

THIS IS DAY OF DAYS FOR MR. BOWLER W. O. B. A. TOURNEY OFF TO A GOOD START

Perfect Greens and Fine Weather
Make Opening Auspicious.

Cracks From All Quarters Here
and Close Contests Assured.

Today is the day of the bowler. Every incoming train this morning brought in hosts of the knights of the bowls. All morning streams of local and visiting artists of the green passed on their way to and from the magnificent grounds of the London Rowing Club, and the unanimous opinion was expressed that the greens are as perfect as it is possible for them to be. The lower greens, which, in reality, are tennis grounds, are just a trifle rough, but the remaining ones are in the best of shape.

Great interest is taken in the probable result of the Labatt trophy match, and speculation is rife as to the winner. London is the only place that has a chance to take permanent possession of the handsome cup this year, but if the locals fail to win out at the present tournament, their chances will be considerably diminished next year, unless some new rink scoops in a win.

Four New Rinks.

There are just three rinks less entered this year than last, and there are at least four rinks entered that never competed here before. They include the Elora club, one rink, skipped by Dr. Robertson; Watford, one rink; Brantford, three rinks, and Fall River, Mass., one rink.

Some of the Veterans.

As one old-time local bowler today remarked, it certainly is good to look upon the smiling and familiar countenances of the veterans who are here, ready for the fray.

Among the veteran experts of the green present are: J. S. Willison, of Toronto, winner of the O. B. A. trophy at Niagara, and honorary president of the W. O. B. A.; Dr. Burritt, of Mitchell; "Billy" Smith, of Toronto, winner of the consolation match last year; Wm. Jackson, of Clinton; Dick Gosnell, of Glenora; Wm. Cole, of Mitchell, winner of the association match a year ago; Tom McCurdy, runner-up for the same event; J. McDougall, of this city, winner of the singles; Billy Davidson, runner-up in the singles; Capt. White, of Aylmer, skip of one of the three rinks who defeated the Brits. Continued on page eight.

Naval Reservist Shoots at Chief

Fete.

Paris, July 14.—The national fete today was marred by an attempt on the life of President Fallieres by Leon Maille, a naval reservist, of Havre, who, it is believed, is suffering from the mania of persecution. Maille fired two shots at the President, but did not hit him. He was at once placed under arrest.

On account of the activity of the anti-militarists, who tried to organize a demonstration against the army throughout France today, exceptional precautions were taken to safeguard the President. The attempt on his life occurred on Avenue Des Champs Elisees, while the President was returning to the palace from Long Champs, where he had reviewed the garrison of Paris in the presence of 250,000 people. Premier Clemenceau and M. Lanes, the President's secretary, were with the President in his landau, which was escorted by a squadron of cuirassiers. The carriage had safely emerged from the Bois de Boulogne, where the anti-militarists had stationed themselves with the intention of hooting the soldiers, and was descending the broad Champ

Conductor Thompson Released.

A dispatch from Kingston says: Conductor Thompson, of London, sentenced to penitentiary for three years for disobeying orders, which resulted in a fatal railway accident on the Grand Trunk near Gourock, has been released. The Minister of Justice granted him a pardon. He was in the penitentiary about one month. Thompson soon after 2 o'clock Saturday walked out of the penitentiary a free man. He was heartily congratulated by the prison officers and others. He had little to say beyond the remark: "I don't want to see this place again." His home is in London.

FIVE HUNDRED BALLOTS MARKED

Water Vote Continues to Come in Slowly at the City

Up-to-date about 500 ballots have been received at the City Hall on the water question.

Most avenues of information as to how the papers have been marked have been closed by the commissioners, but it is said at the hall this morning that the commissioners claim that their pet scheme, the Komoka proposition, is winning out.

Friends of the high pressure scheme are, however, growing in number every day, and this morning there were large numbers of high pressure plumpers put in the box.

Secretary Ellwood draws the attention of citizens to the fact that a large number of ballots have been spoiled because people use crosses instead of figures to vote for the schemes they prefer.

For example, if a ballot comes in with crosses marked for high pressure and also for the Komoka scheme, how are the city officials or the men who count the ballots, to know which scheme of the two the voter prefers? In order to vote intelligently figures must be used.

Mark the scheme you prefer above all others "1." This of course should be the high pressure scheme as it will cost very little money, and guarantee spring water for domestic purposes and high pressure for fire fighting, etc.

The other schemes should be marked "2," "3," and "4," just as the people feel about them.

It is understood that some funny observations regarding the mail order vote have been inscribed in a few of the ballots, and that they will make good reading if they are made public after the count.

IS HE SLATED FOR CABINET

Windsor Believes Speaker Sutherland Will Enter the Ministry.

Windsor, July 15.—Windsor friends of Hon. R. F. Sutherland, speaker of the lower house, see in Mr. Sutherland's present "business" trip to the lower provinces a decided connection with the reports that he is to receive the portfolio of one of the retiring cabinet officers this fall. It is believed he will meet Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who is now returning to Canada. An Ottawa report about a week ago had it that the Essex County man was added to the public works portfolio, but this is giving way to a rumor that a member from the west is to have the public works ministry, and that Hon. Mr. Patterson, minister of customs, is to resign. In this event, Mr. Sutherland's Windsor friends think that he has more than a passing chance for a place in the cabinet.

SUGGESTION FOR SUNKEN GARDEN

Convert Anthistle's Gravel Pit
Into a Playground and Abolish Eyesore.

"I would like to suggest to the London Playgrounds Association," said a prominent gentleman to The Advertiser today, "that while the members are looking for a place to establish a sunken garden and playgrounds, they should not overlook Anthistle's gravel pit in the north end."

"This place is an eyesore now, and if an attempt was made to fill it up as a dump, it would be an eyesore for 25 years. If the Playgrounds Association or the city took hold of it, converted the sides into terraces, and sodded it, it would form one of the most beautiful sunken gardens it is possible to imagine. A small lake in the center could also be very easily secured."

WHO STOLE VOTERS' LIST AT CITY HALL?

Officials Say That Someone "Pinched" It Today.

Who stole the voters' list? Or, as one of the clerks in the city treasurer's office put it, who "pinched" it?

This is what Secretary Ellwood of the water commission wants to know. The list was used to identify voters before their ballots in the water question was deposited in the box.

It was placed too near a hand hole in the wicket this morning and now it cannot be located anywhere in the city hall. That is, the commissioner's copy cannot be located anywhere.

Acting Mayor Beattie and Mr. George B. Harris, the well-known hospital trustee, were near the railing when the book was missing, but the officials hesitate to accuse either gentleman.

SIBERIAN NATIVES DIE THROUGH AN ERUPTION

An Outburst of Volcano Prevents the Procuring of Game.

San Francisco, July 15.—The outburst of a volcano on the Peninsula of Kamchatka on Feb. 18 last, threw the whole country into utter darkness for more than 48 hours and resulted in the starving of scores of natives. According to the officers of the barkentine W. S. Castle, which reached this port last evening direct from the Okhotsk Sea. The natives, some of whom could speak English, told Captain Pedersen and his men that they had no knowledge of the source of the trouble that had come upon them.

