CHAPTER XXXV. A PRETTY PILOT.

"Afraid!" exclaims Hal, clasping her to him—"you afraid? You are the bravest girl in the world, and you will come. Yes, I know you will. Now, let me think. The day after to-morrow, darling; we must go to-morrow!"

"To-morrow?"

"Yes"—and he strokes the silken head—"to-morrow. Now, you must be brave, and do as I tell you. To-night—no, to-morrow morning—you must pack up a few things, what you want, only really what you want, just a little bundle; and then you must come out to this tree with it at—yes, at three o'clock. Let me see; what does the count do in the afternoon?"

Verona smiles.

"He goes to sleep."

Hal grins.

"Poor old man, quite right of him. I wish I could give him a sleeping draught for to-morrow. Well, when he is asleep, not before, you must come here; but sleep or not, you must not be later than four, not a minute, for we may have a long way to go. Anyhow, you'll find me waiting for you; the rest you can leave to me, darling."

Breathless, panting, she looks up at him.

"Papa!" is all she says.

"Well," he says, "will he be miserable because you are made happy?"

She hangs her head and smiles. Love is always clever at argument. Then she looks up suddenly.

"And suppose—suppose we are overtaken—ah!"

Hal's face darkens ominously, but brightens almost instantly.

"I don't think that's likely, darling," he says, and then he laughs, actually laughs. "You forget," he says, in answer to her look of surprise, "that I've seen your horses; and I was thinking that I'd give any pair of them twenty miles start of the day; and if we manage properly, we ought to get twenty miles start of them."

All aflame with the prospect of action—it is suspense and inaction that overwhelms your Englishman—the boy's face is all aglow with hope, and love, and courage.

"Cheer up, darling," he says, just as a sailor might speak to his sweetheart; "trust to me, and I'll have you out of the count's clutches long before the day after to-morrow. You are not afraid now?"

"No," she says, and she puts her hands on his shoulders, and looks at him with a little quivering smile; "no, I'm not afraid now."

There is a moment's silence, in which the eyes, the hearts speak each to each; then she starts:

"Listen! There is the clock striking. Can we have been here an hour? Ah, how the time flies—flies! I must go, yes," with a long, wistful sigh; "I must go; they will miss me, and—ah! what is that?" and she springs to him, trembling.

It is a man's footstep, coming across the dry grass.

With a whisper of caution, Hal draws her close to the ground, just as a man's figure is seen amid the trees.

Hal's breath comes quickly, for he has recognized the man. It is the fellow who passed and repassed the stable door while he was talking with George.

Almost breathless, they crouch and watch. The man stands looking about him for some minutes—an eternity, it seems—then he goes off quietly, sneakily.

They wait for five minutes, until the man passes almost out of sight.

"Now," says Verona, "I will go."

"Go, then, darling," he says; "we part for the last time to-night. Verona," and he blushes as deeply as women do, "will you give me a kiss?" And she kisses him.

CHAPTER XXXVI. JOY WITH THE DAWNING.

Whether he treads on earth or sky, Hal scarcely knows. To see him one moment, one would think he had come into an immense fortune; the next, he thrusts his hand through his hair, as if he had suddenly been made chancellor of the exchequer; once or twice he stops and looks around cautiously, but no one is in sight, and soon he is near the castle and less cautious.

Before him lies an adventure, an undertaking, the like of which he has read about in novels, but has never met in real life. Quietly he pulls out his pipe and smokes away ardently.

"It oughtn't to be so difficult," he says to himself; "it's always easy enough—in books; but so I notice most things are. The running away I—and the boys—can manage easily enough; there's no difficulty about that; but when we've got to where we're running to—that's what bothers me! Oh, my darling—my darling! Yes, I spoke the simple truth when I said I'd rather see the count and her dead than he should have her!" and, with a flash of stern determination, he walks into the stable yard.

He takes his man, George, into his confidence, and together they complete the preparations for the elopement. The programme is carried out next day without a hitch, until the lovers reach Derbach.

That little village has been selected as a safe retreat because it is off the main roads and near enough to the castle to be thought an unlikely place for the runaways to stop.

Hal leaves the princess at a little inn, and goes to the village priest. The cure listens sympathetically to his story, but says he cannot marry Hal and Verona, as they are not of the same religion.

In despair the young man prepares to take the princess back to Forbach, but then he remembers Jeanne. He dispatches George with a note to his sister, begging her to come to him at once.

