It is false economy to postpone painting your property. Many months—perhaps years—must elapse before paint will return to 1913 prices, if ever. Meanwhile the wear and tear of weather is working more harm than any future reduction of paint prices would cover. Insure your house against decay by painting it with Matchless Paint.

A Wall of Resistance

Emphasis should be placed upon the conservation of strength and the building up of a strong wall of resistance against weakness.

SCOTT'S EMULSION

is used regularly by many, right through the winter, as a dependable means of conserving strength.

For the delicate child or adult, Scott's offers rich nourishment with tonic-qualities that are great in their ability to strengthen the body and increase resistance.

The Heir of Rosedene

The Game-Keeper's Hut

CHAPTER XXV. EAVESDROPPING.

While they sat there a man came close behind them—it was the second gamekeeper—and as he was standing along, with his head bent down, he did not see them until he was close behind them.

"I thought," she said, looking up, pale and wan, "that you were indifferent to him, that you cared more for the other, if you cared for either, and at the time I persuaded myself, not thinking that I did you no great harm in deceiving him."

"She paused for breath, and Edna said in a low voice:

"Tell me what you mean?"

"Yes, yes," assented Grace, struggling for composure. "I meant to tell you the first time they would let me see you, and you were strong enough to hear it. I knew the cause of your illness; I knew what had stricken you down—what was wasting away your youth and robbing you of the desire for life! Who should know better than I?—for was I not suffering the same thing myself—but I think I am stronger, however, than you, Edna—and—and—besides, I knew that he did not care for me; that all his thought was for you. Oh, Edna, think!—put yourself in my place. We have spent all our lives together, and had grown up side by side; how many times, in our play, he used to call me 'his little wife'! Is there any wonder that I grew to love him? I loved him, Edna, with all my heart and soul, and I dreamed, I hoped, I am sure, that he was beginning to care for me."

"With a rest of miserable humiliation the proud girl mastered her pride, and went on hurriedly: "Then you came, and it was all altered. I knew it—I saw the change that was to come, the first night we met. Do you remember? Ah, yes, you must! It was at the castle; he sat beside you all the evening; he talked to no one else, had eyes for no one else, and ears for no one until I played and sang; then he came back to me, but was only while the song lasted; when it was over he went back to you—to you, whom he had seen only a few short hours; and so it has been all through. I had no charm for him any longer—you stole his heart—not that it is not true! You—you did not encourage him! I do not mean that, Edna! That was one thing that used to madden me; that he should be won from me by you, who did not appear to care for your conquest!"

"She paused a moment only, as if to look upon the bitterness she had endured, and then went on, passionately:

"How often I have watched you together, he so gravely intent upon every word you spoke, so anxious to supplant your every wish, to place your chair, to hold your flowers—he had always a flower for you! and you, so indifferent, so absent, so weary. How could I dream that you loved him?"

"At last Edna found words to stop her. "Loved him! Of whom do you speak?" she asked, in a low, thrilling voice.

"Grace stared at her. "You ask me!" she exclaimed. "Will you say that you do not love Lord Mersey, Edna?"

"Lord Mersey!" echoed Edna, mechanically, as if the idea was too far-fetched to be noticed; then, when she did notice it, her face was suffused with a sudden red, and her eyes flashed indignantly, as she shrank back and confronted the pale, passionate face opposite her.

"Lord Mersey!—I love Lord Mersey!" she breathed.

Then the indignant look changed into one of troubled helplessness, and she hid her face in her hands tremblingly.

"At this juncture the silent figure at the back displayed a most extraordinary sympathy; his face flushed, too, but with a very different emotion; his eyes sparkled, and he made a step forward, as if he were actually about to speak, but, apparently controlling himself with a great effort, he shook his head and drew back, passive and watchful again.

"Grace pushed her hair from her forehead, as if she were bewildered. "Then," she said, wonderingly, "then my words bore Dead Sea fruit, whose bitterness I alone have tasted. Thinking to snatch him from you, I have sent him away, perhaps never to return home. Oh, God, this is as it should be—I deserve it!"

"And she hid her face in her hands. Then, before Edna could speak, she looked up again.

"You have never loved him—it was the other all the time. If I had but known! But my sin was as great. You forgive me, Edna? You will when you have heard my temptation; it was great, greater than I could withstand."

"But it was Edna's turn to grow passionate; she had been white and red by turns during the last few words, and now she stood, clasping the seat with one hand and holding up the other to silence the confession.

"No, no!—do not tell me! I forgive you any wrong you may have done, or tried to do me! It is all a terrible confusion! Don't tell me any more—not a word!—you have

Famous Old Recipe for Cough Syrup

Really and cheaply made at home, but it beats them all for quick results.

Thousands of housewives have found that they can save four-fifths of the money usually spent for cough preparations, by using this well-known old recipe for making cough syrup at home. It is simple and cheap to make, but it really has no equal for prompt results. It takes right hold of a cough and gives immediate relief, usually stopping an ordinary cough in 24 hours or less.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex (50 cents worth) from any druggist, pour it into a five-cent bottle, and add plain granulated sugar syrup to make 10 ounces. If you prefer, use clarified molasses, honey, or corn syrup, instead of sugar syrup.

It is truly astonishing how quickly it acts, penetrating through every air passage of the throat and lungs—loosens the membranes, and gradually but surely cough disappears entirely. Nothing but whooping cough or bronchial asthma, however, is a special and highly concentrated compound of genuine Norway pine extract, known the world over for its healing effect on all ailments of the throat.