They knew only that while they were crossing the valleys in the first flush of spring, a wave of dust fell upon them followed by utter darkness that continued for two days and nights. Lava almost hot fell about them, and there were such showers of black ashes that their progress was stayed and they were lucky to find undried creeks and springs. But the party of natives was in dire straits, and some of them had succumbed to their hardships. In response to their request, Captain Pedersen sent off two boatloads of provisions which the suffering natives said would suffice to keep them on the way to Petropavlovsky.

CUBAN CIGAR MAKERS WIN

Havana Trust Factories Accede to Their Demands.

Havana, July 15.—The settlement of the cigarmakers' strike, which was announced late Saturday, has been formally ratified. The trust factories will reopen on Tuesday, and the factories of the independent manufacturers will reopen today on the old terms for one week, after which they will accede to the demands of their employees, paying the wages in American currency. It is generally believed that the action of the cigar manufacturers tends strongly towards the speedy adoption of American money currency in Cuba.

Points Which the Ratepayers Should Ponder Before Voting

The choice in the water question lies between the Komoka and the independent schemes. The river filtration scheme has few friends, and is not a serious factor in the discussion. The people of London appreciate nature's precious gift of pure and palatable spring water. So long as they can get it in sufficient quantity they will not resort to such a questionable source of supply as the Thames.

The Titus scheme is lacking in definiteness as to the cost of operation, but it is gratifying to have the testimony of a high engineering authority that plenty of good spring water may be obtained from artesian wells. The city will probably prefer the artesian well plan to river filtration when the flowing springs in this neighborhood are no longer sufficient; but that day is far distant if the spring water supply is husbanded for domestic purposes. It need not concern the ratepayers of today. The Titus scheme, however, is a strong argument against the present proposal to commit this city to river filtration for all time to come. It would be an act of incredible folly.

The chairman of the water commissioners, at the East End meeting on Friday night, suggested that a high-pressure service and meters might be installed when the Komoka supply was approaching exhaustion. This would be at the end of fifteen years, if the waterworks engineer's measurements of the Komoka springs are correct, and if the appalling waste of water were not checked. Why postpone for fifteen years a vastly improved fire protection and a 25 per cent reduction in insurance rates? Would it not be worse than foolish to refuse the underwriters' offer, and to leave the city fettered and manacled as it is now by high insurance rates?

It is illogical to argue that the benefits of a high-pressure service and cheaper insurance would be limited to the merchants and manufacturers. A newspaper, which is backing the hopeless proposal of river filtration, is appealing brazenly to prejudice by alleging that the independent system is a scheme of the rich to benefit themselves at the expense of the poor. It may be answered that it is the only scheme which taxes ratepayers according to the benefits they derive from superior fire protection. Under any other scheme the owner of property in the residential district, although he would derive little advantage from the increase of water pressure would pay as much for it as the owner of down-town property of equal value, who has most to gain from it. The special charge upon the property-owners protected by the high-pressure service would be levied simply by a differential tax rate. This was done in West London after it became a part of the city. For some years the tax rate in that suburb was 25 mills on the dollar, being higher than in other sections, in payment for the benefits of annexation.

Every property-owner in London gains by anything which conduces to the commercial and industrial growth of the city. There is no doubt that the excessive cost of insurance and the inadequate fire protection, due to low water pressure, have told heavily against London. Cheap insurance would count heavily in its favor. It would be a strong card in attracting new industries and retaining those already established here. The growth of the city means an increase in the value of all property. The next fifteen years will witness a great expansion in this country. London should not be handicapped in the race with sister municipalities. Cheap insurance is as important as cheap power.

It must be remembered, too, that the independent system would benefit every citizen by conserving the supply of spring water. It would add immediately 500,000 gallons per day to the quantity of spring water available for drinking. There would be an unlimited amount of river water for watering the streets, washing the pavements, flushing the sewers, and for factories, railways, livery stables and purposes for which spring water is of no advantage. Rich and poor would profit alike by this. The saving of spring water would be greater every year, as the use of river water for various purposes increased.

The meter system is made a bogey by the advocates of the Komoka and river filtration schemes. Meters would not be an innovation in London. They were introduced many years ago, and 300 of them are now in use. They do their work well, are inexpensive, and cause no grievance. They were installed to check the possible waste of water by large consumers. All that is proposed by the independent scheme is to gradually extend the use of meters—first to small factories, hotels and livery stables; then to office buildings, shops, stores and dwellings, with elaborate plumbing fixtures for baths and lawns. Whether the system would be extended further would depend upon results. That could be decided some years hence. By metering all the large consumers a great saving of spring water would be made without going further.

It is untrue that meters would increase the cost of water to consumers. Wherever meters have been installed on a large scale the plan has been to make a test under ideal conditions. A meter is placed in a house, store, or factory, and a record is kept of the amount of water used in a given period of time. The price for this quantity by meter is fixed at the rate the same premises would pay without meters in the same period. The cost to a consumer would be no more after the installation of meters than before, unless he allowed taps to run or pipes to leak. The meter would merely act as a silent inspector. The consumers who waste water increase its price to the community and can not be reached in any other way.

A Malleable Iron Works To Be Established Here

Will Give Employment to Many Men—Plow Works Also Mooted.

Despite the fact that London has not been granting bonuses to secure new industries, quite a number of factories are coming this way. In conversation with Mr. Thomas Knott, the well-known real estate agent, it was learned today that negotiations for the establishing of a large malleable iron foundry, which will probably be located somewhere in the southeast end of the city, are now going on. It is understood that there is not a malleable iron foundry nearer to London than Toronto or Windsor, and London's iron manufacturing is growing so rapidly that a large malleable factory here could be kept busy every day in the year.

FISH NET FIENDS ROBBING RIVER

Complaint Has Been Made to the Fishery Inspector Re
the Matter.

Complaint has been made to the fishery authorities of London, that certain fish plants of this city, are in the habit of placing nets in the river at night thereby making large hauls of the finny tribe, while people with fish lines in the daytime cannot get a bite.

It is alleged that several times during the present month a certain individual, whose name is known, has been watched and that he has been seen to walk with a large bundle under his arm towards the river, in the vicinity of Victoria Hospital.

If followed closely, he takes his nets, which are in the bundle, to his home by a roundabout way, and does without fish that night.

But it is claimed that the other morning he and his friends divided two barrels of fish caught in the river somewhere within the city limits, when the people were not looking.

The people who have been watching the fish pirates claim that they have given all necessary information to the inspector and that it is now up to him to catch the offenders.

McClary Employes Think Well of Mr. Nicholson on Saturday.

One of the most pleasing incidents of the big McClary picnic at Port Stanley on Saturday was the address and presentation to the genial and respected superintendent, Mr. Jos. Nicholson, by the employes.

Totally unaware of what was going to happen, Mr. Nicholson was enjoying the sports along with the others, when he was pounced on by a bevy of young ladies and immediately surrounded by a happy and good-natured crowd of young and old, who were in the secret, and who could scarcely refrain from giving vent to their feelings long enough to allow Mr. Weir to read the following address.

The Address.

