THE HEART'S FREEDOM.

From Miss Pardoe's last new work, entitled, "Romance of the Harem."

"The heart is a free and a fetterless thing, wave of the ocean! a bird on the wing! A restless steed o'er the desert-plain bounding, a peal of the storm o'er the valley resounding; it springs at all bounds, and it mocks the decree of the world and its proud ones, and dares to be free!

"The heart may be tamed by a smile or a tone from the lip and the eye of a beautiful one; but the frown and the force with its impulse contending, never find it as adamant, cold and unbending; it may break, it may burst, but its tyrants will see that even in ruin it dares to be free!

EMMA HAYWOOD.

"'Tis a strange world, and full of contradiction."

It has been often said and with truth, that the life of one who has dedicated himself in the study of books, is monotonous, and others uninteresting; but he who walks forth into this busy world, and mingles with its fellow men, finds endless variety, amusement, and instruction. 'Tis true, we often deceive ourselves; and vanity, the great ruling passion, sometimes causes us to persist in error rather than own that our powers of observation are fallible. "Ah! you cannot deceive me; I know human nature so well." I caught the remark as I was passing, and stopped to look at the speaker. He was a thin, slight, little man, with a hooked nose, over one enormous bridge he peeped into "human nature" with a pair of sharp little gray eyes, with scarcely enough of beauty in their expression to witch the heart of woman, but, nevertheless, of whose quickness of sight he was extremely proud.

"Do you know that old man?" said I to my friend.

"Yes, he is a broker in this city; a man of no standing among the merchants, his possessions rather more integrity than some of his class, though less generosity than any. He is such given to suspicious; never trusts any one with business which he can possibly manage himself—except when he happens to run in the opposite extreme. He has lately taken a partnership with him a young man, who was a favourite with him, by some strange chance, several months ago, and has had the pleasure to maintain his advantage ever since. He is a great hypocrite; has already secretly side with some of the old fellow's projects; and is gradually endeavouring, under the pretence of relieving him from care, to get the business entirely into his own hands. If he succeeds, he will ruin his old master by his extravagance, and then probably laugh at him in his credulity. The broker will never listen to any thing in his dispraise; his invariable answer to such attempts is as you have said—'It is impossible to deceive one who knows human nature so well.'"

I was much amused with this trait of character, though I could not help thinking that in the best and wisest among us are equally liable to suffer from the delusions of vanity.

It was a delightful day, and Broadway displayed more than its usual variety of beauty of fashion.

"That is a beautiful girl coming towards me," said I to my friend—"the one in black, looking with that tall young man. What an amiable countenance! what a playful smile!" "I think," said she, as she passed us, "the young man was perfectly right; he was insulting, and of course there was no remedy for him but to fight."

It was perhaps said without much thought, and the sentiment uttered by her tossed lips almost changed my opinion of her beauty. I silently gazed at the subject of her discourse to the young man in—, who had lately killed his antagonist in a duel, resulting from some dish private quarrel. Woman strangely foregets herself, when she becomes the advocate of duellists. As delicate as her form should be the soul that inhabits it. Instead of being the encourager of the rude passions of man, it should be her care to soften if not subdue them; to condemn these disturbers of society, both by word and action; and to uphold by her soothing support the truly principled, who braves the sneers of the crowd rather than offend his conscience and his God.

My reflections were interrupted by the stopping of a carriage near me, from which descended a lady whose face seemed familiar to me. As she came nearer, she glanced at me, and as her beautiful eye, sparkled with an expression of pleased remembrance, I recognised in her my old acquaintance, Emma Haywood. I was about to speak, but she checked me by a cold distant look, which betrayed at once her change of character, and reminded me, that as I had not seen her since the days of her childhood, I could not claim the right of a privileged acquaintance. As she turned away, I saw that her eyes were filled with tears; and as I saw it, and remarked the paleness of her cheek, I knew that, however the ceremonies of the world of fashion had quelled the vivacity of her disposition and clouded her feelings, they had not changed her heart, and I longed to converse with my little friend, whom, of late years, I had heard spoken of only as the dashing belle and vain coquette—terma, I was now convinced, entirely inapplicable to her real character.