Avoid disappointment by asking your druggist for "2½ ounces of Pinex" with full directions to give absolute satisfaction or money promptly refunded. The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

made a miserable mistake! I—I never gave one thought to Lord Mersey that could cause you a moment's disquietude! Oh, Grace, Grace!" she cried, covering her hot face with her hands and blushing with mingled shame and indignation. "If you knew, you could measure the shame I feel now! I to have been thought in love with anyone—anyone!" she repeated, almost passionately.

"But—" said Grace, grasping her arm eagerly.

"No, no!" cried Edna. "I will not hear any more! I forgive you—that is enough! I am sorry for you, for yes, I have suffered, as you say, but not for the cause you think. I forgive you, but never let us say one word of it again—never again!"

"Never!" and she sank into the seat, exhausted by the excitement of her strong passion.

Grace, pale and trembling, but with a change for the better in her face not to be mistaken, knelt down, and slid her arm round Edna's waist.

"Edna—dear Edna! how noble you are! If you would but listen to me! One word you shall listen to—Capt. Morton comes here on Thursday—"

"Not a word! if you know—if you know—you would not—insult me!"

Grace took the outstretched hand and pressed it to her bosom.

"I will be silent, at least I can obey your wish, dear Edna!" she murmured, and then as Edna's head dropped, the proud beauty put her long, Juno-like arms about Edna's neck, and kissed her.

The underkeeper remained quiet and watchful until the two figures rose and moved away, Edna having Grace's arm still around her waist, and then he came and walked up and down in front of the seat, lost in meditation, and staring at the seat as if it could solve the problem in his mind, and clear away the clouds of doubt and uncertainty. At last he seemed to arrive at some decision, for he suddenly slapped his legs with his strong but particularly shapely hand, entered his cot, and commenced to write a letter, finding some difficulty in the occupation, as was natural, perhaps, to one in his position. At any rate, whether it was the spelling, or the calligraphy, or the composition, which puzzled him, the letter caused him a great deal of trouble, and the destruction of no less than nine sheets of paper.

CHAPTER XXVI. AN INEXHAUSTIBLE STORE.

CAPT. MORTON smiled as he got out of the new carriage which had been sent to the station to meet him, and looked round the lawn and at the house. A few months ago it had been a wilderness—now, if it did not quite blossom as the rose, it had greatly improved.

Sir Edward met him in the hall, and the captain smiled again as he noticed, with quiet appreciation, the new air of stately importance which the once fidgety and insignificant-looking lawyer had acquired.

"Hell, More," he said, "you haven't allowed the grass to grow under your feet."

"No; you notice the improvement, eh?" said Sir Edward, nodding his head. "Yes, I think I have made some alterations already. I'll show you the new wing to-morrow—billiard room and that. Yet the old place has been going to rack and ruin long enough; it is quite time it traveled the other way."

Then the captain was taken to his room, a very elegant apartment, if not quite so handsome and tasteful as that he had occupied at Rosedene; and the captain noticed on his way that the interior as well as the exterior had been altered and improved. It was all new and glittering—too much glitter, perhaps, but that was Lady More's fault—no doubt.

Dinner was not served when the captain came down, and he found Sir Edward in the new library, another rich salon, smelling of the new bindings and morocco leather.

Sir Edward, looking up, noticed something about the captain that was strange to him; it was not in his dress, for the captain was faultlessly dressed, as usual. He was a little thinner than of old, and—yes, that was it—not quite so nonchalant. In place of the half-insolent languor there was a badly concealed anxiety and uneasiness. For the moment, as Sir Edward lolled back in his capacious chair, snug and prosperous, and the captain stood with his back to the fire, glancing over his brows round the room, it seemed as if the two men had changed places with each other.

It was not long ago since the captain had lolled in an easy-chair, and Edward More had been fidgety and restless.

They talked on the topics of the day, on the latest continental news, on everything but the subject that was nearest at least one of their hearts, and then, at last, the captain approached that subject.

"Well, Edward, have you seen her lately?"

"Edna, do you mean?" asked Sir Edward, although he knew quite well whom was meant. "Yes, I saw her a few days ago."

The captain nodded; there was no need to put any questions, that nod was a significant interrogatory.

"She has been very ill—that you know, of course, from my letters. Very ill, indeed. We didn't think we should pull her through at one time."

The captain nodded, and stroked his mustache with his white hand; Sir Edward did not see that it was trembling.

"She has been as bad as that?"

"Es bad as she could be. You will find her altered—altered, but not a whit plainer. I think she is prettier than ever—not that that will matter much to a man like you—"

"What do you mean?" said the captain, almost fiercely.

Sir Edward started and fidgeted slightly; there certainly was a difference in the once cool and suave-tempered man of the world.

"What do you mean? Do you suppose that I am indifferent to her welfare? Do you take me for a man utterly without blood or feeling—do you? Pahaw!" he broke off, with a sudden effort at his old manner, "one would think you had seen me carved out of stone. Let me tell you, More, I have felt the girl's illness more than you give me credit for."

Sir Edward nodded, but rather incredulously.

"Well, she has been ill, but she has been pulling round lately, and I think will soon be all right," he resumed.

"Does she—has she spoken of me?" asked the captain, with a strange kind of irritation, and a slightly heightened color.

