HOUSE OF COMMONS

RECALL OF HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 5, being satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest required that the House should meet at an earlier time—

[English]

—I caused to be published in an extra edition of the Canada Gazette dated August 9, 1987, a notice calling the House to meet this day. In addition, on the same date I sent telegrams and electronic mail to each Member of the House containing the substance of that notice.

[Translation]

I now table a letter from the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council (Mr. Mazankowski) dated August 7, 1987, concerning that notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, as you have indicated, the House has been recalled to deal with legislation containing the widespread abuses in the refugee system, the issue of smuggling, the needed response to our security system, and the whole question of the refugee process.

I would like to indicate to you that there have been discussions with the opposition Parties. A Bill will be introduced later in the proceedings in the name of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) which would amend the Immigration Act and the Criminal Code to deal with the issue of deterrence and detention. I submit to the House that this is a matter of grave urgency, and they are strong measures to respond to the developments of the past two weeks.

It was our intention to deal with this issue today. My understanding is that the opposition Parties wish more time to consider this measure, so it will have to be dealt with later in the week. Perhaps they may wish to consider the efficacy of dealing with this measure in Committee of the Whole. We had some discussions yesterday, but perhaps it could be dealt with in Committee of the Whole, providing there could be some clear understanding with regard to the time frame.

I also wish to indicate that Bill C-55 will be the order of business called for today. It dovetails in an integral way with the new Bill that will be introduced. It is broader in scope, and it deals with the whole refugee determination process as well as other things related to it. It provides for a durable, longer term solution to the question of the refugee issue as it affects Canada.

I wish to indicate to the House the urgency of dealing with this matter as well. It is needed soon. Presently we are dealing with a six-month hoist sponsored by the Liberal Party. I would hope that they may reconsider that and attempt to get rid of it.

Mr. Gauthier: Is this a statement on a motion?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, it is rather amazing in this opening deliberation of an emergency session that the Opposition is so sensitive. I find that rather strange.

Mr. Gauthier: You are making a speech.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am merely trying to outline the order of business. If there are any difficulties with that, perhaps—

Mr. Gauthier: We can read just as well as you can.

Mr. Mazankowski: —perhaps the Member may wish to talk to his House Leader.

Given the urgency of this matter, we may wish to consider extending the hours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I offer that suggestion in the interest of ensuring an adequate debate on this issue, the new Bill, and Bill C-55.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I rise to indicate—and I wish to do this to some extent in the form of an apology—that we did not hear from the opposition Parties in sufficient time to clearly designate the order of business. The Minister of Employment and Immigration will be making a statement when you call Statements by Ministers. I know that perhaps there has been a shorter than usual notice given to the opposition Parties, but that is clearly because we did not receive a response from them as to whether they would be prepared to move with the new Bill or Bill C-55.

Mr. Gauthier: That's nonsense.

Mr. Mazankowski: With those few explanatory remarks, I hope that in the interests of goodwill, commitment and dedication to the welfare and the interests of the country, we can proceed in an orderly and effective manner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Government House Leader (Mr. Mazankowski) was serious about approaching the recall of the House in the spirit of goodwill aimed at obtaining the co-operation of the Official Opposition, and the opposition Parties generally, he has shown a very strange and non-constructive way to go about it.

This morning at 7.30 the Deputy House Leader for the Government, the House Leader for the NDP, and myself were together waiting to do an interview on the program called Canada AM. At that time I told the Deputy House Leader for the Government that our caucus had decided that, in view of what they understood to be the length, the complexity, and the detail of the Bill the Government intended to introduce today, the ordinary and normal rules of Parliament providing for 24 hours between first reading and second reading should apply. Therefore, I told him that we were not willing to suspend the normal rules of Parliament and move directly today to second reading debate on the Bill the Government wishes to introduce today on refugee abuse. I asked the Deputy House Leader for the Government whether he—

Mr. Speaker: I remind Hon. Members that the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) has made a lengthy opening statement, and quite properly so. Hon. Members gave the Deputy Prime Minister a good hearing. I know that all Hon. Members would want to extend that courtesy to the representatives of both the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the waiting room at the Canada AM CTV studio I said to the Deputy House Leader for the Government that the Government House Leader had asked me to provide an answer to his request with respect to beginning second reading debate immediately, contrary to the normal rules, before 9 a.m. this morning. I said to the Deputy House Leader for the Government: "I am conveying to you as Deputy House Leader the answer of the Official Opposition. We want the normal rules of Parliament to apply". I asked him if he would convey that information to his Leader or whether I would have to call the Government House Leader directly. The Deputy Leader for the Government said: "No: I am the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader. I am the Deputy Leader—"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): He said: "I will be happy to convey that information to the Government House Leader. You don't have to do it". It is totally unjustified for the Government House Leader, who does not have the guts to stay and listen—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): He does not have the guts to stay here and take it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: Absolutely impolite!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Members realize that there is a great deal of business to which we must attend, something which will be more easily attended to if Hon. Members respect the fact that when a Member has the floor the appropriate courtesies should be extended to that Hon. Member.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader is not justified in saying that he did not give the usual notice to the spokesmen for the opposition Parties concerning the intention of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) to give a statement because we had not told him before 9 a.m., as undertaken and promised, whether we would be willing to agree to suspend the normal rules and begin second reading debate immediately. Very clearly, I carried out that undertaking by conveying that information to the Deputy House Leader for the Government. If the Government House Leader and the Deputy House Leader are not talking to one another, then that is just another sign of the disorganization and incompetence of the Government. It is not justification for not extending to the opposition critics the normal courtesy of providing at least an hour or more notice of the intention of the Minister to give a statement and to provide an advance copy of that statement.

I now wish to make two other points. First, I think that it would be normal, even when the Government claims that a measure is urgent, a measure that will be seen to be complex, detailed and lengthy when it is presented in the form of a Bill, that we would want to have the usual period of 24 hours between first reading of the Bill, its printing in official form, and the beginning of debate on second reading. This is not only so each and every Member of the House, including government members if they are really interested, can individually and personally study the Bill before they have to take part in a debate on second reading, but so that members of the public can see the exact text of the Bill and be available to give their views and their reactions to all sides of the House.

It is for this reason we are saying that we want the usual rules of Parliament, which have worked to protect our democratic institutions for hundreds of years, to apply in this case. We are not approaching this issue on the basis of obstruction or filibuster. However, we think that the matter is serious enough that at least 24 hours, as provided by the rules of the House, should lapse before second reading debate begins. It is the Government which controls the agenda of the House. If the Government wants to call this Bill for second reading at the first opportunity presented under the rules, which I think will be tomorrow afternoon, then we will be ready to debate it.

With respect to the suggestion that the Bill might be considered in Committee of the Whole, I certainly want to consult my caucus on that. I would like to know why the Government is afraid to allow Members of the House to question witnesses directly on this measure. It has not given any explanation for proposing the departure from the normal rules of the House that Bills are studied in legislative and sometimes standing committees.

Finally, with respect to Bill C-55, which we are ready to debate today, the Government is shedding crocodile tears about the procedural amendment we made in order to show that we had serious doubts and questions about Bill C-55—

Mr. Mazankowski: You want to kill the Bill!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —along with dozens of other groups from across the country. If the Government had been serious about wanting to make progress on the Bill, then it would have presented it to the House on more than one occasion limited to three hours.

That Bill was introduced on May 5 and the Government did not have enough commitment, enough conviction, or enough belief in it to call it for debate until a month later. And then it called it for only one day. I say to the Government that if it was serious about its commitment to the Bill then it would have presented it to the House day after day between May 5 and June 29 until it it came to a vote. The Government was in a position to do this.

We are here to do the business of the country because of your decision, Mr. Speaker. However, I do not think that we have to start off on the basis of discourtesy and inaccurate information about my carrying out an undertaking given to the Government House Leader as to when I would tell him if we would agree to suspend the ordinary rules with respect to beginning second reading. I gave that information to his Deputy at 7:30 a.m. this morning. If the two of them are not talking then that is their fault. They should not take it out on this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, just a very short point of clarification.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member has given us a very weak but spirited defence.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Mazankowski: My office was officially informed at 10 a.m. this morning; that is the fact.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will understand, of course, that the exchange that is taking place on the floor of the House at the moment is a normal and appropriate kind of exchange since it gives the Government a chance to indicate to the House what its order of business will be. Of course, there are the usual comments from the appropriate representatives of the Opposition.

I would ask of all those engaged in this informative exchange to consider that the exchange should be informative. We might come to a satisfactory conclusion of it more rapidly if all of those engaged in it would use the natural self-restraint which I know they all have to avoid getting into an extended debate on extraneous matters.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis).

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is very disappointing that we have had to begin this sitting in the mood that has already developed in the House this morning. I do not think anything demonstrates more clearly the incompetence and the shambles of the Government than the way that this very important piece of legislation has been handled by it.

I remember distinctly that two weeks ago the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicated there was an emergency, a crisis in the country, and then, as he went off to attend various picnics and so on, a week went past, then another week, until finally you, Mr. Speaker, were asked to call a special sitting of the House, which you did and to which we responded.

The Government House Leader has now asked that we set aside the rules, traditions and regulations of Parliament so we could begin this discussion a little sooner than we would do so normally. We were given an unofficial draft copy of the proposed new legislation. After a cursory glance, it became clear it was a very important piece of legislation. The Government was intending to take a whole variety of new initiatives. It was felt it would serve the House, the various parties and the country as a whole to give this legislation the usual thoughtful perusal and study before the debate began.

Mrs. Mailly: To take forever.

Mr. Riis: The Hon. Member screams across the floor "To take forever". We are simply asking that we follow the traditions and rules of the House of Commons as we do with all serious legislation. We are asking for no more. I think the Government has accepted that we will begin the debate on this new legislation likely tomorrow which will give Members of the House of Commons a full day to study the legislation, to read, digest and examine the various implications of the clauses so that the debate which will take place will be a thoughtful and informed debate.

I simply want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we, as well, informed the office of the Government House Leader this morning that we would like to take a day to study the Bill. I do not think that should be considered to be holding up the legislation. In fact, it might even facilitate it in terms of thoughtful and productive discussions as opposed to debating a Bill which most of us would not have had a chance to discuss thoroughly.

I also want to say that I am somewhat offended in that we had a meeting of House Leaders yesterday to discuss the business of today and subsequent days and I am asked today to presumably respond as to whether or not we would be prepared to extend hours of debate or to entertain the request for a committee of the Whole to examine this legislation. I think the place to discuss the work of the House of Commons is between the House Leaders at the appropriate times and not on the floor of the House of Commons. I ask the Hon. House Leader for the Government, therefore, that he take advantage of the good nature of the opposition Parties in co-operating to see that the Bill before us receives thorough and complete study and examination, and carry out our meetings as we have done traditionally between each other and not on the floor of the House of Commons.

If the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) would allow me to make a comment, I do want to register the fact that in respect of the address we will hear later by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), while presumably the intention was to get it into the hands of the opposition critics so they could respond again in a thoughtful and complete way, we really did not have sufficient time. I appreciate at least the thought of getting it to the critics ahead of time, but 15 or 20 minutes does not allow a very thoughtful response on the floor of the House of Commons.

Therefore, once again I would urge the Minister and the Government House Leader that whenever possible, in order to have the debate on the floor of the House of Commons as meaningful and thoughtful as possible, that we are informed as early as possible.

Mr. Mazankowski: I thought I tried to explain that fully.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate that this is the beginning of this particular sitting and perhaps this morning there were difficulties because there was a lot of business which had to be transacted. However, for the future, I make that request.

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Parliament has been recalled to deal with an issue of grave national importance. A serious problem—the growing number of migrants who are entering Canada by posing as refugees—has reached critical proportions.

The arrival of 174 migrants on the shores of Nova Scotia last month has created unprecedented public concern. And rightly so, Mr. Speaker, since organized attempts to evade the immigration laws of this country are absolutely unacceptable. They endanger the physical safety of the migrants, imperil the security of Canada, and—worst of all—jeopardize public support for our immigration and refugee programs.

But there is a much graver problem which has been highlighted by this latest incident. It concerns the growing influxes of undocumented persons who claim refugee status at ports of entry from one end of this country to the other.

These are persons who have not applied through normal channels. These are persons who in most cases have bought their way into Canada with forged documents, or who have destroyed their documents en route.

[English]

The number of persons making refugee claims in Canada has grown enormously in the past seven years, from 1,600 in 1980 to a projected total of 30,000 in 1987. The vast majority of these claims are ultimately found to be bogus. Most of these persons are not in need of Canada's protection.

Before I continue, I would like to remind Hon. Members, and this is important, that the United Nations defines refugees as people who flee their homeland because of a very well-founded fear of persecution. To put it another way, the difference between refugees and immigrants is that refugees leave their homeland because they must and immigrants freely choose to seek a new home.

We all have a stake in these issues. Immigrants and refugees built, and every day renew this country. This is an integral part of our national identity. When the integrity of our immigration and refugee programs is cast in doubt, our sense of identity is weakened. When our willingness to help others is abused, our commitment to providing assistance is placed in jeopardy.

In the past 40 years some half a million refugees and displaced persons have found new homes in this country. Over and over again Canadians have responded generously to the plight of refugees. In recent years, however, this generosity has been brazenly abused by individuals posing as refugees.

In February of this year, we sent a strong signal of our intentions to curb abuse of our refugee program. This message was clearly understood by some, and the flows were reduced substantially.

In May, we announced legislative proposals for a new improved system. These proposals were widely welcomed. Our blueprint for a fair and effective system was seen as a reasonable balance. But in some quarters, our commitment to fairness was interpreted as weakness. And as the date of implementation draws closer, those who wish to profit from the misery of others have adopted increasingly dangerous methods of flouting our existing laws. And that is why we have recalled Parliament. Our first priority today is to send the clearest possible signal immediately to the unscrupulous smugglers who callously exploit the hopes of migrants around the world. We have before us two important pieces of legislation. The first proposes tough measures to deal in no uncertain terms with the most flagrant and dangerous forms of abuse. The second piece of legislation—Bill C-55—provides a blueprint for a completely new and streamlined refugee determination system which operates within the constraints of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are proud of the system of justice in this country. The Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms guarantees those values which we most cherish as a free and democratic society. Unlike most other countries, our Charter of Rights is not confined in its application to those who are citizens or permanent residents.

The Charter of Rights as interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada in the SINGH decision of 1985, extends to every person within Canada's jurisdiction the same rights to life, liberty, and the security of the person.

• (1130)

[English]

Thus it is that every person who arrives in Canada and claims to be a refugee must be treated in accordance with the rights established under the Charter.

When this situation is combined with the inadequacies of a system designed in another era to deal with different needs, it creates an environment where the unscrupulous can flourish.

This combination created gaps through which people steal their way into Canada, confident that although they have broken our laws, we, the people of Canada, will not break our own laws.

Not only has the basic generosity of Canadians been abused, but the generosity of our entire system of justice has been abused. In these circumstances I urge all Members of the House to give rapid passage to the Bill tabled today.

It is a tough Bill containing responsible measures. It will deter those seeking to enter Canada illegally. It will protect the integrity of our immigration and refugee programs, and it will safeguard the security of the country.

Under this deterrent and detention legislation—

. Penalties against smugglers and their accomplices will be increased substantially: maximum sentences of 10 years in prison, and fines of a half a million dollars.

. The Minister's power to turn back vessels which disembark migrants in Canadian territorial waters will be reinforced;

. Authority to seize vessels and vehicles engaged in such activities will be confirmed in legislation

. People who arrive with no documents can be detained until their identities are established.

. Fines and penalties will be increased on transportation companies bringing undocumented people to Canada. Transportation companies will pay $5,000 fines for each undocumented passenger.

. And finally, Mr. Speaker, this Bill will empower the Government to refuse access to the refugee determination system to those people who are known criminals, or who pose a security threat. Not only will they be detained, but they will also be expeditiously removed from Canada.

[English]

We must act swiftly now to guard against the possibility that we might at some later date be forced to take even tougher measures. This Bill is tough on those who would break the law. It has been designed to dovetail with Bill C-55 to provide immediate and continuous protection from abuse. It is in Bill C-55 that we have the tools to deal with the circumstances which face Canada now and will continue to do so in the foreseeable future.

Since 1945, Canada has welcomed over 500,000 refugees to our land. In 1986, the people of Canada were awarded the Nansen Medal by the United Nations High Commissioner for refugees—the first time a country has ever been so honoured.

[English]

While the debate over refugee determination has concentrated on refugee claims made within Canada, we must not forget that our first priority as a country is to help genuine refugees who are confined to camps overseas. These people are desperate. They have nowhere to go and no future ahead of them. They deserve our concern and compassion.

The federal Government's sponsorship of these refugees has increased substantially since we took office. This year we will bring 12,000 refugees directly out of refugee camps and settle them here in Canada.

In addition, Canadian citizens have responded generously. Private groups, families, and individuals are expected to sponsor over 5,000 refugees this year. The Government encourages and supports these resettlement efforts.

We shall continue to use our resources to increase the number of refugees brought directly from camps overseas under government and private citizen sponsorship.

Our immigration programs are second to none. Under this Government immigration levels have been rising steadily—84,000 in 1985, 89,000 in 1986, and we will easily surpass our target of 125,000 in 1987. We intend to continue promoting this steady growth. I am announcing today that next year Canada will accept an even higher number of immigrants from around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: In addition to increasing the levels of immigration, we have implemented almost all of the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration aimed at processing immigration applications more quickly. We also intend to respond to the recommendations made by the standing committee concerning family reunification criteria.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: I am announcing today that regulations to include unmarried children of any age will be introduced. This news, I am sure, will be welcome to many Canadians who wish to bring their relatives to this country through the proper channels—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard: I repeat, through the proper channels. They will now be able to do so.

[Translation]

Ultimately, the solution lies in the implementation of a refugee determination system that achieves the best possible balance of speed and due process. Such a system is embodied in bill C-55.

Bill C-55 will not be in place tomorrow. It requires, and it deserves, consideration not only by Members of this House, and members in the other place, but it deserves the attention of all Canadians.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that all Canadians want a system that assures fair play. All Canadians want an end to the abuse and we will put an end to it because we all want to preserve Canada's reputation as a fair, open and generous nation.

• (1140)

[English]

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am dismayed at the way the national Government has proceeded on an emergency basis. This Party was prepared to come back if the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government deemed the situation to be of an emergency nature. However, what troubles us is that it took nearly 10 days from the time the Prime Minister announced that there was an emergency to the time we learned of the date of our return. Second, it was only late last night that we were able to look at the very legislation we as parliamentarians have been called back to debate. Third, we only received the news at 10 minutes to eleven o'clock this day that there would be a ministerial statement this morning.

I am not trying to cry sour grapes and suggest that somehow the Government should not control the legislative agenda. However, if we are to take a look at the very urgent nature of the immigration and refugee policies, then Canadians would expect their representatives and parliamentarians to engage in a mature and enlightened debate, a debate into which we are prepared to enter with the Government and the NDP. However, it does not add to a mature debate when other Parties are kept in political darkness, because this only solicits reactionary comments that we wish to avoid. That is the first premise I wanted to raise for your benefit, Mr. Speaker, so that we may avoid this kind of process in the future.

The second matter that must be placed squarely on the floor of the House of Commons is the fact that this situation could have been avoided. This situation did not have to propel itself into a recall of Parliament for the second consecutive summer. We have urged for nearly three years, together with members of the NDP, together with NGO groups, together with the Plaut report and together with Canadians across the country, that we should begin to reform and overhaul the system. Why? Because there has been a transition in the situation facing refugees, not only those who come to Canada but as well those who are fleeing and are searching for a home throughout the world.

What was that transition to which I have referred? We are no longer experiencing the luxury we experienced in the 1960s and the 1970s of going abroad to select quotas of refugees in a very orderly and sensible way. In the early 1980s, the situation shifted so that people came to our shores to make application from here without waiting for visa officers to visit them in their camps. That is why the previous administration commissioned Rabbi Gunther Plaut to recommend a system that would evolve with the times and adapt to the new phenomenon. We did not want to have a system that continuously operated in the past but one that was updated, one that works.

We would not have allowed the Plaut report and its recommendations, the report of the Standing Committee on Employment, Labour and Immigration and the reports made by countless NGOs and church bodies throughout the country, to have sat for three years without taking any action on them. The Government preferred to engage in public relations exercises in order to try to address public opinion rather than to deal in a substantive way with the matter of policy and the way the process would work. That is the aspect of this situation that is so troublesome. It is not the case that the Government discovered only this past summer that there was a problem with the refugee processing system. Those problems have multiplied since 1984 because our system has not been able to react fairly enough on the one hand and quickly enough on the other.

Therefore, we as a Party advocated separating the current system into four basic steps. There would be an inquiry at the border, an oral hearing, the possibility for a review, and, if that review was refused, then there would be the possibility of an appeal to the Federal Court. We were trying to suggest a system that would be able to deal with the numbers that were coming to our shores rather than to get Canadians hysterical and to undermine our traditions and international obligations.

The Government cannot say two opposite things. It cannot be more restrictive and regressive on one hand while on the other hand expect to live up to its international obligations under the Geneva Convention. The Government is trying to suggest that some opposition Parties or other Members of Parliament are in favour of abuse. For nearly two years we have been suggesting that the abuse must be cut out. Why is this? If we value the legitimacy of bona fide refugees, if we value the integrity of our system and the respect for it, then we need to curb abuse. We need to stamp out the practice of putting forward fraudulent claims.

More important, we advocated for two years that the Government clamp down on the growing networks of illegal and phoney immigration consultants and smugglers who traffic and trade in human lives and make huge and immoral profits. Communities provided names of such consultants operating in Toronto, but what happened? As we speak today those individuals are on the streets of this nation conducting business as usual. The RCMP did make raids on a number of consultants and their operations but without the full force of the law. There was no cease and desist order from the courts and therefore those individuals will not have to appear in court for perhaps another couple of years. In the meantime, they are conducting business with immigrants around the world. At that time, in the House of Commons, in committee and during Question Period, we were very much on the side of cutting out abuse.

We have looked at the new piece of legislation that was introduced by the Minister and we are prepared to consider the options the Government has tabled through Bill C-84. For instance, higher penalties for so-called consultants or smugglers is not something with which my Party has a problem. If it can be proven that con artists continue to carry out their schemes and their scams, then those individuals deserve to feel the full brunt of our law, and that will send out the right message.

Clamping down on the various transportation companies and having them begin to scrutinize the documentation of passengers much more severely is a provision that could be amendable through debate in Parliament. However, we cannot be so rigid as to suggest that anyone without documentation is suddenly and automatically a cheater. All parliamentarians have experienced in their own constituencies the cases of individuals who have fled certain regimes but who were not able to have the luxury of presenting themselves to consulates and embassies for fear of persecution, for fear that the secret police would monitor things, and Chile is a perfect example of this.

While we do not condone fraudulent or misleading documentation, we are not prepared to say holus-bolus that anyone who does not arrive with documentation is automatically perceived to be a cheater. That would be counter to the reality of legitimate refugees who run for their lives because of political, religious or other pressures. That is the reality of the world of disorder that the refugee lives in. Any legislation we propose has to deal with that reality and not the public opinion polls or the Government's 23 per cent popularity.

Canadians very desperately want the Government to get the message this time. The system needs to be reformed and improved so it will have the confidence of Canadians. That is why I suggested to the Government House Leader that we need parliamentary scrutiny of the legislation so that six months hence we will not have glaring loopholes staring us in the face. We want to avoid court challenges under the Charter based on some parts of the proposed legislation. That would lead to a system even more chaotic than the one we find ourselves with now. In those circumstances the confidence of Canadians is undermined.

Canadians have not been demonstrating bigoted or racist attitudes in the last several weeks. They are becoming impatient with a Government which has failed to come to grips with the problem of developing a system to help the bona fide refugee. After all, it was only with the support and confidence of Canadians that in the 15 to 20 years previous to the present Government this country brought in special groups of refugees and immigrants. In the late 1970s and early 1980s we settled approximately 106,000 Vietnamese boat people. They were welcomed by and integrated into our communities and today they are proud and loyal Canadian citizens.

Mr. McDermid: Under a Conservative Government.

Mr. Marchi: The reality is that when 174 immigrants landed off the East Coast the first reaction by Canadians was to make them tea and offer them cookies. That was the reaction. Then the media came in and the Government undertook a number of very questionable procedures. Yet the first Canadian reaction was that if they are legitimate refugees there is a responsibility on Canada to honour its obligations and traditions.

What is the real solution? Bill C-55 cannot be viewed in isolation. It must be looked at in the larger context, and the real solution is to put in place a system that works, not an ad hoc system sufficient for the next week or two or the next month. We need a system in place that will work for years to come. That is why we, along with countless others, have advocated reform of the system. We have been prepared to lend ourselves to that end. It is simply intellectual dishonesty to suggest that the Opposition did not allow the Government to act.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about your amendment. Tell us about your six-month hoist.

Mr. Marchi: The Government has controlled the parliamentary agenda for three years. Yet no priority was given to this legislation by the Prime Minister or the four different Ministers responsible for immigration, and the situation has been allowed to reach the boiling point.

Mr. McDermid: Be honest, tell us about your six-month hoist. That was your response.

Mr. Marchi: We have to allow Parliament to come to grips with the refugee determination problem. It is important not only for this month or next but for years to come.

The Government also has the responsibility to define much more clearly the differences between an immigrant and a refugee. That is why this morning I was pleasantly surprised to hear one of the reforms suggested by the Minister concerning family class immigration. I welcomed that because the standing committee made that recommendation. Yet it is simply unfair to try and manipulate public opinion—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: —so that someone cannot sponsor a member of his or her family because there are too many refugees already. That is not true. The fact is that in the last three years the immigration of people with family members already in Canada has declined and that feeds the frustrations of many Canadians.

To summarize I would like to suggest the following. Canada is not the sucker a lot of people claim it to be. The world is rife with turmoil. This weekend Hong Kong received three boatloads of refugees from Vietnam. West Germany has received more Tamil refugees. Other countries are also receiving refugees. Yes, we must make sure that we allow legitimate refugees into Canada but we also should be playing a leading role in the international community. We have lost our leadership role and the respect of other nations because we have not come to grips with the problem. It is a world-wide problem and unless we have a world-wide solution we will continue to be afflicted by back door immigration consultants who seek to make profits on the trade in human lives. It is time we used immigration as a positive tool for greater economic prosperity.

Consider as well that we suffer a dwindling birth rate and aging population. Our economy needs certain trades that our education system does not produce. You know and I know that immigration has a big role to play in this country, as it did after World War II. Therefore, let us enter into the debate. Let us allow Canadians to participate in a mature, enlightened and unemotional debate so that we may utilize immigration as a nation-building tool rather than having to just accept immigrants or refugees, allowing the international and national situation to deteriorate to what are simply public relations exercises which do not attack the substance of the problem.

I appreciate your patience in allowing me to make these preliminary remarks and I look forward to that enlightened debate. We as a Party are prepared to simply say no to the illegitimate refugees but you cannot do that and at the same time say no to the legitimate refugees. We need to be strong on legitimacy and send out a strong signal that we are not prepared to allow the back door to become the entrance into Canada.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said the Government recalled Parliament to deal with an issue of grave national importance. I agree, it is and has been for several years an issue of grave national importance. I am glad the Government now recognizes it. What it does not acknowledge, of course, is how we got into this mess.

For years Canada has had a policy of welcoming immigrants and refugees. We have welcomed them according to procedures established by law. Those procedures were also intended to limit abuse since the abusers do interfere with the proper acceptance of those we consider to be justified immigrants or refugees.

It is true that our system broke down because conditions in the world changed. Instead of a flow of refugees from certain parts of Europe, we began to get large and increasing flows of refugees from other continents. The increase of air travel in particular caused a need to re-examine our system.

As far as I know, it has never been true that anyone, in or outside of this Parliament, has advocated an absolute open door for immigration or refugees, although the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) has alleged that. It is simply not true to say that anybody in this House is advocating that we have to accept anyone who sets foot on Canadian soil.

Some of us have said, in accordance with the Supreme Court, that anyone who sets foot on Canadian soil and claims refugee status has a right to be heard. I was glad to hear the Minister acknowledge that at last in his remarks about the Canadian Charter. I hope that when he goes to lunch he will reread both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 and cut from them the parts which deny the decision of the Supreme Court and deny the Charter of Rights.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, this problem has been addressed by Parliament and by the all-Party committee of Parliament which was asked by the Government to respond to the Plaut report and make recommendations on it. The committee did make recommendations which were reviewed a year later. The original recommendations made almost two years ago were reviewed, improved and considered in consultation with many of the public groups and legal experts which had advised the committee during its deliberations.

During the nearly two years since November, 1985, when the committee's report was first presented, the Government never made the comprehensive reply to the committee's report which the rules of this House ordered it to make. It simply refused to do so. To this date it has not responded to the recommendations made in the 1985 fifth report of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Instead, we had Bill C-55 which does not, contrary to what the Minister tried to tell us, agree with the principal recommendations of the committee. It does not send the refugee claimant directly to the refugee board. Instead, it would stop the great majority of refugee claimants from ever coming near the refugee board. It would stop them by examining them, rather than on the individual's claim that he is in danger of persecution, on what country he came from or passed through and, in most cases, it would send him back to one of those.

In other words, contrary to Rabbi Plaut's excellent report and contrary to the drier legal recommendations of the committee, Bill C-55 denied the fundamental principle of the United Nations Declaration on Human Rights of 1948 which says that every person who is being persecuted has a right to seek and enjoy asylum under another government. It denied the basic principles of the United Nations Convention for the Protection of Refugees of 1951 which Canada signed about 20 years ago.

Instead, it introduced a screening system which not only did not send people to the refugee board, and not only created a refugee board which is in fact largely adversarial, contrary to the recommendations of the committee, but also denied an appeal which the Plaut report advocated and which, although not at first advocated by the committee, has since been supported by members of the committee. That is a very well known fact.

Instead, this summer there has been a sudden outburst of inflammatory statements by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). They have stated as a fact in the public media that the people who arrived on a certain ship are not refugees but are in fact illegal aliens. The kindest thing that can be said of the Prime Minister and the Minister in those cases is that they do not know what they are talking about. They have no way of knowing that every person on that ship is not a refugee because those people have not been examined under our laws.

Therefore, it is prejudicial to their case for the Minister of Employment and Immigration, of all people, to give judgment against them before they have even begun to be heard by the due process of our law. To use that premature judgment, and probably untrue judgment in many cases, to inflame public opinion, not only against those refugees and people of that particular national, racial or religious origin, but against refugee claimants in general coming to Canada, is certainly not the proper way to set the scene for legislation worthy of this House.

We now also have Bill C-84 which has been presented in a hurry. We are asked to pass it in a hurry. Fortunately, the rules of this House allow for at least one day's consideration. As a result of our examination of the Bill we are very glad that the rules do allow for that consideration.

As I said, the Minister's statement made much about what is in the Charter and how everyone who comes here must be treated in accordance with our laws. We heard the Minister talking that way in the spring. What he told us in that vein in public statements on Bill C-55 turned out to be with reference to a Bill which had nothing to do with the Bill C-55 which was tabled in this House by the same Minister. The statements he made about Bill C-55 were simply not true. When he was challenged on that he said that we would fix it up in committee, although he knows full well that we cannot change in committee that which is done in principle. The Minister of State for Immigration was very clear in making the point to the critics of the opposition Parties that those things cannot be changed in committee.

Therefore, bearing in mind how misleading the Minister's statements were in May with regard to Bill C-55, we are going to read Bill C-84 very carefully. We are going to deal with what is written in the Bill rather than with the fine sentiments that the Minister expressed in his statement or in any other propaganda he may issue.

For example, in his statement he referred to smugglers. We would like to know how he defines "smugglers" in Bill C-84. Does he mean, as he suggests by his rhetoric, those who make a regular and profitable business from the misery of people who are desperate to immigrate into Canada by some unusual and perhaps illegal means? Is he talking about people who do it primarily for money? If so, he should say so clearly and write the law accordingly.

Is he talking about people like Sister Bonnie Butler of Buffalo or other sisters of the Roman Catholic Orders on either side of the border who have been helping refugees because it is their religion to be committed to helping the ones they saw were poor, perhaps in the economic sense, but certainly in the sense of being afraid for their personal safety if they were returned to the country from which they were fleeing? There are those who have helped people come into this country although they did not have the proper documents. Does the Minister intend to imprison and fine those people, or people of the churches generally? Many thousands of people have helped refugees. Would he like to perhaps retroactively fine the people who gave tea, cookies and peanut butter sandwiches to those who came ashore from the Sikh ship? Does that constitute aiding and abetting smuggling? We want to know what sort of law the Minister is talking about. Thousands and thousands of Canadians in the last few months have been helping refugees get to Canada. They have been helping at the Ontario border, the Quebec border, in the Prairies, in British Columbia, in the Maritimes, and Newfoundland. Thousands of Canadians have been doing this. We want to know whether the Minister is attacking them or only a more narrow group of people who do this primarily for profit and who, as he suggests, may even endanger the lives, safety, or health of the people they are smuggling.

If the Minister is going to turn back a vessel because one person aboard has inadequate documents, will he turn back the whole boatload of people, including perhaps those who have adequate documents? We want to understand that very clearly. How will he find out quickly at sea who has adequate documents?

The Minister talks about a security threat. A "security threat" is a very widely and vaguely used phrase. Who is a security threat? Not too long ago the RCMP had dossiers on 800,000 Canadians, probably including people in this room, who at some time or other took part in a public demonstration for what they thought was human rights. Are all those 800,000 people security risks, and is that the kind of standard that is to be applied to people who come to our borders?

Will people who oppose the murderous Government of El Salvador or the racist Government of South Africa be fingered by the international contacts as security risks and therefore shut out from Canada without any possibility of a hearing? How will the Minister square that with our Charter of Rights and with our obligations to refugees under the United Nations?

I do not intend to comment on the Minister's rhetoric about the increasing number of immigrants he has brought to Canada because his figures change so rapidly. He has stated that 97,000 came in 1986. I also heard him say 100,000 and, today, I heard him say 90,000. Until the Minister has his figures settled I think there is nothing to be said about that.

However, I want to comment with great pleasure on the promise he made today to enlarge the concept of family reunification. This is something on which I, with members of my constituency, have been campaigning for several years. I am also happy to say that it is consistent with the position that the New Democratic Party took two years ago at our annual convention. We will give very strong support to the Minister if he carries through on that promise.

He promised last fall to respond to our family reunification report upon which our committee worked for six months last year. We have not heard a word since then about carrying out that promise, but it is very welcome today.

We will be examining Bill C-84 very carefully. We will also be examining and debating Bill C-55 and doing our best to see that it is replaced with a system that supports what the parliamentary committee advocated, and what church groups, the Bar Association, the labour movement, every public group and every informed immigration expert in this country has advocated, that when refugee claimants come to our border they be sent as soon as possible, with translation and legal assistance, to the refugee board which should be created. They should have a non-adversarial hearing there, and to remove a possibility of a disastrous error, there should be a quick review arrangement or appeal system. We intend to press for that until it is achieved in this country.

That is not only our opinion, it is also what the majority of Canadians support. Such a system will be efficient, allowing for a matter to be heard in two or three months rather than several years. It will be quick enough to do justice to our refugees as well as the abusers. It will notify commercial smugglers and racketeers that there is no more money in bringing people falsely to Canada because they will not be here long enough to earn enough to repay the money they spent on the racketeers' rates.

We will be debating these two Bills very carefully during the days ahead in Parliament. The country will be watching because Canadians whom I know and Canadians whom my colleagues know want to do what is fair for refugees.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PETITIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition from a number of Canadian citizens who are concerned that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country rather than ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

The petitioners point out that Bill C-55 will result in many, perhaps most refugees who reach our border, being turned away without having their claims heard on the merits of their case, and that by limiting the right of appeal to points of law, this legislation ignores the reality that most refugee claims are questions of fact and credibility.

The petitioners go on to point out that a standing committee of this House has proposed a new procedure for refugees which, if adopted, would fairly and effectively solve problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. However, the Government has chosen to ignore that.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition under the provisions of Standing Order 106 on behalf of citizens of Prince Albert, Saskatchewan and Edmonton, Alberta. The petitioners say that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

The petitioners therefore humbly pray and call upon the Government and Parliament to withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission and universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact as well as law.

OPPOSITION TO BILL C-22

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by residents of my constituency of Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic, who are against Bill C-22.

In the opinion of those constituents, the Government's proposals will raise the already high costs of drugs, particularly for provincial health-care programs. They also deplore the fact that drugs will cost more to four million Canadian men and women who are not protected by private medicare programs.

They humbly call upon Parliament to reject these proposals which will increase drug prices.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by residents of British Columbia as well as residents of Toronto and Ontario who raise concerns with respect to Bill C-55. The petitioners suggest that this legislation threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting bona fide refugees and sets out measures designed to keep out most refugee claimants from Canada as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the refugee commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada and the right to appeal on the basis of fact as well as law.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too have a petition signed by an number of citizens of Windsor and Amherstburg, Ontario, expressing concern about the Government's proposal for Bill C-55. The petitioners point out their concern that the Bill will in fact lead to many refugees being turned away without having their claims heard on the merits of the case.

The petitioners point out that a standing committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugees which would fairly and effectively solve the problems of backlogs and unsubstantiated claims. This alternative has widespread support among all parties, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Bar Association, the Jewish Congress and many other groups and individuals knowledgeable about refugee issues.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to withdraw Bill C-55 and put in its place the kind of proposals put forward by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is following the time-honoured procedure of presenting petitions. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us if it was his office which had the petition certified?

Mr. Robinson: That has nothing to do with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there any further petitions? There are no further petitions.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no questions on the Order Paper.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, a notice was circulated to Members of Parliament earlier today stating that questions bearing Nos. 134, 143, 148, 150, 152, 154 and 155 would be answered today. I wonder if, through your guidance, Mr. Speaker, we could get some sort of reasonable explanation as to why we are not receiving answers to questions pursuant to our Standing Orders because there is a requirement in the Standing Orders that my question, in particular, be answered today under the rules of the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate my hon. colleague's point which is a good one. I was not entirely happy with the documentation I had before me. I intend to submit those answers tomorrow once I am sure the documentation is complete.

Mr. Boudria: I do not want to beleaguer the point, but if there is one question which is not pro forma to be answered today, I would respectfully submit to you, Sir, that the Standing Rules of the House still apply. I would like to know which questions the Parliamentary Secretary cannot answer today, and why not answer the others? I am sure we could all agree unanimously to change a document which he is presenting to include the other questions. It is a rule of the House, just as there are other rules of the House which we observe regularly. As far as I am concerned, the Government has no excuse to breach this particular rule because that is what it feels like at this particular point. Why can we not receive the answer and receive it now?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I stand by my original suggestion. I would suggest to my hon. friend that I will check the documentation out and perhaps we could revert to the tabling of answers later on today and I will have the answers then.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

The House resumed from Thursday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), I wish to inform the House that because of the ministerial statement, Government Orders will be extended 50 minutes beginning at one o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Richard Grisé (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak today to the amendment of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) concerning, of course, the refugee problem.

As you know, this Government recalled Parliament in the interests of Canada's security. Mr. Speaker, we are gathered here today because the problem of aliens entering Canada illegally by claiming to be refugees has become an extremely serious one.

I want to make it clear to Hon. Members present that the decision to recall the House was not taken lightly. We are aware of what this decision entails but it was absolutely necessary. It is our duty, as a Government, to take the initiative when the country is affected by events of a serious nature.

Unfortunately, ever since the Government announced its intention to recall the House, it has been accused of either overreacting or being irresponsible. They are never satisfied. Either we are going too fast or not fast enough. I am, of course, referring to comments by Opposition Members.

I believe it would have been irresponsible not to act in this kind of situation. If we had not taken action, it would have meant the steady deterioration of a situation that affects our system for determining refugee status. We cannot tolerate further occurrences. Doing nothing, Mr. Speaker, would have been telling the world that Canada allows its laws to be broken. Doing nothing would have aggravated the dissension reflected in public opinion and thus put our programs for refugees and immigrants in jeopardy.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that Canada's humanitarian tradition of dealing with refugees may come to an end if we do not put a stop to the abuse of our system. To do nothing would be irresponsible and sound the death knell of an honoured Canadian tradition. I will not let that happen, nor will my Government. The Government will never let that happen. The Canadian people want measures to be introduced now, and we are going to do that.

The House was recalled for a specific task. We must stem the increasing flow of migrants arriving in Canada. We must put a stop to the organized and systematic abuse of our system for determining refugee status. We must take measures to put a stop to the exploitation of human misery by people who could be qualified as refugee traffickers.

Today, I am pleased to speak on Bill C-55, a vital piece of legislation which will introduce both fairness and control to the refugee determination process. It is the ultimate step in our plan of action to deal with a problem that has international implications.

For most Canadians the dramatic arrival of 155 Tamils in Newfoundland one year ago was their first inkling that we have a refugee problem. That is not surprising when one considers that just six years ago only 1,600 people came to Canada claiming refugee status. However, by 1986 the number had swelled to 18,000. This year we expect that it will reach 30,000. More important than sheer numbers is the fact that many of these claims are not genuine. Our studies show that last year 70 per cent of refugee claimants were not refugees at all, and that many others had already found safe haven elsewhere before seeking refugee status in our country.

The arrival of the Tamils reinforced our resolve to take action to stem the flow of phoney refugees. Quick action was necessary because of wide media interest in the Tamil boat people. The predictable happened—more and more illegal aliens poured into Canada.

We acted by improving measures to curb the flow of illegals to our shores. The control measures we introduced in February had a limited impact. Refugee claimant numbers which were averaging 1,200 a week in February have dropped to 500 a week today. The control measures and the expanded powers that we are now seeking will deal effectively with short-term solutions to the refugee problem. But a long-term solution will only be found through the passage into law of Bill C-55.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, everyone knows why we have been called to this place. It is because of a system already over-loaded by a backlog of applications which is being exploited by queue-jumpers who are not legitimate refugees in need of our protection. Unscrupulous racketeers are also taking advantage of the situation and misleading men and women into believing that they will be able to get them the papers required to gain admission to Canada. Those racketeers bring these people to Canada under conditions which are often intolerable, unacceptable even for animals, and absolutely shocking in the case of human beings. Legitimate refugees suffer from delays in the system and are put at a disadvantage because of the increasing number and cleverness of fraudulent claims. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are getting more and more concerned about the inequity of the present system, which they believe to be incapable of putting an end to these abuses.

The patience even the most generous and humanitarian of Canadians is running out. Too many people enter Canada without the required documents and constitute a threat to our security. We are obviously faced with a series of potentially explosive conditions which are unacceptable to the Canadian public and this Government. The situation requires that the Government take the necessary steps. We are determined to put a stop to this traffic in human beings.

I also believe it important to throw some light on another implicit component of this Bill. The purpose of the proposed changes is not to discourage legitimate refugees who need our protection. Bill C-55, combined with the other measures we have taken, will enable us to protect legitimate refugees. With this Bill, we shall establish a fairer, faster and more effective refugee determination system which will benefit all legitimate refugees. This system will respect the basic rights of all those who are entitled to claim refugee status.

Bill C-55 contains key provisions which will simplify the processing of claims, ensure faster rejection of unfounded claims and strengthen the powers of the Government. This will allow the Government to send back to third countries those whose claims are unfounded while respecting their fundamental rights.

We hope that the urgency of taking action and the increasing pressures throughout the word will convince this time the Opposition to be more objective about the importance of Bill C-55.

The temporary measures we imposed in February were indeed only temporary. Bill C-55 goes further. It constitutes the long-term solution required by this problem, and this solution is both fair and judicious.

This legislation allows us to regain control over our refugee determination system which past abuses have rendered ineffective. This is a valid solution, Mr. Speaker. The Bill clearly and concisely defines the new process which I repeat will be an equitable one.

As I have already said, we are here to conclude work undertaken several months ago, and Bill C-55 and the Bill on detention and deterrence are a result of this work. The two Bills complement each other. We must ensure that our system can put an end to abuses while allowing refugee claimants to present their views. These two Bills give us such an assurance. They guarantee the rights of everyone, but will deter many fraudulent applicants.

The two Bills will enable us to establish a fairer, faster and more effective refugee determination system which will benefit all legitimate refugees and respect the basic rights of all potential claimants.

Mr. Speaker, we are firmly determined to guarantee the rights of all claimants. However, we also want to limit abuses. The legislation on deterrence and detention will attack the very roots of the problem and give us the control we need over the process.

• (1240)

[English]

I wish to make it absolutely clear that our commitment to genuine refugees is as firm as ever. In fact, Bill C-55 is a step that is consistent with the traditions of fairness and humanitarianism which saw the people of Canada awarded the Nansen Medal by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. This was the first time that an entire country had ever been so honoured.

I wish to remind Hon. Members that since taking office the Government has substantially increased the number of refugees taken from refugee camps around the world. This year it will sponsor 12,000 refugees from these camps, while private Canadian groups and families will sponsor approximately 5,000.

Canada has a long tradition of proving its humanitarian concern for genuine refugees who need its protection. The new determination system will uphold this tradition of commitment to true refugees. Our commitment goes back a long way. It is an essential part of a policy that, since the Second World War, has brought some 500,000 refugees to Canada for resettlement, and which has helped thousands of others through special humanitarian measures. On a per capita basis Canada's record of aid to refugees over the past few years has been second to none.

We provide refugee assistance under three specific formulas. First, direct financial assistance; second, the settlement in Canada of refugees selected outside this country; and protection given in Canada pursuant to a determination process carried out here. This three-prong approach is in line with the United Nations refugee policy.

For 1986-87, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Government set more than $170 million aside for refugee financial assistance. One third of these funds—over $66 million—was given to international humanitarian organizations like the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or to various countries in the form of food assistance for refugees.

In 1986 two-thirds of the refugees selected abroad received only financial help from the Government. Groups made up of private citizens and volunteer agencies sponsored more than 5,000 other refugees. In such cases the Government paves the way for refugee sponsors and makes transportation loans as well as language and vocational training courses available to refugees. Canada has also set up unique mechanisms to help victims of oppression even though these people do not necessarily fall within the terms of the United Nations definition because they are still in their country—for instance, political prisoners and other displaced personalities in Poland, Salvador, Guatemala, Chile and Uruguay.

Our aim in introducing Bill C-55 was to make the refugee status determination process effective again because, Mr. Speaker, this third prong of our refugee program is quite simply no longer operational. Right now this process no longer enables us to give protection to genuine refugees who need it because they are unable to sustain the pressure due to a sharp increase in the number of applicants. Thanks to the proposed process Canada will be in a position to live up to its commitments under the Geneva Convention, while at the same time honouring the principles of justice which are the very basis of our legislation. We will thus be able to maintain our humanitarian tradition. The adoption of Bill C-55 does not mean we will be turning our backs on refugees. On the contrary we want to make sure that those who really need help will be guaranteed our protection. However if we are truly intent on protecting genuine refugees we have to put a stop to abuses and reinstate an orderly process.

[English]

Canada's refugee program measures up to that of any country in the world. Our commitment to refugees is internationally renowned. Our best contribution is resettlement from camps abroad. Many of the people in these camps have been there for years and they have no other options. But, to do that, the refugee determination process must be changed as it is no longer workable. In its present form many people who are honestly entitled to refugee status in our country are prevented from attaining it. Canadians can no longer tolerate this situation. They want a new refugee process, one that is fair but tough on those who abuse it. We have the solution to this problem in hand. Now is the time to refer Bill C-55 to a committee.

[Translation]

I think that in conclusion you will allow me to say that it is clear we have not only the support of my government, but also my own support as President of the Quebec Conservative Caucus, and also the full support of the Chambly riding which I have the honour to represent in the House, to do the utmost to adopt this Bill as soon as possible.

The time has come for us to stop talking and take action.

[English]

It is time to stop talking and start acting.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, who is also the President of the Quebec Caucus for his party, has said that "the time has come to stop talking and take action" on Bill C-55.

Could he explain to me whether there now exists a crisis and whether he feels the need to take action? Why is it that his Government has failed to follow through on Rabbi Gunther Plaut's report in 1985? Why has his government failed to follow through on the report which the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration tabled nearly two years ago in 1985 and which had recommended major changes in the refugee determination process which would both be fair and provide all those seeking refugee status the legal protection provided in Canada by the Charter of Rights and Freedoms?

Why is it that the Government has procrastinated for nearly two years and has finally recalled Parliament in the middle of the 1987 summer recess, claiming that the time has now come to "stop talking and take action"?

How is it that Bill C-55 was tabled on May 5 for first reading in the House of Commons, but that nothing further was done on the subject, except holding three hours of debate before the session ended?

If the Government really wanted to act as in an emergency, how is it that it did nothing in connection with this Bill for nearly two months following its introduction in the House, except the three-hour debate held on June 18? Has the Government really demonstrated the urgency of this matter by procrastinating for nearly two years and now introducing a Bill which many who are involved with refugees feel is unacceptable?

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, listening to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), an opposition Member, a member of the New Democratic Party, we realize there is nothing new under the sun. They want to have it both ways, they want to please everyone at the same time.

Mr. Speaker, they suggest we have been delaying the process too long, we have not been active enough. But a few minutes ago, here in this House, the New Democratic Party House Leader asked our Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) for more time to review the parliamentary procedure over the next few days.

Mr. Speaker, we are now discussing a Liberal amendment that would delay by six months the decision on the Bill, the passing of Bill C-55, and that Liberal amendment is supported and endorsed by their life-long friends, the NPD old boys, Canada's socialist old boys. And they blame us as a Government for having summoned Parliament on an emergency basis so that we could explain the situation to Canadians and provide them with the protection they are entitled to, prevent any possibility of a terrorist invasion—and I emphasixe that—because of the mechanics of the current procedures. And this thanks to Bill C-55, and also Bill C-84 that was introduced this very morning by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) who, in agreement once more with the Liberal and the socialist opposition Parties, has decided to put off until tomorrow the decision as to how many hours the debate should last.

Mr. Speaker, on which side of the fence do they stand, those nice people? When will they be serious about the situation? First, as has been said, stop playing party politics with such serious legislation, stop playing party politics, Mr. Speaker, and provide better protection to the Canadian public. They are entitled to expect the best protection from this Government, and we have an obligation to do everything within the shortest time frame to secure and guarantee that protection for the Canadian people.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my hon. friend who made an excellent speech. I want to ask him about the people in his constituency. My colleague will know that at the present time the House is debating the following motion by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) of the Liberal Party that "Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

By the way, that amendment is supported by the New Democratic Party.

I want to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé). How will the people in his riding react to the suggestion of the Liberal Party, supported by the NDP, that the discussion of this very important issue be delayed for a further six months?

[Translation]

Mr. Grisé: Mr. Speaker, of course, I will be very brief in my answer to the comment made by the Parliamentary secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lewis). The reaction of my constituents of Chambly is simple disbelief, Mr. Speaker—they find it absolutely unacceptable that, in this emergency faced by the Government and Canada as a whole, the Liberal Party come up with a motion to defer by six months the government decision, the implementation of the legislation. This means they are aware of the problem with the Canadian refugee policy. But not to worry.

They will let them come in for six more months, and then, after six months, they will consider whether the decision has any merits.

[English]

My answer to the Parliamentary Secretary is very simple. In no way will the population of the riding of Chambly, or the population of the Province of Quebec which I am proud to represent as Quebec caucus chairman for my Party, support an amendment like that. They urge us, not only the Progressive Conservative Party, but as the Government to make a decision as soon as possible to settle the problem once and for all by adopting Bill C-55 and Bill C-84.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, if the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) is being debated at this time, it is because it was in order to make it two months or so ago, on June 18, the first day the Government felt it proper to call that Bill. There was one day of debate, one day of debate.

Mr. Lewis: How will you vote on it?

Mr. Gauthier: The Bill was introduced on May 5, 1987. They had three years to study the problem, and as disorganized managers—those are the new words for Tories, "disorganized managers"—they did not put a Bill before us. Finally they presented it first on May 5, and then we had second reading on June 18. Surely Canadians are entitled to know what the Bill is all about. We have put the amendment because they failed to tell Canadians what they intended to do, what they had in mind to do. We will try to explain that, I must admit.

Sure enough, Bill C-55 does have its positive aspects, but it contains a number of weaknesses as well: The concept of the third country where refugees will be sent back, the so-called refugees who will be coming to Canada, the preselection concept—the notion, I should say—of the safe third country.

[English]

I am referring to the safe third country concept. I want to ask a question about it, because the Government is putting forth an interesting viewpoint. We admit that a person, a human being, comes to Canada with rights; according to the Charter of our country every human being has basic rights. One of the rights he has is to due process. Another right he has is to be heard. The Government is saying "we will return him to whatever country"; the safe third country concept.

And I want to ask the Hon. Member whether he is prepared to wash his hands of—à la Pontius Pilate—of the problem of refugees in this world by telling a prospective refugee arriving in Canada: You will return to this third safe country. I should like to know what the Hon. Member thinks of this notion.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) has 30 seconds to answer that question.

Mr. Grisé: I will be very brief, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

First of all, while we want to respect the international rights of refugees we must never ignore the rights of the Canadian population, the men and women we represent. That is basic, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) mentioned that they made that six-month amendment two months ago. Do they need two months or four months? Perhaps the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is now suggesting to his colleague from York West to withdraw the amendment. Is that what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is suggesting?

Mr. Gauthier: Answer the question. That is why we need six months, because they won't answer questions.

Answer the question!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has expired. Debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

[English]

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to be here. I think we all deserved a holiday, but because the Government has mishandled and bungled the whole issue of refugees, it is now trying to incite the public into fearing that somehow there is a need to act on a bad Bill, Bill C-55, which is currently under debate. The problems could have been tackled in a much more effective and humanitarian way beginning two years or three years ago.

We are not now talking about a Government which has inherited problems from the previous administration. We are talking about a Government which, on September 4, will have been in power for three years from the last election. Therefore, we are talking about problems which have been there for action by the Government.

I must say that I am very disturbed over the tone of the comments of the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), because the Government is suggesting, fearing its very low position in the opinion polls, that it will somehow ride its way to popularity by inciting prejudice, by inciting feelings which may be racist, and by effectively trying to turn to Canadians to say, "We are going to be proud and strong and keep out those people coming into the country and therefore regain your support that way".

The Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) acknowledged that there are problems in the immigration process, that the immigration process needs to be opened up in Canada for reasons of family reunification and for other reasons. In citing their support for Bill C-55, members of the government Party will be saying at the same time that they are not opposed to having legitimate refugees coming into the country.

However, they mislead the public, they mislead Canadians, if they argue that Bill C-55 is an effective way of achieving that particular goal. They mislead the public if they argue that now we have to act urgently and ignore the fact that the Government failed to act over the last 2.5 years.

It is a fact that virtually every individual and every group concerned with assistance to refugees coming into Canada are opposed to Bill C-55. It is a fact that a number of members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, including members from the government Party, are opposed to Bill C-55, and I suspect they will say so in one way or other, during the course of consideration of this particular Bill. It is a fact that the Government had an excellent report from Rabbi Gunther Plaut in 1985, some 2.5 years ago, which proposed a means of having a refugee policy that would be humanitarian, would be just, would be accessible, and would be quick.

It is important that we talk about speeding up the process for two reasons. First, the time the present process takes is unjust to legitimate refugee claimants who are left in limbo for periods of up to two or three years. Second, it is clear that there is an incentive to people who may not be legitimate refugees to seek refugee status in order to have two, three or four years' time in Canada during which they may be able to gain access to Canada for humanitarian or other reasons despite the fact that they were not legitimate refugees in the beginning. On the one hand, people who could be abusing the process benefit from long delays, but on the other hand legitimate refugees who happen to be in camps from where refugees are moved to Canada are disadvantaged by lengthy delays.

Two and a half years ago the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration considered the Plaut report. It came up with a set of proposals and those proposals have received approval and support from those groups that concern themselves with refugees. For example, I have before me the proposals made by the Canadian Council of Churches. It proposed a determination procedure that would be just and expeditious, a proposal which was supported by Amnesty International and the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees.

This proposal was that when refugee claimants arrive at the border, they would within a matter of a short time, perhaps two or three weeks, have access to an oral hearing before the refugee board, meeting the requirements of the Supreme Court by unanimous judgment in April of 1985 that people seeking to be refugees should in fact have an oral hearing and not just a paper hearing. It was proposed that if the determination at the oral hearing was negative, refugee claimants would then be able to make an appeal. They would know the reasons why they were refused and would make representations on those particular points but the appeal would be a paper hearing. In other words, it would not be unduly delayed. At the end of that, there would then be a yes or no decision. The appeal body could overrule negative decisions, could request rehearings or could confirm negative decisions. Therefore, within about two or three months, a decision would be made.

If people are seeking to abuse the process, they will not spend thousands of dollars in transportation costs or pay traffickers in refugee claimants thousands of dollars in order to come to Canada to be here for just two or three months. It will not pay. That will discourage many of the people who might, it might be felt, be illegitimate claimants. If people are genuinely desperate, they will continue to seek to come to Canada in one way or other. They will not be discouraged and that is as it should be. If a certain proportion of those people are still turned down by our rules, then we must regret that but we cannot accept everyone who believes legitimately that he may be a refugee.

The people concerned with refugees as well as opposition Party Members have indicated that they would support a proposal whereby there is a just determination made within a period of a couple of months. If such a process existed, then most people who might be potential abusers would not be coming to Canada under that process. That is the matter to which the Hon. Member for Chambly and others have been speaking. It would then be possible, according to these proposals coming from people who are concerned about refugees, to have appeals on points of law to the Federal Court of Appeal. However, that would be rare. There would probably have to be leave to appeal and this too would take a matter of maybe two or three months, a total of six months in all after which a final determination would be made.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, one wonders why, when the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration submitted to the Government a report made by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, a man widely respected and with distinguished credentials, who proposed a system that would be just and accessible, in line with the decision handed down by the Supreme Court of Canada in April 1985, a process that would deal fairly with all those seeking refugee status, one wonders why the Government deferred its decision and refused the advice of the Standing Committee, instead tabling a Bill that ignores the recommendations and creates a situation where instead of genuinely examining claims for refugee status, we are actually trying to turn back at the border individuals who want to come to Canada?

That is the gist of what we read in Le Devoir of June 3, 1987. I would like to quote the comments that appeared in Le Devoir:

> Contrary to the initial impression given by the new policy announced by the federal Ministers responsible for Immigration, the purpose of Bill C-55 is not to give refugees, either genuine or phoney, who knock at our door the right to have their case heard—a right recognized by the Supreme Court as fundamental—but to turn back the largest possible number.
> It is therefore not surprising that the proposed legislation has met with massive and violent opposition across Canada.
> It is not that Benoît Bouchard and Gerry Weiner—the two Ministers involved—do not sincerely want to make Canada a country of refuge.

Unfortunately, Bill C-55, a lengthy and complex piece of legislation that even experts have trouble understanding, is actually raising new barriers and, contrary to international law, has opted for a policy of turning back people at the border.

Mr. Speaker, that is what we object to.

The Hon. Member wondered why the Liberal Party proposed a six-month hoist on Bill C-55. The Hon. Member, who has been sitting here in the House of Commons for three years, knows perfectly well that this is a technique used in the House by an opposition Party to indicate it is fundamentally opposed to a Bill. We in the New Democratic Party say to the Government that we are prepared to accept a Bill that follows the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. We believe the committee has made valid and viable proposals that would respond to the concerns expressed by many Canadians since the July incident when 174 Sikhs, citizens of India, arrived on our shores in Nova Scotia, on board a German vessel.

[English]

Let us not be panicked by the fact that 174 Sikhs entered Canada a month ago. Let us not be panicked into saying that that proves that there are security questions which require that the House be called back at this time. We have known since the end of June that the Government was looking for one reason or another to have the House sit at this time. We have known as well that there are some serious questions as to whether or not the Government wants the House to be sitting around the first of October when the free trade negotiations reach their final stages. It has been suggested that the Government does not want to have Parliament around at that time because it does not want Parliament chiming in about what may occur at that time.

After listening to the Hon. Member for Chambly and the Minister of Employment and Immigration one must ask oneself this question. If there is a problem of illegal immigrants being brought to our shores in leaky lifeboats, then why did the Government not act a year ago? What was the reason for the delay at that time? Why is it suddenly beginning to act right now?

If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) considered this to be an emergency two and a half weeks ago, why did he not call Parliament back immediately rather than going out in order to pose with his son Nicholas and his wife at all kinds of ethnic picnics and other events around the country for two and a half weeks before calling Parliament? When is an emergency not an emergency? To what extent is Parliament meeting right now because it is in the needs or interests of the Conservative Party, a Party which is desperate to find some way to get back into the good graces of Canadians, or to what extent is there a genuine emergency at this time?

It has been mentioned that Canada is a recipient of the Nansen Medal for its performance in accepting refugees. We deserved that medal, but maybe we should consider giving it back if this Bill goes forward in its present form.

Those who are watching these proceedings right now should know what are the objectionable features of this Bill. If persons who were persecuted in their homeland because of race, religion, ideology, or some other reason, came to Canada's borders and said they would like to be considered for refugee status, they would face a series of new requirements which effectively make it more and more difficult for their case to be considered.

Canada takes in more than 10,000 refugees a year and that is something of which we can be proud. That is why we won the medal. However, we do not have an obligation just to take refugees in camps in southeast Asia, Africa, or on the borders of Afghanistan. There are people in Central America who are clearly refugees according to the UN definition. They have a well-founded fear of persecution. They make their way into Canada by all kinds of different means. The rules say that if they are judged at the border by the refugee board as having the opportunity to go back to a so-called safe country, they cannot come into Canada. If you are coming from Central America to Canada to seek refugee status, you have no choice but to go via the U.S. It is almost impossible to not travel that way. I presume the Cabinet is not going to say the U.S. is not a safe country. Yet the U.S. rejects 98 per cent of people from Central America seeking refugee status. Canada accepts half of those people who get to our borders seeking refugee status. In other words, the understanding in the two countries of what is a refugee is very different.

The reasons, of course, are very clear. It is because of the misbegotten policies, which most Canadians oppose, of the Reagan administration and its support of military and right-wing regimes in places like El Salvador, as well as its efforts to destabilize and overthrow the Government of Nicaragua. That in my opinion is in flagrant violation of international law.

If a refugee were to come from Sri Lanka prior to the apparent recent settlement, or some other part of Asia, they would have to travel through western Europe. The Government says if they were simply passing through western Europe on the way to Canada that would not meet the requirements concerning a safe third country and they could not be turned back. However, we are saying that if, for example, the refugee stopped in western Europe for a few days or a few weeks, possibly in order to acquire the resources necessary to continue, then they would have lost their chance of ever being a refugee here in Canada.

It is reminiscent of the rules in place before World War I which said anyone who wished to emigrate to Canada from the Indian subcontinent could do so provided they came here directly. A group of Sikhs did so in 1914 and they were turned away because their ship had refuelled along the way. That was used as a pretext to turn them away.

Is Canada adopting legislation which theoretically may not be racist but which in practice effectively means refugees from countries other than eastern Europe have little or no chance of coming to Canada? I believe that is the result of Bill C-55 in its present form.

These parts of the Bill I believe most Canadians would find repugnant. They would say that is not what I meant. The polls show that most Canadians are in favour of Canada being a place of refuge for genuine refugees. Of course they do not want the system abused. No one does.

We have problems with some people who seek refugee status as a way of coming to Canada. However, as I said before, if they could only come to Canada for a few months and then be turned away, very quickly the word would get back to Brazil, Portugal, Turkey, or other places where things which may look like scams have taken place and these people would stop coming here. They would not spend their life savings just for the chance of being in Canada for two or three months. Their relatives or friends would tell them it was not working.

I call on the Government to recognize the concerns of immigrants and refugee assistance groups who reject Bill C-55. It has to recognize that you cannot turn to people and say, if you do not announce you are going to be a refugee the moment you come into Canada you cannot claim that status again. Refugees are scared to death. That is why they left the countries from which they came. To turn around and say they did not meet the requirements and therefore we are going to turn them back to that regime is unacceptable.

There is a lot of passion and concern here, but Canadians should beware manipulation by the Government. We in this Party are certainly prepared to see measures which would ensure just, fair and expeditious handling of refugee claims. It is wrong that we have 20,000 people backed up in the queue right now when the Government had the choice of putting resources to work in order to shorten the queue. For three years it had the means of putting in place the legislation which would have ensured that we would not be facing a crisis now. If there is any crisis now, it is not because of the opposition Parties, it is because of the inaction and incompetence of the Conservative Government of the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment and then I would like to ask the Hon. Member a question. My comment relates to his remarks at the outset of his speech when he referred to the Government and presumably members of the Progressive Conservative Party inciting the people of Canada with respect to legislation to control the entry of refugees into Canada. I realize the Hon. Member lives in the insulated atmosphere of Ottawa Centre, but the people in my constituency of Halifax West, and my colleagues from across Canada with similar experience, tell me very clearly that the people of Canada were not incited by anything other than the sight of 174 people gaining illegal entry into Canada in apparent defiance of the law. That is what incited the people of Canada, not members of the Progressive Conservative Party or this Parliament.

We are all elected to this Chamber as representatives of the people and we participate in debate. We expect to be hit in the give and take of debate. However, the Hon. Member has no basis for insulting the intelligence of the people of Canada who read this situation very clearly and reacted to it. They said to their Members of Parliament, get back to Ottawa and do something about the situation. The incitement did not come from elected Members of Parliament.

There is a very real feeling among the people of Canada that something has to be done. I am shocked and ashamed that the Hon. Member would stand in this place and deny the feelings of the people of Canada, insult their intelligence, and claim they are merely being incited. Those people feel very strongly about this and the Member's defiance in standing in this House and insulting the intelligence of the people of Canada because of the attitude they honestly hold is ridiculous.

I want to ask the Hon. Member if he believes people should be allowed to enter Canada in the way these 174 Asians did when they landed on the shores of Nova Scotia? Does he believe that the law governing that situation should allow them to stay here, notwithstanding that they have not shown in any way, shape or form that they are legitimate refugees? Does he agree with that law? Does he want that law maintained? Is that the reason his Party supported a six-month hoist of Bill C-55? Is that why it wanted consideration of the Bill in the House of Commons delayed for six months and passed into oblivion? Members of his Party agree with the current state of the law. They want this to happen and they want it to happen again and again and again. Is that what they want?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond in a more calm way than that in which the Hon. Member has just spoken. We had a similar incident a year ago when a group of Tamils were deposited on the coast of Newfoundland by lifeboats. If the Government was as concerned at that time as the Hon. Member indicates that he is now, it had every opportunity to bring legislation forward.

There was a model put forward by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which, as I suggested in my speech, had general support and would have ensured that people seeking refugee status would have been dealt with quickly.

In addition, at that time the Government had the opportunity, and failed to do so, of bringing forward legislation along the lines of what I understand is being proposed in Bill C-84, that is, the imposition of heavy penalties for traffickers in illegal immigrants into this country.

Let us suppose that a group of people who genuinely suffered fear of persecution in El Salvador managed to find a fishing boat and persuade the captain of it to take them up the coast to Vancouver. Is the Hon. Member saying that the Navy should be sent out with guns blazing in order to sink that ship or send it back to a place where people would be subject to death squads? Is that what the Hon. Member is saying?

I do not think you can make a rule to cover every circumstance. I believe that people who are seeking refugee status are likely to be coming into Canada by all means. The transportation carriers and the passport control systems and so on are not such as to encourage or facilitate refugees moving from one place to another.

I am not happy about what happened on the coast of Nova Scotia. I am not insulated from it, as the Hon. Member has suggested. My office, like his, has received a number of calls. A number of people have spoken to me about this issue outside of my constituency during the last several weeks. People have expressed their concern that these people may be jumping the queue.

On a different point, the Hon. Member for Chambly said that we must have legislation no ›ecause of the security risk of people coming in in this partic lar way. An adjudicator has now processed all of the cases. The Government has put forward any evidence that it may have of a possible security risk. The adjudicator, who I assume the Hon. Member believes is a competent individual who would consider very seriously evidence from the Government, has judged that there was no substantive evidence that there was a security risk involved in this case.

We must look at this situation with some perspective. This was a rather dramatic case of 174 people made more dramatic because there was not a lot of other news at that particular time. It was perhaps dramatized as well because the people who came in happened to be Sikhs. They look different. They wear turbans and so on. The Hon. Member will be aware that Sikh Canadians right across the country are very productive members of Canadian society and make a great contribution to the country. We are not talking about people who will necessarily be prejudicial to Canadian society. We do not know that.

The question is whether we make law on the basis of a sudden, sharp reaction to one particular incident, or whether we make law in a measured way as was proposed by the standing committee more than two years ago. That is what should have happened. It is the mark of an incompetent and ineffective Government that it has panicked into action now when it should have acted a year and a half ago.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of brief questions for the Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy). Toward the end of his speech he referred to the backlog of 20,000 people who are seeking entry to Canada. What is there in Bill C-55 which will ensure that we will have the human resources necessary to speed up the process in order to keep the backlog at less than 20,000 so that people can go through the process without having to wait months and even years?

Second, what is there in Bill C-55 which will assist in the speeding up of the process without hiring more counsellors and other people to handle the processing of paper in the immigration department? What is there to make this process more streamlined? Do we still maintain the same protection against security risks and ensure that this faster, streamlined process allows genuine refugees to enter?

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) directed a question to me and I am sure he would rather use the time by listening to my answer.

Mr. Cassidy: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member a supplementary question, but I would like the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to answer the question of the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse).

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the question with regard to the security provisions in Bill C-55. However, I am sure that the question of resources is not adequately addressed. It is clear that if the Government believes, as it correctly should, that the backlog is too great and the process is taking too long, then this matter requires not only legislation but also a commitment of adequate resources.

As the Minister indicated, Canada devotes over $150 million a year to refugee resettlement and that kind of thing. I believe most Canadians support that. If we have to find an extra portion of resources, one which would be much smaller than that already allocated, in order to ensure expeditious handling of people seeking refugee status, I believe that most Canadians would also agree with that. I regret that the Government is seeking to turn public disdain on to people seeking refugee status rather than dealing in a compassionate and humanitarian way with persons seeking refugee status here in Canada.

It is also worth noting that under the present process there is provision which is often used whereby a person who does not meet the UN convention definition of a refugee is still allowed to stay in Canada for humanitarian reasons. Humanitarian reasons have no place in Bill C-55. I believe that is a matter for regret. In other words, persons who are now consistently being allowed to stay in Canada for humanitarian reasons would be rejected under the proposals of Bill C-55.

Are we wrong to accept them now? If we are not wrong, why does Bill C-55 in essence say that in the future we will not accept persons for humanitarian reasons which appear to be justified at this time?

Mr. Crosby: Mr Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre asked me my view of the entry of the 174 East Asian migrants into the Province of Nova Scotia. I am unalterably opposed to that entry in that way. I will explain why. The migrants violated Section 95 of the Immigration Act by seeking to enter Canada through a place other than a port of entry, knowing well that had they entered through a port of entry they would have run into the formalities of our immigration laws and would have been required to identify themselves, state honestly under oath from whence they came, and meet the other requirements. Therefore, I am unalterably opposed to their entry into Canada because I believe that they purposely avoided the immigration laws of Canada.

I resent, and I think the people of Canada resent, the remarks of the Member for Ottawa Centre attributing, not to me and not to Members in this House of Commons, but to all Canadians the attitude that they are concerned about the entry of these East Asians because, in his words, "they look different and wear turbans". No one said to me, "I am against these people because they look different and wear turbans". I take Canadians at their word. When they tell me that they do not want law-breakers to enter the the country, when they tell me that they want everyone to observe the laws of Canada as they seek entry to the country, I take their word. I do not attribute malice or racial prejudice to honest Canadians who believe that all our laws should be respected. Canadians are law-abiding people. They pay income tax, they stop at red lights, and they resent people who do not abide by our laws. I am shocked and amazed that the Member for Ottawa Centre would attribute to law-abiding Canadians a racial prejudice that only exists in his own mind.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a very short rebuttal.

Mr. Cassidy: I thank the Hon. Member for his contribution and his assurances that that was not in fact the intention of the Government in its statements at the time of the entry of the Sikhs, and that it was not attempting to build up any kind of support in that way. If that is the case, I am glad to hear it.

I simply say that the concerns of Canadians about the refugee process were concerns to which the Government should have responded a long time ago. Sure, they were heightened and sharpened by the arrival of the Sikhs, but they were also heightened by the arrival of the Tamils a year ago. One must ask why the Government failed to act at the time of the Tamil arrival or when the House resumed in October of last year? Why did it not get on with the job at that time?

Mr. Crosby: You obstructed it.

Mr. Cassidy: There was a bad Bill which we are opposing. Why was there no Bill at all until May 5? Why was there no debate at all on the Government's response to more expeditious handling of refugees until June 18 when there was effectively no time—

Mr. Crosby: You were obstructing then and you are obstructing now.

Mr. Cassidy: It is hardly obstruction when the Bill was not even before us between September and May.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be here today to have the opportunity to debate Bill C-55, unlike my colleagues opposite who seem to decry the recall of Parliament to debate this issue. I believe it is perhaps one of the most important issues that has faced Canadians in the past two years. Members of Parliament from all Parties have a responsibility to deal with it. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) indicated that he does not believe it is important to return at this time. The Member from the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), indicated that he felt the Government was trying to whip up hysteria on this issue. While I do not like leaving British Columbia, I returned from my riding of Capilano because I believe it is important to be here to deal with this vital issue.

I am very pleased that in addition to debating Bill C-55 today, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has introduced additional legislation, Bill C-84, dealing with the deterrent and detention aspects of the refugee claimant situation. We will debate that legislation as well during this recall.

Let me trace what has happened in the past month. On July 12, 174 people arrived on the shores of Nova Scotia claiming refugee status. This particular event touched the nerve of Canadians and caused an outpouring of response like none other I have seen during the past three years I have served my constituency. Indeed, it reminded me somewhat of a movie which I am sure many recall seeing when, after reaching a certain level of frustration, the character said, "I am mad as hell and will not take it any more". That is what Canadians are telling us as their elected representatives. They are tired of being abused and having our borders abused by those who would seek to enter this country illegally.

That does not mean that Canadians are not generous. While we know that Canadians are generous, we also know that Canadians share a fundamental sense of fairness and will react if they feel they are being dealt with unfairly. We have seen such a response over the past three weeks because Canadians believe there are people trying to come into this country unfairly, by jumping the queue ahead of legitimate refugees and those who would come here through the regular immigration process.

Let me refer the House to a few of the comments I have received in letters and phone calls which number well over 1,000. These are the views of individual constituents who are concerned enough to call or write their Member of Parliament. While people may stop on the street to discuss such things as the free trade agreement or the Meech Lake Accord, they do not ordinarily write to express their views as they have done on this issue.

Let me give some examples of the comments I have received. One states in part:

> I am writing to you to express my displeasure at the way the Canadian Government is responding to the . . . migrants who are attempting to enter our country in an improper manner.
> I have been fortunate to travel all over the world and it is heartbreaking to see people waiting at the doors of our embassies and consulates with desperation in their eyes trying to immigrate to Canada.
> What distresses me about the current situation is that these people are just "queue-jumpers" and "system-beaters"—They are showing, by example, what kind of citizens they will make and if allowed in, will try to find a way around every law and regulation we have—

That is the feeling of many Canadians. Those trying to enter this country illegally or by lying are establishing an example of their future behaviour.

Let me quote another letter which I am sure is similar to letters all of us have received:

> Send the boatloads home, and let them apply legally. There is no reason why the boatloads should be given preference over other people—who have applied through the regular channels and are awaiting processing.

Another states:

> As an immigrant who came to Canada in 1969 having been subject to scrutiny, lots of paperwork, screening, delays, denials, and finally after many months acceptance into Canada, I want to know what policies we now have for people to enter the country.
> —anyone who can somehow creep ashore at night, be left wallowing in our territorial seas or concoct any other plan to circumvent the normal entry process is soon housed, fed, given money and other hand-outs, lawyers, et cetera at taxpayers' expense, and then set free into the community.

Finally:

> If it can be proven a person is a genuine refugee then yes, Canada has room for such desperate people, but the applicant must prove his case beyond a question of a doubt. Otherwise, people without a valid case claiming "refugee" status can enter Canada illegally, stay here for months or years while an investigation goes on, and thus make a mockery out of the entire immigration system.

Those are the kinds of concerns I have been hearing over the past three weeks. That is what led me to suggest that this situation must be addressed and why, on July 17, I wrote to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) asking for the recall of Parliament. I want to share what I said in that letter because it was a culmination of what I was hearing from my constituents and how I wanted to represent their views to the Deputy Prime Minister. I wrote:

> After several days of discussion with many of my constituents regarding the arrival of 174 persons last weekend by boat to Canada claiming refugee status, and much personal reflection, I am writing to you to urge the early recall of Parliament for the consideration and passage of Bill C-55 (amendments to the Immigration Act).
> I believe that this is a matter of national urgency and importance calling for action by our Government.
> Canadians in Capilano, and across the country, are deeply concerned about this matter. They are angry and frustrated by what appears to be the inability of government to act swiftly to determine whether or not recent arrivals have a legitimate claim to refugee status and where they do not, to be removed from Canada.
> The proposed amendments contained in Bill C-55 would give us the tools to be much more effective in dealing with refugee claims while ensuring fairness and justice.
> I believe Canadians are generous of spirit and are willing to accept a fair share of genuine refugees who wish to contribute to this country; however, they cannot accept persons who enter this country by illegitimate means, or make false claims, while many others must wait their turn through established immigration channels.
> We must show our support for the generosity of Canadians but not allow it to be abused. Lack of action will lead to unacceptable levels of frustration and cynicism.
> By moving to put in place the proposed legislative changes quickly, rather than waiting until the fall, we will exhibit our good faith by discouraging those who might seek to enter our country illegally.
> Thank you for your consideration of my request.

I must compliment the Government for responding favourably to the request, which I know was made by other Members of my party as well, which brings us back here today to deal with the situation. We will be dealing with Bill C-55, which is the process by which claims are judged, as well as new legislation to much more effectively deter by tough penalties, up to $1 million and 10 years in jail, for those who would seek to bring in people to this country illegitimately. There is a right to seize and sell the vehicles, the boats, planes and, I guess, perhaps even a train which might be used to transport such people illegally, and there is a right to detain those who would enter the country until such time as their identification can be verified. Where there are any questions of serious criminal background, we will have the right to remove that person quickly from Canada.

Those measures are important given the reality in which we now live. It is not a happy global reality, we all recognize that. There are many millions of people, many millions of legitimate refugees, who are seeking to leave these countries. However, there are also many others who wish to seek access to a country where they might have a better life, a greater economic advantage. Certainly we all understand the motivation of these people who would like to come to Canada. However, we also recognize that immigration procedures must be done in a fair way, and that we as Canadians must have control over our immigration policy so that we have control over our destiny.

Bill C-55 will help to give us the tools to deal with those claims quickly and I believe that is what Canadians want. We all know the problems in the existing system which was developed 10 years ago in a different era when these kinds of global movements did not occur as they do now. We now need legislation to deal with the reality in which we live today.

Certainly Canadians to whom I talked, who are not professionals or lawyers, but ordinary Canadians, want to be sure that the system is fair and that it is expeditious. So we see in Bill C-55 a new and streamlined system. Within a period of 72 hours of a person entering the country and claiming refugee status their case can be determined by a member of the refugee determination board and a member of the Immigration Department. If, in certain circumstances, it is very clear there is no legitimate claim to refugee status, that person will be removed from Canada.

There are criteria by which cases would not proceed to a further hearing; "persons recognized as refugees by another country, persons who can be returned to a safe third country and persons under a removal order, those who have made repeat claims or those whose claims have no arguable basis", and there are lots of those. In fact we know that over the past few years the number of those coming to Canada who claim refugee status has increased from 1,600 in 1980 to 18,000 in 1986 and for the first seven months of 1987, they totalled 16,500. Seventy percent of these claims have been unfounded.

I believe we should look at this problem as reasonable men and women with a responsibility for making laws and think through how they should be implemented. A reasonable person would recognize that what we are trying to do is put in a system by which we can weed out that 70 percent or least deter them from coming to Canada in the first place because they will know they will not get through the system. With that in place, the legitimate refugees will be dealt with expeditiously, so they can quickly enter into the fabric of Canadian society. Those kinds of tools are available in the Bill before us.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre expressed a number of concerns which I believe are really not quite fair when we look at the situation carefully. I have talked to a number of people involved in refugee determination work. These people actually hear the cases. They have told me that once one is involved, one quickly can appreciate and understand the difference between legitimate and illegitimate claimants. There are people who claim refugee status who are very quickly known not to be refugees. It is not a big deal. That can be done quickly and safely and they can be sent back to the country from which they came.

At the same time we must have a system where there can be a fair hearing when there is any doubt at all that a person may be a legitimate refugee. Bill C-55 provides for the due process of law. Where either one or two of the persons receiving the information to begin with have any doubts, it will go on to the next stage. The new refugee determination board, will be able to hear the case in a matter of weeks so that possibly within a period of seven to 12 weeks there will be a final determination and the claimant will either be returned or will be able to stay in Canada to start to build a new life. In the present situation it can sometimes take a year, two years and even up to four years before a person's status is finally verified. As politicians we all know the problems that involves. Once a person has been in Canada for four or five years and has established ties, it becomes very emotional and very difficult to remove that person. It is really not fair to any of us.

Bill C-55, taken in conjunction with Bill C-84, will give us the tools and the system by which we can genuinely determine the refugee status of those who would seek to enter Canada legally and deal effectively with those who would try to come here illegally. It will deal with the concerns of Canadians who want us to have that kind of control over our borders and our future.

There are other longer term issues which need to be addressed. Obviously much work needs to be done on the international scene in our role and responsibility in the movement of refugees around the world. Much work needs to be done in order to familiarize and involve Canadians in immigration policy in terms of its goals, objectives and numbers. In this way they can take a greater part in that discussion.

These are issues which my colleagues and I will work on over a period of time. I would like to ask now for the co-operation of all Members of the House in terms of moving quickly and expeditiously on Bill C-55 so that it can finally become law.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member but her time has expired.

It being 1:50 p.m., I will now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. After Oral Question Period the Hon. Member will have 10 minutes for questions and comments.

At 1:51 p.m. the House took recess.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

ENVIRONMENT CANADA—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the report that the Government is again withholding information about toxic chemicals and human health is only the latest in a series of events that demonstrates that the Government does not see Environment Canada playing an advocate role to protect the public.

It started with the St. Clair River "blob" in 1985 when the Minister criticized his scientists for being open and honest with the public. Then a pamphlet entitled "Storm Warning" was withheld from distribution for one year. Communication between Environment Canada and the public has been centralized in Ottawa in an attempt to avoid further embarrassment to the Minister. Scientists are no longer allowed to give opinions that differ from his. In 1986 the Deputy Minister apparently went so far as to tell Environment Canada managers that the department is out of the advocacy business.

These changes are a serious blow for all Canadians. Our pollution laws and regulations need public support through the advocacy role Environment Canada plays in defence of the public. By removing the advocacy role, the Minister has removed the soul of the department. By withholding information, the Minister is muzzling scientists who are working to protect the public interest.

PARLIAMENTARY INTERNS—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SPECIAL AWARD

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me today to inform you and Members of the House about a new and special award to be given to a parliamentary intern each year.

The originator of the parliamentary intern system was the former Member of Parliament from Guelph, Mr. Alfred Hales, a man much respected across Canada. He served the Guelph riding and his country for almost two decades and was recognized as a thoughtful but tough politician. His name is synonymous with service in my riding.

Mr. Hales has agreed to allow his name to grace this award, and an "Alf Hales Plaque" will be presented by the Speaker of the House of Commons to the person judged to be the best all-round intern in the eyes of the Members of Parliament and the director of the program.

I know that you, Mr. Speaker, will enjoy presenting the Alf Hales Award. I hope Mr. Hales will be present as you do so. He was a man with an idea that grew.

WAR CRIMINALS

CALL FOR RAPID PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on June 30, the last day the House sat before adjourning for the summer, the Government devoted a mere five minutes to dealing with Bill C-71 which would provide for the prosecution in Canada of war criminals. Five minutes was not much time, but within that time the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) made a promise to the House. He stated, and I quote from page 7903 of Hansard:

> —I will call on my House Leader to make arrangements to have this matter brought up at the earliest date when this House reconvenes. It will be a priority—for us.

The House reconvened today, the Government has put forward the list of legislation that it intends to deal with, and Bill C-71 is not on the list.

On behalf of my Party I indicated that we were prepared to take all steps to give rapid passage to this Bill in order that it could enter into effect quickly. The Government has not brought it forward. I wish to renew the commitment that I made during that debate and before to assure rapid passage. Let me urge the Government to keep its promise and have this matter dealt with. War criminals are a problem which, because of the biological clock, is disappearing. I think this matter should be dealt with soon.

THE LATE FRANK BEBAN

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago the men and women who work in the forests of British Columbia lost a friend with the passing of Frank Beban. Like his father, Jack, and his grandfather, Frank, before him, Frank Beban will be remembered by the people of Nanaimo, the Queen Charlotte Islands, and indeed all of British Columbia, as a first-class logger, and a first-class guy.

Canadians knew of him as the man who fought with determination to protect his employees. Those of us who knew him called him "one in a million". As his business partner, Bill Verchere, has said: "Frank was no ordinary man, and he put the welfare of others before his own. Those who worked for his company were not employees. They were his friends."

Now that the South Moresby region is to become a new national park, Mr. Speaker, it would be fitting to remember the man and the family who did so much for the people of that region. Frank Beban cared for the Queen Charlottes as much as he cared for his crew. I think it would be fitting for the Government to rename Lyell Island Beban Island in tribute to a man we will miss.

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER TAX—USE OF REVENUE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when the federal Government decided to impose a special 15 per cent tax on softwood lumber exports to the United States, many experts predicted that this extra tax would place many Canadian lumber companies in an uncompetitive position in the U.S. lumber market. Of course, the United States requested such a tax in the first place to cut Canadian companies out of its market.

A recent casualty is the Ainsworth Company sawmill at Savona, British Columbia. This company has announced the August 15 closure of its stud mill. It states that it can no longer compete in the United States market. The result will be 120 employees laid off in a region of extremely high unemployment. For these 120 people to end up on unemployment insurance is unacceptable and unnecessary.

In 1987 the softwood tax revenues collected from the British Columbia companies will be more than $200 million. This money was intended to be used to promote new job opportunities for the displaced workers, such as those at Savona, British Columbia, through intensive and extensive silviculture programs, new market and production development, economic diversification, and special support for single-industry towns. This $200 million should be targeted for jobs, and not a general revenue fund as the British Columbia Government intends.

REFUGEES

WEAKNESSES IN ADMISSION SYSTEM

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, it is very clear that Canada's refugee determination process must be changed to block the flagrant abuses taking place. Canadians have demonstrated a remarkable generosity over many years to welcome warmly genuine refugees from all corners of the world. In recognition of this long-standing generosity, the people of Canada were awarded the Nansen Medal through the United Nations last fall.

However, many Canadians are outraged over the events of the past year, and more particularly the arrival of 174 persons on the shores of Nova Scotia a few weeks ago. These people obviously schemed with foreign and domestic immigration brokers to exploit the weaknesses of our current system. Many Canadians and landed immigrants had to wait years to obtain legal approval to create a new life in this wonderful country.

Canada expects to welcome at least 20,000 persons under legitimate refugee and humanitarian programs this year, and will assist them to settle in our communities. However, when it is estimated that over 70 per cent of persons claiming refugee status are not valid, then clearly changes must be made.

I urge the two opposition Parties to stop playing politics and listen to Canadians who want fair, responsible action now. I am confident that the legislation will not diminish our caring attitudes towards the very real needs of genuine refugees, but it will deal harshly with bogus refugees and the unscrupulous brokers involved. Let us get on with discussion and amendments, if required, and the passage of Bills C-55 and C-84.

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON—REPORTED EXPORT OF MACHINERY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the last question on the last sitting day the House of Commons dealt with the issue of Firestone in my riding of Hamilton East. There are 1,400 jobs at stake. The Minister has now agreed to allow the machinery from that company to leave Canada, without asking for the repayment to the federal Government of a $13.5 million grant which was paid by the taxpayers of Canada.

I have asked for a meeting with the Minister. I have received no reply. I have asked the Minister to conduct an inventory of all equipment sitting on the Firestone premises. The Firestone Company in Akron, Ohio, is in the process of closing the most productive plant in North America.

If the Government and the company expect the workers of Canada to believe our word when we say we will fight for them when we have a corporation which has the most productive workforce in the country and it is closed down, well, that is the result of free trade. That is the result of a Minister who has washed his hands of his responsibility. That is the result of a Government which does not care about 1,400 jobs in Hamilton East.

We are going to keep fighting. I think the Minister's treatment of this dossier is disgusting. It is incredible, and he should resign.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

ANNOUNCEMENT WELCOMED

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his cabinet colleagues—

An Hon. Member: Are you serious?

Mrs. Collins: That's right—for the announcement last week in Edmonton of the $1.2 billion Western Diversification Fund. I refer not only to the fund but to the establishment of the new Economic Development Agency for western Canada.

In Pacific Canada, in British Columbia, we certainly welcome this initiative. We are excited by the prospects that many of our small and medium-sized businesses will benefit from these funds. We will be encouraging our basic industries of forestry, fishing, and mining to add value to their products and will be looking toward new industry, tourism, high-technology and other kinds of industrial manufacturing to take advantage of these new funds.

Equally important is the role that the new Western Diversification Agency will play in ensuring that the interests of western Canada are clearly represented in the development of national economic policies and programs.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia I look forward to working with the new Minister responsible for western diversification to promote economic prosperity for British Columbia and all western Canada.

PENITENTIARIES

CONDITIONS IN STONY MOUNTAIN PENITENTIARY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, since March I have been in correspondence with the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) about conditions at Stony Mountain Penitentiary, and so far the Minister has been unwilling to change policies that are endangering the lives of guards and inmates. I have recently met with constituents of mine who work there, and I am convinced that unless action is taken we may well have another incident like the one in July, 1984, which led to the deaths of two guards.

The policies which most need review are, first, the contracting out of health care services, teaching services, and construction or repair jobs; second, reductions in post standards and security staff; and, third, the closing of the segregation unit and consequent mixing of inmates who should not be put together. This latter policy is all part of what is called management by risk. The only problem is that all the risk is borne by line staff, not by management.

At the management level, all that is happening due to reorganization is that more management positions are being created, while the burden and the stress on those who actually work with inmates are being increased.

What is happening in Stony Mountain is happening elsewhere in Canada, in Prince Albert for example, and the Minister should wake up before it is too late. The risk may not be his, but the responsibility will be. He and his officials have been warned by CSC employees. He has now been warned in Parliament. We hope that he will take heed, and soon, before an explosive situation is detonated.

IMPORTANCE OF MANITOBA'S EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES

Mr. George Minaker (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, in 1986 Manitoba exported $1.7 billion worth of goods, of which 82 per cent or $1.4 billion went to the United States. In the face of growing American protectionism, Manitoba needs to maintain and improve its access to the U.S. market.

Manitoba is five times more export oriented in manufacturing than any other prairie province. The province accounts for one-half of Canada's exports of agricultural machinery with 90 per cent going to the U.S., a third of bus and bus chassis, a quarter of outerwear clothing, and approximately 10 per cent of aerospace exports.

The bilateral discussions with the United States on a comprehensive trade agreement are vital to the economic future of our province. Events have shown that the status quo is not acceptable to either Canada or Manitoba.

New rules to guide trading practices between Canada and the U.S.A. will provide the security of access and the potential for trade expansion to enable Manitoba to develop its manufacturing base and invest further in its natural resources.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

OPPOSITION TO USE OF LAND AS SITE FOR GARBAGE INCINERATOR

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, last night some 500 people protested the proposal to build a garbage incinerator at Walkley Road and Russell Road in Ottawa.

I want to take this opportunity to express my disagreement with any plan which could result in the using of National Capital Commission land to be turned from the Greenbelt into a garbage belt. It is the responsibility of the NCC to protect and maintain the Greenbelt surrounding the National Capital.

We are proud of the Greenbelt, and we are proud of our city. Therefore I ask the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes) to state clearly that under no circumstances would he allow or permit the Greenbelt lands of the National Capital Commission to be used for a garbage incinerator or any other purpose, like a U.S. embassy.

DISASTERS

EDMONTON—EFFECT OF TORNADO

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in a few twisted, roaring, smashing moments much of Alberta's capital city, Edmonton, was transformed to rubble. Lives and homes were shattered. A city grieved, a province and a nation were stunned in unprecedented disbelief. A tornado had scoured a major Canadian metropolis. What lay behind was wreck and ruin. The results were tragic. In some cases lives were lost. In other instances nothing else remained except life itself.

The awesome power of nature and the staggering levels of loss of life and property are exhibited in a special supplement of the August 7 edition of the Edmonton Journal. Copies are available for all Members of Parliament. I thank the Edmonton Journal for making these supplements available for distribution.

The magnitude of tornado power is beyond comprehension. Loaded semi-trailer trucks are flung about like children's toys, multi-storey steel I-beam buildings are flattened in a few seconds, and people's homes and lives lie crushed and shattered.

If there is a silver lining in all tragedy, surely in this case it is the blessing of being Canadian. In the wake of the July 31 tornado, which shredded the lives of so many, there exists a specific characteristic that binds us all—we have again acted out the fact that we are the keepers of our brothers and sisters.

As powerful as a cyclone can be, which tears apart homes, makes swizzle sticks out of steel beams, and lifts and smashes oil tanks, it has not daunted the Canadian spirit of generosity. Albertans in general and Edmontonians in particular are forever thankful for the warm assistance received from Canadians everywhere.

The outpouring of assistance from all parts of Canada has been overwhelming and, as chairman of the Alberta caucus, I wish to express our heartfelt thanks for the generosity of Canadians and for the fortunate fact that we are Canadian.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TRANSFER OF ADMINISTRATIVE RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, early last month the head office of Indian and Northern Affairs Canada directed its Ontario regional office to close seven of 10 district offices next spring, overruling that office's recommendation of a gradual phase-out. The transfer of program administration and delivery to band governments and tribal councils is of course a process which we in the New Democratic Party support and promote as a fundamental move toward the eventual self-government of aboriginal communities.

However, the transfer of responsibilities in a unilateral, hasty, and simultaneous fashion will not meet the needs of aboriginal governments for a smooth transition and could instead disrupt services to aboriginal people as drastically as it will affect the careers of public servants.

What is required is a phased, co-ordinated, and carefully paced transfer of resources and responsibility which will allow the fair and equitable resolution of problems as they arise and give displaced public servants every opportunity to accept internal transfers, to initiate career moves, or to enter the service of aboriginal governments with appropriate arrangements for continuation of their benefits.

Ontario's aboriginal governments are willing to accept far wider responsibility, but not without the proper identification and allocation of resources adequate to their newly acquired tasks.

DISASTERS

EDMONTON TORNADO—CONDOLENCES AND ASSISTANCE TO VICTIMS

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express, on behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government of Canada, and I am sure on behalf of all Members of the House, our deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims and families of those who suffered during the Edmonton tornado on Friday, July 31. Tragically, 27 people lost their lives as a result of the tornado and approximately 200 were injured.

To those bereaved, our thoughts and heartfelt sympathies are with you at this sorrowful time. To those injured, we offer our best wishes for a full and speedy recovery.

Immediately upon hearing of this disaster, the Prime Minister of Canada telephoned Premier Getty expressing the condolences of the nation and offering the resources of the Canadian Government in providing whatever assistance was required. As well, the Prime Minister and I had the occasion to visit personally the area struck by the tornado, and witnessed directly the power and the fury of this terrible storm.

It is indeed difficult to find words that adequately describe the extent of the damage and the destruction caused by the tornado. The Prime Minister and I saw homes, trailers, rail cars and steel and wooden buildings twisted almost beyond recognition. Yet, in our conversations with those who endured the storm, we found that one thing had not been broken, the human spirit and the resilience of those determined to rebuild and to renew.

Mankind has not the means to prevent such natural disasters. However, we do have the ability and the responsibility to assist in the recovery when a disaster strikes.

Immediately following the tornado, the emergency planning teams from the civic, provincial and federal Governments swung into action. Resources were mobilized in an unprecedented, co-ordinated and co-operative manner.

For the federal Government's part, on-site actions were co-ordinated by Mr. Jim Hoffman, the Regional Director of Emergency Planning Canada. Numerous federal departments played a part including Canada Post, the Department of National Defence, Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Health and Welfare, Employment and Immigration, Industry, Science and Technology, and Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

Specifically, the federal Government made Department of National Defence helicopters and ambulances available to provincial officials to assist the medical response. As well, emergency housing was provided by Canada Mortgaging and Housing and immediate accommodation was provided in a quick and orderly fashion. Some 62 families were given accommodation in this manner.

A victim assistance centre involving all three levels of Government was opened on August 3 as a single-window centre to help individuals and families. The centre registered losses and property damage, assisted with housing needs, provided immediate clothing, food and emergency financial assistance, and arranged distribution of various federal payments such as family allowance, UIC and Old Age Security, as well as unemployment insurance registration.

A second centre was opened in Leduc on August 4 and a special centre to assist employees and employers whose businesses were damaged also opened on August 4. Federal financial assistance will be provided under the disaster financial assistance arrangements and through Industry, Science and Technology to help businesses re-establish and rebuild.

Throughout, co-operation with the provincial Government and civic officials has indeed been excellent. I want to express our gratitude to the Premier and the mayor and I also want to compliment the Hon. Dr. Ian Reid and the Hon. Ken Kowalski, the Alberta Ministers involved, for their efforts in ensuring a quick and co-operative response.

Canadians from coast to coast who saw the effects of this disaster on their television screens and in their newspapers have truly opened their hearts to the victims in a Canadian spirit of generosity and compassion. Whether it be those many volunteers who assisted in the immediate aftermath or those Canadians who have generously donated money, food and clothing, the response of individual Canadians has been truly remarkable and in the best tradition of Canadian generosity.

In closing, I wish to convey once again, on behalf of all government Members, our sincere and deepest sympathies to those who lost loved ones or suffered personal injury in this tragedy. I pledge, on behalf of the federal Government, to continue to provide all possible assistance to those rebuilding their lives, their homes and their businesses. We have already seen evidence of the determination and courage of Albertans in dealing with this tragic disaster. This Government will be there to help and assist in their efforts.

• (1430)

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians feel great sympathy for the people of Edmonton. We grieve particularly for those who lost family and friends in the disaster. In large part our country is formed psychologically by our climate and geography. As much as any people in the world we have reason to respect the awesome power of nature. While over the years Edmontonians have endured the challenge of severe winters, they could not have expected at that northern latitude that, out of nowhere, a violent, unpredictable tornado could lay waste part of their community. No amount of experience ever quite prepares any of us for a disaster of that magnitude.

Mr. Speaker, we find a measure of comfort in the fact that Canadians from coast to coast reacted generously to this situation of which the people of Edmonton were the victims.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) will of course have our support in any measures the federal Government takes to help alleviate the suffering of the people of Edmonton. We also want to assure Mayor Decore of our full support.

While we know that as human beings we can repair and rebuild our homes, and restore our roads, we can never recover those whom we have lost. Our hearts go out to those who lost family and loved ones and we pray that memories of happier times will sustain and console them in the very difficult moments which lie ahead.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of members of the NDP caucus to express our deepest sympathy and condolences to those who suffered during that very tragic day, July 31, in Edmonton. We feel for the families who suffered losses and for those who today lie injured in hospitals, as well as those trying to put their homes and families back together again.

One of the very impressive things which occurred as a result of the disaster was the way Albertans responded with an unprecedented amount of generosity and compassion to the victims of this disaster. That response was something to behold. I believe all of us were moved when we heard through the media about the generosity of individuals, families, communities and agencies coming together to assist those in need as a result of this tragic and violent natural phenomenon.

We are reminded by this disaster how violent nature can be and the rack and ruin which can occur to communities in a very few moments. While it is of course impossible for man to stop a natural disaster like this, we are able to respond and provide assistance for those who suffer. In this respect I would like to think that we will one day soon hear specific financial commitments by the Government so that those who are suffering as a result of this tragic situation will know that the federal Government will provide full financial support to help them get back on their feet.

I think this also points out the tremendous need for legislation to establish a fund which will automatically cost share with provincial or territorial Governments during these crises so that there is no question that immediate financial support is made available to assist those who have experienced tragic losses.

I also want to use this moment, and I am sure I speak for all Members of the House, to refer to the tragic situation on July 14 in Montreal. We are well aware of the tremendous flooding that occurred there which caused $229 million in losses. We again look forward to a commitment by the federal Government to provide funds to assist the 21,000 people who were victims of that serious flooding.

Again, to those in Montreal and in Edmonton, on behalf of the NDP caucus I extend our deepest sympathy and condolences to the victims and their families.

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members would want to rise for an appropriate minute's silence.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—BINDING DISPUTE RESOLUTION MECHANISM

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for two years now the federal Government has been selling out our country bit by bit, sector by sector, in the course of its free trade negotiations with the U.S. Leading American Senators are now reminding us once again that there will be no binding mechanism to solve trade disputes between our two countries, and there will be no exemption from American trade remedy law in order to satisfy Canada in these negotiations.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. Will he again guarantee to this House that there will be no trade deal with the U.S. unless there is a binding trade dispute mechanism and Canada is given meaningful exemption from trade remedy laws under the Act of 1974 and under current legislation now before the U.S. Congress?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think my right hon. friend would acknowledge that I have set out that view on many occasions in and out of this House regarding those kinds of provisions. We are working towards that end. Obviously there are different points of view concerning this among members of the U.S. Senate, as there are among Members of this House of Commons. The Government is pursuing the negotiations very actively attempting to secure a comprehensive agreement which will meet all the required provisions.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's voice is so soft that he does not really have an answer.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has dismantled our regional development programs to accommodate American interests during the free trade negotiations. We now find ourselves without a national program of regional development. The Government has totally abandoned Quebec. Is the Prime Minister prepared to sacrifice the development of Abitibi, Saguenay—Lac-Saint-Jean or Beauce just to please the Americans?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment rate in the Quebec regions mentioned by my hon. friend has been declining ever since this Government took office.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The current job creation rate is better than it was in the past, from 1980 to 1984. So I would suggest that in co-operation with the Quebec Government we are creating jobs at a relatively impressive rate, not fast enough but impressive still. As to policies of regional development, we are firmly convinced that regional development must be geared to regional needs. In the Atlantic and Western Canada regions, for example, our policy is such that instead of having bureaucrats in Ottawa who impose their will on the regions, the regions are now working with the federal Government to draft policies which apply directly to them.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, after peeling off the Western Rediversification Program, the Atlantic Opportunities Program and the Northern Ontario Program, we have a Minister with no department left.

I will give the Prime Minister another example of shaping legislation in order to satisfy our American friends in the course of these trade negotiations. We all know that the real reason Parliament was recalled was to pass legislation to inflict higher drug prices upon Canadians. That is the real reason.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister was not able to convince you three or four weeks ago, Mr. Speaker, and he tried another tack.

Are these trade negotiations really so important to the Prime Minister and his Government that he is willing to sacrifice our elderly and our sick and inflict upon them higher drug prices merely to keep these trade negotiations going?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think a couple of more weeks at the lake would have done the right hon. gentleman a lot of good.

An Hon. Member: A couple more years.

Mr. Mulroney: Someone says "a couple more years". Who knows?

The reason for the recall of Parliament is that Canada's immigration and refugee system, which is held in such high regard, was in the process of being abused. When it is abused it is diminished and unfairness creeps into the system. That unfairness then destroys what is an otherwise very valid national apparatus and international attraction.

We have asked parliamentarians to come back to deal with this very, very serious matter. We do not agree with those voices which suggest that we should turn ships away. That is unacceptable to us. However, the system itself must be cleansed of abuse.

I know that my right hon. friend will join with us, not in dilatory measures, in agreeing to conditions which will allow us to expedite this important piece of legislation through the House of Commons so that all Canadians can have the assurance that those abuses which diminish our system cease.

Mr. Gauthier: Give him a copy of the Bill.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE ON REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a question with the Prime Minister, but I will first offer the kindly suggestion that after his last statement he might be well advised to read Bill C-84 which his Minister of Employment and Immigration introduced this morning. He may find out exactly who wants to turn the ships away.

Officials in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, before their demise, produced a report which has now been released, or found out, which suggests that in every region of the country the free trade arrangement with the United States will substantially undermine key industries, resulting in enormous job losses in every single region and that, furthermore, the ability of both the federal and provincial Governments to deliver regional development programs will be undermined by a free trade deal.

Taking into account that that is the conclusion of federal officials, can the Prime Minister promise that before any deal is signed with the Americans the Government will properly divulge what the costs of all those job losses will be and what the impact upon all the regional development programs will be so that Canadians will know what to expect by way of a free trade arrangement?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not think I needed to add, in my response to my hon. friend with regard to turning ships back, "without lawful authorization".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Once the House has granted its authority, if it does, that will, of course, become an entirely appropriate gesture for the people of Canada to exercise. However, without that authorization that, of course, is a different matter.

With regard to the specific question, my hon. friend will agree that all of the documentation which has been established so far, from the Economic Council of Canada, the C.D. Howe Institute, the research institutes and think-tanks, concurs in the judgment, as best we can see, that a comprehensive free trade arrangement would result in more jobs in virtually all sectors of the economy.

As I recollect, the Economic Council of Canada is of the view that some 350,000 new jobs would result from a comprehensive agreement. I think most people would agree that that is the case. There may be divergent minority opinion from time to time to which we will be happy to listen. However, the Government of Canada is clearly of the view, based on objective data, that a comprehensive agreement would result in many more jobs for all Canadians.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF INFORMATION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question will deal with one of those divergent views, that being a divergent view produced by federal officials in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. They have gone through a list, province by province, detailing a substantial number of industries which will experience loss and require major adjustments to deal with those losses across the country while, at the same time, losing the power to do so because of a free trade deal.

Before a deal is signed we are trying to get the Government to provide Canadians with their own information, to give Canadians the kind of information which the Government itself has.

If the Government has information which details the costs and prices which will have to be paid, why will it not publicly table that information so that Canadians will know what is going on before the Government signs a deal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have indicated many times that if the Government of Canada concludes that there is a trade deal which is in the national interest, we shall bring it forward for the consideration of Parliament. That has always been the view. I have expressed that many times.

If, at that point in time, my hon. friend has a divergent point of view or an objective study on which he would care to base his opinion, that would be the appropriate time to bring it forward. However, we are in the process of entering the last two months of negotiation and we believe that a deal can be concluded if it is a good one in the national interest. Otherwise, as I have indicated many times, it will not be brought forward. If it is brought forward for consideration, there will be ample opportunity for debate.

PRINCIPAL TRUST—BANKRUPTCY DECLARATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister will know that yesterday in Alberta the Principal Group declared bankruptcy. This follows on the heels of the bankruptcies of two other financial institutions affiliated with Principal. The major problem is that literally thousands of Canadians, most of whom are in western Canada but spread as far east as Nova Scotia, will be terribly affected by these bankruptcies.

Considering that literally thousands of these Canadians thought they were protected by insurance similar to what they would have had if their deposits had been in one of the chartered banks, and considering that two provincial Governments in the west have begun an inquiry into this situation, will the Minister tell us what the federal Government is doing? Is it participating jointly in these inquiries? Is it taking some kind of independent action?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Hon. Member's question. I want to join him in expressing my concern with the plight of the investors who are being affected by the bankruptcy. Earlier, we expressed sympathy for the other tragedy in Alberta. These types of tragedies are equally burdensome and worrisome.

The CDIC has done everything it can along the way to be helpful in this situation. I am very pleased to tell the Hon. Member that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation hopes to be able to reimburse all depositors in Principal Trust within a few weeks, in terms of those covered by insurance.

In terms of the two investment companies, the Member will know that these were investment companies under provincial jurisdiction. They were not deposit-taking institutions and were not covered. The CDIC has offered administratively to help them in any way and that offer still stands.

GOVERNMENT ACTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for his answer. He chose his words with care. He knows very well that no matter what action is now being taken by certain federal institutions, there are thousands of Canadians of moderate income, and indeed many of low income, including boy scouts in the country, who will be affected very disastrously by these failures.

The Government is moving toward more deregulation which could exacerbate the problem rather than improve it. The Attorney General of Nova Scotia has said that there is a need for consistency in securities legislation across the country. What will the Minister do to bring about that desirable consistency to protect average Canadian families?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, there are not enough occasions in the House for me to remind Members of the policy announcement of December 18. That announcement put in place a regime of corporate governance and investment rules for federally-regulated financial institutions which, if followed, I suggest would virtually prohibit this sort of tragedy. If the provinces, under their jurisdiction, would follow the lead that we are taking, I believe that would answer his question. They would see that very few cases of this nature would occur if they would follow the guidelines that we will set by example at the federal government level.

Let me add that financial institutions are custodial as far as I am concerned. They have other people's money, deposits, and policies. Therefore, the Government's role is to be very careful in a custodial relationship toward those institutions. I hope all provinces will do their best through their consumer protection to follow the lead that this Government is trying to establish not only with the legislation currently before the House but with the rest of its policy of December 18.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETINGS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, again the Minister chose his words with care. He said that if the provinces put in place the kind of legislation that the federal Government is proposing all will be well. However, the problem is that they may not do so.

Canadians in the provinces which are covered by provincial jurisdictional concern do not want wishful thinking from the federal Government, they want concrete action that will protect them.

Therefore, just as when the federal Government took initiative on the question of medicare to get all provinces to come together to agree on a national program of medicare, will the federal Government take some initiative and request a meeting with its provincial counterparts and try to develop the kind of legislation on a national basis that is relevant in provincial jurisdictional areas that the Minister himself has talked about? Why not show some leadership at the federal level?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, we had this meeting on December 5, 1986. We had another meeting in the spring, and we will be having another meeting in the fall.

The federal Government has been holding very important meetings with the provinces on these very questions.

Second, if the Hon. Member is suggesting that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation should be in charge of all provincially-regulated institutions—

Mr. Broadbent: That is not what I said.

Mr. Hockin: If you are suggesting that, you are making an effacable change in terms of party policy and this Government's policy.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION'S ANALYSIS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister has chosen his words very carefully and will know that the Principal Group Limited owns First Investors, 100 per cent of Principal Savings and Trust, the Associated Investors. In turn, all were owned by Collective Securities Limited and 80.5 per cent of those shares are owned by one individual.

Will the Minister confirm that in the last 12 months CDIC did an analysis and a financial administration study of Principal Savings and Trust? Will he confirm that this audit has been done, and produce the record for the House?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Inspector General of Banks do an ongoing analysis of financial institutions, especially those that are having difficulties. I would expect that a close and regular analysis has been done every year, not just in the past year.

Mr. Dingwall: I hope the Minister will table that report by CDIC because the linkages to First Investors, Associated Investors with Principal Savings and Trust are obvious and clear.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. Was the CDIC so blind in its investigation of Principal Savings and Trust that it did not bother to look at First Investors who stamped on the bank accounts of various investors: "Member of Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation"? Is this not gross negligence by his department and CDIC with regard to this investigation?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, nothing is more fundamental for the Hon. Member to understand. As far as we know, each of these investment contracts made by those investment companies was stamped and indicated that they were not insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Company. We have not had an example otherwise. These are not deposit-taking institutions. These are investor institutions and they were so stamped.

DISASTERS

EDMONTON TORNADO—FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In his statement to the House earlier this afternoon he said that federal financial assistance will be provided under the disaster financial assistance arrangements and through the Ministry of Science and Technology to help businesses re-establish and rebuild. Will the Minister indicate how much money the federal Government is prepared to make available to the people of Edmonton to rebuild their homes and communities?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I think at the first indication of the disaster the Prime Minister offered the resources of the federal Government to assist in any way, shape or form. There is a formula under a disaster fund emergency arrangements Act which clearly provides funding from the federal Government.

In addition, in consultation and co-operation with the Alberta Department of Economic Development, we are assessing the magnitude of the damage with the business community and determining what type of assistance would be available. That has not been completed, but the Government stands prepared to work out in a co-operative manner such assistance that might be helpful in terms of re-establishing those businesses.

MECHANISM FOR DISTRIBUTION OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, we wait with interest to hear what the value of the assistance will be because I think the people of Edmonton want to know what is available to them. Is the Government prepared to re-evaluate the mechanism for providing disaster relief for areas like Montreal, Edmonton, Hornpayne or wherever to ensure that there is a permanent fund put in place and money is immediately available under established rules so that people will not have any further anxiety about what is facing them?

• (1500)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could answer this question as the Minister responsible for emergency preparedness. There is an agreement between the federal Government and all of the provinces which guarantees to any province affected by a disaster like this that, after the province contributes more than $1 per capita in disaster relief, the federal Government will contribute as well. As soon as more than $1 per capita is spent, between $1 and $3 per capita, the federal Government contributes some 50 per cent, between $3 and $5 the federal Government contributes 75 per cent, and if it goes over $5 the federal Government contributes some 90 per cent. That formula is there for everyone.

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—OPPORTUNITY TO PROPOSE AMENDMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

According to many constitutional experts, including the National Association of Women and the Law and LEAF, the Meech Lake Accord contains a serious flaw that could be fatal to equal rights for women and minorities in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Justice would let us know whether today, on behalf of Canada's women and minorities, he would be willing to move and defend an amendment that would clarify an ambiguous text that puts the equality of women and minorities in this country in jeopardy.

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member which allows me the opportunity to deny categorically the implication of the question. Our legal advice is just to the contrary. The rights of women in this country are not in any way diminished by the provisions of the Meech Lake Accord. Indeed, there is unanimity with the respect to the desires of all Canadians to make sure the rights of women in Canada are fully protected. This Government has been giving leadership in that area.

I say to the Hon. Member that while the committee is going on, as we are now sitting, there is an opportunity for Members of Parliament and Canadians generally to participate in a very important process, to understand fully the implications of this particular Accord. I conclude by saying to the Hon. Member that her assessment with respect to the rights of women is not correct.

TRIBUNALS' POWERS

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister saying he does not want to take this step and that it is the Government's policy to be ambiguous?

Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Justice could inform the House whether it is government policy to let the courts determine and decide whether women and minorities in Canada are entitled to equal rights in this country. Is it the Government or the courts that are going to decide?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of our country does provide for the equality of women. The Meech Lake Accord does nothing at all to diminish the rights of women in Canada. I ask the Hon. Member if she is indicating the position of her Party with respect to this matter that this Accord should be rejected?

Is it not an important principle that Quebec should be brought into the Constitution,—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —that we should in fact be urging acceptance of this Accord? I ask the Hon. Member to consider her position.

DISASTERS

EXTENT OF GOVERNMENT'S COMMITMENTS

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, following the rainstorm in Montreal which caused nearly $230 million worth of damage and took one human life, the federal Government promised to contribute about $17 million.

Considering the extent of the disaster, could the federal Government show some leadership and increase the amount it is willing to commit to compensate the people of Montreal?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is well aware, an agreement exists between the provinces and the federal Government which provides for federal funding in such circumstances. In July I wrote a letter to Mr. Gilles Rocheleau, Quebec Minister of Supply and Services, informing him of our intention to provide the necessary funds.

EFFECT OF AGREEMENT ON QUEBEC

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Finally, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister guarantee before the House that the people of Montreal will not receive less, proportionally, than the people of Edmonton? Could the Government, could the Minister guarantee that the agreement concluded with the provinces is equally fair to Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta and Quebec?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the agreement is the same for all Canadians. It provides the same treatment for all Canadians across Canada. We have an agreement with all the provinces, and the terms are the same for each province.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister.

This morning the Prime Minister swore in his MIST, or mess I should say. I should like to ask the Prime Minister—given the fact that he has announced a plan for Western Canada, a plan for the Atlantic, a plan for Northern Ontario—how he can justify leaving Quebec in a vacuum, leaving Eastern Ontario without a program? What is the policy of this Government with respect to regional economic development? And why was Quebec ignored?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Quebec was not ignored at all. My friend mentions the Province of Ontario.

Unemployment figures were released last Friday and they indicate among other things that the unemployment rate in the Province of Ontario has now dropped to 6 per cent, which is quite a remarkable job creation effort. So I should think that the situation is relatively good in the Province of Ontario

Quebec as well did experience a rather significant economic upswing. We have been holding important discussions with the Quebec Government over the past three years, discussions which involve the new Minister whom I commend for his excellent work. We intend to continue working with the Quebec Government at an unprecedented rate to speed up the job creation process in all regions of Quebec.

SITUATION OF QUEBEC

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister. He says he is going to co-operate with the Government of Quebec. But does the Prime Minister realize that as federal Prime Minister he must make sure that the fight against regional disparities continues? His own DRIE Minister at the time had announced last June 5 that DRIE had sufficient funds, both to honour commitments made during the previous year and to make new ones for this year.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister ought to know that the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion misled industry leaders and various interest groups in Quebec. The President of the Association des commissaires industriels du Québec . . .

Mr. Speaker: Please. Would the Hon. Member ask his question, please?

Mr. Lapierre: I would like to ask the Prime Minister why he does not show any concern for regions like Beauce, the Eastern Townships, Châteauguay, Valleyfield, Saguenay, Lac-Saint-Jean? Why does the Prime Minister have different standards? Some regions are favoured while others are completely ignored.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely appalling and even disgraceful to hear comments on this subject, particularly from this colleague who implies that Quebec has been ignored, when we can recall for instance that a regional economic development agreement of nearly $800 million was signed with Quebec, an unprecedented initiative. In addition, more than 1,300 projects have been approved since September 1984 under regional industrial development programs.

Mr. Speaker, I am not mentioning the assistance we gave Petromont, Domtar, Canadair, GM, Sainte-Thérèse, Hyundai and a lot of others. When I am told that Quebec is being ignored, that Quebec is badly represented, Mr. Speaker, I think the people of Quebec will understand.

As to his latest remarks, Mr. Speaker, over the weekend when we were in fact accused of lying, I wish my colleague would rise in the House and deal with that just so I might respond. I can tell him that more than 220 projects valued at $240 million have been approved since June 1987. Now let anyone tell me that the Department of Regional Economic Development is dead.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—EFFECT ON ONTARIO INDUSTRIES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Is the Minister aware of a DRIE report which states that free trade will cost the jobs of ordinary Canadians in Ontario in the areas of automotives, tires, automotive parts, major appliances, construction and material handling, industrial electrical equipment, electrical wire, textiles, wine, beer, household furniture, toys and games, motion pictures, sound recordings and publishing—the list goes on—and that the effects will be worse in southwestern Ontario? If the Minister is aware of this report why has she not informed the people of Ontario and the Members of the House of the severe implications of free trade for Ontario?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for the Department has answered that question. I have not read the report. It has no official status with the Government.

I have read the reports of the Economic Council of Canada, Informetrica, and the University of Toronto, all of which have indicated that the benefits to Canada from a free trade pact with the U.S. by far outweigh the problems we face with increased protectionism down there. The people who will benefit the most will be the people of southwestern Ontario.

ONTARIO MINISTRY OF AGRICULTURE'S REPORT

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will see the following as benefits. Has she read the report of the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture which states that farm cash receipts in Ontario will decline by 50 per cent: $170 million for dairy farmers; $127 million for poultry and egg farmers; $45 million for fruit and vegetable growers; and $24 million for grain and oilseed producers, for a total loss of $500 million? Does that not say to the Minister that it is about time to stop the lunacy of the free trade negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I think the House can take into account that in the final two months of the free trade negotiations there will be rumours, election speeches, leaks, innuendoes, and just plain mischief of the kind we have just heard from the Hon. Member. I do not intend to comment on that kind of loose allegation at a time when we are in crucial negotiations.

GOVERNMENT EXPENDITURES

TRAVEL UNDERTAKEN BY MINISTER OF ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, who is probably off travelling some place, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns government waste. Does the Prime Minister approve of the behaviour of his Minister of Energy who went to Washington and Vienna in September, Cannes in October, Washington and Caracas in November, California in January, Switzerland in February, Bogota in April, and he spent $13,000 going to Paris in the month of May of 1987? Does the Prime Minister approve of that type of expenditure? If not, what is he going to do about it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is aware I am sure that the Minister is obligated to travel in his capacity as Chairman of the International Atomic Energy Agency, the International Energy Agency which he has chaired. He met with the International Atomic Energy Agency after the Chernobyl disaster. He has travelled extensively to defend Canada's multilateral and bilateral interests, particularly with respect to the very volatile petroleum market.

I am sure that the Hon. Member would want our Minister to take an active interest in world energy affairs. I think he has done so with a great deal of competence and leadership. I think that the Hon. Member should be complimenting the Minister rather than hurling cheap shots across the floor at him.

PAYMENT OF EX-MINISTER'S LEGAL FEES

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question also relates to government waste and in particular to the Government's legal aid program for ex-cabinet Ministers. Last month Canadians were outraged to learn that the taxpayers of Canada are paying a total of $650,000 in legal fees for the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. That relates to $7,831 per sitting day. How can the Prime Minister justify this outrageous decision of his Government, this rip-off at taxpayers' expense? Can he indicate whether this means that the Government of Canada will be paying the legal fees of the ex-Minister, the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered in the House before. The precedent to which the Hon. Member has referred was long established by the previous Government, the Liberal administration.

ENERGY

BOW VALLEY CORPORATION—PROPOSED PURCHASE BY BRITISH GAS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I too have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources who has surely given new meaning to the phrase "mass transit". In his absence I will ask my question of the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister will be aware that British Gas proposes to buy Bow Valley, a very important Canadian energy company. The press secretary to the Minister of Energy said that the deal runs counter to the Government's policy that healthy oil companies may not be bought up by foreigners. Is that still Canadian government policy? If it is, how does the Government propose to treat this proposed deal between British Gas and Bow Valley?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are of course aware of the facts described by the Hon. Member. However, we have yet to receive all the details of the proposed transaction. In any case, as the Minister responsible for Investment Canada, we must ensure that the transaction will provide a net benefit for Canadians, in terms of the energy policy announced by my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

[English]

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. He will be aware that Investment Canada, which was mentioned, recently approved the takeover of a Canadian utility, West Kootenay Power, by an American utility. We have sold out oil companies, gas companies, water rights and electricity rights. I want to ask the Prime Minister who saw the results of the by-elections the following question. Does he want to go down in Canadian history with the political epitaph: "The man who presided over the sell-out of the Canadian energy industry"?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when I became Prime Minister we had witnessed a period in which the energy industry in western Canada had been devastated by the National Energy Program. The NDP and the Liberals will go down in history as the authors of that devastation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can tell my hon. friend that he should have learned a long time ago—and I know that my right hon. friend will agree with me on this—that by-elections do not general elections make. The Leader of the Opposition and I agree fully on that.

I want to tell my hon. friend that although his NDP colleagues are trying to squeeze him out of his seat it is a good time to leave since, when we issue a writ, we will curl his hair.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PRINCIPAL TRUST—BANKRUPTCY APPLICATION

Mr. W. Paul McCrossan (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. It also concerns the Principal Group which filed for bankruptcy yesterday.

One of the group's companies, Principal Trust, was insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Since the group's financial difficulties were well-publicized over the last six weeks, can the Minister assure the House that his officials moved quickly enough to avoid loss to the CDIC? Or has there been a run on the financial institution over the last six weeks leading to a substantial deterioration in the quality of the company's assets, with tens of millions of dollars of losses to both the CDIC and to depositors?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to the Hon. Member's question as precisely as I can.

As far as the timing of the bankruptcy is concerned, deposits at the Principal Savings and Trust Co. Ltd. had decreased 7 per cent since the failure of the investors groups.

In further answer to the Hon. Member's question, I also should tell him that there has been no increase in insured deposits since that time. Therefore, the CDIC's exposure has not changed at all. It is too early to determine the final cost to the CDIC, as the liquidation procedure has not yet begun.

As I stated earlier, it is hoped that the CDIC will be able to start reimbursing depositors within three weeks for those that they cover. I remind the Hon. Member that these two investor groups were under provincial jurisdiction, and they have had their response from the provincial authorities.

SOVEREIGNTY

CANADIAN AIRSPACE—PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the Minister of Transport, I have a question for the Prime Minister. He may recall that last March in reply to a question by the Hon. Member for Windsor West, the Secretary of State gave a rather evasive reply as to whether or not Canada would oppose the flights of plutonium radioactive material from France to Japan across the Arctic.

Will the Prime Minister give a clear and conclusive commitment here today that Canada will register a strong opposition to these proposed flights, as we are getting very close to the deadline?

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): In short, Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague opposite that there will be no overflights of Canada without the full permission of Canada, and the full application of international and domestic law that may affect those flights.

PATENT ACT

USE OF SECTION 19

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In defending the Government's action to amend Canada's drug patent laws, the Minister has referred to generic drug manufacturers as, among other things, thieves, et cetera. Will the Minister explain to the House why the Government issued a policy bulletin dated June, 1987, which will continue as government policy to use Section 19 of the Patent Act, not only to steal people's patent inventions, but even to the extent of assigning them to other manufacturers who have applied for a government contract? I would ask the Minister to explain to the House who is stealing what, and where is that government policy consistent?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what I was quoting yesterday at the press conference were remarks by Dr. Polyani, Canada's newest Nobel Prize winner. Dr. Polyani stated on the Morningside program on CBC radio that for Canada to adopt a policy that other countries do the research and that we simply import and duplicate that technology is equivalent to being a burglar. Those were Dr. Polyani's words. He further stated that, to be a good burglar, some research still has to be done so that you know the real gems from the false ones.

I am asking the NDP if it is their policy that Canada should continue to be a burglar—to use Dr. Polyani's words—and let the rest of the world do the research, or does the NDP wish to see Canadian scientists do that research here in Canada?

DEPARTMENTAL BULLETIN

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): My supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. After making that statement, could the Minister tell the House why in June, 1987, a government Department issued a policy bulletin which instructed its Department to continue using Section 19 of the Patent Act to use other people's inventions totally arbitrarily? Could the Minister explain that to the Canadian people?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): If the New Democratic Party has now come to the view that we should increase patent protection for Canadian inventors, I welcome the change of heart. If the Member would pass over the document in question and would like to participate in an amendment to the law that will strengthen the protection that we provide to Canadian scientists, I welcome this remarkable change on the road to Damascus, and would appreciate his assistance in making the change.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior. In view of the hour, I would request that the Hon. Member ask only one question.

SMALL BUSINESSES

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT—CONSULTATION PROCESS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism.

In July the Minister of State announced a six-month consultation process with native people across the country concerning native economic development, and I say to him well done. However, a briefing note prepared for the Minister of Indian Affairs in that same month called for recommendations on native economic development to be in the hands of the Prime Minister by October. That is a full three months before the consultation process is to be completed. Therefore, native leaders are referring to a bogus and a meaningless consultation process. I ask the Minister of State, is not this elaborate announcement of his nothing more than a sham, an empty gesture, and just a phoney PR pitch?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): That is probably what the Hon. Member would like natives in this country to believe. It is not at all a sham. This consultation process had been promised by the Government. The Prime Minister stated clearly in 1984 that these programs would not be touched without full consultation with natives in Canada. We have engaged in that process. We have the full co-operation of the native groups across Canada. That process will take place.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): It is not myself that is trying to convince the native people about the sham of this process. They, themselves, have asserted this through their various organizations.

I turn to the Minister of Indian Affairs. In that same briefing note that I referred to earlier, the Minister reveals that the amalgamation of native economic programs is to go forward almost immediately. Last Friday the native leadership described the Minister as being untrustworthy for not advising them of this new scheme. Why is the Minister proceeding with this approach without taking into his confidence and trust the native leadership of the country?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Hon. Member is aware of the Task Force on Economic Development from DIAND and I am sure he is also aware of the recommendations that were put forward. I wish to refer to one of them.

One was the single agency concept proposed by the Ontario Indian Advisory Board in February, 1985. In June, 1987, an AFN National Assembly resolution contained the following assessment, that "federal initiatives to date have further entangled the First Nations in a complex web . . . . short-sightedness and jurisdictional disputes—federal Departments responsible for supporting First Nations' economic development are unable to effectively col-ordinate their activities."

I assume, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to a briefing note prepared for myself. I have not seen it, and I do not know what he is talking about. I can tell the Hon. Member that, along with my colleague and other colleagues, we have to address the desires and needs of the Indian people in economic development. That is exactly what the Government is going to do.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the House that there will be one more question.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE HEARINGS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House on Justice and Solicitor General. Regardless of where they stand on the question of capital punishment, all Canadians are interested in seeing immediate reform of our criminal justice system, and in particular reform of sentencing and parole. The Chairman has indicated that his committee will be studying these issues and making a recommendation.

In the light of the concerns that have been expressed in the House and across the country in the capital punishment debate, and in the light of the comments of the Hon. Minister of Justice that Canadians have lost faith in our criminal justice system, will the Chairman give the House his undertaking to commence those hearings and that study immediately?

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in this important area, as he says, an interest which is increasingly shared by many Canadians.

Last month I wrote to hundreds of individuals and groups active in the criminal justice field. I invited them to submit briefs to our committee by the end of September.

Certainly if it becomes apparent that the House will be sitting for some weeks this summer, I intend to call a meeting of the committee soon in order that we can start the important work which the committee has before it.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the permission of the House to revert to Routine Proceedings and Questions on the Order Paper.

At the time this matter was called earlier today my documentation was not complete. I appreciate that the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) was upset in that he waited around for the answer and I was not able to deliver it. However, as I undertook to do, I am prepared to answer the questions now if the House would give its consent to revert to Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 148, 150, 152, 154, and 155.

[Text]

IMPACT OF PESTICIDES ON ENVIRONMENT

Question No. 148—Mr. Caccia:

1. For the fiscal year 1986-87, were funds allocated to assess the impact of pesticides on the environment in the budget of the Department of the Environment and, if so, in what amount?

2. For the fiscal year 1987-88, was the budget increased and, if so (a) by what amount (b) in what manner will it be spent and, in particular, will the number of person years be increased and what are the specific positions, responsbilities and numbers (c) is the increase (i) new money (ii) internal reallocation of existing funds and, if so, what programs and person years will be affected (d) in what manner will the increase be spent on (i) research (ii) scientists' salaries (iii) support (iv) travel (v) other items?

3. For the fiscal year 1988-89, will the budget be increased and, if so, by what estimated amount?

Hon. Tom McMillan (Minister of the Environment): 1. Yes, $3.5 million.

2. Yes. (a) $900,000 (operating funds).

(b) The budget will be spent to:

Evaluate the environmental impact of pesticides submitted for registration under the Pest Control Products Act;

Undertake the re-evaluation of in-use pesticides under the Pest Control Products Act;

Conduct environmental monitoring of in-use pesticides to determine their presence, levels, trends and effects;

Undertake research on the environmental impact of pesticides used and the transport of fate of pesticides in the environment.

The number of person-years will not be increased.

(c) (i) Yes (ii) No.

(d) (i) Critical review of public literature on pesticides; analytical work; protocol and guideline development. (ii) N/A, (iii) N/A, (iv) N/A, (v) N/A.

3. The 1988/89 budget has not yet been finalized.

MILITARY PERSONNEL RELEASED IN 1986

Question No. 150—Mr. Howie:

In 1986, were any military personnel released from the Canadian Armed Forces and, if so, how many?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes, 5,980 military members.

HALIFAX COMMONWEALTH GAMES SOCIETY

Question No. 152—Mr. Boudria:

1. Did the government offer a grant to the City of Halifax or any other group in the Halifax area for the specific purpose of preparing a proposal to attract the 1994 Commonwealth Games to that city and, if so, what was the amount and to whom was the grant given?

2. Did other cities receive similar benefits and, if so, which cities and in what amounts?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. The 1994 Halifax Commonwealth Games Society, the incorporated group seeking to bring the 1994 Commonwealth Games to Halifax, applied for assistance under the Canada-Nova Scotia Subsidiary Planning Agreement, which allows cost-sharing between the two Governments on studies related to economic development in Nova Scotia. Inasmuch as the application met all the criteria for funding under the program a postitve recommendation was given by DRIE and the provincial Government.

In order to ensure that the federal Government would not be favouring any one candidate over any other through programs accessible only to certain regions of the country, Fitness and Amateur Sport officials, upon hearing of the application, intervened requesting that no federal support be given. DRIE officials agreed with the position of FAS and the application for assistance was not approved and no federal funds were given.

2. Fitness and Amateur Sport has made no financial contribution to any of the bidding municipalities. To the best knowledge of FAS, no other federal government department has made any grant or contribution to any of the nine candidates.

ASSISTANCE TO NEW BRUNSWICK DAIRY FARMERS

Question No. 154—Mr. Howie:

In 1986, did the government pay production assistance to dairy farmers in New Brunswick and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, $4,569,108.

NUMBER OF PERSONNEL—CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 155—Mr. Howie:

On January 1, 1987, by rank, what number of persons were serving in the regular force of the Canadian Armed Forces?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

Total Strength All ranks	86,302
Total Strength—Officers	17,795
General	2
Lieutenant-General	10
Major-General	31
Brigadier-General	88
Colonel	365

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Questions Nos. 134 and 143 could be made Orders for Returns, these returns would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Questions Nos. 134 and 143 be deemed to have been made Orders for Returns?

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 7338).

Mr. Caldwell: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I am sure that she, like the rest of the Members of Parliament in this Chamber, has been very busy answering the telephone and her mail over the past couple of weeks regarding the immigration policy, especially as it pertains to refugees.

I think the message we received, especially in my area of Essex—Kent, was that our constituents want the policy tightened up and tightened up reasonably fast. Of course that is why we are back in the Chamber today.

The Hon. Member will know that we are now debating an amendment at this time which calls for the policy not to be debated at the present time but to be debated six months hence. I am wondering how her constituents would react if we waited for six months.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that my colleague has brought that matter to my attention. As I am sure my colleagues are aware, we are actually debating the motion put forward by the Opposition that Bill C-55 should be hoisted for six months. My constituents in Capilano find that incredible, totally incredible. Most people do not follow the proceedings of this Chamber very carefully. In most cases I would have to mention to people that this had happened, that the Liberals in the first part of the debate immediately asked for a six-month hoist on this legislation, and that the NDP apparently supported it.

That is not what Canadians want. I think my colleagues across the House must be totally out of touch with public concerns on the issue. Canadians want action now. They want fairness, as I discussed in my speech earlier, but they want action and they want the legislation to be passed expeditiously. This is why I ask my colleagues in all Parties to work quickly to get this piece of legislation through all stages.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I should like to pose a question to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). As she probably knows, the United Nations Commission on Refugees has given an aide-mémoire to the Government suggesting that Bill C-55 contravenes the convention on refugees. Amnesty International, the Canadian Bar Association, and all refugee organizations and church organizations in Canada have said the same thing, that the pre-screening provisions and appeal provisions of Bill C-55 are in direct contravention with the international obligations we have signed. They are in direct contravention with the Charter of Rights. Those statements have been made by anybody who knows anything about the business itself. Those statements have been made publicly.

The Hon. Member will also know that members of our Party have said that if the Government was prepared to make amendments to those two key items in Bill C-55 it could gain immediate acceptance and quick passage.

The Hon. Member should take into account all the evidence and weight coming from the United Nations, Amnesty International, the Commons committee including a majority of Members from her own Party, the Plaut Commission, the churches, and the refugee organizations, which say that with one or two amendments to Bill C-55 it would then be acceptable. There could then be a consensus in the country; the Opposition has said that it would agree to it. Would the Hon. Member also agree that those amendments should be made and that therefore we could give total, quick, and immediate passage to the Bill within the next 24 hours and meet the requirements she says her constituents want?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my understanding that the United Nations Refugee Agency has not said that it would violate but that there is a possibility that it might.

I think one should look at the international comparison. If all these people are so upset by what we are proposing, in my mind it is far more fair and generous than the systems in place in Sweden, West Germany, France, Denmark, the Netherlands, the United Kingdom, and the United States.

We are providing for the initial screening. We are providing for the possibility of hearings, due process, and return only to a safe country, which is determined by Order in Council. There are lots of provisions to make changes to meet differing situations.

Good heavens, I cannot think of any more safeguards which need to be in a Bill like this one, while at the same time ensuring that we get rid of illegal immigrants, people who abuse the system and try to enter the country illegally.

I am satisfied with the Bill, and certainly a comparison with every other western industrialized country would show that we are doing a tremendous job.

Mr. Axworthy: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) after recognizing the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, in her remarks before lunch the Hon. Member indicated that she had written to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) some time ago, that she urged him to call Parliament together to deal with this question, and that she welcomed the fact that we had been brought back. If the matter is so important, if the issue must be dealt with so quickly, why did the Government not introduce the Bill before May 5? Why did we get one part of a day, three hours of debate on June 18, if it is so important? Why was there delay on the part of the Government?

I also want to ask the Hon. Member a second question. Just over a year ago a group of Tamils came to Canada in exactly the same way as the Sikhs about whom she and other people are so upset. When they came to Canada the Prime Minister welcomed them and said that they would be treated fairly, with compassion, and in a humane way.

What has changed? We see here that the Government has no policy at all. It will go in any direction which it thinks the public will, because it is so concerned about doing what it hopes people will support.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I find it interesting that my colleague and some of his colleagues want to keep talking about the past when I am here to talk about what we need to do right now.

It would have been nice had the legislation come through more quickly, but I know there was a long process of consultation with all the groups my hon. colleague mentioned earlier and with the lawyers to ensure that it was legally correct and complied with the Charter of Rights. Obviously all this took time.

When it was introduced in May, as has already been indicated, the first response was a six-month hoist. It was evident that the co-operation of the opposition Parties was not to be forthcoming in the limited time we had.

In terms of the Canadian public, it was upset last year when the first boat load came. I remember it well. However, what has happened now is that they are even angrier. There is a fear that this can happen over and over again, that we do not have the tools in place to remedy the situation. They are demanding, as I am demanding, that we get those tools in place, that we get Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 in place so that we have control over the borders of the country.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) that there was a time when Canada took pride in its leadership on refugee matters. Canada provided new standards to which the world would respond. For that reason, we were awarded a prize for exemplary conduct. To compare Canada with other countries does not impress us because there was a time when we felt Canada showed leadership in this area and did not follow.

The Hon. Member said that the Bill took time because of the consultation process. Does consultation not also mean listening and responding? If time was taken to consult with all the groups I mentioned, why were they not heard? Why were their objections not responded to? Why were the changes recommended by every single reputable organization involved in refugee matters totally rejected by the Government? Why did the Government take the perverse, reactionary way it has taken when the weight of opinion around the world and in Canada was that we could solve the refugee problem expeditiously within three months and still retain our rights and obligations under the covenant? Why did the Government go so wrong?

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, first, Canada does have a good reputation with respect to refugees and it will continue to have a good reputation.

Mr. Axworthy: It used to have.

Mrs. Collins: In fact, this year we will be accepting up to 12,000 government-sponsored refugees, and of course refugees are sponsored privately through churches and organizations. There is no limit on privately sponsored refugees and these refugees go through the proper channels for dealing with refugees. Indeed, we are and will continue to be one of the most generous countries in our response to real refugees and refugee-producing situations.

In terms of consultation, this Government and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) listen to Canadians. Is that not a surprise? We do not simply listen to special interest groups. We do not simply listen to people who have a particular interest. We listen to a broad cross-section of people and we need to respond to the concerns they have. In fact, we have incorporated—

Mr. Axworthy: So the Citizens' Coalition isn't what you would call real Canadians?

Mrs. Collins: I am answering the question. We did respond. We incorporated many of the recommendations and we responded to the basic concerns of Canadians who wanted us to deal with this issue and deal with it quickly and effectively right now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among Parties and I think you would find that there would be unanimous consent for my proposal. The Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) had a private Member's item scheduled for today, but unfortunately he cannot be in the House. We have discussed this with Opposition House Leaders and it has been agreed to suspend Private Members' Hour for today and continue with the business before the House prior to that hour until 6 p.m., at which time the adjournment proceedings will take place. We have also agreed that the Hon. Member's item should be dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I can indeed confirm that there have been negotiations. I would just like to remind the House that this cannot be considered a precedent for any future time when a Private Member's Bill is not proceeded with. I do not want to create any precedents at all.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I too want to say that there have been extensive consultations on this matter. As my hon. friend has indicated, we do not want this to set a precedent. However, I think it does indicate the spirit in which opposition Parties are trying to facilitate sensible and thoughtful debate on these very critical issues. We look forward to hearing the next speaker with a great deal of anticipation. Again, we as opposition Parties are trying to make this place work. In that respect, when the request came, our first response was to co-operate as fully as possible.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and on the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, why has Parliament been called back into emergency summer session? Where is the emergency? Where is the crisis? The Government is using the smoke-screen of the refugee question as a pretext for quick passage of the Bill providing for changes to our drug legislation. This legislation has been demanded by the Americans as part of their required agenda in the free trade negotiations with our country.

It is no coincidence that the Chairman of President Reagan's advisory board on trade also happens to be the Chairman of Pfizer Corporation, one of the large American multinationals. The Americans have kept no secrets from us. Unlike our Government, they have been open with their priorities and their wish list. At the top of that list, of course, is this legislation which would open up more patent protection for American multinational pharmaceutical companies in Canada. That is the real agenda and the reason we are here.

We are here because Your Honour refused to grant the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) the privilege of recognizing it to be in the public interest to recall Parliament only for the drug legislation. Your Honour quite justifiably refused that request.

The Deputy Prime Minister, on the instructions of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), returned with a better subterfuge. It was not good enough to be direct about it and to state the priorities of the Government, so be indirect and choose the refugee question which has inflamed Canadian public opinion during the summer.

Mr. Speaker, it is probably the first time in history that the Parliament of a sovereign country like Canada is convened for an emergency session to adopt legislation at the behest of the government of another country. The Conservative Government is using the refugee question as an excuse to push through quickly the amendments to our drug patent legislation requested by the Americans in the course of the free trade talks. The new legislation will cause the price of drugs in Canada to increase by hundreds of millions of dollars annually. The poor, the sick, the handicapped, the elderly and low-income families will be worst hit by these price increases, and all because the Government caved in to the Americans.

The Prime Minister is of course hoping that with the uproar about the Government's bungling of the refugee question, Canadians will not realize that his real purpose in reconvening the House was to adopt this Bill. This is one of the most cynical and most desperate acts of a cynical and desperate Government.

[English]

Why then has Parliament been recalled? Does the public interest demand that the House of Commons sit merely to deal with the issue of the 174 Sikhs, particularly in view of the fact that there is already legislation before the House dealing with the issue? The Government had advance notice of this. It was given weeks of warning. It should have taken control of the situation. Instead, it allowed it to happen the way it did.

Why wait to declare an emergency session of Parliament when, in the previous three years, the Government failed to reform the refugee determination system despite the urgings of the commission under the chairmanship of Rabbi Gunther Plaut, despite the urgings of the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, indeed despite the urgings of the two opposition Parties as well as NGOs and Canadian churches? Why did the Government wait until May of this year, almost a full year after the boatload of Tamils landed last summer, to introduce Bill C-55 before the House of Commons? Why did it bring Bill C-55 before the House for second reading debate only in the dying days of the June session? Why did the Government allow a total of only three hours of debate? Where was the urgency? Where was the crisis? Where was the need to deal with it now?

The Government's record and the Government's actions clearly demonstrate an indifference to and a low priority for the issue. Now, in a desperate attempt to cover up its inaction, as a pretext to recall Parliament, the Government is trying to send a message to Canadians that it is in control, when the very opposite is true.

Deep concern has been expressed to me by Canadians all over the country. In my own riding of Vancouver Quadra the phone has been ringing off the hook. When I was there for two or three days two and a half weeks ago, my constituency office received 190 phone calls on this subject on one day, July 24. I have confirmed with the other constituency offices in the Vancouver area that our situation was not unique. Capital punishment paled by comparison. Perhaps that is what influenced His Honour to recall the House. He shares the boundary of 41st Avenue across the centre of Vancouver.

Public opinion on the refugee issue has been manipulated by the Government. There have been selective leaks that there may be terrorists among the recent arrivals off Nova Scotia. There was a massive phoney search for a mysterious vessel reputedly carrying more people to this country. It turned out to be not true and a farce. It reminded us very much of an old poem by Samuel Coleridge. We had the colourful rhetoric of the Prime Minister on his recent visit to rural Manitoba. I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) sitting here. He was the host to the Prime Minister in the Town of Steinbach, which I passed by yesterday.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Great reception.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He got a great reception but he did not have the guts to go to Winnipeg. He floated around rural Manitoba because he wanted to be shepherded by the Minister and his colleague, the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board, to where he could be assured of a manicured, controlled and friendly reception. It was a miniature election campaign. As a personal note to the Minister let me say that he must have felt proud walking down the main street of Steinbach, the automobile capital of Manitoba.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) in such a buoyant mood today, I do not want to interfere with his domain of Oshawa.

Can we blame Canadians for being confused? The Government has bungled and mismanaged the refugee issue ever since it assumed power in September, 1984. Of one thing I am sure. Canadians are a reasonable, fair and tolerant people. They want a fair resolution of this issue.

A large majority of Canadians support a non-discriminatory immigration policy. We must welcome immigrants and refugees because we need them. Canada needs a bigger population to help develop this vast country of ours, to create new markets and new jobs.

We want to promote family reunification, and our generous immigration policy has enjoyed the support of Canadians throughout this century.

[English]

Canadians believe in an expansive, non-discriminatory immigration policy. It has made us the rich country we are today. It has given us the broadening heritage and spirit of tolerance we enjoy today.

Canadians also believe in an open and compassionate refugee policy. Historically we have received with open arms people from all over the world who are genuinely fleeing the threat of death, torture, persecution, intimidation or imprisonment. We have always given the benefit of the doubt to those who are genuinely seeking a haven and a new home in Canada. This was true of Hungary in 1956, Poland in 1972, people from Uganda or the boat people from Vietnam. Canadians have always opened their hearts, their doors and their homes when the issue is clear and beyond question. At the same time they do not want to see the system abused. They do not want commercial trafficking in the lives of desperate people. They do not want manipulation of lives in hopeless transit. They do not want commercialization of those seeking refuge. They do not want manipulation of a system that they believe should be fair and orderly. Jumping the line and cutting the queue does not meet the test of fairness. It calls into question the credibility of our refugee policy and tests the legitimacy of our immigration programs. Canadians, usually open and tolerant, become suspicious. Each of us in this House have people in our constituencies we have been trying to help to reunite their families. This is particularly true of those of us who live in the large metropolitan centres of Canada. Those people have been trying to reunite their families for years and they resent the arrival of those who appear to be bypassing the system.

Why has this happened? The Conservative Government created a refugee backlog and the resulting backlash against refugees and immigrants, this despite the fact that over the past three years we in this Party have repeatedly called for the Government to bring in a more efficient refugee claims system. The Tories have seemed incapable of doing so despite the promise of action by several Tory Ministers. The current Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), when she was Minister of Employment and Immigration, promised legislation as early as November, 1985. That statement is on record before Your Honour.

The number of refugees landing on our shores went up from 7,000 in 1984 to 18,000 in 1986 and 16,000 in the first six months of 1987. Not only did the Government fail to introduce legislation earlier, it compounded the problem by granting administrative reviews or amnesties. In the long run that action to clear up the backlog had the opposite effect. It stimulated the growth of a new industry, immigration consultants, manipulators and exploiters in human traffic. This resulted in a large increase in the number of people landing on our shores in 1986.

Furthermore, despite the fact that under existing law the Government has the authority to deport refugee claimants whose appeal process has run out, it has repeatedly refused to do so, resulting in a further loss of credibility for our system. Worse, the Government has adopted what can only be called a selective approach to immigrants and refugees. Consider these facts. The total number of immigrants admitted to Canada in 1974 stood at over 200,000, compared to only 87,000 in 1986. Not only has the Conservative Government put a higher priority on the immigrant entrepreneur than past Liberal Governments did—note that the number of entrepreneur immigrants rose from 3,500 to 5,400 in 1986—but it has replaced the standards for qualifying in that category. Under Liberal Governments immigrant entrepreneurs needed more than just money to get into this country. They needed the appropriate skills which would allow them to contribute in a meaningful way to the growth of our economy. The Government has taken a different approach. It has moved to the top of the list anyone with enough money to invest. If you have enough dough, you can buy your way in. Contrast that with the number of immigrants approved from the family class which dropped by 10,000 between 1984 and 1986.

We want improvements to the refugee system. The process is too long and too complicated. The long delays are unfair to genuine refugees. The long delays, prolonged by the Government, have led to the massive abuses and attempts to bypass the system. Bill C-55 does not improve the system. It makes it less fair.

We have proposed a reduction of steps in the process from eight to three. My colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), who responded admirably to the Minister this morning, set out our concerns. Our first concern with Bill C-55 is that in the pre-screening process proposed the crucial first step, the right to an oral hearing, is denied. That is the primary reason we oppose the legislation. It may mean that up to half of all claimants to refugee status may be denied refugee status without ever being able to present their case fully.

Our second concern is that Bill C-55 allows the Government, under the so-called third country concept, simply to deport claimants to that country without considering how that country may treat such individuals. The Government does not care if it ships someone to a third country from which that person could immediately be sent back to his or her own country to face persecution, death, torture or imprisonment. Our proposal is that we would not return anyone to a third country unless that person had refugee or landed immigrant status in that country.

The third concern of our Party and of our caucus relates to the appeal process. Provision is made only for appeals pertaining to purely technical questions. During this process the claimant must leave the country while waiting for a ruling. That is unfair.

The fourth concern: the refugee board is inadequate. Since it is now provided that a Government lawyer will submit elements of proof it is false to claim that there will be no confrontation.

[English]

Our fifth concern is how this affects our international responsibilities. We know that we cannot take in 10 million or 15 million refugees looking for homes, but we do want to do our share. What if every country were to adopt the same third country concept? All the doors would be closed to legitimate refugees.

This Bill has now been subject to public gaze for a number of months. What do other people think of the legislation, the people who deal with refugees? The Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) implied that they do not have any special hearing before this House, but they are the people to whom I believe we should look for some advice, particularly Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the author of a study on this very question. With regard to this Bill he says:

> It does not do justice to our international obligations to protect refugees. Nazi Germany would qualify as a safe country under Canada's proposed new refugee rules. I don't think that I would have been let in. I came in the 1930s from Nazi Germany. The Government is building a Berlin Wall around the country.

Tom Clark of the Interchurch Committee for Refugees says:

> Instead of access, there is a screen. Instead of bringing Canada a notch ahead of European countries, the Immigration Minister has brought it down to their level. It's despicable.

Michael Schelew of Amnesty International says:

> It's an about-face on Canada's humanitarian record that may place people fleeing persecution in jeopardy.

Lorne Waldman of the Canadian Jewish Congress says:

> A long-term aim of the Immigration Department is to eliminate all refugee claims within Canada. The Government has spent millions of dollars and innumerable hours consulting on this problem, and everyone's recommendations have been ignored altogether.

That is the verdict on Bill C-55 which is now before the House. That is the verdict of people to whose opinions we should pay attention.

There was a new Bill introduced this morning labelled Bill C-84. The Government attempted to introduce debate immediately without an opportunity for the country, and the Opposition in particular, to look at it. We received, on a so-called confidential basis, a draft at 5.30 last evening. It was not a complete draft at that. We got official copies just before the House met and were then required by the Government to respond to this very difficult and complicated Bill on this very vital human question.

We will study it. My colleague, the Member for York West, has already given an initial response. We will examine whether the remedies are enforceable. Are these procedures appropriate? Is there sufficient due process? Are existing remedies under existing statutes already sufficient? What sort of legislative duplication have we here? What sort of judicial complications have we here? What sort of constitutional doubts are we raising here?

For example, will we give the same treatment to those individuals, church groups, and so on which bend the rules to bring in legitimate refugees as we do to those unscrupulous commercial operators who exploit illegitimate refugees in order to circumvent the system?

Bill C-84 needs the careful scrutiny which Bill C-55 has already received. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that Bill C-84 cannot be read alone. It must be read with Bill C-55. Why were there no abuse provisions in Bill C-55 which is now before Your Honour? Why have one Bill with the procedural remedies and enforcement provisions and another with the substance of the law relating to refugees? You cannot study the remedies or enforcement procedures without reviewing the substance. Until we are satisfied with Bill C-55 we will not feel comfortable with Bill C-84 because they are one package.

We are in favour of tough measures against profiteers and abusers. We want to examine carefully whether the measures in Bill C-84 are targeted properly. We must have a fair system in place before we design measures against abuse of the system. The system is in Bill C-55 and we are not satisfied with it. The remedies in Bill C-84 must be read in conjunction with the substantial measures contained in this Bill. We do not favour jumping the queue or cutting the line, but we do not favour closing the theatre either.

We do not favour jumping the queue, we do not favour cutting the line, but we do not favour closing the theater either.

[English]

I believe that Canadians want a larger population to help develop our vast land, create new markets and new jobs. The low fertility rate in the country and the aging population will become a real concern for our country by the year 2000, particularly for maintaining productivity and providing a tax base adequate to support our social programs. I do not have to deal with the phantom issue that immigrants and refugees take jobs away from other Canadians. That does not happen. The entrepreneurship, the work, the ideas and the resources have historically provided more jobs than were ever replaced.

We continue to hold that liberal view on immigration. As I said earlier, we also deplore the abuse of our refugee system by unethical consultants and other profiteers. We will support any reasonable measures designed to crack down on the abusers of refugees and of the system. Contrary to what the Government would have the public believe, there are already legislative measures in place to allow the Government to detain and deport people who may be a threat to the security of Canada. There are also measures on the books already aimed at consultants which the Government has refused to use. We will want to ensure that the new measures are better than what we already have. Why the duplication? Why the failure to use what is already on the statute books of the country?

Sections 19 through 32 of the Immigration Act, 1976, declare persons with a criminal record or those likely to engage in criminal activity, inadmissible to Canada.

In order to be deported under those sections, persons must first be given an oral hearing. There is also Section 95(I), (j) and (n), which allow for prosecution of consultants and other profiteers.

Section 95(n), which was used to prosecute the captain of the Amelie, provides, on an indictable offence, for a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years or both; and, on a summary conviction offence, for a fine not exceeding $1,000 or imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months or both. As well, the fraud sections of the Criminal Code have always been available to the Government. What are the effects of this cumulative remedy?

We have constantly urged the Government to implement the changes recommended as early as in 1980 by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) and formally proposed in 1984 by Ed Ratushny and in 1985 by Rabbi Plaut, well before the refugee problem grew worse.

[English]

We also have sought an expanded definition of the family class which corresponds more accurately with many immigrants' notion of extended family living. We will examine very carefully the action announced by the Minister this morning.

At the same time we must make it abundantly clear to the immigrant community that an immigrant who does not have sufficient points to get into Canada does not lose his spot in line because his place is taken by a refugee. We are talking about a new stream of admissions to the country. The refugee is admitted to Canada on an entirely different set of criteria, namely, genuine fear of political, religious, or racial persecution.

Finally, we call upon the Government of Canada to seek actively, by way of a United Nations conference or Commonwealth conference, the participation of other countries confronted with similar strains on their refugee systems. This is not an isolated problem, this is a global phenomenon. We need to work with other countries toward a mutually satisfactory solution. Refugees are on the conscience of Canada, but they are also a global responsibility.

We must stress a co-operative attitude toward solving this international problem. I say to the Prime Minister and the Minister, give us a fair system. Canadians will support that. Canadians will be generous and open, but target the abuses carefully and do it in a spirit of firmness, reasonably, with openness and generosity.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall)—Pharmaceutical industry—Committee Proceedings—Hearing of witnesses—Minister's position; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—Harbourfront—Moratorium on Toronto waterfront construction projects; the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Parry)—Regional development—Northern Ontario—Alleged transfer of public service jobs—Request for freeze on job transfers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 7338).

Mr. John Oostrom (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address the House on this very important issue and to speak to this vital piece of legislation.

There has been a tendency by some to read the worst into the new provisions. One of the most important points for us to understand is that in devising strategies and policies that address the needs of refugees, we always need to look beyond the immediate and domestic solutions. More and more, countries are coming to see that addressing the problems of refugees is an international endeavour. As a Canadian delegate to the 106-country international parliamentary union recently, I proposed that the question of refugees be addressed at the fall conference in Bangkok, Thailand. This proposal was adopted due to the urgency of this world-wide problem of refugees.

Refugee problems can only be resolved by finding solutions to their root causes, by long-term efforts to promote development, self-reliance, and respect for human rights.

Initially, the primary need of every refugee is a safe haven. Without access to a country of safe haven and without an ability to uphold the principle of safe haven as a primary need, none of the approaches or solutions advocated by the international community will work.

Initially, a refugee needs to find a place, any place, where he or she will be free from torture or the threat of death, and where basic needs for food and shelter will be met.

The search for a safe haven was not, as we all know, what motivated the tens of thousands of bogus refugees who have overburdened our system in recent years. The decision by refugees to leave the safe haven provided by another country in order to ask for safe haven in Canada, while understandable, is not a refugee matter.

While we understand the preference for this country over another, individual preference cannot dictate national policy. We welcome, however, their applications as immigrants. Our convention refugee determination system must remain open for those who really need it.

At the request of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration, the number of refugee processing officers, both at home and abroad, was increased due to the higher demand. However, the processing of immigrants and refugees must be done in an orderly fashion. We cannot have chaos, whether it be at home or abroad. Third country nationals cannot decide for Canadians who should jump the line or who should have priority.

Canadians have rights too, as my colleague, the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé), mentioned earlier this afternoon. Through our laws, and with the assistance of very competent officers both at home and abroad, they can decide who will be allowed into Canada and under what conditions.

My constituents especially favour family reunification and do not want to tell their relatives to jump the line. As Eli Weisel, the Nobel Prize laureate reminded us not too long ago: "A society can be measured and judged by its attitude to strangers". I believe we have measured up to these humanitarian standards time and time again. This legislation will allow us to continue to open our doors to strangers, and more particularly, the neediest among them.

Let us look at the principles of the new system. Let us examine how this obligation is honoured in the structure of the new system.

The new system will deal quickly with claims. That is, it will deal quickly with those submitting bogus claims and will attend quickly to those whose claims have real merit. This is what hundreds of my constituents in Willowdale have told me over the past number of weeks: deal with the problem quickly and do it now.

My constituents understand that the current immigration and refugee processing system was set in motion some time ago by the previous Liberal regime, reinforced by the Charter of Rights. This system has gone haywire and is now abused.

My constituents in Willowdale want a fair and open system. This is an open system. Everyone will have the opportunity to make a claim to Canada's protection at home and also abroad. No one will be turned away without having an opportunity to appear before a member of the refugee board.

It is a system which establishes the highest standards of fundamental justice. First, proceedings are oral. Second, the claimant is entitled to be represented by counsel. Third, in many cases, legal representation is provided even free of charge. Decision-making on arguable cases will be made by an independent quasi judicial panel and, once again, individuals will present their claims in a non-adversarial and oral hearing. Those awaiting their hearings before a refugee board will be allowed to work and attend school. Welfare and health care benefits will be provided through federal-provincial cost-sharing programs, which is not the case under the current system. Successful claimants will be entitled to apply for permanent residence. These are the principles and the benefits delivered in the body of the Act.

To date we have heard many arguments. We have heard criticisms and demands that the Bill be withdrawn or postponed. Some have argued that the Bill does not say what we think it says. If there is a legitimate doubt about all this, let us talk about it and consider amendments if necessary. There are other criticisms. However, what is abundantly clear is that this system will stand up where the current system does not. The existing system is based on principles which just do not work in practice, for instance, full access of all claimants to the refugee board for refugee determination, and there are two levels of review.

It does not really matter how you arrange the steps of the process. This is a system which just does not work for everyone because the principles are wrong. They were wrong when the system was conceived, and I referred to that earlier, and their inability to stand the test of events and time has been shown again and again.

We are not the first who have come this route. Other countries have tried and failed. I say to those who still criticize to look at what is being proposed under the new system as a whole, as it has been designed. Look at the insistence on quality, on fairness above all and on the benefit of the doubt being given at every stage. In short, I believe Bill C-55 will provide the solution to the problems which have been plaguing us and that it will allow our refugee determination system to distinguish between the genuine refugee in need of our protection and all other claimants who are not in need of our protection.

The principles behind Bill C-55 are right for Canada. They are right for the present and they will be right for the future. My constituency of Willowdale, and the country, support these principles. I would hope, therefore, that during the course of this debate we could focus on improving the Bill, smoothing the rough edges and clarifying the ambiguities. Further delay is not going to solve anything. It is not going to benefit anyone, least of all the people in need of our protection.

I urge all those who would still be a dissenting voice to keep in mind the objective, which I believe we all share and which this legislation honours, which is to support the genuine refugees in need of help regardless of number and without limit. But the economic migrants and the queue jumpers must obey our Canadian laws. They cannot continue to lie and cheat their way into this country.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to ask a question of my colleague who is on the multicultural committee, namely, the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom). He has endeavoured in his comments on Bill C-55 to provide the right rhetoric required for the Government to put this Bill forward. He talks about it being fair and open and so on. He suggests it is going to provide for our future needs. Yet I sense in his comments as he talked about bogus refugees, his last observations on people who supposedly come to Canada primarily for economic reasons, a certain aversion to refugees and perhaps to immigrants generally.

I want to ask the Hon. Member how in his defence of Bill C-55 this afternoon, with all his rhetoric, he can reconcile these observations with the fact that practically everyone concerned about refugees in Canada opposes Bill C-55? How can the Hon. Member reconcile what he calls this fair system in which people have to make their case very quickly when they arrive and can be turned away by an administrative decision? How can he reconcile his sense that Bill C-55 will protect refugees with the conclusion of those who work with the present system that Bill C-55 would have the effect of turning away 50 percent, perhaps 90 percent of people who make claims on Canada as refugees? Surely we do not have that many people making bogus claims. How can the Hon. Member reconcile his defence of the system with the rejection of Bill C-55 by everyone across the country who is concerned about Canada maintaining its record of providing a refuge to persons in danger of their lives elsewhere? How can he reconcile this with Canada's receipt of the Nansen Medal?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have resorted to rhetoric. I have only expressed the views of my constituents. I trust the judgment of my constituents in Willowdale.

With respect to generosity, Canada allowed in about 18,000 refugees last year and it looks as if we are going to have at least 20,000 this year. This is why we received the Nansen Medal. And this will continue. The generosity of Canadians will continue in the future. This administration has increased immigration year after year and we will continue to do so. As we do so, the levels of refugees will rise. Canadians are generous. We are humanitarian and will continue to be. I think the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp) is giving us a bit of rhetoric himself.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the House that we are presently debating an amendment of the Liberal Member for York West (Mr. Marchi). He moved that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence. It is the position of the Liberal Party that debate and discussion on this Bill should be delayed for six months. This amendment was made by the first speaker on the Liberal Party side. It was supported by the New Democratic Party.

I ask the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom), how will the people in his constituency, those people who stand by law and order and the queue, take to the suggestion of the Liberal Party, supported by the NDP, that this Parliament not even discuss the Bill for six months? How do the members of the constituency of Willowdale feel about that suggestion?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, the feedback I have received over the past month is that we definitely should deal with it now. My constituents wanted me to come back. They phoned me while I was on a trip for a few days to the United States and asked me to come back. They will not stand for any postponement. They want us to deal with it right now. There will be ample opportunity if we are here for one week, two weeks or three weeks. I am willing to stay for the whole month. There is no problem at all. Let us deal with this matter now. We have a large number of members here. We have members of the employment and immigration committee here. I think we should deal with it now and not later.

One of my constituents, Mr. Van Noord, has been waiting for 17 years to bring his sister-in-law here from Jamaica. He told me to deal with it now because this whole question has to be settled. He also mentioned that he would like the Minister to increase the family reunification program in the coming years. I am very happy to note this morning that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) has given some indication that this may be the case.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, since the Parliamentary Secretary seems to rise after every speaker to bring the attention of the House to the fact that we are indeed debating an amendment to the main motion, I would like to make the point that the so-called main motion was part of a process that the Government initiated on May 5 last. After three years in power it decided to do something about this important problem. We do not disagree with the actions being taken by the Government. It left this matter sitting there from May 5 until June 18 when it called the Bill for all of one day's debate—some emergency! In approximately nine and one-half months of sitting time last year and after three years of being in power, disorganized as it is, that is all the time the Government could find to come to grips with this problem.

My question to the Hon. Member is this. The third country concept, the friendly third country concept, is in my view and in the view of my constituents one of the most important parts, and perhaps even one of the serious weaknesses, of Bill C-55. How does the Hon. Member feel about the safe third country concept? Does he feel comfortable with the fact that refugees, possibly bona fide refugees, will come to Canada and be told to go back to a safe third country? Will he wash his hands of the problem as Pontius Pilate did? Does the Hon. Member feel comfortable with that?

Mr. Oostrom: Mr. Speaker, I feel very comfortable indeed with it. I recently travelled through Holland and Germany. The Governments of Holland and Germany are very pleasantly surprised that Canada will take people from their countries, that Canada is willing and has even increased its staff in these countries to process genuine refugees. They give their full co-operation in this regard.

I am also pleased to note that the United States has given its assistance to us in that if there are genuine refugees in the United States who are in our stream, whether they be at border points, at consulates or embassies in the United States, it will not deport genuine refugees. I am very grateful that these countries co-operate with Canada to process refugees.

This Bill was in place in May. Our priorities in the past have been with respect to getting Canadians working again. As we got Canadians working, other problems cropped up. But this Bill was in place in May. There was ample opportunity in the month of May and in the month of June—even during the last days of Parliament—to help us process it. However, there was no willingness on the part of the Opposition, which is why we are back here today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) on debate.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-55. I do so because I would like to direct my remarks to many of my constituents who have telephoned my constituency office in great numbers and who have written to us here in Ottawa. I wanted to do so at the earliest possible time. This being the afternoon of the first day that Parliament has been recalled I am proud to be able to get up to speak.

I wish to acknowledge that this has been a good debate thus far. It is shaping up to be an excellent debate. It is a very important one. The public has a great deal of interest in it. I am pleased to be back in Ottawa to face this issue.

I wish to acknowledge the excellent speech made by the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) who spoke in reply to the Minister this afternoon. I also wish to acknowledge the speech given by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who represents the constituency next to mine in Vancouver. Many of the things he said in his speech rang true to my ears.