"Joseph Nicholson, Esq.:
"Dear Sir,—We the employes of the McClary Manufacturing Company, under your control as superintendent, feel at this time like giving expression to our appreciation of the courteous and just treatment we have received from you even under the most trying conditions.

"While expressing these sentiments, we ask you to accept this umbrella as a tangible form of our respect for one whose aim has ever been for the combined welfare of the company and employes. With best wishes for a continuance of the amicable relations which have hitherto existed.

Good Men Behind It.

Just what size the new works will be is not known, as the parties behind the scheme will not give any particulars, as yet, but it is understood that the new factory will be a material addition to London's already flourishing industries.

The men who are at the back of the project include some of the city's most prominent wealthy citizens, who have been in manufacturing for many years, and who know exactly what is wanted here.

There is also some talk of a big plow works being erected on Chelsea Green, but no definite information in this regard could be secured.

It is known that the Wilcox Hardware Manufacturing Company of Chelsea Green is contemplating the installing of a large molding plant, which will give employment to a large number of hands.

MR. BROWNLEE QUITE CHEERY

Speaks of Track Elevation as Something Not Far Distant.

Manager Brownlee, in a letter to City Engineer Graydon, thanks that gentleman for postponing the paving of Richmond street, between the G. T. R. tracks and Bathurst street, until such times as the company's lines are elevated through the city.

Mr. Brownlee's letter is brief, but in a cheery vein, and it gives the impression that the company has not given up hope of elevating its tracks here within a short time.

Mr. Graydon also received a letter from Supt. Murphy of the C.P.R., in regard to the charge made at the meeting of the board of works that the company has, despite its recent denial, raised its tracks ten inches at Richmond street.

Mr. Murphy took the levels of the tracks at the crossing and finds that they are not one inch higher than they were when first put down twenty years ago.

No cause can be given for the rash act, but there seems little doubt that the excessive heat of the past week temporarily unsettled the young man's mind.

There were on the body letters of recommendation from firms in Paris (France), Cincinnati and Chicago, all speaking highly of Farnan's ability and integrity.

A letter addressed to his brother in this city, written evidently just before committing the deed, was also found on the young man.

The coroner notified the brother, but has kept the letter till after the inquest.

BANDITS HOLD UP
NEAR NEW YORK

Desperadoes Flag Locomotive and Try to Rob Freight Car.

New York, July 14.—Within thirty minutes' ride of New York's city hall yesterday afternoon four negro bandits, in true Wild West style, made a desperate attempt to hold-up a Pennsylvania railroad train. The prompt action of the engineer, who, after the highwaymen had climbed aboard the locomotive, crowded on all speed and carried them into Newark, where they were captured after an exciting chase, alone prevented the daring plan from being carried out successfully.

The scene of the hold-up was just outside Rahway. The train, en route to Jersey City, with twenty cars of miscellaneous freight, was going at a twenty-five-mile an hour clip when Engineer H. B. Lawrence noticed along a stretch of lonely road that the danger signal was set just ahead.

He quickly brought his train to a standstill and was about to descend from his cab and investigate when he noticed that the signal box near at hand had been forced open. The next instant four athletic-looking negroes leaped from the bushes and clambered aboard the engine.

Drives Bandits Into Tender.

"Cut loose now and dig out of here with your engine as quick as you can," cried the leader of the band. "We'll take care of the cars."

"Thrown off his guard by the suddenness of the attack, Lawrence jumped back, and without further parley the bandits began to uncouple the locomotive, intending to leave the car stranded so that they might plunder them at will. Then the engineer took a sudden resolution. Motoring toward several long wrenches at the side of the cab, he seized one, and William Gaffney, his fireman, seized the other. With these weapons the two plucky men drove the negroes far back into the tender.

"Hold them there," cried Lawrence, as he leaped to the throttle, which he jerked wide open.

The engine plunged forward in response to the call, and again the wild ride for Newark, with Gaffney on guard, holding the negroes at bay with his wrench. The train, dashing over the tracks, all steam crowded on and the whistle leaped down so that one long shriek for help was emitted by the siren as wolver car tower sped by along the road to the yards.

Detectives Appear on Scene.

Five more miles of track were eaten up by the growling locomotive, and when Waverly was finally reached Lawrence was compelled to slacken his speed because of a block signal that the track ahead was not clear.

Taking advantage of this, the four negroes made a combined rush at the fireman, passed him and, with the train in motion, dropped to the road bed. But Detectives Elroy and Phillips, of the Pennsylvania staff, who had been notified ahead, were waiting for them, and then ensued another chase, more exciting even than that of the run of the engine.

ACTRESS ANNA
SUES HER EARL

Lady Rosslyn Seeks Divorce
From the Ballet Dancing
Nobleman.

Edinburgh, Scotland, July 13.—The wife of the Earl of Rosslyn, formerly Anna Robinson, actress and stage beauty, has sued for divorce. The earl, who is living in Paris, for some years made his living as an actor both in Europe and the United States, and it was while he was indulging his histrionic ambitions that he met Miss Robinson.

The marriage of Miss Robinson and Lord Rosslyn in London on March 31, 1905, was the talk of the town. Only a few years before Lord Rosslyn had been divorced from his first wife, who was Violet Vyner, and those who knew the young man best shook their heads doubtfully when they heard he was about to rush into matrimony for the second time.

Until a week before his marriage to Miss Robinson the earl and the girl had caused no little gossip by being at Monte Carlo together. They finally left Monte Carlo on a Saturday morning, and were married the following Monday in London.

They went to live at Miss Robinson's handsome home in Norfolk street near Park Lane.

Miss Robinson, who is the daughter of George Robinson, of Minneapolis, Minn., began her career as an artist's model, and made her theatrical debut in "The Kentucky Girl." She has always been noted more for her beauty than for her talent. She had no sooner gone abroad than she was reported to have attracted many ardent admirers, among them the amorous King Leopold of Belgium.

A story soon came across the water that she was to marry the Duke of Manchester, but those who waited to hear the wedding bells were disappointed. Although she played only one short engagement in London, Miss Robinson is credited with having accumulated a large sum of money, and she lived luxuriously. She appeared on the Paris stage for a short time.

Lord Rosslyn (born Francis Harry St. Clair Esquire), in 1869, was formerly a lieutenant in the Royal Horse Guards, and for a time made his living as an actor, appearing in a number of plays in Europe and the United States. In the former country he did a ballet turn in one of Pinero's plays, which caused much comment. He served with Thorneycroft's Horse at the battle of Ladysmith, and also acted as war correspondent during the South African war.

Lord Rosslyn went to New York in 1902 and appeared with Miss Jessie Millward at the Garrick Theater in a play called "There's Many a Slip." He was at one time devoted to Mrs. Langtry, but he lost her friendship in America by turning dramatic critic for a New York newspaper and writing of her acting in a way that she did not like.

Lord Rosslyn was a very bad actor himself. He gained his chief distinction as a turf plunger and as the inventor of a "system" by which he was going to break the bank at Monte Carlo. But he didn't.