Meanwhile, at the King's Schloss, Lady Lucelle has guessed that Hal and Verona have eloped, but, for reasons of her own, keeps her knowledge to herself and, indeed, invents reasons for Hal's absence. She has, too, been devoting her time to persuading Clarence Lane that the marquis has ill-treated Jeanne, that Jeanne is unhappy, and that Clarence has a chance of winning her affection if he will fly with her.

Vane, conscious of Clarence's infatuation for Jeanne, and believing that she does not care for himself, decides, after a talk with Charlie Nugent, to carry her away to England. Charlie consents to act as host to the guests remaining at the Castle.

Greatly moved by Vane's confidence, Charlie does not hesitate, when he meets the love-mad viscount a few minutes later, to tell him to go on to Norway at once. Clarence agrees to leave that very night.

Lord Ferndale tells Jeanne that he wishes her to accompany him to England the following day. She hesitates a moment as she thinks of her brother and his trouble; then she accedes to her husband's wish.

"Don't think I'm interfering or trying to annoy you," he said again. "But if there is anything I can do to help you..."

She shook her head.

"There isn't anything... I ought to have known better than to let you hear that I was crying... There's nothing the matter, I—"

Then quite suddenly she broke down again into bitter sobbing. "Oh, I'm so miserable—so utterly miserable—I wish I were dead!"

Micky was appalled; he had heard women say that sort of thing before, and had said it himself scores of times, but never with that note of tragedy which he heard in this girl's voice.

Ten minutes ago he had considered himself the most miserable of mortals because he had been let down over a dinner; he was ashamed of his temper now as he stood there in the starlight and listened to this girl's sobbing.

"Look here," he said after a moment, "you'll never feel any better if you stay out here in the cold. I don't suppose you've had a respectable meal for hours either—I know what women are. Where do you live? You'll soon feel better when you get beside a fire and have something to eat."

"I'm not going home any more," she said.

She spoke quite quietly, but with a sort of despair which there was no mistaking.

Micky was a rapid thinker. He had clean forgotten his headache. This was adventure with a capital letter. There was still something of romance in the world which his faded palate had not yet tasted.

"I'm sure you're tired," he said gently, "and probably fed-up. So am I. I was just wondering when I heard you crying: it made me feel a sort of kinship with you—it did, upon my word. If I'd been a woman I dare say I should have been howling like anything. Will you come along with me and let me give you some supper? I'm hungry too."

She shrank back from him with a little gesture of fear.

"Oh no—please let me go!"

She tried to pass him, but Micky barred the way.

"You can't walk about the streets all night," he said determinedly. "The cat will hate it anyway, even if you don't mind." There was a hint of laughter in his voice, though he had never felt more serious in all his life.

"And if you don't want me to take pity on you, you might at least take pity on me... please don't think I'm a bounder trying to annoy you or anything like that... perhaps I want a friend just as badly as you do..."

He stopped, agast at his own temerity.

"If you do," she said tremulously, "I am more sorry for you than I can say."

"I'm glad you said that," Micky answered, "because now you'll come along and have that supper with me. There's a little cafe quite near here that I know. If we are both miserable we can at least be miserable together."

Something told him that this girl was at the end of her tether; that she was desperate, and his first casual curiosity concerning her deepened in the most surprising fashion.

He felt in some inexplicable way that a curtain had been lifted from a phase of life hitherto hidden from him; as if he were standing on the threshold of a new world, where women only weep for something real and tragic, not just butterfly tears of petulance like the women of his own class.

The girl was silent for a moment; then suddenly she laughed, a hard little laugh of recklessness.

CHAPTER I.

"Nothing!" There was a note of exasperation in his voice. "You were crying—I heard you, and people don't walk about the streets at this time of night and cry if there's nothing the matter. If that's a baby you've got with you, you ought to know better than to—" He broke off. She was laughing, a weak, uncertain little laugh.

"A baby?" she said tremulously. "It isn't a baby; it's a cat."

"A cat!" Micky's voice was full of disgust. He looked down at her from his superior height with sudden suspicion. If this was just a hoax?

"Well, what's the matter anyway?" he asked again.

She looked away from him without answering.

Micky began to feel a bit of a fool; he wished he had not yielded to the impulse to follow her. After all, it was no business of his if a stranger chose to walk about this road and weep; he looked at her impatiently.