I said that we have had many telephone calls. Indeed, my constituency assistants, Mr. Adrian Dix and Mrs. Sharon Olsen, have listened patiently to a number of people who have been very angry when they have phoned on this matter. We have probably had more calls on this issue than on any other issue, even more than on the capital punishment issue.

My riding is a multicultural riding in the southeast part of Vancouver. Indeed, my riding receives something like 2,200 new citizens a year. I think that is certainly the largest number of new citizens of any riding in British Columbia, and perhaps it is the largest in Canada. Thus there are many people who have a great deal of concern about immigration and who may be recent immigrants themselves or who may want to bring in their families. There is no doubt that no one wants queue-jumping in Canada. Hon. Members have mentioned that already. People want a fair immigration process, as do families who want to bring their brothers and sisters into the country but who cannot. I am pleased that the Minister announced some lessening of the restrictions concerning these people.

This is a Government that has cut back on immigration, contrary to what the Hon. Member who just spoke said. I believe it has cut down on immigration. It has also encouraged other types of immigration. It has encouraged people to buy their way into the country as opposed to bringing in people through the area of family reunification.

As I have said, there is a great deal of concern out there about queue-jumping from people who are immigrants themselves and who want to bring in their families. There is also a concern, and one which I have to deal with in the Vancouver context, and I will deal with it honestly, about violence in the Indo-Canadian community. They see Sikhs coming into Canada and, in some instances, the presence of representatives of revolutionary organizations in the Sikh community. Right across from my constituency office, a lawyer, Ujjal Dosanjh, was beaten up because he was an outspoken moderate. That incident occurred right across from my office.

After that incident there was the assassination of Mrs. Ghandi. There were demonstrations in celebration of that in the streets of Vancouver by a very small group of people. There was also the blowing up of the airline, which resulted in the tragic loss of many families and especially children who were on their way back to India for vacations and family visits. I ask Hon. Members to make no mistake about it, that has inflamed the people in the country, and partly those in Vancouver.

The majority of people in the country do not want the Kalistan issue fought in Canada, or fought from Canada. The great majority of people want to make their lives here in Canada. It is the same with other issues, not just the Kalistan issue. For example, with respect to the Irish issue, we do not want fights in Canada. We want peace in Canada where people can live together in a multicultural society. We all believe in that. Everyone in this House believes in that.

I heard from a colleague of mine from up North who has a Sikh friend who is a postmaster. This man has been a postmaster in a small town for 20 years. Twenty years ago he used to hear comments about a Sikh being a postmaster. Of course, he was accepted into the community because he is a good postmaster and a good person. Now, today, he is hearing comments again in the same vein. So we must be careful with what is happening in the country.

I want to say to the people who have called my office, many of whom have said: "I am not racist but—", that they do not have to apologize. They are not racist when they call in about their concerns. One can have concerns about this issue and not be racist. However, one can also have concerns about it and be racist. But people have called with genuine concerns. I want to acknowledge that.

I think that there is a feeling out in the country that the genuine refugees should be let in and the phoneys should be kicked out. But that is easier said than done when the matter has to be put into law. I want to remind my constituents and Members of the House about some matters which I think are important. First, we are bound by international law. As the Minister said earlier today, refugees are defined as people who flee because of a well-grounded fear of prosecution. We are signatories to those conventions. We have to deal with refugees who come to our borders. I get the feeling that many of our people do not understand that, that there is this refugee law to which Canada is a signatory. We received an international award, as an Hon. Member just said, for our treatment of refugees. I am told that since World War II we have accepted 500,000 refugees: 40,000 Hungarians, 7,000 Ugandans, 100,000 Vietnamese, and many others. We have always accepted many refugees. Let us not panic that we have refugees. Let us try to deal with the problem within the international context.

My mother once said that your reputation is everything. That applies to an individual, and it also applies to a country. Canada's reputation is everything in the international scene. We have one of the best reputations in the world. We do not wish to lose that reputation. We have to be very careful when we deal with this Bill C-55. Therefore, I am telling my constituents to remember our United Nations and world obligation to refugees, and let us not be stampeded into passing a bad Bill. It is important to examine this law very carefully. I will not go into all the pros and cons of the Bill. It has already been dealt with in debate. I think there have been instances in the House where, by proceeding rapidly with a Bill in a fit of panic, a bad Bill can be produced. There can be another War Measures Act. I do not think that we wish that.

I wish to remind Canadians that we are a nation of immigrants. I am an immigant from Scotland. There are other people from many different countries of the world. The immigrants coming into this country helped to create jobs and made this economy hum after the Second World War. We should not forget that. We should not have the mentality that once we are in will pull up the plank. Let us remember that we still need immigrants. We need honest, good immigrants in a fair system.

I will be a little more partisan here in reminding my constituents that they should not trust this Government. It knew two years ago of the Rabbi Plaut report on refugees. In 1985, in its fifth report the House of Commons committee brought forward recommendations. These abuses have been going on for a number of years. In the House in 1982 I asked a question about immigration consultants. I had recently returned from Hong Kong where I saw and heard about some unscrupulous people who were milking helpless, desperate people who wanted to emigrate to Canada. This problem has been around for a long time. For Members opposite to say that it is the Opposition that has stopped them from acting on this is patently nonsense. The Government has 209 Members of Parliament to our 73 in the Opposition. It is misleading the people to say that the Government could not have done anything with this Bill before and it is all the fault of the Opposition. I think that the Government wanted Parliament recalled to pass the drug patent Bill. In my view, that Bill means that prices will go up for people. The drug patent Bill is a pay-off to Ronald Reagan and the American administration for favours on the free trade negotiations. That is why it is there. The drug Bill is not a popular Bill in this country. It is to pay off the drug lobby and its friends in the United States. I ask my constituents to remember that when they are judging the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) Government in recalling Parliament.

We will remember that a few months ago the Prime Minister welcomed the Tamils and stated that they were welcome in Canada. Suddenly we have another boatload, this time of Sikhs, and Parliament is recalled. We send the Navy out on a wild goose chase for some other boat that was coming which was found somewhere else. It was a ridiculous situation.

I see this Government recalling Parliament to try to inflame public opinion on this issue to show that it is decisive, so it can try to recover from its abysmal showing in the public opinion polls. My constituents are not fooled by that. They are not stupid.

I wish to say a couple of other general things. Angus MacInnis, who represented the riding of Vancouver—Kingsway, is somewhat of a hero to me because in 1944 he stood up in the House when the Canadian Government was deporting the Japanese Canadians, putting them in concentration camps, and taking their property. He spoke out against what his wife, Grace MacInnis, later told me was a tidal wave of public opinion. I am afraid that sometimes the opinion of our people can be whipped up so that there can be a tidal wave of public opinion that would force us into passing a bad law. As Edmund Burke said 200 years ago, my job is to give my electors my judgment. My judgment is that we should change the immigration system. We must have a fairer system that is quicker; the delays are too long. We have to go against the people who are smuggling. As the Hon. Member for Spadina said, we must watch how that is defined. Are we dealing with sisters of the church who are helping Central American refugees at the border in Buffalo, or are we dealing with guys who are making a buck off a cheap boat from Germany, or unscrupulous immigration consultants? That must be looked at very carefully.

The other thing that Canadians must remember is that this problem will not go away. It is a new type of problem. We now have airlines that take us very quickly from one country to another. TV is around the world, and people can see how wonderful Canada is. There is a Third World debt crisis. Those economies are losing wealth, and they have precious little to lose. There is a lesson here in the sense that maybe through this Canadians can understand that debt problems and Third World development problems are not problems that do not touch Canadians, because they do. They mean refugees and people flowing into our country. In other words, I am trying to say that problem will not go away. We have to pass a Bill. Personally, I am in favour of passing a Bill, but Bill C-55 is not the answer. As the Hon. Member from Spadina stated, Bill C-55 does not send refugee claimants to a refugee board. It denies some principles contained in the UN treaties that we have signed, and there is another way of doing it. I think that Bill C-55 will be an unworkable Bill.

On February 3, 1987, the Leader of our Party, Ed Broadbent, wrote to the Minister of Immigration supporting a proposal of the Canadian Council of Churches for a refugee determination process. At our national convention in Montreal, the NDP passed a resolution calling for "a refugee determination process that is speedy, fair, and accessible to all, and which ensures the safety of those who seek refuge in Canada". There has been no lack of recommendations: the Robinson task force; the Ratushney report; the Gunther Plaut report; the fifth and sixth reports in November and December, 1985 of the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration; and the proposal of the Canada Council of Churches. The Government has ignored all this and brought in a bad Bill. It has now brought us back here in a panic because the refugee system is not working.

Our NDP proposal would include a process that could be completed in three months. All claimants would receive an oral hearing before an independent review board within two weeks of arriving. There could be a review of unsuccessful claims on the merits and on the facts perhaps to another board that is right there and that could be called soon. There would be an appeal to the Federal Court only on a matter of law which could be cleared up on another matter in at most three months. Therefore, unscrupulous lawyers would not delay the process and keep delaying it, because that is what lawyers would do. That is the way to have a system. The speed of the process would be a disincentive to frivolous, time-buying, false claims. It would comply with our international obligations, and it would prevent the deportation of legitimate refugees.

I will conclude by saying that this is a weak Government which is trying to gain by appealing to some of the worst fears out there in the country. It has brought in a weak law. Our job is to make it better. That is what we will do in this particular Bill.

I will remind Canadians that we are a charitable, thoughtful, and a civilized people. We are people from all different parts of the world. We have tried to adopt the best of the other countries in the world. We have always had a fair process for refugee claims. At the same time we are listening to what our people are saying on the telephone and in letters.

They want a fair process. They want to kick out unscrupulous people and keep genuine refugees. They do not want the battles of other countries to be fought in Canada; we have enough of our own problems here. They want Parliament to deal with the matter in an expeditious but fair way. That is what we will try to do.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few comments on my hon. colleague's remarks. I disagree with most of his speech, but I should like to deal with only a couple of remarks. He is trying, like his colleagues earlier today, to come forward with the pretence that the Government has actually come back to deal with the Patent Act. That is patently nonsense. As I am sure the Hon. Member realistically knows, we are back here to deal with the refugee determination legislation.

Another comment he made—and I have also heard it from other Members on the opposition benches—is that somehow the Government has inflamed public opinion or that we somehow influenced the public to come forward with these concerns. My hon. colleague knows that that is nonsense. Was he out there phoning people, telling them to phone other people about this issue?

The feeling on this issue came from Canadians. They are inflamed and concerned about dealing with refugees. Nobody imposed that on them. I think it came out of their real, honest concern, which leads me to one area where I agree with my colleague.

What he was hearing from his constituents was exactly what I was hearing from mine, that we should let genuine refugees in and kick the phoneys out. That is what we will do with Bill C-55. The very first stage is the pre-screening stage. Those for whom there is no arguable claim—and there are many of them—will be kicked out. We will kick the phonies out. The genuine refugees will have the chance to go through the proper system of hearings, review, and appeal to the court.

We know we are dealing with a six-month hoist, the amendment to Bill C-55 brought forward by the Liberals, which would put it in limbo for six months. When this amendment comes to a vote, would the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell) tell me whether he is going to vote for a six-month hoist and no action, or whether he is going to vote against it and let us get on with further discussion on Bill C-55?

Mr. Waddell: Let me reply to that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosby: You are going to vote for it.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member wants to read my mind. Sometimes I have trouble reading my own mind. I am glad he is so adept at doing it.

The Government tried to recall Parliament before. I do not want to get too deeply into this debate—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: It is a fool's game, because Parliament is already recalled. I do not trust the Government, and I do not think the public trusts the Government. It tried to recall Parliament before for the drug patent Bill. It is dying to get that Bill; it has to get the Bill to satisfy the Americans. We are going to deal with the Bill as Parliament is sitting, so I think it is quite convenient for them to recall Parliament on this matter.

They could have sent a number of officers down there, every officer they had, and dealt with the 174 claimants very quickly. That was another alternative. Of course they did not do that.

There are allegations that the Department has been leaking documents. I believe the Hon. Member for Spadina has been talking about that.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): There have been no allegations.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, there have been allegations. Let me just explain, Mr. Speaker, that they are confidential documents of refugees who have given statements, in hearings, as I understand it, and suddenly the statements have come out. How have they come out? Who has leaked them? The only people who had access to them were basically government authorities. I call them "allegations", but nevertheless they are there.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): How about lawyers with retainers of several thousands of dollars a day?

Mr. Waddell: The Minister is talking about lawyers with several thousands of dollars a day—

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Think about that before you say those things.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): May I interrupt the Hon. Member and say that he is answering the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins). I hope he will answer that question and then, if anybody else would like to ask questions or make a comment, I will recognize them accordingly.

Mr. Waddell: With reference to other comments, there has been a phoney sea search which the Government seemed to orchestrate and which fell flat. We all thought another boat was coming with a lot more people. Where is it? That turned out to be like the Keystone Kops.

With respect to Bill C-55, we both agree with the principle, that the genuine ones come in and the bad ones go out quickly. However, I do not understand how the Hon. Member can explain why so many people—and I am not talking about immigration lawyers—who are fairly objective, have experience in immigration, and have dealt with refugees, think that Bill C-55 is a bad Bill. We have received telegram after telegram from groups saying that it is a terrible piece of legislation.

Finally, with respect to the six-month hoist, it is normal as a procedural move to propose a hoist, so the hoist is a no big deal situation. It is normal to do that when we want to oppose a Bill and want more debate on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: That happens in the House of Commons. With respect to my vote, I will let the Hon. Member know which way I will vote when the matter is called for a vote.

Mrs. Collins: I will be watching.

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member a chance to use our interpretation services.

The Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party referred earlier to the fact that he was pleased with the support he received from the Liberal Senators on Bill C-22. I may remind him that this is a direct attack by the Liberal Senate against two governments in Quebec, the Bourassa Government and the Lévesque Government, that each voted unanimously to urge the Liberal Government to pass legislation protecting drug patents. As I understand it, the Hon. Member for the New Democratic Party supports this attack against the Government of Quebec.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I know the Hon. Member is a fairly new Member, but I should like to bring to his attention that he should not reflect upon the decision or what is happening in the other place. I think it is important that he realize that.

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, regarding the subject before the House, which is the migrant problem, the Hon. Member said earlier that he felt the Government had been pretty ridiculous when it detailed ships to patrol our shores and prevent other vessels from landing illegal aliens.

He thinks all our measures were ridiculous. He thinks the Minister's Bill is ridiculous. He told us he did not know whether he would vote for or against the amendment.

I would like to know his real position on Bill C-55. Will he be for or against, will he vote for or against the amendment? Could he be clear and precise and say whether it will be yes or no?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question, but I did not say I supported the Senate, and I did not even mention the Senate and what its reaction was to the drug patents legislation.

However, I can say now I think the Senate is right. This is not a good Bill. The result will be higher prices for drugs for Canada's consumers and for my constituents. I am entirely against this Bill, and I say it is a Bill for the Americans, not for the average Canadian.

As far as the Navy is concerned, it was rather confusing because the Government and the Minister said there was a ship out there, but I didn't see any ships, and finally they found one in England. This is a ridiculous situation. I don't know the French expression for Keystone Cops, but in English, it means a situation that is ridiculous and idiotic.

As far as Bill C-55 is concerned, I am opposed to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period provided for questions and comments has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer).

• (1700)

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I listened with close attention to the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell). Being a product of the Lakeshore, the area that I represent, I am always interested.

I agree with the Hon. Member when he says that we are having a good debate here today on this fundamental question that has seized the concerned minds of so many Canadians, but I fundamentally disagree with him when he contends that Parliament has been recalled this summer in order to fulfil some design of the Government to whip up public frenzy and concern over this issue.

I think the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway has it completely backward. Parliament has been recalled in order to respond to the pre-existing public concerns, so adequately demonstrated from coast to coast, over the failure of Canada to have at its disposal adequate legal provisions to deal with those who would take advantage of Canada's very generous refugee determination provisions.

One of the things I have learned since being elected to represent Etobicoke—Lakeshore and after listening to people talk about a great many issues is that when one listens to discussions about issue after issue, one begins to appreciate the fact that Canadians are a tolerant people, a very fair people. This is so almost to the point of frustration. One sometimes thinks that Canadians can be pushed to any limits, that they can take almost anything and not respond. However, I have discerned that there is a certain flash point which occurs on an issue when one element emerges, and that element is the perceived double standard.

One quick example of the double standard can be seen in the tax laws. When someone who pulls into a gas station driving a Cadillac has paid less tax than the fellow who pumps the gas, that is seen to be inequitable. That is why Canadians got upset about the tax system. That is why the Government enacted a minimum tax and is introducing a thorough reform of the tax system.

The present example has to do with the refugee determination system. My constituency of Etobicoke—Lakeshore is composed of people from many different backgrounds. A great many of them are to this day still seeking to have family members join them. They are still spending months and indeed years complying with all the formalities and the detailed regulations of the immigration laws of Canada. They, like me, detest the double standard that can operate when others can come to this country and jump to the front of that queue in which they have been standing for months and years. Through distortion of the process, these people seek status here through what is in effect a parallel immigration system.

The figures show that of those who have fraudulently claimed refugee status, next to none have ultimately been deported. In fact, we are looking at an alternate immigration system. It is not the kind of fair and equitable system that Canadians want. That is why legislation has been proposed. It has taken this Government and the previous Government some time to come to grips with how to deal with so difficult an issue as this.

I listened to the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Turner) deliver in this Chamber this afternoon a speech that I thought was very befitting of a former Prime Minister. It was balanced and dealt with these concerns, but even the right hon. gentleman was not able to avoid partisan lapses on this issue. He said, for example, that the Conservative Government has created a backlog in deciding refugee claims. That is very, very interesting. Why then was it a Liberal Government that appointed Rabbi Gunther Plaut to study the refugee determination problems which were already in existence long before September of 1984?

No, this is not something about which we can be partisan, no more than the Leader of the Opposition was when he said on July 17 on national CBC television that that boat might well have been apprehended and could have been turned back because this is not a legitimate refugee process. Those were the words of the Leader of the Opposition and I wonder how he could say that on July 17 and make the comments he made today in this Chamber.

I believe all of us should draw back somewhat from partisan temptations to draw this issue too narrowly. Canadians are not looking to Parliament today to be partisan about this issue. Canadians are looking to Parliament today to settle once and for all something that has profoundly disturbed men and women of good faith, men and women who believe that the laws of Canada have some meaning.

Those who obey the laws of Canada, people who worry about getting their tax returns in on time, people who obey speed limits, people who are law abiding, look somewhat askance and, if we are not careful, will soon look with cynicism upon a system that cannot differentiate between those who willingly, knowingly abuse our system and are not being apprehended and dealt with in the way that they should and those who are not. That is why this legislation is before the House. The Government is seeking to respond to this concern.

I believe that the size of this problem should not be underestimated. Just this last week, someone asked me what difference 174 people would make in a country as large as Canada. Quite apart from the legal process and the manipulation of our refugee determination system which is involved in that particular episode, let me address that question.

We are not talking about 174 people. The fact is that so far, this year alone, 16,500 people came to Canada claiming refugee status. While every now and then there may be a bus entering Montreal or a boat landing off the shores of Nova Scotia, the daily reality is the touching down at international airports of aeroplanes bearing up to 16,500 such people as of August of 1987. There were 18,000 such people last year. We are addressing a situation that is more serious than those numbers would suggest.

I support the Bill because the legislation will protect the genuine refugee. The process will see claims dealt with fairly and quickly. It will prevent abuses.

Some of the features that I find attractive in this legislation include the existence of the independent refugee board, the quality oral hearings, the simplified process and the appeal to the Federal Court. I also welcome the fact that persons who will be excluded from that process under the new legislation will be those who have received refugee status elsewhere, those who may be returned to a safe country, those whose claims are clearly unfounded, those who have previously been rejected by Canada and those who are subject to removal orders.

I am also supporting this Bill because of the safeguards it contains. They include the agreement of a refugee board member, leave to appeal to the Federal Court, and provision of legal counsel. All those requirements of this Bill speak eloquently about the traditions of this country in dealing with refugees in a fair-minded and humanitarian fashion. I do not think any Government has to apologize at any time for trying to ensure that tradition continues.

I was attracted to the suggestion by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition when he spoke of this as a global phenomenon and called for a Commonwealth conference on the issue. That idea should be looked at beyond the passage of this Bill because we are dealing with a long-term world-wide situation. The world has definitely changed in many respects since the UN convention on refugees was signed. Since World War II, Canada has welcomed 500,000 refugees. We have a pre-eminent leadership role to play and we can do it by taking up that larger and longer-term question.

Let us return to another element of Bill C-55 which is of concern to some people. With this legislation in place, we will be able to deal swiftly and fairly with those seeking refugee status. They will not be able to stay here for two or three years, during which of course a child might be born or other things happen so that by the time the case is finally heard it is practically impossible to deport them even if the case warrants it. However, the concern is that the invoking of the Charter of Rights by those who have come here seeking refugee status may cause a confounding of the will of Parliament.

As a former chairman of the parliamentary committee on equality rights and having worked closely with the Charter and its provisions, I recognize that it is a safeguard for the rights and freedoms of Canadians in times like this when the winds of passion and political turmoil blow. What concerns Canadians is the consequences of the Supreme Court decision in the Singh case where it was held that any person physically present in this country had access to all the rights and remedies of the Charter. Of course, the wording of the Charter is not that these rights are accorded only to Canadian citizens or landed immigrants. It says they accrue to any individual, to a person. The Supreme Court took an understandable, legally correct, and in fact very broad interpretation of that clause. Yet to see someone come here intending to manipulate fraudulently our refugee determination process and then take full advantage of those guarantees, seems to be more than most Canadians ever bargained for.

I know the Bill does not contain wording that would qualify the Singh decision. That is perhaps a broader issue. However, as parliamentarians we must examine it in that context and it may be appropriate for the Government to refer the question of status and standing under the Charter, and specifically the Singh decision, to the Supreme Court of Canada. It may well be that our Supreme Court justices will welcome the opportunity to clarify the circumstances under which access to the Charter can be had by those who are neither citizens nor landed immigrants. The issue could be given a more complete examination than was possible in the specific fact situation of the Singh case.

I have always summed up my political credo in a very simple way: Fair shares to all, special privileges for none. In that way I try to convey my strong feelings that a double standard is something Canadians do not want, should not tolerate, and must be ever vigilant in fighting against. I have tried in my remarks today to avoid a narrow, partisan approach. I have drawn attention to positive suggestions from both sides of the House. I am here to be the mouthpiece for the men and women of Etobicoke—Lakeshore and also to express my own conscience as someone who is determined to see that refugee determination in Canada continues to meet adequately the needs of those who come to Canada as a homeland for freedom. Those groups who are too quickly critical of this Government's response to the difficultie must sincerely re-examine their positions to see if they are not trying to maintain a system which will sooner rather than later come crashing down.

Such a refugee determination system must, first, last and always, have at its core public support. Once the refugees are in this country, they must be and will be welcomed as Canadians when they are bona fide refugees who have complied with our very generous requirements. To safeguard a bona fide system we must pass legislation such as Bill C-55. We must see that legislation such as its counterpart introduced in this House earlier today is also passed so that we can ensure that the future of this country follows in the tradition which all of us feel is fundamental to what Canada is all about.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments.

Mr. Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, I realize there is a great desire to ask questions of my friend from Etobicoke—Lakeshore so I shall be brief. He has endeavoured to suggest there should be careful consideration of certain matters. He suggested that the Supreme Court of Canada might be asked to reconsider the Singh decision. In his concluding comments he suggested on the other hand, that it is just as well to have a generous attitude and allowing the Charter to apply to all is not such a bad thing, and that we may want to back the suggestion of asking our Supreme Court justices to rethink the question. He also suggested that he was not endeavouring to be too partisan this afternoon and wanted careful consideration of the issue.

Has he given any thought to the possibility of Bill C-55 being given lengthy and very careful consideration by the standing committee under the able direction of his colleague from La Prairie, who I know will not be partisan about this Bill in giving it critical consideration? The committee, which was under the chairmanship of his colleague from Calgary, has done very good and careful work and it might well be trusted to do exactly that with Bill C-55 when the House has concluded second reading consideration.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, there were two questions. Regarding the first, I will not change what I said with respect to a further examination of the Singh decision. The time to re-examine that is at hand. I can assure the Hon. Member that my remarks today were well thought through and well considered. I fundamentally believe that, although the legislation before the House does not in any way directly raise Charter questions, that is very much in the mind of Canadians as they view this. They wonder how far, to what extent, and under what circumstances the Charter of Rights applies to people who come to this country. That is why I submitted that one suggestion. It is only one idea.

With regard to the Member's second question, I feel very strongly that both Bills should be considered promptly right here in Committee of the Whole. We have all heard from our constituents on this issue, perhaps more than on any other issue.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway, formerly of the Lakeshore, referred to Edmund Burke and the obligation of Members to use their best judgment for the benefit of their constituents. Each of us had heard loudly and clearly from our constituents and we are quite capable of representing those views here in Parliament. The distilled wisdom of the collective people of the country can be brought to bear here. I do not think we need protracted hearings. I believe Members of Parliament can deal with this. My own personal view is that both Bills should be dealt with right here in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a comment and perhaps a question to the Hon. Member. He stated that he supports the exclusion of certain refugees from the refugee determination process, namely those who come from safe third countries and those with unfounded claims. He is, therefore, against the idea of universal access to the refugee determination system which was supportd by Rabbi Plaut and the standing committee. Both those reports were in favour of universal access.

Rabbi Plaut's report reflects the broadly established consensus in the community of people who are knowledgeable about refugee law that if we have a process which turns claimants around within three or four months, abusers will not come. It would not be worth their while. The cost to come to Canada would be prohibitive if they knew that three or four months after arrival they will be sent back home.

Rabbi Plaut recommended that we ensure that everybody have access to the system and that there be procedural safeguards to ensure that cases are properly understood and that claimants have the opportunity to prepare their case adequately.

Does the Member think it is fair that Bill C-55, which he states he supports, would require refugee claimants to establish a credible basis for their claim within 72 hours of their arrival in Canada? They are in a new country, the language of which they may not speak and the laws and procedures of which they may be unfamiliar with.

I remind the Hon. Member that Rabbi Plaut studied the question of manifestly unfounded claims and rejected that concept. He said that we should not be screening people out on the basis of the fact that they cannot establish a credible basis for their claim, if you will, within a short period after their arrival but that they should have full access to the refugee determination system. Why does he not support that proper and appropriate principle?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, first, I do not believe that one element alone makes a good response to this problem. It may be, as the Member says, that Rabbi Gunther Plaut, representing a consensus on that one issue, felt that determination within a three-month period would largley deter others from coming here and abusing the system. That is not my view.

My view is that that is one element, combined with several others, such as features in this Bill and the counterpart legislation introduced earlier today dealing with detention, determination penalties, and so on, which together provide a package of responses which over-all will have the desired result which we both want, which is that the system not be abused.

On the point that the Hon. Member raised, I have no hesitation whatsoever in recognizing the appropriateness of the safe third country approach. That will be decided by Cabinet. Cabinet will look at such matters as the human rights record of those countries involved and the records of those countries in protecting refugees. These matters are well documented by independent sources such as Amnesty International to which the Cabinet will have access. Indeed, the Cabinet would be receiving advice on these matters from a credible source. That is another reason why I am fully supportive of this.

In addition to that, the screening process about which the Member is concerned will prevent repetive claims. It will ensure that claims from persons who have had an opportunity to obtain the protection of the convention in other countries are not being brought up in this forum yet again.

Although the Hon. Member asked the question, I see that he is now busily engaged in discourse. It may be that on this matter, unlike most others, the Liberals already know what they think and are not interested in listening.

The adjudicator and the refugee division member may also reject a claim where both determine that there is no credible basis for it. This, by any standard, is a relatively low standard. Any arguable claim will be afforded a further hearing before the refugee division.

Those are but a few of the reasons which the Hon. Member, in his quest for further intellectual understanding of this matter, may want to consider further. These have been thought about and are being responded to in the two Bills which are before Parliament and deserve passage now rather than the six-month hoist proposed by the Hon. Member's Party.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the House will know, and I want everyone to know, that we are presently debating an amendment moved by the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) which reads as follows:

> Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

I have a very short, precise question for my colleague. How do the people of his riding react to the Liberal motion, supported by the NDP, not even to discuss this Bill until 1988? How do the people of Etobicoke—Lakeshore react to that firm position of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties not even to discuss this Bill until 1988?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, this question has not completely caught me by surprise because I have heard the point raised earlier in debate today. In Etobicoke—Lakeshore people are generally very concerned about this and want to see some action. They are not concerned about paliamentary niceties.

I have stressed two things concerning Parliament. I say that the Opposition has filibustered, that the Hon. Members for York West (Mr. Marchi) and Spadina (Mr. Heap) have been filibustering. I assist my constituents by providing the phone numbers of those two Toronto Members so they can phone directly and register their feelings there.

Furthermore, I believe that many of these people in my riding and elsewhere are those who wanted very much to see Parliament address the capital punishment issue. When I am asked why, in view of our majority in Parliament, we do not use closure even if the Liberals are so out of touch that they introduce a six-month hoist and the NDP blindly support that, I say that there is only so much that can go through Parliament at one time, even with closure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Ottawa-Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for a short question or comment.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, when I hear the definition of a filibuster as three hours of debate, I thank you especially for the chance to reply. First, the Bill was introduced on May 3 at first reading and, on June 18, there were three hours of debate. The amendment was moved on June 18.

The Sikhs came in mid-July and we are now in August. What is the Hon. Member talking about? He is trying to be what I would call dishonest with the Canadian public. I suggest that he stick to the facts. The motion was made in good faith on June 18, one month before the Sikhs came to this country. Those Members are exaggerating beyond all belief and scaremongering as they usually do. They are telling us that we should believe what they say. There is no way we can do that.

The Hon. Member did make a positive comment about my Leader's speech when he said that we should ask the United Nations or Commonwealth group to sit down and talk about the international problem of refugee movement across this great planet of ours.

If the Hon. Member supports that view, will he tell us how soon he could convince his Leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to convene that Commonwealth conference and get on with this very acute world problem of migrants and to discuss with our friends how we will come to an agreeable solution to settle the issue?

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, in the brief bi-partisan moment of this debate, I would suggest to the Hon. Member that I believe the earliest opportunity would be this fall in Vancouver when the Commonwealth leaders gather there.

I never repeat what goes on in the Conservative caucus meetings because we are not supposed to do so. I always tell my wife that I cannot tell her what goes on in caucus, but she says she does not have to ask because she can read about it the next day in the newspaper. However, without telling the Hon. Member what was said by our Leader in caucus, I can tell him that there is enough on the public record that must clearly make it evident to any discerning Canadian that, above all, the attribute that singles out the Prime Minister is a sense of tolerance and concern for the wellbeing of people. I make that not as a partisan comment but as a very sincere observation of the man.

I believe the suggestion raised on the floor of the House late this afternoon is one that he would find most attractive, most commending and compelling. If he does not read about that suggestion in Hansard, I will personally bring it to his attention as an item that might well be on the agenda. It is another issue on which our country is uniquely situated to play a leadership role. It is a role that must be played because the problem we are facing with these two small pieces of legislation are but the tip of a very significant global iceberg.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, what is so remarkable about questions being asked today by members of the Progressive Conservative Party is that they seem to be labouring under the impression that Canada has a minority Government that is in the hands of the Opposition or, alternatively, they seem to be labouring under the impression that only a few months have passed since they took office. These two strange notions must be put to rest.

Canadians know that there is a majority Government which is not in the hands of 73 members of the Opposition. The Government has the power to act and has exercised that political will on a few occasions. I suggest that 208 Progressive Conservative Members certainly have a strong weight when it comes to a vote against 73 opposition Members.

Second, when one considers almost three years of inactivity, it is peculiar to hear questions raised about the need for action. After all, it was not September, 1986 or September, 1985, but September, 1984 when Canadians gave a majority mandate to the Government. It has had the time to develop its measures and move them through Parliament.

One finds it very peculiar, to say the least, to hear the line of questions by Conservative Members who seem to be oblivious of these two major factors.

It is exactly one year today, on August 11, 1986, when 155 Tamils landed in Newfoundland. It is a very strange coincidence that this debate is taking place today. I find it very interesting and educational to see two pages in today's Toronto Star devoted to biographies of some 65 of those Tamils. I will read only the first biographical sketch accompanying the picture of Annamalai Kamaleswaran. It states that Annamalai Kamaleswaran had to leave his family to save it. In Sri Lanka, the 23-year-old Tamil refugee was preparing to study commerce in university but he said that the civil war forced his family to depend on relatives for support. Now Kamaleswaran operates a dyeing machine in a Montreal textile factory 12 hours a day, 72 hours a week, and sends about $500 a month to feed four brothers and sisters, parents and grandparents.

Page after page and picture after picture provide a very interesting human story about the sublime and the difficulty that a newly arrived person goes through when settling in this very hospitable and generous country of ours.

Against this context, it is difficult to understand why the Government would like Canadians to believe that until June, 1987, Bill C-55 was to be the answer to a problem and, second, that the Government would like Canadians to believe that we have a crisis on hand.

I will briefly try to deal with both assumptions by the Government and prove that both claims are inspired by incompetence, confusion, and by near panic.

Let me first deal with the Bill before us today for debate. Between September, 1984 and May, 1985 the Government did nothing. As other speakers have indicated, the Government came to power with the benefit of a number of reports on the question of how to handle the flow of refugees. Individuals and institutions have produced documentation and studies for the benefit of Government, but not until May 5 of this year did the Government bring in a piece of legislation and not until June 18 of this year, if I remember correctly, did the Government decide to put forward for discussion in this House this measure, a measure which certainly raises a lot of questions. We received cables, letters and telephone calls. We made appointments on weekends in our constituency offices to speak to people who expressed their opposition or at least their concerns about Bill C-55. I am sure Members on the Conservative side have received the same kind of signals.

Why did that happen? It happened because in the Bill as drafted certain international obligations of Canada were denied, overlooked or ignored. The appeal procedure was faulty. It was an initiative which really upset and frustrated a lot of people in this field, including church organizations and volunteer organizations which help immigrants and refugees. They all said they did not approve of the notion that Canada should return a person who claims the status of refugee in Canada, after having visited for a while in another country, to a country which is not his or her own and where that person has no hope whatsoever of starting a new life. Therefore this procedure was not acceptable. It was on these three important grounds that our immigration critic asked questions and fought the measure, and then, in understandable frustration, put forward a motion for a six month hoist. That was very understandable.

We have here a credibility gap. It is a gap which reinforces the notion among Canadians that this Government cannot be trusted in what it says. It cannot be trusted when it claims it cannot pass legislation. It cannot be trusted when it tries to make Canadians believe that the Opposition can stop the legislation it puts forward. That is the substance of this credibility gap. There is a credibility gap both in the process and in the content of the measure this Government has attempted to put forward.

The Government has been in power for almost three years and, as I said, the measure it is proposing is being objected to by church organizations and voluntary groups, and it flies in the face of international commitments that Canada has made over decades to other countries.

It was not for nothing that the Governor General of Canada on November 13, 1986, received on behalf of Canadians from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees the Nansen Medal in recognition of what Canadians have done to help refugees in previous years. Under the Tory administration I doubt very much we will ever qualify again to receive such an honour. Her Excellency, on accepting the medal, said, and I quote:

> In accepting the Nansen Medal on behalf of all Canadians, I would like to thank those who made the decision to honour an entire nation for its openness, tolerance and generosity—I must praise the governments, charitable organizations, groups and individuals who have demonstrated the value of sharing and international solidarity . . . Each Canadian taxpayer has had a stake in this process and might view their contribution towards the re-establishment of refugees as an investment in the welfare of humanity.

These are the words of Her Excellency the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauvé, Governor General of Canada. We certainly would not have received that kind of recognition had the Tories been in power in the preceding years, of that I am quite sure.

Let me refer to this notion of a crisis which compels this Government to call Parliament together. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) earlier punched that inflated balloon down to its real dimensions. In my opinion, if there is a crisis, it is a crisis because of the Government's mismanagement, delays, ineptitude and indecision over almost three years. The Government delayed because it could not act upon three reports and because it yielded to the exploitation of fears in and outside of its own ranks. It is very interesting to learn today about the conflict within the Tory ranks of two Members, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock) and the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. On the one hand, the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North sent out a letter to his constituents informing them he is angry because he feels that his Government acted responsibly to change the law and, on the other hand—and listen to this, Mr. Speaker, because this is extremely revealing—the Progressive Conservative Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in a press release yesterday is quoted as saying, and I quote:

> In May 1987, the Government tabled Bill C-55, a Bill to amend the Immigration Act. It proposes a series of changes to the refugee determination process which would make it almost impossible for many genuine refugees to make a claim, and is in probable violation of both the U.N. convention on refugees (which we have signed and ratified) as well as our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms—

This is not an opposition Member saying this. It is the Progressive Conservative Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration commenting on Bill C-55. How do you like that, Mr. Speaker? In a press release issued by the Chairman of that committee, a member of the Conservative caucus, he shows he has seen through the smoke and has at least called it the way it is. That is quite an indictment. It points to quite a sham. I congratulate the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration for his courage. He unmasked the real substance of Bill C-55. He took seriously his own task and his own commitment as Chairman of that committee.

The crisis is not one engendered by 73 Members of Parliament. It is caused by the measure itself. It is built into it. It has not been criticized by us; it has been criticized by the Chairman of the committee who happens to be a member of the government Party. How do you like that, Mr. Speaker?

I ask myself what the Government's reaction would have been if the boat had been full of Europeans. Have you asked yourself that question, Mr. Speaker? Suppose that boat had been full of people coming from any European country, white people without turbans, without daggers, and without anything with which we are not familiar. Would there have been such a panic? Would there have been such a crisis? Let us be honest. Let us try to ask ourselves that question. Let us try to face that type of intellectual and necessary exercise. If instead that pathetic boat had been a liner full of people with $1 million each applying to be accepted into Canada, what would have been our reaction? Just let us ask ourselves that question. Would there have been a sense of crisis? Would there have been a recall of Parliament to deal with 177 millionaires, white, asking to be admitted?

Mr. Lewis: What was the Liberal reaction in 1943?

Mr. Caccia: Come on, Mr. Parliamentary Secretary, be honest. Ask yourself what your reaction would have been. Get up and speak in this debate. It would be interesting to hear what the answer of the Parliamentary Secretary would be.

I submit to Hon. Members that Canadians should not be misled. It is a valuable service that The Toronto Star is playing by informing and educating the public as it does today with respect to what happened exactly one year ago.

Mr. Attewell: Did anyone telephone your office?

Mr. Caccia: Of course I received telephone calls. We all received telephone calls. We received telephone calls with respect to Bill C-55, something that the Hon. Member would have heard me state when I first started my intervention if he had been here. Of course we did.

All Hon. Members will remember how successful the Ugandans were, how successful the Vietnamese people were and how successful the Tibetans were. We all know how successful subsequent waves of refugees will be if admitted to our country. But we cannot prejudge them. We cannot prejudge people before they have had the opportunity to make their cases. Their cases must be made.

In informing Canadians and in ensuring that they are not misled the Government has failed on a very important front. That is to say that it has not made sure that Canadians know and understand that the flow of immigrants is one flow and that the flow of refugees is another. When one refugee is admitted, we are not denying one immigrant entry. That is the task, the duty and the obligation of the Minister of Immigration. He must ensure that this is fully understood. He must diffuse public opinion in this regard in order to remove the fears and to ensure that refugees are not perceived as being competitors to the normal flow of immigrants.

The solution is there, as all Hon. Members know. There is the Plaut report which has been around since the winter of 1984-85, if the Government had had the political will to deal with it. In its recommendations the Plaut report takes into account Canada's international obligations. It emphasizes the importance of a speedy process. It also emphasizes the importance of remembering that in this game there has to be fairness.

I will now conclude my remarks. It was very popular to imprison Japanese Canadians at one time. We do not want to make a similar mistake with the type of legislation that the Government is proposing for speedy adoption at this time. That applies both to Bill C-55 as well as to Bill C-84.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I have given him an extra two minutes, but his time has now expired. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) on a question or comment.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I have to say that I was in my office when I heard the hon. gentleman making his intervention. I hastened down to the Chamber to identify myself with every word that he has uttered.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, my great-great-grandfather on my father's side was one of those who brought not shiploads but row-boats full of refugees from the United States. Among them were my maternal great-great-grandmother and grandfather. When I look at Bill C-84 it is perfectly clear that I would not be standing here before Hon. Members today if this Government had been in power at that time.

Mr. Lewis: That is nonsense!

Mr. McCurdy: It is also clear that in its haste to correct its public image the Government has hastened to identify itself with those who have not given very much thought to the issue of immigration or of refugees as they affect the country. They have deliberately attempted to confuse the two for no other reason than political opportunism.

I listened to the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore (Mr. Boyer). I was amazed at the intellectual contortions that he went through in order to justify the absolutely unjustifiable. How can the Government ignore everyone in the country who has been involved with the question of refugees? There has been report after report. A parliamentary committee has studied the matter. Does the Government do this for no other reason than political opportunism?

I stood in this House and congratulated my country with pride because it won the Nansen Medal. I am ashamed of what the Government is attempting to do. Canadians have legitimate concerns about the abuse of the refugee process. But that is an abuse, as the Hon. Member indicated, that could have been corrected a long time ago without having premised its action on political opportunism and panic.

My question to the Hon. Member is very simple. Can he see any reasonable basis, apart from political opportunism and panic, which would justify, give any intellectual basis or any principled basis to what the Government will do by the introduction and passage of Bill C-55 and Bill C-84?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) can either answer tomorrow or take 60 seconds in which to answer now.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I can't wait to hear it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Berger: If you can't wait, then stick around, Ray.

Mr. Caccia: I can understand why the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) feels compelled to leave the Chamber. Evidentally, it is getting too hot in the kitchen for him.

There is no reasonable basis, no reasonable argument, that can be made for Bill C-55. That is the reason why, after questioning and after the three-hour debate, our immigration critic put forward his motion with respect to hoisting the Bill for six months. That represents our position. It represents a well thought out position, a position which the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) arrived at slowly and gradually in a reasoned and patient manner after having exhausted all the alternatives. At that time that seemed to be the only possible solution to a situation in which a majority Government would not listen to our pleas to make at least two changes. If I remember correctly, two changes would have permitted the passage of the Bill very speedily. But we were faced with a stone wall. That is the reality.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY—COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS—HEARING OF WITNESSES. (B) MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise today and address an issue which I had previously pointed out to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) concerning the effects of Bill C-22 on Canadians from coast to coast. At that time in February of 1987, I brought to the attention of the House the fact that there was a decision reached by members of the legislative committee reviewing Bill C-22, that it was my understanding and belief that the Minister had given a directive to those members of that particular committee in order to prohibit and to prevent the committee from examining testimony of witnesses from other countries, namely, the United States.

The rationale for seeking the testimony of individuals in the United States has been very clear as a result of the Government's stated intentions with regard to trade and a number of other matters. It ought to be remembered that, with regard to Bill C-22 and the amendments thereto, the Government in the pharmaceutical Act itself is trying to change the Canadian system to make it more in line with that of the United States. Therefore, members of my Party as well as the New Democratic Party supported the motion to seek out the views of individuals in the United States who are familiar with that system, because those of us in Canada, namely, the Government of the day, were trying to move toward that system.

Unfortunately, the government members on that committee refused to hear individuals such as the chairman of the generic pharmaceutical industry in the United States in the person of Mr. William Haddad, a former special adviser to the former President of the United States, John F. Kennedy. They refused to hear the testimony of senior citizens' groups and organizations in the United States who have been fighting and waging a battle to change the American law and to adopt the Canadian law. They believe this law to be in the best interests not only of consumers, but indeed of all people in the United States.

The system that we have here in Canada we, in the Liberal Party, believe very strongly is in the best interest of all Canadians. It underlines the concerns that I have had for quite some time with regard to Bill C-22. The effects of Bill C-22 have been demonstrated by numerous witnesses. To highlight a few, they are: the Royal Canadian Legion; the United Church of Canada; Provincial Nurses' Association of Prince Edward Island; the Health Coalition in my own constituency of Cape Breton—East Richmond; and provincial Governments in Ontario, Manitoba, Alberta, and other provinces. They have all expressed real concerns about the devastating effects that could arise as a result of Bill C-22 passing this House without amendments as put forward by myself, or indeed by the Senate of Canada.

In this short intervention that I make I must remind Hon. Members that prices to Canadian consumers for pharmaceutical drugs will rise dramatically. The Government contends that the Prices Review Board will be of some assistance in controlling those prices. It is not set up to control prices. It is only set up to review something after it takes place. Its authority, both in terms of statute and in terms of precedent under the law, is, to say the least, extremely weak. In fact, constitutional experts have suggested in writing and in public that the Bill itself as it relates to the Prices Review Board is unconstitutional.

The contention made by government Members, particularly the Minister, that the passage of Bill C-22 without amendment will create thousands of new jobs and increased expenditures in research and development has not been proven. Nor have the arguments been sustained by concrete and specific evidence; quite the contrary. I hope the Government will respond in a much more positive and much more reasonable and objective manner.

The New Democratic Party opposed outright any amendment to Bill C-22. We, as the Liberal Party, have stated very clearly that the pharmaceutical Act needs reform. I moved some 40-odd amendments to that Bill, much in line with the recommendations of Dr. Eastman, an authority recognized by the three political Parties in this Chamber.

Those recommendations were supported, I believe as early as a couple of weeks ago, in the form of a signed petition asking the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to reform the pharmaceutical Act in line with the recommendations of Dr. Eastman, which have been the recommendations of the Liberal Party since day one.

I hope I will hear from the very distinguished Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mrs. Bertrand) some positive news from the Government on a very important subject matter.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 was designed by Canadians for Canadians. This legislation will result in tremendous benefits for all Canadians, such as improved health care, heightened research and development activity and greater employment opportunities, to name but a few.

All this will be achieved with the guarantee of reasonably priced drugs for Canadian consumers. Nothing in this Bill runs counter to the interests of Canadians.

A Bill that so closely impacts on the most elemental aspects of the lives of Canadians must be discussed and weighed by those concerned, that is, all the representatives of Canada's various interested sectors.

The reasons, Mr. Speaker, that we are insisting that this issue be debated by Canadians are numerous, and all are legitimate. First, the list of witnesses who appeared before the legislative committee is extensive and impressive. Many of these witnesses are considered leaders in their field. They represent all sectors of the Canadian economy and the opinions they put forward, whether they were for or against the Bill, covered all sides of the question.

In addition, we received numerous highly detailed submissions reiterating the arguments raised by the witnesses, and these submissions were subjected to close scrutiny by Committee members, including the Hon. Member.

As a result, Mr. Speaker, we did not consider it appropriate to hear representatives of other countries discussing what is best for Canada. We have the expertise right here at home to do that. We are firmly convinced that foreign representatives could not be acting solely in the interests of Canadians. What advantages would they derive from such a gesture? It would also seem odd, Mr. Speaker, to hear representatives of other countries discussing matters connected with our internal policy.

I would like to point out that we are aware of the situation in other countries, particularly in the United States, because of the many studies that have been published on the subject. For example, one such study, the report of the Commission of Inquiry on the Pharmaceutical Industry prepared by Professor Eastman, makes repeated comparisons between Canada and other countries. Furthermore, our health care system and the legislation associated with it are very different from those in other countries. Our own experts are best qualified to discuss these matters.

I find it particularly surprising that Members of the Opposition are pressing to hear representatives of American interests, in view of the fact that, since the Bill was first tabled, they have been accusing us of bending to American pressure. Let me once again stress the need to ensure that this issue of such vital importance to Canadians results in a consensus among Canadians.

HARBOURFRONT—MORATORIUM ON TORONTO WATERFRONT CONSTRUCTION PROJECTS

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you ever had an opportunity to visit Harbourfront in Toronto? Now I do not mean the lakefront or the waterfront, I mean Harbourfront.

Harbourfront in Toronto is, as I hope you are aware, Mr. Speaker, a portion of the Toronto lakefront. It totals some 100 acres in size and strtches from York Street on the east to Stadium Road on the west. It is owned by us, by the federal Government. This is federal land right in the heart of Metropolitan Toronto, situated on prime waterfront territory. It is right next to the water as would be connoted by its name, and it is a wonderful place. In fact, it is a magic place.

I can tell by the twinkle in your eye, Mr. Speaker, that you were just kidding me. You really have been there and you think it is a wonderful place as well.

A number of members of the greater Metropolitan Toronto PC caucus and I had an opportunity to tour Harbourfront last Thursday. We were struck by some amazing sights. We saw the playgrounds, the craft programs, the day camps, the art galleries, the theatres, the outdoor restaurants, the shops, the boat charters, the antique market and the gondola rides.

Have you ever had a gondola ride, Mr. Speaker? Perhaps you have had one in Venice, Italy, but I bet you have never had a gondola ride here in Canada. You could have one at Harbourfront, Mr. Speaker.

Over 4,000 different cultural programs go on at Harbourfront every year. I can see that the Parliamentary Secretary is impressed by this as well. You name it, Harbourfront has it. However, it also has something else. It has a lot of development. While we were there, we heard from the residents of the area about this development.

There is every sort of development at Harbourfront. There are old warehouses that have been turned into retail shops and theatres. There are new and old office buildings, there are co-op apartments, condominiums, hotels and every sort of conceivable public and private building. It is that development that has put Harbourfront into a swirl of controversy in my community of Metropolitan Toronto.

It is that development that caused the City of Toronto to put a freeze on development at Harbourfront in the spring of this year and to institute a development review. It was that same controversy that caused our own Government to put its own freeze on development in the spring of this year and to institute a review as well.

When that freeze went on, six particular buildings had already been approved for construction. Those buildings were described by some as being in the pipeline, and now they are referred to as pipeline buildings. They are in the process of going ahead.

Those buildings include a co-op building at 633 Lakeshore Boulevard West, the Konvey condominium at 650 Lakeshore Boulevard West, the Konvey condominium at 11 Stadium Road, the Rampart condominium at 441 Queen's Quay West, the Huang and Danczkay condominium at 385 Queen's Quay West and the Huang and Danczkay link building at 350 Queen's Quay West. All of those buildings are pipeline buildings that were approved, ready to go ahead but caught in the freeze.

The City of Toronto has recently completed its review of the development on the site but it has come out with some interesting findings. In fact, the city Planning Commissioner said the city should allow those buildings to go ahead but only if the federal Government conveys to the City of Toronto 40 of the 100 acres for parkland. It should also at the same time agree to down-zoning future development. In contrast, the city Parks and Recreation Commissioner, disagreeing with his colleague, says they should stop development altogether on 441 and 385 Queens Quay West because they are between the south side of Queens Quay West and the lakefront. They would block the view of the people of Toronto to the lakefront. The city solicitor says that will cost not only the city but the federal Government tens of millions of dollars.

Last night the City of Toronto council looked at all these reports and made a decision. It said all six buildings in the pipeline should go ahead regardless of whether or not they block the view. However, it said 6.5 acres of the parkland should be transferred to the city and we should tighten up the density requirements there. All of these things were decided last night.

The big question is, what is the federal Government going to do about it? It has had its own review. The Government has always deferred to the city on planning matters. When the city refused something, the Government agreed, or agreed to go ahead when the city approved it. Are we going to lift our freeze now that the city has said we should? Are we going to downgrade the height of those buildings to eight storeys? Are we going to preserve Harbourfront for the people of Toronto, or are we going to see what has been described as a ceramic wall erected between the lake and the people of the City of Toronto? I would like to hear the answers to those questions from the Parliamentary Secretary tonight.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude Lanthier (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada is proceeding with a full policy review of the role and mandate of the Harbourfront Corporation in Toronto.

[English]

The policy review of the role and mandate is well under way. It will be concluded in September, at which point Ministers will decide what if any changes should be made to the mandate and what if any changes should be made to the existing development plans of the corporation. I ask Members to note that the existing plans were approved in 1981 by all levels of Government, including the City of Toronto, the Metropolitan Toronto Council, the Province of Ontario, as well as the Government of Canada.

Harbourfront has had many successes to its credit. However, in spite of that, public and civic concern has risen in recent months over specific issues, most notably over the seemingly sudden appearance of high-rise residential blocks in an area which people thought would have only medium-height development, as well as the apprehension that promised parkland will not be delivered. Indeed, these concerns were raised here in the House, for example by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway), who presented a petition in the spring identifying concerns of the petitioners regarding the height, density, recreation space and parking requirements of Harbourfront.

To support the federal policy review and the city's land use review, the Government, Harbourfront and the city placed a hold on projects on the drawing boards. I understand the process has now reached the stage where last night city council considered and took decisions on a report from the Commissioner of Planning and that the mayor will shortly be communicating the city's decision to my Minister. I further understand that city council has approved a motion that the six projects affected by the hold on development should be allowed to proceed subject to certain conditions and passage through the city's normal planning and development approval process.

My Minister, in consultation with other Ministers representing Toronto area constituencies and with Hon. Members of this House from Toronto, will want to sit down and consider carefully the city's views, including any possible financial implications of changing the existing plan or modifying Habourfront's role and mandate.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say that in my view, while the policy review, the city's land use review, and the hold on developments have created some uncertainties and difficulties, they are basically sound actions on the part of the Government of Canada and the City of Toronto to take the breathing space which has been created and make doubly sure that the Harbourfront vision corresponds to the wishes and needs of the people of Toronto and the millions of other Canadians who will be attracted to visit there.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—NORTHERN ONTARIO—ALLEGED TRANSFERS OF PUBLIC SERVICE JOBS. (B) REQUEST FOR FREEZE ON JOB TRANSFERS

Mr. John Parry (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, my question on the "Late Show" today arises from my question on March 31 which was one of a number of such questions posed by myself and the Hon. Members for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Epp), Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), and Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) in the period from November, 1986, through June, 1987. We encountered what could politely be termed a lengthy saga of obfuscation, delay and non-information on the part of the Government.

Over the period of seven months during which we were asking about the proposed Northern Ontario Redevelopment Program, we received answers to our questions couched in such terms as "in a few weeks", "shortly", "soon", and "in due course" with regard to when the answers would be available. It was not until July 13 that, in response to months of pressure, the Government finally announced the Northern Ontario Redevelopment Program.

Unfortunately, the announcement was not worth the seven and a half months of wait. The program as announced could only be described as niggardly. Naturally, we in northern Ontario are grateful for any assistance we get and we can promise that it will all be put to good use. However, when we compare the assistance which has been promised in the Northern Ontario Redevelopment Fund, namely, a nominal figure of $55 million over five years, to that which has been promised to other parts of the country, we can see that northern Ontario is again getting short shrift from the Conservative Government.

The program in fact consists of approximately $40 million available for loans, grants, top-ups, et cetra, and $60 million worth of loan guarantees which is equated to $15 million. That works out to a loan loss provision of 25 per cent, which is in itself unrealistic and discriminatory.

Eleven million dollars for a five-year period, $55 million if such is eventually the size of the Northern Ontario Redevelopment Fund, is less than the five months' budget of the provincial Ministry of Northern Affairs. When we compare, on a per capita basis of residents, or on a per capita basis of those who are actually unemployed and to whom obviously the fund is directed in terms of creating employment for them, we see that northern Ontario is receiving significantly less than the other areas of the country which have recently received announcements.

It is not that we begrudge anything going to the Atlantic or the western provinces, but Atlantic Canada, with four times the unemployment of northern Ontario, depending on the method of calculation, will receive between 18 and 25 times the assistance provided for in the Northern Ontario Redevelopment Fund. Western Canada, with approximately ten times as many residents and unemployed, will receive approximately 30 times the assistance. Yet, the geography and the economy of northern Ontario, particularly my own part of northwestern Ontario, is so much closer to that of the Maritimes and that of western Canada as to resemble either of them far more than the economy of southern Ontario. For example, parts of my riding are farther away from Toronto than any capital of a maritime province. There are parts of my riding that are much closer to Calgary, indeed closer to Cranbrook, British Columbia, than they are to the booming economy of the golden horseshoe.

The difficulties which northern Ontario has had to face were aggravated and indeed consisted mainly of the loss of jobs and government jobs in particular. While the Government was answering in the House that jobs were not being transferred out of northwestern and northern Ontario, Departments were cutting employment. These included the Wheat Board, the Department of National Defence, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, Indian and Northern Affairs Canada, and also the Crown corporations of CN Rail and Canada Post which have been cutting jobs in northern Ontario.

Yet there are very significant opportunities which this fund must take advantage of in order to build up the employment base that the Government has so far eroded. They lie in gold mining and in construction for the service industry and for the modernization of our great pulp and paper mills. They lie in the infilling of the service sector with particular reference to tying in the economy of native communities with the economies of cities and towns.

Another disappointment is that nothing has happened in the four weeks since the announcement was made. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher), who is the Minister nominally responsible, has not even replied to correspondence concerning proposed nominations to the board, and no civil servant has been named to the staff of the new fund.

The remedies are clear. The budget must be at least doubled. The $15 million budgetary charge against the potential loan losses should be converted to a real allocation against future loan losses, a true loss provision for these loan guarantees. Only by that sort of measure could the Government convince the people of northern Ontario that it is serious about the economic redevelopment of our region.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to reply. I want to assure my hon. colleague that the Government is very serious about addressing the concerns of northern Ontario.

Before I give my formal reply, I want to say that I am disappointed that my hon. friend does not appreciate and in fact criticizes the efforts we have made to assist the Atlantic provinces and the West. I want to point out that he does not speak for Ontario when he says that.

Mr. Parry: I did not say that.

Mr. Lewis: All Members from Ontario want to assist the other parts of the country which are economically disadvantaged. We are proud of what we are trying to do for other parts of the country. It is very distressing to hear my friend criticize what is being done for the Atlantic provinces and the West.

The Hon. Member has referred to what we are doing. Let me point out again that we announced on July 13, 1987, a new economic development program for northern Ontario. It is focused on the creation of a special northern Ontario development fund of $55 million and, which my friend conveniently left out, the use of loan guarantees, loans and grants, which has a potential to provide a value of $100 million through the private sector, which, of course, the NDP does not like.

Let us consider the program. It is resourceful, imaginative, original, and flexible. It is not completely government and bureaucrat driven, which I know bothers my hon. friend from the interventionist socialist Party.

We have an advisory board of some 12 private sector leaders who are resident in northern Ontario, not in Ottawa. They will all be from northern Ontario and will provide important local advice on the planning and the programming in order to get northern Ontario directly involved.

It will be of particular benefit to medium and small businesses. We all realize that that is the backbone of the economy and we want to attempt to get away from the one-industry town stigma which too long has hampered development in northern Ontario.

We have established a DRIE office. We will have a local senior official who will have secretarial assistance to the advisory board.

We will make the announcement about the advisory board very shortly. I am pleased that my colleague has offered some ideas as to who might serve on the board. The fact that he wants to see people appointed to this local board is, in itself, an admission that we are on the right track. While he did not exactly compliment us on it, I am sure that is what he meant when he talked about suggesting names for members of the board.

We think it makes unique use of the entrepreneurs and business people in Northern Ontario. We are going to attach significant importance to the advice we receive from the advisory board. We want this board to advise the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. CÛté) on specific program elements which will include the topping off or enriching of existing government programs so we specifically meet the problems and particular needs of Northern Ontario, which we all realize has been ignored by the previous Liberal Government. I am sure my colleague would join me in those sentiments.

There is a great deal more I could say. I have as much time as you have, Mr. Speaker. I know you would like to hear all of this.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would appreciate hearing about it but I think we will try it again another time.

THE CONSTITUTION

OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND MEECH LAKE ACCORD

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question I directed to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) yesterday concerning the equality of women and minorities in this country with respect to the Constitution and the Meech Lake Accord, the Minister of Justice responded by urging me to consider my position and added that, according to Government legal advisors, the rights of women are not in any way diminished by the Meech Lake Accord provisions. Allow me to differ, and I am not the only one because a number of constitutional lawyers share my view.

Again I want to ask the Government to bring in an amendment to clarify this text. Naturally I am somewhat surprised that the Government would not take appropriate action because one must remember the saying: Where there is a will, there is a way. I think this is a very important question about which the Government should do something.

I would simply point out that if women are left to take this matter into their own hands the Government might very well have a surprise, as was the case in 1981.

WAR CRIMINALS

SUGGESTED REFERRAL OF BILL C-71 TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary East): Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Government will be courageous and just and use due parliamentary procedure to send Bill C-71 to a legislative committee after second reading, and at the same time follow the recommendations of the Deschênes Commission.

Our majority Government should show Canadians that we are not only interested in dealing with past war crimes from the Second World War but also with those current ones being committed in Afghanistan, the Middle East, Cambodia, and Central America, as well as crimes against humanity which might occur in the future.

Twenty years from today we would not want hindsight to show Canadians that our motives for bringing in this legislation were wrong.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—SUPPORT URGED FOR PEACE PLAN

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in a remarkable achievement the Presidents of the five Central American republics have agreed to a broad peace plan for their tragically troubled region. This plan, introduced by the President of Costa Rica and within the context of Contadora, should be enthusiastically endorsed by Canada.

Canada has long supported Contadora and Latin American solutions to the crisis in Central America. Canada should offer verification resources, funding, and other support for the implementation of the plan and any cease-fire and military disengagement.

Canada should offer to observe any cease-fire, as well as any future elections, if invited to do so. Canada could also offer to host the urgently needed resumption of bilateral talks between the United States and Nicaragua. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has clearly stated that Canada opposes the supply of arms to any faction in the region. Canada should continue to make this clear, and in particular should object to any renewed U.S. funding for the Contras.

HISTORIC EVENTS

ANNIVERSARY OF BATTLE OF DIEPPE

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, although for many people August is traditionally a holiday time when public issues are often ignored, I sincerely trust that Canadians will pause for a moment to remember that August 19, 1987, marks the forty-fifth anniversary of the Battle of Dieppe, an event that should never be forgotten.

Although as a young historian I stood on the beaches of Dieppe, we who were not there at the time will never be able to fully appreciate what was asked of those 5,000 members of the 2nd Canadian Division who went ashore despite the fact that all of the advantages were enjoyed by the enemy.

While military historians continue to argue about the merits of the Dieppe raid, the harsh fact remains that only 2,200, including 600 wounded, of the 5,000 returned to England. Over 900 were dead, the rest were prisoners of war.

Therefore, Canadians of all generations should remember and acknowledge those who, 45 years ago, were prepared to sacrifice all so that we today could enjoy the many privileges and freedoms which we all too often take for granted.

TRAGIC DEATH OF PUBLIC SERVANTS—GOOD WISHES FOR ACCIDENT SURVIVORS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, a week ago today, this country lost four of its dedicated public servants.

I am referring to François Gascon, Robert Paradis, Richard Lemay and Jennifer Morden, all employees of the National Capital Commission, who lost their lives in a tragic accident on a highway in New York State while working on a campaign to promote this country.

Sadly, we are powerless to soften the impact of this painful loss on the fathers, mothers, husbands and wives, children, brothers and sisters, friends and colleagues of those who died. On behalf of all my colleagues and of the entire country, I can do no more than extend our sincere condolences and express our feelings of deepest sympathy.

As for Anne-Marie Leclerc, who was seriously hurt, we hope that the prayers of her family will give her the strength needed for a prompt recovery. And of course I must not forget Nathalie Charron, who, although she was physically unharmed, will always carry the memory of this tragic accident that stunned people across Canada.

I want to invite the people of Ottawa—Vanier and Ottawa—Carleton to attend the funeral service at Ottawa's Notre-Dame Cathedral, to honour the memory of these upstanding public servants.

POLITICAL PARTIES

ATTITUDE OF LIBERALS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, unless they can be persuaded to change their minds, the appointed members of the Senate will refuse to pass Bill C-22, the legislation on drug patents.

The Senate's attitude is due to the firm grasp on that body exercised by an influential Liberal, a former member of the Liberal Cabinet and one of the prominent party members who are challenging the leadership of their present Leader.

May I suggest that if their party is to survive, Liberal Senators should have the political sense to respect the mandate of the elected Members of this House. Otherwise, in the next election, Canadians will eliminate what Liberals there are left.

And if the Liberal Senators insist on committing political suicide, the unfortunate result would be that the Socialists would form the Official Opposition in this House, unless the old Liberal clique decides to lean to the left as well.

Great Britain buried its Liberals. I don't think Canadians should do that.

ADOPTION OF NATIONAL STANDARDS ADVOCATED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Government's long awaited response to the Special Committee on Child Care was due. It is an innocuous two-page document which was not even tabled, and it states nothing of substance. It alludes to a national strategy on child care, but it gives no clue to what this strategy will be. There is no statement of federal objectives for a national child care program which is essential for negotiations with the provinces.

• (1410)

Surely, after two years of unnecessary delay, the Minister by now could have at least established national objectives for a child care program that is accessible in all regions of Canada and to families of all incomes, that is comprehensive, with a range of flexible child care services, and provides guidelines so that federal funding will go only to licensed, quality child care services.

Another broken promise from a Government that cannot be trusted.

ABUSE OF ENTRY REQUIREMENTS CONDEMNED

Mr. Gordon Taylor (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are angry. Canadian sovereignty has been abused and the Canadian nation literally raped by foreigners arriving in our land, unannounced, and immediately demanding the rights accorded to Canadian citizens.

The laws and treaties that permit this abuse do not represent the thinking of the vast majority of Canadians. If any of these are genuine refugees, they should know enough to seek proper admittance, and not sneak into the country. The so-called refugees who destroy their documents and lie about their status and pay large sums of money to smugglers should be shipped back to whence they came. To give them any consideration at all is an affront to Canadians and to the people who seek entry legally.

I commend the Hon. Ministers of Immigration for introducing Bill C-84, for it reflects the thinking of the vast majority of Canadians. The bleeding hearts may howl, but the vast majority of Canadian people will applaud. "Bravo", I say. "Now we are seeing democracy at work."

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES—DEMAND THAT AGRICULTURAL QUOTA SYSTEM BE RETAINED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): On August 4, 1987, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Federation of Milk Producers sent a letter to the Minister for International Trade (Miss Carney) in which they stated:

> Milk producers the world over are extremely concerned about the deteriorating situation of worldwide trade in dairy products. World supply exceeds demand.

Further I read:

> World leaders in the dairy production sector advocate that production cutting mechanisms be maintained and strengthened, including quotas, early retirement programs as well as herd buy-back and price adjustment programs, so that world market prices may again become profitable.

Mr. Speaker, it is therefore important that the Minister for International Trade should clearly indicate to the House that the existing quota system will not be put on the block in the trade negotiations with the United States of America. Canadian dairy producers need that assurance now, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPORT FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult to overestimate the amount of frustration that exists in my riding of Niagara Falls, and I believe across Canada, on the subject of Canada's refugee determination laws.

Canadians have felt abused and frustrated that people are systematically taking advantage of Canada. Therefore, I strongly support Bill C-84, a Bill which will bring some common sense and reasonableness back into the system.

The new measures, combined with Bill C-55, send a clear message to the world that Canada will not be taken advantage of.

At the same time I am disappointed and dismayed to see once again that the opposition Parties will be opposing the Government in its attempt to move this quickly through the legislative process. That is unfortunate for them, because all Canada is watching this debate.

STATISTICS CANADA

INCREASED CHARGE FOR COMPUTER READABLE DATA

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw attention to the Government's policy on reducing access to computer readable products from Statistics Canada.

The cost of 1986 computer readable census products which are still available has increased between 1,567 per cent and 9,900 per cent in three years. Canadian census products at some small area levels will cost $2,500 per file; comparable U.S. census data costs $175.

The cost of doing business in Canada will be severely affected by this increased cost of vital information. However, probably even more important, academic research and teaching will no longer be able to afford to use current Canadian data for the study of Canadian society but will be forced to use old data or U.S. data. It will be impossible to subject government studies to peer review for lack of affordable data.

The principle of government collected information as a public good is explicitly stated in federal legislation and policy statements. Even the Nielsen task force did not go this far in cost recovery. The Government has gone too far in restricting this information.

Oral Questions

LABOUR RELATIONS

POSSIBLE RAILWAY STRIKE—EFFECT ON EDMONTON

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, if there is one thing that Canadians, especially Edmontonians, do not need it is a strike by railway workers. Edmonton is experiencing high unemployment. A very large financial institution has declared bankruptcy, affecting some 100,000 or more Albertans with a potential loss of their savings. A tornado that went through Edmonton caused loss of life, loss of approximately 1,000 jobs and almost a quarter billion dollars in damages. A railway strike will seriously and adversely affect Edmonton's many businesses and their employees.

• (1415)

Surely there is a better method of dealing with labour disputes than strikes or lock-outs. In the past, all railway strikes have always been settled so why not settle the dispute before a strike? It makes common sense to Edmontonians and to Canadians to settle now.

On behalf of Edmontonians and the people of Canada, I urge Canada's two major railways and the affected unions to arrange a settlement immediately and peacefully.

ROAD SAFETY

INSTALLATION OF AUTOMOBILE LAP-SHOULDER BELT SYSTEMS

Mrs. Thérèse Killens (Saint-Michel—Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, the Canada Safety Council met in Toronto in late June for its 19th annual conference. The following motion was adopted:

> That the Canada Safety Council urge Transport Canada to make adjustable lap-shoulder belt systems in rear outboard seating positions available as standard equipment in passenger vehicles by no later than model year 1990.

The Safety Council is also asking the Government to require car makers to produce lap-shoulder kits to install in older cars.

These recommendations demonstrate once again the need for better protection for car passengers and reinforce the Government's mandate to see that all Canadians, be they front-seat or rear-seat passengers, benefit from maximum protection.

The Canadian Safety Council is to be commended for its foresight in this security matter.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

NORTHERN ONTARIO—CRITICISM OF PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT POLICIES

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, after 27 months of Liberal-NDP rule in the Province of Ontario, we can see firsthand the havoc northern Ontarians have suffered. The communities of Temagami, Latchford, Elk Lake and River Valley have had their fill of the Premier's politics.

Recent decisions by Queen's Park to limit new wood supplies in the southern Timiskaming region are irresponsible to the businesses and the people of the area. They are about to cause great hardship, especially the decision to halt the construction of the Red Squirrel access road extension.

Almost 15,000 direct and indirect jobs are in jeopardy due to the insensitivity to northern Ontarian concerns of the Premier and the Minister of Natural Resources. In fact, next month 180 workers at Temagami's William Milne and Sons sawmill could be on the unemployment lines. This is not acceptable. I call on the Premier to respond to the needs of the southern Timiskaming residents and to listen to the people whose livelihoods he is playing with.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—OFFER OF BRIEFINGS—GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, last week the NDP asked for some secret, private, cosy briefing from the Minister for International Trade on free trade and the Minister has leaped at that opportunity and has now given that offer back to the NDP. However, we understand that that corner of the House has some trouble in making up its mind.

I believe that all Canadians have a right to know what is on the Government's mind. All Canadians have a right to know what is at stake in these free trade negotiations, including brewery workers whose jobs are on the line, farmers who feel threatened by these negotiations, and yes, automobile workers who get a different answer every time the Minister speaks. In light of this, when will the Minister for International Trade release those secret studies that indicate which industries will be harmed by these negotiations?

When will the Minister for International Trade set out in detail what exactly are the priorities of the Government in its negotiations with the United States?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member points out that I did write to the Leaders of both opposition Parties to offer them a briefing as we enter the crucial last stage of the negotiations. They are both Privy Councillors. We have offered similar briefings to the Premiers and to the 300 members of our sectoral advisory groups. They have always respected the confidentiality of those briefings. We expect no less from the Leaders of the opposition Parties. The Right Hon. Member has rejected that, and it is under consideration by the Hon. Member for Oshawa.

• (1420)

As to the agenda of the talks, I again refer the Hon. Member to the debate we held in this House on Monday, March 16, 1987, when I and other members of this Government set out in great detail the agenda of the talks and the Canadian objectives. I recommend he go back and read the Hansard report of that debate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I reread the Minister's speech and there is nothing in there to guide Members of this House or the Canadian people generally.

CANADIAN POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government and the NDP may believe they can participate in a conspiracy of silence but we believe all Canadians have a right to know what is happening in these negotiations. We admit we know some things. We know the Government has given in to the Americans on foreign investment, lumber, pharmaceutical patents, and book publishing. What we would like to know from the Minister is when we are going to get something in return and what we are going to get?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, since the Right Hon. Member is not taking advantage of my offer for private briefings, I suggest he should wait until October 5 to find out the answers to his questions.

May I point out that in my speech of March 16 I said, to quote Hansard, "Let me deal with the agenda of the trade talks". I then dealt with it and referred to tariffs. I said non-tariff barriers are on the table, as well as Customs matters, subsidy-related measures, dispute settlement mechanisms, intellectual property and trade-related investment. I spelled it all out. I again suggest the Right Hon. Member read the Debates before he continues this frivolous line that we have not debated and discussed in public what we are dealing with in the free trade talks.

GOVERNMENT ATTITUDE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the Minister was not clear at all in her speech, and I read it twice. At least the American Government was open and honest about its claims. It submitted in writing a list of what it expected of the Canadian Government. It was published in an official document that is before the U.S. Cabinet. It wants to see our breweries, the Canadian Wheat Board and our drug legislation disappear, it wants changes in the Bank Act, in our procurement policies, our postal rates and our social policies, to name only a few. The Americans are not afraid to reveal their priorities to their people. Why should our Government be different? Why isn't the Canadian Government open and honest with Canadians during these talks?

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Right Hon. Member go back and consider the motion we presented in this House and which we voted in favour of. That motion said:

> That this House supports the negotiation of a bilateral trading arrangement with the United States, as part of the government's multilateral trade policy, while protecting our political sovereignty, social programs, agricultural marketing systems, the auto industry, and our unique cultural identity.

We distributed copies of Hansard to the Hon. Member. Why does he not read the material presented to him?

REFUGEES

TERMS OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration. For some two and a half years now our Party has been calling on the Government to stop the abusive and profitable scams of smugglers and consultants who continue to traffic in human beings.

Under the new refugee legislation just tabled the Government would have the power to fine or put in prison any individual Canadian, group, or church leader who simply assists refugees. How can the Minister justify making the actions of a priest, nun or layman who genuinely helps individuals in need, an act of civil disobedience? Will he not agree that he has gone far beyond what was required? Will he agree to amend the legislation so that it can target the real abusers and exploiters, not those who give of themselves for the betterment of their fellow human beings?

• (1425)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the Hon. Member has spoken to the subject in the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Not true!

Mr. Bouchard: I am going to refer to what he said today, but if I look at the statements he has made for the last three weeks with the Leader of the Opposition, I think we are in for some surprises, because there are four, five or six different versions. However, I am not going to quote the Hon. Member but I want to ask him, before all Canadians, exactly where the Liberal Party stands on the refugee question. No fence sitting, no statements about putting them out of the country, no statements about . . . I now ask publicly, in the presence of all Canadians that the Liberal Party tell us whether it is for or against the legislation aimed at returning phony refugees.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day. I think Canadians are ashamed of having a response to a serious question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York West has the floor. I know he will be given the courtesy of having his question heard.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should ask for the response of the Right Hon. Prime Minister who has prejudiced the matter by calling these people illegal aliens before due process. The Minister should get his own responses before arrogantly asking the responses of others who have clearly put their position on the floor of the House of Commons.

PUNITIVE MEASURES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I will return to the Minister. Does the Minister not realize that the legislation provides that a priest helping a group of ten refugees out of charity and compassion could be liable to the same $500,000 fine and the same ten-year prison term as would be applied to a consultant who charges $10,000 a head and dumps the people on our shores?

How can he possibly make these two radically different actions, one for immoral profit and one based on human compassion, the very same under the letter of his law introduced yesterday?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will let Canadians answer my friend. On July 13, 1987, my friend said:

> We have to deal stringently with those culprits who are responsible. That's the frustration—a lot of Canadians had in terms of people like—who takes advantage of the system and gets away scot-free.

Some Hon. Members: Exactly.

Mr. Marchi: That's our position.

Mr. Bouchard: I want to tell my friend today that he will have—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Bouchard: Mr. Speaker, I have another wonderful quote from my friend himself. He said:

> What about the most recent smugglers in Halifax who were sentenced to the maximum fine and a year in jail for bringing in the Sikhs? What if they are deemed legitimate refugees at a hearing? Should we have punished the captain who saved their lives by bringing them here?

That is what you are quoted as saying in The Globe and Mail. Where do you stand, please?

• (1430)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gauthier: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville has the floor. I know that there are strong views on both sides of this issue, but I am sure that all Hon. Members will want to give each other a proper opportunity to ask questions and give a proper opportunity as well for Ministers to reply. I am sure that after Question Period those Members who wish to carry on a separate discussion with each other can take advantage of the appropriate rooms and places for that. The Hon. Member.

USE OF MONEY FOR PROGRAMS AND PROJECTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. It concerns the Western Diversification Fund recently announced by the Government. As the Prime Minister is aware, many western Canadians are suspicious that this might be a second curtain call of the empty Liberal Western Development Fund of Allan MacEachen in the early 1980s.

Some $79 million has been taken out of the fund for the South Moresby National Park and another $54 million for the Salmonid Enhancement Program. Western Canadians want to know what other previously announced or existing government programs, projects, or initiatives will be paid for out of the Western Diversification Fund? Just how much of that fund has already been committed to previous government programs and how much money will be left for small business and new projects?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member now takes the opportunity to criticize the Liberal initiative which he supported at the time it was announced. The initiative that was announced by the Right Hon. Prime Minister is different in several ways. First, the initiative has the support of a Prime Minister who cares about western Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: Second, it has the support of ten Cabinet Ministers from western Canada as well as the western caucus.

I would also point out to the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville that it was endorsed by four Premiers representing three political Parties in western Canada. The establishment of the initiative in western Canada, with a well respected Deputy Prime Minister to put forward the views of western Canadians, to be responsible for the diversification and the strengthening of the western economy, is something that I thought the Hon. Member would have supported.

Mr. Nystrom: Just like Allan MacEachen, he is dodging the question.

SOURCE OF FUNDING FOR PROJECTS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, western Canadians want an answer. On CTV's Question Period on Sunday, the Minister said: "If the program and the project would fit within an existing government department or existing government program, then they will be guided to that particular program". In light of that, will the Minister explain now to western Canadians why the money for the Salmonid Enhancement Program did not come from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and why the money for a national park did not come from the social policy reserve fund? Why did the money for both these projects come from the Western Diversification Fund?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is quite correct. The $1.2 billion is new money. That means that for expenditures on the A basis, the budgets of those existing Departments, would be used first, naturally. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that the $1.2 billion should substitute for the billions of dollars that already go to western Canada in energy, transportation, and CEIC? Is that the stand of the New Democratic Party?

Mr. Nystrom: We are asking for new money, not money that has been previously committed from other government Departments. The Minister knows that and is afraid to answer the question.

ALLOCATION OF FUNDS TO PROVINCES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will try again. The Minister said recently that the money would not be allocated on a per capita basis in western Canada. How much money will be allocated to the Province of Manitoba, how much money will be allocated to Saskatchewan, how much money to the Province of Alberta and how much money to British Columbia? Western Canadians want to know.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure, but maybe the Hon. Member would like it by municipality, too.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McKnight: My colleague comes from the same province as I. He must recognize that there are initiatives that can be taken in Manitoba that strengthen Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. There are initiatives taken in British Columbia that can strengthen the other three provinces.

To devide the fund and make it on a per capita basis goes against what the region of western Canada expressed through its Premiers. The Premiers wish to have the opportunity to build on the strengths of their provinces. The men and women wish to have that opportunity.

The Member criticized the Salmonid Enhancement Program.

An Hon. Member: Rubbish. That is not true.

Mr. McKnight: That is not what the critic for his Party said. He encouraged my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, to provide more money. Naturally, that will build on the strengths of the fishery industry in British Columbia and we intend to continue to do that.

PRINCIPAL SAVINGS AND TRUST BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. As a result of First Investors and Associated Investors going bankrupt, and now the difficulty with Principal Savings and Trust, and the effects those companies have on some 60,000 Canadians, there are major questions concerning the integrity and incompetence of the management and directors of those companies, as well as the role that Governments have played or have failed to play in this entire exercise.

When did CDIC first become aware of the difficulties in which Principal Savings and Trust is now involved? What was the extent of the investigation that was subsequently launched? What does he intend to do with those individuals who may have been in breach of the law? Finally, will the Minister not now table for the benefit of all Canadians the report that he has in his possession from officials of CDIC regarding this most important financial matter?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Hon. Member has been a little more careful than yesterday in asking his questions. The effect of what he was asking yesterday was really to mislead the Canadian people. Essentially, he said that the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation was not applying a stamp indicating that these investment contracts were not insured. In fact, those stamps were on those contracts. The Hon. Member should know that and not give an impression otherwise.

In response to today's question, the Principal Group is made up of 30 companies. One of them is federally insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. There were two investment contract companies which began to bring the whole group down when they fell into trouble.

Beginning in 1983, Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation closely monitored the one institution for which it was responsible, the trust company. It did so to such an extent that the assets of that company were forced to be in a very liquid position. As a result, that particular company will find that CDIC will be able to cover almost all of the losses, and the liquidity of that particular trust company can be traced back directly to the close monitoring of the CDIC month by month.

REPORTED TRANSFER OF FUNDS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, what I said yesterday and what I say again today is there are obvious and apparent linkages between the four companies which have been named in the House of Commons. With regard to Principal Savings and Trust, is the Minister aware it has transferred funds to First Investors Corp. Ltd. which, by the way, had no business address, no letterhead of its own until 1986, operating under the auspices of Principal Savings and Trust? Was he aware of that? And would the Minister not admit he was informed of that information by registered mail on July 16, 1987, to officials of CDIC?

I ask the Minister, for the confidence of those investors and all those Canadians, will he not now tell us the full extent of the investigation? And will he not now make it public so we can all see whether integrity and competence are with the management and directors of those companies involved? Or are you going to continue to mislead Canadians in this regard?

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member feels very strongly that this matter should receive the attention of the Minister and the Minister should respond fully, but I ask all Hon. Members to be careful of how they express those wishes in a preamble.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the communications of the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation with its member institutions are, of course, confidential. They are like medical records. The whole system of insurance would not work in any other way. The Hon. Member knows that.

In terms of the future, I direct the Hon. Member once again to the policy of December 18 which will put in place a new corporate governance scheme, independent directors, and new committees which will monitor these events, preventing in large measure the very problem we are talking about today. In addition to corporate governance, we have a policy of prudential investment rules which will prevent the kinds of investments which I think largely contributed to the problems this group faced.

PRINCIPAL GROUP—INVESTIGATION QUERY

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In early July I attended a meeting of well over 1,000 angry Principal Group investors in Regina. Many of them believed they had invested with Principal Trust but later discovered the money had in fact been channelled into the two other uninsured subsidiaries of the Principal Group, First Investors Corporation and Associated Investors.

Is the Minister or the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs investigating possible fraudulent representation made by Principle Group? If so, are they prepared to lay criminal charges?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. There have been allegations of misrepresentation and I am looking into them. I am also informed that the British Columbia Government has issued a writ under the B.C. Trade Practices Act against the two investors groups, the Principal Group and the Principal Trust Company, relating to possible misrepresentation.

I can tell the Hon. Member that the contracts the customers eventually did sign were clearly marked that they were not covered by CDIC insurance, in letters which were five times the size of the rest of the contracts. Whether there was misrepresentation leading up to the signing of contracts, I am inquiring into that. As I said, there are also other actions under way asking the same question.

REVIEW OF DOCUMENTATION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. At that Regina meeting there was a representative of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who invited the people attending that rally, the investors who had lost money, to send in their own personal experiences, the documentation they had received from sales persons from the group. Surely the Minister must have these by now. Surely he is in communication with his colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. They must now be in a position to have reviewed those documents and those allegations.

I, too, have received letters full of allegations. Surely the Minister must now be in a position to state whether there was in fact criminal wrong-doing and whether the Government is ready to act to ensure that what occurred will never again—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the Minister could probably find a question in that preamble.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and I will be meeting on this matter this week. Our response will be made known to the House very shortly.

THE ADMINISTRATION

PARKER COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. I would like to ask the Minister to confirm that the Government has received in at least a preliminary version the report of Mr. Justice Parker into the investigation of conflict of interest involving the former Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that because I am not aware of the fact we have received it.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister check to see whether a copy has been received? And will he undertake that the report he receives from Justice Parker will be made public in its original version without editing or censorship?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take it the Hon. Member asks his question as the expert of the Liberal Party on censorship so I will only receive the question on the basis that I will make inquiries. These matters are under the aegis of the Privy Council office, being under the Public Inquiries Act. I am sure that if the preliminary report is to be received, I will be apprised of that fact and I will make the Hon. Member aware of the result of my investigation.

AGRICULTURE

SITUATION OF WESTERN GRAIN FARMERS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Whatever the strengths and weaknesses of the Western Diversification Initiative are, the plan in no way deals with the immediate crisis in Canadian agriculture, particularly western agriculture. The Prime Minister has been in the west, he knows the plight the farmers face. Will the Prime Minister, now that he has called Parliament into emergency session, deal with a real emergency, the crisis facing grain farmers in the west? Will he announce to the farmers what kind of action his Government will take regarding emergency support for grain farmers in the 1987-88 crop year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know, and if he does not know I am sure he will be interested in knowing, that we continue our series of meetings with the farm leaders. My colleague, the Minister in charge of the Canadian Wheat Board, and the Prime Minister, have already met with farm leaders. We continue that series of meetings. In fact our next meeting will be held in Winnipeg on August 27.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government has announced another 18 per cent reduction in grain prices and that takes effect immediately. Is it not time the Government made some commitment so that the farmers know what the Government intends to do and so they know they are not in the position where they are not going to survive this next year?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows we have just completed the mailing of the Special Canadian Grains Program cheques, the largest single payment ever made by any Government in the history of the country, $1 billion.

I think the very fact that we signalled the continuing commitment of this Government and the fact that we are continuing the series of meetings—we have had three meetings now and the next meeting, as I indicated in my response to your question, will be in Winnipeg later this month, August 27,—are a clear indication that this Government, because of the priority it places on agriculture and because of the fact we recognize that Canadian grain and oil seeds farmers are facing very difficult times, will continue that commitment.

We are going to continue to work with farm leaders because we find we will come up with a far better program working with farm leaders and letting them put the final details on the program together rather than acting unilaterally on behalf of the Government.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

NEW SPACE AGENCY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology. I would remind him that Canadians, Montrealers particularly, are very impatiently waiting to know the final decision concerning the space agency which has been announced by this Government on a number of occasions. First it was to be announced last February then June, and now we learn that the decision has been again postponed.

I should like to ask the Minister if the Government will soon stop dragging its feet and unveil the policy for which we have now been waiting for months.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): As my colleague announced earlier, Mr. Speaker, the Government is now considering various alternatives before making a decision and an announcement in the best interest of Canadians. Once the decision has been made it will be duly announced.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MAKE COMMITMENT

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, the Government has been studying for months on end. The Government appointed the Picard Commission to study the economic and employment situation in Montreal. The Picard Commission reported several months ago already and its first recommendation was to set up the space agency in Montreal.

I ask the Minister whether he might not take the bull by the horns and say that Montreal will be the site of the space agency which has been announced so many times by this Government.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the decision will first be considered by Cabinet and announced in due time.

IMMIGRATION

CONFIDENTIALITY OF REFUGEE APPLICATION TRANSCRIPTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. This morning the CBC said that it had obtained confidential copies of refugee application transcripts. Apparently these transcripts had been translated by free-lancers working at home without security measures having been taken to guarantee the confidentiality of the transcripts.

Can the Minister explain this serious breach of secrecy, this breach of confidentiality and security?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have also been made aware of the matter raised by my colleague. I think this is a very particular case. Generally speaking, the existing measures to ensure the confidentiality of refugee hearings are safe, but as I say there may be a particular case and we are treating it as such. The Solicitor General has agreed to my request to have the RCMP launch an investigation.

• (1450)

CONFIDENTIALITY OF TRANSCRIPTS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this is not an isolated case. Earlier this year immigration files and microfiche were found in garbage dumps in British Columbia. We have now found out from lawyers that transcripts of statements given under oath by people fleeing the repression of other regimes because they oppose them are being obtained easily by the media. One of them was published in The Globe and Mail last month.

Can the Minister tell the House what action he has taken to protect the lives of these refugees and their families or associates back home from the irresponsible action of the members of his Department who are not taking care of these confidential transcripts?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question previously. I said that when there is a particular case we give a particular answer. I have requested an inquiry by the RCMP. As soon as we have the answer I will communicate that answer to my colleague.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

AVAILABILITY OF FUNDS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the now defunct DRIE.

Yesterday, the Minister was very confident when he told the press that the IRDP program would continue and that there were enough funds to help Quebec businesses. Mr. Speaker, our Standing Orders prevent me from calling the Minister a liar in this House, so instead, I am sure you will not mind if I ask him whether he can explain that at this very moment, his department's offices in Montreal, Val d'Or, Sherbrooke and Drummondville have been advised to hold up new applications because no more funds are available. How can the Minister tell his employees to hold up new applications and then tell the press there are sufficient funds?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member obviously missed the point entirely yesterday, and he will probably go on doing so.

As I have said previously, we must remember that the government has spent more this year than ever before. We have already spent $850 million. We have added another $200 million since June 1987, which the Hon. Member knows perfectly well.

Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, we announced four projects that will create 150 jobs in the Hon. Member's own riding.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, some people say the Minister does not know what is happening in his own department, and I think he should realize that yesterday, he announced projects that had been announced previously. It was just a rehash of what we already knew, and La Voix de L'Est said as much this morning. I would like to ask the Minister why, when he knows there is not a cent left in his department's coffers, he keeps telling business people that there is money when his employees say there is not. Why does the Minister not admit to his failure, why does he not admit that he has lost control over his department and why does he not resign?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, what the Hon. Member just said is patently false, and I emphatically deny what he said. I simply want to remind Hon. Members that we examine projects as they are submitted, but because of the improved economic situation due to the new-found confidence of Canadian business people and especially Quebecers, we are now faced with increased demand, for the simple reason that we have introduced programs that respond to the expectations of Quebec and Canadian entrepreneurs. And that is why we have been able to create 860,000 jobs since January 1984.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION

INITIATION OF FORECLOSURES

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. I have had several cases drawn to my attention regarding individuals in negotiations on mortgage arrears with the Farm Credit Corporation. Since the moratorium was lifted these ongoing negotiations have been stopped by officials of the Farm Credit Corporation and letters have gone out initiating foreclosures under Section 22. Is the Minister aware of this? Keeping in mind that individual cases must still be reviewed by a farm debt review board, is he aware of the aggressive attitude now being shown by field and office staff of the Farm Credit Corporation?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that, no, I have not heard of the so-called aggressive attitude in the Farm Credit Corporation. If that is the case it would certainly be a very sharp departure from the normal humanitarian and compassionate approaches that have been used by the Farm Credit Corporation in the past.

I take the Hon. Member's representations very seriously and I want to have a meeting with him after Question Period to discuss this very matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yukon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FISHERIES

YUKON SALMON FISHERY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. As the Minister knows Yukoners are being ripped off by the Canada-U.S. Pacific Salmon Treaty. Some 50 per cent of chinook salmon are spawned in the Yukon but 93 per cent are taken by Alaskans and only 7 per cent by Canadians, in this case Yukoners.

Despite ongoing talks between Canada and the United States, Yukon continues to be sold up the river. On Friday last the Minister closed the fishery in Yukon without notice. Does the Minister not think that it is high time to pursue aggressively our rightful ownership of this resource?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Yukon on her first and, I think, very thoughtfully put question in the House this afternoon.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: It is true that since the successful conclusion of the Pacific Salmon Treaty—and I do not know if I am permitted to acknowledge that it was in your time of office, Mr. Speaker—

• (1500)

Mr. Siddon: —we have been attempting to negotiate a successful annex to the Pacific Salmon Treaty which would account for the fact that the majority of the Yukon River chinook stocks which are harvested by Alaskan based fishermen are born in Canadian waters.

We are very disturbed that in the present year the American fishery within Alaska is severely overtaxing this resource and fishing far in excess of the normal quotas set within the Alaskan fishery. For that reason I intend to be in consultation with my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, to seek a way of making a strong, formal statement of our concerns to the U.S. Government.

Mr. Speaker: Despite the subject matter of the question, the Speaker is prepared to invite the Hon. Member for Yukon to ask a supplementary question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am glad to hear the Minister say that he is going to do something about it. We will be anxiously waiting to hear. We have already lost one season. I hope we can take this as an assurance to Yukoners, and to all Canadians, that we can trust the negotiating ability of the Government to give Yukoners a fair allocation of our rightful resource.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Indeed, I will repeat the assurance I have given. It appears that the Alaskan based fishery is exceeding the Alaskan quota guidelines by up to 50 per cent. That additional harvest is five times as large as the harvest by our own fishermen in Yukon. That discrepancy must be addressed, and I intend to address it immediately.

PROVISION OF NEW FINANCING

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): My question is directed to the Minister responsible for western diversification. First, I wish to congratulate him on his new appointment, and both the Minister and his colleagues on the announcement last week of the $1.2 billion western diversification fund.

Mr. Speaker: Congratulations are always in order, but keeping in mind the hour I would ask that the Hon. Member put her question succinctly.

Mrs. Collins: There has been some confusion, or perhaps misunderstanding in British Columbia concerning the funding. Under existing DRIE programs, British Columbia receives approximately $50 million a year. Dividing the $1.2 billion by four provinces in five years that works out to be approximately the same. Some people are concerned that the money is the same.

Can the Minister clarify and confirm that the $1.2 billion is new money, and does not in any way preclude funds from ongoing programs of DRIE and other Departments?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): I thank the Hon. Member for the question because it does allow this clarification.

The fund is $1.2 billion of new money. On top of that, there will be $200 million transferred to the Office of Western Diversification for IRDP, WTID, and ERDAs that fall within the jurisdiction.

In economic development across Canada this year the Government has spent over a billion dollars, over $1 billion this year in industry, science and technology, $1.2 billion for western diversification has been identified, $55 million has been identified for northern development, and $1.5 million has been identified for Atlantic Canada. The Government, the Prime Minister and Cabinet have made a commitment to the regions of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON—DISPOSAL OF EQUIPMENT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Less than one month ago the Minister told the workers of Firestone, the people of Hamilton, and all Canadians that if any equipment was moved out of the Firestone plant he would immediately ask for repayment of the $13.5 million that the federal Government gave to Firestone. That was on July 15. Now the Minister is in the process of negotiating an agreement with Firestone that will permit that company to strip its Canadian machinery and equipment and take it down to the United States and leave a barren shell of a company.

What happened between July 15 and today to cause the Minister to have this complete about-face after he gave his word to the people of Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that what we have here is a very difficult and very complex situation. We have looked at various alternatives with Firestone. We have identified respective buyers, and we have asked the company to put $13.5 million, the amount referred to by the Hon. Member, in trust in order to keep all options open and find a positive solution that would keep this plant open, which would be in the best interests of the workers in her riding.

[English]

REPORTED EXPORT TO UNITED STATES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Less than an hour ago I spoke to one of the officials in his Ministry. There is not a single thing in writing between the Government and Firestone to guarantee any of those jobs or that equipment.

Some Hon. Members: Louder!

Ms. Copps: I will be louder, Mr. Speaker. If the government Members do not wish to hear a voice from Hamilton in opposition they will be sorry because I will continue to speak out.

In my hands I have documents which show that a few days before Firestone made its announcement through the night it surreptitiously sent out half a million dollars in equipment to plants in the United States. That is half a million dollars of Canadian taxpayers' money which has been spirited out of the plant. This Minister has done nothing. He has not even met with me. The Minister owes the people of Hamilton and Firestone an explanation and a resignation.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of my colleague I repeat that we have negotiated with the company and it has agreed to put in escrow the sum of $13.5 million in order to allow us to find a potential buyer. We have identified a buyer, and we hope to have a positive conclusion very shortly. In the meantime, we agreed that the company could move some of its equipment—

Ms. Copps: You do not have a thing in writing.

Mr. Côté (Langelier): —that would not prevent the running of the operation if there is a new buyer. That is how we are working for the benefit of the company and the workers of the region.

POINT OF ORDER

ALLEGED FAILURE TO COMPLY WITH S. O. 99(2)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order relating to the Government's supposed policy on day care. I seek the guidance of the Speaker, but he will be aware that under the new Standing Orders, Standing Order 99(2) requires that a government must file a comprehensive response to a standing committee report within 150 days. The Speaker will also be aware that a few days ago this farce of a response was tabled, a copy of which was delivered to my office today, and in it the Minister admits that he has no comprehensive response, that in fact he is violating the Standing Orders. He is asking the people of Canada to wait until some vague later date.

Given the seriousness of the Government's alleged commitment to day care, and the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) promise in the House and outside over the last couple of years, I would ask the Speaker to rule on what I consider to be a blatant and gross violation of the Standing Orders and, more importantly, a gross violation of the spirit of the Government's commitment to respond to the standing committee on day care which was examining the question.

In Standing Order 99(2) there is specification that it be a comprehensive report and not simply an interim notice. I have in my hand the so-called response which was tabled on July 28 in which the Minister states that he will be introducing a comprehensive announcement. He states, "However a comprehensive announcement is expected early in the fall." The Standing Orders do not permit the Minister to respond whenever he feels like responding. The Standing Orders require him to respond within 150 days.

• (1510)

Given the Government's alleged commitment to day care, I cannot understand why it came out with this flimflam, sham document today and tried to sneak it through the House when everybody was on holidays. The Minister did not even have the guts to stand up and make a statement in the House, to table the document.

Is this a reflection of the Government's real response to the report of the day care committee? I think it is a farce, and I would like to get a ruling from the Speaker on this violation of the Standing Orders.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think a number of comments must be made with respect to the response of the Special Committee on Child Care.

I think as Your Honour studies the rules you will know that within a certain period of time the Government, and specifically the Minister, is responsible for the tabling of "a report" in response to a committee. That is exactly what we have done.

In the letter addressed to the chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care, the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin), a letter which was delivered to the Table prior to the number of days required by the Standing Orders—and I think the first paragraph is very clear and within the rules—I stated:

> As Minister of National Health and Welfare, I am pleased to present an interim response, on behalf of the federal Government, to the Report of the Special Committee on Child Care which was tabled on March 30, 1987.

That is within the rules of the House. I went on in that response to the Hon. Member who served as chairperson of the committee to say that the Government would be coming in with a further report or a further response on child care. The reasons for it are stated in the response, and the reasons are quite straightforward.

I think it has to be understood by the Chair why the approach was taken. First, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government—especially he on behalf of the Government—have very clearly stated the Government's commitment to the child care proposals to which he committed the Government as early as the campaign in September, 1984.

Following those statements at that time, and when the Prime Minister was sworn in as Prime Minister, he gave various cabinet Ministers responsibility for various portfolios. One was the child care issue for which I was given responsibility.

I think Hon. Members know—at least, they should know because the special committee recognized it—that any child care response would also have to take into consideration provincial jurisdiction, and that is important. That being the case, provincial jurisdiction requires us to negotiate with the provinces the kind of response that would be best in terms of a child care program for the country, and specifically for families in need of child care.

I have said as well, in the response to the chairperson of the special committee, that I was negotiating with the provinces—and I have been talking with a number of provinces during the summer as well—on the kind of approach which would be acceptable to them in view of two things; first, in view of provincial jurisdiction relative to child care and, second, in view of the spirit that I think should now prevail in terms of federal-provincial relations, namely, the Meech Lake Accord which the Prime Minister was able to conclude with 10 Premiers and which I think all of us are now instructed both morally and tactically to follow. That is the procedure I have taken.

The response is quite straightforward. I have responded within the period of time. I have identified it as an interim response. I have, therefore, fulfilled the requirements of the Standing Orders.

Additionally, I have indicated to the House and to the public generally the process the Government is taking with the provinces and that the debate is continuing within Cabinet.

I think the points I have made are not only in keeping with the new rules of the House but also are within the spirit of those rules.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I concur completely with the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

I received this very inadequate letter yesterday with great difficulty. It was not tabled in the House, as we understood it should have been. With great difficulty I got it from the Clerk's Office. It was addressed to "Mrs. Shirley Martin, Chairperson of the Special Committee on Child Care". There was no attempt by the Minister to provide copies to the opposition critics.

As we understand it, according to the rules it should have been a comprehensive response. In no way is this a comprehensive response.

I should like to ask the Minister, if he would be so kind as to give me his attention for a moment, why, for example, in this response there was no statement of national objectives for a national child care program.

He referred to the Meech Lake Accord. This is basic to the requirements under the Meech Lake Accord. How can he go into negotiations with the provinces when he does not have a federal position on which to negotiate? Surely, any federal position outlining national objectives should be developed with Members of Parliament and should have been presented to the House.

We are very, very concerned about it. There have been long delays. A response was promised for June, and it was delayed again for the summer. This is completely inadequate. Now, of course, it is implied very vaguely that sometime in the fall there might be further information.

We concur completely with the criticism of this process and this Minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I think the question is an important one, and I may remind the Hon. Member that according to the Votes and Proceedings of Tuesday, August 11, 1987, the Government actually did table a report yesterday, August 11. At page 1317, the document tabled by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) is described as follows, and I quote:

> Interim Response of the Government of Canada, pursuant to Standing Order 99(2), to the Final Report of the Special Committee on Child Care (Sessional Paper No. 332-8/31), presented to the House on Monday March 30, 1987.

It is therefore false to claim the Government failed to table an answer. The point being made here, and it is a serious one, is that the so-called report tabled yesterday was not a comprehensive report on the subject. It was not a comprehensive report by the Government in response to the Committee's report. It was an interim report. There is nothing in the Standing Orders that provides that the Government shall or may table an interim report, according to Standing Order 99(2), which reads as follows:

> Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the Committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

The Committee asked for a comprehensive report. It did not receive a comprehensive report but an interim report, and the Minister himself admitted as much, which is entirely unsatisfactory and irregular.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that the House has no recourse against a Government that is negligent and perhaps irresponsible. However, the question is an important one, it is a topical issue, and it is a subject on which the Government should respond. I ask the Government—since the Chair is not in a position to do so, it is up to them to make the decision—to respond as soon as possible to this important report on child care.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to put a question to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Could the Hon. Member possibly give me a copy of the report?

An Hon. Member: Yes, there is one right here.

[English]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments on this very important topic which my colleague has brought to the attention of the House.

Very clearly Standing Order 99(2) reads as follows:

> Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

I repeat: "table a comprehensive response thereto". Clearly there was such a request filed by the committee with the Government through this House upon the tabling of that report in the House. Therefore, it is the duty of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to report in this House in a comprehensive manner.

• (1520)

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, the letter the Minister sent to the Chairperson of the committee on July 28. The Minister said in part, and I quote:

> —I am pleased to present an interim response,—

Very clearly if this is an interim response one can assume it is not comprehensive, otherwise it would not be called "interim". The Minister closed his letter by stating in part:

> —and to establishing a comprehensive, quality child-care program for our children.

In other words, the Minister plans to take that initiative at some point in the future, which again I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, appears to be in conflict or in breach of Standing Order 99(2) of the House of Commons.

Citation 8 in Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

> A standing order has a continuing effect until changed or repealed.

In view of the fact that the rule we now have before us is applicable, has not been changed or been repealed, that rule is in order and should be followed by the Minister and any other Hon. Member of this House.

Citation 9 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

> By custom, changes in the Standing Orders are generally made after study and a recommendation by the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization.

Very clearly the committee has not formulated a wish to change that rule of the House. This further adds to what I said previously, that the rule is still in effect and must be followed by the Minister and, for that matter, by any other Hon. Member.

Finally, Citation 384 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, states:

> Papers which must be laid before the House in pursuance of any Standing Order of the House are usually brought down without any formality by being deposited with the Clerk of the House as if they had been laid on the Table.

This rule very clearly states that the usual procedure is for the Minister to table whatever response he has to give pursuant to our Standing Orders without any formality and to do so according to the rule. There is no exception indicated in Citation 384. One has to further assume it was the duty of the Minister to comply with the rules which were in effect at that particular time.

For these reasons, I would ask that the Chair verify the excellent point brought to the attention of the House by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and give a response to the House that the Minister must comply, pursuant to our Standing Orders, with a request which was made by a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, although I appreciate the point that is being made by my colleague, it seems to me we are here debating the word "comprehensive". It also seems to me that we should be moving on with the business of the House. I submit that this entire exercise is to allow the immigration critic of the Liberal Party to be outside doing scrums and I think that is an abuse of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist Hon. Members.

[Translation]

The question is an important one. It arises from the interpretation of a certain term in our Standing Orders.

[English]

Naturally, that is a matter which the Speaker takes seriously. I know there are some other interventions to be made, but I think all Hon. Members could assist the Speaker in keeping their remarks exactly on the point I have to decide. Hon. Members will know that I have already had to comment on a similar situation, although I am not prepared to say until I have heard all the interventions that it is exactly the same. However, I am aware of the importance of the issue being raised.

I am also aware, and I might indicate this to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who has indicated his intention to speak on this matter, that the Minister has given at least some explanation, as I read the letter. The Minister wants to come back later with "a comprehensive report". Those reasons may be very valid, although they may not completely answer the procedural difficulty which has been brought to the attention of the Chair.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can make a comment on this parliamentary reform without being accused by the Deputy House Leader of being a party to some strategy which has nothing to do with the matter.

I only want to say that what we are debating here, if we are debating anything, is whether or not this particular reform, which was instituted as a result of recommendations of the committee on which I sat—for example, the idea that the Government would somehow be accountable to committees and would have to respond to recommendations of committees in a way it did not have to previously—is going to be respected, not only in terms of the technical definition of what constitutes a comprehensive response but in the spirit of reform.

The spirit of the reform is that the Government would make its position clear at a predetermined time with respect to the recommendations of a particular committee. In this case, I do not think anyone can argue this has been done.

The problem is that this is not the first time the Government has chosen this particular way of not responding to a committee's recommendation. My concern, for the record, is that over time this will become the habit, and the intention of that reform, which was to make Governments more accountable to the recommendations of committees—even if it disagrees with those recommendations—in the sense that it would be required to give a comprehensive response, will be lost by virtue of the practice now developing as a result of decisions being taken by the Government to not respond in the way that was intended by the reform committee when it made this recommendation.

Therefore, I simply say to you, Mr. Speaker, that you have a responsibility, as well as the Government, as do we all whenever the onus falls on us, to live up to not only the letter but to the spirit of those reforms. In this case, I think there is a strong case to argue that that has not been done.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat surprised by the remark of the Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) who is saying that one of the reasons why we object to the explanation as to why the report has not been tabled is that we seek to delay the debate on immigration. When we see that the Minister to whom the reprimand is directed is not even in the House, that he has left, I wonder if this is not simply a slap in the face and whether he reflects the attitude of the Government—

Mr. Speaker: Please! The Hon. Member will appreciate that it is not appropriate to refer to the presence or absence of a Minister or of an Hon. Member.

Mrs. Pépin: I simply want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that it is one of the most important reports, that the report on day care centres is urgent. We have been waiting for it, and people have been telling us that for months. The Government also seemed to realize the importance of day care centres. But as it happens it is one of the very few reports to which the response was not produced in due time. So we do have serious reservations. I can understand that federal-provincial relations must be protected and respected, but as a rule when the federal Government wants something it shows leadership. One of the things for which the Conservative Government has been censured in this instance is its lack of leadership with respect to day care centres.

So allow me to repeat the question: Is this not a demonstration of the Government's lack of leadership in the case of day care centres? We are told a more comprehensive response will be forthcoming this fall. I would not even call this an interim report, it is a letter, barely two-page long, addressed to the chairperson of the committee. So I am surprised, I am astonished, and I am very anxious to see where the priorities of the Government are and when it will take action concerning day care centres.

[English]

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief submissions on the point of order raised by my colleague the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps). It seems to me that the issue before you, Mr. Speaker, is whether or not the Government was in breach of Standing Order 99(2). If you come to the conclusion that the Government has in fact breached that particular Standing Order, the question then becomes what the sanction ought to be.

The facts are as follows. The Special Committee on Child Care of the House of Commons undertook a comprehensive look at the day-care system in Canada in order to make recommendations to the Government. On March 30, 1987, that Special Committee tabled in the House its report.

Under Standing Order 99(2), the Government is required to table a comprehensive reply to a report from a Standing Committee or a Special Committee within 150 days. For the record, Standing Order 99(2) reads as follows:

> Within 150 days of the presentation of a report from a standing or special committee, the government shall, upon the request of the committee, table a comprehensive response thereto.

We must ask ourselves why Parliament in its wisdom decided to enact Standing Order 99(2). I think the reasons are obvious.

Parliament does not want to see the work of its Standing or Special Committees simply gather dust on some Minister's shelf as has happened in the past. In order to validate the work of a Special Committee such as the Special Committee on day care, Parliament decided to enact this particular Standing Order. I should remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the language of the Standing Order is mandatory. The word "shall" is used. It is not permissive. It is not up to the Government to decide whether or not it should file a comprehensive response within 150 days.

It is obvious why Parliament in its wisdom chose 150 days. It wanted to ensure that the Government had sufficient time to respond to such reports. I think that 150 days or five months is in this particular case sufficient time for the Government to respond to each and every recommendation of this Special Committee.

This afternoon, some Hon. Members have tried to determine whether or not the reply of the Minister dated July 28 was comprehensive. I think it is obvious for a number of reasons that this "Dear Shirley" letter to the chairperson of the Special Committee on child care is not a comprehensive response as envisioned by Standing Order 99(2).

In order to assist, we would have to refer to a dictionary to determine what the word "comprehensive" means. I am sure most Hon. Members have a pretty good understanding of what it means. It is obvious as well that the Minister has some difficulties with regard to the definition of "comprehensive". Therefore, I would like to recommend to him a current edition of The Concise Oxford Dictionary, without suggesting for a moment that an older edition might have a different definition of the word "comprehensive".

Nonetheless, this particular edition of The Concise Oxford Dictionary which comes from the Journals Branch and was published not long ago gives the following definition for the word "comprehensive":

—including much or all (comprehensive term; comprehensive grasp,—

The definition of a comprehensive school is a large secondary school providing courses for children of all abilities. I could go on describing the definition of the word "comprehensive" but it is obvious that this two-page reply from the Minister is not comprehensive.

In fact, the Minister admits as much in the letter when he says that it is an interim response. I suppose one could argue both sides of whether or not an interim response could be considered comprehensive. If in fact it was a comprehensive response, why would it have to be called an interim response? Then again, one could have a comprehensive interim response as opposed to a brief interim response.

In any event, to conclude, the issue before you is whether or not there has been a breach of Standing Order 99(2). I think the evidence is clear, unequivocal and uncontradicted that in fact there has been a breach of this particular Standing Order.

The question becomes what the sanction ought to be. Can we prosecute the Government and the Minister in a court of law for breaching this particular Standing Order? The answer, of course, is no, we cannot. Are there sanctions in the standing rules? The answer, of course, is no.

It is obvious that the Government has shown contempt for Parliament by providing a "Dear Shirley" letter when it should have provided a comprehensive response. I do not mean to lecture the Government or the Minister, but recognizing that Standing Order 99(2) exists, the Government ought to have come to the House at the earliest opportunity to seek—if I could have the Minister's attention?

Mr. Lewis: It's your Member.

Mr. Nunziata: If I could just make one final point without the constant interruptions I have encountered from across the floor, the proper course for the Government to have taken would have been to come to the House to seek the unanimous consent of Parliament to provide an interim response and to extend the time period provided by Standing Order 99(2). Of course, some Hon. Members might have denied that unanimous consent but rather than taking that course, the Government chose to show contempt for the rules, for the Chair, for the House and for every Member in it by providing this "Dear Shirley" letter. I would urge you, Mr. Speaker, to first conclude that there has been a breach and second to severely reprimand the Government for its irresponsible act, its incompetence and its contempt for this House.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank all Hon. Members for their interventions. As I said, the matter is an important one and it is a somewhat difficult one.

The Chair is aware that the rule which has been quoted in English also exists in French and the word in French is "globale" and it is "comprehensive" in English. There may be some difficulties with that.

I know Hon. Members would understand why the Chair would want to defer any immediate judgment on the matter, particularly taking into account the fact that I have already had to comment on this particular sort of complaint, although I am not saying the other complaint was absolutely identical. However, I think it is also fair to comment that as the Minister has explained, whether it is procedurally excusable or not is something I have to decide.

The Government did seem to have some problems in being as comprehensive as it would later wish to be and I am sure Hon. Members would not want, at least at this point, to assume that there was any bad motivation on the Government's part. However, the procedural rules are there to be followed.

In this case, I think the matter is a serious one and I will give it careful consideration. I thank the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) for bringing the matter to my attention and I thank the Minister for being here and for responding as fully as he did.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to the 170 petitions Nos. 332-2782 and 332-2784 to 332-2952 inclusive.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition from a number of residents of the City of Toronto who are concerned that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assist refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

Not to go into full detail, they go on to mention the problem of the safe third country part of the legislation, the lack of appropriate appeal or review procedures, and the fact that the standing committee recommended almost two years ago a far more just and speedy system for sorting out real refugees from false ones. They also point out that this has widespread support from the churches and labour movement.

Therefore, the undersigned your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the immigration commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I have the distinct honour of tabling in this House a petition signed by a number of residents of Windsor and Edmonton who avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right thus to present a grievance common to your petitioners in the certain assurance that your honourable House will therefore provide a remedy. These Canadian citizens, sharing a sensitivity and awareness of the real issues involved in refugee determination, in contrast to the Government, humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I hope the Hon. Member will summarize the petition and tell me where it is from so we can carry on.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I think I am in accordance with the regulations in reading what they are petitioning. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55 and substitute legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the immigration commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact. In duty-bound, your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 161 and 163.

[Text]

PUBLIC LENDING RIGHTS PROGRAM

Question No. 161—Ms. McDonald:

1. Between (a) September 1, 1986, and December 22, 1986, (b) December 22, 1986, and June 29, 1987, were any applications received for payments under the Public Lending Rights program by the Public Lending Rights Commission which were for payment in the fiscal year 1986-87 and, if so, how many?

2. In the fall of 1986, were attempts made to update the mailing lists used by the Commission and, if so, what were they?

3. In 1986-87, what was the average payment received under the Program?

4. Were attempts made to ensure that fewer late applications will be received for payments in the 1987-88 period and, if so, what were they?

Hon. Flora MacDonald (Minister of Communications): I am informed by the Canada Council that the reply to the above question is as follows:

1. The Public Lending Right Commission received 4,743 requests for payment during the fiscal year 1986/87 between September 1 and December 22, 1986. Of this number, 4,553 applications met the eligibility criteria while 190 did not. Between December 22, 1986, and June 29, 1987, 183 claims were received for fiscal year 1986/87 and, because these were received after the registration deadline, they have been carried over to the 1987/88 year.

2. The mailing list which the Commission used in the autumn of 1986 consisted of the approximately 5,000 names and addresses of those who participated in a Canada Council test registration in 1981, plus the names gathered by phone between November and December, 1986 (a telephone answering service was set up to take calls 24 hours a day). In total, 7,860 registration forms were sent out. Even though the PLR program had just six months instead of 12 to be set in motion, time was found to update mailing lists, sometimes by telephone (when the address had changed but the phone number remained the same), and with the help of various sections of the Canada Council who had many of the current addresses (most often the Writing and Publication Section). In some cases it was necessary to contact the writing associations directly.

3. In 1986-87 the average payment (arrived at by dividing the number of authors into the available funds) was $619.49.

4. The number of late registrations in the upcoming year should be considerably diminished since we will be able to send out our registration forms two months earlier than last year (they will be sent out in August at the latest), and participants will have until October 15, 1987 to apply. In bringing forward the deadline, we will also avoid the inevitable delays in the postal service that result during the Christmas season. We will, once again, send information to the authors' associations so that, through their newsletters, they can inform their members of how to register for the 1987/88 program.

ALEXANDER PROUDFOOT COMPANY OF CANADA

Question No. 163—Mr. Murphy:

To date, has any money been paid to the Alexander Proudfoot Company of Canada for work done for Air Canada during the months of April and May, 1987 and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises that payments have been made to the Alexander Proudfoot Company of Canada for work done during the months of April and May, 1987, in accordance with the terms of the current contract with the company. Informations regarding the amounts involved is of a proprietary nature and cannot be released for contractual reasons.

[Translation]

Mr. Lewis: I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee

He said: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members have been recalled during what is usually the summer recess so that the House may take immediate measures to eliminate abuses against our refugee policies and then consider without delay a new refugee status determination process.

I should think that most Canadians now agree that the process has given rise to a shady and despicable trade, namely trafficking in human lives. In our opinion, we must take immediate action to dissuade those who abuse the generosity of Canada by illicitly bringing people into this country.

Mr. Speaker, I think urgent action is required, a fact which cannot be denied. Witout delay our legislation must echo our feeling of exasperation and frustration at abuses against our generosity and our feeling of disgust for unscrupulous profiteers.

[English]

We must immediately declare through this legislation that Canada will no longer tolerate the willful and flagrant violation of our traditions, laws and borders. There is a sense of urgency for this is not yet a crisis. It is, however, a grave situation which, if left unaddressed, would grow worse. Those who say let us wait are merely asking that the problems grow worse and the solutions more distant and hence more difficult.

• (1550)

Today we address a Bill which we believe all Members of this House will agree deserves urgent attention and rapid passage. Let us consider the major features of this Bill. It increases penalties for smugglers and their accomplices with prison terms of up to 10 years and maximum fines of $.5 million. Penalties under the current Act do not recognize the recent phenomenon of organized smuggling of groups of individuals. These measures penalize those seeking to profit by preying on the hopes and circumstances of those wanting to come to Canada.

This Bill imposes penalties for the specific offence of disembarkation of passengers at sea for the purpose of illegal entry into Canada. The maximum penalties for this offence are $500,000 and prison terms of up to 10 years.

This Bill provides specific legislative powers to direct vessels suspected of carrying persons who are attempting to enter Canada in contravention of immigration law not to enter or to leave Canadian waters. This power is necessary for deterrence. It is likewise necessary for the apprehension of vessels and, where appropriate, to turn vessels back. The Government will consider all relevant factors in dealing with individual vessels and their occupants; the ships' locations, both in terms of international law and our capacity to intercept it; the ship's flag and the possible need to seek another country's co-operation; the ship's seaworthiness, the safety of our crews and the safety of the ship and its passengers; the condition of the passengers and the availability of food, water and fuel; and what we can physically do given the weather conditions.

Above all, Mr. Speaker, whatever actions may be deemed appropriate, given the specific circumstances involved, we will not do anything to risk the health or personal security of any person.

The Bill provides powers of search and seizure in respect of smuggling activities and it provides for the forfeit and sale of vehicles used by smugglers.

I should note, Mr. Speaker, that the several clauses dealing with search and seizure are, in essence, the same as those which exist under the current Customs Act.

According to the proposed legislation, heavier fines would be imposed on transportation companies carrying people who are not in possession of the required documents. The illegal entry of aliens in highly irregular situations is the main and most obvious source of abuse. However, the vast majority of people who do not have the required documents and arriving at points of entry into Canada use regular means of transportation such as aircraft, trains and buses.

In the past, some transportation companies have been unwilling to check whether their passengers have the required travel documents or were apparently not in a position to do so. The new provisions are aimed at encouraging carriers to be far more vigilant.

Of course, the best solution would be to prevent people not in possession of travel documents from boarding. The Government will now have the power to require any carrier to deposit a security for unpaid fines. Vehicles may be seized if these provisions are not observed.

Recent events have clearly shown we must have broader powers to detain claimants who do not have the required documents until their identity has been established, which is necessary both for security reasons and so that we can return immediately those who do not require Canada's protection.

According to the proposed amendments, a claimant may be detained as long as necessary, provided that after twenty-eight days, the Immigration Adjudicator is satisfied that the Government has made every possible effort to establish the claimant's identity. The reasons for detention will be subject to review every seven days after the first twenty-eight-day period.

Mr. Speaker, I realize that this legislation will increase the Government's powers with respect to detention. However, I may remind Hon. Members that both Bill C-55 and this legislation concerning deterrence and detention are subject to the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, which grants everyone the right to fundamental justice and the usual legal recourse.

Both Bills take into consideration our obligations under the Geneva Convention on the Status of Refugees, Canada's traditionally humanitarian approach to the refugee question, and the rules established as a result of the Supreme Court decision in the Singh case.

Mr. Speaker, this brings me to the last and, I must say, more radical aspect of this legislation, namely, returning individuals who constitute a threat to the security of the State. Under these amendments, there will be no hesitation in dealing with such persons.

[English]

The process assures that we can act with the rapidity appropriate when we face security threats. Equally, it assures due process under the Charter of Rights. I would like to outline briefly the steps of the process so that Members are assured as to both of these elements.

When the Government has information showing that a person may be a security threat to Canada, that person may be detained for a period of up to 28 days to allow for the issuance of a certificate by the Minister and the Solicitor General certifying that the person named is prohibited from entering and staying in Canada. The Minister's certificate will constitute grounds to keep the person in detention and bar him from the refugee determination system.

The evidence in support of the certificate will be reviewed by a judge of the Federal Court of Canada and the person affected will be given an opportunity to be heard. If the Federal Court Justice is satisfied that the claimant poses a security threat, the person will be removed from Canada without recourse to the refugee determination system.

The last thing Canadians want is for their refugee determination system to be misused by terrorists and criminals. I would remind the House that there are persons who, under international law, are excluded from the benefits of the Geneva Convention relating to the status of refugees.

These then are the new features introduced by this Bill. A whole new refugee determination system for Canada is embodied in Bill C-55. It is a comprehensive attempt to deal with an extremely complex and difficult challenge.

We expect these measures will deter individuals who do not need our protection from coming to Canada by illegal means. These persons are free to apply for landed immigrant status. If they are accepted, they, as so many hundreds of thousands before them, will enter Canada, their heads held high.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation introduced by the Government today is only one of a series of initiatives taken by this Government to make its immigration and refugee policies more consistent. The Government has increased immigration levels. It has emphasized assistance to refugees abroad and provided a safe haven for the legitimate refugees who have come to Canada. In other words, we welcome those who come here openly and we shall continue to do so.

Unfortunately, the inappropriate and ill-assorted policies of the past are encouraging an increasing number of people to use a side door.

In the final analysis, the solution is to implement a refugee determination process which will achieve a balance between speed and equity. Such a process is provided in Bill C-55.

It will take some time before the provisions of this Bill can be implemented. This legislation deserves the consideration not only of Members of both Houses of Parliament, but also of all Canadians, men and women alike.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on an especially sensitive part of Bill C-84 which concerns the penalties imposed, especially on those who abet the illegal entry of people into Canada. There are already penalties attached to non-compliance with Section 95.1, and this has never given rise to any criticism or complaint.

Provisions relating to the abusive entry of people without the proper travel documents are already contained in the legislation passed under the Liberal government in 1976. Nothing has been changed. We are simply maintaining this part of the Act. What we are doing is to extend this provision to those who abet the transport or entry of people, especially in groups of more than ten, and I believe that Canadians understand quite well whom this is meant to cover. I do not believe that I have the power to determine who is guilty and who is not; that is up to the courts, and the Minister has no intention of appropriating that right. However, I believe that the law must be obeyed, and no Canadian will be exempt from its application, whoever he may be. This is the framework in which our courts will have to interpret the legislation, and in this regard, we are remaining within the traditions of Canadian law while keeping an open mind, as we have always done, and maintaining the Canadian tradition of welcoming authentic refugees.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond on behalf of my leader and my colleagues in the Liberal caucus at the second reading of Bill C-84. Perhaps I have an obligation as well, because I believe we are entering into a very sensitive and important debate which the country is watching. It is a country that is opinionated and wishes its government, its Parliament and elected officials to show moral leadership and do what is right under the circumstances, not for today, or for this summer, but for the long-term viability of the characteristic that enables us all to call ourselves Canadians.

It should be put very clearly on the record of the House of Commons that no Member of Parliament, regardless of the Party to which he or she belongs, favours abuse, whether it is in our immigration and refugee policy, in our workers' compensation claims, whether that abuse is in our Canada Pension Plans or in our unemployment insurance programs. No Canadian, no parliamentarian, and no political party favours abuse. No one encourages fraudulent claims and no one rewards those who persist in circumventing the regulations and laws of this country. Otherwise, it would jeopardize the very integrity of the system of government.

The Liberal Party is at the forefront of ensuring the integrity of the refugee determination system and of protecting the claim for the legitimate refugee who is escaping torture, persecution and death in all parts of the world in which there are countries facing internal and external upheaval. It is a question of war and peace that is at the source of the refugee movement. They do not wish to live in a country other than the one in which they were born. Everyone, whether an immigrant or refugee, would rather remain in their homeland and place of their birth, but because of circumstances affecting their existence as a human beings, they are forced to flee. They are not only going to Canada, but to countries all over the world.

In this global village, Canada is a recipient, with other countries in the world, of individuals who, in this international year of the homeless as designated by the United Nations, are seeking homes. Therefore, in order to protect the legitimacy of the individual claims that merit our consideration and support, we need to rid our system of abuse. We have repeated that assertion not only this summer, not only for the purposes of this emergency debate as defined by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), but clearly in the last two and one-half years of this Parliament.

We have repeatedly called for the Government to clamp down on the so-called immigration consultants and smugglers who are making thousands and thousands of dollars in trafficking on the desperation of human beings throughout the world. There were schemes and scams in Portugal on which we asked the Government to clamp down. There were scams in other parts of the world, such as in Turkey and then Brazil.

The cancer began to spread, but what did we have from the Government? There was laughter during Question Period, and there was ridicule during second reading of Bill C-55. The Minister did not respond to our questions and those from our colleagues in the New Democratic Party and certain Members on the Government side. We saw inaction, ridicule and laughter. The Government told us that we were exaggerating the circumstances of that abuse.

The system, this Parliament and Canadians are paying the price for that inaction. We are paying the price for a government that did not have the priority to try to address the refugee determination system in the proper context. Instead, the Government preferred to wait until May, clearly almost three years later, after the Plaut Report commissioned by the former Government, after the report of the standing committee led ably by the Conservative Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), after a report by our Liberal Party. There were reports from NGOs, reports from leading church authorities who came to Ottawa and suggested very specific solutions for giving our system a chance to work expeditiously and properly for Canadians, and fairly for those who wish to access the system. The Government did it only in May. Only in the dying days of June before we all left for our ridings for the summer did it choose to bring the matter forward for second reading. For how long? For three hours. So we have a Government which, after only three years, allowed Parliament but three hours to debate its reformed refugee legislation.

Then members of the Government had the temerity to go across the country and say, all of a sudden, we have an emergency. It is as if they discovered the problem for the very first time when the Prime Minister and members of his Party visited their ridings in July. That is intellectual dishonesty. It is dishonest because it runs counter to the reports and the many hours of work that Members and Canadians from all walks of life invested, trying to assist their Government in putting into place a system that would work. But the Prime Minister, together with four different Ministers of Immigration, did not heed that advice. And now those same people, as well as the Prime Minister, suggest that it is an emergency. That is fine. We are here. We did not boycott the House of Commons. We came back to Ottawa to work.

Not only did the Government wait three years to introduce a solution to a problem that was discovered many years ago but it took 10 days from the time it declared an emergency to tell Canadians and parliamentarians when we would be coming back. It did not even allow the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, a government Member, to see the legislation until late last evening.

If an emergency is declared in a business then would one not want the board of directors of that business to meet quickly, to have the necessary information at their fingertips to encourage an enlightened resolution to the emergency at hand? I think most competent business managers would agree with that principle. It is no different in government. The 282 Members of Parliament constitute the board of directors of Canada, at least on a temporary basis. We are the custodians of the nation's authority.

I do not think the process has allowed or facilitated a mature and enlightened debate to address the frustrations that Canadians have with a Government which is unable or unprepared to come to grips with the situation. It is synonymous with trying to hide the deficiencies and the embarrassments of inaction. The Government is trying to mobilize a public relations campaign that is intended to send a message to Canadians that the Conservative Government is in control when the very opposite is true. More important, the Government has presented a piece of legislation that goes far beyond the parameters of the situation.

After having only between 24 and 32 hours to look at the legislation I feel that the proposals in it trample violently over the spirit of Canadian justice and civil liberties which were fought for heartily and finally attained. This Bill is an inflamed piece of legislation. It is a reactionary piece of legislation and it is an over-kill. It misuses the moment in which there has been created a great deal of legitimate frustration across the country. But it is over-kill in terms of what the initial intentions of Government and Parliament should be.

We all agree that the abuses should be cleaned up and that the system should be tightened up. But does that mean that the legislation that is drafted—and the Department probably raced through it as fast as parliamentarians had to race through it—should offend and trample our Charter of Rights, our international obligations, the traditions of nation building which exist in Canada as well as the traditions of past immigration policy that are the centre-piece of our history and which, hopefully, will be the centre-piece of our future? This legislation offends our sense of fairness. It offends the civil rights and liberties that all Canadians and all individuals on its soil enjoy through our Charter. It creates civil disobedience in terms of those who are engaged in assisting refugees.

This legislation does more than just try to cut out abuse. It does more than try to get at the exploiters and the abusers of human misery. In fact, when one looks at the cumulative effects of this legislation one will see that it changes the character and the temperament which defines Canadian society. It is our character which quite proudly distinguishes us from other countries and other societies in the world.

We do not condone abuse. We do not encourage it, and we do not like it. But our Party is not prepared to stand idly by and accept a piece of legislation that goes far beyond the stated intentions and which plays to the worst fears. It promotes an exaggerated remedy that does not respect the precedents of a policy and battles that were fought by parliamentarians and Canadians prior to 1987.

It is for that reason that our Party, in the hopes of curbing abuse and protecting the integrity and the viability of the system and the rights of Canadians and those who wish to come here, asks and invites the Government to join us in amending this legislation in order to do what the Prime Minister, the Government and all parliamentarians want it to do. That is to say we want to try to clamp down on abuse. We want to allow a system which is fair, a system which will allow Canadians their civil liberties. We want a system which will allow individuals due process, a system which will allow them to enjoy the work this Parliament performed some years ago in terms of establishing a Charter of Rights and Freedoms, as well as patriating the Constitution, something which made us the masters of our own destiny. We can now change the Constitution when we see fit.

If those struggles, those hours and those energies of symbolic movement, maturity and of greatness as a country mean anything at all, then I think these elements need to prevail in this piece of legislation.

Let us look carefully at the legislation for it contains a great many proposals. One of the aspects of the legislation gives greater powers of deportation to the Minister of Immigration. While the existing law allows the Minister to sign a Section 39 certificate deeming a person to be a security threat, the power is used very infrequently. It is reserved for cases in which it would be injurious to national security to disclose the evidence in an oral hearing. Otherwise an oral hearing is always held to determine if a claimant is admissible or not. Under Bill C-84 it will be possible to use Section 39 certificates in lieu of oral inquiries, not just for those who wish to disclose information injurious to the national interest but to all cases.

Furthermore, an individual who has a certificate 39 presented against him will not be able to go through the refugee system. If in fact that person is to be deported then it will be necessary through that process to establish the country to which he or she cannot be deported for fear of persecution.

• (1620)

Other changes would put that individual before a Federal Court judge rather than the existing Security and Intelligence Review Committee. For speed and fairness, the Government should allow that person the right to go before the review committee. The Federal Court will take more time. Obviously, the Federal Court has a legal expertise rather than a security expertise. If fairness and expeditious processing are at the heart of these concerns, then those movements run counter to what we have heard from the Government.

Amendments are needed with respect to the creation of deportation certificates. Within our present laws there is the power to deport individuals proven beyond a shadow of a doubt to be inadmissible or who pose a security threat to the country. Those laws are established.

We have not been living in a vacuum until this year when the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) told us that we have to do something about deportation. Those laws are presently in place, but with the protection of the rights of individuals and the rights of Canadians. That met with the approval of Canadians while we were drafting the legislation presently on the books. So before the legislation is changed, the Government ought to return to Canadians who approved the present measures. Yes, let us protect our shores. Of course, we always will. But let us have a sensitivity to the justice and the rights upon which this country has been built and forged and hopefully upon which it will continue to be built.

There is another provision in this Bill that the Minister may use force in directing any vehicle that has entered Canadian waters to leave. This power raises several interesting questions. How can the Minister know if everyone aboard is an illegal immigrant without due process? How can the boat be turned around without each person being interviewed? Will the interviews take place on the boat at sea? Will we send the Minister with his immigration officials to execute a policy of the seas? Most Canadians would expect that if there is a boat coming to our shores, ignorance does not help. We need to escort that boat into our port and find out who is on the boat, where they came from, what are their intentions. If we simply turn boats around, whether they are refugees or anyone else, we are acting without any information. We are not dealing with a situation that would allow the process of determination that this country has agreed to and has signed under international obligations.

Also, that would set up two different classes of refugees. If the person arrives by boat, that individual has no due process according to this legislation. If the person arrives at Pearson International Airport and states he would like to declare the status of refugee, he has due process. We cannot afford to have one system with two classes of refugees, because in that manner it is the mode of transportation that dictates the decision and not the circumstances.

What happens if no one wishes to come by boat any more and they come to our airports by charter planes? Will the Minister of Immigration order his CF-18s to protect our airspace? That is the logical conclusion if those steps are followed through when this legislation on turning boats back is highlighted. Therefore, amendments are needed to that section.

Another section that proves to be very difficult is the definition of smugglers. Do we mean consultants who are making a profit of $8,000 to $10,000 a head, who are forging documents for those individuals and dumping them on our shores? Of course, those individuals should be fined, penalized, and, if need be, put in prison. No one agrees with that corrupt, illegal scheme of making profits from human desperation. The time has not been taken to define smugglers. It has not been stated that it is in a transfer of money that the smuggler aspects would apply to those individuals.

In Section 95.1 of the legislation any individual, any Canadian, any church, any priest, any sister who helps a group of more than 10 refugees face the same penalties possible under the law as the phoney immigration consultants who are making profits. Canadians would not want a priest locked up for 10 years for trying to help an El Salvadorean who is hiding in the basement of a church in the United States to come to our border and try to salvage that person's life in the same way that they would want to lock up an individual con artist. Of course not, Mr. Speaker, but that legislation insults the integrity of Canadians. It does not challenge the exploiters and the abusers. It throws a net around everyone who is moved from the heart and the gut to try to do something for their fellow human beings.

Amendments are needed to that clause. Surely, the Minister will acknowledge that there needs to be a tightening up, otherwise we will be saying to churches and individuals, if they aid refugees they will be committing civil disobedience. Think about the type of country we wish to become. What type of a country would we be if the Opposition lies low because they wish to return to their summer holiday and allow that legislation to change the very temperament of this country? That needs to be amended.

Mr. Marchi: There is another section which states that an immigration officer will be able to break open doors, windows, ceilings, plumbing without a search warrant to look for evidence of those who may be in violation of our Immigration Act. No one has any concern for trying to rid Canada of those who possess a threat to our safety and well-being. But do we have to trample over the rights of human rights organizations or churches because someone may have a suspicion, or the Minister or his deputy may have a suspicion? That, too, has to be amended and mollified with the characteristics of Canadians and not some banana republic that allows its police and officials to run rampant because they may have an interest or a political motive in allowing that type of trampling of rights.

There are also special detention certificates. Presently the law provides that if the Government or the Minister feels there is either lack of identification or a possibility of a security threat the person can be detained for 48 hours. After 48 hours there has to be a request to a special immigration adjudicator for permission for a further seven day period of detainment. Fair enough, if there is a suspicion and to make sure that the suspicion is false a detainment is requested. That was done with the recent immigrants, and it has been done for years. It has worked well.

The Government wishes to move from 48 hours to seven days without any questions. After the seven days, and after a special detention certificate, it would permit a Minister to ask for the person to be detained for 21 days. The adjudicator has no discretion whatsoever to overrule that request. Once again the power has shifted from Canadians and their laws into the hands of one single Minister who is calling the shots. That is dangerous. Today it may be the 174 immigrants who came off a boat; tomorrow we don't know.

Therefore, we must look at the matter in the larger perspective because some of these moves are un-Canadian. They have not been approved in the past and I do not think they would be approved today.

Another question was documentation. If a person persists once he is here in Canada in pushing in the face of our immigration officials fraudulent information, misleading information, or information which might incriminate someone else, of course that would not be right. However, that is very different from saying and trying to suggest that any immigrant or refugee who does not come with a document should be tabbed a cheater.

Why? If the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) knows the reality faced by many refugees, he will know that they may not have the luxury of being able to wait the six months needed to obtain a visa. Persons in Latin America may not have the luxury of going to our Canadian Consulate. I have written to the Minister about three or four specific cases of people who were afraid to go to the embassies because the Chilean police knew their movements and had stake-outs at various foreign embassies. In those circumstances they do not have the luxury of getting documents.

What do they do? They get on a plane, they come to Canada, and they do not have documents. Let us afford the individual the time and flexibility to explain why he does not have a document, not prejudice the case and instantly suggest in the legislation that that individual has to be a cheater, there must be something wrong, let us put him in detention, get a certificate of detention, then get a certificate of deportation, and send him back.

In the very few minutes that I have, I suggest that amendments are needed in these three, four or five key areas because we need to protect our rights as Canadians which we have developed in a mature and thoughtful way through the years evolving to this date. We cannot allow one week in the summer of 1987 somehow to turn back the clock of development and progressive legislation.

We all have our differences—the Liberals, the Conservatives, and the New Democrats. By and large, hopefully, our ends are noble. Hopefully we are all here—and I truthfully believe this—to serve the common good. This is why we stood for office. This is why we were elected. The ends must be noble.

Another aspect to which the Minister should pay attention is that if the piece of legislation is enacted there will be a lengthy list of court and Charter challenges. There is no question. The legal profession, Canadians themselves, and human rights organizations have said that there will be court and Charter challenges. I ask the Minister what that will do to our system. What will happen six months or twelve months hence when there will be Charter challenges left, right, and centre?

I will tell the House what will happen. It will render our system even more chaotic than the present one. If that happens, we will be testing the patience and trust of Canadians once again. Canadians deeply desire their Government and Parliament to get it right this time. If it takes additional time to ensure proper legislation, let us take that time. If it takes a committee to listen to some experts and to include Canadians in the public discussions, let us include them now. For the sake of God, let us have a piece of legislation which is foolproof from legal and human rights challenges. Otherwise, 12 months down the road Canadians will lose patience again. I fear, as a Member of Parliament, that if Canadians lose patience with a Government incapable of coming to grips with the situation, those sentiments and frustrations may turn, perhaps irreversibly, on a progressive policy.

Therefore, there is a responsibility on the part of the Minister. He goes across the country saying that they will raise immigration levels next year, which is fine and dandy. However, how do we expect Canadians to buy that policy if they are to be simply dragged through government inaction and incompetence and a system which has failed to be improved despite the urgings and proposals offered by our Party?

The real solution is in the refugee determination system. We have suggested a proposal which is basically comprised by the following steps: an inquiry, an oral hearing before an independent refugee board distinct from the immigration flow, because that is a distinct entity unto itself, a review, and and appeal to the Federal Court.

It would go from months and years to weeks and months. It would provide fair and quick processing, which is the real solution facing us as parliamentarians. If we really want to do our homework this summer, let us overhaul the refugee determination system rather than move on a piece of legislation which insults the integrity of Canadians vis-à-vis human rights, civil rights, and civil liberties developed by those same Canadians through their Parliaments across the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: What about the message we would be sending out to the world? On listening to the Government we would think that Canada lives in isolation, in a vacuum, and that somehow Canada is the only country receiving refugees. That is false. There are 10 million to 15 million refugees searching for a home. There are countries receiving refugees every day of the week. There are new wars and strife which are literally producing thousands of refugees.

What does this say? It says that it is an international phenomenon, an international problem, which means that we require an international solution.

Some years ago we signed the Geneva Convention which said that we as a country and as a people would participate with other western countries in trying to come to grips with the challenge of trying to house and feed people of the world. We have accepted that responsibility, but we cannot afford to encourage other countries to enact a similar type of regressive and restrictive legislation, because that would hurt the domestic nature of countries even further.

When we place a padlock on the international corridor and we have an international corridor of locked doors, where will people go and how will they do it? If we send out a message that the front door is closed, do you not think, Mr. Speaker, that in order to survive and carry on they will seek the back door? Do you not think that there will be consultants who will continue to abuse those desperate human beings and will always find clients to put on boats, trains, planes, and cars to get them in somehow and make a profitable buck at it? There will always be those low lifes in our society, and we should curb them. We should not produce clients for them who have no alternative but to try to seek a safe haven rather than face torture, imprisonment, or death. That is at the heart of human existence, and the human spirit never gives up.

Therefore, rather than running away and allowing other countries to do the same, Canada should be calling for an international summit of countries, a Commonwealth conference, to suggest to the world that we must re-evaluate the situation, regroup, and have a shared and co-operative type of resolve to try to come to grips with the situation. Otherwise, every individual country will be at risk of further abuse. It is a catch-22 situation which the Government cannot or perhaps refuses to understand.

The Government is not doing Canada any favours by allowing people to become more frustrated and desperate in searching for those back doors. I would rather have a front door policy which says: "If you have a legitimate claim, if you are really trying to remove yourself from torture and death, then you have a chance to receive justice in this country". But we should not send out a message that the front door is locked so that people continuously try to come through the back door. That is not the solution.

I believe Canadians take pride in the way of life which is Canada. They take pride in our justice system, in our Constitution and in our Charter of Rights. When we have people visiting us in this country, we find they are literally amazed at the progressive nature, the democratic and moderate attitudes that influence Canadian society in everyday life. I believe it is those qualities which distinguish Canada from the United States. As great, as powerful, as rich and as resourceful as the United States is, I do not believe any one Canadian living in Canada today would be prepared to trade his or her lot in Canadian society for that of the United States of America. There is sometimes a difficult definition to attach to why that is so, but we all feel it and we all live it. That has characterized our policy towards those who are old, those who are hungry, poor, and sick and those who are essentially less well off than ourselves. The Canadian way has always been to say: "You are also human beings and you, too, have rights the same as we".

Immigrants to Canada, are the centre-piece of our Canadian history, and they number in the millions, and I include myself in that category. When they arrive they have a new lease on life because of what Canada is and what it means. We cannot permit ourselves to lock the door now because the reasons we had for coming here are still valid for those people who wish to have the opportunity as well.

The first reaction of Canadians when they witnessed the arrival of the immigrants was to offer assistance. They offered them tea and coffee and cookies. I think that symbolizes the first reactionary Canadian-style attitude towards those who seek our help. Then the Government and the pollsters moved in. But do you know who are the best pollsters, Mr. Speaker? They are the 25 million Canadians who are watching this Parliament. They are watching their elected leaders and are expecting a moral leadership.

In the history of every nation, including ours, many actions have been popular at particular times in particular circumstances. However, with time and with reflection, many of those actions have become a shame or a dark mark on that country's history. Leadership means staying the course. It means opting to do always what is morally and ethically correct. It means avoiding the lure of quick political fixes because of the attitudes and perceptions of some pollsters or the attitudes of any other nationality.

I hope that we in this Parliament—the class of 84 and others—will exhibit the moral leadership which has come to mean not only refugee policy but Canadian lifestyle in general.

I conclude by asking my colleagues opposite, members of the Government, to show that we too are against abuse, that we, too, wish to protect the system from those who wish to destroy it. We invite the Government and our colleagues from the New Democratic Party to join with us in amending a legislation which can, which should and which must be made better for all Canadians if we are to expect to continue the tolerant and judicious way of proceeding not only for this group of individuals but for anyone else, for our children and for future generations.

Let us not have a situation where parliamentarians in 20 years will stand here in this House of Commons and ask how we could have approved Bill C-84 in 1987. We have a chance because we are still in the present, and I look forward to working with members of the Government in trying to amend this legislation which needs to be amended in order to give Canadians a piece of legislation which will cut out abuse and protect the system and will also make Canadians proud that we stood up in this House of Commons this summer and voted for the correct and appropriate procedure and avoided the quick political fix.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following Bills, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired: Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation, and Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, unlike the large majority of nations in the world, modern Canada in fact is a nation which has been created by immigrants and refugees. Therefore, when we are discussing the future of policy in this area inevitably we are talking about our past as a people. It is a past, I would argue, that principally if not exclusively—because we have been a nation created on top of the foundations of the Inuit and Indian peoples who were here first—has been created by men and women from around the globe who chose to come to this country of ours.

We have created a nation that I think, frankly stated, is unsurpassed in its particular mixture of equality, liberty, compassion and tolerance if one makes a systematic comparison with all the countries around the globe today. I think that is a generally accurate description of modern Canada. Canada is a country which consists of people of all races and religions, people of a wide range of political persuasions, the vast majority of whom, of course, are within the democratic framework. Canada is a country which is rich and diverse. We should keep in mind, therefore, our historical origins that have created what we are today when we talk about the kinds of matters that have been introduced by the Government in its Bill today.

We are a divergent people. People have come here for divergent reasons. It is worth recalling that among those who have come here are black Canadians who fled the United States at a time in its history when it accepted slavery and Canada did not. We had Irish immigrants who fled the famine of their native country in the 1840s. Just previous to and after World War I, on top of the French and the English, the original European peoples, eastern and central Europeans, came and, to a considerable extent, filled up the prairie regions and made those parts of Canada the productive and decent places they are.

And since World War II Canada has gained international recognition for welcoming people whose lives were threatened and whose future prospects were practically destroyed as a result of the war, poverty or political repression in their country.

Throughout the '50s and '60s Canada sprang to the assistance of hundreds of thousands of people fleeing from European and eastern countries because of the totalitarian régime. In 1973 we opened our arms to people seeking shelter after the brutal military takeover in Chile. In 1978 we helped the 100,000-odd boat people and provided a haven for thousands of others who were trying to get away from dangerous conditions in their country.

As recognition for the generosity of the Canadian people the United Nations awarded Canada the Nansen Medal for exceptional service to the refugee cause. Canada did show leadership in the past and, as a result, our policies are acknowledged the world over as being fair. If we want to maintain our reputation, Mr. Speaker, it is imperative that in future we follow the same guidelines that guided us in the past. In the past Canada successfully paved the way for hundreds of thousands of immigrants and refugees coming to this country. Unfortunately it was during the mandate of this Government that we detected shortcomings in our policies, inefficient administration and needless recourse to drama. What is needed is a clear-cut and fair policy which comes to grips with the problem, not the hysteria and panic so patently demonstrated by the Conservative Government.

[English]

For the New Democratic Party, as for the people of Canada, Bill C-84 is unacceptable, either because it does not deal with the refugee problems that are of concern to Canadians or because it violates the spirit and perhaps the letter of our own Charter of Rights. We in this Party want the problems that are felt seriously and are real, to be dealt with but we want these problems dealt with clearly within the principles of law and totally consistent with our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I would like to talk about three crucial areas. Canadians have been legitimately concerned about the abuse of our very civilized refugee law and of our very civilized, tolerant and humane implementation of that refugee law. Canadians do not want that law abused and abuses there have been.

From my conversations with men and women of my constituency and from what I have heard from others by correspondence, as have all Members, I find that Canadians who themselves are recent immigrants and had to wait often for many years to become immigrants or who have relatives back in their countries of origin whom they want one day to be settled as Canadian citizens are the ones who are particularly sensitive to the reality and find offensive those people who have abused our immigration and refugee laws. We in this Party totally sympathize with those Canadians who find these practices offensive and we want to do everything we can to put an end to those violations.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Canadians know that there are people who, through a variety of schemes, have got in by claiming, on highly bogus grounds, to be refugees. They have then managed to stay in Canada for a number of years and then, once again through a variety of stratagems, have gained the right to stay here permanently. That is not a fair process. It is not just and it is not what we in Parliament who created the present law had in mind.

There have been abuses with which we as parliamentarians have to deal. In our view, there have been many suggestions for dealing with these abuses. We have received a variety of reports including that of the Robinson task force and the admirable, lucid, humane and efficacious report made by Gunther Plaut. More recently, suggestions have been made by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), the Chairperson of the employment and immigration committee of the House.

On behalf of my own Party, I wrote to the Minister last February to suggest some very concrete measures the Government could have acted upon if it wanted to deal with this abuse in an effective and humane way. Speaking on behalf of my caucus at that time, I relied almost entirely on what had been proposed by the Canadian Council of Churches. A thoughtful study was done by church leaders from across Canada, church leaders who are concerned about the twin goals of having a fair and humane refugee policy on the one hand and curbing abuses on the other.

What did the Canadian Council of Churches recommend that I passed on to the Minister in writing and to which I have not yet received a reply? It recommended a process that would have reduced the time required to consider the application for refugee status and finally to reach a determination. I will not go into all the details of the proposals now, but I would like to mention some of the key elements of them.

The council proposed a process that was fair and accessible and included hearings and appeals. It is a process which would have reduced the timeframe from the three or four years it is now to a matter of months.

In our view, if these proposals had been acted upon or indeed if they were acted upon now, the process would work. The process would deal with abuse for the very good reason that there are people who use a variety of scams and gambles to get into the country. Indeed, if these people are here for two, three or four years, marry and establish some kind of roots, they rely on the good will of the Canadian Government to accept them as immigrants. Many have taken this gamble. They have gambled in coming in with a process that has gone on for that long. Yet the same people, it has been argued in report after report with cogency, I believe, would not so gamble if they knew they were going to reside just a few months in this country and if they were not bona fide refugees they would be kicked out. That is clearly the conclusion reached by a variety of sensible and practical people who have looked at this matter, and that is the precise recommendation we in the NDP made to the Minister. It is one that we think he should be acting upon today.

Instead of responding to what its own Members have said, instead of responding to Gunther Plaut or the NDP or church leaders, what is the Government doing? It is turning quite upside down the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr Mulroney) almost one year ago to the day. When the Tamils arrived off our shores about a year ago, the Prime Minister said people who arrive in lifeboats off our shores are not going to be turned away. "We are not", he said, "in the business of turning away refugees and", he added, "we never will under this Government". That promise was kept for all of one year.

Mr. Siddon: He said the same thing yesterday.

Mr. Broadbent: He said one thing a year ago and his Government is doing just the opposite today. I will tell the Minister why I say the Prime Minister is turning his own promise upside down.

He said he would not turn them away if they got to shore, so what is he going to do now? He is going to send Canadian ships out to stop them before they get to shore. That is playing with words. The Minister knows it, the Prime Minister knows it, and the people of Canada are tired of this kind of hypocrisy. It is not merely an absence of justice, it is a travesty of justice.

The Minister, who is not in the House now, knows full well—I do not say that critically. I respect your visual admonition, Mr. Speaker, about referring to the presence or absence of a Member. I apologize. I assume he is not here for good reason and I am not being glib on the point. I am just saying that the Government knows full well that this provision is playing with words. It is in effect a turning away of the ships before they get here. More than that, the kind of process the Government is using compounds the unfairness, from our perspective. It says that a representative of the Coast Guard is going to make the decision. He or she is going to be boarding the ship and ultimately deciding whether the people concerned are in a condition to be turned away. What that means in effect is that these people will have no chance for any kind of hearing on whether or not they are bona fide refugees. That is very clearly what we are saying. Up until now these people have gone through a process to decide whether or not they are bona fide refugees. This recommendation of the Government, if it becomes law, will give not to an immigration official but to a Coast Guard employee with no training, and of course there is no appeal process, the right to decide whether this boatload of people is or is not a boatload of legitimate refugees.

We have a couple of quite disreputable incidents like that in our history. In 1914 we turned away a boatload of Sikhs with quite fatal consequences for some of them. In 1939, not so long ago, a boatload of Jews were denied access. It is easy for us, I know, to make nice moral distinctions about what happened in the past. We do not know what we would have done had we been there. What we know is that we as a nation have grown in our sensitivity and commitment to human liberty and human rights for those who do not yet reside within our borders. We in this Party are not going to accept a clause in a Bill which will leave open the possibility of a repetition of what happened in 1914 and 1939.

A second concern of Canadians, and a deeply felt and legitimate concern, is about the profiteering which has been going on. People want to exploit the desires of others to come to our land. They have made money based upon the suffering of these people and their desire to come to this country. Well, we in this Party favour an intensification of the punishment of fines and imprisonment for those who profiteer in this way to get around or break Canadian law. If the goal is or ought to be the putting to an end of that kind of profiteering and the effective curbing of some of the abuses, one would have hoped that the Bill we have before us would deal effectively with that. It does not deal with profiteering as such at all. It contains a provision which could lead to the imprisonment or imposition of serious fines on church people, representatives of Amnesty International, or other totally sincere and empathic human beings who are devoting a good part of their lives to try to facilitate the entry into Canada of legitimate refugees.

I do not say that lightly and I want to read into the record Clause 95.1 of the Bill which clearly makes this possible. It says this:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence and is liable—

It goes on to talk about prison sentences and fines up to the multi-thousand dollar level. I want to make a couple of points about that. First, most legitimate refugees who came to this country in recent years from Central America had no documents and could not get them. If they went to get them in a number of countries in Central America they would be put in jail or worse, so they arrive without them. They are arriving, perhaps even as we are debating now, with the aid of tremendously concerned church people.

According to my reading of this provision, the church people are subject to the penalties under the law. That is totally unacceptable to the members of my Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: There is now an agreement for this measure to be in committee by Friday of this week. We will move a number of very specific amendments there. However, I will make a suggestion now which I hope the Government will begin considering. I assume the Government had good motives in terms of getting at the abuse associated with profiteering and wrong-doing of that kind, and that there was bad drafting of the legislation. I will put it that way. If that is the case, in my judgment there should be no reference at all to documentation being required for these refugees and we should get to the real problem. I suggest that instead of Clause 95(1) we ought to be considering in principle wording such as the following:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets, or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet a person to come into Canada in a clandestine manner, or to make a false refugee claim, is guilty of an offence.

If a person commits an offence fitting within this category, he or she should be liable to the punishments included in other sections of the Bill. That would mean that the church person, who is acting in good faith, or refugees who have no documents, would not be punished by the laws of Canada. We do not want to punish refugees. We want genuine refugees to be acceptable to this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I now want to turn to a third area of concern which Canadians have had. Canadians are concerned about the admission of people who might indeed be a security risk in our country or people who have committed major crimes in their land of origin. I would like to make a couple of points on this issue.

First, I understand international reality reasonably well on the point of serious security risk type of people. They are not the type of people who come as refugees. As the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) said the other day, it is much more likely that such terrorists, such evil people, if I can put it that way, will come in with all the documents, wearing expensive suits and, quite conceivably, flying first class in an airplane. They will come in well organized, not as refugees.

Second, I did some checking and I believe I am right that there is no record in Canadian history of the Government ever finding a person who is deemed to be a security risk who came into Canada and applied as a refugee. My understanding is that no person who turned out to be a terrorist or serious criminal has ever actually applied within Canada as a refugee.

That having been said, all members of all Parties of course want to do everything they can to ensure that no such people come into our country. My Party is as concerned about that as is the Government.

At present a refugee claimant who is detained because of suspicion that he or she would fit into this category is entitled to a hearing within 48 hours. Subsequently the Security Intelligence Review Committee would be asked to determine whether there is a valid reason for this detention. That is the existing law. On the whole, this process, in terms of this category of person, seems to be a good one. However, Bill C-84 proposes replacing the Security Intelligence Review Committee with the judgment of the Federal Court.

There are two serious things wrong with that. One, it is the Security Intelligence Review Committee which has some expertise in passing judgment about security risks. That is why we created the agency. That is why we are in the process of building up a cadre of people with some expertise in this field. They have the expertise and presently have the responsibility of making a recommendation. However, the Government does not want to use the people with expertise but wants to give the responsibility to the Federal Court, which has no expertise whatsoever in this area. I am sure that any judge would candidly admit that. We are going to turn it over to a federal judge who has no expertise.

The second point is that, as everyone knows, there is a backlog at the Federal Court level of many months. The Federal Courts are also overburdened. Therefore, it again seems to us that the legitimate goal of dealing with potential terrorists and taking steps to stop their entry has not been achieved in a sensible way by replacing the Security Intelligence Review Committee's work with that of the Federal Court. That is a recommendation which we in this Party find lacks any sense whatsoever and one we cannot support.

I want to conclude my brief observations on this Bill by saying that we want abuses in the refugee system of our country stopped. We want profiteers punished. We certainly want terrorists to be stopped from entering Canada. However, we want these problems dealt with in ways consistent with the rule of law, with our own Charter of Rights, and with the Canadian tradition which has shown an openness to refugees. We cannot support the present Bill precisely because it violates these requirements.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner).

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order before the Minister speaks. I mentioned that I sent a letter to the Minister last February and that I had not received a reply. I have just been informed that I did receive a detailed reply. I want to correct that.

• (1720)

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for correcting what was obviously an oversight. I indeed appreciate some of his comments which were very helpful. Perhaps they have already listened to what they want to hear, but I would be happy to share a few remarks with them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. If there are any further conversations, I wish Hon. Members would have them behind the curtain.

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, we are in the midst of a difficult and volatile situation. Recent occurrences compel the Government to enact legislation that will eliminate the abuse of our immigration laws.

What we have heard clearly is that queue jumping will not be tolerated. It is unfair that a claimant who is not a legitimate refugee can move to the head of a line. That undermines the system and it incites further abuse.

I can understand the frustration of many who have waited long periods of time, hoping that they can sponsor members of their family or others who do not meet the narrow constraints of our immigration policy. I understand those frustrations and, in fact, in his statement this week the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) gave hope to those who have older non-dependent children that very soon they will be able to bring them in to join them. We know how important it is for them to be reunited with their families.

The current system of the refugee determination process is absurd. It is chaotic, it is unfair, and it just does not work. I hear some proposing a system that is even more complicated. We do not have an appeal process on merit now and some are raising the possibility of a new system that establishes an appeal on merit. One wonders how that will function any better when we already have a system that does not function now.

Clearly we need a system that is firm, fair, just, and balances reason with compassion. It has to be able to identify and welcome real refugees. It must be able to provide protection to those who need protection.

There are others who have been making inappropriate refugee claims. There are illegal migrants—certainly good people—who are attempting to abuse our system.

Recently we have seen an increase in that abuse. Since May of last year only about 10 per cent of those claimants have been found to be legitimate refugees, according to the best advice of our refugee status advisory committee. In the previous year at least a third of the same claimants were deemed to be bona fide refugees. This indicates an increased abuse.

What does this mean to the real refugees of the world, and how are Canadians to perceive how their resources are being abused when they could be a benefit to real refugees?

This is a serious matter. We are sending out a strong message. It is that trafficking in human flesh cannot be accepted. It is deplorable, and that kind of smuggling, keeping people in sub-human conditions and forcing them to risk their lives, will be stopped. We will put those people who mass market in that way out of business.

It could be tragic if we allowed this to go on much longer. The tragedy would be that it could corrode the environment in which we must continue to operate a refugee policy. We need a more hospitable environment in order to build a more generous refugee policy and indeed bring an increasing number of immigrants to this country. As other Members have indicated, immigrants and refugees have made an enormous contribution to the wellbeing of this country. They create jobs, rather than remove them, and make an enormous contribution in terms of goods and services that they require.

Some Hon. Members have raised the security situation. I want to assure all Canadians that if there are reasonable grounds for believing that an individual is a danger to our society, or the person has committed a crime elsewhere, that person should not be permitted to make a refugee claim in this country. That position is supported by our international obligations and by our own Immigration Act.

We will continue to consider the reality. The fact that there are those who are not playing by the rules of the game has eroded public support. By welcoming and identifying real refugees, by removing unfounded claimants, by protecting legitimate refugees and deterring abusive claimants, we will send out a clear message to Canadians that in the summer of 1987 we heard their plea and that abuse will never be tolerated in this country.

I want to explain the details of the new Bill and emphasize a few points before I do so. This legislation will bring in tough controls and some severe penalties. I will not deny that they are indeed tough, but this toughness is tempered by fairness and concern for refugees that has won Canada an international humanitarian reputation.

These proposals address a problem that has been brewing for the last few years. The arrival of the Sikhs is only the latest manifestation of this issue.

The number of refugee claims made at Canadian border crossings has increased dramatically in the last several years. In 1981, 3,450 claims were made. By 1986, that number ballooned to 18,000. An estimated 30,000 claims will be made by the end of this year.

Many of these claims are false and are clogging our refugee determination system. These measures will deter people who make false claims for refugee status from entering Canada.

This Government believes that tough deterrents will bring results.

What are we trying to do? The answer is simple. We want to prevent abuse of the refugee determination system. This will help genuine refugees to get fast, efficient assistance from Canada. We will help those who need our protection, not those who do not.

Bill C-55, which provides permanent solutions, was introduced in the House last May. Given the urgent human dimension of its recommendations, I would hope that the Opposition will consider Bill C-55 more objectively than it did last spring. It is landmark legislation that will streamline the claims process, provide expanded refugee hearing resources, make the determination process more efficient from top to bottom, and give Government new clout to dispatch economic migrants to safe third countries.

As for our motivation, we are deeply concerned by the unscrupulous smugglers who help people come illegally into Canada. Their activity is unacceptable. Not only is it unfair to those who pay their money on the strength of false promises, but it also jeopardizes human lives.

This is not only unfair to the people directly involved, but odious for all Canadians. We have to put an end to this practice and we shall do so. Experience has shown that existing penalties are not sufficiently harsh to deter smugglers.

The Bill introduced today provides appropriate penalties. Anyone who organizes or abets the smuggling of people into Canada is liable to a maximum prison term of five years and a maximum fine of $500,000.

The new provisions will make the activities of smugglers and merciless advisors more risky. Harsh penalties will also apply to the illegal disembarking of passengers in Canadian territorial waters. Our purpose is simple: We shall attack the problem by making lawbreakers lose the benefits they could reap from their activities.

• (1730)

Transportation companies also carry responsibility for allowing people to enter Canada illegally. Some individuals enter Canada clandestinely, but the vast majority of improperly documented arrivals come on scheduled carriers.

Some transportation companies have been unwilling or apparently unable to ensure that their passengers carry proper travel documents. The Bill promises heavier fines for companies transporting people who do not have proper documentation. A fine of $5,000 for each passenger without proper travel documents will be imposed. The Deputy Minister of Employment and Immigration will have the power to require any company to deposit a security for unpaid fines. Failure to comply may result in the seizure of the company's planes. Under this legislation airlines will be permitted to collect documents and return them to individuals upon arrival in Canada.

In addition, transportation companies will collect information to help identify passengers who conceal or destroy their documents. The Government recognizes that limitations must be placed on the liability of airlines and other transportation companies. We recognize that the Government is obliged to deal with inadmissible persons quickly. Transportation companies do have responsibilities and obligations—which I am confident they will meet.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, many of the recent illegal arrivals came without identification. We need to improve our ability to detain improperly documented claimants until their identities can be established. This is important for two reasons. We have to be careful not to admit anyone who poses a threat to Canada's security; and we must be able to identify people who really do not need our protection.

Under the new legislation people arriving at major ports of entry without proper documentation will be detained for a period of up to seven days. If, after seven days, the senior immigration officer can demonstrate that reasonable efforts are being made to establish the claimant's identity, there is an obligatory extension for a further 21 days. Extensions beyond this 28-day period can be made weekly.

This measure sounds quite tough. It is. If we do not know who a person is then we do not know if that person is or is not dangerous. Simply put, we must know whom we are allowing into the country.

The need to establish identity is an important security precaution. A firmer detention policy is essential in any serious attempt to deter large influxes of bogus claimants. Once again I must emphasize that our aim here is to deter people from coming to Canada illegally.

An important aspect of the legislation allows for the detention of security threats until they can be removed. In cases suggesting a criminal background based upon confidential information, a Minister's certificate describing this evidence will be presented to the immigration adjudicator. The inquiry will then be adjourned. The Minister's certificate will be presented to a justice of the Federal Court. The claimant will be given an opportunity to respond to the Minister's allegations. If the justice of the Federal Court rules that the claimant is a threat, then the person will be removed. That person will not have recourse to the refugee determination system.

Mr. Speaker, I have been outlining some of the punitive aspects of this Bill. I emphasize that these are deterrent provisions. The previous legislation left too much room for abuses. The entire world now knows that Canada will no longer tolerate such abuses.

The new legislation also provides other means of deterring fraudulent applicants. Naturally, many people want to take advantage of the economic opportunities offered by Canada, but we cannot allow them to cheat and to bypass regular immigration channels.

The government is now facing a difficult situation. The refugee determination process has bogged down. To date, five years are needed to establish whether a refugee claim is genuine. During that time, the claimant is entitled to work in Canada. If the tribunal rejects the claim, it is very difficult to send the individual back to his or her country of origin after all that time.

[English]

Over the last five years some 40,000 claimants came to our door and, as was their right, they made a refugee status claim. After the seven other levels of appeal and re-appeal, only some 650 were asked to leave the country. That is not a refugee determination process—it is a licence to abuse. It is a licence to come in by the back door. It is unfair. What all Canadians want is a system that is fair and just. If the criteria are well established, then let everyone have the same opportunity to meet them. Some people should not be able to jump into a third line which is totally unrelated to the immigration line, or to jump into a line that must always be there for true refugees, those people who need protection and who should always find a home here.

An individual may have a steady job, have started a family and have children who are Canadian citizens. This however does not legalize the way he or she entered Canada and is a breach by economic migrants of established immigration rules.

Mr. Speaker, the current process, if I may say so, is an invitation to abuse. It is therefore clear that we need a more effective and expeditious system. This legislation is a major and necessary step in that direction. Expeditious treatment will deter illegitimate refugee claims.

[English]

There is no better deterrent than a much more expeditious determination process. Once those people who are known not to be refugees whose claims are either manifestly unfounded, who have refugee status and who have lived sufficient lengths of time elsewhere, who can be returned to those countries or who can seek the protection of those countries are removed from the system, then that will send the clearest message to people around the world that it does not pay to sell all of one's belongings and pick up and try to hit Canada as an illegal alien. Indeed, it may be more appropriate and beneficial to those people to try to apply under the regulation, under the immigration stream. Indeed, most of these people have not done that.

People are more reluctant to take fraudulent actions if they know they can be removed rapidly, and we already have evidence of that.