SUFFER NO MORE.—There are thousands who live miserable lives because dyspepsia dulls the faculties and shadows existence with the cloud of depression. One way to dispel the vapors that beset the victims of this disorder is to order them a course of Parment's Vegetable Pills, which are among the best vegetable pills known, being easy to take and are most efficacious in their action. A trial of them will prove this.

Now that game is so scarce and fresh game impossible under the law, the invention of the poultry dealers has not failed them. Young broiling turkeys are not now in the market and the poussin or squab chicken has ceased to be a novelty. The young broiling guinea fowl has, therefore, come in as a delicacy of the winter. The birds are not as large as a grouse and when split and broiled the white meat of the breast is as delicate as a game bird, and is well put on the market. It is just now the most popular alternative to the inevitable duck or snipe of this season.

A CURE FOR FEVER AND AGUE.—Parment's Vegetable Pills are compounded for use in any climate, and they will be found to preserve their powers in any latitude. In fever and ague they act upon the secretions and neutralize the poison which has found its way into the blood. They correct the impurities which find entrance into the system through drinking water or food, and if used as a preventive fever is avoided.

COLONEL MACBETH

Held This Afternoon, and Was Very Largely Attended—Under Masonic Auspices.

The funeral of the late Col. John Macbeth took place this afternoon at 3 o'clock from his late residence, 251 Sydenham street, to Woodland Cemetery.

The cortege was a lengthy one, very many of London's most prominent citizens following the remains to the grave.

At the house and the grave services were conducted by Rev. G. B. Sage, pastor of St. George's Church, and also by the Tuscan Lodge, of which Mr. J. B. McKillop is the master, Mr. McKillop officiating in the Masonic service.

The honorary pallbearers were as follows: Judge Edward Elliott, Sheriff Cameron, Crown Attorney McKillop, R. K. Cowan, master in chancery; George B. Harris, P. J. Hamond, C. F. Complin and E. Manigault.

The pallbearers were all from the Tuscan Lodge, and were as follows: Messrs. Edwin Paul, P. W. D. Broad, Mr. Major Beattie, Dr. Niven, Wm. A. Young, and E. B. Smith.

At the corner of King and Ridout streets a special car was in waiting, and it took the Masons to the cemetery.

The late Col. Macbeth was one of the most prominent Masons of the London district, and since he was admitted to the Tuscan Lodge in the early sixties, he had taken an active interest in the work of the craft. He was elected worshipful master in 1882, and the Rose Croix degree was conferred upon him by the Supreme Council of England. He was a charter member of the first chapter of Rose Croix in Canada, which was in London Chapter. Associated with him in this lodge were Capt. Thompson Wilson, 33 degrees; T. B. Harrington, registrar-general of Canada, 33 degrees, and the late Col. McLeod Moore, 33 degrees. The only four surviving brethren of this chapter who received their degrees at the same time are Major Beattie, Capt. A. G. Smythe, Mr. David Isorland, of this city, and Mr. Hugh MacKay, of Berlin, Ont.

Saturday afternoon the members of the Middlesex Law Association met in the court house, and the following resolution, moved by Mr. George C. Gibbons, K.C., and seconded by Mr. M. D. Fraser, was unanimously passed:

"That the association has heard with sorrow of the death of Col. John Macbeth, for many years a member of the bar, registrar of the surrogate court, and clerk of the county court. During these many years he has, by his affability, courtesy and judicial conduct, endeavored himself to the entire profession, and is further resolved that the bar attend the funeral in a body, and that the president be requested to send a suitable wreath, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to the members of the family."

Messrs. T. G. Meredith, W. H. Bartram, J. B. McKillop, G. C. Gibbons and others spoke in the highest terms of the deceased.

DINED HON. MR. BECK

London Hunt Club Honors the Master of the Hunt.

A complimentary dinner was tendered by the members of the London Hunt Club to Hon. Adam Beck, Saturday night, at the Kennels. About 35 members were present.

Mr. Thomas Smallman, the president, was in the chair, and after alluding in complimentary terms to the showing the Beck string of horses had made in England, he called on Mr. George C. Gibbons, coupling his name with the toast to the King.

Mr. Gibbons traced the history of the Hunt Club for some years, giving Mr. Beck much credit for bringing it up to its present standard, and also referring to the excellent exhibit of Canadian horses in England by Mr. Beck, when they carried the colors of the London Hunt Club. Mr. Gibbons concluded his address by proposing the health of Mr. and Mrs. Beck, and it was drunk with a will.

Mr. Beck made a brief reply on behalf of Mrs. Beck and himself, thanking all for their many kind expressions. He also gave a short account of the horse show.

ACTOR FORGETS HIS LINES

Lewis Walker Has a Remarkable Lapse of Memory.

London, July 12.—A remarkable instance of lapse of memory was exhibited the other day by Lewis Walker, the famous English actor, who, in response to an encore at a benefit matinee, announced that he would recite the Henry V's address to his soldiers before Harfleur.

"Once more into the breach," Walker began, and there he halted. He stood a moment with his face hidden in his hands, trying to recall what followed. His effort being vain, he walked off the stage, but presently came back and once more undertook the recitation. This time he went along bravely until about half through the address, he came to the words, "Your father likes—!" There he stopped short again.

"I'm very sorry," he said smiling. The audience set to work to help him along with suggestions for the completion of the sentence. He had about given up hope that the right words would come from his friends, when a woman in the dress circle cried out: "Like so many Alexanders!"

Thanks to this bit of help, Walker was able to proceed and end the complete recitation.

"I wouldn't have believed it possible," said Walker later. "I have recited that address hundreds of times."

SERMON AND SONG
IN THE CHURCHES

Morning and Evening Discourses to the Various Congregations.

At Colborne Street Methodist Church the pastor, Rev. T. E. Malott, preached morning and evening. In the morning he spoke from the words, "In whom we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of our sins according to the riches of his grace, which he made to abound unto all wisdom and prudence." (Ephesians, 1, 7-8) "Reciprocity" was the subject of the evening discourse. The choir sang Luke, vi, 27-38. Miss Rowe sang "There were Ninety and Nine" with much expression.

Rev. H. A. Graham, of St. Mary's, occupied the pulpit of Wellington Street Methodist Church. Rev. James Livingstone being in St. Mary's. In the morning Mrs. Duncan, of Winnipeg, sang, while Miss Fowler, of this city, rendered a solo at the evening service.

In the Memorial Church Rev. Dyson Hague preached at both services. His morning subject was "The Great Principle in the Christian's Life," and in the evening he based his remarks on Luke, xi, 48. A quartet, composed of Mr. Lilley, Bandmaster Slattery and son, and Mr. Doherty, sang at both services.

Rev. W. L. Rutledge preached at both services in the First Methodist Church yesterday. The morning sermon, on "Help from the Sanctuary," was based on Psalm, xx, 1-2. In the evening Mr. Rutledge spoke on Nicodemus, taking as his text St. John, iii, 1-2.

Rev. A. K. Birks, of Askin Street Church, chose as his morning text, "But we all with open face, beholding as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even by the spirit of the Lord." Mr. Birks pointed out that there is nothing marvelous in Christian conversion, as in all lines men experience complete changes. When men become filled with the glory of God, they reflect looking into the Bible, they reflected his very character and glory.

