of the Minister of Transport to disorganize railway transportation in Canada. I blame the companies for being unable to convince the Minister to change the plans, but above all, I blame the Government for insisting on deregulation in the railway industry. Nobody—I say nobody—except the big shippers have asked for it. Everybody else who testified before the Transport Committee said, one after the other, that the plan was crazy. Today, because of the lack of action and lack of responsibility on the part of the Government, there is a strike.

I would like to read from an article that appeared in the Toronto Star last week. It reads in part:

> R. E. Lawless, President of Canadian National, warned recently that reduced rail services and lay-offs are "permanent and irreversible." But he also advocated compassionate treatment of employees who are the victims of deregulation. "There is no question" he said, "that we have to manage these changes properly and we have to treat affected employees generously."
>
> But when the House of commons approved the transport deregulation package in June after a debate that attracted little national attention, the government ducked the problem of potential layoffs. Indeed, the Tories flatly rejected proposals by Liberal transport critic Andre Ouellet to give the victims of deregulation certain "last-resort" financial benefits available to other workers under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act.
>
> Surely it isn't too late for Ottawa to recognize the plight of railway workers who stand to lose their jobs due to deregulation and to reconsider some sort of safety net for them.

[Translation]

I am not quoting this article for my own personal satisfaction. I am quoting it to point out that today's crisis, this railway strike, did not come out of the blue. It was predictable. In fact, we saw this coming last June, when we asked the Government to take action to prevent a strike. I quoted this article that appeared in the Toronto Star to put the present strike into proper perspective.

We Liberals say to the Government that the strike became unavoidable when the Conservative Government refused to include a safety net for the workers in its deregulation Bill. Since the beginning of this dispute, we in the Liberal Party have been telling the Government that if negotiations were to fail, any back-to-work legislation would have to contain provisions guaranteeing a certain degree of job security for workers in the railway industry.

[English]

I asked a question of the Minister of Labour, indeed pressed him to make sure that, if he cannot undo the wrongs of the Minister of Transport, then at least to be fair to the workers in this legislation. He is the Minister of Labour and it is his responsibility to take the side of workers.

I am surprised that I do not see some protection for the employees in the legislation. One good example of greater job security, which Liberal Members are sure would have been acceptable to the labour unions and which would not have imposed an unbearable strain on the railways, is the recent settlement covering about 1,200 workers at the Ontario Northland Railway.

There is a new clause in the collective agreement between the Ontario Northland Railway and its employees, Clause 7(a), which gives the employees a sense of belonging to an organization. If there are difficulties, they will not be treated as if they are dispensable. They will not be laid off without proper care being taken for them.

Mr. Nunziata: After many years of service.

Mr. Ouellet: That is right. My colleagues remind me that most railway workers have been devoted employees and have worked their entire lives for the CN or the CP. They deserve better than to be kicked out of their jobs because the Minister of Transport decided to deregulate the railway industry.

This new Clause 7(a) indicates that any employee with seven years' seniority, as a guarantee of employment, as long as the workers agree, could take another job with the railway.

In some cases, it might be difficult to find another job for the employee, but then the collective agreement says that, should no work be found, the employee is placed in a waiting status until such time as a vacancy occurs within his or her classification. During that period, the employee's unemployment insurance benefits or his or her outside earnings will be supplemented to a level equal to 80 per cent of his or her weekly base pay until such time as a job is found.

[Translation]

It is obvious that the Government has a responsibility, bringing pressure to bear as it did on Canada's railway companies by forcing them to accept deregulation. It simply cannot wash its hands off this situation. I find this all the more deplorable that there is nothing in this piece of legislation comparable to what the Liberal administration did in 1973, the last time a similar law was adopted to force the rail workers back to work. The then Liberal Government had shown enough decency, generosity, sense of fair play and understanding of the legitimate concerns of these employees to give specific directives to the arbitrator so he would pay particular attention to the unions' claims concerning job security. I will quote Subsection 16(3) of the 1973 legislation. Subsection (3) of Section 16 of that act reads as follows:

> (3) An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1),
> (a) shall closely examine the job security demands of the unions and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the principle of attrition;
> (b) shall not alter or amend any existing work rules or practices in a manner that could have an adverse effect on rates of pay, earnings or employment opportunities, or safety;
>
> (c) shall, for the purpose of the arbitration, have all the powers conferred on a conciliation board under section 175 of the Canada Labour Code; and
> (d) shall in respect of wages specifically provide for the adjustment of wages to any increase or increases in the cost of living where the arbitrator is satisfied that such adjustment has not been previously or adequately provided.

It stands to reason that, when a Bill stipulates that all the collective agreement clauses which have not been ratified by both parties will be submitted to the arbitrator, that the decision of the arbitrator will be mandatory and binding on both parties, and that the Government fails to give any instructions to the arbitrator, the employees can indeed expect the worst. As it is now the Government washes its hands off the whole thing and says: The country has been thrown into economic chaos because the railways have stopped all operations and the Canadian economy is losing millions of dollars as a result of this rail strike. Well, we will take the hard approach. We will pass legislation and force the employees back to work. As to their wages, working conditions and job security, let the arbitrator do whatever he may feel like doing.

Well, I say this is not the way to proceed. In a similar situation in 1973, the Government at the time at least had the good sense to give certain instructions to the negotiator or arbitrator appointed at the time, to protect employee interests.

[English]

I want to outline very briefly the fundamental differences between the 1973 legislation introduced by the then Liberal Government and that introduced today by the Conservative Government. In 1973 we, like the Conservatives, decided we could not allow a railway strike to go on any longer because of the consequences for the Canadian economy. Therefore, despite our best wishes and hopes we introduced in Parliament back to work legislation. Let us not kid ourselves. It is always better to have a negotiated settlement, but we imposed a settlement in 1973 because we felt we had to do so for the sake of the Canadian economy. I do not quarrel with the Government in this case and we will co-operate in passing this legislation because we think the economy of our country cannot be damaged by a railway strike.

However, when we deal with the legislation on a clause-by-clause basis, I will have a number of questions to ask of the Minister. Indeed, I intend to introduce some amendments which could, to a certain degree, ease the fear and anxiety of the workers that such legislation is inappropriate. I hope the Minister in his wisdom will be able to give guarantees to the workers and hopefully accept some of our amendments which could certainly appease the workers under the circumstances.

In 1973 we put right into the Act a provision stating that some money was to be given to the workers immediately. Effective January 1 of the following year they would receive 34 cents per hour. In that way the workers, forced by legislation to go back to work, were not going back empty-handed. They had not won the collective agreement but at least they had won something. There was some incentive to go back to work and do good work. In this legislation there is nothing like that.

While I am not sure the Minister of Transport understands anything, I am sure the Minister of Labour realizes that when these workers are forced back to work they could slow down the process. There are many ways to do that. Their productivity could decrease. It is not in the interests of either the railways or the employees to see a situation like that develop. I would have thought, in a spirit of good faith, the Government would put at least some money on the line to induce the workers to accept the legislation and go back and do their jobs effectively as they are accustomed to doing. They may go reluctantly. They will be forced by law and they are law-abiding, but if they have no incentive at all, they might go back reluctantly.

Second, the 1973 legislation contained specific instructions for the appointed arbitrator. These included directions to come up with a feasible job security program. He was to recommend a fair wage increase. The present legislation contains no such directions.

Third, in 1973 no time limit was put on the arbitrator. We are dealing with a number of unions and different employers.

This is a very complex issue. Yet this legislation puts a 60-day limit on the arbitrator to come forward with the package. I accept the fact that the Minister has the discretion to extend that time, but I am afraid a 60-day limit will force the arbitrator to look only superficially at the problems. Those problems include job security as well as other issues which had been raised in the negotiations so far. I do hope the Minister is in a position to say to us that he will not hesitate to use his discretion to extend that time limit if necessary.

The arbitrator will have an immense responsibility. I do not want to cast aspersions on the Minister. I know he has to decide on who is going to do conciliation work, but the list of people available is not the one he would like. However, I had been told that the appointment of Mr. Douglas C. Stanley as the conciliation commissioner was very surprising. Not that Mr. Stanley is not a good conciliator, but his experience with and knowledge of the railways is minimal.

Some very complex issues have to be looked at by the conciliator, and the feeling is that the conciliation report did not thoroughly and correctly address those issues. That might have been one of the reasons why there was no success between the parties; the commissioner left a number of issues unresolved or untouched. It was certainly not to the satisfaction of the employees. Therefore, I say to the Minister, whoever you appoint as arbitrator, you have to be sure it is a person with full knowledge of the industry, well known by the parties, and a reliable expert in this area.

As we know, very few things have been agreed to at the bargaining table. The arbitrator is literally going to write the entire collective agreement. Therefore, he has to be someone who knows the railway industry very well.

As well, in 1973 the Liberal Government guaranteed no wage reductions. That might sound funny. People say, well, surely the arbitrator is not going to order a wage reduction. I do not know. I do not think it is appropriate that this legislation does not have such a clause. Frankly, if the two parties cannot agree on a wage package, it is too bad, but I do not think one party should suffer more than the other. Therefore, the real minimum is the status quo. I do not understand why the Minister of Labour has not included a clause precluding wage reductions as we did in 1973. The employees already believe that——the dice were loaded, that the whole collective bargaining process was useless because the companies did not want to negotiate a new collective agreement, since they had the assurance that the Government, in the first few days following the beginning of a rail strike, would inevitably introduce back-to-work legislation. Some clauses of the Bill tabled by the Minister contain phraseology that is very close to the terms used by the employers, which makes it very tempting to consider the possibility that the employers themselves drafted the Bill. I hope that is not the case. I not only hope that is not the case. I also hope that later on, the Minister will be able to give me not just the assurance but irrefutable proof that he will give the arbitrator instructions that employee salaries are not to be reduced.

Finally, I may recall that in 1973, there was no provision for a financial penalty in case of non-compliance with the legislation. I wonder why today the Minister is imposing such severe penalties for non-compliance. We are now talking about penalties of $20,000 and even as much as $100,000 per day. In 1973, we in the Liberal Party placed far more trust in the railway employees' ability to observe the law, and that is why we did not include penalties. I think the Minister of Labour, who as such represents the workers, should at least show the same respect and the same trust. In concluding, I want to say that the Bill before the House today is a most regrettable one, but that should not surprise us because we have to pick up the pieces left by the Minister of Transport.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, in speaking on this legislation I would like to state right from the outset that I am sorry that the negotiations broke down and no satisfactory settlement was reached. I think most Canadians feel the same way. We recognize that in such circumstances governments do have to act. However, the manner in which the Government dealt with this legislation and these negotiations proves its incompetence and shows why we must oppose this legislation. I will go into some detail later to explain exactly why I believe that to be the case.

However, let me start with what has happened in the House in the past week. We have been pushing the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to act in a way which would help to resolve this dispute. We did not tell them to get into the negotiations themselves or to write every clause. We did, however, ask the Government to come forward with some policy on job security.

We explained the problems of people in the railway industry. We explained the obvious issue which was keeping the two sides apart. When we did that, the Minister of Transport got up and spoke about the present CN policy on job security and waxed eloquent, as he is wont to do from time to time, and did so passionately and wrongly, as he does quite often.

The present job security legislation has resulted in thousands upon thousands of people being laid off over the last number of years in our railway system.

Mr. Crosbie: Which legislation?

Mr. Murphy: Pardon me, the collective agreement. For the Minister to say that the collective agreement is wonderful and is guaranteeing job security for so many people when in fact those people are being laid off only helps to create problems for the negotiators and the people on strike.

Mr. Crosbie: I did not say it, but point out where it is.

Mr. Blaikie: Yes, you did. It is right in Hansard.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Speaker, the Minister knows what he said and he knows what he did.

Mr. Crosbie: Stick to the facts.

Mr. Murphy: As a result of this legislation and of what has happened in this House this week, workers across the country feel that they are being picked on by this legislation. They knew that there would be back to work legislation if negotiations were not successful. They also knew that the negotiations were under the hammer of a Government in which the Minister of Transport had already spoken out in favour of the CN position. That in itself made the dispute very difficult to settle in a positive manner.

We will oppose this legislation. We will not prevent it from passing because of the numbers in the House of Commons, but we will debate it. We will point out in detail the problems with it. We will be moving the required amendments. I hope the Ministers responsible will be open to those amendments.

We want to give fair warning now that we know that there is no artificial rush to pass this legislation in the next couple of hours because we all know that the Senate is not even being called back to discuss this legislation until two o'clock tomorrow. Therefore, this House can in fact sit for some length of time and we can discuss amendments and ensure that we do not pass legislation in three or four hours only because there is a political desire among some back-benchers to do so.

It is apparent that government policy was the cause of the strike itself. It was the issue of job security which kept the dispute from being settled positively. That is the same issue that caused the labour dispute within Air Canada. That is the same issue that caused labour unrest at CBC, and the same issue that caused labour unrest at Canada Post. If the Government had a positive policy on job security for Crown corporations and other government employees, there could have been positive negotiation for its employees. However, that is not the case and the remarks of the Minister of Transport this week proved that to be the situation. Other governments have also dealt with technological change. They have dealt with economic setbacks. They have realized that people have not always been able to keep their current job.

It is important to realize that the workers at CN and CP were not asking to keep the same job until they retire. In fact, they were asking for employment security with CN and CP and that those corporations should do all that is possible to make that a reality. It is important to realize that.

It is also important to realize that in seeking this goal, those same corporations should not be contracting out work that was done by people who are now being laid off. If one has worked for CN or CP for the last 15 or 20 years and has been doing a certain job in a shop or in one of the running trades and suddenly it becomes CN policy, which is supported by the Government, that this work be shipped to someone or some corporation that has never worked in this area before, how can one feel that one's valuable work for the company year after year is being appreciated? How can one believe that this country's legislation or the collective agreement one has negotiated will provide protection?

Obviously, the lack of positive government policy on employment security and the fact that the Crown corporations negotiated in a vacuum has led to this labour dispute.

In addition, we know that deregulation has been cited not only by the employees as one of the reasons for the strike, but, despite what the Government has said, the employer has also indicated that deregulation is one of the reasons it will not act to provide employment security for its employees.

Mr. Crosbie: They have not said that.

Mr. Murphy: Again, the Minister of Transport says they have not said that. I wonder how much the Minister of Transport knows about what CN is saying? It is obvious that the Crown corporation has said that at the negotiating table. It is obviously what that Crown corporation has—

Mr. Crosbie: You are quoting them. Where is your source?

Mr. Murphy: The Minister of Transport wants sources. He will get those later on in the day.

Let me turn to the Bill itself and compare it to what was put in place not only in 1973, and also deal with some of the problems this legislation is causing. Clause 4 of the Bill requires that the railways resume operations forthwith. It also requires that "every employee shall, when so required, forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment." This means that the employer must start operations and the employee, whenever he or she is called back, must also begin working.

In 1973, that clause stipulating "when so required" was not in the back to work legislation. That significant change proposed by the Minister of Labour, presumably supported by the Minister of Transport, means that those companies can call back only those employees whom it wants to call back. In effect, it can have a lay-off taking place as a result of this legislation.

This legislation does not return us to the status quo before the strike. It gives a new power to CN and CP to pick and choose which employees it wants back. Certainly, it may have to follow the seniority provisions in the collective agreement, but obviously it is not required to bring back those employees it had working prior to the beginning of the breakdown in negotiations.

That is a major error and a change which the Minister of Labour has brought forward. We want to know why and we will be asking him when we get to clause by clause study.

I will not mention some clauses right now, but that does not mean we support them. I only have 40 minutes for my comments and want to deal with some of the main problems we see with this legislation.

Clause 6(1) states:

> The term of each collective agreement is extended to include the period beginning on January 1, 1987 and ending on December 31, 1988 and may be further extended by the arbitrator to include the period beginning on January 1, 1989 and ending on a day not later than December 31, 1989.

That clause gives the arbitrator the sole right to extend that agreement from two years to three years. What is the reason for that provision? The only thing that both parties in the negotiations agreed to in October, 1986, when they began their negotiations, was that they wanted a two-year collective agreement. No one has said since then that they wanted anything different.

If this Bill was simply back to work legislation, it would not be giving this very innocuous and powerful authority to the arbitrator. It has nothing to do with the dispute at hand.

The danger with this particular power is twofold: first, it reduces the power of the employees to negotiate at a time when they felt they had the power to do so; second, it means that if the clauses of this agreement have not solved the problems that occur in the railway industry they may have to wait one entire year longer before they negotiate.

The other problem is that the positions of the company and the union do not relate to a three-year agreement. The monetary clauses were based on a two-year collective agreement. The conciliation report was based on a two-year collective agreement. Some of the clauses that have been settled already, in open and honest negotiations, were based on a two-year collective agreement. Why would the Minister of Labour introduce legislation which gives an arbitrator the power to extend that legislation for one year at his or her whim? That clause must be eliminated.

Let us turn to Clause 8. The arbitrator, whom we do not know and who may not have any experience in collective bargaining or in the transportation industry, especially with railways, is supposed to solve this dispute within 60 days, although the legislation provides the Minister with the authority to give the arbitrator more than 60 days. However, this is a very complex set of negotiations.

We are not dealing with one employer and one union, but with two employers and many unions, involving many different situations and many different present collective agreements. Sixty days will not be enough, unless the arbitrator restricts himself or herself to a very limited investigation and role in determining what should be in a collective agreement. In that case, an arbitrator obviously cannot write a comprehensive and adequate collective agreement.

I am also concerned that the issues in dispute are not itemized in Clause 8. That was done in the 1973 legislation, and while it may not seem important to some people, because the disputes may seem obvious, there was a press release by the companies today saying that there are three items in dispute. The union is saying there are seven items in dispute. Obviously, there is a difference in numbers, and that is something about which we should be concerned. The legislation, based on prior history, should spell out what should be dealt with by the arbitrator.

• (1630)

The Government, in putting this legislation together, rejected the advice that I, among others, gave in the House of Commons. We suggested that the Minister of Labour meet with both the unions and the corporations prior to introducing this legislation. We were not advocating any further delay because we knew this legislation would be dealt with prior to the end of this week. However, we believed that if the Minister of Labour sat down with the parties, he could have at least had the advantage of recommendations based on the 1973 legislation with respect to the items still in dispute. Perhaps this legislation would then deal with the issues that both sides feel are the issues. He did not do that. As a result, some of the things I indicated earlier are problems and concerns.

In addition, the Minister has not met with the people who are not on strike at the present time, those people who are laid off as a result of the present labour dispute. This legislation affects these people as well. It affects the people in the shop crafts council and the locomotive engineers. For some reason it does not affect the railway controllers. That is an interesting question. We would also like to ask later on why that particular group was left out of this legislation.

The problem is that even those groups, or some of those groups who are not on strike at the present time, are affected by this legislation, and at any time the Minister wishes he can proclaim those parts of the legislation which say those people are now covered by the legislation. That is what I considered to be negotiating with an axe to your head.

This legislation is flawed. If the two sides ever had the ability to get together to resolve the items in dispute at the present time, that is now not possible because they know they have this blanket legislation hanging over their heads. The Minister should have at least consulted with the people who are not now on strike and ensured by his actions, and by the actions of this Parliament, that we are not put in a situation where we actually destroy any ability of those parties to come together by themselves and resolve any potential labour dispute.

With respect to the people who are not on strike, the shop craft workers and the locomotive engineers, this legislation gives the arbitrator the power to impose a three-year collective agreement even though they might be sitting down trying to negotiate a two-year collective agreement. It gives the arbitrator the power to decide what items should be in the collective agreement and what items should not be. It gives the arbitrator the power to take a position which is less than the company offered and make that the final settlement. Again, to repeat the words of my Liberal colleague, that can happen.

I know it can happen because when I was a teacher in northern Manitoba it happened to me. The school board offered a certain settlement. The teachers turned it down, not because of the monetary aspect with which they were quite happy, but there were other conditions they wanted included in a collective agreement. They made that case very clearly to the arbitrator. They said that money was not the issue. They were quite happy with what was offered. But they wanted other clauses put into the collective agreement. The arbitrator said no to each of the items the teachers wanted, and then decided to give us less money than the school board was willing to give us. Thank God we negotiated a settlement the next year and the school board gave us the money back. That is the irony of open-ended powers given to an arbitrator.

An arbitrator not only has the power to stay away from anything in the conciliation report, because there are no guidelines in this legislation, but he has the right to ignore what both the parties think might be appropriate. Surely an arbitrator should not be able to go beyond the bounds of where the two parties are at the present time. That just does not make sense.

We must admit then that in 1973 the Liberals, who had a minority Government, put together legislation which was perhaps a bit stronger than they would have put together otherwise, but at least the legislation in those days had a wage guideline. It had other guidelines. It told Emmet Hall, who became the arbitrator, to deal with the conciliation report. All of those things were done. That is not happening here.

The workers are also being penalized because this legislation does not give them any immediate guarantee of money. Not only do they get no guarantee of money in the long run, but it does not even give them the money the companies have promised them. Why is that? The conciliation report indicated that 3 per cent this year and 3 per cent next year, presumably with a two-year collective agreement, would be a reasonable settlement. The companies have offered about half that. Arbitration may take longer than 60 days. I believe that if we are going to order people back to work, we should also ensure that they receive at least some of the money in the short run instead of having to wait what may be well over 60 days. It may be over a year or two years. It is known that arbitration awards are not settled quickly.

Madam Speaker, this legislation is extremely flawed. I am certainly going to reject any attempts by government Members to rush this legislation through the House. I hope that in the long evening in front of us the Minister of Labour and his Department officials, who will be up watching this debate, and his other officials will get in touch with CN and CP and will talk with the unions, because if this House does not rush this legislation through there may be parts of this legislation which could be improved with the concurrence of all parties. Again, I used as just one example the strange powers which have been given to the arbitrator to extend the collective agreement by one year when no one has asked for it.

We should be able to have a list of what is in dispute so that the arbitrator knows what he or she should be dealing with. It may well be that in order to ensure some peace at the work site, the companies might be willing to give some monetary increase at the present time. All of that is possible if the Minister and his officials make the attempt to contact the people involved.

One of the problems we have when we rush legislation through this House is that we do not allow for those who are affected by the legislation to participate in the legislation and to make that legislation not only relevant but as complete and as accurate as possible. Therefore, I think the Minister has a long evening in front of him and I want him in the House as much as possible. I also want him out in his government lobby talking to the people who are affected by this legislation to ensure that we do get the amendments that are necessary, because the legislation can be improved. The way it stands right now, we cannot support it. We have indicated all week that we would wait to see what the package was. We did not want to be in a position of saying we were against back to work legislation if it was good legislation. We wanted to give the Government a chance to provide adequate legislation if negotiations did break down. But that is not what has happened. This is weak legislation. It is flawed and vague. It is the Minister's job to fix it. If he does not, then we will.

• (1640)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Madam Speaker, I am intervening in this debate against what my preference would be. However, I have to intervene because of the silly allegations made principally by the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) who spoke earlier in the debate. As one would expect from him, most of his remarks were innuendo, non sequiturs, and nothing followed from one another. For example, I would like to deal with some of his platitudes and pitiful pettifoggery, which might, of course, bore the House. He claims—

Mr. Nunziata: Come on, John, this is serious business.

Mr. Crosbie: If the hon. gentleman will listen he will understand what the points are that I am making—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): No, he won't.

Mr. Crosbie: He will at least have the opportunity to understand.

The Hon. Member for Papineau attempted to blame the present strike in the Canadian railway system on deregulation. How is it possible to blame this particular strike on deregulation when deregulation so-called, or the Canadian version of it, does not come into effect in Canada until January 1, 1988? Is this anticipatory? How can he possibly blame it on deregulation?

Deregulation has not caused any loss of employment in the Canadian rail industry because we have not had deregulation. Of course, there has been a loss of employment in the rail industry in Canada caused by the changing nature of the transportation system. For example, in 1974 there were 107,569 employees in the Canadian rail system. In 1984, before we came into office, there were 81,710 employees working in the Canadian rail system, 25,859 fewer than in 1974. Is that to be blamed on deregulation when there was not even any deregulation at that particular time?

If we listen to the Hon. Member for Papineau, I suppose we should make it all retroactive—the blame is certainly retroactive. As a matter of fact, his Government was in office during all those years except for eight months. So the problem with the railway industry, and many other industries in Canada, particularly the smoke-stack industries, the heavy industries, is that the nature of our economy has changed. It has changed to a service and communications kind of economy. The smoke-stack heavy industries and the railways which depended heavily upon them have therefore suffered as a result. That is the problem that is faced by the railway industry.

The Hon. Member for Papineau suggested that when the committee was dealing with legislation passed earlier in this session leaders of the railway industry said that employment would be lost because of deregulation. I happen to have some of the quotations here, which is more than he did. He did not quote one. As usual, he made these slippery comments, old slippery-heels from Papineau, and he did not produce any quotations at all. I have here in my hand a quotation from Mr. I. B. Scott, the Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of CP Rail. He stated:

> We would have to adjust our workforce—but that is going to happen anyway. Those cost pressures are there for our customers in the market competition aspect of rate-setting, let alone the regulatory aspect.

That was Mr. Scott's evidence when he appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport, as well as when he appeared before the Senate committee.

On July 14 Mr. Morin, the Vice-President, Marketing, of CN Rail, stated:

> The total amount of traffic in volume may not be different on each of the railways, but it will move at a much lower revenue. If that is the case, then there will not be any job loss because of it.

This is exactly contrary to what the Hon. Member for Papineau has said everyone from the railways was saying.

Mr. Lawless, who is the President and Chief Executive Officer of CN Rail, said on March 2:

> Whether this Bill comes in or not, the railways have to rationalize their services and they have to find a way to reduce their costs or they will not be able to remain competitive in the market-place today.

That is what he said. It is in direct contradiction to what the Hon. Member for Papineau said.

The rail industry faces a difficult, competitive situation, not because of deregulation but because of fundamental changes in the economy. They faced it in the United States. They face it in every other industrialized country in the world. It is because of changes in railway technology, not because of regulatory reform.

Since the passage of the National Transportation Act in 1967, rail employment in both these railways dropped 29 per cent. In CN and CP freight operations, rail employment dropped 19 per cent in the five years from 1980 to 1985. So deregulation has no more connection with the present impasse in collective bargaining in the rail companies of Canada than the man in the moon would have.

If this strike were caused by deregulation, then what caused the strikes of 1966 and 1973? What a silly suggestion to make. This strike is caused by the fact that the two parties involved, management and employees, have not been able to reach an agreement on various aspects of their collective agreement. We have a free collective bargaining system in Canada. It has some penalties as well as a great number of benefits.

This industry is important to Canada. It is important to our grain farmers and our resource industries. What is carried by rail today, by the way, is grain, which accounts for one-sixth of all the railway tonnage, bulk freight, coal, sulphur, potash, steel, chemicals and forest products, which comprise over one-half of rail traffic. The smaller, more valuable traffic has gone to the trucks and all the rest of it. Because it is so important, we have to intervene. We cannot allow the rest of the country, innocent third parties, to be penalized in this way for very long. That is why we have to intervene.

Rail handles only 27 per cent of all freight tonnage today. That is still very important, which is why we are intervening. But in 1984 the rail system handled 33 per cent. So one can see the declining situation with respect to the share of rail in our freight transportation and the competition it faces from trucks, ships and air.

To return to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Papineau, I am intervening to set the record straight. He claimed that we should have known that the strike was coming and that we should have intervened earlier. We all knew that there was the possibility of a strike. We all know in any set of collective bargaining that there is a threat of a strike. There is always the threat of a strike. That is the power, the weapon, that the employees have, and the employer has the threat of a lock-out. We all know what can happen when negotiations are not successful. But because we know that, are we supposed to intervene right from the start? Is that what the Liberal Government did in 1973 or in 1966? Of course it did not. It is a piece of errant stupidity to suggest that somehow we should have intervened any earlier.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) did everything he could through the use of conciliation and the use of mediators to try to assist these two parties to reach a settlement. Because they have been unable to reach a settlement the House has to intervene to see that the disruption in the rail system of Canada ceases. The only way to do that is by the appointment of an arbitrator. This House cannot and should not arbitrate this dispute. We are not capable of doing it. We are not impartial, as we all know. We just heard the opening speaker, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). He is obviously not an impartial observer of the scene. He has already given his opinion that work should not be contracted out and so on. We are not even allowed to give the facts with respect to the present collective agreement that is in effect at Canadian National.

• (1650)

When I was asked questions in the House on August 24 by the Hon. Member for Churchill, he objected to my answers and tried to allege that somehow this shows some type of bias. I was only explaining that the Crown corporation, for which we are responsible, has one of the more generous systems in effect in Canada, and that the matter was now subject to mediation and collective bargaining. We are not even supposed to say that our own Crown corporation has a system of job security at present. It is one of the matters that has been discussed in this collective bargaining negotiation, because naturally the railway employees want a better and a more generous one, and the employer has to be concerned about its costs, competitiveness, and productivity. They have a different point of view.

We are not even allowed to give the facts in the House when we are questioned and when the motives and the actions of our own Crown corporation are impugned. But the Hon. Member for Churchill can stand up and take a position on all of the matters that are disputed in the present situation, and give his opinion that they should not contract out work. What is sauce for the goose is not sauce for the gander. That is a typical NDP double standard. They think that they hold all the morality, and that all the rights are in the hands of the NDP. We all know how impartial they are. When the labour movement states that they are against free trade, the members of the NDP bob their heads and they are against free trade. If they are against deregulation, this crew bobs their heads and they are against deregulation.

I will say that the Hon. Member for Churchill put forward some relevant points on the Bill. They were of interest to hear. The Hon. Member for Papineau said that the railways have been squeezed out of existence by deregulation imposed by the Minister. How can they be squeezed out of existence by something that is not yet there? Deregulation does not start until January 1, 1988. How can the railways be squeezed out of existence in that manner? It is shocking. It is anticipatory squeezing. It is premature squeezology.

The Hon. Member for Papineau talked about labour adjustment. There are labour adjustment programs of Government. We are aware of the fact that the economy is changing and certain industries have to be assisted. There have to be adjustment programs. We have to deal with the problems of lay-offs and unemployment. My hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), was dealing with that, and it has been dealt with by the present Minister. Of course there are a number of government programs for employment and training. Companies like CN also have programs. I will not comment on whether or not they are adequate. I think it would be fair to say that they certainly have programs that are among the best in the Canadian industrial scene. I am speaking on this point to defend CN, which is our Crown corporation, from unfair criticism from the Hon. Member for Papineau—prejudice, criticism, political, polemical, putrid attacks from the poltroon from Papineau. That is why I am speaking.

The Hon. Member for Papineau criticized the fact that there is no extra money for the employees in the Bill now before the House. That is because this is a Bill to send this dispute to arbitration. How could we intervene and take one or two aspects of the present impasse in the relationship between these groups and deal with that ourselves in the House? We do not think that is the way that the collective bargaining system should operate. Despite our best efforts, these parties have been unable to resolve this matter themselves. It is not for the House to say what the collective bargaining agreement between them should be. Now they have failed themselves, it is for some other impartial authority.

I ask Hon. Members to remember that any new agreement that is reached or imposed by the arbitrator will be retroactive to January 1, 1987. The parties can still agree on any items that they want to agree upon when they first go before the arbitrator. If they say to the arbitrator that we agree on X, Y, Z, this item, that item, or 30 items, the arbitrator will not bother to deal with the items that they agree on. There is nothing stopping the parties from agreeing on anything at the present time right up to the arbitration. Under the legislation, the parties can agree after the arbitration. They can change the agreement that the arbitrator imposes, if the arbitrator has to impose an agreement, by agreement afterwards, as you will see by reference to the Bill. They can change the agreement. They can change their present agreement now, and they can change any agreement that the arbitrator finds he has to impose, if they agree together. Their fate is in their own hands, which is where it should be, if there is to be a free collective bargaining system, as this country is supposed to have. That is how this legislation leaves it. It leaves the dispute largely in the hands of the parties, but if they cannot resolve it then the appointed arbitrator will resolve it.

The Hon. Member for Papineau also said this—a scurvy piece of business, that's the best way I could put it. I am trying to be statesman-like today. He did not say that the employers wrote the legislation, but he said it seems to some people, or it could be that—I forget the exact words he used—the employers wrote this legislation. The Hon. Member for Papineau did not make an allegation that the employers wrote this legislation. He did not make the charge that they wrote the legislation. He just suggested that it might be that they wrote the legislation, and if they did he was against it.

What type of scurvy, dog in the manger, lack of backbone statement is that, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member for Papineau has not as much backbone as a rubber ducky.

Mr. Nunziata: Big joke, John.

Mr. Crosbie: He knows very well that the employers did not write the legislation. He knows very well that the employers had nothing to do with the legislation. He knows very well that the employers did not see the legislation any more than the railway unions saw the legislation before it was introduced in the House. He does not want to make a direct charge because he does not have any proof to back up a direct charge. He just mentions this in the hope that the press or somebody will pick it up and put it on the wire. The rubber ducky is not even here to listen to me.

Mr. Gauthier: It takes one to know one.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. rubber ducky from Papineau.

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We are dealing with some very important and serious legislation with regard to Bill C-85. I find it very offensive that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), as a Minister of the Crown, should make fun of this particular legislation, and in so doing use unparliamentary language and break parliamentary rules in order to criticize my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet).

Mr. Blaikie: I rise on a point of order. Through you, Madam Speaker, I would appeal to everyone here to take this matter more seriously. I know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has a talent for dragging down the level of a debate. The fact of the matter is that he is not supposed to reflect on the absence of Members from the House.

Mr. Nunziata: And the Hon. Member for Papineau is right here.

Mr. Blaikie: And the Member whose absence he did reflect upon is talking to the Member's own colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), presumably about the legislation.

Let us treat the matter a little more seriously, if we may.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. I am sure that everyone in the House realizes that this is a very important piece of legislation. I am sure that the Hon. Minister will refrain from mentioning whoever is and is not present in the House. The Hon. Minister should know better, and I know that he does.

Mr. Crosbie: I would not dream of violating the rules any more than any of the Members opposite who constantly comment on who is and who is not present in the House.

I am not treating this Bill with any levity. I am treating the poor, tasteless remarks of the leading, opening speaker for the Liberal Party. It is better to treat them with levity than to treat them the way that you feel.

I will pass on to the Hon. Member for Churchill who says that the NDP Party will oppose the legislation. This is the usual hypocrisy. They are all for terminating the railway strike, but they will oppose the legislation that terminates it. Why? Because it does not contain the provisions they think it should contain in favour of one of the parties to the legislation. That is how impartial the Hon. Members from the NDP are. They are going to take stand, and it will not be an impartial stand. They say that the legislation is hanging over the heads of the parties. It is not hanging over the heads of the parties. It has been brought into this House so that the present strike will cease and the parties can bring the matters in dispute and present their arguments to an impartial arbitrator. As I said a few moments ago, there is nothing stopping them settling all or any of the items in dispute before they ever get to the arbitrator, including the question of wages.

We know there is a recommendation from Mr. Stanley on wages. I think he recommended 3 per cent and 3 per cent. It is quite possible for these two parties to settle that. Perhaps it is part of the dynamics of a labour collective bargaining negotiation that they do not want to do that. Normally it is a situation of "I will do this, if you will do that", and there is the to and fro on all of the issues. You cannot pick out just one issue. The parties do not want to pick out one issue and settle on one issue because they have a whole lot of other issues they are trying to get settled. That is the dynamics of the negotiation. They have no legislation hanging over their heads. The legislation is in this House today. If the Senate comes back, as it is supposed to do tomorrow at two o'clock, presumably the House will pass the legislation, and hopefully the Senate will, and the strike will be over tomorrow and the two sides will still be free to go forward and settle their dispute by themselves if they can or before an arbitrator if they cannot.

Society has changed. In the 1950s, the automobile started to become the predominant means of inter-city travel, as we all know, and the share of the freight transportation market held by the two railways was then around 60 per cent. In the seventies, it declined to 40 per cent, and today they are carrying 27 per cent of all goods shipped. If that is the case, how can the railways possibly have the same number of employees today as they had in the 1950s after this huge change in the nature of their business? Deregulation has nothing to do with this dispute. It may affect the attitude of the parties who are bargaining, but deregulation did not create this situation.

Our hope is that through deregulation the business of the railways will expand, that the market and competition will give them back a lot of the business they have had, and that in the future they will be able to employ more people, which is what happened in the United States in the trucking field and in the air field. Hopefully it will have a healthy effect here in Canada in the rail field as well.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. He has said repeatedly that deregulation is not responsible for the difficulties. Since deregulation is not in effect, it is not a factor in the fears of the workers that there will be further lay-offs.

I put it to the Minister that the whole purpose of deregulation—and the Government has said this all along—is to make transportation more competitive. The railways will have to compete much more with trucks than they have in the past. Obviously if the railways are going to be more competitive, they will have to cut costs. They will obviously have to accelerate as quickly as the regulatory agency will permit. They will have to get rid of branch lines, cut back on maintenance, and farm out to non-union workers as much of the work now done by railway workers as they can. They will accelerate as quickly as they can in the reduction of the number of employees who work for the railways because deregulation will require that for them to be as competitive as possible.

Why does the Minister keep on insisting, despite the claims of the unions, substantiated by the conciliator, that deregulation is an important factor and will lead to much more in the way of lay-offs?

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I quoted from the leaders of the rail companies themselves as to the effect of deregulation. I would like to refer to the quotation again. Mr. Scott, who is the Chairman and CEO of CP Rail, stated:

> We would have to adjust our workforce—

That is under deregulation.

> —but that is going to happen anyway. Those cost pressures are there for our customers in the market competition aspect of rate setting, let alone the regulatory aspect.

It is not deregulation that is causing the problem, as I have tried to explain, it is the change in society. For example, if we take statistical information on the modal share of major Canadian exports to the United States, including fertilizers, newsprint and paper, wood pulp, steel products, chemicals and acids, the rail share of those exports to the United States in 1980 was 72.5 per cent. In 1985, it was under 60 per cent. The share of the trucking industry increased from 19 per cent to 28 per cent, while water's share rose from 7.5 per cent to 12 per cent. This is why the rail industry has had a significant reduction in the number of people who move in the rail industry.

In 1980, rail moved 17,033,000 tonnes to the United States. In 1985, rail moved only 15,148,000 tonnes. Although there was a larger movement, the total movement went up from 23 million to 25 million but the rail share went down. That is why they have these problems. That is why job security is important to people who work in this industry, not because of deregulation but because of the nature of the changes in society and in their industry in the last 15 or 20 years.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is right when he says that the situation in which Canadian railways find themselves, or for that matter in which other railways in the United States find themselves, is not totally attributable to deregulation. All the things that the Minister cites are true. No one has claimed—he is setting up a straw man here—that the events and the reductions in employment that have occurred over the last 10 or 15 years are due to deregulation. The Minister is right when he says deregulation will not take effect until 1988. But it is also a fact, with a smidgen of intellectual honesty here, that the last year of the contract being negotiated is a year in which deregulation will be in effect. The only point we are trying to establish here is the connection, that deregulation is a factor in these negotiations. Therefore, it is related to government policy.

The conciliator himself on page 6 says that in their submissions to us the railway companies outlined their view of the future. They go on to note things which the Minister has already noted. They see little growth in their transportation stronghold, namely, bulk commodities, because of slack demand for Canadian resources. On top of this they see fierce competition in the 50 per cent of the market where they compete with the trucking industry. They see deregulation and relatively low wages giving trucking an edge in this competition. That is right from the conciliator's report, Madam Speaker. It is not something the NDP Members are making up. All we are trying to establish is a connection between deregulation and what is going on, the arguments which the railways are making, and the Minister has consistently denied this all week. For what reason, I do not know, because it is right there in the conciliator's report.

Will the Minister kindly explain whether Dr. Stanley is subject to all the accusations that he has made about us because we have tried to establish a connection, not the supreme connection but a connection between deregulation and what is going on?

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, let me try to alleviate the trauma under which the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg—Birds Hill is suffering. If he is saying that deregulation is a factor, yes.

Mr. Blaikie: It took a week to get you to say that.

Mr. Crosbie: I was not asked that question. There is no answer to any question by me that indicates otherwise. I was answering the Hon. member for Papineau who tried to blame this whole strike and situation on deregulation in a most dishonest manner, certainly intellectually dishonest. He did not suggest that there was a connection. He said that deregulation and the Minister of Transport were the cause of the strike.

• (1710)

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has a bit more intellect and a bit more intellectual honesty. He said that deregulation was a factor. Certainly it was a factor—

Mr. Nunziata: A big factor.

Mr. Crosbie: Not a big factor. I can quote from Dr. Stanley's report as well. For example, he says that certain proposals go against the rational foundation upon which the system was built, and he was dealing there with job security. He has made his report and has analysed the position.

Deregulation means that the railways will have to be, just as they have been before, as competitive as possible. That is a factor, but their problems started long ago. The big fall in employment in the railways came during the Liberal years.

Between 1974 and 1984, 25,000 people disappeared from the rail employment rolls. The hon. gentleman's Government was in power then and did nothing about it, presumably because there was nothing it could do about it. I might even concede that to the Government because that is the nature of changes in society. I was not here then to use any intellectually dishonest arguments to try to blame the situation on the Government. I did not try to blame the Government for factors such as that steel was no longer important, the railways now depending on bulk commodities, two-thirds of business now going to the West rather than the East, and the percentage carried by trucks, ships and airplanes. That is life and not the fault of any Government. I hope the hon. gentleman will withdraw all the remarks he made and admit that he was wrong.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, I have only a few seconds at my disposal. I will just say that I guess the truth hurts very much. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who was so silent and invisible during the debate on Bills C-18 and C-19, has now suddenly appeared and started responding to my constant objections to deregulation.

It is now clear that deregulation is badly hurting employees. We now have an example of this, and I am glad to see that the Minister is waking up to it. He does not like it but he is waking up to it. I think the Minister should take care of relations with France. He has a lot to do there and he should go back, concentrate on that and let his Parliamentary Secretary continue doing the job on his behalf.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A final word from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, my final word is bushwah.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Madam Speaker, before I begin my remarks on Bill C-85, I would like to point out that the Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques (Mr. Guilbault), the labour critic for the Official Opposition, would have liked to have been here today to participate in this important debate. Unfortunately, his mother is seriously ill in Montreal and his presence is required at his mother's side.

In the last 45 minutes, Canadians had an opportunity to judge and assess the credibility of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) speaking on behalf of the Government of Canada. I am certain that the overwhelming majority of Canadians have concluded that this Minister is not a serious Minister. They have concluded that he does not take this rail strike seriously. He has used the opportunity to make jokes about a serious matter affecting some 55,000 or more employees rather than to justify this back to work legislation. He is making light of a strike that is costing the railway companies $20 million a day, a strike that is costing private industry tens of millions of dollars a day.

What we get from the Government is a Minister of Transport responsible for the railway industry making joke after joke. I would like to tell the Minister of Transport that members of the Official Opposition do not treat this matter lightly. We do not believe it is a joke that tens of thousands of Canadians are affected in a very negative fashion by this legislation.

Having said that, I would like to now turn to Bill C-85, a Bill entitled an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement, et cetera, et cetera. It is back to work legislation. By its very nature, back to work legislation is objectionable. It is offensive in a country that believes very strongly in collective bargaining. However, there comes a time when the Government must act in the best interests not only of the unions and the management but of Canada as a whole.

We are faced here with a national emergency. Parliament was recalled several weeks ago to deal with a so-called national emergency on refugees in Canada. We questioned whether or not that was a true emergency or a true crisis, but the situation Canadians are faced with today is a true national emergency, a true national crisis. If Parliament were not sitting, there is no doubt that it would have been recalled to deal with this legislation as it has been on several other occasions.

The public interest commands that we pass legislation today to get the railways running. As of tomorrow, the railways will be running, notwithstanding members of the New Democratic Party.

I would like to comment very briefly on the position taken by members of the New Democratic Party. We in the Official Opposition believe that their position is totally irresponsible. The New Democratic Party through its main speaker said that it intends to oppose the legislation unless certain changes are adopted. It was not quite made clear whether or not, even if all the suggested amendments were accepted by the Government, the New Democratic Party would in fact accept the legislation.

NDP Members would rather have the rail strike continue. They would rather have the railway companies losing $20 million a day. They would rather have grain farmers in western Canada suffer in a very serious fashion because of the rail strike. Members of the New Democratic Party would rather have the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are affected directly by the railway strike continue to suffer. Is that a responsible position for a national Party to take? I conclude that it is not. Members of the NDP are up to their mischief again. They are speaking out of both sides of their mouths.

Today I had the opportunity to speak to several representatives of the unions affected. Members of the New Democratic Party say they represent unions in Canada. Several union people had some difficulty getting through to members of the New Democratic Party to express their points of view.

If members of the NDP had taken the opportunity to speak to the unions, the individuals affected by this strike, they would have known that the unions themselves will accept back to work legislation. They have concerns about who the arbitrator might be and about some of the matters raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), but when push comes to shove, they understand that the railway must run.

Members of the NDP take the irresponsible and naive position that if some minor technical changes to this legislation are not accepted by the Government, they will oppose it. If there were an NPD Government in Canada, heaven forbid, then the railways would be closed, shut down forever and a day. There would not be a collective bargaining agreement entered into between labour and management.

• (1720)

As the Hon. Member for Papineau pointed out, we in the Official Opposition will support the Government. We are prepared to work all night long. As you know, the Senate has been recalled and it will be in a position tomorrow to give royal assent to this legislation which will be followed by resumption of railway operations.

The Hon. Member pointed out some of the deficiencies in this legislation, but we believe that, notwithstanding the deficiencies, the legislation is supportable. Unlike members of the NDP, who are opposed to everything, we will try in a very constructive manner to improve the legislation.

What are the changes we would like? We are concerned, as are the unions, about several matters. Let me begin with job security. Approximately 54,000 railway employees are affected by the strike. We are talking about 54,000 families. Is it too much for those people to want some type of job security? I suggest it is not. It is fine for us who sit in this beautiful Chamber and collect a pay cheque every month not to be concerned about job security, but the Government must be concerned about job security for the workers. We believe very strongly that certain guidelines should have been entrenched in this legislation to address the whole problem rather than simply giving the arbitrator a mandate to come up with some type of settlement.

In 1973, the Liberal Government was required to legislate railway workers back to work. That legislation contained specific instructions for the appointed arbitrator. Those instructions included directions to come up with a feasible job security program, avoid amending work rules in such a way that they would harm workers, and recommend fair wage increases. There are no such instructions in Bill C-85. In 1973, no time limit was set. Under Bill C-85, the arbitrator must do his or her job within 60 days unless the Minister in his discretion decides to extend that period of time. We believe that the arbitrator should not be required to do his or her important job while being worried about time constraints. Once again, we will attempt to convince the Minister to remove that clause.

In 1973, there was a guarantee of no wage reductions. There is no such guarantee in the present legislation. It should have been made absolutely clear in this legislation that there would be no wage reduction. At the very worst, the arbitrator should be allowed to maintain the status quo. There is a reason for that.

The workers are being forced back to work by law. There are provisions for fines in this legislation if they do not go back to work. It will be an offence for an individual to contravene this legislation with a minimum fine of $10,000 per day and a maximum of $50,000 per day if they were acting in the capacity of an officer or representative of the railway companies. A union official who breaches this legislation will be fined a minimum of $10,000 a day. There was no such provision in the 1973 legislation. The Government is holding a gun to the heads of union officials. That is not conducive to discussions in good faith. It is obvious that the Government, perhaps inadvertently, is tilting the legislation in favour of the employers. We will work with the Government to eliminate that provision.

Individual workers are also subject to substantial fines, a minimum of $500 and a maximum of $1,000 a day. That applies to individuals not acting in their capacity as representatives of the union. It seems to me the workers might not go back to work in a very positive mood. It also seems to me there are ways of ensuring they will go back to work and put in an honest day's work, as well as ensuring that they work with management and the arbitrator in order to come up with a report fair to all sides.

As you know, the workers can be legislated back to work or, to use the wording in the Act itself, be forced to resume their duties. However, we all know about working to rule. They may go back to work but they may not do anything that is not required of them. As you know, working to rule could be just as devastating and negative as a full-scale strike.

• (1730)

We believe that in order to show good faith certain provisions should exist in the legislation. First, there should be guidelines for the arbitrator with regard to job security, fair wages, et cetera. In our view that would assist to provide the atmosphere for positive, good faith discussions and bargaining. We believe that a time limit would assist in setting the right stage for a fair agreement. We believe that there should be no wage reduction.

We will try to convince the Government at least to legislate an increase as proposed by the conciliator. Rather than the employees having to wait the period of time required for the arbitrator to report, we believe that at the very least the workers should receive an increase in their pay cheques in the amount the conciliator has recommended. We believe that will show good faith by the Government.

I would like to comment very briefly on the cause of this crisis, this national emergency. In between jokes the Minister of Transport denied that this strike was caused by deregulation. He admitted, upon being pressed on the issue, that deregulation was a factor in this strike. We know that Bills C-18 and C-19, the two pieces of legislation which will deregulate the transport industry in Canada, have had a profound impact on this strike. The Minister of Transport should assume a lot of the responsibility for this strike because he dealt with this legislation in the same joking manner as he dealt with Bills C-18 and C-19.

As you know, Madam Speaker, there was a Cabinet shuffle today. I suspect that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in his wisdom, will have recognized the lack of credibility of the Minister of Transport and shuffled him not only out of the position of Minister of Transport but right out of Cabinet. Given his propensity to joke about very serious matters, it seems to me that the Prime Minister and his Government would be well served by removing the Minister of Transport and replacing him with someone who will accept his or her responsibilities in a more serious way.

This strike was anticipated by a great number of individuals and organizations. During committee deliberations on Bills C-18 and C-19 the Government was warned that there would be massive lay-offs in the transportation industry.

I note, Madam Speaker, that you have indicated that my time is about to expire. Therefore, I will conclude my remarks by reiterating the position of the Official Opposition. Our position, unlike that of the New Democratic Party, is that we support this legislation. This is a national emergency and we will work over the course of the evening and the morning to try to convince the Government to adopt some, if not all, of the recommendations that we are proposing. We believe that by tomorrow evening this legislation will become law. I hope the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) will be able to convince his colleague, the Minister of Transport, to consider our amendments in a very positive way.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, if there were laws in this country against intellectual pollution as there are against environmental pollution, the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) would be one of the first to be prosecuted. He, better than anyone else, incarnates the current pathos of the Liberal Party, the well-deserved tragedy which is now coming upon that unlamented Canadian institution.

It would be funny, if it were not so offensive, to hear Liberal Members of Parliament making a case against deregulation in the course of this debate when we know that deregulation began under the Liberal Government prior to 1984 and that many of the things which the Conservative Government has done would have been done by the Liberals had they survived the election of 1984.

We also know that during the course of debate in this Parliament about deregulation the Liberals played a very lacklustre part, both in the House of Commons and in the Senate. Quite unlike their behaviour with respect to Bill C-22 to amend the drug Patent Act, Liberal Senators moved no amendments and suggested no changes on deregulation. With respect, the Liberal position on deregulation, as it has been put in the House today with the concern that they have now developed about it, is probably one of the most hypocritical things I have witnessed here in a long time and, God knows, we have witnessed a lot of hypocritical things in the House of Commons. This ranks among the top 10, to be sure.

There are also funny things being said on the government side with regard to deregulation. We finally got the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to admit that there is some connection between deregulation and this rail strike. Yet, after having admitted that, the Minister wanted us to believe that he never made any indefensible claim about deregulation.

I point to Hansard of August 25, 1987, where the Minister of Transport said, in reply to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the following:

> Mr. Speaker, this situation of the railways has no more to do with deregulation than the hon. gentleman has to do with the moon.

That is not the sort of comment that Cabinet Ministers should be making in any event, but the Minister of Transport in effect withdrew that statement when he admitted to me this afternoon that deregulation is a factor. It is a factor because the last year of the contract which was being negotiated, 1988, is a year in which deregulation would already be in effect.

As I read into the record before, the conciliator himself, Mr. Stanley, notes on page 6 of his report that the railways see deregulation and relatively low wages as giving trucking an edge in this competition.

We are talking about the railways' attempt in this negotiation to anticipate the effects of deregulation. One of the effects of deregulation is that they will have to compete with the lower wages paid in the trucking sector. That means that railway workers will be asked, by virtue of government policy, to accept lower wages than they have traditionally been paid in order that the railways might fit into the deregulated framework that is being imposed upon the Canadian transportation sector by the Government. Lower wages for working families mean a reduced quality of life and reduced opportunities. It is not an exaggeration to say that deregulation was one of the biggest pieces of anti-labour legislation ever passed in the United States. We will come to see that deregulation in Canada will prove to be one of the biggest pieces of anti-labour legislation ever passed. We see the beginnings of that in this very dispute, in the way the railways have tried to anticipate the framework within which they will have to live after deregulation.

• (1740)

I do not say this to exonerate the railways because I think there are ways in which they can respond to the difficulties of deregulation without taking it out on their employees. For instance, they could have been more persuasive with the Government in making it realize the absolute lunacy of the policies that are being adopted as a result of deregulation.

Doctor Stanley says on page 6 of his report, again referring to deregulation, that all this leads to the railways' efforts to improve productivity to meet the competition from trucking and from the U.S. rail industry.

One factor, which is not unoriginated but comes right from the conciliator's report, is that one of the most ridiculous, unjust, unpatriotic unCanadian, and damaging steps the Government is taking is that of competitive line rates. Like no other country in the world, we will allow foreign-owned railways, in this case American railways, to compete directly for Canadian traffic that would normally be transported across Canada. Currently, traffic that might originate in British Columbia or Alberta would be transported across western Canada to points in eastern Canada or the northeastern United States. I find it incomprehensible that the Conservatives are making it possible this traffic which formerly made its way across Canada might cross the border from Alberta into Montana and be transported across the northern United States to points east.

This would eliminate the jobs of all the people who operate the trains, who maintain the trains, as well as the jobs of people in spin-off industries that the railway creates.

That is the Progressive Conservative regional development strategy for western Canada. It is eliminating all those jobs as a direct result of deregulation and Bill C-18. That is why the Government must take responsibility for creating the context in which this dispute has occurred.

Railway workers are not only arguing in favour of their own economic well-being when seeking job security and job protection from the effects of deregulation. They are on the front lines in the battle for the very transportation infrastructure of Canada. They are on the front lines fighting for the very nature of this country, if you like.

I hope we can finally put to rest any remaining contention that deregulation is not somehow involved in the present situation, whether it be negotiations, a strike, or back to work legislation.

I have some concerns about the Bill itself. First, it is quite unlike the Bill that returned people to work in 1973. This is partly because the Bill in 1973 was passed by a completely different Parliament in which the New Democratic Party held the balance of power. We were able to have a much larger say in the kind of back to work legislation that would be passed at that time than we obviously will be able to have with the current Government. However, we have not given up hope that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) will listen to some of our suggestions.

Furthermore, this Bill is quite different in detail and in tone, which is especially disturbing. The tone of this legislation and the remarks that have been made, not by the Minister but by certain other government Members in the last few days, have shown that there is a prejudgment on the part of the Government about who is making the most legitimate claims in this dispute. Yet it is my opinion from the conciliator's report that he is more severe with the companies than the employees.

Some of the details of the Bill, which again related to its tone, were mentioned by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). For instance, workers are to go back to their jobs when so required. What is the meaning of "when so required"? Is it when the company decides it wants them back, or could they decide not to require some people to come back and require others? I hope this wording is only a sign of sloppy drafting rather than deliberately inserting into the legislation a new power for the railways to play havoc with the lives of their employees.

The Bill in its present form provides no guarantee that everyone who went out on strike, believing it was his or her right under the usual circumstances, will even be called back.

However, this afternoon there was a call for return to work, but under quite different circumstances than what I am describing. Some local yokel at the CPR diesel shop at Winnipeg decided to recall the employees at that shop. The employees at the CPR diesel shop who belong to the Canadian Council of Shopcraft Unions are not technically on strike. They were to report to work immediately and therefore be put into the position of having to cross the picket lines of their fellow workers. This created a potential for a very ugly scene but, thanks to the intervention of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who made a few phone calls to people in authority at Canadian Pacific, wisdom prevailed and the decision of the local yokel at the CPR diesel shop at Weston was overruled.

Why can the Minister not agree to the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Churchill that there be an itemization of those matters in dispute placed in the Bill? Why leave open the possibility that during the course of the arbitration the items in dispute will not be those things now being negotiated? Why not ensure that what is in dispute will be the subject of arbitration, rather than creating chaos upon chaos? The Minister should follow the suggestion of the Hon. Member for Churchill that those matters which are in dispute be itemized so that there is no disagreement about what is in dispute.

In his telegram to the railways on Monday ordering the parties to have one last round of negotiations the Minister cited the conciliator's report as the context in which they should be conducting their negotiations. Yet this legislation sets no context in which to proceed. There is no mention of the conciliator's report or any other guidelines or instructions.

I hope the Minister will explain why he left out any reference to the useful context that this report might have provided to the arbitrator in the process that the Minister is setting up. Why did he decide not to have any guidelines whatsoever, or any minimum conditions for that matter?

It has already been pointed out that, unlike the Bill that was passed in 1973, there is no guarantee that there will not be any reduction in wages. There is no guarantee of anything. Workers who are going back to work are being asked to sign a blank cheque and put all their faith in some person who has been given no particular instructions or guidelines and all authority in a piece of legislation in which there are no protections whatsoever. There is no protection against rulings by arbitrators, which may be completely out of line with any sense of justice or what is happening with the railways. So I hope the Minister will take that to heart and consider amendments in that direction.

There are some things that one just cannot understand unless one is close to the issues. What has happened in the railway industry is that there has been a complete breakdown of trust over the last five years to 10 years between labour and management. For many people in the community I come from, in Transcona, the railway they worked for and knew for decades, the railway their parents and their grandparents worked for, as is the case with me, has disappeared. What we have now is a completely different world in which management, for whatever reason—and they will be stimulated to be even more like this as a result of deregulation—is constantly looking for ways to get rid of jobs, to get rid of people.

We see this also in the way in which rules are being enforced. Employees are constantly in a position where they are damned if they keep the rules, because if one kept all the rules set down for operating a railway there is not a boxcar that would move. They are damned if they keep the rules. In fact some of them have actually been subject to harassment by the company for keeping the rules. But by God, if they break one of those rules and an accident occurs, they have to take the rap.

At one time it was understood that employees were in a difficult position with respect to these kinds of things as well as with respect to other situations, but this acknowledgment has completely broken down, and so nowthere is no trust.

Let us take an issue the conciliator addresses but does not understand, that is, the desire of the railways to have trainmen hook up hoses. These hoses comprise the break system on a train. The railways say all they want is some flexibility. When there is no carman available whose job traditionally is to hook up these hoses, they want trainmen to be able to hook them up so they do not have to go halfway across the yard to get a carman to hook up the hoses. They say all they want is flexibility. However, anyone who works for CN now knows full well that that is not the real reason. The real reason the railways want to get permission for trainmen to be able to hook up hoses is that they want to be able to lay off about 50 carmen. That is why they want that flexibility. So there is a built-in dishonesty in the bargaining.

There is a built-in lack of trust because time and time again things which have been asked for on one basis are known to be motivated by something completely different. The houses are a good example. With all due respect to the conciliator, he missed that altogether. For whatever reason, he just did not know the full story behind that request.

Railway workers cannot be expected to continue to work cheerfully or productively if they know that at every turn the company is looking for a way to get rid of them, and if they know that at every turn, in terms of public policy established by this Government, their own federal Government is looking for ways to provide opportunities for American railways to take their jobs away. That is not exactly the kind of thing that provides people with a sense of security, well-being or confidence that there is anyone on the government side who cares about them at all.

There has been some argument about whether we knew the strike was coming. We all knew the strike was coming. We knew it was coming because we knew we had a Government that was unwilling to instruct its Crown corporation, Canadian National Railway, to abandon the kind of concession bargaining in which it was engaged. Because we know that railway workers are human beings, that they have some dignity, that they do not intend to live on their knees, and that there was no way in God's heaven they were going to accept such ridiculous demands, we all knew there was going to be a strike. As long as there were self-respecting railway workers around, there would be a strike. It is on the Government's head, not on the heads of the railway workers, that this strike occurred in the first place. If the Government had two brain cells to rub together, it could have figured out what was going to happen, but it did not. So all the people who are complaining about the effect of the strike on their businesses or whatever, can look at the Government opposite and not anywhere else for someone to blame.

Mr. Redway: Madam Speaker, I was interested in the comments of the Hon. Member with respect to the impact of deregulation as a cause, or one of the causes, for the existing strike at the present time. He stated in fact that deregulation, which will be going into effect on January, 1988, is really the cause of the current strike.

I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain to us why it was that between 1974 and 1984, when there was no deregulation in the country and when the present Government, of course, was not in office, there was a reduction in the total workforce of the railways of some 25,000 people, something like a 29 per cent reduction?

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I would be delighted to tell the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) because there has been an implication here—and the Minister of Transport was basically following the same line—that somehow because there were significant reductions in the railway workforce prior to deregulation, therefore, any argument we make about how deregulation will reduce the numbers even further is somehow illegitimate. That is a complete non sequitur, as far as I am concerned.

Yes, there were significant reductions in the railway workforce prior to 1984 and it did not have anything to do with the deregulation. Big deal. So what? What bearing does that have on my argument that deregulation as such will make an already bad situation worse? The already bad situation we are in with respect to the reductions in the railway workforce has happened because of some factors over which no one had any control. I am quite willing to admit that. The use of hopper cars as against the traditional wooden boxcar, the reduction in the traffic of bulk commodities, the change in the economy from a less resource-based economy to a more service based economy, all had a bearing. However, just because there were legitimate factors involved does not mean we should be silent about the voluntary things that were done.

The things I just mentioned were involuntary. They were things no one could do anything about. But there are things that have caused the rail workforce to be reduced that people could have done something about, things which were a matter of public policy. For instance, the present Government refused to instruct the railways to abandon their policy of renting rolling stock by the thousands from the United States railways which put people out of work in Transcona, Moncton, Point St. Charles and right across this country. The Hon. Member has probably seen those yellow rail boxes on trains. The next time he is stopped by a train, he should count just how many rail boxes are on the train. Those are American cars. They are repaired in America, they are made in America and when it is all over they will go back to America, and every time the Hon. Member counts an American rail box, he can count Canadian jobs gone down the drain because this Government did not have the guts to tell the railways to make their own boxcars here in Canada and to use Canadian-made equipment.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Madam Speaker, we meet here today to deal with the suspension of the nation's vital rail operations which began on August 24, 1987, after many months of bargaining, conciliation and mediation. It is somewhat ironic that it is almost 14 years to the day since the last time the House was called upon to deal with a national rail strike.

I look around in the House and I see the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I am sure that he remembers in 1973 as a new Member of Parliament the violence that went on during that rail strike. I am not naive enough to blame the Liberal Party for the violence that went on. The Liberal Party was in power but it in no way had anything to do with the violence. I blame the unions for the violence at that time. However, I do blame the Liberal Party of the day for the way it handled the strike. It took the Party 14 days before it started to deal with the problem. The Government of today is in charge. It knows that after eight days we are entering a critical period, when economic effects will be felt by the people of the country. People become very restless. We have moved on this, and we have moved substantially. We will settle the situation.

The last 14 years—indeed the last 20 years—have seen vast technological change, innovation and subsequent worker adjustment on the railways. The new competitive environment stemming from national and international forces requires that labour and management seek better ways to adjust to the changed economic circumstances. As has been emphasized by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), this disruption of services has the potential to cause widespread economic loss in national and international trade, to an extent that would endanger the welfare of our nation.

The significance of rail transportation to Canada is reflected in the fact that about one-third of the total freight tonnage in Canada is moved by the rail mode. Many bulk commodities, of course, can only be moved economically by rail. Many manufacturing industries and our resource sector depend heavily upon the rail industry.

Rail passenger traffic continues to play an important role in Canada's passenger transport industry. It, too, is significantly affected. It is the interruption of this vital social and economic communications link that is the subject of my comments today.

Vital services on VIA Rail, GO Transit and the Montreal area commuter system have been disrupted by the withdrawal of operating crews and facilities provided by Canadian National and Canadian Pacific, the major companies involved in the present dispute. It is reported that about 30,000 Toronto area workers who use GO Transit daily and about 25,000 Montreal area commuters will have to seek alternate transport to and from their places of employment.

Let us think about the impact this will have. Tonight, later on, I will be flying to my riding of Mississauga. I have to drive into Toronto later on tonight. I am told that Queen Elizabeth Highway and Highway 401 are completely blocked, bumper-to-bumper. The people of this area are not going to sit at home. They are industrious people who want to get out and go to work, and they are going to work, but at great inconvenience.

The traffic congestion and general disruption to normal work schedules and associated travel can only have negative economic and social consequences for the many individuals and businesses dependent on these services. While alternate travel arrangements are being put in place for the commuters affected, the alternatives have reached the limits of their capacities. The situation in Montreal and Toronto is well beyond being a mere inconvenience. It must be resolved, and it will be resolved.

It was only last year that VIA Rail celebrated the one-hundred-and-fiftieth anniversary of rail passenger service in Canada. VIA Rail, which employs some 6,000 workers in all regions of Canada, and operates 800 trains per week, carried 6,286,000 passengers last year. VIA Rail was established 10 years ago following a government decision to reorganize the rail passenger system and to create a single entity to deliver service to all Canadians.

In that 10-year period thousands of employees were transferred from Canadian National and Canadian Pacific and integrated into VIA operations. Station and maintenance facilities were acquired, while the new company endeavoured to modernize in an effort to retain existing rail travellers and to expand in the highly competitive passenger travel market. It is noteworthy that the transfer of workers from Canadian National and Canadian Pacific was accomplished with a high degree of co-operation between the railway companies and the many unions involved. Unfortunately, these co-operative efforts have been disrupted due to a work stoppage on our major railways.

The Government continues to be dedicated to the important goal of making VIA Rail an effective and efficient transportation system for all Canadians. It is crucial that the current railway strike not jeopardize VIA Rail's future potential in this respect. Canadians must not lose confidence in VIA Rail's ability to provide reliable, uninterrupted service across the country. The historic unifying role of the rail passenger system in Canada must be retained for the benefit of all regions.

I would like to mention a few words about GO Transit. GO Transit carries daily 61,000 passengers to and from work, about 30,000 people. It has been my pleasure many times to meet with these people in GO train stations in Meadowvale, Streetsville, Erindale, Cooksville, Dixie, and others in the riding which I have the honour to represent. The GO trains also travel through Oakville, Clarkson and Port Credit. I know that these people are being very seriously affected. I know that they want to have their mode of transportation returned to them, and we plan to do that.

VIA Rail is making an effort, with the support of many train users and train lovers, to expand its role in the Canadian tourist and general travel industry. It is attempting to tailor and upgrade services for those thousands of Canadians who either prefer to use the train or who, for economic or other reasons, have no other viable alternatives. To many Canadians the passenger train is a vital link that has major significance for their personal lives.

In the interest of maintaining VIA Rail's contribution to this country's rail transportation system, I support Bill C-85, the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act, 1987. This back to work legislation is responding to a serious situation in which the railways and the nine unions involved in the Associated Railway Unions coalition have made every effort, with extensive third-party assistance, to resolve their differences. But they have not succeeded. We believe that moving in five days is the way to go, and I know Canadians support us in that respect.

After the many collective agreements involved terminated on December 31, 1986, the parties engaged in direct negotiations among themselves in an effort to resolve their conflicting demands. As a result of requests under the Canada Labour Code, Part V, to the Minister of Labour for conciliation assistance, a conciliation officer was assigned. The officer's efforts were also unsuccessful.

Subsequently, an outside expert was appointed as a conciliation commissioner to aid the parties in settling the many contentious outstanding issues. When the report of the conciliation commissioner did not succeed in providing the basis for settlement, the Minister of Labour named a mediator to try to bring labour and management together. These efforts, too, ended in an impasse.

• (1810)

On August 24 the Minister of Labour directed his Associate Deputy Minister, Bill Kelly, to meet with the parties in a last-ditch effort to arrange a negotiated settlement. The union workers and railway management know that this Government has done everything possible to reach a settlement. All of these extraordinary efforts have been to no avail.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) discuss the railway worker reductions over the past number of years. A few moments ago, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway) asked a pertinent question on how they could account for the fact that 25,000 railway workers lost their jobs between 1974 and 1984 when our Government was not in power. That is a reduction of 29 per cent, and they are trying to blame it on transport deregulation. That is absolutely ridiculous. The Hon. Member for Papineau was easily annihilated by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who shot down his arguments with great ease.

Unfortunately, several important issues still divide these parties. A national strike has begun with significant economic and social consequences for the country. Swift action is needed to bring this disruptive national rail strike to an end.

I support this Bill which provides a means to resolve the many outstanding issues through final and binding arbitration. The arbitrator will be faced with several extremely difficult and divisive issues involving a means to improve railway productivity within a framework of suitable compensation and job security. This Bill will provide the means to resolve the outstanding issues, and get our railways running again.

In conclusion, I urge Hon. Members to support the Bill. The people of Canada deserve no less than the best rail system that we can provide. This Bill is a crucial component in ensuring that our railways return to full operation as quickly as possible.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): One could not either live in the City of Winnipeg, or be a Member of Parliament from the City of Winnipeg and not realize and understand how important the railways are to Canada, and how very important they are to the people of Winnipeg.

All rail traffic going from western Canada to eastern Canada, and all rail traffic going from eastern Canada to western Canada has to pass through Winnipeg. For many, many years there have been thousands of CPR and CNR railway workers living in Winnipeg. The CPR maintenance shops are located at Weston. The CNR maintenance shops are located at Transcona. Winnipeg is a major centre for all the running trades and the workers who actually operate the trains as they travel both to eastern and western Canada.

When I was elected as a Member of Parliament in 1962, the railway unions represented more than 200,000 workers. Today they represent less than 70,000 workers. That should make it obvious to the most ignorant Member of Parliament that the railway workers of Canada and their unions are not Luddites. They have not opposed modernization, automation, and computerization. They have known for many years that times were changing, and that the changes would mean less employment.

I listened with interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg-Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), because I know that he was correct when he talked about people living in his part of the constituency in Transcona who work for the CNR, whose parents and grandparents worked for the CNR, and who know that their children will not be working for the CNR. Exactly the same situation is true for the CPR workers who live in my constituency. They know that their children are not likely to work for the railways. They would not advise their children to try to work for the railways, because they know what has happened.

Neither the unions nor members of the New Democratic Party have said that all the reductions in the numbers of people who work for the railways are taking place as a result of deregulation. Deregulation has not yet come into effect, as the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) pointed out. It will not go into effect until January, 1988. Deregulation not only gives a message but an instruction to the railways that they have to be more competitive. That means that the railways have to be more mean and tough, because they have no alternative. After all, the railways are responsible for building, financing, and maintaining the railway lines. They are responsible for clearing the railway lines after a snowstorm, and for rebuilding the bridge that may be washed out when there is a flood. The railways have to compete with the trucks which travel on the public highways. Of course, their percentage of the traffic has gone down because it has been increasingly difficult for them to compete with trucks.

What deregulation says to the railways is that they have to be meaner, tougher, and more cost conscious than ever before.

What do you do if you are the railway, especially if you are told that the days of deficits, if they are not gone yet, will be gone soon? You abandon branch lines as quickly as the regulatory authority will permit it. Given the approach of this Government, we will see a quickening of the rate at which branch lines are affected. That will mean a reduced number of railway workers.

I do not know if my Conservative colleagues who represent rural constituencies can follow and understand this, but they should. When the railway worker loses his job because a branch line has been abandoned, the farmer's costs increase to get his grain to the market. Up until now he has delivered his grain to the local elevator, and now he will have to truck it probably 50, 60, or more miles.

We are looking at a continuing reduction in the number of people who work for the railways. We are no longer talking about what has happened up until now, which has been a fairly gradual reduction which the workers, their unions, and the companies could absorb almost in a natural way without too much difficulty.

The CNR has made it clear that in the next few years it expects to reduce its workforce by a quarter. The CNR has always been the good guy and if it is proposing to reduce its workforce by a quarter, we know, and the railway workers know even better than us, what the CPR will do. If the CNR can reduce its workforce by a quarter, we will see the CPR aim to reduce its workforce by a third.