[English]

Canada is an open and caring country. All of us are very fortunate to live here. We are privileged to claim Canada as our home. This is no secret to the rest of the world. Our international reputation as a land of peace and opportunity is what impresses people and makes them want to live here. And we want them to come. We will be increasing immigration levels over the next three years. I take pride in the international reputation Canada enjoys as a safe haven for refugees. It is an honour that hard work and dedication have won.

We steadfastly maintain our commitment not only to immigrants but to refugees. At least 17,000 refugees will enter Canada by the end of this year. Obviously, the attraction of Canada has led some people to attempt to bypass regular immigration channels. This worsening situation has prompted the Government to introduce deterrent measures to prevent abuse now.

We want to ensure that there is time for a full and reasoned debate of Bill C-55 to chart the path for refugee determination for some years to come. This Bill is designed to address immediate and difficult circumstances to stop the most flagrant abuses. Bill C-55 seeks to address long-term issues which are facing us. The Government is faced with a difficult situation. Responsible action is needed now and will be needed again in order to pass Bill C-55.

The task before us is one which transcends partisanship. It concerns fundamental issues of fairness, justice, and the integrity of our laws. As such it is a task which deserves not only the attention of all Hon. Members, it demands action. It demands our collective resolve and determination to deal expeditiously with these deterrent and detention measures.

I urge all Hon. Members to accept this challenge, and in so doing to take a major step toward ensuring that Canada will have a refugee determination system that is truly effective, responsive and just.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway (Mr. Waddell).

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) made a strong case for the possibility that caring Canadians who are trying to help legitimate refugees could be charged and prosecuted under this Act. Is the Government prepared to look at that clause and to accept the appropriate amendment?

Mr. Weiner: I indicated that I appreciated many of the thoughtful remarks of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). I have not had a chance to study in great detail what he has asked, or what he is offering. Certainly, I accept and welcome the contribution from him and other Members of Parliament. That is what this process is all about. Nothing has been cast in stone. We are certainly most willing and interested. There is an urgency to the situation. We must send out a message that we will be passing this Bill as quickly as possible. This Bill is to deter, detain, and deport in certain instances, and I would be very pleased to be able to observe and bring it forward in the manner that is prescribed.

Mr. Caccia: It may help the Minister if I brought to his attention the point that has been raised, namely, that the Minister proposes in Section 95.1 to imprison a Canadian, a group, an organization, or a group within a church that engages in helping prospective refugees who may be without documents, and who may want to come into Canada. I am referring specifically to Section 95.1.

Would the Minister be more explicit and indicate to us whether he will accept an amendment that will take into account the number of organizations, churches, and individuals who seek, in the cause of helping potential refugees, a very legitimate activity under the Canadian system?

Mr. Weiner: For almost 10 years there has been a section in the Immigration Act, and I wish to quote Section 95(m). It states that the present Act includes the following offence:

> Every person who (m) knowingly induces, aids or abets or attempts to induce, aid or abet any person to contravene any provision of this Act or the regulations, is guilty of an offence and is liable

The provision was always there, but obviously this was not intended to affect church people and non-governmental organization workers, and we share with them their dedicated interest to help real refugees. What we are attempting to do by the specifics of this provision is to get at the organizers of clandestine movements, those that deal with the mass marketing of human misery. Those are the people we want to put out of business.

The specifics are such that we have taken three definitions from the original Act. We have combined them here. What there is in the specific definitions, 95.1 and 95.2 was already covered by the generalities of 95(m). In the past 10 years we have not prosecuted a single person who was a member of a church or non-governmental organization for his or her legitimate activity. But if it is illegitimate activity, and if they are contravening the Act and mass marketing this type of misery, obviously they too should pay the price.

Mr. McDermid: This afternoon we heard speeches from the Opposition which stated that the new laws proposed in both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 were destroying the credibility of our immigration system. I wish to ask the Minister if he feels that this is true. Does he agree that the abuses which were increasing in alarming numbers over the last number of years were causing the credibility gap with our very generous and fair immigration system, and a very serious backlash was starting to develop here that could destroy what we have built up over the last number of years?

Mr. Weiner: In 1987 we will be welcoming 125,000 immigrants and refugees to Canada. These are people who will meet the criteria either under our independent immigrant class, business investors and entrepreneurs which are a small part of the program, family reunification, and 20,000 refugees and humanitarian cases.

When people who do not meet the criteria come anyway as they have been doing in increasing numbers, there have been over 16,000 this year, we know that over 90 per cent of them are non-legitimate refugees. They are people who should be applying in other streams. They should be applying as immigrants. This causes a frustration in communities with people who have been waiting to sponsor their relatives. I said that I understood that frustration and I understood why they are having difficulty waiting. The trouble it is causing in the community is that it is leading to a feeling that maybe accepting immigrants and refugees is not what we should be doing. I look out and say that there has to be a positive benefit to this. The positive benefit is to put your house in order, stop that abuse, stop illegal aliens. We say no to illegal aliens, and yes to real refugees.

At the same time let us give ourselves the opportunity to focus on the enormous contribution that immigrants and refugees make to this society. In 1986 alone, the 100,000 people who came here contributed over $2.25 billion to the economic development of this country. That is a gigantic contribution. All of them continue to make that contribution. They are not the ones who are out of work. They are the ones who are creating jobs, and by their purchases of goods and services they are helping to advance this society to allow us to continue to grow. I say that by being firm and fair and by creating this type of an environment, we can be assured that this hospitable environment—after I have cleared up the policy matter, created a better understanding of what refugees and immigrants are, and stopped illegal aliens—will allow a much broader growth of the immigration program, and will allow us to be more generous to real refugees. We are making a tremendous commitment to refugees. On a per capita basis, Canada does more for the real refugees of the world than any other country.

Mr. de Corneille: My question is directed to the Minister. Yesterday I received a telegram from within my riding from the Redemptionist Fathers. They were expressing understandable concern about the rather Draconian tone of the present Bill C-84. It seems to many that the Bill has already caused a lot of concern among groups. I know that the Minister would not wish to encourage concern if there is a way to deal with the matter. In trying to make Canadians feel that the Government at last is coming to grips with a subject on which it has perhaps delayed too long, perhaps it is now trying to come up with something that is so Draconian and so severe that it will satisfy everyone's concerns. That is not a very healthy way to proceed. I wonder whether the Minister is prepared to do something about Sections 95.1 and 95.2.

In terms of not only religious communities but all those concerned about fairness, as I think are all Canadians, what is the Minister doing to assure Canadians that steps will not be taken or laws will not be passed that can implicate people who are working for refugees in a positive way in a Bill which is supposed to be trying to deal with only those who are genuinely exploiting the refugee situation?

Mr. Weiner: Mr. Speaker, I hope everybody is clearly getting the message that we abhor the trafficking in human flesh. That process must stop. Very clearly our message of deterrence is being well received.

Perhaps the transportation companies will get the same message—$5,000 for every undocumented arrival. We want them to collect documents and we will authorize them to do it. We want to ensure that the people they bring here will be available to us in a way that we can get an understanding of where they come from and who they are.

We are not meaning to affect any individual who has dedicated his life and work to the real refugees of the world. However, we are going to stop this organized movement of clandestine groups who want to abuse us and take us for patsies. Canadians have said "no more", and we are speaking out loudly and clearly. Saying "no" to illegal aliens will still give us the right to say "yes" to real refugees and to do well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments has now terminated.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, thank you very much for recognizing me and for giving me the opportunity to follow the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) who, from the comments he has been making in the last 30 minutes, is obviously suffering from an acute case of schizophrenia.

On the one hand he says that Canadians are proud of the traditions and accomplishments in making this an open, tolerant, and generous country. Then he bangs his fist on the desk and says, "By God, we are going to stop all this kind of nonsense from coming forth", and begins waving the xenophobic flags and saying that we will not tolerate any more flagrant violations of the system.

Some Hon. Members: Right on!

Mr. Weiner: Exactly.

Mr. Rossi: Mr. Speaker, why don't you call them to order over there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It has been a great debate this afternoon on this particular Bill. We still have about seven minutes remaining. I hope courtesy would be extended to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy: I think we should pose some questions to that Minister and his boss, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). If they truly believe that Canada has established leadership in this issue, why is it that they have introduced legislation which clearly contravenes all the international obligations we have signed since 1969? Why have they introduced legislation which caused the United Nations High Commission on Refugees to take the unprecedented step of sending an aide-mémoire to the Government saying, "What you are doing is wrong"?

Mr. Weiner: Did you see it and what it says?

Mr. Axworthy: Yes. That is exactly what it says. I have it right here.

Why is it that the United Nations High Commission said on the matter of transportation that to put the responsibility of determining who is a refugee on a private commercial airline which is untrained, as opposed to recognizing the responsibility of a country to determine the fundamental issue of who should be a member of its community, is against the convention on refugees? That is, again, from international authorities.

We could cite statement after statement, evidence after evidence, to show that the Government is flagrantly transgressing the commitment of our country to the international community. It is deliberately going against the steps we have taken as a country to support an international refugee system which tries to deal with one of the world's most serious and desperate problems.

There is no question that this is a problem which should occupy and demand the intelligence and response of all Canadians. We are a country which knows what it might be like to be homeless. Many of us come from families who were kicked out of their own countries. Many of our families fled from persecution, famine, and Governments which treated them in a tyrannical manner.

Put yourself in the following position, Mr. Speaker. We in the House can speak confidently, but think of yourself, your wife, and your family if you did not belong anywhere, if you had no rights anywhere, if you were kicked around from country to country.

I have met those kinds of people in the refugee camps of the world. I have talked with them. I know the desperation one can see in their eyes. It is no wonder they try to get here.

We have heard people talk about queue-jumpers and illegal aliens as if they were somehow criminally sponsored. They are people looking for a home, a place to belong, where they have some roots and some rights.

This country, to its credit and up to the last year, has led the world in trying to ensure that there was a fair system to deal with that problem. We undertook international negotiations beginning in 1983 with the Americans, the Europeans, and the Asians to try to find a way in which to share the burden. At that time we saw the beginning of Berlin walls for refugees around the world, the beginning of restrictive measures. We said to the international community: "This must stop. We must find a way of sharing the responsibility and a way of organizing ourselves as an international community to deal with this kind of problem". By the way, the present Government no longer follows that initiative. In fact it was dropped as part of its foreign policy agenda.

When they say, "Why didn't we find a solution", I say, "Why didn't the Minister and his predecessor follow that initiative to try to get international co-operation and fight against restrictive measures rather than go the opposite way and become a follower, following the worst examples rather than setting the best example."

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: He says, "We appeal to find some solution to the problem in Canada". These solutions have been sitting on desks of the the Minister and his predecessor for over two years. The Plaut Commission, commissioned by the previous Government, was put forward as a way of clearly responding to a reform of the refugee determination system. It was then examined by a Commons committee with a majority of Conservative Members who came up with a unanimous report, which the Government ignored, as it ignored the Plaut Commission.

As if that were not enough, the former Chairman, the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), called a meeting last December of NGOs, Amnesty International, UNHCR, and officials of the Department, and came up with a consensus decision.

Do we not hear from the Government all the time, "Let's find a consensus agreement, let's find a way of doing things that is commonly shared"? They had an arrangement to which the churches, refugee organizations, the UN, and Amnesty International agreed. Only one group did not agree; the Minister and his officials did not agree. They were the only ones who stood against that consensus. They were the only ones who stood against the kind of solution which enjoys the total approbation of all interested parties in this country.

What was the problem? Why is it that only they are in step? Why is it that only they have the divine ordinance to tell who is a real refugee?

It is heresy for a Minister of Immigration to stand in the House and say, "I know who is a legitimate refugee, and we are going to keep the bad ones out". We have established in this country an independent process, a process immune from that kind of political influence, to ensure that refugees would have a fair, impartial, and independent hearing. Now we have Ministers of Immigration who are saying that they want to take it back unto their fold. They want to decide who are refugees. They want to decide whether it is the colour of their skin or their hair or their religion which determines whether they are bona fide refugees. They are corrupting that system, and they are going to hear more from me tomorrow morning on that. That is what they are engaged in—corruption of the system, and they know it.

One of the real responsibilities of the Minister of Immigration, rather than inflaming public opinion and rather than generating the kind of response we have seen, is to try to educate and to make Canadians understand the problems they face. It is a sensitive, delicate responsibility. It is a responsibility which has been kicked in the teeth by the present Minister of Employment and Immigration and his assistant. They do not recognize the responsibility to ensure that there is a balance between the system of proper recognition of civil liberties of Canadians and of refugees and making sure that the system works efficiently.

You will hear more about that tomorrow morning, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry will have 12 minutes remaining in his speech, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

PETITIONS

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's response to Petition No. 332-2601.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions signed by residents of Canada in which they express their concern about the Government's Bill C-55. The petitioners believe that it threatens legitimate refugees. They call upon Parliament to ensure that the Government and Parliament withdraw Bill C-55, and substitute legislation which embodies the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims before a refugee board which is independent of the Immigration Commission. The petitioners feel there should be universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

CANADA POST—OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF DIRECT MAIL UNIT

Mr. Ernie Epp (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition from residents of Thunder Bay. In the petition they protest the federal Government's proposal to close the direct mail unit of the Canada Employment Centre in Thunder Bay because it will result in deterioration of service at the centre at the expense of the residents of northwestern Ontario. The proposed decision will result in clients throughout northwestern Ontario having to mail their cards directly to Belleville which will result in a delay in payment of unemployment insurance benefits. All of this is as a result of the removal of the computer centre in Thunder Bay, and the courier service from Belleville.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to instruct the Government to make improved service the highest priority of the Canada Employment Centre, and to instruct the Government to abandon this decision to remove the input of unemployment insurance report cards in the Thunder Bay Canada Employment Centre.

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty to present a petition certified by the Clerk of Petitions from a number of residents of the riding of Spadina, and the City of Toronto.

• (1110)

In this petition they point out that Bill C-55 threatens Canada's traditional commitment to assisting refugees and sets out measures designed to keep most refugee claimants out of the country, as opposed to ensuring that genuine refugee claimants are given protection.

A number of other considerations are raised in the "whereases", but the petition at the end is that Parliament and Government ensure that Bill C-55 is withdrawn and that the Department and Government substitute therefor legislation embodying the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of claims of refugee claimants before a refugee board independent of the Immigration Commission, universal access to such hearings for every applicant in Canada, and the right to appeal on the basis of fact.

In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

OPPOSITION TO ADDITIONAL TAXES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table five petitions bearing the signatures of a number of my constituents who, this summer, were visiting the Byward Market. They are to the effect that the Federal Government has since September 1984 imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new increases on existing taxes, including some on medical and dental supplies, candies, sweets and soft drinks.

That the Federal Government, in its White Paper on tax reform, is considering the possibility of imposing on Canadian taxpayers a generalized sales tax on goods and services, including food, that food represents a vital element in their daily lives and that this sales tax would heavily penalize various categories of taxpayers, including the senior citizens, the families, the unemployed, the low and middle income taxpayers, the young, etc.

Wherefor, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to turn down any legislation the effect of which would be to impose a sales tax on foodstuffs.

Humbly submitted, Mr. Speaker, by some 100 Ottawa—Vanier taxpayers.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following question will be answered today: No. 147.

[Text]

REACTION TO BILLS C-204 AND C-51

Question No. 147—Ms. McDonald:

Since their introduction, did the Government receive any letters in relation to Bill C-204, Non-smokers' Health Act and Bill C-51, Tobacco Products Control Act and, if so, in each case, how many were (a) in support (b) in opposition?

Bill C-204, Non-Smokers' Health Act. (a) 282, (b) 22.

Bill C-51, Tobacco Products Control Act. (a) 499, (b) 1,087.

The Department of Finance has recorded the receipt of 17 letters relating to Bills C-51 and C-204. Of these, only seven named C-51 and C-204 to by name or number. Twelve writers were against the Bill and five were in favour although two of the five felt the proposals were not strong enough.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary has been answered.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 149 could be made an Order for Return, the Return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 149 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CONTRACTS WITH ADVERTISING FIRMS

Question No. 149—Mr. Boudria:

1. Since September 4, 1984, did (a) Continental Public Relations (b) Foster Advertising (c) Golin Harris (d) Continental Golin Harris (e) Advance Planning Company (f) Dalton Camp (g) Camp and Associates receive any money from the Government and, if so, in each case (i) in what amount (ii) were contracts involved and, if so, for each contract, what was the nature and the amount?

2. Were such contracts put to public tender and (a) if so, which ones (b) if not, for what reason?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House resumed from Wednesday, August 12, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before recognizing the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) on a point of order, I should like to indicate that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) has 12 minutes remaining in his speech, with provision for ten minutes of questions or comments.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before we resume listening to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), and with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader in the House, I want simply to clarify where we have arrived at in the House in terms of the negotiations which have taken place over the last two days between the various Parties, the various House Leaders.

I want to make clear just what is the agreement to which we have come. My understanding as of this morning is that there has been agreement that we will limit debate at second reading to enable the Bill before us, Bill C-84, to go to committee tomorrow; that that debate will take place for the rest of today as a regular day and into tomorrow, if necessary; and that then it will be referred to committee—in other words, that debate at second reading will terminate.

This by no means indicates our support; quite the contrary. We are concerned about its major flaws, and we are anxious that it gets into committee.

Since the two opposition Parties have agreed to enable this piece of legislation to go to the legislative committee tomorrow, at committee stage it will receive full and complete hearings, with expert witnesses appearing before the committee to ensure complete and full examination.

I simply want to make that clear because there has been some confusion. When I left last night we had an understanding, and it has been changed this morning.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before recognizing the Parliamentary Secretary, let me indicate that I know this is Thursday and that there should be some sort of government business later, after Question Period today, to discuss what will happen as far as the House is concerned.

Mr. Riis: No, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not think this exchange should be taking place right now on the floor of the House, but I will recognize the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. Gauthier: Equal time.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the House that there were the normal discussions between House Leaders in an effort to come to an agreement but, as I advised my friend at ten o'clock this morning in the corridor outside, there was no agreement.

Mr. Riis: I rise on a point of order for clarification. Since we have now agreed, as of this morning, to go back to the normal procedure, does that mean that we will have Private Members Business at the end of today?

Mr. Lewis: Obviously, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated to my friend at ten o'clock this morning, we were unable to come to an agreement and that meant that a normal day would ensue.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, as is customary, there are ongoing discussions about the organization of the business of the House. We had an exchange of views about how long the debate on second reading of Bill C-84 would go.

It may well be—it is possible—that the debate will come to a conclusion tomorrow, so that a vote can be taken, a vote in which the Liberal Party will state its opposition to Bill C-84 on second reading.

Certainly at this stage I am unable to confirm any agreement and, therefore, I presume we are applying the normal rules provided by the Standing Orders, and I would be happy to have you, Sir, enable the debate to continue.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, in my remarks yesterday I was pointing out to the House that the actions taken by the Government on this Bill and on Bill C-55 were clear contradictions to our agreements under United Nations covenants, that they trespassed upon four decades of important evolutionary work in developing an effective system of refugee determination internationally, and that it would lead to chaos in the courts as they are challenged on a whole series of infractions against the civil liberties of Canadians. In other words, this is bad legislation.

The only justification we have heard from the other side is that this is what Canadians want. They say that Canadians are outraged and that this is what public opinion demands. I point out, certainly from my soundings in my riding and in other parts of Manitoba and the West which I visited this summer, that if the primary concern of Members on the government side were to respond to public opinion, the most important thing they could do is to get rid of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). Unquestionably that is the number one preoccupation of people in my riding. Certainly public opinion says, let's get rid of the Prime Minister. However, I have seen no interest by Tory Members to respond to the overwhelming, unquestionable demand by the public to get rid of the existing office holder.

On a more serious matter, I want to point out a very important historical lesson, that we have a serious scar on the question of immigration in Canada which occurred in the late 1930s and the early 1940s, when we denied the access of Jews fleeing Nazi Germany to come to this country in any substantial numbers.

As Irving Abella has pointed out in his book, that was also a demand of the Canadian public at that time. That was also the overwhelming public reaction, at which time Frederick Charles Blair, who was running the Immigration Department, built upon that public demand to demand certificates for entry. That is not far different from what the Government today is demanding.

Would we want to repeat that terrible, horrible incident in our history? No, I think Canadians have tried to correct it. We have worked since then to try to establish the alternative position. This is why it has been so important for successive Governments, Liberal and Conservative, in dealing with refugee and immigration matters, to ensure that they did not set out to create hysteria. This is why they did not respond to those kinds of demands and attempted to educate and to be interlocutors to shape those reasons, and to say that there is not a problem.

I hear the Prime Minister, going across Canada, saying that because 176 Sikhs arrived there is a wave of illegal immigration taking place. Those kinds of wild statements are being made. Let me point out that in terms of the level of spontaneous movements of people, this represents only 5 per cent of all refugees. Canada, the United States, Germany and Great Britain, the industrialized countries, only accept 5 per cent of all the refugees in the world. That is hardly a vast wave.

There is a problem and we know that. As the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) said yesterday, we have been asking for action for the past two and a half years. There has been the Plaut Commission and the parliamentary committee report. There were clear recommendations for dealing with the matter but the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and his Department refused to listen to those recommendations. They rejected them.

This is a gang that cannot shoot straight. This is the same group that brought us the Forget Commission. This is the same group that brought us the disastrous job programs that are destroying community colleges across Canada. It is the same group that brought us the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, changes that penalized people on retirement. These are the same people who time after time have shown an incapacity to come up with sound and rational responses to problems.

I say to Tory Members, let us find good solutions. Let us deal with the problem in a realistic, honest, rational and constructive way. However, we will not find that contained in many elements of this legislation and there is one reason for that.

The thesis that is being put forward is that we want to control the flow of refugees outside our borders, beyond the shores of Canada. That contradicts our fundamental responsibilities and obligations under the United Nations Convention which says that there must be universal access and that people have a right to apply for political asylum when they arrive at the borders of a country. That is a clear commitment, but in Bills C-55 and C-84 that commitment is being denied.

The pre-screening provision in Bill C-55 will reject people before they even have a chance. It will send them back into so-called safe countries. However, a safe country for El Salvadorans is not the United States where only 4 per cent of all refugee applications made by Central Americans are accepted while 40 per cent or 50 per cent of eastern European applications are accepted. That is a political decision that has been made in the United States, but I would ask the Minister of Immigration if he will say that the United States is not a safe country. Of course he will not, but we know full well that those who come from Guatemala or El Salvador who are sent back to that so-called safe country will be returned to Guatemala or El Salvador and will be persecuted by the death squads.

The refugee community and the churches recognize that we are breaking faith with our international obligations. However, it is not a black and white issue. It is not a matter of accepting Bills C-84 and C-55 or nothing. There are a wealth of recommendations before us that have been provided through the careful analysis of Commons committees, Royal Commissions and experts in the field. There have been agreements and consensus. It is up to government Members to tell the Minister of Immigration that he has had bad advice, that he has received the wrong advice on how to deal with the problem.

I can say on behalf of this Party, as did our spokesman from York West and our Leader yesterday, that we will work in Parliament to find solutions. We are prepared to co-operate in finding effective, honourable solutions to this problem, but not the kind of solutions that are contained in this Bill. Those are the wrong kind of solutions. If the interest of Members of Parliament on all sides of the House is to find solutions, let us find ones on which we can agree. Let us not become servants to bad policy, bad advice and bad legislation.

What would be required? We already know that the Bill contains serious threats to the civil liberties of Canadians by imposing penalties and fines on church organizations, humanitarian groups and refugee organizations that try to help refugees. The Minister himself in the statement we saw on television concedes that there may be some confusion.

The Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) said that he proposed an amendment, but I do not think it goes far enough. I think we must add to that a clear distinction between those who are preying upon people for profit and using smuggling as a means and those who are acting for humanitarian reasons. If we want to bang the smugglers who are doing it for profit, then let us say that and let us bring in a Bill that says that. We will support that—

Mr. Horner: That's what it says.

Mr. Axworthy: It does not say that. The Bill now reads that all those who work toward helping refugees come to this border are threatened with penalties. That includes people in every single congregation across Canada who are working to bring Salvadorans to the border. I helped set up that church network. In 1983, we offered to bring to Canada El Salvadorans who were threatened with deportation in the United States so that they would have sanctuary and asylum. We received the co-operation in that initiative of the network of churches across Canada. This Bill would eliminate that possibility. Do we want to do that? No, we do not, so we have to change the Bill.

The Bill also contains a fundamental transgression against the rules set forward by the United Nations designed to ensure that people have proper hearings. We do not argue with the right of a Government to detain and examine people for security reasons, but not without a hearing, without any opportunity to present a case, without the right to have witnesses.

If someone arrives at this border without documents after having escaped persecution in a country that has an authoritarian Government with secret police and finds that there is a report from some international police organization indicating that he is a terrorist threat, then he should have a right to have a hearing. As I said before, that provision would put Nelson Mandela in the position of being rejected by Canada. We should change the legislation to ensure that these people may bring evidence before the adjudicator to make their cases.

This legislation has also transgressed our international obligations by saying that we will send people back to their countries of origin, this insidious practice of refoulement. We can change that as well. It is possible to change that and to rewrite the legislation.

On the issue of transportation companies confiscating passports, there is only one country in the world of which I know that requires that right now and that is the Soviet Union. That is the only country that requires passports to be taken from people who arrive on planes or ships. Are we going to associate ourselves with that practice in this legislation? Of course not, and that is why we need some changes. We should not turn over to a commercial airline the responsibility of determining whether or not a person is a refugee. That is the fundamental right of a sovereign country, a right which we are now passing on.

I could go on to show all the inequities and stupidities in this legislation, but that is not to say that we should not have a means of responding to them. Let us do so in the Canadian tradition. Let us respond with leadership. Let us not become regressive, reactionary or stupid. Let us recognize that there is a serious refugee problem and that we must provide leadership. Canada has provided that leadership in the past.

The single most important thing Canada could do is to encourage the Government and successive Governments to undertake, as the highest priority of our foreign policy, international initiatives designed to come to grips with the refugee situation, to find ways of co-ordinating the actions of countries, to share the burden, to respond to those 15 million homeless people out there, to build up our traditions of competence, goodwill and tolerance internationally, traditions for which we have been recognized by every international agency up until now. Let us build upon that and provide that international leadership.

Canadians are always asking what we should do to show leadership in the world. Canada is not a big nuclear power with rockets and missiles. In coming to grips with the fundamental tragedy of refugees around the world, Canada has an opportunity to play a leadership role but we are giving up on it. We are throwing it away by passing legislation like the legislation we have before us today.

In conclusion, I would say that we believe that there are solutions to abuses, but not the solutions that are contained in this legislation. If the Government is really interested in genuine solutions then why is it not interested in revising this legislation? Let us go back to consider the recommendations of the Commons committee. Let us bring forward legislation that is decent, honourable and fair and which will deal with abuse at the same time. Let us then build upon that to provide international leadership, to show the rest of the world that Canadians can deal with the refugee issue, but in a way which shows compassion, tolerance and generosity.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, one wonders if perhaps the Hon. Member is not preaching for a call.

Does the Hon. Member agree with Mr. Sid Stevens, Director of Emergency Services for the Sun Youth Organization, who hailed the Bill as "a victory for the genuine refugee"? Mr. Stevens also said: "We will make sure the refugees who come here are the real ones". I should point out that Mr. Stevens, whose group has provided emergency aid to claimants, also said: "Throughout the whole world Canada was known as a soft touch . . . The genuine refugee who waits in line and has a good claim will benefit in the long run". Does the Hon. Member agree with those comments?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to provide quotes then I refer him to statements made by Amnesty International, the Canadian Coalition of Churches, the Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Central Committee of the Mennonite Church—any number of organizations which have said that this legislation is a travesty.

The Hon. Member reflects the fact that he does not understand the type of refugee determination system that we have accepted in Canada, one which we have honoured and built upon. It is the right of any person to make claim. It is then the right of the host country to determine how it will process that claim. Through Supreme Court decisions, and others, we have said that there must be the right to counsel, the right to present evidence at a hearing, that there should be an independent adjudication of the problem and that there should be an appeal process. In effect, that is what the Commons committee recommended. It is something that we endorse. We are prepared to accept it. It means that we can deal with the situation fairly.

If the Hon. Member is worried about soft touches, then his Government should introduce the type of recommendations that were put forward by the committee on which his own Members constitute a majority.

The legislation drafted by this Department does not fulfil the requirements that are in place under the convention dealing with refugees, which are universal access and the right to make a claim. This legislation pre-screens claimants. It predetermines who is a genuine refugee before a chance is even given to make a case.

We are saying that if the Government is seriously interested in that problem then we will co-operate. But if in fact what it is trying to say is that it wants to transgress those international obligations, transgress Supreme Court decisions and the Charter of Rights, then we are not in agreement. I do not care who the Hon. Member quotes. The fact of the matter is that as a Minister of Immigration for three and one-half years I think

I know an awful lot more about the matter than does Mr. Stevens.

Mr. St. Germain: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) pointed out this morning that our most important initiative is to deal with the world refugee situation. I am sure that every Member in the House would agree with that initiative. I think it is a world responsibility, and Canada has a lead role to play, as our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has shown. He has shown leadership in terms of dealing with humanitarian issues. He has gone so far as to take a position that differs from some of the major leaders of the western world. I think that Canadians realize that the leadership is here.

As a Party, the Liberals have never listened to Canadians. Again today I see that the Hon. Member refuses to listen to Canadians. Canadians are saying to us in our offices across the country that they want the illegal refugee situation brought under control. The legislation brought forward by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) clearly enunciates a position that would bring the situation under control.

I cannot believe what I have heard this morning from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry. He is a Liberal, a Liberal who has never listened to Canadians and who is proving it again today here in the House of Commons. That is totally disgusting.

The Hon. Member spoke of humanitarian issues and of the high quality of living that we have in Canada. That is correct. He says that we should be prepared to share the good that we have here in Canada. I am prepared to share, as is every Member in the House. We are prepared to be used but not to be abused.

When the hon. gentleman was the Minister of Employment and Immigration it is my understanding that the number of immigrants was reduced from 121,166 in 1982 to 89,177 in 1983. Can the Hon. Member tell me where there is any consistency in those figures? I would like him to explain to the House the situation when he was Minister of Immigration. I am referring here to bona fide immigrants, people who would contribute to the growth of the country and to the mosaic and the greatness of our land. As Minister he cut the number of immigrants back, and he now takes the position he presented to us this morning. Can the Hon. Member please explain why his actions were such and why he took such a position?

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I would be very glad to enlighten the hon. gentleman, as difficult a task as that may be. First, I would like to deal with the question of listening to Canadians. If the Hon. Member really wanted to listen to Canadians the first thing he would do is get rid of his Leader. That is what Canadians really want. It is what every public opinion poll shows. If he really wants to do his job then let us see him take the type of initiative that Canadians are demanding, that is, put in place a Prime Minister who can lead Canada.

The fact of the matter is that last December, and the Hon. Member may not know about this, all those Canadians who are vitally interested in this matter, including virtually every religious organization in the country—Catholics, Jews, Protestants, Baha'is and other groups—came together, along with all the humanitarian organizations, members of the Opposition and members of the Hon. Member's own Party, and agreed upon a solution to the problem. There was an agreement. The only people who rejected it were the Minister of Immigration and the people in his Department. Who was listening to Canadians then? Who was really listening to the consensus at that point? We would not be here this summer if that agreement had been listened to. The Minister rejected the solutions for the reasons I have set out. He and his Department are trying to subvert and undermine the commitments we have made under the United Nations' Convention on Refugees. That is what they are trying to do.

If the Hon. Member wants an answer with respect to the question why we changed, then I will tell him one thing we did not change. We brought in a great many more refugees. We brought in 100,000 refugees from Indo-China. We brought in tens of thousands of Poles during the beginnings of the Polish Solidarity movement. We brought in the Haitians and the Chileans—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The day is very young; we still have most of the day ahead of us. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry has the floor.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, I was just getting warmed up. The fact of the matter is that we did not limit our commitment to those refugees. We brought in thousands of them. The reason the numbers were cut back was because members of his own caucus, along with members of the trade unions, were demanding in a period of recession that we provide restrictions on the independent class—not the family class. In fact family class levels stayed the same. But we said at that point in time, when the unemployment rate was 12 per cent, that immigrants applying for jobs would be subject to rules which stated that they could not displace Canadians if there was a Canadian available for that job. At a time when there was a high labour surplus of course the numbers were cut back. But the situation has not changed that much under the Government of the Hon. Member.

Where are the levels now—90,000? Members opposite keep saying that the unemployment rate is down by 5 per cent. Of course the levels should go up.

At the same time, we introduced a proper examination of how we could improve the assisted relative class. We introduced improvements to the family reunification class and we made substantial improvements in the area of refugee determination and acceptance. These are actions which are now being turned back by the Government.

I can tell the Hon. Member that I am proud of the record of the Liberals in dealing with immigration and refugees. We have helped lead the world and we have been given international recognition. What we are objecting to now is the fact that we have a Government which is trying to turn back the clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg) on debate.

• (1140)

Mr. Ted Schellenberg (Nanaimo—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and proud to speak on Bill C-84 this morning. I listened with great interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). They contained a lot of rhetoric and some information. I recall quite clearly that the Government of which he was the Minister of Employment and Immigration in the early 1980s, as this problem began to grow and grow to the point where it is now, was always saying we have to do something about this. We checked Hansard which indicates that it was going to do something, it should do something, it might do something. Eventually a committee was struck. Yet this Government is doing something about it. This Government has brought forward Bill C-84 and I am prepared to go to the electorate on that tomorrow. We have the Canadian people behind us. He talked about not listening to the Canadian people. If he wants to go to the people tomorrow and say, we are not going to listen to you when we are in office, we are going to listen to the special interest groups, then let us go to the people tomorrow on this issue.

Mr. Axworthy: Call the election today; let's go.

Mr. Schellenberg: On this issue.

Most Canadians are the children or grandchildren of immigrants. Judging by the mail I have been receiving most Canadians have a pretty reasoned point of view on this issue. They want an open door policy on refugee determination, not a back door policy. They want to close the back door. They say the baseball game is over. That is what they are telling me, at least. Strike one was the arrival of the Tamils last summer; strike two was the arrival on the shores of Nova Scotia this summer of the East Indians; and strike three is Bill C-84, and they are out. The baseball game is over as far as refugee determination is concerned.

It never ceases to amaze me that some politicians in this Chamber go on and on about how they represent ordinary Canadians, yet when those ordinary Canadians speak well and with one voice on an issue they then become part of the mob. I do not represent ordinary Canadians in Nanaimo—Alberni. I represent extraordinary Canadians and they want this Bill through right now. The Bill should be referred to committee and, quite frankly, I am pleased to hear the comments of the NDP House Leader that they are prepared to move this Bill to committee tomorrow. That is very encouraging to hear, because we are legislators, not hoisters.

I was in this House on May 15 or May 16 when Bill C-55, this Bill's predecessor, was brought forward. The NDP and Liberals ganged up and decided to hoist. The job of Government is to propose and that of the Opposition to oppose. These guys simply hoist. They want to hoist this, hoist that, and hoist everything but the Canadian flag. The Canadian flag symbolizes the value of Canadian citizenship and the value of the rights we enjoy. They are not to be handed out to simply anyone who arrives on our shores. That is what this Bill will address.

Ironically enough, if you check the record, the Liberals and NDP agree with the thrust of this Bill. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), upon arrival of that boat this summer, said:

> That boat might well have been apprehended and could have been turned back because this is not a legitimate refugee process. . . . if they came from Europe they were not fleeing a situation where they were facing prosecution or imprisonment or death.

That is a sensible position. That is not what he was saying in the House the other day, but it was a sensible position when this boat arrived. However, his own communications director, Raymond Heard, said shortly after:

> It was very windy that day. Furthermore, Mr. Turner was walking down the street towards his car.

I guess that explains why he has changed his position. Yet the Liberal Party immigration critic, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), also seems to agree with our approach and the general thrust of Bill C-84. Last summer, when the Tamils arrived, he said:

> We have to deal stringently with those "culprits" who are responsible.
> That's the frustration—a lot of Canadians had in terms of people like Captain Bindel, who takes advantage of the system and gets away scot-free.

This summer, with the arrival of the 174 refugees off the coast of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Member for York West said:

> If they enjoyed refugee status in West Germany and they're taking advantage of our country simply to better their lifestyle, then they should not get such protection for a second time.

I think there is more common ground on the thrust of this Bill than opposition Members may wish to admit.

Surprisingly, even the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) believes the law should be improved. In an interview last January on BCTV with Jack Webster the Hon. Member for Oshawa said:

> If there are any refugees off the coast of British Columbia, out in the middle of Lake Ontario, or in the Atlantic Ocean, you're damn right we bring them in and give them shelter.

We also, and we are in the process of doing this, tighten up the law, so that if you find out that these are not bona fide refugees, you kick them out of the country.

What I cannot understand is why politicians who say things like that to the media are so determined to hold up legislation that will improve our refugee determination system. One of my constituents said the other day, Heaven help our country if we ever have to declare war, if our shores are ever invaded. The Liberals and the NDP would demand a six-month hoist of any response to the invasion. We would hate to see that happen.

One of our major concerns is that Canadians hear a great deal of generalities about refugees and not too many specifics. Sometimes it helps to put a face to the story and I would like to try and do that by relating two individual cases. Last week in my riding I met with two refugees and their stories vividly detail the problem we are facing.

The first individual was from a Central American country, his name is Victor. He had been guilty of the heinous crime of being a labour leader. He and his colleagues were rounded up by the Government and taken to the border of a neighbouring Central American country with which there were hostilities. They were asked to strip and put on the uniform of their native country. Then his colleagues were taken off to the border region and shot. Just some more victims of border hostility. Victor saw an opportunity for escape. The camp was visited by a general from another country, there was a great deal of hubbub, and Victor slipped away and climbed aboard a logging truck parked in the compound. He climbed between the logs and hid there for hours fearing for his life. At three o'clock in the morning that truck departed the compound, Victor found his way through Mexico up to Nanaimo, British Columbia, and he is now enjoying the benefits of Canadian citizenship and trying to reunite his family.

Unfortunately there is a darker side to the refugee situation and that is what we are trying to deal with in this legislation. Last week in Port Alberni I met with a woman who filed a deposition with her lawyer, and I have it in my hand. Without naming names, let me try and detail her story. Perhaps this will exemplify for Canadians the problem with our refugee determination system.

She says that from August, 1977, to October, 1980, she lived in the City of Vancouver, British Columbia, with an individual in a common law relationship and had two children. He was ordered deported from Canada in 1980 because he had falsely produced a social insurance card, a driver's licence and a landed immigration certificate from West Germany. During their common law marriage he indicated to her that he was not married. In 1980 she applied for his readmission to Canada. In 1982 he was married to another woman in India after obtaining a divorce from his first wife. She thereupon withdrew her application for his readmission to Canada. On May 9, 1987, he telephoned her from West Germany and threatened to kill her. She is very fearful for her personal safety if the immigration department permits this man's admission to Canada. She has been advised and believes that he is now released on bail in the City of Toronto. This is true. He arrived in Canada with other East Indians claiming refugee status. She says she believes he is not a refugee, he is a danger to her personal safety and, having been deported from Canada, he should not be allowed to continue to reside in our country. She signed the deposition on August 4, 1987, in Port Alberni, British Columbia. The RCMP in that town are now guarding her and she is living in fear for her life.

Those are two specific examples of what is right with our immigration policy and what is wrong.

I would like now to turn to the Bill itself and review just what our Government is proposing. The deterrence and detention Bill, which is its nickname, is meant to dovetail with Bill C-55, the one the hoisters were dealing with earlier this year, to provide immediate protection from abuse. It includes expanded powers to deal with mass inflows of illegal migrants posing as refugees. These will remain with the implementation of Bill C-55.

The legislation also expands the Government's ability to deal with individuals who might pose a threat to our country. Again this will be retained with Bill C-55. The fundamental principles of Bill C-55 will be strengthened by this legislation, Bill C-84. The tough penalties will still be needed once Bill C-55 is enacted.

Out of the 30,000 claims which are expected to be made in 1987 for refugee status in Canada, at least 10,000 will be from people who have arrived in Canada with forged documents or no documents whatsoever. This deterrent and detention Bill gives the Government expanded powers to come to terms with the situation.

Specifically, it empowers the Government to substantially increase penalties against smugglers and their accomplices, including the imposition of a 10-year jail sentence and fines of $.5 million. It will detain people who arrive with no documents until their identities can be established. It will increase and enforce fines and penalties on transportation companies bringing undocumented people to Canada. Transportation companies will pay $5,000 fines for each undocumented passenger they bring to Canada. As well, the Government will seize the vehicles of companies guilty of nonpayment. I remind you, Mr. Speaker, that these companies have responsibilities under the Immigration Act. We want to ensure that we all live up to them.

Finally, Bill C-84 will empower the Government to refuse access to the refugee determination system to those who are known criminals or a security threat. That is something most Canadians will support. Not only will these individuals be detained, they will be removed from Canada.

The world has changed since the 1976 Immigration Act which anchored our commitment to the U.N. Convention on the Status of Refugees. At that time only a relatively small number of people needed protection and our refugee determination system reflected that situation. Canada saw dramatic increases in refugee claims in the early 1980s. A five-fold increase in claims caused long processing delays for legitimate refugees. This was an open invitation for those who wanted to circumvent regular immigration channels. As I mentioned earlier, the previous Government talked about doing something but ended up doing nothing.

In 1985 the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that all refugee claimants had the right to an oral hearing. This placed an extra legal requirement on the overburdened determination system and led to even further abuse, taking advantage of the backlog. Most of this pressure resulted from the flow of economic migrants toward the developed countries. This south-north pull was further aggravated by economic recession in industrialized countries which led to greater tightening of their borders.

Reports indicate there are up to 80 million people who have left their country of origin in search of employment or a better life. Inevitably many of these economic migrants have tried to use the refugee determination system in Canada and elsewhere to sidestep regular immigration channels. The fact that Canada allows refugee claimants to work while their cases are being heard further invites abuse.

These unprecedented and increasing global pressures make Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 of great importance. Clearly, Canada must have the tools to firmly and fairly handle what will continue to be, without doubt, a volatile international climate in the years ahead.

It has been asked whether we are over-reacting. It does amuse me to see the same politicians and editorial writers who were attacking the Government in July for not doing enough, turning around in August and accusing it of doing too much. One of the newspapers in my own riding wrote two editorials in the span of two weeks, both of which I have with me. The headline on the editorial dated July 15 is, "They make us look stupid". A portion of it reads as follows:

> For the time being, the sooner Canada's new immigration legislation is in place, the better we will be prepared to reject people who, quite simply, are jumping the immigration queue and making Canada look stupid on the world scene.

Two weeks later, on August 1, the same newspaper ran an editorial entitled, "Knee-jerking it". It reads in part:

> The illegal arrival of 174 refugee claimants may have caused a furore, but it hardly qualifies as the sort of national or economic emergency with which one normally associates early parliamentary recalls.

So they say, Call back Parliament but don't call back Parliament; Listen to Canadians—no, listen to the special interest groups. We get a lot of confusing signals.

Politicians are normally blamed, but I would like to give another example of how the media is not exactly blameless in this. On August 1, 1987, the day following the terrible tragedy in your own area, Mr. Speaker, in Edmonton, La Presse of Montreal ran the headline, "Un navire de "faux réfugiés" serait en route pour le Canada". Over in the corner is the headline, "Une tornade frappe Edmonton". The issue of the day for La Presse was another boat arriving in Canada.

I, quite frankly, have been a victim of this kind of focus by our media and by some politicians, as have my colleagues. This has become the major issue of the summer for Canadian citizens. What is wrong with responding to their wishes? What is wrong with recalling Parliament and dealing with this problem before it happens again? Most Canadians understand the reasoning for that. Unfortunately, some of the opposition Members do not.

Mr. Waddell: You're desperate to get up in the polls, that's why. Tell the truth.

Mr. Schellenberg: To the extent possible in this volatile climate, Canada must be able to control events instead of being controlled by them. The deterrent legislation, Bills C-84 and C-55, are crucial steps along the road to establishing the control needed to address refugee and immigration issues, both long-term and immediate. Our objective in tabling this deterrent legislation and in tabling Bill C-55 is quite clear. It is to establish a firm yet flexible framework that allows the Government to adjust the intake of refugees and immigrants in accordance with global events and with the social and economic conditions in Canada. The social and economic conditions in Canada have changed over the past decade or two. In accordance with that as well, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-84 will deal with national and international legal stipulations.

It is therefore the responsibility of the Government to be ready to fine-tune existing policy or institute fundamental change if that is appropriate. The Government is ready to accept that responsibility. It is ready to make the difficult policy decisions that come with this territory. They are difficult decisions because refugee and immigration policy is, finally, about peoples' lives. As such, emotions run high and criticism is inevitable. However, we must walk that fine line between tightening up our controls and ensuring that legitimate refugees are still able to enter our borders. That is the kind of legislation that Canadians will support.

People are the ultimate victims of a process which invites abuse and encourages unscrupulous manipulation. Therefore, the Government is doing the responsible thing. It is changing that process. With Bill C-84 and its companion Bill, C-55, we are re-establishing the integrity of our determination system. At the same time we are telling Canadians and genuine refugees alike that fairness, efficiency and due process will once again be the hallmarks of Canadian refugee determination.

We want refugees to know that we have an open-door policy, but that the back door is closed. We do not welcome boatloads of people who arrive by stealth or individuals who bring their murderous hatreds with them. I urge my colleagues in this House to send Bill C-84 to committee so that the will of Canadians will be done. To quote another great Conservative, Mr. Speaker, "give us the tools and we'll do the job".

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg). He described the situation before us now. I believe he called the situation an urgent one, as did his leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

If the issue is urgent now, was it not also urgent last year when a boatload of Tamils came in similar circumstances? If it is urgent this year, why did the Prime Minister wait two or three weeks after the boat arrived before saying that he would recall Parliament and another two weeks before in fact asking the Speaker to recall Parliament? It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that this is not the customary way in which to deal with so-called urgent issues.

I, for one, have no sympathy at all for dishonest people who are using devious means to enter Canada. However, I believe that the abuse of our present system is caused by delays in the determination system and for practically no other reason. Does the Member agree with me on that? In other words, someone who is coming here knows that the determination process will take one, two or more years before we decide whether to keep or return that individual. The fact is that they are already here by the time the case is adjudicated. Is not the real solution to deal with those cases immediately and therefore discourage people from coming in if they know they will be sent back if they do not qualify? It will not be worthwhile for them to come here if they know they will be sent back. Is that not the real way to handle the case?

I want him to comment briefly on two other issues. One concerns the fines for those bringing in refugees. I have no problem with the proposition of levying heavy fines for those who do so for pay and dishonest reasons. However, is it appropriate to attempt to fine individuals and associations? For instance, I was part of Project 4000 that brought in refugees from Southeast Asia. Does that mean that such action today would make me a criminal? I would hope not. I do not believe anyone who acts in such a manner for good reason should be punished in any way. I repeat that I have no sympathy for crooks, but I want his reaction to that situation.

Finally, I want him to deal with the issue of refugees with no papers. I am pleased that the Minister is in the House because I want him to think about this as well. If we create a situation in which people with no papers are sent back, are we not in fact inviting those in authority in some of these repressive regimes to take away credentials from someone because they know they will not be accepted elsewhere without such credentials? I believe that could be a very difficult situation that could cause problems. If other countries followed our example, a regime such as that in El Salvador or Chile could simply ensure that anyone leaving the country does so without papers. They would be up the creek, they would have no choice but to come back because they would not be accepted.

I am not suggesting that the public is not angry at people who abuse the system. I know people are angry, but is the Member sure that we are doing the right thing under the circumstances, particularly in view of my questions?

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, my friend, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), makes three very good points. First, let me deal with the issue of bringing in this legislation a year after the Tamils arrived. Bill C-55 is very complex. It is as thick as the Nanaimo—Alberni telephone book and it took some time to prepare. It was introduced in May and I must ask my colleague why one of his colleagues demanded a hoist of that legislation when it was finally introduced? While I would have preferred its earlier introduction, May is when it was available.

It is quite clear why we are dealing with Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 in August of 1987. The Prime Minister has listened to the good advice of his colleagues, which is the way our party functions. I am not sure about the Hon. Member's party.

The Hon. Member talks about the delay in this legislation and what it will cause with the backlog that now exists. It was their legislation in 1976 that created the backlog we are now facing, with tens of thousands of refugees. That is what many of my constituents do not understand. The Minister was stating a fact when he said that his hands were tied. I could not counsel him to break the law of Canada as it now exists. We counselled him to recall Parliament and change that law.

While I understand the Member's question, he must accept some of the responsibility for the backlog that exists. We did speed up the process quite well with some of the measures we introduced earlier this year, but obviously not quickly enough.

We hear pious questions about why we did not deal with this sooner. How can we do so if the Opposition continues to hoist and delay the legislation that we bring in?

Mrs. Killens: It is your agenda.

Mr. Schellenberg: I am talking about Bill C-55 and a hoist that was demanded by that party.

Mr. Orlikow: First, Mr. Speaker, I want to make it clear that no one in the Opposition and none of the ethnic organizations, the churches or Amnesty International, who have expressed their criticism to these two Bills, have said that nothing needs to be done. They said that these Bills do not achieve what is required and many of their provisions go too far.

In answer to a question by my friend in the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member said that we did not deal with Bill C-55 because they moved a hoist. The truth is that the Bill was introduced in May of this year and was not called for debate until June. Therefore, the fact that there was a hoist motion does not mean anything, because there were just three hours of debate. The Government is in charge of the business of the House. It did not call that Bill except for that one day. It is responsible for the fact that we have not dealt with Bill C-55.

A little more than a year ago, a group of Tamils came to this country by boat. In response to that, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said, "We are not in the business of turning refugees away. We will never, under this Government". He said that the Tamils would be treated fairly and humanely.

One year later we have a very similar situation with the arrival of a boatload of Sikhs. No one approves of people, even legitimate refugees, jumping to the head of the line. There are many thousands of legitimate refugees who have applied in the proper way under the provisions of our laws and regulations and have waited for years. However, the Sikhs did exactly what the Tamils did. What changed in the year? Why did the Prime Minister greet the Tamils with sympathy a year ago and now we have to be tough with the Sikhs? Surely there is no consistency.

The Government reads the polls like everyone else and knows that it is in trouble and knows that people are upset about what has happened, with considerable justification. The Government is jumping on the bandwagon and trying to get support on that basis, not for any reason of principle or humanity.

Mr. Schellenberg: Mr. Speaker, while we are talking about consistency, and I believe I referred to this earlier in my remarks, what happened between January of this year when the Hon. Member's leader was on the Jack Webster program and said, "We have to tighten up the law so that if you could find out that these are not bona fide refugees, you kick them out of the country", and now, in August, 1987? That is an example of inconsistency.

The Hon. Member touched on what was said earlier by my friend, the Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. I also have a concern about the church groups who are legitimately trying to bring refugees into the country and are concerned about Bill C-84 and how they may be affected by some of its measures. I hope to have an opportunity to sit on the legislative committee and that this would be one of the first amendments we can make if the Bill gets to committee, depending on our opposition colleagues. We should ensure that those who traffic in illegal refugees for profit are separated from those who deal with refugees out of conscience. I believe that is one of the first amendments we should bring through.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments have terminated. Debate.

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the last remark of the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni (Mr. Schellenberg). Perhaps he has not had an opportunity to learn that our caucus has sought to have an agreement that there would be substantial committee hearings in order to deal with problems such as the one he mentioned, namely, how this law may unintentionally affect people who are not really opposing the intent of our Immigration Act or our refugee policy. I also hope that the debate will continue in a reasonable course to allow a number of people who are very interested in speaking, but will end reasonably soon so that we can get on with committee work. I have already begun to telephone people who I think may be interested in coming before the committee as witnesses. I trust time will be given to hear those witnesses.

The fact is, part of the reason we have been recalled is to consider Bill C-84. Without going into questions of individuals, parties or governments who did or did not do this or that, I think it is clearly necessary to amend our Immigration Act. I have said so, and my leader has said so, not just since January until now, but for a longer period of time. It is clearly necessary because the system has broken down, and it has broken down partly because of modern transportation conditions. We have many more airplanes flying to and from Canada—they fly both ways—than ever before. We also have disturbances in many parts of the world, particularly in the former colonial countries. As part of the British Commonwealth we cannot claim to be uninterested or uninvolved in what goes on in those former colonial countries.

I have no problem at all with the first and second clause of Bill C-84. The title states that Bill C-84 is an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal code in consequence thereof. I have no problem with that. The second clause states the purposes of the Bill. It states in part that we want to maintain a proper refugee determination process for people who are entitled and we want to control wide-spread organized abuse of that process. We want to deter the smuggling of persons, which not only offends our law but risks the lives of those persons, and we want to respond to security concerns. I have no problem with those objectives, in fact, I would support them. I would hope those objectives would be the basis of our considerations in committee.

My problem is that there are a number of provisions in the Bill that not only fail to meet those objectives but, perhaps unintentionally—I hope unintentionally—would cause some harm, which is not in keeping with the objectives of the Bill. Therefore, I hope the opposition and the Government will be able to work together to make the necessary amendments to this Bill.

The first objective of Bill C-84 as stated in clause 2 is:

> (a) to preserve for persons in genuine need of protection access to the procedures for determining refugee claims;

One of the procedures, established not only by our law but by the United Nations, with which we have signed a treaty, for determining refugee claims is that a person may come from a country wherein he is persecuted to seek asylum in another country. Canadian law has for years reflected that reality and made that one of the avenues by which people may become accepted in Canada as refugees. The other main avenue, of course, although not the only one, is selection from refugee camps. We have also had a policy of selection from prisons of political prisoners. But what is under consideration in Bill C-84 is the selection of people who arrive in Canada.

This is something Canadians support. Thousands and thousands of Canadians this year have worked to help those refugees who have come to Canada to claim refugee status. Even immediately after the Government's restrictive regulations in February there was a rally at Fort Erie where surely they know about the refugees coming across the bridge from Buffalo. It was a rally to welcome and to celebrate, as they put it, the refugees. Three hundred people at that rally had opened their homes to 500 refugees during the two years before that.

The churches, Amnesty International and many Canadians have a very proud record, and that was recognized by the Nansen Medal given to Canada last year. However, Bill C-84 fails to meet this objective. If we read proposed sections 95.1 and 95.2 we find that any person who helps to bring a refugee claimant to Canada would be penalized.

An Hon. Member: Illegally.

Mr. Heap: It does not say illegally, Mr Speaker, 95.1 states:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act—is guilty of an offence—

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Heap: The present law, of course, as the Hon. Minister pointed out yesterday, and as Mr. Girard pointed out on Tuesday, contains a punishment for any one who contravenes any provision of the Act. However, the present Act does not make it illegal for a person to enter Canada without papers provided he does not do that in a way intended to evade the immigration authorities. For instance, he comes across the bridge from Buffalo into Fort Erie to the immigration office in Fort Erie without papers or passport and says, "I am a refugee". That is in no way a violation of Canadian law at the present time. The church person, lawyer or Amnesty representative who may transport him in his car from Buffalo to Fort Erie to the immigration office saying, "I have this person here; I am willing to translate for him; He claims refugee status", has not contravened the provisions of the Act.

When the Minister and Mr. Girard were asked about this point at the press conference on Tuesday, they seemed to miss the question. What Mr. Girard said at one point was, "What we have in Bill C-84 is the same as in the existing Act". He did not explain why, if it is the same as in the existing Act, he wants to amend the existing Act.

The fact is that, as worded here, the Bill creates an offence which does not exist in the present law. It does not say, any person who illegally brings a person in or any person who tries to evade the immigration authorities by doing so commits an offence. Assuming, as does the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni, that that is not the intent of the Government, I hope it can be clarified in the amendments. There is no violation in the present law and I hope there will be no violation in the future law on the part of any person who simply brings someone to the nearest border immigration point saying that he is a refugee without papers, and from there on the immigration law takes its normal course.

The Hon. Minister yesterday reiterated the error which was made on Tuesday at the press conference. I hope he will clarify that matter. Someone on Tuesday said church people will be punished if they try to bring in a refugee in the trunk of their car. I do not remember whether that was the Minister or Mr. Girard. But that is not what the church people are talking about. It is not what the lawyers or Amnesty International are talking about. They are talking about openly bringing a person to the nearest immigration authority in order to proceed according to law. I hope they will not be penalized by the Minister's law for doing that, but that is the only way this law as written could be construed in court.

I also hope the law will be changed in such a way as to indicate that what we are getting at is people who do this clandestinely. That is what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) said in his press statement a couple of weeks ago. I publicly agreed with him and it was so recorded in the press. Hansard was not there to record it, but the Globe and Mail accurately recorded me as agreeing that we have to penalize people who bring immigrants in clandestinely. The word "clandestine" is not in this law. There is no reference to "secrecy" or "evasion". I think that is needed.

We need to identify people who organize the bringing in of people by plane or ship and try to evade immigration authorities, or who try to make what are called "manifestly unfounded claims", claims which clearly do not come anywhere near being legitimate refugee claims. I believe we should have a law which would penalize such organizers. There is presently a law which states that the people who present these unfounded claims should be removed, therefore it is not necessary to do anything further.

A further problem with the wording of this law is that legitimate refugees could very well be denied the hearing required by our Supreme Court decision if, for example, they were identified as "baddies" by the secret police of the country from which they came. This is not hypothetical. There was the case of Chileans who had been accepted in Canada and were residents, but then were examined by the security authorities because of complaints against them. It was found that all the evidence against them was presented by the Pinochet Government. In other words, the Government in the country from which they had become refugees. Therefore, the case against these people in Canada was dropped once it was pointed out that the evidence was far more suspect than they were.

A further problem is that refugee claimants may systematically be detained by an order of a senior immigration officer at a time when they have no counsel to represent them. They may be detained for another 28 days on a Minister's certificate, without any chance to examine the accusations upon which the detention is based. That is a violation of Section 10 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I hope a precedent will not be set for violating it merely in respect of refugees, because if we do that to refugees then Canadians are in danger of losing the benefit of that article of the Charter.

By that wholesale detention, we would also be violating our commitments under the United Nations which state that we should not punish refugee claimants simply for coming without adequate documents. As has been pointed out, most genuine refugees cannot get documents. The ones that do get documents are more likely to be phonies.

The second objective of the law is to control widespread abuse of the procedures for determining refugee claims, particularly in the light of organized incidents involving large-scale introduction of persons into Canada to take advantage of these procedures. In the last two years there have been between 5,000 and 6,000 people brought into Canada who were not bona fide refugee claimants. There is much anger against them, and much anger at the thought that they may be taking the place of bona fide refugees or bona fide immigrants. Certainly, their entry was an abuse of the law. Under that category, the main abusers were approximately 3,500 people from Portugal, approximately 1,000 from Turkey, and approximately 1,000 from Brazil. Perhaps some of those from Turkey and Brazil were refugees. But the people from Portugal who said that they were Jehovah's Witnesses and afraid of being persecuted in Portugal if they were sent home were clearly abusing the law, because not even the Jehovah's Witness Church thinks there is persecution of that church in Portugal.

The amendments in proposed Sections 95.1, 95.2, 95.3, even if they had been in place two years ago, would not have prevented that abuse. For one thing, those sections only deal with people who come without documents. Those people all came with their documents and this Bill would not have stopped them.

Furthermore, this Bill only deals with boat smugglers. That has not been a great source of smuggling into Canada. As was pointed out yesterday, in this century we have had four boats; two boats were turned away, one in 1914 and one in 1939, with the result that some people aboard were killed. Two boats were accepted, one in 1986 and one in 1987, for which I am very happy. Perhaps under the law some of these people are refugees, and perhaps some people are not. We have the means of determining that. But we also read in the paper that some of them from Sri Lanka are hoping to return home. Those people were real refugees coming here for their safety, and they would rather live in their homeland in Sri Lanka if it is a peaceful country.

Unfortunately, in the Section on disembarkation the Bill does something which I am sure is not intentional. The proposed Section states:

> 95.3 Every person who, being the master or a member of a crew of a vehicle used for transportation by sea, disembarks or allows the disembarkation of a person or group of persons at sea for the purpose of inducing, aiding or abetting that person—

In other words, when a captain disembarks the people in lifeboats or rafts at sea, this is to be made an offence. I fully agree with the goal, but I do not see how the captain will be caught. I do not think this section has been properly defined.

There is a further problem in stopping ships coming to Canada. The captain then has few choices. If he returns to the port from which he disembarked, he may be refused permission to land his passengers. If he returns to the country from which the passengers fled, he may be turning them back to death or imprisonment. If the captain is a real profiteer and not a humanitarian, there is a danger that he will disembark those people at sea. I do not think that has happened in the past between here and Europe, but it has happened around Southeast Asia and the Philippines. In fact, in the Executive of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees Canada urged that countries not turn away ships that may contain refugees. I would hope that with this law Canada would not deny the principle that we defended nobly and successfully at the United Nations.

The fourth objective is to maintain the security of our country. Detention without shown cause infringes on our Charter. We presently have good laws that have been able to take care of the security risks who may come by way of the refugee route. There have been security crimes in our country, but they were not committed by refugees. They were committed either by regular immigrants, perhaps by Canadian citizens, or by visitors. These people do not advertise themselves when they come to commit a crime by walking in and saying, "I am a refugee, examine my past." That is the last thing that they do. Therefore, I believe we should leave the security provisions of the present Act unamended. I believe they are adequate to take care of the problem.

I cannot support Bill C-84 unless it is amended in the ways I have described. We have to bring it into line with its stated objectives. We have to remove the penalty as it presently stands against the churches. We have to insert a penalty against people who organize to bring people in clandestinely, or as a group try to make manifestly unfounded claims. We have to remove the interdiction of the boat at sea. We have to improve or clarify the clause against disembarkation to make it more enforceable. In the matter of the interdiction, I believe what has to be done is emphasize the necessity of requiring that such boats be escorted into harbour. In that manner, if necessary, the captain and crew can be charged with this offence, and the passengers treated as refugee claimants.

I hope the Government will not pioneer the destruction of the principle of individual human rights. This is something we agreed to when we signed the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights in 1948, including Clause 13 which states that everyone has the right to seek and enjoy another country's asylum from persecution. The Convention for the Protection of Refugees which we signed in 1967 elaborates that further.

• (1230)

I hope that Bill C-84 will be amended to bring us into line, not only with its stated objectives, but with our international obligations.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree with me that we must not only see what is the effect of this legislation on Canada, but we must be mindful of the ramifications of our actions on other countries.

While it is very easy for the Minister to say that we want to stop people who are trafficking in flesh, and while it is very easy to support that kind of principle and therefore support the idea of apprehending boats and having tough penalties for the masters and crews of ships who organize to bring refugees to Canada, I have asked myself the following question, what if other countries imposed the same fines on so-called smugglers? What if Hong Kong imposed the same fines and restrictions on boats arriving from Vietnam or Cambodia? What if Malaysia and the Philippines did the same? If Canada takes this action, would not those countries be justified in following suit?

I remind the House—and probably the Hon. Member does not need reminding—that at the time of the great outflow of Indo-Chinese refugees, the Philippines, or Malaysia I believe, indeed turned back a boat to the sea. Their action was denounced in practically every country of the world.

Similarly, it is fine for us to say that we want to prosecute people who may even charge for their services to bring refugees into Canada—attention must be paid to illegal counsellors or counsellors who have encouraged people to make people fraudulent claims—however, I am mindful of the fact that in some circumstances in other parts of the world the only way a refugee may be able to get to safety is by buying his or her way to safety. Whether one considers such a practice reprehensible might depend upon one's point of view. Certainly those who escape with their lives may be only too happy to pay for their safe passage. Today many Iranians must pay their way, to get from Iran to Turkey, across the border. What does the Hon. Member feel might be the ramifications of this legislation and the Government's actions in other countries? What if other countries imposed the same penalties? In the final analysis, where will refugees turn?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, there are two questions. One is what would be the effect of our example on other countries. I welcome that question. I referred to it very briefly within the time I had.

We would be called hypocrites for having spoken strongly in the executive committee of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees against countries like the Philippines for turning away boatloads of people who might be refugees. We condemned them. We urged them not to do that. In fact, we went further, I am happy to say. I am referring to a communiqué of March 6, 1985 from the then Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald), in which she said:

> Although the number of people fleeing Vietnam by sea has decreased in the past several years, the proportion rescued at sea, when compared to the total arrivals in refugee camps, has been declining even more rapidly.

In other words, they are being lost at sea more than before. She went on to indicate:

> Many merchant ships hesitate to pick up refugees for fear of having to resettle all of them in their home countries.

Then she referred to the announcement that Canada had always taken up the load of refugees and said that Canada was promising to resettle 2,500 more people in order to encourage merchant captains not to dump their people at sea. She did not put it as crudely as that, but we know that is what was happening.

Canada then acted to encourage countries not to turn boats away by saying that we would take some of the load off those overloaded countries. In fact, the United Nations High Commission, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) yesterday, has warned Canada that if we bring in stiff penalties—I did not have time to bring this into my suggestion for amendment—against ships or planes that bring somebody without adequate documents, then we are again contravening the obligation under the treaty that we signed with the United Nations to give these people a reasonable chance to come and state their claim.

Granted, a genuine refugee who has to escape from his country will do whatever he or she can to get out and to get to a safe place. If they have to buy passage on a ship, they will buy it; if they have the means or the friends, they will buy the passage.

I hope that our laws will always recognize that fact, and not take the attitude that anybody who comes here without full documentation is to be rejected.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration made one statement, which perhaps was not intentional, in his press statement two weeks ago. He said that Canada would maintain its obligation to refugees by selection overseas. The strong implication of the statement as it is put is that we will no longer allow anybody to come to Canada to claim refugee status. I hope that is not what the Minister of Employment and Immigration meant. It would be a stark reversion to the "none is too many" slogan of Mr. Blair in 1939. I certainly do not believe that that is what Parliament will decide, because I know that is not what the people of Canada want.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, we have all heard the news in the last couple of days about three Bulgarian wrestlers who have apparently asked for asylum in Canada. They disappeared from the training site in British Columbia where they were attending an international competition.

I should like to ask the Hon. Member how he thinks these three Bulgarian wrestlers will be received by the Government. I should also like him to perhaps speculate on what might happen if a couple of hockey players decided to stay in Canada and claimed refugee status. They would, therefore, be illegally in the country because they would not have gone through the procedures and probably would not have the appropriate documentation. They would not have a valid and subsisting visa. They would have a visa to come here on a temporary basis.

I suppose people can slice the cake any way they like, but the way I slice it is I feel the measures we are seeing today will be applied arbitrarily. I believe there is a good dose of discrimination and a good dose of racism behind these measures. Does the Hon. Member agree basically with my feeling on this question?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, at this point I would rather not engage in speculation about what may be the intentions of the Government. I hope that as of tomorrow, or very soon, we will begin to negotiate amendments. The amendments certainly must be such as would take care of the matter raised by the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

We certainly do not want to exclude the possibility of people who arrive here for sports or anything else from claiming refugee status if they feel it is necessary and they have the grounds. I would certainly hope that the Bill would be amended to reflect that.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, I take pleasure in rising to speak in this debate. It is not an entirely delightful subject in that it deals with remedial action which has torn us between what we would like to do and what we must do.

I wish to point out quickly that I am not unmindful of my own heritage. Just 112 years ago my great-grandparents came with their family to this country. While they did not come as refugees, their families who remained behind came to Canada as refugees a few years later. Had my great-great-grandparents remained where they were they too would have been refugees. Thus I am not unmindful of the fact that my heritage is rich because of the hospitality of Canada and because of the goodness of Queen Victoria who gave personal guarantees to my people that they would find sanctuary here in their beliefs.

Since my election I have worked many times on behalf of refugees. In 1974, 1975 and 1976 I worked on behalf of Ethiopian refugees, and later on for Iranian refugees. In 1979 we all worked on behalf of the boat people. It is against that backdrop that I speak in this debate.

First, I wish to spend some time addressing the remarks of the Leader of the New Democratic Party yesterday. I listened carefully to what he had to say. I noted that he spoke in very measured and careful language and that he relied on his text, which is why I assume that he spoke with deliberate care and accuracy with respect to his point of view.

The first point he made had an allusion to racism. In that context he made reference to the boat that was turned away from Vancouver some 60 or 65 years ago, a boat loaded with people from India. He then made reference to a boat which was turned away from Canada in 1939, a boat loaded with Jewish people who had left Europe in times of extreme distress. No one in Canada is proud of that part of our history. I feel insulted that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would raise those issues in relation to the legislation which is presently before us as though we are being racist by trying to defend Canada from the violation of our laws. It is beneath the man to raise that spectre, since he began in the preface of his speech by saying we have to deal with illegal claims. Yet just after that he said that we are acting like we acted 40 years ago when we turned back a boatload of refugees from Europe. That is unacceptable, to use the hon. gentleman's favourite word.

I now wish to refer to the Hon. Member's speech as reported at page 7998 of Hansard. He dealt with the fact that the Bill would threaten the activity of church groups and groups such as Amnesty International that work with refugees. I want to say that the Bill will do nothing of the sort. Those who have a vital concern in helping the dispossessed and the endangered around the world will be able to carry on their work, just as before. Canada's tradition of compassion and humanity will not change because of this Bill. Frankly, it will be enhanced because of it. It will give the Department and the courts some kind of mechanism to distinguish between those who are genuine refugees and those who are abusing the system. It will help us to help those who are most in need. That speaks of humanity and not abuse. Those who are working genuinely on behalf of refugees around the world have no need to fear this legislation.

The concepts brought forward by the Leader of the New Democratic Party on behalf of church leaders frighten me. At page 7998 of Hansard the Hon. Member stated the following about the Bill:

> It contains a provision which could lead to the imprisonment or imposition of serious fines on church people, representatives of Amnesty International, or other totally sincere and empathetic human beings who are devoting a good part of their lives to try to facilitate the entry into Canada of legitimate refugees.

Several paragraphs later in the text he is reported as having said:

> According to my reading of this provision, the church people are subject to the penalties under the law.

I want to ask Hon. Members this. Is there anything wrong with that? Should church people, regardless of where they are, not be just as subject to the law as all other people in Canada? Surely because some people wear a clerical collar, have a church title or work on behalf of a church organization they are not exempt from obeying the law. Are we about to introduce the concept in our country that people must obey the law, but if one holds a certain position in society then one does not have to obey it? Is that the concept that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is introducing into this debate? On the basis of his values, does he want to pick and choose those people who have to obey the law?

I wish to emphasize a part of the Hon. Member's speech, a part to which I have referred already. He refers to those who are "totally sincere and empathetic human beings who are devoting a good part of their lives to try to facilitate the entry into Canada of legitimate refugees." I underscore the fact that the Hon. Member was talking about legitimate refugees. He wishes to make the criteria for exemption from the law good intentions and empathy. Since when have we accepted that type of relativistic criteria in relation to whether or not we must obey the law? There are all types of people in our society who have good intentions and who have plenty of empathy. They are just as subject to the law as everyone else. Who says that there are special groups in Canada that which receive special treatment?

The fact is that in Canada there may be a great deal of disagreement with respect to the value concept under which we live and which guides our sense of empathy or our good intentions. There are a great many different value concepts which generate or degenerate our sense of empathy. It depends from which type of a concept we operate on how our empathy works, or how our good intentions work.

I point out to the Leader of the New Democratic Party that, ironically enough, these legitimate refugees about which he talks are actually fleeing societies which have imposed a concept that he is now introducing. They are fleeing, for example, statism. Who says that in those countries where there are dictatorships and where statism runs rampant, where leaders do not necessarily have good intentions, that that means their sense of good intentions is entirely different from ours? Because their intentions are paramount, rather than the law and the courts, they can act with total caprice toward the citizens of their countries. Surely the Leader of the New Democratic Party would not impose on Canada the concept that the caprice of a few people who climb to the top of an organization will dominate the will of Canadians. Good intentions are not good enough. Surely all of us are subject to the law. Surely all of us are subject to the courts that give us protection under the law. Good intentions and a sense of empathy are not reliable enough guides. I would remind my colleagues that empathy and conscience are probably the most malleable faculties we have. Our consciences or empathy-driven responses depend on what we program into ourselves.

I wish to make my third point about security under the courts because I see that my time is running short. The Leader of the NDP went on to say:

> There are two serious things wrong with that. One, it is the Security Intelligence Review Committee which has some expertise in passing judgment about security risks . . . However, the Government does not want to use the people with expertise but wants to give the responsibility to the Federal Court—

That is nothing short of misleading. Perhaps the process has changed, but I would remind Hon. Members that Clause 4 of the Bill amends Section 41(1) of the Act to read as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where the Minister and the Solicitor General are of the opinion, based on security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, that a person, other than a Canadian citizen or permanent resident, is a person described in paragraph 19(1)(d), (e), (f) or (g) or 27(2)(c), they may sign and file a certificate to that effect with an immigration officer, a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator.

The fact is that the evidence will be presented in court because of criminal intelligence reports that will have been submitted to the Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) and the Minister of Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). On the evidence they have provided, those certificates can be issued. It is entirely misleading for the Leader of the New Democratic Party to say that the Government does not want to use the people with expertise but wants to give the responsibility to the Federal Court.

The fact is that because of the Supreme Court and the Charter, we have the best protection under the court system. I would hope that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would have confidence in the Federal Court system, confidence that it will protect people who are being investigated and are under the threat of deportation on the advice of the Ministers. The court system will decide whether the Ministers are right or wrong.

We have heard a lot about refugees, bogus refugees and terrorists wanting to come to Canada under the refugee system. However, it is important that we maintain and protect in Canada the rich tradition of compassion and caring for those who are most destitute and endangered.

The decision of the Supreme Court in the Singh case of two years ago was basically that there are five billion people in the world who could come to Canada and say they are refugees and they would be entitled to protection under the Charter. That is really what it said. We must and will maintain our rich tradition of protection for those who are destitute.

I remind Hon. Members that it was this Government that came to the aid of the boat people who were set adrift on the South China Sea in 1979. It was this Government that proposed that if private organizations and church groups would sponsor refugees, the Government would match that sponsorship. That was one of the best programs in the history of our dealings with refugees. Everyone participated in it.

While we continue to speak for refugees and on behalf of refugees, we must also speak for Canada. We must speak for the kind of country we want, the kind of country we want to protect for those refugees who come here. If we allow our laws to be flouted and our system of immigration to be circumvented, if we allow those who do not share our ethics to erode the sense of justice in Canada, we will not have the kind of Canada that will be an enticement to refugees. So we must speak for Canada as well as the refugees.

It is the intention of this Government to preserve the kind of fairness, compassion and sense of humanity and legal balance under our justice system that will keep Canada an attractive haven for people around the world who are destitute. They should be able to feel at home here and to maintain a sense of humanity.

As long as we allow groups of people to finesse their way around the legal system, we will erode our system and destroy the kind of Canada that makes our country such a great place to live and so attractive to these groups. I say it is time to send this Bill to committee, to hear witnesses and to pass it so that Canada can be the kind of place to which people want to come.

Mr. Blaikie: Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to engage the Hon. Member in discussion on at least one area that he raised with respect to the comments of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). This has to do with what in my judgment can only be a misrepresentation, deliberate or otherwise, on the part of the Hon. Member of what the Hon. Member for Oshawa said. I would like to clarify the matter.

It is not that the Leader of the New Democratic Party, or any other New Democrats for that matter, asking for special status under the law for church people. We were arguing that the wording of this particular Bill would put these people, some active in the church and some not, though it is a fact that church people tend to be associated with caring for and advocating the cause of refugees, on the wrong side of the law needlessly. It is not a matter of asking for special status for clergy or for church people or for anyone else. It is a matter of the way the Bill is worded now. The Bill's wording would put church people who help people who do not have documents come into Canada, believing that they are legitimate refugees, in a position of breaking the law. Is the Hon. Member saying he agrees with that? That is the only point the Hon. Member for Oshawa was making when he spoke about the effect this Bill would have on people involved with the churches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow a very short rebuttal before I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Friesen: I just make this one point. There is concern about people who do not have documents. The question we have is, why do they not have documents? A decision has to be made. There may be some who have no documents through no fault of their own but, as news reports have indicated very clearly and as the Hon. Member will I think understand, there has been a multitude of people who have destroyed their documents and therefore are not legitimate cases. We have to make that distinction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be eight minutes left for questions and comments when we resume debate.

It being one o'clock, I do not leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1.02 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

NORTHERN ONTARIO—PROGRAMS INTRODUCED BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the general election of 1980 returned 10 Liberal Members from northern Ontario—10. Yet, with all that representation under the previous Liberal administration, not once did one of those Liberal Members bring forward an economic program for their region.

I am proud to say today that under the present Government the northern Ontario caucus of the P.C. Party delivered to the residents of northern Ontario.

We delivered an economic development program to the region.

We delivered $55 million in new federal money.

We delivered $15 million in loans and grants of up to a value of $60 million.

We delivered a secretariat, housed in our own back yard, to administer the program.

We delivered an advisory board made up of northern Ontarians. Mr. Speaker, the Government has delivered to northern Ontario.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

NEED FOR FORMULATION OF NATIONAL WATER POLICY

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in spring, 1984, the inquiry on federal water policy was launched to consult Canadians on a federal water strategy to meet our future needs. On September 30, 1985, the inquiry reported its recommendations to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan). At that time the Minister stressed the urgency of formulating a national water policy "to prevent the emerging crisis from happening".

The Minister has had the report for two years now and Canadians are wondering what he has done. The sense of urgency the Minister conveyed in September, 1985, seems to have evaporated like so much water on a hot summer's day. We urge the Minister to get going and start planning now to meet the water management challenges Canadians are facing now and will face in the years ahead. Canadians want to see the benefits of the 18 months of important consultations on water policy for Canada.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIRSPACE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, in the House the other day a question was asked of the Government about its position on the proposed flights of plutonium over the Canadian North. I found the government answer at that time to be very inadequate. All we received from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) was the assurance that these flights could only occur with the full permission of the Canadian Government.

That is not the point, Mr. Speaker. The point is whether the Canadian Government is going to give permission for such flights, whether it will tolerate that type of danger to the northern environment.

I must wonder aloud just what is going on when the Government takes such a casual attitude toward that proposal. Is it because we have compromised ourselves with respect to radioactive substances in the North by the Government's proposal for nuclear submarines for Canada's North? Is it because the Government has entered into an agreement, through AECL, with the United States and Japan vis-à-vis the research going on at Lac du Bonnet into the disposal of high level radioactive waste? Is that why we have this silence, this incredibly relaxed attitude toward a very serious proposal? Or is it because of the general deference to all things nuclear to which the Conservatives have now become captive in the same way as the Liberals were before them?

All these things give one cause to wonder just what is going on. I think it is high time the Government paid some attention to this particular proposal.

FINANCE

HIGH CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, credit cards and interest rates do not seem to go together. For over two years my learned Conservative colleague, the Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), has been crusading to convince banks and department stores to act less greedily with their credit card interest rates.

The president of a Canadian shoe company told me that almost one-third of their net profits came from interest on overdue credit accounts. How silly. Whatever happened to good old cold cash and the rule of business ethics that, if you cannot afford to pay, you cannot afford to play?

We got ourselves into this trap by living plastic lives. We even buy our groceries now with a piece of plastic. However, banks and department stores are, in my opinion, charging excessively high interest rates on credit accounts. Persuasion has not prevailed. It is time to legislate. The Member for Scarborough West has my full support.

POLLUTION OF SAINT-MAURICE RIVER

Mr. Gilles Grondin (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, last June 29 I rose in the House and urged the Minister of Environment (Mr. McMillan) to intervene with a view to settling a problem concerning log drives on the Saint-Maurice, the longest river used for such operations. This river flows through broad land expanses in the Mauricie region—from La Tuque to Trois-Rivières—where logging operations are now one of the major sources of water pollution. This constitutes a very complex problem because, if ever consideration were given to banning log drives, the economic impact on our region would be catastrophic owing to the high cost of trucking logs over land.

Still, Mr. Speaker, I hardly think that letting the situation deteriorate will solve the problem. With this in mind, again I urge the Minister of Environment to convene all parties involved as soon as possible, namely Environment Canada, the paper companies concerned, other federal, provincial and municipal authorities, and spokesmen for the various users of the Saint-Maurice River.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

LEADER'S POSITION ON IMMIGRATION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist party flanked by 30-odd comrades, all excentrics with their own peculiarities, rose in this House to comment on the immigration measure in his capacity as party leader. The first part of his speech had to do with history and literature.

In the second part he simply echoes the message of pressure groups that are against the Government approach.

In the third part it becomes obvious that he is not living in 1987 because his leading references date back to 1914 and 1939.

He criticizes the Government position—which he has yet to read—and even wrongly states in his discourse that he did not get from the Minister a response to his personal quest for information.

In conclusion the socialist leader states that he wants to put an end to abuses and ban terrorism but he does not accept any of our means and, worse still for a party leader, he fails to suggest any alternative.

As he is wont, yesterday the socialist leader toyed with negativism, inaccuracies, demagogy and opportunism.

RIVER SAFETY

WHITE WATER RAFTING FATALITIES—CALL FOR INTRODUCTION OF CONTROLS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, over the past year in my province of British Columbia we have seen 12 people die as a result of white water rafting accidents. Six of those tragic deaths have occurred in the last month alone.

I have a letter from K. W. Stevenson, President of General Paint of Vancouver. He lost his daughter, Marie, aged 32, on the Elaho River north of Squamish. Mr. Stevenson says:

> It is my sincere belief that government must introduce controls for ALL rivers so that other families do not have to experience the grief that we have felt.

I am sure all Members of the House will share in his grief over this tragedy.

I want to remind the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) that under the Canada Shipping Act the authority for regulating and maintaining safety standards on rivers remains with the federal Government and his Department.

I want to offer the co-operation of the New Democratic Party if the Government needs legislation to strengthen the safety standards of rafting equipment and the qualifications of rafting guides. I have had the pleasure of rafting on the Fraser and Thompson Rivers, as perhaps you may have had, Mr. Speaker. It is great fun and it is a great tourist industry. However, we must make sure that these kinds of tragedies do not occur again.

IMMIGRATION—POSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, the majority of Canadians believe that legitimate refugees should be given safe haven in Canada. People want an immigration system that is fair and compassionate.

However, when the system is repeatedly abused, it is not unreasonable for the Government to tighten the refugee determination process, ensure visa compliance, and punish offenders.

I am very concerned that members of the New Democratic Party have not come clean on the issue of refugees. The Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) says the system should be tightened up, while many of his followers have delayed passage of immigration Bills, criticizing them as too severe.

If the NDP had not prevented earlier attempts to amend immigration laws, the recall of Parliament may not have been necessary.

• (1410)

The New Democratic Party should stop delaying new immigration laws. The Leader of the NDP should instruct a few of his loyal followers to act responsibly because Canadians deserve much better.

FINANCE

HIGH CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in the late 1970s and early 1980s interest rates were high. The prime rate was over 20 per cent. Credit card companies, major retail stores and gas companies were charging around 25 per cent on unpaid accounts. When interest rates dropped substantially, the interest rates charged by these companies were not reduced.

It was only after questions in this House and after the finance committee brought down a report early this year criticizing these high interest rates, did the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) warn the charge card companies that, if they did not cut their interest rates, Parliament would bring in legislation.

Finally, kicking and screaming, these companies brought down their interest rates somewhat a few months ago. Now, just four months after announcing a reduction in interest rates, they have begun to increase interest rates again. Their excuse is that interest rates have gone up somewhat.

I call upon the Government to act now, not to wait for a Private Member's Bill which might, with luck, be dealt with a year from now. I call upon the Government to bring in the kind of legislation which will protect tens of thousands of Canadians from the greed of these giant companies.

HORTICULTURE

NORTHERN GARDENING PROGRAM SPONSORED BY MENNONITE CENTRAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, in many small communities in the North the price of produce is extremely high, yet the soil and climatic conditions are suitable for the growing of vegetables. A lacking ingredient, however, is knowledge and experience on the part of the inhabitants of how to cultivate gardens.

Recognizing this, the Mennonite Central Committee has, for the past several years, been sending experienced gardeners to the North to teach by example its people the art of horticulture. This is proving to be a successful program. The object of this statement is to thank both the Mennonite Central Committee and the individual participants for their continuing efforts on behalf of would-be northern gardeners.

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I stand in my place today to compliment the Government on the introduction of Bill C-84 which, in concert with Bill C-55, will stop the queue jumpers who are interfering with immigration to this country. These Bills will stop the unscrupulous tactics of a few people making money from the misfortunes of others with their boatloads of human contraband. That is not fair, nor is the open-door policy advocated by Members opposite.

With the passage of these Bills the Government will be able to proceed with plans to expand the family reunification program because, without immigration, Canada's growth rate will be negative. The Government wants to help bona fide refugees and immigrants enter this country. The hundreds of constituents who called my office to register their concern and indignation demanded fairness. This is a trait which exemplifies Canadians and Canada to the rest of the world, and this Government is delivering.

BILL C-84—SUGGESTED REFERRAL TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, when you recalled the House to deal with Bill C-84 it was our intention at that time, of course, to co-operate with you and come back to Parliament. We have been debating this Bill now for two days.

It has been our intention, because it is very complicated and we have very many concerns which, of course, we have registered, to see amendments made to the Bill. Of course, the appropriate place to make those amendments is in a legislative committee. That is also the place where expert witnesses could be heard to help us improve the Bill. For that reason we have been anxious to have this matter referred to a legislative committee as soon as possible, ideally at the end of today, and that is still our wish.

We want to say we oppose the Bill. However, we want to do what we can to improve the Bill presently before the House and we can do that only by hearing expert witnesses in committee and by proposing amendments in committee.

ESTABLISHMENT OF WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION OFFICE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, the recent western diversification initiative recognizes the need to develop and diversify the western economy to make it less vulnerable to international economic developments and fluctuating commodity prices.

A new agency, the Western Diversification Office, will be created under the leadership of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight). The WDO, with offices in each of the four western provinces, will co-ordinate, support and encourage the creation of enterprises in the West and will administer a $1.2 billion Western Diversification Fund.

This new money will be used to promote western economic diversification by helping to support worth-while specific projects, by promoting the competitiveness of existing enterprise, and by facilitating the creation of new business.

The WDO will co-ordinate and communicate all federal programs and activities that contribute to the economic development and diversification of the West. The WDO and the $1.2 billion fund represent tangible proof of the Government's commitment to help improve the fortunes of western Canada.

OPINION OF MEMBERS

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I just heard the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis) commenting on Bill C-84. He pointed out that although his party was opposed to the Bill, it wanted to see the Bill referred immediately to committee, so that witnesses could be heard.

I would like to say to the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap that his intellectual honesty leaves much to be desired. As a Member of this House, I have the right to express my views on Bill C-84, and I hope we will be given an opportunity to do so in this House. If his party is not prepared to come right out and say where it stands on this issue, preferring to hide in committee instead of speaking out in the House, it can go right ahead, but I want to express my opinion right here in the House. And I strenuously object to the position taken by the Hon. Member for the NDP on this matter.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TRADE

PATENT DRUG LEGISLATION—ATTITUDE OF UNITED STATES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. The Minister knows perfectly well that her colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, keeps repeating that his Bill, which will increase the price of drugs in Canada, is not the result of pressure exercised by the United States during the free trade talks. In fact, he maintains that the United States did not even mention the subject. I would like to know whether the Minister agrees with her colleague and whether the United States has asked Canada to change our patent drugs legislation.

[English]

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the House that of course the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was correct in the answer that he gave the House. I have explained to the House, both in the debate on March 16 and in repeated questioning in the House, that the whole issue of intellectual property, which covers patents, is being discussed, but I am not aware of any specific reference to the Bill in question.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is not bad enough that the Government is going to raise drug prices at the expense of older and sick Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —it's worse that the Government does not have the common decency to admit in the House that it is doing so as a result of direct pressure from the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I have here a document published under the seal of the President of the United States which I wish to quote. It refers to the current drug legislation:

> The United States continues to raise its concerns at senior government levels. It urges speedy submission of modifying legislation to address serious U.S. concerns about the inadequacy of Canadian patent protection in this area.

Does the Minister for International Trade deny the truth of these statements contained in the official document under the seal of the President of the United States relating to these trade negotiations?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member has not established in the House the date of the document, whether the document deals with free trade, whether it is one of the general concerns that is raised all the time between Canada and the U.S. trade negotiators where we deal consistently over a long period of time with trade issues between us. The Hon. Member has not in any way tied this specifically to any U.S. negotiating proposal that is under serious consideration by our negotiators.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would be glad to let the Minister have a copy of this document which has been given to us by the United States Embassy on Wellington Street. It is the National Trade Estimate Report on Foreign Trade Barriers, and it relates specifically at page 55 to what I have just recited.

PROPOSED LEGISLATION TO AMEND PATENT ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this morning in The Globe and Mail there was a further report—

Mr. Malone: Read the whole Globe and Mail.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "Read the whole Globe and Mail"! That would be taxing even the Hon. Member's patience.

I want to quote senior American officials, senior administration officials. Yesterday this fellow said that "intellectual property rights (such as drug patents) is one of our key global issues", and then he said that he thinks "we have the assurance of the Canadian Government that they will see this through".

I ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, to give him a chance to get up finally, why would the Government reject the recommendations of the Eastman report, which was an independent Canadian judicial commission of inquiry? Why would he reject those recommendations and cave in to American pressure instead, to bring this legislation forth?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Which one of you is going to answer?

Mr. Axworthy: Do it together.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I wouldn't take that, Pat.

Mr. Andre: —I would remind the Leader of the Opposition that it was the Liberal Government in 1983 which introduced a White Paper. It was the Hon. Member for Papineau who said that Canada's patent laws needed to be changed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: I would remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that when he was in the private sector and Chairman of the Board of Sandoz Pharmaceutical Company many people heard him say that Canada's patent laws needed to be changed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We support Eastman.

An Hon. Member: Read the Eastman report.

Mr. Andre: I do not know whether the Leader of the Opposition met with the pharmacy students who were here in Ottawa, I believe the day before yesterday, talking about their future—

Ms. Copps: What about senior citizens?

Mr. Andre: —but it is those thousands of jobs and those hundreds of millions of dollars of investment in research and development which are guiding this Government.

I wish the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would have the courage to visit with those students and tell them that he thinks their future takes second place to his political opportunism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: While the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is arranging meetings, we would be interested to know when he is prepared to meet with the senior citizens of Canada who will be facing an increase of hundreds of millions of dollars in drug prices; that is what we would like to know.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTER'S SPEECH—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, seeing that the Minister for International Trade was so anxious to join in a duet with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I will pose a question specifically to her.

Yesterday, in answers to questions from our Leader, she said specifically that the trade knowledge which Canadians need about the Canada-U.S. negotiations is all contained in a speech which she made on March 16. If that is the case, I would like to ask the Minister why it is that when that speech was delivered she talked about jobs but she did not mention the fact that federal officials in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion said that there would be job losses in the brewery industry, in the steel industry, in the shipbuilding industry, in the auto parts industry—in fact in industries in every part of Canada. If that was to be the definitive statement of the impact of the free trade negotiations, why is it that those facts were kept secret, that those facts were hidden and were not divulged at that time?

I ask the Minister, in all honesty, is she now prepared to table those reports showing exactly what the real impact of free trade is going to be in this country and on the jobs of Canadians?

• (1425)

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, let me make some obvious points. First, the free trade negotiations are taking place. They have six more weeks to go. It is not possible at this time to table the type of information for which the Hon. Member is asking because the negotiations are taking place. The Prime Minister has said that there will be public debate on the issue.

Second, I would like to point out that the information the Hon. Member is presenting to the House in the form of the DRIE report, a junior report that was never circulated among Ministers, has already been rejected by one group, the petrochemical industry, which says that the report's assessment of its industry is simply not true.

If the Hon. Member continues to bring forward suspect information in the absence of any discussion on this matter, even with his own Leader in a private briefing by Simon Reisman, then I think the Hon. Member is simply being mischievous and undermining the negotiations that are taking place at this crucial time.

REQUEST THAT TRADE AMBASSADOR APPEAR BEFORE COMMITTEE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I will concede one point. Any information from the Government must be suspect just by its very nature. However, I would caution the Minister that to reject the kind of research analysis done by officials in the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion who know an awful lot—or did know an awful lot—about how regional development took place in the country, is an act of irresponsibility on the part of the Minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. These are important matters being discussed. It would be helpful in preambles if Hon. Members would restrain themselves from getting into argument, and set out the facts that are necessary to place a question.

Mr. Axworthy: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I will put my question to the Minister in this way. Considering that there are only five or six weeks to go before the Government will initial an agreement with the United States on free trade, is it not absolutely essential that Canadians be given the full benefit of the facts which the Government itself possesses about what the impact of that proposed agreement will be? Is it not a responsibility of the Government to be accountable to the Canadian people and divulge those facts?

In doing so will the Minister agree to have Mr. Reisman appear publicly before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade to explain why it is that the impacts are not being divulged, and to explain what it is the free trade arrangement will do for Canadians?

Hon. Pat Carney (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that Ambassador Reisman would give the same response that I have given, that is to say that, since negotiations are taking place and since the type of information that the Hon. Member seeks cannot for all practical purposes be defined or determined until the negotiations are concluded, there is no particular point in Mr. Reisman coming forward at this time.

I have said over and over again that the agenda for these talks has been discussed and debated in Parliament. The agenda and the Canadian position have been widely discussed among First Ministers. We have had a consultative process that involved five First Ministers' meetings, two Trade Ministers' meetings, 16 meetings of the Deputies of the provinces and the federals, 116 SAGITs meetings, three ITAC SAGIT chairpersons' meetings and seven ITAC meetings, which is the group that advises me. All of this work is going on. All of this consultation is taking place.

I offered a similar briefing to the opposition Parties and they have refused it.

I might point out that I find it strange that the Leader of the New Democratic Party has rejected this briefing when it was a member of his own caucus who asked for it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIME MINISTER'S MEETINGS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister. The Minister for International Trade has once again denied that the United States brought direct pressure on the Government of Canada to make changes to our patent drug legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister prepared to admit that during two international conferences with the President of the United States, one in 1985 and one in 1986, the President directly suggested to the Prime Minister that some changes should be made in our legislation on pharmaceutical products?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The Leader of the New Democratic Party is referring to something I am not aware of. Of course, as the Minister said, there have been exchanges on a host of issues during bilateral meetings, which is entirely normal. We are talking about the legislation that was tabled. It is a Canadian initiative which, I may add, will result in several hundred million dollars being invested in Canada and the creation of as many as 3,000 new jobs, most of them in Quebec. I have also noticed that many Quebecers, including the Mayor of Montreal, ministers in Mr. Bourassa's government and various social intervenors, have shown considerable concern about the position taken by the Liberal senators who are opposing a Bill that would bring considerable economic benefits to Canada and Quebec.

• (1430)

POSITION OF UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister says that this was a Canadian initiative. It was a Conservative Government initiative that came after two direct requests of the President of the United States, another request made by the Vice-President of the United States to the Prime Minister as well as in a meeting with myself and, I believe, the Leader of the Opposition, and it was introduced into the House after the visit of Mr. Yeutter to Canada.

Will the Prime Minister now acknowledge that this legislation that is going through the Senate was introduced by the Government because the United States is insisting upon it as a condition for a free trade agreement with the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP is no doubt quite capable of discussing meetings that he may have had with American officials. I would no doubt gather that he would want to leave me the same privilege.

I have responded to the Hon. Member. Have these matters been discussed in bilateral meetings? Of course they have. All matters of importance are raised by officials from time to time. This particular project is one that was brought about, and the Leader of the Opposition himself, when he was in the private sector, had recommendations along similar lines.

The object of the exercise as presented to the House of Commons is to guarantee some 3,000 new research and development jobs and hundreds of millions of dollars of new investment. We are somewhat at a loss to understand why the Liberal Senate persists in blocking something that is of such value to Canada, to the Province of Quebec, and to the research and scientific community in general.

We want to initiate matters so that Canada can provide a leadership role in scientific research and development. We are amazed that the Liberals and the NDP are blocking such initiatives when they can be brought about and keep drug prices down at exactly the same time.

POSITION OF UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister knows or ought to know that the one concrete effect of this legislation will be to drive up the price of drugs in Canada by $300 million to $600 million a year. That is what will happen.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: Since just a few minutes ago the Minister for International Trade denied that the President of the United States in particular, or any other official of the United States attempted to get the present kind of legislation proposed by the Government of Canada introduced, and since the Prime Minister has just indicated that possibly the President of the United States did discuss it with him, will he now admit that the President of the United States did discuss very specifically patent drug legislation and requested the Government of Canada to make the kinds of changes it is now trying to force through the House of Commons and the Senate?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has made the flat statement that the only concrete effect of this measure will be to drive up the price of drugs. That, of course, is quite false.

I would ask Hon. Members, and even those from the Leader of the NDP's own Party who might be inclined to believe such a statement, to refer to other flat statements made by my hon. friend. He stood in the House of Commons and predicted in 1984 and 1985 that the Budgets would cost between 50,000 and 150,000 jobs, and they have created hundreds of thousands of jobs. He was wrong then and he is wrong today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84 PROVISIONS—REQUEST FOR AMENDMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. While curbing abuse is a legitimate concern, it is very clear that Bill C-84 goes far beyond that intent, and in the process of overkill, jeopardizes the Charter of Rights and the civil liberties that we enjoy as Canadians.

Given that outside the House yesterday the Minister conceded that Clause 95(1) of the new Bill, which places members of the clergy assisting refugees in the same category as sleazy profit-making racketeers, is in error, would he now not admit to the House and to Canadians that this clause and others in the new Bill are in need of very significant amendments so that we can clean up racketeers and exploiters without trampling over our Charter and our civil liberties?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will try to explain to my friend—it will not be easy—exactly what I meant yesterday and today. Section 95 has always existed in the legislation. The Hon. Member will agree with me that it has been in the legislation for the last 10 years.

The new clause says that it is not an offence to counsel a person to present himself to an officer and tell the truth. It says that it is not an offence to transport an illegal alien in Canada for the purpose of presenting that person to an officer. What is an offence is to aid persons to evade legitimate immigration controls, either at the port of entry or in Canada.

Perhaps my friend will understand that no one has a right to decide whether or not people are refugees before they come here. Every one in Canada who will want to bring people here will have to wait before deciding if those people are refugees. Because of that, we have to let people here in Canada take that decision. In other words, nobody will be allowed to decide, before the immigration officers, that people are refugees. They could come from any organization, but under the Immigration Act only Canadian people will have the right to decide who are or are not refugees.

CONFISCATION OF DOCUMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, what the Minister says and means is one thing. What is in the legislation and is becoming the law of this country is completely different. We are interested in the legislation because Ministers and Governments come and go but the law remains.

Given that another overkill provision is the provision that all travellers coming to Canada will have their visas and passports confiscated, potentially including Canadians returning from abroad, I would like to ask the Minister this question. While curbing fraudulent documentation is a noble exercise, does he not think that this blanket provision is too far-reaching? By implementing this provision, is he proud to be joining the Soviet Union which is now the only country in the world that requires its passengers' documents to be confiscated? What kind of Canada are we to become?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will let Canadians be the judge. When you get to the point where you start comparing the situation in the USSR with our own, in terms of individual freedoms, that is a sure sign you have run out of ammunition. I simply want to inform the Hon. Member that throughout the international community, procedures are in place that are far stricter than any Canada intends to introduce with the present legislation. I think that the only way—and we intend to maintain this position—to ensure that people entering Canada meet Canada's immigration objectives is to have controls, and we definitely intend to do so.

• (1440)

APPLICATION OF PROPOSED LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. He was quoted today in the Citizen as saying he is not interested in prosecuting legitimate groups who assist refugees. He just now gave a very different interpretation of this proposed law. The Bill states:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence—

My question is this. If a Canadian brings someone who he or she thinks may be a refugee claimant to Canada without travel documents, and at once takes that person to the nearest immigration authority for examination, does the Minister admit that the clause I just read would make that action an offence?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I don't think the purpose of Question Period is to try and interpret the law instead of leaving this to the experts. Once we have passed the legislation, it will be up to the courts to provide their interpretation, and we will then see what the implications are.

APPLICATION TO CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday the Hon. Minister made statements undertaking to interpret this law. A few minutes ago he did the same thing. Will he do what a Minister is supposed to do and answer questions of fact and law in Question Period? Does this clause make it an offence to do what is not now an offence, namely, to bring a person into Canada and take that person to an immigration office, perhaps without documents, for examination?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have a very clear statement for my friend. In this country everyone, every group, has to respect the law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED IMPRECISIONS CONTAINED IN LEGISLATION

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. However, before putting my question, I must say that I am very surprised at his attitude. If the Members of this House are not here for the purpose of drafting and examining the Bill, then what are we doing here? That is the whole purpose of Question Period and our various committees and debates. I find the Minister's attitude incredibly arrogant.

I would like to get back to my question, Mr. Speaker, and I say to the Minister that if we consider Clause 95.1 which is at issue here, I think it goes much too far. Is the Minister prepared to tar with the same brush, the traffickers in human flesh who are going to charge people thousands of dollars for taking them to Canada, and the work done by Cardinal Léger whose purpose is to help refugees find a safe haven and help people who are living in unfortunate and needy circumstances find a country of refuge? Because that is what Claude 95.1 does.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is taking the easy way out. It is the easiest thing in the world to play on public sentiment.

Mr. Garneau: It is the truth.

Mr. Bouchard: Now listen, sir. We listened to you. I suggest you talk to the Liberal senators about Bill C-22. That is important.

I think we should remember one thing. When people are not yet in Canada, whatever the country they come from, we have to wait before a decision can be made. You have already made up your minds that people who are not in this country, people you bring in from outside the country, are refugees. No one in this country has the right to decide who is a refugee except Immigration Officers. That is pretty obvious, and again, I suggest you read the Bill. This provision has been in force for ten years. In fact, it was passed by the Liberals.

MEANING OF CLAUSE 95

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary.

I was thinking about my next question, and in fact, it is very apt now that section 95.1 has been added to the existing Section 95.

I would like to ask the Minister whether, considering what he just said, Marcel Aubut, the President of the Nordiques, and Gilles Léger, his assistant, would have been liable to five years imprisonment because they helped the Stastny brothers come over and play hockey for the Nordiques. That is what Section 95.1 means.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought the Liberal Party was above the sort of argument that was just raised.

Mr. Garneau: Who drafted the clause?

Mr. Bouchard: Now listen, sir, we listened to you, so you could at least reciprocate.

I simply want to say that anyone in this country, as I said so earlier in English and I am sure you understood, anyone in this country who brings people from outside the country before Immigration Officers for evaluation, has the right to do so provided these people are taken to the place where they are supposed to go, namely, a Canadian Immigration Office. In that case, they may do so. However, we cannot let the Canadian system be manipulated, and this has happened several times, to let refugees into the country who are not entitled to that status. As long as I am Minister of Immigration, I will not knowingly let people abuse the system. This has been going on for years, and you never had the courage to do something about it.

EMPLOYMENT

RETRAINING OF LAID-OFF OLDER WORKERS

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Minister of Labour or the Minister of Employment. In February of 1986 the Government promised to bring in a labour adjustment program for older workers. I represent a community with over 200 people who are going to be laid off in September because of the closure of Otis Elevator Company Limited. Another 1,400 families will be affected in January when the Firestone plant closes. Over half of these people would be considered older workers. When is the Government going to honour its promise to these workers and their families and others like them across the country?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the program was announced a little while ago and negotiations have been ongoing with my provincial counterparts. As a matter of fact, I propose to talk to my Ontario counterpart very soon and I will inform him of the Hon. Member's concern.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is when is the Government going to do something about it? The Government has a responsibility. It made a promise to the workers of this country over 18 months ago. Families in Hamilton and across the nation are affected. I would like a commitment from the Minister today. Is he going to make a commitment to implement that program today?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, the announcement was with respect to a tripartite program. The negotiations with the provinces particularly are ongoing and I will inform my Ontario counterpart of the need for that program in Ontario particularly, and hopefully it will be signed, sealed, and delivered soon.

DIRECTORS OF PRINCIPAL GROUP COMPANIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance. He will know that the directors of Principal Group Ltd., First Investors, Associated Investors, and Principal Savings and Trust Ltd. are the same. He ought to know that their business address is the same address on Jasper Avenue in Edmonton. He should also know that the Secretary Treasurer of Principal Savings and Trust Ltd. is also the President of First Investors and the President of Associated Investors.

What test did the Minister utilize to satisfy himself that there was no wrongdoing, or the appearance of wrongdoing, within the operations of Principal Savings and Trust?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation was the insurer of Principal Savings and Trust. There were 29 other entities in the Principal Group. They do not have CDIC insurance. The Hon. Member should know that, even though CDIC insures a provincially regulated institution, it is still a provincially regulated institution. All of the Principal Group companies are provincially regulated.

CROSS-TRADING QUERY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I say very sincerely that there are 67,000 Canadians who have lost their personal investments. The Minister has refused to produce a document with regard to the investigation of Principal Savings and Trust. He has refused under the guise of confidentiality. I think the paramount consideration in this case ought to be the system of investment, depositors, as well as Canadians generally, as opposed to protecting one single company.

When did the CDIC and the Minister first become aware that cross-trading was going from Principal Savings and Trust to First Investors and Associated Investors?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the two contract investment companies, First Investors and Associated Investors, are not insured by CDIC, as the Hon. Member knows. Principal Savings and Trust is insured by CDIC.

In the course of examining the operation of the firm that it was insuring the CDIC came into knowledge of certain problems with inadequate capitalization. It became clear that more capital would be needed if that particular company was to continue. It seems clear that the same is true for the whole group.

In May and June the CDIC made its representations very clearly to the owners of Principal Savings and Trust. If the Hon. Member has been following these matters closely he will know that Parliament passed Bill C-42 which reaffirmed the confidentiality of documentation and communications between CDIC and its member institutions.

PRINCIPAL SAVINGS AND TRUST—REIMBURSEMENT OF INVESTORS

Mr. William G. Lesick (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Many Edmontonians and Albertans in general are adversely affected by the collapse and bankruptcy of the Principal Group.

How will reregulations of the financial services industry help to prevent further bankruptcies like that of Principal Savings and Trust? Can the Minister tell us when depositors in Principal Savings and Trust will be reimbursed by the CDIC?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond that the CDIC hopes to be able to reimburse those who were insured within three weeks.

Second, for the information of constituents of the Hon. Member or anyone concerned about when the CDIC will be sending out the reimbursements, the phone number is area code 613 995-7984.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. We know that officials of his Department were fully aware as early as July 14 of allegations of false representation made by Principal Group to lure customers. The Minister also received letters as early as July 20 from angry investors claiming Principal Group misled them about insurance coverage.

We know that last week the B.C. Government launched legal action against Principal Group alleging misleading and deceptive practices. Why is the Government taking so long to act? Why is it not taking similar action now?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are. The Marketing Practices Branch of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, as the Hon. Member indicated, began investigating in early July the possibility that there were fraudulent misrepresentations made to investors in the two companies. It is doing the same with regard to Principal Savings and Trust.

REQUEST FOR POLICE INTERVENTION

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, that is just not good enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. de Jong: I have had phone calls from people, one from a woman in tears, because they lost their total life savings in this. They feel they have been lied to and robbed and no one has called the police. When is the Minister going to call in the police?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will know that there is an appropriate time for debate, and sometimes at that appropriate time debate can be very heated. This is the Question Period. I invite the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple. These people have been lied to and robbed. When is the Minister going to call in the police?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member suggesting that we throw the individuals in jail and then have an investigation to see whether or not they should be there?

Mr. Broadbent: No, that's immigration.

Mr. Andre: The Marketing Practices Branch has this under investigation. Anyone guilty of fraudulent misrepresentations—

Mr. de Jong: How long?

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member is suggesting that charges be laid before the evidence is gathered. I do not think that is proper procedure.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the House that the exchanges are just becoming argumentative. I think we should move on. The Hon. Member for Mississauga North.

POSSIBILITY OF RAILWAY STRIKE

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I address my question, through you, to the Minister of Labour. The Minister will know that at midnight on Monday, August 17, railway employees will be in a legal strike position. This will bring about the cessation of Go Transit services and will affect commuters from Hamilton, Oshawa, Barrie and, of course, Mississauga. There are 61,000 daily passengers.

If an agreement cannot be reached by unions and the railways, will the Minister assure the House that the Government will take immediate action to prevent this hardship and disruption of business?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the parties are meeting at this moment to discuss the report which was released earlier this week. I encourage the parties to come to a settlement as quickly as possible.

THE CONSTITUTION

OPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE AMENDMENT GUARANTEEING EQUALITY FOR WOMEN AND MINORITIES

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Last June 26 the Prime Minister said in this House that if there is the slightest doubt about the equality of women's rights in the Meech Lake Accord he will secure such rights at the next meeting with provincial premiers, with due speed.

Mr. Speaker, doubts have been raised and voiced by a number of constitutional experts. Now that these doubts have been expressed, can the Prime Minister unequivocally guarantee that he will do his utmost to obtain from his colleagues, the provincial premiers, an amendment giving women and minorities in Canada the absolute right to equality? My question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. I think it is important to understand that in response to a similar representation the other day I tried to set out that we felt, on the best legal advice we were able to get, that indeed the rights of minorities and the equality rights with respect to women in fact remain protected under the Charter in a substantive way.

If she does not want to believe me, possibly she will believe Dean William R. Leterman of Queen's University who speaks on behalf of 12 leading experts on federalism from five Canadian universities and today stated:

> In our judgment, the distinct society clause does not reduce federal legislative authority; nor does it significantly impair citizen rights under the Charter or the ability of Canada to recognize the rights of its aboriginal peoples and its varied ethnic communities.

These are top-notch national experts who have indicated their support of this Accord as an absolutely essential political act on the part of this Parliament in the legislation of our country.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my question was directed to the Prime Minister because the Prime Minister told us that if there were any ambiguity he would guarantee that he would secure the rights of women and dispel any such ambiguity. All I want to ask in my supplementary question is whether the Prime Minister has changed his mind since last June 26 and whether he is playing the same game as the Minister of Justice when refusing to acknowledge the ambiguity in the Meech Lake Accord? Who will make a decision? The Government or the courts?

[English]

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, again, I do not understand the purpose of the Hon. Member's question. Is she stating the position of the Liberal Party, that this Accord should be rejected?

Mrs. Pépin: I am telling you what the Premiers told us.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Is she not in favour of bringing Quebec into the Constitution, into the mainstream of Canadian life? I do not understand the question.

Mrs. Pépin: You are not answering the question.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: We are trying to give the proper legal interpretation. Obviously, we feel that the rights of all those groups on behalf of which she purports to speak are in fact protected. We have good legal advice to that effect. I hope she will support this matter rather than try to equivocate on behalf of her Party.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

GOVERNMENT PROJECTS IN ST. JOHN'S EAST, NFLD.

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Between June 20 and July 20 of this year the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Minister of Transport made announcements totalling in excess of $33 million for ten projects in St. John's East. In view of the shameful unemployment rate in Newfoundland, which is shamefully double the national rate, and that since July 20 I received numerous calls from constituents who are desperate for employment and could benefit from these projects, will the Prime Minister tell us when work will be available from these projects for some of the unemployed in Newfoundland, particularly on projects in Long Pond, Foxtrap, Bauline, and Flatrock?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to welcome the Hon. Member from St. John's East to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I hope that my relationship with him will be as close and cordial as it was with his predecessor.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: That is why he is here.

Mr. Crosbie: I am happy to remind the House that the unemployment rate fell in Newfoundland. It is still a remarkably high 17.2 per cent, but there was considerable decline last month. The projects the hon. gentlemen mentions are and will be going forward, as well as all of the projects that have been announced since, including the $900,000 project at Arnold's Cove in St. John's West, and others.

There is a mighty program under way across this country to revive and repair our small craft harbours. I am glad the Hon. Member is now supporting them instead of complaining about them as he did during the election campaign.

REQUEST FOR SPEEDY START TO PROJECTS

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Government was able to put up huge signs in these communities within a matter of three or four days of making the announcements. In view of the debilitating unemployment rate which is still double the national average, will the Minister assure the House that the same haste and enthusiasm will be used in getting these projects started?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the projects that were announced are going forward with all possible speed. Any project ever announced for Newfoundland goes forward with all possible speed, as the hon. gentleman will realize. Our next major project is to see his replacement in the next election.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

CANADA POST CORPORATION

MAILING SERVICE FOR BLOOD SAMPLES

Mr. John Gormley (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. The recent regulatory change in dangerous goods regulations resulted in a policy of Canada Post that blood samples will no longer be accepted in Canada's mail. This has caused an incredible hardship for rural Saskatchewan hospitals and small health clinics. In short, the policy is not good enough and should be changed.

Will there be a change to allow small hospitals and health clinics to mail blood samples through Canada Post?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is absolutely right. It is an unacceptable inconvenience, particularly to remote communities, not to be able to use Canada Post to send materials like blood samples. The policy is being changed and the change will be implemented. The Hon. Member has my assurance that this will be rectified just as soon as possible.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, since the House is back in session and today is Thursday, I would ask the Government House Leader to give us the customary statement of business that the Government intends to call over the next several days.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly do that. Today we will continue with Bill C-84. We hope that that might be concluded today. If not, we will continue tomorrow. That will be followed by Bill C-55.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on House business. As the Deputy Prime Minister will know, there is a matter of great urgency which is presently before the House. I speak now of the legislation with respect to war criminals.

The Deputy Prime Minister will know that we in this party were prepared just before the House rose to have this legislation move ahead and to complete consideration of the Bill at that time. In view of the importance of dealing with this legislation quickly, in view of the fact that over 40 years have passed, and in view of Canada's shameful history of inaction with respect to those who are alleged to have committed these terrible crimes against humanity, will the Deputy Prime Minister give serious consideration to bringing this legislation before the House in the next few days in order that Parliament might consider it as the emergency which it clearly is?

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member is referring to Bill C-71. Of course, that is a priority item with the Government. The immediate priority, of course, is Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. I will take the Hon. Member's representation into consideration.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). Prior to the break I had asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to introduce remedial legislation to reinstate benefits to women on maternity leave. I have been assured that that legislation will come. When will we get that legislation, as it affects many people at the present time?

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): I appreciate the question of the Hon. Member, but I do not know exactly what assurance he is referring to. I have a copy of my letter to him dated July 30 which says we are taking that possibility under consideration and will be acting shortly. I will inform the Hon. Member what route we are going to take with respect to that.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government House Leader will recall that I asked him on Monday if the Government would bring forward the war criminals legislation during this special resumed session of the House. I would again repeat my request because our party has always said we want to see that legislation expedited.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I think I answered that question in response to the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party. Bill C-71 is indeed a priority of the Government, but we have been summoned back to the House to deal with two very important pieces of legislation, namely, Bill C-84 and Bill C-55. Those are the items of business we want to dispose of. However, if we can work out satisfactory arrangements to deal with Bill C-71, as I indicated, I will take that under advisement.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House rose at one o'clock there were eight minutes remaining in the question and comment period of the speech of the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen). I will entertain a further eight minutes of questions and comments.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Hon. Member referred to five million refugees in the world. I would say that is probably a bit low. From the figures I have heard, I would think it is something like 15 million. What I would like to suggest to the Hon. Member is that they are not all coming here. Does he have any evidence to suggest that they are?

Mr. Horner: They will.

Mr. Berger: The Hon. Member says they will. He forgets that Canada is a remote country. It is one of the most remote countries in the world when one is speaking of the refugee question. Last year we had 18,000 claims. But even the Hon. Member acknowledges that many of these claims were abusive claims caused by the shortcomings in our current system.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member if he agrees with the screening process the Government is trying to set up in Bill C-55? And why does he agree with the efforts to stop undocumented persons from comimg to Canada when he knows that most refugees do not have the time to get documents. They barely have time to pack a bag and leave their countries. How can the Hon. Member tell if a person is a refugee or not if the procedure the Government has set up does not provide all claimants a fair and full hearing?

Mr. Friesen: There are several questions there, Mr. Speaker. The first comment the Hon. Member made was totally erroneous. I never said there were five million refugees in the world. I would hope the Hon. Member has read the legislation a little more carefully than he listened to my speech.

There are 12 million to 15 million known refugees in the world according to the United Nations Human Rights Commissioner. What I said was that under the Singh decision with respect to the protection under the Charter, there is a possibility of five billion people. Anyone around the world could land on our shores. Whether an individual tells the truth or lies, if he says he is a refugee he is entitled to protection under the Charter. Therefore, potentially every person in the world can come here and claim refugee status. That confirms the numbers I quoted.

The Hon. Member wants to know, I believe, how we are going to decide, and that is at the heart of this legislation and at the heart of this debate, and what the Opposition is talking about, the definition of a legitimate refugee. The implication in everything opposition Members are saying is that the church groups and other groups to whom they have been talking have a right to decide and conclude who is or who is not a legitimate refugee. What we are saying is that is not right. Everyone has to be subjected to the laws and regulations of Canada in determining whether or not they are legitimate. Otherwise we have a very subjective system. We can never have a dependable definition of what is a refugee if we are not going to do it according to law.

If the groups working with refugees have the right to bring their claimants to the border and say, we have already decided these are refugees and do not have to be subjected to analysis under the law, then we have a lot of favouritism in the system which we cannot tolerate. I think the Hon. Member knows that.

Therefore, I say again that I would hope that when the Hon. Member speaks in this debate, as I suspect he will, he will do so with a clear understanding of the provisions of the Bill. With respect to proposed Section 95.1 in which he is interested, let me propose to him that it is virtually impossible to come to Canada without some kind of documentation unless it has been destroyed. If a person comes under a scheduled airline, some kind of passenger system, he must have documentation before he gets on the airplane. If he comes by a scheduled ship, he must have documentation. The only way he can come without documentation is either by destroying it or by coming to a port of entry along the Canada-U.S. Border illegally. We are not going to allow organizations, with their own subjective criteria, to decide on behalf of the Department of Immigration and the court system of Canada whether or not those people who land on our shores or arrive at a port of entry are legitimate refugees.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. As the Hon. Member and the House know, Bill C-55, which is legislation to tighten the refugee determination practice, is also presently before the House. We are currently debating an amendment by the Liberal Party supported by the New Democratic Party to delay debate on that Bill for a further six months until 1988. How would the Hon. Member's constituents feel if the Liberals and the New Democratic Party also put forward an amendment to delay debate on Bill C-84 for a further six months?

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order. That question is totally out of order. It is absolutely hypothetical. The motion is not being put forward on this Bill. What the Hon. Member is talking about is an amendment to Bill C-55 which has nothing to do with the debate at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member may answer that question.

Mr. Friesen: I hope the Whip for the Liberal Party will make sure that everyone of his Members who ask a hypothetical question during Question Period is ruled out of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Point of order. I do not need any teaching from this gentleman—

Mr. Mazankowski: You need a lot of teaching.

Mr. Gauthier: —as to hypothetical questions, and I will say to Members of the Government that when it comes to hypothesis, they are the big question mark.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Hon. Member. I would like to ask him whether he agrees with the views of the Conservative Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration? With respect to Bill C-55 he said that it proposes a series of changes which would make it almost impossible for many genuine refugees to make a claim, and that it is in probable violation of both the UN Convention on Refugees, as well as our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This was said by the Conservative Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. I wish to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees and recognizes the force of the criticism that was made by that very knowledgeable Member of the House and of his own Party.

Mr. Friesen: I would be happy to answer that question as soon as the Hon. Member receives unanimous support from his caucus for all of his views on justice.

Mr. Robinson: I recognize that the Member is afraid to answer the question, but I will give him an opportunity once again. The question is very straightforward. Does the Hon. Member agree with the position that has been taken by his Conservative colleague who chairs the parliamentary committee on immigration that the procedures on refugee determination in his Government's legislation are fundamentally flawed? Does the Hon. Member agree or not? Is the Hon. Member afraid to answer the question?

Mr. Friesen: I thought I already answered that question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

On debate, the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger).

Mr. David Berger (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I am astounded by the remarks of the Hon. Member. For him to actually suggest that 5 billion people might come to Canada—

. . . that is beyond understanding, beyond reason . . .

[English]

It is no small wonder that we are debating legislation which carries with it such abuses of our international obligations and the Charter of Rights. Indeed, the Hon. Member even admitted that Bills C-84 and C-55 are designed to do an end run around the Supreme Court of Canada, and around its decision in the Singh case.

Canadians are a fair-minded people. We often have difficulty in establishing that which sets us apart from other peoples. Most Canadians would agree that we possess a sense of fairness. The key issue in this debate is the fairness of the process. If Canadians today are upset with our refugee determination process, it is because the abuses they see offend their sense of fairness.

The critical questions we must ask ourselves are the following. How do we make it fair to both refugees and to immigrants, recognizing that we are dealing with two very different needs? How can we be fair to Canadians who have relatives who want to immigrate to Canada? What can we do to discourage widespread abuse so that Canadians will not feel that our immigration procedures are being by-passed? Surely, it is possible to devise a system that meets these needs.

Indeed, the proposals for reform of the refugee determination system made by Rabbi Gunther Plaut, and largely adopted by an all-Party parliamentary committee which included members of the government Party, show us the way to do it. These proposals are based on the simple premise that we can do justice to refugees, and discourage abuse, by providing claimants with a full and fair hearing, and a decision in a relatively short period of time.

The current system invites abuse. It takes from two to five years from the date a claimant arrives in Canada to the date of the final decision. People or illegal immigrants who may be inclined to abuse or take advantage of the current system do so because they know they can stay. If a quick determination was made within four or five months of that person's arrival in Canada, it would remove abusers and allow refugees to begin to rebuild their lives quickly. In this manner, we would respond to the needs of refugees, and most abusers would not come. The cost would be prohibitive for an illegal immigrant to come here and be sent home shortly afterwards. By cutting down the time for a decision, abuse is eliminated. The confidence of Canadians in our system and laws would be restored.

The other half of the equation is the refugee. How can we be fair to refugees? Rabbi Plaut went to great lengths in outlining the manner in which to be fair to refugees. He insisted on the need for independence of the refugee board, and the right to counsel. He argued that while it is necessary to shorten the process to a minimum, a certain minimum period of time is required for refugee claimants to adequately prepare their cases; the need for procedural fairness should be obvious. Refugees have left their homes because of war and persecution. Their lives and liberty are at stake. Even refugee claimants who one might expect to be fairly articulate, such as lawyers, teachers, and union leaders, have been known to break down during refugee hearings; they have been unable to face the past, unable to talk about the experiences to which that they have been subjected. We must understand that refugee claimants are in a new country, probably they do not speak either English or French. Unquestionably, they are unfamiliar with our laws and procedures.

In his report, Rabbi Plaut considered and rejected various means of arbitrarily excluding certain groups of persons from presenting their claims. The refugee determination system should be open to all claimants; that is, any person arriving in Canada and claiming to be a refugee ought to be given a hearing, and an opportunity to present his or her individual case and be judged on the merits of the claim. This corresponds to the sense of fairness of all Canadians.

Rather than allowing all refugee claimants access, the Government proposes to screen out claimants before they have had a full hearing on the merits, if they come from so-called third safe countries, or if they are unable to establish what the Government refers to as a credible basis for their claims within 72 hours of arrival in Canada.

Rabbi Plaut looked at these concepts and he rejected them. He rejected the idea of screening out those with what are known as "manifestly unfounded claims". He reviewed the practice in those countries that have tried to introduce such a practice only to find it to be unworkable. In other countries, some cases which were at first judged to be manifestly unfounded claims eventually were determined to be refugees by a higher authority.

However, the Government in its wisdom rejected his advice. Under the Government's legislation claimants from countries on a predetermined list established by Cabinet, which may have nothing to do with their personal circumstances, will not get a hearing. There will be no opportunity for them to refute the assumption established by Cabinet that the country to which the Government wants to return them is indeed safe. The inquiry will be limited to determining from where the person came. Members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration have been warned about the dangers of such a practice. Representatives of the United Nations High Commission on Refugees in Canada told the committee the following in March of this year:

> Pakistan may be safe for Afghans in general but not for Iranians—as for Afghans, you have to listen to the claim. There are different political and religious parties among the Afghans. Some of them have good relationships with the government and others do not . . . so even for Afghans who in general are very well treated in Pakistan, we would have to investigate the claim of the individual before saying this man is an Afghan and can be sent back to Pakistan.

Similarly, in the last week or two an Iranian was murdered by one of the Ayatollah's hit men in Europe. This is not the first time it has happened. Many former supporters of the late Shah have been murdered on the streets of Paris and London. Europe is clearly not safe for some Iranians. Some may be safe—people who are not notable members of the community or perhaps young people. However, clearly Europe is not safe for certain individual Iranians. They should not be arbitrarily excluded from our refugee determination process because Cabinet decides, in its imagination, that European countries are safe for Iranians. We must look at each individual case. We must allow people to present their claims and to be judged.

It is false for the Minister, it is false for the Parliamentary Secretary, and it is false for every member of the Conservative Party to say that no genuine refugee will be returned to a country where he or she may face persecution or death; this is just not so. The procedure the Government proposes provides no opportunity for the refugee to make his or her case.

Also it is false for the Minister to say that in all cases the refugee will be given the benefit of the doubt and that even when there is a shred of evidence supporting the claim, as the Minister has said on countless occasions, the claimant will be entitled to a fair hearing. This is just not so. It is not supported by the law before us today.

[Translation]

Instead of advocating giving refugees an honest and fair hearing, the Government proposals totally disregard the consensus flowing from consultations held by Rabbi Plaut and by the House standing committee, consultations to which the Canadian Bar, church authorities and non-government organizations were party. Instead of providing universal access to the system, Mr. Speaker, the Government is suggesting that applications be pre-screened on the basis of arbitrary criteria. Instead of allowing refugees to prepare adequately for a hearing where their life and freedom are at stake, the Government wants to force them through a hearing within 72 hours of their arrival in Canada. Instead of guaranteeing a refugee the right to a lawyer or counsel of his choice, this hasty process denies this basic right as guaranteed by our Charter of Rights. We must bear in mind the situation of refugees: not only is Canada a foreign country to them, but in most instances they do not know a soul here. More often than not they are advised by non-government organizations, refugee assistance agencies and church representatives. These organizations rely on volunteers and are forever strapped for financial resources. So how do you expect these organizations to intervene within 72 hours? Is there one individual who is prepared to say that refugees will be treated fairly and equitably under this system?

[English]

If fairness is the issue, there are further considerations. When Canadians travel abroad or participate in international meetings, we are often pleasantly surprised by the strong and considerable reputation of Canada. This reputation is founded on our contributions to the international community, going back to the days of Pearson, to our peacekeeping efforts, and to our record of aid to Third World countries.

The generosity of Canadians has also extended to refugees. In 1986 the Nansen Medal was awarded to the people of Canada by the United Nations. Who was Nansen? He was a Norwegian, an Arctic explorer, and oceanographer, best remembered for his work for the relief of suffering peoples. He was responsible for the repatriation from Russia of 500,000 prisoners of war from the German and Austro-Hungarian armies. In 1921 he succeeded in raising funds to bring relief to famine-stricken Russia. In 1922, at his initiative, an international agreement was signed in Geneva, introducing the identification card for displaced persons, known as the Nansen passport.

Think of the cruel irony. In 1986 Canadian people received a medal named after Nansen who gave displaced persons, persons without documentation, identification cards. In 1987 the Government wants to throw refugees without documents in jail.

The reputation of our country is also due to its nature. I have been impressed on visits abroad about the advantages of living in and coming from a bilingual country. There is hardly a world forum in which we do not participate. We are involved in the Commonwealth and La Francophonie. When I visited a refugee camp on the border of Thailand and Cambodia I was filled with pride on meeting Canadian volunteers, doctors, and nurses who acted as interpreters between Americans who spoke no French and Belgians or French who spoke no English. To me that is how Canadians can play a special role in the international community.

We are seen as a principled nation, a caring nation, and we ought to be concerned about the effect of this legislation on the international community and on how other countries treat refugees. We have to be concerned about the effect of this legislation on the UN Convention. The basic thrust of this legislation is that the Government does not want refugees to make claims in Canada. It wants to select refugees abroad, something which we do more out of our need for immigration than out of concern for the plight of refugees.

The Minister does not say so directly—

. . . The question was put to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) the other night when he was being interviewed on Le Point: How do you expect refugees to come to Canada? He replied: Let them come any way they can.

But they want to deny them any way to come to Canada without first filing an application with our embassies abroad.

[English]

Line up abroad, that is what this Government is saying. That is why the Minister wants increased fines for transportation companies. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what will happen if all countries tell refugees to line up abroad? What will happen to refugees fleeing for their lives if all they have is the right to wait in line and apply to immigrate from an embassy in a country where they face persecution? Should Canada not be leading the fight to preserve the United Nations Convention so that refugees can continue to have the ability to effect some salvation on their own, to move spontaneously to a safe haven without visas, without lining up at an embassy door or without proper documentation? That is the whole purpose of the United Nations Convention.

Is it fair for Canada to lead the world in denying refugees this right?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke at some length on the subject of screening. In that respect I have one question that I would like to put to him.

In 1980, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) was the Minister of Immigration. At that time there was a very famous case involving a gentleman by the name of Mr. Giuseppe Calamusa who had been convicted in Italy of three criminal offences. He came to Canada illegally in 1968. He was deported on five occasions and charged in Toronto with counterfeiting. He skipped bail in 1976, and in 1977 he was convicted and imprisoned. Sometime after 1980 he got into his car and drove to Winnipeg, turned up at the then Minister's office and asked for a ministerial permit. The Minister had a member of his staff drive this gentleman in a government car down to Emerson, Manitoba, where they did a loop around the immigration building and then presented him with a ministerial permit.

In view of the Hon. Member's interest in screening can he tell me whether the former Minister of Immigration, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry, had prospective immigrants properly screened or was that his idea of screening people who should be admitted into Canada?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I am only vaguely familiar with the facts of the case to which the Hon. Member refers. I recall the name, perhaps as a result of questions having been raised in the House. I would like to ask the Hon. Member what that has to do with the debate we are having here today? Was this person admitted into Canada as a refugee? Was he admitted as a landed immigrant under immigration procedures or under refugee procedures? Quite frankly, I do not know what the Hon. Member is talking about. I wonder if he does.

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) has demonstrated his concern for Convention refugees by visiting with me refugee camps in Thailand and Malaysia. He has participated in the process of bringing refugees to Canada through the legitimate route laid down by the United Nations Convention. Does the Hon. Member feel that it is fair that illegal aliens should be able to jump the refugee process by coming directly to Canada? Does he not agree that the 12 million refugees in refugee camps around the world, Convention refugees as designated by the United Nations, who have been waiting for months and years and who perhaps will never be received, should have priority and that the system should be respected? Those 12 million people are equally concerned with this situation and do not like the line-jumping either. Does the Hon. Member not agree that they have a prior right and that we should try to preserve the system?

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his kind remarks. We ought to go on another trip again soon. It was very enjoyable, not because it was a joy-ride—it was not. On the contrary, it was hard work, but we were working for a good cause.

Does the Hon. Member not recognize that some of the people who have been accepted as refugees by making claims in Canada have been recognized as refugees? Are those people not legitimate? Is that not what we are trying to preserve? Is that not why we are so upset because of an arbitrary screening process that would possibly and inevitably rule out some of those people?

Does the Hon. Member not recognize that the concerns we have and the concerns experts have, including Rabbi Plaut, are legitimate? Does he think that the only wisdom is on the government side?

Mr. Wenman: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Hon. Member that it would appear, although it has not been proven yet, that perhaps some of these refugees tried to come through a third country. They, for example, bypassed Germany, thus bypassing all the refugees in the camps there. They could have gone there and got into the process in that way. Surely the Hon. Member understands that there must be a system, a system which does not allow bypassing of third countries. Surely he understands that we cannot allow racketeers or privateers to abuse that system any more than the pirates off Thailand can be allowed to continue their piracy. Until we can establish a better system, we must maintain control, not only in the interest of Canada but in the interest of the 12 million refugees who want to come here or to other countries. Line-jumping cannot be allowed to continue if we are to be just and fair.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member to think through his argument. He said that some of these people have come to Canada through a third country. Sure, they come through a third country. We do not have any refugee-producing states on our borders. If people had to come directly from a refugee-producing state in order to claim refugee status no one would be able to make a claim in Canada. The whole purpose of the Convention is to allow people to make claims, to move spontaneously on their own.

As long as human beings have a breath of life in them, as long as they have a desire to survive, they will find ways around the bureaucratic systems established by Governments. They will find ways to save their lives. They will find ways of not lingering in refugee camps.

I would like the Hon. Member to reflect on the fact that in the 1920s and the 1930s, there was a Canadian immigration regulation which said that one could not immigrate to Canada if one could not come here by continuous journey.

Mr. McCurdy: Same rule for the same purpose.

Mr. Berger: It is the same rule that we are talking about today, a rule which was discredited in those times.

I would ask the Hon. Member to read a speech I made some months ago in which I quoted a predecessor of mine, Sam Jacobs, who used to say that if Jesus of Nazareth had to come to Canada under that kind of system, he would have been refused entry because he could not have come here by continuous journey. There were a few other factors which would have been in his way as well.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A number of us on this side have the distinct impression that there was not adequate time allowed for the questioning of the previous speaker and that no—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I keep really good track of all the times, and I have given the Hon. Member at least a minute and a half over his time.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me some time today to address Bill C-84. I would like to put a few of my views on the record, views which will hopefully help this debate. I know that this debate has been fairly intensive on both sides of the House, but I think there are some issues on which we agree and I think we should take a look at how we can go from there.

From 1973 to 1979, I had responsibilities as immigration critic while we were in opposition. At that time, the then Government presented a Green Paper on immigration and we travelled the country to get the views of Canadians, many of which were similar to the views that are being expressed in this debate. Legislation was then introduced and this legislation still primarily governs immigration in Canada today.

At that time, though there were differences of opinions on specific points, there was also a lot of agreement on the immigration legislation. The principles on which it was based at that time still exist today and those principles must be repeated. First, Canada needs more immigrants. I believe that that is not a point that is at issue in the House of Commons.

Let me put on my hat as Minister of National Health and Welfare. Demographic studies and projections for Canada are being conducted in my Department on behalf of the Government and are made public. From those studies, it becomes evident very quickly to any objective observer that Canada has benefited greatly from immigration. I do not think we could describe Canada without describing the immigration flow as that is the nature of Canada.

From a demographic point of view, we do need more immigration. Comparing the aging population in Canada to the fertility rates of Canadian women of child-bearing age, it becomes clear very quickly that we do need more immigration, and I believe that on that point we do agree.

Second, I think we all agree that Canada has accepted refugees, is presently accepting refugees, and should and will accept refugees in the future. I believe it is important to keep that in mind. Today's debate, despite its intensity, is not about whether or not Canada should accept refugees. The question is, however, how people should be accepted as refugees.

Third, each country in the world, no matter how generous it is in receiving immigrants, has taken upon itself as part of its sovereignty both the right and the responsibility to put both legal and regulatory conditions on how people enter the country. That is part and parcel of the sovereignty of a country. I believe that some Canadians feel today that Canada's ability to control the manner in which people enter the country has been seriously jeopardized, and that is a fundamental principle underlying the actions of the Government.

I would hope that there is no disagreement among all sides of the House on those three points. If that is the case, then let us look at the record.

Quite frankly, I was more saddened than shocked by some of the words used by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) to describe my friend and colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). To say that someone is barbaric is something that surely should not flow from the lips of a Member of Parliament when describing another Member, whether inside the House or out.

I do not think I am giving away any cabinet confidences when I say that I know that the Minister of Employment and Immigration has always said that we need more immigrants. To use words to describe him like those used by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry is totally unacceptable.

On page 8005 of yesterday's Hansard, the Hon. Member alludes to the fact that the Minister could possibly be racist because he wants to accept immigrants on the following basis:

> They want to decide whether it is the colour of their skin or their hair or their religion which determines whether they are bona fide refugees.

I believe that most objective observers would say that when using those kinds of words, one is ascribing to a person racial overtones. I do not think that has a place either in this House or in this debate. I feel more sorrow than anything else when I hear that kind of a description of my hon. friend and colleague, the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

If those principles to which I have referred apply, it is very interesting to note what has happened to immigration in the last 10 years. Combining refugee and designated classes, in 1978, Canada landed 913 people. The law changed at that time, so that has to be taken into consideration.

I am not trying to be partisan because the pattern continued after our defeat in 1980, but in 1979, the Government said that it would take more boat people from Indochina and we asked church groups, NGOs and others to co-operate. They co-operated beyond any of our expectations in the best Canadian tradition. That year, we landed 27,528 refugees.

In 1980, as that program came into full bloom, that figure was 40,348. Then in 1981, the figure went down to 14,979. Who was the Minister then? It was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). The next year it was 16,925. It then dropped to 13,967 in 1983. In 1984, it started going up, to 15,342. In 1985, it went up to 16,760. In 1986, 17,145. Up to the end of June of this year we are at 12,168. Assuming roughly the same amount in the second six months, the number could be well over 20,000 for the year.

The point I am making is that the Opposition says this Government is against refugees, and that is absolutely wrong. The numbers point the other way. I ask the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry and his colleagues why fulminate against this Government today when their Government had a rate lower than either the Government of 1979-80 or this Government?

Mr. Caccia: We are talking about the legislation you are introducing today, you jerk.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): At least I finally have his attention. He does not want to face the truth.

Mr. Caccia: Talk about this Bill.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will talk about this legislation. The Minister said that we will continue not only the present level of immigration, he said on second reading that he was willing to signal to the House when he is obligated under the legislation, an amendment I moved at that time, to come in with higher targets. Surely we have to go with the evidence rather than the rhetoric or emotions such as demonstrated by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia).

The second point I would like to make is that there has been a change. That change flowed from the Singh case. This has to be understood. To every country in the world that receives immigrants, including Switzerland, Sweden, the U.S. and the U.K., when a person sets foot on its territory that person is deemed not to be in the country for the purpose of exercising all legislative rights until that person's status had been regularized. That was a convenient legal way of being able to determine what that person's status was. It gave the country the power of maintaining its regulations and its sovereignty. In Canada the Singh case reversed that. To my understanding, this is the only country in the world faced with that situation. That interim period is no longer considered valid under our Charter of Rights. Therefore, if a person comes into this country, legally or illegally, from the moment he or she touches Canadian soil they are covered by the Charter and the need for an oral hearing.

The point is that one can see very quickly why our immigration laws have to be changed. Not to reduce the number of refugees who are coming here legally but so that people cannot thwart either the will of Parliament or the fair judgment of Canadians.

Mr. Waddell: What about the UN Convention?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Hon. Member refers to the UN Convention. I have it here before me because that is the next point I wanted to make.

The Opposition says that what we are doing is a violation of the UN Convention. That is not what the UN Commissioner for Refugees says at all. However, if that is the case, is Switzerland outside the convention? Are Sweden and Norway outside the convention? To ask the question is to answer it. It is simply not true. It might be a point of debate but it is not true. If one looks at the comments of the UN Commissioner relative to Bill C-55, a Bill which is not before us but which is tandem to Bill C-84, you will find that he would like to recommend some changes to Bill C-55 to "have as good a model of refugee acceptance as possible". Obviously he is trying to work towards the ideal model. He indicates very clearly, "The UNHCR does not suggest that any aspects of the proposed system are contrary to the convention".

This Government will maintain its international obligations. We are not in contravention of those obligations. This Government will maintain the historic traditions of Canada with respect to immigrants and refugees. However, we cannot violate a system so that anyone in the world can take it upon himself or herself to come to Canada and have rights which they do not have anywhere else in determining the manner in which they stay or how long they stay. That is fair and that is just.

Let us come now to the matter of destroyed documentation. It is interesting to note that a number of people who have come here to Canada to claim refugee status, before they were able to get on a conveyance to Canada, in most cases airlines, they had to have proper documentation. If they did not, I suggest in many cases the airline would not have accepted them as passengers. Therefore, one has to ask: Why destroy the documents? Is the Opposition saying that because someone destroys their travel documents they should have some right of access to the system before those who are in refugee camps? Is that the argument they want to put forward?

I suggest that the reason these people are destroying documents is that a number of them have status—

Mr. Waddell: They are fraudulent documents.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I will get to that, too. We have had indications just recently of people who have come here and had status in Denmark. They chose to get on an aircraft to Canada and before landing they destroyed their documents in order that it would not be known they had status in Denmark. That is the kind of thing we are dealing with. Yes, there are fraudulent documents, but surely it is incumbent upon the Government of any country to check first on whether they are fraudulent. Surely Canadians expect nothing less from their Government.

There are those who will argue that we should have universal access. They do not like to put it quite that way but that is the result of their argument.

Mr. Berger: We put it exactly that way.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): So you are in favour of universal access?

Mr. Berger: Yes, I am!

Mr. Epp (Provencher): All right, let us look at that. The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) says exactly what he is in favour of. He is saying to Canadians, and they have to understand this, that everyone who decides to come to Canada and claim refugee status should have access.

Mr. Berger: Refugees.

Mr. Weiner: Five billion people.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): If that is his argument, that is totally ludicrous. No Government of any country accepts that kind of principle. We hear, for example, about Sweden. Sweden is used as the ideal model. Sweden takes approximately 1,000 refugees a year. I have given you the numbers, Mr. Speaker, of refugees that Canada has taken and that the Minister says we will continue to take. It is interesting to note that when a person claims refugee status in Sweden the first government official he or she comes in contact with is a member of the state police.

• (1610)

I think it is time that Canadians knew the facts and were not simply drawn to an emotional argument that Canada is the only country in the world which is being restrictive. In fact, how often do we hear that the United States is not a safe third country? The fact is that the United States has taken more refugees than any other country and Canada has taken the next highest number.

Mr. McCurdy: No it didn't.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): I am talking about refugees that have refugee status. We have U.N. obligations and humanitarian obligations, Mr. Speaker. We are saying very clearly that this legislation is needed to maintain those principles which have been part of Canada's traditions.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, the Minister was just referring to universal access as though people who are in favour of it had some kind of disease. I am in favour of universal access and I am proud of it. Rabbi Plaut is in favour of universal access as well. On page 91 of his report he says:

> A guiding principle of refugee determination is that of access to the process. It must be available to all refugees to ensure that we act according to the principle of non-refoulement— —which is the most important and really the only obligation under the U.N. Convention.

Rabbi Plaut deals with the question of manifestly unfounded claims and the pre-screening process which the Government proposes to introduce. I would like to read to the Minister what he says about that. He quotes Professor Madsen and says:

> —the noted scholar in the field, has observed that unstated administrative decisions of collective inadmissibility have endangered the refugee process in many countries.

The Minister was talking about practices in other countries. Does he not think that Canada has a responsibility to ensure that we preserve the system that was established in 1951? Does he not think that Canada has a special obligation? He talked about 18,000 people last year. He knows very well that that 18,000 included Portuguese and Turks and that the Government waited months before imposing visas on those countries. Why does he believe it is so necessary to impose artificial and unjustified screens on our refugee determination process?

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Member and I disagree on a number of points. We have already stated our varying points on universal access. I do not believe that universal access works. No other refugee system has universal access. I have pointed out very clearly that the signal which the judgment on the Singh case sent to the world was that Canada's immigration laws worked.

The Member referred to 1951, and I think we must also refer to 1978. However, there were changing circumstances, both with the Charter and with the Singh case in 1985. I do not believe that universal access is the manner through which Canada should take the number of refugees which we have said we will. It is not in the Canadian interest to be the only country with universal access. We cannot send the signal to the rest of the world that that is the manner in which our system will work.

The Member said that we have a backlog. He knows that there was a backlog before the Government came into office, albeit not as large as it is today. The Minister has said that we need more resources, and I think that is absolutely correct, although I think those resources could have been in place earlier. However, since the signals from the Singh case became known worldwide the flow of refugee claimants has increased to the numbers that we have today.

Canada is not out of step. We are leading in terms of refugee determination and in terms of the hearings. The Member cannot give me examples of any country which accepts more refugees and has a more open policy than Canada would have with this legislation.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, one must judge a speech on the basis of whether it is credible and whether the speaker uses the facts and information in his hands in a proper and honest way. The statements just made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) have totally and completely undermined his case. He has obviously attempted to use inaccurate and false figures which do not describe the conditions.

For example, he indicated that in 1984, the last year in which there was a Liberal Government dealing with refugees, there were only 15,342 refugees. I refer the Minister to the annual report tabled by the Department of Employment and Immigration which indicates that over 20,000 were in fact accepted. With regard to 1982, the Minister said there were something like 14,000 or 15,000. In fact, there were 22,000. He said that in 1983 there were 13,967. In fact, there were 17,000.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare, using the reports tabled by the Department itself, is using false and misleading figures. I think it is important that the record be corrected and that the Minister read the reports which were tabled by his own Department before he makes such allegations in the House. At least we could expect proper reading of the information and data as it exists, not as it is fabricated and manufactured.

I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare gave the game away when he said that he does not believe in universal access. He is in fact denying virtually every agreement we have signed internationally under the United Nations Covenant. Article 14 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights indicates that "everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy, in other countries, asylum from persecution". Everyone has the right to seek that in other countries.

The United Nations Declaration on Territorial Asylum, in Article 3(1), says that everyone has the right to the principle of non-rejection. Resolution (67)14 on Asylum to Persons in Danger of Persecution adopted by the Committee of Ministers of the Council of Europe, says the same. The OAU has the same provision.

What is perhaps most interesting is that the executive committee of the United Nations Commission on Refugees, on which a senior official of Canada sits, passed an executive order which specifically directs itself to the inequities of applying to transportation companies the responsibility of screening refugee applicants. In so doing, it says that it runs counter to the United Nations Convention and that we are the first country in that Convention to adopt that kind of practice. We are a member of the executive committee so they cannot plead ignorance. The executive committee went on to say:

• (1620)

> The obligation to examine the claims of asylum-seekers cannot be delegated by States to private companies such as transport carriers. The Executive Committee of the High Commissioner's Programme has recommended in this regard that the determination of refugee status requires appropriate procedural guarantees including a complete personal interview by a fully-qualified official and, whenever possible, by an official of the authority competent to determine refugee status.

Does he mean to say that we are turning over to an airline attendant that responsibility which we, as a member of the executive committee, were adopting in this kind of resolution?

Once again, as we said in earlier remarks, the Government knows better. It has received contrary advice and now it is attempting to defend something that is totally indefensible. In the meantime, it is using false facts and figures to do it.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that we have been using wrong figures. I have been using immigration figures right from the Department which he headed—

Mr. Axworthy: That is the report.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Here are the figures.

Mr. Axworthy: That is the report that was tabled in Parliament.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): The Member can say what he wants. I could even go on to total landings for the period in which he was Minister. Maybe we should remind him because when he came into office, he was down to 89,000 landings. We are now at 125,000.

Mr. Caccia: We are talking about refugees. You are mixing it up. We are talking about refugees, you nitwit.

Mr. Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Berger: Point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) on a point of order.

Mr. Berger: Thank you for recognizing me on this important point of order. The Minister should not mix up immigration with refugee policy. Please don't do that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now over.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie)— Environmental Affairs—Lyell Island logging operations. (b) Obstacles to settlement; the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier)— The Constitution—Promotion of French and English linguistic duality—Position of Government and provinces. (b) Inclusion of special provisions in Constitution—Prime Minister's position; the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Sovereignty— Canadian airspace—Proposed transportation of plutonium.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) has the floor.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, there are times in the history of a nation when the true character of that nation is tested. Those times are particularly times of fear and uncertainty.

When we look back to the history of our country, we can examine the response of Canada as a nation on those occasions. I think of the time in the 1940s, during World War II, when Canadians of Japanese origin were alleged to be threats to the security of Canada and, under the provisions of the War Measures Act, those Canadians were wrenched from their land, their homes and interned. That injustice has still not been remedied today.

I think as well back to 1970 when again it was alleged that there was a threat to the security of Canada sufficient to invoke the provisions of the War Measures Act once again, this time in peacetime. Over 200 Canadians were arrested in the middle of the night, never charged, and we recognize now that that was a serious abuse of the law.

They were threats to the security of our nation, yet now we see clearly that these events were in fact shameful blots on our history. They were based upon perceived threats which did not in fact exist in reality.

The opinion polls showed very clearly that 80 per cent or 90 per cent of Canadians supported the internment of Canadians of Japanese origin, supported the proclamation of the War Measures Act. Yet today, surely we as Canadians recognize that that was wrong.

I am proud that my Party and its predecessor, the CCF, was prepared to stand up in the face of that public opinion and recognize that this was wrong.

Once again, today, we see a Government which is prepared to take advantage of an atmosphere of fear, yes, and of uncertainty, to bring forward legislation that history will similarly condemn and that we in the NDP say is profoundly dangerous and constitutes an assault on the basic rights and freedoms set out in the Charter of Rights, in international conventions, and under international law. It is legislation that, in effect, constitutes a War Measures Act in the refugees area.

Once again, we have this abuse of the most basic and fundamental rights and liberties of the people on Canadian territory.

As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, I recognize very clearly the concern that is felt by people in the face of what they perceive as injustice and as unfairness. As a Member of Parliament from British Columbia, and as the representative of the people of Burnaby, I want to make it very clear that my constituents—and I know that those of my colleagues feel the same—are concerned and angry about what they rightly perceive to be abuses of Canada's refugee determination system.

I have received hundreds of letters and telephone calls from my constituents. I have spoken personally with many of them. There are two or three basic themes which have emerged in the course of those conversations and in many letters and telephone calls. First, there is a deep sense of anger at what is perceived to be queue-jumping. People who have waited for members of their families to join them, in some cases for months or years, feel a sense of anger and injustice when others try to short circuit that process by filing phoney refugee claims. I think of the Turks, the Brazilians and the Portuguese who abused our system by claiming to be Jehovah Witnesses and being persecuted. Quite understandably, those who have been attempting to play by the rules are deeply offended when they see others who would abuse that system.

Second, my constituents, and I am sure most Canadians, are angered when they see others who would profit from and exploit those who are seeking to enter Canada, in some cases seeking to enter Canada illegally. Clearly, strong and effective legislation is needed to ensure that we respond to that kind of profiteering and exploitation of human misery.

Finally, the concern that I have heard, particularly from members of visible minorities, is one about a backlash. Yesterday, I even spoke with a young Canadian of Sikh origin from South Burnaby. He said that he has to work doubly hard now to have people accept him and his family. He was speaking of himself and his family and a backlash that has occurred against visible minorities in this country. There is a very large Sikh community in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia. I see the Hon. Member from Mississauga here. I know there is a large Sikh community in his area as well. The Sikh community in Canada is an overwhelmingly law-abiding, decent and upstanding community. Yet because of the actions of a very small minority there has been a backlash, and there has certainly been a backlash as a result of other recent events.

Another young recent immigrant to Canada talked to me. He is from Vancouver. A few days previously he had read in the newspaper and seen on television a story about three people seeking refugee status. They were members of a wrestling team from Bulgaria. He asked me why it is that there seems to be a double standard, a sense of hypocrisy. The same Canadians who voiced their concerns—and I am not speaking here of all of them but certainly of some of them—about abuses in one area are silent when it comes to refugees whose skin happens to be of a different colour. These are the concerns which have been expressed about queue jumping, profiteering and about the effects of a backlash. These concerns have been expressed by the people of Burnaby, and I think they are felt generally by many Canadians.

The question we must surely ask ourselves is, has the Tory Government genuinely responded to these concerns in a sensitive way, or has it instead used these concerns as an excuse to bring in legislation which is dangerous, in breach of our international obligations, in breach of the provisions of the Immigration Act itself, which violates the fundamental guarantees set out in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and that which ultimately condemn people fleeing persecution to certain torture or death? I suggest that it is the latter.

Let us examine whether the Government has really succeeded in dealing with genuine concerns, that is that there not be an abuse of the system and there not be profiteering. One part of this legislation would make it a criminal act for church groups, Amnesty International or for individual Canadians to assist refugees attempting to flee from repressive regimes to enter Canada, refugees who do not have travel documents. How can it possibly be suggested that a church group, be it the Mennonite Church or any other group, which seeks to assist a family fleeing from the murderous regime in El Salvador who arrives on Canada's border without a travel document, will be subject to prosecution, to fines and to jail? Clearly this is totally unacceptable.

Twenty-five percent of the refugees who seek to enter Canada in fact are not in possession of documents, and that is not surprising in many cases. This Bill would permit the detention of these individuals for up to 28 days in jail. Surely that is a step backward. It would permit the wire tap and the seizing of cars, for example, of those church groups and other volunteer organization which assist individuals who are fleeing from oppression in other parts of the world.

We certainly would agree with legislation that would attack those who would profit from the entry into Canada of illegal immigrants or refugees, those who would attempt to take advantage of clandestine entry in order to make money. That we would support. However, we reject an approach which would be subject to criminal sanction those who would assist genuine refugees.

Clause 8 of the legislation would allow the Government to turn away a ship which lands on Canada's shore without affording to those on board that ship a basic hearing to ensure that indeed they are not genuine refugees. That provision of this legislation is clearly in breach of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as interpreted by the Supreme Court of Canada. The Supreme Court of Canada in the Singh decision made it clear that the Charter of Rights requires an oral hearing for all who claim refugee status in Canada. This Bill would deny that. Who would make the decision to turn the ship away, a Coast Guard official? That would be totally unacceptable to this Party.

We say again that we must examine Canada's history and recognize clearly that in 1914 with the Komagata Maru and in 1939 with the St. Louis, we condemned refugees to death. We must never again adopt legislation which would allow for that possibility.

Another area of concern is the provision with respect to security. As this legislation stands, the Bill would allow genuine refugees to be denied access to the refugee process if a certificate is filed suggesting they may be a threat to the security of Canada. Who provides that information? The information is provided by CSIS. The Security Intelligence Review Committee has said in it most recent report that CSIS does not understand that the foreign policy objectives of our allies and of other countries are not necessarily Canada's foreign policy objectives, which could condemn many refugees to torture or death.

Those are some concerns with respect to the legislation. The Bill flies in the face of our existing commitments under international law and it flies in the face of Section 3 of the Immigration Act itself which requires Canada to fulfil our international legal obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and the persecuted.

In closing, I want to point out that there is another route. The present law obviously is not satisfactory. It has led to abuses and to lengthy delays in the refugee determination process. People have taken advantage of those delays. However, in 1985, the Parliamentary Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration came up with a unanimous report urging the Government to adopt a system which would ensure that there are in fact hearings and that our obligations under international law and the Charter would be respected. Not only that committee, but the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), from whom we will be hearing in just a moment, stated that the refugee legislation tabled by the Government, Bill C-55, would make it almost impossible for genuine refugees to make a claim. The Hon. Member said the procedure set out to adjudicate claims to refugee status in the Bill is fundamentally flawed. We will have an opportunity to hear directly from that Hon. Member.

In conclusion, I wish to say that this Bill is wrong. The Government is pandering to the deepest fears and insecurities of Canadians. It is offering a false and dangerous solution. It is a shameful trampling on the basic rights and freedoms of genuine refugees who seek to claim refugee status. It is an implementation of that policy which was eloquently described by Irving Abella in his book with respect to the closing of the doors on immigrants and Jewish refugees: "None was too many". If this Bill is adopted, quite clearly we will threaten the lives of people who are fleeing from tyranny and oppression.

We in the House, and we in the New Democratic Party, will not accept that fundamental denial of Canada's obligations and traditions under international law.

Mr. Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais).

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, this is a very important day for me and for all Canadian men and women. A great many Members in this House and a number of people outside are impatiently waiting for my reaction to Bill C-84. Today and tomorrow, I as Member for La Prairie, like Lot, will open my door to strangers, these men and women, these children and these old people who have been seeking refuge here. Let us protect them.

Over the past few hours I read and re-read Bill C-84. I discussed the issue with the highest-ranking civil and religious authorities of this country. Yes, last evening I had a very long meeting with the Right Hon. the Prime Minister and leader of my Party. I had lengthy discussions with spokesmen for immigrant and refugee service organizations. I also spoke with Canadian Bar representatives. I also had telephone conversations with representatives of international organizations, including the United Nations. And I took refuge in the Book of Ecclesiastes, a work of wisdom written more than 3,000 years ago. Then I got to work, I began observing all acts of oppression committed under the sun, everywhere oppressed people crying and nobody to comfort them. Harshly treated by their tyrants, there is no one to help them. I noticed that the labour of man and his every effort to succeed are motivated by the jealousy he feels towards his fellow man. Again this is "vanity and vexation of spirit", chapter 4, verses 6, 8.

In recent months, Mr. Speaker, the media have often highlighted how cumbersome and time-consuming the refugee status determination process is in Canada as it applies to people seeking protection against persecution. Were we to complete every prescribed stage, such determination might take from two to five years. And delays breed abuses, Mr. Speaker, because status applicants have precious little to lose by working five years in Canada as they wait, perhaps to be deported some day. Very obviously a reform is urgent. All refugee organizations have been asking for one for a number of years. Mr. Speaker, the Government has released a whole series of studies and reports on this issue. Many private agencies have also submitted briefs and recommendations. Joint consultations have been held, and the House of Commons Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which I am proud to chair has also made recommendations in this field.

Today, years after problems have been identified and solutions advocated, Parliament is about to come up with concrete measures. Unfortunately, this desire for action stems from a series of irregular incidents rather than from humanitarian motives, or quite simply because of the need to update an old statute.

In 1987 the Government introduced Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act.

The changes in the refugee determination process which are proposed in this bill are such that it would be practically impossible for a great number of legitimate refugees to apply for refugee status. Not to mention that the provisions of the bill probably go against the United Nations Convention on the Status of Refugees, which Canada has signed and ratified, as well as against our own Charter of rights and freedoms. In July, 1987, after 174 Sikhs claiming refugee status had landed on the coast of Nova Scotia, the Government announced that it would tighten its legislation.

There are, I am sure, other rational and appropriate solutions to this problem, solutions that would not have us break an international agreement on refugees and that could not be challenged in court on the basis of the Canadian Charter of rights and freedoms.

Years of reports, debate and recommendations have brought to light such principles and methods as would allow Canada to determine refugee status in a swift and equitable way in response to applications of would be refugees.

[English]

Short-term problems stem from long-term inadequacies of policy. Canadian immigration policy is tighter now, on a proportionate basis, than it has been at any time in our history, except during the Depression years. If our over-all immigration levels are low, our refugee numbers are laughable. For example, last year 1,000 places were allotted to the continent of Africa. The result of this overly restrictive stance has been to create a good many illegal immigrants and, second, to establish a market for smugglers and con artists. That is why we are here today. It piles yet more people into the hopper of an already heavily backlogged system. It forces periodic amnesty to be declared to clear the backlog, thereby encouraging still more desperate attempts to jump the queue, which starts the cycle all over again.

The best way to put the smugglers out of business is to dry up the demand for their services. The best way to stop the queue jumping is to shorten the queue. In short, if we want more orderly borders, we need more liberal borders.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jourdenais: I did not use the word "liberal" as a Party, I used it as a liberal policy to do it.

Establishing a quicker, clearer process at the same time would also help to cut the backlog and hence reduce the incentive to overload the system in hopes of an amnesty. Instead, the Government intends to tighten the admission of refugees via Bill C-55, which will guarantee that the process remain arbitrary, confusing, and endless.

There may be a case for this type of rough, frontier justice if immigration were harmful to the country. We need look no further for evidence to the contrary than ourselves, our parents, and their parents. We may also look at the success of the Tamils in the year since their arrival. Yet, the same myths that immigration raises unemployment, depresses wages, and others such myths that are less respectable still persist today. Those were the myths that were used to try to keep out our grandfathers.

There is no natural population level for Canada. If there were, it is remarkable that it should so often be assumed to be the present level. Moreover, there are economic benefits to having more people, especially more immigrants. Larger populations mean economies of scale. Regular infusion of skills, resourcefulness, and entrepreneurial drive that immigrants typically bring to Canadians can only be healthy. Unless immigration is markedly increased, a declining fertility rate will mean an aging, dwindling population in years to come. Our immigration problem is too few people, not too many.

No one knows what the correct level of immigration is, or what it should be. It is a safe bet that it is very much higher than it is at present. To bring us up to our historical average as a proportion of population would mean an intake of 275,000 people per year. However, if we are to welcome greater numbers of immigrants in years to come, then the Government must begin now to prepare the way. It must educate the public on the real value of immigrants who arrive on our shores and stop racism. They do us a favour by coming to Canada; it is not the other way around. It must appeal to our highest selves, not appease the instinctive fear of a stranger at our door.

The recent increase in the movement of asylum seekers from the Third World into the countries of western Europe and North America has become a serious preoccupation of Governments in those regions. These movements, when seen in the context of a parallel migratory flow from the poorer nations toward these same countries, have given rise to concern for Governments and populations alike.

Many affected countries have reacted with a variety of legal and administrative measures aimed at stemming the flow. These measures include the introduction of visa requirements for nationals of particular countries and the imposition of sanctions on transport carriers for transporting illegal immigrants from these or any other country.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees is concerned that measures taken to maintain such movements affect asylum seekers who are in need of protection. Such concern may not arise if the measures were to be limited to countries which do not normally produce refugees. However, when they are applied to persons leaving countries which produce refugees, they may have very serious consequences for the protection of refugees.

In this context it should be noted that persons wishing to leave their country of origin in search of asylum elsewhere may often not be able to depart in a regular manner and in possession of full documentation. Similar considerations often apply to persons who, for reasons of personal security, are compelled to leave another country where they originally had been considered to have found protection.

With regard to sanctions against transport companies carrying aliens without proper documentation, they give rise to serious concern that no distinction is made between aliens in general and asylum seekers in search of international protection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jourdenais: This note underlines the dramatic consequences of such measures for refugees and asylum seekers in need of protection.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), the distinguished and dedicated Member for Roberval, intended to tar with the same brush our friends in the Church and the con men and criminals we should banish from our shores. That is the main reason why Clause 9, especially, should be amended.

Mr. Speaker, I support the principle of having a system that is fair and just for everyone, and which gives all prospective Canadians, both refugees and immigrants, the same opportunities. However, we must not act with undue haste. Some major changes must be made, and we will have to take another look at this Bill and do some fine tuning to prevent abuse. Believe me, we are all human and we all make mistakes. We will not all be sitting in this House ten years hence, and we must be sure this principles are upheld. Our successors may make mistakes as well, so we must provide for that eventuality.

If these amendments, which are necessary, are accepted, I will feel even better about the rest of the Bill. We can no longer let our system be abused by criminals who sell their services, when according to our concept of justice, everyone has the right to immigrate freely to our country, subject to certain conditions. In fact, we should put the perpetrators of this unjustified abuse, who use our laws to their own advantage, in prison for life.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) and I want to ask him whether he has any amendments to propose or suggest today. I would refer more particularly to Section 95.1 which affects those who aid or abet the coming into Canada of persons who are not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa or passport and who belong to Canadian organizations such as churches and other types of organizations. How would he go about amending this Bill to reflect the principles he just described?

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, to answer the Hon. Member's question, I mentioned in my speech just now that one clause, I believe it was Clause 9, should be amended specifically to protect church people in Canada. I said earlier in my speech that I had examined the Bill last night. I had to because I was very busy yesterday and I had not been able to look at the Bill. I believe the concept of Bill C-84, and I imagine that is the Bill to which you are referring, was necessary, and we must be able to enforce these provisions to prevent people from taking advantage of legislation that was passed in 1976 but did not provide for the kind of incidents we have seen in 1987. I think Bill C-84 will match Bill C-55, and as far as I can see, the only clause we could amend is Clause 9. So I leave Clause 2 and if I remember correctly, you referred to Section 95.1

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), who is also the distinguished Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. In addition to simply commending him, I should like to express a great deal of gratitude from our vantage point. The Hon. Member was not only correct and appropriate in the remarks he placed before the House of Commons this afternoon, but I think he also exhibited the courage and conviction to stay the course and to speak up for what is just and what is right despite being a member of the Government.

Those words will not be lost on this Chamber. Those words will not be lost on those Canadians who are looking very particularly at the House of Commons these days. They will understand that while Members on all sides clearly favour an end to abuse, there are also Members of Parliament, including Members on the government side, who are vigilant and wish to pass a proper and just piece of legislation.

Therefore, I think the Hon. Member has done this House and the interest of a progressive immigration policy a great service this afternoon, and I would appreciate his continued support.

In the dying minutes of the debate today, while the Hon. Member articulated some concerns about and amendments to Bill C-84, and in light of the fact that he said this Bill goes together with Bill C-55, perhaps he could share with the House any comments he may have in terms of amending Bill C-55, so that we have a package which is truly reflective of the spirit of Canadians in the last 15 years to 20 years when it comes to dealing with refugees and immigrants?

Mr. Jourdenais: In response, and to thank the Hon. Member for compliments which were not really necessary, I acted simply, first like a man, a human being. I followed the dictates of my conscience. I have been doing that ever since I first came here, and I want to take this opportunity to thank my Party colleagues precisely because I am allowed to express my opinion even though it is not aslways consistent with their will and their views.

With respect to amendments to Bill C-55, I have about a minute left so I will not have time to elaborate, my colleague would know that we have already debated a number of them. To satisfy your curiosity, there is one concerning the pre-screening test. We will discuss it when Bill C-55 comes up for debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed with the consideration of Private Members' Business, as listed on today's Order Paper.

ORGANIZED CRIME

ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

The House resumed, from May 4, 1987, consideration of the motion of Miss Nicholson:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:

1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada, particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking;

2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;

3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activites;

4. legislation to enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;

5. effective and appropriate punishment in instances of organized crime murder conspiracy; and

6. possible guidelines for enforcement agencies in dealing with witnesses against organized crime; and the amendment of Mr. Kaplan (p. 5709).

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec East): Mr. Speaker, for a few minutes I want to deal with organized crime and that part of Motion M-44 which proposes the establishment of a Royal Commission to investigate and make recommendations on legislation to enable the Government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for her interest in this matter. I am sure all my colleagues realize how important it is for society that our legislation provide for the confiscation of the proceeds of organized crime.

A number of criminal activities—illegal drug trafficking, to name one—are often organized and carried out much like major corporation business operations. Those activities generate tremendous profits that are then used to finance other criminal activities and to infiltrate legitimate businesses.

It is estimated that organized crime includes all types of criminal activities that come under the general heading of continuing agreements between people for gainful purposes. It is believed that one of the most effective ways of reducing that kind of crime is to eliminate the profit motive by getting at the gains produced by it.