Her hair beneath its not very smart hat shone golden in the lamplight, and the little oval of cheek and rounded chin which was all he could see of her averted face somehow touched a forgotten chord in his heart and made him think of his boyhood and the girl-mother who had not lived long enough to be more than a mem-

SHE GOT THEM OFF HER MIND BUT—

Have you a sympathetic imagination? When she came home she gave me this further interesting account. Her daughter was much surprised to see her. What had made her come? Why your letter. "Oh, that letter!" I wrote it when I felt awfully discouraged. I often do that when everything has been going wrong, just sit down and write a letter and it makes me feel ever so much better. Things began to go better right after I wrote it."

What Sympathetic Imagination Does. Sympathetic imagination is what people lack who make complaints that cause workers to lose their jobs. Who blow up the telephone girl if there is an instant's delay in getting a number? Who make promises and then disappoint people, especially a child or an old person?

No one can be really unselfish in the higher connotation of that word without having sympathetic imagination. Sympathetic imagination is another phrase for the "put-yourself-in-his-place habit."

Golden Spurred Gamecocks.

Our ancestors dearly loved to witness a stand-up fight, whether it was waged between men, beasts or birds. Cock-fighting especially appealed to them. Kings, nobles and common people vied with one another in breeding these game birds, frequently on an extensive scale.

Benefit Day

Monday night next will be ice-men's benefit night at the Prince's Rink and an interesting and varied programme of games and races is being arranged. One of the features of the evening will be a hockey match between the two teams of girls which have already played twice, each side winning one game.

Golden Spurred Gamecocks.

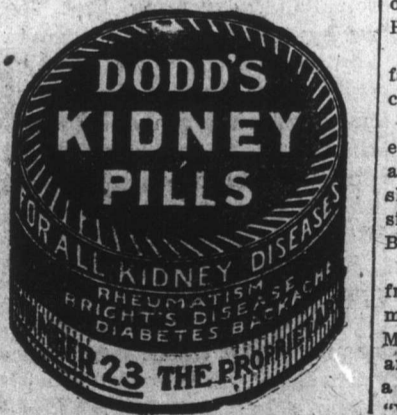

Insects, he says, are often terribly formidable opponents for their size. Ants, for example, will tackle almost anything in reason that you place near their nests. Communities of ants have their warrior class, and two fighting ants of different tribes will put up a great battle, and with their powerful nippers make short work of one another once they get to holds.

Gamecocks With Golden Spurs.

Gamecocks were artificial spurs or heels when "set" against one another in the cock-pit. These spurs also known as gaffs, gaffs or goblocks, were made of almost all metals—steel, iron, copper, brass, bronze, silver and even gold; and their manufacture was an ancient and honorable industry, the memory of which lingers to this day in the names of well-known London thoroughfares, Cockspur Street, near Charing Cross, where the bulk of these artisans lived.

Shipping Notes.

S.S. Rosalind arrived at New York on Tuesday morning and leaves for Halifax and this port on Saturday. S.S. Canadian Beaver leaves Halifax to-day for this port with general cargo to the Furness Withy Co. The following message was received from Capt. Cross of the S.S. Kyle at 8 o'clock last night:—"Steaming slowly through closely packed ice since 3 p.m.; at 7 p.m. sounded on Burgeo Bank; dull, foggy weather."

suspicious circumstances seem to oc- cur and no action is taken against any man.

The whole country is vitally inter- ested in the fisheries, and everything that is calculated to hamper the pro- tection of the fisheries or to inter- fere with their success should be viewed with the greatest concern by the people of every District in the Island. This Coaker policy, both at the outset and all through its exist- ence, has been playing the very mis- chief with our fisheries, not alone with them at present but with their future prospects. It is quite possible and altogether probable that as a re- sult of our difficulties with European countries, and especially with Italy and Portugal, where we have aroused the fish importers to bitter anger, we will lose these markets entirely, or, at any rate, have our pre-eminence there seriously threatened by Nor- wegian and French and Icelandic competition, and all because Mr. Coaker got the bee in his bonnet that he could compel people in foreign countries to buy our fish at prices he would dictate. In pursuance of this crazy policy he has brought our fish- ery to the verge of ruin, impoverished our people, and threatened the solvent existence of the country, and if we are ever to have peace and cer- tainty in our fisheries hereafter, there must be an end put to Coaker domi- nation. The first step towards that end is to defeat the Government candi- dates in Harbor Main District on Saturday next. If they are elected then the Squires-Coaker Party will pursue its present methods, and com- plete the ruin of the country which they have begun, and which has reached a stage that no man could have imagined a year ago. If they are defeated, on the other hand, they will be checked in their mad career, and will observe some prudence and cau- tion in the incendiary tactics they are at present pursuing. Therefore the people of Harbor Main can do an im- portant public service by rejecting the Government candidates and vot- ing as one man for the nominees of the Opposition Party.