At Dundas Center Methodist Church Rev. E. B. Lancelotti spoke from Romans, xii, 9, "Love worketh no ill to his neighbor; therefore love is fulfilling the law." "The Significant Ring" was the subject of the evening discourse, the thoughts being drawn from the parable of the prodigal son. At the evening service Miss Gilmore rendered the solo, "There is a Green Hill Far Away."

The Epworth Leagues of the city and surrounding country will hold a union picnic at Springbank on Wednesday afternoon. Arrangements are being made for a large crowd, and no doubt the leaguers will have a fine time.

ENGLAND SHIVERS
GETTING OUT FURS

Weather Like April With Chilling Rains and Crops Are Destroyed.

London, July 13.—Last Monday was not July; it was April. But the dreadful weather from which we have been suffering has got far beyond a joking matter. Still it is real April weather, with lots of cold rain and very little sunshine.

Summer sales have begun in the shops after a ruinous season, for summer clothes have not been wanted, and as a consequence the people did not buy. Even now they don't want them, and the shops, which are always crowded during the days of sales, are very few more than light clothes.

American visitors are disgusted. They go about shivering all the time. But apart from its disastrous effects on the shop sales and the wholesale trade, the weather is spoiling all sorts of outdoor pleasures, though it could not quite spoil the visitors' fun.

At the same time, Henley presented a queer spectacle. Long white mackintoshes were very much worn, and thick, serviceable umbrellas with businlike handles were seen in place of the fluffly creations of former years which keep off the sun.

The boat cushions were kept mostly under the seats, a less uncomfortable effect being obtained by spreading newspapers on the wet seats, so that it was not an uncommon sight to see men going about with neat productions of public prints on their otherwise immaculate flannels.

Charcoal braziers and spirit stoves added warmth and comfort to the river pageant of boats and a tented punt created some excitement and harsh language on the river one day. It was raining pretty hard and the occupants of a third punt erected a tarpaulin over them by means of poles.

The party drifted along the river joyously, singing the latest Tivoli ditties. The only disadvantage in their ingenious arrangement was that the punters could not see where they were going. Of course this inevitable happened, but the other boat occupants of the tented punt were rescued without much trouble.

But while some were seen going about in oilskins with sou'westers on their heads, many who made believe it was summer. Amid all the wet they were not to be depressed by the sourest of the weather.

Young women came from riverside clubs with young Oxford and Cambridge boys, the former with bare arms and low-necked bodices, poling daintily up the stream; the latter, with wonderful designs on blazers, lightfully unconscious of the rain, and down the river. Rain had no terrors for these happy young bloods. Oh, no, Henley. From a sporting point of view, the race between the Leander crew and the Sport Nautique de Grand, from Belgium, which came over to defend the Grand Challenge Cup, which they won for the first time last year, was the event of the week. Interest in the diamond skulls was nothing compared with this.

Immediately after the victory of the Belgians last year a controversy was started in which pessimists openly stated that English eight-oared rowing had gone the way of other sports, while optimists with a great show of reason pointed out that the Belgians merely had beaten college crews in a poorish way, and suggested that all that was wanted to bring the cup back was a strong Leander combination.

Well, they got together that combination on Thursday, but with no better results than that which befell the third Trinity and Trinity Hall last year.

SIGNAL VICTORY
FOR VON BUELOW

Transformation of Imperial and Prussian Ministers Results of Coup.

Berlin, July 13.—Prince Buelow's visit to the Kaiser at Kiel has resulted in what is practically a transformation of the imperial and Prussian ministries.

Last night the Norddeutsche Allgemeine Zeitung announced the retirement of Count von Posadowsky, Imperial minister of the interior, and Herr von Staudt, Prussian minister of education. Count von Posadowsky is succeeded by Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, hitherto Prussian minister of the interior.

Herr von Moltke, hitherto ober-president of the Province of East Prussia, steps into Herr Bethmann-Hollweg's shoes, and Herr von Staudt is succeeded by Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg, of the department of education.

Von Posadowsky's Personality. General regret is expressed at Count von Posadowsky's retirement. He was a statesman, a junkie, but a nobleman; urbane in manner even with his political antagonists, always reasonable and possessed of enormous industry and knowledge. As early as last December it was noticed that he was a doomed man. He did not approve of Prince Buelow's breaking with the Center. He apprehended that the Socialists would return to power, and his dislike of Prince Buelow's flirtation with the Radicals and his idea of a Conservative-Liberal "pairing."

All along the line Prince Buelow was victorious and Count von Posadowsky's retirement was only a question of time. If there is general regret at Count von Posadowsky's retirement, there is equally general satisfaction at the departure of Herr Staudt, probably the most reactionary, obscurest minister of education which Prussia ever had.

The New Men. With regard to the new men, Herr Bethmann-Hollweg is an accomplished scholar, an able speaker, and a Conservative to the backbone, but with inclinations toward broad-mindedness which are promising.

Herr von Moltke has hitherto been known only as a bureaucrat and nephew of the great strategist, Dr. Holle is a resolute, painstaking official, but of his views nothing is known. He is what the Germans call an "unwritten sheet."

Two facts stand out prominently from these changes—first, that the Kaiser obtained two more men (Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg and Moltke) in the ministry who are his personal friends and likely to represent his ideas; second, that Prince Buelow's power and influence have been greatly strengthened by the removal from the ministry of Count von Posadowsky, his one possible rival. Another inference might be drawn. Count von Posadowsky was never a friend of "Weltpolitik," and his retirement strengthens the ministry should they adhere to a continuation of a spirited policy abroad and in the colonies.

Sir William Crookes has discovered how to get nitric acid from the air, but the discovery has long been looked upon as a "have before me," writes a correspondent of the London Chronicle. A manual of chemistry in which I find a eulogy of nitrogen and its compounds, such as nitric acid and the so-called compound ammonias. "Whoever," says the inspired chemist, "succeeds in producing those bodies in abundance from the nitrogen of the atmosphere without the use of organic materials will not only amass a princely fortune, but must rank as one of the greatest benefactors of the human race, inasmuch as such a discovery would open up almost infinite supply of matter for the fertilization of the land."

CHAPTER XXI.

The Name of the Man.

Dr. North nodded abruptly and turned.

"All right, Bess," he said. "I'll leave you to him."

He pushed her forward across the pavement as he spoke and raised his voice abruptly.

"Here, Clavering, here's Bessie Merrill. She'll take you to Hetty, and explain everything that I can't. Good-night, old man. Good-night Bessie."

He turned abruptly, and hurried away into the darkness before Geoffrey had time to speak or even move, striding down the street, a solitary, lonely figure, leaving Geoffrey facing Bessie on the half-deserted pavement. She looked anxious, eager, nervous all at once.

"So you're little Bessie Merrill, is that so?" he said. "You were a child when I left Bessie."

She put out her hand suddenly to him.

"A child—yes, that has grown up all on a sudden like, and oh, I am right glad to see you, I am. I knew you'd come, sooner or later, if you were of the same mind as when you were, and you were never one to change, as I remember. But I'm getting tired of waiting; an' Hetty—oh, I had heard her callin'—it would a' broke yer heart it would. It was always the same—Has Geoffrey come? Isn't he never comin'?" and then she'd cry. He hadn't changed, he believed in me still. Do you think he does now, Bess? Perhaps something has changed him, and he'll never come now."