Although organized crime can derive tremendous profits from illegal activities, Canadian law as it now stands has no provisions for freezing, seizing or confiscating monies gained from crime. In 1976, for the first time in Canada, legislative measures were passed to deal with the possession of illicit gains. Section 312 of the Criminal Code makes it an offence to have in one's possession property unlawfully obtained by whatever means.

Investigations and prosecution of offences under Section 312 unfortunately proved ineffective because investigation powers and procedures capable of identifying, freezing and seizing criminal proceeds are not adequately developed, either in law or in practice. For instance, money deposited into a bank account and real property cannot be seized.

In cases where gains from criminal transactions cannot be identified, there is often no way to prevent the divestiture of property before judicial proceedings are completed.

The confiscation of proceeds cannot be ordered under Section 312 where the prosecution of an offence under that section leads to a guilty verdict.

The efficacy of confiscation procedures depends on the possibility of seizing property to ensure that it can be preserved until proceedings are completed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay) has the floor.

Mr. Tremblay: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing to reinstate a degree of silence in this dignified Chamber.

As I said, the efficacy of confiscation procedures depends on the possibility of seizing property so that it can be preserved until proceedings are completed. That kind of procedure already exists in civil law where there is a danger that the property in dispute disappear before the court makes a determination as to how it should be disposed of.

The system of search warrants under the Criminal Code provides for the seizure and retention of all things that can be classified as evidence of an offence, instruments used to commit an offence; or the subject of the offence itself.

Those provisions do not apply to the proceeds of criminal acts unless they are indeed property or monies derived from the committing of an offence.

When it is impossible to seize the holdings physically, for instance when the proceeds have been put into real estates, shares or maybe bank deposits, the provisions of the Criminal Code are not far-reaching enough to allow for the seizure and freezing of these proceeds and no provision of the current penal code can prevent the accused from disposing of them.

I should like to remind my hon. colleagues that the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Hnatyshyn) recently introduced in the House a Bill to amend the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act and the Narcotic Control Act to deal specifically with the proceeds of crime. Bill C-61 provides our courts with new powers to seize the proceeds of crime and the police with new judicially-controlled investigative powers allowing for the search of people and premises and the seizure of assets. Finally, the Bill would provide third parties having an interest on a seizable assets with protective and redress mechanisms.

The Bill will create new offences in order to fight against the laundering of the proceeds of organized crime, illegal drug trafficking as well as the possession of property obtained through drug offences. If the Bill is adopted, it will provide an efficient tool for the fight against organized crime.

I recognize that the motion moved by my colleague the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) is well-founded, but in view of the Bill introduced recently by the Government to fight against organized crime and especially against the accumulated proceeds of crime, I must oppose motion M-44.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this afternoon on motion M-44, moved by the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), and to speak to the amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), that the Royal Commission report to the House within six months of its appointment.

Mr. Speaker, this motion deals with one of the important issues of the day. It is worded as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of appointing a Royal Commission to investigate organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations and recommendations on:
> 1. the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada—
> 2. the extent to which organized crime is connected to the institutions of Canadian society;
> 3. action taken by the governments of other countries to investigate and curtail organized crime activity;
> 4. legislation to enable the government to identify and appropriate the proceeds of organized crime;
> 5. effective and appropriate punishment—
> 6. possible guidelines—

Mr. Speaker, we have had some very striking examples in this country of illegal activities, and we have been able to deal with these in very effective ways. I am thinking of the tainted meat scandal in Quebec and the colourful saga of the Dubois clan. There was an inquiry which at the time made it possible to put a stop to these activities and at the same time inform the public of their existence.

I believe that in 1987, a similar approach, and I am thinking of a Royal Commission of Inquiry, might prove beneficial. I know opponents of this procedure argue that the cost is too high, the process takes too long, and so forth. The amendment proposed by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) to have the report submitted within six months of the Royal Commission's appointment would seem to deal with these concerns, at least with the concerns raised at the time. As for the financial side of the matter, I would like to deal with this briefly later on in my speech.

Mr. Speaker, in June the House spent a lot of time debating capital punishment, and so far hardly anything has been done to reduce the crime rate. We were promised a number of measures and studies, but we have yet to see anything tangible from the Government or the Committee on Justice and Solicitor General. I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mr. Daubney), for instance, who chairs the Committee on Justice, has proposed to review the whole prison system and the whole problem of criminality.

Mr. Speaker, this issue is important, and the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) should be congratulated on her initiative, which could be more effective, progressive and useful in the long term in attacking organized crime than the Government initiative of launching a debate on capital punishment, which, as we all know, was resolved by the decision of the House not to reinstate capital punishment in Canada. However, we are still waiting for this Government to take some practical action to reduce the crime rate and provide a feeling of security for Canadians in their own country.

As for the monetary aspect, Mr. Speaker, the cost of criminal activities has been estimated at $2.2 billion in Ontario, and at $10 billion in Canada as a whole. This is to reply to the economic argument that a Royal Commission is costly. We have to realize that the hidden costs of criminality, since criminals operate out of the public eye, amount to $10 billion a year. I imagine that a Royal Commission could cost us a few million dollars and that such an investment would surely yield a lot in return.

What we have to ask, obviously, is this: Would the economic advantages of attacking this problem and preventing abuses not benefit all Canadians? The answer is obviously yes. Naturally, if we can stop the rise of crime by keeping Canadians better informed about criminal activities, we could save substantial amounts and put a stop to these criminal activities.

I have not heard as yet the exact figure of what a Royal Commission would cost. I do not know whether it is available but at any rate, I think that those costs can easily be determined on the basis of other Royal Commissions. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that ultimately, there will be spinoffs and we will save money.

The Canadian people and the general public often do in a naive way, if you want, things that they consider quite trivial and that take place every day. For instance, in a tavern, they will bet on a hockey or a football game without being concerned with the consequences, even though that is in fact illegal. Because you are dealing with people who make a buck through bets on football or baseball games, or any other sport event, and those dealings take place in taverns or elsewhere and are organized by groups of people who are benefiting from those investments, I think that Canadians should know that illicit groups grab an enormous amount of money, taking advantage, as I said earlier, of that laxity, that lack of interest that some people have occasionally for common practices, bets in this case, and other events as trivial as a horse race or a baseball game. They think as many other people that they do not harm anybody, when they make a $2 bet on a horse or a football game. But in fact, Mr. Speaker, those two dollars are unlawfully laundered by illegal agencies and groups to their profit. This is how some unlawfully earned amounts of money are gradually embezzeled and used for illegal activities. Those funds will then be invested in other illegal activities which will bring about more money for those involved. That is why in Canada, every year, organized crime rakes in some $10 billion from unlawful activities. Being outside traditional economic systems, all the money does not benefit Canadian society very much. Indeed, it contributes to social degradation. Criminal activities generate human misery and, if I may say so, are the greatest misery inflation factors in Canada. The rich do not play those games and bet those two dollars, Mr. Speaker. More often than not, those with low or average income are attracted by such games, fall victims to and enrich profiteers.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, and I could cite many more but I think my time is almost up, I believe the motion brought forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), is highly justified and timely. That is why I will vote for it, and I urge my colleagues in the House, regardless of their political affiliation, to do likewise.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) once again for her initiative, and I hope the Government will act on it in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to speak to the amendment put to the motion of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). In doing so, I would like to commend her for bringing the issue of organized crime to the attention of the House. I fear, however, that the proposed Royal Commission to investigate organized crime might have an effect opposite to the one presumably desired by the Hon. Member who put the motion forward.

Some Canadians, perhaps influenced by the American media, have vastly inflated views and ideas of the extent of organized crime in Canada and of the extent of organized crime involvement in Canadian social, economic and political institutions. I certainly do not want to minimize the threat posed by organized crime in Canada, particularly in relation to drug trafficking, and indeed I cannot help but feel that in this area and some other areas of criminal activity, the matter of capital punishment ought not to be forgotten.

I note that the previous speaker made reference to what he termed the futility of such a debate. I certainly take issue with that statement and suggest that ultimately, society will revisit that area in relation to this very topic which is under discussion today. In any event, I am confident that the combined law-enforcement efforts of all Governments in Canada are becoming increasingly effective in controlling organized crime.

As well, I think it should be noted that there is no evidence of widespread organized criminal involvement in Canadian institutions. In my view, therefore, there is little benefit to be derived from establishing a royal commission to delve into these matters.

Again, contrary to the views of the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), I frankly fail to appreciate the spin-off dollar value about which he spoke relating to the establishment of a royal commission. Obviously, royal commissions are extremely expensive, and because the rules of evidence at such commissions are less rigorous than those in courts of law, the evidence adduced before such commissions cannot be used in court proceedings. Therefore, such proceedings would at best be of little value to law enforcement.

Moreover, I think it is possible that a royal commission could unnecessarily alarm Canadians by creating the impression that organized crime was not being adequately addressed by Canadian authorities and by the courts. In addition, one cannot help but be concerned that a royal commission could tend to deflect both attention and resources from ongoing intelligence and enforcement efforts and possibly retard the investigation and prosecution of these cases.

Just as important, the proposed royal commission might constrain ongoing federal, national, and international initiatives aimed at organized crime control. As I noted earlier, the federal, provincial and municipal Governments are already deeply involved in and heavily committed to controlling organized crime. National intelligence systems are in place and are being upgraded regularly. Police forces are combining their knowledge, experience and investigative skills in joint forces operations targeting major organized crime figures.

Major institutions, such as the Canadian banking community, are examining ways and means of minimizing the extent to which they can be used to launder money. Both federal and provincial government Departments are increasingly exploring the extent to which statutes other than the Criminal Code can be applied to the prevention or control of organized crime. Police training, both provincially and nationally, is being upgraded to ensure that officers have the knowledge and skills necessary to detect organized crime and to gather evidence required for the successful prosecution of major cases. These efforts are not widely appreciated and reported on in the Canadian media. In Canada we tend to proceed more quietly and with less fanfare than in the U.S.

In my view, the approach of Canadian law enforcement authorities to organized crime has been and is very effective. It focuses efforts and resources and reflects excellent co-operation between all jurisdictions in the prevention, detection, investigation and prosecution of organized crime figures. It is particularly concerned with the rights of persons who become innocent and unwitting participants in organized crime.

Law enforcement policy and activities operate to preserve the confidence of Canadians in the integrity of social, political and economic institutions as the major influences constraining the corruption that organized crime attempts to promote. Key to this is the integrity of Canada's police, courts and other law enforcement institutions as our front line defence against organized crime.

It has been stated that the criminal underworld in a given society is a direct reflection of the integrity and morality of the institutions of government and business. We must sustain policy and programs to ensure that Canada will never become a country in which the underworld can take root. This demands continued vigilance by governments and law enforcement authorities.

I believe this Government recognized the Hon. Member's legitimate concern respecting organized crime. Canada continues to act in concert with the provinces to enhance enforcement efforts. A royal commission would add little to the mechanisms already in place or under development to deal with organized crime. Rather, this House should support and encourage the federal and provincial Governments in their law enforcement activities, including the expeditious handling of legislation designed to make the law more effective in dealing with organized crime.

While I am confident that the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity reflects serious concern over the extent of organized crime in Canadian society and the availability of measures to facilitate law enforcement efforts, I would like to assure her that members of the Canadian police community, and other dedicated criminal justice professionals, are acting competently in their response to the problem. They have the confidence of this Government and merit the support of all Members of this House, and Canadians generally. It is for those reasons, I believe, it would not be in the best interests of Canadians and our efforts against organized crime to establish at great expense a royal commission which I believe would be of little use in attacking the problems and perils posed by organized crime to Canadian society.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed in the speech given by the Hon. Member speaking on behalf of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn). We have heard the speech before and it did not address the important points brought forward in this debate. There is a sense of complacency, a feeling that everything that needs to be done is being done. I think that assertion has to be challenged on two grounds.

First, this is a legislative Chamber. We pass laws here. That is the prerogative and responsibility of this House, not of the police or the administrative arm of justice, but of legislators. It is clear that legislative change is required. The President's commission in the U.S. came forward with recommendations requiring major statutory change. Why would we abdicate our responsibilities when there is a clear need in that country to make changes? The Hon. Member seems to be assuming that everything that can be done, except in the area of reform legislation, is being done. I for one do not believe that we should have others take on our responsibilities. That is why I believe the proposal of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), as amended, is a proper response to the problem by a Member of the national legislative Chamber of this country.

My second ground is that one has to accept almost as a matter of faith that the problem is being handled. Yet what evidence is offered to support that claim? I heard nothing that would give one any sense of confidence that the worldwide problem of the laundering of drug money has somehow bypassed Canada. Yet that assertion has been made. One of the real values of a royal commission would be to tell us what is going on. I think it is particularly appropriate because of the changes instituted in other countries to deal with this problem. If they tighten their control, that will put pressure on the Canadian financial system if we have not made similar reforms. That kind of dirty money will find an outlet. If other countries apply new laws, then it is almost automatic that organized crime will try to find other countries to access. If we have turned a blind eye to the problem, it follows that we would become a target for that kind of penetration by organized crime in its efforts to find a safe haven for its immense financial resources.

I have another comment to make. I do so with some reticence but it has to be said. The Government's defence for not supporting this resolution is that it will cost too much. I read somewhere in the last couple of weeks that the legal fees the Government is paying for the defence of one of its former Ministers in front of a royal commission is now close to $1 million. The defence fund for Mr. Stevens was originally $200,000 and has now gone up substantially, to say nothing of the cost of the commission itself which I think has come close to $3 million. That was to investigate the alleged wrongdoings of one Minister of the Government. The Government is now claiming that it does not want to spend any money to look at the widespread problem of organized crime which affects a wide variety of activities for reasons of economy. I do not think that is a fair and proper balance of responsibilities. I am not necessarily condemning the actions of the Government with respect to the royal commission for Mr. Stevens and his actions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. It is the Member for York Peel (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Axworthy: I am sorry, the Member for York Peel (Mr. Stevens). However, I am pointing out that the Government was prepared to do that but seems to be saying that we cannot afford that with regard to organized crime and its financial implications in Canada.

I also do not agree with the argument that money spent on a royal commission would be taken away from law enforcement. It may well be that a royal commission, finding efficacious ways of dealing with the problem, could save a lot of money in law enforcement by learning where and how to implement effective measures. Rather than sailing blindly into this problem, we would know where to go.

I believe that the amendment which was introduced by the Whip of our Party is a real effort to ensure that there are limitations. The Hon. Member for Trinity is not prescribing a long-term pension plan for a royal commission. This is something which would be quick and to the point, would address the problems, and would pass the results back to the Government.

I wonder why there is this reluctance, this hesitancy to come to grips with the issue. Is it because it would expose things which the Government does not want exposed? I raise this not in an accusatory way but in a questioning way. It may be that there is some anxiety that a royal commission would reveal that we are not taking the proper measures to meet the problem and that a careful examination of the problem would reveal real weaknesses.

This is a Private Member's Motion with no partisanship attached to it. It is a clear reflection of an important interest. I remind Members of the debate which ensued in this House last spring on the issue of capital punishment. I listened to and read most of the speeches on that issue. All Members on both sides of the issue stated that they believed that their constituents were concerned about the possibility of increased crime or violence in society. We differed on the solution to the problem as it applied to capital punishment.

This measure is directed against one part of that problem. It is designed to deal with a part of that issue, to come to grips with a grueling and expanding difficulty, and to allow independent judgment to be made and recommendations to follow. I hope that the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General will deal with other aspects which were raised in that debate with regard to the judicial and the penal systems.

I think we must confess that we do not know much about organized crime. It is something we see in movies and read exposés about by former members of the gang. However, we have never examined that problem effectively in this country. This is an opportunity to open the lid on a very crucial and important problem which has been examined in the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries. I believe the Member has taken a very important initiative as a private Member. I hope that in the spirit in which it was brought forward and in the interests of this Parliament of protecting its prerogative to look at new legislation and important issues, we will support the Member in her efforts.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I rise with very serious thoughts tonight in the House of Commons. Having been elected only in September, 1984, I take very seriously the remarks of my more experienced colleague, the Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy). I would like to congratulate my hon. colleague, the Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson), on the motion she has presented. It is very important for us. I come from Quebec and perhaps I should speak in French.

Sometimes I feel I ought to speak in French. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I would like all Canadian men and women to understand what such a measure means to us. So I will speak in English from time to time, and perhaps I will say a few words in French as well. But French-speaking men and women of Canada must know how important Bill C-61 is to us.

[English]

Organized crime is usually defined as the activities of a group of persons who seek to operate outside the control of the Canadian people and their governments. It can involve hundreds of criminals working within structures as complex as those of any large corporation, subject to laws which may be more rigidly enforced than those of legitimate governments. Its actions are not those of legitimate governments, but of conspiracies.

The core of organized crime activity is the supplying of illegal goods and services—gambling, loan-sharking, narcotics and other forms of vice—to countless numbers of citizen customers. Organized crime is also extensively and deeply involved in legitimate business. This is the danger. Here it applies illegitimate methods—monopolization, terrorism, extortion and tax evasion—to drive out or control lawful ownership and leadership and to exact illegal profits from the public. To carry on its many activities secure from governmental interference organized crime corrupts public officials.

Organized crime wants money and power. It is different from law-abiding organizations and individuals with those same objectives in that the ethical and moral standards the criminals adhere to, the laws and regulations they obey, and the procedures they use are private and secret. They devise them themselves, change them when they see fit, and administer them summarily and invisibly.

Organized crime affects the lives of thousands of Canadians, but because it desperately preserves its invisibility many—perhaps most—Canadians are not aware of how they are affected or even that they are affected at all. The price of a loaf of bread may go up by 1 cent as the result of an organized crime conspiracy, but a consumer has no way of knowing why he is paying more. We cannot allow this to happen, Mr. Speaker.

It is organized crime's accumulation of money, not the individual transactions by which the money is accumulated, that has a great and threatening impact on Canadian society. Organized crime in Canada exists by virtue of the power it purchases with its money. The millions of dollars it can invest in narcotics or use for lay-off money give it power over the lives of thousands of people and over the quality of life in the legitimate economic system that presently exists in Canada.

The millions of dollars it can spend on corrupting public officials may give it power to maim or murder people inside or outside the organization with impunity. It will give it power to extort money from businessmen and to conduct business in many fields without regard to administrative regulations, to avoid payment of income tax.

The purpose of organized crime is not competition with visible, legal government but the nullification of it. When organized crime places an official in public office it nullifies law enforcement.

I am very serious about supporting the motion that has been brought forward by the Hon. Member for Trinity. As everyone in the House is aware, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) tabled a Bill to deal with the problem of proceeds of crime. Bill C-61 proposes a number of amendments to the Criminal Code, the Food and Drugs Act, and the Narcotic Control Act, and addresses the problem of illegally obtained proceeds and assets by providing law enforcement agencies with the necessary powers to investigate, freeze and seize the proceeds of certain crimes and by providing the courts with the powers to confiscate the proceeds of these crimes.

I am sympathetic with the motion that has been brought forward by my hon. colleague, the Member for Trinity.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress again that it is not very often that we have the chance, the opportunity, to change and improve our laws.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, as the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine, that it is important as Quebecers or as Canadians, that we recognize that it is our security system and our body of laws which provide the means to fight the lawlessness we have in Canada, Mr. Speaker, and that the Government is here to guarantee our security and to protect Canadian men and women.

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to address the House tonight and speak about drug trafficking. As the father of two young children, I can tell you, as most fathers and mothers across the country, that the drug problem is one of the worst problems that exist in the world today. To solve that problem in Canada and around the world, it is necessary that Canada co-operate with other countries to guarantee a better control at the international level.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today highlights drug trafficking and its connection with organized crime. I would like to talk about the various measures taken by this Government.

The previous Solicitor General led, in 1985, the Canadian delegation to the seventh United Nations conference on the prevention of crime and the treatment of offenders, held in Milan. Hon. Members and Canadians will be glad to know that Canada played a leadership role in the drafting of measures to fight international drug trafficking. Besides supporting United Nations initiatives, in particular the new convention on illicit drug traffic, we are co-operating with members of the Economic Summit in the fight against drug abuse.

On April 25, 1986, Canada ratified, along with France, the United States and Italy an agreement on drug control. That agreement is the result of efforts made since 1970 by the four-power Conference including representatives from the Police nationale française, the U.S. Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs and Canada's RCMP. On March 4, 1986, Canada fully endorsed along with Italy the five-year agreement to prevent and eliminate the traffic in narcotics and dangerous drugs. Mr. Speaker, I think Hon. Members will be glad to hear that Canada will host here in Ottawa the coming four-power Conference next month.

I referred earlier to the development of a draft United Nations Convention on the illicit traffic in drugs. Canada co-sponsored, on the occasion of the 39th Session of the United Nations Commission on narcotic drugs held in February, 1985, a resolution on the starting up of the development of a draft convention against the illicit traffic in narcotics and psychotropic substances. That new convention is viewed as a necessary and effective tool for the implementation of the measures against drug trafficking. A Canadian delegation including representatives from the secretariat of the Department of the Solicitor General and the RCMP attended in February 1986 an extraordinary session of the United Nations Narcotics Commission, where significant progress were made as to the identification of matters to be included in the draft convention.

With the exception of certain matters concerning the control of ships and extradition, Canada generally supports the proposed provisions.

Canada views as a top priority the inclusion in the draft convention of a provision to allow each member State to trace, freeze and confiscate profits derived from drug trafficking. Most importantly, it will enact for its part domestic legislative measures making it easier to seize and confiscate those profits, especially those derived from trafficking in illicit drugs.

Another important proposed provision would be an essential tool against the manufacturing of forbidden drugs. It deals with the international control of the major precursors used in the manufacturing of forbidden drugs, for the purpose for instance of extracting heroine from opium and cocaine from coca.

Another still, dealing with controlled deliveries, that is the transportation of forbidden drugs under specified, known and police-approved conditions, is aimed primarily at extending the offence so as to allow the arrest and conviction of the major actors rather than simply seizing the drugs and arresting middlemen.

Controlled deliveries are an effective technique which, where successful, enables to identify the major conspirators and instigators and to go right up to the top of an international connection.

As far as mutual judiciary assistance is concerned, significant progress has been made in the area of international exchange of information aimed at fighting the illicit drug trade. Efforts from now on will be aimed at transmitting evidence and information that can lead to the seizure of profits derived from drug trafficking. Unlawfully acquired property to all practical purposes remains out of reach, by reason of conflicting national and international legal systems. The United Nations Narcotics Division decided to look at measures that could go against banking security rules that encourage the apparently legitimate accumulation of those illicit proceeds in countries recognized as tax havens. Meanwhile, Canada has ratified a treaty of mutual judiciary assistance it had with the United States and is currently negotiating similar agreements with Switzerland, the Bahamas and other Commonwealth countries.

The proposed convention deals with illegal drug trafficking by means of commercial carriers.

In most cases, air carriers and shipping companies are not held responsible for the illegal drugs hidden in luggage or on passengers, but they are held responsible when clearly their employees or crews are directly involved or facilitate the illegal activities through loopholes in their security procedures.

Another provision deals with cross-border co-operation.

Canada recognizes that co-operation between the various intelligence services within the international community is of vital importance and should be intensified in the future, especially in the area of drug trafficking and the investment of its proceeds in apparently legitimate commercial enterprises. For the Government, encouraging co-operation between producing, transiting and consuming countries is therefore a priority issue.

The United Nations International Conference on the Fight Against Drug Abuse and Drug Trafficking will be held next June in Vienna. Hon. Members are certainly aware that Mr. Tamar Oppenheimer, the Conference's Secretary General, is a Canadian who once headed the United Nations Drug Division. Moreover, Canada will be represented at the conference by a Minister, demonstrating the importance the Government attaches to it. Various problems will be dealt with during this multidisciplinary meeting, including the reduction of the demand, the development of alternative crops, the use of drugs for medical purposes, the seizure of drug-related proceeds, the treatment and rehabilitation of drug addicts, and the increase of law enforcement resources.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I cannot overlook the efforts made by the RCMP and the other provincial and municipal police forces.

Indeed, each year at the Canadian Police College the RCMP offer training to police officers from every corner of the world and they send experts to various countries, those of the Commonwealth included, to teach the skills required to fight against the different types of crimes we are talking about. People responsible for enforcing law in Canada, especially RCMP officers, work in close co-operation with their counterparts in other democratic western nations to fight against every kind of crime, particularly organized crime which knows no boundaries. This fight requires special skills and costs a lot of money, and this creates difficulties in times of financial restraints.

Mr. Speaker, given everything that is being done now I doubt whether a Royal Commission on organized crime would serve a useful purpose.

• (1750)

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton—Strathcona): The motion before us, Sir, calls upon the Government to appoint a royal commission to look into organized crime in Canada and to include in its report observations on six different matters, all important matters, and I would like to salute the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) for bringing forward this motion, which I wholly support.

Some people will say that as someone who used to prosecute organized crime and drug offenders I would not be very hard to convince, and I admit I have a long-time experience with that sort of thing. I believe this is a matter which the Government of Canada should consider.

Someone made the point earlier that the establishment of a royal commission might alarm Canadians. May I point out, with respect, Mr. Speaker, that we have had a royal commission on the question of alleged illegal activities of the RCMP and on just about every subject from A to Z. I think Canadians believe in royal commissions. Some people believe it is one of our national sports. I do not think that such a commission on this matter would alarm anyone. I think it would turn the white light of public focus on the activities of organized crime in this country.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Senator Kefauver's committee on crime investigation in the United States Senate in 1950 and 1951, before you were born, Sir, was very useful in focusing attention on the involvement of organized crime in United States politics. That is not one of the items the Hon. Member for Trinity has mentioned, but I think we would all like to know, as democratically elected politicians, whether there is any involvement by organized crime in politics at any level in this country.

One of the subjects the Hon. Member has proposed the Government should look at is the extent to which organized crime is present and active in Canada particularly in such activities as drug trafficking and loan-sharking. As a western Canadian, I have some statistics which might indicate possible answers to this question and it may be something the commission would look at. For the past six years, I am told, British Columbia has reported violent crime rates as high or higher than any of the 50 States in the United States. Vancouver's murder rate, which is low by U.S. standards, is now three times Canada's national average. My Province of Alberta as well as Saskatchewan and Manitoba now consistently post violent crime rates which rival those in Florida, New York and Maryland, the three states which top—am I out of time?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member extra time the next time this Bill comes up. I think he has at least seven minutes left in his speech.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto, with amendments, to which the concurrence of this House is desired.

I also have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House of the recommended amendments, observations and recommendations on general patent law amendments as contained in the seventh report of the special committee of the Senate on Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

• (1800)

For the benefit of Hon. Members, these messages will be printed in today's Votes and Proceedings, and copies are now available at the Table in both official languages.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—LYELL ISLAND LOGGING OPERATIONS—OBSTACLES TO SETTLEMENT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pursue a question that I asked some time ago with respect to logging on Lyell Island.

What I am doing today is not pursuing the question, because the question that I asked at that time has been overtaken by events. Since I asked the question, there has been an agreement to have a national park in South Moresby. That is something a great many Canadians take a lot of satisfaction from. I thought it would be useful to take this opportunity to congratulate all those who were involved in arriving at that agreement. I wish to cite a number of people who I know were instrumental in making that agreement possible.

Perhaps I should begin with the Haida people themselves who, through their own spiritual and historical attachment to South Moresby, were one of the great sources of strength to those people who worked for so many years to have an agreement to create a national park in South Moresby.

One also needs to cite the great host of people who worked in a voluntary manner to advocate the creation of a park. There are too many of those people to begin to name them. I will not attempt to name them, because I would be bound to leave someone out.

One also has to cite people in this Chamber who were instrumental in bringing that agreement to fruition. I congratulate the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) for his involvement in bringing that agreement to fruition. I congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his involvement at the last minute, which one has to assume was instrumental in some way in making an agreement possible.

I congratulate the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm, for having been converted to the cause of having a national park in South Moresby, and resisting the temptation to settle for a provincial park only in that area.

I congratulate the House for the part that it played in creating the appropriate political context for the people to act in who were pushing for a national park. I am thinking of the day when we made procedural history in the House. We had a motion before us moved by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), who as a Member of Parliament for that area has been involved in the struggle to get a national park at South Moresby for many, many years. I am thinking of the day when we agreed somewhat early on in the day that the motion by the Hon. Member for Skeena would be deemed to have been passed and that we could then debate the motion. That unanimous expression of the House of Commons that day created a political context, not only for those outside the House, but also for Mr. Speaker himself to lend his good offices to contributing in whatever way he could to the creation of a national park at South Moresby.

Because the House of Commons had spoken unanimously, he was free to be an advocate of something which by that time had transcended partisan politics. A great many people contributed in many ways, and I think it is useful to put this on record.

Many other things need to happen. We go from this victory for a very special part of creation to other battles which have to be won. One is reminded of the continuing controversy over the Stein Valley, over the Stikine River, and over the Khutzeymateen, an area which is special in respect of grizzly bears. Many issues yet remain to be solved. There will be lots of disagreement and debate in years to come about these matters.

However, I think it is appropriate to comment upon it when there is unanimous agreement in the House of Commons, when that unanimous agreement is followed by an agreement between the federal Government and a provincial Government—in this case, the Government of British Columbia—and when so many people have managed to put the best interests of the future above everything else and arrive at agreement.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) on behalf of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan).

One of the first things the Minister did when he assumed his present portfolio was to announce his commitment to protecting South Moresby as a national park. At that time the provincial Government was still trying to decide whether to continue logging over all of South Moresby, let alone logging in certain areas of Lyell Island. However, that is all past history. Commercial logging will never again be seen on Lyell Island or elsewhere in the park area of South Moresby.

Since the time of the Hon. Member's question in October of last year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has also taken a key role in obtaining the co-operation of the provincial Government toward the establishment of the national park.

Indeed, on July 11 in Victoria, the Prime Minister and the Premier of British Columbia made an important announcement on this matter. I quote from the Prime Minister's speech on that day. He said:

> It is a great pleasure to join with Premier Vander Zalm in signing this historic memorandum of understanding between the Governments of Canada and British Columbia, for the creation of a national park and a national marine park in the South Moresby area of the Queen Charlotte Islands. The Queen Charlottes have been called Canada's Galapagos, and with good reason. In these islands are found flora and fauna unique in the world. The black bear guards its forests, the sea lion stands watch on the coast, and the bald eagle soars in the sky.
> This agreement is about preserving our heritage, it is about protecting our environment, and it is about a new climate of co-operation in our federal-provincial process. It is about meeting the concerns and the objectives of all interested parties in this matter. And all Canadians are interested and proud of the natural beauty which personifies British Columbia.

In speaking about the long and difficult negotiations on South Moresby in his speech, Premier Vander Zalm said:

> It was a good exercise, Prime Minister—because it showed that our Government and your Government—after all is said and done—always seem somehow to manage to reconcile and satisfy not only the interests of our two Governments—but the interests of British Columbians and Canadians.

Not only is there provision for an internationally significant area to be protected forever, but the federal Government will commit itself over an eight year period to paying the $32 million cost of park operations and development, to ensure that South Moresby becomes a world class tourist destination.

Residents of the Queen Charlotte Islands will also benefit substantially from a $50 million regional development fund set up to help diversify the local economy, and logging companies and others will be fairly compensated with the federal Government contribution of $24 million for that purpose.

The next step in the process is to negotiate a formal federal-provincial agreement to establish the park and enable the transfer of lands from the provincial to the federal Government and to outline the general terms for the regional development fund. Canada is working on this on a priority basis. The people of the Queen Charlotte Islands, the Province of British Columbia and, indeed, all of Canada, are anxious to see positive progress in South Moresby as soon as possible. The Government is committed to action on all fronts.

THE CONSTITUTION—PROMOTION OF FRENCH AND ENGLISH LINGUISTIC DUALITY—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT AND PROVINCES—INCLUSION OF SPECIAL PROVISIONS IN CONSTITUTION—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Last June 4, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Government a question concerning the provisions of the Meech-Langevin Accord, the 1987 Constitutional Accord, as it relates to linguistic duality.

Mr. Speaker, we know that section 2.(1)(a) of the Accord signed by the ten provincial premiers and the Prime Minister of Canada, acknowledges the obligation of the Parliament of Canada and the provincial legislatures, and I am quoting word for word, to preserve the fundamental characteristic of Canada referred to in paragraph (1)(a).

Mr. Speaker, this section recognizes the existence of French-speaking Canadians, centred in Quebec but also present elsewhere in Canada, and the existence of English-speaking Canadians, concentrated outside Quebec but also present in Quebec.

That is a basic point. For the first time in the history of Canada such recognition is given supreme status by being included in the Constitution. This is a major step for our country.

Better still, the signatories to the Accord went further by making it constitutionally mandatory for the Parliament of Canada and all provincial legislatures to preserve this fundamental characteristic.

• (1815)

This is a first step. But if they recognize the importance of our language duality by enshrining the principle in the Constitution, why was there not a will to allow it to develop by charging the provinces and the Canadian government with the additional obligation to protect and promote that basic feature? Why have we stopped half-way through that process? That was the heart of my question, the reason why I rose.

Since the agreement was signed, we heard many experts comment on the 1987 Constitutional Agreement. Most of them recognized that a strictly political problem prevented the addition of the obligation to promote language duality in addition to protecting it. Senator Murray, responsible for the matter and Minister in this government, recognized before the Committee that we tried but could go no further. This is too bad. It is too bad for the official language minority groups throughout Canada, either francophones outside Quebec or anglophones in Quebec, because the commitment is to maintain the status quo. Looking at statistics, the assimilation rate of the Canadian francophonie outside Quebec is rising constantly. On the other hand, the birth rate is very low, which means that if the French culture is not promoted outside Quebec, it may well disappear within a matter of years.

Mr. Speaker, the protection of minorities has been a commitment of the Canadian government for years. During the 1987 constitutional negotiations, the Canadian government bowed to provinces for political gains. It did not have the political courage to take on the obligation to promote language duality. We can understand and perhaps even explain that it could not convince the provinces to do that promotion. But that it does not take upon itself, as the Canadian government, not only the obligation to protect but especially the obligation to promote it, I find this, Mr. Speaker, a serious flaw in that constitutional agreement. The minorities, and I know what I am talking about, are disappointed. They were expecting more than that from the federal Government. In answers to questions here in the House and elsewhere the Government told us several times that it would promote linguistic duality through the Official Languages Act which, as you know, was tabled in the House last June.

Mr. Speaker, I say: Very well, so much the better! But I would remind Hon. Members that a statute is not the same thing as a constitution. It is very different. A constitutional obligation cannot be changed overnight. Near unanimity would be required to do so now. A statute can be changed, amended, repealed, indeed this is what we do here every day. I am afraid that it was a mistake not to have entrenched the obligation not only to preserve and protect, but also to promote linguistic duality, and this is why I wanted to know whether the Government intends to amend the Meech-Langevin proposal and to insert, at least at the federal level, the obligation to promote this duality.

Mr. Speaker, there is no need to recall in this House the examples we have had in past months and years of certain Federal agencies, such as the RCMP, which has often shown reluctance and even indifference about complying with the Official Languages Act even though it is a statute of Parliament. I believe that this obligation could be made much stronger by entrenching it in the Constitution instead.

I would ask the Parliamentary Secretary to explain to me whether the government might have changed its views and whether our large Canadian family, both French- and English-speaking, can expect to learn some time from now that the government will change its plans and propose an amendment to the Constitutional Agreement that does not obligate the provinces to anything, please note this, but that makes it an obligation for the Canadian government itself not only to protect but to promote. As suggested by the FFHQ, the Fédération des francophones hors Quebec, we could add a provision allowing provinces to concur in the promotion when they so wish, each province individually. We could have a provision today saying that, the government binds itself to promotion, and provinces would do so in the form of provincial resolutions passed in the province's legislature, under which they could bind themselves to not only protect but promote.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Parliamentary Secretary to transmit to his government the comments I just made and perhaps even to give us an assurance that he will himself defend, as I do, the idea of trying to convince the provinces and the Canadian government to accept to promote language duality, which is essential to us as a people so that we can survive here as full-fledged citizens wherever we live in this country.

Mr. François Gérin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has in the past devoted much of his energies and, in fact, still does, to defending the French fact, for which he is to be commended. In fact, all Conservative Members from Quebec follow his example.

Today, he raised a question regarding the wording of subsection 2(2) of the Constitution Amendment, 1987 which refers to the role of all legislatures in this country, including Parliament and the Quebec Legislature, to preserve Canadian Linguistic duality. This duality is described in subsection 2(1)(a) of the amendment.

The Hon. Member has asked about the federal Government's role in promoting Canada's linguistic duality in light of the proposed subsection 2(2) of the Constitution Amendment, 1987. I can assure the Hon. Member that Parliament's role is as strong as ever and the Official Languages Bill, Bill C-72, recently introduced by the government, in June if I am not mistaken, is a perfect example of how Parliament can promote Canada's linguistic duality. Such measures can only find additional suport in the proposed new constitutional recognition of Canada's linguistic duality.

The Special Joint Committee on the Constitutional Accord is of course examining all the clauses of the proposed Constitution Amendment, 1987 in detail.

One of its great underlying features is the co-operative approach to federalism and this government is confident that such an approach is in the best interests of all Canadians.

SOVEREIGNTY—CANADIAN AIRSPACE—PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, as you probably know, Japan sends its nuclear reactor waste by sea to Europe for reprocessing to recover plutonium which Japan would like to have back for use as a fuel in a new model nuclear reactor. In 1984, one shipment of plutonium was sent by sea from Europe to Japan without mishap. In January of this year, Japan and the U.S. finished five years of negotiations on a draft agreement to transfer up to 226 kilograms of plutonium, which can be used for making nuclear weapons, from Europe to Japan twice a month for the next 30 years. The current plan is to transport the plutonium in jumbo jets from Europe, over northern Canada, to Anchorage, Alaska, for refuelling and then on to Japan.

According to Thomas Homer-Dixon and Carolyn Lee, Canadian Ph.D. candidates at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Canada was advised but not consulted during these negotiations. The agreement is to be ratified by both countries next month and if Canada openly declares now that it will not allow these shipments, the political difficulties in the context of Canada-U.S. relations would be much less than they would be if Canada raised them when the agreement is delivered to the U.S. Congress for ratification. Then the difficulties will be very great. Therefore, the window of opportunity is open now.

The total amount to be carried over Canada is equal to about half the plutonium in the U.S. nuclear arsenal. It is to be shipped as fine powder particles less than one-tenth of a millimetre in size. It does not dissolve in water, stick to soil, and cannot be absorbed by plants. According to Professor Rathjens at MIT, if such a powder is ejected into the atmosphere, as it could be in a large fire resulting from an airplane crash, "much of it could remain airborne for many days and, depending on particle size and meteorological conditions, could travel hundreds or even thousands of miles".

The radioactivity of any plutonium powder released in a crash would increase for several decades as a portion of it decays into a more dangerous isotope. Plutonium has a half life of hundreds to thousands of years depending on the isotope. Although plutonium is relatively harmless if touched or eaten, studies show that inhaling even a minute speck can cause cancer.

Canada has absolutely nothing to gain by allowing two jumbo jets full of plutonium to fly over the Canadian Arctic every month for the next 30 years. On the contrary, we have everything to lose. Even one crash out of the over 700 flights anticipated could kill people as well as caribou, polar bears, and other Arctic wildlife through the slow death of cancer as a result of inhalation of the toxic plutonium dust. Even residents of Yellowknife or cities further south, perhaps including Edmonton, could conceivably be threatened depending on wind and weather conditions, location of the crash site, and the extent of destruction to the casks carrying the plutonium. These risks are avoidable if we say no now.

In a letter to the editor of The Globe and Mail on July 31, 1987, Nobel Prize winner John Polanyi points out that we are dealing with "a total amount of plutonium equal to about half of that in the entire U.S. nuclear arsenal, with all the risks of diversion to military use that this implies. If such traffic proves to be expensive and cumbersome, that is all to the good". He recommended that if this material is to be shipped, it must be by sea under satellite surveillance and escorted by a convoy.

Therefore, my questions to the Parliamentary Secretary are these. Is the Government aware that the time to say no is right now, because the window of opportunity is expiring soon, and that after the agreement is ratified in mid-September the opportunity will be lost?

Second, has Canada already given permission for these flights? That was not at all clear from the answers of the Parliamentary Secretary given two days ago. Third, can the Government, the Minister, and the Parliamentary Secretary assure Canadians that the Government will notify Japan and the United States that Canada will now allow the overflights of plutonium? If it has already notified these two countries, we will be glad to hear about that right now.

Mr. Gordon Towers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, in the matter of the suggested overflights of Canadian territory by aircraft carrying some form of plutonium, I would like to make perfectly clear the position of the Government. First, I would point out that there has been no ratification of any agreement and there have been no decisions made at this time on routing of the material.

I would also reiterate, as mentioned by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) in March of this year, that the movement of all dangerous goods by air is subject to both international convention and domestic legislation. In the international arena, Canada is a signatory nation of the International Civil Aviation Organization, and as such Canada has a number of options available.

First, we can request that pre-notification be given and that approval be received prior to any overflight being taken. In this case we would insist that the most stringent requirements for safe packaging be met and that all safety and inspection requirements be met as well.

Our second option is to deny any overflight by filing a state variance with the International Civil Aviation Organization based on Canada's concern with any inadequate safety measures of such flights.

In the matter of Canada's input with respect to the U.S.-Japan negotiations, Canada made representations to the United States Government in May and August of 1986 and again at a very high level in April of this year to express our concerns in this matter.

In summary, the Government is monitoring this matter very closely. The permission of the Canadian Government would be required on a case-by-case basis before any such overflight could take place and no such overflights would be carried out without expressed Canadian approval. Canadian safety standards are among the highest in the world and any proposal would be fully scrutinized to ensure that these high standards are fully complied with, particularly in the area of safe packaging.

Finally, let me assure the Hon. Member that any decision taken by the Government would make the safety of Canada and Canadians the most important consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House resumed from Thursday, August 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Raymond Garneau (Laval-des-Rapides): Mr. Speaker, thank you for recognizing me and for giving me this opportunity to express my views on second reading of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof.

Mr. Speaker, this debate on second reading is important for all Canadians and for all Members of this House, since the way we approach this debate is an expression, as it were, of our political philosophy and goes to the very heart of what we want to be as a nation and as a society: that is, open and generous to all people throughout the world who face torture and are deprived of their freedom and who are seeking a country of refuge and a safe haven.

Our position on Bill C-84 arises from our concept of the kind of society we want to live in and the role that society can and must play on the international scene.

Today we are not just analysing Bill C-84, we are examining our own conscience. When our children and grandchildren look at this period in our history and see how Canadian men and women, and especially parliamentarians, reacted when a boat with some 100 refugees approached the shores of Nova-Scotia, they will judge us; and today, we should ask ourselves whether our children and grandchildren will be proud of what we as parliamentarians have done. Will they be able to say they are proud of their parliamentary ancestors? Will they be able to say that we acted firmly but also with compassion? Will they say that we acted fairly and humanely? I will leave this question for the time being, but I would like to get back to it later on.

Mr. Speaker, I realize, as I said before, that this is an important problem, but I do not think that today, August 14, 1987, this legislation is as urgently needed as the Government keeps saying. In fact, would you not agree that the emergency is a direct result of this Government's incompetence, a Government that failed to recognize the warning signs of the crisis with which it is faced today and whose extent it has grossly exaggerated? Mr. Speaker, the phony refugee problem has been with us for some time, and as the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) said yesterday or the day before in his speech on second reading, and I quote: "Not only did the Government wait three years to introduce a solution to a problem that was discovered many years ago but it took 10 days from the time it declared an emergency to tell Canadians and parliamentarians when we would be coming back."

Mr. Speaker, the Government's record is appalling. First of all, in April, 1985, if I am not mistaken, we had the Plaut report. This was an impressive document, several hundred pages long, that was prepared by a group of experts and recommended the approach the Government should take to the refugee question. Although the document has been in the Government's possession since the spring of 1985, the Government has failed to follow through on any of the Plaut Commission's recommendations.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, in late 1985 a parliamentary three-Party committee of the House tabled a report, a copy of which I have here. The committee examined the Plaut Commission recommendations and came up with unanimous recommendations of its own. In this document the three Parties—the Government Party and the two opposition Parties—made recommendations to the Government concerning the best way to settle the issue of illegal refugees crossing our borders and gaining entry into this country. Having already turned thumbs down on the Plaut recommendations, the Government again dismissed the recommendations advocated by a committee of this House.

Mr. Speaker, we were told this is an emergency, yet about a year ago a group of Tamils landed on the shores of Nova Scotia. A whole year went by without the Government, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) or anybody else doing anything about it. Now, all of a sudden, we are faced with this makeshift emergency.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the only sentence or the only point which the Government singled out of the Plaut Commission report is the comment which appears as a conclusion on page 215. Here are the words of Rabbi Plaut: "I conclude this report by recalling the remarks made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the Summer of 1984. To a large extent the ability of states to react positively in situations involving refugees depends on the frame of mind of the public."

He also stressed the fact that, unfortunately, there is irrefutable evidence that in recent years public opinion has failed to make the distinction between the very special plight of refugees and the situation of many millions of other foreigners who have attempted to cross borders into countries other than their own. Such confusion led to prejudice towards refugees and dampened the sympathetic attitudes in official circles towards them. We Canadians would be well advised to heed this word of warning.

Mr. Speaker, the Government did heed the warning all right, but it gave a completely different interpretation to the action advocated by Rabbi Plaut, especially so with respect to his caveat. The arrival of a boatload of Sikhs on the shores of Nova Scotia was seen by the Government as an opportunity to rouse public opinion, not to prepare it to react generously to real refugees. Government officials used the incidents which occurred in Nova Scotia to stir public opinion just so they would have an excuse to introduce a stiff measure likely to appease the most conservative wing of the Party in office. Talk about emergency, 10 whole days elapsed before the House was recalled to consider Bill C-84! Had the matter been really urgent, had the Government known what it was doing when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pushed the panic button, it seems to me we would not have been kept waiting for so long before coming back to the House to debate the bill before us.

Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Liberal Party and Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) told the House about the true reason for recalling Parliament, namely to solve the problem of Bill C-22 on pharmaceutical products. Yesterday, the Minister of Employment and Immigration attacked the Liberal position on this issue. Our position is quite clear. As we have maintained in the House for weeks and months, we are opposed to Bill C-22. The Liberal Senators are not alone in their opposition as all Liberal Members of this House have vigorously objected against Bill C-22 in its original form. Today, Government Members are doing their best to create a division between the Liberal Senators and the Liberal Members of this House. We have worked together. We are against the Bill as introduced. I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Roberval, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, that the Quebec Liberal caucus is against the original Bill, and tell him that the real reason for recalling Parliament is to try to make us swallow Bill C-22, which goes against the interests of most Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Bill C-22 will be coming back to the House and we have made our position clear. The previous Liberal Government created the Eastman Commission and our position is that the Government should follow the recommendations of the Eastman Commission to the effect that copyrights on new pharmaceutical products should be protected not for 10 years, but for four to five years. We shall continue to defend this position and the Government will have to accept it because we believe that the legislation it has introduced goes against the interests of the Canadian people.

Let us now come back to Bill C-84, Mr. Speaker. When we look at the basic issues, we have to say clearly that no Liberal Member can approve the abuses resulting from fraudulent claims, cheating and, in some cases, a real racket in human lives. We object to such abuses and we are willing to legislate to provide more appropriate controls and penalties for the offenders. However, this does certainly not mean that we approve Bill C-84 as introduced. This Bill is reactionary and excessive. It exploits unreasonably the present climate of legitimate frustration in Canada caused by the mismanagement of this Government as it attempts to use a difficult situation to try to increase the Government Party's popularity in the polls. Bill C-84 attacks the basic freedoms of Canadians. In other words, Bill C-84 tries to kill a gnat with a canon.

Mr. Speaker, no one questions the fact that the abuses must be eliminated and the system improved. However, does this mean that the legislation should go against our Charter of Rights, our traditions of national development and our traditional immigration policy which is at the very root of the history of this country?

Canada has always welcomed immigrants. The abuses must indeed be corrected. However, it is unacceptable to exploit this situation for partisan purposes, Mr. Speaker.

I would now like to deal more in detail with a few items. Under proposed Section 95.1 in Bill C-84, any individual, any Canadian, any church, any priest, any nun who works in a country where there is no freedom and who is in contact with his or her order here in Canada, all those people helping refugees come to Canada are liable to the same penalties as the so-called immigration consultants whose only motive is to get rich on the backs of the weak and people deprived of any freedom.

Would Canadians accept that a social worker, a priest or a nun be put in prison as a common crook? The Minister says the act must be the same for everybody. But that act is being passed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration, by this Government that treats church people, social workers and charitable institutions that were set up to help people in need as if they were common crooks and smugglers.

Yesterday, I raised the matter of the Stastny brothers. In his answer the Minister claimed I was exaggerating.

Mr. Speaker, I read Section 95.1 again. Can they suggest for instance that the Czech hockey players who left their country on the occasion of a hockey tournament in Vienna to come to Canada and play with the Nordiques were in fact people who wanted to get out of their country? Is it possible to suggest they had their passports with them, knowing what is going on in those totalitarian countries? They jumped into the Nordiques' car and there was a wild chase through Vienna, followed by Czechoslovakia's secret police. Well now, if Marcel Aubut and his assistant were not in breach of Section 95.1 as now proposed, Mr. Speaker, I don't know who can be!

The Minister stated yesterday the section would be interpreted generously. But he will not interpret the act—the courts will, and his immigration officers. How could he say that yesterday from his seat?

Mr. Speaker, as the proposal now stands, Marcel Aubut and Gilles Léger would have been liable to imprisonment for five years. What would have happened to Mr. Peterson, the brother of Ontario's current Premier, who helped the Russian dancer Baryshnikov enter Canada to get out of the Soviet Union—when he brought him in his car from a hotel from which he had escaped to some cottage, in order to protect him while waiting for the Canadian Goverment's answers? Was that not a person, a Canadian helping a political refugee? Can they claim that Baryshnikov had his passport or his visa in his pocket? The fact he did not would have made Mr. Peterson liable to five years' imprisonment.

Does that make sense? Is that the goal pursued by the Government? This is beyond me. And when I hear Hon. Members and the Minister suggest this is a wrong interpretation—please, read that section again. Read that clause again taking into account that it is not necessarily the present or future minister that will have to interpret the Act, but the courts which have to make decisions based on the statute as it stands.

Mr. Speaker, obviously, those who take advantage of the credulity of the destitute, raking off thousands of dollars per person, deserve to be punished and this is why we oppose the Bill as it stands. I ask the government to be more specific and not to put in the same boat social workers, charitable organizations and gangster trafficking in human lives.

Section 103.02(5) provides that an immigration officer may without any warrant collect evidence that an individual is violating the Immigration Act.

However, should we, Mr. Speaker, in order to be fair and firm, trample the rights of citizens, churches and organizations advocating human rights? If a warrant is required to make a search at the place of alleged members of organized crime, why should we allow a search among charitable organizations helping refugees to survive? They are bunched together with traffickers in human lives. Immigration officers are given the right to make a search without a warrant, a right denied to police officers fighting against organized crime. I find such a clause unacceptable and it is repugnant to all liberal minds. Those steps are worthy of a totalitarian regime and not of a great democratic nation.

The Bill provides also for special detention certificates. The Government would like to extend arbitrarily from 48 hours to seven days the detention period, with a possibility for the Minister to add three additional weeks without the so-called refugee having the right to meet an adjudicator. Mr. Speaker, this flies in the face of basic human rights. Again, I feel these are excessive means to reach a goal which is altogether honourable, that of preventing abuse, discovering frauds and punishing profiteers.

Finally, I should like to call the attention of the House on a comment made yesterday by my colleague from York West: If this Bill is adopted as is, it will give rise to a whole series of appeals and recourse before our courts under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. What will be their impact on our system? What will happen, six or 12 months from now, when appeals are made everywhere on the basis of the Charter thus leading to an eventual bog down of the process? Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate to the House what may possibly happen. Our system could become even more chaotic and put even more to the test the patience and confidence of Canadians. Let us draft a Bill which will be sheltered as much as possible from appeals to the courts and accusations of human rights violations, failing which we might be faced with the same problems 12 months from now. And I ask the Minister this: What would you do if two other boats arrived tomorrow morning, filled with real refugees? Now, Mr. Speaker, we must be realistic and Canada has a role to play. I am not saying that we should accept all those men and women who claim to be refugees. That has never been our position on this side of the House. But we believe in universal access, as defined in the international agreements we have signed and, as a Government or a country, we cannot choose arbitrarily those who have the right to submit applications. I was here yesterday when the Hon. Member and Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) indicated that he was against this notion of universal access. I do not know whether the Minister realizes that he is going against the International Conventions which we have signed, because Canada has adhered to this notion of universal access, which does not mean allowing all migrants entry to this country in whatever number whenever they please, but the possibility for a potential refugee seeking refugee status to have access to due process to determine whether he is a true refugee. After that, a country may decide to accept his application or not.

Mr. Speaker, by taking such stringent measures, the Government could weaken its position and become powerless when faced with the false refugee problem. It reminds me of a decision of the Quebec Minister of Finance a few years ago. At the time, drivers using some restricted highways had to pay a 25-cent toll. In an effort to increase considerably his revenues, the Minister of Finance doubled the tolls paid in Quebec on these limited access highway. The negative reaction was such that politically it became indefensible, so that now we have a system where drivers no longer pay tolls on these highways. I say that this Bill goes in the same direction. The Government is using such excessive means that it may end up with an even more difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude and say that I am against any abuse of the system and I condemn all those who try to benefit from the miseries of others. But I also object to a bill which was drafted on the spur of the moment, which does not take into account the realities of the situation and our historic and world-wide reputation as a haven, which ignores the Plaut Commission recommendations as well as the unanimous recommendations of the parliamentary committee which studied the question. I agree with the Government that we must put a stop to abuses, but I simply cannot endorse any of the methods which may very well compromise the rights of genuine refugees and of those who try to help them. I also condemn a Government which has failed to anticipate a problem which had long since been in the making and about which the former administration had given a mandate to the Plaut Commission. The Conservatives did not act on the 1985 recommendations. Today, panic-striken and inspired by opportunism, they are urging the House to adopt a piece of legislation which, far from solving the problem, will make an already deplorable situation even worse and tarnish Canada's international reputation.

Mrs. Mailly: Mr. Speaker, it may be that the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) considers our country's rights and sovereignty as a pesty fly which prevents him and his colleagues from acting as they see fit and destroying our national values. But Canadian rights are not like a fly in the estimation of this Government, they are the very foundation of this country. Hogwash is what we are getting from him, as usual. Listening to him is always a disappointment. He had a leader who was wont to resort to this method of talking nonsense to make a point, but at least there was an element of truth in what his leader Pierre Trudeau would say. But the Hon. Member knows full well that, among other things, for 10 years already we have had a statute which forbids these people to take such illegal steps. What he recommends we let priests and ministers do is already illegal. He also knows very well that we have a very special program for refugees from eastern countries. He knows there are all kinds of programs and services for people like Baryshnikov and all the other Russians and Czechs and other people who want to come to this country. There are special programs. However, that is not the issue here. My question for the Hon. Member is the following. In 1986, the Hon. Member for Outremont (Mrs. Pépin) said it was entirely unacceptable to have an immigrant reception system that penalized bona fide immigrants and a refugee system that penalized bona fide refugees, and that the people who should be punished were those who were trafficking in human misery. Why is the Hon. Member rising in the House today to tell us this unlikely story, a reflection of his Party's contradictory stance? It is entirely beside the point, and he knows that. He is getting political mileage out of people's lives. Today, these smugglers bring people to our shores who are exhausted, sick and ill-fed and maybe even have lice. Are we supposed to wait until people are brought in half-dead? Is the Hon. Member waiting for people to die, for what happened to the Mexicans who were locked up in a boxcar and were dead on arrival? Is that what he wants to happen before we pass legislation to prevent these traffickers from operating?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, it is of course difficult to engage in debate with the Hon. Member for Gatineau (Mrs. Mailly). One is never sure what she said after she has said it. That being the case, I would like to repeat what I said, and I hope that this time, she will understand. We have said time and time again since the very beginning that we have no objection and, in fact, are prepared to support legislation that would genuinely be aimed at traffickers and smugglers, the people who traffick in human lives. However, we want this legislation to differentiate between those people and people who are working for humanitarian causes.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard), the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver all said yesterday that everyone must be equal before the law, with which I fully agree, but the fact is that we are now making the law. We are the ones who will group together under Bill C-84 the racketeers in human lives and the religious, social and humanitarian groups that work to help refugees to find a haven and new freedom in Canada. When we put in the same category the activities of racketeers and those of these other people, we have to remember that it was not Church groups who put these peoples on the train to die, as we heard the Hon. Member say.

I would like to come back to Section 95.1 since the Hon. Member referred to it. This section is new. It says, for instance:

> Every person who knowingly organizes, induces, aids or abets or attempts to organize, induce, aid or abet the coming into Canada of a person who is not in possession of a valid and subsisting visa, passport or travel document where one is required by this Act or the regulations is guilty of an offence and is liable
> (a) on conviction on indictment, to a fine not exceeding ten thousand dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding five years, or to both

Mr. Speaker, this section is quite clear. What choice would a judge have in hearing the case of Marcel Aubut, to whom I have referred, or of the brother of Premier Peterson, or others who provided assistance to people like Baryshnikov or the Stasny brothers? In such cases, is is not absolutely clear that these individuals have knowingly induced, aided or abetted the coming into Canada of other people? This is what the section states and there would be no choice.

This is why I invite the Hon. Member for Gatineau to listen to these views instead of being always so negative, to recognize that they are founded and to make the appropriate adjustments to avoid putting in the same category racketeers and people who work for humanitarian causes.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau), whom I wish to thank for his very clear comments.

• (1030)

We have as a nation endorsed Article 14 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. That declaration provides that everyone has the right to seek and to enjoy in other countries asylum from persecution. This article does not allow a right to refugees to be granted asylum, but it does underline that they have a right to seek asylum. This is called universal access.

Yesterday, the Government, through the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), revealed its intention of breaking this United Nations Convention when, on page 8043 of Hansard, the Minister said:

> I do not believe that universal access is the manner through which Canada should take the number of refugees which we have said we will.

Would the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides comment on the statement of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Garneau: Mr. Speaker, in my remarks a moment ago I had an opportunity to comment on that in French. I am very pleased to do so in English as well.

The statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) yesterday was unbelievable. He said, at page 8043 of Hansard:

> I do not believe that universal access is the manner through which Canada should take the number of refugees which we have said we will.

I do not know if the Minister was speaking on behalf of the Government, but that statement is in direct contradiction to our commitment under the United Nations agreement. One can see in the Plaut report all the documentation that Canada had signed as a member of the United Nations agreement.

Universal access means that any refugee can claim to come to Canada. It does not mean that he will be accepted, but universal access means that his refusal or acceptance should be determined through the due process of law. What the Minister stated yesterday is in direct contradiction. He does not want to accept the idea of the due process of law to separate the type of person that Canada can accept. In saying this, he is in direct contradiction with this country's obligation in terms of its commitment within the United Nations.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in the debate this morning on Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act. It deals primarily with deterrence and the detention of illegal immigrants. We have come back to Parliament this week to deal with this particular legislation along with Bill C-55, to respond to the real concern of Canadians that we are not in control of our borders.

This legislation does not concern legitimate immigration or genuine refugees or human rights of those living under repressive regimes. It deals with the protection of our own constituents, from Capilano to Newfoundland, against abusers, exploiters, and criminals; scofflaws who would have contempt for the laws of Canada. These kinds of people consider us easy marks for their schemes of fraud, piracy, and murder. This legislation is carefully aimed at a small minority, the smugglers and the conspirators who, unfortunately, have existed since the dawn of time.

Many Members who have already spoken in the debate have talked about the problem we are facing in Canada with the increasing numbers of persons who are seeking access to our country by our shores and through our airports by pretending to be refugees, but who obviously are not. That is the group we are trying to address by having tougher laws.

Canadians honestly feel, given the instances we have had in the past year, that Canada is becoming a patsy, an easy mark internationally. They are angry mad about it and do not want to be treated that way. It is a feeling of violation. For example, if one has a party in one's home, one invites guests and prepares for the hospitality. When there is a bunch of gatecrashers, one is very unhappy and wants to make sure they are removed. There is also the law to deal with them if they harm one's property.

Similarly, Canadians feel that there are gatecrashers at our borders who are trying to come in illegally but we do not have the tools under our present laws to deal with them effectively. Canadians want laws established that will deter such people. Such a mechanism is obviously the best remedy. Rather than having people arrive and go through all the processes, we should make sure there are already tough laws so that they are not induced to come here.

One obvious way to achieve this goal is by ensuring that those who are trying to organize that kind of illegal immigration to Canada, and those aiding and abetting it, are subject to very heavy penalties. Another method is by establishing a measure, such as the one in this Bill, requiring transportation companies to take much greater care in who they allow on their airlines or ships coming to Canada so that we are not faced with people arriving here without documentation and claiming refugee status. The fact is that in most cases such people are not genuine refugees.

We know that over the past year about 70 per cent of those who were claiming refugee status were not genuine refugees and are clogging access for real refugees. In fact, the number has risen this year so that about 90 per cent of those trying to get into this country as refugees are really not convention refugees about whom we are all concerned. It is that abuse that has brought us back here today.

Canadians are demanding that we as parliamentarians do something about it because they do not want to be used. That is why I am pleased to be debating Bill C-84 today and to have had the opportunity to debate Bill C-55 earlier. They have to be considered as a package to deal with the total problem.

The main element of Bill C-84 is to provide deterrence. It provides for increased fines for smugglers and particularly for those who would organize groups of 10 or more because those are the kinds of incidents with which we have been faced over the past year. It requires transportation carriers to have documents of all those travelling in such carriers.

Yesterday in Question Period, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), I believe, talked about what a terrible thing it would be if the airlines collected people's documents, that that would make us the same as the Soviet Union. That is nonsense. What we are asking airlines to do is to ensure that people, first, have valid travel documents, that is passports or visas, and, second, that they do not get torn up on the way or given to someone else before the person actually gets on the plane.

I think what is interesting is that Air Canada, our own airline, already has that system in place. It is a very practical system. When one checks in with Air Canada, depending on where you are coming from, you provide a passport or visa. Air Canada makes a record of it on its computers so it has the number of one's passport or visa. As we know, when one checks in one has access to various shops. Unfortunately, some of the other airlines do not do a further check, so what happens is that people give their travel documents to someone else in the airport and those travel documents just circulate around. Air Canada has overcome that problem. Now just before one gets on a plane the documentation is again checked so they know one has documentation when one boards the plane. Because Air Canada already has the passport numbers, and because the documentation was checked before boarding, one would assume the documentation would be with the individual as he leaves the plane, although I suppose it could be flushed down the toilet. But if an individual presents himself on arrival without any travel documents, Air Canada will have the numbers by which those documents can be traced, and that to me is a very sensible way of doing things.

It would seem that if other airlines used such care and diligence we would not have the kinds of problems we are having at the present time. Although I believe the boat incident has received the greatest publicity, we know that the greatest number of illegal aliens are coming in through our airports. That is really where the problem needs to be tackled.

A lot of airlines have said they do not want to bother about checking these passports. They know they are supposed to do it but they do not. However, they are going to have to bother now or they are going to be fined. It will not be worth their while not to do it. I believe that if this particular provision of the legislation is enforced, it will prove very successful in cutting down and deterring these people from even trying to board an airplane in this manner. The same thing, of course, would apply to ships.

Another aspect of the legislation deals with detention. I believe Canadians feel justifiably frustrated that someone can land on our shores without documentation. We do not know who they are or anything about them, but they can be released into society. We do not know if they have a criminal record or if they are potential terrorists. We do not have the tools at present to correct that situation.

With respect to the Halifax situation, we could keep the immigrants for seven days. There were hearings. It was very difficult to detain these people until we had appropriate information about them so that we could be confident we would not have a security risk. Under this legislation we will be able to detain people until their identity is known. As well, for those who have a criminal record, the Minister will have the power to send them right back and not give them access to the refugee determination system. That is something for which Canadians have been asking.

Earlier in the week I spoke on Bill C-55. I talked about Canadians wanting us to do these things. I had the feeling that people were sort of scoffing at these feelings of ordinary Canadians; like what do they know about these things and what rights do they have. In my own view of democracy, I feel we are here as legislators, as the vassals of Canadians. We are not above them. We are not elitists. The Government is not above and separate from the rest of Canadians. We are here as their representatives. We are not always right. We do not pretend to be. However, we do the best job we can to ensure that the deeply held concerns of Canadians are represented and that we deal with them effectively.

The other day I read some letters from some of my constituents on this issue. I would like to share with you a few more, because I think it puts into focus the reason we are here and the deep-felt concerns my constituents in Capilano have on this issue. One letter in part states:

> Having people enter the country in this manner and allowing them to stay is setting a potentially catastrophic precedent; it serves no one's interest and certainly does not serve common sense.

I agree.

Another letter states, and I quote:

> . . . greater punishment must be handed down to those who knowingly break our laws as the captain, et cetera, did in this case and who now according to the news is getting off with a very light fine. Our laws are a joke to many of these people for they know the fine will be light compared to our hefty handouts.

We are increasing the fines to a half million dollars and 10 years in jail, so we are certainly responding to that kind of concern.

I read from a third letter:

> In the future the immediate impounding and subsequent sale of the mode of transport; heavy fines and long prison terms should be given to the principals responsible for organizing these groups.

Again, we are responding to each of those requests. We have a provision in this Bill whereby the Government can seize the vessel, boat or plane and put it up for sale. There are heavy fines and long prison terms for those persons responsible for organizing these groups. That is in Clause 95.

Finally, I would like to share a letter from a constituent of mine. It was written to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), but I received a copy. I feel he might be interested in what the people in Vancouver are saying. The writer states:

> Firstly I am very disappointed with the approach of your Liberal caucus, whereby you have been attempting to delay progress on the new Bill C-55 which would finally bring some semblance of fairness to a terrible Immigration Act put forward by your predecessor in 1976.

I say "hear, hear" to that.

The letter continues:

> There should be no doubt in the minds of any Government M.P. in the Government or in the Official Opposition that the solution of this problem should take the highest priority,—

In our view, it is taking the highest priority but, unfortunately, in the mind of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), especially when he spoke the other day in Parliament, it does not seem to be the highest priority. He asked why we even bothered to recall Parliament. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, I am having great difficulty in understanding the position of the opposition Party. The 174 persons arrived on the shores of Nova Scotia earlier in July. On July 17 the Leader of the Liberal Party said:

> That boat might well have been apprehended and could have been turned back because this is not a legitimate refugee process.

This was said on CBC, the National. The reporter asked: "Do we know that now?", and the Right Hon. Leader replied:

> Well, we know that the boat apparently comes from Europe and I don't know of any country in Europe that's persecuting people. I mean, this is not a boat that came from a country of origin.

I agree with him on that. However, two days later on July 19 on CBC Radio, Cross Country Checkup, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was asked:

> But, Mr. Turner, how do we know that some of these people wouldn't qualify under the Canadian system?

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition replied:

> Well, they're not—if they came from Europe they were not fleeing a situation where they were facing prosecution or imprisonment or death.

He went on to say:

> Well, I think the burden of proof—in situations where you've got a commercial enterprise and obviously a fraudulent effort to manipulate and bypass our regular refugee or our immigration policy—is on the boat.

His colleague, the Hon. Member for York West, the Liberal critic for immigration, said the following day, I suppose after hearing those comments:

> I have some difficulty in appreciating that position, in its entirety, because our position has been for the last two years, and one that he's advocated as, is that there needs to be a processing.

A week later the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party said:

> The people on board could have been examined given some due processing, either at sea, or at port.

My heavens, Mr. Speaker, quite honestly I think the first instincts of the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party were right. I think he felt as outraged as we all did, but then all of the members of his caucus got together and said, no, we cannot say that. Now they are back here saying, good heavens, we cannot do any of these things. We are contravening all our international obligations. We have the wringing of hands as they talk about the church groups and so on.

I do not know the position of the Liberal Party, but this has been typical in some other instances as well. When debating Bill C-55 this week the Leader of the Liberal Party had the temerity to say that public opinion on the refugee issue has been manipulated by the Government. That is nonsense. Has my colleague here, or my colleagues over there, somehow been manipulating Canadians? Canadians are outraged. They came to us and requested some action. That is what we are here to do.

The other point I wish to make is that during the debate we had a great discussion about proposed Section 95, and how terrible it is that the church groups will not be able to help refugees come across the border. I hope that my hon. colleagues are aware that the present Immigration Act provides for an offence. Section 95 states:

> Every person who . . .
> (m) knowingly induces, aids or abets or attempts to induce, aid or abet any person to contravene any provision of this Act or the regulations,
> is guilty of an offence . . .

In the regulations under the Immigration Act there is a requirement that every immigrant shall be in possession of a valid and subsisting passport issued to that immigrant, or a valid and subsisting identity or travel document. In other words, under the Immigration Act a passport, a visa, or a travel document is required. Anyone who aids or abets someone to enter Canada in contravention of that is presently contravening the law.

What has been added in proposed Section 95.1 is not new. It presently is an offence to aid or abet someone to enter Canada without an appropriate travel document. What has been done is increase the penalty for that particular offence. It is the people who are organizing the illegal immigrants that we wish to stop. We have the offence on the books. Has it been a problem for the church groups? No. The church groups are dealing with legitimate convention refugees.

Under the regulations it states that Subsection (1) does not apply to a convention refugee who is in possession of a valid subsisting immigrant visa where, in the opinion of the visa officer who issued the immigrant visa, it would be impractical to require that person to obtain a passport, or an identity or travel document. The provision is presently in the Immigration Act to deal with the convention refugee.

The other thing many of the opposition Members have missed is what now happens with the church groups, or should happen according to the law; that is, they bring these persons to the border. Usually this is to the Canada-U.S. border. They have these persons present themselves to an immigration officer. That is legal. What is illegal is if they are brought into Canada and do not go through that process. That is what we are trying to stop. The fears of the members of the opposition Party are phoney and false. That will be discussed in the committee.

I have looked at the legislation, and it seems to me to be totally fair. In my view, and in the view of my colleagues, anyone who breaks the law should be treated in the same way. The ministers in my riding would not counsel their parishioners to break the law. The churches should not say that they are above the law. There are ways within the law whereby they can help the genuine convention refugees.

I would hope that we could move quickly on the passage of Bill C-84 and respond to the concerns of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap).

Mr. Heap: I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins), particularly when she was speaking on the matter of the amendments in proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2. I wish to ask the Hon. Member to confirm that it is not illegal to assist a person to come from the United States to the Canadian border to a Canadian immigration office. It is not illegal to do that, regardless of the person's possession of papers or travel documents?

In Section 95 of the present Canadian legislation which takes precedence over regulations it states:

> Every person who
> (a) comes into Canada at any place other than a port of entry and fails to report to an immigration officer for examination as required by subsection 12(1),
> is guilty of an offence . . .

In Section 95(f) it states:

> Every person who . . .
> (f) eludes examination or inquiry under this Act . . .

It goes on to detail the different ways in which a person may elude, cut short, or escape examination.

In other words, it focuses on a duty to immediately come to an immigration office for examination in accordance with the Act. Under Section 95 only in the case of a person who eludes or fails to report, or in the case of a person who aids or abets someone in alluding or failing to report is it an offence.

Therefore, I am asking the Hon. Member if she considers that we should maintain Section 95 as it is, and that the proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 ought to be brought into line with that Section? Whether the person is doing it for profit, or whether it is a church person, as an Anglican priest I agree with her 100 per cent, that there should be no special privilege for church persons, clergy, or lay of any denomination whatsoever. That has gone with the middle ages. Does the Hon. Member agree that any person who brings in a refugee claimant, or what might be thought to be a refugee claimant, and who brings that person immediately to the immigration office, is acting legally according to our present law and should not be made illegal in the amended law?

Mrs. Collins: It is my understanding that it is not an offence to counsel a person to present himself to an officer to tell the truth. It would be an offence to counsel a person to present false documents, or in some way not to tell the truth. It is not an offence to transport a person to Canada for the purpose of presenting that person to an immigration officer. In my understanding, this section does not change that. This section has stiffer penalties for those who would organize or abet people to attempt to enter Canada without proper documentation, or false documentation. If they are convention refugees, as the regulations now allow for, they would not necessarily have to have that documentation to begin with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it eleven o'clock, I advise the Hon. Member that she will have five minutes left for questions and comments after Question Period.

It being 11 o'clock a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 19(4) the House will now proceed to Statements by Members, pursuant to Standing Order 21.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

STEIN VALLEY, B.C.—PRESERVATION OF WILDERNESS AREA

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the Stein Valley, as you probably know, is the largest undeveloped watershed in southwestern British Columbia. Wildlife and recreation are great here because there are no roads.

The Stein River supports salmon and sports fisheries. The valleys of the Stein and its tributaries are covered with forests. The Stein's lower reaches are important to native cultural traditions. Archaeological sites and outstanding Indian pictographs give the Stein a cultural significance of exceptional value.

The Lillooet Tribal Council and the Lytton Indian Band are making a strong case to preserve the Stein. Between August 1 and August 4 they hosted the third Voices for the Wilderness Festival in the headwaters of the Stein. It was attended by 1,500 people, including David Suzuki.

The federal Government should play an active role in resolving the conflict over the future of the Stein Valley. I urge the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development

(Mr. McKnight) and the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to impress upon the British Columbia Government the value of the Stein and to find a solution which will respect native rights and preserve this great wilderness resource for future generations.

TRADE

CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN AGRICULTURE AND HORTICULTURE

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, the trade talks with the United States are important to all Canadians. Having guaranteed access to the world's largest market can be of enormous benefit to Canadian industry. Most Canadians look forward to the draft agreement in October.

Of vital importance to our negotiators in that agreement is the protection of Canadian agriculture. No agreement could be acceptable without recognition of that vital sector of the Canadian economy.

An essential element of any protection for agriculture must include protection for the tender fruit industry. We cannot have our fruit farmers exposed to a completely open border or to the threat of American dumping.

Closely related to the tender fruit industry is, as well, our wine industry. Some 16,000 jobs are directly or indirectly dependent upon the Canadian wine industry. It must have the support of our negotiators and, indeed, all Canadians. Our trade negotiators must ensure that any agreement with the United States recognizes the vital importance of the wine industry to Ontario and to all of Canada.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA WELFARE SYSTEM

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed the Province of British Columbia has one of the worst welfare systems and is now introducing even more regressive policies.

Recently the British Columbia Supreme Court ruled that the social service system discriminates against young people under the age of 26 who receive a lower rate of social assistance. Did the B.C. Government immediately raise rates by at least $25 to equalize payments regardless of age? No. Instead, it decided to give a token increase to youth and to have those over 26 years of age pay for this with reduced welfare rates, forcing all recipients to sleep in slums and to eat at food banks.

This kind of anti-human, punitive policy should not be subsidized by the federal Government which pays 50 per cent of welfare costs. I call upon the federal Government to review and reform the Canada Assistance Plan to ensure that welfare rates across Canada are at least equal to the poverty line.

BLOOMFIELD STATION, N.B.—OPPOSITION TO SERVICE CHANGES

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, the community of Bloomfield Station in my riding has joined with numerous other rural communities across Canada to express its opposition to Canada Post's renovation of rural postal service.

I have had meetings in Bloomfield with residents and community leaders. I had meetings with Canada Post officials, and Canada Post has met with the community. The residents of Bloomfield were not satisfied with the answers Canada Post gave them.

Post Office officials were totally unprepared to answer the questions. In fact, many key questions such as those referring to the total cost of implementing this new system, the cost difference between the old and the new service, and the location of group boxes being installed were among some of the important questions left unanswered.

In the past I have supported changes to postal service in my constituency, but Bloomfield Station, in the words of its residents "is not a sleepy little town that can be whitewashed" by Canada Post.

I strongly support the people of Bloomfield in their opposition to Canada Post's disruption of the traditional service to which this community is accustomed. It is unlikely that the savings gained by changing to this new system will amount to anything significant, certainly not worth the disruption to the traditional life of the community.

AGRICULTURE

TAX REFORM—PROPOSED ACCRUAL ACCOUNTING SYSTEM

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, when the Nielsen Task Force Report on Agriculture came out last winter it recommended that the Government force accrual accounting on farmers instead of the cash basis that has always been available to them. The report said that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) could extract $1 billion more in income tax from farmers if the Minister switched to the accrual method.

Sure enough, when the Minister of Finance tabled his White Paper on Tax Reform there was a provision to force farmers to use the accrual accounting method where farmers are claiming losses from other income. He is obviously determined to get the $1 billion in income taxes that the Nielsen Task Force report recommended.

At its semi-annual meeting in Fredericton, New Brunswick, last month the Canadian Federation of Agriculture unanimously passed a resolution calling for the retention of cash accounting for farm filers who wish to use it, and for the retention of the income-averaging provisions.

I call upon the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise) to back off and stop this new tax grab on farmers, many of whom face an already desperate financial situation and who are struggling to survive without more income taxes and a more complicated accounting system.

SITUATION IN ABITIBI REGION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, for a number of weeks the Leader of the Liberal Opposition and Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) as well as the Hon. Member for Shefford (Mr. Lapierre) have been attempting by every means to put fear into the minds of people in the Abitibi concerning regional development, suggesting the Abitibi region and Quebec have been abandoned. This Government has been showing leadership since 1984, and thanks to our business people and workers in the Abitibi, our area ranks first in Quebec for the decline in unemployment.

Opposition Parties should look at the situation of Abitibi now and I challege them to compare the years 1985-1986-1987 to 1982-1983-1984.

This Conservative Government has been meeting its obligation in Abitibi. Hon. opposition Members should review the regional projects completed to date and travel to that great remote area—they will be astonished at our performance.

Mr. Speaker, I was elected to defend my area, and you may rest assured that Abitibi will not be penalized by the change in DRIE's direction. And together with business people, chambers of commerce, city counsellors and the local population, we will remain vigilant.

INTEREST RATE INCREASES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the future of the Farm Credit Corporation. Future prospects for the organization are going down as its interest rates are going up. That is certainly not a positive move for beginning or expanding farmers.

I would like to give the House an example of some of the increases. The five-year fixed interest loan is now 11.5 per cent, a jump of 1.5 percentage points. A new farmer seeking a loan of over 15 years' term will have to pay 12 per cent.

FCC has been criticized by farm groups as lacking in policy direction. It is time that the Government decided what role FCC is to play in the farm credit field. The organization is supposed to aid producers seeking capital for mortgages or expansion, but with these recent increases it will drive customers away.

Last year the lending agency introduced commodity-based loans. However, if commodity prices increased substantially then so would the principal of the loans. Acceptance of the program has therefore been very slow.

For the last few years the Manitoba Agricultural Credit Corporation has successfully offered farmers the option of buying down their interest rates to an affordable 8 per cent. Why could the Government here not direct FCC to follow this lead?

TAX REFORM

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON GOODS AND SERVICES, INCLUDING FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, this Government imposed 25 new taxes or tax increases since they were elected in 1984, thereby reducing the purchasing power in the lowest income brackets. With its tax reform proposals, tabled in this House on June 18, 1987, the Government is increasing the burden of Canadians by levying this time a general tax on goods and services, including food.

Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity this last month to consult people in my constituency and to urge Canadians to strongly oppose that provision. I have a number of petitions, as you know, bearing the signatures of people who strongly oppose that and urge the Government not to proceed with a tax on food, to set aside a measure that is absolutely regressive and unfair to people in my constituency.

MINES AND MINING

MODERNIZATION OF ALUMINUM SMELTING PLANTS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, Jonquière, Bécancour, Kitimat, although off the beaten path, these centres of the Canadian aluminum smelting industry play an important role in the Canadian economy. Our aluminum producers, with some government assistance, have used a period of low prices and poor demand to modernize their plants so that they number amongst the most productive in the world.

With increasing demand and improving prices the industry now stands poised to reap the benefits. These benefits will be enhanced, not only for primary producers but also for downstream manufacturers of aluminum products once we successfully complete the free trade negotiations with the United States thereby opening up huge new markets for the Canadian aluminum industry.

NORTHERN MANITOBA—PROJECTS AWAITING APPROVAL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Manitobans are very skeptical about what the Canadian Government is going to do with the western diversification plan so far as it affects native people. The federal Government has so far refused to sign the Northern Development Agreement extension.

Native people are waiting for funding under the Native Economic Development Fund which has been frozen as part of the DRIE freeze since June and no new projects have been approved since that time. As a result, native people in northern Manitoba are waiting and waiting and waiting for projects to be approved.

So far the province has picked up on a short-term basis a lot of the shared cost programs. This should not be necessary. Get off your rumps and do something for the native people of northern Manitoba.

POLITICAL PARTIES

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S FUND RAISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I guess to start off I must say that I see the wolf in sheep's clothing this morning. I got a letter from Bruno Gerussi in which he is looking for contributions for the NDP and its Leader. I remember when the NDP used to be against what they called income tax breaks for small businesses.

It says in this letter that the contributor will receive a generous income tax deduction for the contribution, 75 per cent of a $100 contribution or 50 per cent on $550.

I really wonder what is going on with the NDP. First their literature was fluorescent orange and now it is down to blue and green.

I remember between 1980 and 1984 interest rates were at their highest, there were bankruptcies across the country, and unemployment was at its highest. I really wish the NDP would come clean with Canadians. Are they with Bob White or John Bulloch? Let Canadians know where you stand.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON REFUGEES—MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Health said in this House that the Conservative Government does not recognize that any individual has the right to claim refugee status in Canada and be entitled to a fair hearing. The Deputy Prime Minister knows that statement flies in the face of the UN Convention on Refugees which has been supported by Canada since 1951.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister support the statement of his colleague and can he say whether the Prime Minister has informed the UN that we have changed Canada's traditional policy, one which is accepted by every progressive nation in the world?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we will not violate our international obligations. We need be given no lesson on our commitment to Geneva and what we signed there in concert with other nations. Neither will we violate our commitment to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and that is clear.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Health said yesterday that "we", meaning the Government of Canada, have already stated our varying points on universal access. He said he does not believe that universal access works and went on to deny what the Minister has just said.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canada for decades has been recognizing the right of refugees to non-removal under the Geneva Convention. But I am putting once more the question to the Deputy Prime Minister who can speak on behalf of the Government of Canada: Is the Prime Minister in agreement with the comments made by his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare? Does he not agree that in so doing, the Minister of National Health and Welfare puts us in the category of the most oppressive countries in the world?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we have before the House for debate a new refugee determination process. The current process is absurd. It has not functioned, it is unfair and chaotic. What we have before us is a fair and expeditious method of identifying and welcoming real refugees. Not everyone in the world requires our protection. Five billion people should not be allowed to make a claim here.

There are people with manifestly unfounded claims. There are people who have refugee status elsewhere. There are individuals who have lived a sufficient length of time in another country and can be returned to that country or seek protection of that country. Bill C-55 will make sure that in three to seven days those individuals can go back to where they came from and start the process, if indeed they would like to immigrate to this country, under the fair and just criteria that everyone else has to meet.

AMENDING LEGISLATION—MINISTER'S POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not responded to the question. Everyone in this House recognizes that Canada needs a credible refugee policy. However, does he not recognize that in the proposed legislation, in Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, his Government has come up with the most paranoid piece of legislation ever brought forward in this country and places us in a class equalled only by the Soviet Union?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Does he recognize that he is placing us in that position?

Mr. Mazankowski: That is absolutely false and you know it.

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, we are saying no to illegal aliens and yes to real refugees.

Queue jumping is intolerable. It is unfair that an individual who is not a legitimate refugee can jump to the head of the line. That undermines a legitimate immigration policy. It incites further abuse.

We can understand the frustration of a lot of Canadians who have waited desperately to bring in their families. As the Minister of Employment and Immigration indicated this week, we will allow more families to come to this country because we will open up the family class and hopefully be allowed to increase immigration levels when Cabinet allows that decision to come forward in the fall.

POSSIBLE EFFECT OF NEW LEGISLATION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the same Minister. The Prime Minister dramatically recalled Parliament for a so-called emergency but he has not had one minute to participate in the debate and render his opinion on this new legislation.

Given that the Minister prides himself as a tolerant man and protector of civil liberties and minority rights, does he not believe that Bill C-84, under which Jim Peterson, the brother of the Premier of Ontario, could have been fined or imprisoned for assisting Mikhail Baryshnikov in escaping the Soviet Union to come to this country, is repugnant to the Canadian sense of justice and, if left unamended, would bring court challenges that would paralyse his new policy and render it even more chaotic than it is today?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is wrong. He does not understand the current immigration law. For 10 years there has been a process under Section 95(m) of the Immigration Act which I would ask that Member to reread. It says that anyone who aids and abets can be prosecuted. However, I ask the Hon. Member how many church people have we prosecuted in 10 years?

On the other side, we have taken that general law and made it more specific in Clause 95(1). In doing so we will get to those who are organizing the clandestine movements of people, those who traffic in human misery. That process must stop.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister has just admitted that this law will have the potential to convict clergy, civil libertarian groups and any other Canadians. He must learn that the end never, ever justifies the means.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT ADOPT POSITION OF MEMBER FOR LA PRAIRIE

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the same Minister.

If the Minister will not accept the reasons put forward by the Opposition, is he at least planning to follow the advice of one of his own colleagues, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), who is not only Chairman of the Standing Committee on Immigration, but also Chairman of the Committee on Immigration within the Conservative caucus, and who asked yesterday the Government to bring major amendments to this Bill, in order not to violate the Canadian Charter and break our commitments to the United Nations?

Does he feel also that the opinions of his Conservative colleagues are both illegitimate and irresponsible too?

[English]

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if the Hon. Member for York West is indeed speaking for the whole of his caucus on this issue. Certainly others of his Party have indicated clearly how pleased they are with the deterrent and detention aspects of the new Bill we brought forward.

Why does he not listen to what the Hon. Member for Spadina said which is that anyone and everyone who is guilty of a violation should indeed be convicted? This new Bill is a deterrence to all those who want to traffic in and mass-market human misery. There will be convictions, with fines of up to $500,000 and 10 years in jail.

On undocumented arrivals, we will not arbitrarily detain but will have the right to hold those people until we know who they are and where they come from. If those people are brought to Canada, we will charge the transportation companies $5,000 per person. Indeed, we are authorizing them to collect documents and have them available to us when they arrive.

BILL C-84—APPLICATION OF CLAUSE 95(1)

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Minister of State for Immigration, in reply to the most recent three questions, said two things. First, he said that the Government was only interested in getting at clandestine entries into Canada and, second, that he favoured the principle that everyone obey the law. We favour both those points, but my question—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: We will see if the Conservatives will be clapping after I ask my question which is directed to the Minister. Will he answer the question he refused to answer yesterday? According to Clause 95(1) of the proposed law, a priest who accompanies a genuine refugee claimant who has no documents or passport to the Canadian border will be committing an offence. Will the Minister acknowledge that that is the case? If it is true, will he accept an amendment so that such a priest will not be violating the law?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question yesterday. I will repeat, for the Leader's sake:

[English]

Finally there is an opinion on immigration on the NDP side. We have not heard one word from you, Sir, for one month on immigration. We have not heard one word for one month on this issue and today, suddenly, you get up.

I said yesterday that it is not an offence to counsel a person to present himself to an officer and tell the truth. I said yesterday that it is not an offence to transport an illegal alien to Canada for the purpose of presenting that person to an officer. It is an offence to aid persons to evade legitimate immigration controls either at the port of entry or in Canada. I think that is very clear.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister had been in the House two days ago he would have heard me making a speech condemning his Bill. If he had been around a month ago when the shipload of people arrived off the coast of Nova Scotia, he would have heard me say publicly that we had a moral obligation to accept those people into the country. I cannot account for the Minister's ignorance. That is his responsibility.

Since the Minister just refused to refer to the appropriate clause in the appropriate Bill, will he now acknowledge that Clause 95(1) of Bill C-84 would in fact make susceptible to the full force of the law a priest who accompanies an honest refugee, who does not have documentation or a passport, to a Canadian border? Will he honestly admit that the law his officials have given him and he has presented to the House would make a priest guilty of a criminal offence under those circumstances? Will he admit that and will he change it?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: You should have asked the question Shirley Carr gave you.

Mr. Broadbent: You will stay at the level you are in the polls if you keep that up.

Mr. Shields: Shirley Carr writes better questions, Ed.

Mr. Murphy: Let the Minister waffle.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the law is very clear, and the legislation has been in existence for 10 years. For 10 years, the law has said that people who violate the Immigration Act may be prosecuted. This has not changed, and in the past 10 years, none of the volunteer groups, church groups or other organizations have been prosecuted under the Act, and the purpose of the Act is quite clear. I said this again yesterday and earlier today, that anyone who brings people before Immigration Officers who are the only people with the authority to judge whether a person is a refugee or not—only people employed for this purpose by the Department of Immigration have that right. All these people who are brought before Immigration Officers, and I say this for the benefit of the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the officers who have to decide whether they are refugees or not, these people will not be prosecuted under the Act. They are not breaking the law in this case.

[English]

UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows it is up to the courts to interpret the law as it is written. The proposed law the Minister has put before us would make criminals of all kinds of Canadians who, under present law, are not made criminals. That is the reality.

I would like to turn to another clause since the Minister has refused to deal with that one. Will he now inform the people of Canada that the United Nations High Commission on Refugees has in fact informed the Canadian Government that the proposed law the Government is introducing contravenes a Convention of the United Nations which up to this point Canada has had the proud record of supporting?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have read the letter from the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and we are keeping in touch with him. We intend to provide an appropriate response. However, the Bill is entirely in line with the commitment we made as a result of signing the United Nations Convention on Refugees, and we have all the explanations we need. Once again, I am not going to let someone else teach me how to—

I just want to recall something. The last time you had something to say other than your speech yesterday, Sir, on immigration, was in Vancouver. You said that we also are in the process of tightening up the law so that if we find out that refugees are not bona fide, we kick them out of the country. That is what we put forward, Sir.

Mr. Broadbent: That's right. That's perfectly right.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: You ought to go back to high school. That's pathetic, just pathetic.

Mr. Crosbie: You're talking out of both sides of your mouth as usual.

Mr. Masse: You're on the spot now, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: We're on the spot?

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Chair can be of some assistance. I recognize that when issues are strongly felt, memories regarding the proper rules of procedure become short. The use of the word "you" has been creeping back into the Chamber and Hon. Members will know that, strictly speaking, the Chair should interrupt when that form of address is used. Of course the Chair does not want to interrupt when important matters are being discussed, but I think there has been too much of it and I will be interrupting from now on.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

LEGISLATION TO AMEND PATENT ACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has justified changes to the Patent Act which will substantially raise the price of drugs for Canadians by saying that there will be an increase in research and development.

A study commissioned by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion says quite conclusively that under a free trade agreement there will be little possibility of increased investment in research and development. That study was commissioned by officials in his own Government. We know at the same time when the Minister reintroduced the Bill last June he dropped whatever guarantees there were in the original legislation that would require that investment.

Given the conclusions reached by federal officials that under free trade there would not be further investment, is it not prudent and proper that, as the legislation comes back to this House, the Government as a first step should introduce a clause that would clearly guarantee the jobs, research and development and investment that he consistently promises? Should we not have that clause in the Bill?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are so many errors in the Hon. Member's preamble that I do not have the time to correct them. Prices will not rise as he stated.

The justification for the Bill is fairness and to get research and development here and make sure Canada participates in the very important biotechnological revolution. We must be there.

It is immoral for any responsible politician to suggest that we should let other countries do the research and we will simply buy what they have later on, presumably by selling our natural resources. That is unfair to Canadian scientists and student scientists who want to work in this area.

There is already a public commitment of $900 million. I have a note in my hand from the Hon. Member for Burlington saying that a company in his riding wants to make an investment of $30 million. That is not part of the $900 million. They want to know what to do because they cannot justify it if Bill C-22 is not passed.

We have built into the legislation a policy review by Government in four years and Parliament in 10 years. We will have annual monitoring of the research performance of these companies reported to this House. It contains all the safety mechanisms needed to ensure that we get these benefits. We will get them if the Liberal Party will co-operate.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the Minister absolutely refused to deal with the question and the fact that there are reports from officials in his own Government which clearly contradict all those statements.

If analyses are available that the investment will not take place under free trade, regardless of the commitments we have received from groups like Principal Investors and others that he knows well, we want to know why the Government is submitting primarily to pressure from the U.S. administration to get this legislation through and refusing to listen to and acknowledge the kinds of arguments put forward by senior citizens, church groups and others who represent all Canadians. They are saying do not raise drug prices simply to give in to your American masters.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member keeps saying drug prices will rise and he knows that is false. If he chooses not to accept the public statements by numerous drug companies, if he chooses not to listen to the academic community across the country, our research scientists and Canadian owners of the new biotechnology which are depending upon this legislation for their future, let him talk to his former colleague, Judy Erola. She can go through it item by item and verify every dollar of that $900 million I have been talking about. If he does not believe me, does he accept the word of his former cabinet colleague?

BILL C-84—REQUEST THAT CLAUSES 95.1 AND 95.2 BE AMENDED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. The Globe and Mail reports today that U.S. immigration law exempts a person from prosecution if he or she brings a would-be refugee across the border and takes him directly to immigration authorities. In light of the statement that the Minister made yesterday, which is not law but which he repeated today, will he agree that Bill C-84 ought to follow that same reasonable principle and amend his proposed Clauses 95.1 and 95.2 in accordance with that principle?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if I am not mistaken, the House has specific procedures for this sort of thing which specify when and where amendment proposals may be made. I have always said I was prepared to consider amendments. And when I do, I will see what can be done. I am not saying we will accept or reject them, but I think there is a specific procedure. The Hon. Member for Spadina is asking whether I am willing to propose amendments. I imagine he intends to make a proposal in the legislative committee, and we will see what happens.

CONFORMITY WITH EXISTING LAW

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter about which the public is extremely concerned as you can see from the media and the representations we have received. If the Minister will not bring it into line with American law will he at least put to rest a possible public misunderstanding by saying that he is willing to bring Clause 95.1 and Clause 95.2 into line with the existing Canadian law which means that it is not an offence to bring a person across the border to immigration officers?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, for the third time since yesterday, I repeat that it is not an offence to counsel or transport an illegal alien in Canada for the purpose of presenting that person to an officer. I think that is very clear. It is not an offence. That is already in the Bill.

PRINCIPAL GROUP—ISSUANCE OF BANK BOOKS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and is with regard to the serious situation throughout Canada involving the Principal Group of companies and their associates.

Can the Minister inform the House when he became aware that the Principal Group Ltd. gave the depositors in First Investors and Associated Investors bank books with the Principal Group logo on which bank books were depicted "Principal Savings and Trust"—regulated, by the way, by the federal Government—and also saying, "Member Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation"? Does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs now believe that that was a deceptive practice in which Principal Savings and Trust was a major participant?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, in my view the question posed by the Hon. Member is posed in the wrong capital city, in the wrong legislature, and to the wrong Government. As I have said to the Hon. Member before, there are 30 different companies in the Principal Group. They are all provincially regulated. None of them are federally regulated. One of them is insured by the CDIC.

All communications of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation with its member companies are confidential as was affirmed in the last piece of legislation, Bill C-42, which was passed in June. Therefore, I am not privy to the documents to which the Hon. Member is referring. The CDIC may be privy to them, but I am not.

The Member has made reference to other communications saying that I have apparently received them. I have not received them and, therefore, ask him to withdraw that allegation.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I say with great respect that the Minister is acting irresponsibly in carrying out his responsibilities to the taxpayers of Canada, particularly those depositors who were insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. He is now saying that they can participate in a fraud against the Canadian people.

PRINCIPAL SAVINGS AND TRUST—CONDUCT OF BUSINESS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister admitted yesterday on the floor of the House of Commons that he was aware of the capitalization problems of Principal Savings and Trust in May. What test did he use to satisfy himself that there were no deceptive practices and no false statements and that no fraudulent practices were being carried out by Principal Savings and Trust? Will he now live up to his responsibility, or is he going to pass it on to the Alberta authorities?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it would be totally unacceptable to the fabric of the country for the federal Government to invade the complete jurisdiction of the provinces over financial institutions which they regulate. The CDIC is an insurer, not a regulator. It is like an automobile insurer. Automobile insurers do not set the traffic laws of a province.

I made contact today with the Alberta Treasurer and hope to speak to him later today to make it clear to him that I encourage the Alberta Government to take all possible actions to protect investors, help these people, and ensure that Alberta continues to be a province with a good reputation as a place to invest.

NEW BRUNSWICK POTATO GROWERS—REQUEST FOR STABILIZATION PAYMENT

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister is aware that the potato farmers of New Brunswick have been waiting since 1985 for a stabilization payment. Despite the best efforts of the New Brunswick Minister of Agriculture, Hazen Myers, and despite a statement by the Prime Minister in the fall of 1986 that the matter would be dealt with expeditiously, the farmers of New Brunswick have not received a nickel.

Will the Minister tell the potato producers of New Brunswick that, just as he found in excess of $1 billion for the prairie grain producers, he will not forget them and will get those badly needed dollars to them right away?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I certainly appreciate the continuing representations made by my colleague, the Member for Fundy Royal, on behalf of the potato farmers and indeed all people in the agricultural community. I must remind him though that the grain and oil seeds farmers in his province of New Brunswick were recipients of their portion of the Special Canadian Grains Program.

I appreciate as well the representations that are being made to me by my provincial counterpart in New Brunswick, the Hon. Hazen Myers. I want to inform both the Hon. Member and my provincial counterpart that we are actively considering this matter. I hope to be in a position to make a positive announcement in the near future. I want them to rest assured because the record will show that we deliver on all of our promises.

LAKE MEECH ACCORD—EQUALITY RIGHTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. Constitutional experts from the National Association of Women and the Law, LEAF, the Ad Hoc Committee on the Constitution, and also from the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women, after intensive study have all concluded that equality rights may not be protected under the proposed Constitutional Accord.

In view of this and the new information raised at the committee which appears to substantiate this view, will the Government take another look at the Accord and, if there is any risk at all, amend the legislation to ensure that equality rights will be fully protected?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Government is, of course, quite concerned about these issues. The Minister of Justice addressed himself to this question yesterday. There are always experts who are able to support any side of an issue. There is more than one way to interpret any constitutional document. However, the constitutional experts whom we have consulted and rely upon assure us that in their opinion there is no danger to equality rights for women or for anyone else in the amendments which were agreed to at Meech Lake.

With regard to the Government reviewing the situation, a most capable parliamentary committee is now receiving submissions. We have great confidence in it and will, of course, look at the recommendations in its report when it has concluded its deliberations.

REQUEST FOR MEETING ON ISSUE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I will address my supplementary question to the Minister who responded. Women across Canada watching the proceedings of First Ministers' Conferences on TV realized that there was not one woman present in all the deliberations and policy decision-making which was going on.

Remembering the Government's commitment to equality and to involving women in equal roles, will the Government show its commitment by undertaking a meeting with relevant women's groups to hear their expert legal opinions with regard to a possible threat to equality rights? I can tell you that they have some very competent lawyers.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member has an important question. I am sure that the Minister will respond. I have indicated that it is not appropriate in this Chamber to use the personal "you". I know the Hon. Member would want to co-operate. The Hon. Member will complete her question.

The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): I think I have the gist of the question, Mr. Speaker. It was the 11 First Ministers who agreed upon the so-called Meech Lake amendments. It is not the fault of the Government that none of those 11 First Ministers happened to be women. Doubtless, it is most desirable that in the future some of the First Ministers, if not all of them, be women. We would applaud that if it occurred.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In fact, I would volunteer my wife as a perfectly suitable candidate. She is my First Minister already, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: She would be a lot better in here.

Mr. Crosbie: In response to the Hon. Member's request, we now have a joint parliamentary committee meeting and considering these very questions. We will have to wait to see what it reports.

With respect to the Hon. Leader of the NDP, it is good to see that he is still able to mutter after the trimming he got earlier in the Question Period.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST THAT MINISTER GIVE UPDATE ON SITUATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of DRIE.

For a number of days I have been warning the Minister that his Department is about to collapse and its incompetence is making Quebec entrepreneurs suffer.

Today, we heard that 400 Quebec companies were waiting for replies from his Department. The President of the Association of Industrial Commissioners has confirmed that the situation is the same across the province.

My question to the Minister is this: When is he going to stop misleading the House and misleading the Canadian public? When will he stop bragging about a Department that is on the brink of bankruptcy?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State Responsible for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's statements this morning are patently false.

I told him this week, and I want to repeat it today, Mr. Speaker: Under the Liberals, the Department spent a little over $700 million, of which about $250 or $260 million went to Quebec.

Under the Conservative Government, Mr. Speaker, and I am referring to this year, we are going to spend over $850 million, including more than $350 million for Quebec, which means $100 million more for Quebec, Mr. Speaker.

The second point I want to make, and in fact, I made it earlier this week, is that the situation at the Department is being monitored. We are receiving more applications because of the improved economy and the popularity of our programs.

Since June 1987, Mr. Speaker, we approved over 28 projects worth $42 million in Quebec alone, and we did so over a period of only six weeks. I don't want to hear anyone telling me this Department is bankrupt.

SITUATION OF DEPARTMENT

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): What I am asking the Minister is this, and I ask him to have the honesty to tell the truth to the House as his officials have already admitted the facts of the situation.

There are unprocessed applications everywhere in his Department. The Minsiter has no money to keep future commitments and this is why these applications are not being processed. It takes longer and longer to complete the evaluations, from what the industrial commisioners in Val-d'Or, Drummondville and Saint-Hyacinthe are saying. All these people cannot be lying, but someone is not telling the truth. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to be honest enough to recognize that his Department is having problems, that it is unable to deliver the goods and that it should stop misleading manufacturers.

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote a comment contained in the very article to which the Hon. Member referred, where we can read: "Contacted in Sherbrooke, the Regional Executive Manager for the Department, Mr. Bégin, recognized that the waiting periods are now a bit longer than usual, but pointed out that all previous financial commitments are being met." It is obvious that we are receiving a greater number of applications because our programs are popular, because we have an economic recovery and because this Government is sensitive to the needs of the population. These are the reasons.

Mr. Speaker, instead of stating obvious facts which only show the level of commitment of this Government, my colleague would do better to direct his energy towards convincing his colleagues to support Bill C-22, which would bring hundreds of millions of dollars of investments to Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

CANADA—UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—TARIFF ON FROZEN DINNER PRODUCTS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed either to the Minister for International Trade or the Minister of Agriculture. In the House motion on bilateral trade talks, we protected agricultural marketing systems. Yet rumours abound that that protection did not continue to include products such as chicken and turkey in frozen TV dinners which now have a tariff of 17.5 per cent. Is that tariff on the table, even though erasing it would have the negative impact of reducing production of those products in this country by as much as 15 per cent?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should take some satisfaction in knowing that the positions we expressed in the March 16 debate, I believe, and in other statements subsequently both by myself and my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, have not changed.

POULTRY PRODUCT TARIFFS

Mr. Vic Althouse (Humboldt—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it was never clear in those statements whether the tariffs on poultry products outside the actual marketing systems would be protected. Will the Minister assure the House that if these tariffs are lifted, some 1,800 families affected in the case of chicken and turkeys will have some protection for their jobs or some reimbursement as their jobs and product are being replaced by U.S. product?

Hon. John Wise (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member of the terminology I used on March 16 and have used subsequently. I have indicated that the supply management system in Canada would remain. I have also indicated that the underpinnings that would be required would have to remain.

We recognize that if that is the case, then it could cause some difficulty with the food industry, Canada's largest manufacturing industry and the largest single employer. Therefore, some complementary measures must remain in place if we are not going to put in jeopardy the financial viability of Canada's food industry. Those details are quite rightly being worked out with the Department and those people who represent that industry on the SAGIT.

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Thousands of Edmontonians, Albertans, and indeed Canadians, face serious financial loss through the bankruptcy of the Principal Group. When I return to Edmonton this week-end, may I ask the Minister what I can tell those of my constituents who demand to know what the Government of Canada has done, is doing, and what it proposes to do, and when?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my hon. friend asked that question so that he can return to his constituents this week-end with the appropriate information. First, with regard to the CDIC insured institution, I can inform him that the CDIC will be in touch with all those depositors and reimbursement will be flowing hopefully within three weeks.

Second, as regards allegations of misrepresentations, it is very important to realize that there is now a judicial inquiry in Alberta. They can direct their allegations to that judicial inquiry but, as in all matters of this sort, be it provincial or federal, they can also direct their allegations to the Marketing Practices Branch of Consumer and Corporate Affairs federally.

Finally with regard to protecting investors, helping these people, and insuring that Alberta remains a good place to invest, they should contact the Treasurer of Alberta, just as I am doing today.

INDUSTRY

FIRESTONE PLANT IN HAMILTON—REPAYMENT OF FEDERAL FUNDS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I am very pleased that he agreed to meet with me this morning, some several weeks after I requested a meeting. I am also most pleased that after I raised in the House the fact that there was no document signed between Firestone and the Government to protect the $13.5 million grant, the document has finally been signed by the Minister.

However, I want to ask him why, in finally putting his signature to an agreement with Firestone that will permit it to begin moving equipment out of the company next week, he did not include a clause that would guarantee repayment of every single penny to the federal Government if a new purchaser is not found?

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my colleague knows, because I told her this morning, that this money has been put in escrow in a trust account so that in the meantime we can try to find an alternative purchaser. We can keep all our options open so that we can provide assistance for the new buyer in order to make sure that the workers in her region are taken care of. That is our responsibility.

REQUEST FOR REPAYMENT GUARANTEE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the Minister does not seem to understand my question. I understand that money has been put in trust and will be made available to a new buyer. My question is clear and simple. If no new buyer is found, why did the Minister not include as a condition in this document that all moneys must be repaid to the federal Government? Why is he giving Firestone carte blanche to start moving equipment out next week without even getting a guarantee in this document that it will repay that $13.5 million grant if no new buyer is found?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, I must make a correction. The equipment we have allowed the company to move is simply surplus equipment which is not being used for current production. We have ensured that all the equipment which might be needed by a future buyer will remain in place. As for the amount, $13.5 million have been placed in trust until February, 1988, by which time we shall have had all the time necessary and every opportunity to take legal action if we so desire. All options are open to the Government.

IMMIGRATION

ENTRY OF EAST ASIANS BY SHIP—QUERY CONCERNING PROSECUTIONS

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the entry of 174 East Asians into Canada. Members of the Opposition are apparently not aware that Mr. Rolph Nygren is spending one year in the Halifax County Correctional Centre for the simple offence of aiding and abetting that illegal entry into Canada.

• (1200)

Is the Minister prepared to prosecute any other persons who aided their illegal entry into Canada? And in the presence of obvious evidence of avoiding entry at a proper port of entry and destroying documents of identification, why were some of the East Asians themselves not prosecuted for illegally entering Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that Bill C-84 addresses these issues. In my opinion, the fines and prison terms that are provided to deter people from abusing the system are much harsher and much clearer than before, and I shall have no hesitation in taking legal action against anyone who attempts to use illegal means to bring people into Canada, exactly as we have done for captain Nygren, but this will depend on the fines imposed in each case.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that as the time for Question Period has nearly elapsed, there will be two single questions from the New Democratic Party. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Vancouver—Kingsway and I will then recognize the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

ELIGIBILITY OF MERCHANT SEAMEN FOR PENSIONS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. I want to congratulate him, by the way, for being chosen by Chatelaine magazine as being one of Canada's 10 sexiest men. I am tempted to ask him how he does it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Before he preens too much, the magazine also chose Michael Duffy of the CBC.

My question is a serious one, however, and it involves the merchant seamens' pensions and the task of trying to get them a fair deal. The Minister is aware that under the regulations they had to serve 180 days. They had to make one voyage through dangerous waters. I have received lots of letters and calls from people who are 17 days short, who cannot prove the fact they were there for 180 days because of the records and because they were minors at the time.

Will the Minister undertake to have another look at this law with the possibility of amending it or rendering decisions which are more favourable to these veterans?

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for a very constructive question. As always, the Department of Veterans Affairs is willing to look over any legislation which comes under our jurisdiction to see if it can be improved in order to give veterans a fairer break. If the Hon. Member, or any other Hon. Member, knows of cases where they think an applicant is not receiving a square deal, please bring it to my attention and I will give it my own personal attention. Thank you very much.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Churchill.

Mr. Murphy: I have a problem. The Minister of Labour has disappeared on me so I cannot ask my question.

Mr. Speaker: The last question, then.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORT OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIR SPACE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On two occasions this week, two different Parliamentary Secretaries in this House have given assurance that plutonium will not be flown from Europe to Japan over Canada without Canadian permission. That is not clear and not good enough. The assurance Canadians want is that Canada will under no circumstances allow the overflight of plutonium. Therefore, can the Minister give the assurance today in this House that plutonium overflights will not be allowed this year, next year, or ever?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member does not want to understand the situation then, of course, there is nothing we can do to persuade him otherwise. Canada has several options. The question is premature at the moment. There is no agreement signed as yet. There are no dates or routes for such flights yet established. Both Japanese and U.S. officials confirm that we will be consulted as is required under the international agreements.

We will have two options when this does become a relevant issue and a decision must be made. We can request that pre-notification be given and that we give approval prior to any overflights being undertaken, if we wish to do that. Or we have a second option, if we are not satisfied with the safety of the procedures, that is to deny any overflight by filing a state variance with the International Civil Aviation Organization.

When we know exactly what is being proposed and how it is proposed to be done, then we have all the necessary powers to make a decision as to what is best for Canada in accordance with our international obligations. The hon. gentleman can relax and be assured that Canadians will be well protected.

Mr. Caccia: Supplementary?

Mr. Speaker: I regret, but the time for Question Period has elapsed.

HISTORIC EVENTS

FORTHY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF DIEPPE RAID

Hon. George Hees (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on August 19 we will mark the 45th Anniversary of the Dieppe raid, the most grievous day of the Second World War for Canada. On that day, together with representatives of this House and the Senate, I will have the honour of accompanying back to Dieppe some of those who were part of that controversial and costly day.

Nearly 5,000 men of the 2nd Canadian Infantry Division sailed from England for Dieppe. Only 2,200 came back. There were 900 Canadian fatalities. For nearly 2,000 others, Dieppe meant that the rest of the war would be spent in prisoner of war camps.

Dieppe saw all three of our services in battle together for the first time. They represented our country nobly. The number of Canadian graves we will be visiting tell of a terrible mission.

Next Wednesday we will be paying tribute on behalf of Canada to those whose efforts made possible the gaining of vitally important information which was invaluable to the success of the all-out invasion of Europe two years later.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, as critic of the Official Opposition I want to echo the words of the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) and pay tribute to those who took part in the Dieppe raid.

As the Minister reminded us, next Wednesday, August 19, will be the 45th Anniversary of the Dieppe raid which is considered to have been Canada's most costly World War II fight: 913 Canadians killed and 1,946 made prisoners, more prisoners than during the 1944-45 11-month campaign of northwestern Europe.

But this cruel sacrifice was not in vain because the experience gained as a result of this feat of arms at Dieppe made it possible for the allies to launch with tactical perfection history's most important landing on the beaches of Normandy on June 6, 1944, the beginning of the great victory of the allies against Nazi oppression.

Mr. Speaker, on a monument standing in the City of Dieppe one can read: "On August nineteenth, nineteen forty-two, on the beach of Dieppe, our Canadian cousins marked out with their blood the way towards our final liberation, thus predicting the victorious return of September first, nineteen forty-four.".

All these heroes fell and gave their lives for freedom, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure that all generations of Canadians will forever remember what they did for them.

• (1210)

[English]

Mr. Jack Harris (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I, too, am pleased to say a few words about Dieppe. I congratulate the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Hees) on his statement. I am sure that next week's pilgrimage will do much to remind Canadians of a very significant day in our military history.

The Minister and my friend from the Official Opposition have described the landing and the terrible losses that ensued. I want to speak briefly about what happened when the shooting stopped and the battle was lost.

There, in Dieppe, were nearly 2,000 young Canadian soldiers in shackles. They were shackled because the enemy misinterpreted an order found on a Canadian officer. For these Canadians, the Second World War was a few hours of hell and many months of confinement, not knowing who was winning the war or whether they would even live to see the end of it.

Let us remember also that a number of our Dieppe veterans were part of the death marches near the end of the war, when the enemy tried to keep prisoners of war away from the advancing allies.

I give credit to the Minister for introducing legislation last year that increased the level of compensation for the basic disability pension from 20 per cent to 25 per cent. I am sure that the Minister will continue to enjoy the support of Members on all sides of the House in his efforts to have those pensions increased in the near future.

As we near the 45th Anniversary of Dieppe let us remember the widows and dependents of those men we regard as heroes. Let us remember also the survivors who spent some of the best years of their lives behind barbed wire. Surely, they have earned not just our gratitude but our utmost generosity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STRIKING

PRESENTATION OF 26TH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the twenty-sixth report of the Standing Striking Committee.

CONCLUSION OF SECOND READING STAGE OF BILL C-84

Mr. Scott Fennell (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between all Parties regarding an agreement which states:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, when the House resumes Government Orders this day, it shall proceed with consideration of the motion for the second reading and reference to a Legislative Committee of Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof;

That the hour for Private Members' Business shall be suspended and the item scheduled for today in the name of the Hon. Member for Bow River shall be dropped to the bottom of the list of the order of precedence on the Order Paper; and

That, not later than 2:55 o'clock p.m., if necessary, Mr. Speaker shall interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith, without further debate or amendment, all questions necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the Bill, and any recorded division, if requested, shall be deferred until 6 p.m. Monday, August 17, 1987, and upon completion of the said proceedings today the Speaker shall adjourn the House until the next sitting day.

Mr. Speaker: The question I am obliged to put to the House at this time is the following one. Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, our intention is to provide our consent to proceed in this way. However, I would like to ask a question of the mover of the motion. We are doing this based on the assumption that the legislation will be referred to a legislative committee and that that committee will have the opportunity to carry out full and complete hearings, receive an adequate list of witnesses to appropriately scrutinize the Bill. Can the Parliamentary Secretary provide us with that assurance? I ask the question so that there is a clear understanding of what the procedure will be.

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise that the normal procedures will ensue. The committee will be struck as soon as possible. The Chairman will meet with the representatives of all three Parties and the normal list of witnesses required to fully air the problems that either side may see in the Bill will be called. One would hope that the witnesses on their behalf, on their side of the story one might say, will make every effort to meet the committee's wishes so that we can move quickly with the committee stage of this matter and return the Bill to the House for third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): A clarification, Mr. Speaker. A few minutes ago we concurred in the report of the Committee appointing members to the legislative committee on Bill C-84. I presume that after the vote held on Monday at six o'clock the committee will be able to meet on Tuesday if it so wishes.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO ADDITIONAL TAXES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have a few petitions which I would like to table today. Constituents of the area and visitors to the Ottawa Byward Market this summer were invited to sign these petitions.

The petitions state that, whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical, dental supplies, snack foods, candies and soft drinks; and whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food; and whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life; and whereas the imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youth, et cetera, the petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour, the duty and the great pleasure to present to the House a petition signed by more than 2,500 Canadians calling for the speedy passage of Bill C-55. The petitioners ask that Members of the House implement measures to prevent abuse of our immigration system.

I urge all Members to respond to the will of Canadians and to pass Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 without delay.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 142, 146 and 160.

[Text]

NATIVE PEOPLE EMPLOYED BY DIAND

Question No. 142—Mr. Parry:

For (a) 1977 (b) 1987 to date, how many aboriginal people did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development employ, directly and on a full time basis, nationally and regionally, and what percentage of the total employees of the Department did this constitute?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): (a) In July, 1977, there were 122 native people employed by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development out of a total of 11,656 employees. The figure for total number of employees included Parks Canada personnel, who were later transferred to the Department of the Environment.

The number of native employees may not be totally accurate, as only those who identified themselves as such, are included. Natives were not accurately identified in the Department's information banks until 1980.

(b) The information on present native representation rates is as follows:

Region	No. of Employees	No. of natives
Alberta	527	117
Atlantic	176	26
British Columbia	417	61
Manitoba	628	191
National Capital Region	1440	109
N.W.T.	195	34
Ontario	778	230
Quebec	397	86
Saskatchewan	494	114
Yukon	325	48
Total	5377	1016

Over-all per cent — 18.9 per cent.

DEPARTMENT OF EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION—GRANTS IN TORONTO AREA

Question No. 146—Mr. Redway:

Since September 4, 1984, did the Department of Employment and Immigration make grants and/or loans to persons or corporations, non-governmental organizations and governments within metropolitan Toronto and, if so, in each case, in what amount and for what purpose?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Yes.

	Amount	Purpose
Grants	$8,590,906	Employment Creation Program. This program was one of several measures announced to reduce unemployment and provide support for areas that had been seriously affected by the economic recession and by high interest rates.
Loans	$12,539,063	Loans issued to Immigrants to pay for the transportation and accompanying costs to their final destination in Canada. Also, Recoverable Adjustment Assistance Loans were issued to Immigrants for their basic needs.

INVESTIGATION OF ELECTION EXPENSES

Question No. 160—Mr. Marin:

Was any cost incurred by the taxpayers for the investigation by the RCMP into the electoral expenses of the Hon. Member for Gaspé, including lawyer and legal fees and, if so, what is a breakdown of the amounts?

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURNS

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 158 could be made an Order for Return, the Return would be tabled immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The questions enumerated by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have been answered. Is it the pleasure of the House that question No. 158 be made an Order for Return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-84, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Criminal Code in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) had five minutes left on questions and comments. Are there any further questions or comments?

Mr. Caccia: Does the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) wish to comment on the fact that one year ago the Tamil boat arrived in Newfoundland, and it has taken one year for her Government to introduce this type of legislation?

Mrs. Collins: I am not sure what the Hon. Member's question is.

In February of this year the Minister introduced new regulations with respect to visa requirements. Those regulations have been very effective in dealing with people from certain countries coming into Canada. Because they are required to have visas, that has stopped the flow from certain areas.

In looking at both Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, I am sure that my hon. colleague will agree that it was not an easy task to develop those pieces of legislation. It required a great deal of consultation with interest groups, and review, to ensure compliance with the Charter of Rights and our international obligations. Therefore, it has taken some time to draft Bill C-55. It was introduced in May. I am sure that the Hon. Member will also recall that when Bill C-55 was introduced one of his colleagues from the Liberal Party immediately moved a motion for a six-month hoist. It was evident that the opposition Party was not interested in getting on with the legislation. Now we have returned and we are proceeding with both Bills.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On debate, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, we have been recalled in the middle of the summer recess in hysteria and panic to debate a Bill which we believe is flawed and dangerous. It is a Bill that was produced in haste by the Government to cover up its own inefficiency and inability to reform the refugee processing system in Canada. This system needs reform, but it needs to be done in a sensible, systematic and a fair manner.

There is no question, reform is long overdue. Reform is needed to deal with a backlog of refugee claimants. The procedure has become so complex that sometimes people have been waiting longer than three years for a decision as to whether or not they will be accepted as legitimate refugees and allowed to remain in Canada, or whether they will be deported to their homeland.

Over the last year, and even prior to that, the Government had the opportunity to improve the backlog of refugee claimants, and to improve the system. During the Liberal regime we received an excellent report from Rabbi Plaut. These proposals have never been considered. During the past year we also received excellent proposals from the all-Party Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. These proposals were very practical, well thought out, and agreed upon by all Parties. These proposals suggested procedures to speed up dealing with refugee claimants, and yet make sure that it is a fair procedure.

Recently, we heard criticisms of the Bills before us from the present Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration. His views are very much opposite to those of the Government. Suggestions continue to come from church groups who are expert in this field, and immigration organizations and NGOs across the country.

All those proposals would have reformed our refugee processing system. They would have reformed the system by speeding up the procedure so that it would be no longer than three months, yet provide fair hearings with a review or an appeal.

However, this summer the boat people came to the shores of Nova Scotia. Although this has not changed the position of the Government, because it had already decided not to act on the recommendations of parliamentary committees, it has changed the impetus and the hysteria with which the Government has decided to deal with this issue.

We all have our own views, and we can talk about motives, but that does not take us very far. The fact is that both the Government and its spokespeople, and I must say certain back-benchers and even the media, have inflamed this whole situation of 174 people who came unannounced to the shores of Nova Scotia. Every night with the news broadcasts there were dramatic pictures, I suggest because there was little other news during the summer doldrums, and there is no question that Canadians became very concerned. We have all received hundreds of angry phone calls to our offices. People were and still are concerned. I am sure we all agree that they have legitimate concerns.

However, the fact that the 174 newcomers wore turbans and ceremonial knives, had dark faces, and came from a strange religion, unfortunately inflamed racism in many people. I am very, very sad that many calls to my office reflected this. In their hysteria, I am sure that few people stopped to question whether or not some Sikhs from Pakistan who came via Europe still may be legitimate refugees. We do not know that. That is why we need to have hearings.

The reaction of the Government and back-benchers escalated the hysteria, called for a special session of Parliament, and encouraged these feelings and prejudices. I will not accept the racism that I heard in the voices of many people who called my riding office.

However, I do understand and sympathize with the many frustrations and anger felt by many people because they believed people were taking advantage of Canada's humanitarian policies and were entering Canada under false pretences. The Government encouraged this conclusion. We did not know the facts, so people were being judged as guilty. We still do not know the facts and the full circumstances of these people.

Why did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) make judgments in advance of obtaining the facts? Did he know whether or not there were legitimate refugee claimants present when he classified the boat people who came recently as "illegal aliens"? He repeatedly used this term in a generalized, negative, and derogatory fashion. Why did he reverse his views? Once again, what does this say about our Prime Minister? Last summer, when referring to the Tamils, he stated in very strong terms that we should never turn our backs on refugees, and we would never turn them away from our shores. He was right. We should not turn refugees away from our shores.

The Government has added greatly to the confusion. It has created misunderstanding in the public. It was the Government's obligation and responsibility to try to give facts and support Canada's humanitarian approach to refugees. I believe that the Government and the two Ministers were probably feeling very insecure and frustrated about their inability to cope with the refugee problem which had been building and building, a problem which certainly requires reform.

• (1230)

I would like my constituents to know that the New Democratic Party is as concerned as they are that there should not be abuses of our immigration policies. When abuses are proven, and I stress the word "proven", of course they must be dealt with.

We have laws that provide that people who are not legitimate refugees as defined by the UN Conventions do not have the right to stay in Canada and therefore will be asked to leave or, if necessary, will be deported. However, we must also be very concerned, and I know my constituents and members of my Party are as well, about the many desperate people in the world.

Many desperate people are indeed taking advantage of our system, trying to come into Canada as refugee claimants, because they know how difficult it is to come as landed immigrants. There are real problems in that regard, and a tremendous backlog as well. I am sure there are ways to deal with that. For example, it would be very helpful to have more than one immigration office in India.

We are concerned about the long delays Canadians experience when having relatives join them from other countries as landed immigrants or assisted relatives. However, I think it is very important that the Government make clear to people that refugee claimants fall under an entirely different category than landed immigrants.

I must say that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) just added to the confusion and prejudices people have been expressing when he implied the other day that alleged refugees are jumping the queue. Alleged refugees do not affect the people who are lined up to come in as assisted relatives, nor do they have anything to do with the people who enter Canada under the entrepreneurial class or other classes of regular landed immigrants.

We want a fair, efficient immigration policy, a policy that is consistent with UN objectives. We want a policy that is able to respond generously to the pressing needs of an over-populated world. We in Canada are so lucky and we must look beyond our borders, particularly to those from regions experiencing extreme violence, war, poverty and infringements of human rights.

We want refugee claims to be processed quickly but we want refugees to have full hearings, legal counsel and opportunity for appeal. We want procedures for doing this that conform to our Charter of Rights and to UN requirements.

Just as we cannot support Bill C-55, we also cannot support Bill C-84. Bill C-84 really does not deal with the concerns I have mentioned. It is a hastily drafted piece of emergency legislation designed to deal with refugee claimants who arrive in Canada without documents by means of so-called smugglers.

We of course believe that unscrupulous agents who exploit people for profit, and there are many, and those who advise alleged refugees to give misleading information, should be punished and should probably be punished with increased penalties. However, proposed Section 95.1 in the Bill would also penalize well-meaning church people and humanitarian agents who voluntarily take it upon themselves to assist very desperate people who seek sanctuary in Canada. As was pointed out in Question Period today, we are concerned because many people would be subject to very serious penalties for breaking the law of Canada, people who are working to assist legitimate refugees.

Many refugees who are fleeing violence or persecution in their homelands do not have documents. I worked in refugee camps in Vienna, Austria, which were flooded with Hungarian refugees in 1956. None of those refugees had papers. I know very well that people coming by boat from Indo-China would not have adequate documentation to prove their identities. Refugees leave under very difficult circumstances. We must have a clause in this Bill that covers that sort of thing and does not says, simply and flatly, that if a refugee does not have papers we will not even talk to him but will ship him away from our shores.

I know that many Latin American people who do not speak English come to the British Columbia border. These people are under considerable stress. They are very worried about their families and about what may happen to them at the hands of their home Governments if they are sent back. They would find it very difficult to present their cases at the border and that is why we are so concerned about Bill C-55 and the limitations it puts on people who appear at the border requiring advocates, lawyers or interpreters. Many of these people will not have time to present their cases.

Bill C-84 provides for indefinite detention of newcomers who have no identification and has no provision for competent legal counsel. Of course, we agree, as would any reasonable person, that there must be security checks, and any person who may represent a threat to Canadians or who does not pass valid security tests should not be allowed to remain in Canada. However, we feel that this testing should be done by qualified security officers who are trained to do this. It should not be dealt with by a judge, and I believe, as some of my colleagues said the other day, the judges would be the first to agree with that. Of course, proven criminals, and again I stress the word "proven", must be deported.

We are also concerned about the policing role this Bill will impose on airline ticket agents who, under this Bill, will be expected to decide whether or not a person is eligible to come to Canada. It is not up to ticket agents in other countries to be policemen for Canada. This is another part of the Bill that needs serious reconsideration and amendment.

The flaws in this Bill are many. We have heard from many immigration experts here in the House about those flaws in detail and we will be looking at them from the point of view of making amendments. That is why it is so important that we get the Bill to committee so it can be worked on carefully.

The new Bill will allow the Minister to order a ship bearing potential refugees out of Canadian waters without any determination of status. This might make the Minister look tough, but is it sound? Of course not. This would allow for the potential repeat of the past injustices in history for which we all must be very ashamed.

The House will recall that in 1913, Canada turned away a shipload of Sikhs from the Port of Vancouver, Sikhs who were fleeing from religious prosecution in their homeland. We forced them out to sea without adequate food and water and many of them died as a result. In 1939, Canada turned away a boatload of Jews who were sent back to the gas chambers.

Just recently, refugees from El Salvador who came to the United States were sent back by that country to their homes, and this legislation would repeat that. Of those people who were sent back, 50 of them were traced and most of those are dead. Is this the kind of thing we as Canadians want to happen because we have impulsive, punitive and poorly thought out legislation?

Most Canadians think it cannot happen. The Minister obviously thinks that. This proposed new law, administered by a very nervous Government, could allow things to occur which deny our obligation to accept legitimate refugees and to have a fair hearing for all those who come to our shores. The Bill is an over-reaction prompted by the Government's desire to project a tough new image. My colleagues, particularly our immigration critic, have pointed to proposed Sections 95.1 and 95.2 which must be amended.

I want to use my remaining time to appeal to the House and Canadians to not allow one incident to turn us away from our humanitarian traditions regarding refugees and immigrants. We have so much to share compared to other regions in the world. We are far away and protected by the oceans that surround us. We are rarely flooded with the masses of refugees, as happened in Austria in 1958, ASEAN countries in 1949, and African countries today. Very poor countries accept everyone without selection because they have no choice. They cannot be as selective as Canada in picking only the people who are healthy or those we think can adjust, or those with relatives or sponsors to assist them.

We cannot let one incident, which may have involved legitimate refugees—we do not know yet—close our doors to Latin Americans and Asians who are living under considerable hardship and who may fear for their safety. We must uphold our principle of fair hearings with appeals while we form a refugee determination policy to speed up the process and deal with abuses as well as dealing effectively with more immigrants.

Bill C-84 would impose abuses of our own and we cannot agree with it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, one of the rewarding things in this debate is that I have heard so much concern for the churches in the last few days. It is cheering and heartening for me to think that there is such an increased interest, particularly on the part of opposition Members, in the welfare of our churches. I hope all of them will be there next Sunday and all of them will give generously when the offering plate comes around. I hope they match their protestations here with their behaviour on Sunday.

I want to highlight a couple of things that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) pointed out. She said, despite coming from Europe many of these people may still be refugees. I agree. However, she will understand that if these people are fleeing persecution or other similar circumstances, it is their obligation to claim refugee status in the first safe country they come to. If they are already in Europe, I am assuming western Europe, she would agree that those countries are generally considered safe countries in which to apply for refugee status. Therefore, it is their obligation to claim refugee status there.

She said we need a system that will deal quickly with the backlog, with a full hearing and counsel, as well as an appeal procedure that meets UN requirements. The Bill does all of those things. I almost came to believe that she was supporting the Bill when she listed these requirements because it meets them.

She also said the Bill would penalize church people because they might help people come in without documents. I think she will agree that there are two basic reasons why people might not have documents. One is that they have destroyed them. The second is that they are coming from a safe country where they have entered illegally, otherwise they would have documents. I think she would have to agree with that.

Finally, she said we cannot take the system away from our qualified security services and turn it over to the courts. She is repeating the distortion presented by her leader the other day. I remind her that proposed Section 41(1) in the Bill states:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, where the Minister and the Solicitor General are of the opinion, based on security or criminal intelligence reports received and considered by them, that a person, other than a Canadian citizen or permanent resident, is a person described in paragraph 19(1)(d), (e), (f) or (g) or 27(2)(c), they may sign and file a certificate to that effect with an immigration officer, a senior immigration officer or an adjudicator.

That is not turning the security system over to the courts. We have an investigation by qualified security officers supplying their reports to the Solicitor General or the Minister. They have to submit a document to the courts and the person in question can make an appeal to the courts, which is exactly what we are obligated to do under the Charter. I hope that the Member will in all honesty and fairness accept the fact that the Bill provides exactly the kind of security she is looking for and therefore will support it.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will not respond to the very patronizing initial remarks of the Hon. Member which do not do him any credit.

Mr. Friesen: Oh, of course not. You will be in church Sunday.

Ms. Mitchell: I certainly would not disagree that it is desirable for the people to have proper documents and to register in the first country they arrive in. No one would disagree with that. The fact is that not everyone comes under those circumstances.

The other fact that the Member does not deal with and which underlines again his attitude and the philosophy of this legislation is that we are so willing to prejudge everything. We want to keep those ships away from our shores before we even know who is on board. We are not willing to give a fair hearing to them and I think this whole question of prejudgment is very undemocratic. We object to it.

I gave my arguments earlier on the other points he raised and I think I will leave it at that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There being no further questions or comments, debate.

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I am going to begin my remarks with a few thoughts on the subject of definitions. I believe that is a good place to begin because when we get down to the nitty-gritty we are attempting to bring a greater definition to the policy we follow with those coming to Canada from abroad. Differences and distinctions are very important in this discussion, the differences between legal immigrants and illegal immigrants. The distinction needs to be made and must be made between genuine refugees and those who only pretend to be refugees.

There is no need for haziness or vagueness about the word "refugee". The Geneva Convention of 1952 gives us a very precise definition. A refugee is a person who cannot return to his or her country because of a well-founded fear of persecution on the grounds of race, religion, national social group or political opinion.

There is no lack of people who match that description. The world has known more than its fair share of oppression, bigotry and senseless hatred. There is certainly no lack in Canada of a desire and indeed determination to hold out a helping hand to those in trouble. We have a good record in this respect.

• (1250)

A river of refugee immigration, fed by many streams, flows into this country and will continue to do so. Since World War II half a million refugees have joined us in this country. Each year we accept thousands more—genuine refugees, people who match the Geneva Convention definition, people living in refugee camps or in actual flight from danger.

In 1986 and 1987 the Government of Canada will sponsor and resettle 12,000 refugees, some from camps, some actually rescued at sea, some whose immigration interviews actually took place in jails. In addition to this, there are thousands of refugees rescued by private Canadian sponsors.

There is in fact no limit whatsoever on the number of people who can come to Canada this way. Indeed, when emergencies have arisen the limit has been ignored. One example we can all remember is Canada's response to the plight of the boat people from Vietnam and Cambodia. There are people in my own riding who escaped persecution in Vietnam. In that short period of time we accepted 60,000 Indo-Chinese refugees. There are other programs, other streams of refugee immigration reaching our shores.

Canada's policy is sane, compassionate and flexible. It expresses the generosity and empathy of a nation of immigrants. It is the right policy for Canada. The integrity of that policy is a matter of tremendous concern to genuine refugees throughout the world.

That, Mr. Speaker, brings me to the purpose, the raison d'etre, for Bill C-84. We are here today not only to protect legitimate Canadian interests but, more basically, to protect the interests of genuine refugees throughout the world. Let us be clear on this point. We are confronting a veritable flood of counterfeit refugees, not just the highly publicized boat landings of a few hundred, but tens of thousands arriving by more conventional means. The pressure of this illegal flood impairs our ability to help genuine refugees. We cannot and will not stand by and see a policy which is so important to so many frustrated and made untenable by unscrupulous opportunists. That is what would happen if we allowed the systematic violations of the past few years to continue unabated and probably to grow.

Let us attach a few numbers to that problem. Only six years ago the number of people arriving in Canada and claiming refugee status was about 1,600. By 1981 the figure was up to 3,450. Last year the figure was 18,000, and for 1987, judging by present trends, we expect it to grow to 30,000.

Canadians would not begrudge even one of the 30,000 if indeed they were refugees, people in fact in danger. However, the truth is that many of these claims are not genuine. Last year, for example, seven out of ten people claiming refugee status were found not to be refugees at all. They were people who claimed that status in order to move ahead of others who were willing to abide by our laws and follow the legal procedures. They were, in effect, queue jumpers.

We have all stood in line with others waiting to see a movie or to be served at the bank. We know how we feel when someone jumps the line. It is absolutely frustrating and damages the whole line. This is what is happening.

In addition to that 70 per cent there were people who, although they had been refugees from their native land at an earlier time, had in fact found safe haven in third country. One must ask oneself about the motivation which drives people, not refugees fleeing for their lives, but people who have found safe haven in one country, to embark on an illegal expedition to Canada. The answer, I am afraid, is that Canada has become a country where loopholes are so large that they can get away with it. We are seen as a soft touch. With each well publicized violation that impression becomes stronger.

We know, for instance, that following the boat incident of last year there was a dramatic increase in the number of illegal aliens entering Canada. The Government, as you know, responded by introducing Bill C-55. We began the process of putting in place a determination system which would be both fair and effective. This Bill is needed to provide immediate protection from abuse of the system.

This legislation has been called tough. Yes, it is tough. Once we comprehend what is at stake we understand that it has to be tough. It is tough because of the interests it protects. As I said, these include the interests of genuine refugees. It is tough because the people at whom it is aimed are in a dirty but lucrative business. A slap on the hand will not deter them at all. It is tough because lives are at stake. We have seen in the U.S.-Mexico border boxcar incident how this traffic in human misery can lead to tragedy. We do not want it to happen in Canada.

For those who may not have visited the East Coast of Canada, Mr. Speaker, foundering in a dory in the middle of the night with fog, bad winds and so on, is an extremely dangerous affair. There are some very powerful fishing vessels plying those waters. One shudders to think what may happen to vessels full of men, women and sometimes children, if we were to continue to condone this type of thing. This Bill is designed to stop this kind of nonsense.

The penalties for the middle man in illegal immigration are tougher. Anyone who considers getting into that line of work will now have to consider the possibility of facing 10 years in prison and a fine of up to $.5 million. If they are thinking of disembarking people illegally in Canadian waters, an act as irresponsible in human as in legal terms, that act, too, will carry its own severe penalties.

As I have said, the vast majority of those who arrived in Canada improperly documented did not float ashore but arrived on scheduled transportation carriers. It is not supposed to be able to happen that way. It has been the responsibility of the companies selling the tickets to check the travel documents. Some transportation companies have been dodging that responsibility.

It is not hard to guess at plausible reasons for this. One reason is the difficulty that the carrier encounters in making these checks. Another is a sort of built-in encouragement to look the other way. Without stiff penalties, if people go through undocumented, nothing much is lost.

This Bill addresses both problems. It imposes fines on transportation companies which bring people into Canada who do not have the required documents. There will be a fine of $5,000 for each such case. At the same time, steps are being taken to make it more feasible for the carriers to meet their responsibilities. Under this Act they would be empowered to actually collect and hold documents for careful examination and to return them to their owners upon arrival in Canada. I would like to repeat that under this Act they would be empowered to collect and hold documents. It does not say that they have to do it, but it empowers them to do it. These are common sense precautions and requirements which can easily be fulfilled by legitimate immigrants.

Another important feature is improved ability to identify people applying for refugee status. Knowing who you are dealing with is the crux of the problem. One obvious reason is that we need to be able to differentiate between those who genuinely need haven and those who are faking it.

Another reason is security. There are millions of genuine refugees in this unhappy world, Mr. Speaker, people who need our help. There are also a few extremely dangerous people, including some terrorists. We may not be able to prevent the illegal entry of every last one of them, but we should not make it any easier for them by being careless or hasty about identification. This Act provides some reasonable periods of detention until identification is made.

The other great need which this Bill addresses is the need to speed up decisions. As matters stand now, it takes up to five years to decide on the validity of a claim for refugee status. This feature by itself invites abuse. Accurately or inaccurately, it encourages the illegal entrant to get in and then play it by ear for half a decade. The Bill before us will move the process forward faster. However, it is equipped with many safeguards to protect the legitimate claimant. The procedure for making the decision conforms with the Charter of Rights. Individuals have the right to counsel. There is provision for an appeal by leave to the Federal Court on questions of law.

No one can be removed from Canada without the concurrence of the refugee board member. The board itself will be an independent and expert body equipped with up-to-date information on the situation in other countries.

I support this legislation because it protects the interests of a community, Canadian and worldwide, which really does need protection. It protects the interest of the potential immigrant waiting in another country who has gone through the drill of interviews and collection of documents, who has patiently waited and has followed the laws that we in this House have passed. I support this legislation because it protects the interests of the legitimate refugee. I urge my fellow Members to support this Bill and to protect this country's ability to minister to the needs of those who are in real need and real danger. I invite my colleagues in the Opposition to be adult once and for all and to support this Bill.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, in his remarks the Hon. Member referred to Bill C-55 and the provision of a refugee board member at the initial screening of refugee claimants. I heard him say that no refugee claimant will be removed from the country without the approval of the refugee board member.

I want to suggest to the Hon. Member that he has not read the law carefully. The law provides indeed that there will be a refugee board member plus an adjudicator as the two decision-makers in the initial screening. It is true that it takes a unanimous decision of that pair to remove the person, and that either person, acting within his jurisdiction, could have the authority to send the claimant on to the refugee board. So far so good.

However, I wish the Hon. Member would read Clause 48 of the Bill very carefully. Clause 48 limits the powers of those two decision-makers, whether it be the adjudicator or the refugee board member, in determining whether the person is eligible. The first matter they can examine is only the question of eligibility, and not the merit or validity of his claim.

One of the major bars to eligibility will be the question of safe country. The Government has never defined safe country. It has never announced any agreement with any country to accept these people on terms that the Hon. Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) said would be required, namely that they would give the claimant full protection against being returned to the country he fled. Nevertheless, there is the provision that if the person comes from a country listed by the Cabinet as a safe country, the refugee board member does not have the power to send that person on to the refugee board. He may want to and may think he should, but that law does not give him that power. This seriously qualifies the generous statement that the Hon. Member made in his remarks.

The second test will be concerning what country he comes from and whether that is considered a refugee-producing country. If he comes from a country that is not considered to be refugee-producing he will not even be heard. Will the Member undertake to read Clause 48 and consider whether, in fact, it supports the statement he made?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I began my speech by going into definitions. I will continue in somewhat the same line by defining a safe third country. This might help the Hon. Member.

The Governor in Council will be empowered to establish a list of countries which are safe for persons claiming convention refugee status. When an individual appears at a port of entry seeking Canada's protection pursuant to the Convention, the adjudicant and/or the member of the refugee division cannot review the Cabinet decision that a country is safe.

The adjudicator and members will be required to determine whether, if removed from Canada, the claimant will be allowed to return to that safe country or would have the right to have that claim determined there.

This decision will be made on the basis of evidence presented regarding the individual's status and duration of stay in the safe country and regarding any bilateral or multilateral agreements to which Canada and that country are parties governing the return of individuals including refugee claimants who are not admissible to Canada.

I believe this is the kind of definition the Hon. Member is seeking.

Mr. Heap: No, it is not. It does not meet the point at all.

Mr. Comeau: I think I have answered the Member's question.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in his concluding remarks, I understood the Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau) to urge Members of the House to be adult and support this Bill. Does this mean, according to the set of values and principles to which he adheres, breaking away and disregarding the protocols and UN conventions to which Canada has adhered?

Mr. Comeau: I believe if the Member were to check with the Geneva Convention to which he refers he would find that this Bill actually adheres to the Convention quite well. It follows all the conventions. I am not sure to what the Hon. Member is referring.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, is the Hon. Member aware of the fact that two days ago the United Nations High Commissioner of Refugees wrote a letter to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) drawing to his attention that this Bill, if adopted as it is proposed, will break the protocols in the conventions to which we have adhered?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister addressed that question today. The Minister will be writing a letter to the Commissioner stating that his interpretation is wrong.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I respect the Hon. Member for his sincerity and attempt to grapple with legislation seriously. The Hon. Member referred to the tremendous increase in refugees trying to establish their status here in Canada. The implication and perhaps the explicit point which the Hon. Member made was that this was somehow reflective of attempts to fool Canadians and make us victims of fraud.

Is there not another explanation, that throughout the world there has been a tremendous acceleration in refugee movement? Whether one considers Africa or Latin America, especially Central America, one finds an incredible movement of people. It is not because of economic causes but because of persecution, vicious Governments, because of exactly the kind of incredible control and domination over people the Conservative Party is supposed to stand against.

• (1310)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please.

Mr. Langdon: I will finish up very quickly. Would the Hon. Member give me and the House his understanding of why he feels there has been such a great increase in refugee movements throughout the world? Why should we not expect that Canada is going to experience that also?

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I am starting to understand from the opposition Parties that they have absolutely no clue at all as to what Bill C-84 is all about. This Bill is about 174 people arriving in the middle of the night on the shores of Nova Scotia and about 175 people arriving in Newfoundland in the middle of the night in small dories in fog and bad weather, placing their lives in danger as well as the lives of other people, Canadian citizens, who were fishing in those waters. The present system as it exists encourages this to happen. This is what this Bill is all about. Opposition Members have absolutely no clue at all about what we are trying to do.

If these things are allowed to continue it will only encourage more illegal immigrants and the problem will increase. We must put a stop to it. There are ways to come to Canada, not surreptitiously, coming to Canada's shores in the middle of the night.

I urge Members opposite to look at what the Bill is trying to accomplish. I ask them to come and speak to the people of my riding and find out how my constituents feel about 174 people arriving in the middle of the night when they themselves have been fishing in those same waters all night. How do you think they felt after having fished all night to find in the morning that they could have run into a boat carrying 175 people? They say: "Oh, my God, I could have hit those people".

If one is a genuine refugee there are ways to come to Canada. I think I have explained what this Bill is all about. Please try to understand that this is to put a stop to the abuse of the system. It is to put a stop to the encouragement that the status quo gives to these people to continue this abuse.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time for questions and comments has now terminated.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we have had three days of debate with some high points and some low points. I would like to start by congratulating the Progressive Conservative Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, who spoke yesterday. He made a number of interesting points, three of which stick in my mind.

First, he said that the changes in the refugee determination process which are proposed in this Bill are such that it would be practically impossible for a great number of legitimate refugees to apply for refugee status. How about that statement, I ask Members opposite and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard)?

Second, the Hon. Member for La Prairie made the point that there are other rational and appropriate solutions to these problems which would not have us break our international agreement on refugees and could not be challenged in court on the basis of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This was pointed out by a colleague of the Hon. Member, the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mr. Comeau), who denied there is any substance to this particular very serious flaw in this piece of legislation.

Third, the Hon. Member for La Prairie made the interesting point that the best way to put the smugglers out of business is to dry up the demand for their services. The best way to stop the queue jumping is to shorten the queue. In other words, if we want more orderly borders, we need more liberal borders. I am sure the Hon. Member for La Prairie was not speaking politically when he used the words "liberal". He meant it in the small "l" manner. However, he definitely made an interesting point. The Hon. Member for La Prairie is a member of the Party in power and he had the courage to rise in this Chamber yesterday and make these points, which fly in the face of all the statements made during Question Period today and yesterday by the two Ministers for Immigration.

That was the high point of the debate so far. Let me now deal with the low points. Yesterday afternoon we were lectured by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). In order to understand the import of what he said, let me give Hon. Members some background because it is very important. We as the nation of Canada have adhered to Article 14 of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, as have many other nations. In that declaration we have agreed that we should allow the right to seek asylum in Canada to anyone who wants to seek asylum in Canada. We signed that declaration as well as a protocol to that effect. This concept or principle is called, in the language which has unfortunately developed on the Hill, universal access. Universal access was dealt a major blow yesterday by the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he rose in the House and said, as reported at page 8043 of Hansard:

> I do not believe that universal access is the manner through which Canada should take the number of refugees which we have said we will.

That is what the Minister said. What a shame! What a disaster! A Minister of the Crown comes to this House and virtually announces that we are abandoning the cornerstone of our international commitment to allow individuals who could be legitimate refugees to apply within the country. It is in a way a revelation that we would break our commitment to the United Nations.

We would not mind if the Government had the honesty and decency to come to the House and tell us it intends to abandon its commitment to the United Nations, including Article 14. At least it would be going through the front door. It should announce that to us, to the media and to the Canadian public and we will fight it on those grounds. However, to come here and to do it in a sneaky manner in some camouflaged language through this Bill is really the last thing we would have expected from the Ministers of Immigration and from the Government as a whole. What a shame! What a disgrace! That was the lowest point in the debate so far.

I bring this to your attention, Mr. Speaker, for two reasons; first, because it was a Minister of the Crown who made that statement in the House and, second, because we have just been informed that the High Commissioner for Refugees at the United Nations wrote a letter two days ago on August 12 from Geneva to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. He wrote the letter to the Minister drawing to his attention the fact that the Bill seriously impacts on our commitment.

We all know how careful international diplomatic language is. We can, I am sure, read between the lines with respect to what the United Nations High Commissioner really means when he says in his letter: "Certain provisions of the proposed legislation, however, give rise to serious concern inasmuch as lack of procedural safeguards could risk exposing bona fide asylum seekers and refugees to forcible return to territories where their lives or freedom would be threatened". This is careful but clear language. It says that Bill C-84 puts us in a corner with very strange company. As Canadians we do not want to be put into that situation. I am sure that the UN High Commissioner would not have written such a letter on the same day that the Bill was introduced in the House had he not been advised about the gravity of the situation. To be more precise, it was really the day after since the Government asked members of the Opposition to agree to forgo the usual 24-hour waiting period between first and second reading.

The United Nations High Commissioner, Mr. Jean-Pierre Hocké, makes his point at length in his letter. Time will not permit me to go into all of it. However, I can assure Hon. Members that very consistently in six paragraphs he reinforces his preoccupation and seeks from the Government of Canada a reply that will reassure him that we are not going to pass this Bill in the form in which it is now written. So much for the claims of a number of Conservative Members who have stated that we have not read the legislation or that we are introducing a false notion as to the interpretation of the clauses. This is a source that cannot be attributed to be in the Official Opposition. It is from 5,000 kilometres across the Atlantic Ocean. The letter comes from Geneva from a reputable, objective and independent source.

Another low point in this debate was raised in Question Period on two consecutive days. I refer to the stonewalling by the Minister of Employment and Immigration who has a bad habit of double-talk. He said in reply to our questions: "Well, actually, what I am doing here in terms of penalties on groups, individuals, organizations and the like already exists in the legislation". If it exists already in the legislation, then why did the Government not apply the law as it is already written? If this legislation exists, then why the need to introduce new clauses in the Bill before us? The Government cannot have it both ways. It leaves us asking why the Government has not applied the legislation as it is now written if it permits the Minister to say in Question Period that what we are doing exists already in the legislation. There exists a contradiction here, and we have seen a great many contradictions.

The Minister has also come under fire with respect to Clause 95(1). It has been said on both sides that Clause 95(1) must be amended since it contains the word "aid". It contains a word which would impact on the civil liberties of Canadians who would undertake to help potential refugees. This theme has also been picked up in other correspondence.

Another point which has emerged in the debate, a point which was very eloquently expressed and expanded upon by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), is with respect to the double standard in the treatment of those who arrive here in that this legislation, if approved, would apply to those who knock at our doors coming by way of air and land versus those who come by water. Here is a piece of legislation that focuses entirely on those coming by water. In essence, this legislation will put Canada in the position of applying two different types of treatment to people depending upon the means of transportation they use to come into Canada. In other words, a person who arrives by plane, bus or train will have an opportunity to apply on Canadian soil. However, if one happens to come by boat and if one is suspect, then that boat can be turned around before it reaches Canadian territorial waters, or even within Canadian territorial waters. We are really puzzled by this double treatment that is being applied. If, tomorrow, Nelson Mandela would escape prison and come to Canada by way of boat he could be among those who could be turned back since he would be coming by water and not by air or by land. We certainly do not want that type of situation to occur. There are certainly a great many Nelson Mandelas in the world today.

Another point so eloquently raised by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York West, is with respect to the question that the Bill will ask transport companies to do a certain job of screening travellers. In essence what it boils down to is that the ticket agent of an airline will be asked to do the job of our immigration officials—

Mr. Layton: He is supposed to do it now.

Mr. Caccia: He is not supposed to do it now at all. He does not have the time, the training or the inclination to perform that type of work at the point of departure on behalf of the Canadian Government. Nor does he have the authority. In this case the Canadian Government is relinquishing a responsibility that is purely the responsibility of our immigration officials in Canada. They are qualified people. They are trained to perform their jobs. They are the ones who ought to do this type of screening, not some unknown ticket agent who has a long line of people with luggage and the like to be processed when their plane is departing in, for example, 59 minutes. It shows just what poor thinking there exists on the part of the Government with respect to this measure.

Today at noon we heard the Hon. Member for Capilano (Mrs. Collins) speak. She waxed eloquent on the theme that this is a law to catch just a few. That theme was echoed as well by the Hon. Member for South West Nova. Both of them are wrong. Anyone who claims that is wrong. There are very important principles at stake here in this legislation which some think is intended to catch a few. The civil rights of Canadians are being infringed upon.

If the legislation is not amended in committee it will break covenants and protocols of the United Nations to which Canada has given its signature over the decades, not just over the last few years, and which have also earned Canada, as Hon. Members probably heard in the debate yesterday, the Nansen award. As I expounded a moment ago, it treats people who arrive by water and are seeking asylum differently from those who arrive by land and air.

Since the arrival of the Tamil boat one year ago, the Government has had a lot of time to prepare a decent piece of legislation. Even without wanting to use the Tamil boat as a benchmark, the Government has had a lot of input since September, 1984 on this particular matter. In August, 1987 it is pathetic to see the Government creating a sense of panic which gives the population a sense of fear, and rushing in with a piece of legislation that is badly thought out. In other words, the Government had lots of time. The Ministers who spoke in this debate ought to be chastised for confusing the public by mixing refugees with immigrants at large. In other words, they are not keeping separate in the public mind the fact that refugees are one stream, immigrants are another, and that it is not true that by admitting refugees, the number of immigrants is reduced. These are two independent flows.

The other day when introducing the Bill, the Minister of Employment and Immigration could not resist the temptation to sweeten the pill by announcing a measure for family reunification just to show, after all, that the Government has a sensitivity and is so inspired by family reunification that, in order to bring in this badly thought out legislation, it would coat it with sugar. That is bad practice, and it does not fool Canadians.

We will fight in committee to turn this bad Bill into passable legislation, if we can. I am sure a lot of effort will be made. Because it is presently in a poor, pathetic condition which breaks principles and protocols, and denies certain civil rights to Canadians who are interested in this issue, we will vote against it.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) has the floor.

Mr. Ferland: Mr. Speaker, I was rather surprised at the aggressive stance taken by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) this afternoon. Usually he is quite calm, so I suppose it was just his Latin temperament surfacing, or maybe he was upset because he had to cut short his golfing season to consider these very important issues.

He said earlier that the Minister's answers were an example of double-talk. I do not think that is true. I think that, during Question Period, the Minister was quite clear and specific in his comments on a Bill that is very important for Canada and Canadians in general. In fact, this is probably one of the issues that is attracting most of the attention of my constituents, because they have the impression that Canada has become ridiculously easy to enter. I was asked why since the war, a Canadian has never needed a visa to go to France. I was also asked why we Canadians now must have a visa to gain entry into France.

Last night on the CBC news someone said: Well, there might be people from Canada who would go to India and make trouble. Canadian men and women have never been trouble makers anywhere in the world. But to get back to the very purpose of this Bill, I should like to remind my colleague from Davenport that, from 1978 to 1986, 6,376 of the 60,000 individuals who claimed refugee status have been recognized as such pursuant to the provisions of the Convention.

Mr. Speaker, the way things are going and if my memory serves me right, there were 1,600 refugee applications in 1980, up to 18,000 in 1986, and this year we should just about reach the 30,000 mark. I wish my colleague from Davenport would tell me whether or not he thinks that profiteers are now abusing. I suggest that the Bill is aimed at people who seek to profit from the misfortunes of other people on earth. So I would like to know how he would go about pulling out some of the teeth of this legislation, because where I come from people tell me we need a law with sharp teeth precisely to prevent some people from taking advantage of others who suffer on this planet.

[English]

Mr. Caccia: I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) for his questions. The Hon. Member and I have two characteristics in common. We both have a Latin temperament, and we both have a passion to stop acid rain.

As the Hon. Member usually does, he has raised a number of thoughtful questions which I will attempt to answer. There is no doubt that Canadians want to see a stop to the trafficking in human misery. The Hon. Member put it very well. Canadians also want to see a stop to abusers.

I am sure that the Hon. Member will agree with me that his Government has had a lot of time to prepare itself for this change in trends that he stated by virtue of the statistics he quoted. The Government has had a lot of time, and a lot of advice. It was only one year ago that his own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) welcomed the Tamil boat. Somehow, this heralded a change in the pattern of arrivals of people. I am seeking the Hon. Member's support in doing this in a manner that does not contravene our international obligations. This is one of the serious flaws in this Bill. It should be done in a manner that does not penalize individual groups or organizations of Canadians who take an interest in helping refugees.

It should be done in a manner that will maintain Canada's reputation in the world and honour its signature to the protocol whereby, as many other nations, we recognize the rights of a potential refugee to seek asylum on Canadian territory, and be processed according to due process.

Finally, I would invite the Hon. Member for Portneuf, for whom I have the greatest respect, to glance over the speech made by his colleague, the Hon. Member for La Prairie. It is a very educational one.

Mr. Marchi: I listened carefully to the very compassionate speech of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). In his speech, he pointed out a number of the high points and the low points of this debate. He also brought to the attention of the House of Commons a very important letter from the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees. The High Commissioner is very concerned with the direction in which the Government proposes to take Canada. The Hon. Member for Davenport quoted a number of comments from the High Commissioner. I wish to draw to his attention a further paragraph written by the High Commissioner to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in which he stated:

> As you are no doubt aware the situations now being faced are not unique to Canada. Institution of the procedural safeguards referred to above would serve as an important example to the international community and help preserve the principle of asylum throughout the world.

• (1340)

The United Nations High Commissioner is essentially asking Canada not to encourage an exodus that would render the pact signed under the United Nations Protocol of 1969 simply powerless. That is one of the messages the Commissioner is sending to Canada, a country that has traditionally been a leader in the international community, a country that lost that leadership but intends to encourage others to go in the same direction.

I wonder if the Hon. Member for Davenport could share with the House some concerns about the message this would send out to the international community which might look to Canada and enact the same legislation, thereby rendering powerless what was and continues to be a very significant international pact.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for York West is correct in putting on record that paragraph of the letter of the United Nations High Commissioner who quite rightly draws to the attention of the Government of Canada the fact that the situation we are facing is not unique to Canada. He asks what the international repercussions would be if we were to deny, reject or break our commitment under Article 14 of the Human Rights Proclamation.

It is true that the situation that has evolved over the last two years is quite different from the one which existed in the past. There is a phenomenal movement of refugees. There may be as many as 15 million people of official or unofficial refugee status around the globe. As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) said yesterday, this offers the Government of Canada an opportunity to take an international initiative and to call together all the interested parties to develop a new set of approaches designed to face a new type of problem rather than to run away from it. In that sense, there is an implicit message in the letter of the United Nations' High Commissioner for Refugees.

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as we know, Canadians are not angels but, at the same time, our people have shown a tremendous readiness to pour out their hearts and their resources to people throughout the world when grave problems are brought to their attention. Canada has never let an emergency or a disaster go by without responding to it as a nation and as individuals when asked. There have been earthquakes in Turkey and Italy, floods in Bangladesh and starvation in Ethiopia in recent years and Canadians have very quickly and readily responded to them.

The same is also true of the reaction of Canadians to refugees who are fleeing from tragic situations such as those who fled from Czechoslovakia during the Russian takeover, those who fled from Hungary at the time they were unable to bring about a democratic regime and their lives were in danger, those Ugandans who fled from the terror of Idi Amin or those who fled on boats from Vietnam. As the list goes on, we recall the ready response of Canadians to welcome to our country those refugees with warmth and enthusiasm.

Canada has shown great compassion, and that is certainly one of the reasons why we as a country deserved to be awarded the Nansen Medal for outstanding treatment of refugees. At the same time, I can report to the House, as can probably every Member of Parliament, that when a boatload of people came ashore in the fog and the dark not long ago and claimed refugee status, there was an outburst of protest, frustration and even anger unequal to anything I have experienced since I was elected a Member of Parliament. My constituents felt that this arrival was illegal, dangerous and unfair to other refugees and to Canadians.

There are some who say that this reaction was caused by racist attitudes and bigotry. To say that is to lay a bum rap on Canadians. I headed a human rights organization on a national basis here in Canada and I have devoted a large part of my ministry to fighting stereotyping, bigotry and racism through human rights legislation, through education and through spiritual values. I think I can recognize a prejudiced attitude and reaction when I see one.

Of course there are some racists and bigots in our midst as there are in every society, but the race or religion of the recent boat people was not the issue. What was the issue was that Canadians saw this as a dramatic example of what had been wrong for a long time and they blew the whistle.

I think it is wrong to say that Canadians overreacted to this situation. It is wrong to say that they were unfair and bigoted. I believe they were concerned, and rightly so, about what has been wrong for a long time.

Canadians are fair and will tolerate a lot patiently. They give people the benefit of the doubt, as they should. However, Canadians felt that something was wrong and had been wrong and they wanted something done.

First, Canadians felt that what was wrong was that an organized effort was made to bring people into Canada illegally by people who were making a profit on dealing in human flesh and misery. They felt it was wrong that the people who came ashore were subjected to danger in the water and in the dark. They felt it was wrong that people were making a profit on the project. They felt it was wrong and on the basis of media reports, Canadians were told that these people who did not come to a legal port of entry were thus evading not only immigration authorities and processes but a health check and a security check; and that these people came from countries where, it was alleged by the media, they already had safe haven and were allegedly denying this and had in fact destroyed documentation that might have proven it.

We do not know if the media reports were entirely true, but we do know that there has been a growing problem of this kind. Some people have been misusing the category of refugee status to actually effectuate immigration to Canada without having to go through the proper applications and processes through which everyone else has to go. That is what was bothering Canadians. They want to help real refugees and immigrants who take the proper steps.

Hundreds and hundreds of my constituents have been unsuccessful in bringing to Canada their relatives, friends or people whom they wanted to employ and whom they were prepared to sponsore and guarantee. They have been refused over and over again, but Canadians are not amused with a system which has loopholes which allows people to circumvent the system eventually and stay in Canada. We are told that somewhere around 90 per cent of those claiming to be refugees have their claims rejected in the end.

The first thing that must be said is that we have known that this problem has existed for a long time. We have known this for years. We know that something ought to have been done about it a long time ago. In fact, the refugee situation in the world is deteriorating. The way people try to gain access is through more and more circumvention, and that is why the last Government assigned the Plaut Royal Commission to recommend ways to change the rules so that a better, faster and fairer system would be set up to determine refugee status and to ensure that people are not able to take advantage of and misuse the system that was designed to help poor people fleeing for their lives from torture, persecution and hatred. The system should try to ensure that real refugees are brought through safely and quickly but that those who are not refugees are not able to misuse it. We would streamline the system. That is why the Plaut Commission was set up and it reported on how to streamline the system. The Government knew something had to be done when it first came to power. It knew the Plaut Commission had been set up to effectuate a change in the system because of new circumstances.

While I was attending a UN meeting on human rights in Geneva in February of this year, I took the opportunity to go to the office of the UN High Commissioner for Refugees and discussed the problems. They agreed that Canada had a special problem. We had to take steps to deal with these new developments. If the UN High Commission was discussing this with me in February and the Plaut Commission had dealt with this and reported several years ago, the Government knew there was a problem. The people of Canada expected the Government to do something about it, yet it was not until May of this year that it brought in Bill C-55. We all know that very little time or priority was given to that Bill. Now we find that because of the incidents off the shores of Nova Scotia, we are told an emergency exists. That emergency, if that is what it is, has existed for years. It is not fair that it has been allowed to go on for years because the rules have been misused and taken advantage of. At the same time real refugees are not being given the assistance they should have.

The basis for any proper refugee policy should be threefold. Refugees should be able to come to Canada and ask for refuge. That is basic to the whole idea of a refugee policy. There has to be a hearing under an independent process with the right to counsel. Third, there has to be the right to appeal. The Plaut Commission provided recommendations on just how to go about this with the least delay and the greatest fairness and protection of the rights of a refugee. The Government set that aside and did nothing with it for years while these wrongs continued.

The Government has now introduced these two Bills. I have to say that in its rush to do so, it has produced disasters. Why? Because they are not the basis for an even half-decent refugee policy. They violate those three principles I mentioned. In their present form they violate the human rights not only of non-Canadians but even those of Canadians who want to help refugees.

Why did the Government put forward such dreadful legislation when it had such a clear consensus with all parties on the basis of the Plaut Commission report? Why did the Government come up with such Draconian, excessive and ruthless rules in these two Bills? It is either because of stupidity, and I hope that is not the case, or because it is a desperate political ploy to assuage the anger of Canadians by dramatizing its belated attention to this problem and the fact that it is finally doing something. In their political strategy meetings perhaps the Tories decided that if they submitted something that was outrageous enough there would be an outcry from the Opposition and various groups across the country and the Canadian people would see what a macho group the Tories are. "Look, they must be doing something tough because everyone is screaming at how tough it is". That may be the political reason for such amazingly unfortunate legislation as has been presented to us, especially Bill C-84. Maybe that kind of political tactic will work, but I hope Canadians will remember that the stonewalling of these problems over the years is what caused this problem to get out of hand. I hope they reject Bill C-84 in particular.

While exploiting refugee status is mean, unfair and in some cases illegal, it is of the greatest importance to Canadians that our refugee policy and rules be fair and humane. Many Canadians came to Canada, or at least their parents did, to escape persecution. Our country is made up of people who are especially sympathetic to those who flee persecution. I gave examples of this today. Our religious traditions reflect this as we remember how Moses sought refuge in the Promised Land and how Jesus and his family fled for refuge to Egypt in his infancy. We know of the importance of the right of people to flee from persecution. It is a part not only of our religious tradition but of our history. Canada is a haven to which people have fled for safety or to find a better life. We do not criticize that. We praise it and encourage it. Why play on the wrong emotions? The Government should come up with a Bill which is fair and genuine because it is a sacred trust to us. The opportunity for refugees to flee to Canada to save their lives and escape persecution is a sacred trust.

Therefore, these Bills must be treated with a sense of sacredness. We must do it carefully and thoughtfully so we will not end up with a situation where an innocent refugee should be for any reason ejected from the shores of Canada when we could have saved him or her. Canadians have shown that this is how they feel in their care of other refugees. Yet Canadians do not want the unfairness caused by those who exploit and misuse the system.

The Government should come up with a Bill that is fair to genuine refugees, one that speeds up the process of determining who should stay and who should not. In that way we can be firm. If you feel your policy is fair, you can be firm. You know that your policy gives all the necessary protection to those who are genuinely qualified for refugee status. You can be fair when you know your legislation is fair. Yet these Bills are so unfair that they will not only encourage circumvention, they will be appealed at every possible level.

Bill C-84 does not allow complete accessibility to Canada. Aside from that, it makes the carrier involved responsible for holding travel documents. That is silly. Clause 14 of Bill C-84 authorizes those companies to hold the visas, passports or travel documents of those persons in order to ensure that those documents are available for examination by an immigration officer at the port of entry. When the travel industry understands the full ramifications of this Bill they will regard it with consternation. Can you imagine them, with the thousands of passengers that use their facilities, being responsible for deciding who looks like a refugee and have some steward or stewardess hold the travel documents? I cannot imagine anything as half-witted, inane and impractical as that requirement. It is incredible. While it is true that they might check them out, I suggest that that alone requires the Government to add new amendments and make this Bill more sane.

Many Polish Canadians and others from behind the Iron Curtain jumped ship without travel documents or any identification. Many of them even evaded our security forces in order to find sanctuary because they were afraid that their captors would catch up with them. They hid themselves in Canada because of their fear. Canadians must realize that we cannot afford to have laws which are as severe and restrictive as those suggested in Bill C-84.

The Government should redraft Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 to conform more with the recommendations of the Plaut report which has almost universal consensus. When it does that it can count on swift passage from the Liberal Party, and I am sure from the NDP as well. The well-being of all Canadians and all genuine refugees will thereby be looked after. It will also discourage the insincere and the dishonest. If the Government's PR exercise can now be over, we look forward to its changing these Bills so that they will be humane.