DR. JONES AND CAPT. LEWIS.

Model Farm Water Service.

LABOR ALONE WILL COST $70,000. The Harbor Main edition of the Star states that last spring some seed po- tatoes were given away free by the Agricultural Department. Many of the farmers had suspicions that this was the case. Potatoes of any kind were scarce then and the Government started selling at $7.50 per barrel, but as the demand increased the price was raised to $9.00, and finally went to $14.00. Every farmer who bought seed at the Agricultural Office knows this is true, but they thought it was only a case of a little profiteering. They are now assured by the Star that they were being fleeced by five civ- ilians for favors.

Terras Defeat Saints. IN POOR EXHIBITION.

The Terra Novas completely outplayed the Saints in the first game of the Cup series last night, defeating them by 15 goals to 4. There was a spark of interest shown in any part of the game and before the end the players themselves became theatrical. At no time during the game did the Saints look as if they were likely to do anything, although Robertson, Munn and Field got in some excellent work.

THE FIRST PERIOD.

From the very start the game developed into a bombardment of the ball and only the excellent playing of Forsythe kept the score down to what it was, though that was not enough. Before the game was 5 minutes old Clouston had notched up two goals and Canning two goals for the Terras. Shortly before the close of the period "Doc" Munn found the once and for all goal, scoring a third goal. When the gong sounded the Terras were 4 to 1 in favour of the Terras.

THE SECOND PERIOD.

Nothing worse than the first half was done in the second period. In spite of this, the Terras kept up their bombardment of the opponent's line to such good effect that they added 5 goals to their tally. Canning getting 2 whilst Clouston and Bob Stuck one each. During this period Robertson got 2 goals and the Saints, in the eighth and 9th when the gong went.

THIRD PERIOD.

The Terras had an even more complete walk-over in the third period. At times the Saints showed signs of waking up. Field obtaining the fourth and last goal. The Terras succeeded in bringing their score up to 15 before the end of the game. Leu Clouston and Bob Stuck one each. The gong sounded with the score in favour of the Terras, it was a relief of both players and spectators.

The line-up was:—

St. Andrew's Society

The successful card tournament and dance which was held by the St. Andrew's Society in their club rooms last night, was a most successful affair. The rooms were filled to overflowing by the large crowd of members and visitors. The whole affair was conducted by the Society's Social Committee in its usual manner.

The principal object of the members is to make their visitors feel at home and that they always succeed in doing so. The card tournament started at 8.45 and continued until nearly 10.15 when supper was served. After supper, an attempt at dance was held and was well enjoyed by all present. The party incidentally holding several more of these social gatherings during the winter season.

Boat Makes

Trepassey.

Due to ice conditions, the schooner "Harbert Warren, Captain Gerald" was forced to put into Trepassey on Saturday. Capt. Power is the youngest skipper sailing out of this port and is on his maiden voyage. He reports that he experienced very stormy weather whilst trying to make the coast.

"Polly Wogg" Writes From the Antipodes.

Hill View, Sutton Forest, Australia.
Dear Friends,—So you all think we have forgotten Newfoundland; well we have not by any means. I am still living and I have the same old beak and can still sing God Save the King and the Marseillaise. I fly all round the garden both here and in Sydney. Diana and Daphne just love being up here; they do so love their ponies. They go for such lovely rides; sometimes if time and work will allow, their mummy goes too; she rides on a big horse named Skylark. The ponies' names are June, Rocket and Nellie. Nellie was once named Topsy, but she was renamed after our dear pony in Newfoundland; she is black, and just sweet.

We all had a delightful time when H.R.H. the Prince of Wales was here; he enjoyed my singing. I liked to sing with Dame Nellie Melba, she said I had a real nice voice. The new Pansy (she is a grey blue Persian), has three new kittens, their names are Brownie, Nigger and Babs, do you like their names? There is a new dog, a spaniel, a lovely brown one named Peggy; she is really Peg O' My Heart, after that nice young lady who acted that part so well while we were in Newfoundland. Diana and Daphne and Pansy send love and all the best of good wishes for the coming year to all their friends in Newfoundland. I am now sitting on the verandah whistling and singing, and talking about pretty Polly. It is very hot here just now, but I do not mind that; but there are some that do, though I just whistle and sing while some one else does my writing. You see there is not our dear Mr. Cake who used to type our letters for us. I hope you are all well and very happy in the Orphanage of Newfoundland. We wish you all a merry Christmas and a very happy, prosperous New Year.