She came closer, tightening her hand on his arm, peering into his face.

"And now you've come at last, thank heaven! Hetty's waited all through the fever, callin' for you this last fortnight as though she knew you were all that was left to her. An' I've been waitin' for you for years—ever since I stopped bein' a child and grow'd into a woman—ever since—ever since—"

She stopped suddenly, stood numb and silent for a moment, and then abruptly broke into a passion of sobs.

"Bessie—Bessie," Geoffrey cried, "What is the meaning of this? What is the matter?"

She could not speak for an instant, but the unsteady words broke from her lips at last.

"You've been waitin' for years for you—for you to come—ever since I gave up Ted Sealey. And I thought you'd never come—I thought—I thought I should lose everything—all the happiness I could ever hope for in my life and you were never one to change, as I remember. But I'm getting tired of waiting; an' Hetty—oh, I had heard her callin'—it would a' broke yer heart it would. It was always the same—Has Geoffrey come? Isn't he never comin'?" and then she'd cry. He hadn't changed, he believed in me still. Do you think

"But what do you mean, Bessie?" he asked. "I don't understand."

She turned her head quickly, and looked sharply round the half empty street.

"Come in," she said abruptly. "I can't tell you here, you must come in. There are folks about as might overhear, and you have to be so careful. If some folks got a suspicion as Hetty was here, you might— they might cause trouble, they was that bitter against her, some of 'em, poor dear; and that's why I have had to be so cautious and careful. But come in. I'll tell you everything inside. Oh, I'm that thankful you've come. It seemed to me these last years as you were the only one left as could help me and Hetty—her out of her trouble, and me out of mine."

She broke off again and made a quick movement toward the cottage, swinging open the little garden gate with impatient hands and stumbling up the little path to the door.

Geoffrey followed with his heart stopped in its breast, and the blood dying from his face. Hetty at last, safe and loved, waiting for him, hoping for him, longing for him, thank God, at last! It was too wonderful a dream to be true!

The door opened and closed on them—surely the strangest of strange pairs—Sir Geoffrey a'wring, of India, whose name had been on the King's lips, and his hand in the King's hand such a short time ago, and Bessie Merrill, the little factory girl, who bent her head and moved her deft fingers day after day among the spools and bobbins of the mill in which she earned her daily bread. Millionaire and working girl, baronet and mill hand went in together.

Geoffrey looked around the once familiar sitting-room. Except that Mrs. Merrill was gone it looked just the same. He missed the good tempered face and the rough hands that had prepared his rough meals years ago, but nothing else was changed. It was just the same, and as clean and as neat as it had been when Mrs. Merrill had been alive. And Bessie had it all to do now. For an instant he wondered how she managed it; but she gave him no chance to ask. She pushed a chair toward him, and dropping into one herself, lay back with a sigh.

"Now you're here, Geoffrey Clavering," she said, "things can't help but go straight. I'm going to tell you everything—straight from the very beginning—from the time I—threw over Ted Sealey till now."

Geoffrey looked at her curiously.

She sat up suddenly, her pale face alight, her black eyes burning.

"I'm going to tell you," she cried, "all about everything. I'm going to tell you what Hetty's been saying in her delirium this last fortnight—I'm going to tell you all I know. I knew years ago, as I should, and I've been waiting for the day to come, I've waited because you loved her, and I knew when you came back you'd love her still, for you were never one to change, Geoffrey Clavering. So now you help her and help me, and I'm going to tell you all what you don't know—all about Hetty and all about the murder of Mr. Lancaster, and why she went away and all. I'm going to tell you what nobody else can—I'm going to give you the name of the murderer—the name of the man who killed poor, old Mr. Lancaster."

Geoffrey gave a sharp cry and sat upright. "The name of the man?" he repeated. "What man? What do you mean? I don't understand."

Bessie brought her face forward sharply to the light of the lamp that burned on the round center table.

"Why, the name of the man who murdered Mr. Lancaster," she said quickly. "You don't believe in Hetty's guilt? You know her better than that, I guess? or?"

She passed her hand across her face and drew a deep breath.

He leaned forward quickly.

"Bessie," he said, "do you mean that after all you have never doubted Hetty?"

She sat up suddenly, her pale face alight, her black eyes burning.

"I'm going to tell you," she cried, "all about everything. I'm going to tell you what Hetty's been saying in her delirium this last fortnight—I'm going to tell you all I know. "Why, the name of the man who murdered Mr. Lancaster," she said quickly. "You don't believe in Hetty's guilt? You know her better than that, I guess? or?"

He leaned forward quickly.

"Bessie," he said, "do you mean that after all you have never doubted Hetty?"

She sat up suddenly, her pale face alight, her black eyes burning.

"I'm going to tell you," she cried, "all about everything. I'm going to tell you what Hetty's been saying in her delirium this last fortnight—I'm going to tell you all I know. I knew years ago, as I should, and I've been waiting for the day to come, I've waited because you loved her, and I knew when you came back you'd love her still, for you were never one to change, Geoffrey Clavering. I'm going to tell you what nobody else can—I'm going to give you the name of the murderer—the name of the man who killed poor, old Mr. Lancaster."

Her black eyes flashed and sparkled. Her red lips relaxed and she threw back her head sharply, her white teeth showing between them.

"Oh, I ought to be on a stage instead of in a mill!" she said. "I've just been actin' a play and deceivin' everybody, and I reckon I've done it grand. Doubt Hetty? Could you believe I should?"

She sat upright in her chair and her manner altered suddenly. The laughter died out of her face, and the look of anxiety and misery swept back sharply into it.

"It was all part of my plan. But I've nearly lost everything through it," she added, suddenly. "You've only just come in time. He's tired of it all, and so am I, and I was just sick with misery to think how I was to explain it to him, and how he'd take it—but you'll do it. Oh, somehow, surely it'll be all right now for us all."

"But I don't understand," Geoffrey said again. "Tell me what it is you have been doing—what do you mean?"

She brought her hand down upon the table. Her bright, black eyes gleamed sharply in the light of the lamp, her breath came quickly from between her red lips.

"You can guess why I took up with Barker? You ain't a fool; you'd know as a girl you'd alwys known to be honest, you wouldn't turn on a sudden, eh? Yet Ted didn't. One couldn't understand, he couldn't believe," her voice broke in a little sob, and then, with sudden impatience, she changed it into a laugh and dashed the back of her hand across her eyes.

"But that's the way of men, they can't understand, they're like children, the smartest on 'em, and Ted Sealey was no better than the rest, and when I took up with Barker he wouldn't believe what I said—that he thought 'as playin' fast and loose with him and wouldn't wait a bit like I told him to."

She broke off again, and lifting her head looked at Geoffrey's eyes with a sudden shadow back in her own.

