The side, dark days, when weeping skies
Analydbing winds seemed but to be
The scho of that human wee
Whose deeper meaning was in me;
The days when by a had proved untrue,
And Friendship but a broken reed— A broken real that pearced my heart, And made it inly, dumbly bleed!

The dark and dreary days in which The body would not serve the mind And painful languors had the power My will in impotence to bind; When Duty called me with strong voice, And, heedless both of blame and praise 1 answered her with fainting heart— Oh, the long, aching, weary days!

But then, O soul, theu wert but one, But one in a great company, And each had had home days as dark As any that had come to thee; For into every life must fall The selemn rain of human tears, And over every life is hung The somber clouds of drifting fears.

But not in laughter and in song Was I the noblest lesson taught:

Twas in the struggle of dark hours
My soul to highest aims was wrought.

Then Fatth, Indurance, Patience, Hupe;
Came hear, and made me strong for strife
And thus the storm of life's dark hours Brought me the harvest-time of life.

If you and your cavalier will have not yet received any letters from dear old Ashurst. In my first letter I said nothing scious looks upon your faces, of course 1 of my own peculiar feelings as to the past, but now I will write frankly toyou. I reflected deeply on all that happened at Ashurst before I left, and the more I thought, the more imperative did it seem to me to give you up, for felt assured that you could never be happy with me for your husband. But since then, Bessie, a new revelation has dawned on me, and I now know that you were right. We did not love each other as those should who bind themselves irrevocably together. Are you curious to know how I have at last made this discovery? I willtell you—simply by falling In my last letter I described my arrival in tion of what has since happened.