Your ever loving old friend,
POLLY WOGG.
(With the above letter was enclosed a donation of $5.00 for the C. E. Orphanage, as a more tangible evidence of interest in the children at that institution.)

Married at Indianapolis

News has recently been received of the marriage of Miss Jennie M. Ryles, only daughter of Capt. Henry Ryles, of Bay of Islands, to Dr. D. M. Terry, at Indianapolis, U.S.A. The ceremony took place on March 4th. Prior to the wedding, Miss Ryles was a Red Cross Nurse, being on duty at the U. S. Army Hospital, 44 West Wheeling Street. The young couple received the felicitations of numerous friends.

The Flag Incident.

L'Evenement, of Quebec, says:—"When the United States Government with impunity allows, over-excited crowds to insult the British flag, it commits a fault marked with ingratitude. The fault lies in allowing the public peace to be disturbed by demonstrators whose political passion is greater than their respect for the law of a country whose hospitality they enjoy. The ingratitude consists in permitting a base group to insult the noble flag that so recently protected the transportation to Europe of nearly one million souls of the American Republic. During the war, the United States flag was not very widely carried on the Atlantic Ocean, and if it had not been for the victorious pursuit of the German submarines by the British navy, the United States would have been able to disembark its troops in France only at the cost of a most cruel and humiliating sacrifice of brave men. At that time, the British flag was guardian of the honor of the Stars and Stripes. Can such service be so soon forgotten? It is the same with regard to ourselves. Is it not with gratitude that we Canadians ought to remember that during those four years of crossing and re-crossing the ocean, the British flag protected our valiant troops, so that not one Canadian transport was sunk by pirates? The British flag has not yet been submitted to any insult in this country by any group of hostile agitators. If ever again people attempted to go to such excess we ought to see the Canadian flag to the Union Jack and then punish whoever showed disrespect towards those two inseparable emblems. In this matter, the Anglo-phobes may, perhaps, pretend that we are displaying an imperialist sentiment. Not at all; we have in view only our national interests."

It will cost each gentleman five dollars, each lady two dollars and fifty cents to become a full fledged member of the St. George's Society. If you can afford to do so you ought to become a member.

Very satisfactory underclothes can be made from pongee. Dry pongee garments thoroughly before ironing. If curling irons are heated in boiling water, they produce a prettier wave and do not break the hair so much.

Lecture on St. David.

Delivered to Lodge Dudley, S.O.E.

A most interesting and instructive lecture was, on Tuesday night, delivered before a large and highly appreciative audience by Mr. G. B. Lloyd, P.D.D.S.P. of Lodge Dudley, S.O.E.S. On the platform were President B. Taylor, who introduced the lecturer, and Past Presidents Andrews and Crowther. In a very able and lucid manner Mr. Lloyd dealt with the life of the Patron Saint of Wales and what it means to Welshmen, the world over. Mr. Lloyd must have gone to considerable trouble in his research work for data for this lecture as there does not seem to be any important fact in connection with St. David's life which has escaped his notice. At the conclusion of the lecture a hearty vote of thanks was proposed by Past Pres. W. P. Butler, second by Past President Crowther and carried by acclamation. It is interesting to note that a copy of Mr. Lloyd's lecture has been placed with other records of the current year, in the "Llyfrgwl Genedlaethol Cymru"—the National Library of Wales.

Trinity College of Music.

Local Exhibition for 1920.

Intimation has been sent to the Sisters of Mercy at Parisus, that a local exhibition of Senior Grade has this year been awarded to Laura M. Cantwell. The value of the exhibition is nine guineas.

This is the second time this talented pupil has gained a Trinity Exhibition, the first time being two years ago when she gained one of six guineas. Laura is evidently a musical prodigy, for she was only eleven years old when she took the examination which gained her this valuable prize, and which is generally taken by pupils of maturer years. She is a daughter of Mr. Cantwell, the druggist of Brigus, who is to be congratulated upon having such a talented child.

Bloodhounds

Catch Murderers.