Mrs. Wells of Petersburg Tells How.

Petersburg, Va.—"For two years my daughter suffered from a weakness and pains in her right side; at times she was so bad she could not do any work. For two years she was attended by the best physicians here, and both agreed that she would have to be operated on. I suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and at first she refused to take it, but finally consented. From every body how much good it has done her."—Mrs. W. D. Wells, 228 North Adams Street, Petersburg, Va.

If every girl who suffers as Miss Wells did, or from irregularities, painful periods, backache, sideache, dragging down pains, inflammation or ulceration would only give this famous root and herb remedy a trial they would soon find relief from such suffering.

THE PRINCE OF WALES IS LIKELY TO GO ON THE GRAND FLEET, OR RATHER WITH A PICKED CONTINGENT OF IT, WHICH, IF ALL GOES WELL, WILL VISIT AMERICA.

The Prince of Wales is likely to go on the Grand Fleet, or rather with a picked contingent of it, which, if all goes well, will visit America.

Sir David Beatty, before the final review of the Grand Fleet this summer. If the Grand Fleet is then sub-divided into three independent Fleets, which, as it is in the old days, Sir David Beatty would naturally take office as Commander-in-Chief of the Home Fleet, Sir Charles Madden, Lord Jellicoe's former Chief of Staff, might then command the Home Fleet, while Sir Michael de Robeck, the German Fleet, assuming that there is no truth in the suggestion that Sir Michael Wemyss would like to go back to the Mediterranean.

GERMAN FAITH IN SCAPA. Lord Jellicoe, in his new book, writes why the Germans did not take advantage of their great chance in the first winter of the war, when the fleet was at Scapa Flow with insufficient destroyers and hardly any anti-aircraft defence. He concludes that the Germans credited us with possessing, like themselves, proper harbor defences, and that it seems impossible to the German mind that we should place our fleet—our all—in a position where it was open to destruction. The rigidity of a German mind in this matter is born out in the following story. Very early in the war two German spies got the Orkneys disguised as neutrals. There were very few precautions taken those days, and ships were calling at Kirkwall. The spies got back to Germany, and gave the astounding information to the German Chief of Intelligence that there were no mines at Scapa. They persisted in this story under the closest examination, with the result that they were taken out and shot. The German naval authorities being quite convinced of their spies had been tampered with, and were bringing them in a triumph. It seems that it was the German faith in the British fleet that helped us to win the war. Lord Jellicoe mentions three alarms of submarines in Scapa Flow, but leaves doubtful whether any submarine could get in. One of the supposed submarines was a whale. The most serious attempt to get in was made according to a writer, where it was weeks before the armistice, and the attempt was very nearly successful. The report went in the fleet that a submarine was manned mainly by officers, who, when it became known that the German navy would not fight again, determined to make a gallant attempt for death or glory. Their end came suddenly. It has always been a puzzle to our officers why the German naval men should so little initiative or enterprise of any kind. The public are able, wonder, too, now they see the appalling catalogue which Admiral Jellicoe gives of the deficiencies of British fleet in destroyers, submarines, wireless, searchlights, and even in the armour and character of the big ships, in which Germany's faith was most firmly based. So small was the margin between the average available force and German force at a selected moment that there was a school of strategy with a very powerful political character which held that we should fight the German fleet whenever it appeared, but should wait until it reached a satisfactory position for our battle operations. It will thus

But in the course of this Allied intervention thousands of Russians have taken up arms and fought on the side of the Allies. How can we, simply because our own immediate purposes have been served, come away and leave them to the tender mercies of their old enemies...

You may be quite sure that the last thing the government desires is to leave any British soldiers in Russia a day longer than is necessary to discharge the moral obligations we have incurred.

Surrender Etiquette.

How Terms Are Arranged.

A parlementaire to arrange a surrender or an armistice has to follow certain etiquette which is laid down by the rules of war as established at the Hague.

A parlementaire consists of an envoy or envoys from the enemy, properly authorized, carrying the white flag and accompanied by a bugler or trumpeter to call attention. The person of the parlementaire are inviolable, provided they do not commit treachery, and provided the commander to whom they are sent is willing to receive them. Those who meet them must take all steps to prevent them from obtaining information, and for that reason it is usual to blindfold them when passing through the lines.

A Sympathetic Word.

Either the commander-in-chief or a prominent general of the defeated army goes in person with the parlementaire. General Gablenz, after the defeat of the Austrians at Sadown, in 1866, proceeded to the Prussian lines under the flag of truce, and was there received by King William. The King, being the handgave about his eyes, supposed that he was a wounded enemy officer, and spoke some words of sympathy to him before discovering the mistake.

At Sedan, in 1870, after Captain Winterfeld and Colonel Bronsart in Schellendorf had summoned the French army to surrender, a parlementaire consisting of General Rodde came out under the white flag, and delivered Napoleon's letter of surrender to the King of Prussia on the heights above Frenois. That evening the French commander, General Wimpfen, came in person to arrange the surrender. The terms were so severe that he refused at first to accept them, and only after the threat of a bombardment did he give way.

After Appomattox, in 1865, General Grant came in person to General Lee, commanding the United States army, to arrange terms for the Confederate army. Grant had accepted the surrender that day, and was in a private uniform, with his shoulder badges to show his rank as the leader of the largest army which, up to that date, had ever fought in war.

Admiration for the Vanquished.