"But it wasn't," she added. "I ought to 'a' told him why I did it, but he was that dead set and that hard on Hetty I didn't dare. That was why I had to do it all on my own. I took up with Barker and pretended to doubt her—I pretended to let him persuade me o' her guilt, and all the time—all the time I could 'a' strangled him with my own hands, I could—the cur! The sneak! Oh, I've only know'd since I've took up with Barker what a cur a man can be!"

Geoffrey stared at her almost stupidly—at her flashing black eyes, her passionate face.

"I thought of my plan," said Bessie. "You can guess it all now. I laid traps for Barker, pretendin' to admire him and believe what he said, and give the cold shoulder to Ted—just for a purpose to get Barker to give himself away."

"To give himself away?" Geoffrey gave a startled gasp for breath.

Bessie nodded.

"I thought it were him as did it," she said. "I thought he was the one as put the poison in Mr. Lancaster's glass. I thought it were him till tonight."

THE CRY OF DESPAIR.

She broke off. Geoffrey was leaning forward eagerly, his face strained and anxious, as he stared up into her passionate black eyes.

"Go on, Bessie," he said, huskily. "Tell me, tell me quickly."

She threw up her head again.

"You'll blame me, maybe," she said, "same as Ted did, but it seemed the best I could do for Hetty. There was no one else as ever tried to clear her, and I couldn't let be. I had to do summat. I couldn't sit still and hear 'em callin' her bad names. It drove me fairly silly to hear 'em, and so I set to work."

"Tell me," said Geoffrey again, hoarsely.

"I took up with Barker. I ran after him, demeanin' myself and gettin' called bold and brazen for my pains. He sneered at me—too, I thought I was a beauty he did at first, but—"

"Oh, I got him. He couldn't help laughin'—"

"I reckon I were a born actress. Anyhow, I won on him, and from that time on he was to be my man. And at last got real crazy over me. And all the time I were a-thinkin' as it were he as did the murder. I thought it were he without a doubt, and that he deserved the worst as he could do to him, for old Mr. Lancaster had found out summat as he had done, and Barker had every reason for silencing him. He's a bad lot, is Fred Barker, and it were he—he and Lord Fanshawe—as forged the check everybody thought had been forged by another. Praps John Andrews was found dead after you went? He were Giles' clerk, you remember, and he'd had over £500 of Giles' money. But old Mr. Lancaster found he hadn't had it after all, but Lord Fanshawe and Fred Barker together, and John Andrews was to be accused of the crime, and he couldn't stand the thought of it, but went and drowned himself, things were so black against him. It was that made me think Barker had killed him."

For on the night of his death he had been there to see him on business. Molly Byrne, the cook, let him in and let him out again, and she said she had seen Mr. Lancaster after he had gone, but somehow I didn't believe her. I kept on, thinkin' as Barker must be the one, and I thought may be he had crept back round the house, over the lawn, to the library window, same as they accused Hetty of doing, and had got in and poisoned him then. But somehow it seems tonight as if I was wrong, after all."

She stopped, dropping back to the chair with a sudden sigh and a faint weariness on her face.

"Well, tell me," said Geoffrey again. "Tell me more. I shall never believe Hetty guilty, but I do believe the verdict returned at the inquest was wrong. I don't believe he died from natural causes, or there would not have been so much feeling about it. There is never smoke without fire. But tell me all you can now."

The eager light flashed back to her face.

"You've heard all about the murder, and what happened on the night of it," she began abruptly. "But, you haven't heard, and nobody has yet, what I know of it. She leaned forward again, and the light of the lamp gleamed on her face and seemed to burn in her eyes. "I never told what I saw," she went on. "I thought I wait a bit till I could lay my hands on something as would help her; but I never thought to wait all these years. But anyhow, on the night of Mr. Lancaster's death I went to the house with a message for him. It was Molly Byrne, the cook, as opened the door to me, and she told me that Mr. Lancaster was shut up with Fred Barker on business. So I went away, and afore I had gone many yards from the house I met Hetty Lancaster herself, looking that white and ill she frightened me. She was changed as you wouldn't believe a girl could change in a few days. She seemed to have grown old, and when she saw me she sort o' broke down. I wanted to see my father," she said. "I want his forgiveness for what I've done. I came on purpose, and now I scarcely dare to go to the house. I'll come back with you, Bessie, and wait a bit before I go." So we turned together, and she came home with me, and there were lots o' folks who saw her who gave evidence at the inquest about her lookin' ill and bein' queer and odd. She came back and sat in our parlor for a bit, and then I walked down with her to her father's house, and left her at the gate."

Bessie paused. Her head was turned away, and her black eyes, with a dull fire burning somberly in them now, were fixed on the little grate.

"I left her there," she added, "but somehow I couldn't go home. Hetty frightened me. What had happened to her, and where she had been those few days while she had been away from home she wouldn't say. But she shuddered at the mention of it when I asked her, and broke down sobbing that heart-broken it made me own heart ache to hear her."

I guessed," Bessie turned suddenly, fierce, and faced Geoffrey with her black eyes blazing and flashing as they met his.

"I guessed then," she cried, "all that I found out after. I guessed when at the bottom of it—I guessed when who had 'ticed her away, and would break her heart afore he had done with her. And you could guess—"

She broke off again, and lifting her head looked at Geoffrey's eyes with a sudden shadow back in her own.

"But it wasn't," she added. "I ought to 'a' told him why I did it, but he was that dead set and that hard on Hetty I didn't dare. That was why I had to do it all on my own. She broke off again, and lifting her head looked at Geoffrey's eyes with a sudden shadow back in her own.

"But it wasn't," she added. "I ought to 'a' told him why I did it, but he was that dead set and that hard on Hetty I didn't dare. That was why I had to do it all on my own. I took up with Barker and pretended to doubt her—I pretended to let him persuade me o' her guilt, and all the time—all the time I could 'a' strangled him with my own hands, I could—the cur! The sneak! Oh, I've only know'd since I've took up with Barker what a cur a man can be!"

Geoffrey stared at her almost stupidly—at her flashing black eyes, her passionate face.

"I thought of my plan," said Bessie. "You can guess it all now. I laid traps for Barker, pretendin' to admire him and believe what he said, and give the cold shoulder to Ted—just for a purpose to get Barker to give himself away."

"To give himself away?" Geoffrey gave a startled gasp for breath.

Bessie nodded.

"I thought it were him as did it," she said. "I thought he was the one as put the poison in Mr. Lancaster's glass. I thought it were him till tonight."

MOVE FOR FOOD ON SIMPLE LINES

Prominent People Identify Themselves With New Economic Movement.

London, July 13.—The theory that we spend too much on food of the wrong sort has caught the imagination of rich and poor.

"I find a new enthusiasm for the reform," said Miss May Yates yesterday, "as the result of the meeting in the Mansion House, and I think, with assistance, we shall carry everything before us in our campaign. We are helped a great deal by the fact that the Declaration has the support of so many people, who do not need to economize in their expenditure on food, but are living more simply because it is more healthy."

Hermann Senn, the great chef who instructs chefs, confirmed this view. He declared yesterday that the trend of modern cookery of the highest class is in the direction of simple and natural food. "All our best dishes today are simple. To make a reputation as a chef you must prepare food in such a way that natural juices and flavors are retained. The dish that is highly seasoned betrays bad cooking."