It is not surprising that the workers and the unions tried to get improvements in their job security system. The Minister of Transport says that the railways have a good system, one of the best in the country. I will not dispute that. I do not think the unions will dispute it, but that is what they have had up until now. When they are looking at a proposed planned reduction of the CNR and CPR workforce by one-quarter, then that sort of normal gradual decrease will not continue. What we are going to have are very major disruptions in the lives of workers.

What does it mean when one-quarter of the workforce has to look forward to no longer having jobs? We will probably see workers who started to work for the railway at, say, age 20 who have worked for the railway for 25 years lose their jobs. I ask Members of Parliament, where will the worker who at age 45 or 50 loses his job, a job which was, as compared to most workers in this country, a fairly well paid, get another job? We have no answers for that kind of problem, Mr. Speaker.

Let us think about the problems of the workers who have 20 or 25 years experience and who do not lose their jobs. The reason that many will not lose their jobs is that people, workers in their kind of work in their craft for the railway, with less seniority will lose their jobs first. That is what the union agreements provide for, as they should. What happens to a worker who has a lot of seniority who lives in La Pas, or in Dauphin, Manitoba, one who works on the maintenance crew and is able to keep his job because somebody in Winnipeg with less seniority was laid off? That worker in La Pas or Dauphin, Manitoba, has to move to Winnipeg. What happens when the railway worker who lives in Quebec City in order to keep his job has to move to Montreal? What happens when the worker who lives in Ottawa has to move to Toronto to keep his job? Just think of the disruption to the lives of those workers. Let us think about some of the smaller towns.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has quite a large railway community in the Town of Melville. When the workers in Melville lose their jobs or when, in order to keep their jobs, they have to move to Regina or to Saskatoon, that is a major disruption for them. They are not the only ones who suffer. What about the restaurant where they used to eat; the hardware store where they used to buy the things needed to fix their houses; the store where they used to buy paint and the school where their children used to go to school? We know how many towns have died when the grain elevators and the railway turnaround points disappeared. It is not surprising that the workers and the unions wanted improvements in the provisions in their contracts which guarantee them some protection.

That job security system is no longer going to give them the protection which they need in order to be able to continue to live with some kind of dignity and some kind of decent circumstances. As I say, changes have taken place and are going to continue, but the Government's deregulation policy, the program which will begin January, 1988, will accelerate that process of change in a way which none of us have seen.

Let us talk about some of the things which the railways have done. They have increased their contracting out. After all, if they have to be more efficient and if they have to cut their costs why, for example, would they get their maintenance work on the tracks done by workers who work for the CPR or the CNR? These are people who have belonged to unions for many years, who have been involved in collective bargaining agreements, and have been able to negotiate a relatively good rate of pay. Why would the railways want to continue employing their own staff when they can contract the work out to some small employer? The small employer will hire non-union workers who will work for substantially less. They will not get the benefits of a pension plan or a health and welfare plan. These are the kinds of things which workers were determined to try to protect and improve. We heard the Minister of Transport today argue that deregulation would have no effect at all on employment. We heard him a few days ago answering questions, calmly assuming technological change has to come—and nobody questions that—and saying that really there is nothing one can do about that. But there is, of course, a great deal you can do about it if you have some concern about humanity and about the lives of people. There are all sorts of things which can be done to cushion the change. But this Government, which believes in untrammeled free enterprise, will not think about those kinds of problems.

What is going to happen to the many people who will be laid off, people who for many years have been able to work for a company which they thought would give them employment for their whole working life? They do not know. When we see the direction in which the companies are going and the direction in which the Government is driving the companies to go, we have no answers for them. I believe it was the Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) who suggested in his speech that because we said that we would vote against this Bill that we were intent on prolonging the strike. I have heard that Member make many ridiculous remarks but I don't think I ever heard one which was more stupid than that.

After all, members of our Party agreed that because of the importance of the question we are debating today, because of the tremendously serious effects that a prolonged strike will have, that the House should deal with this Bill through all stages to completion today, no matter how long it takes. The Bill will be completed in this House today and it will go to the Senate tomorrow afternoon at two o'clock. I am certain it will be completed there fairly quickly. Then the strike will be over.

Because we think that there are many defects and faults in this Bill, we propose to move amendments which we believe will improve the Bill, but because we are 99.9 per cent certain that the Government will not accept many and certainly not all of the amendments we think are necessary, we have made it clear that we intend to vote against the Bill. Our voting against the Bill will not delay for one minute the workers going back to work.

We will vote against this Bill because we say that it does not deal fairly or adequately with the problems of the railway workers.

Mr. Crosby: What if you win the vote?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, we will win the vote after the next election because at least 100 of the Members across the way will not be here. When I say 100 of them will not be here, I am being very conservative.

As I indicated, we intend to vote against this Bill, but it will pass through all stages before this day is over.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What a cop-out. This is the Party of principle?

Mr. Orlikow: It is very interesting to hear the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) accuse us of copping out. If there ever was a Member who has forgotten many of the things he said when in Opposition, it is the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I am tempted to ask the Hon. Member to talk more about the inconsistencies of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), but that is not really the issue that is before us.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Name one.

Mr. Murphy: One thing that is interesting is that in 1973, for example, the Tories sought to ensure that there were guaranteed minimums in the legislation. When in Opposition in 1973, Conservatives made amendments, some of which were accepted by the House.

Perhaps I could ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), who was a Member of the House at the time, if he can explain this inconsistency which is being assisted by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I was not a Member of the House in 1973. Perhaps he could explain to me why a Conservative Party in Opposition believed that back to work legislation must contain certain guarantees and protections for workers and why a Conservative Government with a vast majority will not give any guarantees whatsoever in terms of wages, job security or limitations on the arbitrator? It offers no guarantee that the arbitrator look at the conciliation report—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are not very comfortable in this fraudulent position.

Mr. Murphy: It is very curious that the Secretary of State for External Affairs is still rambling on instead of making a speech. Why has the Conservative Party, which fought for minimum guarantees when in Opposition, not given any guarantees at the present time?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for me to explain the thinking of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, but my colleague from Churchill is of course correct. When the Conservatives were in Opposition, they were able to move amendments which would help the workers because they knew on the one hand that it made them look better to the workers involved and on the other hand that their amendments would not pass. Now they are in Government and they are much more conservative now than they were back in 1973.

It seems to me that Conservatives in Government have accepted the Goldwater-Reagan approach to Conservatism: just let the free-enterprise system go all the way, do not put any restraints on it. That was not the way of Sir John A. Macdonald and it certainly was not the way of Mr. Diefenbaker or Mr. Stanfield. However, it is the way of this Conservative Government.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that there were no strings attached to the arbitrator. He outlined some of the problems that might come up through normal changes that will take place as businesses evolve. How would he see the arbitrator's hands being tied by legislation if the arbitrator is to be asked to arbitrate between two bodies? How can the Hon. Member ask companies to make guarantees when they do not have any guarantees as to the amount of business they will have, when the business will take place or at what time of the year they will get it? How can an arbitrator be made to work within those confines?

In labour negotiations, we really want an arbitrator without his hands tied. We want him to be able to bring the two parties together and to arbitrate between them.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member just two illustrations out of many. The rate of inflation is now running at close to 4 per cent a year. The conciliation report recommended increases for the workers of 3 per cent each year over the next two years. That is less than the increased cost of living.

It seems to me that the legislation could very well instruct the arbitrator, as it has on other occasions when railway workers were legislated back to work, that he should begin discussing the wage question with a minimum of 3 per cent in each of the next two years in mind.

The other illustration was referred to by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy). In the bargaining which went on between the employers and the employees, there was complete agreement that when an agreement was reached, it would be in effect for a period of two years. There was not one suggestion, as far as I have been able to find out, that the agreement should be in force for more than two years. This legislation gives the arbitrator the authority to impose a settlement not for two years but for three years. I suggest that that is completely unnecessary and uncalled for.

I would hope that the rate of inflation will not go up, but if the war between Iran and Iraq escalates and if the supply of oil is adversely affected, the price of oil may go up very substantially and that would have an immediate effect on the cost of living. I am not saying that that will happen but it could happen. Therefore, I ask why the legislation gives the arbitrator the right to impose a three-year settlement. Those are just two illustrations of the many defects we believe to be in the Bill.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the Hon. Member's presentation to the House. I understand that on second reading of the Bill, we debate the principle of Bill C-85; that is to say, whether it is right and proper in the circumstances to terminate the strike that has caused such harm across the nation, particularly in Atlantic Canada and especially in the Port of Halifax, or whether we should allow it to continue. I do not mean to give the Hon. Member a lecture. He is well versed in labour law. He knows the right to strike is granted by the Parliament of Canada under appropriate legislation. It does not exist in common law or in the normal course. It has to be granted.

If the Parliament of Canada gave the right to strike under certain conditions, then clearly it is capable of taking the right to strike away when that appears to be in the public interest. The Government believes it is in the public interest in these circumstances to take away the right to strike or modify it in the way it has in this Bill. What I and I am sure everyone wants to know is what is the NDP position on this issue? Do they agree with eliminating or modifying the right to strike in these circumstances in the public interest, or do they believe it ought to continue?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): We need a one-minute answer from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Orlikow: I can give him a one-minute answer. When we agreed this Bill could be debated and passed through all stages, voted on and enacted by this House in one day, we recognized, one, the right of Parliament to do that and, two, the importance of dealing with this strike which has such major adverse effects on all parts of the country.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What a contortion!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): The time for questions and comments has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I consider myself a relatively new Member of the House of Commons of Canada, and I thought the two socialists who made allegations concerning the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) gave us a rather sad spectacle. They attacked his policy, knowing full well that our procedure in the House would prevent him from responding. I think that Canadians—socialists or others—should show respect for one another and refrain from attacking a Canadian statesman who is gaining ever wider recognition on the international scene, especially when they know he cannot defend himself.

If the socialists care to listen to me, during the 10 minutes following my speech they will have an opportunity to question me on what I am about to say, keeping in mind the interests of Canadian generally. I urge you to question me and I will respond. But do not strike at those who cannot speak at this moment. That is the message I wanted to give you.

Mr. Speaker, not unlike most Members here I am very concerned about the striking railway employees in Canada. My concern also stems from the impact this conflict may have on Canadian industry as a whole, on potash workers, softwood lumber workers, coal workers, farm workers, just to name a few. I am sure this is what we have in mind as we seek a solution.

I am also concerned because my native town, Charny in my riding, happens to be one of the major railway centres on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, in the Province of Quebec. And that is where we find a large number of these employees.

I am very sorry we have to introduce back-to-work legislation in the House of Commons. It is not an agreeable task for a Government that, in order to expand the economy, has promised to put the economy on a sound basis and encourage private sector initiative.

Canada's big railway companies fulfil an important role in providing a service to most of our other industries, and any interruption in these services is also a major threat to the well-being of millions of Canadian workers working in those industries. The Government has tabled a measure that is decisive to ensure that the individual rights of the parties to the dispute do not abrogate or diminish the common rights of innocent third parties who have no say in the settlement of this dispute.

Mr. Speaker, we have known similar disputes in other vitally important sectors of the transportation industry that are subject to Division V of the Canada Labour Code. These disputes were also a threat to the national interest. At the time, various groups loudly demanded a major reform of our approach to the collective bargaining process, and invariably, some very well-intentioned people recommended taking away the right to strike or to declare lock-outs from the parties concerned. I say well-intentioned, Mr. Speaker, because these people are usually concerned about the impact of work stoppages on innocent third parties who have no say in settlement of disputes by which they are affected. They may be well-intentioned but I think they generally have a poor understanding of the complexity of labour disputes and the importance of the right to strike and to declare lock-outs as part of the labour relations practice that has developed over the years in Canada, the United States, Western Germany and other major industrialized democracies.

Division V of the Canada Labour Code provides measures to ensure that collective agreements are implemented and provides a comprehensive and flexible mechanism to facilitate the bargaining process.

Mr. Speaker, upon examining the provisions of the Code concerning the settlement of disputes, I was impressed by the flexibility these provisions offer for settling various problems in the collective bargaining field. We cannot expect a single policy or guideline to consistently resolve labour disputes. The flexibility provided under the provisions of the Canada Labour Code relating to the settlement of disputes is truly admirable and reflects one of the most sensible approaches developed over the years in the labour relations field. I feel the Canada Labour Code offers all the flexibility we need in an effective mechanism for settling disputes.

The right to strike or declare lock-outs exists only seven days after the Minister has exhausted every avenue provided by the conciliation process under the Canada Labour Code. Furthermore, the Minister may, at any time, in accordance with Section 195 of the Canada Labour Code, appoint a mediator to assist the parties to a dispute in settling the dispute.

Under Section 171 of the Canada Labour Code, the parties may, at any time before the Conciliation Commissioner or Conciliation Board makes his or its report, agree in writing that the recommendations of the Commissioner or the Board shall be binding on the parties. Briefly, Mr. Speaker, this procedure offers management and the unions all the resources of the conciliation and mediation process, to assist them when negotiations become deadlocked and also leaves them free to make use voluntarily of a mechanism that will help bring about a final settlement of the dispute, a mechanism under which the parties agree to be bound by the recommendations of a Conciliation Commissioner or a Conciliation Board.

Mr. Speaker, the Government has tried to encourage private sector initiative in Canada to a far greater degree than before and to discourage resorting to government assistance to achieve economic and social ends. This attitude with respect to the role of the state gives individuals more responsibilities and, in the field of industrial relations, labour and management should feel some kind of obligation to settle their differences without government intervention.

As a matter of fact, this happens to be the purpose of the conciliation and mediation procedures provided under Part V of the Canada Labour Code: the first responsibility of the parties involved is to negotiate and resolve their conflicts. In certain cases they may need third-party assistance to shed light on complex negotiation proceedings. In this respect, conciliation and mediation procedures have been established to help labour and management achieve their ultimate aim, namely sign a collective agreement.

In that context the role of the state is to make things easier.

Although Canada Labour Code Part V sets the limits of the rights and responsibilities of the opposing parties, such limits obviously include responsibility for solving themselves the differences which come up during collective bargaining talks.

Mr. Speaker, these limits are prerequisite to what we sometimes refer to as free collective bargaining dynamism. In a way, the responsibility of the parties give them the driving force which enables them to seek common grounds, fair and reasonable compromises which reflect all available options, and to convey to their rank and file or to their senior management the outcome of the collective bargaining sessions.

The Labour Code strikes a balance between the rights and obligations of each party to the collective bargaining process. This framework paves the way for and promotes a renewed sentiment of mutual respect without which collective bargaining remains an idling mechanism.

Unfortunately, there are times when, for whatever reason, management and unions forget they have a responsibility to settle their dispute and try to shift that responsibility to a third party, usually the Government.

Mr. Speaker, both management and the unions must be discouraged from showing any inclination to abdicate their responsibilities in this way. We as parliamentarians cannot allow this institution to be transformed into a kind of labour tribunal by people who cannot or will not make use of the collective bargaining process. When the national interest dictates that we must intervene in a labour dispute as is the case today, Parliament must proceed with caution.

We must avoid any solution that would give the impression that one of the parties had an edge because it brought about Parliament's intervention in its dispute. This kind of solution would, in the future, make us vulnerable to pressures from any party or entity trying to achieve, through Parliament, goals it is unable to achieve through the collective bargaining process.

Mr. Speaker, since we are confronted here with a dispute that has truly disastrous consequences for the economy, I feel that the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act is a wise and appropriate solution.

I would urge my hon. friends to adopt the text quickly so that our railway network, which is indispensable to the economy of this country, will be able to start operating again without delay.

• (1850)

[English]

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I listened to part of the Hon. Member's address. Is he prepared to recognize that part of the reason we are here today having this debate on legislation to remove the collective bargaining rights of rail workers is as a direct result of the policy of his Government which witnesses from the rail companies themselves have told the Standing Committee on Transport is forcing them to eliminate jobs, that being deregulation? Is he prepared to recognize that the Conservative Government of Canada has a responsibility for setting the stage that has created the unfortunate situation we are facing today?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I will try, if that is at all possible, to inform my Socialist colleague on both counts. First, he claims that this Government is removing the collective bargaining rights of 45,000 to 50,000 railway workers. Our Government is not, like the Socialist fringe would have us believe, a Government that considers private interests only. Our Government considers the common interests of all Canadians. If potash workers were involved, our colleagues opposite would be talking only about potash workers because they simply cannot bring themselves to imagine a wider perspective of the interests of Canadians. Our Government is protecting the 45,000 railway employees of the Crown corporation and of the other company. Our Government is also preventing tens of thousands of lay-offs among the workers from which this Party illegally collects dues, as Ontario Supreme Court Justice White said in his ruling. My colleague opposite is pushing on his own self-destruct button.

As to the deregulation policy of the Government I represent in this country—the Conservative Government and the Conservative team—they have failed to understand the message conveyed through this policy. They have failed to understand that Canadians now live in an international context, that Canadians are in a much better position to sustain, face and benefit from competition when each and every one of these Canadians is given the means to be productive and aggressive, to open up new businesses. They seem to think that decisions favouring Canadians are made in laboratories. They seem to think that Canadians are devoid of intelligence, that they must blindly follow the dictates of socialist laboratories, of Socialist International gatherings which the leader is so eager to attend every year with a few of his colleagues. We in this Government have faith in the creativity of each Canadian, and this is why we believe that our deregulation policy will make it possible to deliver our goods at lower costs, mainly to the United States, our best economic trading partner, but including as well the products we ship from the Pacific coast to Japan and the Pacific countries. A good many Canadians will find less expensive channels than a laboratory of socialists which can only thwart the development of Canada and drive us into bankruptcy within a few decades.

[English]

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak on Bill C-85, the Maintenance of Railway Operations Act, 1987. It is not a very pleasant duty, however. The pleasure comes from the opportunity to question some of the things contained in the Bill, not from the certainty in my own mind that we have to pass this legislation this evening.

Having said that, I believe very sincerely that this legislation must be passed as quickly as possible because of the loss it is causing to the commerce and industries of the country. This cannot be allowed to drag on. However, there in itself lies a very serious problem. When there are negotiations with the knowledge that back to work legislation will follow, management has a very distinct advantage.

I do not think that has ever been more clear than in the negotiations which have gone on this year. That is very unfortunate. I strongly believe that management did not put its best foot forward in trying to reach an agreement on this. I believe that had it done so, we would have been able to study this legislation with the knowledge that many of the issues now outstanding had been resolved.

What is the future for this type of negotiation? Will this continue? Will negotiations between the railroads and the unions be a formality where all management negotiators will have to do is stay awake long enough to frustrate the mediator, break off negotiations, and have the Government run in with back to work legislation? I would like to think that this will not happen again, that there will be meaningful negotiations in the future. I say that very sincerely because I believe that the railroad worker is the forgotten entity in this legislation. It is even more tragic because I believe the railway workers, particularly Canadian National, have been forgotten for a long time.

• (1900)

Clause 4(b) of the Bill states:

> every employee shall, when so required, forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment with a railway company.

Why do we need the phrase "when so required"? Either these men and women are employees of the railroads or they are not.

Do these words mean that people who are gainfully and steadily employed by the railroads may not be called back to work when the strike is over? Is the Government really aiding and abetting the insecurity that will be the result of this wording? I believe that would be most unfortunate.

The Government has no business putting wording such as this in a Bill to end a strike. The role of the Government is to try to bring both sides together and get the commerce of this country rolling again—

Mr. Mazankowski: That is what we are trying to do.

Mr. MacLellan: —without placing the worker in a detrimental position. The Government must intend to scrap Bill C-87 and bring forward a Bill C-88. Of course, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) remembers my pleadings to him on behalf of railroad workers, particularly in Nova Scotia—

Mr. Mazankowski: And you have pleaded very well.

Mr. MacLellan: Thank you. I am still pleading.

The words "when so required" are really not necessary. Those working with the railroads when this strike began should be working with them when it ends. If there are to be any with lay-offs, then those lay-offs should be justified, and, not take place simply because the railroads were given the option by the Government in this legislation to not call back any more workers than it absolutely had to.

I ask the Government to consider that point because there is already too much unemployment with the railroads and with former CN family companies. These job losses most seriously affect the smaller communities which, in many cases, are one-industry communities. They include small communities in eastern Canada in my area of Nova Scotia and other Atlantic provinces, as well as farming areas of western provinces.

These jobs are important in those areas because they not only provide wages for the employee and his or her family, they provide an economic base for the respective communities in which these employees live. It is important to maintain these services in those communities. The downstream effect of deregulation will be a loss of service and a loss of jobs in many communities. The fact that they will no longer be able to offer railroad service will affect their opportunity to attract new industries.

Clause 6(1) of the Bill states:

> The term of each collective agreement is extended to include the period beginning on January 1, 1987 and ending on December 31, 1988 and may be further extended by the arbitrator to include the period beginning on January 1, 1989 and ending on a day not later than December 31, 1989.

I object to that clause as well. It is not the Government's role to bring a new aspect into the negotiations. I believe that one of the key questions in negotiations would be the term of the agreement. That is for both sides to agree upon and, presumably, negotiations have been going on in that regard. If the parties have not agreed on a term, that is an outstanding issue.

I suggest that it is beyond the scope of the Government's responsibility to ask Members of Parliament to allow the arbitrator to increase the term of this agreement from a two-year agreement to three years. That is beyond what the Government should be trying to achieve with this legislation, and I would ask it to delete that clause.

It is not its role to recommend points of negotiation to the sides in this dispute. It is not our role in Parliament to tell the arbitrator that he should be considering points that are not already being discussed between the parties in this dispute. It sets a very dangerous precedent for the Government to become involved in suggesting to the arbitrator that the term can be extended from two to three years. It represents the thin edge of the wedge, where the Government can then put anything into legislation that it believes the railways should have obtained but, in their knowledge of the situation, chose not to negotiate.

The Bill also includes stiff penalties for non-compliance, including lock-outs and strikes before December 31, 1988. These penalties are between $20,000 and $100,000 a day. There were no penalties in the 1973 legislation with which the former Liberal Government dealt. I believe it is better to leave that question to the arbitrator because there could be very good reasons why these penalties could be more or less than the ones suggested by the Government. It is not the Government's role to suggest the penalties.

I believe Clause 8 will have a great effect on the arrangement that will be achieved once the Bill is passed and the arbitrator has completed his or her task. Clause 8(1) states:

> The Minister shall, after the coming into force of this Part, appoint an arbitrator and refer to the arbitrator all matters relating to the amendment or revision of each collective agreement that, at the time of the appointment, are in dispute between a railway company and a union and the further extension of the term of each collective agreement permitted by subsection 6(1).

Clause 8(2) states:

> The arbitrator has, with such modifications as the circumstances require, all the powers and duties of an arbitrator under section 157 of the Canada Labour Code.

There are no guidelines provided for the arbitrator. There is nothing to compel the arbitrator not to reduce the benefits already held by the workers. There is nothing which would restrict the arbitrator from bringing new items into the negotiations.

• (1910)

I think it is important that the arbitrator has some guidelines, certainly as far as the workers are concerned. There are no legislated increases. In 1973 there were guidelines for the arbitrator. The 1973 legislation as well contained specific instructions for the arbitrator which included the direction to come up with a feasible job security program, not to amend any work rules that would harm workers and to recommend fair wage increases. I do not think it is asking too much to have those guidelines included in this legislation. As I say, we are trying to balance the rights of the workers against the rights and duties of the companies.

The companies already have a very strong advantage because they have had the knowledge that the Government was going to bring in back-to-work legislation, and they may have had some idea of what this back-to-work legislation was going to contain. I do not know that. I am not making any allegations, certainly, but it is a possibility. I do feel, however, that what the Government should be doing is helping the workers, trying to do something to safeguard the workers with respect to this legislation and the role of the arbitrator.

There were no time limits set on the arbitrator in 1973. This legislation sets a 60 day time limit which can be extended only at the Minister's discretion. While it is important and vital that the railways move again because the economies at the extreme ends of our country depend on the railroads, I do not feel we should be blinded in pursuing our goal of bringing the railways back into operation to the rights of workers. Too often that is done. I think we have only to look at the situation which has existed in our country over the last 10 years to see how railways have not only reduced their workforces but I think, to a large extent, reduced the relative position of the workers of the railway companies vis-à-vis other occupations in this country.

Workers for the railroads had every opportunity, for example, for a secure and valid pension plan, but too often railroads did not protect the older workers. For instance, a man who retired at age 65 with what he thought might be a satisfactory pension, found out at age 82 that the railroads had not added anything to his plan and that inflation had eaten away the benefits of that plan and he was really in one of the most unfortunate economic positions in the country. There are a great many workers today in that position. That is one aspect.

Another aspect is that quite often workers' benefits are given when it depends upon the urgency, political or otherwise, of the situation. I would like to mention as an example the situation of the Moncton shops.

I feel the workers of the Moncton shops were treated quite well. I would like to have seen them get jobs, but I thought the benefits that were offered were good benefits. However, a lot of people, particularly workers at CN in Atlantic Canada, although they thought the benefits were very good too, were upset because these benefits were not offered to them.

Take the case of a man who retires, for instance, at age 55. The workers at Moncton were able to take pre-retirement without any penalty at age 55. Other workers who were not working at the Moncton shops and were between age 55 and 60 had to accept a penalty for every year they were below the age of 60 when they retired. That was just because their lay-offs in the downgrading of CN in their area did not receive as much attention as did those at the Moncton shops. I think that is unfortunate. I do not think that should be the case.

I think the treatment should be standard across the country, particularly in small towns where the job is at least as important as it would be in any other area. That person's job should be kept in mind and that person should receive the same treatment as a worker in a larger centre. I hope the Government will take this into consideration and try to do something.

The Government stated in the Budget that it is concerned about the older workers who are unemployed. I think fair treatment with respect to pre-retirement would do an awful lot to help these older workers.

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, we have been asked today to consider Bill C-85 which orders the resumption of work by Canada's railways and provides for a mechanism to determine the final terms of settlement between the parties. It is perhaps obvious, but nevertheless important to point out, that this Bill would not have been necessary had the parties to the railway disputes been capable of meeting their responsibilities under the Canada Labour Code, Part V, by renewing their own collective agreements.

Despite considerable conciliation assistance provided to them by the Government, they were unable to do so without a work stoppage. This work stoppage, principally involving a strike declared by the Associated Railway Unions at midnight on Sunday, August 23, has paralyzed railway transportation and has brought key sectors of the Canadian economy into jeopardy. The Government cannot, and will not, tolerate a shut down of the nation's major transportation system. I am certain I share the sentiments of all Members in recognizing the critical importance to our national economy of the passage of this timely legislation.

As we consider this legislation, we will want to bear in mind that the present dispute is having immediate effects on various sectors of the economy and that decisive action by this House tonight is required under the current circumstances. I want to emphasize to the House, and draw out the particulars of the impact of this railway dispute on the western economy. Indeed, as we consider the legislation before us, we all want to bear in mind its immediate relevance to the grain farmers in the prairie provinces and in other provinces, including Ontario and Quebec.

The Province of Ontario and the Province of Quebec each have within their boundaries substantial acreage of grain production of various types, whether it be wheat, rye, flaxseed or corn. The grain economy in each of these provinces is affected by this railway dispute. In the western economy, the grain producing areas located in the prairie provinces are our richest endowment of domestically produced grain for domestic consumption and for export. The importance of the legislation before us in dealing with the devastating impact threatened by this present rail dispute certainly cannot be over emphasized.

I cannot stress enough the importance of this dispute to small businesses and to the small towns throughout the prairies which rely on the railways to transport grain, potash and other basic commodities that are the income base to the prairies and provide the source of livelihood for thousands of our citizens.

When we think of the western economy, and the vital importance to it of the grain economy, what comes to mind will most likely be the major grain terminal operations at Thunder Bay and the Lakehead and on the West Coast, Vancouver and Prince Rupert. This is as it should be, because it is at these points that the activities of approximately 2,000 primary elevators throughout the Prairies, as well as the trucking and railway transportation industries, are focused.

• (1920)

Thunder Bay and the West Coast ports are the focal points of the industries, as well as the major points at which grain is processed for shipment by water to our export markets, either directly from the West Coast or indirectly from the Lakehead to the numerous elevators. Most of our eastern-bound export grain is stored temporarily in transfer elevators at Montreal, Quebec City, Port-Cartier, and other eastern locations, awaiting shipment to our European markets.

It is this complex infrastructure of grain production and transportation that is affected by the railway dispute, a dispute between private parties which has brought to a halt the movement from the Prairies of more than 7,000 railcars of grain per week and which threatens a devastating blow to the western economy.

I want to make clear to Hon. Members my reasons for supporting this Bill and what I see as its necessity. The conditions under which prairie grain farmers compete in the international grain markets today reflect developments that have unfolded over a number of years. These are developments that have been clearly adverse to the pricing of internationally-traded grain and, consequently, to the dollar return to the farmers and the western economy of each bushel of grain produced.

One of the most significant developments in this regard is the increasing ability of some of Canada's international grain competitors to grow more grain. This has contributed to a growing world surplus and has led to further developments that have had some severe effects on our grain producers. I am referring here to the effect of the world grain surplus on grain prices and to the attempts by major market competitors, especially the United States and the European Economic Community, to expand their share of the world market by the use of export subsidies that have amounted to billions of dollars. The efforts of these countries to export their grain have been nothing short of formidable.

The decline in world prices has made it all the more important that Canada export a larger volume of grain to compensate as much as possible for the weakness in international grain prices. In this regard the crop year ending July 31, 1987 has been a year of success in that, according to the statistics of the Canadian Grain Commission, bulk exports of grain and oilseeds totalled a record high of 30.2 million tonnes, surpassing the previous record attained in 1983-84 of 29.9 million tonnes, and last year's exports of 23.7 million tonnes.

Canada's railway companies and the workers on their networks and in their shops have made a vital contribution toward the attainment of yet another record for the western grain economy. Their achievements need to be recognized. In doing so we must also underscore the necessity to the western economy of uninterrupted rail transportation services. Hundreds of thousands of workers in resource industries, including forest products, coal, potash, grain, as well as the chemical and fertilizer segments of the western economy, face lay-offs as declining sales and a rippling effect throughout the economy are threatened by this rail strike.

We have not had a national rail transportation stoppage in approximately a decade and a half. The stability of collective bargaining negotiations has been a positive factor in our grain export achievements during that period of time.

As I mentioned, western grain farmers are already struggling to survive in an era of collapsing world prices and overproduction. They desperately need the income which comes from a steady sale of the grain they produce. These farmers are vulnerable as well to the loss of markets, the loss of sales, which could result from a prolonged strike.

You know, Mr. Speaker, there is no shortage of grain available in the world. The subsidy war between the U.S. and the European Economic Community already threatens to erode traditional Canadian markets. Any difficulty getting Canadian grain to export ports is an open invitation to Canadian grain customers to turn elsewhere. Canada is a country dependent upon its railways for commerce, and we need action now.

I would now like to talk a little bit about coal in western Canada. In 1985 the coal industry produced a record 60.7 million tonnes, 45 per cent for the export market and 55 per cent for the domestic market. The coal industry has become a direct source of economic activity for several provinces. However, 93 per cent of Canada's reserves of minable coal is located in western Canada, especially in British Columbia and Alberta, with some in southern Saskatchewan. Development of coal deposits depends on many factors, but transportation is the main one.

The Pacific Rim is Canada's largest market zone. In terms of individual countries Japan, South Korea, Brazil, France, Hong Kong and Taiwan are the top six. Western Canada moved 32 million tonnes of coal in the year 1985 to all regions, that is, both domestic and export markets. Our export customers depend upon Canadian coal for its quality, its reliability and its security of supply. We must move the coal.

Tourism is another major industry for Canada. Alberta depends upon its rail service to attract and transport tourists into its two well-known parks. Banff and Jasper are indeed unique mountain park resorts that depend upon tourists for their livelihood. Over four million people visited these recreational areas last year, many via train.

Forestry is a number one industry in the Province of British Columbia, and it is a growing industry in Alberta, especially northern Alberta. The mining industry in central British Columbia and Saskatchewan relies on rail transport, as do all resource industries.

As I said before, because of its size and its geography, Canada is a country which must have rail service. And it must have continued, dependable rail service.

The level of economic activity in the western economy, as in our national economy, is vitally linked to the operation of our railways, as is the necessity of the legislation before us this evening. It is legislation which we must review and debate. I ask all Hon. Members to support Bill C-85 and to give it speedy passage here and now. It is extremely important for all of Canada, especially for western Canada.

• (1930)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, normally I preface my remarks by stating that I am pleased to contribute to a debate on certain legislation. Sometimes I agree with the legislation, sometimes I disagree, and sometimes I wish to see improvements. I must say that tonight it is with very little pleasure that I am required to make comments on Bill C-85, the back-to-work legislation to end the strike, particularly because of the manner in which it is being done.

As a Member of Parliament from Kamloops, British Columbia, a city, and a region, through which both the CN and CP railways pass, and I recognize the value the rail systems plays in my constituency in terms of the employment that is created, and the infrastructure provided for economic development.

Tonight we are dealing with something extremely serious; I think we would all agree, an emergency situation. When the rail transportation system of Canada is paralyzed, a good portion of the economy quickly shudders to a stop. It is unfortunate that in the latter part of August the unions and the two railways involved reached an impasse, and a strike was the result.

Because of the importance of this labour dispute and the fact that it touches the lives of so many Canadians, either directly or indirectly, one might get the impression that labour strife or strikes, or back-to-work legislation in the railways is a common phenomenon which takes place on a regular basis. Such is not the case. We have been blessed with relatively few railway disputes and national strikes. By and large there has been complete labour peace.

For many years labour and management have been able to negotiate their differences at the bargaining table. In the last 35 years there have only been three national rail strikes in Canada. That is a compliment when one considers the size of the operations, the thousands of employees, and the large number of unions involved. It is a compliment to the process of free collective bargaining. It clearly indicates that on balance free collective bargaining functions well. In the last little while such has not been the case.

I think it is important that we identify what we are doing here tonight. The Bill before us needs considerable improvement before I, personally, would feel comfortable in seeing it through to completion. Naturally, we plan to propose many amendments tonight or tomorrow morning as the debate continues. We are committed to being here in our places tonight, in the morning, or during the day, whatever it takes to complete thorough discussions and examination of this Bill and put forward what we consider to be the appropriate amendments.

It is also fair to point out that if we feel it is necessary to debate this issue all night and into the morning, the Senate has not been recalled until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon at which time it will be in a position to begin its stage of debate on Bill C-85, so nothing can proceed beyond that time. We do have ample opportunity to discuss the ways and means of improving this Bill which requires workers to return to work.

I think it is also useful if we ask why this strike occurred. When one looks at the facts, it does not seem to have anything to do with the unions or the companies involved. If we wish to identify the cause of this strike, it has to be the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada and the Conservative Government. I wish to take a few moments to articulate why I believe that to be the case.

We all remember the hours and hours of debate on the transportation Bills that were commonly referred to as the deregulations Bills. The Government decided that it was time to deregulate the transportation sector, and particularly the railways. As those discussions continued it became clear to all people who were knowledgeable in this area that if the Government proceeded with the deregulation Bills the result would be massive lay-offs in the rail transportation industry. No one would dispute that fact. The evidence was clear, namely, the experience of the United States, where they have already gone through deregulation, and where tens of thousands of railway employees were tossed on the scrap heap. Countless witnesses explained that that would happen in Canada if the Government proceeded.

As a matter of fact, it was worse than that. The deregulation Bills introduced by the Government included provisions found nowhere in the entire world. These deregulation clauses are not found in any other jurisdiction. Experienced people came before us, and I remind Members that the president of a railway in the United States came up here and said that if this deregulation goes through it will actually wreck our rail systems. Those are very strong comments. In light of the evidence before us, the Government soldiered on with its ideological commitment to deregulation. With the massive majority of the Government it was able to pass the legislation in the latter part of June.

As officials from CN and CP stated to each of us individually, and certainly collectively in the committees and in the various forums where we received information, this would result in a disaster for the railways, and that they would have to significantly cut back their labour force. The railways felt that on average they would lose $560 million a year. That amount would be knocked off their balance sheets. As the Canadian rail system was put in direct competition with the American rail system and trucking companies, the result would be massive lay-offs; the railways would be forced to cut deep and mean in order to maintain a competitive edge in the transportation market-place.

Who wanted deregulation? The railways and their employees certainly did not. The large shippers did. They got through to our friend and colleague, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and some of his associates, and presumably used their corporate muscle and decided that in the best interests of the country, the rail system, and what has made this country, which is our rail system, that they were going to go ahead and wreak havoc on the critical transportation infrastructure of Canada.

Now that is all history. The Government went ahead, as it said it was committed to do, and it deregulated. The important thing that we should recognize today is that the employees of the railways are the victims of this legislation. Those hundreds and thousands of men and women across the country are no longer employed by our national rail system. The victims of deregulation were the men and women who worked for the rail companies.

I am sure that most Members of Parliament have railways going through their constituencies. We know the rail workers, and know that they are committed, dedicated employees. These people seem to be a lot more closely associated and committed to rail transportation. They have a proud feeling working in this critical transportation sector. Fathers and sons, and sons of sons have worked for the CN or CP. That is a compliment in terms of the commitment shown by these employees to their type of work. How have they been treated? The Minister of Transport with his deregulation said that they were prepared to write off thousands and thousands of railroad employees. They may be victims on the scrap heap, but that is the way it is. That was the view of the Minister of Transport.

One would expect a little more from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux). After all, presumably he is concerned about what happens to labour on our rail systems and elsewhere. One would have thought he would have taken some steps to provide a safety net, so that when thousands and thousands of people lost their jobs the Minister of Labour would have an obligation, a responsibility to ease the pain and do something about the situation.

Some people ask what can be done; what options does the Minister of Labour have? What can we do in collective agreements, not so much in preserving jobs. I think job security is a misnomer. It is really employment security that we are talking about. In other words, if you have worked with a rail company for many, many years and that part of your work is being contracted out or technological change makes it redundant, you do not just take that employee and say " So long, Joe" or, "So long, Mary, you are on the scrap heap, you are on your own. Thank you for 20 years", or five years service or whatever. I think it is time that we showed some sense of compassion, some concern, some interest and took steps to provide some safety mechanisms.

I want to hold up as an example—it is not a perfect one, but it far ahead of where the Minister of Labour is taking us with this legislation—the Ontario Northland Railway. In its agreement with its employees there is a clause, 7(a) which says that anyone with more than seven years' seniority with that railway has guaranteed employment. Ontario Northland does not guarantee that job forever. That would be silly, but it says that after seven years of good employee performance that person is guaranteed employment. If that job is phased out through technological change, the company moves the individual or retrains him for another job within the Ontario Northland Railway. If there is simply no job at that moment for that man or woman with seven years seniority, then that person is put on waiting status through a variety of mechanisms and is able to collect 80 per cent of his or her regular pay until a job comes up in the company. It is done successfully and it is negotiated into the collective agreement.

There is no reason that we cannot do something for our employees. By that I mean CN's employees, the government run railway, and also for those of CP. There is no reason that major corporate railways like that could not have that type of employment security built into the contracts, as opposed to the present treatment, which is to boot out the people, and that is it.

Mr. Crosbie: That is dishonesty.

Mr. Riis: In 1973 when we legislated an end to that rail strike there was a real difference. It was a Liberal minority Government, and I suspect because of that there was a little more sensitivity to the agreement. A number of things are absent in this legislation that were there in 1973, and that is the crux of the matter that we are debating tonight.

We are asked as responsible elected representatives to sign a blank cheque tonight, to buy a pig in a poke. This legislation says that we want you, Member of Parliament, to support legislation that will identify an arbitrator. Will it be Bill Kerkhoff in B.C., Peter Pocklington, or in all fairness, will it be Bob White or Jack Munro? Who will be the arbitrator? It is a very critical situation. It is imperative, since the arbitrator has only 60 days to resolve the issue, that the individual knows the transportation industry inside and out. He or she should be an expert and an individual respected for fairness in judgment; honesty and equity in decision-making. That is important. However, there is no reference to that in this legislation.

What are the guidelines? What is this arbitrator going to do? There is no guideline, no direction, and there is no suggestion. There is no blueprint or strategy. It is just, do whatever you want, Mr. Arbitrator. That is what the law is going to be and that is what the workers and the companies will have to accept. That is silly, Mr. Speaker. Who in their right mind fulfilling a responsible position as a Member of Parliament would support something so open-ended?

For that reason I want to remind the Minister of Labour that back in 1973, when similar legislation was introduced, it had guidelines for the arbitrator clearly laid out, guidelines in terms of what the wage settlement ought to be as well as a whole other set of guidelines. It laid out what were the issues to be resolved. It said, follow the basic recommendations in the conciliator's report. Members of Parliament could at least make a reasoned decision whether or not to support it.

Now we are asked to sign a blank cheque and to have faith in the system or in some individual to impose a reasonable settlement. That is really asking a little bit too much as far as I can see. We are expecting a lot when we say that the arbitrator must resolve this matter within 60 days, although there is a provision where the Minister can extend that time somewhat. We are talking about two major employers, many, many unions and thousands and thousands of employees right across the country. With only 60 days, we will need someone with an incredible amount of knowledge who is able to do an incredible amount of investigation very quickly, and I think that is a bit unrealistic.

There is no reference in Clause 8 to what are the disputed items. The union says that it has identified seven major areas of dispute. That was in the media today. The companies say that they have identified only three areas of dispute. Obviously there is some difficulty as to what is the problem at this point. Again, the legislation should have that included and it should also include something about general wage settlement areas. I know when our amendments as they come forward will suggest a four per cent range. That is the cost of living. In the conciliator's report there was general agreement that something over 3 per cent would be more than reasonable. I do not think anyone would say that the cost of living increase of 4 per cent for the first year is unreasonable. To indicate our good faith as elected representatives we feel that is a reasonable guideline for the arbitrator to pursue. We could go on and on.

Mr. Crosbie: You have.

Mr. Riis: All of the discussions today have been that this is a two-year negotiated settlement. That was the goal. The unions feel comfortable with a two-year settlement—reasonably, at least. The companies thought two years was a reasonable goal, but the legislation says that if the arbitrator wants he can impose a three year contract. Where does that come from, Mr. Speaker? Three years has never been mentioned anywhere in the discussions in the last 18 months. Why three? Is it a reflection of legislation that has been hastily and inappropriately drafted? I guess at this stage of the debate we are talking about the principle of the Bill. We are not going through it clause by clause and I think it would be inappropriate of me to pursue that at this point. We will have ample time later this morning to do that.

I believe it is appropriate that we spend a lot of time today attempting to improve this piece of legislation. I think this back to work legislation is totally inappropriate, completely lacking in any substance. For us to sign this blank cheque, so to speak, would be irresponsible as Members of Parliament. At this point, unless there are significant changes, I, personally, and others in my caucus, will have to oppose the legislation. I am hopeful that sane heads will prevail and that there is a will on the other side of the House to say, "Yes, those are reasoned amendments and suggestions that make a great deal of sense".

Mr. Crosbie: Where are they?

Mr. Riis: They are before us.

Mr. Crosbie: No.

Mr. Riis: Yes, they are.

Mr. Crosbie: I haven't seen a sign of them.

Mr. Riis: Rather than be distracted by my hon. friend, let me say that we hope that we can improve this piece of legislation as the evening wears on and the morning approaches. If not, it will be impossible for us to support legislation of this type.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): Questions or comments? Debate. The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins).

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to take part in the debate today on Bill C-85, particularly as a Member from British Columbia. The situation that we have been faced with over the past week has had a detrimental impact on British Columbia and if allowed to continue would have a devastating impact on our B.C.'s economy.

I want to start by complimenting the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) and his cabinet colleagues for the very prompt, decisive and fair action they have taken to put an end to the railway strike in Canada. That is what the people want the Government to do, to act fairly, decisively and in a timely fashion. That is what they have done on this occasion.

• (1950)

As the Minister and some of my colleagues have said, no one wants to intervene in a labour dispute. One would hope that the regular negotiation process would be successful and that parties to a dispute could find the answers themselves. Obviously, in some cases, as in this case, that has not been possible, despite the best efforts of all parties, so it is essential that the Government intervene and bring in this legislation today, and hopefully by Saturday morning the railways can be running and the freight moving across the country.

We know that 30 per cent of Canada's freight is carried by rail and has therefore been affected by this work stoppage. However, I want to point out the particular importance of rail in British Columbia. In British Columbia, 90 per cent of freight is carried by rail. Considering that fact, one recognizes how important it is that we get the railways back to work.

When thinking of British Columbia, one thinks of resources. Coal comes from eastern British Columbia to the ports and overseas. Potash comes from the Prairies to British Columbia ports by rail. Grain, which is just now coming to harvest, moves by rail to the West Coast and on to foreign ports. All this is totally reliant upon prompt and efficient rail movement.

Of course, lumber is not as totally dependent on the railways, but certainly for some parts of the pulp and paper industry rail is an essential component which enables those commodities to get to market. We talk about essential services. I cannot think of a service more essential to British Columbia's industries than rail transportation.

Over the last few days, I have read some of the commentaries in the Vancouver press and I would like to share these with some of my colleagues so they can recognize the concerns and feelings that exist in British Columbia.

The Vancouver Province ran an editorial two days ago headlined: "A long rail strike can't be allowed". The Vancouver Sun ran this headline: "Coal, timber, grain halt as freight strike starts". Again, The Province had these headlines: "Strike raises anger", and "Shutdown hurts B.C.". Yesterday, the headline read: "All eyes on Ottawa", because it was recognized that the representatives of the people of Canada and of British Columbia would now have to take action.

I do not necessarily always agree with the editorial policies of my local newspapers, but I would like to share a few comments from a particular editorial with my colleagues as I think it does enunciate well the importance of what we are doing here tonight. It reads as follows:

> The Mulroney government really can't wait very long before legislating an end to the national rail strike. This is essentially a strike against the nation and it can't be tolerated more than a few days.
> Either the negotiators must find a voluntary settlement early this week or the government must bring in a back-to-work bill and have the dispute settled by arbitration.
>
> A coast-to-coast transportation system may not be an essential service in the sense that life and limb are threatened. But a rail shutdown is different from any other—
> —if it goes for long without its railway freight system, the national economy will, to a large extent, grind to a halt. The damage from a rail shutdown would affect too many industries, too many communities and too many people for us to allow it to go beyond this week—
>
> The dispute should be sent to an independent arbitrator or arbitration board.

So the story goes. I think that enunciates very well the feeling that it is so important to bring an end to this strike through government intervention.

Indeed, on Monday of this week the Premier of British Columbia called for a legislated end to the labour strike. He indicated that he would be talking to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and he said the following:

> —I will tell him that the country can't afford this strike, not when key industries like wheat, potash, coal and forestry are affected. This is the only means for transporting these products, and I would go so far as to say strikes shouldn't be allowed in the rail sector to begin with—

Let us look at another aspect of the strike. Perhaps it is not as essential, but hundreds of British Columbia travellers are steaming mad because their plans have been derailed by a Canada-wide railway strike. That is a human aspect of the strike of which we are all aware.

There have been indications that a walkout of more than a week would cripple British Columbia because the provincial economy relies heavily on port traffic. I refer to both export and import traffic. The Vancouver ports will become stalled because much of the containerized traffic moves from the ships right onto the rail.

Indeed, we know of the excellent record of the Minister of Labour when earlier this year it was necessary to legislate the longshoremen in British Columbia back to work. What came about as a result of Mr. Weiler's findings was the elimination of the container clause, and that has certainly been a very important benefit to British Columbia. We appreciate that kind of support.

In the nearly four days since the strike began, these are the facts of life. In British Columbia, Westar Mining Limited is facing $10,000-a-day demurrage fees if the railways do not start operating today because it has ships that are due in at Westshore Terminals; it will not have the products to put on them and it will have to pay the penalty because it has already ordered the ships and it is too late to send them back. The Saskatchewan Potash Marketing Agency notified customers that it can no longer guarantee shipments. At least one producer in the province says that it may have to close. The Coal Association of Canada has said that the strike threatens Canada's international reputation as a reliable supplier of coal and petrochemicals. The Alberta Wheat Pool said that Ottawa should get the railways moving first and then deal with the labour issue. The Dow Chemical plant in Fort Saskatchewan, Alberta, could lose $300,000 a day and will have to shut if the strike is prolonged. Ipsco of Regina will be forced to cut back steel production and lay off employees if rail services are disrupted for just a few days. CGTX Inc. of Red Deer, Alberta, a company that repairs railway tank cars, has issued layoff notices to 43 workers and may have to close in two weeks.

It is not only the 48,000 men and women who are directly involved in rail work who are affected, it is all the other men and women in the other industries who are beginning to be affected. Certainly all Hon. Members on all sides of the House agree that we cannot let a strike in the rail services continue. It must be brought to an end.

One of the other issues I feel is very important is reliability of service. Canada and British Columbia are dependent on exports, and our customers expect their products when they are promised. If we cannot deliver, there are a lot of alternative bargains to which they can turn.

We need only look at the example of what happened in Australia over the past few years as it developed a reputation of having strikes and being unreliable in delivering products. That has certainly had a tremendously adverse impact on Australia. We cannot afford to let that happen. We must keep those products, the wheat, the potash, the coal and the lumber, going through those ports. That is another very important aspect of the issue.

What has happened in the process leading up to the legislation we are dealing with today? It has been difficult but I compliment the Minister. I think he made a tremendous effort to achieve a negotiated settlement. In his remarks earlier he indicated that he approved a full range of third party assistance which is available under Part V of the Canada Labour Code. Following direct negotiations between the parties he appointed a conciliation officer in an attempt to assist both the railways and the unions in the resolution of their differences. When that approach was unsuccessful a conciliation commissioner was assigned to the dispute to provide additional assistance in an effort to achieve a mutually satisfactory settlement. When his report was provided to the parties there was a request for mediation assistance and Mr. Carson was appointed by the Minister. Despite his efforts, major differences remained and that blocked the achievement of a new collective agreement.

As a further indication of the commitment of this Government to the collective bargaining process, earlier this week the Minister appointed the Associate Deputy Minister of Labour, Bill Kelly, along with Mr. Carson, to make a final attempt to assist the parties in reaching an accord. We have seen it on television every night. They have been meeting around the clock. Certainly we know Mr. Kelly's tremendous reputation for obtaining settlements in these disputes, but with all his skills and expertise it was still not possible to reach a negotiated settlement. Thus the Minister gave notice to the House that we would have to bring in the legislation we are dealing with today.

There has been some concern expressed from the other side of the House that 60 days is not an adequate time for an arbitrator to come to a settlement. It certainly seems to me that within 60 days an arbitrator would receive the full range of views and should, indeed must, come to a settlement because both the railways and the unions are going to have to know where they stand. I think you need that sort of gun to the back to get things going and get it over with, and I fully support it. Indeed, it is very appropriate that in this legislation the Minister has seen fit to include provisions to deal not only with this particular work stoppage but any other stoppage resulting from the negotiations presently going on between the railways and other unions. We will not have to come back and deal with a different Bill each time.

I also believe it would be very foolish to put conditions on the arbitrator in the sense of telling him what he should be doing. It seems to me an arbitrator has to look at all the facts and proposals and come forward with the best combination. His or her hands should not be tied by this legislation.

I have really been quite amazed by the position of the NDP in this matter. They told us this evening they cannot support the Bill. Yet earlier this evening an NDP Member said that they know the Bill will go through and just because they are opposing it will not mean the railway workers will not go back to work. What hypocrisy. What does that tell the people of Canada? The NDP claim that they could form the next Government of this country. If they did, what would their position be in this situation? Would they order the railway workers back to work or would they let the strike go on with the resulting devastation to the economy? They cannot talk out of both sides of their mouth. The Canadian public will not take it. They are not that stupid. This is only one example of the NDP trying to fool the public and we are going to see many others. I hope they come to their senses and support this Bill and ensure that the railway workers get back to work.

I know there are others who wish to comment on this Bill and we want to get it into Committee of the Whole as quickly as possible. Therefore I will conclude by repeating that there are, unfortunately, situations where collective bargaining fails and the Government, as the defender of the public interest and caretaker of the economy, must intervene and prevent irreparable harm to Canada. This is one of those situations. We all regret the necessity for parliamentary intervention in the collective bargaining process, but on this occasion, and I believe all my colleagues will share this view, we must do it. This in no way detracts from the resolve which I feel must be exhibited to deal with situations in the future, but in this situation we must move quickly to ensure that the Canadian economy proceeds on course and is not crippled.

I therefore urge all Members to give this legislation their full consideration and support, and promptly pass it so that the Senate can deal with it tomorrow. In that way the railways will get back to work and our goods will once again be moving across this country from Newfoundland to British Columbia and into our ports on Saturday morning.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Redway): Questions and comments? Debate.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, first let me reassure the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that the Canadian people are not so stupid as not to be able to understand the position of the NDP.

Mr. Crosbie: You are a mugwump.

Mr. McCurdy: I will repeat that for the understanding of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). The Canadian people are not so stupid as not to understand the position of the NDP. It is unfortunate that the Hon. Member for Capilano does not share that same level of understanding. She has documented the obvious at great length. There is no question in the eyes of the NDP, nor, I think, in the eyes of any Member of this House, that a national railway strike constitutes a severe test, indeed a threat to our economy. There is no doubt that this country cannot bear a strike that would have such severe economic and human consequences as this strike would cause if it were prolonged. Let us dispense with the necessity for elaborating too much on the self-evident.

We are faced with a serious problem. However, when looking at the impact of this strike on the Canadian people and our economy it is necessary to do what the previous speaker failed to do, and that is look at the situation of those who have been driven to strike. I do not recall in my boyhood my father saying, "Oh, God, I am going to have to strike this week. I have been working too long, I want a couple of days off with no pay and no food". I do not remember anyone saying strikes were nice ways of bringing about settlements. I do not think most people on strike enjoy not answering the door when the bill collector calls. Let us make sure we understand that a strike is not an option easily chosen by those who strike. It is the ultimate weapon against economic power that ordinary workers must use as a means of ensuring that there will be seriousness at the collective bargaining table.

Let us also take note of a few additional facts, one being that the workers in the railway industry have looked around and, from time to time, noticed that one of their fellow workers is no longer working with them. Day by day fewer workers are employed in the railway industry. Others have pointed out the changes in transportation and our economy generally that have brought that about. However, the fact is that thousands have found themselves unprotected after years, indeed in many instances after decades of having worked faithfully for the railroads. When it is all over they find that they not do not have jobs, they have no hope of jobs.

I think that most of us who are not trying to make pretty television pictures for an audience in British Columbia understand that there are some severe human issues involved here. One of the most significant human issues, sometimes I think not seen in human terms, is the threat posed by deregulation. One would have to have a very short memory not to recall the consistent warning provided by this side of the House that mimicking the process of deregulation which has occurred in the United States would mean that thousands of workers would lose their jobs in the transportation industry, most particularly in the railway industry.

There are a lot of factors operating in any case as I have previously enumerated. Superimposed upon that now is deregulation. Mr. Speaker, can you think of any rational human being or collectivity of rational human beings who would not try to protect themselves against a situation which is a threat to their very survival, their economic well-being and the well-being of entire families? Can they on the other side of the House not understand that that which is at issue here is fundamental to the lives of a great many people?

The New Democratic Party has said that it is opposed to this legislation. We believe that it is possible to take the human equation into account in an appropriate way, even when faced with the imperative of having to legislate back to work within the context of the overwhelming economic threat which it constitutes.

However, we will vote against this legislation because it is so typically Conservative. It is part of the pattern of this Government when facing a crisis to go to the most extreme measure, divorcing itself as much as possible from the human issues involved. If the Government truly shared, on the one hand, the concern about the need for urgent action and, on the other, the need for humane action, we would be able to sit down as three different political Parties and approach in a reasonable way the drafting of this legislation.

We have prepared amendments for presentation which would make the legislation at least acceptable. We know, of course, that the Government will reject them. We know that the Government will once more abuse its overwhelming majority and impose legislation that will fail to take into account all that should be taken into account in the circumstances. Therefore, we will oppose what surely will be voted on, that is, unamended legislation presented by the Government.

Perhaps the Hon. Member for Capilano does not understand what the New Democratic Party is saying, but I am sure there is sufficient intelligence out there in the real world to understand what I have just said and what the New Democratic Party is saying.

In referring to legislation passed in similar circumstances in 1973 we find guidelines for amendments that might be accepted; guidelines that would make this back-to-work legislation tolerable. The 1973 legislation provided minimum guidelines for wages. A direction to provide an award was given to the arbitrator. After so many months of negotiations and being faced with back to work legislation, the workers would have at least some financial improvement in their situation.

In fact, we have a conciliation report which recommends 3 per cent over each of two years. I do not understand why, if the Government wants a humane piece of legislation, it cannot accept an amendment which would do such a thing. I do not understand how the Canadian people could accept that; the Canadian people are not stupid, and they know what is reasonable and humane and what fails to take into account all sides, as the Government so consistently does.

There is another difference between this legislation and that of 1973. The legislation of 1973 returned the workers to work under the status quo. The legislation now before the House says that operations are supposed to resume forthwith, but with respect to workers going back to work it says that they will do so when so required. This could mean that any number of workers presently on strike may not be called back, in effect could be laid off. That is certainly not fair in a situation where the key issue is job security. We understand why that provision is there, because the Minister of Transport has already declared which side he is on with respect to job security.

Mr. Crosbie: Be honest now.

Mr. McCurdy: The wording "when so required" is a typical Conservative concession to the employer.

This is only a part of a fabric of failure by the Government to deal with issues affecting workers. One might have thought, job security having become such an important issue in Crown corporations generally, that the Government would have thought to adopt a policy with respect to job security and Crown corporations at least as a guideline by which it would proceed. Of course, we have deregulation without any such provision either.

If one asked me why we think it is necessary to respond to this strike in an urgent way while at the same time opposing this legislation—

Mr. Crosbie: You are a mugwump.

Mr. McCurdy: —I would say that we oppose this legislation because the Government so consistently fails to measure the fine aspects of humane responses to critical issues, just as it has done with Bills C-84 and C-55. I say this with great sadness because I had hoped that this would be a place where reasoned discussion would lead to reasonable action. It is not necessary that on every issue we confront one another like two armies across the bloody field.

• (2020)

Mr. Crosbie: You invite it.

Mr. McCurdy: We are faced with a national emergency. It should be possible, in those circumstances, for all three Parties to reach a reasonable consensus and not disregard the reasonable, helpful propositions advanced by the Liberal or New Democratic Parties in an effort to reach a consensus that the whole nation would accept and which would be in the interests of the workers as well as the economy. But no, we go on listening to often ridiculous speeches, stating the obvious—

Mr. Crosbie: As we are now.

Mr. McCurdy: —avoiding the substance. The Minister of Transport awakes from his slumber every now and then to utter something that is as incomprehensible as it is illogical.

There is another element to this legislation that I must say I find completely weird. Even though both sides in this dispute have agreed that a two-year contract is appropriate, right out of the clear blue sky the Government decides to give the arbitrator the power to impose a three-year contract. Madam Speaker, I notice you are picking up the legislation to see if it is really true. I can assure you that it is.

This is a government that does its thinking off the top of its head. The issues in this labour dispute are serious, as I have indicated before. There are many workers who are worried about their futures and families who are worried about their security. They are not asking for hand-outs, they are not asking for a sinecure in the jobs they presently occupy. They are not asking that there be no change in technology. They are asking that if their jobs cannot be maintained, there be jobs or a means available by which they can maintain the security of steady employment.

The railways say that they are themselves having to face deregulation and that they will have to streamline and cut back the number of employees because there will not be enough work to go around. How does that square with the fact that one of the issues in this dispute concerns contracting out? The railways will lay off the workers presently working for them because there is not enough work, yet it will contract out work to other companies. Surely that requires very careful examination in order to understand it even to the slightest degree. It indicates to me that management lacks the kind of recognition and concern for the loyalty of its employees that would allow decent people to find ways to ensure that the concerns of their employees would be met in the form of new security provisions in the contract.

I hope that a good contract for the employer and employees will be gained from all this. I hope the contract will result in a different kind of labour-management relationship which will make it possible for workers and management to plan together for a changed future, and that will recognize the economic as well as the human imperatives.

I hope that within this industry a new beginning might be made in the social democracy of the workplace. Quite frankly, I believe that is what is lacking here. There have been too many confrontations. There are too serious impacts on society whenever a dispute of any significance arises.

I know that the kinds of hope and aspirations that I and my Party have for a new kind of relationship between labour and management cannot possibly be assured by a government that would propose the kind of back to work legislation that is before us, which is so lacking in any effort to go even a little distance in recognizing that there are workers in this dispute as well as management.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, I wish to make a comment because every now and then in this debate we have to try to bring the New Democratic Party down to the ground. We must ask ourselves, if the members of the NDP formed a government what kind of solution would we have to the present situation tonight. Every speaker from the New Democratic Party has taken a stand in this issue. Each of them has argued the case for the union. We heard the Member who just spoke do the exact same thing. What kind of impartiality and even-handed treatment could the people of Canada expect from a New Democratic Party government if they were in the same majority position as we are tonight? They criticize the Government if we even explain, for example, what the provisions of the previous collective agreement are with respect to job security. If we happen to say that these are among the most advanced contracts and provisions in Canada in that area, we are accused of being biased. We are not even supposed to outline the provisions of a collective agreement into which one of our Crown corporations has entered. That is supposed to be nefarious.

However, members of the New Democratic Party get up and speak in a biased manner in favour of one side in this collective bargaining dispute. According to those Members, there is no free collective bargaining system. The only collective bargaining system there can be is one that favours the people whose support they look to for election. They are like the dogs of a Canadian Labour Congress Pavlov; they are the dogs and when that Pavlov says "salivate", that crew over there salivates.

We are not hearing an impartial discussion of how to end this dispute. They want to solve the dispute themselves. They want to be the arbitrators and set the terms. They do not want the matter referred to arbitration. The 33 nattering nabobs—

Mr. Blaikie: Of negativism.

Mr. Crosbie: Not of negativism, of "interferism", interventionism, of partiality. That group of 33 want to determine what the collective agreement should be.

Do they or do they not believe in a collective bargaining system in this country? Do they believe that the NDP have all the wisdom and they are to decide these issues, or do they believe with us and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) that these are matters that should be left to an impartial arbitrator?

Certainly, members of the New Democratic Party are not impartial. They are the most partial people in the House. Every one of them who has risen today has taken a position in this matter. They are for absolute prohibition of contracting out, they are for x, y and z. They support anything for which the unions are asking. Then they have the gall to suggest we should not even expound on what the terms of the old agreement were. They are mugwumps, by the way. They are trying to say they are going to be supportive of having this strike end. At the same time they are trying to do everything they can tonight to prevent it, to frustrate it, to impose their own will not only on this House, where they are a small miserable minority, but on the whole country.

An Hon. Member: Sit down, John.

Mr. Crosbie: I am not sitting down, Madam Speaker, this is the time for comment or question.

Mr. Blaikie: Keep talking, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Let me ask a question of the members of the New Democratic Party. Should we set the terms of the contract in this House? Because there are 210 of us and there are only 33 of you. If that is what you want done, the terms that are set might not be the terms you want. And there are 40 Members of the Liberal Party. So I suggest that you forget your partisan, prejudicial approach to this problem and that you go along with this Bill.

We are leaving it up to an impartial arbitrator. We are not interfering at all. We are not saying what the arbitrator should do. You are trying to bully the arbitrator, pressuring him to find this and that, contracting out, changing this legislation and so on, exerting your insidious pressure in one direction only. If this country ever has a government formed by your party, by God, we can expect no impartiality, no justice, no free collective bargaining system, nothing but mugwumpry and discrimination against everyone you do not agree with. It is a disgrace.

Mr. McCurdy: Well, Madam Speaker, one might get the impression that the Hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) was provoked to anger and supreme irritation. Indeed, became so angry that he resorted back to using phrases he had only used up to 20 or 25 times 10 years ago. I would have expected to have heard something innovative out of such an eloquent mouth, but evidently logic has left him and imagination has left him as well. That is unfortunate because he was so busy sitting there simmering that he obviously missed practically every word I said.

Mr. Crosbie: Answer the question.

Mr. McCurdy: I am having great difficulty understanding, however, how back to work legislation represents an example of free collective bargaining.

Mr. Manly: Crosbie style.

Mr. McCurdy: What I said was that it should be possible, not on the side of labour, but considering the concerns of labour, not on the side of management, but considering the concerns of the industry, that all three parties—all three parties—not confrontationally, not bragging about "my 210 seat majority", but as concerned representatives of the people of Canada, come up with a piece of legislation which would be at least as humane as that brought forward in 1973.

I do not think that one could have alleged that that legislation at that time was written in the offices of Bob White. On the contrary. The Hon. Minister of Transport would have the people of Canada believe that the New Democratic Party stands for only a very narrow portion of the population.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely.

Mr. McCurdy: The Minister can say "absolutely" as much as he wants, but there is a pretty absolute difference between 44 per cent and 23 per cent. I would prefer to stand up with the fishermen, the labourers and the farmers rather than with a Reagan, a Shultz, or anyone else on the other side. Do not tell me I am un-American because I want to be Canadian because that does not fit into the argument either. I am saying that if the Hon. Minister of Transport wants to engage in reasonable discussion about reasonable legislation, we will be pleased to do so. However, we know that neither the Hon. Minister of Transport nor his Government will entertain any amendments that are at all at odds with the preconceived notions on which his legislation has been written. We know on what side he stands because he has already indicated that clearly to this House.

Ms. Mitchell: I would like to ask my colleague a couple of questions which I think are related. He said that the key issue in this dispute is job security, that workers are concerned about jobs. I believe he said that the basic cause goes far beyond the current crisis, back to the government policy of deregulation as a result of which, I believe, it is expected that some 15,000 workers will be displaced, including workers with 25 years' seniority.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolute nonsense.

Ms. Mitchell: Also—and I think the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) should be concerned about this—workers, including women and representatives of minority groups who are employed under the new Employment Equity Program, of course, will be the people who are last hired and first fired.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for his views. What could the Government have done to avoid this crisis which has now resulted in back to work legislation? And if the Conservatives insist on going ahead with the deregulation, which, as a Government, they are going to do as a concession to free trade, does this mean the end to employment equity as it applies to the railways, which of course are under federal jurisdiction?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Upon recognizing the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) again, I would like to point out that there are only two minutes left.

Mr. McCurdy: Our parliamentary Spiro Agnew, who shares other characteristics with his progenitor, would not admit that deregulation is an essential underpinning to the dispute before us now, but let us not forget what deregulation is all about.

Deregulation is essentially about the application of Reaganomics in Canada. When we have a situation in which only recently women were accorded employment equity and they are the last hired and will be the first fired, I do not recall the Minister expressing one iota of concern. Perhaps his is the same level of concern as Spiro Agnew might have expressed. That disturbs members of the New Democratic Party.

Let me tell you, Madam Speaker, that to say that employers and industry, should be concerned about workers is not a challenge for industry or for employers, and to imply anything so ludicrous is a measure of the intelligence of those who would utter such nonsense.

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Speaker, do I have time for another question?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is now over.

Mr. Crosbie: I wonder if the hon. gentleman could give me the answer to this question—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order.

Mr. Crosbie: There is no time? He does not have the answer anyway, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments is over. We need unanimous consent to give the floor back to the Hon. Minister. Do I have unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I just wanted to ask the Hon. Member a question. He is going on about deregulation causing all these problems. What does he think caused the problem between 1974, when there were 107,000 employees in the rail industries in Canada, and 1984, when there were 81,000, a loss of 25,000 jobs? Deregulation was not even in the air in that 10-year period. What does he think caused the loss of those jobs?

Can he not have at least some intellectual honesty and admit that a lot of the problems in the rail industry today are caused by the change in the nature of our transportation system, not by some sinister plot of somebody who is going to deregulate and put people out of work, and all the rest of it. None of us want to see people out of work. You do not have a monopoly on virtue. You do not have a monopoly on the good feelings. You do not have a monopoly on helping people. I have been helping them for 20 years and I am not NDP, nor a Liberal, I am a Conservative. Why do you think you have all the compassion and sympathy? You are a bleeding heart. You are bleeding that stuff, but you have no more of it than I have. I want you to answer that pragmatic question. What happened in those 10 years?

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I did not say the Hon. Minister was devoid of sympathy. He is devoid of sympathetic action.

Miss MacDonald: Answer his question.

Mr. McCurdy: I am surprised that the Minister of Transport does not know why there has been a decrease in employment in the railway industry over the period of time cited.

Mr. Crosbie: I do know.

Mr. McCurdy: I find this absolutely amazing. Why would a man be chosen to be Minister of Transport if he does not know why there has been a change in the distribution of transport among railways, trucking and shipping? If he does not know that there has been a change in technology, and if he does not know any of those things, then he has no business being Minister of Transport.

• (2040)

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I had hoped that we would hear from another member of the Government on this very important matter. I guess my colleagues to the right of me are spending their time watching a past Leader on television rather than being concerned about the legislation that is before us.

I wish to do two things in my contribution to the debate this evening. I wish to outline briefly and in a general way why my Party and I are opposing this legislation. Then I want to give an indication as to the type of amendments that we will bring forward during the committee stage.

An Hon. Member: Let's go ahead, then.

Mr. Angus: The Hon. Member says that we should go ahead and do it. We will. One of the realities with this type of complex legislation—and in a great many ways I do not think the public really appreciates this—is that to understand what it does and then to find ways in which it can be approved takes time. A number of us have been working since eleven o'clock this morning with members of our staff going through the Bill to try to see what can be improved upon to make a bad deal a little bit better for the people whose livelihoods will be affected by it. I wish to remind Hon. Members that it is not the presidents of the railroads or the shareholders—and let's face it, we, the people of Canada, are the shareholders of one of the two major ones—but it is those men and women who work for the Canadian railroads whose whole existence will be affected by this legislation. It will affect their ability to bargain. It will affect their ability to achieve a settlement that is fair. Once this legislation is passed and those people are sent back to work, whether it is tomorrow, Saturday or Sunday, it will be up to a nameless individual to decide on their fate for the next two years. It will be up to that individual to decide whether or not they will have a job, as a result of the type of policies he or she allows the rail companies to put into place with respect to job security, contracting out and technological changes.

We in this Party believe in the principle that the worker has to have a say in matters that affect him or her on the job. It is something which affects them as workers and, of course, it affects their families.

I wish to deal now with the crux of the matter. We heard part of it in the exchange between my colleague, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie). The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) well knows, because of our debates in the House over Freedom to Move, deregulation, and specifically Bills C-18 and C-19, that our profound belief is that a move to a free market system in transportation can only lead to the elimination of vast numbers of jobs within the rail sector. In effect, what will happen is that, as with contracting out, the Government will allow the theft of jobs from one sector to another, allow the elimination of jobs, jobs that are being held today by Canadian men and women, jobs which will not exist in the future.

Deregulation is at the heart of the problem we have before us today. It set the stage for the type of negotiations that the rail companies entered into with their worker representatives. It is fair to say that a great many jobs in the past were not due to deregulation. But it is also fair to say that much of the pressure on the companies is being brought about because of deregulation and the move to a free market system.

Let us remember that this is a very long country. We are not like the United States where everything is in a grid and there are people north, south, east and west. Here it is only east and west, by and large. It is the ribbons of steel that connect the oceans that are the hub, the dream, that have kept this country together. That dream is based on stability, a stability of service. It is one of the things the Government has forgotten about. Service must come first. The economics, although important, must play a secondary role.

I would now like to deal with the general concerns in the Bill. The Bill provides for a two-year imposed extension of the collective agreement, with the arbitrator given an opportunity, or the permission, to extend it to three-years. It is our understanding that at no time during the negotiations was there a three-year contract discussed. Both sides, company and union, were talking two years. We think there is no reason whatsoever that the arbitrator, this sole individual, should be able to add another year on to a collective agreement that has not been achieved through fair collective bargaining but has been imposed upon both sides by an individual who is not the choice of either side but is the choice of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux).

The question of contracting out—in effect, a process that allows a company to take a full-time, well-paying job from an existing employee and give it to someone else's employee—is job stealing. That is what we call it. I can understand the unions, not just in the railway industry but in all other sectors, fighting this type of clause. It undermines our whole fabric. It undermines the consumers who buy goods and food to put on the table for their families. I think that it would be better for the economy if we could retain these jobs within the rail sector, within the unionized sector, to ensure that the money that is needed in our economy continues to circulate.

This ties in with employment security. Hon. Members will note that I said "employment security" and not "job security". There is a difference. What the unions are arguing for is not job security in which an individual keeps the same job throughout his or her career but employment security in which an individual is assured of ongoing employment within the company. Workers are already being required to change jobs and to change locations frequently as companies continue to try to reduce their workforce. There is almost no one now working for the railroads who has not been there for at least eight years.