He was not only a great soldier but also a great gentleman, and he has told the world what his feelings were at that tremendous moment. "I felt anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe who had fought so long and so gallantly, and had suffered so much for a cause, though that cause was, in my belief, one of the worst which a people ever fought." And it is a characteristic tenderness for the conquered, he engaged in conversation on other topics with Lee at Appomattox. In 1909, General von Moltke made his surrender in person to Lord Roberts, after his stubborn and gallant resistance. In honor of the defeated Boer leader, Lord Roberts wore for the first time since he opened his campaign his ceremonial sword, a heavy one, with a jeweled hilt, and received his opponent in the words, "I am glad to meet a man like you. Like you, I have been in want of food, and the last man which the British staff could produce was sacrificed to his honour.—T.M.

The police archives in Lichtenberg were burnt and 90,000 marks were stolen from the post office.

WILL MAKE NO PROTEST.

LONDON, March 11. In answer to a question in the House of Commons to-day, C. B. Harnsworth, Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs, said that the British Government would not protest against the Irish resolution adopted by the American Congress.

TO BANISH EMPEROR CHARLES.

PARIS, March 11. Information has reached responsible quarters in Paris that the Austrian Government is contemplating the enactment of a law banishing former Emperor Charles. This report has aroused discussion here as to what country the ex-emperor would be likely to retire. It is said to be certain that he would not go to Italy or Germany, while the Scandinavian countries, with Holland's trouble over the presence of former Emperor William as a warning, are not considered likely to receive him. The choice would seem to lie between Switzerland and Spain. Either of these two Powers, however, would require guarantees from the Powers. It is thought, against any possibility of future demand for the ex-ruler's extradition.

BRITISH SQUADRON AT LIBAU.

STOCKHOLM, March 11. A British squadron has arrived at Libau, according to the advices received here. On board the warships are members of a British commission.

DRYAN SUPPORTS LEAGUE.

WASHINGTON, March 11. William Jennings Bryan issued a statement here to-night endorsing the League of Nations, but suggesting amendments to the proposed constitution which among other things would preserve specifically the Monroe Doctrine, enlarge the proportionate voting power of the United States, and make it clear that each member nation might decide for itself whether it would support the League of Nations.

LONDON, March 11. Lieut. Porter, formerly an officer in the German aviation service, has been tried by court-martial, according to Berlin advices received in Copenhagen, and forwarded by the Central

AN AVIATION FEAT.

TOULOUSE, March 11. Lieut. Le Maitre, a leading French aviator of the war, has completed a flight from Toulouse to Casablanca on the western coast of Morocco, a distance of 1,900 kilometres (approximately 1,180 miles) in eleven hours' actual flying time. The Lieut. and a passenger left Toulouse at noon Saturday, and landed at Casablanca at five o'clock Sunday afternoon. The whole voyage, which lasted 29 hours, was made in two stages, the first from Toulouse to Alicante, Spain, and the second from Alicante to Casablanca.

LAST NIGHT'S BUSINESS LECTURE.

PRIZES FOR ESSAYS DISTRIBUTED TO SCHOOL CHILDREN.

There was a large attendance of merchants and clerks at the Casino Theatre last evening when Mr. C. F. Bond, of Halifax, repeated his lecture on Modern Methods in Business.

PRIZES FOR ESSAYS DISTRIBUTED TO SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Hon. John Anderson, who presided, said that the question of unravelling the problems of the merchant was of importance to all, and he was pleased to help forward the movement by being present. In introducing the lecturer he said his name was a familiar one to Newfoundlanders. In this case it was business Bond they were to hear from—a specialist in Business on National Development.

PRIZES FOR ESSAYS DISTRIBUTED TO SCHOOL CHILDREN.

Before the lecture started Mr. Anderson, presented the prizes which had been offered by the lecturer and himself at the meeting a week ago of School Students, for the best essays on "What impressed me most at the Lecture."

He explained that Mr. Currie of the Daily News had kindly judged the Essays and made his award as follows:—

First prize, $5 cheque for the best Essay, and a fine fountain pen for the best handwriting, won by Miss Alice Pippy, student of the Springdale Street Commercial School.

Second Prize, $3, cheque for the second best Essay won by Master Edward P. Foran, student at Christian Brothers School.

Third Prize, $2, cheque for the third best essay won by Miss Annie Noseworthy, of "Spencer Lodge," Church Hill.

About eighty students wrote essays in the competition, amongst which Mr. Anderson said, were many of very high order of merit. The whole of the essays, some of which were written by youngsters of from 11 years of age, showed very considerable and practical thought; and that the entrants had a good grasp of business subjects, which would vie with many grown ups.

One, with more than ordinary aptitude, in writing of the troubles of the merchant with a poor business system quoted Shakespeare's "Merchant of Venice."

"Glancing an eye of pity on his losses 'That have of late so huddled on his back; Enough to press a royal merchant down."

Mr. Anderson after presenting the Prizes to the successful students, announced that Mr. Bond had undertaken that every person who had entered the Essay Competition would receive from the National Cash Register Company of Dayton, Ohio, a souvenir booklet, which would remind them of the lessons of the lecture and be useful when they would shortly start out for themselves in the business world.