Some years ago, before I had quite ceased to consider myself a young man, I boarded in a narrow street, and opposite to a small neat building inhabited by Mr. Haywood, the father of Emma, who was his only child. The window of my chamber looked directly upon their back piazza, upon which Emma used frequently to sit with her books or needlework, and delight me by the melody of her song. She was just about fourteen, and having been brought up by a pious and intelligent mother, in a retired manner, she had not yet learned to covet the admiration of the world, and therefore possessed the artless unobtrusive manners most natural to her age. Her father was in a respectable business, which, however, brought him no more than just sufficient to maintain in his family genteelly, providing every comfort, but rejecting all needless expense and useless show.

I became acquainted with the family, and used occasionally to visit them, though it was my chief delight to watch the young Emma. When unconscious of being observed, she would breathe her own happiness in the sweetest songs, or dance to the music of her own voice. I have often gazed upon her bright face, and graceful form at such times, and wished, that her life might always be as happy, and her spirit always as pure. I have followed her, in my own fancy, through the happy scenes of youth, till she grew up a lovely woman, and with a half pensive pleasure pictured her a happy wife to some noble fellow, who could justly appreciate her worth.

I called to bid farewell to the family, when I was about leaving the neighbourhood for a foreign shore, and Emma received my parting salute with the frankness of childhood, and bade me good-bye with unconstrained expressions of regret. Often, amidst scenes of dissipation and fashionable gaiety, has my fancy gone back to sweet Emma Haywood; and often have I wish myself again at the little window, amusing myself with watching her childish sports. But when I returned to my native place, I learned that Mr. Haywood had shortly after my departure, come in possession of a large fortune by the death of an old miserly uncle, who was thought to be miserably poor, until death forced him to disclose the secret of his hidden treasures. The money which had proved a perpetual torment to him, destroyed the happiness of the nephew and his little family. The house in which they had passed so many pleasant hours, was given up, as too small for their use. They removed farther into the city, occupied an elegant mansion splendidly furnished, bought carriages and horses, gave large dinner-parties, and, in short, entered with avidity into the dissipation of fashionable life.

Emma was a beautiful girl, and masters of all sorts being procured for her she became an accomplished woman. But, admired by many for her beauty and intelligence, courted for her fortune, and flattered by all, she soon lost, in the giddy mazes of fashion, the simplicity of her character; the edge of youthful enthusiasm wore off, and taught to disguise her feelings, to control the first impulses of her heart, and direct her actions and words, not by reason, but by caprice, it is no wonder that she should be thought of only as a beautiful, rich, and heartless woman. I had never met her until she passed me in the street, and had it not been for the momentary sparkle of her former self as she recognised me, and the involuntary tear which started to her eyes as she turned away, I should have concluded with the world. As it was, I sought and obtained an introduction. She passed for one of the gayest of human beings: she delighted the young by her wit and the fascination of her manners, while even the old forgot their sage maxims and stern morality in gazing upon her beauty, and receiving the soft attentions with which she well knew how to sooth their asperities, and flatter their peculiarities. But I, who had seen her amid such different scenes, liked not the change, and could not help thinking she was evidently supporting an assumed character. The sound of some simple melody would occasionally recall the recollections of past times to her mind, and she would shudder, as if the chord of memory vibrated painfully. I always noticed that she preferred the graces of Italian music to the airs that used to be her favourites; and if I attempted to speak of our early acquaintance, she would give the conversation a sudden turn, and that upon indifferent topics with the ease apparently of an habitual trifter.

The constant round of dissipation was too much for Mrs. Haywood—she sank under it; and Emma had to weep the loss of a mother to whom she was the only confidant of her sorrows. Her fashionable friends, finding their consolations of little avail, confined their attentions to ceremonial calls, and the gay Emma was now frequently alone and neglected. I again became her friend, and, from the mere want of relieving her sorrows by disclosing them, almost her confidant.

