another book by W. T. STEAD, the famous editor of "Review of Reviews," and "Borderland."

"Letters from Julia ; or, Light from the Borderland."

Mr. Stead describes these letters as a series of messages as to the life beyond the grave received by automatic writing from one who has gone before. He believes the spirits of the dead can reveal themselves to the living, and has faith in 'automatic writing.' The present letters were written by the hand of Mr. Stead, guided, as he asserts, by the spirit of Julia, a lady who died some months before. The little dainty volume is prettily got up.—London Pub. FAC-SIMILE OF TITLE-PAGE.

JAMES HOGG: The Ettrick Shepherd.

We have the pleasure to offer a real literary curiosity—a manuscript of one of this famous writer's best stories.

In his personal reminiscences the poet-novelist tells the story of the writing of this work and with his usual candour. "In 1822, perceiving that I was likely to run short of money, I began and finished in the course of a few months 'The Three Perils of Man, viz., War, Women and Witchcraft.' Lord preserve us; what a medley I made of it! And being impatient to get hold of some of Messrs. Longman & Co.'s money or bills, which were the same, I dashed on and mixed up with what might have been one of the best historical tales our country ever produced, such a mass of Diablerie as somewhat retarded the main story. I received £150 for the edition of 1000 copies." Afterwards going up to London the author found that Longman had no copies left, and except in a much abbreviated form, with a new title, "The Siege of Roxburgh: a legend of the wars of England and Scotland in the reign of Robert II," the work is not now known. This interesting manuscript came from Edinburgh into the hands of an early settler in the Guelph district.

It is written on foolscap of various sizes and qualities and is numbered up to 445 pages (both sides of the paper used.) The first 64 pages are in plain round hand, written with great care, as the writer's intention evidently was to make it "a monumental work of border history." Money pressure may have forced him on, as the rest of the MS is in his own characteristic chirography. The admirers of Hogg, now rapidly on the increase, will be pleased to know that this most valuable relic has been preserved in good condition. Nearly all of every page is quite legible, although some of the larger ones are slightly frayed at the edges. In this story Hogg has excelled himself. His narratives of fearful Diablerie or the 'Mysteries of Fairyland,' being told in the con amore spirit of one who was more than half persuaded of their truth. He tells with a wealth of detail of that famous "Battle of the Spirits between Friar Roger Bacon and Michael Scott, the Magician," which was suddenly ended by Bacon's sprinkling of black sand (gunpowder) and making an explosion such as quite confounded his opponents. This MSS. has thirty-two chapters, while "The Siege" has only fifteen.

The Hogg Manuscript

The first title (covered over) reads: "The Perilous Castles: A Tale of the Cheviot Borders. The new title: "THE THREE PERILS OF MAN:

War, Women and Witchcraft: A Border Romance."

"Come away now my fine lad the nae ye a braw hand good callant? Do nae ye think ye deserve something that's mair good frae me? Eh? Ay, ye surely deserve something better than ordinar. And ye shall hae it too." (Then a kick on the postern, or a lunder with the staff) Come your ways like a sony braw callant, and I'll let you see a bonny thing, and a braw thing in your brack o' the wood ye ken." Jack cried so spiteously that if his master had not had a brood of stone he woud have relented, and not continued in his fatal purpose, but he gave only the longer the more furious "O let me gang! let me gang! let me gang!" said Jack "let me gang! let me gang! for it wasna me, I dinna hae naething about it at a." "Ye dinna ken naething about what my poor man?" "About you let sheep in the wood ye ken."
"You nae all you rogue you villain! you haue compassed that you ken about it, when I wasna speiring any sic question at you you haue you dog! you rascal! meely that you care! Mather of God but I will do for you! you whelp! you dog! you rascal!" Come along here. (another hand blew) "tell me now my precious lad the ye war gair to be killed, as ye ken something about killing, whether woud you choop to haue your throat cut, or to haue your feet tied, and be skinned alive?" "O dinna kill me, dinna kill me" cried poor Jack. "My dear master dinna kill me, for I cumma brack it. Oh oh, an ye kill me I'll tell my mather, that will I. What woud my mather say to ye, when she has name but me? Oh master dinna kill me and I'll never do the like o' it again." "How? I shall take recourant for that,
-you shall never do the like o' it again" said the other in this melancholly and heart-breaking manner he dragged him on all the way by the rough lawzy head, kicking him one whilk and beating him another till he brought him to the way

"The Devil he sat in Dornock tower, And out of a slip-hole peekit he,
And he saw three crows come yont the left,
And they winged their flight to Eldon tree.

"O, whow; O, whow, quo' the muckle deil,
But yons a sight that glads my e'e;
For I'll lay the steel brander o' hell, There's a storm brewing in the west countrye." The Rhimer of Selkirk.

445 pp. various folio sizes. See page iii. of cover.