The audience followed with great attention the talk on Business Efficiency, and the pictures shown by Mr. Bond. Particular emphasis was laid on the value of newspaper advertising to the retail merchant. The lecturer said in part "More people can be reached oftener and at less expense by newspaper advertising than by any other medium. But don't spend a few dollars advertising and then say advertising doesn't pay. Make advertising a continuous policy of your store and you will not be disappointed with results. The proper method of preparing newspaper advertisements was graphically shown. Window display problems, efficiency of clerks, store organization, selling methods, system in retail business, and delivery problems were also discussed in an interesting manner.

The three reel motion picture film "Troubles of a Merchant and how to Stop Them," which was shown in connection with the Lecture, was a big feature of the evening. In a vivid manner the troubles of a merchant who conducted his store along out of date selling lines were shown. And then the transformation that was wrought when the same merchant was induced to install modern business methods. It was a striking picture lesson of great value to the merchants and clerks present.

In a straight talk to the Clerks present, Mr. Bond laid down a number of business axioms that would help to make them more efficient, of which the following are a few:—

Fix a goal; then work toward it unceasingly.

Don't be afraid to do the things you were not hired to do. It is the men who do more than they were hired to do who win success.

Learn the things the man needs to know who fills the place you want to fill some day.

Don't think because a thing has always been done one way, that that way is necessarily the best. Be alert to make improvements.

Remember always every minute you spend making yourself more valuable to your employer makes you more valuable to yourself.

The clerk, who wears a smile, has a big start over the clerk with a perpetual frown.

The man who doesn't do any more than he is paid for, never gets paid for any more than he does.

Have your heart in your work.

How Do You Walk?

No two people walk alike, and by watching persons as they move about a very true estimate of their character can be gained.

The man who walks easily and naturally is the successful man, but the easy but careless walker is easy-going, unaffected, and cares nothing for public opinion or appearances. People who walk easily but ungracefully are efficient, and possess strength of character, but are lacking in polish. A springing step denotes an alert mind, and a dragging step the apathetic temperament.

A mincing walk shows a mincing nature. It is the walk of the self-satisfied, artificial person who rarely accomplishes anything. A short, quick step, however, denotes business-like qualities, and an active mind which lacks originality, while a long, quick step means a long head and an ability to "make good." A long, slow step, on the other hand, shows a certain slowness of mind.

A rolling gait denotes the uncertain mind of the person ruled by circumstances, while those who walk stately and unobtrusively are firm to obstinacy.

Let us go back a few years farther to 1830, and we find slave-holding on British territory legal. In a Parliament of rotten boroughs Birmingham and Manchester were not represented, but Grampound and Old Sarum were. Until 1834 there was no grant for education, and then only £20,000. No Factory Acts existed.

The savage penal laws had just been repealed, and even still fifty or sixty human beings were hanged every year and hundreds packed off in convict ships to the Colonies.

Then look at the world at large. In 1830 the only Republic was America, and she had a total population of twelve million, one-tenth of whom were slaves.

Our own Colonies were small, primitive communities, having constant trouble with the natives. Italy was parcelled out, Austria holding its richest provinces; China and Japan were closed to foreigners; India was ruled by a trading company, and constantly invaded by northern races; Russia, it was feared, might overwhelm Europe; and Germany was a collection of dukeries.

In 1830 there were no railroads, no ocean steamships, no telegraph, no cheap post, no free press, no public education, no pure water, no main drainage. Trade Unions were criminal associations, and Dissenters were regarded almost as rebels.

How Far Back Can You Remember?

By RUTH CAMERON.

RUTH CAMERON

How far back do your conscious memories go? That question came up around the open fire the other night and brought forth a rather interesting symposium. The average age to which the ordinary person claims that his memory extends is five or six, but two people insisted that they could see still further back into the mists of childhood. One woman whose mother died when she was three, after a six month's illness, was sure that she could remember things that happened when she was not more than two and a half, as her mental picture book contains several pictures of the mother—one at a dinner when the mother wore something all white, and one when her mother stood at the top of the stairs and called to her father to come back and hear about an errand she had forgotten to give him.

What pictures I have are rather of places and objects than people. Several others of the group admitted that this latter was their experience. I wonder if it is not because our visualization of people is colored and obscured by the way they look today. The woman who remembered so clearly how the little mother that died when she was three used to look has no subsequent pictures of a gray haired mother to blot the other out.

What Sort of Things Do You Remember?

The sort of thing one remembers is interesting to contemplate and discuss, too. For instance, a man who has a very fine sense of direction said one of his earliest recollections is evoked by the sight of a picture of himself at the age of five. And the one thing he remembers about having that picture taken is the way in which they went from his house to the photographer's house. He thinks he could trace it out if he tried.

"The boy is father to the man," and there is a certain whimsical pleasure in tracing out what traits and habits and memories he has inherited.

Do You Remember Feelings Or Do You See Pictures?

Another interesting thing to examine is the character of your memories. Are your memories recollections of disembodied states of mind or are they pictures? I am one of those unfortunate people who do not visualize. I cannot call a familiar face to mind at will. I cannot recall just how to place looks, and when I memorize I do not memorize the thing as it looks on the page but rather by sound. Hence my memories are of the disembodied spirit kind. For instance, one of my earliest memories is of my scorn, at the age of four or thereabouts when my cousin aged two or more, cried because her mother left her alone in the room when they were visiting us. Yet I do remember how my cousin or her mother looked.

When The Little Boy Next Door Went To School.

Again, I can almost feel the poignancy of my loneliness when the little boy next door who had always played with me went to school for the first time and I, being several months younger, was left at home. And I remember how glad I was when he came back at noon. Yet I have no picture of him either going or returning.