Mr. Berger: Mr. Speaker, I would like to put some points to the Hon. Member and see whether he would care to comment on them. Yesterday we heard from a number of speakers from the Conservative Party, including the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Gurbin), who said that they were opposed to universal access to the refugee determination system because five billion people would come to Canada.

Mr. Lewis: That's nonsense. You misconstrued it.

Mr. Berger: Never have members of the Tory Party so surpassed themselves in demagoguery, manipulation and sheer silliness.

However, there may be some people who are misled by the Conservatives' demagoguery and believe that being in favour of universal access means being in favour of accepting all refugees who come to Canada. That, of course, is not what universal access means at all. It does not mean that we have to accept everyone who comes to Canada, but simply that we have to give those persons who manage to get to Canada and claim to be refugees a full hearing. Again, we do not have to accept them but have to give them a hearing to determine whether they are refugees. That is what universal access means.

In violation of the principle of universal access which was supported by Rabbi Plaut and the all-Party parliamentary committee and is based on a consensus within knowledgeable circles around the country, the Conservative Government proposes to establish a screening process which would exclude persons from the refugee determination system on the basis of very arbitrary criteria.

On the point of the numbers, the Conservatives were brandishing the spectre of millions if not billions of people coming to Canada. The Member knows that we have very effective methods for controlling the number of people who come to Canada, including transit visas which apply to most refugee-producing countries. Would the Member care to comment on that or add anything more to try to dispel the false propositions, innuendo and demagoguery which has been spread by the Conservatives in this debate?

Mr. de Corneille: Mr. Speaker, if there are people under the impression that instituting the recommendations of the Rabbi Plaut Commission and the all-Party committee of the House of Commons will result in an inundation of refugees, we should try to dispel that impression. If people are dealt with swiftly, false applicants will realize that they are wasting their time and money by coming to Canada when they find that they will only stay a brief time and be rejected. They will lose their time and money. That has been a sufficient deterrent in the past to dissuade people from coming, provided the system works effectively, efficiently and quickly.

We will not, therefore, be inundated by millions or even hundreds of thousands of people. We will find that some who are borderline cases may still come to try out their applications, but by and large a sound system, such as that recommended by Rabbi Plaut, would discourage the bogus applicants for refugee status while, at the same time, giving universal access to everyone who believes that his or her life or well-being are in danger and comes to Canada as a refugee.

I am glad my colleague brought this point up. I think he would acknowledge that this is a worldwide problem. Canada has to solve the problem of the many refugees from various parts of the world with other nations. Working with the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and through the United Nations we may be able to find ways to take our fair share. We would not be inundated with refugees if we were able to bring about a co-operative policy with other countries. I hope this will be undertaken by the Government in the near future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty to put all questions necessary to dispose of the said motion.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to order made earlier this day, the recorded division stands deferred until six o'clock p.m., Monday, August 17, 1987.

It being 2.10 o'clock p.m., this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

The House adjourned at 2.10 p.m.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 106, it is my duty to present to the House a petition signed by residents of Canada who, when visiting the Byward market this summer, cared enough to write their name and address on this petition which says that since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or increases in existing taxes, including some on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candies, and soft drinks; that in its White Paper on tax reform the federal Government is considering the possibility of imposing on Canadian taxpayers a general tax on goods and services, including foodstuff; that foods represents a vital element in their daily lives and this sales tax would heavily penalize various categories of taxpayers, including senior citizens, families, the unemployed, low and middle income taxpayers, the young, etc.

Wherefore, the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to turn down any legislation whose effect would be to impose a sales tax on foodstuff.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 145 and 151.

[Text]

CANADIAN ARMY (MILITIA)—OFFICER VACANCIES

Question No. 145—Mr. McKinnon:

Has the Department of National Defence instituted a policy of placing Canadian Army (Regular) Officers in some officer vacancies in Canadian Army (Militia) units and (a) if so, how many and at what ranks (b) if not, does the government intend to initiate such a policy?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes, in 1985 the Chief of the Defence Staff approved a policy where if no qualified or suitable officer were available to command a militia unit, the Commander of Mobile Command had the authority to appoint a regular force officer as commanding officer.

(a) One as a major.

DND—EXPENDITURES 1970-1988

Question No. 151—Mr. McKinnon:

For each fiscal year 1970-71 to 1987-88 inclusive, did the expenditures of the Department of National Defence increase in real terms and, if so (a) what was the increase, including statutory costs and expressed in percentages (b) what deflator was used and what was the amount of each deflator model?

Mr. Bud Bradley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

Year	Percentage Increase	GNE Deflator Rate
1970/71	(2.5)	4.2
1971/72	2.0	3.6
1972/73	(0.7)	5.4
1973/74	.1	10.9
1974/75	(2.4)	15.1

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

• (1110)

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) who had the floor when the Bill was last debated. My question deals with the safe third country clause in the Bill. All Members have received a letter from the English speaking section of Amnesty International which says that the organization is extremely concerned that proposed new refugee legislation could lead to serious errors with genuine refugees.

As we know, the legislation before us could possibly give the authorities power to return persons forcibly to countries where they may expect to be arbitrarily detained for the non-violent expression of their beliefs, or even tortured or executed.

Could the Member give us the benefit of his knowledge and experience in this matter with regard to persons coming to Canada being returned to a safe third country? That concept is a new one in Bill C-55. People in my riding question me about that and I wonder whether the Member for Davenport has some comments to make on that concept?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. As you probably know, we all received a letter from Amnesty International signed by the chairperson of the Refugee Coordination Group. Through that letter Amnesty International is bringing to the attention of Members of Parliament the fact that it is extremely concerned that Bill C-55 could lead to serious errors in that genuine refugees could be sent back to their country of origin to face possible persecution.

The letter goes on to indicate that Amnesty International believes that no Canadian would knowingly risk the security of genuine refugees. I know that that sentiment is well placed and reflects very clearly the sentiment of the majority of Canadians on this matter.

In this letter, Amnesty International brought to our attention a letter which they wrote on August 7 to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in which they expressed their views quite well in the first paragraph which I will put on record. It begins by saying that Amnesty International is writing to the Prime Minister—> —in response to the recent introduction of Bill C-55 which, if passed into law, will dramatically change Canada's refugee determination policy. As you may be aware, Amnesty International opposes the forcible return of persons to countries where they may reasonably be expected to be arbitrarily detained for the non-violent expression of their beliefs, tortured or executed.

> A law which increases the likelihood of such events occurring is therefore of great concern to our organization.

I am sure that Amnesty International is speaking on behalf of many Canadians. That letter, signed by Robert Goodfellow, president of Amnesty International, concludes as follows:

> We urge you and your government to amend or withdraw and replace Bill C-55 with legislation which incorporates the fundamental principles of universal access, an appeal on the merits and independent decision-making.

We would be very wise and well served to pay very close attention to that letter from Amnesty International.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I am especially interested in the comments of Amnesty International that the Bill should be amended. I want to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that we are presently discussing an amendment moved by his colleague, the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), to delay discussion of this Bill until some time in 1988. Amendments can be made at committee stage as suggested by Amnesty International and the Bill can be improved. However, his colleague's amendment would delay discussion of the refugee determination Bill until 1988.

I have two questions for my hon. colleague. First, will he be voting with his colleague from York West to further delay discussion of the refugee determination system until some time next year?

The second question is the most important. In the Hon. Member's riding of Davenport there are a great many new Canadians who came to this country and met the requirements and regulations for medical and security clearance and did not jump the queue. How will his law-abiding constituents, new Canadians, feel about him voting in favour of a further six-month delay of this Bill with no discussion at committee stage?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Parliamentary Secretary for his questions because they are relevant. First, I am glad to hear that he is amenable to and attracted by the motion of amendments. That is good news because if amendments were to be initiated by him or any other member of the Progressive Conservative Party who can speak with authority on this Bill indicating that the questions of access and universality are resolved, we would be very glad to take a positive look at this Bill because it would coincide exactly with the concerns raised by Amnesty International.

However, we have not yet heard anything about that. So far the signals from the Government have been to the contrary. As the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) indicated in debate last week, we had to move a motion to hoist the Bill out of sheer desperation when it became clear that the Government was not listening.

Most Canadians do not know that this Bill was only introduced for first reading in this House on May 5. After two and one-half years in which to mull it over, with a phenomenal amount of input from Mr. Plaut, Mr. Ratushney and Mr. Robinson, the Bill sat waiting for debate from May 5 to June 18. It then had a three-hour debate and, to our astonishment, was put aside by the Government.

I do not know what game the Government is playing on this matter. If it had serious intentions on this Bill and wanted to have it passed, it would have indicated its willingness to change it at second reading along the lines suggested by many, not only in the Opposition, but in the vast community which is understandably interested in this matter. We would have made progress. For the life of me, I cannot understand why we are facing such a stonewall.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, in the riding I represent, in the Montreal area, 30 per cent of my constituents are either immigrants or descendants of immigrants. They are watching the proceedings with a great deal of interest, and they were watching last week as well. I had a chance to meet some of them personally, and I received about 150 phone calls from people who were in favour of new immigration legislation that would make some changes in the way immigrants are treated here, the way they can enter the country and especially the way refugees or phony refugees come to settle in Canada.

On the week-end I met with people from the Maritimes, especially in the Magdalen Islands. Madam Speaker, not many immigrants go to the Magdalen Islands. In fact, the people who live there try to get away. We go there because we think it is a very scenic and interesting place. Over there, they watch the proceedings in the House and wonder what all the fuss is about. They watch what is going on, Madam Speaker, and they tell us there is a bunch of Opposition Members who want to delay the passage of badly needed legislation.

Madam Speaker, we have all kinds of ways to discuss this Bill, to amend it and improve it if necessary, but the motion before the House today, which we are debating now, says to take the Bill back and table it again in six months. Madam Speaker, I do not know whether you realize when that is going to be, in six months but it will certainly be the spring of 1988, which means practically a year, if we consider the periods when the House is sitting and when it is not. Meanwhile, people who came to Canada previously and who have already become Canadian citizens cannot ask family members—fathers, mothers, brothers or sisters—to come and settle here legally because it takes so long under the present legislation. Madam Speaker, last year in my riding, I saw a gentleman who wanted to bring his sister-in-law to Canada to attend her sister's wedding. He applied for a one-month tourist visa. Do you know when he got his tourist visa, Madam Speaker? Six months after the wedding. And that happens all the time. We have no way of speeding up this procedure which means that in no time flat, we have all kinds of refugees coming into this country more or less legally, and then they want us to postpone the debate.

Madam Speaker, I think the motion before the House today should be rejected and the Bill passed and referred to a committee of the House for consideration. The Parliamentary Secretary said earlier, and the Minister said so as well on the week-end, that the Bill could be amended if necessary. Madam Speaker, in the three years we have been sitting in this House, not a single Bill has been sent to committee without there being an opportunity to amend or improve it at that stage. I believe there have even been proposals or motions from the Opposition on amendments that had already been approved in Committee. Let no one say it is impossible to change or improve this Bill. That is just not true, Madam Speaker.

You know, when they cannot think of anything to say about a piece of legislation, they try and find all kinds of ways to make the person who presented the legislation look bad. Last week, Madam Speaker, I was listening carefully to the speeches made by opposition Members, both on the Liberal and the NDP side, and they were doing their best to have Canadians believe that this would be a very dangerous Bill if it were approved as is, because it would mean that organizations working to help refugees, such as the churches and Amnesty International, might be penalized. Madam Speaker, they even said, in fact, it was the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) who said that we should send the Stastny brothers back to their country because of the way they entered this country. Well now, I would suggest that if demagoguery has a home it has to be here in the House of Commons where we can hear such speeches. As if we were going to deport an individual who is already established here after going through the whole determination process. As if we were going to slap a $500,000 fine on church officials doing their best to help refugees. Or as if the Quebec Nordiques management will have to put up $500,000 because they have the Stastny brothers under contract.

Madam Speaker, I would point out to the Hon. Member for Laval-des-Rapides that the Stastny brothers are Canadian citizens and, as such, have nothing to fear. The way he was talking it sounded as though he would send them back. He wanted the Quebec Nordiques to be punished for that. I should think there has to be a limit somewhere.

Madam Speaker, Bill C-55 seeks to set things straight and redress an anomaly caused by refugees who abuse the system and carriers anxious to make a fast buck. You know, a refugee is an individual who fears for his health and whose life may be at stake in his own country, and this individual is only seeking refuge in another country where he will feel safer. Why should he be concerned about his life? I think the answer is very simple: people in some countries are simply not allowed to act democratically the way we do here. They are not free to express their views, they are not free to practise their religion, they are not free to speak their mother tongue. When they do speak out they are frustrated, they feel threatened, so they ask to come here. But of course there are others who are profiteers, others still who are real terrorists or labelled as being undesirable in their own countries. They too fear for their lives, so they ask us to accept them here. But what are we supposed to do when 175 people land on our shores, how do we decide whether they are real or bogus refugees, particularly when they have no documents, when they have thrown passports, visas and identification papers away? Impossible! We simply have to find a way to determine as quickly as possible whether such individuals are eligible for refugee status here in Canada.

As it happens, Madam Speaker, current legislation provides that certain applicants are eligible, but they have to go through so many stages before they can be accepted or sent back to their own country that in some cases they may have to wait for four or five years before getting an answer. So what do they do in the meantime? We put them up in hotels and, from a social security standpoint, they enjoy most of the rights we Canadians have. They are fed and housed by Canadians, they are expected to wait there without the right to leave, without anything. Meanwhile, the landed immigrants who are already here and who in time have become Canadian citizens cannot use the normal channels to bring over their parents.

In my own riding, there are some 30 per cent of the 115,000 people of Lebanese, Greek, Portuguese, Jewish and Italian descent—altogether some 40,000 people—who feel frustrated and who constantly ask the Government to stop being unfair to them. There are people who come to see me and say: Would it be possible for my old father and mother, who are still in the old country, to come and live their remaining days with us here? They are both 75 years of age. The two of them are alone over there, all their children now live here in Canada or the United States, and we should like them to come and live with us. Considering the time needed to process their application, they would probably die before arriving here. Now, we are being asked to postpone the debate on this Bill. I find this inhuman and abominable.

Although I am not very old, Madam Speaker, I have witnessed many things in my life, including people being treated like cattle, and that is almost what is being done now.

• (1130)

By postponing the possibility for these people to come here legally, without endangering either the country and its inhabitants, we are certainly acting in an inhuman fashion.

Madam Speaker, I think that both opposition Parties should be able to accept that and to vote as quickly as possible on second reading of this Bill, and then to refer it to a committee of the House. I agree that the House should accept any constructive amendment which could speed up the process and make life easier. I for one would be the first to vote for that, Madam Speaker. For once, however, they should stop playing politics with human beings.

Madam Speaker, the carriers—and I would like to come back to this—take advantage of the situation. You know, Madam Speaker, when there is a loophole in a legislation, given the communication systems we have in North America, it does not take time for the gap to be detected and known throughout the world. And there will always be some unscrupulous people who will try to exploit it. Such is the case of those accommodating carriers.

Madam Speaker, those carriers take some 150 or 200 individuals in the hold of their ship, allowing them to leave a so-called refugee producing country to bring them to Canada and charge them $1,000 or $2,000 per capita, thus making a profit of $150,000 to $200,000. I doubt very much that those carriers will issue receipts for income tax purposes. I also doubt very much that such a carrier will declare that income in his own tax return because I suppose that it is paid in cash.

This is where the abuse is. Those individuals will stop at nothing to make believe to so-called refugees, whether they are legal or not, that they will be admitted. You want to come? I charge $1,000 and you only have to embark. As for the conditions of the trip, that is another ball game, Madam Speaker. They do not care that those people will almost starve to death, become ill during two, three weeks or a month, they will do it for money. We should also take that into account in our legislation, Madam Speaker. We must take steps to put a stop to such abuses. That was the issue debated last week when we dealt with Bill C-84 which will put some teeth in the legislation and impose some punishment or fines to those carriers.

Madam Speaker, I personally view this Bill, actually Bills C-55 and C-84 as very good pieces of legislation. Of course, one cannot be perfect when tabling a Bill or reading it, there are certainly details to be improved upon or changed. But as a matter of principle, I think we have enough backbone to rise and say: Listen, Canada is not a one way street. We open our doors, no problem. You are welcome here, except that you are going to comply with our laws. You will respect the rights of individuals who are already here, and above all you will comply with the procedure for immigrating, for entering our country.

If, when an immigrant comes here, someone suggests: That guy will take my job, I do not believe a word of that, Madam Speaker. Legal immigrants come here for different reasons.

It may be family reasons, or economic reasons. Or again, refugees may be involved. But the economic aspect is very important, because when they come here, often they come to create jobs—to start up a company, or to become distributors between European, South American and North American countries. They create jobs, rather than steal them. Nobody here in Canada, Madam Speaker, can come up and say that an immigrant came to this country and took his job. If it happened, it is because of his incompetence. And if it did not happen, a job has been created, because you seldom see a lot of those people depending on welfare. Of the 30 percent of my constituents who are immigrants, Madam Speaker, I can tell you that you can practically count on the fingers of one hand those who are really unemployed in my constituency of Laval.

They are motivated people, they come here because it is a new country, a great, vast and rich country, and they know they can do business with its people.

Madam Speaker, we should be fair to our people, to the immigrants who are here and those who want to come, and we also must be fair to the refugees who would settle here.

I do not know whether opposition Members will support us when the Bill is put to a vote, later today, I imagine. I hope that they will because, as I said earlier, Madam Speaker, I met people from the Maritimes during the week-end and they are really fed up with the behavior of the opposition Parties in this debate as they believe that delaying passage of such a Bill will delay the evolution of Canada.

Thank you, Madam Speaker, for giving me this time to express my views, and I hope that we shall be able to put together a good piece of legislation under which everyone will be treated equitably and Canada will be a better country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy).

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, there are a few comments that I would like to make to the Hon. Member who, on the one hand, is in favour of increased immigration and says on behalf of his constituents that they are frustrated by the problems which arise when they want to have old relatives from overseas come to Canada as immigrants.

I share his concerns in this regard. The present delays are indeed bad, and these delays exist after three years of a Conservative Government. We can wonder why, if the Government is really concerned about this problem, it has done nothing about the delays, not here in Canada, but in immigration offices abroad.

How does the coming to Canada of refugee claimants affect the administrative delays outside Canada? This is my first question.

The second is this: How could Bill C-55 affect the situation of old relatives, for instance, who are now subject to unacceptable delays, since there is no queue, as some have said, since refugees cannot be placed on a waiting list? They either arrive or not.

This does not affect the problem of the delays, which is related to the administration, and to the act and regulations which were developed by the former Liberal Government and accepted for three years by this Conservative Government.

Can the Hon. Member tell us how Bill C-55 can affect the situation and the legitimate concerns of his constituents and why the Conservatives have tried to blame the refugees for their administrative failures when they are due to an administrative problem created by the Government?

Mr. Ricard: Madam Speaker, I should like to respond to the first allegation made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) to the effect that the legislation has been on the back burner for quite some time. He certainly cannot accuse us of creating this measure. We did not draft it, it was there all along exactly as it is now. It has to be amended and he knows that.

Second, Madam Speaker, he is blaming us for a three-year delay in bringing in amendments to the legislation. I wish he would check the motion under consideration right now, and then see for himself who is holding up the debate. We on the Government side? At least we had enough backbone to open up the debate, something which the previous Liberal administration never got around to doing. Since your Party has never been in office, you did not do anything either.

So are you going to support the six-month hoist motion of the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)? Or are you going to vote on the Government side? In committee, are you going to move constructive amendments or destructive amendments designed to make the Government lose face, whereas you know full well you are the ones who are delaying the debate?

Madam Speaker, I have no idea what the Hon. Member is driving at, but he knows as well that all the publicity surrounding this debate and the refugees who landed on our shores have created a real bottleneck in the various embassies and in the Department of Immigration, with the result that people seeking to go through the normal process come under closer scrutiny than before. Some 18,000 refugees are now waiting for their investigation, waiting to find out whether they will be granted immigrant status or asked to go back home.

Do you know what that means, Madam Speaker? When will these people be allowed in? When will officials working on these cases have time to examine other files? The Department of Immigration has to look after refugee and immigrant cases. Both types of applicants and everything involved. And you want us to delay the whole process? Shame on you!

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, it is somewhat unfair for my colleague from the government benches to simply concentrate his debate on the suggestion that the Opposition is in a mood to oppose for the sake of opposing. This is very curious when one considers that for three years he has been a member of the the Conservative Government which has had four different Ministers of Immigration. Each of them came into office making a strong statement toward reforming the system.

There have been a number of government-commissioned reports advocating action. There was a unanimous report from the Standing Committee, chaired by a government Member and comprised of a majority of government Members, which suggested a solution to this dilemma, with a system that is out of date having regard to the new phenomenon that developed in the early 1980s. Many NGOs and church organizations have suggested action for nearly three years. The Government has had an absolute majority but has done nothing for three years. I suggest that it is somewhat intellectually dishonest for it to suggest that the reason for the delay is because of the Opposition. I do not believe Canadians are that naive or that gullible.

The Government has a majority and controls the agenda. It could have moved on that reform some time in the last three years rather than the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) waking up on a sunny summer morning suddenly saying that something must be done.

The reason the technical amendment was moved when Bill C-55 came before the House was that there was a mood on the Government side that somehow it would rush this through without thinking of the repercussions. The repercussions, as with Bill C-84, are that unless there is a proper piece of legislation it will be subject to charter and court challenges from one coast to the other. Those challenges will not come from the Opposition but from lawyers and various groups.

I ask the Member to consider what will happen to the legislation. There will be a policy that is more chaotic, more unworkable and more uncertain than the one we have now. It will be difficult to try to get the patience and confidence of Canadians. After three years, Canadians expect the Government to come to grips with the situation in a way that will result in a policy that is not designed for an emergency during the summer or for a couple of months, but that will work well in the long term so that Canadians can give it their support and trust. If we are going to move from this system to one that will be marred by legalities and uncertainties, then we will be testing the patience of Canadians. I believe their frustration and anger toward the Government for being either unprepared or unwilling to come to grips with the situation will then turn and transfer itself very dangerously in terms of the global policy.

How does the Government intend to get public support for its desire to have more immigrants come to this country, as it has suggested, when its refugee policy is simply in chaos? Rather than try to blame the opposition Parties, why did it take three years to present new legislation?

If we are going to get a new refugee board, as stipulated in Bill C-55, will he explain why he wants to build a barrier around that with a pre-screening mechanism and a safe third country concept that will make prejudicial statements before there is access to the refugee board?

Everyone agrees with the refugee board. However, under Bill C-55, the Government would be able to dictate or restrict access to the system.

Why is he not prepared to allow refugees full access to the board and allow the board to make a determination, either positively or negatively?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I believe Canadians are testing the Hon. Member who tries to delay the debate. I am very surprised that he has made that suggestion because he was the first to move the motion to delay the Bill we are debating now.

I suggest he will have more than enough time in committee to present some amendments in order to improve the Bill. I believe it is his duty to do so. If he does not, Canadians will judge him.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Madam Speaker, many Canadians have been watching this debate that has been taking place for some time and has reached its peak with Bill C-84 and C-55.

When one considers the atmosphere in which this debate is taking place, there can be no doubt that there is a great deal of concern about abuses to our immigration and refugee determination policies. There has been much criticism and concern expressed about this.

There is concern about legitimate refugees to this country who are really in fear of persecution in their home countries, and that under the processes designed to admit new immigrants into this country there is much delay and difficulty and many refusals for entry of relatives of people who previously immigrated to Canada.

There is much concern that those who are somehow delaying the process are preventing family members of immigrants to get into this country in a reasonable period of time. Some believe that the Department of Employment and Immigration does not act fundamentally to bring more people into this country in order to contribute to the growth of our economy.

It has to be frankly stated that there are those who oppose any kind of immigration, whether it be by refugees or others, on the basis that new immigrants and refugees will take jobs from Canadians. It has been expressed occasionally within and outside the House that those people coming into this country are not the same as Canadians and somehow do not fit into our ways but would be accepted if they acted like the rest of us and adopted the nature of the country to which they are coming.

It is unfortunate, but one often hears in English Canada that those in Quebec do not understand or fit into their ways. We also hear in Quebec similar remarks with respect to English Canadians and those coming from outside. There are a great many attitudes and concerns, some legitimate, some xenophobic, which underlie this whole debate. I think it has to be said, in terms of general consideration of those who come to our country from elsewhere, that there has been a very serious failure on the part of governments, not just this Government but previous Governments, to come to grips with the fact. Yes, we are bringing in people who are different from ourselves, those who are deprived, jobless and fearful of their futures, and there is a notion that immigrants and refugees will take away our jobs. In many cases that may be so, but it is also true that there would exist no Canada whatsoever without immigrants and a very different Canada if there had been no refugees entering our country going back to the 18th century.

I have not heard enough about the fact that immigrants and refugees ultimately contribute to our economy. I was impressed by a statistic reported yesterday morning on radio, that there are some 94,000 jobs a year taken away from Canadians by immigrants and refugees. On the other hand, these refugees and immigrants contribute about 115,000 jobs. So there is quite a significant increase of some 20,000 jobs created each year even at the present level of immigration.

Having said that, I think it is important to point out that if there existed in Canada a policy for the creation of jobs for Canadians as a specific goal of Government, there would not be the fear that immigrants would take away jobs. People might recognize with greater facility the significant and economic contribution immigrants make by creating jobs.

It seems to me we have not taken a positive approach to this issue, which is an important issue when one considers the most significant motive and perhaps the most reasonable for the free trade negotiations, that is, Canada has too small a market-place with its 25 million people, and we are not producing enough offspring to maintain our present market size. The reasonable approach to an insufficient population in dealing with a large market is not to become part of the United States but to make Canada larger.

When I considered these facts, I became shocked by the tone of the debate. Politicians are often subject to criticism for their opportunism, for their narrow view of things upon which they act and their tendency to react to critical situations in an opportunistic way. What better situation could have been created than the landing of 174 Sikhs in Nova Scotia following the landing of the Tamils in Newfoundland a year ago? What better circumstance for the great concern, xenophobic and otherwise, which has been evinced by the Canadian people?

There is no doubt the Canadian people see abuses and that they want to see more speed in dealing with these abuses in our system. One might have expected that, instead of waiting until we reached a debate of critical dimensions, the Government might have acted. It seems to me quite evident that if the legislation which was recommended by so many in this country to speed up the refugee determination process had been implemented two or three years ago, we would not have been faced with the introduction of Bill C-84.

Bill C-84 is unnecessary within the context of the clear message that a fast refugee determination policy would itself have been the most significant possible deterrent to abuse. A process which can take up to five years is a process subject to abuse. It creates the opportunity to come here to work, to establish one's self, to be even in a position to cast one's self before the mercy of the Government in order to remain in Canada in spite of the illegitimacy of the claim proffered.

This long process told people, come on over. You may not be a legitimate refugee but you can stay here for five years. Canada is a humane country, it is run by people who are empathic, so if these refugees manage to get here, the chances are pretty good they would be able to stay. That is self-evident.

Instead of dealing with this, we waited until public pressure mounted. Now we have entered into a debate, and many of the utterances I have heard in this debate have been shameful I sat here last week and listened to many Members on the Government side speak without shame. They laughed and hooted. They said things that would have depressed me enormously had I for one moment thought they were reflective of the views of the Canadian people.

I stood in this House not too long ago and expressed pride in this country. It is a country which had begun the process of evolving into a model, showing the rest of the world how many peoples of different origins can live together to create a new society, a society devoted to social justice. In looking at Bill C-84 and Bill C-55 I reflected upon my own origins. I reflected upon the fact that, like many Canadians, my forbears came here as refugees. Indeed, my great, great-grandfather was one of those who brought 10 or more refugees into this country and not one of them had a document. Among those whom my great, great-grandfather brought to this country—his name being McCurdy—were the great-grandparents of my grandmother. They were slaves. They were refugees from slavery.

This country has changed a great deal. I reviewed my own history and thought of how my people have seen this country change. It was for that reason, at least in part, that I spoke with such pride about this country when I referred to the Nansen Medal. Having said that, I think it is the greatest weakness of politicians to behave opportunistically in response to a real crisis. There is no other way of regarding Bill C-55 and its twin, Bill C-84, except as pieces of legislation motivated primarily by opportunism, coloured so fundamentally by the opportunistic approach as to give offence to the new Canada. I sense a conflict between the senior Minister and the junior Minister. I know that the junior Minister is a man sympathetic to some of the things I have said this morning. He has personally been of great value in specific cases relating to immigration with which I have had to approach him. I suppose one would have to say that the present case is a model of how the exigencies of the moment can turn the heads of even the most sincere.

• (1200)

Bill C-55 is bad legislation. It would deny to refugees what Canada has agreed they should all have, that is, accessibility to a determination process that will enable a determination here in Canada of whether or not they qualify. Such a step as a part of a process has been recommended by Rabbi Plaut and his commission, by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, and by virtually every NGO in the country which has had anything to do with immigration. Yet the Government has closed its ears to what has been universally regarded as a fair refugee determination process, that described by the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) as being the most rational, humane approach to all of this.

As if it were not enough for the Government to use the rhetoric of panic and to proffer a Bill that is so fundamentally flawed, and not enough for it to ignore everyone who has spoken to the issue of a refugee determination process, its motives of opportunism are reinforced by the deliberate construction of a legislative committee based on what appears to be one fundamental criterion beyond assurance of support for the Government, and that is ignorance. I refer to fundamental ignorance of the refugee determination process, international refugee agreements and everything else having to do with it.

The Chairman of the Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has been shut out from the legislation committee dealing with Bill C-84. While I stand before Hon. Members very much encouraged by the promise, I believe of the Parliamentary Secretary, that there would be an opportunity for amendment of Bill C-55 in committee, if the precedent with respect to Bill C-84 is followed then there will not be a chance in hell that constructive amendments will be entertained.

I ask the Government not to reproduce its action with respect to Bill C-84 in terms of Bill C-55. When Bill C-55 goes to legislative committee I ask that that committee not have as a fundamental qualification for the government Members ignorance of immigration and refugee matters, that it not shut out those of its own Party who are members of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and who are qualified experts as a result of hard work in the areas of most fundamental importance in dealing with this legislation.

A huge majority of Canadians have expressed themselves as opposed to increased immigration. These people have expressed themselves in terms of an essential rejection of the new in our population. It is also true that when the facts and the details are known, when the contributions of new people to this country are described and encouraged, that those attitudes are subject to change. It is the responsibility of this Parliament not to engage in provocative rhetoric and xenophobic rhetoric, but to communicate the message that Canada's greatness and our future depend on the same base as in the past, that is, the welcoming of those outside our shores to create a new Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Are there questions or comments?

Mr. Oostrom: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member talked at length about a number of ideas but spoke very little about the Bill at hand. He mixed up all kinds of ideas in his speech. What I would like to know from the Hon. Member is if he himself or his Party actually supports the delaying of Bill C-55 for another six months.

Back in September of 1984 the people of Canada voted for change. They voted for action. They voted for a business-like approach to government matters.

Mr. Cassidy: You delayed this for two and a half years. Don't be so hypocritical!

Mr. Oostrom: There have been 875,000 new jobs created. The Hon. Member now wants to delay this measure even further.

Mr. Cassidy: What a hypocrite the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) is. For two and a half years not a word has he said about this issue.

Mr. Oostrom: Other Members of the socialist Party are getting impatient and red in the face—

Mr. Cassidy: It is ridiculous, Madam Speaker!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) certainly likes to be listened to when he speaks. I think he should extend to his colleagues the same courtesy.

Miss MacDonald: He never gives anyone courtesy.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) may conclude his comments.

Mr. Oostrom: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I will make my question very short. I would like to know where the NDP "Party" stands on delaying this Bill, Bill C-55. As I said before, the Hon. Member mixed up quite a number of ideas but he did not talk about bogus refugees, illegal immigration or queue-jumpers. He did not talk about those subjects. We are not talking about immigration, something which this Government since September of 1984 has increased year over year. The Hon. Member did not talk about our Government having created, or having assisted in creating, 875,000 new jobs. Nor did he talk about asking new investment to come into Canada via Bill C-22. Where does the Hon. Member stand on this issue?

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, I find it curious that an Hon. Member of the PCP "Party" would accuse me of being all over the place, where inserted in his question to me were remarks about Bill C-22, which is a Bill that deals with the Americanization of Canada. I am pleased to answer the question of the hon. gentleman from Willowdale who not so long ago was one of those who said that Canadian immigration policy should be based on the encouragement of refugees from Europe and those who have our ways. So we know where the Hon. Member stands on this issue.

Surely, even this Hon. Member understands that the substance of debate should not be constantly reiterated. One of the problems as I see it is that too many of us stand up and say exactly the same thing. There is no doubt that Canadians, and all of us in the House, are concerned about queue-jumpers, as if that were the fundamental issue. What is at stake here is an understanding of the two different processes involved in immigration versus refugee determination. But gentlemen who are concerned about maintaining this country pure, comprised of only those who have our ways, constantly and deliberately confuse the two processes in order to provoke still more opposition to the present arrangements which would have allowed my great grandfather and grandmother to enter this country. They would deny that now.

My answer is very simple, and a short while ago I stated that I am opposed to delay. In fact, delay has enhanced the position of those who oppose what Canada desperately needs, that is, more immigration. It is the fault of the Government that it has been delayed, and it is the Government's fault that people are upset about the failure to act. The chief deterrence to abuse is a rapid refugee determination policy, and we need it now.

Let me further say that this Member would be opposed to any further delay, even that type of delay suggested by the Liberal motion. If the Government would undertake now to entertain amendments in a committee that is not based on the ignorance of government Members of the issues involved.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to ask my colleague if he was surprised and dismayed by the question from the Hon. Member for Willowdale (Mr. Oostrom) who appears to criticize anybody who is delaying passage of this Bill? This Bill was not introduced by the Government until May, and it was not called for debate until June, at which time Members were given all of three hours to debate this Bill. Given those facts, does the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) agree with me that the Hon. Member for Willowdale should be lecturing his own Government about its delay in bringing forth the Bill, rather than criticizing members of the Opposition for demanding honest, sincere, and detailed consideration of this Bill?

Mr. McCurdy: I thank my hon. colleague for his question. I would like to note in passing that the Hon. Member for Willowdale is one of those who has passed the ideological test for representing the Government on committee.

In answer to the question that has been addressed to me, I think we have to simply say that this is one of the elements of opportunism and politicization of the issue, that two governments have ignored every demand for legislation to speed up the refugee determination process while at the same time maintaining fairness in that system. It was delayed until May, brought in on June 18, and that is it. It is all over, and the rest of us are blamed for it. I am sure you will agree that it is a shocking revelation of the insincerity and the lack of commitment on the part of the Government, if not worse. The identification of responsibility in this matter is so clear as not to require any further discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Québec-Est (Mr. Tremblay).

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Madam Speaker, we are gathered here today because the problem of aliens entering Canada illegally by claiming to be refugees has become an extremely serious one. The Canadian people are aware of this and the Government as well.

When the Government announced its intention to recall the House, it was accused of either over-reacting or being irresponsible. Doing nothing now would have been telling the world that Canada allows its laws to be broken. Doing nothing would have aggravated the dissension reflected in public opinion and thus put our programs for refugees and immigrants in jeopardy.

There is no doubt that Canada's humanitarian tradition of dealing with refugees may come to an end if we do not put a stop to the abuse being made of our system.

The Canadian people want measures to be introduced now, and we are going to do that.

The House was recalled for a specific task. We must stem the increasing flow of migrants arriving in Canada. We must put a stop to the organized and systematic abuse of our system for determining refugee status. We must take measures to put a stop to the exploitation of human misery by people who could be qualified as refugee traffickers.

Bill C-55 will introduce both fairness and control to the refugee determination process. It is the ultimate step in our plan of action to deal with a problem that has international implications. For most Canadians the dramatic arrival of 155 Tamils in Newfoundland one year ago was their first inkling that we have a refugee problem. That is not surprising when one considers that just six years ago only 1,600 people came to Canada claiming refugee status.

However, by 1986 the number had swelled to 18,000. This year we expect that it will reach 30,000.

More important than sheer numbers is the fact that many of these claims are not genuine. Our studies show that last year 70 per cent of refugee claimants were not refugees at all, and that many others had already found safe haven elsewhere before seeking refugee status in our country. The arrival of the Tamils reinforced our resolve to take action to stem the flow of phoney refugees. Quick action was necessary because of wide media interest in the Tamil boat people. The predictable happened—more and more illegal aliens poured into Canada.

We acted by improving measures to curb the flow of illegals to our shores. The control measures we introduced in February had a limited impact. Refugee claimant numbers which were averaging 1,200 a week in February have dropped to 500 a week today.

The control measures and the expanded powers that we are now seeking will deal effectively with short-term solutions to the refugee problem. But a long-term solution will only be found through the passage into law of Bill C-55.

And now for the problems we are having today. Madam Speaker, everyone knows why we have been called to this place, but I would like to repeat this for the benefit of certain opposition Members who seem to have forgotten already. It is because of a system already overloaded by a backlog of applications which is being exploited by queue-jumpers who are not legitimate refugees in need of our protection.

Unscrupulous racketeers are also taking advantage of the situation and misleading men and women into believing that they will be able to get them the papers required to gain admission to Canada. These racketeers bring these people to Canada under conditions which are often intolerable, unacceptable even for animals, and absolutely shocking in the case of human beings. Legitimate refugees suffer from delays in the system and are put at a disadvantage because of the increasing number and cleverness of fraudulent claims. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are getting more and more concerned about the inequity of the present system, which they believe to be incapable of these abuses. The patience of even the most generous and humanitarian Canadians is running out, and this Hon. Member, Madam Speaker, sees himself as a very tolerant person. Too many people enter Canada without the required documents and constitute a threat to our security.

• (1220)

We are certainly faced with a series of potentially explosive conditions which the Canadian people and the Government cannot accept. The situation requires that the Government take the required action. We are determined to put a stop to this traffic in human beings.

I also believe it important to throw some light on another major component of this Bill. The purpose of the proposed changes is not to discourage legitimate refugees who need our protection.

Bill C-55, combined with the other measures we have taken, will enable us to protect legitimate refugees.

With this Bill, we can develop a fairer, faster and more effective refugee determination system which will benefit all legitimate refugees. This system will respect the basic rights of all those who are entitled to claim refugee status.

Bill C-55 contains key provisions which will simplify the processing of claims, ensure faster rejection of unfounded claims and strengthen the powers of the Government. This will allow the Government to send back to third countries those whose claims are unfounded while respecting their fundamental rights.

We hope that, this time, the urgency of taking action and the increasing pressures throughout the world will convince the Opposition to be more objective about the importance of Bill C-55.

The temporary measures we imposed in February were indeed only temporary. Bill C-55 goes further. It provides the long term solution needed to solve this problem, and this solution is both fair and judicious.

This legislation allows us to regain control over our refugee determination system which past abuses have rendered ineffective.

This is a valid solution, Madam Speaker. The Bill clearly and concisely defines the new process, which I repeat will be an equitable one.

As I have already said, Madam Speaker, we are here to conclude work undertaken several months ago, and Bill C-55 and the Bill on detention and deterrence are the result of this work.

The two Bills complement each other. We must ensure that our system really can weed out abuse, while allowing refugee claimants to put their cases. These two Bills give us the assurance needed. They guarantee the rights of everyone, but will deter many of those swindlers.

The aim of these two Bills is to put in place a refugee determination system that is more fair, more expeditious and better for all genuine refugees.

I keep repeating myself, but I feel that with the position we are now taking we must repeat the good points, in order that we take time to reflect on what is really at stake in these two Bills.

So as I said, what we are looking for is a system that respects the basic rights of all potential refugee claimants.

Yes, we are strongly determined to guarantee the rights of all refugee claimants. But we also want to check abuse. The deterrence and detention provisions will go to the root of the problem and allow us to exercise necessary control.

I would now like to deal briefly with this Government's firm commitment to help genuine refugees.

It is essential to understand fully that our commitment to help genuine refugees is stronger than ever. In fact, Bill C-55 is a measure that is in line with the traditional justice and the humanitarian tradition for which the Nansen Medal was awarded to the Canadian people by the United Nations' High Commissioner for Refugees—the first time ever it was awarded to a whole nation.

Let me also remind all Members in this House and the Canadian people that since we have been elected, this Government significantly increased the number of refugees selected in camps around the world. This year, we are taking charge of 12,000 refugees from those camps, and private groups of Canadians and also families are sponsoring some 5,000 more.

Canada has a long tradition of proving its humanitarian concern for genuine refugees who need its protection. The new determination process will uphold this tradition of commitment to true refugees.

Our commitment goes back a long way. It is an essential part of a policy which, since the Second World War, has brought some 500,000 refugees to Canada for resettlement, and which has helped thousands of others through special humanitarian measures.

On a per capita basis Canada's record of aid to refugees over the past few years has been second to none.

We provide refugee assistance under three specific formulas. First, direct financial assistance; second, the settlement in Canada of refugees selected outside this country; and protection given in Canada pursuant to a determination process carried out here. This three-prong approach is in line with the United Nations refugee policy.

For 1986-87, the Canadian Government set more than $170 million aside for refugee financial assistance. One third of these funds—over $66 million—was given to international humanitarian organizations like the Red Cross and the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, or to various countries in the form of food assistance for refugees. The rest of this money has been earmarked for adjustment assistance and language training for refugees selected abroad and for assistance to groups helping refugees to settle in Canada and become integrated in Canadian society.

Furthermore, refugees may obtain interest-free loans from the Government to finance the cost of their transportation to Canada.

The second part of the refugee program is resettlement of refugees selected abroad. In 1986, two-thirds of this group received Government assistance.

Groups consisting of private individuals and volunteer organizations sponsored over 5,000 more refugees. In such cases, the Government helps to match sponsors with refugees and offers the latter group transportation loans, language training and occupational training.

I would like to stress that many of the people admitted to Canada because they were selected abroad under this program do not necessarily meet the strict definition of refugee as defined in the Geneva Convention.

Canada has also developed some unique ways of helping victims of oppression, even if they do not meet the UN definition because they are still residing in their own country, for instance, political prisoners and other displaced persons in Poland, El Salvador, Guatemala, Chili and Uruguay.

We also help displaced persons who are in a situation similar to that of refugees, even if they do not meet the Convention definition. For instance, we have helped many people from Indo-China and Eastern Europe. In this case, we are dealing with people who, having left their countries of origin, did not manage to resettle permanently in another country.

Our purpose in introducing Bill C-55 was to make our refugee determination process efficient again, because this third part of our refugee program was simply not working.

At the present time, this process no longer makes it possible for us to extend our protection to the true refugees who need it because they can no longer sustain the pressure resulting from the enormous increase in the number of claims.

Through the proposed process, Canada will be able to continue fulfilling its obligations under the Geneva Convention while respecting the principles of justice which are the very foundation of our laws. Thus, we will be able to maintain our humanitarian tradition. We do not intend at all to turn our backs on refugees by adopting Bill C-55. Quite the contrary. We want to be able to extend a true protection to those who really need our help.

However, if we really seek to protect bona fide refugees, we must put an end to the abuse and reorganize the whole process.

When I deal with the policy of Canada towards refugees, I do so with considerable pride. Our refugee programs compare favourably with those of any country in the world. Our commitment to refugees is recognized internationally and the resettlement of refugees from camps abroad represents our most important contribution. A great many people have been stuck in camps for years without any alternative choice.

I suggest we must do the utmost to ensure that our tradition is maintained. But in order to do that, the refugee determination process must be changed. Canadians no longer can tolerate the current situation. They want a new refugee process that is both fair and tough to abusers.

As evidence of this, let me bring to your attention the results of a radio survey made in the Quebec area on August 3, 1987. The question was: Do you feel the Minister of Employment and Immigration, Hon. Benoît Bouchard, is right in proposing a tougher act to deny entry to refugees into Canada? Here is the response of citizens in that beautiful and great Quebec area—98 percent of the people supported those legislative measures. Two percent only opposed it. I was told the number of calls to that radio survey was larger than average, and according to the station's management, it was the most decisive in the history of their surveys.

I submit, that the people have spoken their minds, and as a responsible Government we have a duty to listen and act according to the people's will. We have the solution to that problem—now is the time to refer Bill C-55 to committee for review. Enough speeches, and I conclude on this, the time has come to act.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions, comments. The Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi).

• (1230)

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague two very quick questions because I know other Hon. Members wish to comment on the speech he has just made.

First, the Hon. Member said that his Government was awarded the Nansen Medal. Would he not wish to clarify that for the record by saying that in fact the Government certainly did not win that award for its achievements over the last two years, but that the Nansen Medal was awarded for the very first time to a country for a record that had been demonstrated over years gone by when his Party was still on this side of the House? I think the Hon. Member should have the honesty to clarify that.

Second, the Hon. Member went on at some length suggesting that Bills C-55 and C-84 somehow meet with the approval of the Geneva Convention to which we were a signatory in 1969. Having said that, would he care to comment on what he thinks about the letter that was released last Friday by the United Nations High Commissioner who, despite couching his remarks in very diplomatic language, expressed clear concern for the direction the Government was taking? In his letter of six or seven paragraphs he pleaded with Canada not to take that direction, but to have some degree of sensitivity to the United Nations Convention and to the message we would send out to the other countries of the world.

If in fact the Government does not wish to uphold the United Nations Charter, why is it not prepared to tell Canadians that it is no longer prepared to live with that agreement, rather than doing it through a sneaky, back-handed, back-door approach?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Madam Speaker, I will answer the two questions very briefly. On the first one, I mentioned in my speech that the Canadian Government indeed had the privilege to receive the Nansen Award, and as a Canadian I am very proud of that.

On the second question, after much reading on the matter and articulating Bills C-84 and C-55, which complement each other, it is my view that everything that has been written and said by this Goverment had but one goal—to protect all Canadians without exception, and to some extent I admire the Opposition. It cannot always be easy to get mentally prepared to criticize proposals which are so obvious, since they are fair and equitable. They deserve some credit for that and I am aware of it.

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, most Canadians would agree with the suggestion of the Hon. Member that we want a refugee system that is humane, fair and quick. How can the Hon. Member say that the Bills that are before us will provide for such a system, when on June 1 of this year a telex was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed by and on behalf of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, the Anglican Church, the Canadian Baptist Federation, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Council of Christian Reform Churches, the Mennonite Central Committee, the Presbyterian Church of Canada, the Salvation Army, the Quakers, the United Church of Canada and the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees making it very clear to the Prime Minister and the Government that in the view of these organizations, which certainly have no political axe to grind, the legislation was very deficient?

Second, why did the Government not follow the recommendations made by the Standing Committee which dealt with this question in great depth? This committee had a large majority of government members on it. It issued a unanimous report making very specific recommendations, most of which were not included in this legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Madam Speaker, I am happy to reply to the question raised by my colleague for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow). I would remind him of a poll to which I have already referred. The question asked to the residents of the beautiful region of Quebec City was this: Do you believe that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is right to propose harsher legislation to refuse refugees entry into Canada? Of all those canvassed, 98 per cent said yes. But what if the question had been phrased this way: Do you believe that the Minister of Employment and Immigration is right to propose harsher legislation to refuse entry to fradulent refugees? I believe that 150 per cent of respondents would have said yes. This is a recent poll and the results are clear. They represent a diversified segment of the population of my region. There are all kinds of happy people in that region. This is what the people think. Many of these respondents are from my own constituency. I have always been very receptive to their comments, and this poll, has shown me what I must do.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Québec East (Mr. Tremblay). The main strength of Bill C-55 is certainly that it will help to reduce the delays in processing refugee claims. It contains provisions which will allow the authorities to process claims more quickly than in the past, and I believe that everyone agrees with that. We are not here to discuss whether or not Canada needs refugees. We have always welcomed them in the past.

Bills C-55 and C-84 deal with illegal or irregular claimants and abusers of the system. One of the provisions of Bill C-55 concerns that new concept. That is one of the weaknesses of the Bill.

The new concept advocated is that the Government or Cabinet will establish a list of so-called safe countries about which we will be able to say: "In that country there is no danger of violence against basic freedoms". The Cabinet will have to establish a list of safe countries, the concept of the safe third country.

I have a question for the Hon. Member, because we all know such a list will create problems. The Cabinet has always refrained from establishing this kind of list because it is not easy to politicize the whole process and make such momentous decisions.

The question is this: For example, the United States do not accept refugees from Guatemala, they do not accept immigrants from other countries, I could name some, San Salvador for one, they send them back home.

The federal Cabinet will have to decide whether the United States is a third safe country. Is it really a country where we can send a refugee or so-called refugee arriving in Canada, under the pretense that he will be well there and not be threatened?

We all know that the policy of the Americans is to send home people arriving from San Salvador and Guatemala.

How can the Hon. Member reconcile this question of the safe third country, knowing full well that we are on very good terms with the Americans but have serious reasons to believe that an individual might come from Guatemala or San Salvador and tell us: "My personal safety is threatened or I am otherwise threatened with respect to expressing my basic freedom". Would the Hon. Member tell us how he would deal with that problem, how he would respond to this refugee whose personal and individual rights are threatened?

Mr. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Madam Speaker, I should think that Canadian representatives and Canadian embassies throughout the world have enough experience and credibility to be aware of what is going on every day, and to be in a position to have an updated list of what we call "safe countries".

So far the Cabinet has demonstrated that we ought to have confidence in them and I would leave any such decision up to them.

[English]

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Madam Speaker, Bill C-55 is a strange and inadequate response to the very serious need for a review not only of refugee policy but of immigration policy in general. Since this Bill and Bill C-84 deal with refugee policy and not other aspects of immigration, I will confine my remarks to that.

I was chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration in 1976 when we passed an immigration Bill. At that time immigration law had not been updated for about 20 years. The Department of Immigration was running along on volumes and volumes of ministerial directives and regulations. The law was then updated and it was quite clear that with the changing issues in immigration there should be a further updating well before another 20 years had passed.

The refugee policy passed at that time did not provide for automatic oral hearings. There was a very elaborate paper screening effort and people had oral hearings later on in the determination process. It became clear this was causing problems.

I spoke in this House in March, 1984, on a motion recommending that all refugee applicants have oral hearings. I supported the motion for two reasons. First, an oral hearing early on in the process could result in faster decisions, and would enable the genuine refugee to know where he or she stood so that they could get on with having trade and professional qualifications evaluated and establishing a life in Canada. It would also screen out the bogus refugees who were starting to appear even at that time.

The second reason I was in favour of oral hearings early on was that I was sure members of the Refugee Status Advisory Committee, as it was called at that time, as they examined sworn statements, must sometimes encounter doubts which could be resolved by a simple question or brief conversation with the claimant. I also said that our refugee policies and practices should be subject to ongoing review.

I think there were some principles held at that time which still hold today and on which we can agree. First, that Canada's effort in formulating and administering refugee policy is an essential reflection of Canada's humanitarian interests. Canadians have shown they have the capacity to reach out to those who are suffering persecution for reasons of race, religion, or politics, and to give comfort to the homeless and stateless. We have demonstrated a concern that our institutions and administrative practices reflect those humanitarian ideals. However, as I said then, and as I repeat today, we also have to exercise those instincts and goals, keeping in mind the protection of the best interests of Canada and of ensuring over-all fairness in our immigration policies.

Unlike other countries, Canada has not in the past faced a situation where large numbers of people claiming refugee status arrived at our borders. We are protected by three oceans. However, air travel has changed that. We are living in a time when strife and civil unrest are common. We are also living in difficult economic times. It is estimated that at any moment in time now some 70 million to 80 million people are on the move. Some are genuine refugees according to the UN standard. Some are unhappy, desperate people moving because of war, revolution and poverty. Some have the same motivation that immigrants have, the desire to create a better life and future for themselves and their children.

Where does Canada stand in all this? What are our obligations both to our citizens and those who wish to come to Canada? Clearly we cannot accommodate 70 million to 80 million people.

When I was a delegate to the UN in 1980 there was a lot of discussion, as there has been since, on the need to find better ways to settle refugees nearer their own homes and the need to find better methods of dispute settlement, protection of human rights, and of ensuring economic prosperity in third world countries. Those all form very basic parts of any approach to refugees and I have not heard any discussion of that kind in this debate. The Government's response to the present situation is simply to find ways of slamming the doors on refugees, keeping them off our shores. That does not touch on the international problem.

We have before us two Bills which are primarily designed to deal with abuses. They do not take a constructive approach to the real situation of refugees. When I spoke in March, 1984, in favour of oral hearings, I said that Canada was then averaging about 500 applicants for refugee status per month, that this was double the number in the previous year, 1983, and that about 9,500 cases were under review for appeal yet only one-third of those who claimed refugee status had their claims upheld.

Those numbers have since exploded. I understand that the number of refugee applicants in the first six months of 1987 approached 16,000 and that only about 10 per cent of those who applied were determined to be refugees. Therefore, the numbers are significantly different and a response on the part of the Government is needed. However, the response is not Bill C-55 or Bill C-84.

Part of the reason for the flood of refugee applicants is, of course, the activities of so-called immigration consultants and of certain lawyers specializing in immigration. In my constituency at one time there were five people operating. Four of them were not lawyers while one was, and he, I believe, has since been charged. There is another lawyer who has not been charged and who, to the best of my knowledge, has never advocated any actually illegal proceeding. However, he certainly takes on hopeless immigration cases at $3,000 a go. My constituents ask me what the difference is between him and a consultant who charges $1,500 to advise someone to tell a few lies at an immigration hearing.

There is an appalling traffic in human misery. Some of the people who want to immigrate to Canada, although not refugees by the UN standard, are trying to escape difficult, painful situations which we can only imagine. It is absolutely appalling that they are being preyed upon and trafficked in by people who are escaping scott-free.

For this I have to be very critical of the Government. The Minister and his officials have certainly known of the activities of these so-called consultants and less than scrupulous lawyers for well over two years. We have seen nothing but inaction. There are measures in the present legislation which would have allowed action to be taken. Remarkably little has been done. The extraordinary and Draconian legislation now before us was not necessary because there are powers in the existing legislation to deal with the problems. There are powers contained within the Criminal Code to deal with fraud which have not been used.

The Minister's officials know, as well as I, that there is a lively traffic in social insurance number cards, that ineligible people are working on building sites all over Toronto. There are remarkably young, healthy men carrying cards which belong to 65 year-olds. This has been well known for a long time and no action has been taken. The Minister's officials know which union halls ask no questions but will send anyone out to a job without the production of identification and proof that he has status in the country. Nothing has been done.

For the Government, which has not taken action, which has not used the existing provisions in the law against fraud, to in effect say that the whole refugee process is so fraudulent that we need Draconian legislation to stop all refugee applicants at the border is surely to attack the problem in the wrong place.

I hope that the news we heard today is not true. There is a report in the newspapers that the Minister is seriously considering building some kind of fortress to house 2,500 refugee applicants. We will wait with interest to see what the Minister has to say about that, whether he will claim that he was misquoted.

Section 95(n) of the present Immigration Act allows prosecution of those who would counsel or assist illegal immigrants. That section has not been used other than to prosecute the captain of the Amelie. In other cases the most extraordinary abuses are taking place and the Government remains inactive.

To repeat, I know that Canadians want us to have a just, humane refugee policy. Canadians want genuine refugees to be admitted. Our past experience has been that they become very good citizens. One example is the 160,000 boat people from Vietnam who were settled in Canada with the aid and active involvement of many Canadian citizens and church groups who participated with the Government in providing sponsorship and offering friendship and assistance to families.

Canadian generosity has not changed. However, Canadians certainly do not want to see scams. Canadians do not want to have the system abused. That is abusive to our own taxpayers and also to genuine refugees. Canadians want abuses stopped. However, the two Bills before us are not designed to stop abuses but to close the door to genuine refugees. That is why I have to oppose them.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, I listened with care to the Hon. Member's speech. I always find it useful to hear what she has to say. She said that there was urgency to deal with fraud and fraudulent cases. Would she then tell us whether she thinks it is reasonable to delay this legislation for another six months and pass it in 1988, as indicated in the amendment to which we are now speaking?

Miss Nicholson: Madam Speaker, as I pointed out, this Bill does not address the question of fraud. There are provisions in the existing Immigration Act to deal with fraud, which provisions have not been used by the Government.

Mr. Friesen: Madam Speaker, would the Member not agree that when groups of so-called refugees, which may indeed be refugees, arrive in numbers large enough to knowingly plug up the system, that is a kind of fraud which destroys the system?

Miss Nicholson: Madam Speaker, the reason that fraudulent applicants can plug up the system is because the system is in need of revision. The Government added to that problem by announcing last year an amnesty, which it called by another name. At the time it was announced, that in itself triggered a tremendous amount of activity on the part of so-called consultants who were advertising in papers all over the world. There was a very deliberate attempt to plug up the system at that time and the Government should have foreseen it. It created the problem about which it is now complaining.

CHILD CARE

COMPREHENSIVE SYSTEM ADVOCATED

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Canadians across this land have been telling the Conservative Government for the last three years that we need an affordable, accessible and comprehensive quality child care system. They said it through the Abella Report, the Cooke Task Force, the "Equality for All" report and the recently tabled Martin report.

Child care has been described as the basic building block to access and equality of opportunity in the workforce for mothers. While this is a most serious consideration, even more important is ignoring the scarcity of services that neglects the real beneficiaries of child care, our children.

Whether pre-school or latch key for after school care, children need the protection and benefits of such a system whenever the absence of the parents requires an alternate form of care.

The Conservatives have had the time and opportunity to establish the needed federal position on child care. How can Canadians trust the Government's political will when it gives nothing but excuses, platitudes and a one-and-a-half page farcical letter as answer to this major social issue? It is time for action for the mothers, fathers and children of our land.

IMMIGRATION

SUPPORT FOR MEASURES TO PREVENT ABUSES OF SYSTEM

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, queue jumping by potential new Canadians to get into our country is simply not acceptable. Canada cannot and should not tolerate unscrupulous persons from anywhere who deal in human flesh at our borders at the expense of legitimate individuals who are waiting abroad to follow standard immigration procedures. Nor should we admit illegal refugees to our lands.

The vast majority of Canadians, almost 80 per cent, support the current Government's actions, and over 60 per cent said we should have gone further. Canadians are obviously in a mood for new tough measures to deal with immigration problems.

Canada can and should continue to welcome new persons to its shores. As we all know, our country has the capacity to do so, but not at the expense of those who are honestly trying to come here. Hundreds of my constituents, many of whom are new Canadians, have told me we should be firm, fair, quick and tough on illegal and unfair practices. I believe we are.

REPORTED PLAN TO CONSTRUCT DETENTION CENTRE

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the media report that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is planning a detention centre for 2,500 refugee claimants. This would be a horrible throwback to 45 years ago when our Government imprisoned 22,000 permanent residents of Canada, mostly Canadian born, and stripped them of nearly all their property solely because of their racial origin.

Unnecessary detention is cruel and such large scale detentions are not needed to protect Canada from refugees. The ancient people of Israel, although they suffered many attacks by enemies and many invasions, nevertheless made it a law to protect strangers who came in peace and unarmed. Jesus promised the kingdom to those who welcomed him in the person of a stranger.

I urge the Minister to drop this idea and cancel any tenders he may have called for the construction of such a cruel detention centre.

HORTICULTURE

PLIGHT OF HONEY INDUSTRY

Mr. Jack Scowen (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, Canada's honey industry has been plagued with more than its share of problems this past couple of years. I won't go into all the horrid details, but weather, disease, management as a result of poor advice, and honey prices are some of the complications. If something is not done soon to straighten out these problems the industry will be in serious trouble.

Financial problems are created by the United States Farm Support Bill which in turn does not bring a viable price to the Canadian producer. Honey was not on the list of commodities covered by the special grains payment made to Canadian farmers.

The honey industry has been a self-sufficient industry until recently and I call upon our Government to hurry up with the support for which the Canadian Honey Council has made application.

AIR TRANSPORT

PROPOSED TRANSPORTATION OF PLUTONIUM THROUGH CANADIAN AIR SPACE

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, next month the United States and Japan are expected to ratify an agreement to ship plutonium from Europe to Japan through Canadian air space. By allowing these overflights of plutonium Canada would jeopardize human life, caribou, polar bears and other forms of life should an accident take place.

The inhalation of toxic plutonium dust leads to slow death by cancer. The people in Yellowknife and perhaps even Edmonton could conceivably be at risk depending on wind direction, location of the crash site and the extent of destruction to the plutonium carrying casks.

The quantity of plutonium to be shipped means two flights per month for 30 years. If one overflight is allowed it will be difficult to stop the second, third, or three hundredth.

I urge the Government to notify the United States and Japan now, before the signing of the agreement in mid-September, and make it known that the Government of Canada is opposed to the transport of plutonium over its territory, and therefore avoid any risks to people, property and the environment. What Canadians want from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is reassurance and preventive action.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

SUPPORT FOR PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION AMENDING PATENT ACT

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr Speaker, I would like to draw to the attention of the House the numerous telegrams and letters I have received from my constituents urging me to support the passage of Bill C-22 as presented by the Minister.

Around the world the creation of new ideas and inventions is protected by copyrights and patents, that is everywhere but here in Canada. Canada stands alone among the industrialized countries in imposing compulsory licensing when a company obtains a patent for a new drug. This means that anyone else can copy that drug as long as it pays a 4 per cent royalty. That is legal piracy, the stealing of a company's intellectual property. It has to stop.

• (1405)

Bill C-22 will allow people and companies to do research with their time and with their money here in Canada. One really has to wonder if Senators have considered that the drug companies involved have promised Canada approximately $900 million in spending on research and development and the creation of 3,000 jobs for Canadians.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

SHORTAGES EXPERIENCED BY MUNICIPAL FOOD BANKS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, in recent months there has been a dramatic increase in the number of people who visit food banks in every part of Canada and in every city and town. These are food banks which have been established by voluntary agencies. For the first time there are skilled workers who have lost their jobs and executives of middle management from major companies who are finding it impossible to continue without the help of these food banks.

This summer many alarms have been sounded as community food banks have run short of enough supplies to feed the hungry. Huge shortages have been reported in big cities such as Toronto, and in smaller cities such as Kingston. Provinces such as Alberta and now British Columbia have compounded the difficulties by reducing welfare rates.

We have to ask ourselves how much longer it will be before food banks begin to crack because of the intense pressures caused by Governments which no longer care enough to help. Already cities such as Regina are turning to provincial and federal Governments to assist in a proposed universal school meal program to help feed that city's more than 2,000 hungry children each day.

When will the federal Government address the basic problems of hunger and malnutrition for so many Canadians? Some of us have been asking this same question for at least two years. It is time the Government got to work on what is a very important and serious problem.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PATENT ACT AMENDMENTS—OPPOSITION OF NEW DEMOCRATIC AND LIBERAL PARTIES

Mr. David Daubney (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the Liberals and New Democrats are strong on the rhetoric of research, development and productivity. But, in practice, they bend to the winds of political expediency opposing the Government's amendments to the Patent Act. Let the Opposition explain this to the 66 working men and women in the pharmaceutical industry in Arnprior who, out of concern for their jobs and their futures, sent telegrams to their Member of Parliament.

Let them explain to Canadians how, in their search for a few easy votes, they have opposed legislation which will encourage and reward those companies which dare to invest in research, developing drugs which ease human suffering and save lives.

Let the senatorial scaremongers try to explain to scientists and researchers across the country why they chose to call up the spectre of unreasonable fears rather than taking the tough decisions necessary to reward innovation and productivity.

NEW BRUNSWICK

PROSPECT OF ELECTION OF A LIBERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, this statement has no connection with the forthcoming election. That is how announcements regarding major projects in New Brunswick are prefaced.

On the week-end it was announced that $20 million would be added to the Canada—New Brunswick Agreement on Tourism. Wonderful! This means that projects previously turned down because of lack of funds will now be able to proceed.

We still do not know whether this announcement has any connection with the upcoming election campaign in New Brunswick. I don't think so. Let me explain.

Everybody in New Brunswick knows that the Hatfield Government is breathing its last. Everyboby knows that no agreement and no amount of money would be able to buy the New Brunswick election for the Hatfield team.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that in his wisdom, the federal Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) is aware that in New Brunswick, the die is cast, and whatever he does, he will not be able to influence the vote towards the present Government, which is so exhausted it doesn't even have the courage to call an election. The Minister is also aware that the next election in New Brunswick will lead to a Liberal landslide that will be remembered in history as the McKenna landslide.

Mr. Speaker, it is only a matter of time.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM—ABUSES CONDEMNED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, sensible, thinking Canadians from every walk of life are appalled at the current refugee determination process whereby anyone can come to Canada at any time, by any means, from anywhere, and upon arrival refuse to identify themselves, and in the same breath claim all the rights and privileges of Canadian citizenship.

We are told that upwards of 500 refugee claimants are arriving weekly with virtually unlimited potential for more. Furthermore, 90 per cent of these claimants are bogus refugees, line jumpers who make a mockery of our laws and who proclaim to the world that Canada is an easy mark.

My constituents are saying that this is grossly unfair; surely, common sense must prevail. They congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on bringing forward Bills C-84 and C-55 which will increase penalties against smugglers, and make it easier to detain refugee claimants. They urge speedy passage of these Bills.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

PAYMENT OF BENEFIT CONTRIBUTIONS DURING MATERNITY LEAVE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the past I have brought up the issue of paid benefits for people who are on maternity leave. At that time I requested that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) act.

It is important to note that in September, 1985, the Government sent out a circular in the format of questions and answers. One of the questions was:

> Is the employer required to continue benefit contributions while the employee is on leave?

The answer was:

> Yes, but only if the employee also pays contributions he or she would normally have made.

That being the case, women assumed that they would have the normal benefits paid by the employer continue. Since then the Government has received a legal opinion which was sent out by James Allan from the Minister of Labour's office. In that letter it states:

> We now have a final opinion from legal services. They advise that Section 59.52 does not obligate an employer to pay their "usual" cost of benefits during maternity/child care leave. We are also advised that since there is no legal obligation for employers to pay, a prosecution under the Code would probably not succeed.

I ask that the Minister of Labour live up to the obligations of his Department, of the House of Commons, and of the law as it was passed in 1984, and make appropriate changes to the Canada Labour Code to ensure that women on maternity leave receive paid benefits.

IMMIGRATION

REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM ABUSES—SUPPORT FOR AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, since the end of World War II, hundreds of thousands of refugees have come to our country, usually after being processed by Canadian officials in one of the many refugee camps around the world. Until recently, only a handful arrived in Canada and then claimed refugee status. That has jumped dramatically, from 1,600 in 1980 to over 18,000 last year. This is partly due to the increase in the world's refugee population, which is presently estimated to be at least 12 million. However, 70 per cent of those who arrive here and then claim refugee status are queue jumpers, posing as refugees to gain quick entrance into Canada.

Canadians do not like queue jumpers. Rightly so, they feel it is unfair to immigrants waiting to come into our country legally. Bills C-84 and C-55 are not aimed at genuine refugees. They are aimed at deterring queue jumpers, and at fairness for immigrant applicants who want to play by the rules. That is what Canadians really want.

NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL OPPOSING POSITION OF SENATE IN AMENDING PATENT ACT LEGISLATION

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to quote from The Packet & Times editorial on August 15, 1987. The editorial is entitled "Drug patent bill—obstructionism by Senate". It states:

> In opposing the federal governments' proposed new drug patent bill, the Senate is staging a grandstand play. We hope Canadians will not be fooled by it.
> At present, in Canada, genetic drug companies are allowed to make cheap copies of medications developed by major drug companies in return for a mere 4 per cent royalty.
> Canada is the only country in the western world which allows this piracy. Most protect the drug investors for 10 years or, in some cases, much longer.
> Canada's practice is unfair. If we treated other "inventors" in such manner we wouldn't have any new inventions.
> If we expect the major drug companies to spend the billions of dollars required to develop new medications . . . for the benefit of us all . . . we must offer some protection . . .
> The Senate, in a deliberate attempt at obstruction, has revised the legislation calling for . . . a four-year monopoly.
> The Liberal-dominated Senate claims that in proposing the law, the Mulroney government is bending to the demands of the U.S. government and drug company lobbyists.
> This ignores the fact that European drug companies and other governments are as much upset at our piracy as the Americans.

NEWSPAPER EDITORIAL SUPPORTING POSITION OF SENATE IN AMENDING PATENT ACT LEGISLATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I, too, want to read an editorial on the same issue, on Bill C-22. This one is from The Toronto Star of August 16, 1987. It is entitled "Bill C-22: R.I.P." and reads:

> Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Harvie Andre says he would rather let its drug patent legislation die than negotiate its provisions at a conference between senators and MPs. That's okay with us.

It goes on, and in the last sentence it says:

> Andre wants none of the Senate's compromises. If that means Bill C-22 dies, Canadians won't mourn its passing.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—FUTURE OF AUTO PACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Acting Leader of the Conservative Government, in the absence of both the Deputy Prime Minister and the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

There are only 49 days left before the end of the free trade negotiations with the United States, and the Americans are still maintaining that the Auto Pact is part of the negotiations. The Government offered to give me a private confidential briefing on trade issues last week on the condition that I not say a word about them.

My first question would have been about the Auto Pact. Since the Government seemed willing to tell me the truth in private, is it also willing to say publicly what is going on in the negotiations as concerns the Auto Pact, or rather the guarantees protecting this pact? Are they part of the negotiations or not?

[English]

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is of course a temptation to offer to reply to the Acting Leader of the Liberal Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —but I will not succumb to that.

[Translation]

As for the specific question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, it is a well-known fact that the Auto Pact is not on the table. The Leader of the Opposition has asked whether we are willing to begin publishing the details of the Canadian position 45 days before the end of the negotiations. This would destroy our position in the negotiations. We are not willing to publish the Canadian position as asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman knows that in the circumstances in Parliament I would not be tempted to needle him, but I want to assure him that I am not likely to follow his precedent.

Mr. McDermid: Not likely?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our difficulty—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Our difficulty is that—

Mr. Masse: Look at your own Members, John.

An Hon. Member: There is nobody behind you at all.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, our difficulty is that despite the fact that the Minister for International Trade has said that she made a clear statement to the House of Commons on March 16, she did not. She did not indicate in clear terms what was negotiable or what was not negotiable.

• (1420)

We do not want to know the negotiating position of the Government and we do not want to know how the Government will play its cards. However, we do want to know what cards are in the deck, those items that are negotiable and on the table with the United States.

I could cite to the right hon. gentleman a statement made on regional subsidies. The Minister said on March 16 that regional development and our capacity to sustain regional development are not on the table. Five paragraphs later, she said also on the table are subsidies and related measures which are important to regional development because we want to know what programs we will be able to implement for regional development.

That is a perfect example of the lack of clarity of the Minister and it is for that reason that I ask the Right Hon. Member this question: are regional subsidies, those elements of Canadian national policy necessary to achieve economic equality across Canada, part of the negotiations with the United States, yes or no?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what is being talked about here is a trade negotiation. I have been out of the country for a week and I do not know if the Leader of the Opposition has changed his position again, but when I left he wanted to subvert the trade negotiations entirely and have us walk away from them before they were completed.

Now he seems to have a new proposal and that new proposal is that since the Government is determined to follow the advice of, among, others the Liberal Premier of the Province of Quebec, by proceeding with the best efforts attempt to negotiate a trade arrangement, he is trying to ask us to act in a way that would put the Canadian case on the table for the advantage of the Americans in a way that would destroy the Canadian case. That is not the way we will proceed with these negotiations.

AMENDMENT OF PATENT ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with that type of answer there will be no overwhelming demand that the Minister stay in the country for any length of time.

The Right Hon. Member's colleague and Leader, the Prime Minister, admitted last week that the drug legislation, Bill C-22 shortly to be before the House, has been discussed with the Americans. It took a little prodding, but we got that admission. Since the Americans have always contended that the drug legislation is a matter for negotiation in free trade with Canada, has the Government consulted recently with the Americans to ascertain whether the compromise set forth in the Eastman report would be a position acceptable to the Americans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, what an amazing attempt to give away Canada's sovereignty. We make those decisions here in Canada, we do not ask the United States to make those kinds of decisions.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a question based upon discussions with other Governments regarding Bill C-22. I can tell him that I have heard from other Governments about the situation of piracy that is the law of Canada now which we are trying to change. I have heard from the French, the Dutch, the Germans, the British, the Americans, and there is no doubt—

Mr. Gauthier: How about the Canadians?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —and we have heard from Canadians, both on the question of the substance of the drug Bill and on the question of the absolutely unacceptable, undemocratic attempt by the Senate of Canada, a Senate whose real purpose is to change the leadership of its own Party, to subvert the actions and decisions of the elected representatives in the House of Commons.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—UNITED NATIONS CONVENTION ON REFUGEES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Immigration. Last Friday in response to a question put by my Leader, he suggested that under Bill C-84 we will not violate our international obligations. However, we have since learned that in a letter dated August 12 sent to the Government of Canada, the United Nations High Commissioner on Refugees expressed grave concern with the policy of the Government and in the process delivered an international slap in the face to Canada which was heard the world over.

Knowing our precise commitments to the United Nations and having received a letter prior to the commencement of the emergency debate last week, why did the Minister persist in misleading the House and Canadians into believing that the United Nations Convention is not being breached by Bill C-84? Will the Minister make the necessary amendments so that Canada can save face with the United Nations? In that regard, what instructions have been sent to Ambassador Stephen Lewis?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I received the comments of the United Nations High Commissioner and I responded to those comments in a letter last week. I am confident my explanation will satisfy the concerns of the High Commissioner.

• (1425)

In the letter I said that the powers permitted to states by Article 25 of the UN Convention on the Law of the Sea authorizes the denial of entry and the enforced departure of vehicles from territorial waters where there is reason to believe those vehicles are transporting a person or persons to Canada in contravention of the Immigration Act or regulations. The Bill requires the Minister to exercise due regard to the safety of the vehicle and the passengers before giving the direction to depart. This provides ample opportunity for the Minister to take into account a variety of considerations before making his decision.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should know that the UN Commissioner is not stupid. His concern is for the safety of refugees. We are squandering the international leadership role on which Canadians have prided themselves. We are losing sovereignty at home, respect abroad, so what else is left?

An Hon. Member: You!

Mr. Marchi: Bill C-84 will render our signature to the UN Convention on Refugees null and void as was diplomatically implied by the UN Commissioner. Why does the Government not have the honesty and integrity to tell Canadians and this House very clearly that it no longer believes in the UN Convention, that it is pulling Canada out of that convention, rather than trying to do it through a sneaky back door approach? You cannot have it both ways. Which one is it?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I share the opinion of my colleague that the High Commissioner for Refugees is certainly not a stupid person, and this is why we responded at length to the question he asked us. I am sincerely convinced that the High Commissioner for Refugees will accept Canada's argument with respect to dissuading bogus refugees from resorting to illegal means to enter this country. We reserve the right to send back ships caught in international waters, but again with every assurance that in the case of people sent back, if ever this should happen, we will have given consideration to the safety aspects and made sure that neither the life nor the future of such individuals would be compromised in any way whatsoever.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF NEGOTIATING END TO APARTHEID—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Secretary of State was quoted as saying that he has come back from South Africa with practical proposals to negotiate an end to apartheid. This seems to be a major development. Can the Secretary of State tell the House what these proposals are?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are no specific proposals and I regret having been misquoted. Some developments have come to light in my discussions with the African National Congress and the government of South Africa which are minimally encouraging. I must say that, as far as negotiations are concerned, I do not believe that there can be any major progress in the forseeable future, but there have been some elements of agreement between the two parties which hold some hope for the future. For instance, both parties have indicated that they would prefer a negotiated solution to one achieved through violence. Both have indicated that, in their opinion, if the apartheid issue is settled by violent means in South Africa, it will have terrible consequences for everyone in the region, both Black and White.

Third, and I believe that this is very important, the ANC recognizes that it is not the only group representing South African Blacks that must be involved in any negotiations. Finally, neither the government of South Africa nor the ANC have closed the door on future negotiations.

FORTHCOMING COMMONWEALTH AND FRANCOPHONIE MEETINGS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, quite evidently the visit of the Secretary of State for External Affairs to South Africa was intended as a preparation for both the Francophone Summit and the Commonwealth Summit.

In view of the experiences of the Secretary of State in southern Africa, is it the intention of the Government to bring forth any specific propositions at all to those two conferences? Quite specifically, is it the intention of the Government to fulfil its promise to try to agree to new sanctions by those two bodies in view of the lack of change in southern Africa?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have the privilege later today of being present when the Prime Minister meets the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Mr. Ramphal, at which time there will be discussion of some of the matters which will come to the agenda of the Commonwealth Conference. Many of those will concern South Africa.

Although that conference is also dealing with a wider world and a wider range of issues, there are some specific proposals that will be considered. If those proposals are to have effect, they have to become subject to the agreement of all of the members of the Commonwealth there assembled. I frankly do not think they would benefit from publication here at this time.

I received some suggestions during my visit, not only from Governments but also from, among others, Reverend Alan Boesak, that may provide some opportunity for action by the Commonwealth. We will study that very seriously.

With regard to the question of sanctions, I think it should be borne in mind that sanctions are one instrument of encouraging change and that there are others.

I think it important to make the point, immediately after my return to Canada, that had the Prime Minister, the Government and I accepted, two years ago, the advice of some in this House that we rupture entirely at that time our relations with South Africa, Canada would not have been in a position to have had the discussions which I was able to hold. We would not have been in a position to put to work the unique credibility of Canada as a country which might be able to build some kind of bridge across which agreement between the ANC and the South African Government might move.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POSITION OF COMMONWEALTH

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, surely the credibility of the Government and of the country is tested as much by the promise of the Prime Minister that diplomatic relations would be broken if there was not some amelioration of the situation under apartheid.

I will direct my question to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State. It may not be that apartheid is the only issue at the Commonwealth, but it certainly is the most important. There is agreement that sanctions and other actions are necessary.

Is it not clear that unless some strong action is taken by Canada and the Commonwealth in response to apartheid in South Africa that in itself would pose a threat to the seriousness with which the Commonwealth is regarded by its membership?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I think that is the case. I think it is important that the Commonwealth act. However, taking an action is only part of the challenge. The other part of the challenge is that the action be appropriate.

I have discussed this matter in some detail recently with President Kaunda, who is not only the President of Zambia but also the Chairman of the Front Line States and the Chairman of the Organization of African Unity. I have discussed it with the leaders of the African National Congress. When the Prime Minister was in Africa himself in January he had the opportunity to discuss precisely these questions. We will continue to look for ways that will be effective.

If I may say so, part of the reason that we were able to have some small influence upon the possible elaboration of a possible negotiating position was because the Prime Minister has shown leadership on this issue which is recognized throughout Africa and, I think, throughout the developing world.

AIR TRANSPORT

AIRLINE DEREGULATION—POSSIBLE CONSEQUENCES

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I will direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Airline deregulation in the United States has had a direct adverse effect on safety. The Detroit tragedy of yesterday may well be another terrible example of this situation.

Why is the Government not ready to do anything to prevent similar tragedies from occurring here in Canada after Canadian airline deregulation?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, of course we all regret very much the very serious tragedy which took place in Detroit. I am sure all Canadians will mourn with the families and friends of those who perished. We extend to them the comfort and compassion of the people of Canada.

I find the Hon. Member's question quite irresponsible. This accident is being investigated by the National Transportation Safety Board. None of the facts has been determined. It involved an MD-80 aircraft which is a development of the DC-9. There are no such aircraft registered in Canada. The engines were a JT8D-200 engine which is a very much advanced engine. Northwest Airlines has an impressive record. I think that making that kind of allegation is totally uncalled for.

I simply want to assure Canadians and the House that one of the first things the Government did was to take extra precautions to tighten up on the safety regulations in the airline industry by passing a new Aeronautics Act which is the most progressive, advanced and far-reaching safety legislation of any country in the world. For the Hon. Member to tie politics to a very serious tragedy is most unfortunate indeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, the Minister's answer is not good enough. Does the Minister know that airline mechanical engineers are delegated powers by the Department of Transport in Canada and are put in charge of applying the standards laid down by the Canadian Department?

How can we have the companies policing themselves? This is unacceptable. I hope the Minister will be ready to change this practice.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I find this question totally absurd from a Member who has had some experience in transportation. He has been the critic for three years now. I invite him to reread the Aeronautics Act and to reread some of the actions which have been taken by the Government.

The fact is that we have added the strength of the airworthiness inspectors. That whole section has been beefed up. If the Member would like a full briefing, I certainly invite him to visit the Department of Transport in order to get the facts straight.

Mr. Ouellet: There are fewer employees than before.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CENTRAL AMERICA—CANADIAN SUPPORT FOR PEACE PLAN

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs and is with regard to the announcement the Minister made yesterday that the Government is sending two officials from the Department of External Affairs to Central America today to ensure that the five Foreign Ministers in the region are aware of Canada's support for the new peace plan, the accord reached in Guatemala City, and also to convey Canada's willingness to give technical advice on peacekeeping mechanisms.

We would not need to send two officials specially to make Central America aware of our support for the peace plan had we had, lo these many years, a more active and larger diplomatic presence in Central America. Is the Minister now prepared to consider increasing Canada's permanent diplomatic presence in the region, up to and including establishing an embassy in Managua?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to do that at this time. I do expect to be making an announcement in the next several weeks that, while not responding to the specific questions that the Hon. Member has raised, will nonetheless enhance the capacity of Canada—a capacity which I think is already recognized in the region as being both strong and willing to help—to contribute to peaceful resolution of disputes and to the kind of economic and other development that we hope would ensue in Central America.

Ms. Jewett: I am sorry that at this juncture the Minister dismisses out of hand enlarging our permanent diplomatic presence with people from the Department, in a region about which Canadians have been concerned these many years.

MINISTER'S ACTIONS

Ms. Pauline Jewett (New Westminster—Coquitlam): Will the Minister give some assurance that the Governments of Central America will know from now on that Canada supports their efforts in the peace plan, as we did with Contadora? Will he do anything to ensure that again we do not have to send down two people to inform Central America of our support for their plans?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why the Governments of Central America know that this Government of Canada has not only supported the peace plan but has been active in encouraging the development of economies and of peace in the region, is that they listen to the Government and not to the Hon. Member, so that they know the facts.

Let me be clear that we intend to continue a very active presence there indeed. I find it surprising that the Hon. Member would dismiss the importance of Canada sending experts down so that we can have discussions immediately and directly with the Governments concerned about practical means by which Canada might be able to apply our experience in control, in verification and other matters necessary to the establishment of a peace, if one is in fact established, in Central America.

As to other steps, we are taking several. Several weeks ago I initiated a meeting with Foreign Ministers of Latin America at the United Nations in September. We intend to maintain a very active presence, interest, and I, hope, effectiveness in Central America.

AIR SAFETY

DEREGULATION—DANGERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Prime Minister who is well versed in the deregulation issue, his own baby.

Since the advent of deregulation in United States, the number of near-collisions in the air increased 300 percent—there are nearly 3 incidents a day.

What steps does his Government intend to take to ensure that this situation verging on catastrophe does not repeat itself in Canada with the advent of deregulation?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I know that Members opposite have been searching very desperately to find ways and means to take issue with the long overdue regulatory reform that has been required in the transportation system in Canada, to make it more efficient and effective, more productive and safe. I am not sure how he proposes to use American statistics, where the situation is quite different in terms of the density and a host of other things, to apply to the Canadian scene.

The fact is that we are very deeply concerned about safety in the skies, safety at sea, and safety on the road in Canada's transportation system. We have taken those steps in a very deliberate fashion, consistent with maintaining a strong and efficient transportation system. I invite the Member to compare the legislative framework we have in Canada as compared to the United States, namely, the Aeronautics Act which this House approved, and I compliment all Members for supporting it.

[Translation]

POSSIBILITY OF ACCEPTING AMENDMENTS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): My supplementary is directed to the same Minister, Madam Speaker.

[English]

According to Jack Butt, Chairman of the Canadian Air Traffic Controllers Association, the number of incidents, such as near misses and close calls, has quadrupled in Canada since 1983. Since 1985 the present Minister has implemented reductions in the number of air traffic controllers. There are now 200 fewer air traffic controllers than we had two years ago. How can the Minister assure Canadians that Canadian skies are as safe as they should be?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, we are not only assuring Canadians that we have the latest up-to-date resources in terms of personnel, we have assured Canadians that we are using the latest and safest technology.

The RAMP Program which employs the latest state of the art technology has had the result of providing safer and more effective services with fewer numbers of people.

I might remind the Hon. Member that the decision to implement the RAMP Program was taken by his Government, something that we support and I hope he supports.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—PROSECUTION OF RACKETEERS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. On Friday the Minister said that he is prepared to consider amendments to Clause 95 of Bill C-84 to avoid punishing innocent volunteers helping refugees. Considering that the Bill also fails entirely to catch or punish the sort of entrepreneurs who, in the past two years, brought in over 5,000 bogus refugee claimants from Portugal, Turkey and Brazil to make frivolous or manifestly unfounded claims, does the Minister intend to offer amendments to the Bill which would stop such racketeers?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on Bill C-84, hearings will start tomorrow in the legislative committee. I think that is the appropriate forum for discussing amendments. Indeed, I will be there tomorrow morning. If there are any amendments—and I would like to correct the perception my colleague wanted to give—ensuring that we can state matters differently without altering the substance of the Bill itself, I am ready to listen. But that will come from the legislative committee.

EFFECT OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Minister's willingness to consider amendments and I hope he will do some thinking ahead himself because there is another matter that requires creative thinking.

The United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees said in his letter last week that Clause 8: "Could risk exposing bona fide asylum seekers and refugees to forcible return to territories where their lives or freedom would be threatened". This, of course, is contrary to Canada's UN obligations. Is the Minister willing to amend that clause in such a way as to protect both Canada's sovereignty and the refugees whom Canada has promised to protect?

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty here. There has been a practice which has been respected in this House, although it has really been a matter of judgment for the Chair, as to how far questions should go on a Bill that is in the midst of debate or has not yet cleared this place.

I understand the importance of this particular issue, especially in view of the fact that one of the reasons that the House is back here is to address that very matter. I will allow the question, but urge Hon. Members to reflect on what the Chair has observed so that what is properly a matter for debate is not put into the Question Period in such a way that the Chair would have to rule it out. I remind Hon. Members that on that particular Bill there will be a vote later this afternoon. The Bill then goes to committee where these matters can be pursued further. The Hon. Minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I read earlier the answer I gave the UN High Commissioner on Refugees regarding the concerns he set forth in his letter to me last week. I thought I was clear. I think that on the whole, Bill C-84 respects the concerns raised. That should be clear to Canadians.

Canadians and especially Quebecers would like to know where the New Democrats stand. For a week the New Democratic Party has been paralyzing the passage of a Bill Canadians want to see passed. Some day the New Democratic Party will have to tell Canadians exactly what it is against. It is against Bill C-22, which it has blocked for nearly a year. Today, it is blocking the Immigration Bill. I think Quebecers especially are starting to realize where you stand.

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On August 13, last week, the Minister informed the House that the marketing branch of his Department was in the midst of investigating the alleged fraudulent practices of Principal Trust and the companies associated thereto. Today the director of that branch confirmed to my office that he was not aware of any such investigation. Would the Minister explain to the House why he has chosen to mislead the House and tell us who he is trying to protect—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member means to imply that, for whatever reason, most certainly an innocent one, the Minister may have left an impression on facts with which the Hon. Member does not agree. However, I know the Hon. Member will know that the suggestion that carries the imputation of a deliberate misleading of the House is inappropriate. So I would ask the Hon. Member to rephrase his question and pursue the matter.

Mr. Dingwall: My question to the Minister then is why, in view of his previous statements, he has chosen to give certain representations to the House which are different from the facts. Who is he attempting to protect? Is he trying to protect the regulatory agencies in the Province of Alberta? Is he trying to protect his friends, or the friends of his associates, if you will, in the various companies, because he is certainly not protecting or enhancing the investments made by thousands of Canadians in those various companies?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know to whom the Hon. Member was talking or to whom his office was talking, but the Hon. Member's allegation of misrepresentation is typical of his allegations, totally false and without substance.

Mr. Foster: He talked to your office.

Mr. Andre: There was a meeting in Regina on July 14 where officials of the Marketing Practices Branch of my Department met with investors of First Investors. The Hon. Member for Regina East, I believe, was present, so the Hon. Member can check with him if he was in fact there. Questionnaires were distributed to investors who felt they might have had misrepresentations made to them.

If the Hon. Member would check his law, he would realize that this branch does not take instructions from me. It has independent power from Parliament to investigate these matters and to recommend charges if necessary.

If the Hon. Member would do his homework in that regard, he would find out that in fact it is carrying on with the investigation. I am informed it expects to have a recommendation by the end of August.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL INQUIRY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. In view of the fact that this particular situation transcends the geographical boundaries of the Province of Alberta, and in view of the fact of its national importance and that it affects thousands of Canadians, particularly in investment communities throughout the country, does the Minister not see it as advisable, in the best interests of Canadians and to provide certainty and integrity within the investment community, to exercise his responsibilities and call upon the Government of Alberta to initiate with him a joint public enquiry into this whole matter in order to shed light and provide necessary information for the general public to address what is obviously a very serious wrongdoing to a great number of Canadians?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very important that we understand the facts in this case. First, Mr. Cormie petitioned this company into bankruptcy. That was the first step. The second step was taken by the Government of Alberta by taking control of the assets. Third, and only third, the Canadian Deposit Insurance Corporation made application to protect the depositors by asking for a winding-up order.

I would like to tell the House this afternoon that the court met this morning and has agreed to the winding-up order. The CDIC has agreed to the following, which may be in the direction to which the Hon. Member refers; first, the CDIC says it will continue its preparation to pay out to the depositors in a few weeks' time, but if a buyer can be found for this group it will not interfere and in fact will continue to encourage it. So the federal Government is simply an onlooker in this matter.

These companies are all provincially regulated. This is the wrong capital, the wrong legislature, in which to ask these questions. Insofar as we have any influence at all, the CDIC is the insurer and it is co-operating with the Alberta authorities.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—PRINCIPLE OF NATIONAL TREATMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. I have just received a tape of an official briefing by a senior U.S. commerce department official, Mr. William Cavitt, in which he indicates that Canada has agreed to the principle of "national treatment", that is, that Canadian and U.S. firms be treated the same in this country. Will the Prime Minister confirm that Canada has made that concession? And will he tell us what Canada has received from the U.S. in return? Or is this more of the one-way giveaways we have seen so often from this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to a briefing of some kind given by Americans to Americans. He has access to that, apparently. So be it. I am surprised my hon. friend would raise questions of briefings because, when his Party asked for confidential briefings, the Minister agreed to brief you fully on what took place on the Canadian side and the New Democratic Party turned it down.

What has transpired at the bargaining table is very much in keeping with the outlines indicated here in the House by the Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and by myself, during debate and in Question Period. It is very much in keeping with the national interest of Canada. That was the kind of information that on a confidential and appropriate basis, the Government, through the chief negotiators, was ready to provide to the New Democratic Party and to the Official Opposition. I regret that my hon. friend chose to decline that invitation by Canadians to Canadians and chooses instead to resurrect items coming from the United States.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, a responsible Government would give this information to all Canadians, not just to parliamentarians on a confidential basis.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DISPUTE SETTLEMENT MECHANISM

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Will the Prime Minister also confirm what Mr. Cavitt goes on to say in this briefing, that the United States has taken a strong position against any binding neutral dispute mechanism of the kind we have sought, according to the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend surprises me and the House with his questions and allegations today. On August 5, Lorne Nystrom, MP for Yorkton—Melville, wrote to Ambassador Reisman saying: "I am writing to you on behalf of my New Democratic Party colleagues to request a private, confidential briefing by yourself, or one of your officials, on the progress of the free trade negotiations between Canada and the United States".

• (1500)

Three days or thereabouts later, on August 11, the Minister for International Trade, in response to a legitimate request for confidential information, wrote to the Leader of the New Democratic Party and stated: "As we are entering the final crucial stages of the free trade negotiations with the United States, I would like to extend an invitation to you to meet with one of the senior negotiators for a briefing on the status of the negotiations to date".

The negotiators, acting on behalf of the Government and the people of Canada, were ready to provide full and complete information in regard to sensitive national negotiations on a confidential basis to the Leader of the New Democratic Party. But, clearly, either the original request coming from the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville was either a sham or, alternatively, the NDP is incapable of keeping confidential information designed to promote the national interest of Canada.

So you will have to make up your minds with respect to what you want because you have already turned down both possibilities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister will have no doubt heard that I did feel it necessary to make comments last week on the use of the word "you". I know that the right hon. gentleman will refrain from doing so in the answer to the next question.

IMMIGRATION

SENATE COMMITTEE'S REPORT ON TERRORISM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Does the Minister agree with the report of the Senate Special Committee on Terrorism and Public Safety which states that Canada's current refugee procedures which were put in place in 1976 constitute a gaping hole in our security system? Does he truly believe that Bill C-84 will close that gaping hole, bearing in mind that this same Senate committee said that the RCMP takes at least 90 days in order to do a background check on everyone who applies for refugee status in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think that 90 per cent to 95 per cent of the time, Senator Kelly's report on terrorism reflects the concerns of Bill C-55. It is clear that the present system for dealing with refugee cases does not provide for effective methods to deal with the problems of terrorism. One of our reasons for introducing some very strict control measures in Bill C-84 is to give Canadians the assurance that before we authorize anyone to enter Canada freely and fully, we must have the assurance, and I am thinking of the Immigration Officers hired especially for this purpose, that these people do not represent a threat in any shape or form to the security of this country. It is clear that these measures are essential, that they form a major part of Bill C-84 and that they will have to reflect the purpose of this Bill.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There will be one more question from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, and one question only.

I just want to say before Question Period ends that, while this has been a Question Period in which there has been a vivid exchange if, perhaps tomorrow and the next day, preambles could be a little shorter then answers should be a little shorter, and the Chair would be able to recognize more Hon. Members.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

EASTERN ONTARIO—REPORTED CLOSURE OF CLIENT SERVICE CENTRES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns a decision of the Government to close down client service centres for the elderly needing help with their Old Age Security cheques.

Over the last three months the Department of National Health and Welfare has announced the closing down of no less than four client service centres in eastern Ontario, including the one in the community of Hawkesbury in my riding, under the pretext of replacing this service with a toll-free telephone line. How can the Government say that a faceless phone conversation to help senior citizens is as good as an official of the Department of National Health and Welfare on site? Why is the Government hitting at senior citizens again?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will take that question as notice, in no way agreeing with the premise or the allegations that the Hon. Member has outlined in it.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976, and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock there were nine minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech of the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson).

[Translation]

I will now recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue the period for questions and comments.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson). The Hon. Member will know that at the present time the House is debating an amendment to the Bill proposed by the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), that this Bill not be further discussed until 1988. In other words, this very important question of refugee determination would be stalled for a further six months if the Liberal amendment, which I understand is supported by the NDP, is passed.

My hon. friend will know that the purpose of putting a second reading motion to the floor of the House of Commons is to get the matter into committee so that there can be discussions and so that there can be witnesses called. But the Liberal amendment would stall any discussion of this matter until 1988, six months from now.

I would like to know from the Hon. Member how she feels her constituents, many of whom are new Canadians, feel about further delaying any discussion of this Bill and about people jumping the queue. I know her constituency well, having spent 30 years in Toronto. What I want to know is whether or not the Hon. Member will be supporting her colleague's amendment which is to further delay discussion of this Bill another six months, or will she be voting against it?

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, it is passing strange that a supporter of the Government should complain about delay with respect to Bill C-55 considering that the Government let the Bill sit on the Order Paper for a long, long time and only brought it in for three hours of debate before the House recessed at the end of June. We have now been brought back and asked to deal with Bill C-55 and Bill C-84, Bill C-84 being a curiously ill-designed, ill-thought out piece of legislation, obviously thrown together in a great hurry.

As I said in my speech, there is a real need for serious updating and review of refugee policy. But Bill C-84 is certainly not it, and Bill C-55 has some serious flaws in it, flaws which have been pointed out in the House and outside the House and which need to be addressed. If the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) is serious about wanting to do a serious review of refugee policy, which is badly needed, then all he has to do is tell us that he is prepared to accept some amendments in committee.

With respect to the abuses referred to by the Hon. Member, the Government has known of abuses for a full two years. There are powers in the existing Immigration Act which it has not attempted to use. Under those circumstances, to say that the Government needs either Bill C-55 or Bill C-84 in order to deal with the abuses, simply does not make sense. It has known of the problems for two years. It has had the powers and it has not used them.

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, during the course of debate much is being made about the delay between having a Bill read a first time and debate commencing.

Does the Hon. Member agree that there is a case to be made for having a Bill printed, and then having it exposed to interest groups, to discussion by the media, and to discussion by various parliamentarians? For example, members of our caucus met with interest groups on this subject matter on approximately June 10.

Does my hon. colleague agree that there is a case to be made for introduction of a Bill, and then a delay before debate starts, so that interest groups can be heard by the various caucuses? In that manner, there can be discussion in the media, and general discussion among parliamentarians and their constituents before proceeding with the legislation.

Miss Nicholson (Trinity): The technique that the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary describes is certainly one that has often been used in the House where, in effect, the first reading of a Bill is treated like an exposure draft, then by the time the Bill comes to second reading and committee a much more informed debate takes place.

Government supporters cannot have it both ways. If they want a thoughtful, careful discussion, then they must be prepared to allow time for it. If the matter is one of urgency, then it is dealt with on an urgent basis. In this case, the Government has not made it clear in which way it is going. On June 18 the Bill was brought forward for three hours of debate as a type of "filler", and we have not returned to it. Today it has suddenly become a matter of urgency. There may be an explanation, but we have yet to hear it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall).

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Madam Speaker, today I wish to address some of the arguments made by the opposition Members and certain vested interest groups who believe that the Government is over-reacting in proposing this refugee determination legislation. They believe that the refugee situation in Canada today is not that serious, and that it does not deserve our urgent attention. I do not know where our critics have been. In my riding this past weekend, and prior to the House being recalled, I have received numerous phone calls, letters, and representations in my four constituency offices, and here in Ottawa, which indicate that people firmly believe that the Government was proper in recalling the House to deal with these Bills.

I would like to lay before the House the notion that all Canadians are very concerned and interested in immigration, and that we as a Government deal with the Bills before us. Whether my colleagues across the floor will admit it or not, every Member of the House has heard from the public on this issue. The message coming through loud and clear is, we are mad as hell about flagrant abuses to our refugee determination system. We are not going to take it any longer. The Government has to do something, and do it now.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) should be applauded for coming forward in such a timely fashion with this take charge, take action legislation. Bills C-55 and C-84 will continue our long history of extending humanitarianism to those truly in need, while sending out a clear, uncompromising message to those who take advantage of our natural goodwill.

Around the world Canadians have the reputation of being good guys. From here on in, these "good guys" will not finish last when it comes to removing illegal immigrants, and stopping in their tracks the unscrupulous smugglers who traffic in human desperation.

The critics of this legislation lay the audacious charge that the Government does not care about the plight of refugees, and that the Government does not act on behalf of refugees. I welcome this opportunity to set the record straight and tell the House that the media and the Opposition have, by gross omission, left untold the many ongoing actions and financial outlays the Government has initiated to assist refugees around the world.

While the debate over the new refugee determination system focuses on refugee claims made within Canada, we must not forget that Canada offers protection to refugees through our overseas programs. In this way we have for years shared the responsibility for the international refugee situation. Each year we offer refugee status, transportation to Canada, and resettlement assistance to thousands of refugees in camps and in flight. We offer the same protection and assistance to thousands more in refugee-like situations.

Our role in selecting refugees abroad is an extremely important one that is perhaps too easily forgotten. For example, there are upwards of 15 million refugees in camps throughout the world. Selecting refugees from these camps is part of an obligation we have undertaken to relieve the burden on countries of first asylum, countries which are struggling to meet the needs of their own people. Very often these refugees have spent years in camps and have no hope of returning to their own countries or of being resettled locally. They are offered resettlement in Canada. It is agreed throughout the international community that although initially a refugee's most pressing need is safe haven, the ideal long-term solution is repatriation or local integration. Third country settlement away from a familiar culture, language, or landscape is the final, least preferred option. Resettlement is for the refugee who has no other choice.

Last year, and this year, the Government will sponsor and resettle 12,000 convention refugees who have applied at our embassies overseas, and who have been taken from camps. Some are interviewed in and brought out of jails, some are rescued at sea. There are also thousands of refugees brought here by groups or organizations acting as private sponsors.

The private sponsorship program has been operating since 1978. It allows all Canadians to become involved over and above what the Government is able to do. In fact, there is no limit on the number of refugees that can be brought into Canada in this manner. While the 1987 report on immigration levels estimates that there will be 5,000 privately sponsored refugees, this is not a ceiling. Many more could be admitted if the situation demanded it, and if Canadians were able to respond in kind. This becomes evident when we look at Canada's response to the Indo-Chinese boat people crisis in 1979 and 1980. The co-operation of private citizens and the federal Government saw Canada open its doors to some 60,000 Indo-Chinese refugees.

Our refugee selection program is so generous that we extend our protection to many who, strictly speaking, are not convention refugees, but who are in situations to which we feel we should respond. This is done in two ways; through the selection of people from designated countries that are undergoing strife or upheaval, and through the selection of those who warrant special humanitarian consideration.

Both of these programs offer protection to the Indo-Chinese and Eastern Europeans through resettlement. They also supplement our other refugee selection programs and assist political prisoners, oppressed persons, self-exiles, and victims of disasters throughout the world. This year our humanitarian measures program allows up to 8,000 people to be admitted. That is over and above the 12,000 government sponsored refugees, those in the designated classes, and those privately sponsored.

We must remember that, to a large extent, it is through our overseas program that we best serve the world refugee problem. At the same time as continuing to express our commitment to refugees, we must balance our response to international developments, large-scale population movements, our international obligations, and the principles of fairness and justice. To this end Canada is working hard in many international forums to help alleviate the political, economic, and social problems which beset so many refugee producing countries.

We also work hard and in close co-operation with dozens of non-governmental organizations across the country to see that government and privately sponsored refugees, and many new immigrants as well, settle as smoothly as possible into Canadian society. I am happy to say that together we have achieved much in this area. We will continue to move ahead.

A great part of our commitment is translated into programs to ensure successful integration. Some of them start even before many refugees arrive in Canada. For instance, the revolving transportation loans fund of $90 million is used to cover transportation costs for eligible immigrants and refugees. We would like to note that loans to convention refugees and designated class applicants are interest free.

Once in Canada many refugees need our help to get their new life off to a solid start. If this is the case, the Adjustment Assistance Program helps ensure that these government sponsored newcomers have enough income to meet their basic needs. Funds available for this program total $49 million for the fiscal year 1987-88.

I would now like to mention several programs which provide ample proof of the positive and very flexible nature of the co-operation between the federal Government and NGOs. I am sure every Member of the House would agree that this close co-operation can be held up as a model of its kind.

The Immigrant Settlement and Adaption Program has been developed to aid immigrant and refugee aid organizations in providing a wide range of services to the community. Through contracts with the federal Government, these activities include reception and referral services, interpretation, counselling, orientation, and general information.

This partnership has produced a nation-wide network of groups that ensure that newcomers, unfamiliar with certain facets of Canadian life, do not fall through the cracks and, may I add, they do their jobs in a highly competitive and professional manner. Funding for ISAP has grown 60 per cent in the past 2.5 years, and this fiscal year it totals almost $5 million.

As well we have set up programs such as the Host Refugee Program which is carried out jointly with community groups. Through it, government sponsored refugees have access to another source of information and, more importantly, support. Starting with an initial three pilot projects in 1985, host projects have sprung up across Canada, providing an additional safety net for those needing special attention which may not have been available before.

Briefly, then, these are the major pillars of our settlement program. We will continue to innovate, to develop, and to mould our programs as the need evolves. We are committed, as the House well knows, to reaching out to refugees in real need, to rescuing those fleeing persecution, and to responding to crises as they occur.

The more than 25,000 people coming to Canada under our humanitarian programs this year are living witnesses to an ideal which Canada will never and can never abandon. However, as the Minister of Employment and Immigration has stated time and time again, the existing system was never designed to deal with the growing number of claims or with the large number of false claims to refugee status. It is bogged down and can no longer respond effectively to genuine refugees in need of Canada's protection.

As the Hon. Member for Laurier (Mr. Berger) stated during a recent foray, as reported in The Globe and Mail, "the length of the process acts as a magnet for those who are not convention refugees".

The long-term solution as embroiled in Bill C-55 will give us the tools to deal with the circumstances which Canada faces now and in the future. However, we have to make changes to the existing legislation to enable us to mobilize our resources immediately and until Bill C-55 comes into place.

Clearly the deterrent and detention legislation holds the immediate answers. Bill C-84 is based on the principle of justice while achieving the balance of speed and due process which will make for a fair yet effective refugee determination process.

With the Bill and with the will of the House we have the means to act immediately, to put a halt to the most flagrant abuses of our refugee policies, and to make a start at putting our affairs in order so that we may resume our role as a champion for justice and a protector of the persecuted.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that our domestic refugee determination system is only one of several programs and initiatives which we undertake on behalf of refugees. It is only one aspect of a much larger and wider spread commitment to refugees which is and will continue to be enshrined in our legislation.

Through the rapid passage of Bill C-84, we will be taking the steps necessary to put an immediate end to the flagrant abuses of our laws and to the obstruction of our refugee program, an obstruction that keeps those truly in need from the protection they deserve.

In so doing we will send a strong message to our constituents and to the world that Canada is a country which cares about human dignity, about human safety, and about doing whatever is within our power to prevent exploitation and to ensure protection from persecution. We will also be saying that Canada is a sovereign nation; that we will protect our borders, our humanitarian values and traditions as embodied in our immigration and refugee systems; and that we will safeguard the security of our country.

Let us work together, pass Bill C-55, and therefore take the course of action needed to serve our refugee determination over the long term. Let us also consider the deterrent and detention legislation which is before us. Let us pass both Bills without delay so that the Government may deal immediately and decisively with the events at hand.

Mr. McCurdy: Madam Speaker, if I heard the Hon. Member correctly, I think he made a very prescient misstatement when he described the refugee determination process as being embroiled in Bill C-55. Indeed, what I think we have here is an issue which has become embroiled because of Bill C-55.

The Hon. Member also indicated his respect and admiration for the work of the NGOs and for the co-operation between his Government and the NGOs involved in the refugee movement. How is it possible for the Hon. Member to have spoken of the NGOs in such a glowing fashion, attributing to them, deservedly, good work in the area with which Bill C-55 has to deal and yet, on the other hand, have such a unanimous appraisal of Bill C-55 as bad in many respects and as denying what he indicated was important to him, that is, fair treatment of refugees in need? I believe that I am quoting him correctly.

Furthermore, he said that he wanted Bill C-55 approved quickly. My question to him is a very simple one. If the NGOs have been responsible for such honourable work, presumably the honourable work was based upon knowledge and experience. Would it not make sense to make Bill C-55, this oh so perfect Bill, more perfect by consulting those who are familiar with the problem, by responding to the concerns of the NGOs of which he spoke so glowingly, and by responding to the concerns of the United Nations' High Commissioner for Refugees in respect of Bill C-55 and these areas in which it denies refugees the fair treatment he says they should be accorded? Would it not make sense to the Hon. Member if, in the review of Bills C-84 and C-55, instead of manning the legislative committees with those who are ignorant of the process, they were manned with Members from the government side who have gained from long experience some familiarity with the issue? Would that not be more consistent with the utterances of this Hon. Member who is, it is clear, so devoted to fairness for true refugees?

• (1530)

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy) has had the opportunity to be in his riding and talk to his constituents. I wonder if he has spoken to those individuals who are trying to operate within today's system. Does he know the frustrations they are experiencing because of illegal immigrants?

Perhaps one of the ways I could describe this would be to say—

Mr. McCurdy: I wonder if the Hon. Member could answer the questions asked of him.

Mr. MacDougall: Perhaps the Hon. Member would give me the opportunity to speak. I did not interrupt when he was asking his questions. May I have the same opportunity?

Mr. McCurdy: Not to ask me questions but to answer.

Mr. MacDougall: Some of my constituents have compared the situation to lining up to see a show when all of a sudden someone from the back of the line butts in in front of you. They want to know if that is fair. That is really the situation with which we are dealing.

The NGOs are doing an excellent job, but this new legislation will allow them to do an even better job.

Mr. McCurdy: Just try to answer the question. Just give it a shot.

Mr. MacDougall: Again, I suppose it is hard for a member of the NDP to listen to common sense.

Mr. McCurdy: No, we prefer to have answers to questions.

Mr. MacDougall: If the Hon. Member had listened to his constituents, this legislation would have been passed already. I am sorry, I suppose he does not listen to his constituents.

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I listened attentively to the speech of the Hon. Member and I was surprised when he said that we should pass these two Bills without debate. We have been debating these Bills for four days and prior to that we debated one of them for one day on June 18. Indeed, I hope that we do pass the Bill, but with proper scrutiny from both sides of the House so Canadians will have a chance to know what the Bills contain.

There are some good things in Bill C-55 but there are also some major faults which must be examined in committee and, if possible, improved. The Minister himself admits that he would be receptive to certain amendments which would not change the substance or the objective of the Bill but would make it more acceptable. That is what we are working on right now.

The Hon. Member spoke highly of NGOs. I take it he knows about Amnesty International, a credible worldwide organization. That organization wrote to all Members of Parliament, and I take it the Hon. Member received a copy of that letter as well.

In that letter, Amnesty International raises some very serious points about the question of the safe third country. Reading from page 2 of that letter, Amnesty International says the following:

> There are several aspects of the "safe third country" which cause Amnesty International concern. First and foremost is the fact that the list of "safe third countries" will be prescribed by Cabinet. As a result, Canada's refugee determination process shall for the first time be politicized. In the past, Cabinet has been reluctant to impose visa requirements on nationals of certain countries because of historical, economic and political considerations. There is every reason to believe that these same factors will be taken into account when determinations of a safe country are made.
> For example, one wonders how easy it will be for our government to deem the United States as unsafe for Guatemalan and Salvadoran claimants, in spite of the high percentage of refugee claimants from those countries deported by the United States.

The Hon. Member knows the problem. I am asking him how to solve it. How do we draw up a list of safe countries? Does he have any advice on how to devise a safe third country list?

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). Yes, we have discussed the Bill in the House for four days and for three hours prior to that and I think his recommendation to send the Bill to committee is a good one. Questions such as the one he has just asked can certainly be discussed in committee. The sooner we get the Bill out of the House, the quicker it may go to committee and the quicker it will return to the House.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I would like to compliment my hon. friend on his remarks and I would like to ask him a question. Hon. Members will know that at the present time, we are debating an amendment put by the Liberal Party, supported by members of the NDP, providing that this Bill shall not be discussed for six months. In other words, it is the position of the Official Opposition, supported by the NDP, that the Bill should not even be discussed by Parliament until sometime in 1988.

How would the Hon. Member's constituents feel about that suggestion? How would they feel if Parliament shut down, went home and sat on its hands for six months? Does he feel that would be acceptable to his constituents?

Mr. MacDougall: Madam Speaker, I would have to say that the voices from the riding of Timiskaming are very loud and clear. They are saying: "Recall Parliament, deal with the two pieces of legislation and please don't come home until they have been dealt with in the proper manner".

Mr. Gauthier: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The government Member just said that we should not discuss this Bill. The motion before the House is that the Bill not be read at this time but that it be read six months hence. The Government had told us that it wanted to look at this Bill in the fall, so I do not see what subterfuge is involved in this repetitive—

Mr. Lewis: I don't see your point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: The point of order is that it is repetitive on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary to rise after every speaker and bore us with these half-truths.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): As the Hon. Member does know, that was not a point of order.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, it is with a sense of dismay and almost shame that I find myself having to address in the Canadian House of Commons a piece of legislation which runs so directly counter to and which so subverts the record of humanitarian concern, caring and openness with which this country has been associated in the past.

One of the events in my life I recall most clearly is flying from England to East Africa in 1972 and stopping at the Cairo airport. I am not certain how many Hon. Members are aware of what the Cairo airport is like. It is not exactly a haven of peace. It is a hodge-podge of tremendous uncertainty and turbulence. In short, it is not a very pleasant place to be in in the middle of the night. Yet, because of transportation schedules, we had to stop there for at least three or four hours.

In the area in which we were waiting out this difficult period there was a throng of perhaps 150 or 200 Ugandan Asians. They were sitting there with looks on their faces which I can only describe as reflecting the deepest possible relief anyone could conceive of. These people had faced the all too real possibility of death or brutal torture at the hands of soldiers of the Amin regime. Yet they had been accepted by Canada as refugees. A new life for them was now possible. They had to leave behind friends and virtually all of their possessions, but they were escaping that regime and finding refuge in Canada. That is what our refugee policy has been about in the past. Our policy has been to accept thousands of Czech refugees in 1968, thousands of Hungarian refugees in 1956, and tens of thousands of Vietnamese boat people. All those people faced brutal conditions had they stayed at home, so they escaped and ultimately came to Canada.

It is possible that we could think of all this as simple humanitarianism on the part of Canada. We have been good-hearted in the past, but things have changed under the Conservative Government. Let me suggest, however, that there is a different perspective which needs to be understood. I venture to suggest that virtually every Member of Parliament who has canvassed his or her constituency has been struck by this, especially if that constituency is in one of the metropolitan areas of this country. If those Members are like me, they have seen these refugees become the most constructive, productive and caring citizens we could possibly have hoped for. We are not talking about some kind of good-hearted gesture of charity alone, although that should be enough. We are talking about the fact that people who have come to our country as refugees have made tremendous economic contributions to Canada.

In the City of Ottawa, which took in many of the Vietnamese boat people, we can ask ourselves, how many of them are a drag on our social system? How many do you find on welfare? How many do you find living off community resources instead of contributing? The answer is, very, very few.

Speaking as an economist, I have to say that most immigrants, particularly those who have come here as refugees, have made tremendous contributions which are illustrated by some very real facts. One such fact is that immigrants have significantly lower levels of unemployment than natural-born Canadians. Another fact is that the general level of income for immigrants is higher than that of those who were born here. After all, these people had to make a tremendous effort with great courage in order to get themselves and their families here. It is not surprising to see them making a tremendous contribution.

In my own constituency I have immigrants from virtually every part of the world. Some have come here as refugees, some as ordinary immigrants. Their economic contribution alone has been tremendous. Yet we seem to have lost sight of that in this Draconian, indeed vicious legislation which the Government has brought forward.

It is not just I and my Party who talk about the viciousness of this legislation. This is something on which there is unanimity among the churches of the country, something which is surely a rare phenomenon. I can quote to you some of the material which has been sent by those church groups. For instance, a telex was sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from virtually every church in this country; the Anglican Church, the Baptist Federation, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Council of Christian Reform Churches in Canada, the Mennonite Central Committee, the Presbyterian Church of Canada, the Religious Society of Friends, the Salvation Army, the United Church of Canada, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, and the Canadian Religious Conference of Ontario.

In this telex, dealing specifically with this piece of legislation, they plead for a refugee determination procedure that is fair as well as fast. They urge the Prime Minister and the Government to replace Bill C-55 with different legislation which provides "access for all claimants to a full, fair and independent hearing" and to "a meaningful appeal".

That is why we suggest that this Bill should be hoisted for six months. We think that surely in the next period of time men and women of good will, many of whom are on the government benches, will see to it that new legislation is brought before the House of Commons which provides not the kind of viciousness, the kind of arbitrary constructs which exist in this piece of legislation, but instead provide that fast and fair appeal system which people across the country are absolutely convinced is essential.

There have been various suggestions about what our constituents think. I believe that right across the country, in my constituency as well as in every other constituency of Canada, there is above all a commitment to fairness. Fairness cannot survive the arbitrary system which will meet potential refugees under this particular Bill, an arbitrary system which gives them no independent access to their own counsel, no capacity to prepare a case and no capacity to appeal if they fall into one of number of categories which leaves them outside of the restricted and privileged few which Canada will accept in the future.

That, Madam Speaker, is not the kind of country that I want Canada to become. We cannot permit that kind of arbitrary, controlled, almost fascist sort of approach to hold sway in this country. If we do permit it to start, its impact will be insidious. Its impact will grow. We will become used to this kind of arbitrariness with respect to not only people arriving as potential immigrants but with respect to how Canadians themselves are treated. That is the danger as we head down this path.

That is why I hope that the Government itself will see fit to withdraw this piece of legislation, to vote in favour of the Liberal amendment which gives it a six-month hoist, and to bring back, not nothing, not the existing system, but the very sensible, very straightforward, quite fair and quite open system which has been recommended by church groups, which has been recommended by Rabbi Plaut in his detailed study of this question, which has been recommended again and again by individuals who have studied this issue with some care.

Finally, Madam Speaker, I find it especially ironic that the Government has called back the House of Commons to deal with 174 new arrivals on the East Coast of Canada, 174 arrivals in the context of a Government that has not even been able to meet its own targets for immigration in the past year. Its own targets for immigration in 1986 were from 105,000 to 115,000 and it could not even hit 100,000.

It is not as though we are talking about a great inundation of people from outside of Canada. We are talking about what used to be a tremendous humanitarian tradition in this country. We are talking about, I hope, a tremendous humanitarian future which can only be achieved if the Government starts to listen—if it starts to listen to church groups, those who have studied the legislation in detail, those who have worked as lawyers with refugee groups, and opposition Parties in the House of Commons.

I hope that the Government will listen. It has listened in the past. I do not think it is too late for it to start now. However, I believe that for the sake of the country it is important that the listening begin very soon.

Mr. Crofton: Madam Speaker, I listened with interest to the comments of the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr.

Langdon). I have served on committee with that Member in the past and he has had some very good observations to make from time to time. However, his representations today leave me very puzzled.

At the outset I would like to make a comment on his general remarks on refugees. There was an inference in his comments that Members on this side of the House are opposed to refugees. I deny that completely and absolutely. This country was largely built by refugees over many decades, whether economic refugees from the potato famine of Ireland, refugees from the pogroms of central Europe, the boat people, refugees from Europe after World War II, or from the uprisings in Czechoslovakia or Hungary. Those people came to Canada and were welcomed. I am not aware of one Member on this side of the House who in any way is opposed to refugees coming to Canada. It is a part of our country and our tradition. I invite the Member to withdraw the implication that we on this side of the House were opposed because it is totally without foundation.

• (1600)

My second observation concerns meaningful debate on what to do with the refugees who are coming to our shores at this time. We are supposed to be debating a six month hoist this afternoon. Members opposite do not have any kind of sinecure or lock on fairness. We are as anxious to see a fair and responsible immigration policy put in place. But it is quite obvious at this juncture that the immigration policy that is being administered is not fair because queue jumpers are able to come into this country and clog the system to the point where respect for our whole immigration policy is put in jeopardy.

We are attempting, through this special recall of Parliament, to deal meaningfully with how to evolve a fair, enforceable, reasonable and practical solution. Members opposite do not seem to be interested in that. I invite the Hon. Member to explain how he expects to get fairness if he is not prepared to discuss the issue.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, frankly, I believe that government Members live in a dream world in which somehow their ears are closed to informed opinion with respect to an issue like this.

Rabbi Gunther Plaut, a person who has studied this issue in tremendous detail, says that we are trying perhaps to build a Berlin wall, and that instead of trying to tailor refugee procedures to control abusers we ought properly to concentrate on refugees and make the procedure fair and quick.

Amnesty International, which is hardly a partisan body, calls on the Government to withdraw the Bill. It calls the Bill regrettable and says that it blocks universal access to refugees. These opinions tell me that in fact this Bill has precisely those effects. It reduces significantly the capacity of refugees to seek a fair hearing in this country. They should not come to this country and automatically get in, but should get a fair hearing. That is what is so vicious and arbitrary about this Bill.

As I suggested in my speech, there is an alternative. That is why I suggested that doing away with the present Bill for six months would serve the country very well.

The Council of Churches, drawing on the work of people like Gunther Plaut, has come up with what it sees as a five-stage process which would be much faster than the present system for determining refugees, at least as fast as the process will be in this legislation for those small number of refugees who get past the gate posts. If we take their advice and pursue this five-stage process, it makes it possible to do something which is fair in terms of quickness, because people cannot be left waiting as the previous legislation has done. It also would provide fairness in the sense of giving people the right to be free of arbitrary control and allowing them to make their case appropriately and have it judged and appealed with the fairness to which this country has become accustomed.

Mr. Keeper: Madam Speaker, I have a question for my colleague. I want to refer to a letter from an ordinary citizen in Winnipeg. Mrs. Anna Rondinella writes about the fact that the Government has brought in legislation to amend the refugee determination process. While she is in favour of action in that area, she also points out that it is not enough to amend the refugee determination process. She would like to see at the same time an amendment to the definition of family unification so that brothers and sisters are classed as close family and qualify for family unification, especially for a person like herself who has no other family and would like to bring at least one member of her family here.

She goes on to make an appeal to the Government to be more generous in the area of family unification. She says that it is not enough for the Government to appeal to immigrant communities by trying to say that it is not fair for people to sneak in under the refugee determination process, but that it is necessary for the Government to make some changes in policies that affect family reunification. Does my colleague agree with her request that the family reunification policy be more generous so that immigrants in this country can bring their family members here, rather than have the Government simply bash refugees?

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, there is an emergency with respect to immigrants in this country. That emergency has hit each of us who has dealt with constituency cases over the life of this Parliament. However, that emergency has nothing to do with refugees. It is that the Government has failed to move despite many recommendations to make it easier for people to come to this country to join their families. I found incredible slowness in the number of cases I have personally taken forward in an attempt to get action. It is like something out of Kafka, dealing with a bureaucracy that believes that 12 months is a short time. It is ridiculous.

That is the emergency with which the Government should be dealing, not with the humanitarian concerns the country has always had with respect to refugees. To suggest that 174 people arriving in Nova Scotia has anything to do with making it harder for us to move on family reunification is simply bogus. It is simply not true.

[Translation]

Mr. Marc Ferland (Portneuf): Madam Speaker, the question we are dealing with today is complex. We are not talking about ideas or abstract concepts but about human lives.

Bill C-55 has to do with the critical situation of those who need Canada's protection. It so happens that the measure takes into account our own Canadian standards with respect to refugee protection.

Statistics on the number of homeless refugees throughout the world are practically endless, but statistics are little more than mere figures. A refugee is a human being whose life may be endangered. Madam Speaker, it is imperative that we keep this fact in mind. Canadians are fully aware of the human aspect of this problem. A recent poll indicates that three out of four Canadians feel that people fleeing from persecution must be protected.

Still the Government is convinced that it is becoming ever more important to keep Canadians fully informed with respect to refugees and matters related to immigration. This is particularly true if Canada is to play an adequate role on the international scene with a view to finding solutions to the refugee situation.

This is why I should like to comment on the need to keep people well informed and fully aware of what is happening. This approach can only stem from a long-term vision of Canadian programs concerning immigration and refugees.

This Government has already developed a longer term vision which looks upon these programs as means to reinforce national unity and contribute to a greater economic prosperity, while meeting its humanitarian objectives.

Following the 1984, fall election, the Government reviewed its immigration policy together with the provinces, some non-governmental organizations, university professors and other interested parties. Following this review, it came to the conclusion that it was desirable to increase the immigration levels in a moderate and controlled fashion. This increase was made to the benefit of refugees who were languishing in camps abroad.

The Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration has had the opportunity to express its views on the issue. Other countries have reduced the number of refugees they will accept. Canada, for one, has kept its doors wide open and has established no ceiling as to the number of refugees it will help resettle. Moreover, this year we are contemplating accepting 12,000 refugees sponsored by the Government, and at least 5,000 more sponsored by private organizations and groups.

What exactly is a refugee? No public information and awareness program could follow its course without an answer to this basic question. Canada accepts the definition of refugee as established by the United Nations Convention. In short, a refugee is a person who happens to be outside his country and unable to return to it because he has a well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership of a particular social group.

Our vision of the increasing importance of immigration for the future development of Canada is based on a series of factors. First, the economic factor: Immigrants create more jobs than they remove from the Canadian economy. They support economic growth and development by contributing to capital formation, increasing the demand for Canadian goods and services, bringing to the labour market their drive and much sought after expertise, and contributing to the tax revenues of all levels of Government. Socially, immigrants contribute to the ongoing development and diversification of the Canadian multicultural mosaic by which all our Canadian regions are socially and culturally enriched. That 70 per cent of immigrants belong to the category of family members underlines the emphasis given by Canada to the reunification of families by welcoming members who had remained abroad.

As far as demography is concerned, increased immigration levels will enable us to prevent the decline in the Canadian population projected for the end of the 20th century and the beginning of the 21st century. There are a number of misconceptions that will be dispelled by informing the people. For instance, some people believe that when refugees arrive they steal the place away from legitimate immigrants. That is not the case, Madam Speaker. As Carol Goar pointed out in the Toronto Star, "This is tantamount to suggesting that people coming to hospital emergency take the places of people waiting for elective surgery".

Our action in support of refugees from across the world has been recognized by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, who awarded the Nansen Medal to the Canadian people. Further, Canada plays an important role in permanent discussions of the High Commission for Refugees and OECD on how to implement the broad international action approaches to the regulation of the movement of some 70 to 80 million migrants in the world.

As I said earlier, Madam Speaker, our doors remain open to refugees. I would like to point out that they also remain open to immigrants.

The 1987 level planning range is 115,000 to 125,000, much more than the low level to which the Liberal Government had let the movement decline. The Government recently held consultations with provinces, non-government organizations, universities and other parties on the direction to be given to the Immigration Program for the rest of the decade. It is evident from these consultations that we will likely need higher levels of immigration over the next decade to meet our own needs and to honour our international obligations. Departments concerned are presently evaluating the social and economic impacts of immigration on Canada while projected immigration levels for the 1990's are being established.

Madam Speaker, the Government of which I am a part is convinced that immigration represents an important factor in the economic and social well-being of Canada, one which has allowed us to take a leadership role in finding solutions at the international level to the problem of refugees and immigrants seeking assistance on humanitarian grounds.

It has taken some time to elaborate a long term perspective and this is partly due to the narrow view of the future which characterized the undertakings of the former liberal administration. We are now focussing on more effective means to make Canadians aware of the facts about immigration and the advantages which can result. In this regard of course, we give special consideration to the noteworthy efforts of non-governmental organizations and to their information and public awareness programs.

Our consultation process with regard to immigration levels is among the most open and detailed in the world. It provides a better understanding of the impact of issues which have a bearing on immigration and refugees.

At the present time, Madam Speaker, the Government is carrying out consultations on immigration levels with non-governmental organizations which involve 150 national organizations, 500 regional organizations and 40 university organizations, as well as with representatives of the provinces and the territories. During the last series of national and regional consultations we had no less than 23 meetings on administrative matters pertaining to immigration levels for 1988, 1989 and 1990.

Recently, in Toronto, we had a two-day meeting with national ethnocultural organizations to discuss questions concerning immigration and refugees. That meeting, the first since the beginning of the 1980s, reflects the Government commitment to a greater involvement of ethnic communities in the determination of immigration levels.

A thorough consultation process is the first element of an effective information program on immigration matters. The Employment and Immigration Commission has produced a series of free consultation reports on our programs and policies. At a time when we are almost always trying to recover costs, Employment and Immigration Canada continues to make documents available free of charge, to promote exchange of information. These documents are in addition to a wide range of free booklets already available.

Passage of Bill C-55 will naturally require that new documents be prepared to inform claimants, counsels, parliamentarians and the general public of the new process. An important element of a well-conceived information program is a research program to make the population aware of some of the key policies and issues actively discussed regarding the immigration program.

Employment and Immigration Canada has undertaken to prepare a series of research documents to that end. Up to now we have published free booklets on aging of the population and immigration and on the impact of immigration on employment. Others to be published will deal with immigration of children and the relationship betweem immigration and migration.

In addition to these studies, Employment and Immigration Canada has a program of technical research in various areas, such as the settlement of immigrants and refugees, immigration and the economy, control policies and operations.

Two advisory committees made up of academics were created last spring to contribute to communications, research and initiatives. One will examine demographic factors, and the other the social and economic aspects of immigration.

Madam Speaker, to develop an extended information program, there have to be extensive consultations and detailed research. Employment and Immigration Canada is now looking at ways to publicize this program in Canada. The methods now being used or considered include the following:

Creating posters and information modules on immigration and demographic evolutions;

Organizing workshops on immigration for certain key groups, such as Members of Parliament, media representatives and teachers;

Writing articles to explain the new policy and program changes;

And I could quote many others.

Other initiatives to improve information on this program will be undertaken before the end of this year. The Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) has recently underlined the high priority which will be given to such initiatives. I am convinced that we can count on the support of our honourable collegues in this regard.

An information program naturally requires an exchange between the one who gives and the one who receives the message. These last few months, Canadians have become aware of the difficult decision which must be made in relation with immigration and refugee programs. The Government now intends to emphasize the major contribution of immigrants on the social, humanitarian, economic and demographic levels.

Before closing, I would like to go over certain facts about Bill C-55.

Last Tuesday, August 11, Canadians were told once again and more firmly about the clear intention of the Government to implement quickly mechanisms to counter abuses related with the refugee determination process and to enable the Government to protect bona fide refugees.

The measures which the Government is planning to take are aimed at those people who show up at our borders or airports without papers or with false documents, as well as the smugglers who, through their fraudulent actions, are helping the entry into Canada of illegal aliens.

Under Bill C-55, the carriers will have to make sure that the people they are bringing to Canada are duly in possession of the required documents, failing which they could be liable to a heavy fine or a long prison term.

The Government is determined to have this Bill adopted. The Canadian public will have to strike a just balance between the need for compassion and understanding on the one hand and irresponsibility on the other. If we do not stop soon the abuse of our refugee status determination process, Canada's reputation as a country with integrity will be jeopardized. We will become the laughing-stock of a great many nations.

The Government is determined to defend its borders, but it will not allow regrettable incidents to become deplorable precedents and have its reputation as a country which accepts true refugees tarnished.

Many people have come forward to explain the Government's intentions. These intentions should not be questioned. I therefore ask all Hon. Members to remove all obstacles and finally put an end to a sorry state of affairs which we should not tolerate any longer.

Canadians will be able to share the Government's vision about its immigration policy and will be able to better support and understand its objectives concerning immigration and refugees.

Madam Speaker, many polls have been carried out. I was puzzled by one of them which was carried out throughout Canada and where the following question was asked: Do you agree that people jumping the line, those who are coming illegally into Canada should have the same protections under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms as all other Canadians?

And surprisingly, and this is for my friends in the New Democratic Party, 80 per cent of those who say they would support a NDP Government are responding: No, we do not agree.

I will say to my dear friends in the New Democratic Party what it means: it means that your members, your "supporters", are people who agree with the efforts made by this Government to try to protect real refugees who are coming into Canada, but also to put in place a legislation that will allow us to "give the boot", as your leader, Mr. Ed Broadbent, said so eloquently on February 11, 1987, to give them the boot if we find that they are not bona fide refugees. He was answering a question put by Mr. Webster during a BCTV program. Therefore, if the NDP Leader agrees with our position, why do members of the New Democratic Party, under the leadership of Mr. Broadbent, not agree with Bill C-55 which is supported by all Canadians?

• (1620)

[English]

Mr. Orlikow: Madam Speaker, I am puzzled by the speech made by the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) who just completed his remarks. On the one hand he tells us that the Government and the Department of Employment and Immigration are holding lengthy, detailed and careful consultations with people from one end of the country to the other on what should be our policy with regard to immigration and refugees. On the other hand, while supposedly holding these consultations, the Government brought in two Bills. It brought in those Bills before it could hear from the people with whom the Hon. Member says the Government is consulting. I find that hard to understand and I would like the Hon. Member to explain.

I would also like the Hon. Member to explain why the Bills we have contain so few of the recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which held a large number of meetings and which made a unanimous report. This committee is a committee on which a majority of members, because of the composition of the House, are members of the Conservative Party.

Why does the Hon. Member urge us to ignore the opposition expressed to these two Bills by, among other organizations, the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, which represents almost all of the new immigrant groups which have come to Canada in recent years, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Labour Congress, Amnesty International, and virtually every one of the major churches in the country? All of these groups have expressed their very strong opposition to the major provisions of these two Bills while accepting the idea that we need to have a system which is humane, fair and which does not allow people to jump to the head of the line in front of many who have waited for years to have their applications dealt with.

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, I said that Employment and Immigration Canada had indeed consulted the Canadian people since last spring.

But for the New Democrats, consultation is forever. When you consult people, it does not take 14 months to know what they think about a bill. We do not need to talk things over. But I think that for New Democrats, it has become a tradition. They like talking, but they do not react or act very often. They would rather have lots of people lose their time. We went through a consultation process. It is going on and will continue in the future. The Bill before us is a result of that consultation.

You said that certain agencies were opposed to the measures advocated in Bill C-55. You must remember as well that last February if my memory serves me right—indeed this position was supported by some journalists—people were saying that the temporary measures which we as the Government had taken were unacceptable. It was impossible,

But I see today that Mr. Vennat in La Presse is suggesting that we ought to use those methods. They are good methods now, but were not so at that time.

Apparently the Opposition is reacting much in the same way today. In February we were using harsh methods, but today we ought to get back to the methods used in February and say they are the best available. The ones we advocate in Bill C-55 are no good.

I have yet to see a measure tabled by this Government in the House have the good fortune of being agreeable for even a fraction of a second to the Opposition. Madam Speaker, instead of suggesting ways to improve this Bill, the Opposition is engaged in outright boycott. They are saying: The Bill is no good. They fail to propose anything better.

Mr. Cassidy: That's not true.

Mr. Ferland: You have been saying that for months and years on end, but I have yet to see any results. And you don't seem to listen very often to your constituents. If you listened more often . . .

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order. The Chair would appreciate it if Hon. Members would refrain from getting involved in personal exchanges and address their comments to the Chair. The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) may proceed.

Mr. Ferland: Thank you, Madam Speaker. I apologize. Of course, I should have told my colleague opposite through you that he was wrong and had no respect for the grassroots militants of his own Party of which 80 per cent support the action of the present Government, a Conservative Government. Madam Speaker, he should listen more carefully to what Canadians are telling him, and not pay attention to three or four people. The large majority of Canadians are worried, and Bill C-55 aims at protecting true refugees and punishing those who violate Canadian laws and exploit human misery.

Mr. Cassidy: Madam Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) for his information that the New Democratic Party advocated a system for a much more efficient treatment of men and women who wish to claim refugee status in Canada, that other groups, including the Canadian Council of Churches, made very constructive suggestions in that regard, and that the Standing Committee on Employment and Immigration submitted a unanimous report in November, 1985, almost two years ago, for the reform of the situation everybody said was needed. Now, the Hon. Member is saying that the consultation should not last 14 months, but we just wonder how the Government could wait as much as two years to accept the recommendations of this Standing Committee, instead of taking action and putting together a system which would ensure a more rapid treatment of these applications, a more efficient administration to ensure that the waiting list of some 20,000 refugees would not be as long as now.

The Hon. Member said that everybody agrees with the Government. Clearly, such is not the case, and nearly all the groups which commented on Bill C-84 were against it.

Madam Speaker, at issue is not whether one is for or against measures to punish the smugglers of false refugees. The New Democratic Party answers yes. At issue is the way to do it. And the Bills before us now are unacceptable, which does not mean that we, of the New Democratic Party, are opposed to the necessary measures to ensure that those who want to smuggle false refugees are punished. That is not the point. The point here is the deprivation of true refugees of their right to seek haven here in Canada. That is what the Government is trying to do with this Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Portneuf may conclude.

Mr. Ferland: Madam Speaker, I should like to call my hon. friend's attention to an information document. I see that when the time comes for them to obtain information, the NDP people are not in a hurry. You have a document in the folder before you, my dear colleague, a document which deals with the situation in Canada, Sweden, West Germany, France, Demmark, Switzerland, The Netherlands, the United Kingdom and the United States. It compares Bill C-55 with the measures that exist in these other countries of the world which are considered as being very open. He would be in a position to see, Madam Speaker, my dear colleague from the New Democratic Party, that Canada is still far ahead of all those countries that claim leadership in the area of welcoming refugees, welcoming immigrants, family reunification and so forth.

But I would like through you, Madam Speaker, to remind my New Democratic colleague of statistics that do not lie—from 1978 to 1986, of 60,000 refugee claims, 6,376 only were officially recognized as such in Canada. It is my belief that Canadians are aware of those facts and appreciate that we must do something about it. When Canadians read, as hopefully the Hon. Member will do so, when they read the program as proposed in Bill C-55, they will realize that Canada is far ahead of all democratic countries in the world.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The period for questions and comments after the speech of the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) is now ended. So is the first eight-hour period of debate. Accordingly, speeches will now last 10 minutes. Debate. I recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone).

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I followed with interest the contribution made by the Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) and I feel that once again he emphasizes that Canada has an open door for immigrants and used to have an open door for refugees. Unfortunately, such is not the direction that has now been chosen by the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). This is a sham, and they are playing all kinds of tricks to keep confusing Canadians as to who is a legitimate refugee and who is an immigrant. I believe that as Minister of State for Immigration and Minister of Employment and Immigration, their job is to uphold the place of immigrants and the role they can play, and that refugees who become immigrants are welcome here. This is what they forgot to do and everyone is confused.

[English]

The lack of support for both the immigrant and the increase in family rejoining has become an unpleasant and unnecessary game plan on the part of the Minister of State for Immigration, and the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Instead of being clear, candid, and forthright and explaining that we are discussing two separate streams, there has been an incredible tendency to make the population in general feel that a person who is coming in as a bogus refugee is displacing the person who is an immigrant. That is false. The Government has gone to great length not to explain this to the general population.

There is a desire and need to improve the family reunification clauses that are in the present Immigration Act. The Equality for All report deposited in the House almost two years ago called for those changes, but nothing has happened. Now we see a refugee Bill that is restrictive. It has caused the United Nations people to request that we stop the type of abuse we are thinking of.

There is something wrong when traditionally Canadians have such a proud record. We were awarded the Nansen Medal for what we have done. We have brought into this country people who have enriched the tissue, the fabric, the expression, and quality of life for all Canadians from the economic and the social perspectives. Representatives from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Uganda, Cyprus, Vietnam, Poland, Iran, El Salvador, Lebanon, Sri Lanka, and Guatemala live within the constituency of Mount Royal. I have spoken with them. In this regard, these people are not pleased with the performance of the Conservative Government. They are being made to feel uncomfortable as immigrants, as if they were asking for special favours because they want to have what is an extended family and their basic family considered. All they have received is words but no action.

• (1640)

Where there are refugees awaiting a determination of their status, from the Tamils all the way through to the people of the Caribbean Islands, et cetera, they are being destabilized, they are uncomfortable, and they have a sense of dislocation. Is it not enough that they have had to suffer the trauma of dislocation? If Hon. Members opposite think they can say, "Wait, I am going to run back for my American Express card, my papers, and my visa", when their lives are being threatened and when they are in danger, believe me, that is not what refugees do. They are refugees because they feel threatened and they are no longer able to live their lives in peace and harmony. Their surroundings are no longer places of peace and harmony or places where they can live properly.

We have the unhappy situation of uprooting and the trauma of dislocation for refugees, and we are saying to these same people, "Refugees, go home". Most of them would go home; if they felt they could, they would. This is what we tend to forget.

I should like to suggest that the Minister of State for Immigration ought to read from Isaiah and then translate it into French for the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard). I suggest that he recall the following:

> Woe to you! you who make unjust laws and publish burdensome decrees, depriving the poor of justice, robbing the weakest of my people of their rights.

International human rights indicate that Canada is a land of refuge for those in need. Your very Draconian, unfair, and inhuman approach to both immigrant streams—you promise but you do not deliver—and refugees whom you treat with disgrace will come to haunt each and every one of you, believe me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May I remind the Hon. Member that she should address her remarks through the Chair. The same rule applies on both sides of the House.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I thank you for that reminder. I suggest that there is a serious and real problem. That was addressed by the Robinson report, the Plaut report, and the standing committee report. How many more reports should there be? Maybe they should go back to school and learn to read; then they could follow these reports.

All those reports are in. They have had the suggestions and recommendations which they have totally ignored. They have followed their own little sweet path. I do not know who dreamt up the lines.

Perhaps it is better that they bring in the hoist, go out and talk to the constituency, hear what the NGOs, the churches and the synagogues have to say, and hear what the people who wrote the reports have to say. Did Rabbi Plaut find the response reasonable? Did he find that response acceptable? They can be assured that he did not.

What did Tom Clark, a worker for the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, have to say? He said:

> Instead of access there is a screen, instead of bringing Canada a notch ahead of European countries, the immigration minister has brought it down to their level. It's despicable.

What did Michael Schelew of Amnesty International have to say? He said:

> It's an about-face on Canada's humanitarian record, that may place people fleeing persecution in jeopardy.

Who is listening in the Conservative Party, for goodness' sake? Is it not about time that you listened to the population who elected you?

Some Hon. Members: We are.

Mrs. Finestone: Excuse me, Madam Speaker. I think government Members should take heed of what is being said.

A rather well known personality internationally, Elie Wiezel, winner of the Nobel Prize, said:

> I believe that a society can be measured and judged by its attitude towards strangers . . . I would hope that Canada would like to be measured according to these lofty rules. I say Canada should lead by example.

I do not think Canada's example should be how to pick a safe third country, how to have two people at the border determining one's future, how not to have access to the legal process, or how not to do anything in the best interest of helping a person who is in crying need to get to safe waters.

The weaknesses of Bill C-55 are many. They are opposed by the NGOs. Its shortcomings include the prescreening system, the safe third country concept, the refugee determination board, to which no one can get because it is surrounded by all kinds of blockages, the appeal system, and the precedent which Canada has set for other countries by perhaps encouraging them to consider similar action. Certainly turning a blind eye to the refugees of the world is one thing Canadians need not do in a country of wealth and space which can use good, healthy, determined people who are looking to start a new life, much as it is uncomfortable, and to run away from the place they knew as home.

Canada is large. It is wealthy. It is rich in human and material resources, but it is not without its blemishes.

I only hoped that all of us in the Chamber learned from our blemishes—the indigenous people of Canada and those who fled Nazi persecution. I have not forgotten the story of the St. Louis at the Port of Montreal or the shores of Canada where refugees went back and then went through extermination camps. If one person has to do that, I hope the Ministers and that caucus will give serious thought to why their consciences will not let them sleep.

We were not kind and considerate to Canadians of Japanese origin. We have done many things which have been wrong. However, I think over time we have become a more humane society and a more concerned society with a better appreciation of the multitude of cultures, languages, skin colours, and faces of people who have come to enrich the tapestry that is Canada today.

Let us not be narrow-minded and bigoted or respond to the basest of feelings expressed out there. Let us be sure that we give a fair hearing to the refugees who come to our shores.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Madam Speaker, the City of Winnipeg which I represent, for 100 years or more has been the gateway to western Canada for people coming to this country.

My own constituency, with the exception of several thousands of native people who live in it, consists of people who are themselves immigrants or whose parents or grandparents came to Canada as did my father some 80 years ago. The original immigrants who settled in my area came from Great Britain, Ukraine, Poland, Germany, and other eastern European countries. We have had an influx since World World II of people from Portugal, the Philippines, Italy, China, Hong Kong, Vietnam, Laos, Central American countries such as Nicaragua and El Salvador, and Caribbean countries such as Jamaica and Trinidad.

They are very interested in the kinds of policies which Canada adopts and implements with respect to immigrants who wish to come to this country and with respect to refugees.

More than half the people who come to see me when I am in my office have problems related to immigration. They are people who want to help members of their families, living in the countries from which they came, and come to Canada. Our rules and definition of who can be considered family are so restrictive that in nearly every case I must tell them that I am sorry but their relatives do not qualify for entry to Canada.

We are dealing with two Bills respecting immigration and refugees. They have been drafted in such a way as to make one believe that the Government has almost deliberately set out to ignore the recommendations made by a number of studies commissioned by the Government, or by the unanimous recommendations made by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

I think Hon. Members should note the speech made in the House several days ago by the Chairman of that committee and his criticism of the legislation that the Government brought forward.

The fact is that virtually every organization interested in these questions has expressed opposition to the provisions of these two Bills. I should like to name a few—the Canadian Ethnocultural Council, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Canadian Labour Congress, and Amnesty International. Thirteen of the largest church organizations in Canada sent a telex to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on June 1 of this year in which they expressed their very strong opposition to many clauses in these two Bills. Included among these churches are the Anglican Church, the Canadian Baptist Federation, the Canadian Council of Churches, the Council of Christian Reform Churches, the Mennonite Central Committee, the Presbyterian Church, the Salvation Army, the Quakers, the United Church, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, and the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees.

• (1650)

To indicate how strongly many people feel about this legislation, I want to tell Hon. Members that I was today in communication with people from Winnipeg and other parts of Manitoba who have worked to help facilitate the movement of refugees into Canada, representatives of the Anglican Church, the Roman Catholic Church and the Mennonite Church, and they told me that if this Bill is passed and the work they do is considered contrary to the law and they are charged, tried and sentenced, they are prepared to go to prison. They believe that the work they are doing to help refugees come to Canada is so right and so justified that they are prepared to pay the penalty they may have to face.

These are people who are not political. They are not wild-eyed radicals. These are people who have a firm commitment to seeing that justice is done.

What is wrong with this Bill? First, it is inaccessible. Instead of ensuring that all those arriving in Canada claiming to be refugees can have their claims heard, this legislation seeks ways to return them to other countries. This legislation has no provision for a meaningful appeal process. The initial screening can only be appealed from out of the country. There is no requirement that a written reason be given at this stage, thus making a legal appeal difficult. The second stage oral hearing can be appealed but only to the Federal Court and only on matters of law, not fact. We know what kind of legal costs that process would entail.

There is no provision in the Bill for humanitarian or compassionate cases as there is in the present legislation. Currently, about 12 per cent of cases that do not meet the technical definition are allowed to stay in the country by compassionate people and even cabinet Ministers. That will cease when this Bill is passed.

This Bill politicizes the refugee process by putting emphasis on whether or not the applicant stopped in a safe third country. Cabinet will decide what constitutes a safe third country. Inevitably, diplomatic and political pressures will intervene. The Minister has already been reluctant to deal with the case of the United States and Salvadoran refugees.

I want to point out that under the same kind of legislation that is being proposed here, the United States has already arrested, charged, tried and convicted church workers in Texas, Arizona and New Mexico. That is the kind of legislation this Government is proposing for Canada.

This Bill is unnecessarily harsh. Rabbi Gunther Plaut before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration suggested that what we need is fast, efficient and fair alternatives with widespread public support. We do not have that with this Bill.

This Bill attacks true refugees rather than zeroing in on those who try to abuse the system. If the Government were to bring in proposals designed to get tough with those who are trying to get around the system, the kind of people who have organized the boat expeditions and are ripping off refugees, the kind of people who make hundreds of thousands of dollars by arranging for these boat trips, we would support the legislation. We New Democrats will not support this legislation which uses an atomic bomb to kill a mosquito.

This Bill builds a Berlin wall around the country rather than promoting the humanitarianism for which Canada has been known. Furthermore, Bill C-55 harms the prospects of Canadian citizens and landed immigrants seeking to sponsor the immigration of family members from their countries of origin by reducing their effective right to appeal decisions on sponsorship.

Like every other Hon. Member from urban Canada, I have dealt with constituents who want to help relatives come to Canada but have been told by me that it is impossible because of the rules. We cannot support legislation like that. We are prepared to support any proposal the Government might make which would give us a fair, humanitarian, efficient and quick system for deciding legitimate applications, both for refugees and immigrants. That is something we do not have in the two Bills which are before us at the present time.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Madam Speaker, the legislative process works well if the Government in power recognizes the value of the advice given it by experts in the field. If it does not recognize the value of advice given it by churches, human rights groups and opposition Members, then it produces a Bill which does not deal properly and effectively with the requirements of the situation. That is exactly what is happening in the case of Bill C-55.

Canadians who are knowledgeable about the situation recognize in this Bill some travesties which, if put into effect, will do a great deal of harm not only to the people affected directly by them, including immigrants and refugees, but also to Canada's international reputation. We proudly accepted a prize for being the country that best dealt with the refugee situation. We accepted a prize for being the most generous, for opening our doors and accepting people who were less fortunate than us. We proudly accepted that award and, in the light of that acceptance, we should put in place a Bill which continues the recognition of that generosity. We should put in place the kind of structure which allowed Canada to be generous enough to win the award.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I apologize for interrupting the Hon. Member. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—PUBLIC BILLS

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, June 4, consideration of the motion of Mr. Nystrom that Bill C-221, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. George Henderson (Egmont): Madam Speaker, I want to make a few comments on Bill C-221. The purpose of the Bill is to provide parity prices to farmers based on a cost of production formula for wheat, oats and barley used for human consumption in Canada, and to establish voluntary marketing commissions for pork and beef.

We know the farmers of this country are having very serious problems. If it is not in one area, it is in some other area. We have heard over the last year or so the tremendous difficulties our western wheat farmers are having mainly because of world market conditions. U.S. farmers are being subsidized to the point of undercutting our farmers. EEC farmers are also heavily subsidized. We are, of course, all competing for the same markets. As well, we in this country have some very high production costs. While we are extremely productive, we do have some difficulties which are caused mainly by our geography in getting our products to market.

This Bill calls for a parity price within Canada related to the cost of production. There is no question that farmers need to have a return on their investment. That investment is immense even when compared to almost all other forms of business. Equipment and machinery is extremely expensive, not to mention the cost of land. We also have the additional problems of climatic conditions. Given that, there is no question that we in this House and in the provincial legislatures across the country should do everything we can in order to help our primary producers stay on the land and support their families and industry.

Agriculture, in one form or another, is the backbone of this country. Without it our country could not survive for very long. That is why we should be doing everything we can to help our farmers survive. In hard times we have to dig down into the coffers of Government occasionally in order to support the industry.

We are supporting not only the farmers, we are supporting every consumer. We often do not think of farmers as consumers but they are probably the greatest consumers we have. Their purchases of farm equipment and machinery create jobs, mainly in central Canada, and keep people at work. Farmers are great consumers. Not necessarily more than anyone else at the dinner table, but consumers of goods and services.

I only had time to go through this Bill quickly a few moments ago, but I would like to see it go to committee for further study. I certainly have some questions I would like to ask. For example, Clause 11 deals with establishing marketing boards. We want to make sure that the majority of farmers agree with this concept. It would be very helpful if we could bring our agricultural community, in the form of the National Farmers Union and the Federation of Agriculture and other organizations which represent that community, before the committee to see if something like this would work on a voluntary basis and whether the community would agree totally to this concept.

Of course, we now have legislation on the books, both provincial and federal, which provides for the setting up of marketing boards and commissions. In that respect I have to come back to the farmers I represent, that is, potato farmers. I know the difficulties they have had over the years. They generally say they are very fortunate if they can get one good year out of every four or five. Yet that is not good enough. There has to be a better way, not only in marketing but in bringing some stability to the industry. Last year, of course, was a reasonably good year for those farmers. We are hopeful that this year will be good, but people in my province are very worried about the low rain conditions. We will know within a few days pretty well whether we are going to have the kind of yield we normally have. Indications are right now that it will be much lower than last year because of drought conditions.

What is important is not only what you produce and how much, but what you get for it. Fishermen and farmers always seem to be faced with the great dilemma of producing a product and not knowing until after they produced it what they are going to be paid for it. Therefore, if there is anything that we can do in that respect through this Bill, I would like to see it go to committee so that we can make a determined effort to do it.

I applaud the mover of this Bill for putting it forward for discussion so that we can take a hard look at it. I hope something good will come out of it, not only for us as Members of Parliament but especially for our primary producers.

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I must say that I cannot in any way claim to be an expert on agricultural issues. I cannot even claim to be someone who knows this policy area in any detail. However, I do want to say as a Member of Parliament from an urban riding in the City of Winnipeg that agriculture is important to us. Even if we are not tilling the fields ourselves, agricultural policy affects our quality of life. That which the Government does to farmers is important to us. The policy framework put in place for farming communities is important to us.

• (1710)

As I understand it, this legislation deals with the concept of parity pricing. Like most of the people in my riding, I cannot tell you exactly what parity pricing is, but I can tell you my understanding of it. I understand it to be an opportunity for a farmer to earn his bread, to make a living.

Farmers should have their costs covered when they sell their product and they should earn a fair return on their investment. That is what all Canadians expect whether they work for someone else or have a small business, or even a large corporation. They expect to be able to earn their living from the sweat of their brow, from the hard work they put into their enterprise.

I have learned from my colleagues in my caucus who come from farming constituencies that in today's economy in order for farmers to be able to make a living they must have parity pricing. In order for them to be able to cover their costs of farming they must have parity pricing. Their costs of producing must be covered and they must earn a fair return on their investment.

One renowned and noted parliamentarian, John George Diefenbaker, came from the west and spoke eloquently in this House. With regard to parity pricing he said that farmers want parity, not charity. In other words, they want an opportunity to earn a living rather than having to go into bankruptcy or live on welfare or public subsidies. This legislation asks for simple economic justice. It asks that a farmer who tills his soil and runs his business be able to make a living from his efforts. I think that that is only fair.

The international agricultural wars that have been going on for the last while have made it obvious to urban dwellers that agriculture is an important issue which touches them directly. The Americans and the European Economic Community so grossly oversubsidize their farmers that they are able to grab markets which have traditionally been Canadian. They drive down the international price of grain to a level at which even those farmers who raise grain in the most productive land in the world for grain, which is western Canada, cannot compete.

The international grain war has caught a lot of attention in the media and has brought agricultural issues home to urban Canadians. It also points out the need for government action. It is not enough to be able to plant your seed in the spring and hope to harvest in the fall. The Government must put in place the appropriate public policy framework.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) has done farmers a favour by bringing forward this legislation with regard to parity pricing. In addition to putting this kind of policy in place the Government must be capable of negotiating effectively on the international scene in order to bring an end to the trade wars between the Americans and Europeans so that Canadian farmers will be able to sell their grain on the international market and earn a living.

John George Diefenbaker knew farmers well. While he was not a member of our Party, he hit the nail on the head in agricultural policy when he said that farmers want parity, not charity. In other words, they want to be able to stand on their own two feet. They want to earn their living rather than beg for hand-outs. They do not want to have to go bankrupt.

Over the last year we have heard on an increasing basis about farmers going bankrupt. These people produce a needed product but have to sell it at such a low price that they cannot stay in business. In addition to this being unfair to farmers and their families it is a destruction of rural Canada.

Our rural communities are made up of farming families. If our farming families go into bankruptcy, there will be a devastation of rural Canadians. There will be fewer and larger corporate farms rather than the traditional family farm. As long as the present policies continue, rural communities in which people get to know one another and support one another will be a passing scene. It would be a great loss to Canada to lose our rural communities and end up with a large corporate enterprise approach to farming.

The Private Members' legislation introduced by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville which deals with parity pricing is meant to give farmers the opportunity to earn their living, to do what every Canadian considers to be his right, that is, to get up in the morning and, by the sweat of his brow, earn his income with a sense of pride in being a farmer and a Canadian. It is clear that for more and more farmers that is not possible today. The cost of producing grain and red meat is more than they can earn in the market-place. Unless we want to have a country without farms which, of course, is totally unacceptable and inconceivable, we must put in place policies which will allow farmers to cover their cost of production and earn a fair return on their investment. That, Madam Speaker, is fair.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to be able to participate in this debate which is obviously of primary concern to western farmers and to all Canadians who are committed to maintaining a farm economy and understand the role of the family farm as one of the basic building blocks in terms of our social structure, not only in western Canada but throughout the country.

• (1720)

Hon. Members will know that the Central Experimental Farm is in my constituency, which gives me some added basis on which I can make a contribution to this debate on Bill C-221 which was introduced by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom).

When I read the Bill, I anticipate that if some Hon. Members from the Conservative Party were to comment on it they would express great concern that the Bill proposes a marketing commission for beef, for pork or for grain.

The fact is that this is a means by which we can legislatively create a framework by which farmers can be assured of an adequate income for their important contribution to our society. Canada has one of the most efficient agricultural sectors in the world and we have overcome many obstacles, including a harsh climate. We also must deal with the problem of subsidization which takes place in other countries.

I suppose it is fair to say that if there were not the degree of subsidization that exists in the common market, for example, perhaps some of these measures would not be required. Nevertheless, we live in a world where national governments tend to give a certain amount of precedence to their agricultural sectors, even in countries with much less efficiency in agriculture than we have in Canada. The question is whether we simply leave our farmers in a situation where they will literally be forced into bankruptcy.

I know that in Ontario it is now difficult for a land-owner with agricultural land to rent to find anyone to rent that land for anything more than a peppercorn rent. The reason is that the land does not pay to farm.

In western Canada where the average farm size has grown to some 1,000 acres, out of necessity, the farm sector cannot be maintained by farmers renting out land to one another. The sector will have to be based on the continuation of family farms.

That raises the question of whether farmers will be able to stay in business with the present price of grains. Over the last few years the price of wheat, oats and barley has come down substantially. In today's terms, I am told, that after the cost of freight and handling, the return to a farmer on No. 3 red spring wheat is some $2 a bushel, which is down from about $4 between 1978 and 1980, which were good years. In the early 1970s the price was also about $2 a bushel in net terms. In other words, over the succeeding time when the price of goods such as clothing and other necessities for which a farmer must pay have gone up, the net return on the wheat has been about $2 per bushel. The family car that cost perhaps $6,000 in 1974, today costs some $12,000 or $14,000.

Producers have succeeded in offsetting the falling prices to some extent by increasing their yields, but that has essentially come to an end. The figures speak for themselves. In northern Saskatchewan, for example, a producer who is efficient can get up to 40 to 45 bushels per acre of yield of excellent red spring wheat. At $2 a bushel, 45 bushels gives about $90 in net return. For a farmer with 700 or 800 acres in production it means perhaps $80,000 in return, net of freight and handling but not net of the other costs. These other costs include fertilizer, diesel fuel for the tractor, and the cost of payments for equipment which may have been financed. There is the cost of the seed and all the other costs entailed in running a farm. This must be paid out of the $80,000.

There may be a mortgage on all or part of the farm, particularly if it is a young farmer who has been trying to set up, or has had to buy a farm from the parents since they do not have pensions.

Obviously, farmers have great difficulty surviving. Most farmers in the West today are literally paying to put crops in the ground in order to harvest and sell them. In other words, they are poorer by putting the crop in than if they did not put any crop in at all.

Is it such a radical suggestion to say that there should be parity pricing in this particular area on domestically sold output of grains? Surely the answer is no. Presently, we have a two-price system, which I realize the Americans are trying to eliminate as part of their onslaught on Canadian practices under the free trade talks. Nevertheless, we have a two-price system now under which the price for domestically consumed grains is substantially more to the farmer than the price of grains that are sold on the world market. This Bill simply entrenches that to make sure that the farmer can count on that lasting for longer than the whim of whatever government happens to be in power.

The other part of the Bill deals with the question of establishing a voluntary system of marketing boards for red meat, for beef, and for pork. It is crazy that we have marketing boards for turnips, beets, tomatoes and almost any kind of farm product one can imagine, but not for red meats. The cost of production in the red meat producing sector is closer to what people are receiving presently, so the problem may not be so imminent. However, why can we not be expanding our sales of red meat to markets like Japan and other markets in Asia where they are beginning to consume more meats that are very expensive to produce? In the Japanese market, meat is produced locally at $25 a pound, when we could ship and land Canadian steak for $2.50 a pound. We must look into that situation.

I suggest that it is no different to guarantee a certain return to beef producers, within reason, than it is to guarantee a certain return to workers in a farm machinery plant where they have a union and organize in order to have a decent living. If workers who produce the farm equipment can have a decent living, why cannot farmers who produce the food on which we depend also enjoy a reasonable living? We are not talking about boondoggles or raising prices unreasonably as far as consumers are concerned. We are talking about a system that will provide a levelling out and ensure justice for farmers who produce the food on the one hand, ensure that those who handle and deal with produce can make a fair living and also ensure that consumers are dealt with equitably. That is the structure of this Bill.

I believe this is the last day of debate for this Bill and I urge all Members to allow it to go to a legislative committee which has been set up to consider it. Some changes may be required to the Bill when it is considered in committee, but I believe the principles are acceptable and desired by many farmers. I believe they are acceptable to many Canadian consumers as well. I hope the House will endorse the Bill at second reading today.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to join the debate today. Let me begin by congratulating the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr.

Nystrom) for bringing the Bill before the House and persuading the Standing Committee on Private Members' Business to deem this Bill worthy of coming to a vote as it meets the criteria for votable items as set by the committee.

We are at a point in this Parliament when we are voting on some of the Private Members' Bills as a result of a new procedure set up for voting on Private Members' Business. As one who was involved with that reform, I find this to be an exciting time in the life of this Parliament. I do not think that the vote with respect to parity pricing will have the same tension or controversy as the vote which took place in the House with respect to abortion, but it is an example of how matters which might not otherwise come to a vote in the House can be decided.

The House will have an opportunity to express itself on this issue and I hope it will use this opportunity to send the Bill to a committee so that it can receive the appropriate attention. That way attention will be paid indirectly to the wider issue of agriculture in Canada in the future by the legislative committee when it looks at this particular Bill.

It is important that this Bill be accepted by the House because apart from its details and apart from what may or may not work with respect to the Bill, there would be an acceptance of the notion that in a country like Canada, in the year 1987, we should no longer put farmers in the position of producing the necessities of life for less than the cost of production. It is a bizarre situation when farmers are constantly put in the position of producing what we all know needs to be produced, grains and red meats, and have to do that for less than the cost of production.

What is involved here is the principle that farmers should be guaranteed both the cost of production and the return on their labour and the investment they make when they produce those necessities. I do not understand why that should be such a controversial matter. It seems to me that almost everyone could agree with that. It is a notion which has been around for a long time.

I am mindful of what a former Prime Minister of Canada said with respect to western grain farmers: "The western Canadian farmers want parity. They do not want charity". The Right Hon. John Diefenbaker used to say that, and this afternoon in this House Members have an opportunity to put into practice that statement and give parliamentary life to that principle by sending the Bill to the appropriate committee to have it studied.

How long can farmers go on when they are constantly put in the position of having to produce the necessities of life for less than the cost of production? I do not say that just with respect to the effect it has on some individual farmers and their families. I say it also with respect to the broader wellbeing of Canada as a whole and of the environment. In this respect I would like to say that as the price continues to fall lower and lower, more pressure is put on individual farmers to do things that are not in the long run in their best interests or in the best interests of Canada. I am thinking of the way in which farmers have been pressured, particularly in recent years, to put marginal land into production in order to increase their income through volume. Because the price for their produce has been so low they have attempted to meet that personal financial crisis by putting more and more land into production, thereby eliminating wildlife habitat.

A great deal of concern exists in western Canada with respect to the elimination of the habitat of waterfowl. I was pleased to see that the Manitoba Government recently entered into a program whereby farmers would be compensated for leaving land out of production and designating it for waterfowl habitat. I think that is a step in the right direction. However, one of the ways in which we can address the problem more fundamentally is to have the price of grain reflect the true cost of production. We would then not be forced to bring in these kinds of ad hoc programs such as paying farmers not to destroy natural habitat. The pressure would not be on them to farm this land in the first place.

The continuing low price of grain has driven western Canadian farmers to overuse, in my judgment, fertilizers and herbicides in an attempt to get a higher yield in the short term, again to compensate for lower prices. However, it is reaching the point of diminishing returns. More and more is being put into the same piece of land by way of these additives or environmental externalities. It is not just a question of a guaranteed return for farmers; it is a question of having an agricultural system which does not have all these unintended effects, both with respect to habitat and to soil conservation and quality.

So I repeat, we have an opportunity here to pass this motion and create a committee which will have the unique opportunity of looking at all these questions. I firmly believe that we cannot continue to put farmers in the position they have been in for so long. We have taken advantage of the fact that farming, unlike a great many other things people do for a living in Canada today, is a vocation. It is an intergenerational vocation. It is a heritage. It is something people do because that is the way they are. They farm because they are farmers. They farm both out of a sense of their vocation and out of a sense that they are doing something worth-while in producing the necessities of life, long after it has become not profitable to do so.

Farmers can only do that for so long. We cannot expect them to continue out of this sense of vocation for ever and ever. I am reminded of a joke I heard which illustrates this all too painfully. A fellow went into a store one day and bought a $10 hammer. He then went out and sold the hammer for $5. He then bought two more hammers for $10 each and again went out and sold them for $5 each. He kept buying more and more hammers for $10 and selling them for $5, until finally the storekeeper could not contain his curiosity any longer and asked the man why he was doing that. He asked how the man could expect to make a living. The farmer said: "Well, it is not great but it's better than I was doing before when I was farming". This is the kind of situation in which farmers find themselves today. They constantly have to sell their produce at a price lower than the cost of production.

The other version of that joke is that the fellow selling the hammers replied: "If I could only sell enough of them, I might break even". That is again the situation in which farmers find themselves. I repeat the call which was issued so long ago by a true Tory, not one of these neo-Conservative Yankees who sit across from us today. John Diefenbaker was a true Tory from western Canada and he said: "Western Canadian farmers want parity not charity". Let the Conservatives show that for once they will act in line with that tradition and pass this Bill today when it comes to a vote.

[Translation]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate, and although I come from the strictly urban riding of Vancouver—Kingsway, I realize that it is still important for us to listen to and consider the problems of Canada's farmers.

[English]

That is why I am proud to speak in this debate. I think even an urban Member of Parliament should take interest in farm issues in Canada. Agriculture is really our number one basic industry. We see signs which state: "Mining is the number one industry", "Tourism is the number one industry", "Steel is the number one industry". All of the industries have different claims. The service trade is probably the number one industry now in terms of employment. But there is something special about agriculture and about farming. I will never forget when, in 1982, the Hon. Member for Burnaby (Mr. Robinson) in the committee which was discussing the Constitution advocated saving the family farm. I thought that was one of the more poignant moments in the committee. Even urban Members can recognize that.

• (1740)

Mr. Speaker, I do not think—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I realize that a great many Members of Parliament from urban ridings are not talking about agriculture. However, I think that most of them will know that I am Madam Speaker.

Mr. Waddell: It is certainly obvious, Madam Speaker. I am appropriately chastised. I sometimes lose my cool when I talk about agriculture, since it is such a hot topic.