"I am not happy," said she one day, "I often wish myself again in retirement, but I cannot shake off the habits I have acquired; and, miserable as I am, should be still more so in any other situation. I am very proud, and I cannot bear to relinquish the station in society I now hold."

It was in vain to protest against such thoughts; she silenced me almost angrily, saying, her destiny was decided. There was a meaning in her words which I could not then fathom; but I afterwards learned it from an aunt of hers, with whom I happened to be intimately acquainted, and who afterwards supplied the place of her mother to Emma, in almost every respect.

"Emma is a strange girl," said my friend; "but although I see her destroying herself, from false opinions of her own character and capabilities of happiness, yet these opinions are too fixed for me to alter; and if I wish to remain her friend I must attempt it. Her father has lost a very considerable part of his fortune by imprudent speculations, and Emma, convinced that, were she no longer to mix in the gay world as the equal of the highest, she should be eminently wretched, is about to make herself the victim of her own ambition.—Among her numerous admirers, is one whose chief recommendation is his fortune, which is said to be immense. He has been refused by her more than once, in very decided terms. Hearing of her father's losses, he has again offered himself to her; and, protesting that her every wish shall be gratified, and the misfortunes which threaten her father entirely averted, he has gained her consent, and the deluded girl will shortly be his wife. He is old, ugly, and said to be extremely whimsical and passionate. He now almost worships her for her surpassing beauty; but when the novelty of that shall have passed away, he is not one of those to be won by the sweetness of her disposition and her dazzling accomplishments; and if she once finds herself neglected, I know not what will become of her. The unhappy girl will never bend to his caprices, though she would probably witness them in a silent scorn."

A few days afterwards, I heard that Emma was married to the rich old Mr.—. I have since met her sometimes, followed by a train of adoring sycophants, the gayest and most fashionable of them all. She has ceased to consider me as an acquaintance, and no tear ever dims her eyes now, at the thought of other days. She has learned the art of dissimulation to perfection, and is envied by all, as one of the best ones of the earth. Once, and once only, have I seen her moved; it was at a party, at which she was, as usual, the point of attraction. It was mentioned that the handsome young Edward B.—, who had been rather celebrated in the world of fashion as a pleasing poet, had that morning died of consumption—brought on, as was supposed, by some secret grief: the colour fled from the cheek of Emma, and it required all her self-command to check the tears which were rising to eyes of late unused to weeping. The plea of indisposition satisfied those who remarked, with surprise, her change of countenance; but catching my glance of pity, she haughtily remarked that she was now quite well; and begging the dancers not to interrupt themselves on her account, she joined their train, and was again herself. I recollected the amiable young man whom Emma had formerly favoured, and while the neglect she afterwards had shown him—even though she loved him—filled up the measure of her errors, I thought his fate far far preferable to hers. None will recognise the subject of this history; for all are deceived. Her deceit is greater and more complete than that of many; but she is not the only one who yields up happiness to ambition, pride, or vanity. Many whose eyes are bright, and whose words are gay, conceal heavy hearts, and find not in their choice of life, that which can fill the "aching void" within. Those whose study is man, will often be disappointed by such melancholy changes of character; and there are some who pass the "ordal" pure and uncontaminated, and discovery of one such spirit will compensate for thousands of disappointments. The diamond would not be valued, if it were not rare; nor happiness really enjoyed, if it were not hardily won.

OLYMPIC GAMES.