Milady of the dark lustrous locks will be surprised to know that she cannot shampoo her hair in the same way as her blonde cousin can do.

STORY-TIME.

"Tell us a story," comes the cry from little lips when nights are cold.

And in the grate the flames leap high.

"Tell us a tale of pirates bold,
Or fairies hiding in the glen.
Or of a ship that's wrecked at sea."
I fill my pipe, and there and then
Gather the children round my knee.

I give them all a role to play—
No longer are they youngsters small,
And I, their daddy, turning gray,
We are adventurers, one and all.
We journey forth as Robin Hood
In search of treasure, or to do
Some deed of daring or of good.
Our hearts are ever brave and true.

We take a solemn oath to be Defenders of the starry flag.
We brave the winter's stormy sea
Or climb the rugged mountain crag
To battle to the death with those Who would defame our native land.

We pitch our camp among the snows
Or on the tropics' burning sand.

We rescue maidens, young and fair,
Held captive long in prison towers;
We slay the villain in his lair,
For we're possessed of magic powers.

And though we desperately fight
When by our foes are we beset,
We always triumph for the right;
We have not lost a battle yet.

It matters not how far we stray,
Nor where our battle lines may be,
We never get so far away
That we must spend a night at sea.
It matters not how high we climb,
How many foes our pathway block,
We always conquer just in time
To go to bed at 9 o'clock.

Peroxide ironed into a scorched piece of clothing will remove the scorch.

A small vegetable brush makes the time of cleaning cooking dishes shorter.

Bass, pickerel, pike, perch or porgy can be used in making delicious fish jelly.

Cheese-making is one of the most satisfactory ways of disposing of dairy products.

Boiling water in which raisins have been soaked can be used in making cocoa.

Chopped seeded raisins and almond paste make a delicious filling for little cakes.

A double boiler used when cooking milk in any form insures more perfect cooking.

Leftover noodles can be combined with leftover Hamburg steak for a casserole dish.

Layers of crisp pastry can have a filling of preserves and ultimate in a delicious dessert.

An excellent luncheon dish is boiled rice with shredded chicken breasts added to it.

Don't forget to increase the amount of green food and fruit as the spring advances.

Hominy has its richness enhanced when cooked with cheese, white sauce and cracker crumbs.

Potatoes should always be eaten with meat to offset the acid-producing qualities of the latter.

Shredded fish marinated with French dressing is an appetizing addition to potato salad.

Cabbage, shredded, with shredded cocoanut and almonds, makes an uncommon and good salad.

"Thumbs Up."

When Tommy or Jack wish to intimate than any particular announcement or happening is "a bit of or-right!" he indulges in the cryptic expression, "Thumps up!" Or if it is "nah pooh!" he changes the phrase to "thumbs down!" accompanied by appropriate action. But how many members of our Army or Navy know the origin of these actions?

At Rome, in the times of the emperors, and all over that mighty empire, a great feature was made of the public games.

One of the items always on the programme of the games was the fight between gladiators.

The favorite fight was that between the Retiarius (a man armed with a net and a spear) and the Secutor (who was armed in a much heavier manner). The Retiarius would attempt to cast his net over the Secutor so as to render him helpless. If he failed he had to run swiftly away, and the Secutor ran after him.

The Retiarius was armed with a spear-pointed spear, and if he succeeded in ensnaring the Secutor the spectators cried "Habent!" (he has it). After which, if they wished the Secutor to be killed they held their thumbs down, and if his life was to be spared they held their thumbs up.

LOVING THE GERMANS.

Inspired by psalms and sermons, on the shelf, I try to love the Germans as I would love myself; but when I've loved the critters for minutes five or ten, I need a course of bitters to tone me up again. It's hard to love the people who trampled Belgium down, destroyed the church and steeple, and burned the helpless town. It's hard to love the blighters who raise a sickly whine when whipped by allied fighters, and shooed across the Rhine. And yet I keep on trying to love them more or less; the effort keeps me crying, and sweating, I confess; and when I've loved the duifers a half an hour or so, no other being suffers the agonies I know. I'm weary and exhausted as though by mortal ills, by doctors I'm accosted, who say I'm needing pills. I feel my doom's been spoken, I'm hobbling on a crutch, I'm weak and bent and broken from loving Hunns too much. A man may love the Russians nor find existence vain; but if he loves the Prussians he cannot stand the strain. And still, inspired by sermons which teach that hate's a fake, I'll try to love the Germans until my spare ribs break.

Safety or Victory?

JELlicoe AT JUTLAND.

Mr. A. H. Pollen, the eminent naval historian and critic, in the Weekly Dispatch, commenting on Lord Jellicoe's account of his handling of the battle fleet at Jutland, drew attention to the singular contrast presented by Lord Jellicoe's and Admiral Jellicoe's conduct. The latter seemed to be beginning to fight to win, while the former seemed to be fighting solely with the safety of his fleet.

In the course of forty pages... Lord Jellicoe gives reasons, some of them technical, why, in his judgment, it was altogether wrong to run the risk of materially reducing the strength of the Grand Fleet in the event of a German victory, in fact, did not intend to fight if it meant serious risks. In his account of his conduct he shows how at every moment a consideration guided his every move.