There are also concerns over centralization. A few years ago the CNR closed the bunkhouses in Atikokan and offered relocation to some of the employees to Winnipeg, which is 200 or 300 miles to the west. House prices in Winnipeg are a great deal different from those in Atikokan. If one is a 50 or 55-year-old married man who owns his own home in Atikokan and finds himself having no choice but to relocate, what he was making in Atikokan can no longer provide him the same type of lifestyle that he would be able to achieve in Winnipeg. The unions are legitimately concerned about the impact of those types of decisions on the people whom they represent.

• (2050)

One of the other items in the Bill is the question of the responsibility of the arbitrator. Basically, the arbitrator has a blank cheque. During the clause by clause debate, we may hear from the Minister on the intentions of his Ministry in regard to instructions to the arbitrator. Clearly, from the manner in which the Bill is written, it is a blank cheque. The arbitrator can decide on what he wishes to deal with which is in dispute, and perhaps ignore the key elements that either side may wish discussed.

In our amendments, we are proposing that we give the arbitrator a shopping list. This is not a unique occurrence; it has happened in other legislation which dealt with back to work matters.

A Bill passed in the first session of the 29th Parliament in 1973 dealt with a work stoppage on the railroad. That Bill included components, it established base increases in wages and criteria which the arbitrator, Mr. Emmett Hall, had to consider.

We are proposing that incorporated into this Bill there be a 4 per cent wage increase effective January 1, 1987. This leaves the second year of the imposed collective agreement to the arbitrator to work out with the two parties. This would ensure that those workers who have been without a collective agreement for some time will have the benefit of a moderate increase in their pay cheques sooner rather than later.

We will also recommend that a list of the key items determined by the parties be included in the Bill, but not necessarily limited to them. I wish to state briefly the types of things that we want to say to the arbitrator through legislation that he must consider and deal with.

The arbitrator must deal with wages, starting rate for new employees, dental plan for new employees, extended vision health care for new employees, shift differentials, medicare allowance, job security benefits, employment security, contracting out, incidental work rules, yard switching limits, coupling—uncoupling hoses, disability pensions, dental plan, extended health care, and vacation. We are not limiting the arbitrator to those issues, because there may be other items that both sides feel it is important to resolve. We want to say to the arbitrator, "This is your starting list. You must not overlook these points because they are deemed to be important to the conclusion of the arbitration and any negotiations that take place".

We also wish to lift a section out of the 1973 legislation which states that the arbitrator shall closely examine the job security demands of the union, and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the principles of attrition.

In that amendment, we are saying that the Bill should have built into it the principle that no individual will lose his or her employment except through attrition. This means, within the terms of the collective agreement, when that individual is ready to retire voluntarily, or leave the workforce. There will not be massive eliminations of jobs, and massive permanent lay-offs of individuals. We did not dream that up. It is in legislation previously enacted by the House several years ago in a matter relating to a work stoppage in the rail industry.

Another amendment that we will put forward deals with an interpretation of the instructions in the legislation to the companies and the unions. There is a section which states, "every employee shall when so required forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment with the railway company".

We are concerned that any of the railroads may use that particular wording to delay calling workers back for their legitimate shifts, or not calling them back at all. We recognize that this legislation will probably clear both Houses before tomorrow, so we are probably talking about a weekend start-up. We understand that the office workers at CN or CP who normally work Monday through Friday will not have to be called back in for Saturday morning, unless there is a legitimate reason to clean up the backlog. We are concerned that the railways will use that particular wording to eliminate jobs, and we want to avoid that situation. We will move the deletion of "when so required".

I have mentioned the two-year contract as opposed to the third-year option. This is a minor wording of a technical nature. It states that collective agreements are between a union and a company. They are not between a company and an employee. A union acts as the agent of the employee through legislation approved by this House. It is designed to protect individual workers in order that they do not find themselves in a position of having to negotiate on an individual basis with their employer, and be subject to all of the whims and other things that we have previously talked about. We are proposing that this be changed so that it is clear that it is between the union and the company, and not the employee.

I come from a transportation town where many railroaders live and work. As the House is aware, many of my constituents work in the grain handling and woods industries. Those industries are interrelated. I do not feel that I would be doing justice to my constituents if I did not stand up in the House and oppose this Bill.

What the Government has proposed is inappropriate. The parties should have been given more time. We could have worked with them. I wish to remind the Minister that this is the third labour dispute that he and I have dealt with in the transportation or grain handling sectors since I became a Member of Parliament in 1984. During the first two disputes he told me that there is a time when one should wait for the two parties to get things off their chest. He said this during the grain handlers' dispute in Thunder Bay, and he said it during the longshoremen's dispute in Vancouver. All of a sudden we do not have to wait these seven days. Bill Kelly was not whispering in his ear and saying, "Hang on, hang on. We have to wait a little longer".

During the discussion on the clauses perhaps the Minister may wish to respond to this. Why is there a difference in this dispute? The parties have been at the table for a long time, they were close to an agreement, and although they broke off negotiations, perhaps they knew that the inevitable would happen. The Minister had been saying, "If you do not get a settlement, we will legislate you back to work". The Minister also said that during the dispute in Thunder Bay. A settlement was reached. It seems that now there is a different set of rules for a national rail strike. I agree that it hurts the economy. More important, I think we have to recognize that unfair treatment of workers by any employer hurts our society. These workers do not want the moon. They just want a fair deal. I would urge the Minister to give due consideration to the amendments to see if he can incorporate at least some of our thoughts and principles. Perhaps the wording we have come up with is not as clear as we would like to have it or as is legally appropriate.

• (2100)

Mr. Murphy: Perhaps.

Mr. Angus: Perhaps. I ask the Minister to consider taking those principles even if he does not agree with the wording, and incorporating them so we can make this Bill a little bit better. Quite frankly, I tend to doubt that that will occur, unfortunately. I, with my colleagues, will vote against this legislation when the appropriate time comes.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, would the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) comment on the inconsistencies in the comments being offered tonight by the Conservatives, particularly by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), who has been critical of the New Democratic Party for wanting to incorporate guidelines and instructions into the legislation? We know full well that in 1973 when the Conservative Party was in opposition it did not feel it was acting inappropriately when it made suggestions and moved amendments and did the very kinds of things which the Minister of Transport finds so heinous now on the part of the New Democrats. Will the Hon. Member comment on that?

Mr. Angus: Madam Speaker, I must say, as somebody who has spent time across from the Tories in the Ontario Legislature a number of years ago, that I was not surprised to see the same kind of inconsistencies when I got here.

Mr. McCurdy: And remember what happened to them.

Mr. Angus: And what will happen to them in a couple of weeks.

Quite frankly, I think the Conservatives have been an opportunistic type of Party, prepared to do one thing in opposition but not prepared to do the same thing in government. I think that is unfortunate. I think the people of Canada feel abused by that type of approach and will surely let the Conservative Party know how they really feel when we have a chance to go to the polls sometime in the next couple of years. That will be the final judgment. Perhaps the Minister of Transport might then be looking for another Party to join. Somehow I do not suspect he will come our way, nor would we want him.

Mr. McCurdy: He can go to the Rhinos.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question is as follows: Mr. Cadieux, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees, be read the second time and referred to Committee of the Whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Cadieux) which was agreed to on the following division:

The Assistant Deputy Chairman (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and, with unanimous consent, the House went into committee thereon, Mrs. Champagne in the Chair.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order! The House is in Committee of the Whole to consider Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On Clause 3—Definitions

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I have a short question for the Minister about the appointment of an arbitrator. I realize we are talking about definitions here, but just the same, I would like to ask the Minister now whether he intends to appoint an arbitrator tomorrow and whom he intends to appoint.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I intend to appoint an arbitrator as soon as possible after the Bill has received Royal Assent. However, before I do, I also intend to make a few enquiries. So I think it would be difficult for me at this stage to say exactly when, tomorrow, in two days or three days and since I want to make a few enquiries, I cannot possibly give the name of the arbitrator.

• (2140)

[English]

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, the Minister, in his response, said that he would consult. Will he affirm that he will be consulting with both the company and the unions about any name he has to put forward?

Mr. Cadieux: I will have consultations. I do not intend to limit myself to various parties or persons. I will gladly accept any suggestions from anyone.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, if a name the Minister puts forward is deemed to be unacceptable by either Party, will the Minister make it clear whether or not he will then not appoint that individual and find someone who is acceptable to both the management and labour side?

Mr. Cadieux: After consultation, Madam Chairman, I will make the appointment, in view of the fact that I am the one who makes the appointments.

Mr. Ouellet: I do not want to belabour the point, if I could use that expression, but certainly the Minister should be much more straightforward in his answer. My colleague has asked whether or not he will consult with the parties. The Minister has indicated he does not want to limit himself to some people but has not said clearly that the parties will be consulted.

I want to be sure that the employees' representative will be consulted. We are not asking that the nominees of the employees be appointed. However, I think it is reasonable to ask that the unions be consulted before an appointment is made. I hope the Minister is in a position to assure us that indeed he will consult the unions.

Second, I want to get the Minister's assurance that, unlike the conciliation commissioner, this time he will appoint someone who has long experience with the railway industry and its activities, and that it will be someone who is an outspoken person, a person well known and accepted in the railway area.

Mr. Cadieux: I think I can say that in the process of consultation, I will be speaking to the parties. I would just like to specify that, in view of the fact that this Act has four parts, and since we are dealing presumably with Part I—and I hope we never have to use Part II, Part III, and Part IV in the process of the immediate consultation, I will presumably be consulting with the leadership of the ARU and the other employer parties.

• (2150)

With respect to the experience and knowledge of the arbitrator, without wanting to get into an argument with my hon. colleague from Papineau on the knowledge or experience of the people who have already served in this particular conflict, I can assure my hon. colleague and this House that I will do my utmost to find the most appropriate person to act as arbitrator. Obviously, their knowledge and experience in the industry is a criterion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 3 carry?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I have an amendment to Clause 3. By the same token, I have amendments to Clauses 12, 21 and 30, which are the equivalent in Parts II, III and IV. I presume we can deal with them all at the same time. I move:

> That Clause 3 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out lines 5 and 6 on page 2 and substituting the following:
> "Railway company who is bound by a collective agree—"

Should I read the other amendments?

[Translation]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: To make things easier I think we should deal with Clause 3 first and once we get to the subsequent clauses we can set them in the proper order one after another. I would suggest this will make it easier for everybody to understand.

Mr. Cadieux: Very well, Madam Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Cadieux: This is a technical amendment required to give more precision to the definition of an "employee". Otherwise, it could be construed from the original formulation that employees hired after December 30, 1986, would not be covered by the benefits of the arbitrator's award.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Cadieux) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 3, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 3, as amended, agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

On Clause 4—Resumption of railway operations

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I have an amendment to this clause.

[English]

I would like to propose the following amendment:

That Bill C-85 be amended at page 2 by striking out lines 21 to 24 and substituting the following therefor:

b) Every employee shall forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment with a railway company.

The purpose of the amendment is very simple. It is to remove three words which appear in the current legislation. The three words are "when so required". It is quite clear on reading the legislation, and a number of employees have seen in these three words the possibility that the railways will never require them or might wait a long time before requiring them. I do not think that is fair. I think, frankly, that as soon as the legislation is to come into force, each railway shall forthwith resume operation of the railway, and every employee shall forthwith resume the duties of the employee's employment. However, to put these words "when so required" creates a certain situation. As one reads the clause, the clause deals with the responsibilities of the railways, on the one hand, to resume their operations and the responsibility of the employees, on the other hand, to resume their work. By putting in the words "when so required" in relation to the employees, we take away from them their decision to obey the law and we put the conditions for them to go back to work not on their decision, but on the decision of the employers.

I certainly appreciate the fear of some employees. In fact, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, was speaking earlier in the House and addressed this very question. He received a phone call in the lobby of the Liberal Opposition from Mr. Steve Jursina, who is the local Chairman of the Brotherhood of Maintenance and of Way Employees in Sydney, Nova Scotia. He was clearly saying, "You are quite right," . He insists on amending Clause 4 to take away these words. He said, "We would certainly be in an impossible position because while we might be willing and ready to go, we might not be required by the employers. Therefore, we might be two, three, four, five days, one week, two weeks at home waiting for the requirements of the companies".

This is unacceptable. I hope that the Minister will accept this amendment to clarify the legislation. This is certainly not what the Minister wants. I do not think the Minister wants to leave to the discretion of the railways the time that the employees shall resume work. I believe the intention of the legislation is to ensure that when this Bill comes into force the railways will resume their operations and the employees will resume their work. Please, make it abundantly clear.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, I also wish to speak to this amendment. We have a similar amendment which would have the same effect which we would have moved if the Hon. Member for Papineau had not introduced his. We see this as an example of two things. First, it is like the amendment that the Minister just made. It is one of the dangers of passing legislation quickly in that an effect which people do not imagine being created can be created. Had there not been someone who caught on to the fact that the previous amendment by the Minister was necessary, we could have passed legislation which would have been very faulty indeed.

In this case we run the same risk. We are giving to the railways the power to call back people when they require them. It does not mention in the clause that they will be called back when they should be called back. It says "when required". There is no definition or explanation. It gives the power to CN and to CP to say: "Well, we are going to call back 8,000 people next week, another 2,000 the week after that, and perhaps we will never call back George".

As I mentioned in my speech on second reading, this clause was not in place in the 1973 legislation. It is strange that a clause of this nature has been thrown in, a clause which obviously gives complete and unlimited power to the railways to determine when someone is required to come back to work. I do not think the Minister can justify that. I am afraid that this is open to abuse and that there is no remedy in law for the Government to do anything if the railways decide not to call back people when they would normally be called back to work.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: What worries me to some extent is that one wrongly assumes that one of the parties will do something which normally is not be done.

[English]

With respect to this particular suggestion, we do not think that it would be appropriate to take out those three words because they serve a very specific purpose. The start-up of operations in a major organization such as a railway is an extremely complex process. Presumably, everyone knows that. Railways operate on a call-out system, which is well known to employees. It is governed by specific provisions in the collective agreement. For example, on the day following passage of this Bill, which, assuming the Bill is passed today and goes through the Senate tomorrow and receives Royal Assent and comes into force on Saturday, there could be 10 yard engines but no boxcars to switch in a particular yard. Only the employees required to perform the work available would be recalled. As volume increases, additional employees would be called in, in accordance with the seniority procedures contained in the collective agreement. Therefore we believe that the wording is absolutely necessary for the intent of the legislation.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I am not pleased by the answer of the Minister. I want him to realize that I have in my hand a copy of a bulletin that has been posted throughout the Mountain Region. It states:

> Your union has declared a strike effective 0001 hours—on 24th August 1987—at the completion of the strike you will be recalled when your services are required—

The bulletin is signed by J. G. Smith, Superintendent, Alberta South Division. At the bottom of the bulletin it states:

> Post this notice in one or more places at each struck work location and deliver to as many employees as possible prior to 2359 hours Aug. 23rd, 1987—

This is a message sent by the employer to the employees. It uses exactly the same wording that we have in the legislation, that is, "when required". I am troubled by this because I believe that the Minister of Labour is using the vocabulary of the company. In other words, we have a strike, the Government decides to impose back to work legislation, and the Government is inspired in its back to work legislation by one party, that is, the railways. I do not think it is correct. I certainly do not believe that it is correct that the employees shall go back to work only when the companies decide that they should go back. This is legislation which must apply to both the railways and to the employees. It should be equally applicable to both parties.

I do not like legislation which seems to favour so brutally one party over another. I hope the Minister will review with his officials this situation and accept our amendment, which would also have been introduced by our colleagues in the New Democratic Party. I think both opposition Parties believe this element of unfairness to the employees should not be contained in the legislation.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I too want to enter into the debate on this clause. I know that the Minister is listening. Perhaps the wording produced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, or the wording of our amendment is not the answer. Perhaps the Minister is prepared to take some time with his officials to find wording that will allow a reasonable return in terms of a normal start-up while at the same time preventing any possible abuses by the railroads. If the Minister is prepared to do that, then I suggest that we might want to stand this clause to allow his officials time to put some wording together that will meet the concerns expressed by the Hon. Member for Papineau, the Hon. Member for Churchill and myself, as well as the people who will be actively involved in the start-up process and who are very actively worried about the railroads using this particular phraseology as a way to further reduce their workforce and, in effect, use the legislation as a loophole. If the Minister is prepared to take a further look at that clause, I am sure that we would all wish to give him that time and would agree to stand Clause 4 while that is occurring.

Mr. MacLellan: I am looking at the complementary Bill that was passed in 1973. Perhaps it would aid us to review the wording that was used since presumably the intention was the same in 1973 that we wish to put forward this evening. At that time, the Bill that was presented to the House of Commons did not use words that we on this side of the House find offensive. As was stated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, the situation has not changed. When the strike ends, we want the operation of the railroads and the service of the employees to continue as before as soon as possible in order to get the commerce moving.

It is generally believed that when the railroads operate, people will return to work. We are using here words that have not been used before in back to work legislation. When words are used that have not been used before in similar situations that existed in the past, then you are deemed to be changing the meaning. I can only assume that the words "when so required" which are put into this Bill by the Government is changing the meaning.

Mr. Cadieux: First of all, I wish to express my deep concern, which was hopefully not a direct accusation from my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau when he suggested that I purposely used language which may have been used by the employer in this case. I can assure the Hon. Member that, contrary to a suggestion made by my colleague from Churchill, I have not spoken to the parties with respect to this particular legislation.

On the other hand, I presume that I cannot be held responsible for language that perhaps that particular employer saw somewhere else. I agree with the Hon. Members who have just spoken that this particular language was not in the legislation of 1973.

I would ask Hon. Members to refer to Bill C-24 which was passed in November, and in particular Clause 3(b). That language has been used before in similar circumstances. With the permission of the Chair, I will read that Clause:

> 3. On the coming into force of this Act,
> (b) every person who is ordinarily employed in longshoring or related operations at a port on the west coast of Canada and who, on December 30, 1985, was bound by the collective agreement to which this Act applies shall, when so required, return forthwith to the duties of his employment.

Mr. Ouellet: Because the Minister of Labour made a mistake in 1985, he does not have to repeat it now.

Mr. Cadieux: First of all, it is 1986, and perhaps I do not wish to repeat the mistake of 1973.

Mr. MacLellan: Regardless of what the legislation stated in 1986, we are talking about a railway strike and the attempt to pass back to work legislation. I am afraid with what has happened in the railroads, particularly as a result of deregulation, and the lay-offs that have occurred in the smaller communities, that this will be seen as an excuse by the railroads to cut back the workforces that have already been severely pruned.

That is not the role of the Government. I would hope it is not the intention of the Government to aid and abet the railroads in doing that. I would hope that the Government would not give them any incentive to do that type of thing. I would hope that it would be the wish of the Government to have the workforce in at least the same numbers as they were prior to the stoppage of the operations of the railroads.

Mr. Angus: If I may, I wish to direct a question to the Minister.

If it is deemed by one of the parties, i.e., one of the unions, that a railway company is doing what we warned that it may, does the Minister have the power within this Bill to ensure that the railway company brings back those workers immediately, or does he have that power elsewhere under the various Acts in order that there is the type of protection that we are seeking?

Mr. Cadieux: With respect to power, as everyone knows, the collective agreement is continued. Under that particular agreement there are very specific grievance procedures that will be available, assuming such a situation would occur.

With respect to the intent that we are trying to place upon the employer, it is certainly not the intention of this Minister to help either party. The intent of this Minister is in the public interest of Canada and returning the rail operations to what they were before. That is specifically what this piece of legislation intends to do.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I should like to read to the Minister a general provision included in the 1973 legislation concerning the return to work. I should like to draw his attention and read Section 14.1 of Part IV of the act which the then Liberal Government had sanctioned on September 1, 1973.

This is how Section 14.1 reads:

> Forthwith upon the coming into force of this Act,
> (a) every railway company to which any Part of this Act applies shall call back to work every employee of the railway company who has been on strike or has been laid off as a consequence of any strike that has ceased to be valid by reason of the coming into force of this Act; and (b) no such employee shall be laid off or again be laid off by any such railway company as a consequence of any such strike.

This specific provision concerning layoffs was in addition to the obligation found in Section 4 pursuant to which the railway companies were to resume operation of the railway forthwith, but they were also compelled to recall all employees forthwith. How is it that in this instance the Minister leaves the companies free to recall the employees—only when they so require—and to let hundreds of other employees stand idle for days and perhaps even weeks before calling them back to work, and probably lay off a few, because there is no general provision concerning layoffs like in the legislation of 1973?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, of course I appreciate the suggestions made by my hon. friend which refer to legislation passed in 1973. Since 1973 there have been, unfortunately, other Bills that had to be passed by various Parliaments to put an end to labour disputes like this one and like the one in 1986, and I am thinking of Bill C-24 in particular.

I am satisfied with the intent of Bill C-24, where the parties behaved as I believe they will behave when this clause in the Bill before the House today is adopted. Personally, I think the present wording satisfactorily reflects the intent of the legislator.

Mr. Ouellet: Is the Minister telling us that the wording of his proposed legislation is such that he is convinced the railway companies will quickly call their employees back to work?

If that does not happen, is the Minister prepared to exercise his authority and even to instruct the arbitrator he will appoint to ensure that the railway companies do not abuse the three words we find in the text as it is now, and is he prepared to ensure that the railway companies take speedy action to protect the railway employees jobs and their right to work?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I am convinced and I hope that all parties, employers as well as employees and unions, will observe the legislation. I believe the intent of this legislation is to have operations resume in a part of the transportation industry that is of crucial importance to Canadians. I am satisfied the legislation reflects that intent. I would not want to prejudge either party, but I am sure that on the basis of our experience, including C-24 where there was no abuse, and considering that these three words were in the legislation at the time, I don't think there will be any abuse this time either.

• (2220)

[English]

Mr. Young: Madam Chairman, I have been going over those words also. I listened when the Minister said a few moments ago that the purpose of the legislation would not interfere with the terms of the collective agreement. In other words, the terms and provisions of the collective agreement would continue until a new agreement was struck.

The clause reads:

> (b) every employee shall, when so required, forthwith resume the duties of that employee's employment with a railway company.

If the employer decides that a specific job has to be filled by a specific employee, say as of Monday morning, does this phrase mean that the recall provisions under the terms of the collective agreement that would apply as those employees are being recalled, that would normally apply in a recall situation, do not apply in this case because of this specific phrase in the legislation? Does the legislation supersede the provisions of the collective agreement? That certainly is the way it reads here.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, any employee who is not recalled according to his rights under the collective agreement obviously has the right to grieve and pursue his case or grievance to arbitration, as provided for by the collective agreement.

Mr. Young: That may very well be so, Madam Chairman, but it seems to me that our job is to be able to make it as simple as possible, and not difficult. I would not like to hear an employer say, "If you don't like how we have recalled you, you have the right to file a grievance under the collective agreement and go through to arbitration". That is a lengthy process and very costly to both the employer and the union. If the Minister's officials would give us the guarantee that this clause does not mean that the collective agreement would be superseded by this language then perhaps it might be satisfactory. To give me a response that if the employee does not like what the employer does that he or she can file a grievance, in light of the language that the employer has in his hand under this legislation, the Minister might want to rethink that because he could be creating more problems than he is trying to resolve.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, the last thing I want to do is create problems for anybody. I appreciate the comment of my hon. colleague. He said in reference to an arbitration procedure that it is costly for both parties, not just one. Therefore, I do not see any interest on one or the other, or both, to create some arbitration process which is costly to both parties. I am of the opinion that the collective agreement will continue and that all the procedures under the collective agreement are there and will stay there. Therefore, the grievance procedure, should there be an abuse, is there to be exercised.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, unfortunately, the reality of what has been happening in recent years is entirely contrary to what the Minister suggests. Most employers, particularly employers such as the two railway companies, which are very large and powerful, have been taking a much tougher attitude to disputes that arise between contract negotiations. They have insisted on carrying the provisions of the process for settling disputes from the shop floor and the foreman right through to the end where arbitration is required. Unions in recent years have been paying tens of thousands of dollars. This occurred infrequently in earlier years. As the economy has become tougher, employers have become much more aggressive. It is nice to have the assurances of the Minister, but as long as the words are in this Bill I can foresee trouble.

We had some trouble in Winnipeg today when a zealous, enthusiastic middle management official sent out a call to workers in shopcraft who were laid off. Because of the strike they were recalled and ordered to report for work within an hour, or as soon as possible, which would have meant crossing the picket line. Fortunately, calls to the head of the company alerted them and a stop to that directive was ordered. That is just the kind of thing which can happen. Despite the assurances of the Minister, I can foresee difficulties and I see no reason why that clause cannot be amended to protect against any misuse.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I just want to give this one more kick, if I can. I do not think the Minister realizes the seriousness of the potential excess that could occur. As my friend from Papineau has said, the words "when so required" inject an intent on the part of the company to bring the workers back whenever it wants, and in fact, the Bill does not really refer to lay-offs in any particular way as did the 1973 Act which said in Section 14.1 the following:

> Forthwith upon the coming into force of this Act,
>
> (a) every railway company to which any Part of this Act applies shall call back to work every employee of the railway company who has been on strike or has been laid off as a consequence of any strike that has ceased to be valid by reason of the coming into force of this Act; and
> (b) no such employee shall be laid off or again be laid off by any such railway company as a consequence of any such strike.

There is a gap here which I find offensive to the workers. Adding that to the fact that the back to work legislation was very much in the minds of the companies when the negotiations were taking place, I find that there should be more consideration placed on the side of the workers in the interpretation of this Bill. I find that the position of the worker has been very much neglected.

• (2230)

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I appreciate the concerns of the Hon. Member who just spoke and I also regret the difficulties that perhaps occurred in Winnipeg today. The only thing I can say is that Bill C-24 which we passed in November of 1986 contained the same language.

I do not agree with playing with the intentions of the parties. The purpose of this particular legislation is to put an end to this strike, to bring the employees back to their jobs and to have the transportation system rolling again. The intent is also to extend the collective agreement. All the safeguards are there and I think the legislation is very clear on that subject.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, let me return to the Bill that dealt with the longshoremen and compare it with the 1973 Bill which dealt with the railways. I am not so sure that those Bills can be compared because of the work environment on the docks versus the work environment on the rails.

The wording may have been applicable to the longshoremen on the West Coast. I assume that it is easier to schedule work there because it is based on traditions, the availability of cargo, location, as well as the fact that there are fewer workplaces. The wording was safer in that situation. There was less chance of abuse. As well, there had not to my recollection been a real downsizing problem in that industry.

Because there are so many different employee groups and occupations within the rail system, there is a much greater potential for abuse by the companies. I just wanted to add that information because I think it is important to the debate we are having today.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, I think the Minister has a problem with realizing what the labour dispute was all about. It was about job security. The wording the Minister has chosen for this clause creates a problem because the whole issue is job security. People wanted guarantees against further lay-offs. This wording in the legislation is making it easier for there to be more lay-offs in an unofficial way. The company simply does not bring the employees back and that is exactly what the Bill says.

We will find in every riding in which there are rail workers that some will not be called back for a long period of time. Some may not get called back at all. If the intent of this legislation is to restore the workers back to the workplace in the same situation that they were in before the strike commenced, then this clause goes against that very intent.

If I hear of someone who was not called back, I will say to the Minister: "Look what you have done, you have allowed CN and CP to do that to the people in The Pas, Transcona, Kamloops, Yorkton and every other community where this has happened". This clause gives the employer an undue extra power which it would not have had if this clause was not worded this way. It only exists because there was a labour dispute, so it is completely unjustified and we know it will result in fewer people working than would be working if this clause was not there.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairman, I would like to add my voice to the concerns expressed by my colleagues and most recently by the Hon. Member for Churchill. I had an opportunity to speak with people who are on strike in Winnipeg and I found that this is one of the clauses that concerns them the most. They are concerned that it does not call for a return to the status quo. It does give the legislation a possible interpretation which is quite frightening if it were to be used in a malicious way by the railways. Given the lack of trust between labour and management in the railways now, I think there is good reason for workers to be afraid that the company might use this clause as a way to get away with things it would not otherwise be able to get away with.

The Minister of Transport made a big deal earlier in the day about impartiality, about the Government not wanting to appear to prejudice the arbitration in any way. In order to do that, it is important that the status quo remain as a result of the back to work legislation. The Minister needs to consider that this particular provision in the Bill does not maintain the status quo. Not only does it prejudice the status quo but it prejudices the relationship that exists between labour and management at the railways. It offers new possibilities and powers to the railways, powers that the Minister has no business giving to them under this particular back to work legislation.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I do not want to repeat what I have been saying for the past 20 minutes at least. I believe the language represents specifically what the reality is. It is the language that was used in Bill C-24 of November of 1986. It worked well at that time and I think it will work well again. The collective agreement is extended, the mechanisms are there and the parties will have the opportunity to discuss job security before the arbitrator.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Can the Minister give us the assurance that this clause does not give the railways the right not to recall their employees?

[English]

Mr. Cadieux: As I indicated at the beginning of this discussion, the start-up of a major organization like a railway is complex. The railways operate on a call-out system. Therefore, my interpretation is that the railways will call back employees—

Mr. Blaikie: They don't have a call-out system at Transcona.

Mr. Cadieux: I usually listen to others when they speak. I would appreciate the same courtesy. The railways will call back employees at the speed required to deal with the resumed volumes of traffic, and to my knowledge, that is what was done in the Vancouver ports situation.

• (2240)

Mr. Ouellet: I accept the words of the Minister, but the question I asked is very simple. If the Minister tells me yes, then every employee has reason to be fearful. If the Minister is able to stand up and say no, that ends the discussion.

The question I asked in French, and I will repeat it in English because it is fundamental, is this: Does Clause 4 give the railways the right not to call back employees? If you are saying it does not, that settles the question. If you are not sure, that is why the employees are so fearful. Is it yes or is it no? If it is no, there is no problem and we will go to another clause.

It is a very simple question. Are you giving the companies the right not to call back employees?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I believe that upon the adoption of this legislation and it coming into force, for instance if in Montreal there are 20 trains of boxcars, they will call 20 crews. If there are 10, they will call 10. That is my understanding of the legislation. The collective agreement specifically deals with that.

Mr. Young: Madam Chairman, I want to ask one simple question and I will try and keep it simple. If as the Minister says the terms of the collective agreement prevail and the recall provisions provide for the orderly recall of employees, why do you need that language in the legislation? If the collective agreement is what we are operating under, why do we have to add additional language in this clause? Why not let the parties who have negotiated these recall rights, over many years presumably, and they know the business much better than you or I do, allow the collective agreement to determine how employees are recalled to work? Why do you need that line of language in there at all?

Mr. Cadieux: It is very simple. It is because the collective agreement came to an end, there has been a strike, and we have to recall them back to work.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairman, the Minister uses the example of the running trades as if that is all that happens on the railway. He talks about 20 trains that need to go out of the yard and 20 crews are called in. We are talking about thousands of workers at the back shop in Transcona and in other places, people who maintain track, people who are employed in various crafts which the various unions represent. It is extremely simple-minded for the Minister to get up here and pretend that all he is talking about is calling crews for trains.

We are talking about people, for example, in Transcona who work Monday to Friday. They are not called in depending on traffic. They have permanent jobs at the Transcona shops from Monday to Friday.

Is the Minister prepared to get up and say this particular language does not give the railways the right not to call people back to work in that sort of back shop situation, or in any kind of situation where they are not on call, not on a spare board, not called out as the number of trains going out of a yard might dictate? Perhaps if he can make that distinction and stop trying to pretend the only people who work on the railway are train crews, maybe we can make some progress.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I was under the impression I was giving an example, but I suppose it could be extended to say that the employer will recall all the employees necessary.

Mr. Ouellet: Necessary?

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, we are back to trying to clarify words. The Minister said "recall all the employees necessary". What do you consider necessary for operating the railroad?

Perhaps we can try it from the other direction. What is there in the Act to prohibit a railroad from laying off an employee as a result of this strike? The 1973 legislation said that every railway company to which any part of the Act applied shall call back to work every employee who is on strike or laid off as a consequence of any strike which ceases to be valid by reason of the coming into force of that legislation. There is no assurance that every employee is going to be called back and those words that are in the legislation only heighten the ambiguity and concern that all workers must feel in reading this back to work legislation.

Mr. Cadieux: I believe, Madam Chairman, that the employers are going to recall the people as the operations start and as volume increases. Obviously there was a work stoppage. One of the reasons we are acting so quickly is to limit the impact of that work stoppage. I believe the language of this particular clause precisely specifies that the parties will recall the employees as the operations progress.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, my question relates to the example used by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill. What is the Minister going to do if people who normally work Monday to Friday are not called back? This clause is so discretionary that CN or CP can decide they really do not want 100 people in the shop anymore. This is a good day, just bring in 75 because we have this power, thanks to the Minister of Labour. That is what he has done. Do not tell us that the collective agreement covers it. It does not because of the wording of the legislation we have in front of us right now. If CN or CP decides not to call those people back, there is absolutely no protection because of the wording in this Bill.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I simply do not agree again with the arguments of my hon. friend. I believe this language, which has been used in the past, has not been abused and I will not speculate on things that may or may not occur in the future.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, the Minister said this clause has not been abused in the past. Precisely. It has not been abused by either side. If that is true, and I am sure we believe correctly that the railway workers are law-abiding citizens and that once this Bill is passed through all stages, and I am sure that by tomorrow at supper time it will have passed not only this House but the Senate, the workers will go back to work as the legislation requires. If that is true, and I am sure it is, then why do we need these words?

The Minister has pointed out, as have other Members, that the whole question of who works and when is covered in the collective agreements between the unions and the two employers. As my colleague from Winnipeg—Birds Hill has pointed out, only a relatively small percentage of the entire labour force are on call, those being the people who actually operate the trains. The vast majority of workers work regular shifts and there is no reason for them to be covered by this kind of restriction. Unless there is reason to believe that some of the people will ignore the call to work, I see absolutely no reason for this provision.

I hope that the Minister is correct that no official in the company will misuse the power which the clause, as now worded, gives them. However, we have had experience, as the Minister knows. The Assistant Deputy Minister knows much more about these matters than do any of us. There is a good deal of ill feeling and we cannot hide that fact. It could be that some official, without authority of senior management, would misuse the power which he or she would have under the provisions of this clause. I see no useful purpose for it and join those who are urging the Minister to accept the amendment.

Mr. Cadieux: As I have already indicated, the employees required as soon as the legislation comes into force will be recalled. As volume and operations increase additional employees will be called in. That is why the words are there. I think they are very clear.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I think the Minister is being obstinate for no reason at all. I sympathize because he is a young Minister and he is anxious to do the right thing, but he has to depend on the advice he is given. And I am not sure that in his instance he is getting the right kind of advice. I think the Minister should realize that Clause 4 is a neutral clause that should not give any more to the employer than it does to the employee. Clause 4 concerns the resumption of railway services.

In the first paragraph, the clause orders the railways companies to resume forthwith operation of railway services. And the second paragraph orders employees to resume their duties forthwith. That is how things stand. This is not a clause that is biased towards one or the other group. It is a clause that says: We have passed legislation so that you, the railways, will resume services and you, the employees, will resume your duties.

I wish the Minister would make his officials listen to reason if they are incapable of understanding the facts, or otherwise, he should take the advice he was given earlier by one our colleagues which was to suspend the debate on this clause. We will proceed with the subsequent clauses and get back to this one a little later after giving it further thought, because the fact is, this clause must be neutral. It should say only two things: Railways shall resume their services, and the employees shall go back to work. But that is not what it says. The employees are told to resume their duties but only when so required. And that is unnecessary. That is not necessary at all.

Of course we are not going to see 5,000 railway employees rushing back to their jobs tomorrow at midnight. They will resume their duties in a normal way as circumstances dictate.

But the inclusion of the words "when so required" in the legislation means that the decision is no longer theirs but that of the employer.

Really, the Minister should face facts and realize that by insisting on these words he is putting the future of these employees in the hands of the employer. This clause, which must be a neutral provision directing the companies to do their duty, that is respect for the law on the part of both employer and employee, this clause is no longer neutral because these words leave the fate of the employees in the hands of the employer, to the whims of the employer. These words should not be there.

[English]

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, what the Minister suggests, that it is a question of bringing the operation of the railroads back to normal operations following the work stoppage, is not alluded to in Clause 4. It says "when so required". It does not say "when so required in relation to bringing the operation of the railroads back to full complement". It does not allude to that at all. There is nothing in the Bill which says there are not to be any lay-offs.

Bill C-85 is a means for the railroads not to call back workers who worked for them prior to the work stoppage. There is nothing here to make the railroads accountable for why those people are not being brought back. They need only say that these people are not required. There is no accountability to the Government, the workers, or anyone. They need only say that they are not required.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, Clause 4 has two paragraphs. Paragraph (a) specifies that the railroad operations must start again and that each railway company shall forthwith begin operations. The operations will resume gradually and the recall will be done gradually as required by the resumption of the operations. I think it is fairly clear and it has been used before.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Ouellet) negatived: Yeas, 16; Nays, 31.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 4 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 4 agreed to. On Clause 5:—Obligations of Unions

• (2300)

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I want a clarification from the Minister. Clause 5(2) states:

> No railway company or officer or representative of a railway company shall
>
> (a) in any manner impede any employee from complying with paragraph 4(b); or
> (b) discharge or in any other manner discipline, or authorize or direct the discharge or discipline of, any employee by reason of that employee's having been on strike before the coming into force of this Part.

I want to be sure that this clause covers all the employees. I understand that while the employees were in a legal strike position, and the media indicated that the employees were in a legal strike position, it appeared that the union negotiation teams had not really authorized the employees to start their legal strike and some of them apparently jumped the gun a little early.

I think whoever did it, did so in good faith. They watched the news and thought that they were in a legal position to strike. In some areas of the country they probably began their strike, technically speaking, a little early. I want to be sure that the company will not take advantage of this to discipline some of these employees who, in good faith, thought they were in a legal position to strike and began their strike a little too early.

Can the Minister assure me that this point will be covered and full protection will be given to all employees, absolutely all, whether or not they started their strike a little earlier than others?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, Clause 5(2)(b) applies to the employees who are covered by this particular part, which is Part 1. Although the leadership of the union perhaps had not given the word that they should go on strike, the ones who have acquired the legal right to strike are covered by this particular clause and section.

Mr. Ouellet: Will you assure me that there will be no discipline of these people? Will no one be disciplined because of that?

Mr. Cadieux: That is specifically my understanding of what the clause says. It reads:

> No railway company or officer or representative of a railway company shall
>
> (a) in any manner impede any employee from complying with paragraph 4(b); or—

The ones covered by this particular legislation. It goes on:

> (b) discharge or in any other manner discipline, or authorize or direct the discharge or discipline of, any employee by reason of that employee's having been on strike before the coming into force of this Part.

Clause 5 agreed to.

Shall Clause 6 carry? On Clause 6:—Extension of Collective Agreements

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I would like to move an amendment to Clause 6. The Member for Portneuf does not seem to enjoy the amendment we are introducing. We are introducing an amendment on behalf of many thousands of railway workers who have some fear that this collective agreement might impair their role in the railways in the future. Certainly I will take all the time I need to try to improve this legislation on behalf of employees. If the Member for Portneuf does not like it, so be it. He can go to sleep if he wants, but there are a lot of employees who are not sleeping tonight because they are very concerned about this legislation. They certainly want us to look at it very carefully and try to ensure that they are fully protected.

Therefore, I move:

> That Bill C-85, be amended by striking out lines 15 to 22 on page 3 and substituting the following therefor:
> "6(1)(a) The terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this Part applies are amended forthwith by entering into the collective agreement of a lump sum payment of $500 to each employee immediately following the coming into force of this Act.
> (b) The term of each collective agreement as amended by this Part is extended to include the period beginning on January 1, 1987 and ending on December 31, 1988.

The purpose of this amendment is twofold. First, as I was saying earlier in the debate on second reading, it is quite clear that there has been a lot of uneasiness on the part of the workers because of a very long and frustrating negotiation process. The workers were hoping that through this collective agreement they would get a fair deal.

We are aware that previous collective agreements with VIA Rail employees arrived at 3 per cent for the first year and 3 per cent for the second year. It might be justifiable and acceptable with VIA Rail. That is a company which is almost bankrupt and is certainly having all kinds of difficulties, and not generating the passenger support that it was hoping to get under this new Conservative Government.

Mr. Hawkes: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The Member opposite has moved a motion and begun a discussion. I believe the intent of the amendment would be to expend further government funds, at least the way it was worded. What he read does not specify clearly who indeed would pay the $500. May we have a ruling as to whether the amendment, as worded, is appropriate to what we do in the Parliament of Canada? Is the member of the Opposition suggesting that the taxpayers of this country come up with $500 for each worker? Is that the intent of the motion and, if so, is that a motion that would be accepted? If it is not acceptable, then I suggest it is inappropriate to allow the Member to speak to the motion.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair did hesitate before accepting this amendment, as the Hon. Member for Calgary West has suggested. The question was asked around the Table, as to who would have to pay that amount of money. Because of the way the amendment is written, in referring to the collective agreement, the Chair decided that the amendment as proposed by the Member for Papineau meant that the railway companies would pay that amount, not the Government of Canada directly and that is why the amendment was accepted and is being put before the committee for debate.

• (2310)

Mr. Ouellet: Thank you, Madam Chairman, I appreciate your ruling. I just want to remind the Hon. Member that if he had a little information about the current negotiations, he would know that the union, which was originally asking for 5 per cent, has lowered its request to 4 per cent. Management was offering a 1.5 per cent increase in 1988, plus a lump sum payment of $500 in 1987. So this is the $500 lump sum payment the management has already offered that I am referring to.

So in the spirit of good-will, to bring these workers back to work, when the management has already said it is ready to give them the $500, why not do so? Let us give them the $500 and see what the arbitrator can do in terms of the collective agreement for the rest of the period, deciding in his wisdom what would be a fair settlement. I believe that every time we have to legislate people back to work we are infringing to a certain degree on their rights and are creating in the labour relations environment some uneasiness and difficulties. The ideal situation is when one has a collective agreement that has been negotiated and agreed upon by the parties.

Unfortunately, when an outside party, in this case the Government, the Minister of Labour, must move in and introduce legislation to force the parties to accept a binding arbitration and at the same time force the employers, in this case, to resume the railway services and the employees to resume their work, we are putting on them the necessity to go back to work, and indeed this return to work might not be as happy as it would have been had they received what they wanted through the negotiation process.

Therefore, I think it is important, especially in light of the deregulation environment we are now facing, with this great fear of job loss, the fear of major change in the operation of the railways, the potential curtailment of services, of rail line abandonment in many parts of the country, certainly it would be wise and appropriate, to allow at the beginning this $500 lump sum payment to be given to each employee upon their return to work.

I am not inventing it. Six major issues have been discussed in this rail strike. One of the issues is obviously the wage package. A $500 lump sum payment was put on the table by the management, and I think it should be given immediately to the employees while the arbitrator, appointed by the Minister, looks at the rest of the wage package.

In relation to the second paragraph of my amendment, it is quite clear that the unions and management were dealing with a two-year collective agreement. They were discussing in good faith a two-year collective agreement. All of a sudden, coming from nowhere—and I do not know why—the Minister is possibly giving the option to the arbitrator to extend this two-year collective agreement to a three-year collective agreement. I think we should not change the rules of the game after it has started. We are now looking at legislation to bring the employees back to work because they were not successful in reaching a collective agreement with the employers. However, both the employer and the employees were working on a two-year collective agreement. That is what they were negotiating. It is too bad the negotiations failed. We regret that. But surely that does not give the right to the Minister to change the period of the collective agreement. This legislation should refer exclusively to what was discussed, which was a two-year collective agreement, and the arbitrator should not be given this additional option of one year.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairman, I want to begin by agreeing with at least half of what the Hon. Member for Papineau said with respect to the bizarre provision in this Bill which will give the arbitrator the power to write a three-year collective agreement as opposed to a two-year collective agreement. We also intend to move an amendment which affects that provision, and more will be said about that later.

I want to comment, if I might, on the amendment put by the Hon. Member for Papineau with respect to a $500 lump sum payment, or what is called a "signing bonus". We talk about bizarre notions. Here we are going to have a signing bonus for an unsigning back to work legislation. It seems to me what is happening is that the Liberals are trying to have it both ways.

Mr. Orlikow: That is not unusual.

Mr. Blaikie: That is not unusual, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North says. They are voting for the back to work legislation and hoping that if perhaps they suggested this $500 lump sum payment, they would be forgiven by railroaders across Canada for voting with the Government to send them back to work under the iniquitous conditions which are provided for in this particular Bill.

I say to the Liberals that I do not think railroaders can be bought off that easily. I do not think they are going to forget for $500 that the Liberals voted with the Government to impose this iniquitous piece of back to work legislation upon them.

I also suggest to the Liberals that they think twice—everyone would—before accepting the $500. That is hard to be against. But the fact is that one could certainly argue that what the Liberals have done here—and in a sense this is consistent with their voting for the back to work legislation—is to take a company view of this matter, because it was part and parcel of the company's offer to the union, this $500 lump sum payment. The Hon. Member for Papineau acknowledged that this was first suggested by the company. To suggest that this is in some way a kind of neutral gesture of good-will and would not prejudice the process which would follow the passage of this Bill, and to entrench into the very back to work legislation something suggested by the company is something about which I think Liberal Members ought to think twice.

My final point, at least on this occasion, is this. Without wanting to sound as if one were against people who certainly are entitled to an increase in their income, one should be very wary of proposals by Liberals which are designed to cover the fact that they have voted with the Government on this iniquitous piece of back to work legislation.

• (2320)

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Chairman, in regard to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Papineau, I do not know where the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill gets his analysis of the situation.

Mr. Blaikie: From watching Liberals for eight years.

Mr. MacLellan: Just because the company recommended it does not mean to say that the workers are not entitled to $500. I think it is past the Hon. Member's bedtime. I think he is a little off kilter.

Mr. Gauthier: He is out to lunch, anyway, most of the time.

Mr. MacLellan: With respect to the second part on the term of the agreement, here we have a two-year agreement proposed and negotiated by both parties. It was something to which they agreed. The Government is now trying to extend it to a three-year period. The Government has been saying throughout this confrontation and this strike that it was between the union and the management. The Government is now imposing a longer term. It is not a party to the collective agreement. The Government is setting a very dangerous precedent here in back to work legislation by taking something that has been agreed to by the two parties in the negotiations and ignoring it and bringing in a proposal of its own.

I hope that the Government will not pursue this, that it will abide by the two-year agreement that has been agreed to by both parties. I am sure the Minister could consult Mr. Kelly on this issue. Mr. Kelly has more experience in conciliation and in mediation than does the hon. gentleman. I find this to be a very dangerous precedent. I hope that the Government will not pursue it and will agree to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Papineau.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to repeat the criticism of the amendment made by the Liberal Party which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, has already put forward. But I would like the Minister to explain this clause of the Bill which gives the person who will settle this dispute the right to extend the agreement which he will impose for three years.

Here we have a Government in which the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Transport in the House, and I think the Prime Minister outside the House on many occasions, have said that they really did not want to bring in legislation, that they really wanted the employer and the employees to settle their differences through the normal course of collective bargaining. That did not work, unfortunately, which is why we are dealing with this Bill. However, there was never any suggestion, as far as I can tell, certainly not in public, and certainly not in the discussions between management and the unions, that the agreement should be for any period longer than two years. That being the case, it is one of the few things which the employers and the employees did not disagree about.

So I find it passing strange, to put it very mildly, that we have in this Bill a clause which gives to the person who will settle this matter the right to extend to three years the length of the agreement which he or she will impose. I would certainly like to get from the Minister of Labour an explanation for what I consider to be a very dangerous intrusion on the collective bargaining rights of both the employer and the employee.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Chairman, I will not take long. However, I am always moved to speak in the Chamber and in committee when I find what I consider to be hypocrisy. We have had an example of two Members from each of the opposition Parties saying, "We are for the working man. We represent the working man". The working man, if one listens to them, does not need choice. "We will tie the arbitrator's hands," say the Liberals. "We will take $500 and give it to everyone and then the arbitrator or the mediator has less room to come to conclusions," which may indeed be beneficial to the people who work for the railroads.

Are Members opposite concerned as a major issue that there be a signing bonus of $500? Nothing I have read in the paper suggests that that is a major concern of the people in the railways. Their major concern is job security, technology, and change. There is some fear out there, as we move into a different kind of world.

Mr. Orlikow: So where did the three years come from?

Mr. Hawkes: We are saying, "Let us give the mediator the maximum freedom. Let us not settle this on the floor of the House of Commons as to what is best for all the parts of that union. Let us let the mediator study this situation and produce a plan that will ensure a stable working environment for whatever length of time makes sense".

Mr. Riis: You don't know what you are talking about.

Mr. Blaikie: It's not a mediator, it's an arbitrator.

Mr. Hawkes: That will work on behalf of those people who work in those situations. That will ensure some stability for the economy of western Canada and other parts of the country. Perhaps the mediator will say that the term of two years is appropriate because that is the best that his wisdom can determine.

Mr. Riis: Arbitrator!

Mr. Hawkes: Arbitrator, excuse me. Maybe he can create a better situation for the transportation of the country and the workers of the country if he is given an extra year. We surely do not preclude the collective process. If it had worked, it would have been signed for three years, or four or ten. There were certainly discussions about two years. But this Party stands for common sense solutions, for choice for individuals. It would be very inappropriate for the House to accept this amendment and bind the hands of that arbitrator who we are sure will act with wisdom in the best interests of the whole country and in the best interests of the railroads.

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with the first part of the amendment to start with, and I will come back to explain the second part.

With respect to the $500 cash payment suggested by the Hon. Member for Papineau, in the current dispute the conciliation commissioner remarked on the inter-relatedness of a number of the issues and on the pattern already set by settlements on the ONR and VIA Rail, and that in order to permit maximum flexibility for the arbitrator who will be appointed to the railway disputes the Government has left the matter of wages to be determined as part of his consideration of all the issues to be resolved. Consequently, we will not agree to that part of the amendment.

With respect to the third year, if I may call it that, of the collective agreement, I agree with most of what has been said. We are talking about a two-year agreement. With respect to where the third year comes from, I would just like to point out that, notwithstanding the fact that, as I have said, we were talking of the two-year agreement ending on December 31, 1988, one must recall that the collective agreements expired some seven and a half months ago and that by the time the arbitrator completes his work, fully one-half of this extended agreement may have already elapsed. It may well be that the parties themselves, during the course of the arbitration, may decide that they wish a longer agreement.

• (2330)

If we look at Part V, Section 160(2) of the Canada Labour Code and Clause 10 of this Bill, it prohibits parties from amending the terms of their collective agreement. In order to provide for this contingency in particular, the Government has provided the arbitrator with the power to extend the agreement for an additional year. That is the reasoning for this additional year.

I understand that the Hon. Member for Churchill may have an additional amendment with respect to this particular clause. I would be pleased to discuss that after we have dealt with this particular amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Ouellet) negatived: Yeas, 2; Nays, 35.

Mr. Murphy: I have a further amendment to Clause 6. I move:

That Clause 6 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out line 18 on page 3 and substituting the following:

"December 31, 1988 and, with the consent of the parties thereto, may be further"

If I may explain the amendment, Madam Chairperson, the Minister indicated a few moments ago that this amendment will be acceptable to all Members of the House. Earlier at second reading we expressed a concern with the fact that this legislation allowed the arbitrator to impose a three-year collective agreement, if the arbitrator chose to do so. At that time we pointed out that in negotiations both parties, as long ago as October, 1986, agreed that it would be a two-year agreement. We cannot understand, and we cannot accept an imposed three-year agreement which only the arbitrator may accept.

The purpose of the amendment is that the arbitrator can go for a three year agreement, especially if the arbitration process takes a long time. The arbitrator can only have a three-year agreement if both parties agree to it. We believe that that is acceptable. It certainly allows for the fact that the arbitration may take a long time. We recognize that the issues in the rail dispute are not easy issues to settle. We certainly did not want to have a situation where workers who thought they were negotiating for a two-year agreement found out that the arbitrator was going to impose a three-year agreement.

I am sure it is acceptable to the Government that, if we have the consent of the two parties to the negotiations, then we could go to a three-year agreement, but certainly we would not do so otherwise.

Mr. Cadieux: As I have already indicated, I agree that the parties were talking about a two-year collective agreement. Already seven and a half months have expired and the process may take a little longer. The arbitrator, with the parties, may choose to extend the agreement by one year. My interpretation at the time, and still is, is that it would not be done without the consent of the parties. Consequently, I welcome that particular amendment, and we would agree to it.

Amendment (Mr. Murphy) agreed to.

Clause 6, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

[Translation]

On Clause 8—Arbitration

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan has the floor—

The Chair sees very well the surprised look of the Hon. Member for Papineau. The Chair has been advised that there are two amendments to Clause 8, and the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan would come before the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for Papineau. This is why the Chair has recognized the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

[English]

Mr. Angus: I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended at line 13, page 4, after the words "each collective agreement that", deleting the rest of Section 8(1) and substituting for it the following:

"either party may say are at dispute. The matters referred to the arbitrator shall include, but not be limited to the following:

1. Wages
2. Starting Rate for New Employees
3. Dental Plan for New Employees
4. Extended Health Vision Care for New Employees

5. Shift Differentials

6. Medicare Allowance

7. Job Security Benefits

8. Employment Security

9. Contracting Out

10. Incidental Work Rule

11. Yard Switching Limits

12. Coupling/uncoupling Hoses

13. Disability Pensions

14. Dental Plan

15. Extended Health Care

16. Vacation"

The intention of this particular amendment is to provide some clear direction to the arbitrator, no matter who he or she may be, that the 16 items that I listed must be considered by the arbitrator in the pursuit of the work. It is not limited to those 16 items, but it ensures that at the very least those 16 items must be dealt with, not only by the arbitrator but by the two parties. To a certain extent, it parallels the 1973 legislation which provided a specific direction to the arbitrator to consider some aspects.

• (2340)

We believe it is important that that direction be given, that it just not be left up to the whim of the arbitrator to pick from here or there. As we all know, the arbitrator, no matter who he or she may be, may come with some biases. There is no such thing as a truly neutral person. Not even in this House do we find a truly neutral person, amazing as it seems. This will give the individual specific direction to say, "Okay, I have to deal with wages. I have to settle that one. I have to deal with the whole question of starting rates. I have to deal with employment security". Those must not get lost in the shuffle. I would hope that because we have said, "not to be limited to the following" that the direction is broad enough and it allows the arbitrator the full power the Minister wishes to give him. Without limiting that power and without limiting the issues with which the arbitrator can deal, it does say that you have to deal with these 16 at the minimum, plus, one would assume, any other items that either party feels are a matter of dispute. It must be part of an over-all package that will enter into a collective agreement that will come at the end of this process.

I hope that the Minister is willing to accept this suggestion. Perhaps he may have a couple of other items on the checklist that he would like to add. It would be interesting to hear his response.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, with respect to this particular amendment there have been some discussions a little earlier with the opposition critics. If we take the text of Clause 8 as it reads now, more particularly in the French version at line 15 where the word différend is used, and obviously the same word in —the word "dispute" has the same sense as in Part V of the Canada Labour Code because of Clause 2 of this Bill, so that Section 107(1) specifies that this word means a dispute about which notice may be given the Minister pursuant to Section 163. All points which are the subject of this notice of "dispute" will necessarily be examined and will be subject to arbitration, they will be submitted to the arbitrator once he has been appointed.

[Translation]

[English]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I do not think that the answer of the Minister is adequate to meet the fear expressed by the Member who just moved this amendment. The reason he moved this amendment was to be absolutely sure that the arbitrator will look at all of the aspects of the collective agreement. He is listing 16 items because he believes that none of them have been agreed to by the parties and they are still in dispute. The precaution in this amendment is justified by a press release which was issued today, August 27, by the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. In part, it reads:

> The following statement was issued by Canadian National Railways and CP Rail following the breakoff of negotiations in Hull.
> "Failure to obtain a negotiated settlement after coming so close to agreement is a bitter disappointment.
> "The railways were encouraged by the progress being made with the help of federal mediation officers. All but a few issues had been settled for the most part when the talks were broken off in Montreal on Sunday.

If it is the feeling of the railways that all but a few issues have been settled, then the arbitrator is not going to look at many things. It would not be appropriate that the views of the railways be taken literally. In the course of negotiations, clearly both parties are putting things on the table. They are making offers and sometimes they agree to some clause, but they agree to these clauses on the condition that they will get an agreement on other clauses. If agreement is not reached on the other issues, then the previous agreement does not hold. There is a give and take. Sometimes parties will agree on some matters with the understanding that they will get something in return later in the bargaining process. But if the negotiations break down and the collective agreement is not signed, the earlier agreement no longer holds. I hope the Minister realizes this and will give us the assurance that the arbitrator is going to look at every aspect of the collective agreement, irrespective of earlier potential agreements on some aspect of the collective agreement.

I have been told that in fact no articles have been signed or initialled by the parties. There is maybe only the CN pension that has been agreed to by the parties. I hope it is clear. I would like to have the assurance of the Minister that the arbitrator will look at everything in the collective agreement.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I appreciate the Minister holding back for a moment. I think we need further clarification of his response to me. Is there a document that the arbitrator will be able to go to to get his or her checklist? Is that what the Minister was saying in French? Perhaps the translation did not make it clear enough. It is important we understand that so that we know if there is a complete document that can be referred to as the shopping list for his instructions.

Mr. Cadieux: Yes, Madam Chairman, there is perhaps not one document, there may be one or two, but they are called "Notice to Bargain". I can give the assurance that I will indicate to the arbitrator, whoever he or she may be, that all the issues will have to be looked at. I am also of the opinion that there may be a difference of interpretation at this moment on what may or may not have been settled or agreed upon during the process of the negotiation. As all Members know, some tentative agreement on certain issues was perhaps given in view of a global agreement which never came. I believe very strongly that the arbitrator will look at all the issues and will render an arbitration decision on all the issues.

• (2350)

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived: yeas, 8; nays, 31.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: For the same reason as was enunciated earlier, I will give the floor to the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I appreciate your eyesight tonight. I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended by:

At line 18, page 4, adding the following Section:

8(2) The arbitrator shall closely examine the job security demands of the union and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the principles of attrition."

This amendment is a very important one. It parallels the 1973 legislation which was passed by this House. It ensures that there will be no lay-offs and that if there are to be job reductions, they are done in a way that would not hurt any individual through the loss of a job. It ensures that it is done at a voluntary level, either by early retirement and early retirement buy-outs or through voluntary relocation of employment.

We believe that this clause is as important now as it was in 1973. Clearly the issue before the negotiators on both sides was that of employment security and job security. This clause would ensure legislative protection. It would not prevent the railways from further downsizing the workforce, I want to make that perfectly clear, but it would prevent massive lay-offs.

We have heard estimates ranging from 5,000 to 10,000 people whose jobs in the rail industry will be eliminated. This clause would ensure an orderly reduction without hurting any individuals or their families.

Conservative Members voted for this amendment in 1973. I urge them to do the same today while in government as they did while in opposition in 1973. I urge them to put a clause in the Bill that will provide the kind of protection that is necessary for the employment opportunities of the men and women of Canada.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairman, it struck me as odd that a motion that would have the effect of providing that there be no lay-offs and that any downsizing of the rail workforce be achieved through attrition should be the source of so much humour on the Tory back-benches. I saw a handful of Conservative back-benchers get a bit of a laugh out of this suggestion. I take it that they—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blaikie: I have touched a nerve. I have obviously hit on something, the dogs are yelping.

The fact is that we in the House often hear Canada's productivity compared unfavorably with that of countries with an economic performance like that of Japan. Yet in countries like Japan, the kind of principle about which we are speaking here, the principle of job security, no lay-offs, of people having a sense that they are not infinitely dispensable and that they cannot at any moment be declared surplus by their employer, is what contributes to that productivity. It contributes to people having a sense of ownership and participation in the corporations for which they work. It is not something which should be the object of ridicule by Conservative back-benchers or, for that matter, by the Government.

I know that the Minister is more responsible than some of his colleagues. Perhaps he will take our suggestion more seriously. The fact remains that this is a concept for which the Conservatives voted in 1973 at the time of the last national rail strike. I do not see why it should be such a joke to some of them except perhaps to some of the newcomers over there who were not here in 1973. I do not see why it should be the object of such humour on the part of the Conservative back-benchers.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I personally take this particular subject and the entire legislation very seriously, particularly because of the public interest which is being jeopardized by the stoppage of this very important transportation system. Nevertheless, I would like to indicate to my hon. colleagues who are specifically referring to job security that job security is one of the items that is in dispute right now. It is one of the items that will be referred to the arbitrator, as I indicated when dealing with the previous amendment. It is one of the items that has been put on the notice to bargain, so it is already covered.

Obviously the arbitrator will have to deal with this issue. I believe, and I think everyone will agree, that it is one of the two or three most important issues in the bargaining.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, I would like to ask the Minister to clarify this clause in the printed Bill for me. I admit that I am not a lawyer and that I often find it difficult to understand the precise meaning of a legal clause. The clause states:

The Minister shall, after the coming into force of this part, appoint an arbitrator and refer to the arbitrator all matters relating to the amendment or revision of each collective agreement that, at the time of the appointment, are in dispute between a railway company and a union—

• (2400)

Does this mean all the matters discussed and agreed upon in the discussions held in recent days are accepted and the arbitrator deals only with those matters and those clauses in the agreement which were not agreed upon by the employer and employee? Or, are all the provisions and all the points of dispute now to be settled by the arbitrator?

Mr. Cadieux: As I have already indicated, Madam Chairman, there seems to be some confusion right now and perhaps some misinterpretation as to what exactly may have been agreed upon during the negotiations. As I indicated previously, all the issues are going to be subject to arbitration. I presume that if on one, two or three issues the parties do agree, they will indicate that to the arbitrator who will obviously take that into consideration.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, the amendment put forward by my colleague from Thunder Bay is essential. It was accepted by all three Parties in 1973. The reason for it was understood. Conservative Leaders such as Mr. Stanfield and Mr. Diefenbaker supported it. The reason it was supported by those distinguished gentlemen and all other Members of the House was because they recognized that job security, even at that time, was the essential issue of the dispute. Obviously we know from what has happened in the last week that that is the essence of the dispute today.

If in 1973 this House thought it important to give a specific instruction to an arbitrator to look at a specific proposal and examine its feasibility, which is all this amendment requires, then I do not believe there is any reason why we cannot now have a specific instruction to that effect to the arbitrator.

During second reading debate many of us said one of the major errors of this legislation is that there is almost nothing to give direction to the arbitrator. Despite what the Minister of Transport says, we are not trying to write the collective agreement in this House. We are not trying to cover each clause for each of the nine unions or each of the two companies. We are trying to make sure that the arbitrator has instructions from the House of Commons. This is a very important area. This does not mean he has to agree with the unions. It means he has to give this very close attention.

That was obviously reasonable in 1973 and it is certainly just as reasonable in 1987. It would speak well of the goodwill of the Government toward the affected employees who are being ordered back to work. At least their concerns will be specifically addressed by the arbitrator. Otherwise, the issue of job security can be treated as just one of many issues. Yet we in this House know from what has been said by management, the unions and some employees interviewed on the picket lines, that job security is the issue.

I think that right across this country, not only union members but ordinary people in communities everywhere, would feel that the workers are being better treated if they got that specific guarantee from the Government. The only way they know that will happen is if the House of Commons does as it did in 1973 and gives specific instructions to the arbitrator. We are not asking much. We are saying that if in 1973 it made sense to give specific instructions to the arbitrator, it should be done in 1987.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I was waiting to see whether the Minister would come to his senses and accept this amendment. Unfortunately he does not seem to be persuaded of the necessity. I regret that very much.

I want to support this amendment. As you know, I have an amendment which will be entertained, I suppose, a little later. It is a little bit different than the one proposed by my friend. My amendment goes a little further, so I am afraid that if the Minister does not want to accept this amendment, I do not know what he will do with mine. I guess he will not entertain it.

Job security is extremely important under the current deregulation environment. The Minister certainly should be receptive to our suggestions and realize that job security is probably paramount in the minds of the employees.

It is my understanding that the unions representing CN workers were demanding parity with CP workers with respect to the retirement age being set at 55. Early retirement is a key issue for the CN unions. The last union agreement, which expired December 31, 1986, protected workers with eight years' seniority from lay-off resulting from technological, operational or organizational change, but not for economic reasons. Unions want the protection to apply to all lay-offs and they want it to take effect after four years of service.

Earlier this week I asked the Minister why he was not ready to instruct his negotiating team to try and explore the possibilities of a job security plan that would be based on the one existing in the Ontario Northland Railway agreement. I think that is a precedent. That railway has a plan which is acceptable to the workers. Such a plan should be in the collective agreement of the other railways.

I repeat what the Hon. Member just said. We are not asking very much. We are simply asking that the arbitrator be told that this is an important subject and he should look at it. I wonder why the Government does not accept such an amendment. It seems so obvious.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I too would like to support this amendment. It is extremely important. As has been said by representatives of both the NDP and Liberals, we are not asking too much. We are merely asking for the recommendation.

I think one of the reasons I feel so strongly about it is that the situation facing the railroad workers is rather unique and particularly serious. It deals with men and women who have been employed by the railroads for a considerable period of time. We are not talking about employees who have been employed only recently. In many cases they will be laid off after having worked for as long as 20 years for the railroads. There is an obligation to these people, particularly by Crown corporations.

• (0010)

To say that these workers can move on and bump someone else is ludicrous. These people have lived in the same community for 20 years and could be asked to accept a job in a community which could be many miles away. Is it supposed to be acceptable to ask them to move and uproot their families when they have been good, steady workers? If this is not changed the injustices which we have seen at the Moncton shops will continue.

There is an obligation which must be recognized. The railroad workers consider this to be a primary item of great importance in these negotiations and I can understand why they would. I just wish the Government would understand why railroad workers consider this to be so vitally important. The time has come when this sort of thing should not be allowed to happen. I wish the Government would bring this issue to a conclusion, just for the railroad workers.

Mr. Riis: Madam Chairman, has the Minister had an opportunity to study the agreement, first mentioned in the House by the Hon. Member for Papineau, which the Ontario Northland Railway reached with its employees? Article 7(a) of that agreement provides that any employee with seven years seniority is guaranteed employment within the confines of that railway organization. An employee is not guaranteed a particular job for all time because, as we all recognize, technological change is altering the workplace. It is important, however, that Clause 7(a) guarantees that individual a job somewhere in that firm.

Imagine the morale in that organization. Imagine the confidence that corporation gives to its employees when it says that since they have served the company well for many years and it appreciates their service it will guarantee, if at all possible within the confines of the corporation, that they will have a job.

Sometimes that is not possible. Positions disappear and it may not be possible to find a particular person a job at a particular time. If that is the case, the provision allows for what is called "waiting status". The individual would wait until a job did come up within that company. With a combination of unemployment insurance and support from the corporation that individual would be guaranteed 80 per cent of his or her income during that waiting period.

Is the Minister aware of this? What is his view on this type of provision in the collective agreement in terms of building the morale and confidence of employees within a company? If he is aware of this, why would he be reluctant to give some guidance to the arbitrator in this case to consider whether something like this could be incorporated in this collective agreement?

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I wish to confirm that I am aware of this collective agreement which was entered into by the parties through the process of collective bargaining without the intervention of any legislation and presumably through the tradeoffs that are included in negotiations, including compromises by the unions to allow workers to cross craft lines, as was suggested by my hon. colleague.

I believe that is an important subject. It is a subject which is causing dispute now between the parties. I have already indicated that all issues in dispute would be referred to the arbitrator. I have already given my assurance that all the other issues which have been listed by my hon. colleague were among those issues mentioned in the notice of a dispute, including the job security issue. I agree that it is probably one of the most important issues and it will be referred to the arbitrator.

I will personally indicate to the arbitrator that that particular issue is very important. I am sure the person who will be appointed as arbitrator will have enough sense to look at precedents, whether of ONR or VIA Rail settlements which have been reached through collective bargaining.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived: Yeas, 10; Nays, 28.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I regret that the preceding amendment was not agreed to. I will try my luck with this one. I move:

> That Bill C-85 be amended at Clause 8 on page 4 by adding immediately after line 21 the following:
> "(a) An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) shall closely examine the job security demands of the unions and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the one existing in the Ontario Northland Railway Agreement.
> (b) No award or decision of an arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) shall provide for any reduction in any wage rate or benefit in the existing collective agreement."

As has been said earlier, Madam Chairman, in Clause 16(3) of the 1973 back to work legislation certain directives were given to the arbitrator. One of the directives had to do with job security. Obviously things have evolved since 1973. Indeed, the Ontario Northland Railway has just concluded an agreement with its employees with relation to job security. I have a copy of the master agreement that was agreed to between the Ontario Northland Railway and the Ontario Northland Associated Railway Unions. In Clause 7(a) of the document there is a full explanation of this package that has been accepted by the railway. It is quite clear that the railway has indicated that it was ready to give any employees with seven years seniority a guarantee of employment as long as the workers agreed to take another job at the railway.

• (0020)

As has just been explained by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, should no work be found, then the employee is placed in waiting status until such time as a vacancy occurs within his or her classification. During this period the employee's unemployment insurance benefits or outside earnings are supplemented to a level equal to 80 per cent of his or her weekly base pay until such time as a job is found. Therefore, at least there is a job employment plan that is decent and fair and should be considered by the arbitrator in order to possibly arrive at a similar plan.

Furthermore, I indicated in my remarks at second reading debate that I was surprised that the Minister did not add any clause to guarantee that there would be no wage reductions. In 1973 there was a guarantee of no wage reductions. This time the Minister will appoint an arbitrator and there is no such guarantee in the legislation. The arbitrator might suddenly decide that the wage package in the current collective agreement is too rich and could, on his own, decide to reduce that wage package. The Minister might say that this is impossible and will never happen, but we never know.

It was a guarantee in 1973 that was agreed to by all Parties at the time, including the Conservative Party which voted to support that guarantee. I do not see why there will not be in this legislation the ironclad guarantee that the workers will not get a lower package than what they currently enjoy. Therefore, I submit this amendment to the good attention of the Minister.

Mr. Riis: Madam Chairman, I appreciate having the opportunity to make a point regarding this amendment put forward by the Hon. Member for Papineau. The amendment causes me some concern.

I think we all believe, as the Minister of Labour has indicated, that the principle of employment security is very important and was fundamental to the negotiations themselves. The breakdown of negotiations was a lack of agreement on that particular issue. The amendment by the Hon. Member for Papineau reads:

> An arbitrator appointed under subsection (1) shall closely examine the job security demands of the unions and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the one existing in the Ontario Northland Railway agreement.

I believe that is a little too specific. I am confident that the Hon. Minister is aware of a number of appropriate agreements that ought to be examined.

With all due respect to my hon. friend, I think that to limit the guidelines for the arbitrator to this one agreement could cause some difficulties. I think we understand what those difficulties may be.

While the amendment may be appropriate in terms of the principle, I think that restricting ourselves to this one particular agreement would be limiting the arbitrator and, quite frankly, not in the best interests of a thorough examination of the opportunities surrounding the introduction of a program for employment security for the workers.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Chairman, I appreciate the concern of the Hon. Member. However, the NDP resolution was just ruled out and I thought it was important to give this another try. The Government has not seen fit to bend yet and we are hoping that if we keep going it will finally see the light.

I also want to bring to the attention of the Minister the trend that is happening with respect to railroads today and the reduction of workers, particularly in the name of deregulation. The Minister knows that the railroads are asking for more concessions and more roll-backs. Where will it stop?

The Minister also knows that many of these people who are losing their jobs are being replaced by part-time employees, sometimes two part-time employees. It means that one full-time employee is replaced by two part-time employees who do not receive any benefits. That is not what we are trying to foster today in the interest of pension protection and planning for the future.

I ask the Minister to allow this motion. It is very important. It gives the arbitrator the message from Parliament that we want him to consider job protection very seriously. We want the railroads to stop this alarming trend and give more consideration to the workers and the future of these workers.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I tend to agree with my colleague, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, with respect to this particular case in question.

In my answer to the previous amendment, I indicated that the arbitrator will look at all precedents and therefore go beyond this particular agreement. I am sure there are other agreements which will offer some indication of what has been done in other cases. Therefore, I think it would be a mistake to limit this particular arbitrator to that particular case.