As I was saying, there is a crisis in western Canada. You are not from western Canada, Madam Speaker, but as you know, there is a crisis there. There exists a double-whammy in western Canada in that the economy depends on the oil industry and on agriculture. Those are the bases of the economy of western Canada. I know that the Government has been trying to diversify the economy. It came up with a western diversification scheme. We in the New Democratic Party announced our ideas on trying to diversify the western Canadian economy. There have been lots of ideas with respect to such areas as tourism, new industries, manufacturing, trade, Asian-Pacific matters, as well as specializing in technological goods and so on. But in spite of all these efforts the western Canadian economy for the foreseeable future will still be based on the twin pillars of oil and agriculture. In British Columbia, which is my area of the country, the economic base is forestry.

The Bill before us standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) proposes to tackle one of those areas, namely, the farming area. I note that when he spoke on this Bill on March 2, 1987, as reported at page 3737 of Hansard he said:

> In essence, this particular Bill proposes the establishment of a floor price for agricultural products that has some reflection in the cost of production and a decent return for farmers. This Bill is proposing that, like workers who have a trade union or businessmen and professionals and their associations, farmers should have some guarantee that the price they receive will support them and their families in the production of food.

What this Bill tries to do is to give farmers some guarantee with respect to the prices that they will receive.

The Bill deals with wheat—and I will come back to that in a minute since we do have a form of parity pricing for wheat—as well as oats and barley which are now marketed through the Canadian Wheat Board. It also deals with pork and beef since there are no marketing boards for those particular products. The Bill would establish a price that would reflect parity for what a farmer receives for grain with the costs of production and a decent return for his product. This applies only to domestic consumption. We cannot do this on the international level because we are a signatory to GATT. I am informed that there is a $7 domestic price for wheat while the international price can be $3 to $3.50 per bushel. So there can be differences in pricing. This has been done with wheat and there have been no technical difficulties, that is to say, price parity for agricultural products that are domestically consumed. We are talking here about 9 per cent or 10 per cent of the grain that is produced by our farmers.

I now wish to draw a parallel to oil since I am the energy critic for my Party. There was a proposal put forward by small oil producers in western Canada when they bought and went out of the oil market. The small oil producers said: "Look, for a level of production give us a floor price". When the price went to, say, $10 a barrel they said: "Give us a floor price of $15 per barrel for a limited period and we will pay that back. That will keep us going, keep us living and we will pay it back later". They said, quite properly: "When the price of oil goes up through the roof the Government puts on a ceiling price," as was done in the early 1980s under the auspices of the National Energy Program. Some of these proposals have already been tried in terms of a ceiling price. They could be implemented as well in terms of a floor price. This could also be done in the area of agriculture.

What does the Bill before us deal with? I have indicated that it deals with areas other than wheat. Why is the Bill drafted in the way that it is? It is difficult for a private Member to produce a Bill that calls for a subsidy or a deficiency payment. That is why the Hon. Member has drafted his Bill in the way in which he has. I point that out to Members of the House so that they will understand and perhaps support the Bill.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) in the remarks which he just completed said that we could create a committee that would have a unique opportunity to look at these questions. On the basis that these are emergency questions and on the fact that the farmer is really hurting and that here is a proposal that could and would work, it would be worth the time of the House to pass this Bill and to get a committee to look at the matter.

I would also like to express a couple of other opinions that are related to the matter. People say that we have a great surplus of food. Indeed, in the developed countries, especially in the European common market and the European Economic Community, as well as here in Canada, we have a surplus of food. But we do not have a surplus of food when we look at the whole world. There are still people dying of starvation in this world. Surely, in 1987, on the international level we are capable of eliminating starvation, either through taking some of our surpluses from the rich world and giving them to the developing world, or by developing agricultural efficiency in the Third World, which is an even better solution. Some countries have been doing this, in particular India. That country just celebrated its fortieth anniversary of independence. There was a great deal of comment at the time about the difficulties that India has. But one of the good things that India has managed to pull off is its increased agricultural self-sufficiency.

Is it possible to do this? Is this Bill a possibility? I draw the attention of Members of the House to the remarks of our farm critic, the Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre (Mr. Althouse), who spoke in the House on April 7 of this year. As reported at page 4955 of Hansard he said:

> In spite of all the rhetoric I heard this afternoon from some of the Conservatives who spoke on this motion, this country is doing some of that right now. We have a two-price system for wheat at the moment, based at $7 a bushel for wheat consumed in this country, which comes close to the cost of production. We are doing that, and it is not wrecking the economy particularly, neither is it doing a whole lot of good.
> However, it applies only to domestically consumed wheat used for human consumption and does not go quite as far as the Bill which was presented by my friend, the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville, which would include wheat, oats and barley consumed by livestock and used for other purposes of animal and poultry production.

I think the Hon. Member makes the point that this has been done to a limited extent with wheat. That was not the entire solution since there are still some problems that exist. However, it was a step forward.

I want to say that I had the experience a couple of months ago to be out in Calgary. I went north of Calgary to visit a vet and his family. The family I visited is named Sutmöller. Mr. and Mrs. Sutmöller took me to their house for the afternoon. They took me out into the neighbouring fields around Carstairs, Alberta, and explained some of the problems.

• (1750)

I recognize the fundamental problems of the Canadian farmer. I submit to the House that the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville goes some way to helping solve some of those problems.

Mr. Lee Clark (Brandon—Souris): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to participate in the debate and take advantage of the few remaining moments to talk about parity pricing and some of the deficiencies in that particular proposal, at least as I understand them.

First of all, I wish to state that we are very much in agreement with our friends in the New Democratic Party and in the Official Opposition when we say that we believe Canadian farmers are deserving of assistance from Governments at both levels. That is the reason that during the course of the last 12 months the federal Government has provided an unprecedented amount of financial assistance to Canadian farmers, particularly to western Canadian farmers.

The largest difficulties being experienced are in the grains and oil seeds sector, which is the primary part of the agricultural economy. I wish that some of the provincial Governments, particularly of western Canada and my own Province of Manitoba, were more supportive. If the two levels of Government could co-operate, and there has never been a time in Canadian history when there was a greater need for co-operation, then the financial position of Manitoba farmers would be improved, if we could match the programs offered by the Alberta and Saskatchewan Governments.

The idea of parity pricing certainly has a surface appeal, which is perhaps one of the reasons why it is misrepresented by many. It has not been misrepresented by those who have spoken today, but misrepresented by many as being a panacea to agricultural problems.

Unfortunately, the bulk of the farm dollars earned in western Canada are earned through exports. Throughout Canada as a whole, 50 per cent of agriculture income is received from exports. The figure of export income is greater in western Canada than it is elsewhere. To this point in time, one of the principal weaknesses of parity pricing is that it can do nothing to assist the price that agricultural exports earn in the world market. For example, with reference to grains and oil seeds, where the vast bulk of our product is sold in the international market, parity pricing would indeed not constitute any significant increase in agricultural income.

Appropriately, reference has already been made to the two-price system which we have for wheat production. We in western Canada are painfully aware that the two-price wheat system means very little, because it represents a very small part of our total sales.

I would remind Members of the House that when the committee travelled across Canada 12 months ago it looked at two-price wheat. Many of the witnesses who appeared before the committee also talked about parity pricing. There was a consideration of the concept, although not in the way that the mover of this motion would prefer.

Unfortunately, when examined under the microscope of that committee, neither two-price wheat or parity pricing represented the significant solution to western agricultural problems that many had hoped. The reason is that there is no proposal in parity pricing to augment income for that 90 per cent of the wheat that is not consumed in the domestic market.

We need to focus our attention on how to do two or three things. In this highly competitive agricultural market in which we live, we should be focusing our attention on how to increase exports. In western Canada, we are pleased with the record of the Canadian Wheat Board in this regard. Most Members of the House know that the exports have reached a record level this year, despite the very intense competition which exists in the international market-place. The Wheat Board, and others, are to be complimented. We must continue to move in that direction.

It would appear from weather conditions in the west, both during the summer and during the last few days, that production this year will not be what it was last year. Therefore, there will not be the same surplus to dispose of as before. We are still carrying a surplus from the previous year's crop, so we must focus on market development.

It is exceedingly important that we continue to work in the international community to end the trade war which is destroying international markets. Canadian farmers are among the most productive in the world. I know that talking about a "level playing field" is similar to a hackneyed statement these days. But as they have demonstrated in the past, Canadian farmers can do exceedingly well when they are given an opportunity to compete with others in the world market without any foreign impediment.

The principal thrust of Parliament and the Government should be toward trying to resolve that trade war. In that regard, a number of people have distinguished themselves in providing leadership. Beginning with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), seconded by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Wise), the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board (Mr. Mayer), and others have provided unprecedented leadership in the international community in attempting to resolve the trade war which has destroyed the economy of so many wheat and grain producing countries.

In Canada we cannot afford to match the subsidies of the Europeans and the Americans. In fact, I would go further and say that both the Europeans and the Americans are now discovering that they too cannot afford to maintain the present policies. In the international community, there has been definite progress. There is evidence that the insane trade war is starting to wind down. There will not be any results for two or three years, I would think, and that is being somewhat optimistic. We must do what we can to resolve that particular trade war. We must pursue the policies that we have been pursuing. We must persuade the Americans and the Europeans that they are not helping their own producers. They are not gaining any additional share of the world market as they anticipated. In fact, we have gained it because of the quality of our product. We must persuade them as perhaps to persuade their own public I think they know that the only winners in this process are consumers in certain countries.

While that struggle goes on at the international level, with the co-operation of all Parties, and I must stress with the co-operation of the provincial Governments, we must continue to build upon the national and regional tripartite programs which are in existence.

The Western Grain Stabilization Program has generated unprecedented cash flows during the last 24 months. Unfortunately, that program is now virtually bankrupt, and it is being funded by the federal Government. Further amendments to that program will be necessary. We must do more in the area of red meat tripartite stabilization. There was a positive meeting recently in Quebec City. We must encourage more of the provinces to join.

What is necessary now is not the projection of certain formulas, which at first glance seem to be a solution to problems. What is needed now is co-operation among all levels of government and continued involvement of the farm organizations themselves. Never before have they had the say they have had in the last 18 months. They must continue to be an integral part.

With the two levels of Government working together, the co-operation of all of the provinces, the continued support of the farm community, an emphasis on resolving the problems at the international level, and in the meantime with continued amounts of massive federal and provincial cash injection into the economy, I think that we can get through the next two or three years until farmers have a chance to get back on an equal playing field. When they do, farm economies will rise to a level at which they deserve to be. Our farmers will quite easily and readily be able to compete, because they know that they are superior farmers, the quality of their product is superior, and their technology is superior. Therefore, we have a responsibility and I believe a commitment to provide that type of cash support until agriculture is back on its feet where it deserves to be.

PETITIONS

UNIVERSAL ACCESS TO FAIR ORAL HEARINGS BEFORE REFUGEE BOARD

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by people from my constituency as well as from other constituencies both within Toronto and, indeed, from as far afield as the Northwest Territories, and Edmonton.

The petitioners point out that the Standing Committee of Parliament has proposed a new procedure for refugee determination which is quicker and fairer than the one now in force and they pray and call upon Parliament to ensure that legislation be enacted which will embody the principles of fair and quick oral hearings of refugee claimants, universal access to such hearings for every claimant in Canada and adequate opportunity to arrive in Canada to make these claims.

SUPPORT FOR PROPOSED AMENDMENTS TO IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House a petition from the residents of Calgary South who call upon the House to pass in full Bills C-55 and C-84. Canadians are law-abiding citizens and the people of Calgary South are very angry and extremely annoyed. They want tough new legislation now to deal with this disastrous situation of bogus claimants entering Canada illegally and of course those people who are trafficking in human bodies. This petition represents the views of my riding on this very important issue.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty to present a petition to the House, signed by constituents from my riding and the National Capital Region, and stating that, whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks; and whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possiblity of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food; and whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life; and whereas the imposition of theis tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youth and so forth, your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Monday, August 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi, (p. 7338).

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, many well-respected and knowledgeable citizens of Canada and other countries have intimate and expert knowledge of the problems of immigration and refugees. Many of these individuals have made that knowledge and expertise available to the Government. As well, the committees of this House have made representations to the Government on the same subject. Unfortunately, the Government chose to ignore that advice.

In 1985 the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration tabled a report recommending major changes in the refugee determination process. Those changes were fair and would have provided protection under Canadian law and the Charter of Rights for refugees seeking asylum. Instead, the Government brought in Bill C-55 and allowed three days of debate in June. When there was a storm of protest about some of the provisions of the Bill it was left on the shelf. The Government now claims an emergency exists and appears to want it passed without delay or change. It appears to be ignoring its own committees as well as people like Rabbi Gunther Plaut who have expressed concern about this Bill.

Worse than that, the Government is doing its best to confuse Canadians as to who is a legitimate refugee and who is an immigrant. Government Members who have spoken on this Bill have made statements which suggest that refugees are somehow jumping the queue in entering Canada the way they do. In doing so those Members are either ignorant of the procedures for entry into Canada or are deliberately misleading Canadians—

Mr. McDermid: That is not true at all.

Mr. Hovdebo: —in order to confuse the issue and make this Bill palatable. Instead of doing that, they should be explaining clearly that there are two queues, two streams—

Mr. McDermid: Four.

Mr. Hovdebo: —and that the bogus refugee is not replacing a legitimate immigrant under the regular process. The refugee is in a different stream. Whether they get in or not, they do not replace someone in the regular immigrant stream. A bogus refugee, when proven to be such, is excluded and sent back. He does not move over to the head of the immigrant queue. That is the situation and many government Members have tried to confuse the public. It is the process of refugee determination that is the problem.

Canadians generally are generous in their acceptance of refugees in Canada. However, it should not take five years to decide whether or not a person claiming refugee status is a legitimate refugee. The Government, quite rightly, is doing something about the determination process, but what it is doing is unacceptable to most Canadians who understand that it is moving us closer to a totalitarian approach. Most democracies and the UN cannot accept that.

Our history of dealing with refugees started badly. I refer to the Sikhs who tried to enter Canada in 1914 and the Jews who attempted to land in Montreal in 1939. Since then we have improved our image to the point where last year we won an award for our treatment of refugees. Yet we now seem to be moving to again put ourselves in the position where Canada's approach to refugees will be unacceptable to most people in this country and most people around the world. That will happen if the Government passes this Bill in its present form.

The Government has the time and the power to improve the Bill. It will be a sad day for Canada if it does not heed the advice of the experts and concerned individuals and groups who suggest that, although the Bill is needed, it is unacceptable in its present form.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity this morning to take part in the debate on Bill C-55. I must say I would welcome it even more if the Bill were better drafted than what we have here. I hope the parliamentary committee responsible for examining the Bill will be able to amend it and make it more equitable.

Mr. Speaker, some Conservative Members have been using the refugee question in recent months to restore their Government's tarnished image. For instance, in a letter sent by a Conservative Member from the Toronto area to his constituents on July 14, 1987, we read the following, and I quote:

[English]

> Since my last letter we have witnessed another boatload of refugees land in Canada.
> Like you, I am angry. Angry because our government acted responsibly to change the law to prevent another incident like that of the Tamils last summer so that the matter could be resolved expeditiously and fairly.
> Bill C-55, which would grant the government the necessary power to curb this type of influx, has been blocked at every turn. It has been thwarted by opposition from both the Liberals and NDP along with a strong lobbying effort being directed by most churches.

Mr. Shields: Hear, hear!

• (1120)

Mr. Boudria: I notice that the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields) says "hear, hear". It is interesting that he would agree with the ill-conceived and erroneous comments of his colleague, the Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. Pennock), who accuses the Opposition and the churches of the mistakes for which the Government is responsible. Perhaps we in Opposition are fair game for this kind of nonsense perpetrated by the Government. I do not, however, share the "hear, hear" of the Member across when referring to the churches, whether my church, his or anyone else's.

Had the Member for Etobicoke North chosen to tell the truth he would have told his constituents that the number of refugees landing on our shores prior to the Government taking power was not very large per year. In 1985 the number increased to 8,000. That did not happen because the Government was in power. Although I do make my share of partisan remarks, this is not one of them. It is obvious that there has been an influx of refugees because conditions in certain countries are getting worse and people want to come here. In 1986 the number increased to 18,000. I understand that by May, 1987, 10,000 people had already requested refugee status. That is a dramatic increase.

For a Member on the other side to accuse the Opposition or the churches of stalling a Bill which was not even introduced until nearly 10 months after the arrival of the Tamil refugees is somewhat less than honest. As a matter of fact, it is a lot less than honest.

Mr. Shields: Why are we debating a six-month hoist? Tell us about that.

Mr. Boudria: Let us talk about the truth and the way in which the Government has handled this most unfortunate situation. The Government is desperately trying to cling to power using every available tool, including hitting those who are least able to help themselves; an attempt to restore public confidence in the Government. The Government has made much of the 174 refugees who arrived this year and of the Tamils who arrived last year.

I do not think it is right when people abuse our immigration laws. I know that the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) does not think that is right either. I know that the Minister knows better and is not the cause of this, but I disagree with his Leader, who is the cause of this mess, when he tries to perpetrate the kinds of things we saw earlier this year.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) tried to convince Canadians that Parliament had to be recalled for an emergency. Two weeks later no one had gotten around to phoning the Speaker to tell him about the emergency for which the House had to be recalled. At the time he said it was an emergency, the boat had already been here for three weeks. Five weeks elapsed in that time of emergency. The whole purpose of the exercise was obviously to try desperately to have Canadians express confidence in him again. It obviously has not worked. It will not work because it is wrong.

I am sure the Minister knows that to be the fact, but he is stuck with it as am I as an opposition Member. He cannot say he does not like it, as I can, because he is a member of the Cabinet. He did not invent the rule, but he has to put up with it and carry the load and the blame. That is unfair, because I think the Minister is a very fine gentleman, but he has to carry that on his shoulders.

We cannot discuss refugee policy without as well discussing immigration policy generally. We know that they are two very different things.

[Translation]

Two different matters, but both apply of course to people who come from other countries to join us here in Canada. Canada has always had an immigration policy, and I think we can be proud of the policy we have had during the last twenty or thirty years, and even up to now. Our immigration policy is generally one we can be proud of. However, the Minister will agree that sometimes implementation leaves something to be desired.

[English]

I have had incidents in my riding of abuses by the system. When the system abuses common sense all Members of Parliament go to see the Minister of State for Immigration knowing that he, in elected office, has the political sensitivity and sound judgment to correct some of the things that go wrong. Luckily, I have had many abuses corrected.

The Minister knows very well of the case of one particular woman in my riding. She came here on a visa with her husband and they bought a farm in my constituency. I only relate this case to give an example of how the system sometimes frustrates everyone and causes abuse.

That constituent of mine was a battered wife. She saw advertisements on television and decided that the appropriate thing to do after being beaten repeatedly was to report her husband to the police, which she did. Her husband was thrown in jail, and rightfully so. However, the immigration authorities then decided that since they both came here on the same visa if one of the two had committed a crime, which in this case was the one beating up the other, they both had to leave the country. The message to this woman was that if her husband beats her up she should not complain because she would be thrown out. That is in fact what the system said.

Luckily I was able to contact the Minister and he was compassionate enough to say that it would not work that way. The woman and her children, who were both born in Canada, were allowed to stay while the husband was thrown out. I have no difficulty with his being thrown out in the circumstances.

That is one example of an abuse. If I had another three or four minutes I could relate a number of others to describe the frustration with the system which may cause people to try to enter the country by other means. The honest and right way of doing it sometimes does not work.

I thank you for your patience, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Thank you. Mr. Speaker, I strongly advise Hon. Members to reject Bill C-55. The Bill must be amended to prevent phony refugees from entering Canada, while ensuring that genuine refugees will always be welcome in this country.

[English]

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, during the last few days of debate on immigration legislation, on both Bills C-84 and C-55, I have heard a multitude of complaints from the Opposition. Yet if there is anyone who should be concerned and should complain, and should commend the Government and the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) for his humanitarian instincts, it is one of my constituents, Mr. Fred Nachbauer of Nelson, British Columbia. He reads press articles from across the nation, and it appeared to him that Canada had allowed Sikhs to hit the shores of Nova Scotia and come in as legitimate refugees, which they are not.

• (1130)

Mr. Nachbauer was born in Germany and came to Canada with his parents at 11 months of age. Prior to 1976, he had to reach the age of 14 in order to make a decision as to what citizenship he wanted, be it Canadian or German. By virtue of his parents' wishes he moved to the United States for a time. Over a period of years, both in Canada and the United States, he shared, with six brothers and sisters, a unity of family with wonderful parents. When that family returned to Canada, Fred decided to remain in the United States while continuing his education to seek his university degree.

The story becomes much more complex after that. Ultimately, Fred Nachbauer returned to Canada and his case fell between the cracks with the narrow interpretation of the Immigration Appeal Board that he should be deported to Germany. He did not speak German and had only been to Germany for one year since the time he was 11 months old.

I have spent time with Fred, his brothers and sisters, and his wonderful parents. I have also spent time with the Minister. I must tell the House and Canadians that the Minister demonstrated the kind of compassion and understanding which, unfortunately, by virtue of whatever the circumstances, was not demonstrated by the Immigration Appeal Board at the time. I cannot condemn the Immigration Appeal Board, for it went by the book, but it failed to examine the parameters.

At this time I want to thank the Minister for all his endeavours on behalf of my constituent, and indeed on behalf of all Canadians.

Let me move to another matter that disturbs me deeply. I watched Rabbi Plaut on Canada AM last week. Canada was condemned for its handling of the recent pseudo refugees who landed in Nova Scotia. It was condemned for Bill C-84 and Bill C-55.

It is ironic that these pious words should flow from a man who selectively condemns Canada while choosing to ignore the record of Israel and the Palestinian refugees.

What is the immigration policy of Israel in terms of the Palestinian refugees? He chooses to ignore that babies who are kidnapped or bought on the black market or otherwise from their mothers in Peru or Brazil are allowed into Israel unencumbered. It may well be argued that those babies will be provided with a better life, but clearly they have jumped the legitimate process.

Rabbi Plaut, by his words, condemned all Members of Parliament, regardless of Party, who have taken the time and effort to write to Jewish prisoners of conscious in the Soviet Union. Parliamentarians of all stripes have followed that process for many years. They have written letters to prisoners and letters to the Soviet Government. It is a frustrating experience to all of us, but it is a joy when one wins a case, as I have experienced.

I suggest that when Rabbi Plaut speaks out against the efforts of the majority of parliamentarians in this House, he condemns us for our humanitarian actions. What about humanitarian actions? He condemns the outstanding humanitarian record of this Government and its Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), who is a humanitarian of the first order.

He condemns Canadians for turning back the Jewish refugee ship, the St. Louis, from our shores in 1939. I was 12 years old when the St. Louis was turned back. There are very few Members who were much older than that. Most of the Members in this House were not even born when the St. Louis reached the shores of Canada, yet we are condemned for the actions of parliamentarians and the Government in 1939.

While I have not had the opportunity to examine the reasons for that action, whatever the reason may be, I find those actions to be most regrettable. I am sure that Canadians have apologized for it time and time again. Why must Rabbi Plaut raise it in the context of the current debate?

This Party, this Government, has a record of human rights unequalled by any other Party or any other Government. During the John Diefenbaker Government, Douglas Jung of Vancouver was the first Chinese Canadian to sit in the House. Lincoln Alexander was the first black elected to the House. He became Minister of Labour in the Clark Government and is now an outstanding public servant and Lieutenant Governor for the Province of Ontario. He was appointed by a Conservative Government under our Prime Minister. We led the world in our humanitarian effort to aid Ethiopians.

Let us compare Bill C-55 with the current legislation. According to the old system, there are seven separate stages in the refugee determination process, which takes up to five years. Bill C-55 provides four separate stages which hopefully will take no more than 12 months. I am astounded by the hyprocrisy that has been demonstrated by the Opposition.

The position of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) with respect to Bill C-55 and C-84 was best depicted in an editorial cartoon which needed no words. For those watching this debate on television, the cartoon depicted the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party like this, pointing in both directions. Nothing else needed to be said because it spoke volumes for the position taken by that man and his Party.

Let us examine the position taken by the New Democratic Party. It is worthy to point out that the Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) said: "I do not see any need to recall Parliament this summer at considerable expense". At a time when Canadians are outraged, that is the educated response of the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) said: "I do not think it is really worth while, but of course that is up to the Speaker". Then, of course, we have the sage advice of the Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) who said: "If we continue to get on our shores individuals who suddenly come up and say, 'Look, we are refugees, take us in', I think we will probably have no choice but to seek a middle ground, and the middle ground that I am talking about is something like a holding centre or a detainment centre, what is commonly known as a refugee camp". I cannot but conclude—

Mr. Manly: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I am sure the Hon. Member would not wish to suggest that the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) is a member of the New Democratic Party. Those comments were not made by a member of our Party.

• (1140)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) has the floor.

Mr. Brisco: For the record, Mr. Speaker, I skipped from the NDP to the Liberal Party without the Member being aware of that transition. However, if he feels more comfortable about it, I will identify the Hon. Member for York West as a Member of the Liberal Party.

In conclusion, I would like to quote the Leader of the Liberal Party. Upon the arrival of the boat off the shores of Nova Scotia, he said: "That boat might well have been apprehended and could have been turned back because this is not a legitimate refugee process". Enough said.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-55 and indicate my opposition to the principles involved in this Bill.

I believe all Members of our Party, as well as other parties, acknowledge that we have a very serious problem. There is a need to clean up the refugee determination process. However, we want to make it very clear that we do not feel this Bill addresses that problem in a serious and fair-minded way, one that is suitable for Canada in 1987.

I want to try to address the concerns of Canadians, particularly the concerns of my constituents who know that something terrible wrong has happened to the whole refugee determination process. Feeling that something has gone wrong, they tend to support Government legislation which claims to correct the situation. I want to try to show why this legislation cannot be supported by fair-minded people.

Let us begin by trying to establish a few facts on which I hope all Members can agree. First, over the last few years, Canada has had a fairly enlightened and progressive refugee policy. This was recognized by the world community last year when the United Nations presented the Nansen Medal to the Canadian people. Second, we can all recognize that the global refugee problem is becoming more serious. It has changed since the Second World War when the refugee problem was mostly centred in Europe. We received refugees from war-torn Europe. Later we received a great many from behind the Iron Curtain. For the last few years the centres of refugees have moved to the Third World and we received a great many refugees in the late 1970s from Southeast Asia. Today Central America is producing a great many refugees. It is at that point that we are starting to close the door.

The situation in Africa is one that staggers the imagination. There we have not only the typical convention refugee, the person who is fleeing from some kind of persecution, but we also have ecological and economic refugees.

It is estimated that in our world today there are between 13 million and 15 million refugees. Indeed, it has been said that over the last 30 years, 700 refugees per day have been created by the turmoil in our world. When 174 of these refugees land on our shores, we suddenly declare a national emergency and Parliament has to brought back into session.

The third fact which I believe can be objectively agreed upon is that western countries have become more restrictive in their refugee determination policy. Denmark, which had one of the most open policies, has now tended to close the door. The United States has recently passed very restrictive legislation. This legislation is intended to clamp down on illegal immigrants, many of whom are refugees, and it puts very severe penalties upon anyone who harbours those refugees or gives them employment.

The American refugee determination process has been rather slanted. One can get some idea of this from the fact that in 1982, out of 12,000 Salvadorans who applied for refugee status in the United States, only 26 were granted that status. This is obviously a very slanted process in the United States. So western countries have become more restrictive in their refugee policies.

Canada, because of an outmoded refugee determination policy, has become subject to abuse. We have seen a great many phoney refugee claimants. We have seen scams such as that of the would-be immigrants from Portugal, members of the Jehovah's Witnesses, who claimed they were being persecuted for their faith, a claim which was denied not only by the Government of Portugal but also by the Jehovah's Witnesses themselves.

Such an obviously untrue claim is nevertheless, processed through our rather cumbersome machinery and it takes up to five years, as many Hon. Members have pointed out, before the final determination is made. Because it takes so long, these phoney refugees have by then put down some roots in the community and are sometimes able to make a claim on compassionate grounds that they should be allowed to stay.

It takes up to five years before the end of the process for bogus refugees. That, of course, has to be cleaned up. As this dodge has become successful for some, it encourages still more phoney refugees to try the same kind of tactic. The result is that Canada has become known as a soft touch for phoney refugees. This kind of abuse increases resentment in Canada towards all refugee claimants. They are seen as queue-jumpers who are avoiding the normal immigration route.

In fact, refugees should be seen as quite distinct from people who are involved in the normal immigration process because it is quite a different situation.

This in turn focuses attention upon some of the more visible minorities who apply for refugee determination and it encourages a form of racism. It is important to eliminate this kind of abuse. Although the abuse might be widespread and practised by people from many different countries, it tends to focus on one or two highly visible groups. This kind of focusing appeals to the latent racism or xenophobia which, I suppose, is found in all people and certainly Canadians are not immune.

We can see this if we look at the situation from the perspective of our history. In 1947 Mackenzie King indicated that there were not going to be any changes in our very selective and discriminatory immigration policy. He said he did not want to see anything which would result in "a fundamental alteration in the character of our population".

In the past we have had a lot of tension between Protestants and Catholics in this country. I can remember in the early 1950s when a moderator of the United Church, to which I belong, complained about our immigration process at that time because he said we were opening the doors to too many Catholics. He was not a particularly bigoted individual. He was a little bit behind his time and was playing on an old Protestant fear that Catholics were going to overrun the country.

The turning back of the St. Louis, to which a previous speaker referred, was based on the anti-Semitism which was then very prevalent in Canada and is still found just beneath the surface in the lives of many Canadians.

Governments have sometimes played on this kind of racism. The Winnipeg general strike of 1919 was led largely by British trade unionists or people who were descendant from British stock. Yet, in an attempt to give the impression that the Winnipeg general strike was of Bolshevik origin, a few people with Slavic names were arrested and deported. That kind of playing on xenophobia is unacceptable and we do not want to see it in 1987.

The 1976 Immigration Act specifically recognized the refugee category. In 1987 there is confusion in our thinking and in our feeling about refugees and how they relate to the whole immigration process.

• (1150)

First, there is a concern about the question of fairness. There is a legitimate objection to queue-jumping, if that is what is happening. When people abuse the process that has to be stopped.

Second, there is a fear of being overwhelmed by refugees. I pointed out that there are about 15 million refugees throughout the world. Last week the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister suggested that there are five billion people all wanting to come to Canada. That was rather irresponsible of him.

Third, there is the fear of many Canadians that our traditional values will be swamped by an influx of people from different cultures. Different peoples with different cultures do bring different values, but do we have so little confidence in our own values, so little belief in the things that are important to us that we feel they will not be able to stand up in a multicultural society.?

Fourth, there is a concern about jobs. At some levels this is a valid concern. Certainly in times of high unemployment, if there is a great influx of unskilled workers, then it can depress wages at the bottom end of the scale. For that reason there has been a decrease in the whole immigration rate over the last few years. But in the long run we recognize that an increase in immigration results in a larger market, a larger consumer market. We bring in entrepreneurs, which is good for the economy in the long run.

What has been the reaction to this on the part of the Government? When the Plaut Report was brought in the Government ignored it, except to ask the standing committee to make recommendations on it. But when the standing committee brought in its report it was also ignored by the Government.

Finally, last spring the Government announced an administrative crackdown and then later on in the spring it tabled this legislation. It was not brought forward for debate until the last couple of weeks in June. Now the Government declares that there is an emergency. We have had a crisis building for years.

Bill C-55 does not address this problem in an acceptable way because it does not give the benefit of due process to the claimants. It allows the deportation of them to a so-called safe third country. But there is no such thing as a safe third country. No country is entirely safe for all people.

The Bill does not allow the possibility of refugee claimants to have lawyers representing them at an early stage. It allows for the elimination of up to 80 per cent of the refugee claimants before they ever reach the determination process. For this reason we oppose Bill C-55.

We urge the Government to bring in a process that is more in line with the recommendations made by Rabbi Gunther Plaut or by the Government's own Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration.

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, for the past several weeks I have listened with some interest to the observations of members of the Opposition on the subject of refugees. I have heard them make some very curious statements. I propose to examine some of these statements during my remarks in the next few minutes.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) representing the NDP, and a little later the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) representing the Liberal Party, spoke at length on the merits of refugees and the contributions they have made to the development of our country. They made these remarks as though someone were denying these facts, an inference totally unfounded and certainly not a view offered from anyone on this side of the House these past several days.

However, it was their choice of words in voicing their views yesterday which particularly interested me. Their observations, echoed by other members of both their Parties, clearly indicated that our prime concern as parliamentarians must be to help, to give comfort and refuge to those who reach our shores seeking asylum. This we are bound to do by UN agreement and by common decency and charity. This is our paramount duty and responsibility according to those Members opposite.

Indeed, we should be listening to the representations of Canadians, we were advised. This was said yesterday and in the days preceding. I beg to differ with this interpretation. I am of the view that as a parliamentarian my first duty is to Canada and my second is to my own constituents. My task is relatively easy in this particular matter. My duty to Canada and my duty to my constituents are one and the same.

What is that duty in this instance? On this topic of refugees my duty is to ensure that we have in place a refugee policy, a refugee determination process that is clearly and readily understood, fair, humane and enforceable. That is our prime duty to Canada as parliamentarians.

It is clear to anyone even slightly familiar with the current refugee problem that our rules are not clearly and readily understood. Consequently, they are neither fair nor humane, and most certainly they are not enforceable.

In other circumstances, members of the Opposition have had much to say about perception. Rules and procedures must not only be fair and just but be seen to be fair and just. My constituents do not believe the current situation to be fair or just. They do not believe the current administration of the refugee process to be fair or just to Canada or to them individually as Canadians. They are outraged at the flagrant abuse of the current system. They expect—indeed they demand—that Parliament, namely, all of us here on both sides of the House, accept our responsibilities and revise the rules, clarify the process, stop the abuses, deal firmly and appropriately with those profiteers who have conspired to circumvent the rules, those who have traded in cargoes of human misery.

How do I know that this is what my constituents feel? It is as a result of the hundreds of telephone calls I have received, as well as the hundreds of letters, numerous office appointments and countless chance meetings.

We as a Government have presented legislation to deal with this issue. What have we had as a response from the Opposition? After all, we are at the second reading stage, the stage at which basic principles are being debated. We are not in committee. We are not at third reading stage, a stage at which we might be debating the recommendations of the committee. No, we are debating the basic principles. Others have covered very adequately these principles.

What is the contribution of members of the Opposition, to give the Bill a six-month hoist, to shelve the matter until next February so that it can compete for attention with the next Budget now produced annually every February? The production of a Budget every February is yet another positive constructive action introduced by the Government. But what the opposition Parties really mean with their six-month hoist is that we should have no immigration rules, no refugee barriers, a policy of, "you all come". I do not hold that view, and neither do my constituents.

Of course we need immigrants for the country to grow. It has been said many times in this debate that immigrants have in the past and will continue in the future to make a very substantial contribution to our country, to the growth and development of Canada. Of course we must accept our share of legitimate political refugees. We do require a meaningful process by which we can determine who is and who is not a legitimate political refugee. Opposition Members have clearly indicated an unwillingness to clarify or more closely define such a process.

Indeed, we are accused of having a desire to punish those who illegally aid or abet illegal refugees who arrive on our shores or at our borders. Those who encourage illegal activity deserve to be punished. Since when are immigration or refugee laws any different from the other laws of this land? Are the opposition Members now arguing that robbery is acceptable if a person has some charitable activity in mind for the proceeds? Hypocrisy is alive and well on the opposition benches.

Opposition Members pretend to be against queue-jumpers. When it comes time to deal meaningfully with the problem, they do not want to deal with the issue. They would rather listen to the immigration lawyers, special interest groups, and even foreigners with vested interest, instead of the millions of ordinary Canadians who want an orderly, fair, and enforceable set of regulations to protect the health and security of our society.

It is entirely legitimate that we should confine refugee applicants until their state of health is determined, and whether they are a security risk. Equally, we have a right to determine who they are, how they arrived, and from where they came. Apparently, the Opposition is not interested in such matters. They pretend to be concerned about queue-jumpers, about fraudulent refugee claimants, and then resist reasonable efforts on the part of the Government to develop a fair and sensible process. No, Mr. Speaker, their response is to banish the subject until some time in 1988. That clearly underscores their view of the priority of this matter. They might just as well state honestly and openly that they do not believe Canada should have any refugee determination rules. Actions speak louder than words. There is no doubt of the effect of their actions.

Canadians expect us to deal promptly with this issue. We on this side of the House intend to proceed. The proposals contained in Bill C-55 compare very favourably with the regulations observed by our international friends and allies. Bill C-55 will serve us well, and it merits speedy adoption.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to follow the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich (Mr. Crofton). He is a Member of Parliament I have respected since he has come to this area. I have served with him on committees, and I have always felt that he is a fair-minded person. I looked forward to hearing the manner in which he would present a defence for this piece of legislation, and I will take into account his criticism of the points raised by members of the Opposition when dealing with this Bill.

No one is arguing with the concerns of the Hon. Member or his constituents for a fair determination system for refugees. There presently is a system which was built in a time when there was not the same type of pressure, but it did conform to our international obligations.

The first question I wish to pose to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Saanich and other Conservative Members, is why are they supporting a Bill that clearly contravenes our obligations under the United Nations Convention for Refugees?

Mr. Crofton: Not so.

Mr. McDermid: That is in your opinion.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, it is so.

If I may quote from our Immigration Act it states:

> —fulfil Canada's international legal obligations with respect to refugees and to uphold its humanitarian tradition with respect to the displaced and the persecuted—

Perhaps the Hon. Member is not aware of the fact that in February of this year the Government cancelled or eliminated a special refugee status that had been established for oppressed and persecuted people. Under group sponsorship that allowed Canada to take people like the Baha'is from Iran, Falashas Jews from the Sudan, and Jews from Argentina, people who were not fully within the definition of convention refugees. That clause was cancelled or eliminated. The opportunity for this country to reach out to specially persecuted groups around the world was eliminated.

Is that the type of policy that the Member feels his constituents want to support? Is that the type of policy he, as a fair-minded person, is endorsing? When a person in another country is denied access to schools for their children, denied access to employment, and threatened with jail, do we as a country want to condone that? Do we want to condone the type of persecution faced by the Baha'is in Iran?

Mr. McDermid: Where does it say that in Bill C-55?

Mr. Axworthy: I am dealing with Bill C-55. Bill C-55 is an extension of what the Government did in February under its new regulations.

Let us deal with the fundamental issue, which I do not think Conservative Members of Parliament understand, that our obligations are based upon universal access.

The Members opposite are laughing, Mr. Speaker. To them refugees are a joke. It is a way of making political points, and it is not a serious matter. If they want to continue laughing, let me say to them that ultimately the record of this House will be the historical record that they will have to live with.

The basic international commitment that we made when we signed the protocol of 1969, and successively, is that we would grant universal access. That does not mean that everybody is accepted. It means that everybody has a right to make a claim. It is quite clear under the United Nations that we can then set up our own determination procedure. That principle was endorsed by the Commons committee, obviously by a majority of Conservative Members.

Now there is legislation which contradicts that principle. How? It is clear. There is a screening proposal which automatically excludes or pre-screens one class of people when they arrive on our shores before they have a chance to make their claim. That contravenes our agreements under the convention. It is quite clear that we are setting up two classes of people. I think that probably better than anybody the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) is aware of that fact. That is a clear contradiction of the principle of universal access.

In debate last week the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) was probably the only honest Conservative Member because he said that was correct. We do not believe in universal access. If that is the case, let us get it on the table and say that the Government no longer agrees with its international commitments. The Minister of National Health and Welfare said so, and he was wildly applauded by other members of his caucus. But no one, including the Ministers for immigration, has had the nerve or the courage to say that is what they agree with, that they are prepared to break that commitment. That is one of the things that is wrong with Bill C-55.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Saanich has been a student of international obligations. I recall when he was a member of the joint committee studying external affairs that he made very eloquent statements of our need to support international obligations. He is now supporting a Bill that will break those obligations.

Mr. Crofton: Not so.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member is saying, "not so". I say to Members opposite that if they do not agree with universal access then they are breaking those obligations. Clearly that is part of what this Bill is about. There cannot be pre-screening.

Another example is the refoulement procedure, a commitment made by this country time after time under UN Convention. Under Article 31 of the convention it states that a refugee claimant is not sent back to a country from which that refugee claims persecution. That is the so-called refoulement clause. This legislation states that a person can enter Canada, they have 72 hours or three days, and then before they are sent back regardless of whether or not they are safe where they are going. That is a total and complete contradiction of Article 31 of the convention. Once again I ask Members if they know what they are doing? Do they understand that they are transgressing signed commitments? I do not think that they know what they are doing.

• (1210)

An interesting story appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press about the comments of the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner). It was dealing with Bill C-84, but let me point out that there is a clause in Bill C-84 which says that transportation companies will be required to screen refugee claimants before they board aeroplanes and to take away their documents. Then we discovered that a senior Canadian immigration official, Mr. Kirk Bell, was a member of the executive committee of the United Nations High Commission for Refugees which, several months ago, passed a resolution condemning the practice now included in Bill C-84. When asked about it, the Minister of State for Immigration said, "Gee, I didn't know about that. Somehow no one told me. Gosh, if I had only known".

It is an interesting contradiction or dilemma that a senior immigration official sits on an international body which decides that to rely upon transportation companies to screen applicants contravenes the convention, and three months later the Government brings in totally contradictory legislation and the Minister says "I didn't know".

This means that either the officials are not telling him or that the Minister is not telling the truth or that in fact the whole thing, as we suspect, has been rushed, hurried, and brought in to appease that public opinion, about which people talk, even though it will clearly violate everything Canada has stood for and will violate our international obligations.

The point is that it was not necessary. It did not have to be done that way. There was already in place a perfectly good series of models and recommendations on how to clean up the refugee determination procedure. We have the chairman of the committee in the House today, the committee which made recommendations on how it should be done. They were supported by the so-called special interest groups; for example, the Central Committee of the Mennonite Church, the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, and the United Church of Canada. Those so-called interest groups help people who are trying to help refugees. The idea that somehow someone who is involved in helping refugees is part of the special interest group and should not be listened to is not acceptable. The very people who sometimes risk their own lives and resources to help refugees are being cast aside as having no involvement or interest in the Bill. There was a solution.

Hon. Members opposite suggest that somehow the Bill will clean up a mess which was not there. The fact is that they will create a worse mess. They will be challenged before the Supreme Court in terms of contradicting Article VII of the Charter. The granting of oral hearings will create an unworkable mess at our borders. It will create a clear and disturbing reaction in the international community when they see Canada contravening its obligations. It will create a worse problem internationally because the fact of the matter is that we will be contributing to the problem, not solving it, with this piece of legislation. That is the real issue.

It is unworkable and unfair, and it will make the problem worse.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join in the debate today. I will get to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) a little later in my remarks. Suffice it to say he was immigration Minister for some time and is part of the problem, not the solution. That is well documented, but I will talk about it later.

We are debating Bill C-55, a Bill which will change the procedure of determining refugees who claim refugee status in our country.

I represent a riding of some 220,000 people. It has grown 24 per cent between 1981 and 1986. That tremendous growth is continuing today. I believe that my constituency is a fairly good cross-section of Canada today. It has a mix of immigrants from all parts of the world. There are those who have come here as refugees. There are those who have come through the other streams of immigration.

An NDP Member today talked about two streams. There are really four streams of immigration, which I do not think people in Canada really understand. One of those streams is the refugee stream, and it is a separate one. We also have the family reunification stream, which again is separate. We have the entrepreneurial stream from which we probably realize some 5,000 or 6,000 people per year. We have the independent class, those who apply and may have skills required in Canada and are accepted as immigrants. We have four different streams.

Let me refer to what has been going on. It was going on in the years when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Immigration. Because the system we had for hearing refugee applications was bureaucratic and time consuming, the average wait for a hearing was five years, sometimes extending to seven years. By the time their hearings came up, whether or not they were legitimate refugees, they had purchased homes, got married, and had a couple of Canadian children. Of course the first person who went to defend them at their hearings five years later was their employer who said, "Gee, don't send him back; he is one of the best employees I have". Also the local priest or minister would support them, or even the convenor of the local soccer league who would say, "he is the best coach I ever had. He is a pillar in the community".

Nobody is questioning whether or not they were good immigrants or good new citizens of Canada. The point was that the system allowed people to come to our shores, whether or not they were legitimate refugees, and load up the system so heavily that by the time their hearings came up it was almost impossible to take a negative position toward an individual.

When the Conservative Government took power in 1984 there were 20,000 people waiting for hearings. Word spreads pretty quickly around the world these days. All of a sudden Canada's system looked like an easy way to get into the promised land.

During the years when my hon. friend from Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Immigration he knew of these problems. His record as Minister of Immigration is not a sterling couple of years, driving a person with a record over the border to give him a ministerial permit to get them back in. His type of immigration policy is well documented.

Let us look at what has happened. Every year since 1980 immigration through the refugee system has increased and increased to the point that last year they were coming in at the rate of 1,200 per week and the system could not absorb them. The way the system was set up we could not absorb that many people.

Had we not taken action, the estimates are that 40,000 people would have come in that way this year. What we are finding out is that 85 per cent of them are not refugees as recognized by the United Nations. They may be economic refugees looking for a better future. I understand that. I understand perfectly why people try to come to Canada, why they want to get into our wonderful country.

I should like to refer to what the people in my riding have said to me, as well as to the calls and letters I have received. They represent people from a broad cross-section—people from Asia, people from Europe, and those who are many generation Canadians. A big mixture and they say: "We are a generous people". I disagree with Rabbi Plaut. He does not think we are a tolerant people. He said that in Maclean's magazine. He thinks Canadian tolerance is overblown. I disagree with the Rabbi on that. We are a tolerant people. However, taking into account every person who wrote me and every person who called, the bottom line is "don't play us for suckers". The bottom line is, "If you want to come to Canada, if you want a better future, go through the proper routes".

• (1220)

Canada has accepted refugees year after year. I hear members of the Opposition say that we do not care about refugees. I would like to remind them that it was a Conservative Government under the leadership of the Right Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark) and the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) that brought refugees from Vietnam, the boat people, to Canada. There was an outpouring of feeling for those people. They were legitimate refugees and it was important that they come here to find a haven and that Canada play its part. As a matter of fact, Canada played a magnificent part in that emergency.

This legislation will not stop legitimate refugees from coming to Canada. Canadians are generous people. We brought in 20,000 refugees last year and we will bring in the same number this year, but they will be legitimate refugees.

What the people of my riding are telling me and what I feel most earnestly is that we cannot have people abuse our system to come to Canada. All those who are legitimate refugees and immigrants will suffer because Canadians are saying all of a sudden, "wait a minute," and a backlash against immigration is beginning. That is dangerous. We do not need and do not want that in this country. We need immigration to grow. Immigration creates employment, it does not take jobs away from anyone. I believe the estimate of the Department of Employment and Immigration is that for every immigrant that comes to Canada, a job and a half is created, so we need immigration but we want legitimate immigrants and we want a refugee system that will assure that legitimate refugees come to Canada and that Canada plays it part in the refugee system.

Bill C-84 is now in committee and we are debating Bill C-55 today. I might remind Hon. Members that we are debating an amendment posed by the Liberals to put this matter off for another six months. That is the motion that is on the floor, put by the critic for the Liberal Party. He made a great speech in the House the other day but never mentioned once that he had moved the amendment to put this off for six months. Canadians do not want that. We will vote against that six-month hoist. We want this Bill to get into committee. We will have hearings in committee. If there are flaws in the Bill, we will take a good look at them. We will make sure that we are doing the right thing, but to postpone this with a six-month hoist like the Liberals would like to do is hypocrisy and Canadians know it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, after hearing the spouting of the last Hon. Member, one would think that there was a true emergency and that this was something the Government had just discovered this summer. As Hon. Members know, the Government sat back for three years and did absolutely nothing about the situation. Finally it introduced legislation in the House in May, brought it back for less than three-hour's-worth of debate in June and never brought it before the House of Commons again until just recently.

It is obvious that the Government did not make this issue a priority until it felt that there was some overwhelming public opinion on it as a result of the landings in Nova Scotia this summer. The Government has not shown a true commitment to reforming the immigration laws of Canada.

The Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration studied this matter and members of all three Parties worked hard to produce a Bill of which all Canadians would be proud, a Bill which would recognize that there are genuine refugees and that there are problems with the immigration system, while also recognizing that there are very frequent abuses of the refugee system. The House of Commons committee studied this issue and came forward with concrete proposals. The Government has done nothing to introduce those concrete proposals to the House so we could have legislation of which all Canadians could be proud. Now, as a result of the landings in Nova Scotia, the Government wants to move quickly.

The committee to study Bill C-84 met for the first time last night and for the second time this morning. We have heard Conservative members of that committee urging that this matter be dealt with in four days. We have heard Conservative Members urge in the House that Bill C-55, the legislation we are dealing with now, be dealt with quickly.

I believe it is important that we actually look at the legislation we are passing so that we may understand its implications and ensure that we are not railroaded by public opinion of the moment. We should make sure that we do not commit in 1987 the equivalent of turning back a boat full of Jewish refugees in 1939. We should make sure that we do not have a recurrence of the way we treated Japanese Canadians in that same era. I am afraid that some Hon. Members from the government side are trying to create that same kind of public hysteria. They are building on the fears of Canadians rather than trying to make them understand the true situation.

It is obvious to me that more and more Canadians are realizing that Bills C-55 and C-84 are wrong, are faulty and were drafted without any real understanding of their implications. Reading some of the more recent editorials, I would point out that as informed journalists have looked at this legislation, they have realized that these Bills are bad and are ruinous to Canada's reputation for being fair.

Let me quote from the Winnipeg Free Press of August 14, 1987:

> One of the reasons why thousands of people try to sneak into Canada either illegally or by claiming to be refugees is that the legal routes are unreasonably difficult. Canada discourages immigration except by people with needed skills which Canadians workers lack or with large personal fortunes.
> A strong back, an adventurous spirit and a willing heart now count for nothing in the immigration system, though these were the assets which got the ancestors of most Canadians into the country.

In that respect, like many MPs, I have heard that Canadians are upset with the present immigration system. They are saying that we must do something to these people who landed in Nova Scotia because their own relatives cannot get over. That perception does exist, and again Conservative Members, the Ministers and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) are trying to promote it. They are trying to say that these people who landed in Nova Scotia are taking the place of legitimate immigrants. That is not true.

Whether the Liberals or the Conservatives are in power, the immigration system of Canada is horrendous. People who should have been allowed into Canada have not been allowed in, whether they be refugees or immigrants who tried to qualify under other parts of the law. We find abuses that are heartbreaking because they keep families apart. People who want to come over here to make an honest and sincere contribution to Canada are denied that opportunity. People who would benefit us by their culture and industry are denied access to Canada.

Regardless of who is the Minister of Employment and Immigration at a particular moment, when you appeal to the Minister he or she refuses to exercise the prerogative to make exceptions. Like many MPs, I have written to the various Ministers responsible trying to get them to recognize the peculiar situations in which people find themselves. I have asked them to intervene, only to be refused.

It is not simply a matter of refugees landing in Nova Scotia displacing immigrant family members who are not yet in Canada. The problem is that the Government has not come to grips with the immigration situation. It does not have a policy which is fair to people from Chile, the U.K. or other parts of this world.

In my own riding there is a bank manager who wants to bring his uncle to Canada, an uncle that raised him. We have written to three successive Ministers pointing out that this is not just an uncle, but a much closer relation. The bank manager is willing to support the uncle. Yet we cannot get the support. Another constituent has an aunt in Chile and cannot bring her over. We have tried to get the Minister to act and he will not.

There are many problems with our immigration system but that is not a reason for rushing this legislation through the House. Neither Bill C-84 nor C-55 will do anything to resolve the problems I have talked about. This legislation will not create a fairer system. The problems will still exist under this legislation and people should not try to sell it as a fairer system which will allow aunts, uncles or cousins to come to Canada.

I only have a minute or two left and it is very unlikely I will have a chance to address this Bill again. If I had the time, I would like to quote from the Free Press or The Gazette, The Edmonton Journal, The Vancouver Sun or the Calgary Herald, all of which have editorials that can be found in today's Quorum pointing out how wrong the Government is with this legislation.

There are other groups, including the Manitoba Mennonite Central Committee, who are concerned. That committee wrote a letter dated August 14 to all Members of Parliament expressing their deep concern with this legislation. They point out the history of Mennonites and the fact that they may not have been allowed into this country under this legislation. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), who is a member of that group, should look at his own history and ask himself whether his ancestors would be allowed in this country if this legislation had been passed 50 or 60 years ago.

A lot of Canadians should look at the legislation and ask if it is fair, and whether it deals with the problem in a way of which we can be proud. I think the answer most fair-minded Canadians will give is, no, it is not fair, it is not something of which we can be proud, and it will not address the real problems we face. For that reason I suggest the Government withdraw the legislation. If it refuses to do so, certainly we should spend the required amount of time to make sure it gets thorough study.

Mr. Jack Shields (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity afforded me today to comment on Bill C-55.

A poster was distributed by the UN High Commission for Refugees showing a picture of graffiti on a refugee camp wall which says, "Refugee go home". The caption under the picture says, "He would if he could". In that message we have the essence of refugees and what distinguishes them from other immigrants.

Immigrants seek new horizons and opportunities for settlement. These are the people referred to when we talk about the influx in the early part of this century into Canada, and in the settlement and development of western Canada. Their desire to emigrate arises from their own ambitions and a desire to break out of an old routine. Their current environment is too limited. Perhaps in the case of Polish or Ukrainian immigrants it is the opportunity to own and develop land that brings them here. There is a chance to fulfil their dreams.

Refugees, on the other hand, are a people with a stake in their community. Sometimes they are among the leaders and the most progressive. They are persecuted and forced out of their own countries because of who and what they are. They may be members of minority groups like the Ugandan Asians Canada admitted in the early 1970s. They may suffer because of their religion, like the Iranian Baha'is. They may be political dissidents, members of a particular social class or people of a certain nationality. Canada's policy is that although refugees are not voluntary migrants, they can be helped to rebuild their lives by being given an opportunity to emigrate and settle in a country like Canada. That is what our policy was all about; providing durable refuge to refugees for whom no other remedy is available.

For that reason we have two programs. One is a program of assistance. Most of our assistance involves contributions to help refugees in camps in other countries who are, like the Afghans, waiting for a political settlement so they can be repatriated to their own country. It also involves bringing large numbers of refugees to Canada as immigrants through our immigration process or programs. Other speakers have noted the details and they have been repeated time and time again in this House. However, the Government will pay for the settlement of 12,000 refugees this year. Private groups and individuals will bring in 6,000 or more for a total exceeding 18,000.

The second program deals with protection, for refugees who simply arrive, legally or illegally, and ask for a safe haven in Canada. When dealing with true refugees, this is the first priority and this is our obligation. We are some distance from most refugee producing situations, and we are not accustomed to this role. However, for the individual refugee who simply arrives, the provision of safe haven without qualification is vital to the process. That is what Bill C-55 is all about; swift, sure and generous response to those who do not have safe haven and who would be persecuted if they were forced to go back to their own countries. I want to repeat that; a swift, sure and generous response to those who do not have safe haven and who would be persecuted if they were returned to their own countries.

This role is not discharged by this Government by simply accepting everyone who claims to be a refugee. We do not discharge the obligation of the Government simply by accepting everyone who comes to our shore and says, "I claim refuge as a refugee".

• (1240)

The dilemma that we face is to find a fair and effective way to separate those who need our protection from those who do not. That is really the bottom line. Our experience in Canada and that of every other major receiving country in the northern hemisphere shows that in an open refugee system the clear majority of people who claim refugee status are not refugees at all. Among real refugees many are simply changing one form of prior protection for another at the expense of those who have no protection whatsoever.

We know that people have been arriving at various points across Canada and ripping up their passports and travel documents because they had in fact already received refugee status in another country such as Germany or Holland. This must be stopped.

The principles behind Bill C-55 are, first, absolute guarantee of protection for those genuine refugees who do not have safe haven or did not have an opportunity to acquire it elsewhere. The principle of the Bill is not to allow a refugee who has refugee status in another country to come to Canada's shores and rip up their travel documents and any indication of the status they do have, and then apply for and receive that same status in Canada.

Second, we want the highest standards of procedural fairness including the benefit of the doubt to the claimant demonstrated by certain features, the first being oral proceedings. Every person arriving claiming refugee status is allowed to tell their story at a proceeding in their own language expressed in their own way. They will do this in front of two-member panels, two people will be entrusted with listening to the story and making a decision. If there is a split decision, the benefit of the doubt would go to the claimant. The proceedings will be non-adversarial. In other words, there will not be a prosecutor attempting to trip up or in any way badger the individual making a claim for refugee status. The next point is that everyone will have a right to counsel.

This is a simple and flexible procedure to ensure speedy identification of genuine refugees and early removal of abusers. We must have that to maintain the integrity of the refugee system in Canada. We must have legislative protections for those determined to be refugees, including the right to apply for permanent residence. If we accept people as refugees, they must be legislatively protected to allow them to apply for permanent residence.

Bill C-55 constitutes a fair compromise and respects the ideals toward which well-intentioned people and countries direct themselves. This system as a whole has more safeguards and offers higher standards of procedural fairness than others in effect and is one which all Canadians may be confident will not expose anyone to the risk of persecution.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate this morning on Bill C-55.

Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that before the House was recalled last week, all Members had a chance to meet with constituents in their respective ridings and had many opportunities to discuss the refugee question. Mr. Speaker, this is an international problem and, as you know, there are many countries that receive far more refugees than we do. Nevertheless, Canadians are upset about the methods used by some groups to enter Canada.

Since 1980, under the Liberal Government, there was an awareness that we might have this kind of problem and a number of studies were ordered. Toward the end of the Liberal Government's last term, the studies and recommendations were before Cabinet, and after the election, when the Conservative Government took over, it had access to the same recommendations, and at the time it could have acted on those recommendations and found solutions to the problems we are facing today.

But no! The Conservative Government decided in the fall of 1984 that it would ignore recommendations that were the result of studies that had taken several years to complete. They ordered other studies, which, as we know, reached the same conclusions.

The fact that three years later we are confronted with a crisis of this magnitude is the fault of the Conservative Government's inaction, a Government which today is trying to take advantage of popular sentiment to pass a Bill that will prevent genuine refugees from entering Canada.

Mr. Speaker, there is a lot here that is just a matter of semantics, but we all agree we must not let phony refugees enter Canada. However, we do not agree with the methods for dealing with this problem. We on this side of the House believe that Bill C-55 does not provide a solution. The problem is with the process. The Conservative Members tell us that Bill C-55 will provide for a screening process to determine whether refugees are genuine or not and to do so more quickly. However, after examining the Bill, we find that the process has become more complicated and will take more time.

Second, when drafting this legislation, and I am referring to Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 as well as any other immigration policy the Government may wish to table, did the Government ever wonder why we have so many phony refugees in our country? One Hon. Member said 85 per cent of our refugees were phony refugees. Is there any particular reason for this?

Mr. Speaker, I can tell you about my experience in the riding of Saint-Léonard—Anjou where there are a number of communities other than the Francophone or Anglophone groups. My constituents are upset, just like anyone else, when they hear about cases where people who have a brother or a sister, a cousin or other close relatives, are prepared to give their homes and their money as security to get their relatives to Canada. So they are prepared to offer every conceivable guarantee and even regular employment, yet under the terms of the existing immigration statute these people simply cannot be allowed into Canada. We are understandably indignant when we see other people coming in through the back door. In this respect we agree that something has to be done.

If the Government were to look at it this way, Mr. Speaker, I think it would promote the kind of immigration policy which at least would give hope to people who are anxious to resettle in Canada after complying with all legal requirements.

But right now, Mr. Speaker, for all practical purposes Canada's doors are shut tight. But there is a way for somebody to enter Canada: he lands here with a tourist visa, hires a lawyer, claims to be a refugee and, owing to the lengthy process involved, he is allowed to remain in this country.

After three years in office and fully cognizant with studies made and reports submitted before the last election, the Government still has no policy. People who made their move before this Government was elected did not take that problem into account. If today we had an immigration policy fully consistent with the turn of events since the beginning of this country, people who are willing to work and earn an honest living would be allowed in to resettle here and promote prosperity in this beautiful country, Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to take the floor in this House today. I am one of those who benefitted from the Canadian policy under which it was possible to come here and entertain every hope of success. As it happens, Mr. Speaker, I must wonder whether I would even have been able to gain entry into Canada in the 1950s if I had been faced with today's immigration laws and such measures as Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. Mr. Speaker, that is where all Hon. Members should ask themselves the question. I am pleased to see that we have here with us in the House the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr.

Weiner). I am sure he is quite close to the ethnic communities in the Montreal area.

Instead of adopting stringent legislation to create the impression everywhere in the world that Canada is closing its doors completely or putting people in jail who, for humanitarian reasons, help legitimate refugees enter Canada, we should develop a comprehensive immigration policy. That is why Canadians generally are furious. We need a comprehensive immigration policy to give hope to all those who want to come to Canada. For the relatives who are here, we need a family reunification policy, Mr. Speaker.

Therefore, I hope that Bill C-55 will be redrafted in its entirety. Instead of closing our doors, we should open them to all those who want to immigrate to Canada, while sending them at the same time clear and precise messages that when they come here they will have to respect... While in the process of integration, they will have nevertheless to take into account the Canadian context, accept Canadian tolerance, respect our laws and build a future for themselves and their children.

Mr. Speaker, you are signalling that I still have a few minutes left. That is a debate which would definitely require more than ten minutes to truly examine all the aspects of this Bill and develop a real immigration policy. I hope that my colleagues, especially those who belong to the Government majority and can determine the fate of the Bill, once this debate is over, will announce an immigration policy that will give hope to those who want to come to Canada and become full-fledged citizens.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate because of the importance of the issue and the widespread public concern. I have been impressed, as have other Members, by the intensity of interest on the part of the public on this issue and by the hundreds of telephone calls to my constituency office, as have been received at the offices of many other Members.

I want to bring into this debate some representation of the opinions expressed by citizens to me, because it is their opinions that provide us with the strongest argument against the entirely unwarranted amendment which the Liberal Opposition has put to the motion on Bill C-55.

Let me cite these sentences from letters that have come to me from across the country. The first is from Halifax. "Surely Canada has to be master of its own destiny". Another letter from Quebec states, "I heartily approve of your proposed tough new legislation to deal with the so-called refugees". One letter from Scarborough states, "What kind of message are we sending to the rest of the world?" Another states, "These people knew what they were doing when they paid their money to someone to illegally bring them to Canada". Another letter states, "It is extremely unfortunate that in our complacency the silent majority will once again be the losers". Here is a letter from a Toronto person who says, "Why should these people be allowed to jump the line?" Again, from Toronto, "One has only to set foot in Canada and the patsy Canadians will spend years and millions of dollars fighting each other over whether you can remain". Again, "They have entered Canada illegally". A letter from London, Ontario states, "A clear signal must be given to the world that Canada is no dumping ground for impatient, dishonest, unreasonable people". A resident of Willowdale states, "It has been proved beyond any doubt that it is really profitable to be a violator of the law than to be law-abiding". Also from Toronto, "Protest against the cynical outlawlessness as exercised by another boatload". Another letter states, "We are incensed at the slackness of this Government". Another states, "It is likely that before this letter comes out in print the politicians who want only more votes might have caved in". A resident of Niagara Falls, Ontario states, "When are we going to stop being the immigration patsies of the world". Another letter from Saskatchewan states, "Obviously a quick one is being attempted and we cannot help but feel somewhat frustrated that this modern-day rum-running operation would have even a chance of success". A letter from Wynyard, Saskatchewan states, "I don't care if these people had come from Iceland, Ireland or the U.S.A., what they did was wrong". From Calgary, Alberta, "I am looking forward to the day when the Government takes necessary actions to prevent the abuse of the goodwill of Canadians toward genuine refugees". A letter from Vancouver, British Columbia states, "You must know that most Canadians want these invaders put back on the boat". A letter from Surrey—White Rock states, "Unless our Government is stern about this there will be others who try this piece of international thuggery". A letter from Vancouver states, "I have real difficulty in understanding why these people have circumvented the normal means of travelling and have landed clandestinely and have suddenly acquired legal rights". Another letter from the west states, "To want to be Canadian citizens and to start the process by breaking its laws is disgusting". Another letter from Vancouver states, "People on the west coast are furious about the handling of this affair". Again, from Vancouver, "We are not allowing good people in, or at least we are delaying their entrance for months on end".

All these quotations show not only that the public is concerned but that the public wants action. We have to be aware that debating an amendment to delay consideration and voting on this Bill by six months is flying in the face of the people in Canada.

I see that it is one o'clock. I will reserve the rest of my remarks for this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

CHOICE OF MONTREAL AS SITE FOR NEW SPACE AGENCY

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, for the third time this year, I rise in this House to ask the Conservative Government for an answer as to the location of the future space agency. The city of Montreal is getting impatient and wants to have that agency in its area.

The Canadian Space Agency will have a central and determinant role in the development of Canada's space industry. Its economic impact, especially on employment, will be very significant. I therefore believe it is essential that its location be announced as soon as possible. That decision has been postponed for too long. The Canadian aerospace industry is for the most part concentrated in Montreal. It is in Montreal that Canada's aerospace industry had its beginning some 25 years ago. Today, Montreal remains the capital of that industry in Canada.

Although a number of cities and provinces would like to host the Canadian Space Agency, they all recognize Montreal's importance and experience in that field. It is therefore time that this Government also recognized this and located the space agency in Montreal. Foot dragging has been going on far too long. The Government must take action and select Montreal as the capital of the Canadian aerospace industry.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

UTILIZATION OF PUBLIC FUNDS FOR CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I have received at my riding office address two letters dated July 1987, both of them typed on House of Commons stationery and both signed by the leader of the socialist party. Mr. Speaker, these letters begin as follows, and I quote:

> Dear Mr. Fontaine,
> I thank you for taking some of your time to convey your preoccupations regarding the tax system.

All four other paragraphs also contain misrepresentations.

Mr. Speaker, first of all this correspondence represents a misuse of public moneys and if it is sent to all Canadians it will cost taxpayers 500,000 $ every time.

Mr. Speaker, the leader of the socialist party should explain to the House, as I have often asked him to do, why he uses money from Canadian taxpayers' pockets for the benefit of his party, which is made out to be so honest and transparent.

Furthermore, I take the opportunity to warn the leader of the socialist party to stop sending me his fundraising letters. You socialists are wasting your time with me. Mr. Speaker, I have had just about enough of socialist harassment!

FINANCE

SCIENTIFIC RESEARCH TAX CREDIT—COST TO TAXPAYERS

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. MacKay) has now confirmed by letter that the Scientific Research Tax Credit is going to cost Canadians over $1 billion and has given figures that indicate that cost may go to $2 billion or the equivalent of $76 for every man, woman and child in the country. That is equal to almost half of what Canada spends annually on research and development.

This boondoggle was created by the Liberal Government, but when the Conservative Government had a chance to slay the monster it gave it new life by a grandfather clause which allowed alleged abusers to continue to take advantage of a rich tax boondoggle.

Despite assurances from the Minister that his Department would give all the necessary resources for tracking down fraudulent projects, the track record is not good. Not only have there been only four prosecutions after years of investigation but the Department has not collected one additional cent since March, 1986. A government official has now admitted that the Government is no longer going to go after many of the culprits. It is thereby giving up millions and millions of dollars which belong to Canadian taxpayers.

When is the Government going to live up to its responsibility to the Canadian people? When is the Conservative Government going to admit its responsibility and take action against abusers who have milked the ordinary taxpayers of billions and billions of their hard-earned dollars?

THE ECONOMY

GROWTH STATISTICS

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I have here the Quarterly Economic Review published yesterday by the Department of Finance. The highlights are found on page 1.

Real growth picked up very strongly to 6.3 per cent. The final domestic demand was also very robust, growing at 6.1 per cent.

Residential investment continued to be the strongest component of final domestic demand as housing starts rose to levels not seen since 1978. Business non-residential investment spending surged.

The trade balance improved in the first quarter. Exports of goods and the terms of trade both increased. Employment growth increased to a 4.2 per cent annual pace. The unemployment rate dropped to 8.9 per cent in June, its lowest level since February, 1982.

These, Sir, are tremendous accomplishments. I am proud to be a supporter of a Government which has turned the national economy completely around in such a short space of time.

CHOICE OF MONTREAL AS SITE FOR NEW SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): In Montreal, Mr. Speaker, people of every political affiliation, spokesmen for business circles, the Journal de Montréal and La Presse make up a common front to bring pressure to bear on the Conservative Government and urge it to honour its commitment and designate Montreal as the site of the space agency.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members of the House—and personally as a Quebec Member from the Montreal region I support this movement—and I urge Conservative Members from the Montreal region as well as the New Democratic Party to take position in this case and once and for all demonstrate that they have the interests of Quebecers at heart and are prepared to support Montreal as the site of the space agency.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

TRIBUTE TO MILITARY COLLEGE STUDENT OFFICERS

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, to get on the floor of this House a subject usually has to be about wars, rumours of wars, disasters and near-disasters, crises, real and imagined. I would like to say a word about something positive, encouraging and even heart-warming, something that I was impressed by during a brief visit to the Collège Militaire Royal de Saint Jean, Quebec, where I saw face to face 218 young Canadians selected from many hundreds more for training as future officers in the Canadian Armed Forces. They are now undergoing an intensive program that takes them each day, seven days a week, from 6 a.m. to 11 p.m., from parade square drilling to lectures on all dimensions of military service.

They are impressive for, at the age of 18 and 19, they are mature in their acceptance of discipline, their readiness to meet a challenge and to serve a cause greater than themselves. I refer to them because they and others at other defence colleges of Canada are an inspiring demonstration of the quality of Canadian young people.

The next time I sing the national anthem and sing: "O Canada, we stand on guard for thee" I will want to keep in mind these young people prepared to spend the rest of their lives doing just that.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS

PRINCIPAL GROUP BANKRUPTCY—SALE OF ASSETS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, today marks another sad chapter in the inadequate regulation of financial institutions by Governments with the sell-off of some of the Principal Group's assets. This will not significantly help the 67,000 persons who hold uninsured contracts with Principal subsidiaries such as Associated Investors and First Investors. Had the federal Government simply insisted that all RRSP contributions be covered by deposit insurance, many of these small investors could have been secured.

Since the federal Government gives significant tax savings to RRSP contributions, it is clearly in the Government's interest to see that these contributions are as safe as possible. Instead, about $115 million of the losses by Principal's subsidiaries are lost RRSP contributions.

How much longer will it be before the small investor, who puts trust in the Government which encouraged Canadians to invest in RRSPs, gets better consumer protection? Many investors in Alberta and in other parts of Canada want that question answered today. They want the Government and Parliament to enact legislation which will enable the CDIC to give Canadians the protection to which they are entitled.

IMMIGRATION

ABUSES OF SYSTEM—SUPPORT FOR GOVERNMENT LEGISLATION

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, the people of Calgary South and, indeed, the people of all of Canada want immediate action to deal with the present serious refugee problem. Tough legislation is needed now to deter those who abuse our generosity and those who wish to profit, and I repeat profit, by breaking our laws.

I congratulate the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) on his two Bills, Bill C-84 and Bill C-55, which will stop the flow of illegal claimants abusing our country; stop queue-jumpers who are interfering with immigration to Canada; will promote family reunification; and will streamline the process to ensure a fair and quick response to people who arrive and make claims for refugee status.

Our doors will always be open to genuine refugees who need our protection. We will continue to welcome immigrants who apply through the proper channels.

A clear signal must be sent to the world now. Canadians urge speedy passage of Bill C-84 and Bill C-55.

HISTORIC SITES

LEFEBVRE MONUMENT OF MEMRAMCOOK

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Westmorland—Kent): Last week, Mr. Speaker, a number of Acadian community organizations expressed their dissatisfaction concerning the Government's delay in taking action with respect to the Lefebvre monument in New Brunswick's Memramcook Valley.

It will be recalled that in 1984 a fund of $700,000 had been earmarked for this historic site which highlights the survival of Acadians. After the election of the Conservative Government the fund was frozen and then reduced to $500,000, which meant the building would not include the concert hall, the main component of this monument.

In addition, the Government wants to get rid of the property. It refuses to acknowledge the significance of this monument in the history of the Acadians, yet the federal Minister of Tourism himself had promised in Memramcook to take action at the earliest opportunity.

The Government's refusal to act in this case is an insult to the Acadian population, an insult which Acadians are not about to forget.

INTERNATIONAL OPTIC COMMISSION

FOURTEENTH CONFERENCE IN QUEBEC

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, from August 24 to 28 the fourteenth conference of the International Commission for Optics will be held in Quebec City, co-sponsored by the National Research Council and Laval University.

Under the theme "Optics and the Computer Age", this Conference will focus especially on the use of optics in communications and the impact of computer science on the automation of traditional optical measurement techniques.

The last meeting of this Commission was held in 1984 in Sapporo, Japan. This year, over twenty countries will participate, including China, India, Poland, the USSR, Mexico, Australia, the United States, and of course Canada.

It will be the first time an International Optics Conference is held in Canada, and I am especially proud that Quebec City has been chosen to host this important conference as research activities play a major role in the Quebec region.

As you are probably aware, Laval University, the INRS, the GATIQ, and so on, do a lot of work in this field, and the coming opening of the National Optics Institute in Sainte-Foy will emphasize the technological vocation of the Quebec area.

I therefore want to wish every success to the organizers of this international event and to congratulate Laval University for acting as co-sponsor.

CELTIC AFFAIRS

HIGHLAND PIPING AND DRUMMING—CANADIAN BANDS TAKE FIRST AND SECOND PLACES

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, one of the last remnants of Canada's colonial past disappeared short days ago in Scotland when two Canadian pipe bands came out on top in the world championship for Highland piping and drumming. This is the first time that Canadian bands have superseded Scottish bands in this way. The 78th Fraser Highlanders, and Simon Fraser University Pipes and Drums, placed first and second respectively. They are to be commended for their excellence, and for representing Canada so well in their endeavours.

In recent years leading Canadian pipe bands have distinguished themselves by the freshness, the creativity, and the finesse which they have brought to traditional piping and drumming. The fact that this is now recognized, accepted, and even acclaimed in Scotland itself is something in which all Canadians should take pride. Canadians too are now able to say with confidence: "Here's tae us, wha's like us. Damn few, and they're a' deid!"

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I know the House will allow the Speaker to express a certain satisfaction in having heard the moving and appropriate words of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) who is himself a distinguished piper. Of course the House will also have noticed that the Speaker has some particular interest in the two Fraser pipe bands that won first and second place.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SALE OF WEST KOOTENAY POWER AND LIGHT TO UNITED STATES CORPORATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the fight to keep West Kootenay Power and Light under Canadian control continues today in British Columbia where the Kootenay—Okanagan Electric Consumers Association is attempting to appeal the decision of the B.C. Utilities Commission to approve the sale to the U.S. based Utilicorp.

The provincial and federal Governments have made a bad error in judgement in approving this first ever sale of a public utility to a foreign-owned company. The U.S. Government recognizes the perils of foreign ownership of its utilities, and it has banned similar actions.

The only reason the Minister responsible could give for the approval was that market forces determined the outcome, and that Canada would, in some way as yet unspecified, benefit from foreign ownership of this utility. It is a sad day when the federal Government abandons Canadian ownership of public utilities.

I urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to stand up and prevent the foreign takeover of our public utilities. Canadians would prefer to retain ownership of our public utilities.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

MANITOBA—EFFECT OF PROVINCIAL SURTAX ON INCOMES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Selkirk—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, we just heard some good news from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie), but I am sorry to have to bring forth some bad news.

Since July of this year working Manitobans have been taking home less pay thanks to the NDP provincial surtax of 2 per cent on their incomes. Most Manitobans have no choice and must still live in Manitoba and pay such excessive taxes. Others in Manitoba have options.

The Royal Bank is now in the process of relocating some of its administration from Winnipeg to Alberta. Why? The last Manitoba budget increased the capital tax on banks from 1.9 per cent to 3 per cent, costing the Royal Bank $4.5 million more. Payroll tax was increased by 50 per cent to 2.25 per cent. These anti-business taxes are driving an increasing number of employers, employees, and investments elsewhere.

The excessive taxation of the New Democratic Party in Manitoba is causing businesses to relocate. When businesses relocate, so do the jobs. It is only fortunate that these businesses and their employees can still find provinces within Canada where taxation is progressive and business is welcome.

Honestly, Mr. Speaker, with these kinds of penalties can we really blame new businesses and investors for staying away from Manitoba?

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

FEDERAL INITIATIVE WELCOMED

Mr. Bill Gottselig (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, the recently announced western diversification initiative is good news, not only for my home province of Saskatchewan but for all western Canada.

This initiative, under the leadership of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), will assist entrepreneurs to develop new ideas into projects which will create not only jobs but will help to diversify the western Canadian economy and make us a little less vulnerable to the uncertainties of the world commodity market.

The injection of this new money, $1.2 billion, is proof positive that we have put our money where our mouth is. It represents a solid commitment on the part of the Government to assist regional development of western Canada.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—INVESTMENT ISSUE—NEGOTIATOR'S MANDATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since Parliament resumed for this so-called emergency session we have asked some serious questions of the Government on the current free trade negotiations. So far we have been rewarded with nothing but glib answers.

Since the issue is so very important, I want to put a few straightforward questions to the Prime Minister, and I think Canadians could expect some straightforward answers.

In her remarks last spring the Minister for International Trade said the following:

> So far we are dealing only with trade-related investment measures. The Americans want more. We are listening.

Those were her words. I ask the Prime Minister has the Government agreed to this request from the Americans? Has the mandate of our own negotiator been extended and expanded beyond mere trade related measures?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the situation is as it was when the Minister for International Trade replied, but I think I should make the point that as we get into the last weeks of the trade negotiations it would not be helpful to the position of Canada were we to be announcing, item by item, development by development, every change or every step along the way in the negotiating process. I trust that it is not what the Leader of the Opposition is asking for.

I want to indicate to him again that while we are prepared, indeed anxious, to provide the kind of thorough briefing that was offered to him by the Minister for International Trade the other day, we do not propose to publicize and advertise our negotiating strategy in a way which would endanger the Canadian position.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and his other colleagues have given that answer before. We are not asking for tactical responses. We are asking to know the scope of the negotiations and whether the issues have now gone beyond trade related issues, whether they include the request of the United States for unfettered investment in Canada. It is a very fundamental issue and it has nothing to do with tactics.

PUBLICATION OF REPORTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government has always refused to reveal any information contained in departmental studies on the impact of free trade on this country and on Canada's regions.

These departmental reports have either been kept back or heavily censored, ostensibly because publishing these reports would harm Canada's negociating position.

Could the Prime Minister, considering that Canadians are entitled to this information to form their own opinion and that today the Government is still refusing to publish these reports, inform the House that once the talks are completed, these reports will be published before the public debate and before the debate in Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Government did not refuse to publish the reports. A number of documents have been made available to the House. Explanations have been provided to a considerable extent by various Ministers during the debate in the House and on a number of other occasions.

Furthermore, thorough and serious studies made by the Economic Council of Canada, the C.D. Howe Institute, and others indicate that many hundreds of thousands of jobs will be created if a free trade treaty between Canada and the United States is signed.

I understand why the Leader of the Official Opposition is now formally objecting to a free trade treaty. However, I suggest that he recall the comments made the day before yesterday by Premier Bourassa of Quebec, who said that a free trade treaty was necessary, because otherwise Quebec might be faced with irreversible economic decline.

I think it is most unfortunate that the Liberal Party in this House has taken a stance against free trade that will deal a severe blow to the economy of Quebec and which runs counter to the wishes of Quebecers.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we here in the House are not in a position to assess the Prime Minister's statement because the reports we need to judge the talks and determine the effects of free trade on this country have been censored, manipulated and kept hidden from the Canadian people. That is the problem.

PROCESS TO RATIFY POSSIBLE TREATY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): If the Prime Minister insists on pursuing his current dangerous course on these negotiations, will he let Parliament know now what rights we will have at the end of the day? Will this treaty be subject to review by Parliament? Will it be referred to a parliamentary committee for detailed study? Will Parliament have the jurisdiction to ratify or veto the treaty?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend is acquainted with the rights and obligations of the Government of Canada as a sovereign nation in regard to treaties concluded in the international sphere with other sovereign countries.

I have already indicated on behalf of the Government of Canada that there will be ample opportunity for all Members of Parliament to discuss and debate any matter. If and when a treaty is concluded, it shall of course be submitted for consideration in an appropriate and thoughtful way by Members of the House. My right hon. friend is of course aware of this.

[Translation]

By the way, the Leader of the Opposition said in French that he is unable to assess the Canadian position at the bargaining table. He said so. The fact is that we are carrying on the tightest and the most complex and confidential negotiations and in spite of this the government—

Mr. Lapierre: Ha, ha!

Mr. Mulroney: Ha, ha! In spite of this . . . Of course! We are carrying confidential and difficult negotiations on behalf of Canada. In spite of that, the Government of Canada has offered to the Leader of the Official Opposition to give him a thorough briefing on what is going on at the negotiation table. He refused it. It is a shame because he missed an excellent opportunity to get acquainted with the matter.

[English]

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE ON RATIFICATION PROCESS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to raise a question with the Prime Minister. The one major flaw, of course, in the offer of the Minister for International Trade is that it did not include 25 million Canadians who have a right to know what is going on in the free trade negotiations.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister a follow-up question. He said that Parliament would be given an appropriate way of examining any proposed free trade deal. The Government has rejected the calls for full publication of reports and has rejected our call for a halt to the discussions until we know what the mandate is.

Can we get assurances from the Prime Minister that, first, Parliament will be sitting when the proposed agreement is announced October 5? Second, can we have assurance that there will be national public hearings at which all Canadians will have an opportunity to appear and make their case known? Third, can we be assured that this Parliament will have the right to recommend amendments to that agreement similar to what the U.S. Congress enjoys?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have been trying to make it clear for a long time that, despite the obvious preference of the Hon. Member, this is Canada, not the U.S. We operate by Canadian rules and in the Canadian interest. We do not intend to change our system to the American model which the Hon. Member appears to prefer.

There will be, as there has been, full parliamentary and public opportunity to consider any agreement which might be arrived at. The Prime Minister indicated that. The House of Commons will certainly be sitting during the period of time any agreement arrived at is going to be under consideration. There will be ample opportunity for that kind of consideration by Members of the House of Commons.

We have indicated to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the NDP that we are prepared to provide them with the kind of briefings that the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville sought on their behalf. Now the Hon. Member wants us to find a room and a table big enough for 25 million people to sit in on that confidential briefing.

Mr. Axworthy: In that last comment we have seen exactly what the Hon. Minister thinks of the right of those 25 million people to know what is going on. I would remind him that his model of the Canadian way of doing things may be a closed shop but our model is that it has to be open and accountable.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Since when?

Mr. McDermid: Don't turn your back on him, John.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated yesterday, in the interest of getting the maximum number of Members on their feet throughout Question Period, that some discipline would have to be exercised in preambles. I know the Hon. Member would want to co-operate and put his question.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, can the Hon. Minister be a little more specific in his response? Can he assure us that on October 5, when the President of the U.S., under his agreement with Congress, announces something, this Parliament will be in session so we will know exactly what that agreement proposes? Can he also assure us that subsequently there will be proper committee examination, with the full right to recommend amendments to any agreement within the period set forth under the fast-track arrangement which the Government agreed to with the U.S? It is your agreement to go by the fast-track, not ours.

Mr. Speaker: I again want to ask Members to respect the rules and refrain from using personal terms in asking questions of Ministers, or on the part of Ministers or Prime Ministers replying to those asking questions.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I note the Hon. Member's question about House business. I knew he wanted to be the Leader of his Party. I did not know he wanted to be the House Leader. He asked a question which I have answered.

BANKS AND BANKING

VARIABLE INTEREST RATES CHARGED TO FARMERS BY CHARTERED BANKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Finance. Before doing that, if the Government finds a single example of a Liberal Government—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Broadbent: If the Government finds a single example of a Liberal Government submitting a treaty to Parliament for consideration, please let us know.

Mr. Crosbie: Good point.

Mr. Mazankowski: Ask your friend.

Mr. Axworthy: Do you want me to answer for you?

Mr. Beatty: A lovers' quarrel.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: My question is with regard to the plight of farmers and many businessmen who took out loans from Canadian chartered banks in the early 1980s. At that time, as the Minister knows, many farmers and small-business people borrowed money from the banks at what they assumed would be a fixed interest rate. When interest rates started going up, mystery of mysteries, they found that they were being charged a variable interest rate, the net result of which was that the sample of some 40 farmers and small-businessmen who were surveyed were being overcharged to the extent, including interest, of some $60,000.

As the Minister may know, last night in Innisfail, Alberta, a group of such farmers and small-businesspeople got together to discuss what could be done to get some economic justice restored to them. What is the Government doing to get some economic justice for these people who were dealt with unfairly?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the hon. gentleman has been raised a number of times by Members on all sides of the House. The answer that I gave previously can be updated today.

First, there have been a series of court cases in the past dealing with this matter, the decisions on which have gone both ways. I have logically, therefore, suggested that matters of this sort should be dealt with in the courts.

There are subsidiary questions which the Hon. Member did not raise which are well worth looking at, one being the cost of doing the searches. I have been making inquiries and have some preliminary evidence of the cost of doing these inquiries in order to help those who are questioning the banks' practices.

ONTARIO SUPREME COURT DECISION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows very well that the most recent court decision was made at the highest level in the Ontario judicial system, the Ontario Supreme Court level. The decision came down on the side of the farmer against the bank and the bank, quite wisely in terms of the law as I understand it, decided not to appeal it. It seems that the bank recognized that justice was on the side of the farmer.

The Minister seems to be implying that the farmer ought to go back to the bank to borrow another $40,000 and when the bank asks for the purpose of the new loan he will say, "I want to take you to court". The Minister would conclude, I think, that most farmers are reluctant to pursue this in the courts because it costs them so much to do that.

Will the Government at least study a whole range of such loans made in the early 1980s to find the extent of damages? It has been estimated that 30 per cent of Canadian farmers are in serious financial difficulty. When will the Government come to the aid of the farmers as quickly as it did to the aid of the banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): First of all, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman wants the verdict of one court case to apply to all other situations. I find that an astonishing view of justice.

Mr. Broadbent: I didn't say that.

Mr. Hockin: Yes you did.

Mr. Speaker: He may or he may not have. That is not the way in which we refer to Hon. Members. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Hockin: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Second, on the question of fees I raise the point of doing searches. When a farmer or small-businessman believes that he has been unfairly dealt with by a bank, when he thought he had a fixed interest rate which became a variable rate, he goes to the bank and asks for his records. There are charges for that. I am considering whether those charges are reasonable and whether the research is done properly because that is integral to settling this problem in the courts.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER REVIEW SAMPLE LOANS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the Minister correctly, he is saying that the Government's policy is to leave it to the individual farmer to resolve this, that the Government will help the farmer with certain service charges but not with legal costs.

Since not only many farmers are involved in this but many small-businesspeople, will the Government undertake a sample review of the loans that were made at that time to learn the extent of the damage that has been done, and then report and consider the possibility of covering all the legitimate costs of farmers and small businesses to get some justice from the very wealthy and substantial banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to try to assess the extent of this problem. It is not that easy. He has been in touch with the banks and they are trying to make that assessment. When I have something to report to the House, I will report.

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF REPORT FORWARDED BY INSPECTOR GENERAL OF BANKS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of State for Finance. He knows that many farmers and small businessmen have been overcharged by the banks. He has a report in his office from the Inspector General of Banks which he has refused to make public. Will he make that report public?

Since the Minister has not set out any action to recover these funds for farmers and small-businessmen, will he consider establishing a Royal commission to investigate the matter and ensure that action is taken to refund these funds to farmers, many of whom have gone broke already? Perhaps some of those who are still hanging on can survive if the overcharged funds are returned to them.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is very similar to the previous set of questions. I can assure him that the Superintendent of Financial Institutions, not the Inspector General of Banks, is making an ongoing study of this. I will report to the House when a further report is given to me.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister explain why there was a public inquiry almost immediately when two western banks went broke? There was over $1 billion of restitution and assistance for them. Why is it that when banks have overcharged farmers there is no public inquiry and no action to assist them? Tens of thousands of farmers are facing serious financial difficulties. Why the disparity? There is action when a bank goes broke, but when they are overcharging farmers there is no action.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, a little bit of history. The reason the Government did what it did in the case of the Northland Bank and the CCB was to bail out the farmers, not the banks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FINANCE

RISKY BANK LOANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have just learned that the Government is doing almost nothing to help farmers who have been overcharged by the banks. Could the Minister confirm that his department, the Superintendent of Financial Institutions and the chartered banks signed recently a memorandum of understanding whereby chartered banks would be allowed to increase by approximately $5 billion their reserves against foreign loans deemed "risky"?

Could the Minister also confirm that, contrary to the normal practice of chartered banks, this transfer to the reserves will be made over a one-year period instead of five, and that the cost to the federal treasury will therefore be approximately $2 billion in income taxes which the banks will not have to pay? Could he confirm these facts?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has raised a very complex issue. He has seen the press release which was issued by the Superintendent. I will confirm that there has been an agreement between the Superintendent and the banks to acknowledge what has happened in the public markets and the value of the debts of 34 countries, I believe it is. He has allowed the banks to reflect this in their income statements totally consistent with existing tax policy and the proposals for tax reform with which the Hon. Member is very familiar.

LOAN WRITE-OFFS—EFFECT ON TAX REVENUE

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance confirm that it is the normal practice of the banks, if they have losses to write off, to write them off over five years, but that after meeting with the Superintendent and representatives of his Department the Government has agreed that the banks can write these losses off in one year?

That will mean a loss to taxpayers of something like $2 billion in revenue which the banks would have paid on their profits but will now be able to write off. Is that not a very major cost for taxpayers to have to pay as a result of mistakes made by banks on foreign loans? Why do the banks get that special treatment and farmers cannot get the time of day from the Assistant Minister of Finance?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no change whatsoever in the basis on which these loans are treated for tax purposes. Whether there is a loan to a foreign country, whether there is a loan to business, whether there is a loan to an individual, if that loan goes bad or the value of that loan is reduced because of market circumstances, then the banks are allowed to take a write-off and that is a tax deductible expense.

Mr. Broadbent: It changed from five years to one year.

Mr. Cassidy: It was five years, now it is one. What is the difference?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is very hard to deal with a complex issue when the Hon. Members are heckling in the middle of the answer.

Mr. King: It is hard to deal with a knucklehead.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: There may well be some truth in that comment.

LABOUR RELATIONS

RAILWAYS—PICKET LINES REPORTED IN MONTREAL

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. According to the reports on the Telemedia Radio Network, some railway workers have set up picket lines in front of the CNR maintenance shops in Montreal. A disruption of rail service would certainly have devastating effects. Commuter passengers in large cities would lose an essential means of transportation. The western economy could be crippled if commodities like coal, potash, or grain stopped moving. Certainly the last thing hard-pressed farmers need is a rail strike.

What does the Government intend to do this time to avoid a repeat of the bungling, hands-off approach that led to a postal strike a month ago? Can we expect direct government action this time and, if so, of what kind?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we can certainly see from the Hon. Member's speech what he would like to have happen. There was no bungling a month ago and there will be no bungling in the next few weeks either.

The unions involved in CN and CP are meeting at the present time, through the agency of the mediator, Mr. Carson, who has been appointed. We hope they will make progress.

We have a free collective bargaining system in this country and the Government has no intention of intervening unless that becomes absolutely necessary on behalf of the public interest, at which time we will certainly act quickly.

With respect to the picketing this morning, that was not by the unions involved in these discussions in Montreal at the present time with Mr. Carson, but by the shop craft unions. I believe the demonstration is over, according to a message I received, and hopefully will not be repeated.

[Translation]

EXISTENCE OF EMERGENCY PLANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we have to deal with a different minister. In the case of the postal strike, it was the Minister of Labour. Now, we are offered the same recipe which resulted in a strike, namely that the Government will not interfere, but try to settle the problem through third parties. The information I should like to get from the Government is this: Is there an emergency plan in case of a railway strike? How can we ensure the transportation of goods which is so vital in some areas of this country? Do such plans exist or will the Government maintain its hands-off policy?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is absolutely incredible. The hon. gentleman has been in the House for many years. His Party had been in government for many years and left us a collective bargaining system that applies to the railways of the country. Just because he now wishes to get some publicity, are we to change that whole system because there might conceivably be a strike? There are two parties who are sincerely trying to reach an agreement with the help of a mediator. I suggest that the Hon. Member stop his hypocritical statements—

An Hon. Member: What action are you taking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: —and hope that the two parties will reach a reasonable settlement.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS—SUBSIDIES ISSUE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It goes back to the comments of the senior trade official from the United States whom I quoted yesterday, Mr. Cavitt. Mr. Cavitt indicated in his official briefing that the Government has accepted in principle doing away with subsidies that would include low interest and no interest loans. Has that concession in fact also been made and has the Prime Minister obtained anything in return for that give-away?

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that we are not familiar with Mr. Cavitt. I think the Minister made it very clear last week that between now and the time that negotiations will conclude there will be all kinds of wishes, statements, rumours, papers flying around and so on. I think we should leave it to the negotiators to work out the best possible agreement they can, and then we will discuss it once that agreement is made.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Government's philosophy seems to be to give away as much as possible and then give us the chance to talk about it after the fact.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member would want to put his question and not take up too much time in argumentative preamble. The Hon. Member will please put his question.

Mr. Langdon: Will the Government please come clean with Canadians and tell us—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): God, you are a fraud.

Mr. Langdon: —if these statements of concession after concession demonstrated by Mr. Cavitt are in fact accurate? Will you at least please confess that that is what is taking place?

Mr. Mazankowski: Stop spreading innuendo.

Mr. John McDermid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I find it passing strange that the New Democratic Party listens to the Americans and never listens to the Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is because you don't tell us anything.

Ms. Jewett: Tell us something.

Mr. McDermid: For a Party that wants to walk away from negotiations, forget about the Americans, and to become isolationists, all they do day after day is get up and quote them.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for York Centre.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PLAN TO ABANDON RURAL TRACKS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. He has known, as a result of a document leaked to the public from the CNR last September, that CN is seeking to abandon over 5,000 miles of rural track. This will mean in Ontario that all cross-country traffic and all cross-Ontario traffic by rail will be routed through Metro Toronto, including much greater quantities of the deadly toxic chemicals of the sort that were involved in the Mississauga train disaster and are now routed through sparsely populated areas.

A year later, is the Minister prepared to take steps to assure, before the CTC, if necessary, that CN does not close down the lines through these sparsely populated areas?

Mr. Blaikie: Rip Van Kaplan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it has been rather unkindly suggested that the Hon. Member should be better known as Rip Van Kaplan. There must be an election under way in Ontario because suddenly all the rail lines are going to disappear, according to the hon. gentleman. What absolute twaddle and twiddle, absolute nonsensical drivel.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, the document to which I am referring is signed by the Assistant Vice-President, Strategic Projects, of the CNR. If I am Rip Van Winkle, perhaps the Minister has had the answer for a year. What is the Government's position on the proposal to close down these rail lines? Is the Minister saying in his answer that the Government will oppose it, or is he saying it will do nothing?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is legislation presently in force in this country that deals with railway abandonment of branch lines and the like. It is very difficult for the railways to abandon branch lines. CN, just as CP, wants to abandon a large part of its rail trackage because it gets only 2 per cent of its traffic from about one-third of its railway trackage, and 75 per cent from a third and so on. Actually, CN would like, just as it has in the States, to abandon some of this trackage. But the laws prevent it. It has to go through a very rigorous process and if it is suggested to me that 5,000 miles of railway track be abandoned in Ontario, I would not oppose it, I would just forbid it.

INDUSTRY

HAMILTON FIRESTONE PLANT—INTEREST ON GOVERNMENT LOAN

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. I have a press release here from an executive of the Firestone Company saying that the accrued interest on the $13.5 million in trust would go to the employees who were left out of work, 1,300 families. I thank the Minister for having sent me the agreement. However, I would like to ask him why this statement is not in that agreement?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, we negotiated with the company in the best interests of the workers. We did consider a number of alternate solutions which would make it possible for these workers to keep their jobs.

We also concluded with the company an agreement under which interests on the $13.5 million would be earmarked for the benefit of workers. But should the plant close down and if we should find a buyer, of course this amount will go to the company.

[English]

TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, that does not appear to be in the agreement I received from the Minister. I would just like to be assured that it is not just a press release but actual confirmation in a legal agreement?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that throughout the negotiations we tried to do as we always do, which is to protect the best interests of the workers. That is what we did in the case of this company.

PUBLIC WORKS

FUTURE OF OTTAWA BUILDING VACANT 11 YEARS

Mr. Barry Turner (Ottawa—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. It concerns a federally owned uncompleted building on Walkley Road in Ottawa called the Mulligan Building. It was purchased 11 years ago by the Government at a cost of $1.98 million. It has not been used to date.

Will the Minister tell the House when it is going to be properly used by the Government? Or will this building be sold to the private sector?

Hon. Stewart McInnes (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. I wish to indicate that this building has been left vacant since 1976 at a cost for maintenance of some $750,000. I have a plan to introduce to Treasury Board this fall involving an expenditure for renovations of some $22 million to utilize the building for two government Departments.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF CERTAIN OLDER WORKERS FROM 1985

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and concerns the unfair treatment of older workers.

After seventeen months of fighting by older workers and the Official Opposition, 46,000 older workers received a refund of their unemployment insurance benefits. Unfortunately, today there are still 42,000 older workers in Canada whose claims have been turned down. The Minister knows perfectly well that these people—in fact thousands are involved—took early retirement before January 5, 1986. They went to the offices of the Canada Employment Centre, but because of the information they were given by employees, these people have now been penalized.

My question to the Minister is quite simple: Is he willing to ask the Unemployment Insurance Commission to refund unemployment insurance benefits to all older workers in the 1985 group who were unable to file a claim? Yes or no?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think the Conservative Government is doing an excellent job with respect to the early retirees. In fact we are seeing proof of this every day.

We have established criteria, however, and one of those criteria was January 5, 1986. All claims filed after that date have been referred to the Department and may be at the arbitration stage. However, I do not intend to intervene in order to change the rules.

ALLEGED ERRORS BY OFFICIALS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Gareau from Brossard would appreciate it if the Minister would tell him why he was forced to take early retirement on December 20, 1985. On January 3, he goes to the employment centre, which is under the authority of the Minister. The official tells him: Sir, come back on February 2, 1986.

Why will that individual be penalized, why should he be denied a refund because an official misled him? Is the Minister ready to acknowledge the errors made by officials and give their money back to those thousands of senior workers in Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's concern for workers in Montreal. I hope he has the same concern for those who are waiting for development that will flow from the investments provided for in Bill C-22. We are awaiting questions from the Hon. Member for Montréal—Sainte Marie on the jobs that are being lost now in Montreal.

As far as employment centres are concerned, applications made before January 5 will be honoured. Applications made after January 5 must be referred to employment centres and will be dealt with according to the statutes.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

UNION'S OPPOSITION TO PRIVATE SECTOR POST OFFICES—DISMISSAL OF EMPLOYEE

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Post Office. I have a letter in my hand from the president of the local of Canadian Union of Postal Workers in Calgary. He writes to local private-sector sub-Post Offices that he wants to explain why the union is opposed to offering service at sub-Post Offices and outlets such as this.

The president of that local was fired for having circulated this letter, for having fulfilled his function of representing the workers he represents. Does the Minister realize this raises serious questions about whether the Post office is seeking a settlement or a confrontation, and strikes at the heart of democratic freedoms in this country, the freedom of association? Do you agree with my characterization of—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the facts are that there are other letters sent out by that individual which threaten businesses that might undertake franchise operations, commercial operations, on behalf of the Post Office—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —with harassment, with loss of business, and in various ways. I wonder if it is the view of the NDP that an employee of a company, be it a Crown Corporation or any other company, should be free to go out and threaten potential customers of that company and that the company should still be duty bound to keep that individual in its employ? Is that its position?

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I go back—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Answer.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, my question to this Minister—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Answer.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question. I know Hon. Members will, of course, extend the usual courtesies.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to know directly from this Minister whether he condones the firing of this president of the union local and whether he realizes that means that Canada Post Corporation can take retribution against persons for fulfilling their function of democratically representing the workers they represent? That flies in the face of democratic human rights in this country. Does he realize that?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Government and I support the idea that unions are there to represent their members. I do not support the idea that any employee of any company can go out and threaten customers of that company and still expect to retain his or her employment.

This Crown corporation, managed by its management, must obey Canadian law, as do its employees and as do members of the union. There are grievance procedures within the contract. If in fact they have not been followed, the employee will get reinstated. But if in fact he has been threatening customers, I personally would rather not have him employed at the Post Office.

TAX REFORM

IMPACT ON SMALL MANUFACTURING ENTERPRISES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance will be put in his absence to the Minister of State for Finance. In the White Paper on tax reform, the minister announced he would reduce from 30 per cent to 23 per cent the tax rate on large manufacturing concerns, while increasing from 10 per cent to 12 per cent the tax rate on small manufacturing enterprises.

I would like to know why the Government, by increasing their tax rate, would penalize those 85 per cent of the Canadian manufacturing sector that created 74 per cent of jobs in Canada.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that, unfortunately, the premise of the Hon. Member's question is incorrect. Therefore I cannot confirm the allegation in the question.

TAX RATE APPLICABLE TO SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, I took the information from the White Paper which states that the small business manufacturing rate is actually 10 per cent and as of January 1, 1988, it will be 12 per cent, an increase of 2 per cent. Why does the Minister want to increase the tax rate of a small manufacturing business when he is reducing the tax rate of a big manufacturing business? Why does the Government want to penalize 85 per cent of the manufacturing sector which creates 74 per cent of the jobs? Is that clear now?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I now understand the question. However, it is only half a question. The true answer is that to understand tax reform one has to understand the over-all level of corporate rates, not simply on the manufactured level but the over-all marginal rates for corporations. They will be lowered and small manufacturing will benefit as well as large.

PATENT ACT

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs deals with the Patent Act.

As we know, Quebecers are waiting for nearly $1 billion worth of investments to materialize when that bill is passed, especially since the Quebec National Assembly on two occasions expressed unanimous support for that legislation. What does the Minister intend to do to counter the systematic, Trudeaumaniac obstruction on the matter?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am open to suggestions. The Government will be soon introducing a motion in the House to respond to the Senate's unfortunate decision with respect to this Bill. I hope that those thousands of Quebecers who are waiting for those hundreds of millions of dollars of investment will not have to wait too long. This is too important to the future of too many Canadians to be delayed by these tactics for too much longer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SHIPBUILDING

HALIFAX SHIPYARD—CONTRACT TO REFIT ICE-BREAKER

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. Despite the federal Government's commitment in 1984 that it would have a shipbuilding policy for Canada there has been no policy made. In addition, workers at Halifax-Dartmouth Industries Ltd. have only 20 people working at the present time. There used to be 1,000 people at that yard.

In view of the fact that the Minister made an announcement that the refit of the ice-breaker Louis St. Laurent would be done at that yard, when will that work finally start?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the question should more properly be directed to me.

As a result of representations and the urging of the Minister of Public Works, we were able to announce in June that the mid-life refit of the ice-breaker Louis St. Laurent would be done at the Halifax shipyard. In the release which was made at that time it was explained that there would be two contracts, a design contract so that the design of the work could be done and all the detailed engineering done, followed by a construction contract, once we had the shipyard and an agreed to price.

It was expected that the actual construction would proceed in 1988 in accordance with the release that was issued in June. The Government is doing its best to see that government shipbuilding and ship repairing work is spread across the country. Halifax has been looked after. Unfortunately, we cannot do the work until the design is done. That is quite clear. The design work has to be done first.

CANADIAN TRANSPORT COMMISSION

REPLACEMENT OF COMMISSION—FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES

Mr. Bill Tupper (Nepean—Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Canadian Transport Commission is to be reorganized shortly with a new mandate. I think all who work for the Commission welcome this reorganization, saying it is long overdue. The employees are deeply concerned about their future and whether or not they will be part of the new mandate.

Can the Minister tell us when the Commission will be establishing its new mandate, by what date will the employees be told whether they will be part of the new Commission, and for those who will not be fortunate enough what steps will be taken to find places of employment for them in other parts of the Public Service?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, our hope and expectation are that the new national transportation agency will start to function on January 1, 1988, to replace the present Canadian Transport Commission. However, there are two Bills still to be passed by Parliament as a result of some action taken by the Senate. These two Bills are coming back with amendments that we in the Government find acceptable. We will be presenting them to the House and recommending them for passage. Hopefully, we can still have all the necessary work done in time for January 1, 1988.

With respect to the employees, these are all valued people. They may not all be needed since the functions of the NTA are somewhat different from the CTC. But we hope to find places for them in other aspects of government work, or certainly see that anybody who does not stay with the new national transportation agency is well looked after.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank Hon. Members for their co-operation. There was a better response in Question Period today.

There will be one final question from the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence, and that will close off Question Period.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MOZAMBIQUE AND ANGOLA—COMMITTEE CHAIRMAN'S LETTER TO MINISTER

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs well knows, a senior member of the Conservative caucus who is also a Chairman of a Standing Committee of the House of Commons, namely, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South, sent a letter recently to the Minister in which he declared that Canada should occupy by force and take over the sovereign and independent nations of Mozambique and Angola. I am wondering what the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member that the Chair has some difficulty with his question. I have listened carefully to the question so far and it does not seem to refer to a matter with respect to which the Right Hon. Minister has jurisdiction. I would ask the Hon. Member to leave the matter with me. Perhaps we can discuss it and it may be appropriate to raise it tomorrow. In view of that I would ask the co-operation of the Hon. Member.

Orders of the Day.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee, and the amendment of Mr. Marchi (p. 7338).

Mr. Speaker: Is the House ready for the question? The question is as follows: Mr. Bouchard, seconded by Mr. McMillan, moves that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

And on the amendment of Mr. Marchi, seconded by Mr. Berger, that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

"Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence."

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more that five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Marchi) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Resuming debate on the main motion. Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Keeper).

Mr. Cyril Keeper (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is wonderful to have a full House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I thought perhaps we would break with tradition. I know the importance of the legislation that is before the House and I know that each and every Member of the House is interested in this legislation. I naturally concluded that since everyone was still sitting here as I rose to speak, we would have a full House for this debate. I believed that that was true not because I am naive but because I thought the Government called the House back to deal with an emergency situation. Therefore, I expected that government Members would be here for the debate, and they were here for a moment.

Mr. McDermid: Look around you. Where are your colleagues?

Mr. Keeper: Of course, government Members have now fled. They have fled the Chamber—

Mr. McDermid: Let the record show that of the NDP, you are the only one in the House. Oops, sorry, Marion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe that because of the Hon. Member's performance today, instead of having a full House, we have a royal flush as can be seen by looking at the House.

Mr. Keeper: Mr. Speaker, I will not try to top that comment. This is getting a little too risqué for my tastes.

I would like to address the legislation before the House because it is a very serious piece of legislation and it has very serious implications for Canadians and Canada's international reputation.

• (1540)

I want to tell you how I size up the situation we are facing today. We are here in an emergency sitting of the House in the middle of the summer to deal with a Draconian piece of legislation concerning refugees. Why? Basically because of the concern of Canadians over the fact that the refugee process is not working and the Government said this is our opportunity to recover our standing in the polls. This is our opportunity to take on the Liberals and NDP and come out on the winning side of public opinion. The Government has for so long been at the bottom of the opinion polls and out of favour with the public that it saw this as its opportunity. That is why the House was called back this summer. That is why we have this legislation before us.

We should remind ourselves of what the Government said before it came into office and how it acted after it was elected in order to evaluate what it is saying in this debate. When the Conservatives ran for office, they started out by condemning the Liberal Party and the Liberal Prime Minister, now Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), for abuse of the patronage system. The now Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) criticized the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition in debate and won public approval. Yet what did he do once he got into office? Exactly the same thing the Liberals did. He took the same kind of immoral and depraved actions regarding the patronage system that the Liberals did. He carried on with the same kind of activity he had condemned. That is the difference between the promises and the actions of the Conservative Government.

We have a parallel in this situation. The Government is promising to fix the refugee determination process. Most Canadians have come to the conclusion that the process is not working. It is being used and abused by people who simply want to come to this country without going through the normal process. That is what so many Canadians find unfair. We all recognize that the process needs to be changed, that we need an adequate and just determination process. So the Government called the House back and brought forward its legislation.

Does the legislation do what it purports to do? It is clear that it does not. One thing it does do is to give the Government the opportunity to say it is coming down hard on the abusers. Of course it is, but in the process it is also tearing apart the democratic traditions of this country. We have heard from human rights advocates across this country. We have heard from representatives of the churches. We have heard Rabbi Plaut who did a thorough study of the refugee determination process. We heard the UN say that this legislation is going to put at risk the possibility of genuine refugees coming to this country. Therefore the legislation is not doing what it purports to do, that is, eliminate the abusers while at the same time allowing for a fair and efficient determination process by which genuine refugees can come to Canada.

In fact it breaks with a generous Canadian tradition of providing a sanctuary for those whose lives are threatened elsewhere. It threatens those who are struggling against the dictatorship in Chile and who are threatened with torture and death. It tears apart the Canadian tradition of sanctuary in the name of fixing a system that is not working.

Not only that, if passed by the House in its present form, which I doubt will happen, it will be torn apart in the courts. The effort will be wasted because it does not do what it claims it will do. It should be withdrawn and humane, effective legislation, which allows for the elimination of abusers while at the same time maintaining our compassionate and open approach to people who need sanctuary, introduced.

We call upon the Government to wake up and stop trying to rush this legislation through. It should realize we are not going to let this go through quickly because we want to make sure the process takes into account not only the abusers of the system but also the human rights of those who need sanctuary.

Mr. Reginald Stackhouse (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, if you and I were to examine the mail I have received from one coast to the other, along with telephone messages in my constituency office, and I am sure it is comparable to that received by other Members, we would see that there are certain common features to the expressions of opinion which have arisen without stimulation from those on Parliament Hill. One of those features is that there has been no racism expressed by the people of Canada in their opposition to the ingress of what they see to be illegal immigrants to this country. Over and over again I have had it said to me that the concern of the population is not based on any consideration of race at all.

Mr. Keeper: None at all?

Mr. Stackhouse: None at all. The Canadian people cannot be accused of racism no matter what the Opposition, including the Hon. Member, may wish to suggest. The people of Canada are saying to us that, regardless of the race of the person concerned, he or she will receive equal treatment before the law and not special privilege.

The second feature is that they want fairness for all, including those who have been waiting patiently, not without frustration, for years in their attempts to gain legal acceptance in this country. The people of this country see what seems to be manifest unfairness in the possibility of someone gaining entry to this country by what appears to them to be a trick. They are asking Parliament and the Government of Canada to provide legislation which will make that kind of fairness possible.

Next, I find a concern among Canadian people for the rule of law. We are a law-abiding people. We are a people that have historically been characterized by a commitment to order as expressed by the laws of the country. It seems to people an utter affront to that tradition of law, that respect for order, that people at will, be it a large group or one or two or three, can somehow insinuate themselves into this country in a way clearly contrary to the demands of the law and the requirements of regulations. They are, therefore, asking us to provide the Government with the authority required to re-establish the rule of law in terms of refugees.

Further, I believe that the Bill before us should be supported, not only by the government Party but by every Member of the House, because there is clearly a demand from the people for action. They have been frustrated over an extended period of time as they have seen the laws broken, traditions flaunted, and unfairness apparently rewarded. We are told that they want some action. We are trying to hurry the Bill through the House but the Liberal Opposition wants to give it an extended examination, a six-month hoist.

We are faced with the utter dismay of the people of Canada at the prospect that once again they may be thwarted. They are appealing to us, and this Bill is an answer to that appeal, an attempt to give them action in the face of need. We have been called together to make a decision.

Along with that demand for action I take it from the mail and calls that I have received that there is an extraordinary but nonetheless impressive message from the people that they wonder if anybody is really in charge. They are demanding to know whether anyone is really in control of admission into the country. If you can just show up on a beach or at an airport and somehow, without qualifications or credentials, find yourself in the country with de facto admission for one, two, three or perhaps five years, they wonder whether the Government really is in control.

I take that question very seriously. If the Government and the legislature of a country are not really in charge, in what sense are we a country? If we do not have control over our own borders, what kind of country are we? That is the situation to which we have come in recent times and which we are attempting to correct, and not with any lack of justice or compassion for those who legitimately merit the term and designation "refugee".

I am sure that all other Members, like myself, have read the Convention of 1951. It is clear from that document, to which this country has been a signatory and to which the Government, like others before it, is committed, that a refugee has designated, covenanted rights. The ambiguity arises over who is a refugee and who determines that. It is quite clear that the country itself determines that refugee status in accordance with the terms of the covenant and its historic application.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill before us is in accordance with that and will stand the test of challenge. We have every right, indeed every duty as a Parliament, to put our imprimatur upon it and to make it the law of the land so that the Government, elected by the people, given a mandate to govern, will truly in this instance be in charge.

I am not unaware that this Bill, like any other that has been introduced in this House since 1867, might well be improved by this amendment or that. I think it would be approaching hypocrisy if either side of the House were allowed to suggest that there is nothing that could not be clarified, nothing that could not be refined. However, in debate on second reading we are talking about the principle of the Bill, the clear message, and of that there can be no doubt if we take the people of Canada seriously.

I am aware that the opposition Parties do not take the people of Canada seriously, that they are really elitist Parties that are with the people if the people are with them and their secret knowledge of the truth. I am appealing to them through you, Mr. Speaker, to listen to the ordinary Canadians, of whom they are apparently so fond, and take seriously what the ordinary Canadians are saying, namely, "give us some action, give us the rule of law, put the Government in charge again".

I have been impressed that the Liberal Opposition, for one, has opposed this Bill. It tried to give it a six-month hoist. I was impressed as well that less than a month ago the Liberals were saying that the Government was at fault because it had not turned the boat back. Now the Liberal Opposition wants to turn this legislation back. I ask them to be consistent, to be concerned, not about turning the boat back but about turning the clock ahead to today, to putting this nation in tune with the times, and to giving us legislation which can cope with this problem which is of this day and age.

The legislation and rules of the past are no longer adequate. To be fair to those who drafted them, they may have met the need then, but they do not meet it now. We have need for legislation which takes seriously an entirely unprecedented development. We have 12 million refugees in various centres in the world. We have frightening population pressures in various parts of the world. There are 5 billion people sharing this globe, many of them crowded into small conurbations—16 million, 18 million, or 20 million in a massed urban sprawl. We can appreciate that there will be great pressure for many years to come on persons to find new opportunities and to offer themselves as refugees when, according to the convention, they do not meet those criteria.

We have a need for this legislation. The Government was right to call this House back through the Speaker to deal with an emergency situation in an emergency way. I hope that we will see reason and pass the Bill.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lucie Pépin (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about Bill C-55 and to support my party which considers that the bill provides no solution to the tragic situation and to the international problem raised by the determination of refugee status.

Instead of being consistent with the tradition of assistance to refugees Canada can be proud of, the provisions of Bill C-55 put a stop to any progressive initiative in that area. The proposed legislation does not allow for an accessible and quick mechanism for determination of the refugee status nor does it give sufficient protection through a hearing before a qualified board and through a fair appeal procedure.

The Liberal Party is opposed to Bill C-55 because it essentially provides for a new process for the determination of refugee status without taking into account the Plaut report and all suggestions made by organizations dealing with refugees.

If the Conservative Government is serious and honest about consulting those organizations regarding the reform of the refugee determination process, it should not try to pass legislation in which the basic principles of the future process are laid down.

Besides, this view is largely shared by immigration lawyers and many humanitarian agencies. There are, among others, the concertation group for refugees, SOS Refugees, the Civil Liberties Union, the Société québécoise de solidarité internationale, the Immigration Lawyers Association, l'Association des juristes québécois, the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees, the Standing Conference of Canadian Organization Concern for Refugees, Amnisty International and the Island Refugees Society of British Columbia.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party is not opposing Bill C-55 for the sake of filibustering. This is not a partisan issue but a matter of pure common sense. For instance, if you look at the pre-screening process, it builds up a wall all around the system that we claim to improve. The pre-screening process is very discretionary and it prevents the full accessibility to the process.

As well, if you look at the Refugee Board, its proceedings are supposed to be non-accusatory, but it is the Crown Prosecutor who will put forward all the relevant facts. There will be an adversarial situation with an officer working for the Department. Where will he find those facts? From the pre-screening process? Why do we put together refugees and immigrants?

Of course, if you look at the appeal mechanism, that is the appeal with the agreement of the Federal Court, if the Court is unable to learn new facts, to re-evaluate the credibility of the claimant or to ask for the opinion of the NGO, it has no real power to review the procedure followed or the relevant facts. We believe that the quality of the system as a whole depends on that of the appeal mechanism. In addition, while the claimant asks for the right to appeal, he will be deported. This procedure is quite inhumane and could be unconstitutional under Section 7 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that Canadians have been misinformed. Racist feelings are on the rise in Canada, and such a Bill will exacerbate the situation instead of educating Canadians.

I believe that this is also the opinion of many Canadians. It is time to review the refugee determination process and to initiate an extensive information campaign on refugees. The great majority of Canadians do not know the difference between a refugee and an immigrant.

In the case of immigrants, the receiving country is entitled to set criteria and to accept only those who meet them. It is quite different for refugees. Canada has international obligations. Under the Geneva Convention, the refugee claimant is entitled to assistance. It is not a privilege. Most Canadians and many Members of Parliament are not aware of this. Many forget the political difficulties faced by many people in their own countries.

When you think about apartheid in South Africa, the military dictatorships and police repressions in many Latin-American countries, religious intolerance in Iran, the foreign invasion in Afghanistan, and so on, you are more willing to welcome those who fear persecution in their own countries and seek refuge in Canada.

As emphasized by Rabbi Plaut, compared with the magnitude of the global refugee problem, the task of recognizing the status of those who claim refugee status here, in Canada, is relatively small.

The information campaign which should be initiated should emphasize the economic contribution of newcomers as well as differentiate between immigrants and refugees. We have to put an end to the myth that foreigners are taking away jobs from Canadians.

Many economic studies dealing with immigration have shown that it is impossible to establish a cause-effect relationship between the number of foreigners admitted in this country and the economic situation. A number of economists maintain, however, that by increasing the number of potential consumers in a market, immigrants contribute positively to the economy. In short, it is our whole approach towards immigration which must be improved by increasing this openmindedness and generosity which have characterized Canadian men and women for so long.

This enlightenment of attitude which is urgent should go hand in hand with the reform of the refugee determination process. I feel that its implementation should offer the perfect opportunity to set in motion a refugee awareness campaign from coast to coast. This bandaid solution which the Conservative Government is suggesting today with Bill C-55 seems to be both useless and harmful. If it were adopted, I believe that the government, unfortunately, would delay reforming the refugee status determination process, contrary to what a great many groups involved with refugees are seeking.

In this Bill, Mr. Speaker, we cannot find any recommendation put forward by the special committee created to deal with Bill C-55. Although several groups appeared before the committee, unfortunately, we have the impression that the committee never existed. I wonder why the Government creates such committees. Is it simply for window-dressing purposes, when we realize that not a single recommendation made by this three-party committee which submitted a unanimous report appears in this Bill? I will say, therefore, that I have great reservations about Bill C-55 and will certainly vote against it.

• (1600)

[English]

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, today I believe this country is facing problems at many different levels which will not be solved by legislation such as Bill C-55. Our concern is and certainly should be about the increasing international problem of refugees. We have a responsibility to have some input into an international solution and to seeing that the oppressive Governments that are ignoring human rights face international disciplinary action so that people will be able to stay in their own countries where they want to be, safe and secure.

I believe all Canadians are proud of our country which has been built from the different ethnic backgrounds of people who have come here in various ways, including the refugee and immigration process. I believe we have also been careful to ensure that people remain in contact with their own cultures so that they do not deny their roots. This has enriched the fabric of Canada and certainly made us stronger.

The kind of legislation before us does not help to maintain the international image we have had over the years. While I did not think this would be the first Bill to which I would be speaking in the House of Commons, I felt it was important that I share with Members of the House the experience I had when we called for our community to adopt and sponsor 4,000 refugees in 1979. While the Government of the day had a quota of 8,000, we challenged communities across the country to sponsor these refugees. There was an overwhelming response in the country and within a month the quota was changed to 50,000.

I believe all Canadians were very proud of the Indo-Chinese who came here, and I think the Government of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and his Minister of Immigration, the present Minister of Communications (Miss MacDonald), certainly deserve credit for their action.

It is a tragic and sad day for our country to be faced with the legislation in front of us now. It partly results from the generous action that was taken in 1979 because the number of refugees coming to Canada began to increase. Of course, the cumbersome method of defining a refugee was in place, a very cumbersome method which has not been able to respond to the need. I do not believe there is any disagreement across the country nor in this House, from what I have heard, about queue jumping. No one wants anyone to jump the queue. Certainly those people who arrive on our shores legally are not queue jumping. The real problem is that the present Government has cut back on family reunification by 10 per cent. Therefore, people who have applied and have been waiting for many years in the proper way, through the proper channels, are feeling bitter and angry because the numbers have been cut back.

I am disappointed when I hear some Hon. Members refer to things they heard from their constituents which do not always encompass the most altruistic kind of feelings. I can be a witness to some of the letters and phone calls I received when we put forth Project 4000. They were not always very complimentary. Some things that were said were less than what we would want to hear from people. However, I think we countered that reaction by showing that there was the other part of Canadian society who opened their arms and hearts, showing their generosity and proving we have a better country today because those 50,000 refugees came to Canada.

I feel that what has motivated many of us strongly is that we realize we are not proud of our fathers and mothers who allowed the kind of legislation to happen—and a lot of it was not legislation but regulation—that said many Jewish people had to go back and be murdered because we would not open our hearts and arms to them.

In examining this Bill we can recognize that it is just as cumbersome. We are not allowing people who are declaring themselves as refugees to have even full access to counsel. Because of this there will be people who will have to go back to the country which will persecute them before we ever realize it what we have done.

I am sure some of that rationale was expressed in these very Chambers in 1939. I hope we will not be part of encouraging that kind of thing to happen again. Certainly reports that have come from non-governmental organizations, from the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration and from Rabbi Plaut have all recommended things which I believe Canadians can live with and be proud of. What is really being said in those reports is that we want to have a fair and efficient system. We want to have a system where people can be heard, where they can be seen to have universal accessibility.

I was quite shocked to hear yesterday that people did not understand what universal accessibility was. All we are talking about is that it does not matter what colour one's skin is or what part of the planet one comes from, we are all part of the human family and should have the right to be heard. That is all we are saying. At the moment there are about 20,000 refugees in this country who have been here for four or five years.

Mr. McDermid: More.

Ms. Dewar: Yes, and probably more, because the process, has been so cumbersome. Because of this cumbersome process what we are going to do is to punish people who are running for their lives.

I come from a riding which has some very strongly committed volunteers who work day and night to help save the lives of some people from Central America. It seems to me that as these volunteers help to get these people into Canada, not only will they be seen to be criminals but certainly the people whose lives they are attempting to save will not be saved. I think that is something that is very serious. I do not think it is something that anyone in this country wants to have happen.

Surely the Government will recognize, through all the presentations made to it individually and through committee, that there is an easier way to accomplish what it wants to accomplish. I think today, the day we are speaking on this legislation, is the day to say to the Government that there is another way. We agree with the goals it is trying to attain but it is doing it in a very punitive way. Surely to goodness we are talking about a global village where we all live as part of the human family. We are saying that within that human family there are ways of dealing with each other's problems without causing chaos. Without causing chaos we can save each other's lives if we have legislation that is efficient.

I would heartily recommend to the Government that it withdraw this Bill. I believe we should begin to have a parallel system, one which deals with refugee determination efficiently and quickly as well as one which deals with immigration separately.

Right now the Canadian public is very confused about the chaos the system is in. I do not blame them for reacting the way they are. However, I think the responsibility of this House is to ensure that we have a system that works, a system that is efficient, generous and fair, in the way most Canadians want their system to work.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to interrupt the debate but I just wanted to point out to Members that this was the maiden speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain. I want to compliment her on it. I may not agree with everything she says, but I do compliment her on it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner)—Indian Affairs—Post-secondary education assistance program; the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—External Affairs—Nicaragua—reported banning of Conservative Party. (b) Access to political prisoners; the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar)—Employment—retraining of laid-off older workers. (b) Request for ministerial commitment.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, let me begin my remarks on Bill C-55 by recalling once more the chain of events which led to the recall of the Parliament of Canada from recess. Going back to August of 1986, Members will recall the arrival of 150 so-called Tamil refugees off the coast of Newfoundland. When that event happened, most Canadians were prepared to give the benefit of the doubt to the new arrivals and in that connection they were allowed to come into and remain in Canada. But what surprised a great many Canadians was the process by which these people entered Canada.

They were shocked in many cases to recognize and to understand, and to be told, that there was no real way these people, the so-called Tamils, could be prevented from coming into Canada or could be not allowed to stay here. This quite understandably led to a review of the refugee provisions. I think it is fair to say that that led the Government to construct the legislative provisions now contained in Bill C-55. It was introduced in the House of Commons in May, 1987. Some people say that it took too long a time, but who can judge the process? Sometimes legislation takes months, sometimes it takes years. The fact is that there was a Bill introduced in the House of Commons in May of 1987. It was debated and brought before the Members of the House of Commons on June 18, 1987. The representative of the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), introduced an amendment at that time which would give the Bill a six-months hoist which would put it into oblivion. That amendment was supported by the New Democratic Party. We just voted on and defeated that amendment a few moments ago in the House of Commons. That is why we are here. It is because the opposition Parties did not want Bill C-55 processed.

That is what we are talking about in relation to refugees. We are talking about legal process. We are not talking about the status of individuals. We are not talking about the fear and pestilence that pervades many countries in the world. We are not talking about people escaping from persecution. We are talking about the legal process. This Parliament of Canada, this House of Commons, is responsible for the legal process in this country. However, what has happened is that we as Members of Parliament have abdicated that responsibility by moving amendments like the six-months hoist for legislative measures such as Bill C-55 instead of coming up with constructive legislation to deal with what is the real problem in the process.

That brings me to July 12, 1987 when there arrived on the coast of Nova Scotia 174 East Indians who entered Canada illegally and said: "We are refugees", and our system collapses because our system does not handle that situation. Why does it not handle that situation? Because once one is in Canada claiming to be a refugee then the legal process no longer works.

It was said that we were faced with our obligations under the UN Convention respecting refugees. I think Canadians were shocked and outraged to learn that under that UN Convention a person in Canada claiming to be a refugee is entitled, for example, to access to the courts and to legal counsel in connection with that access. They are even entitled to public relief. Article 23 of the convention states that the contracting state shall accord to refugees lawfully staying in their territory the same treatment with respect to public relief and assistance as is accorded to its nationals. Not only do we have to accept refugees under certain circumstances, we have to open the public coffers and pay them money, provide them with assistance and legal aid.

We all consent to that. That has been the position of the Government of Canada. We uphold the accord. But surely we must have the right to determine who comes into Canada and who is a refugee. Surely such a process has to be put in place so that we will not be faced with people who decide that they are coming to Canada, that they are going to claim to be refugees, that they are going to take advantage within our nation, our territory and our home shores, of the UN Convention, whether or not they are escaping from fear of prosecution or difficulties in another country, whether or not they are prepared to tell us what has gone on in their past history that would entitle them to special refugee status in Canada. That is why Canadians are outraged. They want to know what is happening. They want to be in a position to render a judgment. When that judgment is rendered, and rendered effectively and properly, I am sure all Canadians will support it.

I am sure that all Canadians will welcome refugees into the country. I am certain that all Canadians will afford such persons every item listed in the UN Convention, every guarantee of freedom and of liberty. That is what we all want. But we want to provide that sort of assistance only after a proper legal process has been observed.

Anybody—Liberal, Conservative or New Democrat—who denies the outrage of the public in this situation is simply not facing the true facts. I have heard members of the Opposition stand in the House and accuse the Government of fanning public outrage in this case. That is nonsense—absolute nonsense. One wonders how they can hope to represent the people of Hamilton Mountain or any other constituency across the country if they are going to make accusations like that against the Canadian people who were genuinely outraged by this event.

What we are doing is responding to that concern after trying to calm the people after trying to say: "Listen, we can take some time to resolve this problem". That was not the mood of the Canadian people. They wanted parliamentarians back at their seats working on this problem. That was the only course of action that could be sensibly taken, which is the course of action that was taken. Anyone who does not want to sit in the House of Commons to try to resolve this problem here and now has no right, in my opinion, to be here in the first place. The people told us what they wanted to do and we are trying to react to it.

My friend, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse), said it very well. He said that we are not here to write laws in stone. This is not Moses coming down from the mountain with the tablets. We are here to write laws of practical application to deal with real problems. We are here to cure the mischief that exists in our society and to try to do something about it. If we make a mistake, then we can correct it. We do not have to wait years or centuries. We do not have to wait for anybody else to tell us what to do; we can recognize our own errors. So we are looking at Bill C-55. It is an attempt to cure what is an obvious mischief in our system, that is, the lack of process in dealing with persons entering Canada and claiming to be refugees so that they can get the benefit of the UN Convention which we readily observe.

Bill C-84 has already been referred to committee. It is a Bill which is intended to rid us of the mischief of those people who would help people invade Canada under improper circumstances and profit by it. We now have to deal with Bill C-55 which will give us an opportunity to deal effectively, speedily and fairly with people who arrive at our doors.

People from Upper Canada often annoy us in the maritime provinces and the Atlantic coast. They sometimes think that we are a little backward. I want to point out to those people from Upper Canada that it is not easy to get an ocean-going vessel into a small place such as Pubnico Bay, a beach on the coast of Nova Scotia. It is more or less like flying an airliner into Malton Airport without consulting air traffic control and over-shooting it and landing in some small airport in some county town.

In order to get an ocean-going vessel to the coast of Nova Scotia at a point such as that one has to avoid all the normal sea routes and all the navigational aids and benefits as well as the Port of Yarmouth and the Port of Halifax. That is exactly what was done. So I say this to Hon. Members from Upper Canada. Do not be surprised when people from Nova Scotia say: "What the heck is going on here? We know that those people who arrived on that vessel were avoiding the lawful process by which people enter Canada. We know that they did not disclose their identity to the traffic controllers. We know that they strained to put the ship in that particular place. So it is no wonder that we are suspicious of those who are involved in this process, no matter what difficulties they faced at home".

How can we get rid of that suspicion? We can only get rid of it if there is a fair hearing at which the facts are disclosed. And what facts were disclosed? The facts that I heard disclosed were the tearing up of identity documents, allegations that did not fit the facts about where the group had come from, how they had arrived here and how they got off the ship and so on. By the way, it was never made clear whether there were 174 or a great many more aboard.

I am well aware that bad cases make bad law. I think that is something that we want to avoid. But I marvel at my colleagues in the Opposition who talk in general terms about refugees and who talk in general terms about immigrants and who do not want to come to grips with the mischief that exists in Canada, that is, people seeking to enter Canada illegally.

We talk about fairness in our system. In 1986, the following immigrants entered Canada. There were 7,000 from the United States; 6,800 from India; 6,400 from Vietnam; 5,800 from Hong Kong; 5,100 from Poland; 4,900 from Great Britain; 4,400 from from Jamaica; 4,100 from Philippines; 3,600 from Guyana; and 3,000 from El Salvador. Does that sound like racial prejudice? Does that sound as though we were trying to exclude people from some areas and not admit people from others? That sounds like a pretty fair distribution of 50,000 people to me. Yet what does The Vancouver Sun state? It states: "PM's recall has taste of racism". I want to tell the editors of The Vancouver Sun that there is no racism involved in this issue. There is fairness to all Canadians involved, as well as fairness to refugees and, in particular, fairness to the immigrants who are already in Canada.

I have people in the Punjab right now who want to come to Canada through the legitimate process. I have a heck of a time with the Minister of State for Immigration (Mr. Weiner) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) trying to get permission for a visitor's visa for these people. So do not tell me about racial prejudice. We want to talk about fairness, not prejudice. We want fairness. We want fairness for the people in the Punjab who want to come to Canada now. What we all fear will happen out of this is that if we do not achieve a proper process, if we do not achieve a fairness, then there will be a backlash against all immigrants. People will say: "If you cannot establish a decent process, a fair process, to bring refugees and others into the country, then do not bring anybody in. Keep them all out".

If we scratch the surface we often find, unfortunately, that there exists discrimination. But our job as parliamentarians is to ensure that we have a fair system, that we have a good system, that we have a system that will be observed by all people so that there will not be any discrimination. It is the system that prevents discrimination. The people cannot be changed but they can be made to observe a system. That is what we are trying to do with Bill C-55. I believe we are well on the way to having a fair system with this Bill, but we need some help and support from all Members of Parliament and all members of the public.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the last intervention by the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) as well as the earlier intervention by the Hon. Member for Scarborough West (Mr. Stackhouse) were a mix of rhetoric and good intention, as well as confused notions about what is the real intent, thrust and purpose of this Bill.

It was disappointing that the Chairman of the Human Rights Committee, the Hon. Member for Scarborough West, would develop a speech the way he did without bringing forward in his capacity the importance of ensuring protection for asylum seekers, legitimate asylum seekers, who are, I am sure, one of the main preoccupations of the committee which the Hon. Member chairs.

The Members opposite are aware of the preoccupations that stem and flow from this Bill. They know that there are serious flaws in this measure. There are flaws in the pre-screening system and the process itself, the safe third country concept, the refugee board, the appeal system, and other aspects. This measure has been put together without taking into account the important principle to which Canada has adhered for decades and which has been recognized by the United Nations, that is, that asylum seekers who are in need of protection must be protected and given an opportunity to apply.

Perhaps this may sound partisan coming from a member of the Official Opposition. I wonder if the Hon. Members for Scarborough West and Halifax West realize that one of their colleagues, the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais), who is the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, himself expressed some serious criticism of this very measure in this House as recently as five days ago. He stated it in the following terms:

> —the Government intends to tighten the admission of refugees via Bill C-55, which will guarantee that the process remain arbitrary, confusing, and endless.

He further stated that the changes in the refugee determination envisaged and proposed by Bill C-55 are such that it would be practically impossible for a great number of legitimate refugees—note the word "legitimate"—to apply for refugee status. This was not said by a member of the Opposition, but by a member of the Government, one who is knowledgeable about this matter because of his role as the Chairman of the committee that studies matters related to immigration.

The same Member also commented that other rational and appropriate solutions to this problem exist, solutions that would not break an international agreement on refugees and could not be challenged in court on the basis of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Note the words that this measure in Bill C-55 contains sections that could be challenged in the courts. Unless it is modified, this measure could end up in the courts. This would tie up the Government in lengthy hearings because of badly drafted and poorly thought out legislation.

The Hon. Member for La Prairie also stated:

> The best way to put the smugglers out of business is to dry up the demand for their services. The best way to stop the queue jumping is to shorten the queue. In short, if we want more orderly borders, we need more liberal borders.

It was courageous of the Hon. Member for La Prairie to issue a press release on this matter in which he commented on Bill C-55 and described it as follows:

> It proposes a series of changes to the refugee determination process which would make it almost impossible for many genuine refugees to make a claim, and is in probable violation of both the UN Convention on Refugees (which we have signed and ratified) as well as our own Charter of Rights and Freedoms—

That sums it up, Mr. Speaker. That will explain why we on the opposition side put forward an amendment to hoist the measure entirely, in order to convince the Government that a clean alternative had to be introduced. That would not have been necessary if the Government had indicated that it would be willing to make certain basic changes of the type pointed out by the Hon. Member for La Prairie. Unfortunately, that did not happen.

It strikes me as curious in this debate that an element of urgency was created last week by the Government on the necessity of moving the Bill through the system as quickly as possible. In one month, it will be three years since the Government came to power. In 1984 and 1985, the Government also had the benefit of studies on the question of refugees and also of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which produced a substantial amount of information and advice upon which to draft a Bill that would meet the needs of the situation. Yet the Government took until May of this year to introduce this Bill. The Bill then sat on the Order Paper after first reading. There was no sign of urgency and no panic, everything seemed to be calm. On June 17 the Bill was brought forward for debate for three hours, and that was the end of that Bill. It was not seen again.

Mr. McDermid: What did the Liberals do?

Mr. Caccia: Because it was so badly flawed, and because the Liberals put forward such good counter-advice on how to improve it, the Government withdrew and did not know what to do. Instead of having the honesty and saying, "There are some areas where changes can be made, give it second reading and we will get it through", and also instead of listening to the advice of its own members of caucus—the Hon. Member for La Prairie is a very reliable source—why did the Government not listen to the advice by the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration? Why did it take almost three years to come forward with this piece of legislation?

Finally, we are facing this notion that we must move very quickly. The Government could have saved itself days of debate. It could have saved itself these exchanges, which I hope eventually will make some impact. On this side of the House we have repeatedly brought to the attention of the Government the flaws of this Bill and the importance of this Bill being written in such a manner that it will not be challenged in our own courts because it infringes on the Charter. That business concerns everybody. It is a very important matter. It is also important that we ensure that Bill C-55 take into account the important principle that we want to make it possible for asylum seekers in need of protection to be able to apply in this country. It has been done in the past. We are willing to support the changes that are within these basic principles. We know that it can be done, and we insist that the Government introduce the essential amendments in order to make it a viable piece of legislation that can be supported by all Canadians.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, when reflecting upon what has been occurring in the House over the last few days, there are many, including myself, who are puzzled by the events which have transpired over that period of time in view of the history of the matter that we are deliberating.

• (1640)

It is perfectly clear that there has been a great deal of concern in the country that our refugee determination process was open to abuse and subjected to abuse. There have been a variety of reports on the issue going back three years. We have had the Plaut report, the Robinson report, and two reports of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, all of which addressed the issue within the context that the refugee determination process as it exists now has been dragged out for so long that that in itself invites abuse.

There has been within Canada not only a clear consensus that the problem exists, but a clear consensus about the cause of the problem and the solution. This has been going on for quite some time, and it went on without any action by the Government until late spring.

With a history of inaction, we are suddenly brought back to the House of Commons on an emergency basis to deal urgently with an issue, the solution to which was clear and has been clear to everybody for a long time. Therefore one would have thought that in a matter of this sort, involving as it does extremely important human and humanitarian issues, the House of Commons, this Parliament, with the co-operation of all sides could have been able to act on a consensus about the solution to the problem we are here to address.

This raises questions. In view of this consensus and the identification of the problem and the solution, what has been the behaviour upon getting back here? The Government introduced Bill C-55. It also introduced Bill C-84. If one looks at what has happened here and tries to measure what the Government and Members on the government side have been involved in, one has to be deeply suspicious about the fact that we were called back here in the middle of summer to address a matter which could have been addressed a long time ago. When one listens to the rhetoric, one is really inclined to identify something on the government side other than a pure determination to address the problem which all Canadians have identified.

We have heard screams and complaints of queue jumping. We have heard allegations of reverse racism. We have heard intimations that we who have questions about the particular legislation before us are accusing the Government of racism in questioning it.

Let me just give an example. The Hon. Member from a riding with an extremely long name, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen)—

Mrs. Sparrow: It is a nice name.

Mr. McCurdy: It is a beautiful name, but it is excessive in its verbiage. Just the other day we heard him say that the Leader of the New Democratic Party had reflected upon a previous incident involving Sikhs landing on Canadian shores, and the Hon. Member, having identified within that elements of racism, documented by all historians since that time, was accusing the Government of racism because this Bill and Bill C-84 were somehow related in a racist way to the landing of the Sikhs in Nova Scotia.

Those of us who understand the battle against discrimination and the expression of racism understand that in the absence of specified and regularized procedures with clear guidelines and opportunities for appeal, all of which elements are absent from Bill C-55, a situation is created in which individuals have an opportunity to express personal views and attitudes that could be prevented by appropriate provisions in the legislation. That is in no way to be interpreted—and I would say it would require a deliberate interpretation to see it in any other context—in a malevolent way.

Let me make a plea. The Government has submitted Bill C-55 as its solution. It is contrary in significant elements—in respect of the screening process, in respect of the concept of a safe third country, in respect of the inadequacies of its appeals and in other respects it is deficient as compared with other propositions which have been advanced. We know that the Canadian Council of Churches, the Canadian Labour Congress, and the Canadian Civil Liberties Association—a whole host of organizations interested in the refugee determination process; respectable, thoughtful, concerned Canadians represented by a variety of organizations—see the Bill as defective in significant respects.

If one looks at the suggestion of the Canadian Council of Churches, which is identical in significant elements to the proposition advanced by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, one sees that it makes it possible for everyone who would claim refugee status to have access to the determination process. It meets the requirement for appeal, eliminates the notion of a third safe country, and provides at the same time that the whole process will be over in a matter of months. Indeed, it can be argued that the Government's proposition would be more time consuming in its implementation.

My plea is a simple one. Let us recognize that there is a consensus within the House on the need for a rapid and fair determination process which will eliminate abuse. Let us set to work constructively in committee to consider amendments which will strengthen the legislation. Let us do this as parliamentarians, let us do this as Members of this noble House, and let us do this as Canadians concerned as much with abuse as we are with fairness and humanitarianism.

This should not be too much to ask. Commensurate with that proposition, I would seek from the Government an undertaking that it will not eliminate from its appointees to the legislative committee, if that be the case, those people who have not adhered to the rigid line of opportunism which the Government has struck. Bring back the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais). Bring back those others who have given careful consideration to the issue. Let them join with us in constructing legislation which will be universally accepted by Canadians, which will meet the issue of abuse, which will ensure the fairness that the vast majority of those not given to excessive rhetoric would support.

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words in respect of Bill C-55 which deals with amendments to the refugee determination process.

I appreciate the opportunity because I, like most Members of Parliament—and in fact I suspect that it would be all Members of Parliament—have spent this summer being deluged by telephone calls, by letters, and by personal visits from constituents in connection with the arrival on July 12 of some 173 men and one woman on the shores of Nova Scotia. The message I got, as I am sure all Members of Parliament did, was that my constituents felt that these arrivals were queue jumpers and gate-crashers. They felt that they had butted into the line-up. Canadians have all at one time or another experienced being in a line-up and having someone try to get in in front of them. By and large, we do not like that sort of thing. There was a feeling that these people were butting into the line and that in that sense, they were illegal immigrants.

• (1650)

Another message came to me as well and that was a message of concern for the security of Canada. I suppose that was underlined by the Senate special committee report on terrorism which was released, interestingly enough, during this period of time. That report said that our present refugee process constituted a gaping hole in the security of Canada. It was that sort of thing that caused another outcry from my constituents.

I found it very interesting to note which constituents that message came from. The first group it came from was a delegation of the families of the survivors of the Air India crash. They expressed to me concern about the possibility of a gaping hole in our security system caused by the refugee process.

The second group that expressed concern to me came to me just as Parliament was recalled and I was on my way back to the House of Commons. This group was composed of representatives of the Sicilian community. In my constituency, there are about 10,000 Canadians who came originally from the Pachino area of Sicily. They too conveyed the message to me that they did not want potential terrorists getting into Canada through a leaky refugee determination process.

The message came to me as well just today when I received, as I am sure did other Members of the House of Commons, a letter from the President of the Hindu Federation of Canada. He as well expressed that same concern about the gaping hole the refugee determination process leaves in our security system. The message has come to me and to other Members of Parliament from many, many sources. We have heard not only about the need to do something about queue jumpers and gatecrashers but also about the need for plugging the security holes in the process.

By and large, the people who communicated with me said that we should ship those who arrived illegally back immediately and if we are not going to ship them all back immediately, we should detain them and then ship them back. However, I got the sense, not only from the people who called me and came to visit me, but from the people in my constituency that there was another message there. That message was that we are prepared to see genuine refugees enter Canada, no question about that, but we do not want people using the process in order to butt in and get ahead of people who have been following the rules and waiting for years to enter the country legally as immigrants.

In my view, the reason that people decided there was a group of people trying to enter the country illegally revolved around the fact that every morning and every evening when they turned on their radios or television sets or when they picked up their newspapers, they were getting reports of people who had waded ashore not at a regular port of entry but at a fishing town on the coast of Nova Scotia. They were getting reports about people who did not present their passports when they came but ripped them up on the beach. They were getting reports about people who asked news reporters where they could catch the next bus to Toronto or Montreal. They were getting reports that alleged that some of them were saying that if they were ordered to kill, they would kill.

The people were not getting the other side of the story from the press or the media. They were not being told of the true meaning of refugee status. They were not being told of the distinction between a refugee and an immigrant. They were not getting the message that we were bound by the Geneva Convention, which we had signed as far back as 1969, to accept legitimate refugees and not to turn them away. They were not getting the message that in 1985, the Supreme Court of Canada had decided that anyone who is physically present in this country, whether here legally or illegally, is entitled to all the protection of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. Those rights and freedoms, of course, include the right not to be held improperly and without just cause, the right to bail, the right to counsel, and the right to a fair oral hearing. All of those things flow automatically to those who are in Canada, legally or illegally, claiming refugee status.

I found it to be most unfortunate that the media and the press were telling only one side of the story. I do not want to say that that was universal, but by and large that was so. It is understandable, then, that after hearing only one side of the story, Canadians would get up in arms. It is understandable, after hearing only one side of the story, that they would not give us much time to try to explain the other side of the story to them. Indeed, it is not an easy story to explain. It is complex and involves many different steps. When one has made up one's mind in advance because of stories read in the newspaper or seen on television, it is very difficult to accept the comments of a Member of Parliament or a constituency assistant who is trying to tell the other side of the story.

That, of course, led to the Government introducing Bill C-84 and to the debate we are having today on Bill C-55. This whole process is designed to speed up the refugee determination system, which has resulted in a backlog of something like 20,000 cases. In speeding up that process, the whole idea with which everyone agrees, whether in Opposition or Government, is to reduce the amount of time people who are not legitimate refugees are in the country and, by reducing that amount of time and sending them back when it is decided that they are not legitimate refugees, to discourage others from coming. The idea is to set up a system that is fair and equitable.

In order to set up such a system, the Government introduced in February of 1987 some control measures. Those control measures were introduced at a time when the flow of refugees was about 1,200 a week. Those control measures cut that flow down to about 500 a week, and this legislation has now tried to put in place something that will replace those temporary measures with a fair system with which Canadians will agree, a system that will allow legitimate refugees to enter the country but at the same time discourage queue jumpers from entering Canada.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS--MOTIONS

[English]

FOOD AND DRUG REGULATIONS

SUGGESTED DRUG CONTENT LABELLING

Mr. Murray Dorin (Edmonton West) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Food and Drug Regulations in order to require the labelling of all drugs, irrespective of their intended use, in a manner that would include a quantitative list of all medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients.

He said: Mr. Speaker, my main purpose in presenting this motion to the House for debate is to gain the support of my colleagues, and alert them to the difficulties faced by many Canadians, young and old, who take prescription and non-prescription medication without knowing its complete contents. This is a very serious matter for a person with a known allergy to or low tolerance for a certain substance. In some cases people wish to avoid a substance because they know it causes them to suffer adverse reactions. In other cases, people have experienced an adverse or allergic reaction and a list of ingredients on the product label will establish which substance caused the reaction. That way the substance in question can be avoided in the future. By labelling all ingredients in drugs a person can determine which product contains the offensive substance and can avoid that product. I consider this to be basic information.

The arguments are probably similar in some ways to the debate which took place when the Government introduced a similar requirement for foods in 1976. Many of the arguments faced by the Government in opposition to that labelling apply to my motion as well. Some of the fears were that labelling would reveal a company's secret recipes to the competition. Consumers would not utilize the labels because they would not bother to read them or, if they did, they would not understand the terms. As well, it would be costly and difficult to list ingredients on food packages. None of that happened. In fact, the consumer has greatly benefited from the introduction of food labelling legislation.

In linking food labelling to my motion I wish to point out that the April 27 issue of Maclean's magazine featured a cover story entitled "Food That Can Kill". It is evident that many of the arguments put forward in the debate over food additives also apply to my motion. The article indicated that sometime in late 1964 breweries in Quebec began putting increased amounts of a chemical called cobalt sulphate into beer. It had been used for several years to make the foam on a glass of beer last longer. However, during the next six months 48 beer drinkers in Quebec became ill and 20 died. It was the most dramatic episode in Canada so far in what has become a worldwide debate over the safety of chemical additives. We do not want anyone to have to die before making mandatory the labelling of all ingredients in drugs.

The article went on to say that individually additives may be okay, but taken together with other chemical or nutritive factors they may cause adverse reactions. It said that scientists cannot be sure that all food additives are safe because not enough is known about how they react in the body with chemicals, pesticides and insecticide residues, prescription drugs, cosmetics and other foods. I firmly believe the Canadian consumer has the right to know what a drug product contains, be it prescription or non-prescription, when they buy it or use it. This applies to all drug products which are taken internally.

A drug is not dangerous on the store or pharmacy shelf but it can be potentially dangerous when taken by a person who cannot tolerate certain substances. Studies have shown that people do read labels in order to avoid undesirable components in products. People do experience serious side effects and severe allergic reactions. Some such adverse effects could have been avoided had the person had the opportunity to read the label on the medication and find a pharmaceutical product without the agent they need to avoid.

I must pause here and give credit to the key organization responsible for my presentation of this motion for debate. The Allergy Information Association made available to me extensive material and documentation on reactions to various substances. Normally I would not actively call attention to an organization. However, in this instance I believe it is important for me to set out in Hansard the address of this organization so that many people who suffer from various allergies or low tolerances to certain substances can contact the association for assistance and support. The Allergy Information Association is located at 25 Poynter Drive, Suite 7, Weston, Ontario, M9R 1K8, telephone (416) 244-8585. I do not want this to sound like a commercial but I believe many Canadians will appreciate knowing of this association if they have or suffer from allergic reactions.

In giving credit to the AIA I should also point out that this motion touches me closely personally. As many of my colleagues know, I am the father of young twins. Unfortunately they suffer from many allergies to various substances. My wife and I have spent many restless days and nights trying various prescription medications to determine those which the children could tolerate and those to which they had a reaction. If the information was readily available, it could have saved us a lot of suffering. My son is also asthmatic, which further complicates the use of medication.

I would also like to give a great deal of credit to Dr. Ed Napke, chief of the Product Related Disease Division, Bureau of Epidemiology, Health Protection Branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare. Dr. Napke provided a great deal of information in preparation for today. He has been working in this field for 20 years and I consider his expertise and knowledge of great benefit in addressing this issue. I would particularly like to use a quotation of his which is:

> Man is a walking test-tube. Each time a chemical is added or subtracted the balance may be upset.

This statement seems to validate beyond question my argument for the passage of this motion.

I should start with a simple definition of a drug. A drug is any substance of therapeutic, diagnostic or prophylactic indication, including medical devices and objects such as an IUCD. An adverse reaction is any action which is not of therapeutic, diagnostic or prophylactic benefit to the patient. I must also define the term "excipient". Medications are composed of two types of ingredients, usually termed the active and non-active. The active ingredients are, for therapeutic purposes, the raison d'être of the drug. The inactive ingredients are more properly called excipients. They are those things used as coaters, binders, fillers, colourings and flavourings. They were originally termed inactive because they were considered inert, not adding to or affecting the intended action of the active ingredient.

The actual incidence of adverse drug reactions in the general population is not known. The incidence in the institutionalized population has been obtained from surveys of hospitalized patients where the prevalence ranges from 6 per cent to 15 per cent. In addition, 3 per cent of admissions to acute care hospitals are attributed to adverse drug reactions. Fatal drug reactions are, thankfully, quite rare.

I would have liked nothing better than to come to this House this afternoon prepared with specific numbers of Canadians who have suffered or been treated for an adverse reaction to either a prescribed or non-prescribed drug. I would like to have come prepared with exact cost figures indicating the amount of money adverse drug reactions cost the Canadian taxpayer each year. These figures would have made the Government and my colleagues realize the seriousness of this motion. Unfortunately, it is almost impossible to obtain such data.

It is indeed sad that adverse drug reactions are not well identified and, when they are, are not well reported or analysed as to their bases. While I give credit to the federal Government in studying the various aspects of adverse reactions through the adverse reaction program of the Health Protection Branch, it is more and more evident that more needs to be done. The incidence of drug adverse reactions in hospital patients varies, according to the intensity of monitoring, from a low of 5 per cent to a high of 35 per cent. As many as 5 per cent of monitored patients may suffer from drug adverse reactions, or DAR, on admission to hospital, while more than 3.5 per cent of in-hospital deaths have been drug attributed. Those figure were taken from an article published more than 10 years ago. It is highly possible that the number is higher now because our society seems to be using more and more drugs.

In recent years it has been established that at least some adverse drug reactions are caused by the excipient rather than the therapeutic ingredient. Therefore it is important that the Government take action to require the labelling of all drugs which would include a quantitative list of all medical and non-medical ingredients. In other words, the label would contain both the active and excipient ingredients.

• (1710)

I can quote specific medical cases here but it would prove pointless unless everyone listening had a medical background. I see one or two doctors, but they are in the minority.

Mr. McDermid: But they add a lot of class to the place.

Mr. Dorin: The onus seems to be on persons suffering the allergy, reaction or low tolerance to a substance to determine which products they can and cannot consume. The labelling of food has made this easier and much safer. The labelling of all drugs will have the same impact. It will make the choice easier and safer for the consumer and patient.

To bring this debate to a non-medical level let me say that colouring agents are probably the best studied and most common causes of adverse reactions in excipients. As well, one of the most common food allergens is milk. Many people, including one of my twins during the early stages, suffered from a lactose intolerance. Corn is also a common element causing an allergic reaction. Both these substances are often used as fillers in various medications.

Many pharmaceutical products contain the gluten of wheat, usually as an inert excipient in capsules, tablets and suspensions. I am listing here but a few of the more well known substances which cause reactions in many Canadians. There are many others used in many products, but their names may not be so familiar.

Polyethylene glycol is used in many drugs and in products such as shaving lotions and milk shakes. Alcohols in pharmaceuticals are inappropriate for patients such as children and alcoholics. Alcohol is known to produce a synergistic effect with other medication. Therefore, an alcohol-containing medication should not be taken in conjunction with a medication which interacts with alcohol. Since the content of alcohol in medications is unknown, adverse reactions and lack of therapeutic benefit can result.

Celiac disease is a condition whereby wheat, rye, barley and oats and their products cannot be tolerated by the body. As drugs have fillers, it is important to know what the drug contains on the outside as a coating as well as in the inside as medication. I am fortunate enough to have become aware of this disease through the Edmonton Celiac Association.

The public is now aware of the fatal association of aspirin—acetylsalicylic acid—and Reye's syndrome. The public is probably not aware that many medications contain acetylsalicylic acid as an ingredient.

Many drug products have propylene glycol as their solvents. How many other "active ingredients" are stigmatized as causing or being associated with hypertension, cardiovascular collapse or even sudden, unexplained fatal reactions? The list is unknown since far too often the full formulation of the product is unknown except to the individual manufacturer and a few governmental drug agencies.

Similarly, metabisulphite, a common preservative in Canada in food, drink and drugs, has been found to cause acute asthmatic attacks in chronic asthmatics. More recently this preservative, used in certain intravenous products, has caused respiratory arrest in patients. Presently, inasmuch as these compounds are classified as "inactive", manufacturers are not required to list them on the product label. This makes it virtually impossible for a person to know whether he will have a reaction to a certain medication even if that person knows he or she has a low tolerance level or allergic reaction to a specific substance.

Information concerning the occurrence of these common additives in medications is virtually impossible to obtain. Specifications of dyes, preservatives, fillers, binders, lubricants, glidants, disintegrants, coatings, flavourings and sweeteners, is lacking. The care of patients sensitive to excipients is far more difficult without information on these additives.

The excipients and additives in drug formulations have been described as inert because they do not have an active role in the prevention or treatment of particular ailments. This has led to the misconception among physicians, pharmacists, drug manufacturers and the public that they are harmless and unworthy of mention. In fact, pharmacists are allowed to substitute drug formulations without regard to the excipients as long as they ensure that the active ingredients in the substitutions are the same as those in the formulation prescribed.

The Canadian public deserves to be better protected. The United States has legislation requiring complete labelling of some food, drugs and cosmetics that incorporate more than one ingredient no matter how innocuous the constituents are believed to be. I refer not to voting constituents this time, Mr. Speaker.

In Canada drug manufacturers are not even required to share this information with physicians or pharmacists when they introduce a new drug or reformulate a product already being marketed. Nor are pharmacists required to disclose the contents of formulations which they prepare in the absence of commercially available products.

The third stream of activity that has contributed to physicians and the paramedical professions not knowing or being aware of the product formulations is industry. Industry in the past has refused to reveal its formulations and know-how to the professions for a very good reason, namely, rivalry in business. However, with modern techniques most trade secrets can soon be unravelled whilst others can be patented. Therefore, the complete formulation should be made known to the health professionals and the general public.

In fact, the Government's Bill C-22 will provide much greater patent protection for the pharmaceutical industry and, unknowingly, the Bill actually strengthens the argument for my motion.

At one time the pharmacist and the physician did know what the excipients were in a product. There once was a time when pharmacists compounded the product and could, with some reasonable assurance, tell physicians what their patients received chemically as far as that product was concerned. Today that is not the case.

The modern pharmacist, for all his declared interest in becoming a drug information expert, often has very little knowledge, or none, of the excipients, colouring matter, particle size, et cetera, which make up a particular drug product. How can he? Sometimes even the manufacturer does not know for the manufacturer may be using a colorant or other additive which was purchased under trade name from another firm. This makes a very strong case indeed in support of the labelling of all ingredients for drugs.

One very important point in this debate—perhaps the most important factor over-all—is that the patient is at multiple risk. He suffers an ill effect, an "active" ingredient is consequently denied him and, on the other hand, a non-active ingredient which is the unsuspected culprit may show up again in the next medication he receives and produce the same unwanted reaction once more. It is conceivable that the patient might be denied proper treatment because of his reactions to unknown ingredients.

The key element in this entire speech is that it is impossible to trace or test for allergic reactions or to treat for allergy without a complete list of excipients. The medical profession cannot treat a patient when they do not know what substances compose a drug and they cannot determine an allergic reaction to a product when they do not know what the product contains.

During the month of June there was a great deal of debate in this House on the issue of unborn foetuses. In this regard it is important to note that the developing foetus or neonatal individual is particularly susceptible to the toxic effects of drugs and other chemicals. The foetus is the unwilling recipient of whatever the mother ingests, inhales or applies to the skin.

More recent studies have confirmed a continuing high drug use during pregnancy. One study reported that women took an average of 15.6 drugs during the course of their pregnancies. This figure represents 6.4 prescription drugs and 3.2 over the counter medications during the pregnancy and six additional drugs during labour and delivery. Despite public awareness of the tragedies associated with drugs such as thalidomide and alcohol, the publicity warning pregnant women to avoid the unnecessary use of drugs during pregnancy has been ineffective.

In closing, I should note that for the manufacture of a new drug identification number Canadian drug regulations require that all submissions contain a quantitative list of ingredients including colouring agents. Although such information is regarded as confidential, the Health Protection Branch has been instrumental in bringing the consumer, physician and manufacturer together in difficult cases. This work by the HPB is to be commended but it certainly does not go far enough.

I am certain every Member in this House has many constituents who suffer from allergies, whether to certain drugs or certain foods. This motion, while directly benefiting a minority in Canada, will indirectly benefit each and every Canadian by enabling the consumer to make the best choice with the greatest amount of relevant information. I urge all Members of this House to support the motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Montreal—Sainte Marie): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) for his proposal. In view of his eloquent and positive presentation and explanation of the matter, technically and otherwise, I think that any Member should support such an initiative, unless there is contrary evidence from the so-called experts. No only has the Hon. Member proved the importance of information brought forward by the Allergy Information Association, but he also quoted from personal experiences, personal cases.

I believe that often it is that kind of specific initiative that forces Governments, of whatever political stripe, to change something.

Unfortunately, it is too often left to some abstract individuals to develop policies, from some building in Ottawa or Hull, on the sixth floor, and often those people do not have specific field experience or are not aware of the impact.

First, I think it would be important to explain the thrust of the motion: it would urge the Government to bring in amendments such that each drug is labelled with a list of all ingredients. Currently medicinal ingredients are listed, but all the non-medicinal ingredients in that drug should be listed so as to inform people of the impact the drug they are taking could have on someone suffering from allergies.

On the other hand, as I told the Hon. Member earlier when he enumerated a series of learned terms only used by doctors because of their training and written on the labels of drug containers and boxes, the vocabulary used by doctors is of no help to the layman.

I therefore believe that the Hon. Member should ask that the labels for every drug include directions for use not only in technical or medical terms, but also in terms that can be understood by the public.

I believe that we should take this opportunity to ensure that all information given on pharmaceutical or food products, and this include dosage, directions for use and ingredients, be printed in large readable characters. There are thousands of senior citizens in Canada who have to take medication because of age or illness, but unfortunately, to save money, the drug companies write the directions for use in virtually unreadable print.

I am in full agreement with the motion of the Hon. Member. If we do not force companies to make their directions easy to read, we shall not meet our objective. I believe however that we should add to the motion that directions for use should be written not only in understandable terms, but also in easy to read characters.

Mr. Speaker, I trust that this motion will receive the support of all Members of this House and that it will be agreed to as quickly as possible because, as the Hon. Member has shown, some companies are saying that they are against such an amendment as their formula could then be copied by competitors. We know what it means when people are afraid of being copied! Others say that it would be too costly. I find this unacceptable.

The first duty of Parliament must be to protect the life, health and welfare of the public. We can think about the cost later. These companies are making a lot of money. It is unacceptable that we, Members of the House of Commons, whatever our political stripe, should give in to blackmail for monetary reasons.

I somebody needs a drug, it is a matter of life and death. A healthy person does not need any drugs. But when someone has to take a drug, it is important to make sure that that drug will improve his or her health, and that it will contribute to cure the disease or ease the pain related to it, but without having adverse effects on people who suffer from allergies.

I will conclude on this, Mr. Speaker, because I feel that the debate will not last very long if we all agree, given that the Conservative Member ... until we have proof to the contrary, I believe that the New Democrats will also be in agreement. On this side, we feel it is useless to go on with this debate and I am prepared to pass this motion right away. Let us act. I congragulate once more the Hon. Member. If his motion is passed rapidly and if we succeed in forcing those companies to change, we might save human lives and avoid many sufferings.

• (1720)

[English]

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my loquacious Liberal colleague has intimated that perhaps it is unnecessary for a member of the New Democratic Party to speak because, of course, the NDP, being a Party that represents the enlightened average Canadian, would surely support a Bill of such eminent merit, as it is. It is a motion that is long past due.

The principle that the consumer should be made aware of the contents of what he or she purchases for consumption is an elementary principle that is particularly critical when it involves drugs and medicines.

The Member has suggested that inert ingredients be labelled. Before addressing that specific aspect of his proposition, perhaps he should also give attention to the fact that the consumer who goes to a drugstore to receive a prescription generally gets a little bottle with the date of the prescription, perhaps the contents, the frequency of intake, and perhaps even the size of the dose.

I would suggest that in addition to labelling and making available the inert contents of a drug or pharmaceutical, the time is long past due when a patient should know what the pharmacist and the doctor know, which is the specific characteristics of the drug in terms of its effectiveness, its appropriate dosage, its likely side effects; in terms of its potential toxicity, in terms of its incompatibility with other drugs that might be taken, and any other limitations on the use of a particular drug that would be of importance in protecting the health of an individual.

I hope that the Hon. Member, in considering the provision of the contents of a medicine with respect to excipients, would also address the need for the complete availability of all pertinent information with respect to a pharmaceutical. We know that the druggist gets the information from the original package and a great deal of information is available to the doctor. I believe it also ought to be available to patients.

It is hard to imagine any drug that does not have some degree of toxicity, or limitations in terms of incompatibilities with other agents that might be consumed. It is rare to find an antibiotic or chemotherapeutic agent that does not have those limitations. Perhaps only penicillin can be classified as a commonly used drug that has no significant toxicity. But penicillin is a drug that suggests an element which is often not taken cognizance of in drugs as well as in agents. It is the idiosyncratic reaction of individuals to a variety of agencies. In other words, penicillin causes allergies, as people know.

As the Hon. Member has identified, there are a great many other ingredients that have nothing to do with the therapeutic properties of a drug but are included for a variety of reasons, such as colour, filler, binding agents, and to provide a pleasant taste.

These agents, if not identified, have the potential of causing the same kinds of effects in terms of drugs as the sulphates had with respect to food. Since the majority of us are not susceptible to these idiosyncratic reactions, too little attention has been paid to the potential danger that exists for a relative few. Because it is related to such a relative few, it should not at all be cause for lessening our concern. I was impressed by the reference made by the Hon. Member to his personal experiences and the experiences of his family with respect to a variety of substances. I would say to him that just over the last couple of weeks my family and I have become aware of allergic reactions which have caused a serious impediment to the activities of two of my children. The late recognition of these idiosyncrasies has caused my children considerable difficulty.

• (1730)

It is with congratulations and felicitations that I rise to support the Hon. Member in proposing this resolution. It is a resolution, as the previous speaker from the Liberal Party indicated, that all Members of this House, all three Parties, should be capable of supporting. The implementation of this legislation should be prepared as quickly as possible.

I will not prolong the debate so we may have an opportunity to vote positively on this motion. I would like to express my appreciation once more for having the opportunity to support this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with an issue which is amongst the priorities set by the Government of Canada in the field of health care. I am referring to the labelling of drugs and more precisely to the listing of the medicinal and non-medicinal ingredients they may contain.

In its 1986 publication entitled Achieving Health for all: a framework for Health Promotion, the Government of Canada identifies three areas which are poorly covered by existing health policies and practices. The first one is prevention on which we should put greater emphasis. Various preventable diseases and injuries continue to jeopardize the health and quality of life of Canadians.

