Another "Sunshine" Feature

This is an entirely new idea, and will especially interest people who reside in natural gas districts. The gas ring takes the place of the lower Sunshine fire-pot, thus making it possible to burn gas in your furnace without inconvenience. Such is not possible in a furnace where the ordinary gas log is inserted; for, should the gas give out, a coal or wood fire could not be started until the gas pipes were disconnected.

To provide against sweating in the summer time, Sunshine Furnace is equipped with nickel-plated steel radiators and doors. All other parts are made of copper-plated steel. This special treatment, besides meaning quicker and greater radiation from the radiators and doors than cold cast iron could possibly give, acts as protection for the bolts, rivets and rods from iron-oxide gas. When cast iron comes in contact with the nickel-plated steel it is coated with our special Anti-Rust treatment, which prevents the slightest possibility of rust commencing anywhere in Sunshine Furnace.

A Little More Cross.

A little more cross and a little less creed. A little more beauty of loveliness and a little more bearing of things to be borne. With faith in the infinite triumph of moose.

A little less doubt and a little more do of the simple sweet service each day brings to view.

A little more cross with its beautiful light. The beam of love and a little more rose. A little less sword and a little more rose.

To soften the struggle and lighten the blow: A little more worship, a little more prayer. With the beam of its incense to lighten the way.

A little more song and a little less sigh. And a theory that leads to the freedom to go by. A little more cross and a little more do.

In the cross that blooms like a rose out of dust. A little more dreaming, a little more singing. A little more childhood and a sweeter thereafter.

A little more cross and a little less hate. With love in the hands and a rose by the gate.

A Prophet in Babylon.

BY W. J. DAWSON.

A TRAGEDY.

THE anonymous letters had become again. They had also become more definite in their attacks, and more vindictive in their character.

Gaunt read them and laughed; but both Butler and Palmer regarded them as a grave menace.

The exciting cause of these new threats was not far to seek. Butler had succeeded by his trenchant exposures in the Daily Light in arousing New York to one of those brief missions of reforming energy which are so characteristic of the volatile city. Public opinion had been roused, and had furnished the necessary dynamic for the enforcement of law.

There had been police-raids of houses devoted to gambling and worse things; saloons had been closed, and some of the worst offenders had been fined or sent to the penitentiary. One result had been the enrollment of thousands of new members in the League of Service. Many men of influence who cared relatively little for the religious aims of the League, recognized its social value, and joined its ranks. The pulpits of the city rang with denunciations of public evils. Even the papers most hostile to Gaunt were silenced, and others which hitherto had indulged in caustic commendation.

But in that under-world of vice and crime, whose kingdom Gaunt had invaded, there was the growing rumour of conspiracy and retaliation. The old Ephesian cry rose, Our craft is in danger, and it was all the more to be dreaded because it did not utter itself in public clamour, but in whispered wail. In that dark and evil street where the Mission stood, and the Sisters of the poor toiled, there were ominous signs of dissatisfaction. One night the windows of the hall were broken, and another night an attempt was made to fire the building. The grey sisters went about their work unmoved, but they noticed sadly that they now met more scowling than smiling faces. Butler knew the peril, but he recognized that the wisest way of meeting it was to show no sign of fear; for the first sign of fear is the coward's signal to attack.

Palmer was more acutely conscious of the peril than Butler, but for this there was a reason in growing love for Olivia Jordan. The figure of the fair girl filled his thoughts, and often haunted his dreams. Again and again he woke in terror, from the vision of her peril, but what could he do? She met his hunted gaze with the confident and cheerful smile of a courageous child. Like Gaunt she smiled at threats, and that indeed was the temper of all these tender women.

'No one will hurt us,' she said. 'Our frailty is our protection.'

Palmer listened, and began to understand why the records of martyrdom are so full of woman's names.

'You have disregarded our warnings,' ran the latest anonymous letter. 'You must now accept the consequences. The blow which we will strike will be sudden and sure. You cannot escape it.'

Gaunt, Butler, and Palmer each read this letter in turn. They were seated at a table in the little room which Gaunt used for consultation and correspondence.

'What do you make of it?' said Palmer anxiously.