Wholesale bread, which the reformers advocate, is used by Mr. Senn as a basis of canapés and croutets.

Among well-known women who are practicing and advocating the simple life at the dinner table are the Duchess of Grafton, the Marchioness of Ormonde, Lady Windsor, Lady Wimborne, Lady Llangatock, Lady Henry Somerset and Lady Dorothy Neville.

Several flourishing restaurants and cafes testify to a growing trade for simple food among the people.

"For men following sedentary occupations," said Bertram Theobald, the secretary of the Food Reform Restaurant in Holborn, yesterday, "we provide nutfood, cereals, salads, fresh fruit, poultry, and cheese. Men who do manual labor can find all the nourishment they want in wholemeal bread, lentils, peas, beans, cheese and rice."

The co-operation of the teachers in the schools and all local associations for the betterment of the health of the people is being sought in several localities. Bred and Green may be the first scene of the new campaign.

CARTER CO. VICTORIOUS

U. S. Court Says It Is Exclusively Entitled To Red Package for Pills.

The Carter Medicine Company, of New York, states that its exclusive right as owner of Little Liver Pills to the red package has just been again confirmed by two important decrees of the United States circuit court sitting at Trenton, N. J. It says: "The suit of the Carter Medicine Company, in that court, for an injunction restraining a Canadian, N. J. pill manufacturer from using a red-colored package for his preparation, is decided in favor of the Carter Company. A similar result occurs in a suit to enjoin a retail druggist from selling pills in red packages. Both actions were contested."

"The court decides that the Carter Medicine Company has for many years used the red-colored package, and to the use of red-colored wrappers and labels upon small round packages of liver pills, and says that the right was acquired by the adoption of that color more than thirty years ago, and defendant in each case is permanently enjoined from manufacturing or putting up any liver pills in such red colored packages, and also from selling by its continuous use over since. The defendant in each case is permanently enjoined from manufacturing or putting up any liver pills in such red colored packages, and also from selling any pills in red packages, except the genuine Carter's."

"The decrees direct the defendants, among other things, to deliver up to

is most important to every baker. A business in which the receipts and profits vary every week, while the expenses remain the same, is a source of great anxiety to any business man.

No baker can hope for a steady and increasing business unless the quality of his bread is uniformly superior to that of his competitors. He can have no more valuable asset than the reputation that his bread is the "best in town." Any baker can win this reputation for his bread by using only "FIVE ROSES" and "HARVEST QUEEN" FLOURS.

These flours are made from the very highest grade wheat obtainable and are superior to ordinary bakers' patents in every way. They will not lose, but make, trade for any baker who uses them, as they make the very sweetest, most wholesome and most nutritious bread. Regular and ever increasing custom can be obtained by any baker who lets his customers know that he uses "FIVE ROSES" and "HARVEST QUEEN" only.

Y.M.C.A. BOYS OUT FOR A GOOD TIME

Camp at Port Ryerse Is Proving to Be Very Successful Outing.

[Special to The Advertiser.]
London Y. M. C. A. Boys' Camp, Port Ryerse, Ont.—Twenty boys from the junior department of the London Y. M. C. A. are spending a jolly two weeks at Port Ryerse, on Lake Erie, seven miles from Simcoe. They have a lovely spot on the beach, with drinking water and supplies right close at hand. Mr. Mel Brock, the boys' secretary, is in charge of the camp, and Rev. Mr. Bowen is looking after the religious work.

Notes.
So far, everyone but Jack Hamilton and Ernest Bleuthner have succeeded in falling in the lake with their clothes on.

Thursday morning, Tom Chatto,
Charlie Sumner, Dick Mills and Sid Elliott had an early morning dip in the lake. The only thing wrong was that they hadn't time to disrobe, consequently, they did not enjoy it as much as they otherwise would.

George Gilmore is still chasing the finny tribe, but so far has only landed one of the goby's ducks.

Gordon McGuffie is thinking very seriously of going on the stage in the capacity of a clog-dancer.

Last night the boys had a fine campfire on the beach, which was much enjoyed by the neighbors as well as themselves.

Jack Greer and Everett Glen have been keeping the camp awake at nights playing mouthorgans. We hope they will soon learn.

The boys are practicing baseball and football faithfully, and have arranged for games with Simcoe teams the early part of next week.

George Gilmore established a record for eating ice cream last night. Seven dishes in ten minutes.

Harry Sing is becoming an expert fisherman.

Louis Harris was afraid he would be thrown in the lake this morning for not being dressed for breakfast, so he slept with all his clothes on.

Arrangements have been made for
Rev. Mr. Bowen to hold two services
Sunday in the village hall.

Two of the boys are at present laid up with sunburn.

Four of the boys went to Port Dover yesterday, and were nearly arrested, because they only had a jersey and a pair of football knickers on.
Whenever you mention the word "officer," Fred Short starts to run.

Bert, the cook, was teaching the lads
"squat wrestling" last night, and they became so enthusiastic that a number were practicing in their sleep,
to the discomfort of their tent-mates.

Water Meeting Drew Small Crowd on Saturday Night

Commissioner Saunders, Mr.
Robt. A. Lyons and Mr. J. M.
Parsons the Speakers.

The meeting called by the water commissioners to discuss the water question attracted only about twenty-five people to the city hall Saturday night.

Commissioners Saunders, Robert A.
Lyons, chief engineer of the London
Electric Company and John M. Parsons were the speakers. The latter presided at first, but as the audience desired to hear his views on the water question, Dr. John D. Wilson took the chair and allowed him to speak.

Mr. Lyons' argument was that the commissioners have not given the artesian well scheme and the T. & W.
scheme a fair deal. He maintained that his experience with an artesian well on the property of the London
Electric Company, on York street, leads him to believe that plenty of water to supply the city for years to come can be secured from artesian wells.

He accused the commissioners of boiling wells where they were sure they would find no water.

Commissioner Saunders.

Commissioner Saunders didn't have anything to say of the cut in insurance which the installation of a high-pressure system will bring about. Instead, he devoted his attention to a defense of the Komoka scheme, and an exposition of what looked like its good qualities, compared with the other schemes. He declared that there has been no appreciable depreciation in the flow of the springs down the river so far as he has been able to learn.

Some Fireworks.
Mr. Parsons supplied some fireworks. He said he could build the high-pressure scheme for $200,000 for

Big Time Assured for All Who

If those who attend the grocers' pic-not have a good time, they will have no one to blame but themselves. Certainly it won't be any fault of the gro-make the affair a great success. The C. P. R. has promised all first-class coaches and plenty of them, and as the train will make no stops after leaving the asylum grounds, the trip should be a pleasant one. The ladies on the train will be made the recipients of souvenir packages, put by the McCormick Manufacturing Company, and the D. S. Perrin Company. They will also receive a dainty luncheon and the gentlemen will be well looked after.

Everyone on the train will receive free tickets for Scarborough Beach. This is one of the newest and best-equipped amusement parks in Canada, and no one should miss it. "The House of Nonsense," deserves its name, but everyone receives his money's worth of fun; while the "Third Degree" should be very popular with all belonging to the Masonic order.