For those reasons and others given on the previous amendment, we will not accept the amendment.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

• (0030)

Amendment, (Mr. Ouellet), negatived: yeas, 4; nays, 32.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 8 carry?

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Clause 8 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 9 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 9 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 10 carry?

On Clause 10—Parties may amend agreement.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended by:

Adding immediately after line 7 at page 5 the following:

(2) The terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this part applies are amended forthwith by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1986, as established or pursuant to such agreement, by four per cent effective January 1, 1987.

Even though the legislation itself says that the arbitrator will be given 60 days to finish his or her work, it is interesting that the Government in another amendment went on to say that perhaps this agreement may have to be in place for three years instead of two years, mainly because it would take the arbitrator a long time to finish his or her work. So the Government in its own thinking, in proposing that the arbitrator can make this a three-year collective agreement rather than a two-year collective agreement, is saying the arbitration process could drag on for well over one more year.

We do not believe it is fair to have the employees penalized by not having any increase in salary in that time period. We deliberately restricted the salary increase for the first year of the collective agreement, allowing the arbitrator to look at the second and possibly the third year of that collective agreement. In that this process, by its very nature, will be long and drawn out, we believe that the workers involved should be guaranteed at least a pay increase for this year which is close, not meeting, but close to the actual increase in the cost of living. We believe that again would be a clause which would help to make for better peace and good relations in the railway industry.

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I just want to add to the comments of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Churchill, by quoting from the 1973 Act where this type of component was placed into the Bill. Section 5(1) reads:

The terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this Part applies are amended forthwith by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1972, as established by or pursuant to such agreement, by thirty-four cents per hour effective January 1, 1973 and by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1973, as established by or pursuant to such agreement and pursuant to this Part, by six and one-half per cent effective January 1, 1974 and by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on June 30, 1974, as established by or pursuant to such agreement and pursuant to this Part, by one and one-half per cent effective July 1, 1974.

Clearly, a precedent was established in this House, I take it, supported by the Conservative Party of the day.

I believe that in fairness to the workers who have been negotiating for many, many months, and who are waiting for reimbursement for their labours over and above what they were receiving at the end of 1986, it is our duty to include an amount in this Bill which is reasonable. Certainly 4 per cent is less than inflation, and it is only for the one year. It still leaves the arbitrator the flexibility to deal with the second and third years, to provide whatever amount he or she deems appropriate. I think it is a way to perhaps soften the blow a bit, to let them know that even though we are sending them back to work without a collective agreement that has been negotiated, there will be an income settlement to ensure that within a month or two they will be receiving backtime cheques as opposed to sometime in 1988 or later.

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairman, I too would like to speak in favour of the amendment for many of the reasons which have been articulated by my colleagues. I invite Members opposite, if it turns out to be the case that the Government cannot support this amendment, to rise to their feet and tell us why.

The principle they supported in 1973, was that people who are being legislated back to work should not be legislated back to work without any increase whatsoever, that some demonstration of goodwill is appropriate. I invite Members on the Government side to rise and tell us what is different about 1987 as opposed to 1973? Why did the Conservative Party support such a gesture in 1973 but is silent with respect to it now?

I hope the Government will accept the amendment, but I have a hunch they will not. Does their silence mean they find the Government's position on this indefensible? Or are they willing to rise and tell us why it is they are willing to tell railworkers that they must continue to receive the income they have now with no guarantee that the arbitration process, which is being set up, will result in any immediate increase in their income? I wonder if anyone would be willing to take up that challenge? Or is the silence to continue?

Mr. Ouellet: I would like to indicate that indeed the amendment which is now proposed is in the same vein and nature as the one I proposed earlier, that is, the up front $500 lump sum payment as a genuine gesture towards the employees. The Government has to understand what it is doing. I hope some of the Members here in the House on the Government side, who are basically here to make up the necessary numbers when we have a vote, but not to really take part in the discussions and studies of the Bill, will realize that indeed what the Government is doing is forcing the employees to go back to work, imposing on them a collective agreement that has not be negotiated.

The Minister is appointing an arbitrator who will decide for the next two, or three years, the wages that the employees will earn and the conditions of work the employees will have to accept, and the decision of the arbitrator is binding. Therefore, the employees have no choice but to accept the law. I think it is in the spirit of goodwill that this amendment is presented to give a minimum 4 per cent. Let me remind my friends that in 1973 the following wage increases were accepted in the Act. For the railway non-operating employees it was 34 cents per hour effective January 1, 1973, followed by a 6.5 per cent increase effective January 1, 1974, and a 1.5 per cent increase effective July 1, 1974. For the railway shop-craft employees and the railway operating employees there was an 8.25 per cent increase effective January 1, 1973, a 6.5 per cent increase effective January 1, 1974, and a 1.5 per cent increase effective July 1, 1974.

• (0040)

All of these wage increases were in the legislation. The employees knew in advance that they would receive those increases. I remind the Government that at that time the Opposition, the Conservative Opposition, voted for this package. Members of the Conservative Party thought that it was important and necessary to put it into the legislation. Although the employees were being ordered to go back to work they were at least being given something. The current legislation is totally silent in this respect. I think that is a mistake.

We know that on the wage package the unions' requests are way above what management is ready to offer. While the demands of the unions are much higher, I have to say that those demands have decreased as the negotiations have gone on. Unfortunately, the railways' offer has not increased.

Originally, the unions were asking 5 per cent. In the course of the negotiations, in the heat of discussion I might say, they indicated that they would accept a 4 per cent increase over the next two years. Management has been offering a 1.5 per cent increase in 1988, plus a $500 lump sum payment in 1987. In fact, at one time management was even asking for wage rollbacks.

We can see that there is a legitimate fear on the part of the workers that they might not even get a wage package that corresponds to the increase in the cost of living. I think this amendment, if accepted, would go a long way in bringing the employer back to work with some sense of satisfaction and security. I urge the Minister to accept such an amendment, although he has refused my original proposal of an immediate $500 lump sum payment upon the return of the workers to work.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, obviously, it would have been a great deal simpler for everyone if the parties had not abdicated their responsibilities and had come to an agreement at the negotiating table. However, in the current dispute the conciliation commissioner remarked on the inter-relationship of a number of the issues and on the pattern already set by the settlements in the ONR and VIA Rail agreement. In order to permit, as I have indicated, the maximum flexibility for the arbitrator who will be appointed to the railway disputes, the Government has left the matter of wages to be determined as part of his consideration of all the issues to be resolved.

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Chairman, I take exception to the remarks of the Minister. I do not think that the union representatives have abdicated their responsibility. I am told, and I have checked this, that they have negotiated in good faith from the very beginning.

One thing that has been looked at and, of course, realized, is that the employers from the very beginning have been under the impression that they could hold firm and that the Government would come to their rescue by forcing the employees to go back to work.

Since the Conservative Government has been in office we have never seen CN management act so rude, so brutal and so difficult with its employees. Never in the history of CN have we witnessed such worsening of labour relations. All of this is due to a change of attitude on the part of the Government dealing with its Crown corporations. The Government is squeezing the lemon all the time.

Mrs. Sparrow: You are laughing!

Mr. Ouellet: I am not laughing. There are a great many employees of CN who have lost their jobs since the Conservatives took office. The attitude of the Conservative Government is to destroy Crown corporations.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us what you did with the Post Office when you were in charge of it. Tell us how well you did.

Mr. Ouellet: I understand that the Hon. Member should be somewhat sad today. He should go to bed and relax.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): You should go to bed.

Mr. Ouellet: I am saying that the Conservative Government has been terrible with respect to Crown corporations—

Mr. McDermid: Why should I be in bed?

Mr. Ouellet: I will tell you that, my friend. If you do not realize it, I will tell you.

Mr. McDermid: I saw the next poll. We are happy and you should be worried.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I know that it is getting late and people are getting tired. It would be helpful if Hon. Members would avoid having conversations between themselves and if we could get back to the amendment which is before the House.

Mr. Ouellet: Through you, Madam Chairman, I have been speaking to the Minister in a very gentlemanly fashion. Since there are a few phoney boys who just appeared in the back row of the Conservative benches—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Chair is very well aware of what has been said in the House. The Chair would appreciate all Hon. Members getting back to what is being discussed right now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would like to be fair to the Liberal Member who has just been speaking. We have a number of people in the House who, obviously, are here strictly for votes and who are not participating in the debate. I think that for their own sake if they heckle less they may well go home earlier and sleep there.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair offers her gratitude to the Hon. Member for Churchill whose intervention was not a point of order. May we now please get back to the amendment being debated.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Madam Speaker, thank you for giving me the floor again. I can assure you that if Conservative Members without the slightest interest in this legislation or in job security for railway employees would keep quiet, we could adopt this Bill a lot faster.

I want to repeat for the benefit of the Minister of Labour that the wage issue is an important factor. This is especially true if you consider two collective agreemeents, one with VIA Rail employees which provided 3 per cent the first year and 3 per cent the second year, and the collective agreement with Ontario Northland Railways which also provided for a wage increase of 3 per cent the first year and 3 per cent the second year.

Now I don't think we can compare the situation at VIA Rail and Ontario Northland Railways with Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

Although 3 per cent was acceptable in the case of VIA Rail because of the financial difficulties of that company, the same cannot be said today of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific.

I may remind the Minister that the 3 per cent that were approved for Ontario Northland Railways employees were only one aspect of a very generous package, since in addition to the three per cent, that is 3 per cent the first year and 3 per cent the second year, there was this new job security plan we have been talking about for nearly one hour, a plan that was approved by Ontario Northland Railways for its employees, and it is the kind of plan that CN and CP employees want as well.

Consequently, if we cannot make any progress on job security, these employees should at least receive some concessions with respect to salary levels.

In his report, Conciliation Commissioner Douglas Stanley was not very generous on the item of job security. He rejected the employees' demands, unfortunately, and said on page 35 of his report:

• (0050)

[English]

> I recommend that the parties agree either immediately to trade-off reductions in the years service to achieve job security for some or all of the companies demands for greater flexibility, or that they agree to a process whereby this could be achieved on an individual bargaining unit basis during the closed period in a staged process.

[Translation]

So on the most important item, which was about job security, Mr. Stanley was less than generous. As for the second most important item, and I am referring to wage demands, I hope that the arbitrator to be appointed by the Minister will at least be more sensitive, more aware of these important demands and that he will act accordingly.

However, to be sure that is the case, if the Minister could include in the Bill that at least for the first year, the increase would be four per cent, at least part of the battle will be won.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: I rise in support of this amendment. I wish to remind the Minister and Members on the government side of what the CNR wishes to do to its workers. On the one hand, it makes it clear that what it would like to do as quickly as possible is to reduce its workforce by 25 per cent in a very few years. On the other hand, it says to those who will be lucky enough to stay on that it does not want them to accept a wage increase of 1 per cent, or whatever increase is finally dragged out of it kicking and screaming, but it wants them to take a cut in wages. There is an increase in the cost of living of approximately 4 per cent, which means that the real value of the wages and salaries of the employees have been reduced by that amount. In addition, the company wants to impose a further reduction in wages on the employee.

I ask Members of the House if the management of CNR, after these failed negotiations, and after the arbitrator looks into the matter and makes a finding, can expect to have a happy, co-operative workforce?

I saw back-benchers of the Conservative Party laughing when my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, talked about the workers in Japan. Until a year ago when the situation changed dramatically, for reasons that we do not have time to discuss, the workers in Japan were involved in a highly productive society. In comparison with workers in North America, both here and in the United States, among the large employers in Japan, comparable to CP and CN, when a worker got a job at that company in Japan he or she had a job for his or her entire working life. If the company wanted to bring in new machines, computers, or automation, of course the workers did not worry because they knew that they had a job for life. The worker would co-operate and was willing to accept any new techniques or new processes. In fact, the worker was probably suggesting new ways to do the job faster and more efficiently because they were part of a team in which both the employer and the employee benefited.

The Hon. Member for Papineau referred to the management of the CNR as being rude to its employees. I was not there, so I do not know if they were rude to their employees, but they certainly have displayed an aggressiveness, a toughness, and a "we don't care about you" attitude which is certainly new in the entire history of the CNR.

I would ask the Government to give some serious and favourable consideration to this amendment proposed by my colleague. If we put that amendment into this Bill which we are passing, it would say to the workers of the two railways that the Government and Parliament cares about them. It understands the difficulties through which they are living. It is sympathetic and wants them to do as well as can be done. Therefore, it says in the legislation that it is ordering them back to work because the country cannot live with an extended work stoppage, but in ordering them back to work it is guaranteeing a wage increase which will as least meet part of the increase in the cost of living which they, and everybody else in Canada, have to live through.

I would urge the Government to give some serious consideration to making this type of relatively generous response to what I think is a very reasonable amendment.

Mr. Blaikie: I have recently taken the opportunity to review some of Hansard during the last time that Parliament was faced with a similar situation, making a comparison to the arguments being offered by the Conservative Government today about the inappropriateness of the NDP's suggestions that the arbitrator be given instructions, and that some income protection be built into the back to work legislation. I would like to refer, if I might, to the remarks of the Hon. Mr. Stanfield, Leader of the Conservative Party, when he spoke in the House on August 31, 1973. At page 6109 of Hansard we find:

> On the matter of wages, we are not negotiating an agreement but, rather, back to work terms as the Hon. Member for St. John's East emphasized yesterday. He expressed the principle that governs the amendments we will propose. That principle involves building into the Bill a protection to ensure that any settlement adequately takes into account increases in the cost of living as they can be more realistically projected since the time the Members of the Conciliation Board drafted their reports earlier this year. In imposing a settlement, this parliament can do nothing less than provide that kind of insurance.

• (0100)

Those words are from the former Leader of the Conservative Party, Madam Chairman. I do not know why the passage of 14 years should obliterate matters of principle in the minds of Progressive Conservatives unless there are no principles there to obliterate in the first place. Mr. Stanfield went on to say:

> —Parliament cannot simply pass the buck to the parties in the dispute, or to a mediator or arbitrator, without some clear expression and direction of the matters for which Parliament is responsible—

As reported on page 6110 of Hansard he went on to say:

> I emphasize that such action could in no way be construed as taking sides or attempting to make a final settlement judgment here in parliament. This would simply be Parliament, in this case, accepting its responsibility in regard to the extraordinary cost of living situation which now prevails in the country.

Mr. Stanfield was arguing that Parliament has certain responsibilities which have to be lived up to. He went on to say in wrapping up, just before the then Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre spoke:

> We feel these proposals would have a salutary effect on the employees concerned. Surely this is a very important consideration both in ensuring an orderly return to work and setting the stage for ongoing negotiations. We believe that Parliament would be doing no more than it should, in line with its limited role at this time, in supporting our amendments. We also believe that in doing so it will be doing what it indeed must do in the interests of justice in imposing a settlement at this time.

Those words were the words of the Leader of the Official Opposition at that time. I hope that this will at least put to rest, if not bring the Government on side, the notion which has been bandied about here on occasion today that what we are suggesting be done in the course of passing this back to work legislation is somehow inappropriate or irresponsible. This was done both in 1973 and in 1966 and which the Progressive Conservative Party supported on both occasions.

Mr. Redway: Madam Chairman, I was not a Member of Parliament in 1973 but I was a citizen of this country in 1973. I am aware that the conditions at that time with respect to the cost of living and inflation were very much different from what they are today. In fact, when Mr. Stanfield was making those remarks, he was making them in the context of runaway inflation. He was making those remarks preliminary to espousing a policy of introducing wage and price controls which he advocated in the election campaign of 1974, as you will recall, Madam Chairman.

At that time, the then Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Elliott Trudeau, had indicated that he was absolutely opposed to and ridiculed the concept of wage and price controls. However, immediately after the 1974 election he introduced the same concept in direct opposition and contrary to what he had said during the 1974 election campaign. All of that was in the context of runaway inflation, a very, very much different situation than what we face today.

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Chairman, the Hon. Member for York East is correct that we were dealing in 1973 with a very high rate of inflation. What the then Member from St. John's East moved as his amendment, supported by the then Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party, Mr. Stanfield, was that the increase, which was spelled out, had a relationship with the actual increase in the cost of living in that year. This amendment is proposing precisely that.

Mr. Murphy: The Stanfield amendment.

Mr. Orlikow: My colleague from Churchill called it the Stanfield amendment. This amendment proposes that we write into the legislation an increase and a percentage which has a very careful and clear relationship to the actual rate of inflation at the present time. The Hon. Member for York East should learn a lesson. The former Member for St. John's East resigned his seat. When the election was held, it was not a Progressive Conservative who was elected but an NDP Member. This was because of the kind of approach taken by the present Conservative Government.

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I want to repeat what I already said before. The arbitrator who will be appointed will be looking at all the issues, including wages as well as precedents that have been quoted earlier this evening and perhaps later. I am sure the appropriate decisions will be taken at that time and the parties will make their representations.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Amendment (Mr. Murphy) negatived.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 10 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed

Clause 10 agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 11 carry?

On Clause 11—Offences

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, I thank you for your enthusiastic recognition of me at this time of night. It is only ten after one and we have almost finished Part I. We only have Parts II, III and IV to go through. I understand the Government has a couple of amendments to make after that and then we will have third reading. We should not get too tired yet.

Concerning Clause 11, it is important to recognize that the Government is not treating people equally. If we take a look at subclause (2), we find:

> A railway company or union that contravenes any provision of this Part is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction and is liable, for each day or part of a day during which the offence continues, to a fine of not less than $20,000 or more than $100,000.

That may seem equal to some people. But when you take a look at who the people involved are, you see CN, a multibillion dollar operation, and CP in the same type of a situation. Some of the unions involved in the railways have a thousand members who would be facing a fine in the same amount as CP and CN would receive. It would be the same amount as the fine CN would receive. In every other case in which we have passed legislation, we have recognized that the size of the fine should have some relationship to the ability to pay. I think it is unfortunate that the Government did not recognize these variations.

In speaking against this clause, I hope that the Government will recognize that it is inequitable. I recognize that it is not willing to change this at the present time, but I would hope that in future labour legislation, we ensure that fines are equivalent to sizes of organizations being fined so that we do not impose a very heavy fine on small groups and a fine on CP and CN that would be completely insignificant.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, the 1973 legislation contained no penalty whatsoever. This Bill includes stiff penalties for non-compliance and is very different from the one introduced in 1973. As I indicated in my remarks at second reading, I do not see the necessity of such stiff penalties and I regret that they are there. I will not introduce an amendment, but I will certainly vote against this clause. I hope that the clause will not carry.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Kempling): Shall Clause 11 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 11 agreed to.

On Clause 12—Definitions

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, as I had indicated when I originally presented amendments at the beginning of this interesting discussion, I proposed to put all the amendments at that time but it was suggested that we do them as we come to each clause. I appreciate the goodwill of my colleagues who are permitting me to move this amendment which is in the interests of the legislation and obviously everyone concerned. I move:

> That Clause 12 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 6 and substituting the following:
> "railway company who is bound by a collective agree—"

Amendment (Mr. Cadieux) agreed to.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Kempling): Shall Clause 12, as amended, carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 12, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 13—Resumption of railway operations

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I move:

> That Bill C-85 be amended at line 26, page 6, Section 13(b), following the words "every employee shall", delete the words "when so required".

There are four clauses which are almost identical and we will repeat the pattern throughout the Bill without going into debate on most of the items.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived on division.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Kempling): Shall Clause 13 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Clause 14 agreed to.

On Clause 15—Extension of collective agreements

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Clause 15 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out line 25 at page 7 and substituting the following:

"December 31, 1988 and, with the consent of the parties thereto, may be further".

This is an amendment which was accepted by the Government and it prevents the arbitrator from imposing a three-year collective agreement without the consent of both parties.

Amendment (Mr. Murphy) agreed to.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended by:

At line 45, page 7, Section 15(2) following the words "the agreement and each of", deleting the words "its employees who is" and substituting therefor the words "the unions which are".

The intention of the motion is to put into the Bill the kind of relationship that exists between an employer and the representatives of employees; i.e., the union. As the Act is currently worded, it talks about a relationship between an individual employee and the company which does not in fact exist.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux: Mr. Chairman, the introductory part of Subsection 15(2) makes the agreement binding upon the parties. Paragraph (b) specifies, and the terms used repeat the wording of Section 154 of the Canada Labour Code, that the agreement is binding on every employee. For the benefit of all Hon. Member I will quote Section 154:

A collective agreement entered into between a bargaining agent and an employer in respect of a bargaining unit is, subject to and for the purposes of this Part, binding upon

(a) the bargaining agent;

(b) every employee in the bargaining unit; and

(c) the employer.

Mr. Speaker, we will therefore vote against the amendment.

On Clause 17—

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended at line 17, page 8, after the words "each collective agreement that", deleting the rest of Clause 17(1) and substituting for it the following:

"either party may say are at dispute. The matters referred to the arbitrator shall include, but not be limited to the following:

1. Wages
2. Starting Rate for New Employees
3. Dental Plan for New Employees
4. Extended Health Vision Care for New Employees
5. Shift Differentials

11. Yard Switching Limits
12. Coupling/uncoupling Hoses
13. Disability Pensions
14. Dental Plan
15. Extended Health Care
16. Vacation

The reasons are the same as given before.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived on division.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended at line 22, page 8, by adding the following clause:

"17(2) The arbitrator shall closely examine the job security demands of the union and fully explore the feasibility of a job security plan based on the principles of attrition."

Amendment (Mr. Blaikie) negatived on division.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended at Clause 17, page 8, by adding thereto immediately after line 31 the following:

"no award or decision of an arbitrator appointed under Subsection (1) shall provide for any reduction in any wage rate or benefit in the existing collective agreement."

Amendment (Mr. Ouellet) negatived on division.

Clause 17 agreed to.

Clause 18 agreed to.

On Clause 19—

Mr. Angus: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended in Clause 19 by adding immediately after line 12 at page 9 the following:

"(2) The terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this part applies are amended forthwith by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1986, as established or pursuant to such agreement, by 4 per cent effective January 1, 1987."

My reasons are the same as before.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived on division.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

On Clause 21—

Mr. Cadieux: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Clause 21 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out lines 11 and 12 on page 10 and substituting the following:

"railway company who is bound by a collective agree—"

Mr. Crosbie: Let's strike out the Opposition.

Mr. Murphy: Madam Chairman, despite the provocation by the Minister of Transport we will support the amendment.

Amendment (Mr. Cadieux) agreed to.

Clause 21, as amended, agreed to.

On Clause 22—

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended at line 29, page 10, Section 22(b), following the words "every employee shall", delete the words "when so required".

I just want to add one additional bit of information to the debate we had on the original amendment. It is my understanding that a large number of the craft employees have been laid off. They are very concerned about this mechanism being used as a bargaining lever by the companies to force them into an unacceptable agreement. I would once again like to appeal to the Minister to reconsider inclusion of this wording in the legislation to prevent that from occurring.

Mr. Blaikie: Some time has passed since we last debated this amendment. I wonder whether the Minister has had time to not only think about it but to check and is he now able to answer the question of whether or not this clause would permit, for example, the railway to only call a certain percentage of its workforce back on this coming Monday and call others back on Tuesday and others on Wednesday. Has he had an opportunity to think about that and can he say that this clause will not permit them to do that? If he is not able to say that, would he accept the amendment?

Mr. Cadieux: Question!

Amendment (Mr. Angus) negatived on division.

Clause 22 agreed to.

Clause 23 agreed to.

On Clause 24—Extension of collective agreements

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairperson, I move:

That Clause 24 of Bill C-85 be amended by striking out line 28 on page 11 and substituting the following:

"December 31, 1988 and, with the consent of the parties thereto, may be further"

That amendment is similar to that which was accepted by the Government on the first two sections of the Bill.

Amendment (Mr. Angus) agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 24, as amended carry?

Some Hon. members: Agreed.

Clause 24, as amended, agreed to.

Clause 25 agreed to.

On Clause 26—Arbitration

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Chairperson, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended by: At line 20, page 12, after the words "each collective agreement that", deleting the rest of Section 26(1) and substituting for it the following:

"either party may say are at dispute. The matters referred to the arbitrator shall linclude, but not be limited to the following:

1. Wages
2. Starting Rate for New Employees

10. Incidental Work Rule
11. Yard Switching Limits
12. Coupling/uncoupling Hoses
13. Disability Pensions
14. Dental Plan
15. Extended Health Care
16. Vacation"

Amendment (Mr. Blaikie) negatived on division.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 26 carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 26 agreed to.

Clause 27 agreed to.

On Clause 28—Parties may amend agreement

Mr. Angus: Madam Chairman, I move:

That Bill C-85 be amended by adding immediately after line 16 at page 13 the following:

"(2) The terms and conditions of each collective agreement to which this part applies are amended forthwith by increasing each hourly basic rate of wages in effect on December 31, 1986, as established or pursuant to such agreement, by four per cent effective Januasry 1, 1987."

The same rationale, Madam Chairman.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When shall the Bill be read the third time? Pursuant to order made earlier this day, now?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cadieux moved that Bill C-85, an Act to provide for the resumption and continuance of railway operations and for the settlement of disputes respecting terms and conditions of employment between railway companies and their employees, be read the third time and passed.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Madam Speaker, during my closing remarks on this legislation, I want to say that it is sad when Parliament must deal with back to work legislation. Certainly, the ideal situation would have been for the parties to negotiate a collective agreement. Unfortunately, it seems that it was impossible to arrive at a negotiated settlement.

The companies believe they must go through massive reductions in their operating costs and therefore are not in a mood to give generous wage settlements to their employees. Therefore, the bargaining process was jeopardized from the beginning because of this situation. Clearly, while under normal circumstances a collective agreement could have been reached, it was impossible to do so this time.

I must say that for a number of years collective agreements have been reached easily in the rail industry. In fact, the last time that back to work legislation was introduced was in 1973. There have been good labour relations in the railway industry for 15 years. It is sad to see that the situation has changed.

In discussions with union representatives, I have been told that there has been a very drastic change of attitude on the part of management in recent years. This is regrettable and I hope that it is a trend that will not continue.

Clearly, year after year in Canada a number of people working for Canadian National, Canadian Pacific and other railways have been able to earn a good living. The railways have been a very important factor in the development of our economy and an important source of good reliable employment. Therefore, it is sad that after so many years of good relations, many employees who have been working for 20 to 30 years with the company are now seeing a drastic change of attitude on the part of their employers in terms of their treatment and consideration and friendship. The new attitude is one of confrontation or indifference.

I believe it is very important for the arbitrator who is to be appointed by the Minister to realize the difficulties that now exist in terms of labour relations in the railway industry and to try to correct the situation.

I am not very optimistic about the future of the railway industry in Canada, in the deregulation environment. Despite this, I hope that at least in the beginning of this new deregulated environment the arbitrator will see fit to give employees a chance and provide them with a good collective agreement. Fundamentally, it will be on his shoulders to draft the entire collective agreement because the two parties have not agreed to anything so far. It will be a difficult task for the arbitrator and I hope the Minister is fortunate enough to find an able person to assume this responsibility. I wish him luck and hope that this collective agreement will be well received by both parties and, above all, while being an imposed settlement, will be perceived by both parties as a fair settlement.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Madam Speaker, my speech will not be as long as the one I gave at second reading, but I want to indicate that we are still in opposition to this legislation. During second reading we explained that we understood the need to have the railways running in this land.

• (0150)

Many of us are from western Canada, and that is the area of the country which is most affected by a rail strike in proportion to its population. However, we do believe that this legislation, as it was presented to Parliament, and even after the amendments made in the last number of hours in Committee of the Whole, is still flawed legislation. We are glad the Government agreed to and helped to draft an amendment which means that the arbitrator will not be able to act independently to impose a three-year collective agreement on the parties which for over a year were trying to negotiate a two-year collective agreement. I believe we did make some wording improvements in that area.

However, in many of the other areas about which we expressed concern at second reading, this legislation has not been improved. My colleague the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), quoted from the Hon. Robert Stanfield in 1973 with respect to the purpose of Parliament and its role when we introduce back to work legislation and how it is important for us to go beyond the structural step of ordering people back to work. We must also consider the times and realize there should be reasonable guidelines for the arbitrator.

This legislation refuses to deal in any way, shape or form with the responsibility which Parliament should have undertaken. As a result, workers and the companies have absolutely no idea of how the arbitrator is going to work. As I expressed at second reading, we cannot put blind faith in an arbitrator. I mentioned my own personal experience as a negotiator for teachers in Manitoba. We had an arbitrator who ruled against something both the school board and the teachers had agreed to. It seemed, in his mind, to be the right thing to do. The two parties to the agreement could not sign the final package because of some other differences. They both expressed their acceptance of the salary package. Yet the arbitrator decided to act differently. We, by passing this legislation at this moment are making that same mistake.

We know there are certain things which must be studied by the arbitrator, especially in the whole area of job security. We tried to get the Government to accept the same amendments the House of Commons accepted in 1973. The amendments passed into law in 1973 were accepted by John Diefenbaker and by Robert Stanfield, supported by the former Member for St. John's East, the Lieutenant Governor of that province at the present time. However, for some reason this new Conservative Government will not accept the same caring philosophy expressed by the Conservatives of 1973.

The Government recognizes that arbitration can be a very long process because it has pushed for the possibility of a three-year collective agreement solely on the basis that the arbitration process may take a very long time. To compensate for something all parties recognize, we said there should be some salary adjustment which should take place for the first year of the collective agreement. Let the two parties work on the second and possibly the third year of the collective agreement. If they cannot resolve that, the arbitrator will deal with it. However, for the first year there should be some recognition for the workers who are obviously trying to make a living. With the price of goods going up across the land and with taxes going up at both the provincial and federal levels, those people have extra expenses. Those expenses are occurring now. If it takes a year or a year and a half for the collective agreement to be settled by the arbitrator, those people will be out of money for a very long time indeed. So we tried to move in that area in the last few hours.

We quoted Mr. Stanfield again, and the Conservatives, who in 1973 were in favour of recognizing a cost of living increase for the workers, would not do so now. I should point out that in 1973, the Conservatives not only supported the Liberal back to work legislation, which gave a salary increase, but the Conservatives moved an amendment to increase the salary. Not only did they accept the cost of living clause put in the legislation by the Government, but the Conservatives, supported by their leader, moved an amendment to increase the salary above and beyond what the government of the day wanted to give to the workers.

The New Democrats of that day supported that motion and the motion carried. So we had a motion by the Conservatives in opposition, supported by the New Democrats in opposition, and the motion carried. I find it more than passing strange that this new Conservative Government will not do the courageous thing they were willing to do in 1973. I heard one of the Conservatives say it was a minority government. Even if it was a minority government, what the Conservatives believed then, they should believe now. It is the same principle. The workers and their families will face extra expenses as taxes go up, as the price of food goes up and as other costs go up, and if the Conservative Party in 1973 thought we should recognize that in the legislation, the same principle should apply today.

We are also concerned that we do not know who the arbitrator is. We wish the Minister had taken advantage of the advice we gave him earlier today. We wish he had used the time he had to sit down and talk with both parties. He has now assured us he will at least consult with both parties before he appoints an arbitrator. I hope he does that in such a way that we do get someone who is not only acceptable to both parties but who does have a knowledge of the railway industry.

The clause that may be the sleeper in this legislation, the clause that may give us the most concern, is the clause which says that employees "when required" must return to work. It was one of the first clauses we debated earlier this evening. It created a very excited debate as people realized all of a sudden that again we were doing something different than was done in 1973. The 1973 legislation said that those workers who were on strike had to come back to work, those employers had to bring those people back to work. This legislation creates a new scenario. It creates a new loophole for those corporations which are admittedly trying to reduce their workforce. They have a new weapon now, a weapon given to them as a direct result of this legislation.

We challenged the Minister in the House of Commons in a clause by clause study that if the people in the Transcona shop are not called back, if the people in Kamloops, Thunder Bay, and Yorkton are not called back, and if CN or CP uses this clause as their reason for not calling those people back, the Minister's credibility is certainly in jeopardy. This is a new weapon which the Government is giving to CN and CP. Previous back to work legislation tried to re-establish the status quo, to treat both employees and employers in an equal manner, to get them back to work to provide service to the public. The exception that the Minister made tonight is a dangerous one. I believe that in the case of CN and CP, which companies are trying to reduce their workforces, and which companies have used every method they could possibly use to do so, if the collective agreement says it cannot lay off 50 people without giving a long notice, then they will lay off 49 people, and then another 49 x number of months later, followed by another 49 x number of months after that. That is the existing practice in the rail industry.

• (0200)

We have now given those two companies another weapon. I predict that in some circumstances they will be tempted to use it. It will be our position as members of the Opposition, and I hope that government Members will also be keeping an eye on CN and CP, that if we hear about people who are not brought back a week or two weeks from now when the work has obviously reached the level it was prior to the strike, we will go to the Minister and get this legislation changed.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I do not intend to abuse for very long the patience of those who are still here.

I make one last try with the Minister in regard to the question of the language of people returning to work when so required. The Minister cited an example of previous legislation in which that language was used. He said that he had no problems with it. However, I wonder if the Minister has reflected upon the fact that the legislation to which he referred when he was making his defence of the language was legislation that applied to people who would be returning to work through the auspices of a hiring hall and not in the way that people on the railroad will be returning to work. I ask the Minister to think about that point. The words "when so required" may have been adequate to the situation that existed when people were returning to work through a hiring hall, but it may not be adequate and may indeed create the type of new power about which the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has spoken. This new power could be given to the railways as a result of the wording in the Bill.

Finally, I want to say that people in my family have worked on the railway ever since 1912 when my grandfather first came to Canada.

There are many in my family who still work for the railway. I want to tell you, Madam Speaker, and I hope that Hon. Members will listen, that something terrible is happening to the railroads. Something terrible is happening to a way of life in this country. Something terrible is happening to the traditional relationship between labour and management and the way of life that was associated with working at the railroad. The Bill that we have before us will not help. It has the potential to make matters incredibly worse.

I say for those who may want to think about it years down the road, that unless something very, very serious is done to correct certain trends which are in place, we will have on our hands the sort of railway equivalent of the chaos that we have had at the Post Office for so many years. So much bad feeling is being built up as a result of new attitudes being taken by management that we will soon be at the point of no return. We will soon be at the point at which there will be no more trust on which to rebuild any kind of productive relationship between labour and management and employees in the companies.

I do not take any delight in that. I am simply saying that that is where we are. If the Minister had taken some of the amendments seriously, he would have had an opportunity to take decisive action to arrest that slippery slope that the railways are on at the moment. Unfortunately, we have not been able to arrest that slide here this evening because the Government simply has not been willing to listen.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Madam Speaker, I too am rather concerned and disappointed that the Government has not agreed to some of the amendments that have been put forward this evening—excuse me while I get back to my seat, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Obviously, at this time of the morning I hope the House will forgive the Chair for recognizing the Hon. Member even though he was not in his place. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan).

Mr. Blaikie: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recall the words of the Hon. Member who just found himself not in his own seat. He made a comment about another Hon. Member earlier in the evening with respect to the fact that it was past that Hon. Member's bedtime. It seems to me that it is certainly past this Hon. Member's bedtime.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is not a point of order!

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I too would like to make a few comments. I am not going to continue too long despite the heckling of Members opposite. I hope that the Government, although it has not agreed to the amendments that have been suggested, will not forget the remarks that have been made here this evening. As was stated earlier by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet), our Party supports the legislation because of the downside we see in delaying this whole question. We feel that the loss to the economy of the country by prolonging this rail strike would be extremely damaging. We do not see that continuing negotiations and prolonging the rail strike will in any way influence the Government on what we feel should be in this Bill that is not in it already.

There has been mention made tonight about concerns with respect to job security. I say to the Minister that we are disappointed that he has not seen fit to put in the Bill a recommendation that the arbitrator consider this question very, very seriously. Not only is job security not uniform among the various railroads in the country, it is not uniform among various areas of Canadian National within a certain region. I refer to the Atlantic region. The benefits should be there. They should have been there for everyone in the railroads. However, that is not the case. I hope the Government will correct that.

I also suggest that, with respect to Clause 4 and comparable clauses in the Bill, the words "when so required", which the Government did not agree to delete, would be taken into consideration. We in this Party will be watching very, very carefully to assure ourselves that those who were working for the railroads prior to the strike will be getting back to work in their jobs immediately after the strike terminates. If there is a breach of faith by the railroads in this regard then we definitely want the Government to step in.

I hope that something has been served as far as the Government listening to these matters is concerned. As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Papineau, has stated, this is not something in which we take a great deal of delight. It is not a happy occasion to be passing back to work legislation. In this case we feel it is necessary but, as my colleague has said, we take no delight in doing so.

Mr. Angus: On behalf of all Members of the House, I wish to thank the staff for their work with us this evening to ensure that we could continue to operate. They have put in a long day, and hopefully in approximately two minutes we will all be able to go home.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have some difficulty recognizing the Hon. Minister right now, because he is deemed to have spoken when the motion was put to the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cadieux: I did not wish to speak originally because I thought that we had all said what we had to say. I notice by certain repetitions that we had done so. Nevertheless, I would like to add that it is never with great joy that as Minister of Labour I introduce in the House back to work legislation. Unfortunately, it is the second time that I have had to do this, and I do not find any joy in it.

I still believe that our collective bargaining system is probably one of the best in the world. To attest to this fact, and the fact that the parties usually use it to come to an agreement, last year out of 11,000 collective agreements that were reached and signed in Canada, 94 per cent were reached without one single day of strike or lock-out. Obviously, our system works very well. I am proud of the system that we have which falls under the Canada Labour Code. We are always there to provide the services of conciliation and mediation in order to assist the parties to achieve those agreements.

Unfortunately, in this instance it did not work. Because of the impact upon the public interest, and because of the stoppage of the most important transportation system in Canada, we indicated that we could not and would not tolerate such a work stoppage. We had to step in. It is never pleasant, but we had to do it. We did it, and hopefully we will not have to do it again.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it. I declare the motion carried on division.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 2.14 a.m., pursuant to the Order concurred in earlier today, this House stands adjourned until 10 a.m. later today, pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Wednesday, August 26, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, An Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I think the debate on Bill C-22 is proceeding. We are now calling it for the fifth day. We are naturally anxious that this Bill, which will do quite a bit for investment in Canada and jobs, proceed and be sent back to the Senate. Hopefully our motion will be granted. Under those circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the question be now put.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have just been caught by surprise. That is a debatable motion and I would like to address it, but not at any length.

I am happy to address the Hon. Member as the "Minister" now because yesterday he was elevated to that position. I want to offer him my congratulations, as well as those of all of us.

Mr. Murphy: That was his first mistake.

Mr. Gauthier: As the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) has just reminded me, he has just made his first mistake. He is not usually the type who catches us by much surprise but sometimes he does these things and we do like to be given proper notice.

It is usually the procedure and the habit of the Government to give us fair notice of what is going to be debated in the House. We were told yesterday that we would be dealing with Bill C-71 this morning. As a result, I asked people who understand Bill C-71 and who want to debate it to be here.

I understood also that the Government was going to call the debate on the amendments from the Senate on Bill C-22 which was to follow Bill C-71. I also expected the Minister, before Orders of the Day were called, by using Standing Order 57, to invoke closure, of which the Government had given notice through the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board two days ago. Therefore, I must admit that it was with some amazement at the Minister's sudden and, I would add, unexpected move, that I now rise to speak.

Two days ago I told the Minister that our leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), had spoken, and spoken very well I might add, on the issue making the position of the Liberal Party of Canada very clear. I had told the House that we believed Bill C-22 was a bad Bill, that we thought it should be amended in the interests of protecting the consumers of Canada, that the Government had caved in to the multinationals and that the Government was giving them what they had asked for in the free trade debate, namely, opened-ended access to the pharmaceutical market without any restrictions on patents. The Government has acceded to those requests from the Americans in the hope of getting a free trade deal. Two days ago I told the Minister, who was then Parliamentary Secretary, that after my Leader spoke we would not put up any additional speakers because we believed strongly that democracy must be given a chance to operate. There has been sufficient debate. We have made our points. The Senate sent back the Bill amended and we accept that as a parliamentary procedure very much in keeping with tradition. The Senate has that right. The Government accepted one of the Senate's amendments, I understand. Therefore, the process has worked.

I do not think it is a question of whether or not the Senate should be abolished because it is doing its work. I think it is a debate on whether or not we will satisfy multinational American companies and others who want us to give up our patent protection on pharmaceutical products. We said at the beginning of this emergency session on August 11 that, indeed, the Government was not calling us back for an immigration crisis, it was calling us back to satisfy its own agenda on the question of the free trade deal.

I was surprised to see how the Minister, on his first order before the House, changed the Order of the Day. The Hon. Member for Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic (Mrs. Killens) just handed me a copy of the Projected Order of Business for today. I admit it says at the bottom that the document is intended as a guide but, nevertheless, it contains instructions that were given by the Government to the Table. It does say as I mentioned at the beginning of my remarks that Bill C-71 would be the first consideration at 10 this morning.

Having said all that, I say that I will not prolong this debate. I know that the Government with its huge majority will have its way. I simply say to the Minister that I hope he shows a little more understanding and operates a little differently in the days and months to come. Consultations with us will bring on better relations between the Parties. Indeed, if we want to carry forth in the spirit of the McGrath reforms, I think it would be appropriate that when we do say something, we mean it. We should stick to our word and should not play games with Members of Parliament. Indeed, in that habit of openness and truthfulness, we will establish reasonably good and fair grounds for debate.

I do not know if anyone else from my Party will participate on this debate, but I am ready to vote on the question as soon as the debate is over.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, let me preface my brief remarks by saying how pleased we are that the new Minister of State has been given his new responsibilities as Deputy House Leader. We in the New Democratic Party look forward as we always do to working co-operatively with him and his colleagues to facilitate the business of the House of Commons.

Having said that, I must say that it is with a heavy heart that we begin a debate on the patent drug legislation. I find it disappointing that the first order of business the new Minister of State announced was a change of plans.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, and I know how committed you are to the effective workings of this House, that we do what we can to conduct the business of Canada as expeditiously and conscientiously as possible. To do that, we as responsible Members of Parliament must have some indication of what the business of the House will be. That indication then allows Hon. Members who are concerned about certain legislation an opportunity to prepare thoughtful remarks and add thoughtful comments to the debate. For us to act responsibly, we require some notice of what the business of the House will be. We cannot expect an Hon. Member to rise in his or her place to speak on legislation that he or she has just heard about seconds earlier.

As the Whip for the Official Opposition indicated, this morning's order of business indicated that the first order of business was to be Bill C-71. We were prepared to deal with that Bill. Our speakers were prepared to offer what I felt would have been thoughtful and constructive comments on that legislation. However, we now find that that will not necessarily be the case. I am not sure what the case is, but the first order the new Minister of State introduced is, in a sense, a form of closure.

The Minister indicated today that the Government will not tolerate any more amendments to this Bill. I do not know where he got any indication that there would be more amendments to this Bill. I think it is useful to note that this is simply part of a long train of events. At every stage of Bill C-22, debate has been curtailed. I think this is rather unique in recent Canadian parliamentary history. The House of Commons has been muzzled. The Government has used its large majority in a rather jackbooted fashion and has said at every stage that it has had enough discussion on the Bill, it will curtail discussion through time allocation or one form of closure or another. It is not surprising that as we wrap up this discussion, once again the Government is telling us that it has had enough and it will begin cutting off any opportunity for debate. That is essentially what the new Minister of State said this morning.

This is distressing because we all want to get on with the business of governing Canada. We want to play our roles as government Members or as effective opposition Members. It is impossible to do that if we are not allowed to debate issues, if the Government uses its huge majority to muzzle Parliamentarians and say that it will not allow free speech or free and open debate on this or that issue.

If this is any indication of what we can expect from the new Minister of State in his role of assisting the business of the House of Commons, it will be a very, very dark fall for open parliamentary democracy in Canada. We are here to debate. We are here to work. We are here to discuss the issues of the day in a responsible, thoughtful and constructive way. To do that, there cannot be last-minute changes.

I suppose this tells us as opposition Members and, through us, the people of Canada, that the Government is out of control. It has no agenda. It does not know what it is trying to accomplish.

An Hon. Member: Get serious.

Mr. Riis: I hear people saying, "Get serious, Nelson". Fair enough. I beg the government House Leader and the new Minister of State to begin to lay out some kind of a strategy. I think we are far beyond the day when we have to come here at 10 a.m. or 11 a.m. to find out what we will do during the day. Surely to goodness a Government with such a vast majority can say, "This is our plan for the next few days, the next few weeks or the next few months". But no; day by day, hour by hour, we wonder what the Government is going to do. This sends a very clear signal that the Government does not know what it is going to do. It is directionless. It is leaderless. It has no idea what its parliamentary agenda is and, by definition, it has no idea of what its government agenda is.

On behalf of all Members of the House of Commons, and I mean as well government Members who offer constructive and useful comments during debate on various sides of an issue, I beg the government House Leader and the new Minister of State to try to work with Members of Parliament and to lay out a strategy that has a longer term than five minutes. The Government might then begin to give some indication that it is in charge of its own agenda and has an idea of where it is going.

I apologize for making these rather harsh comments so early the day after we sat so late. However, I am very worked up, and very disappointed with the new Minister. Normally we enjoy working with him. It is unfortunate that his first order of business is to curtail debate and muzzle Parliament. In a sense he is using the jackboot tactics we have seen at every stage of Bill C-22 and it is unfortunate that we are seeing it once again today.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to echo and elaborate on the comments of my House Leader. I find this a very unusual procedure. The motion before us is that the question be now put. I do not have to explain the rules to you, but that prevents any amendments to the main motion with which we are dealing. The debate on that motion started last Friday. It was debated almost every day this week. There has not been one single amendment offered by a member of the Liberal Party or the NDP, or even by the Conservatives. Why move a motion saying there will be no more amendments?

We indicated as late as 2.15 a.m. to the new Minister of State that we were not going to be doing anything unusual or using any procedural tricks. We had no intention of making any amendments. The Liberals indicated the same thing. Therefore the motion is completely unnecessary. In fact, it seems to work against co-operation among the Parties.

I can tell you, as I have told the Government, we had about three more Members who were eligible and available to speak today. Obviously this legislation was going to be completed some time today. However, we are now in a situation where all the people who have spoken since Monday are now eligible to speak again. This motion works against the Government's intentions. I now have a bunch of people who are eligible to make another speech on Bill C-22. This is completely illogical and shows that the Government did not know what it is doing. At the same time, it unnecessarily antagonizes the Opposition.

When you talk to the new Minister, the person responsible for the progress of legislation in the absence of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), and tell him that you are not going to obstruct, that you expect the legislation to be completed Monday at the latest but probably today, you assume that is acceptable. He has been in the House since last Friday when the debate commenced and he knows we have run out of speakers. It is obvious. Given an opposition Party the size of ours with 33 Members, when you speak for five days on the same topic you are going to run out of speakers. The Liberals with 40 Members are going to do the same thing. Therefore I have to ask the new Minister of State why he would do something which only provokes the Opposition and at the same time enables it to prolong the debate for another week if it desires.

I think this really shows the paranoid attitude of the Government towards Bill C-22. Yesterday we had a bunch of Tory back-benchers ranting and raving because the CBC did not cover for two nights in a row the hired demonstrators outside on the Hill.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Is that a nice way to talk about Canadian workers?

Mr. Murphy: That was the situation. That was the concern of the Conservative back-benchers. They did not talk about unemployment or problems in their ridings. They were concerned about what the CBC did or did not cover on The National last night. Then today at ten o'clock when the House convenes we have a motion put which allows the Opposition to drag out this legislation for another week when the Government knew we had no intention of doing so. I really do not feel I would be upset if one of our Members had a few more words to say. The Government has now given us the opportunity to make one more speech per Member.

We do not intend to stall the legislation. We intend to keep our word despite the provocation and tactical stupidity of the new Minister. It was completely stupid and completely unnecessary and I think in some ways unforgivable and I hope he will apologize to Members of the House.

Mr. Beatty: I hope you will apologize to the workers of Canada.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I hope to speak briefly about the Government's tactics in just a few minutes, but I want to speak about the main motion which rejects the majority of Senate amendments to the Patent Act.

I am reminded of a Vancouver woman who some years ago married an up-coast logger and went to live with him at his float camp on an isolated inlet in British Columbia. In the first week at her new residence she decided she was going to bake some fresh bread for her new husband as a special treat. Something went wrong and the bread did not rise properly. Not wanting her husband to make fun of her when he came home, she decided to get rid of the bread. She took it out and threw it into the salt chuck. However, if the bread did not rise properly, it would not sink either. Instead, the tide carried it out, but not very far. The next tide carried it right back in. When her husband came home there was this ungodly-looking mess for him to see and ask what it was all about. For the next several days the tide would carry the bread out and then bring it right back.

Mr. Beatty: Yes, but she cast her bread on the waters.

Mr. Manly: Now we have Bill C-22 back on our doorstep when it should have been given a decent burial.

I suppose I should congratulate the Government on one significant achievement with regard to Bill C-22. Perhaps it is the Government's most significant achievement over the past three years. It is something that none of us could have expected. With Bill C-22 the Government made the Senate look good. Only a reactionary Tory Government playing sycophant to Uncle Sam and the American drug industry could have made that obsolete, undemocratic relic of 19th century colonialism, filled with Liberal patronage appointments, look good. The Government has managed to do that and I say, congratulations.

The Government has now announced closure. That is not surprising. Every stage of this Bill has been rammed through by the Government with some form of closure or time allocation. The Conservatives have not been willing to allow the debate on this issue to run its full course. They have had to introduce some form of closure to ram it through.

All of us, opposition Members as well as Government, would like to be able to salvage a little bit of the summer. We are not anxious to prolong any debate. However, the NDP wants to see that the issues are properly raised, and in spite of my own personal wish to be back on Vancouver Island visiting my constituency and enjoying the sunshine, the beaches and beautiful scenery, I am not going to abdicate my responsibility to speak out against a Bill which is so contrary to the interests of ordinary Canadians.

During the last couple of days we have seen a few demonstrators on Parliament Hill calling for passage of C-22. I have no doubt that those people are sincere, even though I understand their pilgrimage here was heavily subsidized by the drug companies. The Tories claim that somehow this demonstration represents strong grassroots support for Bill C-22. If that were really the case I think the Government would have wanted to let the movement build a little before killing it by bringing in closure. If this measure were all that popular with the Canadian people would it not be natural for the Government to let the Canadians see that the Opposition is just being obstructionist?

Instead the Government is bringing in closure because it does not want the people to see this debate. The Government knows that the more Canadians know about this Bill the more they will oppose it. Any window dressing such as the demonstration the other day does not really convince the Government that it has any real popular support.

We have documented time and again the real reasons for this Bill. It is an appetizer for American business interests as they get ready for the great free trade barbeque. Perhaps a little bit of history would help us understand. Up until 1969 Canadians paid the highest drug prices in the world. Under this Bill we will revert to those times.

In conclusion, Madam Speaker, let us remember the words of Joe Wallace who said:

Ours is a sovereign nation
Bows to no foreign will
But whenever they cough in Washington

They spit on Parliament Hill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 13(5) the division stands deferred until six o'clock p.m., Monday, August 31, 1987.

CRIMINAL CODE, IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 AND CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act, as reported (without amendment) from a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): There are five motions at report stage of Bill C-71, all standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer). All of these motions were moved in committee and debated there and all of them were negatived. It is with regret, therefore, that I must inform the Hon. Member that under the powers granted to me by the Standing Orders none of his motions will be selected for debate at report stage.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada) moved that Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Mazankowski moved that the Bill be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to address this Bill at third reading. I shall not take a lot of the time of the House because I know there is an interest in proceeding quickly to pass this Bill at third reading.

Bill C-71 flows out of the efforts of the Government, through the setting up of the Deschênes Commission, to examine the issue of war crimes. I believe the Deschênes Commission served a very worthwhile purpose for our country. It put to rest the nagging question of whether or not there are Second World War criminals in Canada who were either allowed here illegally or came here legally having somehow escaped paying any penalty for their actions during World War II.

I believe the commission served a very useful purpose for a great many people, those who suffered under a threat that there may have been some wrong-doing, and others who suffered under no threat but wanted the matter cleared up. I believe that a great service was done for the country in the settling, once and for all, through the Deschênes Commission, of exactly who should be prosecuted and what laws should be put in place to enable that prosecution.

Bill C-71 was debated for a short time in the House and went to committee where it had a full hearing. My colleague, the Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer), who is interested in this subject, had the opportunity at committee to move his amendments. They were defeated in committee and the Chair has ruled them out of order. We are, therefore, now on third reading debate.

In conclusion, we are pleased that we have reached third reading of this very important Bill. There seems to be a disposition in the House that this measure receive third reading as soon as possible in order that prosecutions under this law can proceed. I would like to thank the members of both opposition Parties for their efforts and their co-operation.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Madam Speaker, we have reached an important stage today in the making of Canada into a truly just and civilized society. We are finally giving third reading to a Bill which will, when passed by the Senate and proclaimed, give the criminal justice system of Canada the tool for bringing war criminals present in Canada to justice within our own country.

I want to congratulate the Government for bringing the Bill to the stage which has been reached today. I want to acknowledge, as the Minister has, the co-operation which he has received from the Official Opposition and from the NDP. That co-operation was more than necessary due to the urgency of dealing with this matter.

As I say, the country has become a more just society because of the step being taken today, but it is almost too late because, albeit not exclusively, in the main the Bill is directed toward bringing to justice individuals responsible for some of the worst crimes committed in the history of mankind. These crimes were committed with the aid of official government policy and with the resources of the state. They were committed, with the technology that our modern civilization has created, and were directed toward the killing of innocent men, women and children.

• (1040)

Why is it necessary to bring these war criminals to justice so many years later? There are many reasons. I grew up as a member of the Jewish community, safe in Canada, but knowing of the holocaust being perpetrated in Europe and having relatives there, knowing of the unsuccessful efforts that millions made before the Second World War to come to Canada and other countries where the doors were closed. Following the war there was a long period when nothing at all was done by any of the countries which should have been interested, because of their commitment during the war and the victory for which they were responsible.

In the course of the last four or five years public opinion has finally come to recognize that the greatest crimes of all time might go unpunished, unpunished with the complicity of democratic countries that should have known better and which have a rich tradition of being committed to righting wrongs and seeing justice done. Why do we have to do it now?

Sometimes I hear people make the point that it is inevitable that people are killed in wars, and one should not make a special point of characterizing the act of war, when innocent people are killed, as one that should attract special punishment after the war is over. One hears people say that it happened, it is over, and we should try to forget and put the past behind us.

However, we must remember that the deaths we are talking about, in the overwhelming majority of cases, were not of people who were killed in the course of war. They were not people who died because their cities were bombed. They were not people who were struck by bullets straying from the valid targets of both sides in a war.

We are talking about an evil—as I think it can only be characterized—demographic policy of the Nazis which was not enforced during an actual battle. We are talking about events which took place in city after city, country after country, during the war, after a battle, after a military authority was established in each jurisdiction. There was an evil demographic policy by which people in the captive nations were rounded up and placed in concentration camps.

That is an act that could not have been done during actual fighting, but after the fighting and during the establishment of fascist governments in each of these jurisdictions. Innocent people were rounded up and systematically slaughtered, using all of the resources of the state. Hard pressed railway lines were being diverted, and hard pressed administrators, with a losing war to continue, were taking time out of their busy schedule—if I can put it in that bizarre fashion—to kill millions and millions of innocent people who had been captured, including Ukrainians, Jews, and gypsies. People of every nationality were rounded up for slaughter. To say that this type of conduct can be forgiven after a war, because it happened in the course of a war, is unthinkable and totally unacceptable. I am pleased to see that this is recognized in the measure we are passing today with the support of all three Parties.

People also ask how one can prove cases. We can look at the Demjanjuk trial in Jerusalem. I had the opportunity three weeks ago to spend a day talking with the individuals involved in the conduct of the trial about some of the issues of evidence. In Israel, as in Canada, the highest standards of evidence continue to be applied. There must be absolute respect for the rule of law.

I am glad to note that nothing in this legislation diminishes in any way the safeguards which are available to any individual charged with any serious crime in Canada. I know that if it were otherwise it would be difficult to defend the legislation. However, now, even 43 years later, prosecution is still possible. I am looking forward with great anticipation to such trials.

I had responsibility for many aspects of the Rauca trial when it occurred. It was an extradition proceeding and I was concerned with the preparation of evidence and submission of evidence. I can assure the House that none of the safeguards of evidence that are required for any other accused person will be denied to individuals who are prosecuted under the law which is being brought forward today. It is a feature of the law which I very much commend.

Let me make one final point in this connection. One sometimes hears an argument against prosecuting war criminals because war criminals have suffered enough and have lived for decades with the full knowledge of their crime. I will refer to the case of Helmut Rauca. Helmut Rauca, who lived a few blocks from my constituency for 30 years, killed with his own actual physical involvement 15,400 people in one day. All of the evidence brought in that extradition trial related to Mr. Rauca's activities in one day.

After the city had been secured by German military forces, the Gestapo moved in, rounded up innocent people who were sleeping and waiting anxiously in their homes, took them to a central plaza in the city and shipped them to their deaths. Some argue that conduct like that must weigh heavily on an individual, and knowing that they could have been subject to prosecution all those years must have filled them with horror and remorse.

I watched the trials that have occurred over the last few years. I hope Canadians watched the Barbie trial which was widely reported here in Canada, and the Rauca trial. You do not see individuals who have suffered great remorse. Of course, we are not yet in a position to draw a conclusion in the Demjanjuk trial. However, in case after case where conclusions have been reached, one sees individuals who feel totally justified in what they did. They have their own explanations. When the facts are out and undeniable, and the conviction obtained, we see individuals who feel totally justified in what they did. It is a situation that cannot be left unremedied in a civilized nation.

I am not naive enough, as I hope no one is, to think that, with the power man has to commit atrocities like those which were committed in World War II, it will never happen again. I believe it can happen again, but I feel that the measure we have taken today in passing this legislation is one factor which will be borne in mind by those who would commit such atrocities in the future. They will keep in mind that there will be no safe haven in any fair-minded, decent country in the world.

I think the main reaction of Canadians when the Rauca case developed was that they were appalled. They were appalled to realize that among us there were unpunished individuals who had committed those crimes, whose identity, in some cases, were known to the Government or to other individuals, yet nothing had been done about it for decades.

• (1050)

In passing this legislation, we are sending a strong message about our civilization. The message is that that type of conduct will not go unpunished. Even 10 years, 20 years, 42 and 43 years later, as it is, a decent country will permit no haven. Canada is now becoming one of those countries, and there are a few of them, which are making that statement.

I directed all my remarks so far to the events of World War II. In the committee I proposed an amendment which was actually moved by another member. It was defeated. If enacted, it would have widened the scope of authority to the Attorney General to lay charges against more individuals who commit war crimes and crimes against humanity. The definition is limited for reasons which those who are interested can read. They were put forward in the committee. But to my way of thinking the scope of the legislation should have been broader.

As I indicated on second reading, I thought that war criminals and criminals guilty of crimes against humanity, have appeared not only in the forum of World War II, and not only in western Europe, but in other places, in Asia, Central America and Africa. I ask anyone who thinks World War II could never happen again, that the Holocaust could never happen again, to look at some of these places in the world I mentioned where crimes have occurred and where survivors and others from that country have come to our country and made Canada their homeland.

We cannot ignore the injustices and crimes which, within their lifetime, have been committed against them if those guilty of committing those crimes have also come to our country. We cannot say that we want to bring justice, in the World War II context, but that we want to ignore it in relation to crimes against humanity which have occurred in Asia, Latin America, Africa, and the other places I mentioned. As an example, I could mention Haiti which was much in the news about a year ago. I wanted a law which would be broad enough to ensure that, by our very high standards of justice, where a case could be made against an individual present in Canada, by witnesses who could come to Canada, or who are in Canada, and tell their story, that that would be done. The Government can correctly point out that the legislation is not directed only toward World War II, but it could have been broader.

I had some other amendments I wanted to explain as well to the House, but I see that with eleven o'clock approaching we may lose the opportunity to give third reading to the Bill right now, and I would very much like that to be done.

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park): Madam Speaker, let me begin, in the time remaining, by stating very clearly that in my opinion Bill C-71 is a positive step to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act, after decades of neglect, of pretending the problem did not exist and of cover up. It is the first serious attempt by a Canadian Government to bring war criminals and those who committed crimes against humanity to justice. Yet, in my opinion, the Bill has a serious flaw. It should have been amended to comply with the principles of equity and civil liberties in Canadian law.

As it now reads, the Bill differentiates between crimes committed during periods of war and crimes committed during periods when Canada is not at war. But the problem is not in the differentiation of crimes. It is in the discrimination of the current wording of the Bill, levels against perpetuation of crimes against humanity when Canada was not involved in armed conflict. Clause 1(a) states that the crime must be committed by a Canadian citizen or an employee of Canada in a civilian or military capacity, by a citizen of a country with which Canada is at war. The victim must be either a Canadian citizen or a citizen of an allied state while Canada is at war. Clause 1(b), dealing with non-wartime crimes, states that at the time of the crime Canada would, in conformity with international law, exercise jurisdiction over the person with respect to the act or omission on the basis of the person's presence in Canada and subsequent to the time of the crime the person is present in Canada. No such restrictions are required for crimes committed while Canada is at war.

While in theory the Bill will permit prosecution of Canadian residents for any war crime or crime against humanity committed anywhere, the complex wording of the Bill would make it easier to prosecute some war criminals than others. The Bill may work well against suspected Nazis from World War II, but would allow others to escape justice; for example, former Soviet citizens who helped orchestrate the state imposed Ukrainian famine of 1933. To have easier access to the courts for some crimes than for others risks making the victims of some crimes feel their sufferings are being slighted and that Canada is treating them as lesser human beings.

Moreover, there is a risk that with two equally well documented crimes, one falling into paragraph 1(a) and the other falling into paragraph 1(b), the latter could fail to reach the courts due to an erroneous, narrow view of the Crown prosecutors as to what international law permits.

I am sure all Canadians would agree that any legislation dealing with war criminals should be of a quality sufficient to ensure that all and any war criminals found in Canada, regardless of when the crime took place, or of the criminals religious, ethnic or racial origin, are brought to trial in Canada under Canadian criminal law. In other words, a crime is a crime and a victim is a victim regardless of when and where the crime occurs.

The Government argues that the current wording of the Bill in fact meets these stringent requirements. For the sake of justice, I hope my interpretation is wrong and that the Government's interpretation is correct.

In closing, let me again congratulate the Government and both justice critics from the Opposition Parties for their co-operation and for bringing a " made in Canada" solution to this very important problem.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Madam Speaker, it is an honour to take part in the third reading debate on Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976, and the Citizenship Act. It is an honour because this legislation represents the culmination of a great deal of work by many, many people. At the same time, this legislation will bring about the opportunity for justice to be served against those responsible for the heinous crimes against humanity committed over 40 years ago.

It is important that we never forget these crimes or allow the perpetrators of them to continue to live freely. We must always be vigilant in order that the racism, hatred and anti-Semitism that was the foundation of Nazi ideology cannot be repeated. Such crimes against humanity are unimaginable still to this day, yet they must be imagined and remembered. It is, therefore, a tribute today in passing this Bill in the House of Commons to the memory of the millions who were murdered at the hands of war criminals.

It is never too late and, although the Canadian Government under previous administrations has a shameless record in this area, I would today recognize the work of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), and the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), who have had a continuing interest in this area for many years. As well, the former Minister of Justice, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), deserves full recognition for appointing the Commission of Inquiry into War Criminals back in February, 1985. It was this Commission, ably led by Mr. Justice Deschênes, that has been the focus of our work for the past two and a half years. His report is a landmark in the area of war criminals. It served as the basis for this important legislation.

• (1100)

As well, the work of Mrs. Alti Rodal which was commissioned by Justice Deschênes should also be recognized today. Her study was both comprehensive and eloquent. We still urge the Government today to act upon Mrs. Rodal's request and the recommendation of the Deschênes Commission and release the entire study Nazi War Criminals in Canada.

One final group has been crucial to the passage of this legislation. I would like to give recognition today to the North American Jewish Students' Network. This group provided hours worth of meticulous and concise research, not only for my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby, but also for all other committee members. Special recognition should be given to Mr. Ken Narvey who worked tirelessly in order that this legislation would be passed. I know that all Members of the House appreciate the work he has done.

Canadians have witnessed many, many times the trials in recent years. We all feel very strongly that justice has been meted out in appropriate terms as individuals who committed heinous crimes have been recognized in terms of the dastardly deeds they committed.

The question often raised is this. Will the Holocaust ever happen again? I think it is only fair that when we look around the world today, whether we look to Africa, Asia, South America or the Caribbean, we find there are crimes being committed against humanity in these parts of the world. It is important more than ever before that Canada not become a hide-out, a safe haven for those individuals who have been involved in perpetrating these heinous crimes.

Finally, we must now look to the future. This legislation will be passed shortly. The work will then be turned over to the special team assembled at the Department of Justice. It is important that we have reached this stage in the legislation. The New Democratic Party calls upon the Minister of Justice, as was strongly recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes in recommendation 81-c, to ensure that ample financial resources be given to this team in order that the work it carries out is thorough and complete.

Clearly, after 42 years of inaction we owe it not only to the memories of those who have died but also to their families who have suffered in surviving.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

THE ADMINISTRATION

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION-PRICE WATERHOUSE STUDY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the Price Waterhouse study was submitted, it was clear that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion—he must have had a dressing-down by the Prime Minister, and we saw the results in the Cabinet shuffle—that in recent weeks and months the Minister had failed in his duty to Parliament and the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that several times during the past few weeks, I raised the subject of the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and more specifically, the fact that the Department was completely "broke". And every time, Mr. Speaker, the Minister categorically denied what we said. He said it was false, and today, we see that we were right about this grim state of affairs, and it has cost him his Cabinet post.

I think we have every reason to congratulate Price Waterhouse on their study, but we also have many reasons to be concerned about the way this Government is administering its departments. One wonders how a Minister could let his own Department get into such a mess. We happened to pick on this particular Department but I get the impression that many Ministers spend more time doing just about everything except administering their Department efficiently. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister who has some experience in financial administration, will restore the necessary controls in his new post because frankly, the former Minister failed utterly.

SENIOR CITIZENS

RECOGNITION THROUGH APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER OF STATE

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, all too often the role that our seniors play in society is seriously underestimated and overlooked. Life does not stop after retirement. Our seniors can, and do, play a vital role in all aspects of Canadian life.

Yesterday Canada's seniors received long overdue, proper parliamentary recognition. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) set a wonderful precedent when he appointed my colleague, the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mr. Hees), as the Minister of State for Senior Citizens.

This is an historic initiative for all seniors, as they now have a direct voice to represent their concerns in Parliament.

Bert Hanmer, one of my constituents and a lifetime member of the Senior Citizens Council of Ottawa-Carleton, and all of his golden era colleagues, will now be able to make representations to Parliament through this wise, caring and experienced Minister.

After all that the seniors of our country have done and continue to do for Canada I am sure that every Member of the House welcomes this new Ministry.

Congratulations, Mr. Hees!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HERBICIDES

USE ON PARLIAMENT HILL LAWNS

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was shocked this morning to see a sign on the West Block lawn stating: "This area treated with herbicide. Use at your own risk". "Secteur traité à l'herbicide. A vos risques".

The lawns of the House of Commons have always been a people place. They are not only to be well kept so that they are attractive to look at, but they should also be kept as an area that can be safely used and enjoyed by the people of Canada. Even crab-grass is better than herbicide. But lawn maintenance should not require herbicides.

The House of Commons should set an example for ecological sanity in a world that is turning irresponsible use of herbicides and pesticides into world suicide.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH ASSISTANCE PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT FUNDING

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, last week the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle) announced that $18 million in new funding would be given to the granting councils to support university research. On Tuesday, August 25, the former Minister of Supply and Services (Mrs. Vézina) announced that $30 million in new funding would be provided to the Unsolicited Proposals Program, a program to promote advanced technology manufacturing.

Yesterday, the Minister of State for Science and Technology announced that the Government will be providing $28 million in new funding to the National Research Council to support the IRAP, one of our most successful industrial programs. This program helps small companies use research developed at our universities and in government laboratories. Larkin

Kerwin, President of the National Research Council, said: "This is very welcome news, both for the NRC and the industrial sector".

The Government consulted with industry and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) advisory board before making the decision to supply the extra funding to IRAP. The increased support for IRAP demonstrates the Government's commitment to research and technology.

HOUSING

SHORTAGE OF PUBLIC HOUSING IN METROPOLITAN TORONTO

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the public housing situation in Metro Toronto has reached desperate proportions—5,900 families are on the list of those waiting for public housing. At the end of June the number had climbed to 7,200, and with the influx of college and university students at this time of year the number has greatly increased. Some 700 to 1,000 of these families are truly desperate.

Unsuspected is the effect of this crisis on children. These families pay so much for rent that they can only afford housing that is not big enough for their families, and there is not enough money left for food and clothing. The effect on the children is that they are doing poorly at school for lack of sleep, illness as a result of stress, and lack of ability to remain clean. A lack of proper cooking facilities in the home leads to bad nutrition—and the list goes on.

• (1110)

I call on all levels of government to establish immediately an ad hoc committee to investigate this urgent matter. I urge the Minister responsible for housing to take leadership in this issue. The future of our children in Metro Toronto depends on it.

BANKS AND BANKING

CONSUMER LOANS—HIGH INTEREST RATE CHARGES

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, many people who have high unpaid credit card balances are often given advice to go to the bank and meet with their friendly bank manager and arrange a consumer loan. This sounds wonderful until they try to practise it.

Many people have written to me and indicated that when they approach certain banks they cannot obtain a loan unless it is much larger than the amount they need. Others who go into other banks find that small loans are available at the same interest rates as those charged on a credit card. Clearly the objective is to tie the consumer by the chains of excessive interest.

I hope that there will be widespread all-Party support for a Bill that I intend to introduce which will offer more protection to consumers.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—INVESTORS' LOSSES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, two days ago more than 2,500 people who were investors in the two failed Principal Group companies gathered in an Edmonton sports arena to hear first hand how they were victimized by an incompetent and, many feel, fraudulent use of their money.

These investors purchased investment certificates that they were told were guaranteed in full by assets held by the Principal Group with Canadian chartered banks. However, the real story is quite different. It has now been revealed that these assets were seriously over-valued. When the assets are liquidated they will cover no more than 60 per cent of the losses faced by the investors. We heard this story before when the Canadian Commercial Bank collapsed, when Northland Bank collapsed, and when Pioneer Trust and other financial institutions bit the dust.

This deception of both investors and depositors must stop. The New Democratic Party wishes a closer co-operation between provincial and federal regulators to ensure that the financial institutions meet the most stringent test of managerial competence and honesty. Farmers, working families, senior citizens, and others should not be left out in the cold when unscrupulous and incompetent financial managers fail to live up to their promises.

I urge the Government to be vigilant and take action to improve regulation and supervision, sponsor a full public inquiry into the matter, and introduce legislation that requires waiver forms to be signed if CDIC or other insurance does not apply to a deposit or an investment. This action is an absolute must if we hope to preserve regional financial institutions.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

BILL C-22—ALLEGED NDP PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, once again the Senate will be asked to follow the lead of the democratically elected with respect to Bill C-22, legislation that according to our calculations will create 1,300 jobs in the province of Quebec and attract $700 million in investment. I said acccording to us, Mr. Speaker, because in the fall of 1986, an article published in Le Devoir économique and signed by Françoise Côté, predicted 10,000 jobs in Montreal as a result of Bill C-22.

At that time, the New Democratic Party distributed across Canada a form drafted in English: Fund for Fair Drug Prices. In the form Canadians were urged to kill Bill C-22, which would of course kill the 10,000 jobs mentioned in Le Devoir. The form was in English only, and this was also an opportunity to do some campaigning and collect money. Mr. Speaker, this is the form drafted by the Socialists I am sorry, it is in English only-:

[English]

"Each $100 gift will enable us to send 400 more letters like this one".

[Translation]

Which means letters aimed at killing Bill C-22. The New Democratic Party is using taxpayers' money to campaign against Bill C-22 and against 10,000 jobs in Quebec.

We thank the Socialists on behalf of the province of Quebec and all Francophones in this country. Thank you very so you have been a great help in defending the cause of Bill C-22. We will remember that.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—COMMITTEE APPEARANCE BY FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday private citizen Trudeau appeared before the Special Joint Committee on the 1987 Constitutional Accord. He was great.