Even though most Canadians are unaffected, some non-medicinal ingredients have been incriminated in benign or serious side effects, especially various forms of allergies.

Mr. Speaker, some non-medicinal ingredients may be used routinely in pharmaceutical products for safety reasons or for effectiveness. For example, an ingredient may be used to prevent tablets from crumbling or to maintain the sterility of a product. Others may promote the release of the active ingredient in the body after ingestion or help maintain the potency of that ingredient.

In general, non-medicinal ingredients have no detectable effect on the people taking the drug. However, in the last few years, health professionals and regulatory agencies have started to observe that some groups of Canadians show a degree of intolerance or allergy to certain ingredients.

Mr. Speaker, reports on such reactions show considerable variations. Among the most extreme I could mention a few cases of anaphylaxis, some of them followed by death. However, the responsible ingredient is seldom identified. Beside causing direct anaphylaxis, some non-medicinal ingredients have been reported to be the cause of strain-induced anaphylaxis.

Fatigue, nervousness and headaches are typical examples of symptoms related to reactions caused by non-medicinal ingredients ranking at the bottom of the scale with respect to health hazards.

A wide variety of chemical products used as non-medicinal ingredients in drugs are also added to some foods. When explaining the details of symptoms noticed in conjunction with some of these substances, I will be more specific about their more widespread use as food additives.

Sodium metabisulphite and similar compounds were often found in fruit juices, wine and beer; these substances were also sprayed on mushrooms, vegetables, potato chips and seafoods to maintain their flavour and preserve them longer. Being an oxidizing agent, bisulphite removes the oxygen required for bacterial growth and thus prevents deterioration. This is why sodium metabisulphite would also be sprayed on freshly-prepared salads in restaurants and on grocery stores fruits and vegetables stands to keep them fresh. It has been ascertained that swallowing metabisulphite may cause vomiting, skin rashes and, sometimes, congestive breath, high blood pressure and respiratory problems. However there is no explanation for the precise mechanism of reactions to metabisulphite.

It is known that monosodic glutamate, an additive often used with Chinese food, will cause wheezing respiration in some asthmatic patients. For other sensitive persons it will lead to numbness of the back of the neck, facial tension, thoracic pain and difficult breathing. Sensitive subjects showed symptoms of the syndrome after ingesting up to three grams of MSG.

In one study, benzoates, butylated hydroxytoluene and butylated hydroxyanisole, were incriminated, respectively, in 11 and 15 per cent of chronic and recurrent skin rashes. These preservatives are often present in prepared foods, bread, powdered milk and potato flakes. It is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, that the food we normally eat contains substances with such complicated names. The same preservatives are also found in fats, oil, margarine, mayonnaise, jam, chocolate, soft drinks and powdered beverage mixes. Although seldom causing gastro-intestinal symptoms, nitrates and nitrites have been blamed in cases of cyanosis in babies who were fed spinach.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, the range of side effects is very extensive, even if only a small proportion of Canadians seem to have adverse reactions to some of these ingredients. Nor is there any doubt that some of these additives are widely used in our society and do not cause any obvious problems for most Canadians. Because of the wide variety of chemicals used in drugs available in Canada, it is impossible to eliminate completely non-medicinal ingredients from all products.

For instance, some non-medicinal ingredients are essential to prevent the growth of bacteria, fungi, and algae in medication. Granted, some Canadians may have adverse reactions associated with such substances. However, when a substitute non-medicinal ingredient cannot be found, we must not forget that various toxins released by bacteria, fungi and algae have been associated with serious intestinal, and sometimes even neurological, symptoms.

Sulphite is one of the remarquable non-medicinal ingredients which have been used in food and drugs. Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that though it is impossible to eliminate it from all pharmaceutical products, its use in foods is not considered essential. Last October, the Government of Canada, therefore, limited the use of sulphites in fresh food, such as salad preparations in restaurants.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, since it is impossible to replace or eliminate all non-medicinal ingredients from all drugs, steps have been taken to protect Canadians from being uselessly exposed to non-medicinal ingredients to which they know they are sensitive or allergic. This is in fact an avoidable risk factor. In this connection, I have been advised that the Health Protection Branch has been concerned for a number of years by the presence of non-medicinal ingredients in drugs.

Approximately two years ago, associations of pharmaceutical manufacturers adopted voluntary guidelines concerning the disclosure of potentially dangerous non-medicinal ingredients. The manufacturers of prescription drugs have agreed to disclose the presence of those ingredients which had been clearly associated with symptoms of intolerance or allergy among certain patients. This disclosure has been made to the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association for inclusion in the descriptions of drugs which appear in the reference book entitled "Compendium of Pharmaceutical and Specialties". As to the makers of over-the-counter drugs, they have accepted to indicate the presence of non-medicinal ingredients on their labels.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, these measures reflect both our concern for and our monitoring of the useless exposure of Canadian men and women to non-medicinal ingredients which their systems just cannot tolerate. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, these measures are only an example of the concerted commitment of the regulating agencies, the health professionals and drug manufacturers to enhancing prevention in health care.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I find myself somewhat uncomfortable this afternoon speaking to the motion of the Hon. Member for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin). I wish to give him a great deal of credit for the fact that he has brought this matter to the attention of the House and, more particularly, to the attention of the Government, although I have some fears that the Government is not as receptive to the idea as I might like to think it should be. I dare say that there are some problems that need to be worked out with respect to this matter.

I wish to commend the Hon. Member since he has done an excellent job of presenting the problems that exist now for many people in the country who have cause to take a drug of some form and find that they have an idiosyncratic or an allergic reaction to it. I would have preferred, had I had any influence in the wording of the motion, to expand it since I continually come across products at my home that are bought from the drug store, the grocery store or the hardware store, be they liquids, solids or powders, which absolutely fail to mention on their labels what is in them. That is just as dangerous because if a child takes one of those products we have no way of knowing whether or not it is a dangerous product. There may be a warning printed on the product, for example, "Danger If Ingested", "Do Not Ingest" or "Keep Away From Children", but these warnings do not tell us what the actual ingredients are. That is the real hazard we should be addressing. The motion is extremely timely, but it needs to be expanded to other products which are not deemed to be drugs.

I was particularly interested in the personal references that the Hon. Member for Edmonton West made inasmuch as two of them struck a particular note with me in a personal manner as well. First, he mentioned his famous twins. We certainly want to congratulate him on his young family by way of twins. I am interested in those twins, too, because I have heard about them and a bit about their problems since one of their babysitters is a girl who worked in my office here in Ottawa for several years. I know that she is very fond of those twins and is concerned about the problems they have by way of allergies.

The Hon. Member referred to consultations that he has had with one of the officials in the Department who is in charge of the adverse reaction program, Dr. Ed Napke. Interestingly enough, Dr. Napke and I were class-mates at the University of Toronto Medical School a number of years ago. We have all enjoyed Dr. Napke's humour over the years and the very serious approach he takes to adverse drug reactions. I want to commend him for the work that he has done on behalf of the Department in this area. I think it likely that if we had a chance to talk to Dr. Napke further we would probably find that he is very sympathetic to many of the proposals included in the Hon. Member's motion.

I was also interested in the presentation made by the Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville (Mr. McCurdy). He and I have occasion to sit together on the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare. I have a great deal of respect for the contributions he makes to the deliberations of our committee. Today, for instance, he talked about the need for patients to have more information about drugs. To a large extent I think that he is right. On the other hand, as a practising physician, I would say that in the past I have never hesitated to provide a patient with the very kind of information he wants to have with respect to the adverse effects of a drug, what the synergistic effects may be with other drugs and so on. I think people are entitled to that information, although I have some reservation about providing it to every patient unless he or she particularly asks for it, because there are anxieties that can be produced in people if they read all the details about the adverse reports that have been documented on any given drug. However, I think the Hon. Member's contribution was very useful and I commend him for it.

Having said that, I am sure that there are some problems with the motion before the House. I wish to touch on those briefly. They are probably sufficient not to allow it to be passed today. I encourage the Hon. Member not to let this issue die. I think it is a very fundamental issue. He and the people who are interested in allergies with whom he has consulted have a valid concern.

I remind the Hon. Member and the House that there are other ways of pursuing this matter. In the Hon. Member's case we should undoubtedly see this issue brought before our caucus committee on health. There is no reason why the Hon. Member could not present this issue before those of us in our caucus who are interested in health care issues. There is no reason that he should not make representation to the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare to ask it to consider discussing it at the level of the standing committee. Failing that, as a Member of Parliament he has a right to attend the meeting of the standing committee at which the Minister himself is present to answer for his Estimates. If I were the chairman of that committee I would want to see the Hon. Member recognized to have a chance to ask questions in this regard. I think that is a very legitimate use of the standing committee.

Having said that, there are some matters concerning this issue that are of concern to the Government. I suppose they should be put on the floor at this time. The disclosure of non-medicinal ingredients is considered to be a solution to the problem. However, it should be interpreted in light of the full problem. The determination of which agent or agents which someone may be sensitive to is often an elusive process. This is particularly true for allergic reactions involving the gastro-intestinal tract. This system, unlike other systems in the body, is relatively inaccessible as compared to organs such as the skin and it is therefore hard to see reactions. Thus, a patient's symptoms of intolerance may be heightened or modified by reactions to other substances to which concurrent exposure has occurred. These substances may be airborne, ingested or have come into contact with a patient's skin. In fact, all three modes of contact may occur simultaneously.

The whole issue of the diagnosis of what is an allergic reaction and what the allergen or cause of it may be, also is compounded or confounded, one might use either word, by the placebo effect. I wish to touch upon that for a moment.

This well documented syndrome revolves around the erroneous attribution of symptoms to some particular chemical food or circumstance of events. In this case, the presumed cause is incorrect and cannot be scientifically demonstrated to have an effect. This agent is termed a placebo. To appreciate fully the magnitude of the placebo effect, and, therefore, the gravity of its implications, I wish to summarize briefly the scope of the scientifically documented medical effects of placebos.

Almost any type of pain may respond to placebos: pain after surgery, pain during and after childbirth, dental pain, and the distress of cancer. In the treatment of 150 patients with headaches caused by tension, the common cold, sinusitis, premenstrual tension, and eye strain, one investigator found that placebos relieved pain completely in 43 per cent of cases, and partially in another 31 per cent. Others have come to similar conclusions. Cough, insomnia, seasickness, chronic bronchitis, and the common cold may all yield to the placebo. Patients with osteoarthritis and rheumatoid arthritis have shown improvement. In some studies stomach ulcers, stomach irritation, and heartburn have shown amelioration after placebo administration in 92 per cent of patients. This showing was so impressive that certain gastroenterologists have speculated on whether most of the hundreds of older "treatments" for ulcers were not primarily placebo remedies.

Other aspects of body function such as blood pressure and sputum production, have also displayed a change due to a placebo. In the classic Cornell studies on one subject who had a serious stomach problem, placebos and manipulation of psychological beliefs produced impressive changes in the appearance and motility of the stomach lining, and in the secretion of gastric juice. The same investigators were able to prevent vomiting from an emetic in a pregnant woman by assuring her that this nauseating drug would actually relieve the excess vomiting from which she suffered.

In Boston, dental student volunteers produced increased amounts of saliva when they were given water that was suggested to be sour, and they showed a decrease in flow when citric acid was given with the suggestion that it was tasteless.

To the great surprise of two researchers in Surrey, England, the incontinence of "deteriorated" psychotic patients changed dramatically for the better when the patients were given sugar pills three times a day. Similar results were observed in a study in Maryland of schizophrenic and senile patients.

I would add my own anecdotal observation as a physician, in my early days when we dispensed drugs from our own office, people with certain types of pain would tell us that the aspirin they had taken had no effect at all. We would give them a brown coloured aspirin and they might find complete relief or they may have taken a pink aspirin and received no relief at all. This placebo effect is very important when one is trying to assess the effect of drugs on patients. It is very readily demonstrable.

On the other hand, the placebo also has the capacity for producing many types of adverse effects. While most side effects after a placebo are hard to measure, such as nausea, thirst, headache, dizziness, sleepiness, insomnia, fatigue, depression, numbness, difficulty in concentrating, hallucinations, feelings of cold or warmth, itching, and the like, some side effects are of the kind that are verifiable by the observer. These include vomiting, tremor, fast heart beat, diarrhea, changes in blood pressure, pallor, skin rashes of alarming severity, hives, unsteadiness of gait, and swelling.

Two prominent researchers described three major reactions to placebos in 31 patients engaged in a clinical trial. One had sudden, overwhelming weakness, palpitation, and nausea within 15 minutes of taking a placebo. A second patient developed a diffuse, itchy red rash which was diagnosed by a dermatologist as a typical dermatitis from drugs. The third patient had repeated reactions within 10 minutes of taking the pills that included abdominal pain, watery diarrhea, skin rashes, and swelling of the lips.

In another study a patient who had travelled to Miami on holiday called his physician to complain that his medicine had so weakened him as to cause a near drowning accident in the surf. A hasty check of the records showed that the patient was taking a placebo.

One could go on and give further evidence of the peculiar effects of placebos, and the involvement that this strange phenomenon has on the whole taking of drugs. I can appreciate why some of our officials in the Government are loath, at this time, to see a full blown acceptance of the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Edmonton West.

In closing, I would certainly encourage him not to put this to rest and to make sure that he comes back with this motion again, either to committee or to the House. I compliment him for the effort that he has put into his presentation to the House today.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, first, I wish to congratulate my colleague for Edmonton West (Mr. Dorin) on his motion.

Mr. Speaker, the presence of non-medicinal ingredients in drugs is always a source of concern for the Canadian Government.

It is quite usual for non-medicinal ingredients to be added in various concentrations to pharmaceutical products sold on the market to increase their safety and effectiveness. Some of these non-medicinal ingredients keep the drug active while others delay micro-biological contamination. Many of these drugs are sold in Canada, each with its own physical and chemical properties which must be taken into account in determining the dosage appropriate to the patient and his state of health.

While most of these non-medicinal ingredients can be consumed without apparent ill effect by most patients under treatment, a limited number of them have been associated with adverse side effects. The ingredients most often mentioned in such cases include sulfites, tartrazines, parabens, gluten, sugars and alcohols. For technical reasons, it is impossible to eliminate consistently all these ingredients from all drugs. Indeed, in some cases, their absence could reduce the availability of the drugs themselves.

Mr. Speaker, although a policy aimed at eliminating these non-medicinal products from all Canadian-made drugs cannot possibly protect sub-groups of Canadians against all risks of undesirable secondary effects, we must not forget that the Department of National Health and Welfare's Health Protection Branch requires that all pharmaceutical products be tested before they are marketed in this country, and that drugs so tested must contain all non-medicinal ingredients that will be added to the product sold to the public.

Checking the acceptability of a new drug makes it possible to control the harmlessness and efficiency of any non-medicinal ingredients it may include. In addition, about two years ago the associations of drug manufacturers voluntarily decided to establish guidelines concerning the disclosure of non-medicinal ingredients. Manufacturers of prescription drugs agreed to make public the non-medicinal ingredients most commonly associated with reactions of intolerance, and they conveyed this information to the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association. For their part, manufacturers of unrestricted drugs agreed to list on labels all non-medicinal ingredients contained in their products.

There is no doubt that health professionals, drug manufacturers and regulating agencies in this sector in Canada have combined their efforts in the interest of our population.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to commend all parties involved in this endeavour. The tables prepared by the Canadian Pharmaceutical Association are a telling example of the role which professional associations have voluntarily agreed to play. One of the first priorities of our health care system is to make Canadians increasingly aware of the various types of illnesses and injuries they might be able to avoid. Prevention means that such factors as may lead to an undesirable condition must first be identified, and then reduced or eliminated. In this context, Mr. Speaker, the spirit of co-operation which has been the hallmark of Canada's intervention with respect to non-medicinal ingredients attests to our commitment to lay even more emphasis on prevention within our health care system.

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, on May 14 the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight), in a communiqué related to changes to be made in the Indian post-secondary education program, made the following statement:

> Education and training are important tools in today's technological society. They are even more important for Indian people in the process of developing self-government and economic self-reliance.

I agree entirely with what the Minister said in that communiqué. In another interesting document entitled "A Framework for Diversification in Western Canada" we read the following on page 9:

> Over time the greatest returns to Canada will result from an investment in our people. Education and training, while broadly a provincial responsibility, is of special interest to the federal Government both with respect to highly qualified workers and to native people. The federal Government is anxious to see this nation's current performance improved in these areas.

The Indian post-secondary education program has been a huge success. It certainly is the avenue which leads Indian and Inuit people from social assistance to economic independence, from welfare to personal well-being, self-respect, and self-sufficiency.

That being so, I would ask the House why there is such a schizophrenic response to the delivery of these valuable programs. I want the House and the country to know that there has been a severe capping of one of the most successful and one of the most important federal government programs in existence.

I also want the House to know what is the Minister's case. The Minister's case is that the participation rate of this program has grown. Ten years ago there were 3,500 eligible students in this Indian post-secondary education program, and today there are 12,000. The costs have grown from $8 million to $93.7 million. That is the beginning and that is the end of the Minister's case.

I want to tell the House that that is no case at all, because it does not say anything about inflation over those years. It does not say anything about the growing demand which must be met for reasons the Minister himself has given. It does not say anything at all about the fact that Indian and Inuit people are rapidly taking control over their own lives.

In that same communiqué the Minister said that education and training remained a priority for him. At the same time, applications for assistance under this program are to be considered on a very strict priority basis.

I cannot take the time of the House to go through all the priorities, but I want the House to know that out of the five categories described by the Minister, only categories one and two—that is, Indian and Inuit students who were enrolled in 1986-87 and are continuing on in 1987-88, and students whose applications for assistance were deferred in 1986-87—will be funded out of this allocation advanced by the Minister and approved by Parliament.

Who will be left out? Eligible high school graduates are to be left out. Mature students who are enrolling in post-secondary education for the first time are to be left out. Would you believe it, sir, that students enrolling in programs for the LL B, the law degree, for the MD, the medical degree, or for the bachelor of education degree are to be left out? If along the way one of these students in any program has dropped out and wants to return, he will have no chance at all of getting back. Those are the priorities. This means that a large number of students will be turned away.

• (1805)

Let me quote from the Debates of the other place. Senator Len Marchand, himself an Indian person, has said the following:

> In my home band alone, which consists of 900 to 1,000 members, there are 26 students who will not receive funding for post-secondary education this fall.
> From talking with members of other bands around the country, I have learned that there are literally going to be hundreds, or a few thousand, of students who will not be able to pursue post-secondary education this fall. I call this a disastrous policy.

I just learned that a very fine cultural college in Hobbema, Alberta, the Maskwachees Cultural College, has already in the month of August had to turn down 31 applications for this program.

At this very moment, on the Alexander Reserve in Alberta, an emergency meeting is being held, attended by grassroots educational leaders who are members of the Indian community or serve the Indian community. They call the current situation a crisis. It is a crisis because we know that there is a clear link between education and future employment and economic development. There is a clear link between education and aboriginal self-government.

The Government talks about economic development, believing that it is the most important route for Indian people. It talks about Indian self-government. It uses the terminology and the phraseology. I want to tell the House and the country, however, that the Government uses all the right words, but it denies the substance thereof. I call upon the Minister to take dramatic action to show that his priorities are real and that education for Indian and Inuit students will not be denied but that this program will be met to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise on behalf of the Minister to respond to my friend, the Hon. Member for Cochrane—Superior (Mr. Penner). He has raised an interesting question. It is certainly the case that the Indian post-secondary education assistance program established by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is unique.

As the Hon. Member indicated, the budget for the program has grown substantially, from $8 million a decade ago to $93.7 million in 1987-88. Over the same period, the number of full-time equivalent students has increased from roughly 3,500 to approximately 12,000.

I would like to highlight the major provisions of this program which has the goal of enabling Indian access to post-secondary education. Full-time students can receive financial assistance for undergraduate, masters and doctoral programs, community college diplomas and college-entrance preparation courses. The costs of tuition, books, supplies and transportation for students and dependents is covered, together with living allowances of from $120 to $184 a week, shelter and child care allowances and a special incentive for graduate students. The funding is provided as a grant; there is no loan component nor is there a means test.

This year's increased budget will mean that most of the students applying for assistance will receive it. A priority system ensures fairness and consistency in approving applications. Students who are continuing their post-secondary education programs must have first draw on the budget. This includes students who were enrolled in undergraduate programs last year and who will be enrolling in graduate programs or professional degree programs in 1987-88. Next are those who were deferred last year for lack of funds.

In order to provide additional access to post-secondary studies, the Department's next priorities are new undergraduate and college entrants and college preparation students. Students who are beginning post-graduate studies or studies toward a second professional degree and who were not enrolled in post-secondary studies last year have been given a lower priority.

• (1810)

To assist individuals in achieving their personal career potential and strengthen the process of self-government and devolution of programs to bands, we must provide the opportunity within government resources for post-secondary education. The Department is now reviewing other options for student assistance and special post-secondary programs and will be discussing these with Indian leaders in the months ahead.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—NICARAGUA—REPORTED BANNING OF CONSERVATIVE PARTY—ACCESS TO POLITICAL PRISONERS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock—North Delta): Mr. Speaker, on June 5 I rose in this House to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) regarding a situation in Nicaragua that was of great concern to me. Two months previously I, as chairman of the Canadian section of the IPU, along with others, visited Nicaragua. I had looked forward with some anticipation to determining the level of pluralism in that country. President Ortega assured us that pluralism was alive and well. However, there were a number of signs in that country at that time which indicated that was not true at all.

When we got back in June, we heard that the chairman of the Conservative Party had been put under house arrest and subsequently released, but that his Party had been banned.

Since that time we have seen some very promising developments in Central America. The recent proposal to bring about peace in that troubled part of the world seems to be gathering momentum. The President of the United States has made a proposal as well and has looked with some favour at least on the other proposal. I hope, and I think all Members of the House will agree, that these negotiations will bear fruit and that there will be genuine, lasting, and total peace in that part of the world.

The key to peace and stability in that part of the world, however, rests on one ingredient, and that is the willingness to provide verification. Among the people and groups in those lands the level of distrust is so high that you cannot restore confidence unless there is verification. You will recall, sir, that the Government of Nicaragua, the Sandinista Government, celebrated the inauguration of its Constitution last January. The next day it withdrew that Constitution and declared a state of emergency. It in fact withdrew all of the major provisions for civil and human rights in that country.

I have with me a copy of that Constitution provided to me by the embassy here and I note Article 185:

> The President of the Republic may suspend, within part or all of the national territory, the rights and guarantees consecrated in this Constitution in case of war or when demanded by national security, economic conditions or a national catastrophe.

It goes on in the next article to indicate certain sections of the Constitution which cannot be suspended. For example, Article 33(2.1), which says that you cannot arbitrarily be detained or imprisoned. However, Article 33(2.2) can be suspended and that article says:

> To be brought before a competent legal authority within 72 hours.

That is, every citizen of Nicaragua has the right to be brought before a judge or competent legal authority within 72 hours.

For years we heard about the terrors of the Somoza regime, and we understand that, and the terror of its El Chipote prison. Now we have the shocking news that the Sandinista Government is using that very same installation and denying the right to be heard before a competent legal authority. We met with mothers and wives of political prisoners in Nicaragua. We have a right to be concerned about the level of rights being respected in that country.

• (1825)

My question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs was simply whether he would corroborate the news that I had received, that the President of the Conservative Party had been apprehended and that the Party had been banned. There must be some truth to it because when we were there at a conference, we tried to organize a meeting of the opposition Party leaders and were prohibited from meeting with those people within the conference centre. We had to find a room in the hotel to do that.

I come back to my original point. We have now sent two Canadian officials there to provide Canadian aid in bringing about peace. I welcome that. I think we have taken a good initiative. I hope that Canada will do its part together with other nations which are interested in a secure and lasting peace there, that we will provide those means necessary to bring verification to any agreement so that the Cuban, Soviet and Contra troops all become disarmed, so that the people do not have to fear militarization, and that a lasting, just and secure peace can exist for the people of Nicaragua and the surrounding countries. I hope that we will provide the verification which will give everyone the confidence that that will be a just peace.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my honourable colleague asked his question on June 5, 1987. The Canadian Embassy in Costa Rica has since investigated the allegations made by the Honourable Member about human rights abuses in Nicaragua. The opposition leader to whom he referred is Mr. Maurio Rappaciolli, the leader of the Conservative Party of Nicaragua. Members of his party have confirmed that neither their leader nor other members were detained or put under house arrest at the time of the IPU meeting.

The Conservative Party of that country was not included among the opposition parties which met IPU delegates because it has no members in the National Assembly, having boycotted the 1984 elections.

The Party attempted to organize a demonstration during the IPU meeting but was unable to do so because State Security agents surrounded its headquarters. The Party has not been banned and there appears to be no legal mechanism for doing so because it is not an officially recognized political party. This does not prevent it carrying out political activities subject to the restrictions which apply to all political parties. For instance, they cannot hold outdoor meetings without prior permission.

The International Committee of the Red Cross has confirmed that its representatives are denied access to the prisoners held in El Chipote because they are political prisoners held by the Ministry for the Interior under administrative detention. The International Committee is given full access to political prisoners once they have been brought before the courts and moved into the national penitentiary system.

The International Committee is denied access to political prisoners who are being held under administrative detention while their cases are investigated. Under the provisions of the state of emergency, there is no limit to the time prisoners can be held in this way.

Although no reliable figures are available, President Ortega said in May 1987 that there were 8,000 to 10,000 prisoners in Nicaragua of whom 60 per cent were common criminals, which presumably means that the other 3,200 to 4,000 are political prisoners. Other independent estimates range from 4,000 to 10,000.

Canada remains concerned by continuing breaches of human and civil rights in Nicaragua, especially instances of arbitrary arrest and harrassment of the churches, opposition groups, the press and trade unions. These concerns have been made known to the Nicaraguan Government on many occasions.

Canada welcomes the fact that the Central American peace plan signed in Guatemala City on August 7 by the five regional Presidents includes a commitment to representative and pluralist democratic systems of government in all countries in the region. We hope that the implementation of the peace plan will result in the lifting of the state of emergency in Nicaragua and the removal of the current restrictions on the press and opposition groups. We urge the Nicaraguan Government to fulfill the original goals of the revolution which have recently been reaffirmed in the Constitution. These goals include political pluralism, a mixed economy and non-intervention in the affairs of other states.

EMPLOYMENT—RETRAINING OF LAID-OFF OLDER WORKERS. REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Ms. Marion Dewar (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) when the Government would implement the program for the adjustment of older workers that it had announced 18 months ago. The Minister said that he was negotiating with the provinces.

While the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program that was introduced by the previous Government was not totally adequate, it did something for older workers. That has been phased out and we now face a vacuum while the federal Government is negotiating with the provinces. This is a disaster for people between the ages of 54 and 65, who are left without any benefits through no fault of their own, but because plants have closed down.

We must consider a program to fill the vacuum that has been left by the phasing out of the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program. Last year, some $91 million was spent on the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program. That amount has been reduced to $82 million this year.

People in my riding of Hamilton Mountain are being laid off because of the closure of Firestone and Otis Elevator. They will be left to fall through the cracks, with nothing for them. Also, if there is no program from which older workers can quickly benefit, their situation will deteriorate more rapidly. They can adjust very well to new skill training and will enter a new job situation. However, if they are left to fall through the cracks, there will be a lot of domestic pressures and human misery.

The Minister's response that he is negotiating with the provinces is inadequate. Canadians were told 18 months ago that another program would be established. That still has not taken place, which is grossly unfair and certainly does not fulfil a promise. People 54 years old and over in my riding, as well as in others, are the ones who are suffering severely. Not only are they suffering, but their families are suffering as well.

It is not right that people who have contributed to this society by being responsible workers and taking part in this economy should be allowed to fall through the cracks. It is not fair that they should be told to wait for a couple of politicians to negotiate their welfare, which is basically what is happening.

The negotiations with the provinces are taking place behind closed doors. No one knows what is happening. The Minister responds by saying that these people will be looked after when the provinces and the federal Government get on board. The federal Government has a responsibility. It has always paid 100 cent dollars for these kinds of programs and has no right to phase one out if it is not being replaced by another, and if it has not done the negotiations before it is replaced.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to say how pleased I am to have this opportunity to respond to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Dewar), and especially to congratulate her on being elected to the House. Since this is the first time I have had the privilege of speaking to her in the House, I think congratulations are particularly in order, all the more so because I had the privilege of meeting her when, as mayor of Ottawa, she invited all newly elected Members to City Hall. I may add that it was a very big reception because so many new Members were elected on September 4, 1984.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that this Government believes that the first line of defence in assisting older workers is not only setting up programs but providing jobs for Canadians. Our performance in this area has been quite remarkable.

With respect to the specific lay-offs mentioned by the Honourable Member, she should be aware that in the case of Firestone, my colleague the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion has already indicated that he is working with the Government of Ontario and the company to find a buyer to continue operating the plant and to preserve these jobs. That is our main objective.

When this government took office in September 1984, there was the LAB program, which provided adjustment assistance to laid-off older workers and was due to expire in August 1985. There were 4,200 older workers receiving benefits under this program, total payments being about $42.2 million.

Now let me tell you what has happened since then. We extended the LAB program for one year and launched consultations with the province. I must admit that these consultations may not be proceeding as quickly as we had hoped.

We also extended the LAB designations for the communities of Gagnon, Fermont, Port-Cartier, Sept-Iles, Schefferville, Labrador City, Wabush, Asbestos and Thetford Mines.

Furthermore, in December 1985, we introduced seven new regional designations under LAB: Corner Brook, Newfoundland; Buchans, Newfoundland; Glace Bay, Nova Scotia; Murdochville, Grande Vallée, Québec; Nelson, British Columbia; Salmon Arm, British Columbia; and Logan Lake, British Columbia.

In the February 1986 budget, we committed $125 million in new monies to the new Program for Older Worker Adjustment you described so well.

Finally, we are continuing negotiations with the provinces. As I said earlier, the process may not be as fast as we had hoped, but in any case, the Minister of Labour has met several times with the provincial ministers.

The results of these initiatives, Mr. Speaker, have been to greatly increase the federal government's assistance for older workers. Over 9,000 older workers are currently receiving adjustment benefits and expenditures are expected to reach $96 million this year. As a result, the federal Government's financial commitment to older worker adjustment has increased from $141 million over the five years prior to 1986-87 to an anticipated $510 million over the five years from 1986-87 to 1990-91.

While negotiations on the development of POWA are still ongoing, there is a growing recognition of the needs of older workers among all governments in Canada. For example, Ontario recently introduced a modest program for retraining of older workers and we are hoping that it will join us in the more comprehensive POWA which we have proposed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

INDIAN AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA LAND CLAIMS TRIAL—FUNDING SHORTAGE EXPERIENCED BY PLAINTIFFS

Mr. Keith Penner (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, the Gitksan-Wet'suwet'en Indian bands are seeking through court action recognition of their rights to their traditional lands in northern British Columbia.

The Government of Canada, as the trustee for Indian people under our Constitution, has an obligation to see that justice is done and that this case is heard in its entirety. The defendants in this case are both the province and the federal Government.

Three weeks into the trial the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs reduced its legal aid support to the bands by more than $1 million. The presiding judge, Chief Justice Allan McEachern of the B.C. Supreme Court, says it is imperative and in the public interest that this trial continue. He went on to say that anything other than that is a confession of failure on the part of all of us, and all those who support the justice system in our country.

Both the plaintiffs, that is the Indian bands, and the public must have a resolution of this vital question related to aboriginal rights. Therefore I ask that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. McKnight) not try to win this case by reducing the funding for legal costs required by the Indian bands.

WAR CRIMINALS

CALL FOR EARLY PASSAGE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, on June 29 I rose in this House to make the record clear about the Government's commendable action on war criminal legislation. Unlike previous Governments we had the moral courage to set up a special commission chaired by Mr. Justice Jules Deschênes to investigate the delicate issue of the possibility of war criminals living in Canada and to make recommendations concerning the prosecution of such individuals.

• (1405)

Our current Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) responded to the recommendations in a sensitive manner while insisting on a made-in-Canada solution. Bill C-71 provides the required legislation. Unfortunately, we were not able to pass this legislation in the last days of June due to some genuine concerns by two of my colleagues.

Since Parliament has been recalled to deal with the refugee legislation, I urge the Government and both opposition Parties to support quick passage of Bill C-71 during this emergency sitting. I spoke to the Minister of Justice this morning and he assured me that Bill C-71 is ready to be presented to the House of Commons. Let us get on with this historically important task.

SPECIAL CANADIAN GRAINS PROGRAM

ELIGIBILITY FOR IRRIGATION PAYMENTS

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government's recent decision to provide supplementary benefits to irrigated production under the Special Canadian Grains Program appeared to be a good decision. Perhaps it was a good decision, but on the surface it now appears to be flawed. In what appears to be a hallmark of the Government, it has again clouded the issue.

For some unknown reason 80 per cent of Saskatchewan's intensively irrigated acreage is not eligible for supplementary benefits under the Special Canadian Grains Program. Irrigation farmers in Saskatchewan want to know why they are not eligible for these special payments. In Alberta only 20 per cent of intensely irrigated acreage is not eligible for these special benefits.

Why is there a discrepancy between Alberta and Saskatchewan under this program? If there is a good reason, why has the Government not bothered to tell the producers?

EFFECT OF ADOPTING BILL C-22

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, in a few days, if the Liberal Senators do not change their minds about the drug legislation, Bill C-22, the authority of this House will have been questioned and the twice-given unanimous consent of the Quebec National Assembly will have been ignored.

One of the most important projects of this decade, which would represent 1,300 permanent jobs and $700 million in capital expenditures, will be lost to Montreal and Quebec as a whole.

In this issue, we have to recognize that the Liberal Leader is powerless and that the Quebec Members for Laval-des-Rapides (Mr. Garneau) and Montreal—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart) are embarrassed and silent.

Mr. Speaker, it is now up to Montrealers to rise in protest. Mayor Doré, members of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade, South Shore residents of Montreal, elected public representatives, businessmen, consumers and workers, you must all come to the Senate and say that you want those jobs. Come and demonstrate before the east door of Parliament, before the doors of the Senate, where the whigs are holding your jobs hostage. Quebec Senators especially should be held to account. Come and speak your mind.

TAX REFORM

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, in the White Paper on Tax Reform tabled on June 18 this year, the Conservative Government promised to reduce our taxes by $5 billion. It forgot to mention that since 1984, the Government has taken $22 billion from Canadian taxpayers.

Once again, the present Government is trying to throw up a smoke screen by pretending to reduce expenditures, although it is actually increasing the amount of money Canadians must spend by $17 billion.

As if that were not enough, the proposed reform includes a new federal sales tax, to be applied to goods and services. Despite representations made by the Opposition, the Government has refused to promise not to tax food. When we know that 46.8 per cent or nearly half of our senior citizens live below the poverty line, and that more than 16 per cent of their expenditures are for food, taxing this vital element of our daily lives would further aggravate the financial burden of these Canadians who spent their lives building our country. This tax is unacceptable and it is unfair. While the Government is reducing corporate taxes, it is increasing taxes for single parent families and low-income families. In fact, it is taking the bread out of the mouths of those Canadians who are in greatest need.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION

CONDEMNATION OF PRACTICES

Mr. Dave Nickerson (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation ill serves fishermen in the Northwest Territories.

It has a stranglehold over their lives and seems almost useless at its stated purpose of marketing fish.

Its monopoly, granted by previous Governments, stamps out any private marketing initiative which would lead to higher prices being paid to fishermen.

The recent decision not to open the Wool Bay receiving station on Great Slave Lake goes against any economic sense and constitutes a threat to the livelihood of fishermen. The only reason can be that the corporation is deliberately trying to cut back production because of its failure to fulfil its sales mandate.

It is time that we removed this millstone from around the necks of northern fishermen.

POVERTY

INSTITUTION OF MINIMUM INCOME PROGRAM

Mr. Robert Toupin (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, all Canadian men and women must be rejoicing at the Canadian Council on Social Development's recent report featuring recommendations pertaining to work and income. Canadian Council officials stress that four million Canadians live below the poverty level and they advocate the establishment of a minimum income program providing basic support payments for people who are unable to work, cannot find employment, or hold unpaid jobs like those who have to remain at home.

The income security system endorsed by the Canadian Council would make a significant contribution to families with children as well as to low- and middle-income households, and it would mark the end of the scandalous situation of poor children in this country.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted that business circles and labour leaders have welcomed this important report with unrestrained enthusiasm, and I urge the federal Government to implement these recommendations at the earliest opportunity.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

CAPE BRETON—UNEMPLOYMENT REDUCED

Mr. Lawrence I. O'Neil (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, it is less than three years since my election. I have argued that new approaches could improve economic opportunities in my native region. Our Party promised to try, and its efforts have resulted in successes.

People are being put to work. All Canadians want an opportunity to enjoy meaningful employment.

A recent headline in a Nova Scotia daily tells the story: "Nova Scotia unemployment down. Cape Breton leads the way". In my riding we have agencies, Enterprise Cape Breton, SCIDA; we have the Cape Breton Investment Tax Credit, IRDP, and the topping up assistance. We have increased local control. These are major reasons for success.

I have advocated increased support for our primary industries. The Government of Canada has responded with a special $10 million forestry program, a $14 million tourism agreement, harbour improvements, the development of a new clam fishery, and a feed freight assistance program for all of Nova Scotia. Manufacturing facilities are under construction for the first time.

The Government has a regional development record to be proud of and I am proud of what has been accomplished. We have reversed the trend. The process of building a strong and diversified economy is well under way in Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS AT TRANSCONA SHOPS IN WINNIPEG

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, we learned today that the CNR has announced the lay-off of 49 workers at the Transcona shops, with more to be expected soon. What is more disturbing is the reason for the announcement. It is that CN intends to abandon the commitments that have been made by federal Governments over the last 20 years to the rehabilitation and upgrading of branch lines in western Canada.

This makes a mockery of the so-called commitment of the Government to western development and diversification. When the Government can abandon the vital transportation resources of the west and not hold CNR to the kinds of commitments that are essential to the movement of our basic commodities, it simply says to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that once again we have a scam in front of us.

I ask this House to demand immediately that the Minister of Transport deal with CNR and ask it to live up to its commitments and immediately make a decision to restore the branch line rehabilitation program for prairie farmers.

THE ECONOMY

CONTRIBUTION OF REED PAPER COMPANY TO QUEBEC CITY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, as Member for Québec-Est I want to commend Reed Paper Company management for their initiative and the confidence they have shown in this Government led by the Progressive Conservative Party.

Reed Paper officials have unveiled a $146 million investment project at their Quebec City mill, a project which will protect the 1,500 existing jobs and directly or indirectly create 500 new jobs.

The climate of confidence in the Canadian economy is due mainly to the very timely and well-advised interventions of the regional Minister, the Hon. Michel Côté, who has been criss-crossing Canada to meet job-creating company officials, and to the exceptional leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister Brian Mulroney who has managed to restore Canada's credibility the world over, shore up Canadian unity, enable Quebec to endorse the Constitutional Accord with respect and dignity, and launch productive and respectful negotiations between Canada and our neighbour, the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I want to draw attention to this momentous event and, personally and on behalf of my constituents, thank management President Peter William and Vice-President André Sarazin for this contribution to the economic and social life of the beautiful region of greater Quebec City.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF LAY-OFFS AT TRANSCONA SHOPS IN WINNIPEG

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, the announcement of the lay-off at the rail plant in Transcona shows that the Canadian National Railways is abusing the goodwill of railway workers once again as well as abusing the goodwill of the Canadian people with respect to their commitment for branch-line upgrading.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) says this makes a mockery of the Government's commitment to western Canada. It does. It also makes a fool out of the former Liberal Government which led this country to believe that if the Crow rate was changed we would have consistent upgrading of the rail lines in western Canada. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry fell for that business and he should be the last one to lecture anyone on this matter.

The railways are abusing the goodwill of railway workers. They are up to their old tricks. They are laying off while negotiations are going on. The Government should take heed of the conciliators report which shows that the railways have not been dealing in good faith with neither the workers nor the Canadian people and get the CNR and CPR to start to dealing fairly with their employees.

TAX REFORM

EFFECT ON SMALL BUSINESSES

Mr. Alphonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard—Anjou): Mr. Speaker, in stage two of its tax reform, the Government wants to introduce a new 8 per cent sales tax that would apply to nearly all goods and services, including food. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has ignored entirely the problems this kind of tax might create for small businesses.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses very accurately described what the impact would be on these businesses. First, the new tax would be an administrative nightmare for all small businesses. Second, small businesses are not in the same position as large companies to pass the cost of the new tax on to the consumer. And third, the new tax will discourage consumption.

Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of Canadian businesses have an annual turnover of less than $250,000, which is only 5 per cent of total Canadian sales.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

OPPORTUNITY TO AMEND BILL C-22

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party has proposed some reasonable improvements to the drug patents Bill, improvements that are based on the recommendations of the Eastman Report. Our proposals would guarantee jobs for Canadians, including young Quebecers, and at the same time let their grandparents pay lower prices for their medication.

I would like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs why he is refusing to consider changes that are so reasonable and so fair and that have the support of the Canadian people.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition had been following the debate on this Bill he would have recognized, and seen the evidence, that in fact what we are proposing will be of enormous benefit to the health of Canadians by promoting a lot more health research in this country, $1.4 billion more, as well as 3000 jobs in this area. Our young people now have to go overseas if they want to work in this area.

Because of the Drug Prices Review Board looking at the prices of all drugs, including that 93 per cent that do not have generic competitors, there will be downward pressure on drug prices for the first time in Canadian history at the federal level.

Besides, as the Liberal Party quite properly concluded in 1983, with the White Paper issued by the then Minister, the Hon. Member for Papineau, and as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has himself said on many occasions when he was Chairman of the Board of Sandoz, it simply makes sense for Canada to do this.

AMENDMENTS PROPOSED BY LIBERAL PARTY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it would make sense for the country to accept the Eastman report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those are the changes we have already supported and have always supported. The Minister said there are guarantees of investment, but the legislation which will come back before the House has no guarantee written into it. The Liberal amendments are based upon the well received Eastman report and the package of recommendations returning to this House, one of which is to establish a royalty fund which will disburse moneys against proven research, guarantee long-term research and development. They guarantee new jobs for Canadians and they put a lid on drug prices.

• (1420)

In these circumstances, based upon the facts, the studies and the Eastman report, why is it that the Minister refuses to do what is best for Canadian consumers in a way that will not lessen research and development possibilities in Canada?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the proposals of the Senate will not make things better for consumers. The proposals in Bill C-22 will.

In terms of the royalty fund, let me deal with one particular aspect of it. As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should be aware, and I am sure he is, there is in Canada today a number of new pharmaceutical research companies, biotechnology companies. In my province alone there are three or four. They are all over the country. Canadian scientists are interested in getting involved in this exciting area which promises to have tremendous benefit for the health of not just Canadians but of the entire world. We in Canada want to be a part of that technological revolution. It would be a shame—it would be immoral—to deal ourselves out.

Nothing proposed by the Senate, nothing in the royalty fund, will provide one penny to those companies. Without patent protection for their discoveries they will not be able to raise the capital. The Hon. Member should talk to John Evans who at one time was touted as a future Leader of the Liberal Party. Ask him what he thinks about this. The Hon. Member should talk to Dr. Polanyi, our Nobel Prize winner. Ask them what they think about this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COST OF DRUGS—REQUEST THAT STUDIES BE CHANGED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have talked to Dr. Eastman who has made the most thorough study of this matter in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All the experts, all the public studies, the findings of the Eastman report itself, even the independent findings of the Research Branch of the Library of Parliament here in Ottawa, have concluded that the legislation proposed by the Government will raise drug prices dramatically.

The Minister shakes his head and denies that implicitly. He has said that he has studies to prove otherwise. Will he table those studies in the House of Commons? If he will not, will he not finally admit that the real impetus for this legislation is the pressure from the Americans to keep the free trade negotiations going?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition totally dismisses—in fact, he never talks about, and I can understand why although he ought to—the 3,000 jobs. He ought to talk about the hundreds of millions of dollars that will be invested in Montreal alone. He ought to talk about the previous Liberal Government to try to make up, in part, for all the lost jobs caused by the 1969 amendments and the funding of the Biotechnology Institute in Montreal. He ought to talk to the people who work there and ask them about this.

If the Hon. Member has been watching television over the last two days he will have noted that the U.S. has authorized human testing on a new AIDS vaccine developed by a Canadian, a Canadian here in Canada who had to move to the United States because we are not doing that research. Does he want to continue that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIEWS OF RALPH NADER

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister well knows that under the present legislation there are no guarantees for jobs. There are no guarantees with regard to research and development.

Yesterday, the consumer advocate, Ralph Nader, stated, and I quote—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: —the Canadian Government "is close to making a very serious mistake by choosing corporate wealth over the Canadian public's health". Will the Minister explain why he refuses to listen to this consumer advocate when in fact we know from officials in Washington at the Canadian Embassy that he has listened to and has acted on the best interests of multinational corporations in the United States? Why does he not at least give some consideration to the consumer advocate and the suggestions he makes?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the guarantee of jobs comes from the over $900 million of investment already committed, and the $1.4 billion that we estimate will be committed over the next three years.

• (1425)

Perhaps when he is returning to Cape Breton this weekend, the Hon. Member should stop in Montreal and talk with people on the island, and look at the hundreds and hundreds of jobs that he is putting in jeopardy in the high-tech area by his constant persistence with his allies in the other place.

It strikes me passing strange that the Hon. Member's Leader stands up and falsely accuses us of listening to advocates in Washington, while the Hon. Member stands up and says we should listen to advocates in Washington.

'I have a detailed reply to Mr. Nader, and I would be pleased to table this letter. Mr. Nader fails to realize that this is Canada and not the United States. In Canada we have medicare, and we have social safety nets. Eighty-five per cent of the population is covered by drug plans, including virtually 100 per cent of senior citizens. No one who receives welfare goes without drugs. We have a tremendously beneficial health care system to which Bill C-22 is a positive addition.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister may choose not to give consideration to an internationally acclaimed consumer advocate. But why does the Minister refuse to listen to the United Church, the Royal Canadian Legion, six provincial Governments, and senior citizens across the country? Why does the Minister refuse to listen to those Canadians? Is this another consultation process of the Prime Minister and his Government, saying one thing and doing the opposite?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Why does the Liberal Party of Canada refuse to listen to the Liberal Legislature and the Liberal Premier of Quebec? Why do they refuse to listen to virtually everybody who is interested in the technological progress of this country, in Quebec and elsewhere?

Why does the Hon. Member not listen to his former colleague, Judy Erola? Why does he not read the White Paper put out by the previous Government, and the Hon. Member's colleague, the Member for Papineau? Why does he not talk to researchers? Why does he not talk to the students?

ADVICE OFFERED TO MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, a minute ago the Minister said that he did not want to listen to the advice of Mr. Nader who gave his opinion after experience in the United States, and after studying the impact of the proposed legislation in Canada. I have a straightforward question for the Minister.

As the Minister of Consumer Affairs in Canada, why has he persistently listened to the advice of drug company interests in the United States, but refuses to listen to the most outstanding spokesperson for consumer interests in the United States?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in an August 1 edition of the Montreal Gazette it points out that Mr. Fingerhutt, a prominent Washington consultant, sits permanently on the NDP strategy committee.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: The Leader of the NDP falsely accuses us of acting on advice from elsewhere when we are doing this for the benefit of Canadians. Presumably, he is receiving this tactical advice from Mr. Fingerhutt, the Washington consultant who apparently advises him on how he should act in this House. Now the Leader of the NDP feels that we should do the same thing in terms of Mr. Nader.

I suggest he return to his Washington consultant and ask that consultant to read the Act, and to look at the benefits that will come to Canadians, and ask him if they should put political opportunism ahead of the interests of Canadians.

PRIME MINISTER'S DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will answer the question. Will he confirm to the House that at the first summit that our newly elected Prime Minister had with President Reagan, the question of this legislation was brought up? Pressure was created then. It was brought up at the second summit that the Prime Minister had with President Reagan. It was brought up at that time by the Vice-President of the United States, George Bush.

Will the Consumer Affairs Minister actually acknowledge that he has yielded to very serious American pressure on this legislation, and is not acting in the interest of Canadians?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I, and every other spokesperson for the Government, have indicated that we have been under pressure from all of our partners for many years. Earlier this week in the House that was stated by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The British, the French, the Germans, the Swiss, and the Americans have all said to Canada, stop behaving like Taiwan and Bolivia, and respect intellectual property.

• (1430)

If the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party is really interested in the health care of Canadians, in research and development, and in future cures for diseases which inflict mankind, I suggest that on one of his trips, perhaps on the way to Socialists International, he stop at one of our medical schools and talk to people doing the research.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the whole country knows that right after this Government was elected we saw the most massive cuts, in recent history, in research and development money of any Government, and he knows that.

[Translation]

REQUEST THAT MINISTER LISTEN TO CONSUMERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is simply this: Will the Minister accept the suggestions made by spokespersons for U.S. consumers and pay no attention to the interests of U.S. corporations? That would be fair to Canada.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in committee—and perhaps he could talk to some of his Members who were there—we looked at the effect Bill C-22 would have and asked the question if in 1969 we had introduced Bill C-22, with a drug prices review board, seven years for manufacturing, and 10 years for importing exclusivity, what would be the impact in 1983, which was the year Eastman concluded that there was a $211 million savings from generic competition. If Bill C-22 had been in place, there would have been between $230 million and $360 million more savings.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party, in continuing to make this false accusation of rising prices, ought to do the House a favour and, in all conscience, ought to take a look at that study—I understand that at one time he taught economics; he should be able to understand it—and he will see that this is beneficial to consumers, not detrimental to consumers.

BANKS AND BANKING

REPORTED OVERCHARGING OF FARMERS—REQUEST FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Finance. Yesterday, in response to a question put by the Hon. Member for Algoma, the Minister made the statement that the reason the Government did what it did in the case of the Northland Bank and the Canadian Commercial Bank was to bail out the farmers, not the banks. That is like saying we are feeding the sharks to help the drowning man. It is one of the most outrageous statements made in the House.

If the $1 billion bail-out for the banks suggested and required a Royal commission investigation, why does the fact that the banks are now overcharging thousands of farmers in an inequitable and unjust way not also require a proper investigation and commission of inquiry? Will the Minister, today, establish that kind of Royal commission of inquiry on behalf of the farmers of western Canada?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, first of all, that the two banks disappeared and that the farmers and customers of those banks are very much with us.

When we speak of farmers, for example, thanks to the $1 billion Special Canadian Grains Program, thanks to the $60 million interim stabilization program, and thanks to program after program, it adds up to over $6 billion. This Government's efforts on behalf of farmers are well known.

The particular case raised by the Hon. Member, however, is not just an issue for farmers. It was a general question which was raised when he was a Minister in Government. Between 1980 and 1984, interest rates reached 22.75 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Hockin: It was when interest rates went right through the roof that caused this problem. Nothing was done by the previous Government to bring down interest rates, to speak of, or to help in this particular regard.

Six months ago a Member from our side of the aisle—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry.

Mr. Axworthy: Mr. Speaker, while the Hon. Minister is talking about history, I remind him that it was the previous Government that brought down the inflation rate, which is the reason interest rates have gone down. That was the reason for it.

FARMERS' LEGAL COSTS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister another serious question, seeing that he has flunked his history lesson.

He said yesterday that the farmers must go to court to try to obtain some relief from this major transgression. Will the Minister not provide assistance to those farmers who are presently facing bankruptcy and the loss of their farms and cannot afford the legal costs? Will the Government provide them direct financial assistance to undertake those legal cases?

Will the Minister also insist that the banks begin to provide open books on those loans rather than require the $500 fee which they presently demand from those farmers? Those are in the jurisdiction of the Minister. He can take action now, and we are asking him to take it today.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy to answer that question. I know this particular issue was raised on a television program two nights ago and then picked up by the NDP, but this was six months after the Hon. Member for Mackenzie raised this issue with me and I started to conduct inquiries.

Mr. Axworthy: And we are still waiting for an answer.

Mr. Hockin: The Hon. Member, as usual, is third in line in looking into these kinds of issues. Let me tell him what the situation is.

We have not just farmers who are affected by this; we have small-businessmen, large businessmen, and individuals. Many Members of the House are concerned about variable rates.

I have satisfied myself through my inquiry that the kinds of disclosure in place now will not allow this to happen any more. As for those who have suffered, I instructed, after I watched the television program and before I came to the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hockin: —the Superintendent of Financial Institutions to meet with some representatives from Innisfail, Alberta, to find out what we can do to help them.

We want to help, but we cannot intercede in a third party issue.

Mr. Axworthy: Yes, you can.

Mr. Hockin: We cannot help one side instead of the other. We will help the farmers in this particular case in any way we can, but we cannot interfere in a court case.

AIR SAFETY

INCREASING FREQUENCY OF NEAR COLLISIONS IN UNITED STATES AIRSPACE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. A number of Canadians are concerned with the increasing frequency of near misses in American airspace. I would like to have the Government assure Canadians that it will look into the matter to ensure that Canadian lives are not a threat and that adequate safety precautions are in place in the United States.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that that very thing is being done and has been done for many months, indeed years, in this country.

Although they are a separate sovereign nation, they also have a huge number of people operating in a much smaller space than we have in Canada, so the situation is not comparable in any way, but it is being monitored virtually daily.

SAFETY OF CANADIAN PUBLIC

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we are not comparing Canada with the United States. We want to ensure that the Canadian public is safe when it is flying over that country.

We would ask that the Government ensure that the reports, which it says are being made on an ongoing basis, are made public so that we know what the risks are.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport: Mr. Speaker, again I assure the Hon. Member that everything is safe and is being done, and will continue to be done.

Indeed, I think it was just today in California that they adopted standards for visual flight rules which we have had for years and years in this country. They are moving to our system, rather than the other way.

PENITENTIARIES

JOYCEVILLE PENITENTIARY RIOT—REPORTED CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOL

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It concerns the serious riot last night at Joyceville Penitentiary. The Minister knows that one of the causes of the riot was the behaviour of several intoxicated inmates. The Minister has known for some time now that there is a serious alcohol problem at this particular institution. In the past year there were over 60 alcohol seizures; two stills were seized at this particular institution.

Could the Minister indicate what is wrong with security at this penitentiary? How is it possible for alcohol to be manufactured and consumed in a Canadian penitentiary?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the Hon. Member, I would advise him that the security at Joyceville is excellent. I think, frankly, the Hon. Member should have commended the members of the guards at that particular institution for the commendable way in which they put down the disturbance last evening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to commend prison officials while at the same time condemn the Minister for his inaction. He knows that it is a result of his inaction that Canadian penitentiaries are a powder-keg ready to explode.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1440)

OVERCROWDING AT PENITENTIARY

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General knows that another cause of this particular riot last night was the overcrowding that exists at Joyceville. Over the past three years, 10 per cent to 20 per cent of its inmates have been double-bunked. Instead of addressing the problem of overcrowding in Canadian penitentiaries, the Prime Minister builds a $68 million unnecessary prison in his riding—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, please.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious problem in Canadian penitentiaries of overcrowding and double-bunking, what has the Solicitor General done and what does he propose to do to address this particular problem, in order to avoid the possibility of future riots in Canadian prisons?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I find it somewhat difficult to understand the Hon. Member when, on the one hand, he tells us there is overcrowding and, on the other hand, he chastises us for building more prisons. He cannot have it both ways.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nunziata: It wasn't needed in his riding and you know it.

Mr. Kelleher: Mr. Speaker, I remained silent while the Hon. Member was asking his question. Perhaps he could remain silent while I try to respond to it.

I would like to point out that overcrowding is not a serious problem in our prisons. At this particular institution there are 531 cells housing 584 prisoners. That is an overbunking of approximately 10 per cent which I think is extremely reasonable.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—COMPATIBILITY WITH UNITED NATIONS OBLIGATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. As the Government knows, last week the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees criticized Bill C-84 as falling short of Canada's duty under the United Nations to protect refugees. Yesterday our Ambassador to the United Nations said that this Bill could be made compatible with our UN obligations. Was our Ambassador speaking for the Government?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, our eminent UN Ambassador, Stephen Lewis, has apparently said that our Bill is fair and humane, our history of generosity and openness will not be compromised, and indeed our legislation will not breach our international covenants.

REQUEST THAT BILL BE AMENDED

Mr. Dan Heap (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, really Mr. Lewis was indicating discontent with Bill C-84 when he said that it can be brought into line and made compatible with our UN obligations and then would be fair. Based on his criticism implied in that remark and the criticisms of civil rights groups and churches, will the Government do the right thing and take the necessary steps to bring Bill C-84 into line with our UN obligations to refugees who come to our shores unable to bring documents with them?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the abuse of immigration laws cannot continue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Weiner: The profiteering and trafficking in human flesh cannot continue. We have no sympathy for that. What we have before us is a Bill whose purpose is the following:

(a) to preserve for persons in genuine need of protection access to the procedures for determining refugee claims;—

(c) to deter the smuggling of persons into Canada—

(d) to respond to security concerns, including the fulfilment of Canada's obligations in respect of internationally protected persons.

COLLECTION OF PASSPORTS BY AIRLINE ATTENDANTS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Contrary to the instructions of the Department of External Affairs calling upon Canadians not to forfeit or surrender their passports to anyone, is the Minister aware that he is asking the staff of all airlines, including foreign carriers, to undertake the responsibility of taking up and later on returning to passengers hundreds of passports on each and every international flight, to risk the danger of losing them or mixing them up, and to act in effect as untrained Canadian immigration officers in a foreign country under foreign laws? Is the Minister aware that that is what he is asking for?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the Bill gives us certain powers. It does not say, however, that we must use them. It gives us the power to collect the documents if needed. It does not say that we must collect them all. It gives us the power to issue detention certificates. It gives us the power to turn around ships if needed, but not every ship on the horizon. It gives us the power to fine and jail if needed. We may do it if we have to and we will do it if we must, if and when a situation warrants it. However, we will deter abuse and that is what is clear to all Canadians.

HIJACKING INCIDENTS—IDENTIFICATION OF PASSENGERS

Mr. Roland de Corneille (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister had answered my question. However, I would like to ask him about the question of nationality in the case of a hijacking. IATA spokesmen are concerned, if carrier staff have in their possession all passports and hijackers ask them to identify particular nationalities such as Jews or Israelis, about where the crew stands. What is the role of the crew in the protection of passengers as well as their own safety with this kind of law in force?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, the legislative committee is now reviewing all aspects of the current legislation. We have had wonderful co-operation with the IATA people. I might say that the interception abroad is working and working well. We have continued training of airline personnel. Of 6,700 improperly documented arrivals last year, there were 1,300 interceptions made abroad. This year the figure is running even higher. New legislation will help the airlines do even better, and the collection of documents is not mandatory but could be useful when seriously in doubt.

Oral Questions

BANKS AND BANKING

FARMERS' LITIGATION WITH BANKS—REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Finance and is regarding the rip-off of farmers by the banks and their interest rate shenanigans. The Hon. Member for Humboldt—Lake Centre brought this issue up six months ago. The Minister suggests that the money that has been given to farmers for the situation in the west is the Government's commitment to farmers. Meanwhile he is abandoning those same farmers to fight the powerful banks unaided. Will he put some money where his mouth is and give assistance to the farmers in fighting those powerful banks?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, the financial institutions involved in this particular matter are not just banks. A whole range of trust companies and credit unions also had similar problems. I would like to help any groups affected in any way I can, and particularly farmers. Would the Hon. Member tell me exactly what kind of assistance he has in mind?

NATURE OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, the Government bailed out the banks with $1 billion. I want to take a part of that $1 billion and give it to the farmers so that they can legally fight those banks to get justice in their interest rate problems.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member—

Mr. Broadbent: You're answering the question.

Mr. Hockin: I am going to answer the question. Would he like us to support financial institutions which are small, regional, and undercapitalized as well?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport, I have a question for the Parliamentary Secretary.

RAILWAYS

REQUEST THAT MINISTER OF TRANSPORT VISIT ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE TO SEE IMPACT OF CN DECISION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Can the Parliamentary Secretary confirm whether the Minister of Transport will be in Abitibi-Témiscamingue to attend the weekend meeting of Quebec Conservative Members to defend CN management's decision to shut down their freight train service in Abitibi, thus causing the direct or indirect loss of some 9,500 jobs in that region?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that all Quebec Conservative Members will be present in Northwestern Quebec where we will review the various files concerning Quebec, including one of the most important cases involving investments of $700 million about to be made in the Montreal metropolitan area where 1,300 new jobs are being created, while a handful of Liberal Senators are thwarting this massive flow of capital towards Montreal. We intend to review the situation in light of Premier Bourassa's representations on the heels of a National Assembly unanimous motion directed against the Liberal Senators here in Ottawa. The motion is to the effect that enough is enough, let Quebec have its share of industrial expansion in the scientific field of research and development.

EXTENT OF PROTECTION OFFERED TO PHARMACEUTICAL COMPAGNIES—IMPACT

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister, who is giving me an opportunity to inquire about a situation that is entirely incomprehensible to public opinion. And perhaps he could advise his Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs to be more conciliatory and reasonable when dealing with consumers.

What the Liberal Senators propose is not to prevent investment but to get certain conditions for such investment in Canada, without letting the drug companies make excessive profits. The four-year period proposed by the Liberal Senators is the one recommended in the Eastman Report. I therefore ask the Prime Minister why he insists on letting the drug companies make excessive profits by giving them a monopoly that is totally unacceptable, according to Professor Eastman who did the study, a 10 year monopoly that is unnecessary.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked me to speak to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister has protected the interests of consumers, and I think that is clear to everyone, and I will certainly give him the message.

I will also ask the Hon. Member to send a message to his leader, who is supposed to look after the interests and future of the Liberal Caucus, including non-elected Liberal Senators who are not only preventing elected Members here in the House from expressing their democratic will—this handful of Senators, who are not elected and who are very well paid, are not only undermining the democratic will of the House but also jeopardizing the creation of 1,300 highly sought-after jobs in the science and technology field as well as investments totalling $700 million for Montreal. I tell you, the Liberal Party is about to cause an industrial catastrophe in Montreal. Talk to your leader about this because Quebecers' time is running out.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEGAL AID—SASKATCHEWAN USER FEES

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. He will be aware of the fact that the Saskatchewan Legal Aid Commission recently introduced user fees for legal aid services as a result of the Conservative Government slashing its Budget by 8 per cent this year. This is in clear breach of the federal-provincial memoranda of agreement on legal aid. What action is he prepared to take to ensure equal access to justice for all, not just those who can afford to pay for it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members will know, the federal Government is fully committed to funding legal aid across Canada. We have entered into agreements and are in effect funding 50 per cent of the cost of legal aid in each province.

I have of course been in touch with my officials concerning the provisions of the agreement between Saskatchewan and the federal Government. I should point out to the Hon. Member that I understand litigation is now contemplated and will be before the courts. It seems to me under those circumstances I should not comment further on the basis that it will be sub judice.

TERMS OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENT

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, while this litigation is before the courts, it is quite clear that poor people in Saskatchewan are being turned away from legal aid—

Mr. Lewis: Name one.

Mr. Robinson: —because they cannot afford the fees. A memorandum from the acting chairman of the commission asks all directors to record the applicants who are denied services as a result of inability to pay. Does the Minister not agree that the imposition of user fees in legal aid is in clear breach of the federal-provincial agreement? If so, what action is he prepared to take to ensure that the Government of Saskatchewan stops breaking the agreement and ensures access to justice for those who cannot otherwise afford it?

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, all I can say is that I cannot confirm the allegation made by the Hon. Member. All I am telling him is that the federal Government has a commitment to fund legal aid to the extent of 50 per cent. This Government has a commitment to legal aid across the country. Under our agreement, this being a matter of provincial jurisdiction we cannot fund unless there has been a contribution of equal amount by the province. If he does not understand that, he does not understand anything.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROJECT COST OF NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. Patrick Crofton (Esquimalt—Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. There is a CBC story today quoting the latest edition of that well-known British military journal Jane's Fighting Ships. It says the editors suggest that the nuclear submarine acquisition program that Canada proposes to embark on will cost in the vicinity of $12 billion rather than the $7 billion cited by the Government. Has the Minister had an opportunity to review the criteria on which this article is based and, if so, how does he respond?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the CBC story this morning was apparently based on a Canadian Press dispatch from London which was a review of the current issue of Jane's Fighting Ships. What the CBC overlooked, or failed to mention, was the fact that when Jane's referred to higher costs, that was to purchase the American Los Angeles class nuclear submarine which we are not looking at. The CP story says Jane's accepts the Canadian cost estimate of $7.5 billion Canadian if the Government buys and builds under licence the British Trafalgar class submarine.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

REQUEST THAT ATLANTIC SEA CADET FACILITY BE ESTABLISHED IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. He will know that the Premier of Newfoundland, the Minister of Transport, Newfoundland's representative in the federal Cabinet, all of Newfoundland's Senators, myself, and the Hon. Member from Stephenville have all urged the Government to establish a new Atlantic Sea Cadet training facility at Stephenville, Newfoundland.

Some 60 per cent of all Atlantic Canada sea cadets come from Newfoundland. That province also has the lowest per capita defence expenditure of any province in Canada. Given that, can the Minister tell the House when the Government is going to announce that Sea Cadet facility will be placed in Stephenville, Newfoundland?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, the Government's White Paper on Defence committed the Government to rebuilding Canada's defence capabilities after they were allowed to slide for so many years. We are currently examining a whole range of options for expansion. One of those will be Stephenville, obviously, and we welcome any input from the Hon. Member on that.

REPORT PREPARED BY CONSULTING COMPANY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has had my input as well as that of almost every single Newfoundland Member of Parliament. Can he confirm that he has had in his office since June of this year a report by McFann & Rodgers, a consulting company in Halifax—copies of it are floating around—which recommends that the Sea Cadet training facility not be placed in Newfoundland, the province which provides 60 per cent of all Sea Cadets, but in the province which already has the highest per capita defence expenditure in the country?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, what I can confirm is that the Government is committed to rebuilding Canada's defence capabilities—

Mr. Tobin: Sea Cadets!

Mr. Beatty: —and that there is a strong commitment as well to the Cadet movement. We are doing that after a period of decline in Canada's defences while the Trudeau Government was in power.

• (1500)

If the Liberal Party, instead of harping and complaining about us rebuilding Canada's defences, supported us in doing so, I think we would be able to make much faster progress.

SMALL BUSINESS

NATIVE ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to either the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism or the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. Applicants under the Native Economic Development Program are becoming thoroughly frustrated and discouraged by the Government's mismanagement of this program.

At one bureaucratic level they hear there is a freeze on and at another bureaucratic level they are told there is not. Will the Minister tell the House how many new programs have been funded under this program since June 1, 1987?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I have already replied to such questions many times and I have said that, since June, 1987, hundreds of projects have been approved, representing just under $200 million. I shall be happy to reply to my colleague and tell her exactly which projects the Government has approved since June for Western Canada. I can assure her that we are doing everything possible to promote regional development in the regions most especially concerned.

[English]

EXPENDITURE OF FUNDS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister then give his assurance to aboriginal Canadians that the $76 million allocated to this program in this fiscal year will be spent and that the full amount of $345 million will be allocated by March, 1989?

[Translation]

Hon. Michel Côté (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that, in 1983-84, the Government spent $770 million for regional development. In 1987-88, we shall be spending over $1 billion. I think that this shows the concern of this Government for regional development.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I want to advise the House that there will be a supplementary question by the Hon. Member for South-west Nova which will be followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Levis. That will close off Question Period.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

LOCATION OF PROPOSED ATLANTIC SEA CADET FACILITY

Mr. Gerald Comeau (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, in response to a question from the Member for Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe the Minister indicated that he would be prepared to listen to representations from Members from Newfoundland and that such representation would be taken into consideration.

If the Minister will grant me the same privilege, I would like to make representations on behalf of the great riding of South West Nova in which is presently located the Sea Cadet School. I hope the Minister will accept my representations on this matter.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I will indeed.

CONSUMERS AFFAIRS

BILL C-22—REQUEST THAT MINISTER VISIT MONTREAL AND MEET INTERESTED PARTIES

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and has to do with the Patents Act which would make it possible to create 1,300 jobs and invest $700 million in Montreal. This legislation is in limbo as a result of the ineffectiveness of the Liberal leader and his sidekick from Laval-des-Rapides—and both of them should indeed be listening to me. Montrealers will now have to make their representations directly to the Senate, Mr. Speaker.

I ask the Minister whether he would be prepared to accompany me to Montreal next week to meet with the Mayor of Montreal, city councillors, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Board of Trade and tell them how they can come here and explain to Quebec Liberal Senators how we will pass this legislation and what benefits are in store for Quebec.

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this Bill is vitally important to the technological advancement and future of all of Canada, but particularly to that of the west island of Montreal where a lot of our high-tech pharmaceutical biotechnology research is located.

I cannot for the life of me understand how anyone representing Quebec could stand by and watch the other place destroy this economic opportunity for that part of the country.

PETITIONS

OPPOSITION TO AIRLINES DEREGULATION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present three petitions in the House today. They all relate to Bills C-18 and C-19. The petitioners express their concern that the experience of airline deregulation in the United States has resulted in a reduction of safety standards and practices in that country. They call upon the House of Commons to reject Bills C-18 and C-19 so that we do not have the same deregulated and unsafe conditions in Canada.

OPPOSITION TO TAX ON FOOD

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 106, which petition was signed by constituents from my riding and visitors to the Byward market in lower town Ottawa, also in my constituency, who have had an opportunity to discuss with us this summer the Government proposal to impose a tax on food.

The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas since September, 1984, the federal Government has imposed on Canadian taxpayers 25 new taxes or tax increases, in particular on medical and dental supplies, snack foods, candy and soft drinks;

Whereas the federal Government in its tax reform proposal has studied the possibility of imposing on Canadians a general tax on goods and services, including food;

And whereas food constitutes a vital element of day-to-day life and imposition of this tax would have the effect of seriously penalizing certain categories of taxpayers, such as the aged, families, the unemployed, low income taxpayers, youths and students;

Wherefore your petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject all measures that would have the effect of imposing a sales tax on food products.

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, August 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Bouchard that Bill C-55, an Act to amend the Immigration Act, 1976 and to amend other Acts in consequence thereof, be read a second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Manly (Cowichan—Malahat—The Islands): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, speaking on the hoist motion, I had a chance to express some of the background relating to Bill C-55. I pointed out the changing situation of refugees around the world. We focused on the refugee situation in Europe and Iron Curtain countries after the Second World War. Now the focus tends to be on the Third World. There has been a growth of restrictive measures in western countries so that refugees are having a more difficult time gaining access to all countries in the western world. Instead of refugees being seen as people in need, they are being seen more and more as threats to the status quo. We are taking a very self-centred approach to people who are in the most extreme kinds of need.

I pointed to the unacceptable abuse of our own refugee determination system and the need to improve that, but at the same time we have had the failure of the Conservative Government to take timely action to deal with it. It was presented with the Plaut report. Instead of acting on that, it mandated the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration to study it. When the standing committee presented its report, the Government took no action.

I pointed to the latent racism that exists among Canadians, as, indeed, exists among people all over the world. It lies not too far beneath the surface in most of our lives. Racism is something that needs to be resisted, not catered to. Unfortunately, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84 are catering to a fear of other peoples, a fear of other cultures. It is a kind of xenophobia that is unacceptable for the kind of Canada we want to build in the 1980s and into the 21st century.

Racism has had its time. We should leave it behind and develop the kind of legislation that will lead to a more open society, not one that is more fearful and based on the belief that we have to put up walls in order to protect our values. If we have faith in our values we should be willing to test them in a multicultural society and world.

When the standing committee presented its report in November, 1985, it outlined four basic principles as fundamental to the approach of the committee. I want to read those four principles because I believe they are key to the whole refugee determination process:

> 1. It is the Committee's strongly-held conviction that Canadians do not want people sent back to countries where they may be persecuted.
> 2. Every person in Canada who wishes to claim that he or she is a Convention refugee should have an unqualified right of access to a formal process that will adjudicate the claim.
> 3. All Convention refugee claimants should have their case decided at a non-adversarial oral hearing.
> 4. The decision-maker in the formal process shall have the power, in addition to declaring an individual to be a Convention refugee, to recommend to the Minister that specific individuals who are not within the strict definition of Convention refugee, nevertheless should be considered for landing on compassionate and humanitarian grounds.

Those four principles have not been adhered to in Bill C-55.

The committee pointed out that it had been persuaded by Rabbi Plaut and other witnesses that the decision to provide the protection of Canada to those who have well-founded fears of returning to their own country should be undertaken by a body of people knowledgeable and sensitive to human rights issues rather than immigration issues. The determination decision is not an immigration matter, but instead a decision as to who are Convention refugees in need of Canada's protection.

Care must be taken to make sure that our international obligations to Convention refugee claimants are dealt with by a refugee determination system that is not part of our immigration system.

Those are the four principles that the standing committee set out and which, unfortunately, Bill C-55 does not adhere to. The refugee determination system does not follow the general recommendation of the committee.

Rabbi Plaut said, and the committee concurs with him, that declaring a claimant to be a refugee is not a privilege we grant but rather a right we acknowledge. I think it is important for us to think about the meaning of that assertion. We think of citizenship in Canada as a privilege. Certainly those who come as immigrants in the normal stream, coming to Canada is a privilege. However, with respect to those who come as refugees, we say we are recognizing a right rather than granting a privilege.

We recognize this as a right because we, as a nation, have signed certain international covenants. We recognize that we have broad obligations to humanity, broad obligations to our brothers and sisters throughout the world. Where people are in need of refuge, we as a nation that prides itself on a humane tradition, a tradition of fairness and helping those in need, have an obligation to provide that refuge. It is not a privilege we extend but a right that we recognize.

The committee agreed with Rabbi Plaut that there should be no distinction between those who have entered Canada legally and those who have entered illegally when it comes to applying for refugee status. That is, there are those who come to Canada without full documentation and without going through all the procedures. However, the committee said that they should still be entitled to apply for refugee status.

The committee recommended that there should be broad grounds for appeal when refugee status has been denied, and not just on points of law as Bill C-55 provides.

The committee provided for a shorter appeal process. This really is the crux of the abuse of the system. Our appeal process is so long and drawn out that people can take advantage of it. The committee and other people such as Rabbi Plaut have proposed models that would have a much shorter appeal process but would still be fair and would give the benefit of due process to refugee claimants while not allowing them to stay in Canada for up to five years.

These kinds of recommendations would have eliminated the abuses but would also have left a fair system in place. Unfortunately, Bill C-55 is legislation that does not leave a fair system.

I want to point out some of the objections to Bill C-55 that have been raised in a submission by the Montreal Coalition for Refugees. It is a submission that I commend to all Members of Parliament for their study and thought.

The committee states:

> —we see as dangerous and unacceptable a proposed system which will govern our borders and yet fails to reach basic human right standards. For instance, the bill requires that the "burden of proof" lies with the claimant. Thus the bill contains a "presumption of abuse" unless the individual, despite his likely initial confusion and distress can prove otherwise.

When people arrive as refugees I think we all recognize that they have been under a great deal of stress. I believe it is not fair to lay upon them the additional stress that they have to prove that they are not abusing the system. The Coalition points to certain moral failures in the Bill. It states:

> The denial of a complete hearing is unjust. The practitioners opposing this document know from experience that it is extremely difficult for refugees having just arrived in Canada to immediately (within twenty-four hours) present their claim and expose their reasons. It is more than probable that an adjudicator preoccupied with immigration demands, will not recognize that a person is a refugee at the instant of his arrival.
> Yet, such a person will not have a second chance to present his case. Furthermore, the speedy character of the pre-selection process will in practice deny the claimant of the right to counsel of his choice.

• (1520)

Secondly:

> The list of "safe third countries" goes against Canada's humanitarian tradition. No country is safe for everyone.

Either we are creating diplomatic difficulties for Canada or we are creating a very unfair system for refugees. If we have a situation where we have to declare, for example, that the United States is an unsafe third country, as it very obviously is for Salvadorans or Guatemalan refugees, we are then creating some diplomatic difficulties between ourselves and the United States. Why are we doing this to ourselves? Why do we not eliminate the possibility of a "safe third country" because there is no such thing.

The Coalition goes on to state:

> The pre-selection process for refugee claimants violates international norms of protection.

It points out that Bill C-55 violates the principles of justice upheld in Canada. It states:

> Bill C-55 does not in any way reflect the consensus that emerged from Government consultations with, among others, the Canadian Bar Association, Rabbi Gunther Plaut, the churches and non-governmental organizations who continuing to demand:
> (i) universal access to a simple, fair and efficient system
> (ii) an impartial decision making body formed by refugee experts and chosen in consultation with other concerned organizations.
> (iii) an initial and full hearing
> (iv) the right to a lawyer of one's choice
> (v) a full right of appeal
> (vi) the independence of the refugee system from immigration
> (vii) equitable treatment of claims made abroad.

The Government has never formally rejected these objectives in principle but Bill C-55 denies them.

In conclusion, I would urge the Government to withdraw Bill C-55 and bring in a Bill which would eliminate the abuse, provide for a shorter appeal process, but still provide for a full and fair hearing for refugee claimants so that Canada will continue to be a country that can hold its head high when it looks at the whole refugee situation throughout our world.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the debate on Bill C-55 is important and we are now into our ninth hour of debate in the House. Therefore I am not exaggerating when I say that it is imperative to appreciate fully what is being proposed through Bill C-55 which is aimed at revamping the refugee determination process and establishing mechanisms—stricter perhaps, and perhaps even more adequate—to be able to decide who is a bona fide refugee.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government has had three years to study this important question. It has done precious little during those three years. It came to the House last May 5 and introduced the Bill for first reading. We waited until June 18 to begin second reading of the Bill, a day which, as we recall, was full of other things—that was the day the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) made his famous statement on tax reform. And the Government used Bill C-55 as a kind of filler. Since then, the Government has not seemed too anxious to follow through on Bill C-55. And as Hon. Members are aware, many non-governmental organizations with special expertise in this field have recommended the Government give the Bill a great deal of thought. Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate because even if we have only 10 minutes each, I will try to get across my personal position on Bill C-55, a Bill that, I admit, has its good points but also contains a number of weaknesses which I think should be corrected in committee. It is important to realize that when, either today or tomorrow, we finish the second reading stage here in the House, the committee that will consider the Bill will, I hope, consider the substantive amendments that are in order.

Mr. Speaker, we have had information from every possible source regarding refugee status determination in Canada. There was a major commission chaired by Rabbi Gunther Plaut and appointed by the Minister of Employment and Immigration at the time, Miss Flora MacDonald, which produced a voluminous report which, I imagine, has been thoroughly examined by Hon. Members and contains a number of recommendations.

I would like to start my comments by reading the report's conclusion which, I think, is particularly important, and I quote from page 215 of the Plaut Report:

> I end this report with two observations made by the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in the summer of 1984.
> The ability to states to respond positively to refugee situations, he said, "depends very largely on a favourable climate of public opinion." He further stressed the unhappy fact that there has been > increasing evidence in recent years of confusion in the public mind between the very special situation of refugees and that of the many millions of other aliens who are endeavouring to gain entry into countries otherthan their own. This confusion has been to the detriment of refugees and has tended to impede a sympathetic approach to refugees at the official level.

I shall go on, because I think this is important. It is not that long.

> We in Canada will do well to heed this caution. We need to give urgent attention to promoting a renewed understanding of the special situation of the refugee, and both governmental and non-governmental organizations will wish to co-operate in doing so.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that since the session resumed on August 11, there has been a lot of confusion between, on the one hand, Bill C-84, a deterrent measure that also provides for the detention of some individuals that enter this country under perhaps special conditions, and the overall immigration question on the other hand. All that has been mixed up, and confused in the minds of Canadians, sometimes by a Government that was not too clear as to its objectives, and that I must recognize, sometimes according to the perceptions and views that we have at least in my constituency of Ottawa—Vanier, wanted to spread confusion by making Canadians believe there was an emergency because of 174 Sikhs who landed in Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker, like many other Members I went through the experience of welcoming refugees in Ottawa when the Vietnamese, the boat people faced an emergency situation. At that time, we accepted a significant number; I am told 100,000 Vietnamese were accepted in this country. In my own city, 4,000 were. We put in place systems, mechanisms to help human beings who were going through a crisis. That was the Canadian way. That was absolutely honest and open in my view.

All of a sudden we have 174 people arriving in the middle of the night, under very unique and difficult circumstances, as I mentioned earlier. So a state of crisis is declared and public opinion is fed the idea that the refugee system is subjected to terrible abuse and that immigrants and refugees are one and the same.

I feel that the Government should clarify the situation and that is why I do not hesitate to ask my colleagues in the House to rise and speak to this issue, over which we have debated a mere nine hours, so that Canadians can be made to understand what is at stake here, which is not to make it possible or easy to abuse the system. I would think that all Hon. Members have understood this, as have all Canadians. We are against abuse, we do not want people to break the law and get away with it. But what Bill C-55 is concerned with is the determination of what the refugee status is. This is important since the public does not have a clear idea as to who is an immigrant and who is a refugee. We do not get one hundred thousand of them every year. Barely 20,000 people qualify as refugees every year. It is true that at the present time there are more applications for refugee status than our officials or the system can handle.

A ready solution comes to mind: we need only increase our capacity to handle such applications and put in place a mechanism to deal with them as expeditiously as possible.

Mr. Speaker, the essential merit of Bill C-55 is to allow the number of unprocessed applications for refugee status to be worked down to a manageable level by decreasing the amount of time elapsed between the initial request and its final acceptance or rejection. The idea is to speed up the process to take care of what has been termed the back-log problem.

The whole process entails a maximum of three stages: a pre-selection at the initial hearing stage; a hearing before two members of the Refugee Board; and, as a last resort, an appeal to the Federal Court on legal grounds only, if necessary.

Mr. Speaker, the present mechanism comprises at least seven stages. Their number is thus more than halved under the new procedure. Up until now, the process could stretch over five years, as we well know. It was drawn out, often costly and difficult as well.

The amendments in Bill C-55 would allow for the shortening of the first stage. As I said, that can translate into acceptance or removal.

I could speak for much more than 10 minutes on the flaws of the Bill, because there are many. Indeed, I raised the matter a number of times in this debate on the occasion of questions put to Hon. Members. The numerous flaws start with the pre-selection process, the safe third country approach, the Refugeee Board, the appeal mechanism and the precedent encouraging other countries to take similar steps while claiming they are concerned with the well-being of refugees.

Mr. Speaker, when a claimant appears before the adjudicator and the member of the Refugee Board, under the pre-selection process, as proposed in Bill C-55, his claim unfortunately is treated according to the country of origin, which jeopardizes the protection that should be afforded to people who claim refugee status.

This is why I put the following question to the Conservative Member when he had the floor: How will we determine what is a safe third country? Is the United States a safe third country? They do not accept people from Guatemala. They also refuse to accept people from El Salvador, returning them back home.

So there should be an exact determination of what is a safe country to which we can return an individual, a human being in distress who comes here as a refugee.

Mr. Speaker, this in my view is the work that will have to be accomplished in committee.

I see that you are about to interrupt my comments, Mr. Speaker, and I will conclude on that.

I know the Government told us they would not return an individual to a country where that individual could be prosecuted or unfairly treated.

But the question that comes to mind is this: If we return an individual to the country of origin, whichever—Holland in the case of Tamils or the United States in the case of someone from Guatemala—Mr. Speaker, this should be determined and I feel the committee has an important task to accomplish. It is important in my view that the Bill be reconsidered, and if possible amended in committee. I thank hon. Members for their attention.

Mr. Mike Cassidy (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to have to participate in this debate again. I am sorry about what is happening, that the House has met in the middle of August when I think Members should be out in their constituencies or taking some time to prepare for the jobs that need to be done when the session gets going again in the fall.

We are here because of an emergency, because of a crisis. But, unfortunately, it seems to me that this is a crisis because of the standing of the Progressive Conservative Party in the polls much more than it is a crisis in terms of a need for instant action on an issue related to refugees on which there have been some solid and constructive proposals put forward by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, as well as in the report of Rabbi Gunther Plaut of Toronto some two years ago.

If this were a priority the Government could have acted at that time to begin to shorten the very long period of time that it takes for refugee claimants to have their cases adjudicated. Everyone agrees that that time is too long. But I want to address some comments through you, Mr. Speaker, to those citizens who will read this debate or who are perhaps watching the debate today and who are scratching their heads with respect to what has happened.

Certain members of the Conservative Party have cited opinion polls saying that Canadians want action on this particular issue. It is true that if one asks people if something should be done to prevent people trafficking in people who may be false refugees and from dumping them off our coast, most Canadians say yes. We say yes, too. I say yes as a New Democrat. I think what Canadians have to be aware of is that what we have from the Government is, in Gunther Plaut's words, an hysterical over-reaction to a situation, a situation which required change, yes, but not a situation which required the kind of change that we have right now.

I wish to cite and to deplore the comments made by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mr. Bouchard) when he appeared before the legislative committee on Bill C-84 yesterday. He accused the churches of having violated immigration law for the past 10 years in terms of the assistance they have given to refugees. He admitted that the Bill which we sent from this place a day or so ago, Bill C-84, does nothing to stop those immigration consultants who were instrumental in bringing in people from Portugal, Turkey and Brazil who, it would appear, were actually false claimants of refugee status and who certainly did not come from countries which have generated large numbers of refugees in the past.

Yet the Bill which the Government put forward in response to what it says is a crisis and an emergency did nothing to impose penalties on these consultants who have, I believe, in seeking to abuse our laws in the process, abused the generosity that most Canadians feel in helping people who are genuinely in fear, in legitimate fear of persecution in their home countries. None of those consultants involved with the Portuguese and the other groups that came have in fact been prosecuted.

One asks, if the Minister or the Government wanted to send a signal, why has that kind of signal not been sent and why are there no proposals today to change the penalties from what existed before?

I believe that Canadians are being given a wrong picture in terms of the refugee situation as a consequence of the landing of a group of Sikhs off the shores of Nova Scotia. Some 17,000 people have sought refugee status this year. Some 174 additional ones coming in is equivalent to an extra 1 per cent. It is a very small number. The only previous time we have had a similar incident was when the Tamils came in one year ago. I remind Canadians that at that time the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself welcomed that group of Tamils and said, "We will do our best to ensure that you are seriously considered for the refugee status you seek", despite the curious circumstances under which they were brought to Canada's shores.

Last year that was okay; this year it is not. I believe that the Government and members of the Government are trying to place in peoples' minds an impression that hordes—very large numbers—of dark-skinned applicants for refugee status are coming to Canada.

• (1540)

The Government has taken different sides in this issue, and perhaps it is seeking to exploit fears relating to internal politics in India where there are tensions between the Sikh and Hindu populations. Because Sikhs wear turbans and look different, it is being suggested that there is something wrong with Sikhs being here in Canada. Canada has 150,000 Sikhs. The vast majority, like the vast majority of immigrants from every country, make a solid and constructive contribution, regardless of the national or religious dress they choose to wear.

Every person seeking or applying for refugee status is not necessarily a legitimate refugee. That is not the question. The question is whether somebody who is seeking refugee status has a reasonable case to be there. The figures this year indicate that of the 17,000 people who have applied 4,000 came from El Salvador. That country has a history of death squads and dictatorship that has continued despite the election of the government under President Napoleon Duarte which was going to clean things up. The serious problems there are exacerbated by the meddling of the Central Intelligence Agency, and of the Americans in Central America where their shenanigans have extended beyond Nicaragua to other countries in that region.

A further 1,208 applicants came from Guatemala. The same situation prevails in that country. Hundreds of thousands of people have become displaced, stateless, or forced into refugee status in Central America because of political disturbances, and state terrorism in those areas.

One thousand six hundred and eighty-seven applicants came from Sri Lanka. I would hope that the recent agreement between Prime Minister Ghandi and the President of Sri Lanka regarding the status of the Tamils and the decentralization of power to the northern states in Sri Lanka will lead to a settling of the grievances of the Tamil population, and of the problems which have created refugees. In the past, Canada has accepted a number of Tamils as refugees. One has to assume that a number of the people from Sri Lanka were legitimately seeking refuge because of their Tamil origins, and their legitimate fear of persecution, oppression, or death.

One thousand six hundred and fifty-two people were seeking refugee status from Iran. I need not comment on the situation in Iran, and what has been done to the people of the Baha'i religion, or those deemed to be enemies of the ruling religious regime in Iran.

One thousand two hundred and ninety people have applied from Chile where the Pinochet dictatorship continues. This weekend I read the devastating novel by Isabel Allende, the niece of the former President, Salvador Allende. In her novel she describes the events that took place there, and the degree to which the Conservative right wing in Chile were disillusioned, and deeply disturbed and distressed by the manner in which their country literally went to the dogs during the takeover by the military at the time that President Allende was murdered, and the democratically elected progressive Government was defeated. Certainly, Chileans have a legitimate case to argue that they are suffering fear of political persecution.

Of the top six refugee applicant producing countries, the only one which we might question would be Brazil. It produced 1,681 applicants. I am not qualified to judge whether or not those applicants are genuine.

We have to bear in mind that out of total immigration this year of approximately 120,000, there was a relatively small number of people seeking to have their refugee claims dealt with fairly. I believe this total should be increased. The other day in the House the Minister announced that this total will be increased because of a relaxation of the family reunification policies.

Churches, refugee aid groups, the Canadian Bar Association, and other groups, have put forward constructive proposals to accelerate the consideration of refugee status claims. At the same time, they have stated solidly that they believe that Bill C-55 is wrong. In particular, they feel that it is wrong for Canada to have a situation in place where applicants for refugee status can be turned away at the border because of an administrative determination taken within 72 hours that they have touched down on a safe country on the way to Canada.

People who have come from Sri Lanka, El Salvador, Iran, Chile, Afghanistan, and other countries generating refugee applicants can hardly help but pass through another country.

Bill C-55 effectively gives these quick tribunals at the border the authority to turn away most applicants for refugee status, without any serious look at whether their claims are valid. I do not believe that is in the spirit of Canadians.

Most Canadians feel it is wrong when our Minister of Employment and Immigration suggests that the churches, and other refugee groups working out of charity and generosity are breaking the law, and should continue to live under the threat that they may be prosecuted for continuing to break the law. Surely, that is wrong. That is one of the reasons why I believe that Bill C-55 should be opposed. Instead, Canada should put in place recommendations and proposals along the lines of those put forward to accelerate the process without victimizing persons who seek refugee status.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is an unhappy reality that the House of Commons is still debating Bill C-55 in principle. I had hoped that the Bill would either have been delayed for six months by the vote yesterday, or withdrawn by the Government. There has been extremely cogent and detailed criticism of the gross inadequacies in the Bill, and the serious dangers to our tradition as a humanitarian country open to immigrants and refugees. Those people have made a tremendous contribution to our country. Instead, this piece of legislation is still in front of us.

The Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops described this proposed legislation in the following terms:

> This proposed legislation and its objective go against the humanitarian traditions of the people of this country, who in great majority are descendants of immigrants and/or refugees.

Yet, the Bill is still in front of us, and the Government persists, despite the fact that there are three fundamental faults that are self-evident to anyone who has looked through the legislation with any care.

First, the procedure for refugees which is established by this Bill makes our country inaccessible to a great many people who would like to be able to claim at least the chance for a hearing. They are not claiming the right to settle here, but the right to a hearing. Instead of ensuring that everyone can have their claim heard, this Bill sets up a system which I predict will eliminate the chances of 75 to 80 per cent of those who come to our borders seeking to have their claims heard. That means that 75 per cent to 80 per cent will not even have the opportunity of a hearing.

Second, there is a basic contradiction of the notion that those who judge claims should be independent of those who are regulating the system.

Let me quote from the news release of the Inter-Church Committee for Refugees:

• (1550)

> Instead of providing an independent procedure specialized in refugee determination and related international law, this legislation relies on decision-makers operating in an immigration control environment who have shown little understanding of standards of justice or human rights,—

Finally, there is within this legislation no meaningful appeal. Instead of allowing access to a specialized independent appeal body, the legislation seeks to use the Federal Court in an inappropriate and unworkable way. It permits rights of appeal only on points of law, not on the merits of the case, which in itself is a further movement away from the traditions of justice as we have known them in Canada.

The legislation, as the Inter-Church Committee says, represents no improvement on the proposals of May 21, 1986 which were condemned at the Canadian Council for Refugees meeting that followed the announcement of that initiative. Of course the most recent Canadian Council for Refugees meeting was even more scathing in respect of the injustice and unfairness within the legislation.

If one had a choice between this and the previous legislation and nothing else—if that was the choice before us—one might well have to look at some parts of the Bill which are at least an improvement over the incredibly lengthy, unfair, and completely inadequate systems of refugee determination we presently have. However, an alternative has been presented by the Canadian Council of Churches. It is an alternative that sets out five stages through which refugee determination would take place.

The first stage would be a simple arrival stage with the refugee claimant arriving at the border and immigration officials registering the person and referring the person to a refugee board. At that point we would not have the principle of refugees being returnable, accepted by legislation, as this piece of legislation would do.

Stage two would be the stage at which the refugee himself makes an appointment with the refugee board for an oral hearing within a fixed time period after the referral has taken place.

Stage three would be the oral hearing itself at which the claimant and an independent legal counsel the claimant would be able to obtain, rather than a duty counsel, as is the case in the present legislation, would present the case to a two-person panel of competent, specialized persons on a refugee board who would decide whether or not they believe the person is a refugee.

If at that stage the answer from the refugee board is no, there would be an appeal review stage at which unsuccessful claimants could submit additional information for a paper review, as the Council of Churches puts it, by a specialized level of the independent refugee board within a fixed time of receipt of reasons for refusal in the context of a transcript being available. At that stage the appeal body could overrule a negative decision or request a rehearing. The Council of Churches suggests that this would take a maximum of about 14 weeks, which is far less than the present system.

Finally, there would be the potential for appeal to the Federal Court on points of law, because an appeal would already have taken place on substantive issues. It is suggested by the Council of Churches that that would require four weeks to thirteen weeks. Therefore, the maximum amount of time we could be talking about would be 27 weeks for a full, fair, and effective review procedure.

That is the alternative which exists. That is why the approach by the Government is so unfair and so unjust and will ultimately be part of what brings the Government down when an election is finally called.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, every poll which has been taken has indicated to us as Members of Parliament that the people of Canada are very sympathetic to a policy permitting a substantial number of legitimate refugees to come to Canada. What they are opposed to is people who are not really refugees being permitted to come here. They are opposed to people who may be refugees jumping to the head of the line, as did the Tamils who came here a year ago, were welcomed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and were assured that Canada would always be generous to refugees who came here. They are also opposed to the recent entry of Sikhs into Canada by boat.

What they want is a fair and humane system. When the Government says that the people support what it is proposing, it is right, except it has not explained to ordinary Canadians what this Bill really means.

People who are interested in and supportive of helping refugees come to Canada, such as Amnesty International, the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Ethno-Cultural Council, and the major churches, having looked at the legislation and thought through its implications and the power it gives to Government and to officials of various Departments, have unanimously expressed opposition to it.

Let me quote a couple of lines from a telex sent to the Prime Minister on June 1 of this year on behalf of 11 major church groups in Canada. In part it reads:

> We urge you and your government to replace Bill C-55 with legislation which provides:
> —access for all claimants to a full, fair and independent hearing,
> —a meaningful appeal.

Then it went on to indicate:

> The Bill is being promoted on the false premise that it will protect genuine refugees. It is clear that the effect of the Bill, with a preliminary hearing which is no more than an elaborate mechanical screening, and with no meaningful appeals, will be to turn away genuine refugees. In addition, the provisions of this Bill undermine rights and standards of justice in Canada for everyone.

Also Members of Parliament received a letter from the General Secretary of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops dated June 11 of this year, in which the following was indicated:

• (1600)

> This proposed legislation and its objective go against the humanitarian traditions of the people of this country, who in great majority are descendants of immigrants and/or refugees.

Let us look at the powers this Bill gives to the Government and the people who work for the Government. Allan Borovoy, the leading activist for the Canadian Civil Liberties Association and a very prominent lawyer has said:

> Almost every section violates some fundamental principle of civil liberties and democracy.

He is talking about Bill C-55.

Let us look at the analysis of this Bill of the Manitoba Bar Association, as reported by The Toronto Star. Bill C-84 would allow officials to do the following:

> Detain people without documents for seven days without higher authorization.
> Extend detention for another 21 days with a Minister's certificate.
> Keep undocumented claimants in detention indefinitely if an adjudicator agrees the Government is making reasonable efforts to track down their identity. After the first 28 days of detention, the case will be reviewed every seven days—
> Make an arbitrary decision on who is or is not a security threat, based on any evidence the Government wishes to consider.

If I can digress for a moment, one can imagine the kind of security advice on potential refugees one would receive from the Governments of Chile, El Salvador or some Communist countries.

The Bill will permit the Government to do the following:

> Lock up people earmarked for deportation until a federal court hearing is set.
> Bar the suspect and his lawyer from seeing the complete evidence against him if the Canadian Security and Intelligence Service or RCMP classifies it as secret.
> Bar the court from seeing the complete evidence for similar reasons.

Imagine a Canadian law which would bar a judge from seeing evidence in a case with which he is dealing. That is a disgraceful proposal.

The analysis continues by indicating that the Bill would do the following:

> Deny appeal to anybody judged a security risk by the court—though Canadian law grants the right of appeal to those convicted of crimes. (Lawyers say it may be possible to retain right of appeal through court procedures).
> Deport those considered security risks as soon as possible.
> Remove the right of those apprehended as security risks to a review of the evidence of their case by the Security and Intelligence Review Committee.

The article goes on to say:

> If immigration officials or police are on the trail of illegal immigrants or a smuggling racket, Bill C-84 gives them sweeping powers to search homes, offices, property or vehicles that will supply evidence if a justice of the peace signs a certificate.

We know how quickly justices of the peace or judges will sign any certificate asked for by the police.

The article goes on:

> According to the Government, the powers are needed to apprehend criminals and avoid destruction of evidence. But lawyers, including the Manitoba Bar Association, say the legislation goes farther than the powerful narcotics laws.

I for one know that the Manitoba Bar Association is not a very radical organization, to say the least.

The article continues by saying that the Bill would also allow the following:

> Search of property in any part of the country, even if the original warrant is issued in another province.
> Search of private homes where landlords rent space to non-Canadian tenants, if immigration officials suspect they are illegal immigrants.
> Forcible search of property including smashing doors, windows, locks, floors, ceilings, walls or anything deemed necessary by immigration officers or police if they suspect evidence will be destroyed.
> Search and seizure without warrant if "by reason of exigent circumstances it would not be practical to obtain the warrant."
> Confiscation of any property officials or police think necessary.

I do not think that a Communist country like the Soviet Union would possibly give its police any more power than this Bill gives immigration officials and RCMP officers.

It is not surprising that all those groups and organizations to which I referred oppose this Bill. It is not surprising that Manitobans to whom I have spoken in the last few days including Mennonites, Roman Catholics, Anglicans and members of the United Church who have been helping refugees have told me in very clear and unequivocal terms that if the things which they have done in the past and which they continue to do in the future to help refugees settle in Canada will violate this law when it is passed, they are prepared to suffer the consequences. If they are arrested, charged, tried and sentenced by a court, they are prepared to pay the penalty.

It is a sad day for Canada when people who want to do the right thing, the humanitarian thing, are told that if they continue to do so they may indeed wind up in jail. As members of my Party, I have no intention of supporting this Bill as it is drafted at the present time. We will do everything we can to oppose the passage and implementation of this Bill.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, Canada has a very long tradition of welcoming refugees fleeing from persecution. In fact, it accepted some 37,000 Hungarians in the mid-fifties, some 12,000 Czechs in the late sixties, some 7,000 Ugandans in 1972, some 700 Cypriots in 1975 and nearly 10,000 Vietnamese in 1975, 1976 and 1977, and quite recently, early in the 1980s, some 9,000 Poles.

It should be emphasized that this reputation has also made it possible for us to accept a few thousand other refugees from Iran, El Salvador, Lebanon, Sri Lanka and Guatemala more recently. Altogether, when we add up all these new Canadians, we find that we have accepted some 360,000 refugees since 1950, or an average of 12,000 people a year.

In view of the size of Canada, opening our door every year to some 12,000 people who live under difficult and painful circumstances and who are sometimes persecuted in countries where freedom does not exist quite as much as here is nothing to write home about. There is certainly plenty of room for them in Canada. In fact, our country was awarded the prestigious Nansen Medal by the United Nations in recognition of our action in favour of the needy. It should be emphasized that this medal was awarded to the Canadian Government, both present and past, but above all to the Canadian people who have always very well accepted these people who are in need and difficulty. We would have felt that this Conservative Government would have been anxious to maintain this generous and welcoming attitude towards these unfortunate people in search of a new country.

In fact, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had stated when the Tamils arrived in August, 1986, that if the scale were to tilt, it would on the side of compassion and justice. Well, Mr. Speaker, we simply cannot understand the attitude of the Conservative Government which has now introduced a series of legislation that go squarely against this spirit of generosity and good will that has always characterized Canada.

To want to limit the flow of false refugee claimants to Canada is legitimate and something we can accept and support. But the measures announced by the Government go far beyond that and are aimed at closing the door on many refugee claimants who arrive in Canada, and not at changing the refugee determination process.

As the Leader of the Liberal Opposition (Mr. Turner) was saying, in order to stop the queue-jumpers, the Conservative Government has decided to close the theatre. Instead of telling these people who do not want to wait their turn to please go back and wait in line, the Conservative Government has decided to penalize everybody and shut the door. It is an unacceptable and incomprehensible attitude which we denounce.

I should like to quote from an editorial by Pierre Venat which appeared in La Presse under the heading: "A Bill that needs to be amended". "The Bill, which minister Bouchard introduced last week for the purpose of strengthening the Canadian legislation on immigration, does not deserve to be adopted unless it is thoroughly amended."

Even the Hon. Member for La Prairie (Mr. Jourdenais) who belongs to the Progressive Conservative Party, shares this view.

There can be no doubt that people are ill at ease when they see this flood of foreign citizens whose customs and habits are sometimes altogether different from their own—"

But a number of people simply do not know what to make of the Government's approach to this problem, and indeed it ought to be reconsidered. This is the view of Montreal's Coalition pour les réfugiés, the Canadian Bar, Amnesty International, and the Civil Liberties Union—they all want the Bill to be amended. As it happens, the Liberal Party of Canada has unequivocally expressed its concerns about the Bill, and I will recall them very briefly.

First, we believe that the prescreening mechanism builds a wall around the system we seek to improve. In a way the Government washes its hands of the refugee problem, leaving other countries to deal with it. As we see it, this Pontius Pilate attitude is unacceptable.

Second, we believe that the prescreening procedure creates more problems than it solves. Why confuse the two issues of immigration and refugees when in fact the purpose of the whole exercise is to make a distinction between the two.

Every year, there are thousands of Canadians across this country who want to bring their relatives to Canada. These are people who emigrated to Canada from various other countries. They are happy in their new country and they want to bring their mother or brothers or a cousin over to join them in Canada and live in this beautiful country of ours.

The family reunification policy, which has always been the cornerstone of the Liberal Party's immigration policy when it was in power, is now being maliciously undermined by a Conservative Government that wants to close the door to immigration. It is using the fact that a couple of people wanted to jump the queue as an excuse to impose new immigration criteria in Canada that will destroy not only the open policy we have always had with respect to refugees but also the policy maintained vis-à-vis those who want to bring relatives over to Canada.

I have no hesitation in saying that the Government's policy will be disastrous not only for refugees who absolutely must find a new country but also for Canada's family reunification policy which should be permanent.

Canadians of many origins have made extraordinary contributions to this country. They have enriched our culture and are now living happily and in harmony with other Canadians, and they have the right to hope that their family members will be able to join them in this country. We believe this Bill may actually diminish their chances of family reunification.

That is why we do not like this Bill and why we, the Liberal Party of Canada, intend to vote against this measure which in the circumstances, we feel, is excessive just to deal with a minor problem. To amend legislation, the Government is using a sledge hammer. To end certain abuses that are easy to control, the Government is closing our doors to many people who normally would have been able to enter Canada to join our growing Canadian labour force. We believe the Government is on the wrong track with this poorly prepared, poorly drafted and philosophically unsound legislation.

[English]

Mr. Ian Waddell (Vancouver—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the Hon. Minister is applauding the last speech or my introduction.

Mr. McInnes: Both.

Mr. Waddell: Thank you.

I am pleased to rise and speak in the debate on Bill C-55. As you know, we are considering two immigration Bills, this one and Bill C-84 which is now in committee. We were called back into emergency session because the Government decided a crisis situation existed, and the first Bill tabled was C-84. I spoke on that Bill on the first day, Tuesday, August 11, as recorded at page 7955 of Hansard.

I do not want to repeat my remarks, but I did acknowledge there was tremendous public pressure, to judge by the telephone calls and letters we received at our constituency offices, to act to change what was considered an unfair process. People were coming in as refugees and using the process to stay in Canada for two, three, four or five years. At the same time legitimate immigrants could not get into the country at all. Obviously something had to be done.

During my speech I said I thought if we could sum up the public's attitude it was to let the real refugees in, because we are bound by the UN Convention we signed, and throw the phoney ones out. We must have a fair procedure to do that. Canadians are fair people and are prepared to deal with the matter in a fair way. I thought the Government was going to do that.

I watched the CBC's Journal last night. In my speech of a few days ago I warned about an overkill, that the Government might over-react to this matter. Sure enough, on the Journal was a woman, a grandmother, who was helping legitimate refugees from Central America. She now expresses the fear that due to the Government's Bill C-84 she could be locked up for assisting these refugees. A nun came on after that and said that she too could be locked up for bringing people into Canada without papers, as she has been doing. Legitimate refugees do not have any papers. They flee for their lives and only their lives, literally, not with their papers.

The Government now has itself in a position in which it is putting grandmothers and nuns in jail. Can the Mulroney Government not do anything right? It is going to put grandmothers and nuns in prison for helping refugees? I suggest to the Minister, who is a reasonable man, that he bring in a reasoned amendment to clear up that situation. Members can read the Bill. I am a lawyer and can read the law. There are other lawyers in the House. It is quite plain that under this Bill the grandmothers and nuns would go to jail.

Mr. Côté (Lac-Saint-Jean): You should be put in jail for talking like that.

Mr. Waddell: The Member wants to put me in jail. He is a typical Conservative. They want to put everyone in jail to solve the problem.

I would like to deal with Bill C-55. Since I have already expressed many of my own views on the matter, in the time I have left I would like to read into the record and make comments on a letter from Amnesty International to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) dated August 7, 1987. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Amnesty International won the Nobel prize for the peaceful work it has done on behalf of people locked up in jails all over the world. Amnesty International says:

> As you may be aware, Amnesty International opposes the forcible return of persons to countries where they may reasonably be expected to be arbitrarily detained for the non-violent expression of their beliefs, tortured or executed. A law which increases the likelihood of such events occurring is therefore of great concern to our organization.
> Before outlining some of Amnesty International's concerns about the legislation itself, we wish to address the process of consultation which took place prior to the introduction of the Bill. Non-governmental organizations working with refugees were unanimous in recommending that a new refugee determination procedure embody the principles of universal access, an independent decision-making process, and an appeal on the merits. These principles were also reflected in the recommendations made by the Standing Committee in Labour, Employment and Immigration. Regrettably these recommendations were ignored by Cabinet in proposing this Bill.

Indeed, if the Cabinet had acted sooner and responded to the recommendations of the committee of this House, we would not have had to come back for this special session and would not have had the recent problem which we did with the boat coming in.

The letter continues:

> The Bill itself is an attempt to prevent abuse of the determination procedure while at the same time ensuring that genuine refugees will not be returned to countries where their fear of persecution is well-founded. Amnesty shares these concerns.

So do we in the New Democratic Party, Mr. Speaker, and we can agree with the principles which the Government has put in this Bill.

The letter continues:

> As we have stated many times in the past, abuse of the process has a detrimental effect upon legitimate claimants.
> In fact, we urged your government to impose, long before any action was taken, a visa restriction on Portugal, whose citizens were clogging the system with fraudulent claims.

A lot of people have been afraid to say that in the House of Commons but it needs to be said. There were a lot of fraudulent refugee claims from people from Portugal. They should have been immigrants. If we had a decent and fair procedure for immigrants we might not have had those phoney refugee claims.

Amnesty says:

> We therefore support legislation which attempts to curb abuse. However, in its zeal to prevent abuse, Cabinet has seriously undermined the very objective which should be the cornerstone of any law dealing with refugee determination—the protection of genuine refugees.
> In our view, the major deficiencies of Bill C-55 lie in its restriction of access, the limited right of appeal and non-independent decision-making. The details of our concerns can be found under the following categories:
> (1) Eligibility Criteria
> Under Bill C-55 certain refugee claimants are considered ineligible to have a full hearing of their claims on the merits. Five classes of claimants will be excluded from the determination process at a very early stage of the inquiry. Of these, the greatest number will be found ineligible because they have come to Canada from a country which has been prescribed as a "safe third country".

I do not have time to read the whole letter so I will summarize it. Amnesty goes on to say that we could get into real trouble with this. For example, if we return Guatemalan and Salvadoran claimants to the United States, a so-called safe third country, they may be sent back to their countries. The Government is then faced with a difficult dilemma. Does it say that the United States, our friend and ally, is not a safe third country? That is a very sticky wicket. I can see what Amnesty is getting at.

They talk about a credible basis test and about who should be making the determination. They talk about a limited right of appeal and the problem of not having full appeals.

We have suggested that there could be a fair appeal process in a much shorter period of time. Amnesty talks about the difficulties of appealing on the law, having an appeal on a legal point, rather than on fact, which is the real basis of determining whether someone is a legitimate refugee. Amnesty concludes by saying:

> We reiterate our concern about preventing abuse of the refugee determination process. However, fundamental safeguards are necessary to ensure that genuine refugees will not be returned to face persecution. The life or liberty of one bona fide refugee lost as a result of Canada's restrictive refugee policy would be enough to render such policy a failure. We urge you and your government to amend or withdraw and replace Bill C-55 with legislation which incorporates the fundamental principles of universal access, an appeal on the merits and independent decision-making.

Remember, Mr. Speaker, that this country once returned a boatful of Jewish people and some of those people died as a result. That is a bad blot on our history. None of us want that to be repeated. We all want to make this a fair process. I urge the Minister to study this in committee and make the proper amendments so that there will be proper legal procedure. We will co-operate with the Government on that. However, do not over-react again and get into the position of sending grandmothers and nuns to jail through an overkill process.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see that the Minister is in the House. I intend to concentrate on a couple of concerns I have with the situation in which the Government has put us, by recalling Parliament and asking us to deal with this very complicated matter in a somewhat hurried fashion.

I begin by questioning whether or not there is in fact a genuine emergency. I do not think there is an emergency with respect to Canada's refugee policy, certainly not a situation which is so much of a crisis that we could not have been permitted the ordinary parliamentary time for dealing with this very difficult matter. I suspect, without imputing motives to the Minister, who may be acting only on instructions, that there was a political emergency with respect to the Government's own popularity. This is a very cynical, and I think unsuccessful, attempt to take advantage of a great deal of popular concern, in many respects legitimate concerns of the Canadian people with respect to the abuse of Canada's open attitude toward refugees and Canada's refugee policy. Unfortunately, the legislation before us and Bill C-84 which is now in committee would not deal with the most serious abuses of that system. The Hon. Member for Spadina (Mr. Heap) pointed out on numerous occasions that the Bill would not deal with the people who arrived from Brazil, Portugal and Turkey on registered airline flights with the documentation and everything else they needed. Instead, the Bill is written in such a way that rather than dealing with such obvious abuses it may put at risk genuine refugees.

• (1630)

One element of almost all religious traditions, from as long ago as antiquity, is that a human community is to be judged largely by the way it treats strangers. The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock—North Delta (Mr. Friesen) is here and I recall saying this with his approval and the approval of other Canadian members of the delegation to the meeting of the Interparliamentary Union in East Berlin in September, 1980. I spoke on behalf of the Canadian delegation with respect to refugee concerns that were being debated at that time.

I noted that refugee policy was traditionally one of the moral measures by which the quality of a particular country could be judged. I say that because I want people to understand that Canada's soul is at stake in this debate. Our refugee policy will say a lot about what kind of country we are.

Let me move to two concerns which I believe the Minister can address. Obviously, the Government and the Opposition will continue to have legitimate differences about a number of provisions in this Bill. However, it seems to me that there are two improvements to the legislation that would at least meet the following concerns. Church groups and others have quite properly raised a concern that the measures the Government wants to establish will not only catch people who are deliberately abusing the system for profit but will also make lawbreakers out of those who help others who do not have documents come into the country in the genuine belief that these people are refugees.

The Minister knows that there is quite a difference between someone in Manitoba who drives to Grand Forks to pick up a person whom he believes to be a legitimate refugee from Central America and takes that person directly to an immigration officer in Emerson in the personal, conscientious belief that this person has a claim to refugee status that will stand the test of Canada's determination process even though that person does not have papers, the Minister knows that there is a significant difference between that case and the abuses that the Minister quite rightly wants to stop.

I have not heard the Government make a convincing denial to our belief that the measures the Government wants to introduce do not make any distinction between that person in Manitoba and those who can be convincingly accused of abusing the system. We have suggested some ways in which the Government can change the legislation to meet that concern. I believe that on the basis of simple political advice, such a change would certainly overcome many of the objections that have been raised with respect to what the Government wants to implement.

Second, in no way should anything we do with respect to refugee policy, either in Bill C-55 or Bill C-84, be seen to be in breach of our international obligations. There was some foo fa raw in the House earlier today about whether our Ambassador to the United Nations was taken out of context with respect to his comments about the Bill. Leaving that debate aside, the fact is that the Ambassador spoke about the possibility of the Bill being made compatible with our international covenants. While that suggests that the Bill in its present form does not meet international covenants, it also suggests that there is a willingness on the part of the Government to attempt to find a way to make the legislation compatible. I believe that is very important.

When I had the opportunity to speak in an international forum on refugee policy, I was pleased to be able to get up as a Canadian, knowing that Canada had a certain credibility, not just in practical terms, but in terms of the respect it had shown for the United Nations High Commission for Refugees and other concerns. I ask the Minister to consider the price we will pay for being open to the accusation of being in violation of UN and other international agreements with respect to refugees. Whether the Minister believes that to be the case or not, I ask him to consider the price we will pay even if we are perceived to be in violation of those agreements.

I believe much is at stake. One of the most important roles that Canada plays, not only with respect to refugees but other issues, is our honest broker role, a country with credibility in a great many humanitarian issues. I would hate to see that credibility put at risk.

I urge the Government to at least find a way to change these Bills with respect to refugee policy even if it insists on being consistent with its other objectives, so that Canada will not be open to those accusations.

I hope the Minister will take these two suggestions to heart because they are two areas in which I believe movement is possible on the part of the Government.

I will not even attempt to deal with the larger debate because I do not believe I have enough expertise. However, I have paid attention to those two issues because they struck me as two glaring weaknesses in the Government's position. I hope the Minister will carefully consider correcting the legislation, and I look forward to the Government actually making some changes in that direction.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-55. All Members have received letters, correspondence, and telephone calls from concerned Canadians who want to make sure that our refugee and immigration policy has integrity. I certainly do not question much of the concern that has been expressed to me by individuals who have called or written. However, the question that I and many other Canadians are asking is whether the Government's response to this kind of problem is not too harsh or extreme.

There are other Canadians who certainly have another point of view. They arrived at their position in an equally honest manner, as individuals who are expressing concern on the other side of the question.

• (1640)

I am glad to have this opportunity to advise the House that I received a letter today from a constituent. I am quite sure she would not have any objection to her name being mentioned. Her name is Jill McNall. She has written two letters to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) expressing her point of view on Canada's refugee policy and her concern that this Government is attempting to change that policy. I am sure Hon. Members in the House will be interested to hear what this constituent has to say, so I will read her letter as my contribution to this debate. She begins, and I quote:

Dear Prime Minister,

Further to my letter to you in February, 1987, I am again writing to express my grave concern about the direction of Canada's refugee policy.

As I indicated in my letter, I was most disturbed by the policies which were imposed in February, 1987, but the introduction of Bill C-55 to the Legislature has left me truly appalled. I feel we are reverting to attitudes and practices which I had hoped we had left behind forever: practices reminiscent of government-sanctioned racism and of the refoulement of Jewish refugees in the Second World War.

I recognize and appreciate that there have been abuses of our refugee determination process in the past, however, those abuses have largely stemmed from an inappropriate process.

Numerous humane alternative procedures have been suggested in the past which would enable us to deal quickly and fairly with each refugee claimant. A quick procedure is essential to the prevention of abuse of the system. However, a quick procedure which jeopardizes genuine refugees in favour of preventing abuse is completely inappropriate and unacceptable in a country which has prided itself on its assistance to refugees. Bill C-55 will eliminate many refugee claimants in the very early stages of the process before they have even had a chance to tell their own story or to have their own claim judged on its merits.

Refugee claimants are people fleeing from persecution in their native countries, hoping to be given an opportunity to start a new life. They arrive frightened and tired, often speaking very little or no English, and usually with only a minimal idea of what life in Canada is, let alone what our immigration and refugee policy is or how it all works.

The expectation that refugee claimants can be given a fair chance in three to seven days is absurd. Many will not even know that they should indicate their desire to claim refugee status immediately, and they will certainly not have time to get independent advice or counsel.

A great area of concern is also the so-called "safe third country" to which refugee claimants can be returned. These countries will be designated by Cabinet, and I ask myself what factors will be considered? In view of our political ties to the United States for example, how likely is it that the United States could be determined to be a "safe country" for Guatemalan and El Salvadoran refugee claimants, even though virtually all refugee claims from those countries are denied in the United States. This imposition of political considerations on Canada's refugee policy would seriously undermine the integrity of the system.

The right of appeal is a cornerstone of Canadian law, even $500 claim in Small Claim's Court has the right of appeal, yet we would deny that right to people whose lives may be at stake. Bill C-55 drastically restricts the grounds of appeal basically to points of law rather than fact, yet refugee claims are based on fact and credibility. Another reason for the right of appeal is that mistakes happen in any system, and an appeal is a tool for correcting those mistakes. A meaningful right of appeal should be a cornerstone of any policy, but especially where life and liberty may hang in the balance.

Ms. McNall goes on to state:

One of the unfortunate circumstances in this issue is the lack of accurate and up-to-date information available to the general public. I am very concerned by the confusing, often biased, and frequently inaccurate media coverage of matters relating to refugees and immigrants, as the media acts as major source of information for a large number of Canadians. A lot has been said about public opinion being opposed to a so-called "open door" policy, but I believe that, with an accurate information, the majority of Canadians would recognize that refugees are not immigrants or queue-jumpers.

It is difficult for most of us to really understand the plight of refugees, because we were born here or came by choice. It is almost impossible for us to imagine living in fear of our own Government. Refugees are people seeking asylum because of persecution; people who want a chance to start a new life in freedom; people who are willing to work hard and to become contributing members of Canadian society.

In conclusion, I would like to request that Bill C-55 be discarded as an inappropriate and wholly unacceptable solution to a grave and potentially life-threatening concern. Safe, quick and humane alternatives have already been suggested in the past.

I will stop there because I feel that Ms. McNall has made her argument, which I consider to be one of the best I have heard. This is someone who I do not think has a legal background or any expertise in immigration or refugee matters. She is a person who is speaking from the heart as a decent Canadian. We have always had a decent attitude towards those in other countries who wanted to come here to live within our civilized Canadian society.

If this Government had really wanted to do something about illegal refugees, as it likes to call them, or an immigration system which plainly does not seem to be working as well as it should, why did the Government not act six months ago when it was aware of these problems rather than waiting until a perceived emergency existed? I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion. The Government jumped in because it saw this as being a politically opportune time to respond to a feeling in society towards which it has contributed. If the Government had wanted to go after the smugglers rather than the people being smuggled, I do not believe anyone would have any objection. If it had gone after the individuals who exploited disadvantaged peoples like the Sikhs who came in a month ago, we would have supported it. However, rather than go after the smugglers, it has gone after the people being smuggled and I think the Government should be ashamed of itself for lending its support to that kind of attitude.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I only intend to speak for a few minutes on this legislation at this particular stage. I have a number of concerns about Bill C-55, some of which I expressed yesterday in a speech I gave on the hoist motion. In that particular speech I pointed out that I do not believe the Government's intent with respect to this legislation is very honourable.

Bill C-55 is a piece of legislation which the Government sat on for three years. The Government has had the advice of the parliamentary committee in which representatives of all three Parties indicated they wanted reform of the refugee legislation which would ensure that we keep out those people who are not honest refugees. At the same time, we want a fair system, a system which allows for an appeal process and a system of which Canadians right across this land could be proud. That is what the standing committee of the House of Commons pushed for and that is what we believe should be the basis of the legislation before us. However, that is not the case.

In addition, after stalling for three years, the Government has introduced legislation which is unfair. It is a blight on Canada's reputation. We now have a Government which wants to rush through consideration of this legislation and is insisting that this legislation be passed in all stages prior to the adjournment of this special session of the House.

I think that does not speak well of the Government, not only in that the legislation itself is flawed but in that it is complicated. For the Government to want to rush through this legislation at this time in the middle of summer indicates that it has a political agenda as opposed to a legislative one.

When we adjourned in June, representatives of the Government told us that it would be possible for Bill C-55 to be studied in committee in the fall. That would have given an adequate opportunity for various groups who are concerned about the legislation, including expert witnesses and others, to appear before a committee of the House in order to give a thorough examination to the legislation. That was the case when the House adjourned at the end of June.

What has happened to change the Government's legislative agenda? Someone could point to the arrival of the boatload of people in Nova Scotia. Or they could point to two or three people who arrived in the Northwest Territories during the summer. If that is all it takes for the Government to change its political agenda, if that is all it takes for the Government to insist that we rush through legislation without adequate study, then obviously it is not concerned about the passage of good legislation.

To complicate matters more, we have a situation right now wherein we have a legislative committee of the House studying the so-called emergency legislation, Bill C-84. The committee is in session right now. At the present time it has expert witnesses in front of it. What the Government is trying to do by giving second reading to Bill C-55 this afternoon is to ensure that we have another committee studying Bill C-55 at the same time as we have a committee studying Bill C-84. What we will have is a situation in which two different committees of the House are studying legislation which is closely related and intertwined at the same time. This is a system which would guarantee that we end up with bad legislation. One committee will not know what the other is doing. We will be in a situation in which clauses that depend on each other will not be studied in the fashion in which they should be.

The Government is working by political impulse. The unfortunate thing is that it has a very bad reading of the political pulse of the nation. As a result, the Government is panicking. It is passing legislation which we can almost guarantee will be thrown out in the courts, just as has happened with legislation which the Government introduced before in a rush, in a so-called emergency.

It is evident from the tone of the debate that the Government and its back-benchers are trying to create fear and to build on fear across this land. You have heard, Mr. Speaker, cabinet Ministers, Prime Ministers and ordinary Members of Parliament talk about queue jumping. Your Honour has heard them talk about people arriving and abusing our system. Well, there are people abusing our system, but that is not what this legislation is about. This legislation is trying to hit those people who are helping honest refugees. This legislation will hit those people who do not have the proper documents because they come from countries where they cannot obtain those proper documents. For the Government, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to talk about the fact that those refugees, or those so-called refugees, are queue jumpers is ignoring the fact that legitimate refugees and legitimate immigrants have a heck of a time getting into this country because of the bureaucratic mess that the Government has instituted and because the Government has not been able to overcome the past Liberal legislation.

As a result, the examples I raised yesterday and the example I will give now are not examples of refugees, or so-called refugees, abusing the system, therefore keeping out legitimate refugees and legitimate immigrants or people who want to join their families in Canada. The problem is that the Government has not addressed the real problems of family reunification. The Government has not dealt with the real problem of ensuring that legitimate immigrants come to the country.

The example which I wish to give today involves my having written to the Minister, the previous Minister and the Minister prior to that. The case to which I refer involves a Canadian whose family is from Peru. He cannot get his mother-in-law into the country. Why? Not because of refugees landing in Nova Scotia but because the woman cannot find her marriage certificate. I have written to the Minister asking for special consideration in this case, but my request has been denied. This is not a matter of a refugee landing in Nova Scotia and being denied access. It is an example of the Minister and the laws he is protecting and the bureaucratic system of which he is a part denying that woman access to Canada.

It is time that the Prime Minister, cabinet Ministers and Conservative MPs were honest with Canadians. We need real legislation to keep out the abusers. But we do not need the false rhetoric of the Conservatives. We need legislation that will keep out the abusers and that will punish the real smugglers.

We do not need legislation that punishes real refugees, those who cannot get papers, those humanitarians in Canada who are concerned about trying to help refugees. That is what we have before us in this Bill. The fact that the Government wants to rush through consideration of this legislation, the fact that it wants to have two committees studying related legislation at the same time indicates a political agenda, a very corrupt agenda.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Bouchard) which was agreed to on the following division:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-18

Mr. Doug Lewis (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Point of order, Mr. Speaker. There have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find unanimous agreement to the following House order.

The Government will now call Item No. 18 on the Order Paper, consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) will speak to the motion on behalf of the Government. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) will speak next on behalf of the NDP. The House will extend today's sitting if necessary until the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill has completed his remarks.

On Thursday, August 20, we will continue consideration of Item 18, with the provision that the first speaker for the Official Opposition shall have the right to unlimited time to complete his remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Charles Mayer (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-18, an Act respecting national transportation.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise to speak to the amendments which have been proposed by the Senate and to encourage Members of the House of Commons to concur in them. There has been very close consultation and the nine amendments will make a very great difference to the Bill and our constructive policy development for the nation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the development of this Bill and Bill C-19, an Act respecting the Motor Vehicle Transport Act, has involved one of the most extensive consultation processes ever engaged in by a government in preparation of legislation. Release of Freedom to Move report in July, 1985, was followed by two sets of hearings by the House of Commons standing committee, one on Freedom to Move as a whole and one focused specifically on the North. Both of these involved hearings in various regions of the country.

I would once again like to thank the members of the standing committee from all Parties under the able leadership of the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) who spent virtually thousands of hours on this legislation. They would not have had to spend that time. It is possible to sit as a Member of Parliament and not do much, but these ladies and gentlemen did a lot of work for the public policy of this nation. I think they should be commended once again for the personal sacrifice that they made.

Following tabling and second reading of the Bills in the House of Commons, the Standing Committee on Transport held another set of hearings across the country. Hundreds of witnesses appeared and hundreds of briefs were received and reviewed. More recently the Senate Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has had the opportunity to review Bills C-18 and C-19 and has held hearings to receive firsthand, the views of 75 additional witnesses.

I cannot stress too much that these Bills will help our producers and manufacturers. As a result of their improved competitive position they will be better able to maintain and create jobs in every region of the country.

The Government has undertaken to implement Bills C-18 and C-19 on January 1, 1988. Everyone affected is busy making plans to take advantage of the new opportunities as of that date.

Nine Senate amendments to Bill C-18 are now awaiting our approval. Seven of these are for the purpose of clarifying the wording of the French text, while another amendment corrects a spelling error. The major amendment involves a stipulation that members of the new agency must be either Canadian citizens or permanent residents of Canada, which is surely a reasonable and indeed desirable qualification. There is no doubt that they would have been such in any event, but to have it enshrined in the statute is not a disagreeable proposition.

Allow me once again to elaborate on the benefits I anticipate once this Bill and its companion, Bill C-19, become law. These Bills will remove obstacles to innovation in both services offered and prices charged in the air, rail and trucking sectors. As a result, shippers will be more competitive and will be able to maintain existing jobs and create new ones in every region of the country.

A fundamental principle of these Bills is that transportation exists to serve the needs of shippers and travellers. Many of our producers, especially our resource producers, have faced severe difficulties in recent years and see these reforms as a necessary step in maintaining and improving their competitive position.

Bill C-18 provides workable remedies for captive rail shippers who have few practical recourses under the present law. It also provides many, for the first time, with competitive alternatives. For manufacturers, innovative service and freight packages in both the rail and trucking sectors will allow them to meet the demands of today's economy. Passage of the Bills will also give us better service and price packages from air carriers, which will benefit both leisure and business travellers.

Turning for a moment to safety, the first and overriding principle in the legislation is that the transportation system must be safe. Government's commitment to this principle will never waver. My colleagues will elaborate further tomorrow on just what that means. Section 3 of the new National Transportation Act enshrines this commitment in legislation for the first time.

I think Members should note that for the first time we actually have enshrined in legislation that safety is the highest priority. We have operated all these many years without that as the highest priority. It is now the highest priority, and I am sure all Members will find that to be a worthy principle.

I said at the outset that Bills C-18 and C-19 are based on extensive consultation. I would like to mention just a few examples of how the Government has listened and made changes. First, Bill C-18, as tabled in the House last November, recognized the principle that transportation is a key to regional economic development. Many witnesses and members of the Standing Committee on Transport felt that this should be strengthened. The Government listened and agreed.

Now the Bill states that the commercial viability of transportation links should be balanced with regional development objectives so that the economic strengths in each region can be realized. This principle will be part of the definition of public interest to be applied by the new agency in its decisions. We have operated all these many years without that as a principle of the law. It is now a principle of the law. An efficient, effective and competitive transportation system is a prerequisite for lasting economic development in all regions. Bill C-18 will give us just such a system.

The Government of Canada is committed to ensuring that disabled persons have access to the transportation system. This commitment is reflected in the policy statement in Section 3 of the Bill. While it was the original intent of the Government to fulfil its pledge through human rights legislation, we were convinced otherwise by the sincere representations made before the House standing committee. Accordingly, the Bill was amended to give the new agency the power to enforce accessibility standards for the disabled. Again, for the first time in our entire legislative history disabled people are recognized statutorily for the purpose of transportation.

In all, there were approximately 50 amendments made to Bill C-18 by the House of Commons, and now an additional nine by the Senate. Throughout the development of these Bills, the need to have a balanced package, especially with respect to the interests of shippers and carriers, has been held firmly in mind. The need to make Canadian products more competitive in domestic and international markets where the costs of transportation are a vital element has also been a primary consideration.

I believe that Bill C-18 is a balanced package. It is not simply deregulation; it removes unnecessary regulations and it protects the public interest where that is really necessary, for example, in the special regime for northern air services. Thus, Bill C-18 is truly a made-in-Canada policy.

I therefore encourage my hon. colleagues to support the Senate amendments to Bill C-18. It is clear that we need these amendments. The benefits are also clear. Now is the time to finish the job of making these reforms a reality.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Birds Hill): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleagues across the way for agreeing to permit me to speak this evening to the matter now before the House. As you may know, Mr. Speaker, the whole question of transport deregulation, particularly as it affects deregulation in the rail sector, has been a matter of pressing concern to me coming as I do from a riding in which life is so bound up in the transportation sector. I have the CNR main back shops, Transcona shops in my riding and Symington yard very near.

In Winnipeg in general the question of the future of rail transportation and the future of Winnipeg within the broader framework of rail transportation is a matter of ongoing concern and debate, as Hon. Members will know from the many occasions on which I have asked the Government questions in the House about the various aspects of Winnipeg's future as it pertains to transportation deregulation.

I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if I could appeal to the Hon. Members. I am having a hard time hearing myself over the conversation.

• (1750)

First, we are debating amendments which have come back to us from the Senate. It is my understanding that those amendments are not particularly offensive but, rather, ones that were agreed upon in the Senate between government and opposition Members. For instance, they include an amendment to require Canadian citizenship of members on the National Transportation Agency. There are various amendments which bring the French and English text into line. They are not a matter of controversy.

However, we should not let that obscure the fact that the whole deregulation package itself is deeply controversial. There is, particularly between the Progressive Conservative Government and the New Democratic Party, a very serious division of opinion about how our transportation system ought to be ordered in this country.

I notice that, unlike the situation with respect to Bill C-22, despite the great deal of Liberal rhetoric in the House of Commons about the current Government's plans for deregulation, the Liberals in the Senate did not move any significant amendments to the transportation deregulation. After all was said and done, there was no real battle waged in the Senate over deregulation. The Liberals and Conservatives were basically able to agree on deregulation.

I believe that Canadians who are against the current deregulation package should take keen note of the fact that deregulation had its roots in Liberal government policy preceding the election of 1984. There is a great deal of overlap and consensus between the Liberal and Conservative Parties with respect to deregulation.

The only real opponent in the House of Commons to what the Government is trying to do to our transportation sector is the New Democratic Party. Today is a very timely day to be considering the matter of deregulation in one of the final stages before Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 become law.

At this very time we are seeing one of the fruits of the anticipation of deregulation in the whole matter of negotiations going on between the railway unions and Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways.

It was once said of deregulation in the United States that deregulation turned out to be the biggest piece of anti-labour legislation that was ever passed in that country. In as far as the initial arguments of the railways for a 5 per cent wage rollback and a reduced initial wage were based on the anticipation of deregulation, the very same thing is beginning to happen here in Canada. Deregulation will become the grounds on which a great many working Canadians who are now well paid will become less well paid as the years roll by and the effects of deregulation and the irrational competition it brings into being in Canada come to be experienced.

I want to offer the empirical proof of the very arguments that the railways are now using with respect to the competition they expect to receive from American railways as a result of the provision in Bill C-18 for competitive line rates. This would allow American railways to compete for Canadian traffic directly.

I was interested to hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) say that transportation was to be the key to regional economic development and that this was one of the mainstays of the Government's belief with respect to deregulation. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary comes from western Canada. Canadian railways will be put into a position whereby goods that they normally carry may well be carried to the border points south of Alberta in Montana, and transported across the northern United States either to destinations in the northeastern United States or in eastern Canada. How does that serve the regional economic development of western Canada, when all the jobs in between, both railway associated jobs and the spin-off economic potential, will be put at risk by that particular measure?

This issue becomes a matter of national integrity for me. This legislation would let American railways compete in this manner with our two railways. It will put our two railways, CN and CP, at each other's throats by competing with each other and for the traffic now carried by trucks. As a result, there will be more pressure on the railways to abandon trackage. That will mean more pressure on provincial Governments as that trackage is abandoned and more trucks are used on the roads.

Furthermore, that transportation will not necessarily be by Canadian trucks. It may well be that Canadian trucking firms will be put in severe jeopardy as a result of the entry of American trucking firms into the Canadian market. There are many people involved in trucking in Winnipeg who are concerned about that possibility.

Let us consider the cumulative impact on the region of western Canada, because the Minister cited regional economic development as one of the elements of the Government's objectives when it decided to deregulate. There will be more rail line abandonment and heavier use of roads, the cost of which will be picked up by provincial Governments that are already experiencing a great deal of fiscal pressure from the Government in terms of costs that were not previously passed on and various cut-backs that have taken place.

The community infrastructure of many smaller communities in western Canada will be put at risk as the elevators and other operations shut down. As people move out of these communities, there will be pressure on the remaining citizens to fund the schools and other community services. These effects will not take place overnight, but during a longer period.

The Conservative Government says that it is the values and lifestyle of small communities that are the backbone of this country, where we find the very best of what it means to be Canadian. The Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills has heard me argue many times that I find it ironic that a Conservative Government says it cannot fight that battle and must get on board and follow that trend by deregulating and taking other steps so the process will come to a conclusion as quickly as possible. I would think that it would want to resist that trend and try to find ways of structuring our economy so that these types of communities could continue to exist in a healthy and lively atmosphere.

We believe that is possible, but it means having a critical rather than an accommodating attitude toward the trends in the market-place. That is what clearly defines the difference between the Conservatives and the New Democrats. Our approach is to think critically about what is happening in the market-place, globally, nationally, and locally, and to address how we can resist those trends in the market-place that negatively affect the quality of human life and so structure our economic life that those negative impacts will not occur. Having said that, I believe the difference between us and the Conservatives is that they know these trends are taking place. They say: "That is the invisible hand of Adam Smith. That is the market-place working itself out in the universe". They say there is nothing they can do about it, that all they can do is try to accommodate those trends in such a way as to make maximum economic advantage of it for those people who are already well placed in the market-place. That is the great divide between the Conservative Party and the New Democratic Party. The relative complacency with which the Liberal Party has regarded this whole debate on deregulation shows that, really, when it comes to these kinds of issues—and I admit there are perhaps a couple of issues about which there are fundamental differences between the Liberals and the Conservatives—there is really no difference between the Liberal Party and the Conservative party.

• (1800)

I go back to a matter raised in the House earlier today when the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) rose and had the nerve to chastise the Government for not living up to its commitments to western Canada vis-à-vis rail line upgrading. He cited the lay-off in Winnipeg at the Butt Weld in Transcona, a place where I used to work, as evidence of the lack of willingness of the CNR to live up to its promises. It was both the Liberals and the Conservatives who not so long ago in this place argued for a change in the Crow rate on the basis that if it were to be changed there would be a new era for rail transportation in western Canada. They said this would mean massive investment in double tracking, tunnels and in a great many other ways. The people in the shops in Winnipeg were led to believe that if we just changed the Crow rate there would be the dawning of a new era with respect to rail transportation. The very opposite has happened in many respects.

Since the change in the Crow rate, we have seen still more reductions in the number of employees at both major railways. We have seen the shut-down of major shops. I am thinking of Moncton in particular with respect to CN. We have seen rationalization, so called, going on in both railways, which has not had the beneficial effect which was promised during the Crow-rate debate.

So what we have before us is the beginning of the end of an entire way of life in Canada and, in particular, in western Canada. I admit, as someone younger than the Hon. Member for Lethbridge—Foothills, that I took it all for granted. I thought this was the way Canada was and that there would be no debate on that. I never really took seriously—although I now wish I had—the possibility that we could some day elect a government that would so directly attack the very economic infrastructure of Canada, and particularly western Canada, through transportation deregulation. Yet that is what is happening.

We will come to see that that is what Bill C-18 represents. To be fair, I tend to concentrate too much on matters having to do with rail transportation. I think it would be in order for a moment to speak about airline deregulation. Some questions have been asked in the House in recent days. I certainly do not intend to hang anything I have to say on any particular accident or anything like that, but the fact is that there is growing concern about the effects on safety of deregulation in the United States. The Parliamentary Secretary, when asked about this is quick to point out that Canada is in a very different situation. We have a lot fewer flights, we have less density of population and so on, and we are really not to be compared. It is a point well taken to a degree. However, the fact is that we are learning from the American experience that deregulation does put unhealthy pressures on airlines to cut corners, to push equipment a little harder and a little longer than it should be, and to have fewer employees than they should have because they are competing with someone else. An airline decides to cut staff in order to be competitive and keep its prices down. We know this happens. It really has nothing to do with whether or not the Government is genuinely committed to safety as its highest priority. It is nice that it is in the legislation. No one argues with that. The Parliamentary Secretary pointed that out. But having a preamble or whatever in the legislation is not enough. It has to be backed up with a system that actually lends itself to safety, or a government that is committed, having created a situation which does not lend itself to safety, to having the necessary staff around to do the kinds of inspection, enforcement and investigative work that will actually create the kind of commitment to safety about which the Parliamentary Secretary speaks. We do not believe that is being done.

No one is saying the Government is out to create an unsafe system. We just think its faith—and it is really taking a leap of faith in this respect—is unjustified.

I just want to reiterate the complete and total opposition of the New Democratic Party to the deregulation legislation which has previously been before this House and which is now before the House in the form of amendments sent back to this House from the Senate. In my eight years and some months in this House, I cannot think of anything that will have a more negative impact on the economic and social well-being in the long run of the people in my constituency.

Mr. Jourdenais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Laprairie (Mr. Jourdenais) on a point of order.

Mr. Jourdenais: Mr. Speaker, earlier, when the House voted on Bill C-55, I abstained from voting. I wonder if my abstention will be officially recorded in Hansard, because I want the people of my riding to know I was present in the House for the vote.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With his intervention, the Hon. Member has just achieved that result.

It being six o'clock, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

NATIONAL TRANSPORTATION ACT, 1987

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed, from August 19, 1987, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that amendments by the Senate to Bill C-18, an Act respecting National Transportation, be read the second time and concurred in.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak at this time, and I would like to point out that Canada's three political Parties have taken three vastly different positions on the proposed legislation that will substantially change the transportation industry in Canada.

While the Government, the Progressive Conservative Party, favours wholesale deregulation of the industry in Canada, the New Democratic Party is totally and completely opposed to any deregulation whatsoever.

Those are the two extremes. And as always, it is the middle road, the happy medium that should prevail.

• (1110)

That is the position the Liberal Party has been vigorously defending. We said from the outset that we believed in a certain degree of deregulation. However, we feel that the kind of wholesale regulation the Conservative Government would impose on us would be a disaster for Canada in several respects. We think it would be particularly harmful to the stability of Canada's transportation industry. In fact, whether we are talking about the railways, the trucking industry or air transport, our Canadian transportation industry is a going concern, it is profitable and creates and provides thousands of jobs for Canadians who are able to earn an honest living. We in the Liberal Party are still wondering why it should be necessary to overhaul completely an industry that on the whole is doing very well in this country. We do not deny that improvements and amendments to the Transportation Act are needed to keep up with the new developments and new competition that exist in this field as in so many others.

To completely overhaul everything and change the rules of the game through wholesale deregulation, as the Government intends to do, is a giant step that should not be taken. An exhaustive study of this Bill has been made. In fact, the Parliamentary Secretary for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Thacker) said yesterday in his speech that the Bill had received very careful consideration. The House Committee on Transport travelled across the country and heard testimony from people from all walks of life and every region in this country. The message we received almost everywhere was one of concern and of opposition to the Government's Bill. Only the big shipping companies are in favour of Bill C-18, and the Conservative Government is again abdicating its responsibility to act in the national interest, in order to act in the interests of a few big Canadian companies. It has become a fact of life that the Conservative Government is biased towards the wealthiest in our society. This Government works only for the big and the wealthy in this country when it is not working for those outside the country, and I am thinking of the multinational drug manufacturers who dictated Bill C-22 which we will be considering in a few days. It is crystal clear that once again, the Government legislates for the rich and the rich alone. The Government's insisting on wholesale deregulation of the transportation industry merely proves my point.

The number of companies that will be affected by deregulation is enormous. We will see an excessive concentration of our trucking and air transportation industry in the hands of the wealthiest exponents of those industries. That concentration is already taking place. And this while it was hoped there would be numerous airlines, each privately owned. We will still have many of the small airlines, but they will all be connected with one another and often belong to the same owner. What is even worse, it is to be feared that they will be under foreign ownership. Well, as Members of the Liberal Party, we oppose this across-the-board deregulation because we believe that the Bill is not a well-balanced one. We have no objection against partially deregulating the transportation industry in Canada to facilitate the shipping of our finished goods in Canada towards the United States and other countries of the world where we can compete with foreigners. The Government, however, has failed to seek the proper balance.

We are now considering a Government motion which accepts the amendments proposed by the Senate to Bill C-18. I can even quote part of a statement made yesterday by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport:

> Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to rise to speak to the amendments proposed by the Senate and to encourage Members of the House of Commons to concur in them. There has been very close consultation and the nine amendments will make a very great difference to the Bill and our constructive policy development for the nation.

I notice that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre) is present in the House and it is rather interesting to realize that concerning Bill C-18, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport has accepted the amendments proposed by the Canadian Senate and feels that, quote:

> —these amendments will make a very great difference to the Bill and our constructive policy development for the nation.

In other words, what the Government is prepared to do today is to recognize the legitimacy of the Senate and the absolutely essential role it can and should play to improve the various legislation which we adopt here in Parliament.

It is not the first time that the House of Commons accepts amendments from the Senate. What is rather particular and unique, however, is the stubbornness with which the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs refuses some amendments from the Canadian Senate. That is exceptional. For throughout our history, session after session, Legislature after Legislature, the Canadian Senate has amended legislation adopted here in the House of Commons. With only a few exceptions, the House of Commons has always accepted them and always considered that the Senate had the same authority as the House of Commons concerning a Bill. Under the Constitution, both Chambers are equal. And the House of Commons and the Senate both have the right to adopt legislation and to accept Bills.

What the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs are trying to do is to convince the public that, by amending Bill C-22, the Senate has exceeded its rights and responsibilities. Nothing could be farther from the truth. All the legislation introduced in the House are later submitted to the Senate to be reviewed, amended if necessary, and returned to the House of Commons.

• (1120)

And as I am speaking to you, the situation can be summed up as follows: we are debating Bill C-18 as amended by the Senate which, as the Parliamentary Secretary himself put it, has done such a good job that all the amendments made by the Senators will be accepted. Double standards.

There can be only one explanation: the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is so obstinate as to reject the good amendments made by the Senate to his patents legislation.

Mr. Gauthier: A hard-headed man.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister of Transport, through his Parliamentary Secratary, is quite prepared to accept the amendments to Bill C-18—

Mr. Gauthier: A reasonable man.

Mr. Ouellet: This is not the first time this has happened. I will recall a whole series of amendments which were made by the Senate in the past and which were eventually accepted by the House of Commons.

I have here a study done by the Library of Parliament's Information and Reference Branch, and I did not ask them to go over to earlier centuries, just the past 25 years.

I have here a document that takes us back to the early 1960s. I am not referring to minor Bills, in fact the legislation we are considering today, the Transport Act, is an important piece of legislation, yet it has been amended by the Senate and Government Members are prepared to accept them. Such was the situation in 1960 when a measure to amend the Income Tax Act came back here in July, 1960, with three Senate amendments. The House of Commons agreed to these amendments and Royal Assent was given on August 1, a full endorsement of the work done by the Senate.

The 1961 Act to Amend the Criminal Code in the case of capital murder was also amended by the Senate and later approved by the House of Commons.

In 1964—I shall not list all such measures because there are pages of them, but I shall simply mention a few to illustrate my point that it is quite natural for the Senate to amend Commons Bills occasionally, and that, in nearly all such cases, the amendments are accepted.

The Senate also proposed amendments to the Trans-Canada Airlines Bill, and these were accepted by the Canadian Parliament.

In 1966, an amendment to the Fund for Rural Economic Development Bill was proposed by the Senate and accepted by the House of Commons.

In 1969, the Pest Control Products Bill was also amended by the Senate, and after discussions, the House of Commons decided that the Senate amendment was unacceptable. What happened then? After consulting Government representatives, the Senate did not insist on having its amendment adopted, but did insist on the principle of this amendment and proposed a new amendment to replace the first one.

On May 14, 1969, the House of Commons accepted this new Senate amendment, which led to the Bill receiving Royal Assent in June.

This shows that, when people of good will work in close co-operation, there is always a way to come to an agreement.

I now come back to what is going on in the case of Bill C-22. If the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was less authoritarian, obstinate and determined to satisfy pharmaceutical multinationals, he could say that the amendments proposed by the Senate to Bill C-22 do not meet fully the objectives of the Government, but that there might be a way to achieve a proper balance. The Senate could then, later on, propose new amendments which, as in the case of Bill C-157 in 1969, would be acceptable in the mind of the Government.

However, such is not the case. The Government is desperately trying to stir up a fight on the backs of the Senators and suggesting that the Senate is overstepping its authority by amending legislation. The Government should not really be so critical today, since the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport has himself accepted amendments from the Senate, as I have already pointed out which at least proves that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) is not as stubborn as the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[English]

Mr. Andre: That's not what you said in the elevator.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Other amendments have also been accepted in the past. In 1970, the Investment Companies Act and the Northern Inland Waters Act were also amended by the Senate and subsequently passed by the House of Commons. In 1971, the Consumer Packaging and Labelling Act was amended by the Senate and accepted by the House of Commons and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs at the time.

Mr. Gauthier: He's leaving.

Mr. Ouellet: I see that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who was listening just now, finds my comments rather hard to take and probably went behind the curtains to be able to breathe a little easier.

It is a fact that in all our Parliaments, the Senate has, from time to time, amended Bills originating from the House of Commons. The Ministers have always had the courtesy and tact to go and discuss the matter with the Senate and reach some appropriate compromise so that the legislation could be passed in the best interests of Canada and Canadians. Not like the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who wants it to be in the best interests of the drug multinationals.

I say that when there is a will, the House and the Senate can find a way.

I have some more precedents for Bills amended by the Senate and accepted by Parliament. In 1973, there was the Protection of Privacy Act that was amended by the Senate and subsequently approved by the House of Commons; the Act to amend the Northern Canada Power Commission Act; and the Statute Law (Status of Women) Amendment Act in 1975. The Senate proposed an amendment that the House of Commons subsequently accepted in June, 1975. There was also the Canadian Commercial Corporation Act that was approved after a certain number of amendments had been suggested by the Senate.

I know about this, for I was then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. And I never felt my rights as a Minister had been infringed upon because the Canadian Senate had suggested a few amendments to the Bill I was debating before the House of Commons. Quite the contrary: In 1975, I understood and accepted these amendments proposed by the Senate because I knew that these amendments were improving my legislation. And I never felt that my role as Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs had been debased. As a matter of fact, I was quite pleased to accept the sound pieces of advice of the Canadian Senate. I cannot understand why the current Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs feels his rights have been trampled on simply because the Canadian Senate wants to make a few suggestions in the best interests of Canadians.

The Petroleum Administration Act was another major legislation to which the Senate had also suggested amendments which were later accepted by the House of Commons. Of course, I could continue on and on. There were other similar instances in 1976, 1977 and 1978.

In 1981, there was the Act to amend the National Energy Board Act. If the former Liberal Government ever had a legislation at heart, it was the National Energy Board Act. Yet, on April 7, 1981, the Senate proposed six amendments to this Bill. The then Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources did not make of them a life or death issue. He accepted these amendments from the Senate and the Bill received Royal Assent on December 18, 1981.

Well, since the Members of the Conservative Party came to power, they have been trying to pick a quarrel with the Senate, and they would like the Canadian people to believe that the Senators, because they are not elected, enjoy fewer rights and privileges than the elected Members of the House. Canadian judges are not elected either. However, we are not trying to imply that their decisions are less valuable and important because judges are not elected. In some American states, some judges are elected. There are functions in the judicial system that are elective. On the other hand, other positions in the judiciary are appointed. So, I have never heard that, because an American justice official in one case is elected and in another appointed, the one who is elected renders decisions that are better or more valuable to the American judiciary than the appointed one.

I find false and unacceptable that argument by the Canadian Prime Minister and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who would have the people believe and imply that because Senators are not elected, their work is any less important and less valuable than that of the elected Members of the House of Commons. The fact is the Canadian Constitution gives that full and complete right both to Senators and Members of the House of Commons. And I am happy to state that the Senate did an excellent job on Bill C-18 and also Bill C-19, the other legislation that comes at the same time as Bill C-18 and that would bring a major change in deregulation in Canada.

I would like to remind the House that Bill C-18 has been especially opposed because it is not definite enough as far as safety is concerned. It is incomplete, in particular for air safety, and in my opinion, it should have been amended by the Government at the committee stage.

I would like to quote some of the presentations we received from various organizations when this Bill was being considered. In particular—

• (1130)

—more specifically, the Canadian Union of Public Employees, Airline Division, which appeared before the Transport Committee on March 24, 1987. I would like to read an extract of its presentation which states:

> A review of the American experience with airline deregulation revealed the following:
> In relation to safety it states:
> U.S. airline passenger safety has been compromised and jeopardized by deregulation. Airlines, in a competitive squeeze with low-cost opposition have slashed not only labour costs, but operations and maintenance costs as well. Spending on commercial aircraft maintenance declined by almost 18 per cent between 1980 and 1984. The average fleet age of commercial aircraft increased by almost 4 years during the same period of time.
> Flying is becoming more hazardous in the U.S. as the effect of using equipment and personnel for longer hours with reduced maintenance is beginning to show. The safety buffer diminishes daily under the relentless economic pressures of deregulation.
> In 1984, the U.S. Federal Aviation Administration disciplined 16 of 43 carriers, including People's Express, Pilgrim Airlines and Alaska Airlines, after an in-depth inspection found major safety problems, including extensive use of unqualified pilots. Several carriers had their licences suspended.
> Meanwhile, U.S. near-collisions in mid-air have jumped, and safety violations fines of commercial airlines are at a record high.
> Near mid-airs (in-flight near-misses reported by pilots) escalated alarmingly from 311 in 1982 to 830 in 1986. Pan American, American and Eastern airlines were fined a total of $13 million for violating safety and maintenance standards.
> Another of the dangers of U.S. deregulation is that it has brought hundreds of inexperienced pilots into the industry.
> In at least 2 cases, that inexperience cost a planeload of passengers their lives, once right here in Canada. An American air safety expert said the Arrow Air crash at Gander that killed a planeload of U.S. servicemen in December 1985 was "clearly a deregulation crash. Without deregulation, that crew would not have been flying that aircraft under those conditions". ("Those conditions" included freezing rain—the same kind of weather we have to deal with here in Canada about five months a year.)

• (1140)

This was stated by the Canadian Union of Public Employees when they appeared before the Transport Committee. I think that their fear of having the same American experience in Canada is real. According to the people who know what they are talking about, deregulation in the United States is a frightening experience. Why would it not also be frightening in Canada?

[Translation]

I was especially frustrated by the attitude and the answers of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to a question which I asked him Monday in the House. I asked what the Canadian Government was going to do to guarantee that tragedies such as the recent one in Detroit would not happen in Canada when the industry is deregulated.

The Deputy Prime Minister, a former Minister of Transport and himself sponsor of Bills C-18 and C-19 which will bring about this massive deregulation in Canada, rose and, affecting indignation, said that he found my question irresponsible. As shown on page 8118 of Hansard for August 17, 1987, the Deputy Prime Minister gave this reply:

> I find the Hon. Member's question quite irresponsible—
> I think that making that kind of allegation is totally uncalled for.

He concluded by saying:

> For the Hon. Member to tie politics to a very serious tragedy is most unfortunate indeed.

Mr. Speaker, Detroit was the scene of an appalling tragedy which took the lives of innocent passengers. As a matter of fact we have learned today that the accident may have been the result of human error on the part of the pilot. And what do we hear from spokesmen for unionized workers in the aviation industry: air safety has been compromised in the United States since the advent of deregulation.

I am not trying to score political points when I ask the Minister what he intends to do to protect Canadian air travellers when deregulation becomes a fact of life in this country. Everything seems to indicate that lower air safety standards are directly related to deregulation in the United States. Well, we do not want any compromise on safety in Canada and this is why I asked the question. My question was all the more justified that, in its January 12, 1987 American edition, Time headlined:

[English]

"Be careful out there. As air traffic soars, so does concern about safety in the skies".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am not about to quote the whole article but I would suggest that the Deputy Prime Minister, former Minister of Transport and responsible for this Bill C-18, should read it and discover for himself to what extent the kind of deregulation which has been implemented in the United States and which he seeks to force on Canadians might play havoc with air safety in this country.

I am not the only one who is saying this. A number of expert witnesses who appeared before the Committee on Transport expressed similar concerns.

[English]

The Canadian Air Line Pilots Association also presented submissions on Bill C-18 to the House of Commons Standing Committee on Transport. They appeared before the committee on April 2, 1987 in Montreal. Here is what they said:

> It should be unnecessary to point out that a profitable operation is necessary for safety—

This was stated by the U.S. Senate in 1937 during debate on economic regulation of the fledgling U.S. transportation industry. It is equally true in Canada in 1985, 1986, and 1987.

The subject of airline safety appears in Bill C-18 at Clause 3(1)(a) wherein it states that the objectives of the Act are most likely to be achieved in a free market system under conditions ensuring that the system meets "acceptable safety standards". We are appalled at the use of the term "acceptable" when clearly the public is entitled to and expects that the "highest safety standards" will be assured. Nowhere are there provisions which will assure that the highest level of safety, or even these so-called "acceptable" but undefined standards can be met.

The level of aviation safety in Canada is ostensibly the responsibility of the Minister of Transport who, through his Department, is charged with establishing certain standards and monitoring the industry to ensure compliance. However, in practice the level of safety we enjoy in Canada has been dependent upon air carriers' willingness and ability to operate to standards well above the minimum demanded by the Department of Transport, and on the efforts of dedicated individuals.

Of course, under deregulation the Department of Transport will continue to monitor and enforce the same minimum standards. But as efficiency and profit become all-important, the self-policing aspect of the industry will fade. Capital will be forced to trade as closely to the marginal line of safety as the enforcement agency will permit.

To quote from the Assistant Deputy Minister's keynote address at the Flight Safety Foundation's annual seminar in Vancouver on October 7, 1986: "—safety is not the end objective for companies—" In the same speech he noted that "—safety comes from the top and must be seen to come from the top". In their presentation, the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association said that it is certainly not seen to come from the top in Bill C-18.

The Liberal Opposition introduced an amendment at the committee stage. We tried to convince the Minister to change the words "acceptable safety standards" to the words "the highest level of safety". We were unsuccessful. The Minister did not want to budge. He felt that to do otherwise would be too constraining on the companies. It is a sad day when the Minister will not put safety ahead of everything else in terms of aviation. I very much regret that decision. We would have liked to see the legislation amended, as requested by the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association, but we had no success with the Minister.

It is the bread and butter and the security of the people who are directly involved in the airline industry, and they should know what they are talking about. This is what they said to the Transport Committee:

● (1150)

> Prior to deregulation in the U.S., many airline industry experts expected that as the economic regulation by the Civil Aeronautics Board disappeared it would be replaced by a higher level of safety regulation and inspection by the Federal Aviation Administration, particularly in view of the expected influx of new entrants. This did not happen. Rather, from an inspectorate of approximately 2,000 responsible for monitoring 237 air carriers in 1979, the FAA reduced its number of inspectors to some 1,300 responsible for 470 air carriers by early 1984.
> Furthermore, between 1980 and 1985 much of the time of these inspectors was taken up with certifying new operators, so that the normal inspection process could not be followed. It was only last year that financial restrictions were lifted to allow hiring of additional inspectors, but the number is still, and will remain, below the 1979 level.
> Since 1984, when growing safety concerns led to more vigilant and intense airline safety audits, we have seen record fines levied against numerous U.S. airlines, large and small, established and new entrants. Some have argued that these actions by the FAA have demonstrated a satisfactory level of inspection; we, however, take the less comforting view that there is clearly a very unsatisfactory level of compliance with regulations.
> Experience in the United States since the beginning of the transition to economic deregulation has shown quite clearly that a greater burden falls to the safety regulator.

This is what the Nielsen task force was saying in 1985. Let us remember that that task force of the previous Deputy Prime Minister of Canada came out with those types of opinions. In other words, this is clearly the view of the Government. The Government is ready to believe and have faith in the industry policing itself.

It is true that for a number of years it has worked relatively well in Canada. Our record of safety is a good one. However, we will be working under a new environment. We will totally deregulate the airline industry with this legislation. Therefore, the situation and the circumstances will be different.

To continue to believe that we can let the industry police itself is dangerous. I believe that something must be done to ensure that government officials, independent people, will be able to check the work of each company in order to protect properly and effectively the public that uses airlines. To restrict it exclusively to the industry, as the Americans have done, is a very dangerous course to follow. We only have to look at what is taking place in the United States to realize that American authorities have made a mistake and are compromising safety in the air in the United States, because they do not have the proper number of people to do the necessary inspections. We do not want this to happen in Canada. We are begging the Government to hire the appropriate number of people in the Department of Transport and in the various agencies created to monitor the airline industry to ensure that safety is not compromised.

We have not yet seen evidence that the Government understands. We have not yet seen person-years assigned to the Ministry and the agencies to make us believe that the Government is ready to take its responsibility. We clearly believe that the Minister of Transport and the Deputy Prime Minister are very eloquent in words but are very short in terms of putting money where their mouth is.

Let me continue citing the presentation of the Canadian Air Line Pilots Association before the Standing Committee on Transport last April. It reads:

> Jerry Lederer, President—of the Flying Safety Foundation has stated: "Industry does not remain indifferent to tragedy, but it faces a selection of priorities based on limited resources . . . When the highest priority is economic survival, then safety must take a back seat, and there is disturbing evidence that the traditional safety margins of the air transport industry are already being eroded.
> As the representative of the airline pilot who is charged under the Aeronautics Act with direct authority over and responsibility for the safety of his passengers, crew and aircraft, CALPA is concerned at the insidious trend in the airline industry, world-wide, toward reduced safety margins.
> Over the years, there has been a dramatic shift of onus in most areas of aviation safety. Where once it was safety first, cost second, with no questions asked, pilots are now increasingly faced with the burden of proving why a cost-saving procedure is not safe, or the even more difficult task of showing why it is less safe to the degree that it should not be done. Where once there was a strong element of pride within the industry in providing the very best in safety and service, we are seeing more and more reliance upon the letter of the law. Cost considerations are gaining pre-eminence, as a financially hard-pressed industry simply has no incentive to spend more on safety than is required to meet minimum regulatory standards.

[Translation]

I firmly believe what pilots are telling us. Day in and day out these people have to live with what is going on in the United States since deregulation. We ought to listen when they warn us to be careful, and this is what I had in mind Monday when I directed my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. I reject the Deputy Prime Minister's allegation that I was indulging in petty politics when I asked him what his Government was prepared to do to make sure that Canadian air safety will not be jeopardized.

Allow me to continue quoting from this very important brief which was submitted to the Committee on Transport:

[English]

> Nor is it only the commercial side of the industry that is being adversely affected. We also see it in publicly funded safety services, most recently in crash, fire and rescue services. All indications are that there is a general slippage in safety standards, an erosion in safety margins that could take as many years to restore as they have to deteriorate. If so, better alarmist now than apologetic later.
> The challenge is to maintain Canada's traditional attitudes toward safety and ensure that economic pressures, which can only be intensified under deregulation, do not lead to lowered margins of safety. Anything "less safe" must be rejected; we are not interested in exploring the outer limits of the safety envelope.
> Bill C-18 presents no provisions to allay our fears that the inevitable economic pressures already affecting all segments of the airline industry will also affect safety. No one other than members of CALPA through our constitutional objectives, has been charged with maintaining the highest standard of safety; instead there is a vague reference to "acceptable" levels. This shortcoming must be addressed.

● (1200)

Indeed, members of the Liberal Party have tried in committee to address it and present amendments to change the legislation but without success. While the Bill provides something to deal with this, certainly Clause 3(1)(a) was the place where we could have dealt with it. The Government refused to budge. Indeed, I have no hesitation in saying that the Minister is compromising safety.

Let no one think that CALPA is alone in its safety concerns. I want to say this because of the vicious response by the Minister of Transport to my questions last Monday. I was asking something that I thought was absolutely responsible. I wanted to know if the Government was going to take every possible step to prevent the occurrence of an incident like the one in Detroit. The Minister tried to imply that we wanted to make politics out of a tragedy. It was not making politics because what happened in the U.S. could certainly happen in Canada. What I was saying on Monday is what the CALPA people have been saying along with a number of experts in the U.S. Let me cite them. Canadian Aviation is an important publication and it said in September, 1985:

> All airlines are cutting corners these days. Sure there are safeguards but the risks are being cut a little finer in the interests of the bottom line.

James E. Burnett, Chairman of the U.S. National Transportation Safety Board, said in 1985:

> Under-capitalized carriers cannot afford to invest as much in training as the well-established carriers, so that there is less familiarity with equipment and procedures.

Here is what Larry Crawford, President of Avitas said in Airline Executive in 1985:

> The current trend among airlines towards maintaining aircraft only to minimum FAA standards is disturbing.

Here is what Donald Engen, administrator of the FAA, was saying in Flight International in November, 1985:

> We cannot accept any tendency for people to move down to the minimum standards. Deregulation in itself isn't bad . . . But this is not to say we have no problem for the future.

This is precisely what we in Canada are saying. Contrary to the NDP, which is vehemently and totally opposed to deregulation, and to the Conservatives, who want to jump right to it in a massive and urgent deregulation, we in the Liberal Party are saying, "Just a minute. Deregulation to a certain degree is not bad. Certainly it could be done. But let us do it in a way that will not compromise the safety of people flying. We will not compromise the employment of those who have for years worked in the industry. We will not compromise services to the regions which are accustomed to a service that will no longer be available if there is no ironclad protection in the legislation". That is what we are saying. This industry, if it is totally deregulated, will only go where it can make a buck. It will not continue to serve the remote areas of our country who have been accustomed to the services. Finally, let us not do it in a way that will compromise safety as happened in the U.S. and as will happen in Canada unless we have the proper safeguards.

I am not the only one speaking this way. I want to cite another important organization, the Brotherhood of Railway and Airline Clerks who appeared before the Standing Committee on Transport when it visited Vancouver in March of this year. Here is what they had to say with regard to safety:

> —a number of other facts have many U.S. air safety experts worried about the future:
> The number of near misses have increased steadily over the last five years—from 311 in 1982 to 776 in 1985; in the first five months of 1986, 305 were recorded, an increase over the same period in 1985.
> While the number of commercial flights has grown by 31 per cent, from 14.7 million in 1980 to 19.2 million in 1986, the number of air traffic controllers has declined by 13 per cent.
> While the number of aircraft increased by 68 per cent between 1980 and 1984, the percentage of operating revenues spent on maintenance has declined from 8.9 per cent in 1980 to 7.6 per cent in 1984.
> Although there has been a dramatic increase in both the number of flights and passengers, the number of FAA inspectors has declined by 33.8 per cent between 1979 and 1984.

These statistics were presented to the committee to indicate that this trend in the U.S. should not happen in Canada. They urged the committee to make recommendations to the Minister to improve safety and make sure the number of inspectors in the Department would be sufficient to do a proper job. What we have witnessed so far is lip-service by the Minister. There has been no clear-cut indication that there are going to be more employees to do the work effectively. In his report to the House of Commons for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1985, the Auditor General made the following remarks:

> None of the Transport Canada regions was able to inspect all carriers in its jurisdiction at least once a year.

This is not a member of the Liberal Opposition speaking. This is the Auditor General of Canada. He is telling us that in 1985, under the Conservative Government, none of the Transport Canada regions were able to inspect all carriers in their jurisdiction at least once a year. The Government is going full steam with deregulation and it has not substantially increased the number of people to do the work. The Government is trying to pretend that it is not compromising safety. It is trying to pretend that the work will be done. When I asked the Minister a question in the House the other day—

[Translation]

Did the Minister know that the Department of Transport delegated—not: did the work itself—delegated authority to airline mechanical engineers to apply the standards it has laid down? I also asked the Minister whether it was normal to let the airline companies police themselves. The Minister answered:

> —I find this question totally absurd from a Member who has had some experience in transportation . . . I invite him to reread the Aeronautics Act and to reread some of the actions which have been taken by the Government.