Mr. Pollen says that the effect of Lord Jellicoe's method of deployment at 6.15 p.m., "was to take the whole of the action out of the hands of the German fleet," and that the result was a later period of the battle, which was a second time "promptly turned away, thus opening the range for the Germans by nearly 2,000 yds. Contact was never recovered."

Mr. Pollen concludes: "Victory was thrown away on March 31st by deployment and refusal to face the torpedoes."

"What will the verdict of history be upon these events and the man responsible for them? Well, it will be impartial and an impartial verdict, for the man is clearly above and beyond criticism. He has told his story with such unparalleled frankness, he has thrown himself so completely on the generosity of his readers, that no harsh word or epithet can ever be employed against him. If he was wrong his error has cost the country and Europe an incalculable price. But he has given all his reasons for his actions, and if he is condemned it will be out of his own mouth."—Daily Mail.

Eczema Now Curable

A wonderful new discovery for the treatment of skin diseases called the D.D. Prescription for Eczema has dual advantages. It is a scientific preparation, compounded by a famous specialist. It is a simple antiseptic wash, a reliable home remedy that should always be kept on hand. Apply this D. D. Prescription to the skin and instantly the awful itching ceases. The very moment the liquid touches the skin, the agonizing, tormenting itching disappears. This soothing wash penetrates the pores, killing the germs that cause the disease and restores the skin to a thoroughly healthy condition.

Don't delay your cure; get a bottle of D. D. Prescription to-day. Sells everywhere.

Persons Who Take Drugs

Where Doping is a National Vice, drug-taking has been the downfall of nations, and for that reason it has been the greatest scourge from which the world has ever suffered. Millions all have the same dreadful ailment in the long run. They break down the nerves, weaken the will, and leave their victims in a state of insomniac, hoping for sleep, yet dreaming the horrible dreams which come to them.

There is not the slightest doubt that drug-taking was the great cause of the fall of Russia. It was notorious that Russian society was soaked in drugs, and the deadly increase may be shown from the fact that while from 1870 to 1880 the increase in crimes due to drugs was 19 per cent., from 1900 to 1910 the increase was 118 per cent.!

Turkey is another nation which owes its downfall to opium and drugs. So common is the vice in Constantinople that it is the fashion for ladies there to make one another presents of gold and silver mounted syringes for injecting morphia—a form of opium—into their veins.

Opium Eaters.

In 1600 Turkey was at the height of her power, and had swept up to the gates of Vienna, and Hungary was a Turkish province. But drug-taking was introduced, and now Turkey in Europe will soon be but a name, as the Roman Empire is, and its fall due to the same cause.

In Rome, vice in every shape and form conquered the ruling classes through the terrible habit of taking drugs, and rushed the greatest empire of ancient history to her doom.

All civilized countries in the last few years have passed drastic laws making it illegal not only to import opium, the most deadly drug, but to be caught smoking it.

In America the habit of drug-taking has been steadily on the increase for years, and it is now estimated that over a million and a half people use opium regularly. It is openly taken in pill form in most of the big convict prisons. In one prison, for example, it was found that out of 1,600 convicts, 1,200 were regular drug-takers.

In China in many districts nearly half the population are opium eaters and smokers; while in the Malay Archipelago there are whole communities who regularly hold opium-smoking parties. A dish of little pieces of opium, about the size of peas, is passed around to the guests to smoke till they are in a state of hopeless intoxication.

Another drug that is extensively smoked, and which has very similar effects to opium, is hemp or hashish. Every other Afghan one meets is a user of the drug, as well as most of the tribes along the Indian frontier and in Persia. Practically every Persian takes this, or a similar drug, as much as we do tobacco. Another nation which takes hemp in huge quantities is the Moors and in South Africa the Hottentots use it under the name of dacha.

Arsenic and Beauty.

One of the most curious facts that is taken by a whole nation is made from a poisonous toadstool found in Kamtschatka, where it grows in great quantities. Everyone there takes the drug. From the time they are little children, and often drug-parties are held lasting a week without cessation.

In some parts of Austria, and especially in the hilly country towards Hungary, there exists the extraordinary custom of eating arsenic, one of the most deadly poisons. There, however, the peasants are so accustomed to its use that they are able to take huge quantities without any harm and they assert that the remarkable beauty of their women folk is entirely due to constant drugging with arsenic. But of all the most extraordinary forms of drug-taking in existence the most remarkable is the eating of clay, which is indulged in by many tribes, while nearer home some hundreds of cartloads of a kind of earth are eaten annually in the north of Sweden and Finland by the peasants, who say they can no more do without it than an opium-smoker can do without his pipe. In North Germany, too, this earth is eaten, by the poorer classes, who call it "berg-mehl," or mountain meal.—Pearson's Weekly.

The Duty of the Press.