He spoke about the cultivation of a national spirit and of a Canadian patriotism. He said that the proposed Accord weakens the national spirit because it gives greater powers to the provinces and nothing in return to the federal Government. He said that because of the Accord there will be greater powers for the provinces. "It's more than a triumph for provincial patriotism over national patriotism," he said. "This Accord digs right into the very essence of Canadian nationalism. The Accord saps the strength of the elements that compose a modern state".

"Towards one's country, one's nation, one's people," Mr. Trudeau said, "there must be a loyalty greater than the sum of the loyalties toward the provinces". The Accord undermines this greater loyalty.

Canadians appreciate what Mr. Trudeau says. The Accord is not good for Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—GLOBE AND MAIL EDITORIAL

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, it continues to concern me that many Canadians are living in the dark ages with respect to a new trading arrangement between Canada and the United States. They should read the editorial in The Globe and Mail of August 27. I wish to quote in part from that editorial:

> Free trade is coming down to a choice between critical judgment and uncritical opposition . . . free trade's opponents are withdrawing even more aggressively into rigid and negative postures.
> How is the national interest served by campaigns on the political left to prejudge a trade agreement with the United States? How are workers protected by purported leaders who reject out of hand the bulk of studies showing significant potential benefits to workers?

We may not get a deal. But why do my colleagues on the left insist on having no real faith in Canadians?

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX FROM PENSIONERS IN MANITOBA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, it has come to my attention that Canadian National has sent out a letter to its pensioners in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and British Columbia. In this letter CN announces that it will be deducting income tax off their pension cheques retroactive to January 1, 1987.

It concerns me that in this letter they refer to income tax increases in the Province of Manitoba. Those income tax increases became effective on July 1, 1987, not January 1, 1987. There is no justification whatever for CN to go back to January 1, 1987, and tell its pensioners that it will be deducting more than normal in these coming six months to make up for the period from January to July when that tax increase was not in effect from January to July.

God knows how it screwed it up with respect to the other provinces, but we know for sure with respect to Manitoba that CN is wrong in the manner it is going ahead with regard to income tax deductions from pensioners' cheques.

I know that pensioners have raised this issue, and I hope that by my raising it here CN will very soon rectify this situation that should not have happened in the first instance.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PREMIERS' POSITION—IMPOSITION OF U.S. TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that yesterday in a major communiqué the Premiers accused the United States of bad faith in its trade relations with Canada. The Premiers have called upon Canada to take the strongest possible retaliatory actions against the various forms of trade harassment, the latest case being that of potash.

We have received absolutely no response from the Government on the potash issue. There has been no letter of protest, no sign of strong reaction, no effort to deal with what could be the destruction of a major industry in this country.

In light of that demand by the Premiers that we use all strategic instruments possible to retaliate against the trade harassment by the United States on the potash issue, among others, what does the Government intend to do about that demand? Will we receive some action?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member finally realizes that there is a protectionist mood in the United States which has been developing for some time.

Three years ago the Prime Minister realized that and initiated trade talks with the United States because of its protectionist attitude. Those negotiations are presently ongoing.

In the communiqué from the Premiers, I do not believe that they said to retaliate in the strongest terms. I believe they want Canada to take firm action. We are taking firm action. As we speak this morning here in the House, negotiations are going on and are proceeding quite favourably. We hope that there will be a successful conclusion to those negotiations in order that this protectionist attitude in the United States will not affect Canada once these trade negotiations come to a successful conclusion.

• (1120)

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary, I go back to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is quite clear that the Parliamentary Secretary has not read the communiqué from the Premiers where they make a direct request to use every available strategic instrument in retaliation against the specific cases of trade harassment. I simply say to the Parliamentary Secretary that in the last three years we have had more cases of trade harassment from the United States than in the previous 25 years. So much for those negotiations.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, whom I presume might speak for the Government, when will we get action? When will the Government do something about the potash case and the other cases rather than simply providing concession after concession in the free trade talks? When will the Government start defending Canadian interests directly with the United States?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to reassure the Hon. Member that the Parliamentary Secretary speaks for the Government when he answers questions, and I think he does it in a very articulate and informed manner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Second, the Hon. Member knows that there is, as the Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, a growing protectionist mood in the United States, and that, particularly, is why the Prime Minister exercised leadership in attempting to address this very serious problem through the discussions in the attempts to negotiate a comprehensive free trade arrangement.

One of the components of that comprehensive trade arrangement is an effective and an adequate disputes resolving mechanism. I think the Premiers in their communiqué very much struck that point.

That is the essence of the long term solution. I know the Hon. Member likes to engage in ad hoc solutions. We are attempting to address this in a comprehensive way. If the Hon. Member would get onside and join forces with the Government, we could present a unified force and make our case that much better to the United States of America.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, to be invited to join a three year string of absolute failures when it comes to dealing with the United States is like being asked to jump off a cliff.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in the communiqué, the Premiers specifically requested or demanded—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Which was it, Lloyd?

Mr. Axworthy: —that any comprehensive agreement must include a binding arbitrary mechanism—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A binding arbitrary mechanism? Come on now, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: They did not say adequate, they did not say effective, they said a binding mechanism, which is very different language from what the Government is now using.

Can we get a guarantee from the Government that it will not sign or initial any agreement that does not include a binding dispute mechanism? Not the adequate one the Minister is talking about, but a binding mechanism that would require the United States to accept those solutions, rather than simply having more of the kinds of concessionary consultations that we have now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has said on many occasions that there will be no deal unless it is a good deal for Canada.

Mr. Axworthy: Binding or not?

Mr. Gauthier: You are backing away.

Mr. Mazankowski: A comprehensive trade arrangement without an adequate dispute resolving mechanism certainly would not be considered as an adequate deal for Canada.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—APPOINTMENT OF SUPREME COURT JUDGES

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of Justice was asked by me whether it was deliberate or an accident that there was no provision for the Territories to submit names for consideration for appointment to the Senate and the Supreme Court of Canada under the Meech Lake Accord. He refused to answer the question on the grounds that there was a court case in which the grievance of the Territories was being considered.

If the court case is that important, will the Minister of Justice agree that the ratification of the Accord should wait until that court case is settled and the Minister can answer the question?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think this is probably the first time in my parliamentary career that I have been accused of obfuscation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No? Maybe it is the second time, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As the Hon. Member knows, there is adequate precedent with respect to the political proceedings going on, notwithstanding the fact that there are matters before the court.

I only refer by way of example to the fact that in the time in which Mr. Trudeau—you will remember him, I think—was the Prime Minister, he had, in fact, put forward a reference to the Supreme Court of Canada with respect to the Senate and the powers of the Senate. This did not preclude us from carrying on political responsibilities.

The matter is before the courts. It will be dealt with there. It seems to me it has been dealt with rather expeditiously at this point in time. At the same time I take it that the Member speaks on behalf of his Party, hoping that we will move forward with the Meech Lake Accord to ratify this most important Accord for Canada.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Minister of Justice that Mr. Trudeau also took political responsibility for what he was doing.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Never.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL DECISION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in this case the Minister of Justice and the Government are not telling us whether this grievance of the Territories is the result of a deliberate decision that they not be allowed to put lists forward or whether that was an oversight. It is a simple question. The grievance before the court has nothing to do with it. Why can't the Minister just answer the question?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is one of the members of the joint committee dealing with this important issue. He has a daily opportunity to question witnesses, speaking to the spokespersons on behalf of the Government, with respect to any aspect of this matter he cares to raise.

With respect to this particular issue, I have answered it adequately. I have said to the Hon. Member that we take the position that the Accord is a good one for Canada. I hope the Hon. Member is not trying to change the position of the Liberal Party to support this wholeheartedly, notwithstanding representations to the contrary.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REPORTS ON OPERATIONS AND FINANCIAL CONTROL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister.

In the midst of an emergency debate on back-to-work legislation yesterday and the appearance of a former Prime Minister before an important committee of the House, the Government tabled two documents that I am sure it hoped would be totally obliterated by this news, a Price Waterhouse study on the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion's operations, and an internal study.

The Price Waterhouse study says with reference to DRIE financial control that it "was not given a high priority". In fact there was no report until half-way through 1986-87. When it was done the information in the Department itself was incomplete and conflicting. The internal study said "no alarm bells were triggered" at that time in the Ministry, and they were not triggered until the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville raised the scandal about $100 million being misspent.

Considering there is absolute proof of total incompetence in management by the then Minister, why is it that this Minister, instead of being sacked, was given new responsibility for a Department that will be spending millions of dollars of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wrong, Ed.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer my hon. colleague by telling him that as soon as we found out at the Ministry that there were serious overspending problems, the then Minister and his deputy immediately, as they should, asked for those two studies, one internal and one external.

The studies identified the problems and made a number of recommendations to solve them. Those recommendations are being acted upon and Price-Waterhouse has also been retained to ensure that they will be implemented as quickly as possible. Treasury Board followed the situation throughout the period and acted as expeditiously as possible to correct any flaws that existed in the operations of the Department. I would also like to say that those actions were taken well before any question was raised in this House.

• (1130)

DISCHARGE OF MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada have been asked to believe a lot by the Government. I will not elaborate on that particular observation, but I would like to ask a question of the Minister or the Deputy Prime Minister who should be speaking for the Prime Minister on this matter.

It has been shown beyond doubt that there was gross mismanagement, not by some junior clerk at some distant outpost, but right here in Ottawa at the highest level of the bureaucracy. Instead of accepting ministerial responsibility which the Government should do, why has the Minister, who ought to have had control of his Department and clearly did not, now been put in charge of another Department with responsibilities for spending additional millions of dollars?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the Minister was made aware of the difficulties being experienced in the Department, he commissioned the two studies. The Treasury Board was immediately notified and brought into the picture so that we could follow the process. Obviously, before acting we wanted to have a full diagnostic of exactly what was going on. As soon as we got it—

Mr. Broadbent: As soon as we got it?

Mr. de Cotret: Yes, as soon as we got it, we took measures. We took measures on July 15 and on July 30. We acted by implementing a new regime for financial control and management in the Department.

I feel that the tabling of the two documents, far from indicating as the Hon. Member would suggest a Government that is trying to hide from the facts, indicates a Government that is willing to put all the facts on the table. They are all there. Hon. Members have all the information and we are willing to give them all the briefings they would possibly want on how we will correct the situation.

KNOWLEDGE OF DEPARTMENT'S SPENDING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister seems to be ignoring what was said in the report and what I quoted. It said that for half of fiscal year 1986-87 there was no financial report about what was going on presumably brought to the Minister's attention. Presumably the people of Canada were thinking at this time that the Minister was in control of his Department and would ensure that he knew what was going on with spending.

I direct a question to the Minister since he is now cleverly in the position of answering, not the other Minister, one day after the report has been tabled. I would suggest that that is not accidental.

Does the Government accept as reasonable procedure that a Minister would have no knowledge for six months of spending that is going on in his Department? Is that the Government's definition of managerial competence? It is not the definition of the people of Canada.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to point out two things to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. First, there was a lack of financial control and we have admitted that. The reports point that out very clearly and there is a good reason for it. There is not an excuse but an explanation for it.

Going back throughout the years, in 1982-83 the Department underspent its budget by 30 per cent. The following year it underspent its budget by 24 per cent. The following year it underspent its budget by 20 per cent. The following year it underspent its budget by 24 per cent. It was continually underspending and I presume from what the reports indicate that this led to a lack of adequate financial control. They were always underspending.

The fact that the economy is now booming has led to a record number of requests under the existing programs of DRIE. That led to the situation as we now know it.

Since the reports were tabled and while we were going through the exercise this summer, we introduced new measures for budgeting, forecasting, financial reporting, financial control and program management. We appointed a new Deputy Minister, a new Assistant Deputy Minister in charge of finance, and soon we will appoint a new controller to ensure that this kind of situation will never repeat itself.

GOVERNMENT'S ADMINISTRATION OF DEPARTMENTS—CONFIDENCE OF CANADIANS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the new Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, who is responsible for DRIE. I am a little disappointed in his initial response and performance as Minister. I am trying to understand the Minister's logic. He wants to justify a short-fall of $350 million by saying that during the last two or three years they had a surplus and so there was no control over spending. This is like saying: Well I had a surplus in my family budget during the last month, so next month we'll go on a spending spree.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister what assurance Canadians, what assurance taxpayers have that this short-fall of $350 million is not repeated in other departments where no investigation has been conducted. How can Canadians be expected to trust this Government, which lost $350 million, to administer its other departments and the money they pay in taxes?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I want to be quite clear. There is a problem. I am not trying to deny that. There is a problem. But what I am trying to explain to Hon. Members is that as soon as we were aware of the nature of this problem, steps were taken immediately to deal with it, and we now have mechanisms to ensure there will be no recurrence of the problem that existed at DRIE. Furthermore, while I was in my previous post, the Comptroller General of Canada was asked to immediately investigate all other departments with similar budgets, to ensure that financial controls were in place so that this type of situation could not develop.

MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister who until yesterday was the President of Treasury Board—after all he didn't see the $350 million worth of commitments either. Three hundred and fifty million dollars—that ain't hay! How could anyone not notice what was going on? What I want to ask the Minister is, how can we be expected to count on him after he let this pass as if it were nothing? How can we count on him to take control of this Department and ensure that commitments are met and that money doesn't just disappear?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I will say it again. It would take too long to explain all this during Question Period, and I would be delighted to talk to the Hon. Member privately.

We have taken all the necessary measures to ensure the Department's commitments do not exceed the amounts voted by this House. These measures include the budgetary aspect, the estimates, spending, the way the Department's financial reports are done, financial controls at the Department, and also a review of the criteria for various departmental programs.

TRANSFER OF MINISTERIAL PORTFOLIO

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I am quite incredulous. We have here a $100-million misunderstanding. A Minister as a result of really gross mismanagement overlooked $100 million in his Department. The reality is that after misrepresenting and mismanaging his Department to the tune of $100 million, this Minister has not done the honourable thing, has not been sacked, but has been transferred.

I would ask the Deputy Prime Minister if this is the kind of mismanagement and Government that we can now expect in the future. He said he would do something different from the Liberals. This is actually very different. This is a $100-million misunderstanding. Is this the kind of business practice we can expect from the Government and this Minister in his next portfolio?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, again the Hon. Member's statements and conclusions are false. I would invite him to read the reports before he pontificates in the manner in which he has.

The fact is that the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology has explained the corrective steps that have been taken. The record of the Government in financial management and control has been excellent. There is a problem here and that has been admitted.

When the Minister indicated that he would engage in both internal and external studies, he said that he would make them available. They are there for every Member to read and, I hope, to understand. The Ministers will be available to appear before parliamentary committees to explain the process in detail. Before he draws such rather drastic and radical conclusions so that he can get on television tonight, I would invite the Hon. Member to study the report in more detail.

• (1140)

MANAGEMENT QUERY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that $100 million has been mismanaged. The Minister took no responsibility and there were no reports for the first six months of this fiscal year.

Mr. Broadbent: In his Department.

Mr. Riis: In his Department. Surely he has to accept responsibility for that.

It is even more serious than that. The Government's reaction is to transfer the Minister to a Department where the expenditure plan indicates the Department is responsible for $600 million in government bank accounts. The Minister blew $100 million in his previous position. Now he is in a position of managing $600 million in government bank accounts. Is that the kind of management we can expect from now on?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is suggesting that $100 million has vanished. That is totally untrue. He should clearly study the report before he makes such false allegations and draws false conclusions.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Carleton.

An Hon. Member: You are being exposed.

Mr. Mazankowski: One of these days you will be exposed.

Mr. Riis: Great business ethics.

Mr. Mazankowski: How about some ethics over there? You do not know the meaning of the word.

UNITED NATIONS

CONFERENCE ON DISARMAMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Riis: A $100 million, and he gets rewarded.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): You never understood, Nelson.

Mr. Speaker: I would remind—

Mr. Riis: I think we can understand this, Mike.

Mr. Murphy: Order. The Speaker is rising.

Mr. Speaker: I know all Hon. Members would want to hear the question from the Hon. Member.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, it has been a difficult summer.

An historic conference on the relationship between disarmament and development began on Monday of this week at the UN, regrettably without the participation of the United States. What impact does the Minister feel that may have on the outcome of the conference? Does he also feel that Canada is optimistic that a conference consensus can be reached on these two vital issues?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe that with determination on the part of all participants a constructive consensus can be achieved. I regret the absence of the U.S. I think it is always better to stay in a room and try to win an argument rather than leave it. I regret it particularly because it is tempting the Soviet Union to try to take a propaganda advantage in a field where the Soviet Union has no credentials and no claims at all.

It is worth entering into the record of the House of Commons that in 1985 western countries contributed $4.7 billion to UN development activities, or 91.7 per cent of the total. The East bloc countries, including the Soviet Union, contributed only 1.2 per cent. The developing countries themselves contributed 7.1 per cent. In other words, the record shows that developing countries contribute something like seven times more towards UN development assistance than the entire Soviet bloc.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He has probably been briefed about the fact that in a few weeks Japan and the U.S. will sign an agreement for the shipment of plutonium from Europe to Japan. The Government of Canada has a limited time to tell the two parties that transport of plutonium through Canadian airspace is not in the cards.

Once again we ask the Government to make a commitment today to notify both Washington and Tokyo that Canada will not approve any application for the transportation of plutonium through Canadian airspace.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this question quite understandably gives rise to a great deal of concern in Canada. That has been registered in media comment and questions and answers in this House. One thing that is sometimes overlooked but which is absolutely clear is that the Government has the power to prohibit that kind of shipment through Canadian airspace, including the Canadian North.

Mr. Orlikow: Are you going to exercise that power?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): The question of whether we will choose to exercise that power, to come to a question from a member of the NDP, will be dealt with when it is no longer hypothetical.

The request made to me, as I understand it, by the Hon. Member for Davenport is that we send a signal now to the Government of Japan and the Government of the U.S. We are in contact with both those Governments.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE PERMISSION WILL BE REFUSED

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, why can the Minister not give us the assurance today that the Government of Canada will give the signal he has referred to in advance of the signing of this agreement? In that way neither Japan nor the U.S. will entertain any notion that they will be able to get permission from Canada to fly this plutonium through our airspace? Why not give us this assurance now?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to make two points in response. The first is to reiterate that the Government of Canada has that clear power and there should be no doubt and no fear about that. The second is that we are at this stage in contact with both the U.S. and Japanese Governments and it is my judgment that is the most effective way to proceed in these circumstances at this time.

AIR SAFETY

CANADIAN AVIATION SAFETY BOARD REPORT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Transport. He will be aware that the Canadian Aviation Safety Board produced a report yesterday which said in part that the number of aircraft/aircraft and aircraft/vehicle conflicts reported in Canada is at a level significant enough to warrant serious safety concerns. The report makes a large number of recommendations. Will the Minister ensure that rather than studying these recommendations the Government will immediately begin the process of implementing them so we can increase the level of safety at Canadian airports?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member has acknowledged and recognized that as a Government we have always treated safety as a priority in all matters relating to transportation. The Canadian Aviation Safety Board, with respect to its responsibility for investigating accidents, has had a very successful track record. More importantly it has been successful in identifying ways and means of improving air safety in all its aspects. One of its objectives was to make recommendations from time to time to the Government concerning ways and means of improving the system. This is a classic and clear-cut example of that work which is being carried on very effectively.

I know the Minister of Transport will take the recommendations seriously. Having had some experience in working with the Department, I know they will be very eager to implement recommendations to improve safety at our airports, particularly on the ground.

Mr. Angus: The Minister will also be aware that the Department has not always accepted the recommendations of the CASB.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know that as a result of Bill C-18, the National Transportation Act, there will be an increase, at some airports, in the number of flights. There will an increase in the number of less experienced personnel involved. Because of what this report says will he undertake to delay the implementation of C-18 until such time as these recommendations have been fully implemented? Only then will we move to the next stage of the change in the transportation sector. Is he prepared to make that commitment?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, not having had the benefit of reading the report and studying the recommendations I think it would irresponsible for me to accede to the Hon. Member's request. Suffice it to say there are suggested improvements in systems and co-ordination of the air navigational systems at the various airports. The Hon. Member is assuming there will be a lot more traffic involving inexperienced—

Mr. Angus: Less experienced.

Mr. Mazankowski: —less experienced personnel at the controls. I am not sure whether that is a valid observation. I would not want to associate myself with that because I am not sure it is referred to in the report.

I can only repeat that I know the Minister of Transport and his Department will take these recommendations very seriously.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CONTINUED PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Communications, with regard to the CBC, has said:

> There may be services which could be purchased from the private sector at less expense than continued public ownership of stations and transmitters.

I will direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Does he agree with the approach of the Minister of Communications to privatization of the CBC? Is this the kind of birthday present they should give the CBC for its fiftieth birthday?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, let me clarify the assumption which was made with regard to the future of the CBC. First, I have made it very clear that we are looking at three companies; Petro-Canada, Radiochemical and Air Canada.

The statement made by the Minister of Communications was by way of example of some of the things that might be considered to assist the CBC to fill its public policy role. For example, it may be possible that some of the services could be produced more in the public interest and that of the Canadian people within the private sector.

FUTURE OF CORPORATION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, following a savage $85 million cut to the CBC—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, if I may, in January, 1985, the Prime Minister made the following comment:

> Some people want to buy the CBC. The CBC is not for sale.

It is not our problem if the Minister of State for Privatization wants to have a job and is looking for something to do. The problem is what is happening to the CBC.

Is the Acting Prime Minister going to honour the promise of the Prime Minister and stop this move to privatize the CBC, or will we see the disappearance of another Crown corporation in order to keep the Minister of State for Privatization in business?

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals want to privatize John Turner.

Mrs. McDougall: That's not my department.

Mr. Gauthier: Wonderboy spoke again.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could answer the question without any help.

Mr. Beatty: They don't ask me any questions.

Mr. Axworthy: That's because you don't know any answers.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of State (Privatization)): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to accuse my colleague across the way of being frivolous. However, I think that that which the Minister of Communications said was very clear. There is no privatization of the CBC. This was raised almost by way of a question with regard to how the CBC can best serve the people of Canada.

Mrs. Finestone: In other words what Mr. Mulroney says doesn't count.

THE ADMINISTRATION

INQUIRY WHY CANADIANS WOULD HAVE CONFIDENCE IN FORMER MINISTER OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to get back to the issue of mismanagement at the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Could the Prime Minister inform the House why Canadians should have confidence in the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion, now that he has taken over the Department of Supply and Services?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there have been two reports laid on the Table which are open to study and examination. I hope the Hon. Member will read the reports. The Minister of Industry, Science and Technology has indicated the corrective steps that have been taken. I think he would make officials or himself available to give the Hon. Member a full elaboration on the report. Perhaps then the Hon. Member might be able to come back to the House and ask some intelligent questions.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

INQUIRY WHY CANADIANS WOULD HAVE CONFIDENCE IN NEW MINISTER OF SUPPLY AND SERVICES

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, there was mismanagement. Canadians want to know whether they can have confidence. Could the Deputy Prime Minister answer the question and inform the House why and how Canadians can be expected to have confidence in the new Minister of Supply and Services?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that the present Minister of Supply and Services initiated the studies to ensure that he got to the bottom of this issue.

Mr. Riis: Too late.

Mr. Mazankowski: Not late, as soon as it became available to him.

Mr. Riis: It's taxpayers' money we are talking about.

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. Member reads the report he will find that it is stated that the reliability of the financial data used in the preparation of forecasts has been a problem for some years.

Mr. Broadbent: You are supposed to change it.

Mr. Mazankowski: There was inherited—

Ms. Mitchell: Do something about it.

Mr. Broadbent: They are blaming the Liberals for this.

Mr. Mazankowski: There was an inherited—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think I have a right to respond to this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister, of course, has the right to respond. He also has the right to the courtesy of a hearing by other Hon. Members.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, there was inherited a system which, as a practice, established internal budgets in excess of voted amounts. It is clear that that practice should have been abandoned. The fact of the matter is that as soon as this came to the attention of the Minister he took the appropriate action and the corrective action is being implemented.

FRENCH TELEVISION COVERAGE OF EVENTS DURING FRANCOPHONIE SUMMIT

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Communications, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker, I heard in Quebec that Francophone journalists with the French CBC network were planning to walk out during the Francophonie Summit. As you know, the journalists have been without an agreement for two and one-half years, and I would like to know whether the Minister is aware of this and what he intends to do to ensure, beforehand, that French-speaking Canadians will be able to see and hear this important historic event, the Francophonie Summit on television?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I heard the same rumour, and I know the parties have been negotiating for quite some time. As I indicated last night at the end of a long debate, last year 11,000 collective agreements were signed in Canada, and 94 per cent were signed without a single day lost to strikes or lock-outs.

Mr. Speaker, I hope this particular dispute will be resolved in the same fashion. I would urge the parties to reach an agreement, and I would be very sorry to see Canadians suffer the consequences should a strike be called this week.

HOUSING

INQUIRY WHETHER GOVERNMENT WILL PRESENT PROGRAM DURING INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE HOMELESS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Housing.

Next September 14, 15 and 16 in Ottawa, we will have the privilege of hosting the International Conference of the Homeless, where the theme will be: building together for the future. The Minister will agree that the problem of the homeless is also a social problem. Has the Minister drafted an action plan for this conference and if so, could he give us an overview of the plan?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the Hon. Member. I heard her intervention during Statements by Members today. I think that which she pointed out was accurate and very much in keeping with attitudes in the House on the situation.

I cannot specifically reply to her question. I will take notice of it to the Minister in charge and ask for an early response.

SOCIAL HOUSING ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have a problem of our own in Canada. This morning I met with members of the Assembly of First Nations and was made aware of an interdepartmental problem regarding funding for social housing on reserves.

The matter is between the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister knows that there is a shortfall of almost $8 million flowing from the changes in the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program. On May 11, my colleague, the Member for Cochrane—Superior, asked a question of the Minister of Employment and Immigration who said he would look into it. I understand that the matter is in Cabinet at the moment. Will the Minister give us an answer today?

• (1200)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give an answer to the latter part of the Hon. Member's question.

I believe many of us in the House, not only as Ministers but as Members have had the experience with the issue of the amount of money available for housing and the shortfall that often takes place when a house is built, in terms of development costs. In other words, one does not only take into account the price of the house, but also development costs for such things as access. I know this is being discussed by the Minister of Employment and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I am sure the Deputy Prime Minister and his colleagues will bring that to their attention.

There have been many discussions about that. The question of how much funding there should be and how much equity there should be in terms of individual housing, as an increasing number of Indian bands are moving toward a CMHC configuration as opposed to the former configuration of direct grants, is an ongoing issue.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—SEVERANCE OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In an article published in The Toronto Star the Secretary of State characterized the position that complete diplomatic sanctions ought to be imposed on South Africa as an extreme position. Of course, this was part of the position enunciated by the Prime Minister in 1985 before the United Nations.

Does the Minister's statement reflect a retreat from the position adopted and enunciated by the Prime Minister in 1985? Does this also apply to the other part of that promise by the Prime Minister that complete economic sanctions would be imposed upon South Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Of course not, Mr. Speaker. If the Hon. Member would apply to the reading of that article the moderation that has been his happy characteristic in dealing with questions relating to this Government's position against apartheid, he would know that what was described as extreme was the suggestion that two years ago we should have disrupted diplomatic and other relations with South Africa.

Had we done that, I would not have been able to go to South Africa two weeks ago. I would not have been able to carry the case, on one day, to the African National Congress, and carry the case on the next day to the South African Government, thus providing the possibility of some capacity to breathe life into the negotiations which can be the only means of a peaceful resolution to a situation that can lead to bloodshed in South Africa unless it is resolved peacefully.

The position of the Government of Canada remains as it has been, that if other measures do not work we will be prepared to sever all economic and diplomatic relations with South Africa.

Mr. Orlikow: When?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): We believe it is important for us not to take a blind ideological position like some members of the New Democratic Party do, but rather to try to follow the Canadian tradition of working out a peaceful means to resolve a situation that could erupt into bloodshed.

SOUTH AFRICAN GOVERNMENT'S ADVERTISEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I find it incomprehensible that the Secretary of State should become so agitated by a request for clarification, which I appreciate having received.

Mr. Speaker: Members sometimes do become agitated here. However, given the hour, I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, in the article in The Toronto Star the Secretary of State also indicates a hope that negotiations may still represent a solution to the South African situation.

In The Globe and Mail this morning, we see an ad placed by the South African Government which attempts to demonize the ANC. In view of his hopes for negotiation, which does he think is the greater obstacle in view of this kind of activity on the part of the South African Government, the ANC or the South African Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I frankly do not think it is very helpful for me to respond to that kind of question at this stage. They are both an obstacle because at this stage—

Mr. Broadbent: ANC is an obstacle?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): At this stage the ANC is not prepared to come to the kinds of agreements that were set forth in the negotiating position of the Eminent Persons Group regarding the suspension of violence. They have reasons which they believe to be good reasons.

The South African Government, on the basis of my conversations with it, is not prepared to enter into negotiations because of the difficulty over the same piece of language.

What I find interesting, and—if one can find hope in this circumstance—what is potentially hopeful is that neither the ANC nor the South African Government, which is significant, have ruled out the possibility of negotiating one with the other. Neither side claims that the ANC would be the only representatives of blacks in South Africa.

I know Mr. Tambo has had conversations with Members of the House and others. I think his visit here can be a constructive step toward encouraging that kind of negotiation, if only because it will allow and require the ANC to respond to some of the accusations that, while they have appeared today in Canadian newspapers, are part of the regular fare issued by the Government of South Africa.

I think it is important for people who hear those accusations also to have the opportunity to hear directly Mr. Tambo's response to them. His presence here allows that to occur.

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise Members that there will be a question by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, followed by a question by the Hon. Member for Trinity, and that will be the end of Question Period.

HUMAN RIGHTS

ETHIOPIA—POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The long awaited finalization of the new Ethiopian Constitution will give the Government of that country a chance to show that a new Constitution can mean a new beginning for human rights.

Will the Government consider using the considerable moral leverage of Canada, in view of its large and continued aid program, to persuade the Government of Ethiopia that its political prisoners should be released or, at the very least, be put on charge and given a fair trial?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question. It is valuable and timely. There have been substantial rumours that in consort with the proclamation of a new Constitution there would be an amnesty granted in Ethiopia. We have been making representations on human rights questions for some time and certainly it is our view—and I take the opportunity to make it clear publicly again to the Government of Ethiopia—that the proclamation of the Constitution should be accompanied by an amnesty for political prisoners.

EMPLOYMENT

OLDER WORKER ADJUSTMENT PROGRAM

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In his February, 1986, Budget he announced a new program for older worker adjustment to begin in August, 1986. The Government discontinued the previous Liberal Government's labour adjustment benefit but has yet to put in place its own program. Will the Minister assure the House that he is prepared to act to offer retraining and placement to the increasing number of Canadians in middle life who are facing unemployment?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the objective of that program. We recognize the importance of this for people who see their jobs change as a result of technological progress and we must be responsive to that. That is particularly important for those who, in their later years of work, find it more difficult to get that training and find another occupation. That is precisely what we are trying to do.

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION AND IMPLEMENTATION

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, if and when the Government introduces the program for older workers' adjustment, only about 2,000 older workers will be helped. The Government ended one generous program a year ago. It has not put in place even the limited replacement it promised. Will the Minister give us an assurance of just when the new program will be in place?

• (1210)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is well aware of the fact that there are negotiations under way with the provinces right now, and they have been going on for some little while. There needs to be some response from the provinces on this but we are very definitely committed to it, as is the case with the Canadian Job Strategy which makes a considerable amount of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: That is really working well, isn't it? That is a wonderful program.

Mr. Wilson: Those Hon. Members do not like to hear the truth again. They are very much aware that we have changed the previous Government's make work programs where money was spilled out to try to tide people over from one period of entitlement to unemployment insurance to another. That was changed by a new program which involved career development and training for almost the entire amount of the funds made available under the Canadian Job Strategy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson: The truth hurts and we understand that clearly.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that that concludes Question Period. I will hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on a point of order and then I will hear the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

NCC USE OF HERBICIDES ON LAWNS OF PARLIAMENT HILL

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order with respect to the way in which the National Capital Commission has really thumbed its nose at the House of Commons by going ahead with the use of herbicides on the Parliamentary lawn against the all-party recommendations of Mr. Speaker, the environment critic of the Liberal Party, the environment critic of the New Democratic Party and other Members of Parliament who joined together in asking the National Capital Commission, in writing to Mrs. Pigott, the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, not to do this.

I noticed that some people thought this was a bit of a joke when it was raised by the Hon. Member for Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands (Mr. Manly). I noticed the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) laughing. He is the last person on earth who should be laughing at this kind of matter. This is a matter which has been taken seriously by both sides of the House of Commons.

We should take it seriously for two reasons. First, it concerns the environmental question, both as to the effects of the herbicide used and also because we would like Parliament Hill to be an environmental example, if you will, and it certainly does not appear to be any kind of ecological example with little yellow signs all around the Hill saying you had better stay off the grass, not in order to keep the grass well, but to stay well yourself.

I think this is offensive both on environmental grounds and on the grounds that were established by the recommendations of the McGrath report which said that Parliament should have more control over its own life and over its own environs. We recommended at the time that a parliamentary intendant be appointed and that the House of Commons have more control over its own precincts.

We tried in a nice negotiatable sort of way to get the National Capital Commission not to do something which everyone agreed it should not be doing, and it basically told us to go to hell. That is what it did. It put that stuff all over the lawn here in spite of the objections of Members of Parliament, in spite of the will of Mr. Speaker, in spite of the collective will of the environmental critics and others who expressed a similar concern.

I think this points up the problem we have on Parliament Hill. We are not even in control of our lives here, of our own environs. We pretend to be running the country but we cannot even get the National Capital Commission not to dump poisons on our own lawn after we have asked it not to do so.

I would hope that you, Mr. Speaker, would send a very strong message to the National Capital Commission on behalf of Members of the House of Commons, that we find it offensive in the extreme that, against the recommendations made to it, it has gone ahead and done this.

I hope all Members will use this as an occasion to reflect on the need for the implementation of the recommendations of the McGrath report, the Special Committee on Parliamentary Reform for a structure through which we have more control over our own environs and are not subjected to this kind of offensive action, and previous offensive actions, such as the time we wandered out one morning to find that everything had been dug up in order to facilitate the light show. That was done without the knowledge of the Speaker of the day. These kinds of offences continue to happen and it is about time they stopped.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I could just advise Hon. Members that the Speaker is in a bit of an unusual situation here because, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) has pointed out that this matter has been a matter of discussion among Members, brought to the attention of the Speaker, and there have been responses from myself with respect to this and other environmental considerations of the Hill.

I think I should make it clear that certainly these kinds of matters are matters which have been brought to the attention of the Chair by Members of all parties. Perhaps it is advisable if the Chair just makes that clear to the House.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I am simply going to suggest that the Board of Internal Economy may wish to take another look at the complaint of my hon. friend, which he raises at the first available opportunity, and with a great deal of vigor. I know he is concerned about the environment in this particular matter and I can do no more than to suggest that is a very appropriate matter to be discussed by the Board of Internal Economy.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): I am not so sure that is the best approach. You, Mr. Speaker, gave us great leadership when on May 29 you wrote a letter to Madam Pigott of the National Capital Commission on this matter. We were extremely grateful to you, Mr. Speaker, for having taken in hand a matter which, as the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) states, is intended to regain control of the Hill, by the Parliament, with respect to the kind of environment we have, making it into a model for other jurisdictions to see.

On June 4 the Speaker received a reply which he kindly circulated. In effect it said that the National Capital Commission management committee decided not to spray this spring with 2-4,D and to reassess its position later this year. It was signed by Madam Pigott.

What we see happening here is that both you, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps even the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, have been ignored by this management committee, or Madam Pigott has forgotten her commitment, or the matter has simply drifted so badly that we see this silly development whereby a commitment made only three months ago is now not even worth the paper on which it is written.

You have our fullest confidence and support, Mr. Speaker, in pursuing this matter. I am sure you are as upset as we are, because we do want to demonstrate that we can have grass, lawns and soil managed in a proper manner on the Hill without having to utilize chemical fertilizers.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair wants to thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) and the Hon. Minister. It is quite clear, and it should be clear to everyone watching or listening, that what we have just heard in this Chamber is a very strong expression of the will of all three parties. I will carefully take into account what has been said here and will be meeting with Members in order to make an appropriate response. I thank Hon. Members for taking the position they have, and I thank the Hon. Minister for supporting both the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill and the Hon. Member for Davenport.

ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH PROVISIONS OF S. O. 99(2)

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on this point of order because it relates to the tabling of the Government's response to the interim report on the "Recommendations of the Task Force on Broadcast Policy, Speciality Programming Services", and some proposed legislative amendments. That was called our fifth report.

The point of order also relates to the response to the sixth report called "The Recommendations for a new Broadcasting Act, a Review of the Legislative Recommendations made by the Task Force on Broadcasting Policy". I think Hon. Members have noted the size of the Hansards which were required to bring our reports to the attention of this House. There were 150 pages of carefully considered documents and analysis which included 107 recommendations. Members of the committee, members of our staff and members of the Library of Parliament worked extremely hard to bring—

• (1220)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) but the Minister rises on a point of order. I will hear the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I in turn do not wish to be seen to be interrupting anyone's argument. In view of the fact that this argument with respect to the tabling of a report is both substantive as to the contents, and procedural, will the Hon. Member for Mount Royal agree to stand down her argument on her point of order until such time as we are able to get the Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald) in the House in order to respond to the substantive part of the argument.

As I said, I am prepared to deal with the procedural part of the argument. I do not wish to be seen to be delaying the Hon. Member. We are perfectly prepared to deal with this at any time. However, I wonder if it would not be more appropriate for Your Honour to hear both the substantive and procedural parts of the argument at the same time.

Mr. Speaker: I am wondering if perhaps the Chair can be of help. First, I want to say to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal that the Chair has heard not just one but several complaints of this type in connection with the rule that, after a committee reports, the Minister is to give a comprehensive response under the rules. The Chair has been reluctant to get into the position of defining what is a comprehensive response. However, if I may say to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, I think the Hon. Minister has made a very helpful suggestion. It is difficult under this particular rule to find a clear line between the substance and the procedure. The Minister has suggested that the Hon. Member for Mount Royal adjourn her point of order to a day soon when the Minister responsible can be here, I say to the Hon. Member for Mount Royal that that, frankly, would help the Chair.

I would invite the Hon. Member for Mount Royal to agree to the suggestion of the Minister that this matter be adjourned to a day, which can be arranged through myself, when the Hon. member can pursue her argument and the Minister can be here. I want to assure the Hon. Member that this is a matter that the Chair takes very seriously. If the Hon. Member would agree, then I think that would be the most expeditious way of dealing with the matter.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, with your many years of experience in the House I will certainly accept your guidance, in the hope that when the Minister hears the argument she will have had an opportunity to rethink the grievous way in which she has injured the committee with her snide four and one-half page response. Thus, I hope that the Minister, whose staff is watching, will prepare the kind of responsible report that she should have prepared in the first place. I look forward to that argument taking place at that time.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Mount Royal for her intervention, and the subject that has been raised. Arrangements will be made to continue this discussion further. I know that the Minister will convey to his colleague the proceedings so far so that when we bring this matter back to the House it can be dealt with in an appropriate way.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties with a view to the rest of today's business. As the House will know, we were able to dispose of Bill C-22, the debate on the motion to send the matter back to the Senate. We have also given third reading to Bill C-71. This is due to the co-operation of all three Parties. We have therefore decided that, having made that progress, the following draft order would be appropriate:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, upon the completion of Routine Proceedings this day, the House shall proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on this day's Order Paper for a period not to exceed one hour;

That upon the completion of Private Members' Hour the Speaker shall suspend the sitting to the call of the Chair; and

That, following the giving of Royal Assent to certain Bills, later this day, the Speaker shall adjourn the House until 11.00 o'clock a.m., Monday, August 31, 1987.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by residents of Vancouver, Halifax, Toronto, Rouyn-Noranda and Ottawa. The petitioners are asking for changes in highway safety regulations. They believe that current rear-seat car safety belts are inadequate and that the sufferings of car accident victims can be reduced or avoided. They believe as well that medical care costs can be reduced or eliminated.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, they urge Parliament to make a commitment with respect to the mandatory installation of adjustable shoulder safety belts for all rear-seat car passengers, and the installation of air bags for front-seat passengers.

OPPOSITION TO SALES TAX ON FOOD PRODUCTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to present again today a petition urging this Government to listen to the people, to listen to the many representations of Liberal Members, to listen to the remarks of its own Quebec Conservative Members asking that a vital commodity such as food not be taxed.

The petition reads as follows, Madam Speaker:

Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed upon Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack food, candies and soft drinks; whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal is studying the possibility of imposing a general tax on goods and services, including food; whereas food constitutes a vital element of everyday life, and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of penalizing such categories of taxpayers as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, and youth;

Therefore, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Madam Speaker, if Question No. 162 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 162 be deemed to have been made an order for return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HUMAN RIGHTS

SUGGESTED DESIGNATION OF HELSINKI HUMAN RIGHTS DAY

Mr. Andrew Witer (Parkdale—High Park) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of designating August 1, 1987, as "Helsinki Human Rights Day"; and

That, further, in recognition of the importance of the twelfth anniversary of the signing of the final act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, and to demonstrate Canada's commitment to the principle of universal human rights, this House encourage the government to continue efforts to achieve full implementation of the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accords by raising the issue of non-compliance with the offending nations at every available opportunity; to increase efforts to effect the release of all political prisoners, including Helsinki monitors; and to work to provide people of all nations with the most basic of human rights, freedom of speech, movement and religious worship.

He said: The Oxford Companion to Law describes human rights or the rights of man or fundamental freedoms as "conceived of as rights inherent in individuals as rational, free-willing creatures, not conferred by positive law, nor capable of being abridged or abrogated by positive law".

The guiding principles of the final act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe, better known as the Helsinki Accords, were to establish security in Europe, and to promote mutual co-operation in areas of economics, science, technology, the environment, and humanitarian concerns.

It is the humanitarian concerns, the human rights provisions of the Helsinki Accord which are the subject of this motion, and the importance of those provisions is underscored by the precedents set by the agreement. Never in modern history have the heads of state of 35 countries come together to agree on a statement of principles which guide the conduct of countries to their own people. This was done in the case of the Helsinki Accords. My motion seeks to recognize the importance of that historic document by designating August 1 as "Helsinki Human Rights Day".

There are many compelling and significant reasons for such action, reasons which exemplify the very heart of the accord. The principle of respect for the inherent dignity of the human person, and the human rights and fundamental freedoms which derive from recognition of that principle.

While the Final Act of the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe is not a perfect document, it is significant in the history of human rights by its very nature. It must be viewed in context. It is not a legal document but a statement of principle, and therefore open to criticism for its lack of enforcement provisions. Nonetheless, while there is no enforcement mechanism in this agreement, no police, no judge to ensure compliance, there is, in fact, a jury. The humanitarian provisions of the Helsinki Accords have elicited a strong public response, particularly in the Eastern Bloc countries where Helsinki monitoring groups were organized by courageous individuals responding to the noble principles embodied in the accords. Along with the international attention focused on the CSCE conferences, they form a court of world opinion to which even the most intransigent of offenders must pay heed.

The importance of the final Act is that it placed respect for fundamental human freedoms squarely within the East-West framework, as a basic element of government to government relations. Through good faith, observance of the Final Act's standards for responsible and humane international conduct, signatory states were to advance along the difficult road toward mutual trust and co-operation.

It was an ambitious agenda involving an evolutionary process. In essence, by signing the Helsinki Final Act, the western democracies pledged to keep faith with the persecuted in the East. It is telling to recall that the West failed to anticipate the impact that the human rights provisions of the Final Act would have on East Bloc citizens. We in the West were not the first to act upon the Accords as a means to expose human rights violations in the East. East Bloc citizens seized upon the Helsinki provisions as a program for human rights advocacy. Many of them have paid a high price for their actions.

The reason the Accords have generated such a response is clear from a reading of the document itself. In the accords the participating states express the commitment to "recognize the universal significance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for which is an essential factor for the peace, justice and well-being necessary to ensure the development of friendly relations and co-operation among themselves as among all states".

The document further commits the signatories to "respect human rights and fundamental freedoms, including freedom of thought, conscience, religion or belief, for all without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion", and to "promote and encourage the effective exercise of civil, political, economic, social, cultural, and other rights and freedoms, all of which derive from the inherent dignity of the human person and are essential for his free will and full development".

Additionally, the document recognizes the rights of the individual to profess or practice, alone or in community with others, religion or belief acting in accordance with the dictates of his own conscience, and the signatories express their commitment to respect the rights of persons belonging to a minority to equality before the law.

To those individuals living under a repressive regime, the wording of the principles of this document is a poignant expression of their hopes, dreams, and aspirations, and it is a reminder of all that is sadly lacking in their society.

It is this document that has spurred the efforts of individuals such as Yuri Orlov, Meral Kostava, Victor Pyatkus, Aleksey Tykhy, Mikolay Malusevych, Mirolsar Marynovych, Petro

Vins, Levko Lukyanenko, Shagen and Eduard Arutyunyan, Robert Nazarym, Viktor Rtskhiladze, Anatoly Shcharansky, Viktor Nekipelov, Yaroslav Lesiv, Vasyl Striltsir, Vitaly Kalynychenko, Yuri Lytvyn, Oles Berdnyk, Petro and Vasyl Sichko, and Grigory Goldshtein.

The persecution of these individuals for their brave actions has been amply documented, and their sacrifice represents a trust and obligation on the part of western democracies to fulfil the trust imparted by the Helsinki monitors, and to ensure that their sacrifices have not been in vain by using every possible means to ensure that the Eastern Bloc nations live up to the commitments they agreed to in the Final Act.

Once again, the importance of this document has been demonstrated by the willingness of these individuals to undergo persecution, arrest and imprisonment in the cause of the Helsinki Accords principles.

Of course, no discussion or debate of the importance of the Final Act would be complete without discussion of the reasons for the necessity of such an agreement. In the time available to me I could not begin to delve with any depth into the morass of human rights violations which occur behind the Iron Curtain, in Ukraine, Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Romania, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, as well as the absolute atrocities committed in Soviet-occupied Afghanistan.

I cannot begin to describe the persecution and repression suffered by the Ukrainian Catholic Church. The Church has some four million followers in Ukraine yet has been outlawed. The Ukrainian Orthodox Church has also suffered from such repression and has been forced to become plart of the Russian Orthodox Church which is under state control. But to attempt to detail the extent of that persecution in the time available would be impossible.

Some specific cases of human rights violations include: Vera Lipinskaya and Anatoly Ponomaryov, who dared to write complaints to government authorities; Teovils Kuma, who handed out religious leaflets and Anatoly Lupynos, who read his poetry at a public meeting honouring a Ukrainian national poet. All of these acts were labelled "socially dangerous", and were grounds for the commitment of these individuals to the Gulag or psychiatric hospitals.

Then there is Alexei Nikitin, a coal miner in the City of Donetsk, in Ukraine, a hard worker and popular with his co-workers. Nikitin took the complaints of his co-workers to his trade union leadership and to the director of the mine. These complaints were rejected, and Nikitin was eventually incarcerated in a local mental hospital, even though he had no history nor signs of psychiatric illness. Later, a mine explosion occurred, and several miners were killed. When Nikitin was released, in desperation he spoke to American journalists about the problems of Soviet coal miners, and within days, Nikitin was again incarcerated in a psychiatric hospital and eventually was transferred to a special psychiatric hospital near the Chinese-Afghanistan border. He is still there.

At this point it is important to note the extent to which the Soviet Union uses the psychiatric commitment as a convenient instrument of policy. It enables Soviet authorities to substitute psychiatrists' judgment for sentencing in a trial or to avoid a trial altogether. It enables the Government to keep dissidents incarcerated for an indefinite length of time and allows the regime to claim that Soviet citizens who express dissatisfaction with the system are simply mentally ill.

It would be forgiveable if those of us who are uninitiated to the Soviet system assumed that when dissidents were committed on psychiatric grounds they were merely incarcerated indefinitely. However, the true facts are much more horrifying. Many dissidents must undergo what amounts to torture while in such hospitals. Dissenters are often given insulin shock therapy or the drug Sulfazin, which causes great physical discomfort, a raging fever so intense that the patient is virtually incapacitated for up to three days after the injection. Any psychiatrist who might dare to rebel against such abuse has all the incentive, he or she needs to stay in line when they contemplate the example of Dr. Anatoly Koryagin of Karkow. Koryagin was a consultant to a committee formed several years ago to fight psychiatric abuse. He had the opportunity to examine Alexei Nikitin, whom I discussed earlier, and published his findings in a British medical journal. He was subsequently arrested and sentenced to a work camp. He was then transferred to Christopol Prison, where he remains today.

This is the battle we are fighting and the Helsinki Accord have provided us with a forum, in the CSCE conferences, to focus world attention and international pressure on those who are responsible for these acts of persecution and repression. The Helsinki monitoring groups through their reports have provided and continue to supply the West with ammunition in the form of substantiated human rights violations. They must never be betrayed by failure on the part of the western democracies to use this hard-won information to pressure the offending Governments at every opportunity and with every means at our disposal to comply with the commitment they made in the Final Act of the conference on security and co-operation in Europe. It is our duty, as a free and democratic society, to speak out for those who cannot be heard through the blanket of silence imposed by the Iron Curtain. I believe the importance of the accords have been clearly established, both in the history of the human rights movement, and the catalyst they have provided to oppressed peoples.

The next step is to strengthen the CSCE process by every means available in order to increase pressure for reform in those nations which have ignored their commitments. By designating August 1 as Helsinki Human Rights Day, we will send a clear message of Canada's commitment to the accords and to the principles embodied in that agreement. It will put those countries who have a record of human rights abuses on notice that Canada will continue to press for compliance with the Final Act commitments. Finally, it will help to raise public awareness of the agreement and human rights issues, both at home and abroad.

Similar efforts are being undertaken in other western nations. I urge my colleagues to join with me in supporting these efforts through the passage of this motion.

With your assistance, much can be accomplished in the field of human rights. Without it, the future may be bleak for those freedom fighters in oppressed nations, who are relying on our support.

In accepting the Nobel Peace Prize last year, Elie Wiesel said:

> We must always take sides, neutrality helps the oppressor, never the victim. Silence encourages the tormentor, never the tormented . . . When human lives are endangered, when human dignity is in jeopardy, national border and sensitivities become irrelevant. Whenever men and women are persecuted because of their race, religion or political views, that place must, at that moment become the centre of the universe.

While this motion may seem a small step on a long road toward the universal rights and freedoms we seek for those who look to us for help, it is a symbol of our commitment to make that journey a reality.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Madam Speaker, the idea of designating August 1, 1987 as Helsinki Human Rights Day as proposed by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) is a good one. He should be commended for coming forward with the idea and for the wording of the motion that he has put on the Order Paper for this debate today.

There is no doubt that the cause of human rights has been put forward in that fine document signed in 1975 by some 35 nations in Helsinki. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park is, I am sure, familiar with that document in detail having participated at conferences where this agreement between East and West is regularly reviewed.

The Member for Parkdale—High Park probably knows that human rights is one of three baskets that are included in the accords. That is an important factor which must be kept in mind because I would submit to the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park that the cause of human rights within the Helsinki Agreement can best be pursued within the overall context of the agreement. As you know, Madam Speaker, 35 nations did get together in the mid-1970s with a feeling of optimism that there could be and there must be a rapprochement between East and West. The European nations added the United States and Canada to the 33 European signatories because they felt that the presence of two nations from North America, one of them being a superpower, was essential. So we did participate, and since 1985, Canada has held a very high profile in the promotion of human rights and in dealing at times also with specific cases of individuals. Today, the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park mentioned a list of names representing the present wave of cases that are on the agenda.

I would urge the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park, however, to look at the advancement that must be made in human rights as part of a broader approach that is contemplated by and implicit in the conference and the accords themselves. In those accords, there is a basket of issues dealing with disarmament. There is another basket of issues dealing with economic matters. Then there is the very important basket of social matters including human rights. One cannot make substantial progress on just one of these fronts. One must keep the pressure going and chip away at the totality of these fronts because mutual interests must be met.

The Conference on Co-operation and Security in Europe does not work on the basis of a voting process like this Chamber. It operates by consensus. Therefore, it is important that the Hon. Member who is advancing a list of names also participate with other parliamentarians in the proceedings of this conference by advancing other elements of the conference itself. These elements are disarmament, economic matters including the environment, and human rights.

No doubt progress can be made within the Conference on Security and Co-operation, and it has been made. That process has gone through very difficult times. In 1980 particularly, at the time of the invasion of Afghanistan, the conference came to a stalemate in Madrid for 18 months. Nevertheless, the spirit of Helsinki is basically a good one. That is what the Hon. Member is in essence endorsing. He is telling us that we should promote and advance the Helsinki spirit on August 1 by emphasizing Human Rights Day. We are with him all the way. However, it is important that the participation of parliamentarians be spread out on all fronts of that conference because it is a conference to which East and West come together with separate agendas and the two agendas must eventually be integrated.

For example, disarmament is very high on the agenda of eastern European countries. Elements of human rights are very high on the agenda of western nations including Canada. On the economic front, it is a mixed bag of different interests which not very often come together. Nevertheless, there is an awkward, difficult and sometimes not very focused convergence of interests. Therefore, the process must be refined and the role of parliamentarians, particularly through the Inter-parliamentary Union, is crucial.

I hope that the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park attends conferences of the Inter-parliamentary Union in order to advance the ideas he has advanced here today. I suggest that he put his time, efforts and energies, which I know are very high, into those conferences under the auspices of the Inter-parliamentary Union which brings together parliamentarians from East and West to discuss the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe. That is where we as Canadian parliamentarians can communicate our preoccupations and priorities. That is where we can communicate the names of people we think ought to be given human rights considerations to our colleagues from eastern Europe. That is where the dialogue can take place, and it does take place at times.

The Hon. Member was quite right when he said that declaring August 1, 1987, as Helsinki Human Rights Day may appear to be a small step, but nevertheless it is a small step on a long road that began in 1975 when the Government of Canada participated, not only sympathetically but enthusiastically, in the notion of finding common ground and a convergence of interests, awkward and unfocused as it might be at times, in order to bring cohesion and build bridges between such different systems as are represented by the 35 nations that compose this particular conference.

I congratulate the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park. He has done us a service by reminding us that there is a CSC process, that we have a particular interest and obligation on the side of human rights, that we want to intensify our efforts, that we want to participate in these efforts in their totality, and that Canada as a middle nation has a particular role to play. I must say that that conference is one of the world's forums in which middle nations can play a major leadership role notwithstanding the two superpowers which, in this kind of exchange, often tend either to drag their feet or sometimes to be so aggressive and unconstructive that the whole process comes to a grinding halt. That is neither the object nor the substance of this motion. Perhaps it should be the object of a debate on another day.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Madam Speaker, I am very pleased to address the House on this motion and to underline the Government's support for the idea of a Helsinki Human Rights Day to be celebrated every year on the first day of August.

I commend the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) for bringing this motion before the House. I listened very carefully as well to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and I think he made a very good point by saying that although the motion focuses on human rights, we should really remember that the Helsinki Final Act has many different element parts and we want to be supportive of the entire accords.

There is no question, nevertheless, that the promotion and protection of human rights in all of the 35 participating states of the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe is a very important and fundamental part of the Helsinki Final Act. Canadians have a deep interest in and respect for human rights throughout the world and have campaigned vigorously against abuses of these rights wherever they occur.

In its response to the Special joint committee report on Canada's international relations, the Government reiterated that its concern for the fundamental rights of individuals and groups is intrinsic to Canadian society and Canada's historical heritage. The Government further stated that human rights are and will remain a fundamental, integral part of Canadian foreign policy.

Twelve years ago, the signing of the Helsinki Final Act evoked a wide range of reactions. Some naively beieved that the hostility and uncertainty which had marked East-West relations for so long would quickly disappear in an era of détente. Others, somewhat cynically, viewed the Final Act as a commendable set of principles which would be ignored and soon forgotten. However, most of us viewed the Final Act with both cautious hope and pragmatic realism.

• (1300)

Hope was essential. Canada has deep roots in Europe. Our historical origins lie in Europe. We have shared the benefits of Europe's political and social ideals, along with the tragic cost of Europe's wars. Experience has shown that even long-standing divisions can be healed, or at least managed peacefully. The relationship between West Germany and Canada since 1945 is a good example of that. In spite of two world wars we are good friends and committed allies in NATO, for peace and security and the progress of democracy and human rights in the world. Our hope, however, was then and is still today tempered by realism. The tortuous negotiations which led to the Final Act made it painfully clear that distrust and hostility were very deeply-rooted, and productive dialogue would take time, patience and, above all, commitment.

More than that, however, the history of Communism since 1917 has taught us that we must study very carefully and diligently both its theory and practice. We have to be very careful and constantly on guard. Words might mean one thing in our democratic system but may be used in an entirely different way by the Communists for their own ends. For example, in the Yalta Agreement it was declared that within two years there would be free and unfettered democratic elections in all of the liberated states of eastern Europe. Did that happen? Certainly not from the point of view of how we understand free, unfettered and democratic. Nevertheless, the three nations who signed the Yalta Agreement all agreed on those words. We have to look at the theory and practice of Communism to determine how the Soviet Union meant those words when it signed the agreement.

In order to have a free and unfettered democratic election under Communism you must first remove by torture, death, expropriation and imprisonment all of the wealthy, the educated, land owners, and all foreigners whatever their name. A cousin of mine, because of his German name, Reimer, was taken as a 15-year old boy and sent to a gulag. He came back to the Soviet Union and, fortunately, six years ago came to Canada. Then you remove all the churches' power and influence. Then you get rid of all the political Parties. When you have one Party left and all other influences have been eliminated, and the one Party is supreme in all the institutions of the state, you can have a free, unfettered and democratic election. That is what they meant because that is what they did in all the eastern European states. The Red Army came through and got rid of whoever it wanted to get rid of, using the excuse of war. Then the Communists started their system of torture and imprisonment to the point where Romania, Bulgaria, Poland, Czechoslovakia and the rest of eastern Europe had imposed on them the Communist system with its understanding of those words.

We have to keep all of that in front of us when we deal with something like the Helsinki Final Act. We just celebrated Black Ribbon Day in many centres across Canada. We also have to remember the events of 1939 to 1941 and all they mean to the denial of human rights and self-determination. We have to remember the way in which three states, Lithuania, Latvia and Estonia, were simply annihilated by the Soviet Union. Many people were killed and others taken forcefully to the Soviet Union. Then Soviet citizens were brought in so they could say that those three states do not exist any more. That is the way it stands today.

I could go on to give many more examples, but in spite of all that, the Final Act is nevertheless a modest beginning which I think we must support. It is a product of compromise. Together the states involved determined they must come to some understanding and work out an agreement concerning the recognition of the events which had taken place. They came together in a climate of understanding and détente. The Soviet Union wanted the West to accept the fact that they now control all of eastern Europe and it was their sphere of influence. We of course were not going to war to change that. Therefore, we saw an opportunity not to recognize and accept all of that but simply to say, "Yes, that is the reality. If you want us to recognize this simple reality and not go to war to change it, we insist upon other human rights and the recognition of the right of free movement of people. We can at least start building some measure of détente".

In that way an agreement was signed which met the needs of the peoples and states that met together at this conference.

Let us look at what happened this past year in one small country, the Baltic Republic of Latvia. There a small group was formed to monitor the Final Act. By passing this motion today we would be saying to those people who have risked their freedom that we are with them. We stand with all the people throughout easter Europe. We stand with all those who are denied the rights we have. In passing this motion what we are doing is more than symbolic. We are saying that we stand with those who are in prison in Poland today because of their work with Solidarity.

In conclusion, I want to move two amendments to the motion before us. First, I move:

That Motion 119 be amended. That the year 1987 be deleted from line 3, so that it will read, "designating August 1st as 'Helsinki Human Rights Day'."

I also move:

That Motion 119 be amended in lines 5 and 6 by deleting the words "of the twelfth anniversary of the signing".

The effect of those two amendments is that we will celebrate this agreement every August 1. The amendments are very simple and I am sure Members will understand and support them.

In conclusion, I want to say that one of the most effective ally for those in eastern Europe and the Soviet Union who would deny the human rights and many other things that we enjoy is our silence. By doing this we are saying, "we stand with you". By doing this we keep chipping away at the denial of human and political rights. We are showing that we recognize that although there is a huge gulf between us, we have to work at that and eliminate all of the rhetoric and the differences so that we can have at least a measure of peace and security.

• (1310)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair was in some difficulty having received two amendments. However, after studying them carefully we realize that the second amendment is consequential and the two amendments could become one. Therefore, I am sure the rewriting of the amendment will be done by the Table Officers as long as we all accept the substance of what is being done.

Shall the amendment carry?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Reimer) agreed to.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Madam Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to speak in support of designating August 1 as Helsinki Human Rights Day. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer) for having brought forward this motion, which we support.

In his comments the Hon. Member said something to the effect that silence never helps the victims but always the perpetrators. Yet it was pointed out to me that last year when the Committee on Human Rights was holding hearings on the issue of human rights in South Africa the Hon. Member was the only one who voted against sanctions against South Africa. That, too, is a kind of silence which speaks very eloquently of support for the perpetrators of human rights violations in South Africa.

Mr. Witer: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the Hon. Member will check the record he will see that the statement which he has just made about the way I voted in a committee is inaccurate. I am sure he would want to correct his statement.

Mr. Manly: Madam Speaker, I will check the record. If I prove to be inaccurate I would want to apologize to the House.

I support the whole concept of a Human Rights Day on which the spotlight of our concern here in Canada and, we hope, the spotlight of the entire international community will be put on human rights violations, not simply in Europe but throughout the world. The whole concept of human rights is far too often dealt with from an ideological perspective.

For example, the two superpowers are trying to use human rights in a very political way. The United States is able to pinpoint human rights violations in Russia and the Warsaw Pact countries and the Soviet Union is able to point to violations on the part of the United States through some of its covert activities throughout the world. In fact, both of these nations are quite right in pointing to the faults of the others, but we have to move beyond seeing human rights only from an ideological perspective and in terms of an East-West struggle. We must recognize that where human rights violations take place, whether in the East, West, North or South, they should be condemned and exposed.

We have to move away from the idea of trying to remove the speck from someone else's eye while ignoring the log in our own. We have to move away from this kind of hypocrisy. Canadians are guilty of this also.

We also need to recognize the complexity of human rights issues because sometimes what is defended as one nation's right to survive as a people becomes condemned by another nation as a violation of human rights when one nation is under a kind of seige.

We can see some of this in Canadian history. One of the most shameful incidents in Canadian history is the forcible expulsion of the Japanese from British Columbia. That was done under the provisions of the War Measures Act during World War II. That was a violation of the basic human rights of those people, many of whom were Canadian citizens. Yet it was justified by the Government of the time and the population of the time as being somehow necessitated by national survival.

More recently the imposition of the War Measures Act in the Province of Quebec in 1970 resulted in hundreds of people being arrested, many of them completely innocent of any kind of wrongdoing. That was a violation of human rights which took place under the rubric of some kind of national necessity.

We also need to recognize that the state of our world means that human rights violations are taking place in so many situations that it is almost overwhelming. How can we be aware of them all? Any spotlight that brings attention to one particular set of violations should be welcomed. However, while we might focus on one area we should not be blind or oblivious to the violations that take place in other parts of the world.

This past year the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade did a study on the development assistance policies of Canada. We issued our report entitled For Whose Benefit? In this report we make a strong case for linking our development assistance to the human rights policies and practices of the nations that are receiving our development assistance. I would like to read some of the recommendations as follows:

> The committee recommends:
> i) That emergency humanitarian aid continue to be given on compassionate grounds without preconditions, but that it be monitored closely to prevent abuses;

Even in situations where there are abuses, where there are compassionate needs, emergency needs such as following an earthquake or something of that nature, there would be emergency assistance.

The committee further recommended:

> ii) That the victims of human rights violations not be forgotten when decisions are taken to reduce or delay long-term development aid to governments;

Since we cannot support bilateral aid to governments that violate human rights, we have to remember the individual victims within those countries.

Third, the committee recommended:

> iii) That human rights criteria be developed coherently as part of overall Canadian foreign policy, and that these be applied in a universal, consistent and transparent manner;

In other words, we don't want one set of human rights criteria to be used for development assistance and another set of criteria to be used when we are developing military alliances or trade negotiations.

Fourth, the committee recommended:

> iv) That such criteria, embracing both individual, civil and political rights and socio-economic and cultural rights, be derived from established standards of international human rights law and convention;

It is very important that when we talk about human rights we not only talk about civil and political rights as we understand them in the western democracies, but that we also emphasize the importance of socio-economic rights. What do human rights mean to a child growing up in Mozambique, for example, a country which has been left poor from four centuries of Portuguese colonialism? They are under constant stress and threats from the destabilizing efforts of the South African Government. What do human rights mean to a child growing up in Mozambique? Do they not appear in the form of milk, food, education and a safe shelter, rather than in whether or not someone can run for a legislature, although that is also important? Next it reads:

• (1320)

> That verifiable reports of violations, not ideology or strategic interest, be the basis for unfavourable assessments of human rights observance;

In other words, it is not a question of ideology but of objective description. Organizations such as Amnesty International try to provide that kind of evaluation of human rights. Groups such as that must be supported. It goes on to read:

> That, more generally, progress on human rights be considered part of development, with assessments of the human rights situation in a given country being related to the over-all record of development, particularly from the vantage point of the poorest people.

As we assess human rights, we want to see what a particular country is doing in the whole concept of development. Nicaragua is a good example.

While some people have complained that certain rights and liberties have had to be suspended during a period of crisis, it is a country that is under seige. The American Government is financing a Contra movement that is working to destabilize the whole economy and working to destroy the whole process of development. Yet, since the revolution, Nicaragua has had one of the most remarkable achievements of development in terms of education and health. It has had one of the best records in Central America in terms of being able to make effective use of Canadian development assistance.

When one considers the total picture in a country like Nicaragua, one sees that it has a good human rights situation, even though there are one or two areas where certain human rights have had to be curtailed because of the political crisis that has resulted from the American funded Contra attack upon that country.

The committee goes on to recommend that a human rights unit be established in the Policy Branch of CIDA, and that it develop a human rights grid in line with what the committee recommends. The committee recommends that there be four categories: human rights negative, human rights watch, human rights satisfactory, and human rights positive. In other words, we would attempt to consider the whole situation of a country and apply that situation to a grid to determine whether, for example, the human rights situation in that country is so negative that it stands in universal condemnation. In that case, there should be no bilateral aid.

Human rights watch indicates that there are problems but we believe there are still possibilities. We would not want to rule out the possibility of Canadian aid in those areas. Human rights satisfactory means that we would want to be able to provide aid. Finally, human rights positive refers to situations where a country has made great strides in improving human rights.

In conclusion, I want to indicate our support for the whole concept of human rights, and the Helsinki Human Rights Day on August 1. Wherever a spotlight can be brought on the need for improvements in human rights, we in our Party will support it.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, I wish there was time available to do justice to the motion and the message that it communicates. However, looking at the clock, I see that our time is running out very quickly, and if there is agreement in the House it might be possible for us to vote on this motion now because of the unanimous support which I detect from Members representing all Parties.

I would welcome such support both as a colleague of the mover of the motion in the House and in the Committee on Human Rights.

I am sure that I represent the general opinion of the House in supporting the mover of this motion and the intent of the motion. The great value of a motion such as this and the idea that it advocates, namely an annual remembrance of the Helsinki Human Rights Accords, is that it will raise the consciousness of our people about human rights and continue to maintain that consciousness year by year. It is absolutely vital, particularly in a democracy, that such a message not simply be a commitment on paper but that it be incarnated in the interest, devotion and sense of men and women throughout the land.

The message of human rights is part of the political obligation of every Government of the world. We recognized in our signing of the accords that we have a responsibility to concern ourselves with human rights in other parts of the world because they are the rights of men and women who share our humanity. They share with us this world and our humanity and we have a common obligation to them.

It has also been pointed out that we have a responsibility in that our commitment to human rights is such that when we speak to the world we can speak with sincerity, integrity and effect.

This is a subject that calls forth from the heart and the mind. There is much that might be shared but, alas, time is running out and I want to give an opportunity to speak to my distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis).

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Madam Speaker, I take great pleasure today in joining my colleagues in their support for the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Witer).

His proposal that August 1 should be designated "Helsinki Human Rights Day" is indeed appropriate, because it expresses the profound sentiment that is felt by every person in this country. Madam Speaker, there is not a single person in Canada who is not concerned about this problem. The Hon. Member's proposal also addresses the vital role of the CSCE in seeking a greater element of trust and stability in East-West relations. Finally, it reflects the role of human rights in developing the trust that is a prerequisite for any tangible improvement in East-West relations. For Canada, human rights are a moral obligation. They are the expression in concrete terms of our obligation to respect others. Furthermore, they are the keystone of our democracy and the foundation of our civilization, because full respect for these rights opens the door to the free exchange of ideas that is the source of all creativity. Over the years, the Canadian Government has made a tremendous effort to reinforce the protection of these rights in Canada by enshrining them in the Constitution.

Our support for human rights does not stop at our borders. Since the Second World War, we have signed universal declarations of human rights and we have been signatories of UN conventions on human rights. In years gone by, the Canadian Government has been particularly active and sent delegations to other countries to express our position that human rights must be respected throughout the world.

Madam Speaker, I want to say that I wholeheartedly support this motion and that I would like to see it adopted today.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, today, I welcome this opportunity to table two more petitions asking this Government to listen to the Canadian people, and especially to the many representations I and my party colleagues have made to the Members of the Party in power, the Progressive Conservative Party, all on the subject of proposed tax on food.

Conservatives in the Quebec Caucus have already said they do not want the Government to tax food, and we agree.

Mr. Speaker, the petition I am tabling on behalf of the constituents who visited my riding and especially the By Ward Market this summer, reads as follows:

Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

And whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life, and imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youth and students;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise to present a petition from people mainly in Atlantic Canada opposed to the Draconian measures in Bill C-55 and call upon this House to reject the Bill and bring in one that is much more fair.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions. The first deals with Bill C-55 which threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine claimants are given protection.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings for claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): The second petition deals with the Post Office.

Whereas the federal Government's proposal to seek financial self-sufficiency by 1988 for Canada Post Corporation will result in cut-backs, deterioration in service and consequently will be at the expense of service to Canadian consumers, the petitioners call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of Canada Post and abandon the policy of closing rural Post Offices and cancelling rural routes.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from people in the Provinces of Quebec and Ontario concerning Bill C-55. They note that a standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure for refugees which if adopted would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims.

They therefore call upon Parliament to withdraw C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right of appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition concerning Bill C-55.

The petitioners state that a standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure for refugees which if adopted would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee status before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the Cities of Toronto, Montreal and other municipalities in Ontario and Quebec. They object to Bill C-55. They point out that the concept of a safe third country has no foundation in law and no definition and therefore subjects the refugee process to undue political and diplomatic pressures. They also point out that a better alternative has been provided by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which has the support of churches, the labour movement, the Bar Association and many other groups.

Therefore they request Parliament to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact. In duty-bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Government has kept its word and called the Bill we have on the Order Paper. I do not see either Minister to discuss the Bill. We have a series of amendments which are at this time usually the object of debate. I have one sheet of paper given to me by the Clerk concerning some amendments. I just wondered if prior to getting into the debate we could have some direction as to who is speaking for the Government in this debate and when we can expect to start debate on the amendments. The first amendment will be that of the Minister himself, Amendment No. 1.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the House that the debate will be led off by the Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen). We are ready to go and I am sure things can proceed after your preliminary ruling.

Mr. Fennell: Got you, J.R.

Mr. Gauthier: I have to apologize. I guess it was a Pavlovian reaction of some kind. I expected the Parliamentary Secretary to be in his place, which is on my extreme left. Today he is right in front of me. I understand there has been a shuffle and the Whip has brought some of his friends to the centre of things. I apologize.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: This is also a problem for the Chair.

[English]

There are 23 motions on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof. I have had an opportunity to review some of the motions and propose that consideration be given as follows:

Motions Nos. 1, 4, 7, 11 and 18 standing in the name of the Minister will be grouped for debate and a vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to Motions Nos. 4, 7, 11 and 18.