On Sunday, March 10, 1886, murderers were tracked down by dogs in Colorado, one of the largest of the United States of America. A deputy sheriff had been murdered at Walsenburg, a village near the Southern border of that State, and four Italians were thus caught and confessed their crime. On their way to prison they were shot dead by the mob, and two others, imprisoned on suspicion of having shared in the crime, were lynched in their cells, or received capital punishment without legal trial, a practice named from Charles Lynch, a justice of the peace in the state of Virginia, who lived from 1738 till 1796; and in 1780, towards the close of the War of Independence, greatly exceeded his lawful authority by punishment of persons who supported the British Government there. The dogs used were bloodhounds, so-called because their peculiar power of scenting enables them to follow the track of a wounded deer or other quadruped or a man who has been in contact with blood. Slowly and carefully they search, and if they lose scent they go back to the original starting line, and make another attempt to follow it. In England and the European Continent, dogs were formerly much used for hunting purposes, but by the ancient Normans they were employed in pursuing and catching human beings, and in modern times in the United States for overhauling and capturing runaway thieves—until slavery was abolished there; such animals were used by the Allies in the late war against Germany.

How to Treat the Local Editor.

Expect him to be a prophet, mind reader, and encyclopaedia. Never tell him anything of interest that he might print in his paper, unless it contains a free advertisement for yourself.

If he asks if you have any items of interest, tell him no, and then if he does not publish the fact of your grandmother having died in the old country, last week or that you had friends call on you, tell him his paper is no good and never has any news in it.

If you tell him anything give him the wrong information and then chaff him for it, or if he finds you out in time and gives you a rag, get mad.

Or tell him only part of what he asks and then if he does not print the thing just as it happened, call him down for it.

If there is anything you really want printed, never send it into the office until a few minutes before the paper should be in print.

If he should work overtime very often just to oblige, tell him he must be making lots of money and scandalize him for being too mean to employ help.

If he has a few more items sent in from another district than from the home town one week, tell him he is boasting places outside more than his local district and threaten to boycott him if his paper does not contain a little more home news and come out earlier in the week.

Expect him to give to every charitable cause brought to his notice and do a whole lot of work for nothing.

Never pay your subscription until he presses you for it and then get mad and discontinue it because he asks you to pay for arrears.

If he sends you the paper after your subscription expires, let it keep on coming, and then tell him you did not want it. If he discontinues your paper at the expiry date tell him it is a gross reflection on your integrity.

If he prints an advertisement you don't like, don't advertise your own business to counteract it, but play the part of a school boy and refuse to play the game.

Expect the editor to pay an advanced price for everything he uses, but "kick" when he asks an advanced price for his products.

Expect him to be fearless in his criticisms, but let him understand that he must always respect you.

The Stormy Petrel
of English Journalism
Tells of Fifty Years of Battles.

Frederic Villiers, known to the world by such picturesque titles as "the stormy petrel of English Journalism," "the old war eagle of the fourth estate," "the D'Artagnan of war correspondents"—artist, camera man and writer—has just issued two volumes of memoirs covering "five decades of adventure."

In a foreword, he assures his readers that they will find no word of fiction in the pages he has written. "Every incident," he says, "I have set down can be fully corroborated by comrades, many still living, who have shared my vicissitudes."

Frederic Villiers is probably the last survivor of a departed race—a war correspondent who was welcomed at the front. Before he was 26 years old he had been an eye-witness to ten big battles and as many more skirmishes. From the days of the Paris Commune, in 1871, down to the siege of Verdun, hardly a war or a border scrap of the world over has taken place without Villiers being there at some stage of the game with his camera and notebook.

Before the kodak was invented, he made pencil sketches on the battle fields and he was the first to make the moving picture camera an aid to the war correspondent's work. A veteran of twenty-one wars, big and little, he made many a rendezvous with death, piled his art amid the crimson-streaked snows of the Balkans while shot and shell took their toll of human gun fodder around him, and in the parching desert sands where the British squares were diminished by encircling savage hordes.

War was his field of industry—his meter. He did not moralize about it, his one thought was always to get to the front, where things were happening, and to get at once into the action of the play—it was the romance, the glory, the heroism, the dramatic effects that largely appealed to him.

With all the big fellows of his own craft, he had achieved the master's degree. He stood under fire with Archibald Forbes at the battle of Plevna, sketching the holocaust around him while Forbes wrote an account of the bloody scene for his paper, the London Graphic. He was with "Khivra" MacGahan in the Russo-Russian war, with Creelman at Port Arthur and with Winston Churchill at the Boer war.

During the world war, then a veteran of 65, he and Philip Gibbs, disguised as Belgian refugees, tramped the fields to get up to the front, a privilege that had been denied them at the British War Office. The Russo-Turkish, the Chino-Japanese and the Balkan wars found Villiers always where the fighting was heaviest and he followed the varying fortunes of the British through all of the old-time Egyptian campaigns as well as later through Mesopotamia.