The responsibility of the Press at the Peace Conference is hardly less grave than that of the delegates themselves. Writing in this Review at the time of the first Hague Conference, Mr. W. T. Stead used words concerning "the keepers of the ears of King Demos, the daily councillors of the peoples," which will bear repetition to-day. "Will they," he asked, "rise to the height of their grave vocation and use their unequalled position of persuasion and influence in order to make the most of the present opportunity, or will they, like many an evil councillor or ancient despot, seek to make their own fortunes and strengthen on their own position by ministering to the follie of the hour? It is much easier to tell off good descriptive writers to describe cricket matches than it is to rouse the conscience and direct the intelligence of a nation. But at the Day of Judgment these things may appear in a somewhat different light." At this moment the Press owes a stern and onerous duty to the public, but in turn the Conference owes a duty to the Press. The world is determined that this is not to be a hole-and-corner Peace, a Peace negotiated behind the darkness of closed doors, and only exposed to the cold light of outside criticism when the decisions of those who made it have become irrevocably facts accomplished. That would be a return to the old tortuous methods of secret diplomacy which could not be tolerated for a moment, but for a few anxious hours, when it was announced that beyond official communications to be issued by the Inter-Allied Drafting Committee, the newspapers would be allowed to publish no information regarding the work of the Conference, it appeared that a ban was to be placed upon the publicity of its proceedings. Happily, the outcry which arose caused wiser counsels to prevail, and it was finally decided that representatives of the Press should be admitted to meetings of the Full Conference, but upon necessary occasions the deliberations of the Conference may be held in camera. Publicity is the very life-breath of the Conference's work. No mischief, which might ensue from the premature leakage of news which should have been kept secret are to be compared with the advantages of a wisely-interested and wisely-guided public opinion, and we are glad that at the outset of its proceedings the Peace Conference would have decided, even on second thoughts, to trust the Press.—Review of Reviews.

Guarding the British Museum.

The authorities of the British Museum are now having returned the treasures which were removed to places of safety during the war.

Most of these treasures were stored in the London Tubes, in order to make quite sure that no aerial bomb would destroy them. The museum itself, too, has been protected with sandbags and wire-netting wherever possible.

But in the ordinary way, apart from air-raids, the British Museum is one of best-protected museums in the world as regards risks from fire or burglary.

It is most unlikely that it could ever be burnt down for there is enough water in the tanks to last the firemen for several days' continual pumping, in case the main hydrants broke down.

Every one of the policemen who helps to guard the building is also a trained fireman, and the hoses are so arranged that there is not a spot in the building which these policemen could not swamp with water within a couple of minutes.

The burglar who has his eye on any of the treasures in the national collection would stand little chance of succeeding, for, after the building is closed to the public, every gallery and room is examined and then locked up.

An hour later every room is again searched thus providing a double precaution against fire and burglary. It takes an hour nearly to examine and lock up the rooms every night.

Famous Shop Murders.

TRAGEDIES AMONG SHOPKEEPERS

It is a remarkable fact about any kind of crime committed that there should be an almost similar crime committed years before. The recent murder of Mrs. Ridgley, a widow who kept a small general shop in Hitchin, is not the first of such murders by many. It is supposed that she was murdered by two men who went into her shop late at night on pretence of looking for lodgings.

In October, 1904, two men entered the shop of an old woman named Emily Farmer. The unfortunate woman, who was sixty, lived alone over the small newsagent's and tobacconist's shop she kept in London, and the murderers chose the unusual time of half-past six in the morning, for carrying out their dreadful deed. The two murderers, men named Donovan and Wade, were arrested shortly afterwards and both paid the penalty on the scaffold.

A Liverpool Murder.
One of the most mysterious murders of a woman in a shop took place in Slough, in a butcher's shop, in 1881. The murder has remained unexplained to this day. The victim was a woman named Mrs. Reveille, and she was sitting at her desk one evening when she was struck down by a butcher's cleaver, the shop door being open at the time.

The woman was alone at half-past eight in the evening, when the butcher boy left, and before twenty minutes to nine she was discovered dead. In that brief time she had been murdered with not a single clue to trace the murderer left behind.

Many people will recall the sensational Liverpool murder in December, 1913, of a Miss Bradford, in a shop in Oldhall Street. As in the case of Mrs. Ridgley, the murder was committed by two men, one of whom, named Sumner, was finally captured and executed after one of the most exciting man-hunts of recent years.

Who Killed Mrs. Samuels?
Every newspaper in the land printed his photograph and a close description of him. It was, indeed, estimated that over twenty million copies of the wanted man's photograph were distributed at the time, and every hotel, lodging-house, hospital and infirmary was warned to look out for him. Yet he had never gone out of Liverpool and had spent the week before he was captured taking girls to the pictures!

Who killed Mrs. Samuels in a milk shop in Bartholomew Road, Kentish Town, one afternoon in 1887? It is fairly certain that three men were concerned in the affair, and that they ly afterwards and both paid the penalty on the scaffold.

Who killed Mrs. Samuels in a milk shop in Bartholomew Road, Kentish Town, one afternoon in 1887? It is fairly certain that three men were concerned in the affair, and that they must have known the unfortunate woman's husband was on his usual milk round at the time, but they were never arrested. It is certain that the three were disturbed before they could rob the shop, for they fled after taking only 25s.

The Open-Shop Door.
Another unsolved shop murder was that of a Mrs. Squires and her daughter at a shop in Hoxton, in July, 1872. The two kept a small stationer's shop, and were murdered in broad daylight at midday, and the shop and living rooms ransacked for money and valuables.

The whole time the murderer was engaged in his dreadful task the shop door was open, yet by sheer ill-fortune no one entered at the critical time, and he got away and was never captured.

One of the most amazing reasons for committing a murder was that given by Meunier, who killed a Mrs. Pearcey. She kept a small general store in Bromsgrove, and was killed with an axe by Meunier, a travelling pedlar, because, as he confessed, he thought it would be a nice thing to do.

Twelve good men and true decided it would be a nice thing to hang him, and accordingly he was executed a few months later by Billington.