Motions Nos. 2 and 3 seek to delete Clause 2. Since the motion of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) was received first, it will be selected for a separate vote and debate. Motion No. 3 will not be selected.

Motions Nos. 5, 9 and 20 will be selected for separate votes and debates.

Motions Nos. 6 and 10 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) are duplicates of Motions Nos. 5 and 9 and will not be selected.

The Chair will review the remaining motions and make a definite ruling at three o'clock.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since giving this Bill second reading about 10 days ago the House has passed Bill C-71 which deals with war criminals and those who have committed crimes against humanity. The five motions which we have presented at this time are all consequential amendments to the passage of Bill C-71 which was passed last week. Pursuant to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, I will deal with these five motions in one address.

The purpose of the motion to amend Clause 2 of Bill C-84 is to add "war criminals"' to the list of types of persons who may be made the subject of security reports leading to deportation from Canada.

Bill C-71 would add a new inadmissible class of persons to the list of inadmissible classes in Subsection 19(1) of the Immigration Act, 1976. This new inadmissible class, which would be described in Section 19(1)(j) of the Immigration Act, precludes the admission to Canada of persons who there are reasonable grounds to believe had committed a war crime or crime against humanity.

The effect of Clause 2 of Bill C-84 is to continue the existing process for handling security matters concerning permanent residents of Canada. This process, set out in Sections 39 and 40 of the Immigration Act, involves a security report signed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Solicitor General, a review by the Security Intelligence Review Committee, and a recommendation to the Governor in Council.

It should be noted with reference to Bill C-71 that the provisions regarding the inadmissibility of permanent residents who may have committed a war crime is not retroactive. These provisions will prevent the admission to Canada for permanent residence of any person, after the proclamation of Bill C-71, who has committed a war crime or crime against humanity and will allow for the deportation of permanent residents who commit such odious crimes after the coming into force of Section 19(1)(j).

I am sure that all Members will agree that persons who have committed a war crime or crime against humanity ought to be treated in the same manner as other persons who pose a security risk to Canada. This motion to amend will ensure that that is the case.

The purpose of the motion to amend Clause 3 of Bill C-84 is to add a reference to "war criminals" to Section 40 of the Immigration Act. As mentioned earlier in reference to Clause 2 of Bill C-84, Sections 39 and 40 of the Immigration Act set out the process for handling security matters involving permanent residents of Canada. This motion is therefore consequential on the addition of the reference to Section 19(1)(j), which describes war criminals, to Clause 2 of Bill C-84. Clause 2 amends Section 39 of the Act.

The purpose of the motion to amend Clause 4 of Bill C-84 is to add a reference to "war criminals" to the list of types of persons who may be made the subject of security certificates leading to deportation from Canada. As mentioned in reference to Clause 2 of Bill C-84, Bill C-71 would add a new Section 19(1)(j) to the Immigration Act thereby making war criminals inadmissible to Canada.

Clause 4 of Bill C-84 establishes a new process for handling security matters involving persons who are not permanent residents of Canada, that is, for example, visitors, refugee claimants, and illegal aliens in Canada. The new process involves a security report signed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration and the Solicitor General and a review by the Federal Court.

I am sure that all Members will want to support this motion to amend Clause 4 to ensure that once Bill C-71 is proclaimed war criminals will be treated under the Immigration Act in the same manner as other security risks.

The purpose of the amendment to Clause 5 of Bill C-84 is to ensure that when Bill C-71 is proclaimed war criminals will be denied access to Canada's refugee determination system.

• (1130)

The United Nations Convention relating to the status of refugees provides in Article 1F that:

> The provisions of this Convention shall not apply to any person with respect to whom there are serious reasons for considering that he has committed a crime against peace, a war crime, or a crime against humanity, as defined in the international instruments drawn up to make provision in respect of such crimes.

The UN Convention lists war criminals as persons considered not to be deserving of international protection. As a result, we wish to deny access to the refugee determination system to minimize the prospect that such persons will be able to manipulate the system in order to delay their removal from Canada.

Finally, there is the amendment to Clause 12. The purpose of this amendment to Clause 12 would be to add a reference to war crimes to the new provisions established in Bill C-84 for detention at the port of entry for investigation of identity or security risk.

Clause 12 of Bill C-84 would establish a new Section 104.1 of the Immigration Act. This Section would permit the Minister to issue a certificate requiring detention of a person upon arrival in Canada for up to 28 days for investigation of whether that person may pose a security risk to Canadians.

The present motion to amend Clause 12 by adding a reference to paragraph 19(1)(j) of the Immigration Act as would be established by Bill C-71, would ensure that persons suspected of being war criminals would be treated in the same manner as other persons who are suspected of posing a security risk.

Finally, I wish to emphasize that nothing in these amendments will interfere with our ability to prosecute war criminals in Canada. Removal provisions do not overrule or override the Criminal Code.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to see the Parliamentary Secretary steering this Bill so competently through the House. While I am very happy to hear his voice, and follow the logic of his approach, I must say that with two Ministers of Immigration in the House, whose combined skills are perhaps not as good as the Parliamentary Secretary alone, I cannot understand why they should not be here today to deal with their Bill and guide us through the report stage.

An Hon. Member: Where is your critic?

Mr. Caccia: When one considers that for some reason, which is hard to understand, the Tories decided to have two Ministers in charge of immigration, at least one of them ought to be here, particularly in view of the shabby way in which they have handled questions in Question Period when we were grilling the Government on a number of questions related to Bill C-84.

I must confirm my confidence in the Parliamentary Secretary and say that actually, in a way, I am reassured by the fact that his presence here today shows that his skill and competence is being recognized by the Government.

The amendments to Clauses 1, 4, 7, 11, and 18, which were put forward by the Parliamentary Secretary, are important because they deal with the processing of war criminals. We on this side of the House concur in the necessity of introducing these clauses and debating them under one motion as you us to do a few moments ago.

Therefore, on behalf of the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), who is due to arrive any moment, I will be very glad to concur. I believe he has been held up on constituency business, which I believe everyone understands.

He is not the proponent of the Bill and there is a big difference. The proponent of the Bill is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and that is why I am saying he should be here.

In any case, we concur with the motion before us.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, we support this group of motions relating to this amendment. We are also very pleased that the war criminals Bill has been passed. Of course, these motions are consequent upon it.

We support these motions, notwithstanding that we oppose those parts of Bill C-84 to which these motions relate. Specifically, we oppose the denial of access to the refugee process for the several classes of people who are referred to in this motion. We disagree with the interpretation that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has given, based on a quotation from one aspect of the United Nations Convention for Refugees.

Representatives from the United Nations High Commission for Refugees made it very plain when they spoke to us during our committee hearings on this Bill that, while they do not grant the absolute demand for protection to war criminals and the others described in this motion, they still ask that the decision to find the person as one of those so described should be made as part of determining the refugee status which the person has claimed. We are talking about people who have claimed refugee status but are found to be inadmissible on these grounds.

The United Nations Convention does not require that Canada or any country admit somebody that it finds inadmissible on these grounds. It does not even require that Canada observe the rule against returning that person directly or indirectly to the country where he fears persecution. Therefore, the right of Canada to do what it thinks is necessary for its security, and necessary in accordance with the war criminals Bill, is not in any way infringed or challenged either by the United Nations Convention regarding the protection of the status of refugees or by the decisions of the executive of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. This was made quite clear to us by their representative who spoke to our committee a couple of weeks ago.

However, they do urge that their procedure be followed. Their procedure includes not only recognition or non-recognition of a person's claim to refugee status, but also recognition of the facts of the crimes of this sort for which the person may either be convicted or very reasonably suspected of committing.

In their view, the difference it makes is that if there is a person in Canada who is convicted or suspected of those crimes and therefore considered unacceptable, inadmissible in Canada—of course leaving aside the extradition at the request of another country which is based on other legislation—nevertheless, in regard to refugee status, Canada ought to allow the refugee process to continue its full course, including consideration of that security risk or crime, war crime, or crime against humanity.

Considering both facts, both the crime and the fact of refugee status, it might make a difference in how that person's situation would be handled. It might be possible, if the United Nations High Commission so wished, to have that person sent to some other country than the one from which he fled. There are war crimes and there are war crimes, and this has come out during the debate on the war crimes Bill.

Not everyone is completely at one about the exact definition or scope of the definition of war crimes. Therefore, the United Nations prefers that we follow the rule it has adopted, which is not binding on us but is recommended. It prefers that we do not deny access to the refugee states process even to these people. In fact, there have been very few cases, perhaps a couple of dozen, who have come anywhere close to this category in the last couple of decades in Canada.

It is not a burdensome item and the UNHCR prefers that we keep the principle clear of not denying refugee status to a person who has claimed it. But it is an agreement with us that after that status has been granted, and in the case of someone who is also found to fall into this inadmissible category, Canada then is free to deport that person according to our own laws but it wishes we would consult with the UNHCR before we do that.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we would be supporting this clause, although we will be opposing certain parts of the Bill with which this clause deals.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker since we are discussing the amendments proposed by the Government, I have a few questions for the Parliamentary Secretary and I think it would be desirable to have some appropriate answers.

Mr. Speaker, last Friday, we adopted here in the House Bill C-71, a Bill that provides the courts with the requisite mechanisms to send war criminals living in Canada back to their own countries to stand trial. I have some trouble understanding why the Government is proposing these amendments. There must be a very logical answer which I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary could give me.

[English]

I would like to ask the Parliamentary Secretary a question. Since Bill C-71, which was adopted last Friday, is supposed to be a "made in Canada" approach to war criminals, that is, they would be charged under the Criminal Code, why do we now want to deport, or to be able to deport these same people? My understanding is that by virtue of Section 52 of the Immigration Act, persons can be tried in Canada before they are deported. Can we have some response from the Parliamentary Secretary as to why we would want to try these people and then deport them? Is that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Am I to understand there is unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member of Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) to put his question to the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier will understand, of course, that in order to update legislation there must be full reference to new provisions made in other legislation. It would be inappropriate and incomplete to have a new Bill passed which deals with war measures and then have another measure passed dealing with immigration, which is affected by Bill C-71 in this particular case, and not have any reference to it. It would be as though the Immigration Act was blind to a new provision which had been made under Bill C-71.

Yes, it would be the view that if someone has been here as a permanent resident and now falls under the inadmissible class of Section 19(1)1(j), he is deportable just as every other person mentioned on Section 19(1) is deportable if they are a permanent resident.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motions Nos. 1, 4, 7, 11, and 18. A vote on Motion No. 1 will be applied to the other four motions. Therefore, the question is on Motion No. 1. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motions Nos. 1, 4, 7, 11 and 18 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Motion No. 2 will be debated and voted on separately.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 2

That Bill C-84 be amended by deleting Clause 2.

He said: Mr. Speaker, Clause 2 and Clause 3 are really, as explained in the notes, consequential on Clause 4. However, I understand we have to take them up as they come.

The effect of Clause 2 or Clause 3 is to separate out certain groups from an action that is taken by Clause 4. The effect of the three clauses together is to set up a new procedure around the matter of security certificates. In the existing legislation we have provision for security certificates.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) together may sign a security certificate which accuses a certain person of being in effect a threat to the security of Canada. They are not required by law to provide information as to the nature of the action the person is accused of committing, nor are they required to provide any of the evidence. The argument for that contrary to our otherwise normal legal procedure in Canada is that to describe the act or the evidence might of itself endanger the security of Canada or the security of certain persons. This provision has been in force for some years and I am told that in the last couple of decades about 23 people have been accused under that provision.

There is a limited degree of protection of the rights of the persons so accused. The charge and the evidence are reviewed by the Security Intelligence Review Committee, the same body that was set up by Parliament to monitor the work of CSIS, the Canadian Security Intelligence Service. The Security Intelligence Review Committee will review the information, the accusation and the evidence, and it will describe some of it to the accused person, to the extent it believes it can give that information without endangering the security of Canada or the safety of any persons. The accused person is allowed to respond to that limited part of the information. The Security Intelligence Review Committee then makes a recommendation to the Minister as to whether the certificate should be sustained or not. If the certificate is sustained, and if the Minister judges that the person is a threat to the security of Canada, that person may be deported.

What is being done by the new law is to say that while the earlier law applies to Canadian citizens, if they are so charged, and to permanent residents of Canada, if they are so charged, it does not apply to others such as visitors on a visitor's visa or to people who have come in without any adequate documentation such as many refugee claimants claiming what we have provided in our law as the Inland Refugee Claim procedure. Those people, including those refugee claimants, instead of having the certificate reviewed by the SIRC will have it reviewed by the Supreme Court. We will be opposing that when it is dealt with under the amendments relating to Clause 4.

I will not go at length into the reasons for opposing it now. Since we are opposing the creation of this new procedure for those who are neither citizens nor permanent residents of Canada, we therefore oppose the separation of those people from citizens and permanent residents in the division of this law into two parts. There seems to us to be no sufficient reasons shown why the matter should be put before the Federal Court of Appeal rather than the Security Intelligence Review Committee.

Very briefly, the explanation given by certain persons, staff and certain Members of Parliament, is that it will expedite the action. That seems very questionable since there seems to be great evidence that the Federal Court has as great a backlog, if not a greater backlog of business, than does the SIRC. Although at present the SIRC meets only monthly it is able to meet in panels or as single persons in order to deal with matters as they come up.

To my understanding there has been no delay, or no undue delay, in having these cases, the few that have occurred, looked at by the SIRC. There may well be a delay of months, according to the backlog of the Federal Court. That would be potentially injurious to the accused person who, of course, is being detained. That sort of delay and prolongation of the process certainly increases the administrative burden of the Department and of the justice system.

Further, the Federal Court has no expertise as such in security matters. Whether some individual members may have a background in security or not, the court as such has no expertise in that area. As the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister pointed out during debate at second reading, the court has access to the security information provided by CSIS. It has the same access as does the review committee. That is not the question. The question is about the court's familiarity and expertise in evaluating such information.

The whole point of the review is that the matter should not be left merely to the fact that the security authorities have presented certain evidence. That evidence has to be weighed. We have a body which is appointed for two special purposes, and one is to weigh that evidence. Over several years it has developed a recognized competence in doing that.

The Federal Court is a court which judges legal procedures. It reviews how a case has been handled to see whether or not it has been handled according to law. It is not within its expertise to handle matters of fact. It is certainly not within its expertise to weigh matters of security. Therefore we believe that as a matter of justice the group should not be divided to separate non-permanent residents from the rest.

We also believe there may very well be the occasion of a Charter challenge under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In the general spirit of the Singh decision of two and a half years ago, it may be that the Supreme Court will find that it is unconstitutional, contrary to the Charter, to deny as good a hearing to non-permanent residents as is available to permanent residents. That was certainly the spirit of the Singh decision. It would be consistent with that decision if the Supreme Court found that in this case.

Rather than waiting perhaps two or three years for a Supreme Court challenge, with the exception of that and with the trouble that may accrue to individuals in the meantime, I hope that the Government will agree to the amendment that I will put later which would withdraw that amendment to Clause 4. I am therefore asking that we withdraw this consequential amendment now.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, unlike the government Members in committee, we listened to those who appeared before our committee on Bill C-84. We carefully developed a position whereby we concluded that Clause 2, which gives considerable powers to the Minister of Employment and Immigration, should be removed. The reason is this. The Minister would be given the power to arbitrarily sign a certificate against a person without the benefit of the report by the committee. I am referring to the Security Intelligence Review Committee. This is an arbitrary power that was objected to by a number of organizations which appeared before the committee.

For instance, the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees commented, saying that the Security Intelligence Review Committee is doing a good job and has developed expertise in evaluating security certificates. It asked, why that role should be suspended? Actually, it urged that the review task be left with the committee. It felt that the jurisdiction should remain with the Security Intelligence Review Committee. It also argued that the Federal Court does not have the expertise necessary to deal with these matters.

We had submissions from the Canadian Bar Association which said it could not see any reason for the inclusion of Clause 2 in the proposed Bill. Representatives of the Bar Association felt that the Federal Court is not an expert tribunal on security issues. They also confirmed that the Security Intelligence Review Committee is doing a good job. They argued that the Federal Court is not fast in making a decision, that a waiting period of six months in the Court of Appeal and longer could take place.

The Canadian Bar Association also felt that the Federal Court would not be any faster than the present process. It reinforced the notion that the committee is adequate. It, too, wanted to leave the jurisdiction with the committee and argued that, perhaps, the decision-making process of the Security Intelligence Review Committee ought to be spread out and expedited.

Amnesty International commented that it cannot see any reason to change the existing system. That association said that often foreign governments do not state the truth about the activities of people they consider as threats—among those foreign governments there are some that are friendly to Canada, as in the case of South Korea—and student security checks.

• (1200)

The Canadian Ethnocultural Council saw no reason to transfer this responsibility to the Federal Court, which already has a heavy case-load, and that council also argued in favour of maintaining the present system.

The Canadian Jewish Congress also supported the existing procedure of the committee. It felt that the procedure for the examination of the validity of the security certificate could be stacked against the claimant; there is no appeal and no cross-examination, the Minister's case would be presented in camera, and the claimant would only receive a summary of the evidence.

The Civil Liberties Association also commented against the change, and the inclusion of Clause 2 to which we object. That organization felt that the Security Intelligence Review Committee is developing a reputation for independence, and that it does have an expertise which ought to be utilized. It also suggested that the committee procedure by the Security Intelligence Review Committee should be maintained.

We also received a submission from the coalition interested in Bill C-84. It argued that the Security Intelligence Review Committee was established to provide for proper review of security decisions. It argued and recommended in favour of leaving the present system in place. It agreed with the Canadian Bar Association proposal to impose time limits. The coalition also stated that there has been no indication that the committee is not working well. It argued that it has now developed considerable experience and knowledge.

There were also submissions from individuals, for example, Mr. Joe Stern, who argued that the role of the committee ought to be continued. The Etobicoke Committee for Fairness to Refugees also felt very strongly that this clause should be removed.

The Inter-Church Committee for Refugees came before the committee. It felt that if there are security worries, the people should go to the refugee division quickly and then a decision could be made regarding security.

It is interesting to note that the United Nations High Commission for Refugees made the observations that we should first determine whether or not a person is a refugee, that a person should be given time to find another country, and that the commission can assist. We would not be helpful if we did not know whether this person was a refugee. The commission argued that we should determine the refugee status first, and then decide on security issues, as it is done presently. This body has been in existence for many years, and it has been engaged in the matter of developing policy and handling the movement of refugees around the globe, and it came forward in favour of removing Clause 2 from this Bill.

Amnesty International also commented on this important matter. It said that the law should give all refugee status claimants the opportunity to be heard on the merits. It developed a rationale for handling cases where the claimants are found to be refugees and security threats.

The submission made by Rabbi Gunther Plaut is also worth considering. He also recommended that we continue with the present system for the reason that criminality is defined differently in different countries. He said that situations may look different when assessed through Canadian eyes. He said it is important to determine that a person is a refugee at the same time as the security assessment is made, and then it is important to decide what to do.

The Canadian Jewish Congress and the coalition, and other people, also appeared before the committee and made comments on this particular clause. I wish to stress that it is important that the Minister pay attention to the arguments advanced by a number of interested parties.

Because the Federal Court is inexperienced in this matter, and the Minister without the benefit of a report by the Security Intelligence Review Committee would have the powers to sign a certificate against a person and file it with the Federal Court, we are voting for the deletion of Clause 2. The present system has proven so far to function properly, and it does not give special powers to a political individual without the benefit of a report from the Security Intelligence Review Committee on which to base a decision.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): I appreciate the comments of the two members opposite. As the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) correctly pointed out, the purpose of Clause 2 is to make a distinction between permanent residents and visitors. Clause 4 will bear that out when there is a distinction made in the manner the two classes of people are treated when a decision has been made.

Broadly speaking, the people that we are talking about in this clause, and again in Section 19(1) of the Immigration Act, are the inadmissible class. Here I disagree with the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and I would remind Members opposite that the first purpose of the entire determination system is not to determine whether these people are refugees, but to determine whether they need protection. This was again stated last week in committee. The purpose of the determination system is to decide if these people need protection. In fact, all Members know that some people have found protection elsewhere and have chosen to leave there. As one witness stated, they are shopping for the best place to go.

The second purpose is to provide protection for Canada. We are dealing with an inadmissible class, people who have been convicted of crime, who may be security risks, and now, on the amended version, who may have been guilty of war crimes. Surely Members opposite would concede that there is a rationale for treating visitors differently from permanent residents. Permanent residents do have rights, as do citizens. They can work. They have a right to employment and to the social services of Canada. Within the immigration system they have not only a right to sponsor but a right to appeal in a sponsorship program. Visitors do not have that right. I hope Members opposite would concede that there is a difference between visitors and permanent residents.

• (1210)

The purpose of the process outlined in Section 2 of this Bill is to make sure that there is maximum fairness provided to those who have been investigated and who have been issued a certificate. Therefore, in order to provide maximum fairness it seems to us that you can get that by appealing to the Federal Court. The Hon. Member for Spadina said that the court was not competent to hear this evidence. I hope he will rethink the suggestion that the court system is not competent to hear evidence. What is it all about if it is not competent to hear evidence, Mr. Speaker? Surely that is the very business in which the court is engaged. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) together with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) make application on the basis of security information to a Federal Court, the very competentcy of the Federal Court guarantees that the person named in that application will get maximum fairness because that decision will be made in fact and in law. Therefore, I am somewhat perplexed at the persistence on the part of the Member from Spadina in raising this matter constantly.

The Member from Spadina says there will be Charter challenges. There is no escaping that because lawyers litigate. That is what they are all about. I think it is clear that there is good argument to be made that the Charter deals with people who are similarly situated. Surely the Member will agree, and we are confident that the court will agree that visitors and permanent residents are not similarly situated.

Finally, the Member mentions that there is a backlog in the court system. There is a backlog in the immigration appeal division but not in the trial division where expertise has been developed in determination of fact.

I cannot accept what the Member from Spadina and the Hon. Member for Davenport have said regarding this amendment. We cannot support the amendment. I do not think the Member from Spadina has dealt with Clause 4. It would be interesting for him to deal with, but he has not chosen to do that and I am surprised he chose to deal with this clause. At any rate, for these reasons, we cannot support the amendment proposed by the Member from Spadina.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 2 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour please say yea.

An Hon. Member: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it. I declare the amendment lost.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, you said: "I declare the amendment lost." In fact, when you put the question, we said "yea" to the motion; no one said "nay". So the amendment is carried, not lost.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am willing to look at the record. When I asked for the yeas and nays it is my recollection that I heard someone say yea, probably the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), while a large number of Members said nay. Therefore, I declared the motion negatived. That was my recollection but I am willing to hear the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, why would the Opposition speak against the motion?

Miss MacDonald: That is what we want to know.

Mr. Gauthier: Let me finish. Why would the Opposition speak against or for the motion and then stay quiet and not want its voice vote to be heard? Our Party and the New Democratic Party spoke for the amendment. We voted for it and that is it as far as I am concerned. The yea vote was won by us.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You always get a second chance on Monday mornings.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I sympathize with the argument put by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier—

Mr. Gauthier: I don't need that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I know a member of his Party spoke against the motion—

Mr. Gauthier: Spoke for the motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When I took the voice vote my understanding was that the nays had it.

Some Hon. Members: Right.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thought it was by an overwhelming majority. Five Members did not stand up. No one stood. The decision will stand.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 5

That Bill C-84 be amended by deleting Clause 3.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am fairly confident that the history of Canada will not hinge or turn on the vote on the last motion.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Heap: Motion No. 5 is a motion to delete Clause 3 and Clause 3 in turn is consequent on Clause 4. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has expressed disappointment that I did not speak on Clause 4.

Mr. Friesen: Surprised.

Mr. Heap: I understand that we were taking the clauses in order so I spoke on Clause 2 when we dealt with Clause 2 and I will speak on Clause 4 when we deal with Clause 4. I hope that the Parliamentary Secretary will agree with me because that, of course, is the important clause out of those three clauses.

Clause 3 is like Clause 2, it is consequent on Clause 4. Therefore, I will not speak on it at length. I would rather devote time to Clause 4.

• (1220)

I would simply say that the whole system of segregating out visitors or others who are not permanent residents or citizens as established by Clause 4 is what I wish to reject. However, I wish to take this occasion to respond to a couple of points made by the Parliamentary Secretary.

The Parliamentary Secretary talked about the court being competent to judge questions of evidence. In fact, the court's main expertise is to judge questions of procedure. According to its jurisdiction, it spends less time by far judging questions of evidence per se. It may judge a question of unreasonable disregard of evidence. Cases like that are often sent back to the jurisdictions from which they came for rehearing.

I notice that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary did not really challenge the point that the Federal Court does not have any specific expertise in security matters. The Security Intelligence Review Committee has that specific expertise. Therefore, the point I was making has not really been addressed or negated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary.

The Parliamentary Secretary has said that visitors are not situated similarly to permanent residents. That is true, but the Supreme Court heard that argument in the case of Singh, the judgment it gave two and a half years ago. At that time, the court said in effect that when it is a matter of risk of life or imprisonment, the difference of situation between a permanent and a non-permanent resident is not enough to deny the normal due process to the non-permanent resident. It is true, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary said, that when it comes to a question of the right to take employment in Canada, there is a difference. That difference is legislated and, to the best of my knowledge, it has not been challenged at the Supreme Court, though I am not familiar with all the cases.

It was interesting that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary made a sort of facetious reference to the possibility of Charter challenges. He said that of course lawyers will litigate, implying that lawyers will litigate frivolously or that they may have some rich clients who will hire them to litigate frivolously. It reminds me of the remark made by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) a couple of months ago when confronted with the fact that lawyers in private practice with expertise in immigration matters who had spoken publicly on the Bill had all spoken against Bill C-55. The Minister responded by saying: "Oh, they are just interested in their fees".

I find it remarkable that a lawyer who is simply interested in fees would be taking up the case of refugees who are mostly very poor. Except for the occasional one who may have made a fortune dealing in drugs in Vietnam and has retired as a general in Canada, refugees are not usually regarded as rich clients.

I also find it very interesting that this has come from a Government which has been preaching for nearly three years that it is the private sector that is the engine of recovery. I find it very comical that this Government, which is selling off public corporations as fast as it can, this Government which has boasted that it will reduce the number of people in public employment, should speak with scorn about or try to denigrate lawyers in private practice.

I do not know if the Minister really thinks that all those lawyers ought to be hired by the Government, and I do not know if the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary thinks that they all ought to be civil servants before their opinions should be taken into consideration. I understand, of course, that lawyers hired by the Government have some difficulty expressing opinions in disagreement with the Government unless they have plans for other employment.

I find it strange that the Government should offer public scorn to the opinion of lawyers in the private sector whose only apparent offence from the Government's point of view is that they might want fees for their work.

I hope the Government will reconsider and will have some regard for lawyers in private practice, especially since it was lawyers in private practice who obtained the Singh decision against the expertise of government lawyers. I think it would be foolish on the part of the Government to dismiss the possibility of litigation brought by lawyers in private practice as though it were badly motivated and ineffective. I would ask Parliament to uphold this motion to delete Clause 3.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we argue in favour of deleting Clause 3 for the reasons to which we already referred earlier. It would be difficult to add new information to the argument.

I would only like to bring to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary and the Government once again the comments on Clauses 2 and 3 of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The High Commissioner made the important point that the first and most important thing is to determine whether or not a person is a refugee. That is the paramount decision that must be made. That must be done first because that is the nature of the matter affecting the future of a person who applies as a refugee, relying on us as a nation complying with our international agreements. The decision on security must then be made, but as a subsequent step.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees has registered an important message with the Government of Canada and that message has been ignored. That is why we feel that Clause 3 ought to be deleted.

All of a sudden, the experience of the committee is being put aside and a new process is being put into place that deals more with procedure than evidence, as the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) so eloquently put it. We feel that that is not the wise approach.

Reference has also been made to the possibility of this clause being found unconstitutional, and not simply for the fun of hiring lawyers and taking the Government of Canada to court. There may be some very good grounds for taking the Government to court on this legislation in light of our Constitution.

For the life of me, I cannot understand why the Government takes this matter so lightly and ignores the submissions, comments and suggested amendments made by the committee. That is not good Government and it is not the open and democratic approach this Government promised in 1984. As a matter of fact, one can hardly find one comment or one suggested amendment made by the groups and individuals who appeared before the committee that has been accepted. In this case, this is an attitude of neglect on the part of the Government which is extremely difficult for us in Opposition to understand.

• (1230)

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, to respond very briefly to what my friends across the way have said, I would point out again that the review committee sits only several times a year. To wait for the next sitting would be to ask the whole process to slow down and invite the committee to be burdened with decisions we feel should be made by the court. After all, the purpose of the committee is not to deal with immigration or refugee cases, it is to be a watch-dog of the whole security system. It will hear some cases, of course, but it is to provide an overview and make sure the security system is functioning well and the private lives of Canadian citizens are not invaded without reason. We feel that the court system is the place for the case to be heard. What the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) has described within the court system may be true with respect to the appeal division but not the trial division which is the competent court with which we are dealing.

He drew a fairly long bow with respect to my remark regarding litigation. As usual for the NDP, sooner or later it comes down to money. The fact is that over the last five years, since the Charter was passed, all the discussion has been about Charter challenges. That is the situation we are in. What are the parameters with respect to the Charter. Laws will be challenged on the basis of the Charter. Every time you pass a law you invite that kind of challenge. We accept that. That does not invite the long lecture that I got from the Hon. Member for Spadina.

Since this proposal on the part of the Hon. Member is again consequential to the previous proposal, it is logical that we will not support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 5. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

An Hon. Member: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea?

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is Motion No. 9.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 9

That Bill C-84 be amended by deleting Clause 4.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is the clause the Parliamentary Secretary was waiting for. I hope I have now satisfied his yearning because I am going to speak on it as he so much wanted me to do. I see him looking very happy and his disappointment is assuaged.

This clause is basically unnecessary and therefore unfair. It is not a question of whether Canada has the right and should have the power to protect itself against persons who may threaten our security or who otherwise are serious offenders in our eyes, people such as war criminals. That is not the question. We have dealt with war criminals in Bill C-71. We have provided for their inclusion under the Immigration Act. My Party supported both those decisions. What is at stake here is the refugee determination system for those people. That is why I and my Party oppose Clause 4 and have asked for its deletion.

I am advised that the Security Review Committee meets monthly, is flexible and can meet more often, as it has had occasion to do. It can meet in panels, even panels of one. It is very flexible in its approach. It has not caused any delay in the hearing of security cases which have come before it. Any delay was not caused by the inability of the committee to meet expeditiously. It was caused by the inability of CSIS to provide the information on which the committee could meet. If CSIS does not provide the data, then neither the committee nor the Federal Court can handle the case. Therefore, there is no ground for predicting that these cases could not be handled expeditiously.

In fact, the committee was told that the two functions of the security committee actually assist each other. That is to say, the examination of the particular cases, as under the Immigration Act, together with other cases, actually assists in elucidating the possible problems the Security Review Committee has to examine in the operation of CSIS. That was explained to us by the chairman of the committee.

It is very important that this committee not operate in a vacuum, only examining abstract reports. It is very important that it have access to particular cases so it can see not only the analysis but the facts on which the analysis is based. For example, there were several cases of people who came from Chile. They were admitted as permanent residents but are now being accused of being security risks. That was the information provided by CSIS. But CSIS had not evaluated that information adequately. Perhaps that is not its function. At any rate, it did not. It simply said we have this information which is very damaging to those persons with respect to security.

The matter was brought to the security review committee and, operating with their knowledge of the security operations of Canada, and in dealing with counsel for the Chileans concerned, it turned out that all the evidence against those persons was based on information from the Pinochet Government which those persons had fled. It was either police reports originating from the Pinochet police or newspaper reports originating from newspapers owned or controlled by the Pinochet Government.

It is commonplace that a dictatorial Government, and I hope the Parliamentary Secretary will not dispute the dictatorial nature of the Pinochet Government, tries to persecute people who have left the country after opposing the Government and trying to organize a democratic resistance. When they are finally chased out of the country in fear of their lives or liberty, a Government such as Pinochet's will pursue them with lies. It will try to compromise them in the eyes of whatever country they may go to. That is what happened in the case of these Chileans.

• (1240)

Therefore, it was very important for those persons that the Security Intelligence Review Committee reviewed their cases. It was also very important for the work of the SIRC in monitoring, overseeing and evaluating the work of our security service. It would not be to the benefit of Canada to separate the business of looking at particular cases such as this from the over-all review and analysis by the SIRC. It would not be to the benefit of certain individuals concerned, in certain cases at least, and it would not be to the benefit of the over-all work of the review committee.

We are asking that the review committee continue to have the responsibility. If the Minister is concerned about delay, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary suggests, it would have been and may still be quite easy to put certain time requirements into the clause.

In fact, I moved such an amendment in committee but the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary and his colleagues in the government caucus, who say they are interested in speed, were not interested in speed at that time. They were not interested in amendments to the clause which would require the SIRC to render its decisions within certain statutorily specified times.

Therefore, there is not much weight to the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's argument that they are concerned about SIRC being too slow. There is no evidence that SIRC would be too slow and there is no evidence that the Government is seriously concerned about speed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the House will adopt my motion to delete Clause 4 which would resolve any doubt in the Minister's mind about whether I was giving undue attention to Clauses 2 and 3.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we feel the same way. Much has been said on this matter in committee by my colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). He argued about the potential unconstitutionality of this process and about the necessity of deleting this clause.

It is interesting to note that if we do not delete this clause and the preceding one the Minister will be given enormous discretionary powers of his or her own. The decision of the Minister on the basis of a certificate will go forward to the Federal Court. The Federal Court will have to take upon itself the onus of deciding whether the reasons which led to the issuance of that certificate are valid, sound and proper. It seems to me that that is quite a lot for a court to have to decide on the basis of a political decision.

We believe that the alternative is a much better way of handling refugee cases than the one being proposed here. The method proposed here has too much of a political undertone and gives extensive powers to one person, namely, the Minister of Immigration of the day. It then shifts the entire responsibility of deciding whether the political decision is valid and ought to be accepted, namely whether the certificate is appropriate or not and whether the grounds upon which the decision was made are correct or not, to the court which must then examine a political decision. Therefore, we are very unhappy about this development and that is why we urge the deletion of this clause.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will respond first to the last comments made by the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) that this has political overtones. It is just the opposite. If it is turned over to the Federal Court it removes any kind of political overtones from the proceedings. The Member might argue that in some of the Immigration Appeal Boards in some of the regions there may have been some intrusion of politics. He may want to argue that, but I hope he would not argue that if an application is brought before the Federal Court it becomes political. After all, it is removing the politicians from the scene. The Minister together with the Solicitor General file an application on the basis of evidence presented by CSIS which puts it in a nonpolitical arena in the federal court system. I hope my friend from Davenport will understand that.

He also said that the Minister has enormous discretionary powers. It is just the opposite. It must be dealt with in fact and in law. He does not have discretionary powers. Once he files to the federal court system it is out of his hands and the court decides.

I would now like to respond to the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who began by saying that that which is at stake is the refugee determination system. I could not agree more. That is exactly what is at stake in this section and that is why I cannot accept his proposal.

The system has been defrauded by misuse. He and I have heard of the case which was reported in the press not too long ago of someone from New York who was involved in a $50 million insurance fraud and came to Canada and applied for refugee status here. That is what makes the refugee determination system fall apart.

I will remind Members of the classes of people with which we are dealing. In Subsection 19(1)(d), (e), (f) and (g) and in 27(2)(c) there is reference to organized criminal activity, espionage or subversion against democratic government, subversion by force of any government and acts of violence or subversion by force of any government. It is people involved in that kind of thing with whom we are dealing.

The guarantee that there will be some fairness in this system is that the evidence which it is not in the public interest to have publicized will be heard in camera and the individual will be protected from having information about him disseminated through the media. This addresses the whole element of fairness.

My friend from Spadina talks about the Pinochet Government. I think all of us in the House recognize that he is no boy scout leader. It is not always pleasant living in Chile. The Member referred to the evidence which was accepted by CSIS and then thrown out by the review board. I hope he will be confident that the court will be competent enough to make the same kind of decision as the review committee could make. Surely if the review committee were brilliant enough to discard trumped up evidence on the basis of newspaper reports from Chile or statements made by the Pinochet Government, court justices will be able to see through that kind of scam too and will be competent to deal with it.

• (1250)

Therefore, I suggest that Clause 4 is at the heart of the entire system with which we are dealing and to accept the amendment by the Hon. Member for Spadina would be to gut the legislation. We could not accept that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, would the Parliamentary Secretary clarify for the benefit of the House the question of certificates which we dealt with earlier? It is my understanding that the Minister does not file an application, he files a copy of the security certificate with the Federal Court. Because it is the Federal Court, the court is almost obliged to uphold this certificate unless the process of issuing that certificate is found to be improper. Will the Parliamentary Secretary clarify whether this is correct?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the court is entirely competent to accept or reject the Minister's statement.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not have the privilege of taking part in the committee when it considered this particular clause, but I want to echo the concerns that other people have raised about the kinds of "star chamber" aspects of this legislation.

The argument made by the Government is that there may be security grounds related to people seeking to be refugees and therefore this is required. If I understand correctly, I do not believe that there have been security offences committed within Canada by any person who has been admitted to this country as a refugee.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is also the case with some people who try to obtain refugee status and against whom allegations are made by the government of the country from which they came. As my hon. friend from Spadina (Mr. Heap) said earlier, if, for instance, the testimony is given by the secret police of a country like Chile, a very repressive dictatorship, containing statements that the alleged refugee has committed offences against the security of their country, we do not know exactly how such testimony will be dealt with by a judge of the Federal Court of Canada. We can assume there will be some problems since one of the critics of the Bill has pointed out, with regard to the Canadian Security Intelligence Service, that they have, on occasion, too readily accepted information on security from authorities in countries that are not democratic and in fact are dictatorships.

Mr. Speaker, the Government is proposing that, if a person is suspected of being a possible threat to Canada's security—and as I just said in English, we have very little, in fact no proof that this has been a problem in the past—that in this case, instead of referring the evidene to an adjudicator who knows the immigration sector, instead of having that, we start over with a new process. The Federal Court of Canada is a very busy court. Even if, according to the Bill, a judge of the Federal Court must examine the certificate within seven days, there is no guarantee that the person in question has the right to know what the charges are against him. In some cases, that person will have no idea what the allegations are, since the judge will have the right, at the Government's request, to deny all access to information referred to the Court, on the basis of which the Government wants to prevent that person from being admitted to Canada.

Mrs. Speaker, that is also the case with some people who are seeking to obtain refugee status in Canada and who will have to face allegations made against them by the Government of their own country. As was mentioned by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), if, for instance, we have testimony by the secret police of a country like Chile, a very repressive dictatorship, containing allegations that the alleged refugee has committed offences against the security of their country, we do not know exactly how this testimony will be dealt with by a judge of the Federal Court of Canada.

[English]

I simply question the necessity for this entire heavy-handed kind of clause which again does not relate to evidence that we have had in Canada that people coming here as refugees have proven to be risks to Canadian security. They may be dealt with as security risks in Guatemala or Chile, which is precisely why they may be coming here. They are considered by those Governments to be a threat to the security of those states and are therefore being persecuted. They would not be a threat under our terms, but in seeking such simple things as dignity, land reform for peasants and better income, they are deemed to be in opposition to a government that may not be democratic.

That is why I support the efforts of my colleague, the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), and other Members, and say that if a process related to security questions is needed, it does not need to be heavy-handed in this way.

If it is needed, it does not need to be shunted into a different channel. There is no reason why it cannot be handled through the regular process of determination of refugees.

Of course, if there are security questions which trouble the Canadian authorities, then there needs to be a fast-track. However, the problem with the refugee determination process over-all is that there has not been adequate swift disposition of cases. If there was swift disposition of cases this type of instrument would not be needed and fast-tracking would probably not be required as well.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, by unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) heard what he was saying. He talked about proceeding with this on the basis of mere suspicion. I find that offensive. The whole system is based on Canada's system of evidence and rules of evidence. Our court system is not based on mere suspicion.

He also talked about the court being heavy-handed. I hope that he will reconsider his view of the court system. We are appealing to the court system because it is fair. It makes its determinations on the basis of evidence, not on the basis of suspicion. It is staffed by justices who have been trained in law and weighing evidence. It is our judgment that the claimant will have the best hearing if he is heard by a court of law.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is not as easy as the Parliamentary Secretary would have the House of Commons believe. In the last number of weeks we have heard representatives from a wide range of organizations, including the Civil Liberties Association of Canada. They mention that with this particular aspect of security plus a detainment certificate, potential claimants for refugee status are being treated, on suspicion, worse than the criminal who would rob a bank in broad daylight. Therefore, I do not believe that the Parliamentary Secretary is completely correct.

Second, the United Nations High Commission for Refugees has expressed a great deal of concern about this particular clause.

I see that it is one o'clock. I would like to continue the debate following Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

FISHERIES

DEEP SEA DRIFT-NETS—KILLING OF MAMMALS AND SEABIRDS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): As you know, Mr. Speaker, deep sea drift-nets are the marine equivalent of strip mining. Individually they hang to a depth of seven metres and often stretch for 50 kilometres.

In the Pacific Ocean alone there are an estimated 30,000 kilometres of drift-nets laid by 1,700 ships which belong to South Korea, Japan and Taiwan. The nets are intended to catch salmon and squid but also trap and kill up to 50,000 mammals such as whales, dolphins and sea lions, and one million seabirds.

Strung together these nets would reach from Tokyo, across Canada, to Rome. This shocking and wasteful method of fishing must be stopped before mammal, seabird and fish populations are depleted. The International Whaling Commission could stop this unacceptable exploitation of our common resources. We urge the Government of Canada to condemn Japan, South Korea and Taiwan strongly for using drift-net fishing, and to lead an international campaign to stop this practice.

SPORTS

IMMIGRANT SPRINTER BEN JOHNSON WINS WORLD CHAMPIONSHIP GOLD MEDAL

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, many people have criticized the Government for its policy of steadily decreasing the number of immigrants admitted to this country. Some have asked just what have they added to Canada? Well, they cannot ask that question any more because a simple answer would be that Canada would not have the gold medal won by Ben Johnson, the fastest man in the world, if, 15 years ago, his mother Gloria had not decided to migrate from Jamaica to Canada and bring her family with her.

The example of Ben Johnson is not a single example. He is the most celebrated of us all today, a world-class name, but he is only one of hundreds of thousands, in fact of millions of people who have come from various countries and have made Canada a better country.

We are proud of him throughout this land but nowhere more than in the city of Scarborough where he and his family have lived these many years.

SPORTS

CANADIANS PROUD OF BEN JOHNSON'S OUTSTANDING ACHIEVEMENT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, he is not only the fastest man in the world, he is the fastest man the world has ever seen, and he is a Canadian. As we lavish him with deserved praise and luxuriate in our own pride that he is our compatriot, we can contemplate the fact that Ben Johnson came to us from across the sea, as so many have done who have made this country great. We must remember this when we are tempted to limit the spirit of generosity that brought him and others like him to Canada.

Let us remind ourselves as well that the talent, motivation, discipline and intelligence to master one's craft, to make one's self a great athlete, are the same characteristics demanded for excellence in any field of endeavour. There is among all Canadians, irrespective of their origins, sex or race, and in every field of endeavour, the potential, if we are prepared to nourish it, to make of Canadians what Ben Johnson has taught us we can all become, the very best.

Thank you, Ben Johnson, for being a Canadian.

TRIBUTE TO BEN JOHNSON—"FASTEST MAN ON EARTH"

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, may I add to the comments of my colleagues. Today all Canadians are proud. They are proud of the outstanding athletic feat of Ben Johnson who, yesterday in Rome, shattered the world record for 100 metres and proved to the entire world that he is the fastest man on earth.

What Ben Johnson has demonstrated to us is that such success comes only after years of dedication, after years of a gruelling training schedule, and after years of continuing to believe in one's self. Ben Johnson has surely become a role model for all young athletes training in every part of our country.

I know I speak on behalf of all Members of this House and on behalf of all Canadians when I repeat how proud we are today of Ben Johnson. May I add, as an incidental postscript, that Ben Johnson comes from that beautiful city of Scarborough.

NEW BRUNSWICK PROVINCIAL ELECTION

REPORTED TACTICS OF CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, now we know when Frank McKenna is going to be elected Premier of New Brunswick.

[English]

Yesterday in New Brunswick large crowds gathered to acclaim the Liberal Leader as he made stops in Shediac, Memramcook, Ste.-Marie, Bouctouche, Rexton, Richibouctou, and this is only the beginning. You have not seen anything yet.

[Translation]

The Conservatives are desperate. We can tell by the promises they are making. They are promising major projects all over the place. They are even promising bridges, and who knows, before long they may even be promising rivers.

Promises come cheap, especially when people do not intend to keep them. Some of those promises go back as far as 1982 and were conveniently forgotten.

Mr. Speaker, it will not be long. Take a deep breath, because there is going to be a big bang in New Brunswick.

NATIONAL PARKS

NAHANNI NATIONAL PARK—OPPOSITION TO BOUNDARY EXPANSION

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the experience in the North has been that once land is tied up in a national park, the public, especially local people, are pretty well excluded and the area becomes part of the personnel fiefdom of parks officials.

For this reason there ought to be no expansion to the boundaries of the Nahanni National Park Reserve. I am opposed to any such expansion and am of the opinion that the existing 7,000 square mile reserve is quite sufficient.

• (1405)

The Government, which has already misled local people on the jet boat issue, should keep its sticky fingers off the Nahanni Karst, Tlogotsho Plateau and Ragged Range areas. The rights of local people to hunt, trap, prospect or just visit in these areas must not be impeded.

There must be no further land-grab in the Nahanni.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CALL FOR CONTINUATION OF BOOK RATE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the House what is probably a very little known fact. It is that the Government subsidizes the transfer of books from libraries to citizens and between libraries. This is called the book rate.

This rate has been under active review ever since the Nielsen Task Force Report. Libraries have been unable to get any assurance that the subsidy will continue, and therefore that this service will continue.

How much are we talking about in dollars and cents? The Library association assures me that we are talking about potential increases of 400 per cent to 900 per cent. As one example, in Halifax County the increase there could be as high as 1,100 per cent. These are massive increases in costs for libraries.

The people who will be affected are those who are unable to have access to libraries, people in small rural communities. This is another attack on rural Canadian life. The blind and disabled will be affected, people who do not have easy access to library services. The elderly, who cannot find their way to libraries, will be affected. Students who are taking courses outside the city where their university may be located will also suffer.

This is a service that must continue. It is time for the Government to wake up and remember that the Post Office is a public service. It is not a private profit-making business. This is not an opportunity for the Conservative Government to continue to attack ordinary Canadians and their services.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

OPENING OF BETHANY CARE CENTRE IN AIRDRIE, ALTA.

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday it was my pleasure to represent the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) at the official opening of the Bethany Care Centre in the City of Airdrie.

The complex consists of a 24-bed wing for brain-injured patients, a 50-bed seniors lodge, and a 50-bed nursing home. Each corridor has a street name and each room a house number, with individual thermostats, a window, and its own colour, while sinks, mirrors, et cetera are constructed to accommodate the aged and the disabled. There is a chapel, a crafts room, a greenhouse, a training centre and an auditorium—in fact everything to provide the best possible physical, social, spiritual and emotional care.

I commend the Lutheran Welfare Society of Alberta and all its members for sponsoring this splendid complex that will continue the long tradition of the Lutheran Society in providing care in a loving Christian manner. In fact, the Christian care for others permeates the entire complex. I commend the Government of Canada and the Government of Alberta for sharing in this project that will keep costs down to an affordable level.

This participation shows that the federal Government and the Government of Alberta really care for our aged, our injured and our disabled.

SPORTS

BASEBALL—NATIONAL LITTLE LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP—TRIBUTE TO WINNING TEAM FROM GLACE BAY, N.S.

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the people of Cape Breton and in particular the residents of the town of Glace Bay have been known throughout the country as a people proud of their heritage, and tenacious in their quest to achieve excellence.

Last week a group of young persons from that community made a long and tiring journey to participate in the Canadian National Little League Championship in British Columbia. Although they were only rated to do "just okay", their skill, their team play and their dedication demonstrated on the baseball field surprised and pleased their toughest critics. These young men won, and won convincingly, the Canadian Little League National Baseball Championship in British Columbia.

To the players, the coach, management, and the players' parents, I extend on behalf of all Members of Parliament our heartiest congratulations.

They also went on to participate in the World Little League Baseball Series in the United States and did exceedingly well there. Both as individuals and collectively they are Cape Breton's youngest ambassadors. They are the finest quality of young people that this country has to offer.

Congratulations on a job well done!

LABOUR RELATIONS

AIR CANADA—EFFECT OF HIRING PART-TIME WORKERS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, contract trouble looms once again in the transportation industry. I understand that the conciliation report of the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers in Air Canada was given to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) on Tuesday of last week. To date the Minister has not released the report, or indicated his intentions with regard to the report.

• (1410)

Meanwhile workers at Air Canada are concerned for their jobs as the management of Air Canada, under obvious instructions, continues to demand the right to hire more part-time workers. The jobs and the security of hundreds of full-time airline employees are in jeopardy as the Government heads into the dangerous areas of deregulation and privatization.

I call upon the Government to quit its efforts at Air Canada before it sparks another confrontation with Canadian workers who are trying to protect their livelihood. Such problems, on the railways or in the air, are caused by the same attitudes and actions. Deregulation and contract concession hurt Canadian workers. The Government must change its attitude if we are to return to peaceful industrial relations in Canada's transportation industry.

SPORTS

FUNDING OF SPORTS ORGANIZATIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to join with other Members of the House in congratulating the world's fastest man, Canadian Ben Johnson. He certainly was an inspiration not only to the people of Canada, but to people across the world. It was a shame that at the same time that our Ben Johnson was standing to receive his medal for Canada, he was not wearing a Canadian uniform. The fact that he had to accept the medal for Canada without wearing a Canadian sweat-suit, in Ben Johnson's own words, "made me feel bad. We were supposed to get suits, but I didn't get anything. Not a top, nothing. I wore what I had".

This particular situation illustrates the precarious financial situation facing sports bodies in Canada. I was most disturbed to hear the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Jelinek) suggest that he was going to start ordering athletes to participate in various ventures whether or not they wished to do so. For example, he was talking about forcing athletes to participate in the Pan-American Games, instead of preparing for Europe.

Before the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), and the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport proceed with their decision to eliminate all funding for sports organizations' functions under the new Bill C-51, they must consider some of the financial implications and be prepared to replace that funding with funding either from government or other sources.

Ben Johnson accepting a medal without wearing a Canadian sweat-suit is an insult to Canada, and something we do not wish to see repeated.

GROWTH STATISTICS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, again I wish to draw the attention of Canadians to our excellent economic performance which started in September, 1984. Last weekend when I was talking to people, they again told me how impressed they are with our economic performance. We are zeroing in on the creation of almost a million jobs. Interest rates are down, which means that house buying and other areas of investment are up. This means that today there is greater confidence not only in the country but in the Government.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—CALL FOR ACCEPTANCE OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, once again I urge the Government to amend Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act.

I believe that all Canadians wish abuse to be curbed, and that all Canadians want all bona fide refugees within the system who request and require it to receive due processing. I believe it is incumbent upon the Government to look at the report stage and accept some of the amendments put forward in the spirit that Canadians wish.

In committee, the Government basically ignored the many recommendations and amendments that were moved passionately and with great force by witness after witness from across the country.

I urge my fellow Members on the government side, in particular the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), at this eleventh hour to accept some of the amendments in order that we can curb abuse and make the system more fair, and also ensure that this legislation is in line with the system of justice that Canadians are proud of, with the Charter of Rights, and with our international obligations. On those three merits this legislation is riding roughshod over those facts. It will be tied up in the courts, and the policy will be paralyzed unless the Government is prepared to pay a small price now, instead of, as the commercial goes, a big price later on.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to welcome back to the House the Minister for International Trade. I wish to raise some questions with the Minister concerning what is becoming a very nasty, turbulent, and dangerous trade dispute in which the Government has totally abdicated responsibility by taking no action, making no statements, and providing no leadership. The Premier of Saskatchewan has now given notice that he intends to introduce into the Legislature a motion that would impose major restrictions on the production and export of potash, as a means of retaliation against the imposition of extraordinary tariffs imposed by the United States.

• (1415)

Is this an action with which the Government of Canada agrees? Is the Government of Canada supporting this initiative by the Government of Saskatchewan? What other kinds of actions and initiatives is the Government of Canada taking to head off a dispute that could result in the unemployment of 4,000 to 5,000 workers in the potash industry of Canada?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as I have already stated, we share the frustration and disappointment of Saskatchewan in this decision which was against the potash companies in the Province of Saskatchewan.

We are receiving today a detailed briefing on the reason for the decision of the U.S. Department of Commerce, and I will have more comment at such time as we have that basis of decision.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): If I may paraphrase the Minister's words, Mr. Speaker, we find that response extraordinarily disappointing. There is an irony here. The Government is negotiating free trade and one of the backers is going to introduce perhaps one of the most severe forms of protectionist response and retaliation that we have seen in decades. Surely the Minister recognizes that there is an inherent contradiction there.

Is the Government of Canada this week, because the legislation will be introduced this week, supporting the Saskatchewan stand, or does it have an alternative? Does it have any other response that it is prepared to make before we engage in this very major trade war on the horizon?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the only inherent contradiction raised today is the stance being taken by the Hon. Member worrying about a protectionist measure in the U.S. while at the same time his Party is opposing our efforts to get a free trade agreement with the United States.

I can only advise the Hon. Member that we are in touch with the Government of Saskatchewan. We do not intend to pre-empt its announcement but we are working along with that Government.

Mr. Axworthy: I am afraid that the abdication of responsibility by this Government in this very crucial issue will result in incredible consequences of which we will all be the victims.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—BINDING DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one further question of the Minister for International Trade. The ambassador for the trade negotiations over the weekend said that there was apt to be a further meeting between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada to work out remaining trade differences.

Is the Government of Canada still standing behind the commitment made by the Prime Minister that any trade agreement with the United States must include a binding dispute settlement mechanism? I ask the question because last week the Deputy Prime Minister refused to give that guarantee and was talking about an adequate mechanism. It is a very important difference.

Is the reason that the supposed meeting is coming about so the Prime Minister can concede, once more, another important issue and give away the particular commitment made that we would have a binding dispute mechanism as part of a free trade agreement?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the negotiators met all last week, as I believe the House knows. They made a lot of progress last week. There are many issues that still have to be resolved and the negotiators will be meeting again next week to address those.

In terms of the specific question raised by the Hon. Member, there is no contradiction between the statements made by the Deputy Prime Minister, myself and others. We have always said that an adequate dispute settlement mechanism must be a binding one.

Mr. Axworthy: Adequate is not what you said.

Miss Carney: If I am allowed to answer the Member's question, I will repeat my answer. We have always maintained that an adequate dispute settlement mechanism has to be binding on both parties. There is no point in having a trade treaty without binding rules to put it into effect.

FISHERIES

CANADA-FRANCE NEGOTIATIONS—NORTHERN COD STOCK

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to remind him that the inshore fishery in Newfoundland and Labrador for the past four years has been a complete disaster and that thousands of jobs are at risk. In spite of that, the Government has put northern cod on the table in its negotiations with the French. How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify that? Will he now, on behalf of the Government, stand up for the interests of Newfoundland and East Coast fishermen and tell the French that the northern cod is not negotiable and there will be no give-away of Canadian fish to French interests?

• (1420)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has taken a long time to ask a question on this subject. This is a matter that was thoroughly ventilated last February and March and nothing new has occurred since except that the Prime Minister was successful yesterday in his conversations with Prime Minister Chirac in having the French return to the bargaining table in order to complete negotiations on these most difficult and contentious questions about the East Coast.

Northern cod will be in no danger as long as we are looking after it. The hon. gentleman says—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The only cods that are in danger are the cods across the House, including the honourable cod that leads the NDP.

Landings for cod in the inshore to date have been down by 16 per cent, unfortunately, as compared to last year, but the landed value of cod in the inshore fishery has increased by 52 per cent. The hon. gentleman should not be too alarmist. Not everything in Newfoundland is dark and gloomy. There are some very positive signs. The landed value increased 52 per cent in the inshore cod fishery in Newfoundland.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about ventilation. The only thing that is being ventilated is the Minister. He has been replaced as the lead by Mr. Fortier. He talks about the inshore fishery. There has been a 40 per cent reduction this year from last year and he cannot deny those figures.

OVERFISHING BY FRENCH VESSELS

Hon. William Rompkey (Grand Falls—White Bay—Labrador): Mr. Speaker, there has been excessive overfishing by the French off the South Coast of Newfoundland as determined by the Government's very own Department of Fisheries. Will the Government say to the French in these negotiations that overfishing has to stop, otherwise there will be no deal?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is unbelievable. It was the hon. gentleman's Government that, in 1972, entered into a treaty with France giving France access to fish quotas in Canadian waters. Now the hon. gentleman comes to the House to complain about the fact that the French can fish in Canadian waters for certain quotas.

In addition, it was this Government that closed Canadian ports to French fishing vessels as a result of overfishing in disputed Zone 3PS, a move that has seriously affected the French and made them take a more reasonable position in these negotiations. None of that ever entered into the mind of the hon. gentleman who wrecked our prospects in the fishery during the years his Party was in power and did nothing to correct these conditions.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. I do not think this is a matter for joking concern. I think we want to hear a clear-cut statement from the Minister. Will the Government make any more concessions to France as a result of the re-establishment of negotiations? Will the Government stand firm with its present position?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one feels delighted when one receives small mercies.

The hon. gentleman's interest in this issue when he comes from Churchill, Manitoba, must, I suppose—

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He is a Canadian.

Mr. Crosbie: I suppose some of their other Members cannot be in the House today. The position is as we have explained it—

Mr. Broadbent: You're a gem.

Mr. Crosbie: If I am a gem, the hon. gentleman is a cod. I have already explained that to him.

The position is that we have taken a firm stand on the matter of negotiations with the French on the two questions of the territorial boundaries and the fishing quotas off the East Coast. Nevertheless, there are serious problems that have to be resolved. They can only be resolved by negotiations.

We have first-class people in charge of negotiations, supervised by first-class people, if I might be that immodest, including the Prime Minister. We are hoping that in the next six or eight weeks, some way to resolve these issues will be found, a way that will protect the national interest of Canada and the interests of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada.

• (1425)

Mr. Murphy: I may be the Hon. Member for Churchill but I would like to thank the Minister for going up there in 1979 and helping make that possible. He will remember that in my first speech in the House I congratulated him for all the hard work he did on my behalf.

NORTHERN COD STOCK

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, will the Government keep northern cod off the table and maintain those jobs for Canadians?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is engaged in a negotiating process with the Government of France in accordance with an agreement signed on January 24. Of course, surrounding that agreement is a treaty entered into by Canada in 1972 which gives France access to fish quotas in Canadian waters each year, ad infinitum.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): What?

Mr. Crosbie: For infinity. There is no time limit in the treaty whatsoever. At the same time Canada and France need to settle the question of the territorial waters surrounding St. Pierre and Miquelon and what economic zone they are entitled to.

We are negotiating in accordance with statements which have already been made in the House. These negotiations are now to be expedited. The Prime Minister's firm stand on this matter has brought France back to the table and you can depend upon the fact we will continue to have a firm stand and reach a solution, if one is possible, that will be in the interests of Newfoundland and Canada.

CANADIAN POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister again refuses to give a straight answer. The question is: will he protect Canadian jobs? Will he ensure that France does not gain more rights and as a result we lose Canadian jobs?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is ignoring the events of recent months. We have already taken action to protect Canadian jobs. We have protested French overfishing in the disputed waters of 3PS. We barred French fishing vessels from Canadian ports because of overfishing in the disputed zone. That action was never taken by a previous Government.

We have not done what the Leader of the NDP wanted us to do, order out the Armed Forces. He was going to chase the French vessels off the high seas. How he could do it with the defence policy of the NDP of course baffles everyone in the country.

TAX REFORM

EFFECT ON RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On June 18 in his tax reform speech he said: "The reformed system will strongly support two key priority areas for this Government: research and development and the labour-intensive economic sectors." However, the five high-tech business organizations which represent more than 700 companies and 210,000 employees doing more than 80 per cent of Canada's private sector research stated that the Minister's tax reform proposals will discourage the very research and development Canada needs.

I ask the Minister the same question I raised in Chicoutimi last week. Why are he and his Government determined to discourage research and development in Canada as a result of his tax reform proposals?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I stand by the statement I made on June 18. If the Hon. Member cares to review the particular proposal, I think he will see that Canada maintains one of the best, if not the best, tax regimes for research and development. As well, the Hon. Member is a member of the standing committee which is now hearing representations from various people. Those hearings are designed to hear people out, listen to their proposals and try to weigh those proposals within the context of the over-all approach to tax reform. At that time I would imagine all the proposals will come together and form the basis of the report to Parliament by that committee. At that point I would be happy to respond in a very full way to these various representations.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT—TAX REFORM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, according to their associations which published the results of a survey, representatives of businesses indicated that after tax reform, 40 per cent of research and development spending will no longer be tax deductible, which will create a tremendous problem for these businesses in terms of research and development.

Does the Minister agree with the associations that published their opinions? We do not have to wait for the Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs. That is already taken care of. Does he agree with the associations representing research and development firms that the proposed tax reform will only discourage research and development, at a time when R&D is essential if Canada is to compete with other countries on the world market?

• (1430)

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is quite aware of the commitment made by the Government, led by the Prime Minister who, as the Hon. Member knows, is the Chairman of the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology. He is also aware of the proposal to reorganize the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion with the Department of Science and Technology to ensure that we have a very full response to the demands of a growing research and development and science and technology community in Canada.

You may wish to consider, Mr. Speaker, that the questions which the Hon. Member is posing to me are the subject of committee hearings which are taking place this very day and will continue for the next six weeks. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to comment in the House on every representation and brief put before that committee. That would be an attempt to influence the work of the committee.

I believe the Hon. Member is quite aware of the importance of that work and I believe it is more appropriate for me to wait until the committee has had an opportunity to respond to the full range of representations which will be made over the next six weeks.

DEPARTMENT OF REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

OVEREXPENDITURES—PROVISIONS OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have now seen a couple of studies and reviews by Price Waterhouse and an internal review by DRIE which said that there was an overexpenditure of some $80 million in DRIE in 1986-87.

I asked the Deputy Prime Minister this question last June before the reviews got under way. Does he agree that this overexpenditure is a breach of Section 25 of the Financial Administration Act which says:

> No contract or other arrangement providing for a payment shall be entered into with respect to any program . . . unless there is a sufficient unencumbered balance available out of the appropriation—

Does the Minister not agree that this is a breach of the Financial Administration Act since the Department overexpended by some $80 million?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is no, there has not been a breach in my view.

REQUEST THAT FORMER MINISTER RESIGN FROM CABINET

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in his statement to the House last week the former Minister said that there was an overexpenditure of some $79.9 million or $80 million. Does the Deputy Prime Minister think that is grounds for the resignation of the Minister since one of the most important things we can do in this House is appropriate the money of taxpayers? Is this not a violation serious enough to result in the Minister not being a member of the federal Cabinet?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is dramatizing the situation by being very selective in his approach. The reports are very clear. The Minister of Industrial Expansion and Science and Technology outlined in a very comprehensive way, I thought, the steps that were being taken to correct this situation.

If one reads the report one finds that there are many conclusions which could be drawn. However, I think the most salient point is contained in one paragraph which says that there is no one single problem or factor which caused the 1986-87 cost over-run.

There was a problem with budgeting, forecasting, and financial reporting. All of those things have been identified and corrective measures have been taken to ensure that this does not happen again.

Oral Questions

AIR SAFETY

INSTALLATION OF NEW EQUIPMENT IN AIRCRAFT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In a report released last Friday the Canadian Aviation Safety Board states that "the number of aircraft-to-aircraft conflicts reported in Canada is at a level serious enough to warrant serious safety concerns".

At the same time the Canadian Pilots Association has revealed that it is pushing hard for Canadian commercial and private aircraft to be equipped with sophisticated computer technology called the TCAS-3 and the MODE-C, both capable of detecting approaching aircraft, which would permit pilots to take early action to avoid mid-air collisions.

Has the Minister directed his Department to examine the feasibility of installing this new technology and, if not, will he do so with the shortest possible delay?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, not only the Canadian Aviation Safety Board but the Department of Transport is always seriously concerned about safety in all aspects of transportation in Canada. I do not think there is anything new or startling in the report to which the hon. gentleman refers.

The Department of Transport has been examining the device to which the Hon. Member referred. It is keeping in touch with the research on it and with the U.S. authorities in connection with it. When it becomes accepted, proven, and viable we will certainly be interested in encouraging its use along with the United States. The matter is under study and is well known to us.

[Translation]

REPORT'S 28 RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, in its report, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board also indicated that the number of near misses involving aircraft and ground vehicles has reached alarming levels. In order to minimize the risk on the ground, could the Minister give Canadians the assurance—since he says he is aware of all these problems—that he will act as soon as possible on the report's twenty-eight recommendations?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think we should keep this in context. As the Director of Air Traffic Services for our Department has pointed out, we have the second highest number of registered aircraft in the world with 27,039. We have 59,395 licensed pilots and our air controllers look after five million square miles of air space.

With only about 150 general occurrences to study in a system of that size with only about 10 per cent of them deemed critical, I do not think anyone should be unduly alarmed. I think that puts it in context.

With reference to control of ground traffic at airports, we are now installing airport surface detection equipment, a vastly improved special type of radar which gives air traffic controllers a high resolution display of ground traffic at airports. They are being installed in Toronto, Vancouver, Dorval, Ottawa, Winnipeg and Calgary.

The system was commissioned in Vancouver on June 11 of this year and in Toronto on July 1. It will be commissioned at Dorval by the end of October, and so on. Therefore, steps are already being taken to deal with the problem of on-the-ground collision possibilities as well.

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN POTASH

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister for International Trade. It is with regard to the preliminary tariff imposed by the U.S. Trade Commission of up to 85.2 per cent on Canadian potash imported into that country.

Since the U.S. obtains 80 per cent of its supply of potash from Canada an embargo would increase the price of potash and underpin the weakness which has occurred in that resource. It would also contribute to reduced grain surpluses in the United States and help strengthen grain prices.

It is, therefore, very obvious that the Government's indecision on this issue has nothing to do with economics. It must be for political reasons. Can the Minister tell us what those political reasons are?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I categorically deny that there has been any government indecision on this trade action brought by the U.S. We have worked with the industry from the start of this dispute to review the system. It is a dispute between the U.S. industry and Canadian producers. We have offered every possible assistance. I already stated when this decision came down that our view has been that this action should never have been brought because the companies that brought the action against the Canadian producers account for less than 5 per cent of the U.S. production.

• (1440)

As the Hon. Member probably understands, the United States only produces about 10 per cent of its own potash requirements. To bring an action against their major supplier does not make economic sense. As the Member already pointed out, the people who will pay for this in the long run are the U.S. farm producers and U.S. consumers.

It is for this reason that we have taken the stand from the beginning of this action that it should never have been brought. It is inconsistent with trading rules to bring this kind of action. That is the stand we have been taking in Washington.

POTASH EXPORTS—SUGGESTED EMBARGO

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid it did not clarify the stand of the Government. Is it the Government's intention to cease the export of potash until the Americans are willing to discuss the issue? What is the stand with regard to an embargo as has been suggested by the Government of Saskatchewan, for instance?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I submit that that is not the stand that has been announced by the Government of Saskatchewan. The Government of Saskatchewan is considering this matter. We have been advised that it will make its announcement shortly. I certainly do not intend to pre-empt that announcement.

APARTHEID

SOUTH AFRICA—THREAT OF TOTAL SANCTIONS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister knows that the Prime Minister of Canada stated in his speech at the United Nations in 1985 that Canada was prepared to implement "total sanctions", as he said, and sever absolutely diplomatic relations with South Africa unless the policy of apartheid was dismantled. We all know that the abolition of the oppressive system of apartheid certainly has not made much progress since the time the Prime Minister made his statement.

Does the Prime Minister intend now to fulfil his threat at the United Nations, given that two years have passed, or is the Prime Minister perhaps having second thoughts?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs is in Quebec city with the French delegation. He advises me that he was in the House last week to answer that and will be in the House next week to answer that question. He has asked me to take it on notice.

FORTHCOMING FRANCOPHONE AND COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCES

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, we know that the conferences are at hand. My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister who, I trust, is speaking for the Government. He is well aware that the issue of South Africa will be very high on the agenda of the upcoming Francophone Conference and the Commonwealth Conference which Canada will host. Is the Prime Minister planning to set an example before or during these conferences by invoking effective and comprehensive sanctions against South Africa, and put some kind of substance to his previous statements which he made at the United Nations?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I take it the Hon. Member was unavoidably absent from the House on Friday. This issue was dealt with in some detail in response to the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville who, in a very timely fashion, raised the very point the Hon. Member is making. I would refer the Hon. Member to page 8574 and page 8575 of Hansard of last week, wherein the Secretary of State for External Affairs clearly outlined the Canadian position which is consistent with the Prime Minister's statement, and also in recognition of the fact that there are changing circumstances in which Canada will respond in accordance with the principle that was enunciated by the Prime Minister.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PARCEL AND REGISTERED MAIL SERVICES IN SCARBOROUGH

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. It involves the new policy of the Post Office which requires residents to travel to a distant sub-Post Office to pick up parcels and registered letters.

Have the Minister and Canada Post considered the hardships being placed on the thousands of senior citizens from my riding alone who must travel up to four miles, take at least two different buses, and trudge through snow, slush, hail, rain, wind, and sub-zero temperatures, risking a bad fall or other injuries, just to pick up a parcel?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post informs me that the change in policy was to bring it closer to the customers so that if they are not home when a parcel or registered letter is delivered, they are able to call for the parcel or registered letter at sub-Post Offices, most of which are open in the evenings as opposed to the corporation-run Post Offices which close at 4.30.

There is a specific problem in Scarborough regarding one of these sub-Post Offices. I am told by the Post Office that it is looking at it and the Hon. Member's constituents will soon be able to pick up their parcels very close to their residences.

Oral Questions

INVESTMENT CANADA

SALE OF WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT COMPANY TO UNITED STATES CORPORATION

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The amendments to the Patent Act by the Tory Government tonight will result in higher drug prices to Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is false.

Mr. Skelly: The changes to the Foreign Investment Review Act which permitted the sale of West Kootenay Power and Light to the Americans will result in higher electrical prices for consumers in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Skelly: Is the Minister not aware that American law would prohibit the sale of a public utility to Canada because it is not in the interest of Americans? Does the Government intend to change and improve the foreign investment review legislation so that it would prohibit such a sale that is not in the interest of Canadians?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, certainly not. It is as a result of this Government's foreign investment policy that we have had unprecedented investment in the country, unprecedented growth, and unprecedented job-creation. That is part and parcel of creating a positive climate so that the entrepreneur can go to work, create jobs, and make the economy hum.

Mr. Skelly: The difficulty outlined by the Minister is the difference between investment and sell-out.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Ray Skelly (Comox—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm, has indicated that all the assets of the Government of British Columbia are for sale. If the Government sold the B.C. ferries to the Blackball Corporation of Seattle, would the Government approve it? If it sold B.C. Hydro to Consolidated Edison, would the Government approve it?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that most of the time one question is sufficient.

Mr. Skelly: May I summarize in a single question, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly: Is there no level below which the Government will not sink in the selling out of Canada? Will you indicate to the House that you are not prepared to sell out West Kootenay Power?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has given the Minister several choices.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is raising the ideological difference between his Party and the Social Credit Party in the Province of British Columbia. I thought that issue was resolved during the last provincial election. Clearly, the Socreds won that round.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

REQUEST FOR TRANSFER OF FUNDS TO BUILD HOUSES ON INDIAN RESERVES

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration. As the Minister knows, several months ago his colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, made a formal and, I believe, very reasonable request to the Minister that there be a transfer of funds from the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program so that the Minister of Indian Affairs could use that money to create jobs on Indian reserves and, at the same time, build some houses.

That was an excellent proposal. The Minister received that request in writing and has had a lot of time to think about it. Is he prepared today to tell the House that he has reached a favourable and positive decision on that request?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, several months ago I received a request from my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, about funding totalling $8 million that would be applied or transferred to the Canadian Job Strategy Program for the construction of housing on Indian reserves.