A choice of episodes is difficult in such a wealth of material, but we will select a few of his "moving accidents by field and flood and hairbreadth escapes in the imminent deadly breach" from his bristling pages.

At the battle of Plevna he had sketched his way along to the very battle front, absorbed in his work while the dead and dying were piling around him:

Charged Russian Guns Alone.
"I had advanced with the Russian skirmishing line toward the river when the Russian general, observing a strong body of the enemy's cavalry about to work round the flank of our

"A moment later, flushed and breathless, I found myself trying to explain, in snatches of Russian, French, German and English, to the general and his staff, who had ridden up to the emplacement, the reason for my charging the Russian guns."

On the March to Khartoum.
In the desperate march of the British desert column in 1884, on its way to relieve Gordon at Khartoum, Villiers volunteered with a British square that attempted to fight its way through the hordes of the Mahdi to the Nile to get water for the famishing soldiers. Two of the war correspondents fell by his side, but he, with his marvellous luck, escaped unscathed. It was hot work and vividly pictured in Villiers's pages:

"General Stewart had been wounded early in the action . . . Cameron of the Standard now met his fate, shot through the lungs. The band of death grew tighter and tighter. Something must be done. In a few hours water would fail us entirely. In this extremely Sir Charles Wilson, who took command when Stewart went down, resolved to force his way through the enemy, march a square to the river, build a fort by the water and return for the survivors left in the zereba. I decided to go with this brave little band, on which the whole safety of the brigade depended."

"Just as I was starting back I saw St. Leger Herbert, correspondent of the Morning Post, getting something from his valise. He had volunteered, like myself, so we walked together toward the forming square. The men were ordered to throw themselves down as they arrived in position, for the scathing fire from the bush was already making many casualties. My friend was wearing a red tunic he had borrowed from an officer. 'You are drawing the fire with that infernal jacket—take it off,' I cried. Recalling no reply, I looked around. Poor Herbert was lying on his back with a bullet through his brain. The whole Arab fire was now concentrated on that patch of human beings sprawling on the sand."

"From our front and flank belched forth fire and smoke. Our targets were only the white puffs of smoke from the Remingtons of the hidden enemy. Presently the clear voice of Col. Bosacovan was heard above the terrible din, as if on parade: 'The square will halt; then when we had come to a standstill, 'The square will fire a volley at two hundred yards—Ready!'

Men Were Shot Through and Through.
"After firing one round, we would move forward again at a funeral pace in order to give our wounded an opportunity to pick up our wounded and novel situation. Then suddenly, without the slightest warning, he turned sharply around, took the bit between his teeth and bolted."

"I was so taken by surprise that before I could recover myself I found we were half way up the glacis, and swift as the wind I was carried right into the teeth of the Russian guns. Crash! Crash! Whirl! Whirl! came shell after shell. As I neared the top of the glacis I could feel the whirlwind of the projectiles as they clove the air and the lurid blaze of the guns almost blinded me. I lay as flat as I could along my pony's neck till the black mud curtain of the emplacement suddenly barred my path, when I rose in my saddle, and in another moment we cleared the parapet and plumped right into the centre of the battery, scattering the gunners."

Miss Flora Boyko
Tells How Cuticura
Healed Her Pimples

"My face was very itchy at first, and after that it was covered with pimples that disfigured it. I used Cuticura Soap and Ointment and when I had used five cakes of Cuticura Soap and five boxes of Cuticura Ointment I was healed."

(Signed) Miss Flora M. Boyko, Gardenton, Man., Dec. 26, 1918.

"I had obtained a clear, healthy skin by the use of Cuticura, keep it clear by using the Soap for all toilet purposes, assisted by touches of Ointment as needed. Do not fail to include the exfoliating Cuticura Talcum in your toilet regimen."

looked upon during all the wars I have seen. In the old campaigns both armies usually ceased hostilities at some period between sundown and sunrise, but here at Port Arthur, a new kind of warfare has developed and the night is as the day.

"For four hours the little Japs have gallantly tried to cross the death ridden valley in the broad glare of these artificial lights and under a decimating machine gun and rifle fire from forts on either side of their objective. . . . The devilish searchlights, like a fiery glare from the eyes of legendary monsters, sweep the valley, and when one rests its rays on any vital spot, red spurts from the black void behind belch forth shells which 'tear ghastly gaps in the Japanese lines wading through the millet and cornfields below. In spite of the terrific carnage a few remnants of these brave battalions under Ichinohe reach the base of Bag-u-san and clamor up the glacis with faint shouts of 'Banzai, Banzai,' which are echoed by their comrades across the valley."