Most nations, ancient and modern, have been distinguished by some peculiar species of amusement. Of the various games of different nations, there are few perhaps, governed by better rules than those under which the Olympic games were conducted. Immediately before any of the candidates for engaging appeared, a herald proclaimed his entry, and demanded to know if any one knew him to be a profligate character, or guilty of any particular crime, or even guilty of any tyrannical actions—and if any crime were alleged against him, he was not permitted to contend for the prizes and striped of all honours; but if all remained silent, he was suffered to contend. The most solemn declarations were made both by those who awarded, and those who received the prizes, that the strictest justice had been observed. Those that were fortunate in gaining prizes had innumerable privileges granted to them; they were allowed to fight nearest the king in battle, and were always looked upon as men who had conferred great honor on the state. Indeed generally speaking, though some of their practices were rather of a barbarous character, they had a better tendency than might have been supposed. They, in the first instance, occupied that time which otherwise have been ill spent. Again, they made the combatants athletic and healthy, and astly, strongly acted as a promotion to honest and moral conduct. Regulated as they were, they were deemed as a badge of honour, and a passport for any purpose.

Amongst these games, foot-racing was the most ancient of the whole, and the wrestling, but the more inferior classes would sometimes

LONDON AND PARISIAN FASHIONS FOR MARCH.

Coiffures.—Turbans numerous; some are of silver blond lace, others of the class point, these last are in a majority. Some of the most admired coiffures are composed of black lace intermingled with diamond spots. Coiffures in history are very numerous, particularly those copied from the portraits of celebrated women of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries; these had dresses and particularly resplendent with diamonds.

Morning Walking Dress.—Silk pelisses of dark hues, or also flounced robes of plain materials; habits of the half-open form. Velvet pelisses, or satin shawls, trimmed with fur, or chenille, or cashmere fringe. Chapeaux either of black or dark colored velvet, or velours epingle, either of blue tints, or poussé, or trimmed with lace and feathers. Half boots of black morocco leather, the upper part composed of very strong silk, or very fine cloth.

Evening Dress.—Robe of green laventier, the border trimmed with a very broad band of black velvet. Fichu perles, also trimmed with black velvet; falling collar of English point lace. Black velvet chapeaux, with a vilette of black blond lace; the crown trimmed with black ribbons and black and green shaded feathers, and the interior of the bonnet with velvet capucines. Pearl grey satin redingote, closed in front by two mountains, which forms lappels, and are edged with black lace. A high corsage, tight to the shape, and short pelienne, trimmed with black lace, which descending in the fan shape upon the bosom, terminates in a point in the centre. Sleeves à la Jardinière, surmounted by a single volant, trimmed with black lace.

Dinner Dress.—Changeable silks are now entirely exploded in every department of the toilette, but striped ones are in very great request, particularly those striped in different shades of the same color; blue, green, red and grey, seem to be the hues most in request for these dresses. Some are made with corsages half high behind, but partially open and disposed in cross drapery in front; they display the chemisette, which is bordered with a falling tucker of white lace. Long sleeve of the Victoria form, with a cuff of lace or tulle to correspond with the chemisette. The skirt is trimmed with a single deep flounce of the material of the dress, a very narrow one falling over the hem.

Evening Dress.—Although rich and heavy materials are decidedly the mode for soirees non dansant, yet we see also several dresses of India muslin; these robes, when worn by young unmarried ladies, are for the most part trimmed with great simplicity. A single flounce head-dress, a bouillon, through which a colored ribbon is drawn, or else two or three rows of bouillons without flounces adorn the skirt. The corsage is either draped à la Sarrasin, or else it is ornamented with a fold forming a stomacher on each side, and a fall of lace disposed round the top of the bust. The sleeves are always short, moderately full, and terminated in general by a round lace ruffle of moderate depth.

Ball Dress.—Gold-colored tulle robe over satin to correspond; a low corsage descending a little in the centre of the bosom, draped in a profusion of small close folds, and bordered with broad lace standing up round the bust; it terminates in a sharp point. Short sleeves, tight at top, the lower part ornamented with three bouillons, two are white tulle. A trimming formed of puffs of white tulle descends from the waist to the bottom of the skirt, the puffs increasing in size as they descend; they are formed by loops composed of short white ostrich feathers; epis and sprigs of berries form of pearls. The hair disposed in soft bows at the sides, and a knot formed of plaited braids behind, is ornamented with a fancy jewellery diamond.

MISCELLANEOUS SELECTIONS.