The present state of the Job Strategy budget, however, is not such that, at this stage, I can promise my colleague that I will be able to transfer the funds mentioned.

With my colleague for Indian Affairs and Northern Development, we are still looking at ways in which certain funds could be used.

I must repeat once again that this is very difficult, because the Job Strategy funds are fixed, and this particular request was not included originally; what we have here is a specific request applied in a specific way to a specific clientele. It is a very particular request, although it is being made under the Job Strategy Program.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): The Minister of Employment and Immigration knows that this approach worked extremely well under the former Canada Works Program. He will forgive me, I am sure, but it is puzzling to me why the Minister would not respond quickly to this request because the highest unemployment in the country is on Indian reserves. At the same time there is a housing crisis there. Why would he not put those two things together, act positively and fulfil his job as the Minister of Employment for this country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my hon friend that I am very proud of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. I think there is no comparison with what we have known when the Liberals were in power. I think there is no comparison between the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and the hundreds of thousands of jobs we have created, and the failure which represented the former program for employment of your Government.

I agree with the Hon. Member in terms of the reality of employment on reserves. I think there is a problem there. I can tell the Hon. Member that my Department has put a lot of money into that sector. We have provided a lot of money for Indian people on the reserves. At the same time, we have to consider we have a lot of problems, and we are dealing quite effectively with those problems.

Once again, I would like to emphasize that the Department of Employment and Immigration has the best results of any we have seen in this country with any program of creating jobs and employment.

AGRICULTURE

DISCUSSION OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENT FOR 1987-88

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We understand that the Minister of Agriculture had a profitable meeting in Winnipeg with the Canadian farm leaders to discuss next year's deficiency payment. It is reported that the Minister of Agriculture has accepted in principle a deficiency payment in the neighbourhood of $3 billion. Could the Deputy Prime Minister confirm this figure? And is the Deputy Prime Minister able to give us a date when an official announcement will be made regarding the 1987-88 deficiency payment?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am fully aware of the question raised by my colleague. If we refer to what the Canadian Government has done in the agricultural sector over the past two years, I would suggest that if there is a sector where the Canadian Government has taken initiatives, has responded to the farm community and has always been present when agricultural producers asked the Canadian Government to look after their interests, it has to be the agricultural sector, and it was our Government which took action. In that respect, I think no one needs to worry.

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the statement made by my colleague, I would suggest that our problem right now has to do with agricultural surpluses and a price war, a war where both American and European administrations have decided to subsidize the agricultural sector, without any kind of restraints.

Mr. Speaker, our response as Canadians has been to refrain from waging a world-wide war of dollars, preferring instead to convince grain exporting countries—Europeans, Americans and others—that nobody can possibly win if the agricultural price war continues.

Mr. Speaker, what we did, what the Prime Minister did was to put agriculture in the agricultural sector program. Mr. Speaker, we will continue to be present in the agricultural sector, we are listening to agricultural producers—

[English]

Mr. Axworthy: Was that his maiden speech?

Mr. Broadbent: That will do until Christmas.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member may be right and I think the Minister's remarks are very interesting, but perhaps a shade too long.

[English]

Mr. Hovdebo: I am not sure I want to start another one like that, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Make it a true or false question.

Mr. Speaker: It is your choice.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM—APPLICATION TO IRRIGATION FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister because it involves Alberta and Saskatchewan. Can the Deputy Prime Minister gives us an explanation of why the irrigation farmers of Saskatchewan are not eligible for Special Grains Program payments while those in Alberta are?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Agriculture has been dealing with this particular issue. My understanding is that there are some who do qualify. However, others, because of the technicalities in the program, did not qualify. The Minister is working with the advisory groups to address this particular issue and I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to my attention.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

OMISSION OF QUEEN'S PORTRAIT FROM STAMPS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister in charge of Canada Post. Some months ago when the 36 cent stamp was issued, many citizens were disappointed that the issue did not include a stamp bearing the Queen's portrait. That deficiency has still not been made up. On their behalf, I ask the Minister if he can assure the House that such a stamp will be issued and that it will be issued soon.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, I can give the House that assurance. Apparently there have been some production problems with the supplier of those stamps. I was hoping they were working on a stamp with my picture on it but this is apparently not the case.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I am told that on October 1 there should be 15 million such stamps available for Canadian consumers.

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON—FATE OF GOVERNMENT GRANT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the only problem with a stamp for that Minister is we would not know whether to put on back or front.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I would like to ask him a very straight Question. Given that Firestone Canada has reneged on its commitment to 1,400 workers and to the Canadian community by refusing to guarantee the jobs of Firestone workers for 10 years, can the Minister tell me why his Government has negotiated an agreement with Firestone which will possibly permit it to keep all the money if the company is not sold, and if the company is sold it will permit Firestone to keep the interest on a $13.5 million grant paid by the Canadian taxpayers? Can he explain what kind of a deal that is?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, that question was answered in some detail. My understanding is there are funds which are put in escrow and that negotiations are still going on.

PAYMENT OF INTEREST ON FUNDS IN ESCROW

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should be aware, and if he is not, the ex-Minister who botched the thing should have at least briefed him about the fact that the money that was put in escrow was to be set aside with the interest going to the workers if the plant was not sold. The rules of the game have now changed. Firestone has said if the company is not sold, Firestone America in Akron, Ohio, will get the interest, not the Canadian workers. I would like to know from the Deputy Prime Minister, given the botched handling of this issue by the previous Minister, will he personally ask the Prime Minister to take this issue in hand instead of leaving it to his underlings who botched it from the start?

Mr. Crosbie: It is a real son-of-a botch.

Ms. Copps: That's right.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations are still going on. The answer still remains the same.

Ms. Copps: What is the answer?

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not sure why the Government should change its position just because the Hon. Member suggests that is the appropriate course of action. If we had followed her course of action on many of the recommendations that she advanced, we would have been sinking to oblivion just like her Leader.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES—CONSULTATION PROCESS

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Post Office. Is the Minister aware that in at least a dozen areas across the country local rural communities have received the 90-day notice of a change in postal service? The distinctive characteristic of these notices is that they do not contain an offer to maintain the existing post office. The only alternative is a much reduced commissioned postal service or a rural route service.

Will the Minister acknowledge these facts? Will he tell people whether he considers this to be genuine consultation with communities when he goes there to close off the option of keeping their post offices open?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this policy of Canada Post has been discussed extensively for the last year. It was raised in committee of the House when the Hon. Member was present. He will know that the justification for it is that there are changes occurring across the country. Some communities are diminishing in size. In a great many places where the postmaster retires the community is no longer justified in maintaining an expensive operation for the smaller number of people who live there.

The Post Office is engaged in discussion. It is committed to giving the 90 days so that there can be discussion with the people affected and Members of Parliament to try to come up with a service that provides people with the same quality of service, and in many cases better, but not necessarily the same as it was. The world is changing. The Post Office is acknowledging that. Apparently, the NDP is not.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister acknowledge that the change that is taking place is that the Government is treating the Post Office like a profit-making private sector enterprise rather than as a public service? Does he consider it a viable option when he goes to a community such as Wilmot, Ontario, and says: "You can have a post office on a commission with one-fifth the revenue of before"? Is that not an offer that is designed for failure rather than for good service?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is exactly correct. In keeping with the commission of this House in 1981 we unanimously passed legislation turning Canada Post into a Crown corporation so that it might go out and operate as a Crown corporation like Air Canada and CNR. If it operates at a profit or on a break-even basis, I think that as representatives of the taxpayers we should be thankful.

The Hon. Member seems to be suggesting that it is somehow immoral for a Crown corporation to show profit. I do not understand that reasoning.

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee; and Motion No. 9 (Mr. Heap, p. 8597).

Mr. Speaker: Before debate continues I want to advise Hon. Members that I have considered further the matters at report stage of Bill C-84. I want to add to the ruling I made this morning. I have now completed my examination of the remaining motions on the Notice Paper in amendment to Bill C-84 and am now prepared to rule as to their procedural acceptability.

Motion No. 8 is somewhat similar to a motion moved in committee, but I intend to give the Hon. Member the benefit of the doubt. It will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 12 and 13 require the Minister to notify the office of the United Nations Commissioner for Refugees when a person claiming to be a Convention refugee is denied access to the procedures outlined in the Bill. They are attempting to add a new concept to the Bill as read a second time. Therefore I must rule that they are beyond the scope of the Bill. I would refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 773(1) which reads in part: "An amendment is out of order if it is irrelevant to the bill, beyond its scope—". Thus both motions are out of order and will not be put to the House.

Motion No. 14 will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions Nos. 15, 16 and 17 are offered in amendment to Clause 9 of the Bill. Motions Nos. 15 and 17 were debated and negatived in committee and therefore will not be selected. Motion No. 16, which is deleting lines, will be debated and voted on separately.

Motions No. 19, 21, 22 and 23 will be debated and voted on separately.

To summarize, as I noted this morning, Motions Nos. 3, 6 and 10 have not been selected. Motions Nos. 15 and 17 also have not been selected. As I said, Motions Nos. 12 and 13 are out of order.

Therefore there will be separate debates and separate votes on Motions Nos. 8, 9, 14, 16, 19, 20, 21, 22 and 23.

I want to thank Hon. Members for co-operating with the Table in the discussions that made this ruling easier for the Chair.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to thank Your Honour for the ruling on the various motions. I would like to discuss, if I may, under a point of order, Your Honour's ruling on Motions Nos. 15 and 17 which suggest that a similar amendment was discussed and proposed at committee. The key element—

Mr. Speaker: I very much regret interrupting the Hon. Member because the Hon. Member has, as Hon. Members know, and as the public knows, worked long and hard on this particular matter. However, we have been trying to adhere to a practice, when there has been very extensive consultation between Table Officers and Members, that when it comes time for the Chair to make the ruling not to open up that ruling for further debate.

I just want to be sure that the Hon. Member is not getting himself into a position where he is urging the Chair to change the ruling. It may well be that what the Hon. Member has to say can be raised in debate. However, I would hear the Hon. Member further.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I certainly have the utmost respect for Your Honour and for the Chair. The Table Officers, however, and I did not discuss Motions Nos. 15 and 17.

With all due respect, what I was going to suggest is that a similar amendment was proposed by myself in committee. This particular amendment focuses on the key word "humanitarian" in an attempt to overcome Clause 95.1 and Clause 95.2 which clauses provided the most concern with respect to religious and non-religious groups. Therefore it was an attempt at report stage to try to insert the word "humanitarian" within the motion so as to exclude very clearly religious groups and non-religious groups that would be helping refugees out of humanitarianism and compassion, and certainly not to mislead the system or to propose fraudulent claims.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for his intervention. While he was giving his remarks I was listening but I was also able to have some further consultation with the Clerk. Perhaps there was not quite as much consultation with the Hon. Member as I had thought, partly because these motions came in very late on Friday night, which is nobody's fault. I suggest that perhaps in the next little while the Hon. Member might meet with the Table Officers to discuss the matter further to see whether there might be some reason to adjust the ruling. All other rulings on all other motions stand.

Continuing debate with the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was debating Motion No. 9 moved by my colleague from the New Democratic Party. This is an amendment that is very similar to my Motion No. 10. It concerns provisions for the security certificate that we would like to amend.

What we are suggesting is that if in fact the individual claimant is found to be some kind of a security threat or falls within an undesirable category within the Immigration Act, then by all means we are supportive of detaining that individual to ascertain his identification to see whether or not there is sufficient cause to merit that individual's further detention or deportation.

• (1510)

Our concerns articulated by my Motion No. 10, and by Motion No. 9 which we are presently debating, are that under the current legislation any individual who is deemed to have been the recipient of such a security certificate would not necessarily have the opportunity of entering into the refugee determination process. The provision as stated in Bill C-84 would restrict accessibility to the system and undermine the crucial universality component.

Many times a certificate may be granted based on information received from the country of origin. In the case of real refugees, often it is not unusual for the government of the country from which they are escaping to provide Canada, or another country receiving that claimant, with information that would suggest that that person is either an undesirable or poses a security threat. For instance, an individual in another country may be seen as an offender, for standing up for democracy. Obviously within our system of justice, and within the Canadian parameters, someone who stands up for democracy, as we do every single day, would not be considered a security threat or an undesirable. Many times information received from the country or the government of origin would actually substantiate the fact that the person's case is probably legitimate, that is, because of political or religious pressures that individual is escaping as a refugee under the definition of the United Nations Convention.

Our first concern is that by declaring this certificate, it would override or ignore the very information that can be utilized to determine and substantiate the individual's true refugee claim. However, if Canadian authorities find the claim to merit further consideration, then that individual should not be sent back to the country from which he or she is escaping because he or she may be in some particular trouble, may face certain persecution, torture, imprisonment, or probable death.

Another aspect that colours this particular clause is that if we deny accessibility to individuals to have their case properly determined within the refuge board or the refugee system where the issue is properly disposed of rather than making a predetermined determination by the Minister or his official, that is of great concern to our United Nations obligations under the Geneva Convention. In fact, a representative of the United Nations High Commission appeared before the legislative committee which was studying Bill C-84 and expressed considerable reservation concerning this particular clause which would guarantee that an individual would not be allowed to pursue the refugee process and would be deported and expelled from the country.

That runs contrary to the non-refoulement undertaking that we as a country have given under the United Nations Convention. Therefore, it was not without passing concern from the United Nations High Commission that these representations were made at the committee, and in correspondence exchanged between the High Commissioner for Refugees and the Government of Canada. I believe there has been considerable concern expressed internationally that, if Canada enacts this particular legislation with this particular clause as it stands, it would be undermining the non-refoulement undertaking.

Since Canada has been at the leadership level in terms of providing and offering leadership for the salvaging of the plight facing refugees, the concern is that other countries may legislate similar clauses. If that happened on a frequent basis one can see the danger of the United Nations Geneva Convention coming apart, and the very foundation being rocked. In the correspondence from the High Commissioner for Refugees to the Government of Canada there was a specific paragraph that suggested and reminded Canada that this could trigger an exodus by other countries.

It is with that spirit that we spoke to it in committee, and witnesses participated, to ensure that if the person is a security threat, or if there is need for detainment, then by all means a certificate or the powers should be available. However, this should not exclude the individual from receiving a hearing in order to properly determine if the concerns are founded and, if they are founded, what repercussions that person would face if he or she was returned to the country from which he or she was fleeing.

Our amendments suggest that the current legislation which allows an individual to participate in the refugee determination system be retained and, therefore, protect our international obligations and our obligations under the accessibility and universality of the system.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 9 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We will now move to Motion No. 8.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 8

Immigration Act, 1976

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 4 by striking out lines 29 to 31 at page 3 and substituting the following therefor:

"officer or an adjudicator shall make an order to detain or release the person named in the"

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a relatively simple point in Clause 4. Clause 4 represents an amending of the Act in connection with detention of a person:

> —where the Minister and the Solicitor General are of the opinion, based on security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, that a person, other than a Canadian citizen or permanent resident, is a person described in paragraphs 19(1)(d), (e), (f) or (g), or 27(2)(c), they may sign and file a certificate to that effect with an immigration officer, a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator.

This is not the security certificate previously referred to in an earlier section. Perhaps this could be called a detention certificate. In proposed Subsection 41(2), which is the one I am dealing with, it states:

> (2) Where a certificate is signed and filed in accordance with subsection (1), an inquiry under this Act concerning the person in respect of whom the certificate is filed shall not be commenced, or if commenced shall be adjourned, until the determination referred to in paragraph (4)(d) has been made and a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator shall, notwithstanding section 23 or 104, detain or make an order to detain the person named in the certificate until the making of the determination.

This concerns the making of a certificate which suggests that a certain person who is seeking entry is perhaps a criminal or a threat to the security of Canada.

• (1520)

What the second paragraph does, which I seek to amend, is to make it compulsory that that person be detained. An adjudicator has the power to make a decision. He is a quasi judge. An adjudicator normally is allowed to make the decision to detain or not to detain. The wording in this clause is that a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator shall notwithstanding detain, which means removing the power of the adjudicator to do what essentially an adjudicator does. I do not think it has been shown that that is necessary, Mr. Speaker. What we have been told is that people may require a longer time to investigate, but we have not been shown that inexperienced adjudicators have failed to detain people on their own judgment when given an indication by the Minister that that is something which they ought to do.

I think it is an unfortunate tendency to take away from a lower official, that is, lower than the Minister, the power he has been exercising according to law and that as far as I know he has exercised satisfactorily for the Government. I have not heard complaints that adjudicators have been irresponsibly turning people loose whom the Minister wanted detained longer. However, I have heard complaints that adjudicators have not turned people loose when some people thought they should. I even heard of one situation where it was reliably reported that the Minister thought the adjudicator should turn some people loose but still did not. It seems to me that if the adjudicator has erred, the adjudicator has erred on the side of caution, that is, detaining a person to make sure that the matter was cleared up so far as necessary.

I believe that in this case it is unreasonable to assume that the adjudicator would act irresponsibly when presented with a Minister's certificate. Granted, the adjudicator does not have all the information behind the certificate, but I believe that adjudicators have shown themselves responsible in this matter of security.

Therefore, I proposed the motion to delete lines 29, 30 and 31 replacing them so that the clause would read:

—a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator shall make an order to detain or release the person named in the certificate—

I believe that would respect the existing law in that it would allow the adjudicator to perform his or her function, he, being the man or woman on the spot who is in possession of the essential facts, including the Minister's certificate. It would allow that person to do the job that he or she should do without being overruled and turned into a mere rubber stamp by the Act, as is the case the way the Act is now worded.

I would ask Members of the House to vote for this motion to sustain, to keep intact, the responsibility of the adjudicator in this matter.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to address Motion No. 8. The motion is very similar to one I presented at the legislative committee which was, as all amendments were, turned down.

The reason I presented the motion then and the reason I speak in favour of it now is that we heard very moving testimony about the need for a check and balance. The arguments received at committee and the arguments that I put forward were not for detainment of individuals in respect of whom government officials had no identification, or that particularly valuable information was received on a claimant. That was not the concern. We are not saying that a person should not be detained. Existing legislation provides full opportunity for an individual to be detained for 48 hours without going to an adjudicator. Subsequent to that the Minister, the Crown or officials can go to an adjudicator and request detainment of an additional seven days. The question is, who makes the decision and how is it made.

A presentation by the Canadian Civil Liberties Association articulated very thoughtfully about the need to have the adjudicator make the decision based on evidence that he or she receives from the Government. In other words, the information provided to the adjudicator would be analysed and considered rather than giving total power, carte blanche if you will, to the Minister of the day. That would be seen as excessive power or unilateral power allowing the Minister to detain an individual without having to go to an adjudicator. That is why many witnesses, and certainly the leading one on this clause, the Canadian Civil Liberties Association, argued for the need of a politically disinterested decision-maker rather than a politically motivated or politically interested individual. It was not meant to be a slight against the Minister or a Minister's position, but obviously it was referring to the realities of a Minister or to the realities of politicians.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and everyone else in this Chamber receive various representations. We push and pull situations on a number of issues. Quite often from what we hear, feel and see we make a decision. The argument here is to offer protection in the system so that the Minister's powers would not be abused and misused. Again, it is not a slight against the current Minister. We are talking here about Ministers, certainly long after the present Minister and after you and I are gone, Mr. Speaker.

The request was for the adjudicator to have the flexibility and discretion of saying, "The information I receive from the Government justifies its concern and therefore, justifies further detainment". Or, perhaps based on information the adjudicator receives from the Government or other sources he will say, "Hold on, the preconceived notions are unfounded because I found a, b, c and d" which would then be offered to the Government. The Government would then have a further opportunity of rebutting the case or saying, "You are correct, Mr. Adjudicator". This offers a check and balance.

The current legislation offers those checks and balances. That point was accepted by Canadians at large that, yes, we have the powers to detain, but detain in a way to ensure that people's rights are protected and that powers are not abused and misused.

I believe the motion I put forward at committee and the very similar motion that we are debating here this afternoon is a very reasonable one, with which most Canadians would agree, given the sense of justice within this country.

I urge the House to adopt the motion so that we retain the discretion of the adjudicator, who would be in a position of being politically disinterested, borrowing a phrase from the Canadian Civil Liberties Association. If we move on this it would ensure that our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, for which we have fought so hard, will not be challenged and it will also preclude any court challenges in the future on this particular clause. A number of legal experts suggested that this would be one of the clauses that would bring a Charter challenge under Section 8. I do not, and I am sure that neither you, Mr. Speaker, nor any other Member of this House, would want this legislation to become policy of the Government, get tied up in the courts, paralyzing our policies. If that happens six months, 12 months or 18 months down the line, Canadians will not have patience or trust in the Government any more. They want the Government and Parliament to do it right this time.

• (1530)

We were called back for an emergency and I would not want to leave this Chamber without the provisions of the Bill being legally accepted. If they are not, the refugee system and particularly the Government will pay a bigger price once these challenges begin to take shape in the courts. Therefore, it is with that spirit in mind that I hope the Government will move to retain the discretion of the adjudicator and allow him or her to make the decision based on information provided by the Government.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) began by saying that this is a simple point. In terms of an amendment it may be very simple, but its effect would be very complicating both in terms of the administration of the system and the security of Canadians.

I would reiterate what I said before lunch on the previous amendment. We are dealing with what is broadly called the inadmissible class of people, those who have records of criminality, organized criminal activity, espionage or subversion against democratic Governments, subversion by force of any Government, or acts of violence or subversion by force of any Government. Those are the kinds of people about whom we are talking.

The difference between the position of government Members and that of Members of the Opposition is on whether we should release or detain these individuals under certain circumstances. The Hon. Member for Spadina read certain clauses of the Bill as it is now before the House. Clause 41(1) indicates that the Minister may sign and file a certificate to that effect. He is not obligated to do so and may do so depending upon the circumstances of the case. It may be that he is presented with old information. However, if he chooses to sign and file a certificate, then Clause 41(2) comes into effect and provides the following:

> Where a certificate is signed and filed in accordance with subsection (1), an inquiry under this Act concerning the person in respect of whom the certificate is filed shall not be commenced, or if commenced shall be adjourned,—

That is the simple point. If there has been evidence to convince the Minister and the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) to file a certificate, then there are not many options left. The primary obligation is to protect the security of Canada and Canadians.

I would remind Hon. Members of what I said in committee the other day when I referred to the Bill of 1976. A distinction was made between whether coming to Canada is a privilege or a right. Most Canadians believe that it is a privilege to be in Canada. The amendments we are now debating make it look almost as though it were a right for inadmissible classes of people to maintain freedom of movement in Canada.

I would like to underscore the fact that the primary obligation of the Government, and in fact of all of us, is to protect the security of the country and of individual Canadians. The fact is that this amendment would make the detention of security risks difficult if not impossible. As well, the information on which the Ministers base their decision to file a certificate is not information that can be released to the adjudicator, so it is not surprising that in times past, adjudicators have released individuals who should not have been released and did so with all good intent. In the past, the Government has been unable to obtain an order for detention from an adjudicator in security cases because the adjudicator was not aware of the risks involved.

Turning back to the Hon. Member's point, it is very simple. Do we detain or set at liberty those who the Minister and the Solicitor General are convinced are security risks? The Government must opt for the security of Canada and of individual Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 8 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 14.

> That Bill C-84 be amended by deleting Clause 8.

He said: Next to the clause that would make it an offence to help a refugee come to Canada and even to an immigration office without the usual passport, this clause about turning away ships has caused the greatest concern in Canada and with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees. Clause 8 provides that the Minister may turn a ship away that is within the internal waters of Canada, the territorial sea of Canada or 12 nautical miles of the outer limit of the territorial sea of Canada if he believes that that ship is bringing any person into Canada in contravention of this Act or the regulations. In that case, the Minister may, after having due regard to the safety of the vehicle and its passengers and to the convention, direct the vehicle to leave or not to enter the internal waters of Canada or the territorial sea of Canada, as the case may be.

The Bill provides that the Minister may turn a ship away and it also specifies that any such direction may be enforced by such force as is reasonable in the circumstances. Originally, there was much more concern over this clause, but it was amended in committee by a government motion. The words that are underlined in the version we have before us, "and to the convention," were added to the Bill. On the following page, Clause 8(3) gives some definitions including a definition of the convention meaning the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees.

I welcome that amendment. I am very pleased that it was moved by a government Member and that government Members as well as opposition Members adopted it. It goes some distance toward dealing with the most difficult part of the problem.

The problem with this clause is that we are told that if a ship is bringing any person into Canada, the Minister may turn it away, but if a ship had 100 passengers and the Minister believed one of them was being brought to Canada in contravention of the Act, he is authorized to turn the ship away. What happens to the other passengers who might all be quite legitimate? There is only one ship and it cannot be chopped into pieces to divide the ones the Minister considers legitimate from the ones he considers illegitimate.

An Hon. Member: Throw them overboard.

Mr. Heap: Someone on the government side has said: "Throw them overboard". Unfortunately, that is not a joke. That sort of thing has happened perhaps not in the Atlantic but it has happened in the Pacific, particularly to the boat people from Vietnam. According to all we have heard from the UN, those people tried, usually in small boats, to get to countries like Malaysia or the Philippines and some of them were thrown overboard.

• (1540)

That is something the UN is very much concerned about on two levels. First, a rule like this, if it does not fully protect people who might be refugee claimants, or might even be legitimate refugee claimants, leaves in doubt what will happen to them when the ship is turned away. A simple expression of the Minister's good intentions is not good enough for a law because the people enforcing the law cannot be expected to have the good intentions of the person who may today be the Minister.

Second, Canada has very sternly and verbally attacked nations in the southwest Pacific who turned away ships with refugee claimants. The executive of the UN High Commission for Refugees adopted the principle that such ships ought not to be turned away. Therefore, for Canada to begin that practice would not only be very risky to the passengers of those ships, it would be a step backwards from the international leadership Canada has so far exercised, not just through our representatives to the UN but through the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

In 1979, the then Minister, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), took specific steps to offer resettlement to some of the people picked up by such ships so as to dissuade the captains from, as the Hon. Member across suggested and which he thought was a joke, throwing people overboard. The amendment to which I referred moves in a very good direction. However, I feel it is not strong enough. The phrase "having due regard" leaves so much to the subjective discretion of the Minister that I am afraid, since the Minister cannot be everywhere all day long or even at one time, that acting through his officials the "due regard" might be much too pale and a ship with perhaps bona fide refugee claimants may be turned away to the harm of those on board. That is not to mention the great disadvantage to legitimate passengers who might have paid their passage and who might have their passports and visas to enter Canada.

In committee we urged that instead of this rule it be amended so that the ship would be escorted into a Canadian port. If the captain was guilty of trying to arrange for the contravention of Canadian law, he would be charged and prosecuted, if necessary with bigger penalties. If there were passengers contravening the law, they could be dealt with accordingly. If there were refugee claimants, they could be dealt with according to the law. The safety of the passengers would have been assured and the deterrence of future captains would be assured. For that matter, if that captain were in prison for several years and his ship were confiscated, that certainly would be a deterrent to that particular captain and that particular ship. Simply turning them away on the high seas may be just telling them to try somewhere else tomorrow when it is dark or foggy or something like that. It is not a sufficient deterrent. However, the amendment was unfortunately lost and we have the Act as printed.

Because of the risk both to passengers who might be returned to a country in which they would be in danger through careless application of the phrase "having due regard", and because of the uncertain example it sets for countries, particularly in the southwest Pacific, I believe we should delete this clause. If the Government wishes at another date to bring forward a further clause that would deal with it in the way many of us and the public and the UNHCR asked, I would of course actively support it. In the meantime, I hope the House will accept my motion which would delete Clause 8.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, after Clause 9, Clause 8 was perhaps the most controversial clause in the Bill. If you look at what the Government has been saying for the last month or so with respect to curbing abuse and going after the smugglers, then Clause 8 is a huge contradiction. As the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) suggested, we moved an amendment which would correct the situation. That was defeated, and so we have to rely on the strength of Motion No. 14.

There are essentially three very specific errors in Clause 8. First, obviously, you are not offering due process to any claimants on a boat that may be turned back. We have had a policy in this country that individuals who request refugee status be granted an interview with immigration officials. They then go before the appropriate committee and the immigration appeal board in order to explain their circumstances. If you pass a law which says that the Government can, if it desires, turn a boat away, obviously you do not want to listen to and ascertain the circumstances of the passengers on that boat. You are making a predetermination based on who knows what.

Such an initiative would be a very dangerous precedent for this country. No other country in the world, save the U.S., has a provision along these lines. The U.S. has never seen fit to utilize its special powers. Therefore, I suggest that the Government be very, very leery of approving such a regressive clause. By doing so it would be unable to uphold the commitment which lies at the foundation of the UN Convention on Refugees, to which we were a signatory back in the 1950s. If that breaks, it will break the resolve of the international community to try to come to grips with an international problem and phenomenon which requires, therefore, quite logically, an international solution.

The second aspect is that this Bill is supposed to deter. It is to deter those who try to abuse our system, the smugglers who drop individuals off on our coasts, the consultants who continue to make huge and immoral profits from trafficking in human beings. No Canadian disagrees with that. Anyone who disagrees with it would be implying that there be no order in the process. If there is no order, there is no fairness, and if there is no fairness, it is the legitimate refugee who will ultimately pay a very dear price.

This clause will not deter smugglers. This clause will allow the Minister, through a Coast Guard vessel, to turn a smuggler's boat around and send it wherever he wishes to go. If you are a captain leaving a port in Europe knowing that the worst you will face is having your boat turned around, what do you have to lose? You have collected the money from your so-called clients and it is in the bank. You chances are fifty-fifty. You may be able to drop your clients off and get away with it. At the very worst, the Government will turn the boat around and you will dump your passengers in some other place. However, your money is secure.

On the other hand, if the law says very precisely that if you are found in contravention of our laws by trying to dump people on our shores in the middle of the night, your boat will be boarded, escorted into the nearest port and seized, and you will be charged and perhaps fined or imprisoned, you will think again. We moved an amendment at the legislative committee which was turned down by the same government Members who keep talking about deterrence.

Which plan will deter smugglers the most, Mr. Speaker, the plan to turn the boat around or the plan to seize the boat and imprison the captain? I suggest that most Canadians would favour the latter, that it would be the greatest deterrent. If we capture the boat and imprison the smuggler, I am sure other smugglers in Europe will get the message that their buddy is in a Canadian jail and has lost his boat. I do not think other smugglers would set sail. We in the Opposition are saying that not only do we want to guarantee the safety of the passengers and give them due process, but that we want to ensure that the smuggler is detained.

Committee members on the government side said that some captains are not at the heart of the situation, that they are just employees, and the real smuggler is on the beach in Acapulco. Perhaps they are right. However, the way to stop the operator who is on the beach in Acapulco is not simply to turn his boat around. The crew and captain must be detained and they will probably testify. That testimony can be used against the real operator. We will, therefore, not be dealing in ignorance but will have testimony and information.

In my humble submission, Your Honour, the proper way to act is to escort the boat in every time. The Government still has not told us in what circumstances it would escort a boat in as opposed to turning it away. If the Government wants to deter, it must put its money where its political message is. It must fine, imprison, and seize boats rather than turning boats around. What kind of deterrence is that?

What kind of system are we putting in place in which a claimant who arrives on a boat is turned around and denied processing and then arrives again two days later through an airport and is processed? A passenger coming through Pearson International Airport in Toronto will not be stopped by the Government but will be processed and accepted while a claimant coming in by sea will not. That is the problem.

Claimants arriving by boat, plane, bus, car or train are all the same. We cannot allow the Government to suggest that the method by which you come to Canada will determine whether you are going to be processed. That is absurd. Of the 15,000 claimants in the backlog 14,700 arrived by means other than boat. Only 300 arrived by boat.

Through this legislation the Government is suggesting that boats can be turned around while buses cannot. What if a smuggler brings people in clandestinely on a bus? It is still wrong, but there is no legislation to stop it. It is still wrong to charter an aircraft and load it up with fraudulent refugee claimants, but it is not covered in this legislation.

We are suggesting that we need a sense of balance. The Government has thus far not shown justification for turning back a boat but not any other vehicle. That is improper and illogical. It creates two sets of refugees, the ones who arrive by boat and the ones who arrive by other means. We cannot allow the mode of transportation to dictate whether or not an individual will receive a hearing.

That is an improper precedent and will not act as a deterrent despite the suggestions of Members that this Bill will deter. The only people it will deter are real refugees. The only people who will be put in prison or fined will be church representatives aiding refugees. That is the irony of this legislation. It could be very easily amended in order to protect legitimate refugees while discouraging those who wish to circumvent and undermine our regulations.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that under other legislation the Minister has the power at any time to order a vessel into port and implement fines, seizure of the vessel, and so on. This gives the Minister another power to turn a boat around.

• (1600)

That may or may not happen in my lifetime. The committee has included provisions that are meant to protect convention refugees and to consider health and safety.

We often forget that there are unscrupulous people throughout the world who prey upon people who are in unfortunate circumstances. Those of us who have had the fortune to see the Atlantic, the Pacific and other oceans throughout the world have some respect for the power of the ocean. Unscrupulous people may charge from $10,000 to $25,000 for transportation, forged passports and many other schemes. When we are dealing with desperate people, it is likely that sooner or later an unscrupulous sea captain will fill an unseaworthy boat with people who pay a lot of money and that boat will be lost at sea in a storm. This Bill suggests that it may not be a good idea to allow oneself to get into such a situation in order to come to Canada's shores because there are regular ways to come to this country. We have embassies throughout the world and we treat refugees and refugee claimants decently. They do not have to spend $10,000 to $25,000 and run the risk of the high seas.

I do not anticipate that this clause of the Bill would ever be used to turn away people who have a legitimate claim to refugee status, but it may stop a lot of unfortunate people from getting on to a vessel that would not see them arrive safely on our shores. Therefore, I would urge Members to keep this power so that we can send a message that people should come the safe way to Canada rather than the unsafe way.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, it seems that this clause is a reaction of the Government to the fact that in the last year boats dropped 155 people on the shores of Newfoundland and 174 on the shores of Nova Scotia.

The wording of the clause does not make much sense. It states that if the Minister or his delegate believes that a ship within 12 miles beyond Canadian waters is bringing any person into Canada in violation of the Act, they may order the ship to refrain from entering the area within 12 miles of Canada.

The clause is objectionable because it can apply to any person, not necessarily a boatload, as it was in this particular case, nor any portion of that boatload.

While Members may suggest that this provision may never be used, the fact that it exists means that it can be used to turn a boat back. That may cause the very result which the Member has suggested the clause is meant to prevent, which is to allow a boat that is unseaworthy back out into the ocean and a possible disastrous situation. Consequently, I suggest that the clause should be removed entirely and the clause be left as it is.

The United Nations High Commission for Refugees is concerned that this type of clause may result in turning away real refugees who may have a very good reason for coming to Canada. However, since that person may happen to be a passenger on a boat which the Minister or his delegate decide should not be allowed into our waters, that person could be sent back to a possibly disastrous situation.

I have spent considerable time in other countries. We must recognize that there is a fine line between democratic countries which have Governments like ours and those which give rise to legitimate refugees. A clause such as this might put in danger refugees from such countries not only of disappearing at sea, but of being sent back to their country to face either imprisonment or death.

Furthermore, this clause is not likely to deter the smuggling which has accounted for a large portion of the refugee claimants who are coming to Canada. It will not stop the captains of these boats from seeking ways to enter Canadian waters.

Rather than simply partially amending this clause, it would be better to eliminate it entirely. That is the position we have taken on this particular amendment.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Hovdebo) says that this amendment is a reaction. Of course it is a reaction to what happened last summer and this summer. If we had not reacted, we would have been faulted by the Canadian people for not taking into account what was happening on the shores of our land. Of course it is a reaction, but it is not an over-reaction.

Let me begin by thanking the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) for not raising the question of refoulement, because I think he knows that that is not the purpose of this clause.

The Member for Prince Albert mentioned that the implementation of this clause could lead to a possibly disastrous situation. I point out to him that the Bill states: "The Minister may, after having due regard to the safety of the vehicle and its passengers" and to the convention. All safety is looked after before a decision is made, and it is still the option of the Minister and the Department to seize the ship and prosecute the captain.

I want to point out the two conventions which are important in this connection. One is Article 33 of the UN Convention for Refugees which reads:

> 1. No Contracting State shall expel or return a refugee in any manner whatsoever to the frontiers of territories where his life or freedom would be threatened on account of his race, religion, nationality, membership of a particular social group or political opinion.
>
> 2. The benefit of the present provision may not, however, be claimed by a refugee whom there are reasonable grounds for regarding as a danger to the security of the country in which he is, or who, having been convicted by a final judgment of a particularly serious crime, constitutes a danger to the community of that country.

• (1610)

I will read from the Law of the Sea Convention to which Canada is a signatory. Article 19 under the heading of "Meaning of Innocent Passage" states:

> 1. Passage is innocent so long as it is not prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the coastal State. Such passage shall take place in conformity with this Convention and with other rules of international law.
>
> 2. Passage of a foreign ship shall be considered to be prejudicial to the peace, good order or security of the coastal State if in the territorial sea it engages in any of the following activities:
>
> (g) the loading or unloading of any commodity, currency or person contrary to the customs, fiscal, immigration or sanitary laws and regulations of the coastal State;

Finally, Article 25, under "Rights of protection of the coastal State" states:

> 1. The coastal State may take the necessary steps in its territorial sea to prevent passage which is not innocent

I leave Members with that convention, which is designed to protect the very people about whom Members everywhere in this House are concerned. At the same time it is designed to respect the sovereignty of the state, that is, Canada.

We are entitled to control our immigration and our refugee determination and, again, the uppermost question is, are these people in need of protection? That is the premise upon which the whole scheme stands. The clause, as tabled by the Government, protects those people on the high seas, particularly from the unscrupulous who would defraud them of $10,000, $15,000 or $20,000 and still not be able to guarantee them safe passage to Canada.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, it is clear from the exchange this afternoon on this particular clause that the Government really has failed to demonstrate that these people in need protection will be protected. The Parliamentary Secretary just mentioned the fact that people in need of protection will be given protection but without indicating how. Turning around a boat before allowing it to land and allowing our immigration officials to examine one by one the applicant refugees, without those applicants receiving the appropriate attention, will not extend to the visitors or applicant refugees the protection to which the Parliamentary Secretary refers.

The Parliamentary Secretary knows that in order to extend this kind of protection, and subscribe and implement our commitments to the UN Convention for Refugees, we will have to allow the potential refugee to make his application in Canada. This is what this piece of legislation does not contemplate. This is why the UN High Commissioner for Refugees wrote the letter to the Minister of Immigration some weeks ago expressing that profound preoccupation and raising, in diplomatic language, the hope that this Bill would be changed in order to be in line and conform with the commitments Canada has made over the years through various international conventions.

We were given a promise by the Minister in committee, if I remember correctly, about an oral hearing that would be given to people arriving here by boat under this particular legislation, or Bill C-55. The Parliamentary Secretary must tell us during this debate how this will take place. Will officers of the Department of Immigration be allowed to board the boat while it is still on the high seas? Will they be boarding the boat when it enters Canadian territorial waters, or will this boat be turned around and no oral hearing will take place at all? This matter has not been clarified at all.

Actually, this is an attempt to sweep it under the rug as if somehow people should interpret the law better than the Parliamentary Secretary is capable of doing. That is not good enough. We have subscribed to several articles under the UN Convention over the years. We have been urged by the High Commissioner to stick to our commitments and to respect them, and this piece of legislation departs from those commitments.

The Parliamentary Secretary made a reference to the fact that this Bill is a reaction to what happened in the summer of 1986. Over 14 months have gone by since that happened and we are still puzzled by the poor quality of the Bill. As the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) indicated earlier, we have here a proposal, soon to become law, which will endeavour to determine whether or not people who arrive on our shores by boat are legitimate refugees, but will not give the same treatment to people who will be arriving by means other than by ship. We in the Opposition are puzzled by this different way of application. I would invite the Parliamentary Secretary to clarify this point.

Why is it that this Bill fails to apply to those who may be arriving by air? It seems to fail to apply to those who would arrive by land, by train or by bus. It applies only to people who arrive by water.

If these powers are contemplated in another piece of legislation, if the Minister has powers to proceed with the screening of potential applicants who arrive by means other than by water, then we would like to hear that from the Parliamentary Secretary. This is a very important aspect. It was addressed at second reading and it was addressed very thoroughly in committee by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), but it is still unclear as we approach third reading. Therefore, the Parliamentary Secretary would do us a service by, first, clarifying the question of powers which give the Minister the opportunity to screen people regardless of the vehicle by which they choose to enter Canada, and, second, in which way are we complying with the UN Convention whereby we do recognize the right of potential refugees to seek asylum as they touch upon Canadian territory?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motion No. 14 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11) the recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

At the request of the Hon. Member for York East, the Chair has taken a further look at Motions Nos. 15 and 17. Similar motions were moved in committee but the two motions, which were negatived in committee, did not use the word "humanitarian". The Chair is thus inclined to allow both motions to be moved and debated with one debate and one vote disposing of both. The Chair wishes to explain that the short lead time between the return of the Bill and the start of the report stage caused a bit of a rush. Hopefully, the House will understand this further clarification of statements made this morning and earlier this afternoon.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West) moved:

Motion No. 15

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 9 by striking out lines 25 to 32 at page 8 and substituting the following therefor:

"95.1 Every person who knowingly, and for other than a humanitarian or commercial purpose, smuggles, organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to smuggle, organize, induce, aid or abet a person to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim is guilty of an offence and is liable".

Motion No. 17

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 9 by striking out lines 1 to 9 at page 9 and substituting the following therefor:

"95.2 Every person who knowingly, and for other than a humanitarian or commercial purpose, smuggles, organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to smuggle, organize, induce, aid or abet a group of ten or more persons to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent refugee claim is guilty of an".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank Your Honour and the Table Officers for allowing me to make my representations. As Your Honour has quite rightfully pointed out, there was not enough time between Friday night and today to discuss the difference between my amendment in committee and my Motions Nos. 15 and 17.

Essentially, Clause 9 was probably the one that epitomized the concern of Canadians the most, namely, that it would allow under the law an individual Canadian, a priest, a nun or any other individual layman, to be fined or imprisoned for aiding a refugee applicant who does not possess identification documents or a Canadian visa. Mr. Speaker, you can well imagine the uproar from Canadians, in particular civil liberty groups, the Canadian Bar Association, churches, non-profit organizations and Amnesty International as a result of placing the onus on these individuals to pay the price rather than on the smugglers and consultants about whom everyone has agreed something must be done.

The Minister has said, "Do not worry. We will never put in prison or fine a priest or a nun who helps legitimate refugees". I am not concerned with the meaning or the intention of the Minister since Ministers come and go. Even you and I, Mr. Speaker, will go one day, much to the regret of the House of Commons. This is why during bad governments in particular it is important to have good legislation, legislation which will protect the citizens of Canada.

This piece of legislation, perhaps interpreted by the present Minister or by someone else, can be interpreted according to the letter of the law and would therefore make liable any individual Canadian, including thousands and thousands of church groups, although this wording is not limited to religious institutions. Many social and humanitarian organizations have been at the forefront of helping those less well off than you and me, Mr. Speaker.

Who do Hon. Members think were the first to advocate food banks, particularly in the basements of churches in the Province of British Columbia? These food banks came to the aid of those who did not have food on their tables. Can Hon. Members think of any more regressive or humiliating thing than to have to line up for one's food? It was the churches and it is still the churches which have filled the vacuum in 1987 with the plenty which surrounds us, and the line-ups are getting longer.

The churches and other organizations have come to the aid of those looking for a home. To date, Governments have not said anything particularly negative about the role played by churches and non-profit organizations. However, all of a sudden the same institutions which help refugees will now be made liable to imprisonment or to fines. I challenge the Government to produce one Canadian who would be in favour of that law. I am not suggesting that the churches or non-profit organizations be put above the law. No one, including government Ministers and the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), is above the law. But when there is a law that makes liable individual groups and Canadians who legitimately and out of humanitarianism come to the aid of a person fleeing persecution, then what type of country are we trying to become under this Conservative administration?

Is the Government proud to follow the lead of the United States of America? In that country members of the clergy have to hide refugees away from law enforcement officials. Is that the direction which this Government wishes to take? Unless the Government changes Section 95.1, not only will it be following the course taken by the United States of America, it will in fact supersede that country.

It is for that reason that at the committee stage and at second reading we tried to move members of the Government and the Minister away from this wording in order not to allow a blanket-type of legislation which will potentially incriminate everyone yet catch only a few. That is not the way to draft laws. When laws are drafted we have a purpose, an objective. In this case the objective is abusers of the law. Let us clearly define who are the abusers. Once we have done that, let us target our laws appropriately and effectively in order to get those people.

Why put in the same category a manipulator who charges $15,000 a head, dumps people in the oceans and leaves them to pick up another load to bring somewhere else, and a parish priest of a church in my riding who continues to help people in need whether or not they have identification documentation? The action of my parish priest is different from that of the smuggler who makes half a million dollars on every load. Why, under the law, are the priest and the smuggler potentially one and the same? It is my intention to differentiate between the two.

This is not to say that the Liberal Party or the New Democratic Party or the Chairman of the standing committee are in favour of abuse because they rise to speak about this issue. This issue has become like the constitutional accord, every time we try to make an amendment, we are seen as anti-Quebec. That approach cannot be taken. That is why I am moving the amendment today to include the word "humanitarian". This is an attempt to amend the law in this way by stating:

> Every person who knowingly, and for other than a humanitarian or commercial purpose, smuggles, organizes, induces, aids or abets—

This is a specific word that would set clear in legislation the intention of which the Minister speaks, which intention suggests that churches, organizations and individuals who are helping refugees legitimately are not the target and cannot be the target under this legislation. In response in committee the Minister said: "We cannot use words that cannot be defined by the law, words that would allow smugglers or others to profit through the loopholes". I am not saying that "humanitarian" is the only word to use. However, by using that word it is our intention that we be very specific in this law.

I would like to advise the Parliamentary Secretary that the words "charity", "non-profit" and "humanitarian" have been used in 38 different statutes of this Government.

• (1630)

With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, I am not in the mood to listen to the response from the Parliamentary Secretary when he asked what it means when the Hon. Member for York West suggests a humanitarian. It is general, broad, and it does not appear anywhere else. I am sure that when checking the federal statutes and the Immigration Act there are legal definitions of the word "humanitarian", otherwise that word would not appear 38 different times in our federal statutes. I am sure that there is a definition of a church and a non-profit organization.

My point is that the Minister, the Parliamentary Secretary, or indeed the government Members cannot use the excuse that legally they could not find the phrases to define those very people whom we are trying to exclude from this regressive law, but in fact the words presently are in our federal statutes. If there is a political will to state clearly in intentions and also in law that the target of the Bill will not be and cannot be those groups and Canadians who are presently serving their fellow man, in this case, refugees, then it can be implemented

I ask the Parliamentary Secretary why there was no legal word or phrase that would set forth the intention that the Government does not want to throw in jail or fine a priest, or an individual Canadian who is helping refugees, but that under the law those intentions are real? In other legislation in other areas of policy in the Government or in the federal domain drafters have been able to come up with those terms and define them. Given the precedent, and the fact that "humanitarian" is used 38 times in our federal statutes, why was it not possible to find this word or another word with the same meaning to put in this legislation in order to match intentions with the law? Intentions are only as good as the paper on which they are written. It is the courts and the decision-makers that will ultimately interpret and follow the law. According to proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 it makes liable any individual, church, or otherwise, who legitimately will be aiding refugees without documentation.

Thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: I must admit that I came in late. I wonder if I heard the Hon. Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I hope that the Hon. Member is not rising on a question or a comment. There are no questions or comments allowed under Standing Order 114.

Mr. Heap: With unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North to ask a question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Orlikow: I heard the Hon. Member defining the word "humanitarian" in his amendment. I did not hear him explain the three words following the word "humanitarian" which are "or commercial purpose". I wonder if the Hon. Member could explain that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent to allow the Hon. Member for York West to answer the question?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchi: If the Hon. Member will check with the Table Officers, he will find that this was a typing error which was not part of the motion. It has been struck by the Table. The three words "or commercial purpose" should not be in that motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Spadina on debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): I rise to support the motion of my hon. friend from York West. I would have preferred to handle the same problem in a somewhat different way. I will discuss that at a later time.

It has been proposed that we should exempt from this law people who act for a humanitarian purpose. As the Hon. Member stated, the word "humanitarian" is one that is in legal usage. Governments, courts, and the public have found it possible to use this word with a known meaning in legal matters. Therefore, it is a possible way in which to resolve what many people see as an unclarity, a possible mix-up, or a drafting error in the law.

When we started debate on the Bill, I was very much of the mind that there was a drafting error. One of the chief drafters, the director of the legal section of the task force, gave me a briefing on this. He explained that Sections 95.1 and 95.2 hinge on the difference between the word "into" and the word "to". He spent approximately half an hour explaining to me that to bring a person "to" Canada is legal, to bring a person "into" Canada is illegal, always was, and should be.

Later the Minister told me he was wrong. I am not sure about the quality of a law that is drafted by someone who soberly and conscientiously told me one thing, and after hearing the Minister, had to admit that what he told me was not true in regard to the meaning of a crucial clause in the law.

It seems to me very ironic that this Government, no less than the previous Government, and possibly more, has actively sought partnership with churches, unions, and all types of non-governmental organizations in the work of bringing refugees to Canada and helping them to settle here.

When the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) was Minister of Employment and Immigration, she told me that it was an important part of her plan to win that type of co-operation. In fact, at that time the host program began and it has continued. Churches and other such groups have joined with the Government in helping to settle refugees. Often they joined with the Government by helping very substantially to settle the refugees sponsored by the Government. Perhaps there is some confusion about how many the Government sponsored and how many the church sponsored, but one has to look at the whole picture and not pick certain figures out of context. It has been acknowledged by government officials that they have helped a great deal in providing information. The church has a good network and it is represented in places where the Government is not represented, and it is also represented in most places where the Government does have overseas posts. Therefore, information that the church has brought about countries has been greatly used by the Refugee Status Advisory Committee and by the Immigration Commission in trying to identify the type of problems that may generate refugees and attempting to clarify who are the refugees and what is needed in response to a real refugee who has been through some very terrible experiences.

All this information was actively sought by the Government, and I am glad that it was. The churches responded very positively, as did other groups. Many of those groups were ad hoc groups, for example, the Nanaimo Immigrant Aid Society and the Immigrant Aid Society in many other towns and cities. Without that assistance, the Government would have been greatly hampered in meeting its own goals in this matter.

In fact, this year the Government announced it was necessary to impose very harsh restrictions on the entry of refugee claimants into Canada over the American border. It announced those restrictions on Friday morning and on Sunday afternoon there was a great rally in the City of Fort Erie of over 300 local townspeople who were led by their clergy. For about half an afternoon in the park they held what they called a celebration of refugees. They told me that in the past two years they had billeted 500 refugees in the Town of Fort Erie. It started one evening a couple of years ago when one of our immigration officers on the bridge met a Salvadoran family, did the necessary paperwork and procedure and then asked, "Where are you going tonight?" They didn't know. The officer told them to wait. He phoned around and found them a place to stay with a friend, which by the way is the kind of thing the churches have been doing spontaneously. A committee was formed within a few days and that network billeted 500 people in a small city in two years. Southern Quebec at the same time sent a truckload of food and blankets to refugees who had been sent back to Plattsburg, New York, who had been stopped from coming into Canada. That competes with an action between Windsor and Detroit for being the first time, at least in modern days, that refugee aid was sent to the United States of America.

• (1640)

There are all kinds of ways that people in the maritime provinces, the central provinces and the prairie provinces, even Alberta, are doing. I say that because I know the Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) is very much aware of the refugee activities and refugee support activities in Alberta. Although there are fewer there than in Ontario for reasons that the Member could explain better than I, Albertans are making refugees very welcome.

It is ironic that the Government should undertake now to pass a law that refers to every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to smuggle, organize, induce aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa or passport, because thousands of people have helped thousands of people do that very thing. People have helped those coming to Canada by assisting them to the nearest immigration office believing that they were acting lawfully. Nobody in this Government, including the present Minister, ever whispered to them that they were not acting lawfully. They read the Act, they listened to the officials and the Minister. They did what was lawful and they were praised for it, at least by the preceding Minister, if not by the present one.

It is ironic that we should now have a law saying that everyone who does that is guilty of an offence and is liable, et cetera. It is not nearly good enough to say, "You are nice people and we would never prosecute you", as was made very clear by a representative of the Inter-Church Committee on Refugees, a layperson who has worked on refugee affairs for about 20 years. These people are not asking to be protected from prosecution. They are saying, "Do not make us guilty of an offence for doing what you encouraged us to do for these many years". I really thought at first that there was a misunderstanding. We tried, as we heard from an earlier speaker, to get this clause amended in committee. I remember very clearly the Parliamentary Secretary saying that he did not think words could be found any better than the ones that were in the law.

That leads me to the conclusion that there was no misunderstanding but a fundamental moral change in the law to prevent, or at least to discourage or intimidate, Canadians or anybody else from helping refugees coming into Canada unless they are privileged to have visas. It is not to help them evade the law. Even to help them meet the law will now be made an offence. It must be the first time that the Government has sought to pass a law to make it an offence to help somebody keep the law. I am very sorry but that seems to be the Government's decision. I hope there is still time for Members opposite to reconsider their position and adopt the motion that we have before us.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we have stated on several occasions today that this Bill contains too many discretionary powers. We have regretted that and pointed at passages and clauses where too much power is given to an individual Minister. We do not like it.

I can tell you that nothing is more repugnant, Mr. Speaker, than this Clause 9 and nothing is more upsetting than the content of this measure which prompted the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to put forward his amendment, which I fully support.

In essence, the Government is taking a line whereby it wishes to give an oral assurance to groups, volunteer organizations and churches not to prosecute them, while at the same time putting into law a measure that will prosecute them the very moment the promise is forgotten. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, how naive and incompetent can one be in making the kind of statement which the Minister made in committee? You cannot do things that way. You cannot expect to give this kind of reassurance unless it is embodied in the law. It is irresponsible to expect society to function on the basis of verbal assurances by the Minister of the day. What will happen with the Minister of tomorrow, a logical question which the Hon. Member for York West already raised? You do not make laws that way.

What is repugnant about this measure, which is very upsetting, is the fact that you would treat as criminals through a blanket clause in this Bill a number of people who have been and will continue—I repeat, will continue—to be involved in matters relating to the refugee movement in Canada. Why am I saying that, Mr. Speaker? Because we have it on record in statements by two representatives of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary knows very well what was said. Nancy Pocock said:

> If my Government tells me it is a crime to help these people,

Namely, refugees.

> —I will have to say I am obeying a higher law and I am going to continue to help them when they need me.

This is quite a statement from a person who has high moral standards and motivation flowing from a life dedicated to this kind of work. Another member of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, George Cram, said:

> I do not want to be guilty of committing an offence for doing humanitarian work.

True. What civilized society would do that? It is so un-Canadian. It is absolutely revolting that this kind of legislation would be allowed. It is upsetting and embarrassing. As the Hon. Member for York West said earlier, you can make a distinction between activities that are oriented by profit-making and activities that are non-profit making. Any law writer can make that distinction, but it takes political will to do it. The Member for York West indicated the number of times where the word "humanitarian" has been used in federal statutes. It is over 30. The number is over 30. There is no excuse for the Government to tell us that it cannot be done. It can be done, but the political will is not there.

To add insult to injury, we have a Minister who has the nerve to say, "Don't worry, you guys over there, the Inter-Church Committee, we will not prosecute you. We will keep our word". How serious is that? How can you make laws that way? Not even a banana republic would do that. It is either on the books or it is not, and it is on the books, unfortunately.

• (1650)

The matter was raised at second reading stage a number of times by the Hon. Member for York West and by other Hon. Members including myself. This clause is a shame and it must be given attention by the Government if it has any respect for volunteer organizations and all those involved in this kind of work.

I know that the Parliamentary Secretary has a special sensitivity for the movement outside the country in which refugees are involved, and I know that he will take the matter up with the Minister. The Bill cannot be allowed to go ahead like this.

As we all know, there is an enormous difference between those who get involved for the purpose of profit-making and those who are involved for humanitarian considerations only. Everyone in this room knows that there is a big difference. The distinction can be made and it is clear. The terminology does exist if one wants to choose from it. It must find its way into this piece of legislation.

Clause 9 is a repugnant clause for which there is no room in the Bill in light of the traditions we have developed in Canada. It is not consistent with our international reputation. There is no way that this clause should be allowed by those back-benchers over there to stand on the books. It ought to be changed and ways to do it must be found.

I fully support the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West. Blanket incrimination rather than targeting those whose motives are venal is not fair and is not right. The distinction must be made.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) said that it is up to the Government to find the word to be used. Now the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) asks why the Government does not find the word. It is their amendment. Why did they not find the word? They can get themselves the latest edition of Roget's Thesaurus and use any synonym they want.

I have no objection at all to their using any word they want in their amendment. If it meets the narrow definitions of the Criminal Code, that is fine. However, I can say that the word "humanitarian" will not do it.

I agree that that word is used elsewhere in the statutes and even in the immigration law. However, it is not used in definite regulations. It is of course used in the context of broad Canadian goals.

I would ask the Hon. Member for Davenport, as I asked the Hon. Member for York West in committee, to define "humanitarian" in a world context. Both Hon. Members know that every radical group in the world thinks its goals and objectives are humanitarian.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Pinochet never uses it.

Mr. Friesen: Of course, he is saving his country from communism. Check with Abu Nidal or the Ayatollah. The Ayatollah has saved his country from that great Satan, the United States. What a favour he has done for the Iranian people! That, in his world context, is being a humanitarian.

As I did in committee, I will bring it a little closer to home. Within the last two weeks, there was a case in British Columbia of a young lady riding a motorcycle who had an accident. Her leg was severed and she was taken to the hospital. The humanitarian staff at the hospital wanted to save her life. However, the treatment required a blood transfusion and she was a Jehovah's Witness. Try as they might to be humanitarian in their scale of values, her scale of values did not allow them to give her a transfusion, and she died.

How are we to define "humanitarian"? We cannot use a loose, subjective word like that and expect the law to carry weight and to be effective.

Hon. Members have spoken about the threat to churches. I have been interested in refugees for a long time and I have been active in my church for a long time. I have never once felt threatened by the law because of my interest in refugees.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Of course not, this law wasn't passed then.

Mr. Caccia: That's right, big deal.

Mr. Friesen: That's right, big deal. Let me offer the House the statistics. There is no need for any organization to come to the border with so-called refugees who are undocumented. To come to the U.S.-Canada border without documents is unnecessary. They can go to any Canadian Consulate in the United States to obtain documentation. They can go to refugee detention centres on the U.S.-Mexico border and be documented. Any church or humanitarian organization that so chooses can go to the United States and sponsor refugees to give them a more certain future than it would be doing it the way they describe they want to do it.

Central American landings seem to be the focus of attention of all the groups that have criticized this legislation. In 1986, the Government sponsored 299 Central American landings in Canada from Central America. Private groups sponsored 14. From the United States, the Government sponsored 1,018, and private groups sponsored 76. From others abroad, the Government sponsored 2,465, and private groups sponsored 149.

Up to June of 1987, the Government sponsored 101 Central American landings in Canada, and private groups sponsored 17. From the U.S., the Government sponsored 680 and private groups, 19.

If Hon. Members want to help Central American refugees, the simplest thing they could do is to go to the United States and sponsor all the refugees they want. If they do it in the United States, the refugees come to Canada with work permits and they are secure as soon as they are in Canada.

There are thousands of refugees in the United States. I ask Hon. Members opposite who speak on behalf of these organizations why they only brought 76 refugees from the United States in 1986 when the Government brought in 1,018. Why did they not bring in more? There are unlimited opportunities to sponsor refugees if they want to. Why in the first six months of 1987 did they bring in from the United States only 19 refugees when the Government brought in 680? If they are so interested in helping refugees, why have they not done so?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, could I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to ask a question of the Parliamentary Secretary?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent for the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) to put a question to the Parliamentary Secretary?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is no unanimous consent. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on Motions Nos. 15 and 17 standing in the name of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motions?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), the recorded division on the proposed motions stands deferred.

It being 5 o'clock, the House will now proceed with Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

NUCLEAR ARMAMENTS

ADVISABILITY OF DECLARING CANADA A NUCLEAR ARMS FREE ZONE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone by prohibiting the deployment, testing, construction and transportation of nuclear weapons and associated equipment through and within Canada, the export of goods and materials for use in the construction and deployment of nuclear arms and further, the government should encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the establishment of nuclear weapons free zones in areas around the world has increased enormously over the last several years. Nuclear weapons free zones exist by international treaty in four global regions: The sea bed, Antarctica, outer space, and Latin America. International recognition is presently being sought as well for the nuclear weapons free zone established in the South Pacific during 1985. At least 17 nations have declared themselves nuclear weapons free zones, including Japan, Sweden, Austria and New Zealand. A number of other countries which are members of NATO have also done so. In addition, there are currently proposals for regional zones in the Balkan states, the Middle East, Southeast Asia, Africa, the Indian Ocean and parts of Europe.

Here in Canada as of June of this year the number of nuclear weapons free zones has grown to 169. In addition to cities such as Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, Regina, Toronto, Montreal, Bathurst, Lunenburg and St. John's, scores of local Governments have passed motions declaring their own communities to be nuclear weapons free. The Provinces of Ontario and Manitoba, as well as the Northwest Territories, have done the same. Just over 59 per cent of the Canadian population now lives within nuclear weapons free zones.

Almost from its beginning the UN has urged its members to create these zones in order to build an international climate that would bring about a comprehensive arms limitation agreement. In fact, in 1978 the final report of the UN special session on disarmament declared: "The establishment of nuclear weapons free zones on the basis of arrangements arrived at among states in the region concerned constitutes an important disarmament initiative. The process of establishing such zones should be encouraged with the ultimate objective of achieving a world free of nuclear weapons".

In the past, Canadian Governments have traditionally supported the thrust of this policy. At two special sessions of the UN General Assembly on Disarmament, one in 1978 and the other in 1982, Canada supported the final declarations which encouraged the establishment of nuclear weapons free zones. It would appear from all that activity that Canada should have taken the lead and shown by example what it is indeed encouraging other nations to do. Instead, we have managed to confuse our position by acts of both the present and previous Governments.

This is the third time this particular motion has been debated, once on May 29, 1984, and once on October 10, 1985. As well, two similar Private Members' Bills were debated, one put forward by the Hon. Member for Regina West (Mr. Benjamin) on March 18, 1985, and the other put forward by the previous Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, Mr. Doug Anguish, on March 30, 1985.

In reviewing those debates, the central argument used by opponents of this proposal is that if Canada were to adopt it, her obligations to her allies would be seen to be diminished. In particular, it would isolate Canada from her allies in NATO and NORAD. As I understand the policy of the present Government, it is that it does not support the declaration of a nuclear weapons free status for Canada because Canada does not possess nuclear weapons. Since such weapons are not stationed in Canada we are essentially a nuclear weapons free zone. However, since we are members of NATO, which is a defence alliance which deploys a nuclear deterrent, we would be inconsistent with our membership in NATO if we were to adopt this motion.

I fully expect to hear that same kind of argument being advanced numerous times in the course of this debate. However, my Party believes, as do I, that on the evidence the argument does not stand up. Nuclear arms are not even mentioned in the North Atlantic Treaty. Therefore, Canada is not obliged to support what has developed as a NATO policy. As well, the treaty makes it clear that it is up to member states to decide the size and nature of their commitment within NATO. Presumably that is the reason given by Canada for its recent decision to withdraw its contingent of troops from Norway. It is also why Canada took the position at the 1957 Paris heads of government meeting that whether or not Canada would commit itself to having nuclear weapons was a decision only Canada could and should make. As we all know, the record will show that we decided not to do that.

I would like to think that we made that decision because to do otherwise would have meant that we would be lending our support to the build-up of nuclear arms and contributing to the increase in world tensions and the threat of nuclear war. In my view, the position Canada took was both visionary and in keeping with the respect we have internationally as a peace-loving nation. I think we continue to enjoy that respect, but I also believe the principles we adopted then are not as clear today. In point of fact, while continuing the policy not to store or deploy nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, we also provide support for the development, testing and training in the use of nuclear weapons. We place no restrictions on Canadian industrial involvement either in the production of U.S. nuclear and nuclear capable delivery systems or, indeed, their components. Even though we have policy restrictions with respect to the export of fissionable material, there is clear evidence that this material is finding its way into arms production in France, South Korea and in the U.S. In addition to that, U.S. and British warships which are nuclear-capable, and some suspected of being actually armed with nuclear weapons, are allowed to visit Canadian ports.

It is also the policy of nuclear nations within NATO to "neither confirm nor deny" the presence of weapons on their vessels. They also apply this policy to aircraft. Yet while we as Canadians reject this policy for aircraft over Canadian territory, we seem to find it acceptable for naval vessels in our waters. I have never heard a satisfactory answer from either Government as to why this contradiction in our policy exists. However, it does.

I can provide numerous other examples where Canada's policies are a departure from her stated principles, but I will leave that to other speakers who will be rising in the course of this debate. It is sufficient to say that these few examples I have given illustrate the numerous inconsistencies in our stated principles as opposed to our developed policies.

• (1710)

Another central argument which has been made against Canada dissociating itself entirely from this nuclear policy development is that it would threaten Canadian jobs. That is also an argument that was used in the initial stages of the debate on whether Canada should or should not be involved in the U.S. Strategic Defence Initiative or, as it is more commonly known, Star Wars. That argument was made even after many studies showed that military spending is one of the least effective ways to create employment.

One of those many studies conducted by the U.S. Labour Department showed that for every $1 billion spent on military procurement 28,000 jobs could be created. The same $1 billion would create 32,000 jobs if it were used to upgrade transportation systems, 57,000 jobs if it were spent on consumption of goods and services, and 71,000 jobs if it were spent on education.

Apart from any other consideration, I think it is irresponsible to talk about the need to create jobs through nuclear arms production when we know full well what the results of their use would be to mankind. However, it does bring me to another related point which I think brings into sharp focus the insanity of the global arms build-up and the developed world's wrong-headed setting of priorities. I am referring to the recognition that has been given to the maxim that we cannot achieve world peace if we cannot also achieve economic and social justice on the global scale.

The United Nations has estimated that some 130 million children in our world are denied access to any form of education and that 800 million adults are considered illiterate. One-half of the Third World countries have no safe drinking water supplies, yet the technology is available to provide it within 10 years. We could do the same to prevent the hunger that is killing hundreds of thousands every year.

The World Health Organization tells us that 10 children die each minute as a result of contracting measles, diphtheria and tuberculosis and that only 10 per cent of the Third World's population is even immunized against disease. We also know that air and water pollution is responsible for increased illness and death from diseases such as asthma, cancer and heart disease.

Yet, we continue to spend billions of dollars on weapons that are capable of destroying every living thing on our planet. In my opinion and that, I am sure, of most reasonable Canadians that is the ultimate in insanity.

Hundreds of thousands of Canadians have lent their support to the notion behind the motion which is before the House by signing petitions that call for the House of Commons to adopt the statements I have included in this motion. They recognize, as I do, that declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone will not change the world overnight. International tensions and relationships are too complex, unfortunately, for that to happen. However, I argue that by adopting this motion Canada would be affirming to the international community its position that our stated principles of the fact are to become our policies of today.

Under the rules of the House this motion will receive five hours of consideration during the time set aside for Private Members' Business. The motion is also a votable item and I ask Members on all sides of the House to give serious consideration to the debate and to the motion and to consider supporting it.

In conclusion I would like to quote from a working paper entitled "Making Canada a Nuclear Weapon-free Zone" that was made available by Project Ploughshares. In my view it sums up the argument very well. The document says:

> The point of any state becoming a NWFZ—

—a nuclear weapon-free zone, Mr. Speaker—

> —(or joining an international NWFZ) is not to seek immunity from nuclear war. Once war breaks out, all bets are off and any country, whether nuclear weapon-free or not, will be vulnerable to direct attack—the relevant circumstance being whether or not the nuclear combatants will consider it to their advantage to attack or not to attack—and all suffer the post-war devastation and nuclear winter.
>
> Treaties count for little in war, and they certainly count for nothing in the sharing of the effects of war. Similarly, while a Canadian NWFZ would eliminate any willing Canadian role in nuclear warfighting, this also is not the point of a NWFZ—after the war few Canadians could either be around or inclined to celebrate the virtues of non-involvement in global self-immolation.
> A NWFZ is not an attempt to make one immune to the effects of war, rather it is an attempt to influence national and international behaviour before war breaks out, thus helping to reduce the likelihood of war. A NWFZ is a peacetime measure to restrict the spread of nuclear weapons, to withdraw political and technical support for the nuclear arms race, and to build trust between nations and regions of the globe.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I think that is a sentiment which has been expressed by the vast majority of Canadians, both individually through petitions to the House of Commons and through the actions of representatives at local and provincial government levels. This is the first time in the last several years that the House of Commons has had an opportunity to express its view on this very important matter. I look forward to the coming debate.

Hon. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) for putting this motion before the House. I believe that it is too seldom that we take a look at one of the most important aspects of our civilization, in the words of Tolstoy, war and peace.

We have been asked to consider today the advisability of declaring Canada a nuclear arms free zone and to encourage cities, provinces and states throughout the world to undertake similar action. In a perfect world the need to consider such a proposal would not present itself. Unfortunately, we well know that the world in which we live is far from perfect. Given the nature of modern submarine and missile technologies it is not fanciful to see a direct potential threat to Canadian security and sovereignty.

We must, therefore, take a realistic and pragmatic approach to conditions. The Hon. Member who just spoke is filled with good intentions and I admire them. However, we must be practical and deal with reality. To do otherwise would be more than foolish, it would be dangerous for Canada.

In the face of the known threat, of which nuclear arms are a major component, Canada has joined with other countries which share similar values and interests in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, an alliance founded in a concept of collective defence. The primary role of the alliance is to safeguard the security of member nations by deterring aggression. This deterrence capability, which is weighted and balanced against the forces of the Warsaw Pact, relies ultimately on nuclear weapons. Although the alliance has pledged never to resort to force except in response to attack, it remains united in its determination to deter any aggression against its members. The Hon. Member who has just spoken wishes to do away with the deterrence. Our Government continues to believe that it is through participation in these collective defence arrangements, rather than retreating into the uncertain security of a nuclear weapons free zone, that we can make our most effective contribution to preserving peace and security for ourselves and others.

• (1720)

I would not want Members of the House, however, to believe that Canada is dragging its heels in promoting peace. Far from it. While we have not considered such zones to be a satisfactory alternative to the ratification of the non-proliferation treaty, this Government does believe that, in the absence of universal adherence to the non-proliferation treaty, the creation of such zones can make a contribution to the objective of preventing the proliferation of nuclear weapons.

In order to be effective, such zones must: first, apply to a well defined geographic area; second, have support from the principal military powers of the region; third, not give military advantage to any state or group of states; fourth, contain adequate treaty assurances and means to verify that all countries abide by the commitments involved; fifth, not permit the countries of the area to have an independent nuclear explosive capability; and finally, enhance regional security and international stability.

Some Hon. Members may believe such criteria to be excessively rigorous, but we believe it is only through strict application of such criteria that nuclear weapons free zones will be effective. Canada has voted in favour of United Nations resolutions calling for such zones in Africa, the Middle East, and South Asia. We have also backed measures which would consolidate the establishment of a nuclear weapons free zone in Latin America, in accordance with the Treaty of Tlateloko. Canada also supports the South Pacific nuclear free zone which came into effect under the Treaty of Rarotonga in December, 1986.

There are some areas of the world, however, where efforts to create nuclear weapons free zones have not succeeded. It would be useful to look at some of these in order to clarify Canada's position.

The idea of a Nordic nuclear weapons free zone has been under discussion for almost 30 years. The primary impediment to its establishment is that such a zone is not considered viable without the inclusion of the Baltic region and parts of the western U.S.S.R. in the geographically designated areas. The U.S.S.R. has provided no indication that it would accept the inclusion of its territory owing to the military significance of the Kola Peninsula, which is the location of the densest concentration of nuclear weapons in the world.