QUEBEC MAN GIVES HIGH PRAISE TO DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Absolon Duchesneau Gives Three Reasons Why He Advises Everyone to Use Dodd's Kidney Pills for Kidney Ills.

St. George, Beauce Co., Que., March 8th.—(Special)—Just how much good Dodd's Kidney Pills have done in one family is told by Mr. Absolon Duchesneau, a well-known and highly respected resident here.

"My health is very much better since taking Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Duchesneau states. "For two years, I was in pain, but since taking Dodd's Kidney Pills the pain is gone. I also induced my mother to use Dodd's Kidney Pills for sleeplessness and the results were very satisfactory."

"My sister, too, took Dodd's Kidney Pills for headache, and she is better. Do you wonder that I advise everyone to use Dodd's Kidney Pills?"

The reason, Dodd's Kidney Pills have come to occupy such a prominent place in the family medicine chest is that so many of the ordinary every-day ills come from sick kidneys. Rheumatism, urinary troubles, backache, diabetes and heart disease can all be traced directly or indirectly to sick kidneys.

Ask your neighbors if Dodd's Kidney Pills are not the best remedy for sick kidneys.

Thought They Were Samples.

A young man who had spent his life in a country village came to the city to seek his fortune. On the day of his arrival he walked into a restaurant and ordered dinner.

The waiter brought the meal in those little side-dishes sacred to restaurant-keeping, and arranged them in tempting array around the young man's plate.

For half an hour he sat and looked at the untouched food, until, overcome by hunger, he called the waiter, who had been watching him wonderingly, and said, "Look here, mister, if you don't hurry and bring my dinner I'll eat up your samples!"

DON'T DIE!

It is unnecessary. We have saved the lives of hundreds of our fellow-townsmen and will save yours if you come to us in time. Our "Phoratox" and "Creosote" Cough Mixtures selected by their standard-bearers. Soon the mass closed around us. Then, from our square, when the enemy were within three hundred yards, there poured forth volley after volley of deadly hail into the midst of the re-devil foemen. When the dense fog of smoke cleared away there was nothing left of this bold charge but its dead and dying.

"The sudden collapse of the attack was almost beyond realization. Some five thousand warriors—they looked

Who Scored?

Canon Addeley tells with humorous relish an incident which happened last time he spoke in Hyde-Park.

"I don't believe," said an atheist, "what you persons say because you're paid for it."

"Do I understand you to mean," replied the parson, "that if I am paid to say that twice two makes four it's a lie, whereas if I'm not paid it's true?"

"No. What I do say is that if you were paid to say twice, you makes five you would be quite ready to do so," was the retort.

Gambling to be Suppressed in Spain

Gambling throughout Spain will be suppressed from March 1, according to orders issued by the Minister of the Interior. The legal code forbids all gambling, but permission has been granted widely to clubs in return for contributions toward the support of the poor, as it was thought in this manner to root out the prevalent mendicancy in the streets. The authorities find that the contributions of the gambling clubs are not sufficiently generous to supply the needs of the poor and of late beggars have increased in numbers instead of diminishing. The Minister has, therefore, decided to put the law in force and suspend gambling until the Cortes has had an opportunity of amending legislation providing for efficacious control and contributions.

HOME—HUNGER.

I need the sight of a friendly spirit
To cure the longing that troubles me,
The old-familiar maple tree,
The curling smoke of a cheerful fire,
The little street of my heart's desire,
There are merry eyes that I soon
Must see,
I must take the children upon my knees,
For kisses can't come by the mail or wire.

Oh, the wanderer sickens in time of smiles
Of men and women who come and go,
And though he walk where rich roses grow,
His heart goes traveling back the miles
To the little place where his loved ones wait,
And he yearns for the joys at his humble gate.

Scene at Council Meeting

The proposal to confer the hon. of the city of Glasgow on the Prince of Wales and entertain at a luncheon has been vetoed by the Laborite members of the Town Council. They objected to the spending of public money on the feasting of royalty when hundreds of families were starving. The matter was closed and a roll call for the Laborite Councillor Kerr was made and hung it to the floor. The din the Provost and his colleagues left the chamber, declaring that the proposal had been carried.

The publisher of the best paper in the Maritime Provinces writes to us states:

"I would say that I do not believe of a medicine that has stood the test of time like MINARD'S LITTLE PILLS. It has been an unfailing remedy for our household ever since I was a member, and has outlived dozens of would-be competitors and imitations."