Lord Chesterfield (says Lord Orford) thus directed a letter to the late Lord Pembroke, who was always swimming:—"To the earl of Pembroke, in the Thames, over against Whitehall." This direction was sure of finding him within a certain number of fathoms.

An illustrious person told Lord Chesterfield that he had drank six bottles of wine. "That," said his lordship, "is more than I can swallow."

Scaled Proposals.—A Vermontor, we understand, has written Governor Fairfield, requesting him to advertise for scaled proposals in taking the Province of New-Brunswick.

French gaiety.—In the campaign of 1812, a distinguished general officer of the French army was severely wounded in the leg. The surgeon, on consulting declared that amputation was indispensable. The general received the intelligence with a much composed. Among the persons who surrounded him he observed his valet-de-chambre, who showed by his profound grief the deep share he took in the melancholy accident. "Why dost thou weep, Germain?" said his master smilingly to him. "It is a fortunate thing for thee, you will have only one boot to clean in future."

A whopper.—We have heard of a man who is so tall that his pantaloons have to be woven in a rope-walk. He folds up like a two-foot-rule, and has to get on his knees to put his hands in his pockets.

An Editor in trouble.—A young lady in Shippensburgh says the New Orleans Freeman has threatened the editor of the Herald with a "locking" the first time she catches him out. His anxious mother had better keep him in. We would much rather meet fifty men, armed with pistols and bowie knives, than one of the tender sex of the borough of Shippensburgh when excited.

Advice to a gentleman in love.—"Are you in disgrace with the lady you love?" "No!" "Are you in favour?" "No!" "The medium?" "Yes!" "That is bad; you had better have had a quarrel. It is much easier to pass from storm to sunshine, than from India to the Pole," than to take indifferent dalliance into grace and favour."

The liberality of love.—In Tristram Shandy, Trina, giving an account of his beautiful Begone, who attended him during a fever, and relating the feverish dreams which disturbed his slumbers, says, "I was all night long cutting the world in two, and giving her half."

Irish Applause.—A funeral procession met the Lord Lieutenant on some of the roads about Dublin—halted, and gave him three cheers!

Melancholy Accident.—On Sunday last, Mr. Charles Le Tourneau, a merchant of Belesis, and son of P. Le Tourneau, Esq., formerly Cashier of the Banque du Peuple, was drowned in the River Richelieu. He had embarked about two o'clock in the afternoon with three other persons on a pleasure excursion in a boat. They had not proceeded an apron from the shore, when a sudden movement, to shift the sail, caused the boat to capsize. Mr. Le Tourneau, the father, was upon the river bank, but in spite of his utmost exertions he could not reach the spot where his son was struggling with the stream, before he had disappeared to rise no more. The shock of losing a beloved child under such distressing circumstances did not prevent him from a successful effort to save two of the unfortunate companions of his child, already feeble in their contest with impending death. The third was found dead underneath the boat, one of his legs being locked within one of the thwart, and his two hands clasping a bar. His name was Eustache Croteau, whose father was of the party, and one of those saved by the exertions of Mr. Le Tourneau.

The whole of this latter gentleman's family having assembled on the river bank, to witness the embarkation, were exposed to the agony of witnessing the desperate but vain efforts of Mr. Le Tourneau deceased. He was only 22 years of age—universally beloved and respected. His body was recovered from the water on Monday morning. — Transcript.

LATER FROM ENGLAND.

Two days later intelligence from England has been received by the packet ship Moro-gabala, which arrived at Philadelphia, bringing London dates to the 8th, and Liverpool to the 9th ult. The news is not of any great importance.

A dinner has been given in London to O'Connell, by the members of the Precursors' Society. About 900 sat down to table. There were 150 ladies present, who listened with pleasure to the eloquence of the great agitator. The F. n. d. line Hospital at Naples was destroyed by fire the night of Feb. 15, and 23 infants perished in the flames. A nurse jumped out of the windows with a child in each arm, and thus, by this act of female devotion, the whole train perished.