I reread the Aeronautics Act, but I have yet to see the Government's actions reflect it in the policies we need to implement the new legislation and ensure it will produce results. Until the Department or the agencies have the staff they need to do the work, these policies will be no more than wishful thinking on the part of the Government. We can hardly ask the agency, any more than we can ask the Department, to work miracles with the number of person-years and resources the Department of Transport has been given. It can't. I repeat: If you are sincere and if you are honest when you say that you don't want to compromise air safety, more money will have to be spent. The appropriate administrative measures will have to be taken and the requisite support staff made available to do a satisfactory job, and not what your Department of Transport is about to do, which is to ask the companies to police themselves. That is what the Americans have done with their own airlines since deregulation, and the number of accidents or near misses in the United States has increased. I ask the Government: Please wake up before it is too late, otherwise Canada will see a repeat of the tragic incidents that have been occurring in the United States since deregulation.

I want to conclude with another quote from the CUPE Airline divisions.

• (1210)

[English]

The general chairperson of the CUPE airline division, V. J. Udvarhely, appeared before the Transport Committee. Let me read to the House an extract of the document that was tabled before the committee. It reads:

> The Safety aspect is of monumental concern to us. Examples across the border of horribly low safety standards abound and while the Government would not knowingly create safety hazards, they will happen unless there is a budget for more safety inspectors and the requisite number of firemen at airports and a regulatory body with teeth. This should be a main concern, budget deficit notwithstanding. Safety has no monetary ceiling.

[Translation]

This, in a nutshell, is the philosophy of the Liberal Party of Canada, now in the opposition. We are afraid that deregulation will be a disaster and we have asked exactly what CUPE asked us when it testified before the Transport Committee: that we should have inspectors in sufficient number, an agency with the means and power to act and, above all, the necessary financial resources.

The number of firefighters at airports has decreased, while the Minister would have us believe that he has security at heart and takes steps to better protect the travelling public. It is clear that the number of inspectors and employees is not sufficient to meet the needs. And not only are there not enough inspectors and employees to do the job, but for certain positions such as firefighters working at airports who must take action in case of a tragedy and hurry on the landing strip to protect human lives on an aircraft which may be on fire, their number at Canadian airports has decreased. And the Minister would like to convince us that he has security at heart. Nonsense! On behalf of my Party, therefore, I repeat that we are deeply dissatisfied to see the Government move forward with this Bill which will result in the across-the-board deregulation of transportation in Canada. My only solace, before I resume my seat, is to say that to a certain extent, the Senate at least has improved this legislation and we are greatful to its members for their contribution to Bill C-18.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak today on the motion before us on the amendments brought by the Senate but I cannot agree that small changes in spelling errors and French translation will really affect the basic principle of the Bill and provide the kind of transportation policy that Canada needs. We are very disappointed that many of the possible amendments that would have made the Bill a better one were not made and that the opportunity to do so was lost.

If there was ever a need for sober second thought, it was on this Bill. It is an issue of vital importance to all Canadians and, if I may say so, of particular importance to those of us in more remote and rural areas of Canada. It is an issue which affects everything from the price of a can of soup in my constituency to the export of car parts in other constituencies.

It is not an issue that is very exciting to many people and probably not even very exciting to the media. However, a Bill that throws out the chance of having a planned transportation system in favour of a market-directed game of chance has passed both Houses without substantive amendment, and the New Democratic Party says that that is a shame.

Deregulation conjures up very positive imagery. It has a nice ring to it: get the Government out of our hair, keep it off our backs, decrease bureaucracy and red tape. It appeals to the emotions of most Canadians. We must remember, however, that in the past, there was deregulation. Regulation came into being because deregulation was not working.

At second glance, deregulation as proposed in this legislation is, if I may use the analogy of one of our more sacred Canadian institutions, like a hockey game without a referee. The little guys will get beat up by the big guys and the people who paid to see the game will not see the game at all, but chaos.

• (1220)

Transportation and public policy related to it have gone hand in hand in developing Canada and uniting our vast land and have been the subject of many debates in this House. Transportation legislation then must be founded on a social and economic objective. In this case the social objective must be that of maintaining transportation services on an equitable basis for all parts of our country. Nowhere is the importance of this more clearly evident than in the north.

In Yukon, my home riding, a territory of some 200,000 square miles, we are accessed by one major highway and only one major Canadian airline since the amalgamation of PWA and CP. The cost of living in Yukon is at least 20 per cent to 50 per cent higher than in most parts of southern Canada. Much of the reason for this is the high cost of bringing goods to the territory, most of which are trucked in a minimum of 1,000 miles from the south.

Mining, which is a very large part of our economy, also relies heavily on good and economical transportation systems. A big issue in the Yukon recently was that a mine which was closed due to lower world market prices could only open again if economical transportation could be provided. I am suggesting that with deregulation such economical transportation would not have been provided and a number of people would have been put out of jobs because of that.

Our economy is as fragile as our climate. Temperatures range from 35 degrees above zero to 60 degrees below zero. Due to this, transportation routes are the subject of much conversation, speculation and often trepidation owing to floods, snow slides, and the very fact that we are so isolated. The highway is the lifeline of our territory and numerous jobs depend on it.

Parts of northern B.C. as well as Yukon rely on the major airline which goes to only two main communities. Therefore, smaller companies play an extremely important part in relaying goods and passengers between the smaller communities to facilitate mining explorations and to bring tourists to various sites. We are very reliant upon the small chartered companies and smaller airlines.

We know that transportation is expensive. For example, it costs more to go from Whitehorse, the capital city of Yukon, to Vancouver than it does to go from Toronto to Vancouver. It costs twice as much to go from Whitehorse in Yukon to Old Crow, our most northerly community. It costs twice as much to travel within the territory as it does to go outside. Therefore, transportation and the cost of it is frequently a subject of discussion.

The situation of Yukon is not unique in Canada. These characteristics are shared by rural communities throughout the country. Dependence on one major transportation system, high costs, unstable climatic conditions, long distances, and small populations characterize transportation systems in probably 80 per cent of the country. Efficient, economic transportation systems are essential to our survival.

The question before us is how best to achieve a fair system for all Canadians. The New Democratic Party does not oppose improvements to the transport regulatory system. We need less bureaucracy and red tape, better safety regulations and better inspections, but we do not believe that this legislation will significantly address this problem. This legislation is like the referee walking away from the hockey game and saying, "Go to it and we will see who survives".

We require common sense regulations supported by adequate funds for enforcement so that all parts of Canada can benefit from a fair and equitable transportation system.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: Wholesale deregulation as proposed by this legislation does not do this. It does not take into account the geography and demographics of this country. Canada is not only Vancouver, Montreal, and St. John's, Newfoundland. It is Carmacks, Tuktoyaktuk, Cranbrook, Qu'Appelle, Wingham and many other small towns, not to mention Come-By-Chance. If this Bill goes through it certainly will be only by chance that many smaller communities will receive reasonable transportation services.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: While rural areas do tend to have high transportation costs, at the moment we at least have a reasonable degree of service in many areas, speaking particularly of the north. Addressing air service specifically, fares are not currently subsidized by the taxpayer but, because of the test of public convenience and necessity, are paid for through averaging between high and low profitability areas.

Passengers in Toronto are perhaps paying a few dollars extra so that Canadians in less populated areas can pay more reasonable fares—not cheap, simply more reasonable. That is an example of what makes Canada a special country. Our public policies have been—not always and sometimes imperfectly—generally oriented to ensuring that there is some equity for the country.

We cannot be sure of what will happen under a deregulated system. Our system in Canada is very different from that in the United States where deregulation took place almost 10 years ago in the airline industry and seven years ago in the trucking industry. What is the verdict there?

In trucking the number of motor carriers doubled although the amount of freight stayed the same. Therefore, there are twice as many people scrambling to carve up the same pie. There was a 140 per cent increase in federal highway taxes. Insurance rates soared 200 per cent to 600 per cent. Trucking accidents increased 18 per cent in one year alone as drivers attempted to out-race competitors. It is estimated that since 1980 one-third of the trucking jobs in the United States were lost owing to deregulation.

In the airline industry serious concerns have been raised frequently about safety, working conditions for employees causing more stress for pilots and others, and poor route service in less profitable areas. The good news with regard to deregulation seems to be that larger centres receive somewhat less expensive services. The bad news is that smaller centres receive less service and pay more. That is the crunch for rural communities.

In order to give some background to the importance of this I will, if I may, refer again to my riding of Yukon, a place which emanates good sense in that the residents have elected both a territorial New Democratic Government and a federal New Democratic Member of Parliament.

I believe the situation in the Yukon illustrates some of the potential pitfalls in this legislation. In the Yukon there is a very fragile industrial economy characterized by high operating costs and relatively low volume. The majority of our trucking firms, for example, are small owner-operated family owned businesses. Compared to southern firms, even the larger firms are relatively small. The scenario envisaged under the proposal for deregulation could very easily lead to an economy dominated by large firms from southern Canada and potentially the United States. We share a border with Alaska, and what happens there very much affects what happens in the Yukon.

One might ask, what is the matter with this? At this point, local trucking firms are run by people who live in the Yukon. They are committed to the community, run the services in the community and even run for public office, participate in the little league and so on. They are there to stay.

Branch plant operations of trucking firms, if one can call it that, do not have this commitment. They are concerned with serving the high volume, high profit routes. Small firms will lose out. Those who are willing to provide a year-round service to rural communities will lose out because they will not be able to compete for the high volume and high profit routes.

We are particularly vulnerable in the Yukon in the summer, both through air transportation and trucking because the highest profitability is in the summer months, with tourism, mining and exploration and the transport of various goods. It is during the summer that heavy equipment and other materials can be transported. If the larger firms come in to skim off those good routes, the smaller, year-round companies will be left with the winter routes. They will not be able to survive because they must average out their profitability in the good months and winter months.

The Northern Aviation Transport Association recognized this problem and made a very impassioned plea to the committee, as did the Government of Yukon. They did receive a hearing from the committee about some of the problems these regulations would raise.

We will not have an equitable system under deregulation. The Minister may say that the problem has been addressed for the north by the inclusion of designated areas, under which my riding falls. This is quite true in the case of air carriers, but the main question for the people of Yukon is, what will happen now that we have lost the public convenience and necessity test? The Government has allowed the north the illusion of protection with its designated area, but without the committee and the appeal system of the Canadian Transport Commission, and without the public convenience and necessity test, how will the community complain about eroded service? Who will hear these complaints, and on what grounds can a successful argument be presented? What action can be taken if such an argument will be made?

As the House is well aware, my predecessor certainly has something to do with the Canadian Transport Commission. I assume that the Transport Commission is not being changed because my predecessor is the Chairman and will continue in that role, but certainly he does understand some of these issues, having been in the Yukon for many years.

Without the tried and true test of public convenience, the Government is creating great uncertainty for the people of northern Canada with this new environment based on charging as much as the market will bear. Without a policy entrenched in this Bill, which clearly states that people come first, the Government is inviting every opportunist who understands our transportation problems to hold the north up for ransom.

An obvious question arising from the issue of the designated area is: Why did the Government stop with air travel? Surely it is not suggesting that truck transport to the north is less vulnerable, or that truck transport is not every bit as important? I am certain there are many areas in Canada which should have rail transportation protected under such a scheme as well, but neither House would adopt such a common-sense extension of the air designated area, nor would they make the air designated area effective. It is deeply disappointing and makes one wonder how earnest the Government is in wanting to protect the north from this policy.

I mentioned that in the Yukon we have a very fragile industrial economy, characterized by high operating costs and relatively low volume. I have also said that the trucking firms are small and owner operated. It is a very important character of our community that people can be facilitated to become independent and remain self-sufficient through the operation of their own business.

I believe that as this legislation comes into force we will see more and more problems. While we have been given some hope as to what will happen, we have not yet seen the evidence.

I want to deviate somewhat from this subject, if I may, to say a few words about my constituency. We are fortunate in the Yukon because we have a population that, while small, includes aboriginal people whose ancestors have been in that land for over 30,000 years. We are able to benefit from that accumulated wisdom and knowledge as well as from the technology and science of other cultures. We are certainly fortunate in that respect.

In many ways, the Yukon is a microcosm of Canadian society and despite our small population, the dynamics of federal, provincial and territorial relations, of human rights and of immigration are readily seen and experienced.

I might add that in the Yukon, perhaps one of the most harsh areas of Canada, we have a number of refugees and immigrants who contribute significantly to the Yukon society and economy.

The impact of public policy in an area like this will be immediately and readily visible. Northerners are used to a struggle. The aboriginal people have a highly evolved culture and it is they who made it possible for Europeans who came to this country to survive. Today, they are struggling for a just land claims settlement.

In 1896, people seeking gold came over the Chilkoot Pass. One of my famous predecessors in the House of Commons, Martha Louise Black, was one of those who went over the Chilkoot Pass in 1896. In 1935, she became a Member of Parliament for the Yukon.

Despite the Yukon perhaps being somewhat isolated from the rest of Canada, it has certainly led the way in electing women, and now of course, in electing New Democrats.

The men and women of Yukon today, like their counterparts in the south, are really average working people who value independence and self-sufficiency. They value the lifestyle of the north and want to stay there even with the high cost of living and harsh living conditions.

We are concerned about the potential for loss of jobs through this legislation. Even the loss of a few jobs has an extremely significant impact on the economy. I think this is probably quite true in other areas of Canada as well, particularly in rural areas.

Deregulation does not meet the transport needs of this country. It will not further economic diversity. Canada's public policy has not historically been based on the survival of the fittest mentality, but rather to strengthen Canada from sea to sea to sea by encouraging a fair deal, not just for the many but for the few as well. I submit that this legislation will not do this. I urge the Government to implement a public policy that will be fair and equitable for all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1240)

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Hon. Members will join together in commending the Hon. Member for a fine maiden speech in the House of commons.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would also like to congratulate the new Member for a thoughtful speech which not only well represented her riding but certainly addressed the inconsistencies of the Bill. I would like to indicate that, as the Chief Whip of her caucus, she will be called upon to give many more speeches on behalf of the New Democratic Party. I think one could say that finally the velcro has been stripped from the lips of the Yukon.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to raise a question or make a comment. As whip of the Liberal Party, I should like to indicate simply that we have fully appreciated the comments made by the Hon. Member and that we are delighted to have her with us.

[English]

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I want to join with my colleagues in congratulating the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) for what was indeed a very fine speech. As one who some time ago had a large interest in this Bill, and spent a lot of time in committee when it was first introduced, going back to the White Paper, I must say that the Hon. Member for Yukon has summarized very eloquently and succinctly the problems which confront those Canadians who live in the more far-flung reaches of the country, those people who are dependent in a very fundamental way on transportation services. Transportation services do not come at them in a flood of varieties but they are restricted usually to one or two basic services. The Hon. Member, I think, has done the House a service, having only been here a short while, in reflecting very well the concerns of her constituents.

Coming from Newfoundland, I share those concerns. I have to say as one who has been associate transport critic for some period of time, and who was in on the ground floor when the White Paper was released by the Minister initially, and as one who travelled the country with the committee listening to Canadians from across this land, that many voices out there were not saying that deregulation was of and by itself some kind of disaster for Canada. They were saying that while we need to reregulate, to make changes to our transportation system to help it be more competitive and able to evolve in changing conditions and times, we have to maintain at the same time some measure of ability on the part of Government and regulatory agencies to ensure the best interests of Canadians.

As one who has heard that kind of testimony given by quite sincere witnesses right across the country, people who crossed all political ideologies, I am amazed that today we have a Bill before us which came back to the House with nothing more than some housekeeping, house cleaning amendments. These are technical changes to ensure that the French and English sections correspond with each other in as exact a language as possible. These are minor changes.

In making those minor changes, what kind of substantive testimony by Canadians has been ignored? That has been done in a number of fundamental areas. This Bill would change the basic nature of what was formally known as the Canadian Transport Commission which is a regulatory agency that has operated at arm's length from government since the 1960s. It is an agency which is not a Liberal agency, nor a Tory agency, nor an NDP agency. It is a group of some of Canada's finest and most committed citizens appointed to act as the agents of the people of Canada, not of a particular political philosophy. The CTC is an agency which, in the past, functioned as an echo and voice for the people of Canada, including those who live in areas such as the north. Its mandate, in acting in that capacity, was to sensitize and recommend to the Government of Canada the kind of changes necessary from time to time in transportation policy to reflect the reality of this country. It is an independent agency.

That agency has been wiped out. It is gone with the stroke of a pen. It exists no more. There is a new concept incorporated in this Bill. Rather than being independent, autonomous, recommending transportation policy to the Minister honestly without fear of losing a job, and so on, this new agency will receive policy instructions from the Government of the day.

The Government of the day will draw the map. A Minister, a few Deputy Ministers and a few colleagues from Cabinet will sit in committee and will say what is the transportation plan for Canada. They will say: "This is the transportation map for Canada. We in our cloistered, hallowed halls surrounded by our chandeliers and stained-glass windows, walking upon our rich carpets, will decide here in this truly representative realistic House what those people in the Yukon, in Come-By-Chance and Baie Comeau need in transportation policy". They will take that map and give it to their new transportation agency which will make it happen. "Let us not let the reality of this country get in the way of our particular vision of what a transportation policy ought to be", is a philosophy which has never worked in our country of 25 million people, with a land mass as great as we have and with our diversity not only in economic activity but almost in cultures. It is almost ironic because just such a model could be found in the Politburo. It is the new five-year plan which will be issued to the transportation agency. If it does not work after five years, well, governments will change and a new philosophy will be heard and a new map will be given to the transportation agency.

Any hope of objective, independent continuity in the regulation of our transportation industries is lost in this Bill. That is not only a Liberal philosophy. It is not only a Liberal concern. It is a concern the committee heard from one end of this country to another. It was heard from people as diverse in their views as labour, business, town councils, chambers of commerce, and so on.

There is very serious flaw in this Bill. It is the question of foreign ownership. Yesterday we heard from the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre), who has really become the Minister of industrial affairs, the Minister of American industrial affairs, the Minister of American, pharmaceutical, industrial affairs, the Minister of multinational American, pharmaceutical, industrial affairs. He stands in the House and in an attempt to have Canadians swallow this bitter pharmaceutical patent Bill— "pill" Bill—he tells us that the reason we are all going to pay more for drugs is that we are going to establish and develop a brand new Canadian industry in pharmaceuticals.

• (1250)

That is what he told us. He told us that it was a priority of the Government, an obsession. We were told that the Bill was not designed in Washington, is not part of the free trade talks and that we are not caving in to the Americans.

Mr. Malone: Who says?

Mr. Tobin: I ask the Hon. Member, who pays his salary? Who pays my salary? Who pays the salaries of those who toe the line of the American multinationals? I do not particularly care who says what about pharmaceuticals when their salaries are being paid by anybody other than the people of Canada.

Having given us a lecture yesterday on the importance of Canadian ownership, the Government passes today a Bill on the transportation industry. One does not have to be a genius—one does not have to be an Einstein or even a Joey Smallwood, who was next to Einstein in his brilliance—to understand that when there are 25 million in such a massive land, transportation is not a secondary concern. It is the way in which we move goods, people and engage in commerce with each other. It is critical.

But this Bill simply demands that all mergers and takeovers over $20 million and over 10 per cent of the voting shares of a Canadian transportation firm be reviewed by the Governor in Council. Anything below $20 million can just happen. In Canada, in particular Atlantic Canada, with respect to our trucking industry, for $20 million on any given day of the week one can monopolize that industry. It is not reviewable under the terms of this Bill.

Let us consider some of our other industries, for example, the airline industry and the shipping industry. When it is reviewable, what happens? It goes to the Cabinet of the day. And what is the philosophy of the Cabinet of today? It is that Canada is up for sale. This is the same Cabinet that believes that Dome ought to be purchased by an American energy giant, and just as quickly as possible. It is the same Cabinet that refuses to intervene in the sale of Dome to try to put together a Canadian solution, a Canadian package. That same Cabinet now provides us with a Bill concerning our transportation industries that has no means of ensuring an independent assessment or protection of Canadian ownership in this vital—I would argue the most vital—industry that we have in Canada.

What is the rule south of the border? What rule do the Americans set for themselves, those who would now become, by invitation, the new owners of Canada's transportation industries? What rule do they set for themselves, those who believe in the spirit of free enterprise and competition, those who sit back in their ivory towers 25 floors up surrounded by concrete, glass and steel and smoking big cigars? What rule do they set for themselves as they personify free enterprise? I will tell Hon. Members what rule. They say that 75 per cent of their airline industry must be American-owned. When the United States of America, 10 times bigger than Canada and 10 times more economically powerful than Canada, says that it is necessary to have a rule that 75 per cent of its airline industry be American-owned, by law, we in Canada pass a Bill which sets forward the belief that there is no need for us to have similar provisions.

We Canadians, as legislators, as the custodians of those things that make this country Canada, have to ask ourselves whether or not we have done our job on Bill C-18. I submit that we have not.

With respect to regional development, I talked a moment ago about Canadians always bearing in mind what a large, diverse nation this is. Too few of us have ever travelled this country. We have been to Jamaica, Barbados and Europe. But too few of us have really travelled the width and breadth of Canada. Most of us who have travelled the country have done it on an airplane. It is but a four-hour ride. We cannot even really begin to comprehend how big the country is and how different are the interests of each of its parts.

The Bill before us was born out of a White Paper on transportation. When it was born, the 10 Canadian Premiers—Premiers of Liberal persuasion, Tory persuasion and NDP persuasion—met to consider their response to the Minister's proposal. There was only one thing that those Premiers from all 10 provinces, from all three Parties, could unanimously agree to, because some wanted regulation, some did not, some wanted more and some wanted less. But one thing those Premiers agreed to—one matter in which they were unanimous—was with respect to a clause being inserted in Bill C-18 that would ensure that the deregulation objectives of the national Government would not override the regional development objectives of any of the provinces. In other words, if in a particular part of Canada special transportation arrangements had to be made as a fact of life to move people or goods, then in that particular part of Canada these new rules on deregulation would not override the regional development objective. That is what all the Premiers agreed to. They asked that that principle be cast in stone, in law, in this Bill.

The Bill we have today merely has a statement acknowledging that transportation is a key ingredient of regional development objectives. It has no provision to ensure that the regional development policies of any particular province will not be overriden by the new powers contained in it.

For a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who came to power developing and expounding the principle of his predecessor, the Hon. Member for Yellowhead (Mr. Clark), that Canada was a community of communities, that there was to be no more confrontation, that co-operation would be the watchword of this new administration, I find it passing strange that this Bill, drafted in this place with its ivory towers, fails to recognize the particular transportation needs and the ability of provincial Governments to make special provisions in parts of this country that do not suffer from an over-abundance of competitive players wanting to provide transportation services. It is not there. I think that there are Members on all sides of the House who are not happy that it is not there.

I would now like to deal with safety. We have all heard over the last number of months about the increasing number of near misses in the United States over the last number of years. We have heard about the increasing number of near misses in air transportation in this country. We know that there have been a number of disasters over the last number of years, some of which are attributable, directly or indirectly, to deregulation, and some of which are still under investigation. What we know is this. Every single objective analysis that has been done after nearly nine years of deregulation in the United States shows that safety has suffered.

What do we mean by safety? We mean training, maintenance, using aircraft and airplane parts and engines long beyond their normal lives because companies have been engaged in cut-throat competition. When one is engaged in cut-throat competition one has to save money somewhere. Contrary to what most Canadians realize, the most expensive part of flying an airplane is not taking off with a couple hundred passengers on board and landing somewhere else a few hours later. The most expensive part of an airline is training and maintenance. That is where the cuts have been made south of the border, and that is where the cuts will be made in Canada.

Last week the president of one of Canada's national airlines said that there was one airline too many in this country, so there will be a price war and one of them will have to go. When companies that are barely making money now, most of them not making money, engage in price wars, where will they make the price cuts? Cuts will not be made on the free booze that is given to passengers on the flight because that is visible. Cuts will be made on maintenance, training, and by deferring the life of an aircraft beyond its normal operating time.

This Bill does not deserve the support of the House. I hope that Members opposite will have the intestinal fortitude, the courage, and the vision to give it the boot it deserves. In Newfoundland we would say that we should pick it up by the slack of the pants and the scruff of the neck and fling it over the nearest wharf.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

WATER AND SEWAGE WORKS—ONTARIO LIFELINES PROGRAM

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in June the Ontario Government launched Lifelines, a program which will provide grants to municipalities for 33 per cent of the cost of repairs to water and sewage works.

When Ontario asked Ottawa to participate in Lifelines, it was turned down flat. At the same time the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) was announcing a $7.5 billion proposal for 10 nuclear submarines, a move questioned even by military experts.

Across the nation water and sewage treatment facilities are in need of repair. Every summer beaches are closed because of inadequate sewage services. Yet the federal Government cannot find even one thin dime, hiding behind the excuse of the deficit and the phoney argument that this is not within federal jurisdiction.

We must keep in mind that before 1984 the federal Government contributed hundreds of millions of dollars to build or maintain municipal water treatment facilities and sewer systems. We in the Official Opposition recognize this to be a national problem. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) has pledged to share the costs with provincial and municipal Governments.

Once again we urge the Government to examine its priorities—build sewers instead of subs.

THE ECONOMY

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN ADOPTING BILL C-22

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, last Friday, I called a press conference in the riding of Trois-Rivières to denounce the position taken by Liberal Senators with regard to Bill C-22. And I mentioned on that occasion, Mr. Speaker, that the Quebec National Assembly, under the Parti Québécois Government as well as the Liberal Government, has been in favour of Bill C-22 which will bring major benefits in terms of investment to Quebec and to Canada, as you know Mr. Speaker, specially in the Montreal region, where $600 million in investments and at least 1,500 new jobs are expected.

I then asked the people of Trois-Rivières to get in touch with their Senator and to state their position. Please allow me, Mr. Speaker, to read a telegram which I received on Monday:

> Just been made aware of content of senate committee report on Bill C-22. Sorry to hear that changes were proposed. Had been expecting for months a compromise which, over the next ten years, would have afforded Canada 1,4 billion in R & D funds and created 3 000 jobs. We urge you to maintain version of Bill C-22 originally proposed by House of Commons.

And it is signed by a Mr. Boisvert from Trois-Rivières. And I have received, Mr. Speaker, an impressive number of calls and telegrams from people in the riding who urge the Liberal Senators to change their views.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

DANGERS POSED BY UNITED STATES NUCLEAR REACTOR

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, Fermi II is a trouble plagued nuclear reactor in the United States, just 12 miles from parts of my riding. Over 7,000 residents of the southern part of Essex—Windsor have so far signed a petition against allowing Fermi II to operate at full power.

Why? Because the basic design of Fermi II is questionable, because the reactor has over 7,300 discrepancies between its plans and its actual construction, and because there have been dozens of breakdowns before the reactor has even reached full power operation.

Also serious evidence has been presented to the U.S. Congress of attempts to cover up these problems by the Nuclear Regulatory Agency in the United States. This is why we are pushing the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to get a neutral safety review of Fermi before any permission for full operation.

Canadians will suffer the risks; Canadians must have an equal say in reviewing this dangerous reactor.

THE ECONOMY

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN ADOPTING BILL C-22

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, 40 years from now, the majority of current Members of the House and nearly all current Senators will be dead.

Over that same period, hundreds of thousands of Canadians will die from illness.

All human beings must die; it is a law of nature. However, this eventuality can be postponed thanks to the progress of science and the quality of our scientists. We are contributing to the advance of pharmaceutical research and the development and marketing of new drugs to reduce pain and extend life when we provide incentives to our scientists, academics and workers.

Our outdated legislation to protect inventors, which goes back to 1968, prevents research activity in Canada. Our Government has decided to amend this legislation and encourage medical innovation.

However, Canadians will not be able to benefit from our Bill as long as their lives are kept hostage by a group of Whig Senators.

Mr. Speaker, the Drug Bill will provide employment for our youth, give back their health to the sick and ensure a longer and happier life for our elders. Quo usque tandem abutere patientia nostra, MacEachena?

SHIPBUILDING

HALIFAX SHIPYARD—NEED FOR GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, on August 4, 1984, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), then Leader of the Official Opposition, stated in Halifax that he fully supported and was committed to the Atlantic shipbuilding industry. Once again we have the Prime Minister saying one thing and doing another. Since 1984 the Halifax shipyard has received only $60 million in work, whereas the industry in Quebec received $750 million.

As a further insult to this Maritime industry, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. McInnes), the Hon. Member for Halifax, promised Halifax dock workers a $60 million refit program starting in November, 1987. He then reneged on his promise. He now says the work may begin in November, 1988.

Surely the people of Nova Scotia deserve more than lip-service from the Prime Minister, and certainly more clout in Cabinet than what they have been able to obtain from the obviously uninfluential Member for Halifax.

THE ECONOMY

CANADA'S GROWTH RATE BEST OF MAJOR COUNTRIES

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, have you seen the headline in today's Toronto Star? "Canada's Economy Best in the West for Growth". The Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, OECD, says the Canadian economy, which last year grew faster than the economies of every other major western country, will out-perform those others again this year.

Do you remember what OECD said before the last federal election? It said Canada's economic growth was behind that of Greece, Portugal and Turkey. Why? According to a study by the Canada West Foundation published in 1983, government economic intervention in the prior decade had severely inhibited incentives for investment.

What we needed, the study said, was a climate of stability in economic policy to restore confidence in the Government's capacity to deal with investors in good faith, and to give business some degree of certainty as a basis for rational planning decisions.

That is what we have had for the past three years under the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) Government and that is why Canada is now No. 1.

NUCLEAR ENERGY

CANDU REACTORS—RESISTANCE TO IMPLEMENTING SAFETY RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, the Fermi plant in Michigan, described by my colleague from Essex—Windsor, shows what can go wrong with ill-considered nuclear technology. Canadians are now disturbed to learn that Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. is resisting recommendations put forward by the federal regulator of the nuclear industry, the Atomic Energy Control Board.

The AECB has a number of serious and well-based concerns over the safety of Candu reactors, while AECL is anxious to restrain costs. Such differences between a regulator and a regulated industry are understandable. What is profoundly disturbing is the fact that nuclear power is a technology which is harshly unforgiving of any errors in judgment, while the too cosy relationship between AECL and the AECB has undermined effective regulatory control in the past. I urge the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) to ensure that the AECB fulfils its mandate without becoming captive to the nuclear industry.

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN ADOPTING BILL C-22

Hon. Suzanne Blais-Grenier (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, being a Member from the Montreal region I can see every day the consequences of the high rate of unemployment in Montreal. In spite of this situation a handful of Liberal Senators are making a deliberate attempt to delay the adoption of the drug patents Bill.

The Liberal Senators from Quebec are thus depriving their own province, and Montreal in particular, of a $600-odd million investment which will create between 1,200 and 1,500 jobs.

Their irresponsible behaviour threatens the Greater Montreal economic development in the state-of-the-art pharmaceutical research sector. Their action also deprives recently graduated young professionals of the skilled jobs for which they are fully qualified and thus keeps them on the unemployment rolls.

Twice the National Assembly of Quebec unanimously asked that this Bill be sanctioned as soon as possible. Though very handsomely remunerated by the taxpayers, the Liberal senators are continuing their guerilla tactics. It is a scandal, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROPOSED NEW SEA CADET TRAINING FACILITY—NEWFOUNDLAND LOCATION URGED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, the Province of Newfoundland receives the lowest per capita share of defence spending in Canada. Nova Scotia receives the highest per capita share of defence spending in Canada.

The Government of Canada is to build a new Sea Cadet training facility in Atlantic Canada. Fully 60 per cent of all Atlantic Sea Cadets come from one province, Newfoundland and Labrador.

The Department of Defence has commissioned the Halifax based firm of MacFawn and Rogers to determine where the new Sea Cadet training facility should be located. Not surprisingly, the Halifax based firm says Nova Scotia, the province that has the highest per capita defence spending.

Newfoundland, the province with the lowest per capita defence spending, is being asked to understand. I am here to report that we do understand. We understand that there is no limit to the bare-faced indecency of a Government drowning in its own pork-barrel. In Newfoundland and Labrador, this Government has gone down for the third time.

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN ADOPTING BILL C-22

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) clearly indicated that he had every intention of having Bill C-22 adopted, no matter what.

We Conservative Members of the Greater Montreal region fully agree with our Prime Minister, particularly myself since he has just written to me to pledge his unconditional support and to state that my ideas and my contribution to the efforts of this Government were unquestionably essential and highly appreciated.

We Members from Greater Montreal are waiting impatiently for the economic fall-out from the Bill to amend the legislation on drug patents.

Mr. Speaker, let us have respect for the work done by the democratically elected Members of Parliament.

DISASTERS

SUDBURY—INCO PLANT GAS LEAKAGE

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches): Mr. Speaker, yesterday sulphur trioxide leaked from an Inco plant in Sudbury and 120 members of the public who were exposed to the fumes were treated at area hospitals. I understand that one person is still being treated. Apparently Inco did not reveal the problem to environmental or other officials until people began to phone about the large cloud of clearly visible gas on the eastern edge of the city.

I urge the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) to contact Inco and the Ontario Minister of the Environment to determine why no warning was given and to ensure that environmental law is amended to require that companies give prompt warning to the general public when potentially dangerous substances have been released into the environment. It seems to me that public safety must be paramount in the way any company is allowed to operate within the community.

CONSEQUENCES OF DELAY IN ADOPTING BILL C-22

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, the whole Saguenay—Lac Saint-Jean area asks me to express its support to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) against the Grits in the House of Commons who have been thrown out of Parliament after having divided the country and sent it into bankruptcy. This time, it is on a major Bill, that the Grits now control the Senate, Bill C-22, a legislation that will generate $1.4 billion's worth of investment and create thousands of jobs, especially in Quebec.

I therefore challenge the Liberal Leader (Mr. Turner) and some of his Members from Montreal who went into hiding during the vote on Bill C-22, to start a Quebec campaign against that Bill that is highly important for the whole of Quebec.

Concerning price increases, it is also important to state, Mr. Speaker, that for the first time a Government will create a price review board to review 93 percent of drug prices that have never been reviewed before. And of course, I invite the Liberal Leader in the Senate, Mr. MacEachen, to accompany his Leader here in the House of Commons to explain to the people in Saguenay—Lac Saint Jean the reasons why they oppose that very progressive Bill.

POLITICAL PARTIES

IDENTITY OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY QUESTIONED

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, what is it with the NDP these days? Yesterday I read a news story in which Bob Rae, yuppie leader of the NDP in Ontario, refused to say whether he considers himself a socialist. Is Bob Rae, smack in the middle of an election campaign, having an identity crisis? The NDP in Ontario no longer refer to themselves as the New Democratic Party. They are now known as the "New Democrats", whatever that means.

• (1415)

The NDP are in crisis. The Party of principle has sold its soul. The Party that has prided itself on being Canada's conscience and the Party of principle is rudderless, totally adrift, and riddled with hypocrites. Its leading lights have been co-opted by a tired, faltering and cynical Tory dynasty that has gone from infancy to senility in three short years.

How else can one explain the fact that Stephen Lewis—remember Stephen Lewis—once NDP Leader in Ontario and now Canada's Ambassador to the United Nations, is one of the stoutest defenders of the Government's new refugee Bill? How else can one explain Dennis McDermott's acceptance of an ambassadorship to Ireland after being one of the Government's fiercest critics? How does one explain Ian Deans' acceptance of a $95,000 a year government job after criticizing the Government for six years?

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will, of course, remember that in Statements by Members we try to avoid naming those who are not in the House and therefore unable to respond as they would perhaps wish.

MEDICAL CARE

PRINCE ALBERT, SASK.—OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF HOME FOR MENTALLY DISABLED

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, during the last several months an organization called TEARS was formed in Prince Albert. TEARS is a group of concerned citizens in Prince Albert and district, in fact from all across the Province of Saskatchewan, who are protesting the closing of the Prince Albert North Park Centre, a home for mentally disabled people.

The name TEARS seems symbolic of the anguish and disorientation which residents and relatives of the residents are feeling about the callous approach taken by the provincial Government in dealing with these citizens.

The quality of our civilization is shown most clearly by how we treat our elderly and disabled. The hallmark of conservatism as manifest in the drug patent Bill in Ottawa, and by actions such as the closing of the Prince Albert North Park Centre in Saskatchewan, indicates a denigration of that care.

TEARS is an appeal to us all to be more compassionate, and particularly to the Devine Government in Saskatchewan to have a care for the people who cannot care for themselves.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BILL C-22—OPPORTUNITY TO OBTAIN EXPERTS' OPINIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a few questions for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Since the Government is incapable of winning the battle on the drug patents Bill by giving us the facts, it is trying to win with false statements.

The fact is that the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party would guarantee hundreds of jobs in Montreal, while the Government is promising jobs without any guarantee at all.

The fact is that the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party would guarantee lower prices for drugs than the legislation proposed by the Government.

The fact is that all the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party would advance the cause of both consumers and research.

All the reasons given by the Prime Minister yesterday are false.

Can the Minister name a single independent expert who says that the Bill proposed by the Government is better for consumers and researchers than the amendments proposed by the Liberal Party and supported by the Eastman Report?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Liberal Party stands. I have a memo to all Liberal caucus members from the Member of Parliament from Cape Breton—East Richmond, dated August 18. It has a lot of falsehoods in it but one statement is true. It says in the final paragraph:

> The gist of the amendments are, of course, a four year period of exclusivity (which amounts to retaining the status quo since generic companies take at least four years to come on to the market).

• (1420)

In other words, in their own communications, the members of the Liberal Party privately admit that what the Senate has done is restore the status quo which saw Canada's performance in research and development go downhill from what it was, and not develop. It saw the Hoffman-LaRoche plant in Montreal close and the Smith Kline and French plant close in Toronto.

Everyone in the scientific community, certainly in Montreal, but everywhere else in the country, has recognized that this Bill is vitally important to provide jobs for the graduates of their universities and to provide economic opportunities in this important area. The Liberal Party, those from Quebec, are the only ones I know who are denying that fact.

NOBEL PRIZE WINNER'S VIEWS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the proposals of the Senate duplicate the proposals we have made in the House of Commons. They are directly in line with the recommendations of the Eastman Report.

I ask the Minister to stick to the facts and all the authorities that he cites to support them. Yesterday he claimed once again that Dr. John Polanyi opposed the Liberal amendment, in the House and in the Senate. We checked again with Dr. Polanyi yesterday and this morning. Dr. Polanyi, of course, favours research in Canada, but he takes no view whatsoever as to the relative merits between the Government's proposition and the proposal of the Liberal opposition.

Why did the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs present a false proposition to the House, citing in his favour Dr. John Polanyi when Dr. Polanyi took no position whatsoever?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I quoted Dr. Polanyi on the CBC program Morningside with Peter Gzowski, where he said: "A country that says in essence we will rely on others to do our research, which does not provide the patent protection for research and development, is equivalent to a burglar". Those were Dr. Polanyi's words on CBC radio. I will send the quote.

I have a quote from another expect, Dr. Michel Chrétien, the brother of someone known to the Opposition leader, who says:

[Translation]

> We should ask that Bill C-22 be passed immediately in its original form. This legislation strikes the right balance between the interests of the consumer and those of the innovating companies. As a highly industrialized country, Canada has a duty to protect intellectual property and to promote research.

[English]

We concur.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think the most generous thing I can say to that reply is that the Minister is reaching a bit.

VALIDITY OF SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-22

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday that Liberal Senators have no right whatsoever to change House of Commons legislation. The fact is that not one Conservative Senator voted against the Bill in the Senate. They all abstained or walked out.

To return to the facts, the fact is that today, in the House of Commons, the Minister of Transport has accepted nine amendments proposed by the Senate on the legislation affecting national transportation. Why is the Senate entitled to propose amendments in one case and not entitled to propose amendments in another case? Why does one Minister take a constructive view and another Minister take a hard rock, absolutely rigid approach to legislation in the parliamentary process? Furthermore—

Mr. McDermid: Speech, speech.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am trying to get equal time with the Minister. Why does the Minister not cut out the hypocrisy? Why does he not accept a reasonable compromise suggested by Dr. Eastman which would guarantee research and jobs and yet put a lid on drug prices in this country?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, his own critic for Consumer and Corporate Affairs acknowledges in this memo that was sent to all members of the Liberal caucus—I presume the Leader got one as well—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1425)

Mr. Andre: I am sorry I jumped to conclusions there. He acknowledged that what the Senate had done was essentially to establish the 1969 status quo. When the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was Chairman of Sandoz, a pharmaceutical company, he acknowledged that that was unacceptable.

The Right Hon. Leader talks about listening to Dr. Eastman. Why does he not check to see what Dr. Eastman said before the Senate committee, before the House of Commons committee? He said he thought that Bill C-22 was a good compromise between the various interests and would produce the kinds of research we are looking for, and that he was confident the Drug Prices Review Board would be effective in keeping down prices for consumers.

Mr. Gauthier: You are out to lunch, Harvie.

Mr. Andre: Why does the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition not listen to what Dr. Eastman is saying about this Bill?

THE CONSTITUTION

MEECH LAKE ACCORD—EQUALITY RIGHTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Every major national women's group in Canada has expressed serious concern that in the Meech Lake Accord, as presently drafted, the distinct society clause may threaten the sexual equality rights that women fought for and achieved in 1981. Yesterday the Prime Minister adopted a suggestion that these concerns, which were based on legal advice, were a cover for what the Prime Minister called the real motives of these groups, which was to deny Quebec explicit recognition as a distinct society.

How can the Prime Minister accuse groups like the National Action Committee, whose President is a Quebecer, of veiled racism against Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I would want, Mr. Speaker, that comment to be withdrawn. I accused no one of racism, veiled or unveiled. I make that accusation at no time against anyone. I would ask my hon. friend to reflect upon it, given the seriousness of that accusation and its falsehood, and no doubt he will want to withdraw it.

With regard to the matter raised, I invite my hon. friend, rather than refer to, perhaps, reports in the papers, to look at the transcript. The transcript says in reference to a response I gave to a question:

> You can be certain that there is nothing in the Meech Lake Accord—

Mr. Lapierre: We believe you!

Mr. Mulroney:

> You can be certain that there is nothing in the Meech Lake Accord that in any way diminishes the rights of women—

Some Hon. Members: We believe you!

Mr. Mulroney: I have been asked an important question and the Liberals don't want an answer.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask all Hon. Members to give the Right Hon. Prime Minister the courtesy of listening to his reply.

Mr. Mulroney:

> You can be certain that there is nothing in the Meech Lake Accord that in any way diminishes the rights of women or anyone else.
> What the Meech Lake Accord did was to strengthen Canada. And I urge you to take a look at a column by Lysiane Gagnon yesterday who was pointing out her concern at the number of people who are using that argument because they are opposed to a distinct society. That is her view. And she is an experienced observer and defender of women's rights, and an award-winning columnist. And her view is that a lot of people are using that as a Trojan horse, not because they're trying to protect women's rights, but because they don't want the distinct society and the Meech Lake Accord. And I urge you to read it. It's a very thoughtful piece that some of whose judgments I share.

That was the comment I made which strikes me as being very straightforward—

Mr. Tobin: What a slippery answer.

Mr. Mulroney: —and in no way is involved with racism.

Mr. Tobin: He stick handles better than Gretzky.

Mr. Mulroney: I know my hon. friend, who has been very good in dealing with racism elsewhere in Canada, with the support of all Parties, will want to withdraw any reference to racism involving me.

COLUMNIST'S COMMENTS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): We can settle it fairly quickly. I have the Lysiane Gagnon article in front of me. She suggests that the women were motivated by hypocrisy and that they were opposed to the distinct society in Quebec, and that that was their reason for rejecting the characterization of the equality provisions.

Let me simply ask the Prime Minister to dissociate himself from that suggestion and to accept that the women's groups that are coming forward, whether he agrees with them or not, are at least coming forward in good faith and not motivated as hypocrites as Lysiane Gagnon suggests in her article?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said: "You can be certain that there is nothing in the Meech Lake Accord that in anyway diminishes the rights of women or anyone else. What the Meech Lake Accord did was to strengthen Canada." I understood that was the position of the Liberal Party because the Right Hon. Leader of the Liberal Party rose in this House and indicated he supported it on behalf of all Members of Parliament.

Mr. Tobin: Are you going to apologize to the women or not?

Mr. Mulroney: If that is still the position of the Liberal Party, I think that would be very welcome.

Mr. Tobin: Dig yourself in deeper.

Mr. Mulroney: Madam Gagnon is more than entitled to her opinion.

Mr. Nunziata: Have some integrity for a change.

Mr. Kaplan: Do you agree with her?

• (1430)

Mr. Mulroney: My hon. friend has not in any way fairly characterized her opinion. I will just read the last line of her opinion.

[Translation]

"Our defenders on the other side of the Ottawa River can cool their outrage. Since the first to be concerned are the very last to feel threatened, they had better find other reasons for objecting to the recognition of Quebec's distinct society." Ms. Gagnon is saying that the women of Quebec do not need to be told how to protect the most important rights we have in Canada and Quebec.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BILL C-22—EFFECT ON RANITIDINE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. On a number of occasions the Minister stated that the Bill on drug patents will benefit Canadian consumers, that the result will be fair to Canadians, and that the generic drugs now on the market will always be available. If all this is true, can the Minister explain why the drug Ranitidine, which costs 25 per cent less than the original product, will be withdrawn from the market as a result of the retroactive clause of Bill C-22?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member is talking about the so-called pipeline drugs which were sort of caught between old rules and new rules. Those were made public on June 27, on which day they were made effective. So there is not the retroactivity about which the Hon. Member talks.

In dealing with his preamble about the effects on consumers, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member that 93 per cent of drugs in number, 80 per cent by value, have no generic competitors. Those drugs now form a monopoly and are priced accordingly. Traditionally, their prices have been rising higher than the cost of living over the last few years. The Drug Prices Review Board will be in place and mandated by law to keep those price increases at less than the cost of living. Thus for the first time we will have those drugs for which there is no generic competitor being held down in terms of price increases by the Drug Prices Review Board.

If one examines that objectively, and I do not know whether or not that is in the capability of the Hon. Member's Party, one will see that, in fact, there is significant benefit to consumers from that fact. I do not understand why it is so difficult—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Walkerville.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I do not understand why it is so difficult for the Minister to fail so utterly and so consistently to answer any question addressed to him.

AVAILABILITY OF GENERIC DRUGS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase my question and put it to the Minister again. Will the Minister explain how it is better and how it is fair for Canadians that dozens of generic drugs, many of them held up merely by the slow processes in the Health Protection Branch, and many of which lack notices of compliance, will not be available to Canadians? Why will the Minister not accept amendments to his legislation which would make available those drugs that are presently on the market or in the pipeline by deleting the retroactive phraseology in his legislation?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when the Government announced on June 27 its intentions effective June 27, by what logic does one conclude that this is retroactive? I fail to comprehend on what basis the Hon. Member could keep making this statement about retroactivity.

The question of how to treat the so-called pipeline drugs, those that are in the Health and Welfare approval procedures, represents an enormous compromise in discussions between generic companies, brand-name companies, the provincial Governments, drug plans and so on. I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting we drop the safety standards that now exist and put on the market drugs that could be potentially dangerous. He seems to be implying that. A compromise was arrived at after months and months of discussions and negotiations, to be effective June 27. In no way is that retroactive. It is eminently fair to consumers, to the innovators and to generic companies.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the Minister has in mind, having recommended to one drug company that it stockpile its ingredients so that it can circumvent his own legislation.

SENATE AMENDMENTS TO BILL C-22

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, again my question is directed to the same Minister. Will he not at least look at the Senate amendments which would eliminate retroactivity, and perhaps even explore with his bosses in Washington this very small sop to the interests of Canadians rather than the interests of Americans and their drug companies?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is Mr. Fingerhutt, the consultant in Washington who sits on the NDP strategy committee, who must be advising the Hon. Member to make these crazy suggestions.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Is that his real name?

Mr. Andre: Fingerhutt is his name—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Minister is formulating a reply and I would ask him to make that reply as quickly as possible.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, as I have said repeatedly, there are all kinds of conflicting interests, obviously, when one deals with a subject of this complexity. There were months and months and months of negotiations and discussions, not just with generics or brand-names, not just with Washington consultants—

Mr. McCurdy: Or presidents!

Mr. Andre: —but with a research committee. When people such as Dr. Michel Chrétien, who is Scientific Director and Chief of the Institute of Clinical Research at Montreal, and eminent scientists of that capability say that this is vitally important to the future of their institutes and health research in Canada, and when we see young scientists like the one who developed this promising new vaccine for AIDS—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Some Hon. Members: More!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Jacques.

ADVISABILITY TO ADOPT AMENDMENT TO CREATE JOBS IN QUEBEC

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on the same subject. Yesterday we witnessed a sad spectacle when the Prime Minister distorted reality in an attempt to make Canadians believe that the Liberal Party is against the creation of jobs in Quebec by drug manufacturing multinational companies. Quite the contrary, it so happens that some of the amendments we advocate are aimed at forcing foreign multinational drug companies to do research in Canada to create jobs. My question is this: Why would the Government reject an amendment to Bill C-22 which would guarantee new jobs by forcing these foreign multinationals to carry out research and development here in Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should think that all Quebecers, including Montrealers, are convinced that it is due to the filibustering of a handful of Liberal senators who are standing in the way of 1,300 new jobs and investments of $700 million. It is a source of deep concern to all Quebecers, all Montrealers. This morning I received a telegram from Montreal Mayor Jean Doré who states that any delay or any amendment to this Bill will have a devastating impact on Montreal and on Canada's economic development in that sector. Now, since my friend is a Montreal member and since Montreal is urgently asking that jobs be created as soon as possible, we have before us a Bill whose effect will be to create 1,300 new jobs in Montreal and inject investments of $700 million in the greater metropolitan area. I think this is good news for Montreal and Quebec. Please, tell the Senators that enough is enough. Get on the Montreal economic recovery Conservative bandwagon.

REQUEST FOR GUARANTEES

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Saint-Jacques): Mr. Speaker, we will go one step further than the Mayor of Montreal, who wants jobs to be created in the pharmaceutical industry. We demand guarantees that these jobs will be created. We are doing so, Mr. Speaker, because we are as sceptical of the promises of foreign multinationals as we are of those made by the Conservative Party.

Why does the Government, which claims that it wants the multinationals to do research and development here in Canada, why is that Government against legislating measures that would guarantee this would happen and that would oblige the companies to engage in research and development in this country?

Why don't you practise what you preach?

• (1440)

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a national Government must take a variety of measures designed to generate national growth in all regions of the country.

I know my hon. friend, who represents a constituency in Montreal, will be very pleased with the headline in today's Toronto Star on an OECD report which states: "Canada's Economy Best in the West for Growth".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Right Hon. Prime Minister is aware that we have a rule about exhibiting newspapers, or other things that may be used to support a statement. I know that the Right Hon. Prime Minister will continue the answer without waving the newspaper around.

Mr. Mulroney: I did not think that there would be any objection from the Liberals. It was a quote from The Toronto Star.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Right Hon. Prime Minister will accept that it was an objection from the Chair.

Mr. Mulroney: With good grace and alacrity, Mr. Speaker.

The report of the OECD would be of great interest to my hon. friend. It states:

> The buoyant Canadian economy, which last year grew at a faster rate than the economies of every other major Western country, will outperform the others again this year, the OECD predicts.

That is good news for Canada. One of the problems that we have in Canada, and debated in the House, is the fact that the tremendous growth and job creation experienced in Canada are uneven in their application. Newfoundland does not share as equitably as southern Ontario in this type of growth. We must equalize the opportunities. One of the ways to do this, for example, in Montreal, and in Quebec, is to attract the $700 million worth of investment and 1,300 new jobs that will be created in the R and D sector.

FINANCE

THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES' DEBTS TO CANADIAN BANKS—LOSS OF TAX REVENUE FOR GOVERNMENT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Finance.

The Toronto Dominion Bank announced it had signed an agreement with the Government to cover the debts of the Third World at a cost of $450 million in lost taxes.

Could the Minister indicate to the House what will be the total cost in lost taxes from all Canadian banks as a result of this agreement?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer precisely what the total tax implications will be. The tax situation of each bank is different. Each has different foreign tax credits, and each has different taxable rates of income.

I can tell the Hon. Member that in the committee that he and I served on a year and a half ago, he argued for outright forgiveness. If there was outright forgiveness of these debts, the tax deferral would be permanent and much, much larger.

Mr. Langdon: The Minister knows that what I argued for was a Canadian initiative for an international conference to see to it that international action was taken on this issue.

POSSIBLE EFFECT ON INTEREST RATES CHARGED BY CHARTED BANKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Since the Minister could not answer the previous question, I would like to ask him this.

Now that this tax break has helped the banks out of part of their problem, what steps will the Government take to see to it that the banks do not raise interest rates and service charges so that their customers pay for the rest of the costs of these suspect debts?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Finance)): The answer to that question was given on December 18. We have put in place a policy which will allow trust companies, insurance companies, and other financial institutions to compete head-to-head with banks on commercial and consumer credit. This new policy will give an injection of competition to the economy that previously the banks did not have.

PROFITS OF DRUG MANUFACTURING COMPANIES

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister will know that profits for the pharmaceutical industry were among the highest of all Canadian industries from 1968 to 1982. At the present time they are higher than those in Japan, Germany, Britain, France, and Switzerland.

Why is the Prime Minister pushing a Bill that will make profits in Canada even higher than those in the United States, which has the most expensive pharmaceuticals in the western world? Why is the Prime Minister putting profits before the health of the Canadian people?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if a company makes a net profit after sales of $2 million and invests $1 million in research, the profit declared is $1 million. If the company does no research, it declares $2 million profit.

Through this Act we are attempting to make it attractive for all companies, those already established and new companies attempting to become established in Canada, to invest these funds in research and development and generate thousands of jobs in Montreal, Toronto, Calgary, Nova Scotia, and everywhere around the country. We are tired of seeing our young university graduates in the health sciences and biotechnologies going elsewhere in the world in order to pursue their careers.

RESEARCH WORK—REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF GUARANTEES IN LEGISLATION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. The Minister will know that, as demonstrated repeatedly in committee, and in the House, the present legislation has no guarantees for research and development, and no guarantees for jobs in this country.

If the Government is concerned about the cures for illnesses such as cancer, why does it not have those guarantees in the legislation to ensure that research for these diseases will stay in Canada? Does the Minister not understand that thousands of Canadians want research and development, but they want the Government to provide good public policy, and to have guarantees that multinational corporations and generic companies do their research in Canada?

When will the Minister act for consumers in Canada as opposed to the multinational corporations?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, everybody involved in creativity and research understands that when an investment is made in research there must be some period of time after the discovery is patented to recover the investment, otherwise it makes no sense. The Hon. Member would have us pass a law that says "Industry shall discover a cure for cancer. But, if you do, do not expect us to patent it, and do not expect to get a period of exclusivity. Invest your money, but we reserve the right to have somebody duplicate your research results immediately."

NATIONAL DEFENCE

PROJECTED COST OF ACQUIRING NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday the Minister responded to a question raised about the cost of nuclear submarines. The authority quoted was Jane's Fighting Ships. The amount quoted was $12 billion or $13 billion for the submarines which we were to acquire.

• (1450)

I know that in London today the 1987 version of Jane's Fighting Ships was published. I wonder whether the Minister has had an opportunity to look at it. Could he tell us what Jane's Fighting Ships now believes the cost of our nuclear submarine program to be?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have had a chance to take a look at the foreword to the current issue of Jane's Fighting Ships.

It refers to a cost of $7.5 billion to $8 billion, and it says that this looks like a bargain. Further it says that the decision to purchase the submarines represents a radical and welcome break with past Canadian naval policies.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I think I just heard an echo in here.

CANADIAN SECURITY INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

SURVEILLANCE OF MAGAZINE PUBLISHERS

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the most recent annual report of SIRC stated that CSIS is abusing its sweeping powers and is spying on far too many Canadians, including targeting a group that publishes a left wing magazine in Canada. The Minister's response to this is to set up another review committee to review the work of the review committee.

In view of SIRC's attack on this targeting of a group which publishes a magazine in Canada, will the Minister explain to Canadians why CSIS improperly targeted this group? Which magazine did it publish? Was it the United Church Observer, or what was it? Will the Minister immediately order CSIS to stop this offensive spying, this assault on freedom of speech in Canada?

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I trust the Hon. Member is not accusing the United Church of Canada of being left wing. In any event, I would like to correct the Hon. Member. The committee I set up is not a review committee.

If the Hon. Member will read the release I issued at the time I set up the committee, he will see that I said that indeed we were accepting the concerns and recommendations of SIRC. The Osbaldeston committee is to give me an action plan to implement the recommendations and concerns as expressed by them, particularly with respect to counter-subversion, the very concern raised by the Hon. Member.

ALLEGED SURVEILLANCE OF UNION MOVEMENT IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. SIRC said to stop spying on this magazine, and I would like to ask the Minister to respond to that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same minister. Apparently, the CSIS has targeted not only leftist newspapers in Canada, but also the labour movement in Quebec.

Could the Minister clarify the role played by Mr. Marc Boivin, a former CNTU adviser in Quebec? Was Mr. Boivin an informer or secret agent for the CSIS and, in the affirmative, how could the Minister justify such a scandalous attack against a democratic organization in Quebec?

[English]

Hon. James Kelleher (Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I presume he did not hear the answer I gave earlier in the House a month or so ago in which I advised that we do not nor is it within the mandate of CSIS to target a union. It never has been and it never will be.

We do target individuals, and that we must do under our particular mandate.

Whether or not Mr. Boivin is an agent, I think Mr. Boivin has publicly discussed that himself. The case is presently before the courts, and I do not think I should comment on it at this time for that reason.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

STUDY PREPARED BY FORMER DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIAL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He has been flailing around in the House in the last week or two claiming that the new legislation he is proposing will increase jobs in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I am glad his own Members believe him, because nobody else does. The fact of the matter is—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure Hon. Members realize that the hour is late. It would be helpful if questions were direct and answers were a little shorter.

Mr. Axworthy: I would like to ask the Minister about a study which was recently published by Mr. Roy Davidson, the former Senior Economic Adviser of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the former Director of Research for the Combines Investigation Branch. He pointed out that in the period in which Canada had compulsory licensing, the net increase in employment was 29 per cent. In the same period in the United States, which had the monopoly system the Minister is advocating, job creation was only 23 per cent, a net loss of 6 per cent compared with what we had under the present system.

Taking that kind of verifiable evidence provided by a distinguished former economic analyst of his own Department, how does he put that kind of evidence against the spurious claims which the Minister and the multinationals are making to show that there will be job creation, when in fact we will be facing job losses?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have gone over the investments in some detail before the committee. I am glad to send them over to the Hon. Member.

We already have commitments of over $900 million—specific investments in specific places, including the University of Manitoba. There are people who will be employed at the University of Manitoba working on research, and trying to find cures for Alzheimer, cancer, multiple sclerosis, and all other diseases.

Why does the Hon. Member feel that is unworthy of support?

Mr. Axworthy: The last time the Minister made that claim the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers' Association had not heard of the same commitments he is talking about.

OWNERSHIP OF PATENTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg—Fort Garry): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question about another distinguished source, the Economic Council of Canada. In its report it pointed out very clearly that 95 per cent of all patents held in this area are held by non-Canadians.

Why is he promoting legislation which will give advantages to non-Canadians rather than following the advice of the Economic Council of Canada which recommended the royalty system, as we have recommended, or a co-venturing system? Why has the Government avoided that recommendation of the Economic Council of Canada and gone with the clear and unmistakable demands of the American Government and the American multinationals?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right that our performance in terms of patenting new discoveries, and so on, in Canada does not stand up very well. That is because there has not been research going on in Canada and because we have not had the patent laws to make it worth while for people to invest in Canada. That is what we are trying to cure. The Hon. Member said—

Mr. Axworthy: The Economic Council of Canada says, not the Hon. Member.

Mr. Andre: Why does the Hon. Member have so little faith in Canadian scientists?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF COMMUNICATING WITH SENATORS WITHOUT PAYING POSTAGE

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs who is also responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. It deals with the Patent Act. Because of the powerlessness of the Liberal leader, thousands of Canadians will die sooner, some chronic patients will never get well, and some senior citizens will no longer be able to afford effective drugs. As Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation, is the Minister prepared to authorize Canada Post employees to accept free of charge the many representations made by the old, the sick, the chronically ill, to the Liberal the whigs in the Senate, all those who will not be able to take part in the demonstration scheduled for the Senate next Tuesday on Parliament Hill? They need to be able to contact senators free of charge. Does the minister agree with this?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his question. As all Hon. Members are certainly aware, no stamp is required to send a letter to a senator. I hope that as soon as Bill C-22 is adopted, a drug will be found to cure the pitiful state of the Liberals!

NATURAL RESOURCES

ALUMINUM COMPANY'S APPLICATION TO USE MORE WATER FROM NECHAKO RIVER IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Over the next 11 days the Aluminum Company of Canada Ltd. will attempt to reach a private settlement with the federal Government to take more water out of the Nechako River, which contributes 40 per cent of the flow of the Fraser River, at Prince George, than federal scientists feel is safe. Since this development is of enormous importance to communities throughout British Columbia, will the Prime Minister add his support for a public inquiry into this major development to ensure that federal constitutional powers are protected and that the development occurs for the full benefit of all water users in British Columbia?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I accompanied the Minister of Fisheries last week-end on a journey throughout the Nechako watershed and also the Morice River system which would be involved in the expansion program. I can assure the Hon. Member it is the Minister's desire to negotiate with the company to make sure the interests of which he speaks are protected. Scientists from both parties are meeting this week to see what can be worked out to make absolutely certain that the interests of which the Hon. Member speaks are protected. That is the Government's concern.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have to address my supplementary to the Prime Minister because I want to know whether or not he endorses on behalf of the Government a public process? This is due to the fact that the Minister directly responsible, the Minister of Fisheries, is on holidays until September 7. The negotiating window expires on August 31. Since all three federal political Parties in the Northwest in 1984 endorsed a full public inquiry, do he and his Government endorse and support a process which involves the public, something which the present Speaker held high in British Columbia?

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not on holiday.

Mr. Fulton: I confirmed it with his office.

Mr. Oberle: Both parties are desirous of extending the process which expires on August 31 to make possible the kind of thing he is talking about, namely, the meeting of scientists to reach an accommodation and a negotiating process between the parties.

Mr. Fulton: What about the public?

Mr. Oberle: To be fair, in western Canada Alcan is known as perhaps the best corporate citizen we have. It is very active in his riding and it would be helpful if the Hon. Member checked with the Kitimat Chamber of Commerce to see how they feel.

Mr. Speaker: I would advise Hon. Members that we will hear from the Hon. Member for York West and that will be the last two questions of Question Period.

IMMIGRATION

BILL C-84—POSITION OF AMBASSADOR TO UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Immigration. Despite statements by the Minister in the House yesterday, the Canadian Ambassador to the UN, Stephen Lewis, has refused to categorically endorse Bill C-84 in its present form. To quote from his statement outside the House yesterday: "It would be very uncomfortable for me as Ambassador to the United Nations to be in a situation where our own legislation was in any way out of sync with conventions that we have."

Our Ambassador to the UN will eventually have to promote and defend Bill C-84. He has also refused to endorse the legislation unequivocally. Therefore, does the Minister not agree that amendments to the Bill are absolutely necessary if the Government and its ambassador are in harmony on our policy, rather than sending a conflicting, confusing and embarrassing message?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, Ambassador Lewis is not a Member of this House. Clearly what we have heard Canadians say is: "Stop the abuse. Stop the racketeering". What this House has done is send to committee a refugee determination process that will provide a speedy, fair and just determination which will allow access to real refugees.

The purpose of the other Bill, which is also in committee, is to preserve for persons in genuine need of protection access to a procedure for determining refugee claims. It is to deter the smuggling of persons into Canada. It is to respond to security concerns and, of course—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should try to answer the question asked rather than one that was not asked.

POSSIBLE ACCEPTANCE OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Prime Minister. Every single witness appearing in front of the committee studying the legislation urged the Government to move on amendments. Canada's own Ambassador to the UN has refused to support Bill C-84 emphatically as it stands. Therefore, will he concede that amendments are required to enable our ambassador to defend freely Canadian policy without reservation or embarrassment? If he is not prepared to accept amendments, what instructions or ultimatums has he given the ambassador—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Immigration)): Mr. Speaker, both Bills, which are amendments to the Immigration Act, are now before a legislative committee. While we never said anything was cast in stone, we believe the principles set forth will do just what we want to do. They will stop the abuse, stop the racketeering, and provide an open determination system for everyone in need of our protection.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, can the Government House Leader give us a statement concerning government business? In particular, is the Government ready to call Bill C-71, the Bill dealing with war crimes, which arises out of the Deschênes report, once debate is completed on Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 which the House will deal with now?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to that. I am prepared to call Bill C-71 this afternoon right after we pass Bill C-19.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, I am certainly pleased to hear the Government House Leader's assurances that he intends to call Bill C-71 for second reading this afternoon. We in the NDP, in view of the history and urgency of this matter, are prepared to consent to having this Bill go through the House in all stages this afternoon.

At this point I would like to seek unanimous consent in order to proceed with this legislation in that manner.

Mr. Mazankowski: I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is assuming the role of House Leader for his Party. These things are normally discussed amongst House Leaders and I will be prepared to talk about that.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I repeat that at this point I am seeking unanimous consent of the House to proceed with this important legislation in all stages today.

Mr. Prud'homme: You are not the House Leader.

Mr. Lapierre: Mind your own business.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, we are not even on that particular legislation. The order of business is Bill C-19. There have been no discussions with his House Leader or his Acting House Leader. The Hon. Member is up to his old tactics of grandstanding, and I am not sure whether he speaks for his Party because on previous occasions he took one position and the rest of his Party took another.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MOTOR VEHICLE TRANSPORT ACT, 1986

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (for the Minister of Transport) moved the second reading of, and concurrence in, amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-19, an Act respecting motor vehicle transport by extra-provincial undertakings.

Mr. Darryl L. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity again to speak on Bill C-19, which we have discussed in the past along with Bill C-18. It is memorable that, after so much consultation and so much work by all the House committees involved, we have finally reached a consensus on the National Transportation Act, something which will be good for Canadians in general.

• (1510)

Time and again throughout this lengthy process, the Government has demonstrated the necessary flexibility to develop and modify the economic reforms mentioned in Bill C-19. Indeed, some amendments were made when the House standing committee examined the Bill last spring.

Without going further, I would like to congratulate the Standing Committee on Transport, its Chairman and all members of the committee from all sides of the House who worked so diligently with the provinces and all people concerned with our transportation system. We must remember that there are consumers, shippers and carriers involved in the transportation system and we have responded to the needs of those people.

The transition period during which economic regulation will be phased out was extended from three years to five years, that is, to January 1, 1993. The provinces have generally been relaxing economic controls on the industry for some time, so this gradual approach to change is already well under way.

The extension of the transition period will give truckers well over a decade to adjust to a less regulated environment. Some shippers feel that this is too long to wait. The Government, however, has also listened to the provinces and the trucking industry. A five-year transition represents a reasonable balance of opinions as well as a consensus among the provinces that will be implementing the reforms.

In response to uneasiness expressed by a few provinces concerning the final step to fitness only, Bill C-19 now includes a provision to study the effect of reform in the fourth year of the transition phase which will be 1991. The Government is confident that this study will not show serious problems, but if it does, the Governor in Council can extend the transition period.

When the Standing Senate Committee on Transport and Communications recently conducted its own independent review of the Bill, Senators felt that certain concerns were not adequately addressed in the Bill. Again, we were most cordial and conciliatory to these views, and in fact we recommended and accepted certain amendments that were proposed by the Senate.

I would like to take this opportunity to explain briefly these new amendments that will be brought forth in Bill C-19. First, the wording of Clause 8(5), paragraph (b), has been clarified and now obliges provincial transport boards to have regard to any statement of public transportation policy issued by the Governor in Council after consultation by the Minister with the Government of each province affected thereby.

Second, a new subclause has been added to Clause 34 which requires the Minister to table a copy of the four-year review in each House of Parliament within 15 sitting days of his acceptance of the completed report.

Finally, a new Clause 35 has been added which essentially requires that a review similar to the four-year review be conducted at the end of each year from 1988 to 1993. These annual reviews must contain motor vehicle accident statistics as well as a progress report on the implementation of the National Safety Code. Again, the Minister will be obliged to table these reports in each House of Parliament.

As all Hon. Members can see, these amendments in no way detract from the essence of this Bill. Indeed, they enhance the measures that have been taken. Very close attention has been paid to the safe implementation of the economic reforms that Bill C-19 proposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe at the same time that under Bill C-19 and Bill C-18—this is provided in those acts, those pieces of legislation—security is a high priority for this Government, for us, all Members in this House and also for other Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, it is essential that in every Canadian transportation mode safety be guaranteed. And this is what we have included in those two Bills, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

For the trucking industry, the federal and provincial Governments and industry representatives have co-operated to produce a uniform National Safety Code. In March, the federal and provincial Governments reached an agreement on implementation and cost sharing, which was subsequently incorporated into the Bill. The code now has a concrete existence. All Governments are committed to implementing it. Key components will be in place in federal regulations when this Bill comes into force on January 1, 1988.

The Government of Canada has agreed to assist in funding development and implementation of the standard Canada-wide National Safety Code to a maximum of $23.5 million over the next five years. The National Safety Code will form the basis of safety regulations in the future. You know as well as I do, Mr. Speaker—

[Translation]

—whether we come from one of the 10 provinces, from the Northwest Territories, Newfoundland, western Canada, British Columbia, or the northern part of the Northwest Territories and Yukon, it is important for us to have a safety code for our transportation system in Canada.

[English]

Several key elements of the code will be included in the federal safety regulations. The detailed standards for these regulations will be finalized by the end of this month. Hence, once this Bill is passed, federal regulations setting out safety requirements for both trucks and buses will be in place well before the move from reverse onus to fitness only in January of 1993.

Furthermore, Parliament will be provided with a mechanism for knowing what is going on in the key areas of extra-provincial motor vehicle safety and highway accidents. While available evidence indicates that there is no causal link between economic regulatory reform and safety, many believe there is a connection. The preparation of these reports will dispel any fears that the Parliament of Canada is proceeding with economic regulatory reform of this important transportation industry without first putting in place a mechanism which will enable it to monitor the situation over the next few years.

This should not be misconstrued to mean that we have no highway safety at this time. Canada has an excellent safety record but we are determined to improve it. We already have a fine regime of safety regulations in each of the provinces and territories. Indeed, a number of the elements of the new safety code are already in place in one or more provinces. There will be improvements made to the safety standards in provincial regulations, some of which will be ready by January of 1988 and the remainder of which will be ready by mid-1989.

The provinces have made a commitment in consultation with the federal Government, with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and especially with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) to have enforcement resources in place by the end of 1989 in order to police these improvements. The improvements that will exist in the new safety code and Bill C-19 include, first, a safety requirement for obtaining an operating licence. For the first time in legislation, all applicants for extra-provincial trucking licences will have to meet tough safety standards. Second, we will have uniform safety requirements for all extra-provincial traffic among the provinces. In the past we have had different codes and different regulations in each province. We are bringing all of Canada together. Third, we will have a national enforcement scheme based on company and individual driver safety deficiency records which will be available to all provinces. Fourth, we will have annual reports tabled in both Houses of Parliament reporting on trends in extra-provincial motor vehicle accidents and on progress in implementing rules and standards governing the safe operation of extra-provincial undertakings.

• (1520)

Economic regulatory reform includes the most effective enforcement tool, the linking of safety compliance with an operating licence. Furthermore, implementation of the Motor Vehicle Transport Act on January 1, 1988, will maintain pressure on the provinces to meet the implementation forecast for the safety code.

Bills C-18 and C-19 are of the utmost importance to our country. We began creating them, not in the last two or three weeks but over a number of years. It has taken in excess of 20 years to revamp our National Transportation Act.

I speak as the representative of my riding, Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine, but also for all Canadians when I say that due to the Canadian geography we must create a system of transportation for the shippers, carriers and consumers that is reliable. Regardless of what the Opposition says, safety will never be compromised. We cannot use isolated examples of what has happened in Africa, Europe or the United States. Millions of Canadians have travelled on our highways, our trains and our airplanes. We have an impeccable record.

The Opposition may say that this legislation is bad but, Mr. Speaker, it is good. As the Vice-Chairman of the Transport Committee, as a Member of Parliament, and as a Canadian, I sincerely believe that Bill C-18 dealing with our trucking industry and Bill C-19 dealing with economic regulatory reform will be good.

The Government has attempted to develop a balanced package of reforms which removes obstacles to the growth of our economy and trade with the rest of the world. Over-all, I believe that Bills C-19 and C-18 represent a balance for all concerned; our shippers and carriers and their employees, consumers, air travellers and others in every region of Canada.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words in the debate on the motion to support the amendments that were sent to us by the Senate. Once more, amendments made by the Canadian Senate to a Bill have been found in order by the Government. I commend the Hon. Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) for accepting on behalf of the Government, on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) those amendments from the Canadian Senate.

It is therefore clear that the Canadian Senate, which has a role to play in the same way as the House of Commons in discussing and accepting or proposing provisions to a Bill, is doing its work. In this instance, the Senate found it useful and worthwhile to improve Bill C-19, and this is why we support the motion to accept the amendments made by the Canadian Senate in the area of trucking by extra-provincial firms. I can say immediately that we accept these amendments. We find it quite appropriate for the Canadian Senate to propose occasionally amendments to legislation which was first considered in the House of Commons. I can only repeat how sorry I am that the flexibility shown by the Minister of Transport in accepting the amendments proposed by the Senate to the Bills sponsored by himself or his Parliamentary Secretary (Mr. Thacker) is not shared by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Andre). I do not understand why one Minister would find amendments from the Senate acceptable while another says that the Senate is overstepping its authority by proposing amendments to Bill C-22. What is good for Bill C-19 could be just as good for Bill C-22, and I find it strange that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs would refuse to consider such amendments.

In any event, I would like to say that, on the substance of this Bill, the Liberal Party of Canada has been critical right from the start because we believe that the Conservative Government, inspired by a free competition theory which has serious weaknesses, and inspired even more by its desire to reduce the costs of the Canadian transport system, is now destroying the regulatory basis of the Canadian trucking industry.

Basically, the Conservative philosophy seems to be that the Canadian transport industry should catch up with the deregulation which has already taken place in the United States. Unfortunately, the Conservative position on transport deregulation virtually ignores the harmful effects of American-type deregulation on the Canadian trucking industry, and most important, the transport cost increases which will fall on Canadian manufacturers, who will thus lose some of their competitivity on the market as they will have to transfer these higher costs to consumers.

The Canadian Trucking Association states in its presentation to the Standing Committee on Transport that deregulation has clearly contributed in the United States to an increase in competition and shipping costs and to a decrease in productivity, reflecting a deterioration of the financial position of the trucking industry and an increase in the cost of transporting goods.

If there is one thing that the deregulation of the trucking industry in the United States has taught us, it is that there can be no compensatory rates on the basis of service in the trucking industry. On the one hand, we have seen a proliferation of full-load carriers, and on the other, a strong concentration of large, long-haul carriers. The losers are the regional and inter-regional carriers who have mixed loads and provide long distance services.

Moreover, the trucking industry is not alone to suffer from deregulation in the United States. Smaller manufacturing businesses unable to ship large quantities over long distances, which would allow them to benefit from the discounts offered by the carriers, must pay higher prices to compensate the lower rate given to those who ship goods in large quantities.

As we can see, the principle that large shippers pay less and small shippers pay more has serious consequences on all businesses, and not only on carriers already established in Canada. It is quite possible that deregulation in Canada will remove the value of operating licenses in financial statements. As many Canadian carriers use the value of their license as security for credit from the banks, the value of their business will disappear with that of their operating license. All Canadian trucking firms will find it ever more difficult to borrow money and, without Government assistance, they will not be able to compete successfully with the major American carriers.

Unlike the Conservative Government, the Liberal Party is not in favour of deregulating the trucking industry. We said so when the White Paper entitled Freedom to Move was tabled, we said the same thing when Bill C-19 came up for second reading here in the House and when is was scrutinized by the Committee on Transport, a parliamentary committee of the House of Commons which heard representations from various groups and people interested in trucking in Canada. We repeated the same thing at the time that, if the Conservative Government was really intent on seeing this deregulation project through, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to take the opportunity of his Budget presentation to do something to help trucking firms be at least on an equal footing with the major American carriers to be in a position to compete with them.

Sad to say, the Minister of Finance unveiled his tax reform, but he did not say a word about this very important question of the support he might have given Canadian truckers. Indeed, American truckers are way ahead in their country if we compare them with our trucking firms and the tax situation they are faced with here in Canada.

We in the Liberal Party recommended introducing a compensation mechanism in the form of a tax rebate for the trucking industry, so that shippers would be compensated for the drop in value of an operating licence issued under current rules of access.

When a company is not in good shape and is near bankruptcy, this artificial value diminishes and the guarantee ceases to exist. When this happens, the banks, as we know very well, call in their loans. If the companies were compensated in the form of a kind of tax relief that would correspond to this depreciation of their assests, Canadian shippers could at least survive. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance failed to take this into consideration. Today, now that we have reached the last stage in adopting Bill C-19, it is clear the U.S. trucking companies will have an unfair advantage when they come to compete with Canadian companies.

Deregulating the trucking industry means that we are opening the door to American trucking companies who will come here and take a lucrative market away from Canadian companies. They already have tax benefits. They pay a lot less for their gas in the United States than we do in Canada, and in many cases, wages and working conditions in the United States are less attractive than in Canada. We have always wondered why the Conservative Government insisted on dismantling a system that, on the whole, has provided stable employment in the trucking industry in Canada, and why it wanted to get rid of something that is working quite well in this country. We have a competitive trucking industry that meets Canada's needs and the needs of all Canadians. Thousands of workers earn a decent living in our trucking industry. To satisfy certain specific economic interests of big shippers, and for the sake of deregulation at any cost, the Conservative Government is about to seriously undermine a prosperous Canadian industry to promote competition that will come almost exclusively from big trucking companies in the United States. We find this most unfortunate.

But there is more. In addition to the threat that Canadian trucking companies will be swallowed up by U.S. companies, there is also the highway safety factor.

• (1530)

[English]

Transportation is different from most commercial activity. A fundamental difference dictating reaction to commercial forces is that the product, which in this case is a service, has no shelf life whatsoever. If a trucker has a load from point A to point B, and he has to get back to point A, absorbing costs associated with that return move, he can be persuaded under hyper-competitive conditions to back-haul traffic at an extremely depressed rate to cover his out of pocket expenses. That is a sensible market decision for the mode.

It has inevitable long term consequences, as one can imagine. Multiply that by thousands of truckers, all competing to some extent in each other's market-places, with one's man head-haul being another man's back-haul, and there is a potential for destructive competition, at least until a massive shake-up spends itself.

Therein lies the connection to highway safety. The independent trucker, in particular, faced with payments on his rig, expensive maintenance bills, or that atrocious insurance premium, has no alternative if he is to survive in the short term but to ignore hours of service restrictions if he can find another load, or defer maintenance as long as his truck will move. It is these attributes of hyper-competition that result in a deteriorating safety record in association with deregulation, in the absence of an effective and adequately enforced safety regime.

This is exactly what took place in the United States. It has become very clear that after some years of deregulation of the trucking industry in the United States, this phenomenom has now become a very serious problem there.

We in the Liberal Party who have been discussing this Bill have told the Government to be careful, to examine the experiment in the United States and to ensure that what is happening there will not happen in Canada. In doing that, we did not take it out of our minds. It was not done in abstraction.

• (1540)

We have looked at the experiment in the United States. We have studied it and have listened to some experts who have written on the subject. I would like to quote Mr. Nicholas Glaskowsky who wrote a very important essay entitled "Effects of Deregulation on Motor Carriers". This essay has been prepared for the ENO Foundation in the United States. We should take a very close look at what he said because I think it is certainly important, on the eve of deregulating the trucking industry in Canada, to see whether or not it was a useful and appropriate experiment in the United States. Mr. Glaskowsky states:

> Depending on the model, a new over-the-road tractor today costs about $80,000, give or take a few thousand. That is a lot of money. A dozen of them—with a few spare tires thrown in—cost about a million dollars. A motor carrier strapped for cash in an intensely competitive deregulated environment has got to consider alternatives to equipment replacement. The only realistic alternative is to keep and operate the equipment longer before replacing it.
> The necessary concomitant to using older tractors and trailers is that they need more maintenance. But, maintenance costs money. And, worse from the standpoint of safety, some types of maintenance can be deferred. In fact, a great deal of maintenance can be deferred, the only limitation being a non-functioning item that literally prevents the vehicle from being driven.
> After five years of deregulation three trends are fairly clear: (1) the equipment fleet of the motor carrier industry is aging, (2) a lot of maintenance (expense) is being deferred, and (3) the motor carrier accident rate is increasing.
> Part of the cause of the increasing accident rate is probably due to the use of many more less experienced drivers by new entrants and non-union firms. The cause and effect relationship between good and poor drivers on the one hand, and properly and improperly maintained equipment on the other, is fuzzy, but clearly exists. For example, an experienced and careful driver may be able to handle a tractor-trailer with brakes he has "taken up," if he "takes it easy," whereas a poor and/or inexperienced driver would stand a good chance of having an accident if he drove that same rig.
> There is no question but that the motor carrier equipment fleet is aging. There is also no question as to the cause of this. It is lack of money for the purchase of new equipment.

I am sorry?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please! The reaction of the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) is understandable.

To the best of my knowledge in such instances, Hon. Members have 20 minutes to speak and 10 minutes for questions. I shall have this confirmed and come back to the Hon. Member. You have had unlimited time in the case of Bill C-18, if I am not mistaken.

However, to my recollection, the Hon. Member was allotted unlimited time in that case by resolution of the House.

At any rate, I shall grant the Hon. Member the time requested, but I believe that in this case 20 minutes plus 10 minutes apply.

I shall come back to the Hon. Member shortly.

[English]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, if you think I cannot speak for a longer period of time, I will shorten my intervention.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In any case, to settle the issue—

[English]

—I do not think there will be any opposition. I am sure the House will agree to give some more time to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) to complete his speech—I am sure that he will not take unreasonable time, in any case, as he never does.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ouellet: I thank Hon. Members for allowing me to complete my remarks. I will not abuse their good disposition and will speed up my remarks.

I was citing Mr. Glaskowsky who was describing the situation in the United States. I will continue:

> There is no reason to believe that this trend will lessen in the foreseeable future. Indeed, there is every rational reason to believe that it will continue and may even get worse.
> Maintenance, especially preventive maintenance, can do much to keep older equipment safely in use. Carried to an extreme, it probably can overcome all or nearly all of the safety concerns involved. But, such a maintenance-practice extreme is also extremely costly. And that's the problem. The cost/profit squeeze brought about by deregulation affects mostly those carriers who can afford it the least in regard to aging equipment and the associated need for greater maintenance expense. One state (California) attributes an increase in its accident rate to the safety related effects of deregulation.

What is happening in the United States will inevitably happen in Canada. It is true that California, after the deregulation of its trucking industry, has decided to reregulate because of the level of accidents. It is interesting to note what is happening in California. Based on its experience with complete state deregulation, complementing its regulations, they are now deciding to redeem the situation by reintroducing a form of rate regulation. I hope we will not have to go through this terrible process in Canada, to deregulate, to destabilize the Canadian trucking industry, to create a number of accidents on the road and the loss of good jobs for Canadian workers to the detriment of American workers, because quite clearly, what will happen, as has been predicted by the industry, is that there will be excessive concentration of the trucking industry in Canada. Every time there is concentration of ownership, there are mergers of firms. The very first people who are affected by these mergers are the workers, employees of these companies who are losing their jobs. The process is always the same. One merges two companies and then one tries to streamline the operation and improve the efficiency and productivity of the two new companies. In the process, inevitably there are a number of employees who lose their jobs. We will see this happening in the trucking industry in Canada.

More important, the Canadian trucking industry has told us that what will happen is that it will not be able to sustain the competition of some major American trucking companies and will lose some of its market, some of its more productive and financially viable routes. This is a danger which is very real. I think deregulation in Canada will create this situation. If the Conservative Government goes ahead irrespective of the advice it is receiving, we will then be forced to do like the Californian people and reregulate after a bad experiment.

We have been saying all along that we should not do it. Let us put the proper safeguards in the legislation in order to ensure that we are doing it right. If we are able to take advantage of the experience of others, let us take it, and let us do it right in Canada in the first place. Both the Canadian Trucking Association and the Ontario Trucking Association have made representation to the Canadian Government to implement the deregulation process the right way.

One matter which has been outlined to the Government and which it has not been taking care of, something which I regret very much, is with respect to the safety gap that exists in Bill C-19. A balkanized approach to safety has developed. This has created an extremely dangerous situation. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie) has indicated that the national safety code is to be phased in between 1988 and 1990. Moreover, the Minister of Transport has stated that the main elements of the national safety code will be in place by January 1, 1989.

For the period between January 1, 1988, which is the proposed date of the regulatory change, and January 1, 1989, there will be inadequate safeguards to irresponsible and unsafe trucking operations. This is quite clear. The deficiency there is important and should have been addressed by Ministers but it was literally refused every time we brought it to their attention.

[Translation]

The Quebec Trucking Association also made representations on Bill C-19. I would like to briefly quote from them.

"Let us now review the situation. The Government wants to deregulate on January 1, 1988; yet there is no indication that we would have in place a standardized road safety code throughout Canada before 1990 or even 1991.

"Each province interprets in its own way its role in that area, and there is no central leadership other than a pious wish to arrive at a uniform code some day in the future.

"Imagine what could happen if anyone can enter trucking without any ability and qualification tests, without rules and without any regulatory process to protect the public interest, on matters of vehicle safety for instance.

"What we cannot understand is why this Government wants at all costs to travel a road the Americans already are starting to steer away from. Looking at what is going on in United States under deregulation, we find it led to increased road accidents, increased bankruptcies, concentration in the hands of a few large corporations that conquered new markets through price discrimination and unfair practices."

We share the same view exactly. We believe that this measure to deregulate trucking in Canada has been put together hastily. Without the required mechanism for adequate safety, we cannot understand that this Government wants to deregulate trucking immediately without at the same time putting in place a national road safety code.

Each time we have asked the Minister of Transport whether he could guarantee that a highway safety code will be implemented throughout Canada, he has told us that he has received the assurance that the provinces will co-operate. However, he has never been able to give us a clear and specific commitment that a uniform national code will be implemented in all the provinces. We are therefore about to deregulate the trucking industry with no proper guarantees.

We are about to deregulate our trucking industry in exactly the same way as the Americans did, without proper guarantees, and I must say that we are running the same risks as in the United States of disastrous consequences because of an increased number of highway accidents caused by massive deregulation. I have no hesitation in saying that, because of the indifference of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Crosbie), we shall have the same problems on Canadian highways in a few months or years because of this massive, ill-prepared and ill-orchestrated deregulation imposed by the Conservative Government.

[English]

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is always interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Papineau (Mr. Ouellet) talk about deregulation. He does a very effective job of explaining his position and all the ills that go along with deregulation. As I said in an earlier debate, it is interesting to hear a former Liberal cabinet Minister take that line since it was his seatmate, a former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), who was really the father of deregulation in Canada. He started us down the road, the track, the flight path of deregulation. There is no question that that is the case.

It is interesting to see that members of the Liberal Party when in opposition combine with the New Democrats to fight such legislation, legislation which I suspect they would have introduced were they the Government today. It reminds me of another piece of legislation, one which we will probably be dealing with tomorrow, Bill C-22. A former Liberal Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, Judy Erola, was looking at legislation very similar to what the Conservatives have brought forward with respect to changing the Patent Act as far as it affects generic drugs. Ms. Erola is now the chief spokesperson for the large American-based pharmaceutical companies in Canada. She is their chief lobbyist and was speaking on their behalf on The Journal last night. It is interesting to hear how the Liberals say one thing when in opposition and yet the very actions they take when in government are similar to the actions now being taken by the Conservative Government.

Politics aside, I would like to speak about the Bill. I believe that both Bill C-18 and Bill C-19 are dangerous for all Canadians. Deregulation will be an important step to the destruction of a safe and reliable transportation network in this nation. We will be sacrificing service, safety, reliability, job security and Canadian control of our transportation industry.

During the past week both the Hon. Member for Papineau and myself have asked questions of the Government regarding near-misses and accidents which have caused the deaths of people in the United States. I believe that the near-misses and, perhaps, the devastating destructive death-causing crash of an airliner earlier this week were a direct result of deregulation. I think we must recognize that with deregulation, with the competition to stay in business, with cost-cutting measures and the reduction of people working on maintenance, we are running the risk of creating a situation in which we will have more near-misses and more accidents causing death, not only in our skies but along our tracks and on our roads.

I come from a riding which encompasses a great part of northern Manitoba. There are large distances between communities in my riding and people often fly in small planes from one place to another. There have been derailments and people have died as a result of truck accidents along our roads. I recognize that deregulation will create an even greater risk to people living in isolated communities, people living in the north, people who rely on a deregulated industry in which competition will be fierce and in which safety will be sacrificed.

There are already concerns in our nation with regard to the quality of air safety. At the present time there are many small companies involved in providing transportation services to remote communities, and there are a large number of accidents, many of which are caused by poor maintenance records. Many of those accidents are caused by keeping pilots in the air too long, overloading flights to realize as much profit as possible, and not adequately seating passengers. At the present time that is the history. Going into a mode of deregulation will only escalate the whole problem and the threat to the safety of Canadians.

Looking at the history of deregulation in the United States, there has been a reduction in the service to some small communities, and some that are not so small, for example, cities of 10,000, 15,000, 20,000, and 30,000. A situation is created whereby many of the companies want to do the profitable runs between Chicago-Detroit, Detroit-New York, and Seattle—New York. Many companies in Canada will want to do the runs between Toronto-Vancouver, Winnipeg-Vancouver, and Toronto-Montreal. The companies will be less interested in serving Timmins, Thompson, Prince Albert, and the other small communities. In the United States that has certainly been the experience. Companies know there are a large number of passengers on certain runs between cities with large populations, and they will either cut their services to smaller communities, or drastically reduce them.

The people in those smaller communities will suddenly discover that the flight that used to take off at 8.30 a.m. now takes off at 5 a.m. or 6 a.m., and that that is the only flight which leaves that community. In order to use the equipment for a longer period of time, air transportation becomes completely inconvenient to the people in smaller communities. I have already experienced that happening with the amalgamation of PWA and CP, and the management arrangements that are taking place with other small companies. The service is more inconvenient, the equipment is smaller, less comfortable, and obviously slower. This is already happening with the threat of deregulation. When deregulation becomes a fact, more problems will be created.

The other aspect that concerns me with the general concept of deregulation is that the number of carriers in this country is decreasing. When the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Transport, and this legislation was first discussed, there were a number of small, independent operators. Now PWA and CP have amalgamated and that new firm has formed management arrangements with other carriers. Air Canada has also made similar arrangements with other small carriers.

Over the last four years, instead of having competition there has been a drastic reduction in the number of carriers and independent operators. Two weeks ago, CAI, the amalgamation of CP and PWA, bought out 45 per cent of Calm Air International Ltd., a small carrier that services the people of my riding.

We are not developing a free enterprise, competitive sense in the country. The larger corporations are having complete domination. There is less service, and less competition, as a result of a Bill which is supposed to be called deregulation, and which the Government has stated will result in more competition. That simply is not happening in the area of air traffic. In the long run, I suspect that it will not happen with rail or truck transportation. In the short term, especially in the trucking industry, perhaps there will be more carriers. In the long term, we will suffer, as the Americans have, and there will be a reduction of service and in the number of carriers available to do the work.

The last area that I wish to deal with in the general concept of deregulation, before I deal specifically with Bill C-19, is its effect on job security. All of us in the House recognize that we are facing a pending rail strike, depending on the outcome of the conciliation talks presently taking place. The main issue is not salaries. For that matter, salaries seem to be a very minor issue in the rail talks. What is at stake is job security, and the insistence of the rail lines that they be able to contract out work that is presently done by their employees.

The reason given by CP and CN for contracting out the work, and taking away the job security of the present employees, is that they expect to be facing more and more competition in the trucking industry. Much of that trucking competition will come from American firms. In this country we are facing a strike as a direct result of the whole area of deregulation, and the legislation that will be passed in the House later today.

Employees in the rail industry may have reasonable salaries, and in the past they may have had job security. It is completely unacceptable for the employees to have their jobs threatened because the Government has a political agenda which states that we must go into deregulation and for some reason open up our trucking industry to Americans. It will not benefit Canadians to be in a situation where the owners of our trucking firms are based in Memphis. It will not help Canadians to pay taxes if the truck drivers are from Tennessee. It will not help Canadian municipalities to raise taxes if the operations are not based in their own communities. It will not help the Province of Manitoba, which has a large trucking industry, if the trucks are based in Minneapolis. That will be the result of the legislation before us.

Perhaps as a result of the desire of the Government to come to some arrangement with the Americans on the free trade talks we will open up our doors to American firms in this transportation Bill. Yet, the Americans will not open up that same door to Canadian truckers. In the United States in the trucking industry, we cannot do what this legislation will allow Americans to do in Canada. The immigration rules and policies in the United States prevent Canadian truckers from operating in the same manner as this legislation will allow and encourage Americans, to take Canadian jobs. That is the truth. We have not heard any government Member deny that that is the truth.

As I have listed them, my concerns deal with the fact that we are giving up service, safety, reliability, job security, and Canadian control and ownership of the transportation industry.

As has been done with the oil industry and the mining industry, in the long run we will find that 80 per cent, 85 per cent, or 90 per cent of the transportation industry will not be Canadian, but will be owned offshore or in the United States. That is the history of the development of Canada in the case of so many of our resource industries, and our other industries.

Transportation has been one of the areas where Canadian control and ownership has remained. We have built up a proud tradition which has resulted in the employment of Canadians. We have built up a tradition which has resulted in servicing and maintenance being done in Canada. We have built up a tradition where the jobs, purchasing, and taxes have remained in this nation.

This is not so in every case. We know that CN has occasionally bought its tracks elsewhere and that CP, in terms of shipping, has quite often flown flags other than the Canadian flag. However, the bulk of the jobs and the bulk of the wealth have stayed in this country because we have had a regulated industry. With all its problems, its inconveniences, and the bureaucracy attached to it, we still managed to maintain Canadian control and to ensure that the industry operated for the benefit of Canadians.

It is interesting to note that the amendments before us at the present time are minor ones. The Government has accepted them, but basically the amendments say that we must keep some statistics on what might happen with regard to accidents in the trucking industry as a result of deregulation. That is nice and commendable and I congratulate Members of the Senate for managing to get them passed. Similar amendments were previously suggested in the House of Commons, but at that time the Government did not accept them. All they are saying is that they will keep a record and that the record will be made available to the House of Commons. They are hardly major amendments which will convince members of the New Democratic caucus to support the legislation, because its basic intent will ruin our transportation industry.

In terms of my own riding I find it upsetting that they have not said, with regard to the trucking industry, that the north should be treated differently. In the case of air transportation, we have recognized that in part of the north we really cannot expect to have a free enterprise system with 15 or 16 operators, each with one plane, no mechanics and no hangars. We recognized it for northern parts of the country, but we have not recognized it in terms of the trucking industry. We are creating a situation where there may not be adequate maintenance, garages, and trained mechanics in smaller communities. Basically we could see fly-by-night operators who come in, take the business, last for a year or two, and close.

It is interesting that that is actually happening—and it is not only a threat to people in northern Canada—in the United States with a much larger population. The number of carriers hauling less than a full load has not decreased as a result of deregulation in the United States. In fact, the reverse is true, because bankruptcies and takeovers have increased the number of general freight companies. It seems that what has happened is that with deregulation the competition is cut-throat. A business lasts for a year or two and provides a fairly cheap service, but in the long run it cannot pay its bills with the banks, do the maintenance, or provide the service necessary to maintain contracts. As a result it goes into bankruptcy and finds itself a victim of takeover.

With the American experience of less competition and worse air safety, why are we going that way? It does not make sense. We know that it will be a threat to the lives and to the safety of Canadians. At present we are being told by CP and CN that it will be a threat to the jobs of Canadians. Why are we doing it? It will not be to the advantage of Canadians. Obviously it is because of a political dogma which is unacceptable to the nation.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief comment to make following the remarks of my NDP friend. At the beginning of his remarks he indicated that he thought it was peculiar to see the Liberals adopting a different position now than the one they adopted while in Government.

I remind him—and the public was listening to us—that in this case, like in many other cases, there is a fundamental difference between the three political Parties. In relation to deregulation of the Canadian transportation industry, Conservative government Members are massively for immediate deregulation at all cost. At the other extreme, NDP Members are vehemently opposed to any deregulation at any cost. All along members of the Liberal Party have said, while in government and now in opposition, that we favour some deregulation, flexibility in the regulations which allow better competition and help the shipping and manufacturing industries of Canada to be in a better position to compete world-wide.

At the outset we said that we favoured some deregulation. In fact, the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy), brought about partial deregulation in the airline industry which resulted in reductions in ticket prices; fares have been lowered thanks to these efforts.

At the same time as we were favouring some deregulation, we always said that there must be appropriate guarantees in the legislation to protect the jobs of workers in the transportation industry, to make abundantly clear that safety would not be compromised, and to ensure that an industry which is predominantly Canadian would continue to be Canadian.

We certainly oppose the Conservative Bill because we do not see these safeguards in the legislation. This is why we think the regulations contemplated by the Conservatives are so fundamentally wrong.

We are in the middle position. We have the Conservatives who will do it hurriedly, at any cost, and take many risks. On the other hand, we have the frozen New Democrats who are afraid of change. I do not think that position is appropriate either. I much prefer the Liberal position, which is in the middle and will be helpful both to workers in the transportation industry and the shippers who want a better deal.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I must admit that the Hon. Member for Papineau spoke like a true Liberal; he wants to have it both ways.

Mr. Ouellet: The right way, not both ways.

Mr. Murphy: The far right way, there is no question about that.

Let me refer to the history of the last two years of Liberal administration. As the Hon. Member mentioned, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry was the Minister of Transport and was certainly on the road to massive deregulation. It was not just the matter of a slight difference, that they would do a bit more for safety or to maintain Canadian control. They conducted a series of hearings across the nation in which they pointed out that they were going for deregulation, with a few exceptions, and that they were opening up the air to all sorts of new companies. That is what they bragged about. If we look back at the speeches of the former Minister of Transport and what Liberal government Members were saying across the nation, we must recognize that the Conservative Government is doing in an exaggerated form what the Liberal Government was doing.

That is the truth, and Canadians know it. They remember the speeches and the massive press promotional kits which that Government put out. It was certainly good at that; it talked about deregulation and called it deregulation. Do not pretend it is anything different now.

• (1620)

The Hon. Member also said we have a rigid position. That is not true. When the former Minister of Transport, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry set up hearings on deregulation, we said there was a need to change the system. For the air and trucking industries, we promoted ideas which we thought would enhance not only competition in some areas but also service to other areas. Let me just give one quick example because obviously I cannot go through our whole policy paper of four years ago right now.

We said that if the Government wanted to open up competition on east-west routes and increase the number of flights between Toronto and Vancouver, those carriers would also have some obligation to maintain north-south flights so that smaller communities would still receive service. If a new carrier came in, there had to be guarantees that they provide a certain level of service and maintenance. They, too, would share part of the responsibility to make sure smaller communities still received service. We had some ideas which we thought would have increased competition but at the same time guaranteed a level of safe service across this land.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 66, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia)—Environmental Affairs—Acid rain—Effect on lakes in eastern Canada—Request that Prime Minister press economic arguments with United States President; the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi)—Refugees—Terms of proposed legislation—Punitive measures; the Hon. Member for York East (Mr. Redway)—National Parole Board—Request for changes to parole system.

CRIMINAL CODE, IMMIGRATION ACT, 1976 AND CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Hnatyshyn that Bill C-71, an Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Immigration Act, 1976 and the Citizenship Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. Ray Hnatyshyn (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to once again rise in debate on Bill C-71. As I said on June 30, the Government views passage of this legislation as an essential step both in correcting historical wrongs and in reforming our laws to ensure that Canada can never be considered to be a safe haven for war criminals or those who have committed crimes against humanity. Further, the law shall apply whether those acts were committed in the past, today, or in the future.

As you know, consideration of the legislation was interrupted on June 30 by adjournment of the House, pursuant to Standing Order. Unfortunately, unanimous consent to extend the sitting to complete second reading of the Bill was not granted. I indicated at that time it would be an early priority of the Government to resume the debate when the House returned and I am pleased to be able to fulfil that commitment today.

In the interim one other significant event occurred. Following the tabling of the report of the Deschênes Commission and the Government's comprehensive response earlier this year, I indicated an additional study undertaken at the request of the commission would be made public. That study, entitled "Nazi War Criminals in Canada: The Historical Policy Setting from the 1940s to the Present" was submitted to the Deschênes Commission by Ms. Alti Rodal and, along with the other information assembled by the commission, was considered by Mr. Justice Deschênes in developing his findings and recommendations. In turn the Government provided both its detailed policy response to those findings and the recommendations and presented the legislation we are now debating here today.

Although the Rodal report contained no new information beyond that considered by the commission of inquiry, the Government believed the report contained useful contextual information and it was made public following a review by the Privy Council Office to ensure conformity with the statutory requirements of the Access to Information Act and the Privacy Act.

The report speaks for itself. It traces the development of issues and policies in the past. It speaks of what is sometimes not a proud history but what is nonetheless history. It is not my intention to debate the policies and practices of past Governments. That task must fall to those who made those decisions or instituted those policies. It is up to those who are responsible to take responsibility for their acts or omissions. My task, and one from which this Government has never shied away, whether in establishing the commission of inquiry, responding to its findings, or bringing forward legislation and taking action on case files as recommended by Mr. Justice Deschênes, is to face the problem before us today. That is, to reform our laws and ensure that justice is done with respect to suspected war criminals.

Bill C-71 is a critical element in that task. It will give us the tools required to undertake prosecutions where warranted and will bring about important changes to our immigration and citizenship laws to ensure that the errors or oversights of the past are not repeated. Canadians expect their Government to undertake every step consistent with the principles of Canadian justice and the spirit of fairness and equity that is woven throughout the fabric of our nation and its institutions. Those principles are fundamental to our made in Canada policy response and they are an obligation we shall not shirk.

There is one other observation I feel compelled to make before dealing with the substantive provisions of the legislation. We must make every effort to ensure that in our zeal to bring war criminals and those who have committed crimes against humanity to justice, we do not overlook the requirements of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and of the requirements of natural justice. I am often pressed by the media, groups and individuals, and generally by those interested in individual cases, for information with respect to the identity or whereabouts of suspected war criminals, or about the disposition of specific files turned over to the Government by the Deschênes Commission. In all good conscience, and in my capacity as Attorney General, I cannot and will not do anything that would serve to reveal information which might serve to jeopardize the right of any Canadian citizen or person resident in Canada to a fair trial. Furthermore, where there is no evidence to support prosecution or where Mr. Justice Deschênes recommended that files be closed, it is not my desire to submit persons to a form of trial by media. The requirements of Canadian justice will apply equally to all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the support which this Bill has already received, not only from Members of Parliament but also from the Canadian public, shows just how important it is.

I intend to speak mostly about the amendments proposed to the Criminal Code, but I shall also give an outline of the parts of the Bill which propose related amendments to the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act. These amendments complement those dealing with other immigration issues which have already been introduced in this House. By proposing these amendments today, the Government is living up to its commitment to respond quickly to the Deschênes Report.

[English]

The same is true of the amendments proposed to the Citizenship Act. My colleague, the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Crombie), recently issued a comprehensive discussion paper on citizenship, setting out in broad terms the areas to be considered for legislative review.

• (1630)

This is a complex matter from a legal perspective involving not only Canadian law but also principles of international law. However, I believe that the purpose of this Bill can be summarized more simply. It is that we as Canadians will not allow this country to be a haven for those persons who have committed acts or omissions which are rightly condemned throughout the civilized world.

The purpose of this Bill is to confer jurisdiction upon the courts of Canada so that the criminal law can be exercised in a manner consistent with international law and the principles of our Criminal Code. I make no apology for the somewhat intricate nature of the proposals the Government has brought before the House. They are necessary if we are to address not only those wrongs which have already occurred but also those which sadly will take place in the future.

This Bill is retrospective rather than retroactive. The acts or omissions encompassed in the definitions of war crimes and crimes against humanity have long been regarded as criminal by the community of nations. It is important to note that the military tribunal at Nuremburg reconfirmed the prior existence of these offences as have other courts since then. This Bill recognizes this fact and therefore would confer jurisdiction upon such cases.

I think it is important to stress that only offences which were known both to international law and to Canadian law at the time when such offences were committed will be brought before the courts. There will be no new offences created or applied retroactively to past acts or omissions, something which would be rightly viewed by Canadians and courts alike as repugnant to our concept of justice. Similarly, the proposed amendments to the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act would not have retroactive application for the same reasons.

This important point is underscored by reference to the words of Mr. Justice Deschênes who said:

> We are not aiming to make acts, which were deemed innocent when committed, criminal now; such would be unacceptable retroactivity. But extermination of a civilian population, for instance, was already as much criminal in 1940 as it would be today, under the laws of all so-called civilized nations. We are only trying to establish now in Canada a forum where those suspected of having committed such offences may be tried, if found in Canada.

However, I should point out to the House that international law is evolutionary and has changed over time. The definitions of war crimes and crimes against humanity reflect this. In the past, Canada has amended its laws in order to conform to its international obligations. Often these amendments have also recognized the increasing acceptance in international law of the principle of according universal jurisdiction to the national courts in respect of internationally acknowledged offences.

The proposals in this Bill are made in this tradition and have been designed to respect international principles of jurisdiction with regard to any particular time period. Canada will conduct its prosecutions under the new amendments in accordance with international law.

While we must always be vigilant to ensure that the law and its application are fair, this is perhaps an instance where we must be particularly scrupulous. For this reason, the Bill contains provisions that the accused will be entitled to the full range of defences available under the laws of Canada or under international law at the time of the conduct in question and at the time of the trial. This will of course include the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In this way, it will be clear to everyone that while Canada condemns and will act against war crimes and crimes against humanity, this country will only proceed in a just and equitable fashion. I believe that in acting against historic evils, we are at the same time preserving historic rights.

[Translation]

It should be noted as well, Mr. Speaker, that the Bill contains a provision whereby a defendant can be convicted even if the offence was committed to obey orders or pursuant to the law in force at the time and in the place of its commission. I think that all members of this House and even all Canadians find it necessary to ensure that some people do not avoid prosecutions by maintaining that the act or omission they are charged with were legal in the place of their commission. In case of "war crimes" and "crimes against humanity", international law must have precedence over domestic law.

[English]

As the report of Mr. Justice Deschênes has already emphasized, the offences addressed by this Bill inevitably raise considerable emotions. The urgency the Government attaches to the enactment of this Bill recognizes the necessity of treating the problem as dispassionately, justly and expeditiously as possible in order to reassure all Canadians and to prevent intemperate individual action. I believe that this view is shared by my hon. friends opposite and I commend them for the support for this Bill which they have already shown. I am sure they will work with us to ensure that the proposals are not delayed. I am also most encouraged by the attitude of those groups which had legal standing before the Deschênes Commission.

The Bill also recognizes the need for prosecutions not to be undertaken lightly nor solely in response to the understandable pressure that offences of this horrible magnitude inevitably create. For this reason, proceedings will only be commenced after the personal written consent of the Attorney General or Deputy Attorney General of Canada has been given. It is proposed that the proceedings will only be conducted by the Attorney General of Canada or instructed counsel. This is in accordance with the recommendations of Mr. Justice Deschênes.

I have already referred to the evolutionary nature of international law. The restriction on the right to prosecute also carries with it the responsibility to ensure that any action is in conformity with the treaties, rights and accords to which Canada is a party at the time such prosecution is considered. In general, this monitoring of international law is the duty of the Attorney General of Canada.

I will now turn to the amendments proposed to the Immigration Act and the Citizenship Act in support of the changes to the Criminal Code already described. I will first consider the provisions of the present Bill as they relate to the Immigration Act.

Consistent with the Government's response to the Deschênes Commission report, these changes will be prospective in nature. The single most important change to the Act is the addition to Section 19 of the Immigration Act of a new class of inadmissible persons. This new admissible class consists of persons who, there are reasonable grounds to believe, have committed a war crime or crime against humanity as these concepts are defined in the amendments to the Criminal Code.

As it is evident that no selection or assessment process, no matter how thorough, will be successful in preventing the entry of all inadmissible persons, it is necessary to provide a means for the removal from Canada of those war criminals who might be successful in slipping through the screen. This has been done through the creation of two new classes of persons against whom removal action can be taken should it come to light after they have been admitted to Canada that they have committed war crimes or that there is strong evidence suggesting that they may have committed such crimes.

The Bill also restricts appeals to the Immigration Appeal Board by persons ordered deported as war criminals to questions of law or fact. Other classes of persons having the right to appeal to the Appeal Board may do so on the basis that for humanitarian reasons, they ought to be allowed to remain in Canada. It is inappropriate that war criminals and persons who have committed crimes against humanity should enjoy this privilege.

The Immigration Act currently provides for the removal of persons to their country of citizenship, country of residence or the country from which they came to Canada. An important provision of this Bill with respect to the removal of war criminals empowers the Minister of Immigration to select any country that is willing to receive a person as the country to which he shall be deported, notwithstanding the fact that normally he would not be deportable to that country.

• (1640)

This provision is necessary because the country that is both willing and best able to prosecute, while at the same time offering guarantees of due process of law, may not be a country to which the person concerned would be deportable under existing Canadian law.

I would also like to outline briefly actions being taken by the Government outside the context of this Bill to implement the recommendations of the Deschênes Commission with respect to the immigration program. The recommendation of the Deschênes Commission with respect to refugee claims by war criminals has been implemented in Bill C-55 by including in the definition of "convention refugee" the exclusion clauses contained in the United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees. These exclusion clauses include persons who have committed war crimes and crimes against humanity. Their inclusion in Bill C-55 will have the effect of preventing such persons from being found to be refugees.

[Translation]

In addition, the Canadian Employment and Immigration Commission is in the process of developing new administrative procedures in order to ensure that people asking for landed immigrant status will answer questions about their potential participation in war crimes or crimes against humanity. Moreover, these proceedings will mention their positive or negative answer, which could be used later as evidence.

[English]

The proposed amendments to the Citizenship Act will also be prospective in nature only. They would make involvement in a war crime or a crime against humanity a bar to the acquisition of Canadian citizenship. Section 20 would be amended in three important ways.

First, citizenship could not be acquired or resumed if the person was being investigated or charged with, on trial for, or subject to or a party to an appeal regarding war crimes or crimes against humanity unless and until that person has been fully cleared. Second, a conviction for these offences would be a permanent bar to acquisition or resumption of citizenship. Third, the onus would be placed squarely upon the applicant for citizenship to reveal any involvement in offences of this nature. Failure to do so would then render the applicant subject to prosecution and/or revocation of citizenship.

These amendments would, I believe, be a full and positive response to the concerns raised before the commission of inquiry. I am sure that the House appreciates, as I do, the swift and thorough efforts of my ministerial colleagues and their departments in addressing these related issues.

In order to avoid delay, the Government has already begun to act upon the recommendations of the commission of inquiry headed by Mr. Justice Deschênes. As he states in his report, this will require another monumental effort. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this work should proceed as soon as possible with the benefit and blessing of this House.

[Translation]

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we often say in this House that we are very pleased to have the opportunity to take part in a debate.

[English]

We often say what a pleasure it is to be able to participate in debate. In my case in respect to this Bill that would be an understatement. A large preoccupation of my life has been the events of World War II, in particular the holocaust, and the fact that our country, without intending it in a general sense, did become a place where a certain number of war criminals found safe haven. I think that by and large Canadians are appalled with this situation. It reflects badly on those, some in high places, who, over the decades, have been responsible for their arrival and their continued presence in our country.

It is difficult to characterize Canada as a just society or civilized place without a strong policy to bring to justice those who have committed crimes which can be characterized as war crimes or as crimes against humanity. Yet they are here. The royal commission appointed by the Government, under the exceptionally competent leadership of Mr. Justice Deschênes, presented a report with a blueprint for action. I want to acknowledge that the Government has adopted an important part of the blueprint for action, albeit not all of it. I would have liked to have seen all of it implemented, but an important part of it was implemented.

I am in the awkward situation of wanting to speak on this reading of the Bill but wanting also to see the Bill go forward quickly. Our House Leader made an offer to the Government on behalf of the Official Opposition. That offer was that we were prepared to give the Bill all three readings today, or earlier than today. We would have been prepared to have the Bill go to Committee of the Whole rather than to a regular legislative committee.

All of our willingness to expedite the passage of this Bill relates to two fundamental points. First, although the Bill can bear some improvement, we are satisfied that it will achieve the good purpose of providing for the prosecution of some war criminals. That is one reason why we support the swift passage of this Bill.

More important, however, is the fact that we are dealing with a problem which is rapidly becoming history. We are dealing with crimes committed by a small number of individuals in Canada who are aging and will be the subject of prosecution under this Bill and against whom evidence will be brought, pursuant to this Bill, by holocaust survivors who are also aging.

It is, therefore, very important that we move swiftly. While the Government has expressed a commitment, provided a royal commission, and brought forward legislation, I only say that I wish it had been done more quickly. I wish it had been done by past Governments, including the Government of which I was a part. However, I cannot refrain from commenting on the fact that if this is to be effective it must be done as quickly as possible. For that reason we supported moving through all of the stages quickly and getting on with the job in the time left on the biological clock for action against the war criminals in Canada.

We will, therefore, uphold the agreement that we made to have the Bill referred to a legislative committee by five o'clock today. I hope that when the Bill is considered by a committee some amendments can be considered, not in the spirit of wanting to slow the Bill down but in the spirit of wanting to be certain that the Bill is more effective.

For example, I would like to be certain that the Bill will apply to all war criminals. While there is no doubt that the main genesis of the Bill is the holocaust which took place during World War II, there are other victims of war crimes and crimes against humanity who are living in our country. World War II was not the only war in which terrible atrocities were committed. Atrocities have been committed outside of war, against victims who have found haven in our country.

• (1650)

When a war criminal or a criminal who has committed a crime against humanity is living here, whether he or she comes from Europe, Asia, South America, Central America, Africa, or wherever, I want to be sure that this amendment to the Criminal Code will be available for the prosecution of that individual. Justice requires certainly no less.

I want to argue, and will do so in the legislative committee, that any individual within Canada who has committed a war crime ought to be amenable to being charged under the Bill, whether he or she has become a citizen, a landed immigrant, whether they are here on a more casual basis, such as on a work permit or as a visitor, or just passing through.

If international intelligence puts us in a position to lay a charge against someone who is in our country waiting to change planes, I think this legislation should be amenable to being used for that purpose.

Finally, in spite of the fact that Mr. Justice Deschênes recommended it, I do not think we should give a monopoly to the federal Attorney General when activating this legislation. I have great confidence in the present incumbent and I am certain he will do his duty under this legislation. I am looking forward to seeing that he does. However, I think provincial Attorneys General across the country have the competence also to bring charges under the Criminal Code. They understand the rules of evidence and deal with many matters that involve international and foreign evidence. I believe provincial Attorneys General ought also to have the door open to them to lay charges and bring forward prosecutions when they feel that it is advisable to do so, perhaps even where the Attorney General of Canada may not feel that a prosecution should be brought, in a particular case.

I want to indicate that this is only a stage and that simply passing second reading and referring this Bill to committee in no way assures that it will be passed and the Government will do the investigations and the Attorney General of Canada will lay the charges. I think the commitment that the Government has made requires it to follow through and do all those things I just mentioned.

Let me say that I am not questioning the good faith of my friend. I am only indicating that if he and his Party want the recognition and the thanks that would come from having and implementing an effective war criminals policy, it must follow through. It cannot just refer it to a committee where it will languish in a rerun of the Deschênes Committee, accepting as witnesses everyone who wants to come. In that respect, I think those who want action and wish to tell the committee that they want action will be doing themselves a disservice by seeking to appear before the committee. I hope we will be very disciplined when this Bill goes to committee, to see that we can move within a time frame I have described and have action and results.

I commend the Minister, as I commended the other steps that the Government has taken in the evolution of a war crimes policy. However, each step in itself will mean nothing if we do not proceed and reach the point where something can actually be done.

There has been talk about this issue for a long time. When we were in Government, we were able to move in a limited area. We attempted to produce extraditions and we managed to accomplish one. Certainly one was not the limit of my ambition in that area. I hoped we would be able to produce more, which I believe will be possible under this legislation.

Therefore, I want to give my support and encouragement, and that of the Official Opposition, at this stage. But let us not take too much satisfaction from reaching one stage. It is important to reach the stage where war criminals are being brought to justice.

While one was brought to justice in the former administration and more might have been brought to justice, at this stage let us at least get to one, and then more.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, I will be brief because I believe all Members of the House recognize the urgency of this legislation. Indeed, as I indicated earlier, we are and have been prepared to facilitate the passage of this legislation through the House in all stages today.

I want to acknowledge the importance of the decision taken by the Government to establish the Deschênes Commission. Clearly, in the face of some 40 years of inaction, this decision was an important one. It sent out a signal that Canada at last was prepared to take seriously our responsibility to bring to justice those who were responsible for these terrible crimes against humanity.

I want to commend the Canadian Jewish Congress, the Simon Wiesenthal Centre, B'nai Brith, the Canadian Holocaust Remembrance Association and others for their tireless dedication over many years in urging Governments to take action.

As we know, it was only in 1982 that action was finally taken. I want to acknowledge the work done by the Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) within his Government in attempting to persuade his colleagues in Cabinet to take action. Unfortunately, he was unsuccessful.

The former Minister of Justice, Mr. Chrétien, stated: "I don't think we should start prosecutions in Canada for crimes committed in European countries 35 years ago". That slammed the door on any further action. I am very pleased that the Government recognized that that response was inadequate and that action had to be taken.

We know that Canada's record, both before World World II and following World World II was quite appalling. Irwin Cotler quite rightly called it the "bureaucratization of horror".

This record was eloquently documented in the report of Alti Rodal which was referred to by the Minister. In Nazi War Criminals in Canada she set out very clearly the fact that a strong anti-semitism underlay many of the actions of the Government at that time.

As Irving Abella said: "None is too many, was the underlying philosophy of those Governments". Today, surely we must recognize that our responsibility must be that one is too many when it comes to the presence of alleged war criminals in Canada.

We are not speaking in abstract terms. I think it is important to underline that we are dealing with human beings who are responsible for terrible atrocities. I recently had an opportunity to visit Ukraine where I viewed official archives, met with officials, and heard personally from men and women in Lav'in who had witnessed these terrible crimes against humanity.

There is the man with tears in his eyes who, at the age of eight, saw the village in which he had been sheltered as a young Jew be burned to the ground, subsequently returning to see the horrors of that event. There is the story of the destruction of the village of Huta Pieniacka. There is the deeply moving tale of the woman who witnessed her father being murdered in front of her eyes. We have an obligation in Canada to bring to justice those responsible for these war crimes and, indeed, all other war crimes. This legislation is an important step in achieving that objective.

The Deschênes Commission recommended other steps as well. Instead of dismissing them as the Government has done, I believe we should have seriously examined those alternatives. Apparently this Bill will go to a legislative committee where we will be proposing amendments in a number of important areas.

Let me close by quoting the words of the president of the Canadian Jewish Congress, Dorothy Reitman, who said: "The presence of Nazi war criminals in Canada has been an affront to the Canadian conscience, a moral stain, a betrayal of everything that people died for and Canadians fought for. The report of the Deschênes Commission would help to remove the stain, to redeem the victims, to right the wrong and to restore faith in the rule of law".

We have waited far too long. Let us finally move as a nation to right this historic wrong.

As I indicated earlier, I wish to seek unanimous consent of the House in order that we might proceed through all stages of this legislation today. We are prepared to proceed in this manner, given the urgency of the legislation. I would seek the unanimous consent of the House to proceed through all stages of the legislation today, through Committee of the Whole and third reading.

• (1700)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as I explained to my friend this morning, a Member of our side, who will be participating in the committee work, was unable to be here today. He also has amendments he wishes to place. The fact that we are debating this Bill today is as a result of co-operation among all Members during the proceedings earlier today.

I could not for a moment think of going back on my word to this Hon. Member when I said this would be heard in a legislative committee and he would have his opportunity to place amendments. I am sure, given the spirit of Hon. Members, and what was said here today, that those meetings at committee will be very brief and that the Bill will proceed, with the co-operation of the other two parties, to, hopefully, third reading next week, or after those committee hearings.

While I am unable to give the consent, I do say that there is a good feeling toward this Bill and there is no question in my mind that third reading will pass very, very shortly and that this Bill will be law before the end of August.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There being no unanimous consent, is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

THE ENVIRONMENT

SOIL EROSION

The House resumed from Friday, June 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Caccia that, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of introducing a coherent, comprehensive policy and plan of action to respond to the threat of soil erosion posed to Canada's agricultural land, as described in "Soil at Risk" and "Soil Degradation in Canada".

Mr. A. H. Harry Brightwell (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to rise to speak on this motion of the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) because I have a great deal of interest in the matter of soil conservation. In my area, the riding of Perth, one of the greatest farming areas in Canada, it is of deep concern to the farmers as well.

My interest in this subject was spurred by a piece of historical fiction I read. It was about an immigrant who came, I assume legally, many years ago to the American States. As he treaded across those States, he used a test when he came to a piece of land he thought was good. He took a rod and drove it down into the ground until it came to the hard soil underneath. He measured in this way, perhaps imperfectly, the amount of topsoil. This gentleman was from Scandinavia and I assume he went to the area of Minnesota. Finally he found a piece of land where he could drive his rod down, I think it was something like 18 inches before he came to hard ground. He said to his family: "This is where we will stay. This is where we will farm because this is good land".

After reading this book, I read a report about the same area where the amount of topsoil left on many of the farms which had been farmed for perhaps 150 or 200 years was only something like five inches or six inches. This struck a bell with me. In my riding, many of our farms have only that amount of topsoil. If farmers plough deeper than six inches they turn up clay. There is very little reserve left in many of these areas.

In Ontario, which grows intensive crops of corn, they say that if you grow a 100-bushel crop of corn, you lose 100 bushels of topsoil off that land. I know that is not totally true because some land is flat and the topsoil does not run away. Some areas are protected by trees, and some areas have a lot of hills where much more topsoil runs away. I asked an expert what would happen if one had a piece of land with perhaps eight inches of topsoil and every year corn was grown for never ending time. How long would it take for all that topsoil to disappear leaving nothing on that farm? The answer was about 100 years. I saw then that our farmers today, who are farming in difficult times and with techniques that are pushed by economics, may be forced to expend the soil on their farms so there is nothing left for the farmers of the future.

This particularly worried me. We see corn grown on land year after year. We see bigger tractors used on that land because the soil gets more compacted. We see more chemicals being used on that land because without rotation, without the ability to put other crops in, one has to add chemicals to kill the weeds. We are seeing a destruction of trees which would stop some of the erosion because farmers have to use 100 per cent of their farm land. That is a very frightening prospect.

I am sure the farmers of Canada are aware of this problem. They may not know the solution. They may not know how to handle it, but they are aware of the problem. For economic reasons they cannot really stop some of their practices or do something else which would help their land.

Of course, we know that much of the cost of land degradation does not accrue to the farmer. It accrues to the societies living downstream, the cities that have to clean out the sewage, the water flows, the provinces which have to clean out the ends of rivers. The total cost does not accrue to the farmer. He may not even realize what the total cost is, although he does know the problem.

I am very interested in the motion of the Hon. Member, although I believe it is possible that there is a move already in process which will answer his concern, and perhaps this motion is simply unnecessary.

Because of the Senate report called "Soil at Risk", which was tabled in 1984, and indeed other reports mentioned by the Hon. Member in his discussion on June 19, this issue has become very important to any thinking environmentalist in Canada. It was on the agenda of the First Ministers' Conference in 1985 and as a result of the deliberations there, six working groups were set up. One of these dealt with the soil and water conservation problem. This particular working group was composed of federal and provincial officials who studied the problem and produced a report for agricultural Ministers in July 1986. This report provided the basis for the soil and water related recommendations that were put forward by agriculture Ministers in the national agriculture strategy. The soil and water conservation part of that strategy called for many different aspects but particularly for the establishment of a co-ordinated soil and water conservation program adapted to each province. In other words, it would not be the same in every province because each province's needs are different. How could one compare, for instance, the rolling land in southwestern Ontario with the flat prairie lands in the west. So each province would have a different need.

The program would provide awareness in education programs so that we ensure that everyone is aware of it, and improved extension and technical advisory services to help the farmer and the communities plan the use of the land because we cannot blame this totally on the farmer. It would provide for more on-site demonstrations of preservation techniques. It would also provide for additional research, improved financial support and assistance in areas such as soil survey work and infrastructure planning. That is all under just the one requirement of the program.

Other requirements are improvement of federal and provincial co-ordination mechanisms, a creation of a focal point for co-ordinating existing and new soil and water activities, the re-orientation of federal and provincial programs to meet needs, and the negotiation of federal-provincial agreements to finance and co-ordinate these programs, and the establishment of local water and soil conservation organizations where appropriate action could be taken to facilitate the farmers' participation in local activities.

The national agriculture strategy calls for a federal-provincial partnership to be developed whereby both parties can define their ongoing work and in this light the federal Government has designated officers to work bilaterally toward a definition of the program by province. As well, Agriculture Canada has put together an inter-branch committee which is now in the process of defining a comprehensive national soil and water policy. In carrying out that task, federal representatives have already completed a round of consultations with each province in order to define the needs and to start the process of co-ordinating activities between each of these governments. As well as all of this, consultations with Environment Canada are under way. This is what is planned under the strategy.

• (1710)

Before I complete my remarks, I want to mention another program that is already in place but which has nothing to do with this strategy. It was developed separately. I refer to a soil and water environmental enhancement program which will be put in place in my area. Some $30 million in federal and provincial money will be designated to meet the problems of soil erosion. This is a program being carried out separately from the programs I mentioned before.

In thinking about environmental problems in terms of soil, we must remember that things we do in the soil can affect other areas, for example, water-tables and the quality of water that we have available in our cities for consumption. We have to keep in mind that we should not change programs so much as to cause other problems to rear their heads. It is my view that this federal-provincial approach to soil conservation will provide the coherent and comprehensive policy and plan of action called for by the Hon. Member for Davenport. It is for this reason that I maintain that his motion is simply an unnecessary one.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I too am delighted to speak to the motion put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and to express my appreciation for him having brought forward such a motion. The significance with respect to his bringing forward the motion is that he comes from a large urban area. I believe that the solution to the problem lies with our urban cousins as opposed to our farmers.

What is before us is an important motion. The Hon. Member can provide a valuable service to the country by visiting urban Canada, since he understands the ethics and mores of urban Canada. He can more appropriately change them than those of us who come from the rural parts of the country.

Speaking for the West, there is absolutely no doubt as to the description of the problem. In the high western plains we have been farming for some 50 years. The fertility of the western plains has dropped by some 50 per cent. If it goes down by another 50 per cent over the next 50 years, we could very easily have nothing but pure sand, which would lead to the very real possibility—in fact a probability—of seeing a massive desert in that area.

This is not a situation which can be taken lightly. The amount of soil lost in western Canada each spring is truly massive. I flew over all of southern Alberta this spring and even at a height of 18,000 feet we could barely see out the window of the plane when the winds were blowing strongly. It was not difficult to see that where farmers were using proper strip farming procedures there was no land blowing. However, where they were into farming 80 acres or more, the strips were wide enough that I could see a few pebbles rolling along on the western end which just grew and grew until the whole field was blowing away. As well, salinity is a very major problem on the high plains.

The motion before us asks for more government involvement. In fact, there is a government strategy in place. However, I want to argue that the real solution is not necessarily in more government involvement, although I think that will be the case in the short term. The solution is not necessarily in more regulation, although I believe that in the short term we will need to have more regulation. Nor is the solution implementing laws that would send farmers to jail for not stripping properly.

I submit that the real solution lies with our urban cousins, those of us who live in the small and larger urban areas, to pay more for farm produce. I say that for one reason. I believe that farmers want to save the soil. In fact, farmers more than anyone else want to save the soil if for no other reason than they want to conserve their income-generating asset. However, the situation goes beyond that.

Farmers have a unique attachment to the soil. Those of us who work with farmers every day and, indeed, those of us who come from the land ourselves, understand that. One has just to stand in a field after a harvest knowing that one has prepared the soil, seeded it and watched it grow, sprayed it for weeds and then swathed and harvested it. Often times one stands at the edge of the field only to see that the entire field has been destroyed as a result of a hail storm. That is a sick feeling that you would never want to have, Mr. Speaker.

If farmers received the proper amount of money for their produce there is no doubt, and I can assure anyone in the House, that we would not need laws. No farmer will let his land go down. But he needs to have a higher price for his produce so that he does not have to mine his land but actually farm it. That is where the solution lies.

With respect to grain, we have to get at our European and American neighbours who have placed us in a price war that is driving the price of grain far below the true cost of production.

How can we convince our urban cousins to do that? I am not sure. Until we can do that, even with low prices, farmers themselves are doing much, much more. Today, farmers are more knowledgeable than they were even 15 years ago when I was a young man coming off a farm. They simply know more now and they want to do better.

In southern Alberta we have a Drylands Salient Control Association which is doing absolutely first-class work in the Warner-Milk River country south and east of Lethbridge. The Government is moving. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Perth (Mr. Brightwell), set out the six task forces. We are operating at the political level, federally and provincially, and at the administrative level with the bureaucrats. We can all say that it is not going fast enough, and we do, and perhaps it is not. But at least it is moving ahead.

The long and short of it is that the solution lies in the pricing structure. If we were to get the prices up a bit—and it would not have to be a lot—farmers would make an investment in their soil and machinery that would stop us from having any problems.

I noticed in another document I was reading that we have clear objectives on acid rain, which gets into another dimension that affects farming, particularly the forest industry which is a type of farming, as well as the production of maple sugar. Canada's clear policy is that acid deposition in vulnerable areas must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year. I think my hon. friend from Davenport would agree with that. Indeed, when he was part of the Government he might have been part of the setting of that objective. But in order to do that, total Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border east must be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes per year. That would be some 50 per cent of the 1980 level. Also, the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the United States into eastern Canada must be reduced to about two million tonnes per year. Again, that is 50 per cent of the 1980 level.

Because I did not realize at first exactly all of the things that Canada was doing in this area, I want to set forth some of them. On May 22 Canada began discussions with the United States on a possible bilateral accord. It is the first time since 1982 that the two countries have engaged in negotiations that could lead to a lasting solution to the acid rain problem.

• (1720)

A concept paper tabled by Canadian officials outlined the nature and scope of a possible accord. The paper clearly stated that, to be acceptable to Canada, the accord must have definite targets and schedules for acid rain reduction. Specifically, Canadian representatives stressed that the flow of United States sulphur dioxide to Canada must be reduced to the 2 million tonnes that I referred to. This objective was again stressed at a July 28 meeting of Canadian and American officials. The federal Government believes that an effective U.S. acid rain abatement program requires action by both the U.S. administration and the Congress. To date our efforts have been focused on the U.S. President. Increasingly, in the months ahead, we will be concentrating on American legislators while continuing to work with President Reagan and his administration on a bilateral accord.

As we have learned from our history when dealing with the huge republic to the south, it is not enough to deal with the administration. As a Parliament, we somehow have to develop and expand our parliamentary contacts. The Canada-U.S. Parliamentary Association does good work. The yearly meeting where they come up and sit with us in Canada, and where we go down and sit with them in the United States is a good program. Perhaps it should be expanded further. More and more the U.S. Congress is responding to narrow special interest groups. Less and less it is reacting and making decisions based on the national good of the entire United States. We too are faced with those pressures of narrow interest groups that develop sophisticated techniques, and powerful levers over us as Members of Parliament. It is difficult to take a Canadian view rather than the view of your own narrow self-interest group.

Whether it is on free trade or 100 other topics, we in Parliament have to develop a more refined mechanism in order that we can go to the United States and sit with members of Congress and have them see our Canadian perspective. I do not believe that they want to destroy North America any more than we do.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in speaking to the motion introduced by my hon. colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). Having heard the previous speaker from the government side express his interest in and frequent involvement with farmers, I must say it astounds me that the Hon. Member spent most of his time talking about acid rain when he was involved in a discussion of such importance as reading the future agricultural production of Canada. I would have thought that the Hon. Member might have said that acid rain is an important issue, one that requires a great deal of work in order to give it prominence in the consciousness of Canadians and Americans, and that while it is a significant problem, an equally significant program is the problem of soil degradation in Canada. Perhaps he should have continued to give some constructive characterization of the problem, and its potential solutions. I regret that the opportunity was lost to enlighten this Parliament and the people of Canada on this significant problem.

I stand before you, Mr. Speaker, and unashamedly admit my fundamental ignorance of agriculture and farming. I am an urban dweller who should be made more conscious of the issues affecting the farming community. My own constituency barely has a farm, if any, within its boundaries.

It is consistent with the concerns of the former Minister of the Environment that he should raise this issue. There are a great many problems in the environment that will create a problematic future for our children. There is a great deal of discussion of holes in the ozone layer, the greenhouse effect caused by excessive petroleum product combustion, carbon dioxide causing a future warming or cooling of our climate, the contamination of food and beverages, and the dumping of toxic and carcinogenic substances into our waters. We discuss the lead in the air from lead in gasoline.

There is also an awareness of the global problem of soil erosion. I think most people are aware of the desertification of parts of Africa, and the consequent famine. It is worth noting that wind erosion and the consequent wafting of dust in the air probably has a far more significant impact on climate than the production of pollution by our factories because it shades the earth from the sun.

Two years ago when exploring the constant stream of literature that crosses our desks, I came across a book entitled Soil At Risk. It was an impressive and informative document in terms of drawing my attention to, and enlivening my concern about soil erosion. At the same time it suggested a function that the Senate has well fulfilled, and that is being involved in long-term studies of the type that the immediate concerns of the House of Commons do not permit us to do.

When we consider the problem of soil degradation, we are considering a problem which is characteristically the type of issue with which the House has great difficulty. We are not talking about next year, much less today, but we are talking about a century from now. In the year 2050 we will be faced with serious problems of being able to maintain ourselves and our economy to the extent to which our survival is based upon a prosperous agricultural sector. Presently it is costing in the neighbourhood of $1.5 billion a year. As was earlier noted by my colleague, huge amounts of soil are being lost to cultivation. Some $20 to $35 per hectare is the average cost of soil degradation in this country. In immediate terms, this involves an area of something in the order of 650,000 Canadians, 10 per cent of our gross domestic product, and 20 per cent of our positive merchandise balance in trade.

This country can ill afford to lose its soil. Because of climatic and geological conditions, Canada has only 9 per cent of its vast land mass in cultivatable soil. Much of that area is taken up in other uses, for example, in cities, roads, forests, and other not unreasonable uses. Only 4.5 per cent of our land mass constitutes cultivatable soils. In addition to the degradation of our soil, if one envisions the future increase in our population, it is obvious that we are going in a dangerous direction. It was mentioned earlier that to a large extent the problems or the solution to the problem of soil degradation belongs to the cities, we urban residents. One of the significant causes of the loss of our richest, most fertile soil is the willy-nilly expansion of cities and towns into areas that were previously farmland. Year by year huge amounts are lost.

• (1730)

As I told you, Mr. Speaker, I am an urban dweller and therefore not tremendously knowledgeable about agriculture. However, I was a member of a regional conservation authority and I live in a county where soil erosion is quite marked. Whether it be by wind or by water, one knows immediately what are the causes simply by looking across our flat country. There are no trees, so in the area where I live we have exploited the land, purely and simply, without any attention to conservation.

The book "Soil at Risk", and the Science Council of Canada publication "Soil Degradation in Canada" are to be recommended to all to read.

I was interested in hearing the results of the federal-provincial conferences and other consultations on the issue of soil conservation. I would have to say, if indeed effective actions are being taken, that they are being kept quite well hidden from the general population. Certainly the most important thing which needs to be accomplished is to increase the awareness of Canadians of the dire threat to their survival and to the survival and self-sufficiency of the country as a result of the degradation of soil.

It results from wind and water erosion, from salinization, from acidification due to the excessive use, chiefly, of fertilizers, from compaction due in large measure from tilling practices, and from loss of organic matter.

As you have indicated by your signal to me, Mr. Speaker, I do not have much time to elaborate on all these issues, but it is clear that many of the problems result from the practices which are being used and often encouraged by other government policies, whether they be taxation policies, transportation policies, farm products transportation policies, marketing boards, or whatever.

There is no doubt that there is a significant difficulty on the part of the farmer in attempting to address the problem. There is no doubt that the urban dweller has a significant role to play. However, certainly the urban dweller will have to be made aware of the situation of our land as well as the situation of the farmer fighting increased costs and lower prices; facing a lack of adequate information on how to deal with the problem; and facing government practices which have failed to provide adequate research, adequate information, adequate advice, and a national policy which everyone knows would deal effectively with this very serious problem.

We have heard much about acid rain and much about the pollution of our waterways. This motion calls for not only increased awareness and action on this very serious problem, but it calls for that action to be co-operative and on the basis of concern on the part of farm dwellers and city dwellers as well.

Motion (Mr. Caccia) negatived.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that the sitting be suspended until six o'clock in order for those who have adjournment motion questions and the respective Parliamentary Secretaries to attend.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the first question in the late show tonight is in my name and that the Parliamentary Secretary is here, I am ready to proceed. I wonder whether the Parliamentary Secretary would be agreeable to proceed at this point and hope that the other two Members who have questions make it to the Chamber.

Mr. Lewis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, that is satisfactory to the Government. We will try to work in the second and third adjournment debate matters as soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 66 deemed to have been moved.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS—ACID RAIN—EFFECT ON LAKES IN EASTERN CANADA—REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER PRESS ECONOMIC ARGUMENTS WITH UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in March of this year I raised in Question Period the findings by Dr. Schindler of the Freshwater Institute of Winnipeg concerning the impact of acid rain on the ecology, in particular on the life of organisms on which fish feed. In that process I raised the urgency for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to proceed with the matter of an acid rain agreement with the United States.

On that occasion the Minister of the Environment (Mr. McMillan) made reference to the agreements that were being discussed, at least, and to the bilateral discussions which were taking place. It was implied that Canada was to meet with the President of the United States with a clean conscience, having put into place a domestic program on acid rain from Manitoba to Newfoundland.

Today I should like to put very briefly to the Parliamentary Secretary the following chronology, in the hope that he can answer the questions I have for him flowing from the chronology and the intervention last March.

In March, 1984 the Government of Canada sought and obtained the agreement of the provinces to introduce a program which, by 1994, would implement a 50 per cent reduction in pollution emissions by producers of electricity and non-ferrous metals.

In March, 1985, the present Government confirmed that agreement and announced a detailed program.

By April, 1987, to make it short, several provinces signed that particular agreement with Ottawa, namely, Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, Newfoundland, and Prince Edward Island. We still had two provinces missing, namely, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, both of which want some funds for research or even for electric generating plants.

After enormous pressures from the committee on acid rain we finally managed to get the Premier of New Brunswick to appear before the committee on April 2. He appeared and made an announcement that he was ready to introduce a plan for New Brunswick and to sign this agreement with Ottawa. The media were there. A lot of publicity was given to that committee meeting, and Mr. Hatfield disappeared. We have not heard from him since April 2, which was just on the eve of the meeting that took place in Ottawa between the Prime Minister and President Reagan.

It was certainly well timed to convey the impression that Canada was moving, but we have not heard since from the Province of New Brunswick on the commitment it made at that time, through its Premier, that it would sign an agreement with Ottawa.

We also have another province which has not signed yet, that is, Nova Scotia. Here again that province has been dragging its feet to come through with the commitment and promise it made back in 1984 to cut its pollution in a manner which, quite frankly, is rather modest and not substantial.

Nevertheless, we have two provinces with Conservative Governments, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, that have not come through with the promise and commitment they made twice, once in 1984 and again in 1985. At the same time we see two provinces run by Liberal Governments, Quebec and Ontario, that have come through on their promises by signing an agreement. I begin to wonder whether it is perhaps Tory ideology which is impeding action by the Premiers of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick in coming through on a promise made some time ago. I cannot find any other explanation.

• (1740)

As I mentioned, the Premier of New Brunswick made a very clear and explicit commitment before our committee. We have not heard any word from the Premier of Nova Scotia despite letters from the chairman of the acid rain committee. Therefore, I am taking this opportunity to bring the matter to the attention of the Parliamentary Secretary. I am sure he is well briefed, and he is well known for his competence and thoroughness. I am also sure he will give us a very comprehensive reply.

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government established clear objectives on the acid rain issue. To protect the Canadian environment from damage due to acidification, acid deposition in all vulnerable areas must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year. Achieving this objective requires that total Canadian sulphur dioxide emissions from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border eastward be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes per year. You will know that is 50 per cent of the 1980 level. As well, the transboundary flow of sulphur dioxide from the U.S. into eastern Canada must be reduced to about 2 million tonnes per year. Again, that is 50 per cent of the 1980 level.

The federal Government and the provinces are implementing a program to achieve the required emission reductions by 1994 at the latest. More than 90 per cent of the reductions required are in regulatory or program form and have been ratified in federal-provincial agreements.

The federal Government is unequivocably committed to securing an accord with the U.S. that specifies targets and schedules to reduce transboundary acid rain to the level necessary to avoid environmental damage. The Canadian objective is to have the flow of U.S. sulphur dioxide emissions into Canada reduced from 4 million tonnes to 2 million tonnes by 1994, paralleling the Canadian acid rain abatement program.

On May 22 Canada began discussions with the U.S. on a possible bilateral accord. This is the first time since 1982 that the two countries have engaged in negotiations that could lead to a lasting solution to the acid rain problem. A concept paper tabled by Canadian officials outlined the nature and scope of a possible accord.

The paper clearly stated that to be acceptable to Canada the accord must have definite targets and schedules for acid rain reduction. My friend opposite will remember that phrase because that is what he fought for when he was the Minister. Specifically, Canadian representatives stress that the flow of U.S. sulphur dioxide to Canada must be reduced to 2 million tonnes by 1994. This objective was stressed again at a July 28 meeting of Canadian and American officials.

The federal Government believes an effective U.S. acid rain abatement program requires action by both the U.S. administration and Congress. To date our efforts have focused on the U.S. President. Increasingly, in the months ahead, we will be concentrating on American legislators, while continuing to work with President Reagan and his administration on a bilateral accord.

This fall promises to be an important period for our dealings with the U.S. administration and the work of Congress. Canadians can be assured that the federal Government will continue to place a high priority on securing U.S. emission reduction targets and schedules. Our objectives and our determination could not be clearer.

NATIONAL PAROLE BOARD—REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO PAROLE SYSTEM

Mr. Alan Redway (York East): Mr. Speaker, you may recall that just about a month ago the National Parole Board granted an unescorted day pass to a man by the name of Real Chartrand. As you know, he was convicted of first degree murder and sentenced to die in 1972. This was for the murder of a police officer in Ste. Thérèse, Quebec. That murder occurred after a chase following a bank hold-up. While awaiting the carrying out of that sentence, in 1976 the Parliament of Canada repealed capital punishment. As a result, his sentence was commuted to life imprisonment. He was to serve some 25 years in prison, but at the same time an amendment to the Criminal Code was passed which provided that someone convicted of first degree murder could, after just 15 years, apply to a jury and have it decide whether he or she should be eligible for parole at the end of 15 years.

Mr. Chartrand is the first person to have the opportunity to take advantage of that change. Just a month ago, after applying to a jury in the same community where he shot and killed the police officer and where he was convicted of first degree murder, the jury decided he was entitled to go to the NPB and ask for a parole after only 15 years. As you know, he did that and was given the right to unescorted day passes.

All that occurred just a few days after this House had debated the issue of capital punishment and voted on that issue in the early morning of June 30. Coming so quickly after the return of capital punishment was defeated in this House it came as a shock to many Canadians. They felt that not only was a decision made on June 30 to not increase the penalty for murder, but in fact a few days later, on July 9, there was a decision in effect by the NPB to reduce the penalty for first degree murder.

You may recall as well that in April of this year a national poll was conducted. It found that at least 62 per cent of Canadians felt that the parole system was too easy. It was too easy for people to get out on parole. Some 82 per cent of Canadians were against the idea of a week-end pass for criminals convicted of serious crimes. Only 2 per cent felt our parole system was too harsh. Only 33 per cent felt it was just right.

It is interesting and perhaps even significant to find that in the Chartrand case one of those who felt he should have received parole after 15 years was the father of the police officer murdered by Mr. Chartrand in 1972. As you will recall, he was in fact the Chief of Police of Ste. Thérèse at the time that incident occurred. Following the decision by the NPB to release Chartrand, the father of the slain police officer, Mr. Labelle, now retired, said that if Chartrand has rehabilitated himself, why not let him out? He said that if he had made an effort to change, give him a chance.

• (1750)

Mr. Labelle obviously stands with that 36 per cent of Canadians who feel that either the parole system in Canada is all right as it is or perhaps that it is even too harsh. Obviously he does not stand with the 62 per cent of Canadians who feel that there is something wrong with the parole system, it is too lenient, it should be changed and it should be changed very quickly.

Why is it that some 62 per cent of Canadians do not have confidence in our parole system? I think the Chartrand case is perhaps a good example of what concerns Canadians about our parole system. Someone who was quite clearly convicted of the first-degree murder of a police officer was released on day passes after just 15 years. Is that in fact a proper penalty for the deliberate first-degree murder of a police officer who was in the line of duty?

It seems to me that another reason for this is the whole question the Minister of Justice (Mr. Hnatyshyn) raised not too long ago when he said that Canadians have lost confidence in our criminal justice system. He said that the reason we have lost confidence is that the media has been sensationalizing all of these cases. It may be that that is the answer but I personally do not really think so and I know that 62 per cent of Canadians are with me. I think they feel that there is definitely something wrong with and something that has to be changed about our parole system. Having defeated the principle of capital punishment again in June of this year, they feel that Parliament now has a duty and an obligation to see that changes are made to the parole system, changes which would restore the public's confidence in that system.

In my view, we need a parole system that not only works but seems to work as far as the public is concerned. We need an entire criminal justice system that not only works but seems to work as far as the public is concerned. I hope that tonight, the Parliamentary Secretary will tell us that the Government will be unveiling such a system, a system that will restore the confidence of that 62 per cent of Canadians who just do not have any confidence at all in the present parole system.

Mrs. Monique B. Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to read, if I may, the mandate of the National Parole Board: "The National Parole Board, as part of the criminal justice system, makes independent, quality conditional release decisions and clemency recommendations. The Board, by facilitating the timely reintegration of offenders as law-abiding citizens, contributes to the protection of society."

What I have just quoted, Mr. Speaker, clearly expresses the NPB's purpose and guides the NPB's day-to-day activities. The statement is the starting point for the renewal under way within the NPB, a renewal initiated last year by the Solicitor General, Mr. Kelleher.

The Minister did not await survey results to decide to take action: for some time, in close co-operation with the chairman of the Board, he had been analysing what changes should be made and how best to familiarize Canadians with the activities and nature of the National Parole Board.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, a few important changes that have already been made: the attention focussed on victims, who may now express their views to the Board in the course of its deliberations and reviews; the guarantee to victims that their testimony will be a factor in decisions on the release of offenders; the NPB's organizational review, the purpose of which was to ensure the Board's greater effectiveness as well as improvements in training, techniques and information for board members; the joint efforts of the NPB and the Correctional Service to enhance their respective contributions to the protection of society while reducing the need to build new prisons; the measures taken by the two agencies to make the transition from a prison setting to life in the community easier for the inmates; the establishment of uniform release standards, now on the verge of publication, to replace by the end of 1987 the current criteria which are too vague and general; the implementation by the Minister and the chairman of strict criteria for the selection of board members, thereby ensuring a very high level of competence.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, one reason why 62 per cent of Canadians have mixed feelings about the system may well be because the system is poorly understood. The Solicitor General (Mr. Kelleher) is perfectly aware of that stumbling-block, and that is why he has requested that the workings of the system be exposed to public scrutiny, so that everyone can see and understand how the Board reaches its decisions. In so doing, the NPB will demonstrate to Parliament, to the Government, to other agencies in the criminal justice system and to Canadians in general how the National Parole Board contributes to the protection of society.

As we have seen, Mr. Speaker, the Board is going through a period of change. The Hon. Member will, I am sure, join me in applauding what has been done so far. I am convinced, as well, that the NPB's new direction and new spirit will not only lead to greater security for Canadians but will also contribute substantially to assuaging the fear of crime, which affects the quality of life of so many people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 3(1).

PATENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND—CONSIDERATION OF SENATE AMENDMENTS

The House proceeded to the consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill C-22, an Act to amend the Patent Act and to provide for certain matters in relation thereto.

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is with mixed feelings that I initiate this debate to respond to the Senate's report on Bill C-22. First, this Bill is a carefully crafted package which balances a wide variety of interests. It reflects the need to respect in Canada, as in every other industrialized nation, the concept of intellectual property and that a creator, an inventor, an author, or whoever has created some property of value, is protected by the state from those who would copy that property.

It also reflects the fact that we in Canada must—I emphasize must—ensure that our research and development, science and technology activities are increased over what they have been in this country.

Everyone who has looked at science in Canada has concluded that we must do more. We cannot rely in perpetuity on our raw resources. We cannot continue with the philosophy that we can let the rest of the world develop the new technologies, the new drugs, the new treatments, and new goods and services, and we will pay for them with our raw resources. We cannot continue in that way without facing a drastic drop in our standard of living. We cannot continue our past practices in this country of being hewers of wood and drawers of water.

Bill C-22 also acknowledges that Canada ought to become involved in the manufacturing of fine chemicals, rather than relying on imported drugs and chemicals.

Most significantly, this package acknowledges that the health care of Canadians is vitally dependent on more research in health related areas in Canada. It makes common sense that only through research will we be able to increase the quality of life of Canadians as our population gets older, and be able to find cures for Alzheimer's disease, arthritis, cancer, AIDS, muscular dystrophy, cystic fibrosis, multiple sclerosis and the many diseases that still inflict mankind. I think we all know intuitively that there is a much greater likelihood of getting the best and latest treatment in our hospitals if those physicians in our hospitals are working in a research-orientated atmosphere. If we are going to say in essence, let the Americans, Swiss, British, French and Germans do the medical research, we will wait until they prove out the new treatments, the new drugs, and then trust that our physicians will learn from their developments and apply those to Canadians, what we are saying is, Canadians will get the treatment later on. The rest of the world, the citizens of these other countries, will have access to these treatments early on.

• (1010)

Again, it is common sense—and everyone working in the area will acknowledge it—that physicians working in a research atmosphere are simply that much more able to understand, to diagnose quickly to realize the importance of new treatments and to apply them. There are all kinds of anecdotal support of that. Again, common sense and the normal experience all of us have had, would acknowledge that.

This package, Bill C-22, provides consumer protection. It provides that Canadians will have drug prices at 80 per cent of what they are in the United States. It provides that drugs will not increase more than the cost of living. It is in the original Bill C-22. It provides a mechanism to ensure that consumers are not gouged.

When one talks about consumers in Canada, one has to acknowledge first the magnificent health protection system we have. We have medicare. We have hospital care. No one in this country goes without medical help if they need it. No one in this country goes without drugs if they need them. Eighty-five per cent of the population is covered by drug plans. In fact, if one looks at the percentage of drugs prescribed under drug plans,one finds it is much higher than that. The 15 per cent who do not have drug plans are in a kind of low-risk group.

In my own personal experience, I had no drug plan until my first child arrived. When I was single and first married, I was young and healthy, and for the odd prescription I needed, it was simply economically sensible for me to pay for that prescription. When our children came along and it was necessary to have some protection in case of a debilitating disease the children might have had, I subscribed. That is the nature of the situation. So when I talk about 85 per cent of the population having drug plans of one sort or another, in fact, way over 90 per cent of all drugs are purchased under drug plans.

Virtually 100 per cent of senior citizens in Canada are covered by drug plans and they are by far and away the largest users of drugs as a group. Therefore, consumers, individually, in Canada are already protected enormously. Bill C-22 ensures that the funders of those drug plans, be they provincial Governments, private plans and so on, will not be faced with increased costs as a result of this Bill.

It is a balanced package arrived at after months of discussions, negotiations, analysis and examination. Frankly, any objective, and I stress the word "objective", observer can reach no other conclusion after looking at all the facts.

Has this Bill been adequately studied? I do not know of a Bill, at least in this Parliament, which has had more study. This Bill had 87.5 hours of House and legislative committee time—87.5 hours. I do not know of any Bill which has had that much time. There were 250 submissions—250 submissions.

Mr. McCurdy: All against.

Mr. Andre: The Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party makes a point. He says all these submissions were against. All right. Let us talk about some of the groups that are in favour of Bill C-22. They are: the Canadian Association of Retired Persons; the Canadian Medical Association; the Canadian Chamber of Commerce; the Science Council of Canada; Dr. John Evans, National Biotechnology Advisory Committee; Dr. Michel Chrétien, Clinical Research Institute of Montreal; Patent and Trade Mark Institute of Canada, the Canadian Society for Clinical Investigation; the International Business Council of Canada; the Canadian Federation of Biological Societies; the Canadian Manufacturer's Association; the Canadian Pharmacy Association, the Canadian Society of Industrial Pharmacists; Fédération internationale des conseils en propriété industrielle, the Biological Council of Canada; 70 individual pharmaceutical companies; the European Federation of Pharmaceutical Industries; Dr. John McNeil, the President of the Association of Deans of Pharmacy; the Canadian Association of Pharmaceutical Students and Interns; the Society of Professional Pharmacists; the Association of Canadian Community Pharmacists; The Kidney Foundation.

The list goes on. It includes: the Canadian Cardiovascular Society; the Canadian Dermatology Foundation; the Canadian Paediatric Society; the Canadian Diabetes Association; Transplant International; Advanced Coronary Treatment Foundation; the Canadian College of Neuropsychopharmacology; the Terry Fox Foundation; the Biomedical Research Centre of B.C.; First Seniors Resource and Research Society of B.C.; Pacific Pharmaceuticals, University of British Columbia, B.C. Mental Health Association; Biomira, a small Canadian biotech company in Alberta; Chembiomed Ltd., another biotech company in Alberta; the Alberta Minister of Economic Development; Calgary Research and Development Authority; Health Sciences Centre, University of Calgary; Faculty of Pharmacy, the University of Alberta; Alberta Pharmaceutical Association; Saskatchewan Pharamacare Program; The University of Manitoba. I will skip over a few now.

The Toronto Board of Trade, The Municipality of Mississauga.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Andre: All right, I will read more of them. Dr. Lawrence Spiro, University of Toronto; Dr. McLeod, The Dean of Medicine, of McMaster University; Professor Don Thompson, York University; Connaught Labs, the discoverer of insulin; the Gerontology Research Council of Ontario; Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto; Medical Centre, Peterborough; Pharmaceutical Marketing Club of Ontario; the Ontario Pharmaceutical Association; the Ontario Council of Administrators of Teachers; the Quebec National Assembly; Robert Bourassa, Premier of Quebec; Daniel Johnson, Minister of Industry; Fédération nationale des associations de consommateurs du Québec; Institut de Cardiologie du Québec; Biomega a new biotech company in Quebec; La Fédération de l'Age d'Or with 250,000 members; Jean Doré, may or Montréal; Montreal Board of Trade; and the Montreal Chamber of Commerce.

The supporters of the Bill also include; Bureau de valorisation des applications de la recherche, Rassemblement des citoyens de Montréal; Conseil du Patronat; Institut Armand Frappier; Faculty of Medicine, McGill University; la Faculté de médecine, Université de Sherbrooke; Université de Montréal; Association des étudiants en pharmacie de l'Université de Laval; Association des résidants en pharmacie de l'Université de Laval; Association canadienne française pour l'avancement des sciences; Coalition nationale pour la recherche en sciences de la santé; L'Association des médecins de langue française; la Fédération des médecins spécialistes du Québec Provigo; Ordre des chimistes du Québec; la Fédération des médecins omnipraticiens du Québec; Conference of Montreal Suburban Mayors; Fonds de la recherche en santé du Québec; ACEF de Laval; Accurex Clinical Data Research, Montreal.

It also includes: the New Brunswick Senior Citizens Federation; Dalhousie University; Cystic Fibrosis Society; Prince Edward Island Medical Society; Newfoundland Pharmacy Council; Faculty of Pharmacy, Memorial University, and many, many more.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I find it strange to have it repeated in the House ad nauseam by Members of the Opposition that no one supports this Bill. Is there anyone involved in medical research, in the treatment of the sick in this country, who is not in favour of this Bill? Is there anyone involved in the treatment of the sick in Canada who does not understand the importance of research and development? What about the experts? Is there anyone in that category who is not in favour of this Bill? I doubt it. That is not someone I would like to approach with an ailment, I will tell Hon. Members that.

• (1020)

How about the general public? The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond (Mr. Dingwall) stated in his memo to the Liberal caucus: "Nobody supports this Bill". There was a poll taken of members of the Canadian public and the following question was put:

> As you may know, the proposed bill would extend the period of time which brand-name companies are protected from having their drugs copied by generic companies . . . Those who support the Bill offer several arguments as to why it is necessary:
> (1) Companies which spend the money to develop new drugs should be protected from having their works copied just like any other invention.
> (2) If brand-name companies double research efforts in Canada, health care and quality of life will improve because of early access to new, high quality cures.
> (3) Canada is essentially a fair country and should be at least as fair to brand-name manufacturers as other countries are.
> (4) If we have to choose between developing research jobs in the brand-name companies or protecting existing jobs in generic companies, jobs in the brand-name companies would be better.

I could have developed much stronger arguments than those. But those are the arguments for it.

Those who oppose the Bill, the question goes on, offer several arguments as to why it is a bad idea:

> (1) Nothing should be done which might increase the price of drugs, because the sick and the poor will suffer.

We have heard that in the House many, many times from members of the Opposition.

> (2) Nothing should be done to help the brand-name companies which are mostly foreign-owned, especially if it hurts the Canadian-owned generic companies.

We have heard that before. It has been said that these foreign multinationals are the ones who will benefit.

> (3) Brand-name companies seem to be doing just fine in terms of profits, therefore, there is not a need to change things.

We heard that yesterday. Those companies are already getting profits so we should not change things.

> (4) Just because other countries offer greater protection to brand-name companies doesn't mean Canada is being unfair and needs to change its laws.

That is the "if it ain't broke then don't fix it" argument which we have heard from the other side.

What was the response of the public when asked, "Given those arguments how do you feel about it?" The arguments were interdispersed, sometimes leading with the positive and sometimes leading with the negative. Five per cent of the population said that the Bill is a very bad thing; 29 per cent said it is a bad thing; 54 per cent said it is a good thing; and 8 per cent said it is a very good thing. So 62 per cent said it is a good thing, yet members of the Opposition say that the public of Canada does not support this measure. That is nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Perhaps more telling is this proposition:

> I would support the bill if the government put in place a way of making sure that drug price increases would not be higher than the rate of inflation.

That is in fact in the law. We have done that. Eighty-one per cent said yes to that proposition, which means that 81 per cent of the Canadian population supports what we are doing in this Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: What the amendments suggested by the other place in response to Bill C-22 would do would be to return to an old Liberal policy which has been thoroughly studied and found to be inadequate. I will point out very clearly in ways that can be subject to no other interpretation but to verify that they are inadequate. I will provide the evidence and the references on which the evidence can be checked if in fact there is doubt in people's minds.

First, the Senate proposals make a mockery of intellectual property protection. They fail to recognize the importance of intellectual property protection for developing both a dynamic pharmaceutical industry and new products. I find it incredible that there is not that understanding—I really do. People say, "We cannot provide patent protection because it might hurt the consumers". I will show that we protect the consumers. I ask Hon. Members to think about that argument.

If we were to allow generic book publishing; if we said that any time a book came out another company could publish a copy of it provided it paid the author a 4 per cent royalty, then when Pierre Berton comes out with his new book at $29.95 for the hard-cover copy, a generic producer could put out a paperback version immediately for $2.95. Think of the hundreds of millions of dollars that that would save Canadian consumers of books. Think what that would do to the intellectual quality of the country and to its literacy. Think about those people who, for unfortunate reasons, are unable to participate in athletic activities by virtue of age or infirmity and who rely on reading as their main source of recreation—the poor, the elderly and the infirm. Think of the money we would be saving them if we had generic book publishing. This would be an enormously beneficial thing to the consumer. But think of the destruction and havoc we would be wreaking on our authors.

Indeed, in this case, Pierre Berton is a millionaire already so why does he need any more copyright protection for his book? Is it not fair to consumers who want to read his excellent books about the history of Canada, the CPR, the Yukon and so on that they be able to get a generic copy immediately rather than having to pay $29.95? I ask Hon. Members to think about that for a while, especially those who so casually dismiss the necessity of providing our scientists, researchers and those who discover cures with some kind of protection. Does it not make more sense that we say to our scientists, "Look, if you find a cure for cancer we will let you patent it and that is yours exclusively for 10 years; and if you get rich, alleluia"? Why is it a sin for a scientist to get rich on discovering a drug that cures cancer?

Mr. McCurdy: Name one rich scientist.

Mr. Andre: How do we in Canada so casually and easily say that, by cracky, if that scientist is working for a company, well, we cannot allow that company to make profits. That is tragic. My goodness, if it is a company that employs that scientist, we cannot do that. I wonder about the values of a country that thinks that a million and a half dollars a year for Tim Raines is fair because he is a super athlete, but, by cracky, if a company discovers a life-saving drug and makes a big profit, then that is a catastrophe, a sin; that is immoral. Surely, if we are walking the moral high ground we say as a society, as we have said, "we will make sure that no one in this country goes without that cure for cancer. We as a society will pay for those cures. We will provide for the hospitalization, physician care and the drugs they need; but we will not penalize those who do the research and discover those life-saving drugs because we recognize that they have created something of value, some property, and they have a right to it. Surely that is the only moral high ground.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: I heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Fort Garry (Mr. Axworthy) say, "Well, since it is mostly foreigners who have the patents in Canada, why should we protect these foreign patents? Only 5 per cent of the patents are Canadian". What that says is that it is all right to steal the intellectual property of foreigners. If in the process we steal the intellectual property of those 5 per cent of Canadians, well, that is the price we are willing to have those inventors pay. That is very magnanimous of us. We are prepared to see Canadian scientists carry the cost of our desire to take the intellectual property of foreigners.

• (1030)

That points out a symptom of what is wrong in this country. Only 5 per cent of our patents are by Canadians. That is a symptom of what the Government, and my colleague, the Minister of State (Science and Technology) (Mr. Oberle) have been repeatedly discussing. In fairness, it is also what the Opposition has been discussing. But when it comes to the specifics that will help, the Opposition says, "Oh, no. Yes, we are in favour of more science and technology, but do we recognize that the fruits of that effort should be patented? Oh, no". It is a source of continuous bewilderment to me how the Opposition manages to balance those two positions, or the intellectual gymnastics they go through to occupy both those positions at one time.

This Bill states that there will be 10 years of exclusivity. Before the Bill was amended by the Senate, it provided that if the drug is developed in Canada there is a 20 year protection. What was taken out by the other place was a specific advantage for research done in Canada. That was taken out by the Liberals over there while the Liberals here state that there are not enough Canadian patents anyway, so why worry about it.

Time and time again, both here and elsewhere, I have faced the accusation that this is giving in to pressure from the United States. We have had pressure from the United States. We have also had pressure from Britain, France, Germany, Switzerland, Japan, and every single country in the western industrialized world. We are a member of the Group of Seven. We pride ourselves on being a major industrialized country. Yet, in our patent laws respecting pharmaceuticals, we are equivalent to Bolivia and Taiwan. The rest of the industrialized world does not understand that. They say that it is unconscionable for Canada to do that.

It is correct that we have been under pressure, and quite properly. If the Opposition thinks that we can retain our status as a leading industrialized country, retain our moral suasion capabilities vis-à-vis our allies, and still behave like a Third World country in terms of our treatment of intellectual property, I wonder what planet they come from. How can we possibly do that?

Even more important, at least to me, is that anybody who is even peripherally aware of what is happening in the world of science today recognizes that there is an enormous revolution in the area of biotechnology. Exciting things are happening that will have a profound effect on our society. It is vitally important that we participate. There are a number of small Canadian companies in this business. We have excellent universities that turn out excellent people. These people want to do research in this area, and they are ready to do it. But they cannot if we say that the fruits of their research are not patentable, or that the patent can be infringed upon through compulsory licence immediately. That is what we are saying, and we are giving a death knell to Canada's opportunities in this high-tech area. For goodness sakes, do not make this tragic mistake. Do not deal Canada out of this biotechnology revolution. Do not be so short-sighted for political gain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: The Senate proposals contribute to the stagnation of pharmaceutical research development in Canada. Under our proposal we have a commitment from the industry, and it will be honoured because annually in the House of Commons we will have the figures to see if they have been honoured. If they have not been honoured, they will be reviewed and there will be an opportunity for redress during the review by Government in four years, and by Parliament in 10 years. There is a commitment for 10 per cent of sales to go into research and development, which is the international norm for this industry. Based on projections of the growth in the drug market that will represent $1.4 billion in new investments by 1995.

[Translation]

In terms of jobs, increased research will make it possible to create about 3,000 jobs for Canadian graduates in advanced technology disciplines. Universities, hospitals and private research institutions across Canada will benefit from this increase.

Mr. Speaker, various scientific groups that carry out research across Canada have long awaited a Bill that would promote research in this country. Bill C-22 is that long-awaited legislation.

At public hearings held by the Senate Committee as well, these scientific groups all spoke out in favour of Bill C-22, as adopted by the House of Commons.

[English]

We have already had over $800 million announced, contingent upon passage of Bill C-22. That research will happen. It is false for the Opposition to claim that is not the case.