The creation of a Balkan nuclear free zone appears even more remote despite expressions of interest of all the Balkan States on various occasions. The major obstacle is that the removal of American nuclear weapons from the area would create a destabilizing regional imbalance since nuclear weapons on neighbouring Soviet territory would remain untouched. The various inter-regional conflicts and multilateral differences, particularly the fact that the region includes two NATO and two Warsaw Pact members and other non-aligned nations, further complicate this issue.

In Southeast Asia, an increased Soviet naval presence and an expansionist Vietnam have prompted interest among the six Asian countries—Brunei, Indonesia, Malaysia, the Philippines, Singapore and Thailand—in the establishment of a zone of peace, freedom and neutrality in their region. An important element of this concept would be the declaration of Southeast Asia as a nuclear weapons free zone. However, differences of view among the ASEAN states and practical problems of implementation have relegated the realization of the measure to the distant future.

I have tried to show, then, that there are many factors which affect a region's ability to declare a nuclear weapons free zone. It is obviously even more difficult to make such a declaration effective and meaningful. In each case, specific and concrete strategic realities must be taken into account. It would be foolhardy and dangerous for Canada to pass such a resolution. Declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone would involve a serious abdication of our alliance responsibilities and might even require withdrawal from NATO. Such a proposal would clearly not have the support of our allies and would in all likelihood give military advantage to the Soviets, thus reducing regional security and international stability.

In conclusion, I wish to reiterate to the House that Canada does support the declaration of nuclear weapons free zones if regional conditions permit. Such a declaration is not appropriate for Canada. A more productive approach is to encourage serious arms control and disarmament measures within established negotiating agencies such as the mutual and balanced force reduction talks in Geneva. It is only through serious negotiations involving the nuclear weapon states that meaningful advances in arms control can take place.

Fortunately, the superpowers are, of late, negotiating seriously to find a mutually satisfactory way to reduce their nuclear arms. Countries such as Canada can and are doing much to encourage the superpowers to continue their efforts. In my opinion, the present situation is more hopeful than it has been in the last two decades. Progress is being made toward balance and verifiable reduction of nuclear weapons.

I am more optimistic today about nuclear disarmament than I have been since the U.S.S.R. started the new generation of nuclear weapons with its introduction of the SS-20, which destabilized the relative balance that existed in 1977.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in addressing this both provocative and important resolution, I am reminded of this summer when I had the opportunity to read a very long and fascinating book entitled The Making of the Atom Bomb. It was a study of how scientists from five or six different countries in the 1920s and 1930s arrived at the awesome discovery that we could unleash the force of the atom.

In light of the prevailing mood in Europe and the emergence of Nazi Germany at that time, many of those scientists decided that the force of atomic energy should be examined with a view to making weapons, without really beginning to understand exactly what incredible power for destruction they were beginning to unleash.

That realization began to dawn in the 1940s, that this was not just another geometric expansion of dynamite, but something of unspeakable potent destruction that was unknown in the annals of humankind. Those scientists, including Niels Bohr, Fermi, Oppenheimer, and others who worked on those projects made a proposal to the politicians, specifically President Roosevelt and Prime Minister Churchill, that the possession of that weapon was a two-edged sword whose political application, if used correctly, could actually bring about an understanding among all nations that war of major proportions was impossible.

Some Hon. Members will recall the fierceness of the fire bombings of Cologne and other cities that our Armed Forces were able to wreak upon them at that time. We were able to understand that in our time we were able essentially to unleash the genie from the bottle.

The recommendation was that this weapon was so immense in its destructive power that it might just bring about a tone of sanity and perhaps form the basis for stopping wars since no one would be a winner any more. Unfortunately, the politicians did not listen to the creators of the atom bomb. In 1945-46 they decided that since our side had the advantage, we would attempt to use it to attain strategic advantage. They were warned that the Soviets would soon catch up because the power of the atom is not confined to any nationality, it is a universal knowledge. It was just a matter of time before someone from another country figured out how to make the bomb.

This resolution brought to mind that small history because it made me realize just how much of an eyelash away we came to actually controlling nuclear weapons and how much we lost it then. I am not saying we have more wisdom than our predecessors. Certainly we do not. However, I do mean to say that politicians, policy makers, have been faced with a number of crucial questions along the way about the application of nuclear weapons, and that we have made a lot of mistakes, beginning with the first one.

I think 1945 was when the new history began. Everything up to that was a prelude. The first explosion in New Mexico was the beginning of a new history. Since that time we have been trying to find various ways and means of putting the stop back into the bottle. We have not been too successful. When we think of it, Mr. Speaker, how many successful nuclear weapons agreements have there been since 1945? There was the Nuclear Test Ban Treaty in 1963 which limited test bans in the atmosphere. There were SALT negotiations to which the United States did not become a signatory but adhered to informally up until last year. There was the Non-proliferation Treaty of which Canada was the major architect. It tried to control the application of nuclear weapons to other countries. That is about it. That about summarizes 43 years of trying to come to grips with this incredible, destructive power.

So much of it is involved in the cold war rhetoric. Somehow nuclear weapons have become intermixed with the competition between East and West, the Soviets and Americans, NATO and the Warsaw Pact, and all the other competitions. We tend at times to believe that there is something plausible about a nuclear weapon. I mean, there are military people and some politicians on our side and certainly on the side of the Soviets, who believe that we could actually use nuclear weapons in wartime and get away with it. They actually say we can have a nuclear war fighting capacity. There are those people in the world and they are not locked up in insane asylums. There are in many cases people occupying very important positions in very important countries, who talk about using nuclear weapons in wartime. They say that if there are only 50 million or 60 million people killed in North America, that is an acceptable level of damage.

We have the same thinking on the Soviet side. Its military people are saying: "If we have to fight one, we will. We survived the Second World War and we can survive a Third World War". When we read these things we think, oh, my God, what are these people saying? In heaven's name, what are they talking about when they say it is okay to have 60 million or 70 million casualties in the first day, to say nothing of the impact on the environment and the atmosphere and the fact that it will totally destroy our social and economic cultural way of life? We cannot reconstruct what we have built up over the past 3000 or 4000 years after a nuclear war.

Surely, the real issue is how to get rid of the fighting. If we can never get rid of the knowledge, how can we finally find a way of putting down such implacable guidelines and controls? As I tried to point out, part of the question is not the techniques but the psychology. Part of it is the understanding. It is people like us in this Chamber and people in other political decision-making Chambers who have that power. We can listen to the scientists. We have listened to them in the past and we have not responded to their recommendations. It will be people like you and I, Mr. Speaker, reflecting ordinary Canadians who will be making those decisions.

Is it so wrong to think in terms of a nuclear weapons free zone? Many Canadians have latched on to that concept, not necessarily because they see it as the perfect answer, but it has a symbolic value, if nothing else. It is one way of ordinary Canadians expressing their gut reaction to us as politicians, as policy makers, which is to get rid of those things. They say: "Do not put myself and my kids in jeopardy". That is why we have resolutions in Ontario, Manitoba, the Territories and various towns and cities. It is one way for people to express themselves. I think we have to listen to that expression. We can be critical of the specifics. However, let us recognize what it represents. It is a heartfelt underlying current of opinion in this country, as it is in other countries around the world, that perhaps the time has come to stop the insanity. Perhaps the time has come to try to recapture what we lost in 1945.

I have to admit to some surprise. When I introduced a motion of this kind at the policy convention of our Party last November, I did not expect it to pass. It was going to be one of those controversial resolutions. However, over 75 per cent of our delegates voted for it. Many said afterwards that they were not sure exactly what a nuclear free zone meant in terms of specifics, but they did know that it perhaps was one further extension of what this country has tried to say over the years, that is, that perhaps we are in some peculiar and unique way one of those countries that can stand up and provide a difference to this thing.

I know I do not have much time and I wish I had another hour or two to explain this because it is a topic about which I feel strongly. Perhaps the most important nuclear weapons free zone that Canada should be arguing for right now is in the area of our Arctic, the northern territories. One of the really serious problems is that Canada can no longer treat nuclear weapons free zones as an academic exercise. It is not something that is happening in the South Pacific, in Antarctica or Latin America. We now face in our own northern territories the emergence of an arms race. We face the emergence of our own undersea submarines. In a sense I wish the resolution could be amended to say: "If there is one thing on which Canada should be united it is that we do not want an arms race on our territory underneath our own Arctic waters". We should be using every ounce of our diplomacy and persuasion to try to convince other countries who border on those Arctic waters to demilitarize and denuclearize, not to allow it to become an area of combat between Soviet and American submarines, not to allow the Forward Maritime Strategy to become the predominant philosophy.

This is an area where we can make not only a symbolic statement but a real statement because it affects us directly as Canadians. We should be negotiating with the Norwegians, the Russians, the Icelanders and the Americans rather than building up the arms race, rather than adding to the submarines, rather than putting missiles in those submarines. Let us declare our North nuclear free. Let us demilitarize. That is what I would like to see coming out of this kind of resolution, something not just symbolic in intent, as important as that may be, but something very real and tangible, and that is absolutely crucial.

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be permitted the opportunity to comment on the motion of the New Democratic Party which would see Canada declaring itself a nuclear weapons free zone. I was disappointed, I must say, though, to hear the Liberal spokesman of his Party going again half-way and only wishing to declare half of Canada a nuclear free zone.

• (1740)

This type of motion has been debated on three previous occasions during Private Members' Business and once during an Opposition Day. The motion before us proposes a course of action for Canada which is unrealistic and hypocritical. The same could be said for the recently announced New Democratic Party's posture on defence.

No NATO members have declared themselves to be nuclear weapon free zones, and there are no NATO countries that prohibit visits by allied ships that may be carrying nuclear weapons.

Mr. Young: What about New Zealand?

Mr. Bradley: Some NATO countries have, either as a matter of government policy or by parliamentary resolution, decided that nuclear weapons should not, for the present, be stationed on their soil. Canada is among these countries which include Denmark, Iceland, Norway and Spain. However, these nations continue to share fully in the risks and responsibilities of Alliance collective security.

Alliance members, Canada included, have acknowledged publicly the critical requirement to maintain the continuance of nuclear and conventional deterrents as a pre-requisite to undiminished security at lower levels of armament.

Declaring Canada a nuclear weapons free zone would, first, be without precedent in NATO, as no other Alliance member has taken this course. Its consequences in terms of Alliance relationships cannot be predicted with certainty. Second, it would be incompatible with Canada's continued membership in NATO and NORAD, and, in particular, with participation in the NATO Nuclear Planning Group, which affords Canada the opportunity to consult on nuclear policy, including arms control affecting nuclear weapons.

This policy reflects the NDP's vision of a little Canada divorced from that larger community of states with which we share our traditions and basic political and social values.

Mr. Young: Deal with the issue!

Mr. Bradley: It suggests a ludicrous course of action which would be not only extremely costly for Canada to implement in terms of providing our own defence, but would result in a loss of credibility in the international community, reducing, not enhancing, Canada's ability on the world stage to encourage peace and stability.

Mr. Young: You should talk to your Prime Minister.

Mr. Bradley: For example, for Canada to take over the responsibility of the air defence alone would cost over $5 billion. I would ask: Where are the savings that the NDP proposes?

As a useful and effective international player Canada would lose the following benefits of membership by withdrawing from NATO: the privilege of discussing with our allies the evolution of East-West relations and making our voice heard—

Mr. Young: Talk about the motion, why don't you?

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I was more than willing to sit very quietly and listen closely to my hon. friend.

Mr. Young: But I spoke to the motion.

Mr. Bradley: I would accept that he could make the same commitment to me and allow me to make my presentation.

Mr. Young: At least I spoke to the motion.

Mr. Bradley: We would lose the advantage of an existing consultative process in times of international crisis. We would lose the benefit of being a member of NATO taking part in arms control negotiations as exemplified by the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe, and the mutual and balanced force reductions. We would lose as a member of the NATO Nuclear Planning Group a voice in the planning process, as well as access to information shared within the Alliance.

In closing, I would argue that there is no way that Canada, deprived of the multilateral means now available through the Alliance structure, could achieve as much on the international stage if we were to follow the lead of the NDP. As our White Paper recently put it so eloquently:

> Canada has never been neutral. We have always sought our security in a larger family of like-minded nations.

In light of our position in the world, the values and traditions which have been defended steadfastly by previous generations of Canadians, and our political and economic interest, neutrality would be hypocrisy.

Our security would continue to depend on the deterrents provided by our former allies, but we would have opted out of any contribution to and, equally significantly, any say in the management of that deterrent. As I mentioned earlier, there is a possibility that acceptance of this motion could lead to the loss of that hope and faith we have in our collective securities.

We could turn our backs on the obligation to work for a stable world order. Technology and geography would not, however, allow us to escape the consequences should that order collapse.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, the motion by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young) before the House today concerns a fundamental issue that is of more than passing interest to all Canadians, and that is the control of nuclear deterrence, Canada's defence and security, and peace. Mr. Speaker, I feel particularly privileged to speak to this motion today because, as you know, the headquarters of Canada's mobile force is located at CFB Saint-Hubert in the riding of Chambly which I have the honour to represent. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to mention the excellent work being done by all members of Canada's mobile force.

Mr. Speaker, Canada has no nuclear arms, and right away, I want to give Canadians the assurance that we do not intend to acquire any. Canada is a signatory to treaties guaranteeing non-proliferation and prohibiting nuclear testing. Furthermore, unlike most of its NATO allies, it neither stores nor deploys nuclear arms on its territory. Technically speaking, in peacetime Canada is, to use the terms of the motion, a nuclear arms free zone.

However, through its geographic location, it must live with the threat of a nuclear holocaust that in a conflict between the superpowers would not recognize neutrality and would spare no one.

There are only two ways to defuse such a threat: by maintaining a credible force to deter any potential aggressor and by negotiation.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians know, and I want to take this opportunity to talk about Canadians, and I mean Canadians in every sense of the word, not the way the New Democrats and the Liberals use the term when they talk about the ordinary Canadian. Mr. Speaker, according to the dictionary, ordinary means: not special; common; everyday; or average. And that is what the Liberals and Socialists call the people of this country. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Party has never called the Canadian people common or everyday. Canadians are a proud people, and the Conservative Government is proud of the Canadian people. We Conservatives would never speak in such negative and insulting terms of the people of this country.

• (1750)

There are no ordinary Canadians in this country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our present system of mutual deterrence is effective and stable. Through the most acute crises, it has given us over forty years of peace, and the Government believes this should continue. In this perspective, the Canadian Government's priority is not to create nuclear arms free zones but to maintain a peace zone. Earlier, I heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) mention a Third World War. Is there anyone in this House or in this Government who wants a Third World War on this planet? The Conservative Government would never dream of bringing a Third World War to this planet, to this country or to this continent.

This being a joint venture—we rely on our allies and they rely on us to deter a potential enemy—we are in favour of developing and maintaining nuclear forces which have every chance of surviving, as required if we are to set up an effective and credible deterrent system.

Mr. Speaker, this is why Canada contributes and must contribute to strategic deterrent forces even though it does not have nor deploy nuclear armaments.

Our role and mission in this connection are clear and securely anchored in our geography and in our history.

We must do our share to defend the North American air space, and this we accomplish through our defence effort and our membership in NORAD.

Mr. Speaker, I sit on the Standing Committee on National Defence and in that capacity I was able to tour NORAD bases and centres, not only in Canada but also at Colorado Springs in the United States, and I can attest to the importance of these military bases in North America and on Canadian soil. American support is essential if we are to continue to defend our large territory. Without the help of our American friends we would hardly be in a position to put up adequate defences. This would cost far more than we as a government and as a nation can afford to spend to guarantee our safety and that of our population.

We must protect NATO strategic forces by denying access to our air space, land and territorial waters to potential attackers. Mr. Speaker, this happens to be the thrust of the Government's defence program.

Finally, should the need ever arise, our allies must have ready access to our territory and our facilities.

We meet these obligations and carry out these collective security duties with due respect for our sovereignty and our integrity. In peacetime we contribute to the training and improvement of deterrent forces; in time of crisis Canada might authorize strategic force vectors to fly over its air space and use its defence facilities.

It is essential and in keeping with our policy and our commitments that our air space and firing ranges continue to be used for training and improving unarmed vectors, that our armed forces train side by side with NATO troops, and that deterrent force ships drop anchor in our ports.

This cannot be viewed as a threat against our country, it is part and parcel of its security and peace commitment.

Mr. Rossi: Who wrote that?

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about a project concerning the security of this country, yet the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) would rather make untimely remarks. He is not even interested in debating the thrust of this motion on the security of the whole Canadian population. And we are always . . . Such are the Quebec Liberal Members. That is what is left of them. We still have a few of the 74 nobodies of the 1980 administration, and they indulge in heckling while we are debating one of the most serious issues, namely the security of all Canadians.

It has a commitment to peace that is reflected in sustained efforts to negotiate arms control and disarmament. This negotiating process is unprecedented, both by its duration and its intensity, and it contributes toward maintaining a dialogue between East and West. Our presence at the negotiating table, the opportunity we are given to influence the proceedings and their outcome are also the result of our membership in NATO. Our defence efforts and the fact that we share in a common defence effort have made Canada a valid and credible partner who can and does take initiatives.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that leaving NATO or weakening its deterrent force would be the best way to contribute to world peace and security.

However odious resorting to nuclear arms to secure our defence may seem, their presence is essential to provide a balance to the Soviet nuclear arsenal. To withdraw would mean breaking our commitments. It would also mean undermining an equilibrium that is essential to maintaining peace.

In concluding, that is why I believe that the concept of having a nuclear arms free zone, though well meant, is a perilous one because it ignores the realities we must face and would reduce our capability to defend ourselves and, especially, to negotiate. That is certainly not our policy and it is not what this Government intends to do.

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am privileged to speak after the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) who spoke to the motion put before the House today by the Hon. Member for Beaches (Mr. Young). We are debating a motion that is not an easy one, because it is very important for the future of this country and the whole world.

First of all, I would like to say that Canada's policy and practice is already in many respects attuned to the particular conditions of this motion, since Canada does not have any nuclear arms.

In normal times, that is, during peacetime, no nuclear arms are deployed or tested or built in Canada, nor are they transported in this country. Similarly, no activities involving nuclear arms take place on Canadian territory or under our country's jurisdiction without the specific consent of the Government of Canada.

I may also remind the House that Canada differs from many of its NATO allies in that it does not have nuclear arms on its territory. As for Canadian exports, our country's policy is firm in this respect. All exports of nuclear materials, equipment or technology must be used for peaceful purposes. They may not be used to trigger an explosion. The strict application of this policy is guaranteed through bilateral agreements with the co-operation of the International Atomic Energy Agency.

[English]

Last Monday at the United Nations, Canada's role was exemplified by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He was asked by the Secretary General of the United Nations to be the first speaker at the historic Conference on Disarmament and Development. That was a recognition of Canada's continued leadership in seeing that the world pursues an intelligent course of nuclear disarmament and channels those moneys into developmental issues, which will solidify the problems and priorities and strengthen the Third World developments.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member will have seven minutes left in his debate next time this motion comes up on Private Members' Business. The hour provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 36(2) the order is dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House resumed from Friday, August 28, consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre:

That a Message be sent to the Senate to acquaint their Honours that this House agrees with amendment 10(a) made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and provide for certain matters in relation thereto, but disagrees with all other amendments except amendments 1(c) and 8, because this House believes that amendments 1(a) and (b), 2(a) and (b), 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), 6, 7(a) and (b), 9 and 10(b) and (c) are in contradiction to the principles of the Bill which will increase intellectual property protection, increase research and development in Canada, create new high-technology jobs, improve the health care of Canadians, and protect consumers from higher drug prices. More specifically:

Amendments 1(a) and (b) delete the definitions of "Board" and "patentee". These definitions are necessary to support the powers of the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers.

Amendments 2(a) and (b) reduce Canada's export potential and fine chemical manufacturing.

Amendments 3, 4(a) and (b), reduce the periods of market exclusivity, thus eliminating the incentive for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendment 5(a) reduces the period of market exclusivity and export potential, thus reducing economic benefits for Canada.

Amendment 5(b) deletes the Patented Medicine Prices Review Board, which is required to protect consumers, and this amendment also removes the protection for Canadian-invented medicines and thus the incentives for increased research and development in Canada.

Amendments 6, 7(a) and (b), 10(b) and (c) arise out of amendments 1(a) and (b), 2, 3, 4(a) and (b), 5(a) and (b), and are therefore inappropriate.

Amendment 9 arises out of Senate amendment 8, but is not consistent with the House amendment to Senate amendment 8, as set out below.

And, that:

Senate amendment 1(c) be amended to read as follows: "(c) Strike out lines 35 to 42 and add the following:

Patent Act

(2) For the purpose of sections 41.11 to 41.16, the notice of compliance that is first issued for either the original and distinct chemical composition of a medicine or the obvious chemical equivalent of the medicine shall be deemed to be the first notice of compliance issued in respect of that medicine."

Senate amendment 8 be amended to read as follows: "insert the heading "Transitional" and the following as clause 31:

31.(1) The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs shall pay to each province for each of the fiscal years commencing in the period April 1, 1987 to March 31, 1991, for the purpose of research and development relating to medicine, an amount equal to the product obtained by multiplying

(a) the quotient obtained by dividing

(i) $25 million by

(ii) the total population of all provinces for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made, by

(b) the population of the province for the fiscal year in respect of which the payment is made.

(2) Payment of any amount under this section shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund at such times and in such manner as the Governor in Council may, by regulation, prescribe.

(3) For the purposes of this section, the population of a province for a fiscal year shall be the population of that province on the first day of June of that year as determined and published by the Chief Statistician of Canada."

and the amendment of Mr. Lewis (p. 8555).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being six o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 13(5) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the motion of Mr. Lewis for the previous question in relation to the motion of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs concerning the amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Mr. Lewis moved:

That the question be now put.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis) which was agreed to on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

The next question is on the main motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find an inclination in the House to apply the vote on the last motion to the present one.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Andre) which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to petitions Nos. 332-2964 and 332-2974.

[English]

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some petitions signed by residents of British Columbia dealing with the refugee situation.

They point out that a standing committee of Parliament proposed a new procedure for refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. Those alternatives have widespread support among all Parties in Parliament as well as the various churches, bar associations, and other groups knowledgeable about refugee issues.

• (1110)

They therefore call upon the House to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation which embodies the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of British Columbians who have indicated an interest in the progress of Bill C-55 and have raised some concern.

They suggest that the House of Commons consider the recommendations of the standing committee of Parliament which has proposed a new procedure for the processing of refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve the problem of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims.

They have indicated that this particular motion has the support, not only of all Parties in Parliament which sat on that committee, but also the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Bar Association, the Canadian Jewish Congress, and other groups that are familiar with the refugee issue.

They call upon the Government of Canada to consider the committee's recommendations.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition which has been approved in form by the Clerk of Petitions.

It is signed by a number of people from Halifax and Windsor who object to Bill C-55 on the grounds that it will result in many, perhaps most, real refugees who reach our borders being turned away without their claims being heard on the merits of their cases partly because there is no proper appeal on point of fact which is the question of credibility for most of these refugees.

Therefore, the petitioners request that the Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact. In duty bound your petitioners ever pray.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, question No. 106 will be answered today.

[Text]

IMPORTS OF PLATINUM, MAGNESIUM AND CHROME FROM SOUTH AFRICA

Question No. 106—Mr. Stewart:

1. At present is (a) platinum (b) magnesium (c) chrome imported into Canada from South Africa and, if so (i) in what quantities (ii) by what companies?

2. Are any sanctions imposed on these minerals at the present time or are they contemplated?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. In 1986, according to Statistics Canada, $5.9 million of chrome (of which $4.7 million was ferrochrome), and $5.4 million worth of platinum was imported into Canada from South Africa. No South African magnesium was imported into Canada. Under the relevant provisions of the Customs Act and because of the proprietary nature of the information involved it is not possible to divulge the names of the companies concerned.

2. At the present time no sanctions exist or are proposed against imports of South African chrome, platinum or magnesium.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 159 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES—GRANTS TO METROPOLITAN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 159—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within Metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Return tabled.

POINT OF ORDER

COMPLIANCE WITH S. O. 13(2)—EXTENSION OF BELLS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a very short point of order on which I would like to seek some guidance from the Chair. It is with regard to the situation which arose late in the day yesterday. Members of the House had been informed earlier in the day that there would be a vote called at six o'clock as per the Standing Orders. The Standing Orders provide for a 15-minute bell in that case.

I would like to make the point that Members of Parliament work not only in the House of Commons giving presentations and voting at the appropriate time, but also carry on their responsibilities and duties in standing, special and joint committees as well as carrying out their regular responsibilities as Members of Parliament. In order to do that effectively it is important that Members have the opportunity to schedule their day's events.

This is not an earth-shattering situation and I do not want to suggest that it is. However, we have Standing Orders so that we can understand what we are doing here. The reform committee which studied this matter for a considerable length of time made its recommendations in order to facilitate the business of the House of Commons so that Members of the House would have a clear understanding of what was transpiring at any time.

I draw this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, because you were conducting business elsewhere at the pertinent time last night. I thought it would be appropriate for you to make a comment at the appropriate time. Members were assembled at the appropriate time for the vote and five minutes passed and then 10 minutes and then 15 minutes. It is understandable that Members of Parliament became concerned. After the vote a number of people asked me, as House Leader of the New Democrats, why we waited for so long.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, this is not the most important event in Canada today, but if we are going to facilitate the business of the House and take it seriously, it is important that rules, regulations, conventions and traditions be followed unless there is good reason to depart from them after discussion and concurrence of the Parties involved. I draw that to your attention, Mr. Speaker, to reflect the view of my Party that there was concern that the business and planning of a number of Members in my caucus, and I suspect in all caucuses, was disrupted yesterday. At the appropriate time I would appreciate a comment from the Chair on this matter.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. There is more than a question of orderly business involved in this matter; it becomes, at a certain point, a matter of discipline. If there is a 15-minute bell it means that Parties should be able to produce their respective votes at the end of the 15 minutes. When a longer period of time is allotted, in this case to the Government because the Government Whip, as I understand it, was not present, it perhaps means that the Government is not ready for the vote at the end of the 15 minutes. As it was a 15-minute bell, the question should have been put without the Government being ready for it. Otherwise, what would be the point of insisting that the bell be limited to 15 minutes and that the vote take place thereafter?

Therefore, it is more than a matter of orderly business. If the Government is to be allowed additional time at the end of 15 minutes through the device of not having the Whip available, then similar consideration might be asked for in the future by the Official Opposition. If that is the way in which the situation devolves, what happens to the rule that calls for the vote to be put after 15 minutes?

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. Actually, I tried to raise this point of order yesterday afternoon, after the bells had rung for more than fifteen minutes. However, I was unable to do so because we were in a vacuum. The bells were ringing and no one could speak in the House.

The point I want to make is that in Standing Order 13(2) which is very clear, we read the following:

> (2) When, under the provisions of any Standing Order or other Order of this House, the Speaker has interrupted any proceeding for the purpose of putting forthwith the question on any business then before the House, the bells to call in the Members shall be sounded for not more than fifteen minutes.

The first question that comes to mind is why the bells had not stopped, since they were supposed to stop. The Standing Orders are clear. I may remind Hon. Members that before the Standing Orders were amended, the bells could go on ringing for an indefinite period. There were times when opposition parties took advantage of this fact and prolonged the ringing of the bells to make a certain point, and this has occasionally created a chaotic political situation in this country.

When our Party negotiated with the Government to amend the Standing Orders of the House, we agreed to a time limit on the ringing of the bells, fully realizing that this would put certain constraints on an opposition party that would no longer have the means of using the bells to get its point across. Since we as the Opposition Party agreed to discipline ourselves and to change the Standing Orders, thus losing a mechanism, in fact a weapon, it could otherwise have used in the House, I think it is only fair that the Government should observe the Standing Orders, since they apply to both the Government and the Opposition.

I realize that according to our parliamentary tradition, the bell stops ringing when the Whips enter side by side and walk onto the floor of the House.

However, the Standing Order I read earlier is quite clear: The bells shall ring for not more than fifteen minutes.

I think that, eventually, the Chair should make a statement in the House—at least that is what I would suggest—to clarify the interpretation of this Standing Order so that all Members know what the situation is. That is what I would urge you to do, Mr. Speaker.

• (1120)

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my colleague raising this point because I think it is fair to say that this is one of the rules of the House which works both ways at various times. I am aware, without being able to state exactly on what dates it happened, that there have been accommodations given by the Government to the opposition Parties with respect to Members who were having difficulty arriving for a vote, when perhaps for the Government's purpose we would have appreciated a 15-minute bell in order to go to caucus. However, we allowed for a half hour bell so that planes could arrive and so on.

I think it is fair to say that this is a rule that has not been abused by either the opposition Parties or the Government in the past. I also submit that it was not abused last evening.

There were many Members who showed up for the vote. It would be partisan of me to comment that there was a noticeable absence of opposition Members from Montreal, so I will not do that.

Mr. Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Order.

Mr. Lewis: Everyone knows the interest that Bill C-22 had in the Montreal area. I compliment my friend—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister, of course, has alluded to what he was not going to do. Having chosen the words he did immediately after having alluded to that, he did not have to allude to what he was not going to do. The Hon. Minister will, of course, keep that in mind.

Mr. Lewis: Thank you for dispelling any illusions that you are not following my allusions.

Having said that, I take the point that the opposition Members have made. However, it is not a rule that has been abused to the best of my knowledge. There will be occasions when this happens in the future and accommodations are asked for by all Parties of the House. That happened yesterday evening. I take the comments of my colleagues to heart and hope that in the future when this happens we can settle it among the Members of the House without lengthy discussions on the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Carlo Rossi (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I agree with what the Minister said about waiting for two or three minutes. However, I totally disagree with his allusions that some Liberal Members from Montreal may have stayed away from the House.

At least I will have the decency to refrain from telling him the real reason—that the minutes—

An Hon. Member: You know the reason?

Mr. Rossi: —yes, I was waiting to walk onto the floor of the House as Whip. I know the real reason, but I shall not blame the Conservatives and I shall not challenge them to tell us how many Conservatives were missing, because percentagewise, there were a lot more missing on your side than on ours.

Mr. Speaker, that is not the point. The point is that the two or three minutes, as the Minister said . . . True, that could happen in all three parties.

I would like to submit something that may simplify the procedure and prevent the recurrence of last night's incident. It is true that, according to our procedure, the bells do not stop ringing until the Whips walk onto the floor of the House. In an emergency, it is of course possible . . . However, I think that if at a given time, the Speaker of the House says—and it is his responsibility . . . : It is now 6.18 p.m., and we were supposed to vote at 6.15 p.m.. The bells stop ringing at the Speaker's request, and Members may rise and be recognized by the Speaker, after the bells have stopped ringing. But as long as the bells keep ringing, everything is at a standstill, and no one can speak. So it might be better to say: The bells will ring for fifteen minutes, thirty minutes or thirty-two or thirty-three minutes, and then the Speaker can order the bells to stop ringing, the Whips can walk onto the floor of the House and everybody, I would imagine, would be happy. All we need is probably just a slight change in procedure.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add a short comment in response to the Hon. Minister's intervention. It concerns the fact that this is one of the Standing Orders that has not been abused, as he has indicated. From time to time there is accommodation made. I think it is important that we recognize that for this particular vote to which we are referring in the deliberations this morning, Members and Party Whips had three days notice. It was not as though the motion and the vote came as a surprise. When that does happen, often we end up voting very quickly and accommodations are made back and forth, as I hope they will be from now on.

Considering the advance notice that all Parties had, and the advance recognition that there would be a vote at six o'clock and the bells would ring until 6.15, I simply thought it was appropriate that we follow the rules of the House of Commons under those conditions.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Member for Kamloops-Shuswap (Mr. Riis) has mentioned, there was three days notice given for this vote. The Opposition has been fighting this legislation for months now, yet, there were only 33 out to vote. I hope it may occur to him that perhaps we were trying to accommodate the Opposition to help them vote on a Bill to which they were opposed so much.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary—

Mr. Fulton: One hundred of your guys were missing.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary has been in the House a long time and, as all Hon. Members know, has made a very significant contribution to the matters that come before this House. However, while I very much regret that this happened last night, what is before me is a case where the bells went on for a considerable length of time. I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to address himself to that particular issue and I know all Hon. Members would want to refrain from breaching the rule, which we have for a good reason, that we do not comment on the absence or otherwise of colleagues in the House. The Hon Parliamentary Secretary.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not want to violate the rules of the House. It was my understanding that it was improper to refer to the absence of any particular Member, about which I have been very careful. I was simply making a comment in general about the general absence of opposition Members when they had a chance to vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order. I cannot stand the allusions being made by the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister. If they want to know the truth, let them ask the Government Whip why he was not in the House. He knows why, and I know why, and I will say so. I know the reason.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I fully understand what the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) is saying. I also know why he is saying it. But I think that we probably do not need a lot of comments about the absence of Members, whether they belong to the Government or the Official Opposition or to the New Democratic Party.

[English]

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment which has nothing to do with the presence or absence of particular Members, Members in general, or anything else of that nature.

• (1130)

With respect to the issue of a designated 15 minute or 30 minute bell, what happened last night was very dangerous, even given the fact that in the past there has been accommodation in the order of minutes between Parties, which is a kind of mutual courtesy. I hope that will continue. However, what happened last night went beyond that. I was glad that it came to an end and we finally had the vote before the person, whoever it was we were waiting for, arrived.

The fact is that if that were to happen more than once; if the House was to be put in a position where we could not have the vote until the Whips came in and the Whips were not coming in until a particular person were to arrive, we would be very soon back in the position we were when the bells rang for 16 days, or at least the possibility would be created.

The Special Committee on Reform of the House of Commons of the House went to a great deal of trouble to eliminate that possibility. One of the ways in which we were to eliminate that possibility was by having a 15 minute bell when the bell would ring for 15 minutes and then there would be a vote, and if there was a 30 minute bell, the bells would ring for 30 minutes and then there would be a vote.

This point of order is not over nothing; it is about something which could be very dangerous. I say that to Members because they know it. I could see it on their faces last night. They knew what was happening. This should not happen again. It is as simple as that.

Mr. Speaker: The matter that has been raised this morning was brought to my attention earlier today and I very deeply regret that it happened. I will consider carefully what Hon. Members from all three Parties have said. I do want to reiterate that there is a tradition in this place that sometimes the Chair is guided by the disposition of the Whips. That is a tradition which we may well not want to abolish completely.

However, the extension of the bells last night was lengthy. I think the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mr. Rossi) probably, if he had been less inclined to be the gentleman he is, might have indicated at least part of the reason for that extension. I think Hon. Members perhaps know that part of the reason for that extension was a courtesy extended in the best traditions of this place to those from one Party to another.

The point that has been raised I take seriously and I will come back with some comments which I hope will be of some guidance to the House, without at the same time being so severe that Whips among themselves will be constrained from exercising upon occasion some appropriate common sense.

What happened last night was regrettable, and I am very sorry it happened. I will do everything I can to ensure that it does not happen again. I will come back with some measured comments which I hope will be accepted by all Members of the House. I thank all Members for intervening this morning. Their comments were helpful to the Chair.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

On the Order: Private Members' Business:

Second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-258, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (War crimes and crimes against Humanity)—Mr. Kaplan.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have before the House an amendment to the Criminal Code, Bill C-258, dealing with war crimes. I moved the Bill in the hope that whether or not it was passed, it would encourage the Government to bring in its own Bill. The Government has done so. The Bill has received three readings and has been sent to the Senate.

In light of that, I would like to seek the unanimous consent of the House to withdraw my Bill.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the Government took independent action as a result of the Deschênes Commission and brought forward the report. The legislation which was brought forward by the Government flowed directly from the Deschênes Commission report. We passed it last weekend. We are satisfied that we have taken action finally, after a long, long time, and, therefore, we are prepared to give our consent that the Bill be withdrawn.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, we are certainly prepared to concur with the request.

I would also like to use the occasion to recognize the contribution made by the Hon. Member, in co-operation with other Members of the House, namely, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson), for many, many years, in terms of focusing attention on this issue, and the Government, as the Minister has indicated, has acted.

I think that shows that when Members of the House of Commons are persistent and steadfast in their commitment to seeing certain legislation introduced, in the end it works well. Again, Mr. Speaker, we certainly lend our consent to the request.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) for his comments and I must say I agree with them.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, August 31, consideration of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, as reported (with amendments) from a legislative committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 16

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 9 by striking out lines 25 to 40 at page 8 and lines 1 to 14 at page 9.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this clause of Bill C-84 has aroused more comment than perhaps all the other clauses of the Bill put together, among many people, not just those directly engaged in refugee work but editorialists and others.

What this clause does in the present law is make criminals out of thousands of people if they continue to do what they have been doing for years with no suggestion from anyone that they were doing wrong.

Clause 9, Section 95.1 states:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence—

It goes on to indicate the punishment upon conviction of up to $10,000 fine, or on summary conviction a fine of up to $2,000, or imprisonment for as much as five years on indictment or six months, or both.

Section 95.2 describes the offence in the case of a person who brings in more than 10 people in the way they are described and the punishment in the form of fines and imprisonment are appropriately much larger. That is to say they are appropriately larger if they are appropriate at all.

What we have here is the creation of a new offence, the offence of bringing a person to a Canadian border point and saying that the person, in many cases, does not have a visa or travel document of any sort but is claiming to be a refugee, that he was brought there in order to tell the immigration authorities, as the Minister has told us should be done, and have them decide whether in fact he or she should receive any protection from Canada as a refugee. That does not mean that he will be admitted as an immigrant, only that he will receive protection as a refugee.

• (1140)

This has been done in the past. The law has been quite clear to Ministers, officials and thousands and thousands of Canadians. What is an offence is an attempt to evade immigration authorities. The existing law states in Section 95(a):

> 95. Every person who
> (a) comes into Canada at any place other than a port of entry and fails to report to an immigration officer for examination as required by subsection 12(1)—
> is guilty of an offence and is liable—

In other words, if he evades the point of entry, if he evades the examining officer, then he is guilty of an offence. This was clearly done in certain recent cases that were much publicized, cases of people landing by ship and not coming to a regular port where they might have met an immigration officer.

The Bill also states that anyone who knowingly induces, aids or abets or attempts to induce, aid or abet any person to contravene any provision of this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence. That is clear. If a person enters in an evasive way, and if someone else helps that person to do so then that second person who gave the help is guilty of an offence. That is found in Section 95 of the Act, subsections (a) and (m). Section 95.1 states that any person who:

> knowingly contravenes any existing term or condition subject to which he was granted admission or contravenes any term or condition added—

In other words, a person who knowingly feigns refugee status when he knows that to be not the case would be in contravention of the Act and any person who counselled him to do that would also be in contravention of the Act. It may be that some people are now about to be tried in court this month in Toronto for charges of that sort. But the existing offences under the present Act all depend upon whether there is an attempt to evade the regulations, to evade examination, to get in without being examined by an immigration officer who would have the responsibility of saying, "come in" or "stay out".

The new offence that is described here would be an offence without any attempt to evade, without any attempt to deceive, without any attempt to put forward a false refugee claim. Very simply, if a person brings an undocumented non-Canadian to a Canadian port of entry and to the immigration office there then that will now be a serious offence punishable by a fine of several thousands of dollars or several years in prison.

Many members of the public and many Members of Parliament at first thought that there was an error in the drafting of this Bill. When my Leader first spoke to the Bill he suggested there was an error in its drafting. There were attempts made by members of the public and by members of the Opposition in committee, with the assistance of many delegations which appeared before the committee, to correct such an error if in fact it was an error. The motion I moved in an attempt to provide for the creation of an offence that would not attack people who are innocent of any attempt to evade was as follows:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet a group of ten or more persons to make a manifestly unfounded or fraudulent claim—

Likewise:

> —to enter in a manner that avoids normal entry procedures is guilty of an offence and is liable.

That amendment and all proposed amendments were turned down by the government members of the committee. In fact, at the end of the debate, or toward the end of the debate on that clause, the Parliamentary Secretary said that he believed it would be impossible to find any words better than the words that were there. In other words, we were mistaken in assuming that the Government had made an error in drafting. In fact, the Government intends to make criminals out of thousands of Canadians if they continue doing what they have been doing in good faith.

The people at Fort Erie who have welcomed refugees are aiding refugees. People who give refugees true information about the Canadian law are aiding refugees. They are aiding people to come into Canada. Many of them will come in without proper documents. That is to say, not sneaking in but coming to an immigration office. Therefore it is clear that the Government wishes to intimidate Canadians in order to persuade them to stop helping refugees to come to Canada, unless those refugees have a passport.

Last night the Parliamentary Secretary stated that it is not necessary to help them in that way because they can get a visa at the consulates in the United States. That is false for a great many of the people who are in genuine need as refugees because we have a quota. There are only so many hundreds of visas to be issued to such people in a year in the consulates in the United States, and also because they examine them not primarily as refugees but as immigrants. If they do not match up to our economic requirements for immigrants, then they are turned down for a visa, notwithstanding that they may be in great need as refugees.

I am forced to the conclusion that the Government has decided firmly and clearly to make a major change in Canada's refugee policy, but not to announce it as such. It had made a major change in which it will say, "No more inland claims will be accepted unless those people have come on a visitor's visa", which very few will be able to get. Usually only well-to-do people, diplomats or celebrities are able to get them, unless they happen to be transiting through Gander from some country in Eastern Europe, in which case of course their case will be handled quietly, not through any refugee determination procedure but simply on a so-called humanitarian basis at the time of arrival, meaning it will be completely closed to the public, totally subject to political pressure of the current government, whichever government might be in power.

I think it is unfortunate that the Government has chosen to make such a basic change in our refugee policy, a basic denial of our obligations to the United Nations, without any announcement. That is the only conclusion I can come to from the Government's considered refusal to accept any kind of clarification or amendment to Clause 9 of the Bill.

Therefore my motion is that we delete Clause 9 as being quite offensive, both to thousands of Canadians and to our international obligations.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to support Motion No. 16 put forward by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). Yesterday I moved an amendment to change the wording of the proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 of the Bill. I did so because I think everyone recognizes that proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 could have and should have been amended. I do not believe there is a Member of Parliament or a Canadian who would concur with the powers granted to the Government under those sections.

The Hon. Member who spoke before me was correct when he said that despite the objections of the Ministers and the Parliamentary Secretary this clearly creates a new offence. The offence would be operative around the word "documentation" and the word "visa" and somehow any Canadian, any priest, any individual assisting, aiding or abetting an individual refugee claimant who does not have a proper visa in his or her back pocket is liable to a fine and to imprisonment. If it is a group over 10, that fine can be up to $500,000, and up to 10 years in prison.

• (1150)

It is 1987 and we live in what we would like to believe is a progressive country, which it is, because its progressive element is rooted in the people, and perhaps not in the Government. But imagine enacting a piece of legislation that would in law, place an individual who acts out of humanitarianism for fellow human beings in attempting to assist the refugee claimant in the same category as the sleazy smugglers and consultants whom everyone wants to put out of business.

Before the committee studying Bill C-84 prior to report stage, the churches and other organizations clearly stated that they have never counselled fraudulent applications, that they have never counselled evading the law of Canada, and they have never suggested that any claimant rip up his or her documentation before arriving in Canada.

Those organizations went on the record in support of amending proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2. I tried to do this and was unsuccessful in committee, and in the House yesterday. Those organizations would be in favour of making it an offence to evade the law, and counsel fraudulent claimants, whether or not they have documents.

During the Portuguese scam people came in with their documents, and their claims were largely unfounded. Making those actions liable to a fine or to imprisonment would receive the approval and the blessing of the church organizations and the non-church organizations. There is no disagreement with the witnesses who came before the committee and suggested that action. Obviously, those organizations would object strenuously and passionately if those proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 were allowed to stand.

We have had a song and dance from the two Ministers of immigration—the Cheech and Chong show—when they suggested that the churches do not worry. They also suggested to individual Canadians that they should not worry; we will not put you in prison, or fine someone who assists refugees. Canadians are asking, if that is the intention, why at the same time is legislation being enacted that would allow the Government to do the very things that it is suggesting it will never do? Why create a law that will imprison or fine people that it does not want fined or imprisoned? It is hypocritical. It is attempting to straddle two sides, and that simply cannot be done. If the Government is serious in its intentions, it should be reflected in the legislation.

It is the ultimate responsibility of Members of Parliament to create laws, and ensure that the taxpayers' dollars are wisely spent. Those two elements are fundamental. We have to draft laws that protect Canadians, our country, and our civil liberties. Those laws must ensure that regardless of who is the Minister tomorrow or next week, or who is the Government tomorrow or next week, there is a law that cannot be undermined, abused, or misused.

This is a clear and flagrant abuse in drafting legislation. It is irresponsible for a legislative assembly, particularly the national institution of Parliament, in 1987 to draft legislation that would allow and permit a fine against an individual, a priest, a nun, who is assisting a refugee claimant who has no documentation. It is not a signal or legislation that we should be proud of. I do not know of any progressive country in the western world that has in its legislation such a repugnant and regressive element. Surely, if we are to draft legislation to target those who are the culprits, those who circumvent our laws, let us not have legislation that is so wide and encompassing that it throws a blanket around everyone and treats them as potential criminals. That is not the manner in which legislation is drafted. It has an objective, a target, and we must provide the legal tools and wording to enable us to zero in on the real abusers and not make criminals out of those who wish to help their fellow man.

This is not only the position of the Opposition. George Cram, of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees stated:

> I do not want to be guilty of committing an offence for doing humanitarian work. I do not want to feel inside myself that what I am doing is illegal, and I do not want to be liable for prosecution. The offence is what you are creating, not the prosecution.

Another member of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, Nancy Pocock, a woman who has dedicated most of her life to assisting refugees, and not assisting refugees to circumvent the law, stated:

> If my government tells me it is a crime to help these people, I will have to say I am obeying a higher law and I am going to continue to help them when they need me.

In what was very moving testimony, at committee, Rabbi Gunther Plaut stated, referring to the committee and Parliament:

> You can render the Canadian people and the refugee community of the world and causes of humanity in general a true service if you manage to eliminate from this Bill clauses that treat such people worse than the worst of criminals.

There was a second reading of this Bill during which these concerns were outlined. There was a legislative committee that heard from Canadians, and the Government had a chance to listen. Thus far in report stage the Government has declined to accept any amendments, wording changes, or inclusions of the words humanitarian, church, non-profit, charity, volunteer, which would state clearly that beyond intentions, which are not worth the paper on which they are written if we have this legislation, we are not after individual Canadians who complement the work of the Government's elected officials by doing a job that would ultimately cost the Canadian Government and taxpayers millions of dollars. This is volunteer work, work that is done by people who are moved from the gut and the heart. The Government is moved by neither its gut or heart to make those actions liable under the law to a fine or imprisonment.

I again call upon the Government, at report stage, now at the eleventh hour, to heed these concerns, listen to the concerns of Canadians who are saying to the Government to go after the culprits, the smugglers, and the consultants who are charging $15,000 a head, but do not place them in the same sleazy category that is occupied by those smugglers.

That is the challenge and the purpose of this amendment. I look forward to having a more progressive and enlightened response from the Government, rather than pretending to ignore legitimate, substantial, and real pleas.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): The motion of the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) deserves the full support of every Member in the House, as explained by those who preceded me in this debate.

Yesterday during a similar debate in the House on a motion by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Friesen) said something that was revealing and important. As reported at page 8626 of Hansard, he said:

> I have never once felt threatened by the law because of my interest in refugees.

That is because under the present legislation, no one is threatened by the law for his or her interest in refugees.

• (1200)

Under the auspices of the Government and steered by the Parliamentary Secretary for the second day, because both Ministers of Immigration are absent, the Bill before us includes a clause which the Hon. Member for Spadina wants to delete, and quite rightly so, as it is a clause that will threaten anyone who gets involved in refugee work. That is why we are very upset about this matter and have raised it at second reading stage, in committee and here today at report stage.

Yesterday in Ottawa there was a group of Canadians including the Committee of Canadians Representing Human Rights Activists, the Anglican Bishop Edward Scott, the President of the Canadian Council of Churches and representatives from the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Canadian Ethno-Cultural Council, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and a number of lawyers described as experts in immigration, refugee law or the Charter of Rights. They actually went much further than we are going in this debate today in that they urged the Government to scrap its callous new refugee legislation. One of the reasons they proposed this yesterday is this particular clause, the clause the Hon. Member for Spadina wants to have removed for the reasons just given by the Hon. Member for York West.

A number of Canadians have commented on this legislation, particularly on this clause. I would like to draw to the attention of the House the words of George Cram of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees. He said that he does not want to be guilty of committing an offence for doing humanitarian work. Clause 9 of the Bill amends Sections 95.1 and 95.2 to make individuals or members of organizations, volunteer organizations or church organizations that help refugees, guilty of an offence for becoming involved in legitimate work with refugees. That is the clause to which we object.

Once this legislation is passed, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Immigration will not be able to claim that he can feel safe and secure under the new Canadian law when he becomes involved with refugee work. He cannot claim that, no matter how much he rejects that notion, because if he does he is not reading what is printed in the Bill we are passing today.

Clause 9 of the Bill reads:

> 95.2 Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a group of 10 or more persons . . . is guilty of an offence—

Even if only one person is involved, such a person becomes guilty of a criminal offence. Is that what the Government wants to do? If the answer is no, then this clause must go, as we urged on second reading and as the Hon. Member for York West and the Hon. Member for Spadina urged in committee.

There is no place for this kind of clause in sound legislation that would take into account the legitimate work of Canadians who are involved in human rights and legitimate refugee work. There is no way that this ought to be allowed.

As others have already said, this clause will become the object of contestation in the courts and of constitutional action. Before we know it this legislation, which was intended by the Government to be the solution to an urgent problem, will become entangled in the higher courts. What an incompetent way of dealing with the problem facing us.

What is so astonishing is that having been warned, the Government is not taking into account all the submissions which have come not just from the Opposition but from groups that are legitimately active in the field of helping refugees.

The motion of the Hon. Member for Spadina is one that commands attention—not only attention but support. We hope that when it comes to a recorded vote government Members will support the motion. I hope they will not be silent and allow to pass into law Clause 9, a clause which runs counter to all our traditions and commitments and the recognition of decent work done by Canadians in the field of refugees. There is no place under the sun for this clause in good Canadian statutes.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have to say at the outset that of all the motions before us, this is probably the most astounding one. All during the debate we heard opposition Members say that everyone is subject to the law. I should say all opposition Members with the exception of the Leader of the New Democratic Party who said in his speech that according to his reading of this provision, the church people are subject to the penalties under the law and that is totally unacceptable to the members of his Party. He said that as though church leaders do not have to obey the law. I find that unacceptable. The members of his Party later modified their Leader's position.

Opposition Members have said that we must stop the abusers and shysters, but at the same time have introduced a motion which withdraws from the Bill all of the provisions that are designed to stop the abusers and shysters. Frankly, I fail to see the logic of that kind of a mind-set.

On the one hand, we have heard a chorus of opposition Members and witnesses saying we must stop the abusers, and we provided a provision in the Bill that would stop the abusers. Then, on the other hand, the Hon. Member for Spadina has said that he thinks we should withdraw that clause. I do not know how we could carry on a refugee determination system with no provisions to protect genuine refugees.

All of us here are over 21 and we are all entitled to different points of view. However, we do have a responsibility to be accurate and to base our views on accurate information. I mentioned last night that church workers working on behalf of refugees have no reason to fear this legislation. They are not the target group.

I will repeat what I said last night in order to give myself the opportunity of correcting what the Hon. Member for Spadina said this morning. Church leaders who want to work with refugees have no reason to fear this legislation because their major concerns are with the flow of refugees from Central America. That flow comes principally through the United States of America. Last night I asked why any of them could not go to a Canadian consulate anywhere in the United States, whether New York, Detroit, or Seattle and apply for refugee status? There is no reason that they cannot do that. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) says they cannot do that because there is a quota system. That is absolutely false.

• (1210)

Mr. Heap: True, there is. I have been told by the officers.

Mr. Friesen: It is false. There is no quota on sponsoring refugees. The Member cannot hide behind that. It is unlimited. I cannot understand why the churches would not simply advise claimants to go to a consulate in the United States and say, "We want to sponsor this person to come to Canada." That would be better for the claimant. He can do all of his paper processing there. He can come directly to Canada and qualify for a work permit as soon as he arrives and begin the process of integrating, if that is what he intends to do, into Canadian society. The churches are not using the sponsorship program very well.

I will repeat the numbers that I read yesterday. Of Central American landings in 1986 from the United States, the Government sponsored 1,018 refugees from refugee camps in the U.S. The churches, the humanitarian groups, individuals in total sponsored only 76.

Mr. Caccia: So what? What is the point?

Mr. Friesen: If they were really interested in sponsoring refugees, that is the way to do it.

Mr. Caccia: Judge the quality not the numbers.

Mr. Friesen: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) says, "judge the quality".

Mr. Caccia: Yes, of course.

Mr. Friesen: First, I am mystified as to what he means by that. Second, the quality is in the integration in Canadian society. If they would get their work done in the United States in a Canadian consulate or a detention centre refugee camp—

Mr. Caccia: If they are in Nicaragua, what would you do?

Mr. Friesen: —on the U.S.-Mexican border, they would come already providing themselves with a fuller way of life in Canada.

Up to June, 1987, the church groups together with private individuals and other humanitarian organizations from the United States sponsored 19. Where is their great concern?

Mr. Marchi: What about the boat people?

Mr. Friesen: Is there is something romantic about ferrying people to a border point in Canada? Does it add something to the glow of humanitarianism to see if this can be done clandestinely? Is it the air of excitement? If they are thinking of refugees, they would sponsor them the same way the Government sponsors them.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am certain that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary would not wish deliberately to misrepresent the church leaders he is talking about. Rhetorically he asked, is it because they wished to ferry people to border points clandestinely. I am sure that the Parliamentary Secretary does not seriously wish to charge them either with doing that clandestinely or with having supported the idea of doing it clandestinely in their representations to our committee. I hope the Parliamentary Secretary would clarify the point and indicate that he is not suggesting that church leaders or humanitarian groups have either ferried people clandestinely or have advocated doing it clandestinely.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair takes that more as a matter of a question to the Parliamentary Secretary. It is a matter of debate and not a point of order.

Mr. Friesen: Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Spadina I would want to make it clear that I am not charging the church leaders. I am simply asking them, is there an air of excitement about ferrying people to border points other than through the process of sponsorship? If the humanitarian groups really are looking for the best possible way of helping refugees, it seems to me they would want to do the work outside the country as much as they can and bring them into Canada already fully prepared to take part in the Canadian way of life and be able to work.

As I said, I find it shocking that the Member who has constantly said that we need to get rid of the profiteers now would introduce a motion that would take away the provisions in the Bill that would help us to get rid of the profiteers.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I would like to spend a moment covering some of the ground somewhat hastily dirtied by the Parliamentary Secretary a few moments ago. A little bit of history is in order here, particularly in relation to Clause 95.4, at which all Members of this House should take a close look.

This clause was originally suggested by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap), which was then moved by the Government and placed into the Bill. He is suggesting as Members on this side of the House are suggesting, that proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 be removed, for good reason. Those two sections go after church groups and others.

We hear the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and some Members on that side saying, "Well, those church groups don't need to worry because we will not prosecute them", but Government Members, and the Minister in particular, are saying there will be selective prosecution. As someone who used to work in the courts on probation and parole, I know about selective prosecution. I know that Members like the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) would like selective prosecution whereby if you do not like a particular church group or a particular group of refugees then you go after that group and by using the full force of proposed Section 95.1 and 95.2 you go after them. But if it happens to be a group you might like in your constituency or that might be politically appealing to you, then it is the wink-wink, nudge-nudge—you know what I mean, Mr. Speaker. It is not the way Canadians like laws to be written, or the way we like to see them used within the courts.

The Parliamentary Secretary and others on that side of the House often ask whether we really want these refugees who come without papers anyway. It displays the kind of ignorance that is symptomatic of that Member in particular and other Members on that side. Some of the bona fide refugees that come from Central and South America, sister countries, are in fact closer to my constituency in my province of British Columbia—if you think particularly of Central America—than is Nova Scotia or other parts of our own country. There are growing relationships between many families, certainly many western provinces, in agriculture, fisheries and the many things in which we have expertise with those countries.

Many people understand why refugees who are persecuted, politically in their own land, do not just sort of drop by the local police station and ask for their papers before heading up to Canada or the United States. They do not just sort of drop by to pick up a driver's licence, a visa or a passport or anything else because the death squads and others terrorizing civilian populations in much of Central and South America do not view very kindly those who are active politically and are attempting to get papers to get out of the country.

Let us take a look at what is being proposed. Let us look at proposed Section 95.4 and see what it says. I quote from the Bill:

• (1220)

> Every person who knowingly counsels, induces, aids or abets, or who knowingly attempts to counsel, induce, aid or abet, any other person to make any false or misleading statement in connection with a claim by that other person to be a Convention refugee is guilty of an offence and is liable
> (a) on conviction on indictment, to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or to both; or
> (b) on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding two thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or to both.

That is the standard wording you find with respect to indictable or summary convictions in most of the Criminal Code of Canada.

I think most Members would note that The Ottawa Citizen today ran an article by Iain Hunter pointing out what Anglican Archbishop Edward Scott, President of the Canadian Council of Churches, has to say about the orchestration of the emergency involving the 174 people who landed in Nova Scotia. There was the orchestration of another boat supposedly coming along. The Government knew all along that the first boat was coming but orchestrated it to get emergency recall of Parliament, not just to deal with Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, but to deal with Bill C-22, the drug Bill, and the rail back-to-work legislation. Now we find today all kinds of other legislation.

The Parliamentary Secretary this morning, quite contrary to the rules of the House, as is often his way, commented on the presence or absence of Members of the House. That is the kind of scurrilous activity we see the Hon. Member involved in all the time. He says, "How was I to know about the rules?"

We are talking about a law which potentially affects refugees whose lives are in danger. It is one thing for the Hon. Member to say they can just drop in on an embassy in Detroit or somewhere else in the U.S., and that there are no quotas. My colleague from Spadina has spoken to officers who work in various consulates in the U.S. and has confirmed that there are quotas in operation. We know what is happening in the U.S. where sections similar to 95.1 and 95.2 have been introduced. We know what has gone on. There have been direct belligerent prosecutions of church groups who have been attempting to assist those whose lives are very much in danger as they try to escape from the terrorist activities of certain groups in Central and South America in particular, but in other areas of the world as well.

Let us look at what proposed Section 95.1 states, keeping in mind what I put on the record with respect to proposed Section 95.4. It states:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence and is liable—

Such a person is liable in the same way as proposed Section 95.4(a) and (b). Who is this directed at? Let us think about the evidence given by the Government concerning the number of refugees who came to Canada last year without proper documents, some 6,000. None were found to have any serious criminal record or to have difficulties in Canada. None were found to be terrorists or potential terrorists. This clause is directed specifically at those groups who have been assisting refugees from Central and South America.

The Parliamentary Secretary and others over there laugh and say the church groups do not need to worry. They do need to worry; but it is the law. Government Members say they will only selectively prosecute. We will only prosecute if they decide they do not like you or they get a call from the CIA or the FBI, or for some other reason. It is illogical and bad law. The intellectually dishonest presentation involved has also become the trademark of Members like the Parliamentary Secretary. That is why British Columbians do not like Members like that who involve themselves in this kind of scurrilous intellectual dishonesty day after day in this House, painting false pictures. The Hon. Member knows they are false.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member not to get personal, please. Debate.

Mr. Friesen: That is hard to do.

Mr. Fulton: It is hard when one has to deal with the kind of absolutely false information put on the record day after day by that particular Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for the Hon. Member's speech has terminated.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is on Motion No. 16. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 114(11), a recorded division on the proposed motion stands deferred.

The next motion is No. 19.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina) moved:

Motion No. 19

That Bill C-84 be amended in Clause 12 by striking out line 26 at page 20 and substituting the following therefor:

"specified in the certificate, or release the person. Such addition—".

He said: Mr. Speaker, this motion provides for detention of people who arrive without clear identification or who are suspected by the Minister of being inadmissible for other reasons. The opening part of this new clause reads as follows:

Where, with respect to a person seeking to come into Canada,

(a) the person is unable to satisfy an immigration officer with respect to that person's identity, or

(b) in the opinion of the Deputy Minister or a person designated by the Deputy Minister, there is reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), an immigration officer shall detain the person—

Then it goes on in 104.1(2):

Where, with respect to a person detained under subsection (1), the Minister certifies in writing

(a) that

(i) the person's identity has not been established, or

(ii) the Minister has reason to suspect that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class described in paragraph 19(1)(e), (f) or (g), and

(b) that an additional period of detention is required to investigate the matter referred to in subparagraph (a)(i) or (ii), the person shall be brought before an adjudicator who shall continue the person's detention for the additional period specified in the certificate, which additional period may not exceed twenty-one days from the day on which the person was brought before the adjudicator.

In my motion I am asking that we remove line 26 and substitute the words "or release the person". In other words, it would read:

the person shall be brought before an adjudicator who shall continue the person's detention for the additional period specified in the certificate, or release the person.

My point is that an adjudicator is appointed by the Government to be a judge with respect to immigration admissibility. The person is also to be a judge of the necessity of detention after any two-day period which can first be ordered by a senior immigration officer. The adjudicator is selected and trained to exercise his judgment as to whether it is necessary to detain a person for a further period. This clause removes that ability and makes him a rubber stamp. He becomes a clerk who simply says you have to stay here for another 21 days. It means there is no possibility of finding out why the person is being detained except that the Minister says that he suspects that the person may be a member of an inadmissible class as described in Clause 19(1)(e), (f) or (g). He suspects that he may be.

• (1230)

It is a principle in our country that a person should not be detained without due process. The principle is that if he is to be detained he is to be told the reason and is to have the right of counsel to defend him. Partly on the basis of that principle the law in our country is that if the Minister thinks he should be detained longer, the person being detained should have the right to have that detention reviewed by an adjudicator. Taking away the adjudicator's responsibility to say "keep him in longer" or "turn him loose" on the word of the Minister or someone designated by the Minister takes away that person's right to due process.

The Parliamentary Secretary will get up and read a list of possible criminals, terrorists or others like that in order to suggest that because these people are criminals, terrorists and what not, it is obvious that they should not be turned loose. He talks with mock horror of having them walking our streets. It is a typical Conservative trick to assume that a person is guilty unless he gets a chance to prove himself innocent. Because the Minister has said that he suspects he may be a member of one of those groups, he becomes a member of one of those groups and is guilty of either doing something dreadful or planning to do something dreadful and, therefore, we must lock him up.

That is convenient from an administrative point of view. It means that governments do not have to answer for what they do in cases like that. It is, however, contrary to the intent of our laws and the intent of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Even though this person is not a Canadian our Charter, according to the Supreme Court, applies to everyone who is within Canada. It does not extend all rights to everyone who is in Canada. It does not give them the right to vote or to work, but it does give them the right to due process according to the Supreme Court.

I believe that the amendment which I have moved would save the time and cost of a series of Charter challenges on the basis of this line in this clause. It would perhaps save having the whole proposed Section found invalid by the Supreme Court and the necessity of then having to go back to the drawing table and introduce new legislation.

It is not a question of whether the Government should have the power to detain a person to learn his or her identity. It is simply a question of whether the Government should be able to do that for an unusually and extraordinarily long time without making known any of the reasoning for it. If the Government does not trust the adjudicators it should hire better adjudicators or train them better. The Parliamentary Secretary has not given us examples of adjudicators wrongly releasing persons as he has suggested they have done.

The RCMP representatives who appeared before the committee last week told us that of the 6,000 undocumented people who came in last year none of them, to their knowledge, was engaged in any of these activities. Of course, the Parliamentary Secretary will probably get up and say that if we had been able to keep them in jail for a month or a year we could have found something against them. That is the kind of argument that is used to deny due process and to deny the principle of innocence until proven guilty.

It has about as much logic as the man in Etobicoke who set a strange circle of white stones around his house. When people asked what the stones were for he said they were to keep elephants away. When they said that there were no elephants in Etobicoke he said that that was because of his stones. The Minister's representative is going to prove that because the person is suspected it is, therefore, necessary to lock him up. This is contrary to the kind of law which Canadians want in this country.

Therefore, I am asking Members of the House to support my motion to change one line of this clause in order to allow the adjudicator to keep the responsibility given to him under our present legislation, namely, to decide, after listening to what the Government tells him and to anyone else who has the right to speak on that point, whether to continue detention or to release the person.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support Motion No. 19 moved by the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap). It will be very interesting to see the reaction of the Government because Motion No. 20, moved by myself, which will be debated next, proposes deletion of the entire clause if the Government does not wish to amend it.

The law as presently written is sensible. It has been supported by previous Parliamentarians. The Members of Parliament in Government, when in Opposition, supported it. The Government now has the power to detain and deport people. The Government has the power to do that which this legislation allows it to do.

It is false to suggest that the Government needs new, greater and unchecked powers to deal with what it considers to be an emergency. To borrow a phrase from a Member of Parliament who spoke earlier, that borders on intellectual dishonesty because it implies that there are currently no statutes or powers to defend our country against those who wish to abuse it.

How naive and misleading can the Government be? That is to suggest that everyone else is either naive or ignorant. It suggests that Canada has not had the mechanisms and powers to protect its shores from those who are undesirable, unwanted, unwelcomed and wish to pose a threat to the nation. There is not one Canadian, not one Member of Parliament, not one priest, nun or layman helping refugees who wants us to accept individuals who will pose a threat to this country.

I think the Government should stop its marketing scheme of implying that it is only the Government that is trying to protect our country from so-called undesirables. That is a false message based on a false premise.

The current legislation allows for automatic detainment for 48 hours. Any individual who comes to our shores without documents and who the Government believes may be a problem can automatically be detained for up to 48 hours with no questions asked. That is acceptable to my Party. I assume it is acceptable to many Members of this House. If the Government cannot substantiate the identity of such person, why he or she is here, then with any evidence it may have received from any authority within 48 hours, it has the opportunity to go before an adjudicator and request a further seven-day detainment period. The adjudicator will then decide, on the evidence from the Government, whether the request for further detainment is legitimate or groundless. I believe that is very reasonable.

If the Government still wants to detain a person after the seven-day period, it goes back to the adjudicator; the same thing happens in additional seven-day periods. Those are existing powers that would allow the Government, without great difficulty, to detain people who it believes beyond suspicion, and with actual documentation, should be kept in detention.

While I do not purport to be an expert or claim to have a monopoly on what Canadians believe, my reading of Canadians would suggest that they believe we have reasonable powers now to detain people if necessary and that an adjudicator is the key element in this process, because the adjudicator will decide on the merits of a further detainment based on the information presented by the Government.

The adjudicator can question government officials whether they believe the information is flimsy or whether they should offer more proof. The Government has the opportunity to do so and even has the opportunity to suggest that the information might be so secret that the adjudicator might not be able to be informed in the presence of the claimant or the claimant's counsel. The adjudicator can obviously decide in favour of the Government in the interest of the defence of our sovereignty and well-being. I suggest that this is a reasonable process that is in keeping with our sense of justice.

The Government wants to abolish the 48 hours and be able to automatically detain people for seven days. It may be argued that more time is required in getting the identification of an individual who comes from a country thousands of miles away, but the Government also proposes that after the seven-day period in which it does not have to secure permission it may also detain a person for an additional 21 days.

The key element in this proposal is that the adjudicator would simply rubber-stamp the request because the law says he shall permit the detainment for a further 21 days. The Bill does not state that he may permit a further 21 days in detention, which would offer the adjudicator the flexibility and discretion to weigh the evidence and protect the rights of the individual in our country. The use of the word "shall" means that there is no discretion or flexibility left to the adjudicator. The adjudicator must simply rubber-stamp a government request to detain a person for another 21-day period. That is Draconian and excessive. I think it is essentially not Canadian when one considers that the Charter of Rights protects the rights of individuals not to be detained on unreasonable grounds or for suspicion.

It goes beyond that. We are not merely talking about refugees who deserve rights. After all, they are human beings as well and merit some human rights standards that are applicable to a person arriving on our shores. What would be the ramifications to our society when one Minister is granted the full discretion and flexibility to detain people for periods of up to 28 days without any questions asked? Of course, Canadians believe we need to protect ourselves as a sovereign state from undesirables. No adjudicator would ever lend himself or herself to allowing people who would do a disservice to our country or commit a crime in Canada. They will always protect our flag and protect Canada. We trust the adjudicator. What kind of society are we trying to create by vesting Draconian and excessive powers to a government that one day may abuse those rights? I suggest that if the rights of one individual are abused, the collective rights of our nation are abused and undermined.

These types of powers are not needed. Since the time of Diefenbaker, the Government has had the authority to protect our shores, protect our sovereignty and stand up for our flag, while at the same time offering civil liberties as expounded in the Charter of Rights which states that all men and women, whether rich or poor, black or white, catholic or atheist, enjoy human rights as all Canadians should. That is what is being undermined today if the clause is not changed.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I will not deprive the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary of his ten minutes, so I will limit my remarks and simply say that the motion presented by the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) is very sensible. The reasons have been eloquently explained by the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

It is an amendment that would at least introduce an element of balance in what otherwise would be a Draconian clause. This amendment, if accepted by the Government, would turn this clause into one that contains some checks and balances whereby the adjudicator would have the option to make a decision on his or her own, motivated of course by the basic principles and guidelines that the Member for York West has outlined.

Again, we find ourselves advancing an eminently sensible amendment which permits a certain latitude to the adjudicator. It is a good amendment.

Of course, the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us whether he will accept it in good grace, in keeping with the ideology of civil liberties that he expounds at home and abroad, particularly at the Interparliamentary Union. He has an opportunity to apply what he preaches, and we call upon him to demonstrate the mettle he is made of when it comes to the facts and the reality of legislative measures.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) for the confidence he has expressed in my view of civil liberties. I certainly hold to those.

Since we have heard from the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) I think we should move back to the Bill and see what it really says, instead of what we have heard.

As the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) rightly points out, the Bill deals with the inadmissible classes, including what we agreed to yesterday; that is, those who have been guilty of war crimes or crimes against humanity.

Picture the scene, Mr. Speaker. We have someone arriving on our shores, at our airports, or other port of entry, with no documentation—absolutely none. He has either destroyed it or has given it back to the person who trades in passports and visas so it can be recirculated.

Mr. Caccia: Some refugees legitimately have no documents.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, and some legitimately have no documents. But those persons come to the port of entry and the immigration officer meets them and is supposed to identify them. How does he go about it, especially if there are 30 or 40 coming in at the same time without documentation? The Bill requires that there be a seven-day detention period in order to establish identity. If a person is from Uganda, for instance, where there is a constant state of turmoil at the present time, how does any officer go about establishing identity in seven days? It is not necessarily possible.

The next subparagraph says that the Minister may apply for an extension of another 21 days. Here is where due process, about which the Hon. Member for Spadina was concerned, enters the picture. He cannot just willy-nilly say, "We are going to hold you another 21 days". What he does under Clause 12, proposed Section 104.1(2), is continue the person's detention for the additional period specified in the certificate, which additional period may not exceed 21 days from the day on which the person was brought before the adjudicator.

How does the Minister go about getting a certificate? He goes about it by dealing with the securities forces of Canada to get as much information as he can. If there is reason to believe that this person may be a threat to either Canadian security or to other people in Canada, he has to file evidence which would substantiate the need for a certificate.

The Hon. Member for Spadina knows that that is not the kind of information he can give to the adjudicator. He can give the certificate to the adjudicator but he cannot give the evidence. In the interests of privacy for the individual, to protect his privacy, he cannot give that evidence and allow it to become public. That is why I am saying that this is the due process asked for by the Hon. Member for Spadina.

The Minister cannot just on a whim say, "I want to detain this person another 21 days". There has to be just cause, established to the satisfaction of the officers, that a certificate is warranted. If the certificate is granted, it can be extended for 21 days, for a total of 28 days.

I would suggest to Members that that is not an unreasonable requirement when we realize that the person coming to our port of entry is undocumented, is thought to be a security risk and there needs to be documentation presented. Twenty-eight days, considering communications with some of these countries in the world that are trouble spots and are in conditions of upheaval, where the normal systems of communication are not functioning properly, is not an unreasonable requirement.

What the Hon. Member for Spadina is asking for is that at the end of seven days, if the identity has not been established, we release the individual. I do not think Canadians would like that one bit. We have every reason to provide protection for people who need protection, but as responsible parliamentarians, and as a Government of Canada, we have every responsibility to protect Canada and to protect Canadians. That is what this clause is all about.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.