It is a singular fact, that while we are introducing into our houses stoves hitherto used in Russia, the Russians are adopting open fire-places, which, according to persons who have visited that country, are deemed a great luxury.

A beggar in Canton extorts money from the crowd by exhibiting the disgusting sight of his amputated arm embalmed.

Mr. Colley Grattan has been appointed to the office of British Consul at Boston, in the United States. This gentleman is the author of "Highways and Byways," and several other popular works.

A treaty of commerce between the Netherlands and the United States of North America has been concluded on terms advantageous to both parties; the duration of the treaty is fixed for ten years.

There is a story in one of the London journals of an attempt of two Americans to assassinate Madame Vestris, because her husband had spoken ill of the United States.

The supplies of good wheat from the Black Sea, but shipped from Italian ports, had been so considerably that prices had fallen.

It is stated in letters from Montreal that the steamer Charlevoix was taking in her cargo, and was advertised to leave for Quebec on Monday next.

Since our last the harbour has presented a lively appearance in consequence of the arrival in port of three more steamers—the British America, the Princess Victoria and the Cygnet. The Princess will commence her regular trips to Laprairie this morning at nine o'clock.—Several rafts have already arrived in port.—It is probable that the steamboat navigation between Montreal and Quebec will commence very soon, as the river is now completely open, and will soon be clear of ice. — Montreal Herald.

Conjecture was all alive in Montreal on Wednesday last in consequence of the appearance of fire on Tuesday night in two different and distant points. The Transcript says that a large barn full of straw was on that night consumed by fire about three miles above Chambly. This accounts for one fire—the other was apparently extensive.

The Annual Bazaar in aid of the Female Orphan Asylum of this city was held at the National School House on Wednesday and Thursday last. The profusion and variety of fancy articles exposed for sale were evidence of the zeal and industry of the ladies promoting this truly charitable object. Notwithstanding the weather and the condition of our streets were not the most favorable, the number of visitors was unusually large; and though we have not been able to learn the precise amount of the proceeds, we believe that it is ascertained to exceed £300.

Lieut. Col. Hope has issued a Regimental Order, on taking leave of the Queen's Volunteers and Highland Company, expressing his high opinion and approbation of the soldier-like manner in which both the Regimental and Garrison Duty has been done by them during the past winter, and of the unwearied assistance and zealous support of both Officers and non-commissioned Officers, afforded to himself in his capacity as their immediate Commanding Officer.

CALEDONIA SPRINGS.—We are requested to recall the attention of the public to the opinion of Dr. WILLIAM ROBINSON, of Montreal, which will be found in this number. We understand that this opinion was left by the gentleman on the Strangers' List, last June, while he was on a visit to the Springs, as an invalid, and that it was published at the time; but confidence in the efficacy of these waters coming from such high authority cannot be too generally known. We learn with much pleasure that the improvements at this health restoring establishment are in a state of rapid progress; that a great number of hands are employed about the new Hotel, which will be open for the reception of visitors early in July, and that even at the present time very good accommodations may be had for from twenty-five to thirty visitors. We also learn that a fresh supply of the water will be forwarded to some of the principal drugists in town, at the opening of the navigation.

Mr. Aubin, who is giving a course of lectures and experiments in chemistry at the City Hotel, on Thursday evening created the most lively interest amongst a numerous assemblage by administering exhilarating gas to several persons present. A general desire was expressed that the entertainment should be repeated; and we understand that on Thursday next another opportunity will be afforded of witnessing similar interesting and amusing experiments.

The schooner Nancy, Captain Vigneau, has entered for loading, and is expected to sail on Monday next for St. George's Bay, with provisions. She will be the first vessel to clear for sea this year.

A schooner will be dispatched in a few days to attempt the relief of the Airship Castle, wrecked on the Island of Anticosti last fall, and purchased at underwriters' sale by Mr. Hunter.

Two schooners arrived from below on Thursday. They were detained in the ice for a few hours.

A late number of Mackenzie's Gazette mourns over the loss of 700 subscribers who have withdrawn.

CALEDONIA SPRINGS.

THE favorable opinion I formerly entertained of the waters of the Caledonia Springs is MORE THAN CONFIRMED, as well from the benefits I personally derived from their use, as from what I observed of their effects on others. The water should be drank in moderate quantities before breakfast, and persevered in for some weeks: I least.

PROSPECTUS

Of the Fifth Volume of the CANADA TEMPERANCE ADVOCATE

THE Committee of the Montreal Temperance Society, in commencing another volume, earnestly request the aid of the friends of Total Abstinence in both Provinces to extend its circulation, by subscribing themselves and procuring as many subscribers as possible. The welfare of our country, the safety of our families, and the prosperity of the Church of Christ, demand vigorous measures to stem the torrent of intemperance which is rapidly spreading its destructive course over the land.

Amongst the many means for effecting a reform, the promulgation of truth, through the medium of the press has been, by the blessing of God, one of the most efficacious. Acting upon this belief, the Committee, besides making arrangements to render the Temperance Advocate still more interesting, have resolved to lower the price of the next volume fully ONE HALF, although at the present rates, its support is attended with considerable pecuniary loss. To sustain the undertaking at even a moderate sacrifice, prompt payment and an extended circulation are absolutely necessary. The friends of Temperance are, therefore, appealed to for renewed exertions, in order that the committee may be relieved in some measure from the responsibility assumed, and be enabled to continue the support of a means so necessary for the success of the Temperance Reformation.

The following are the terms of the fifth volume: When delivered in town, $$$ annum, 1s. $$$ copy. Sent by mail (except to post-masters) postage included, from 1 to 10 copies 1s. 3d. $$$ annum; from 10 to 100, 1s. 6d.; 100 and above, 1s. 3d. NO PAPER FORWARDED WITHOUT PAYMENT IN ADVANCE. All communications and remittances to be sent (post paid) to Mr. JAMES COURT, Secretary.

N. B.—Copies will be sent (gratis) to every Minister of the Gospel and Schoolmaster whose names are transmitted. Individuals and Societies unable to pay for the quantities they may wish to take, will be supplied at reduced prices or gratis, on making proper representations.

PILES, &c.
HÆMORRHOIDS—NO CURE NO PAY!
 Price $1—Hay's Liniment—No Fiction.
THIS extraordinary chemical composition, the result of science and the invention of a celebrated medical man, the introduction of which to the public was invented with the solemnity of a death-bed bequest, has since gained a reputation unparalleled, fully sustaining the correctness of the lamented Dr. Goldley's last confession, that "he dared not die without giving to posterity the benefit of his knowledge on this subject," and he therefore bequeathed to his friend and attendant, Solomon Hays, the secret of his discovery.
 It is now used in the principal hospitals and the private practice in our country, first and most certainly for the cure of the Piles, and also so extensively and effectually as to baffie credulity, unless where its effects are witnessed externally in the following complaints:—
 For Dropsy—Creating extraordinary absorption at once.
 All Swellings—Reducing them in a few hours.
 Rheumatism—Acute or Chronic, giving quick ease.
 Sore Throat—By cancers, ulcers or colds.
 Croup and Whooping Cough—Externally, and over the chest.
 All Bruises, Sprains and Burns—Cutting in a few hours.
 Sores and Ulcers—Whether fresh or long standing, and fever sores.
 Its operations upon adults and children in reducing rheumatic swellings, and loosening congeals, and tightness of the chest by relaxation of the parts has been surprising beyond conception. The common remark of those who have used it in the Piles, is "it acts like a charm."
THE PILES.—The price $1 is refunded to any one who will use a bottle of Hay's Liniment for the Piles, and return the empty bottle without being cured. These are the positive orders of the proprietor to the Agents, and out of the many thousands sold, not one has been unsuccessful.
CAUTION—None can be genuine without a splendid engraved wrapper, on which is my name, and also that of the Agents.