'It is a piece with all the other letters,' replied Butler. 'They are written by one hand. This may mean that they simply express the intentions of an individual, or that they are the manifesto of a group of men plotting to do us harm.'

'Then you think that there is a conspiracy against us?'

'I do, and more than that, it is not a conspiracy of ignorant men. If any attack is made upon us, it will not be the work of the ignorant, but they will be the tools of intelligent and probably wealthy men.'

'And what can we do?'

'Simply nothing, except sit tight,' said Butler with a grim smile. 'We can't wear chain armour under our clothes, it is out of fashion, and it would be a confession of weakness to invoke police protection. We must just take our risks and be of good courage.'

About a week after this conversation Gordon died. The old man had been busy until his last hour. After a long day's work he went to bed at midnight and died in his sleep.

When Gordon's will was opened it was found to contain one curious clause. He stated that the only service he had for him should be conducted in the Mission-hall, which was within a stone's throw of the hall in which he himself had preached five and twenty years before on his accession from the church. In his death he wished to be identified with the poor, he directed that his funeral should be of the plainest possible description; that his bearers should be six poor men chosen from the Mission converts, that Gaunt should conduct any service of a public character that might be arranged; and finally he expressed the desire that those who had loved him would not be betrayed by their affection speaking any words of adulation over one whose mistakes had been many, whose acts of wisdom had been few, and whose life had been the testimony of his unfulfilled intentions.

'How like him!' said Gaunt, as he read these last instructions. 'While most of us are filled with a lively sense of our value to society, I believe Gordon had not the least idea of what his life meant to the world.'

'I saw you widely to see himself,' said Palmer.

'He sees now the intention of his life fulfilled,' replied Gaunt.

Then each felt that any further words were sacrilege in the presence of that inscrutable and majestic mask of death.

Gaunt sat long that night in the quiet room where the dead man had worked, busy in the examination of his papers. These papers consisted of fragments of autobiography, notes upon various scholastic and philosophic problems, prayers, meditations and diaries. As Gaunt read each faded page there came to him a new sense of the wonderful wealth of energy and wisdom compressed in such a life as Gordon's and he remembered Palmer's saying that Gordon saw widely because he did not see himself. How rare was that temper! How few were those whose lives were not pivoted on egoism! He saw now what was the real secret of the majesty and sweetness of Gordon's character: it was his total self-obliteration. He had striven as all brave men must needs strive, for the things which they count worthy, but he had never made personal success his goal, or measured the worth of his quest by the degree of his success or failure. He had been so sure of the triumph of God's purpose that he had never imagined himself necessary to that triumph. Therefore he had died in peace, incapable alike of the intoxication of success or of the depression of failure. And therefore also he had kept the prophetic vision; for only those who see not themselves can see God.

Gaunt felt himself humbled before the testimony of Gordon's life. In the midnight silence he examined his own heart, and put to himself inevitable questions. Was not he in danger of the intoxication of success? Had not he unconsciously conceived himself as necessary to the fulfilment of God's intentions? He thought he recognized in himself what certainly no one had noticed, a certain coarsening of spiritual fibre since his cause had triumphed. It was not pride, it was not complacency; it was hard indeed to define, unless as a certain dulling of the finer sensitiveness. Amid the agonies of his recognition, when he let his old life go at the fall of truth, he had nevertheless been conscious of rapturous moments of station. They were the moments when his naked soul clung close to God, knowing no other refuge. But it seemed to him that his clinging to God was less ardent now. Did not this imply that he saw God less clearly, because he had looked from

God to himself?

He realized now, as he meditated on Gordon's character, that those very qualities which had composed the noblest elements of that character were the products of outward failure. Fragrance from the bruised herb, wine from the crushed grape, a world's faith from the cross of desolation—so the story of the world's redeemers had ever run. Assuredly if that story of the tragic centuries was to be believed, success was the one fatal calamity in life, defeat the true redemption.

Yet he could not honestly pray for defeat, he could not even wish for such a life as Gordon's, so let us as its outward results went. But he saw now the thing he might pray for, and the goal he might strive for—it was complete self-obliteration. He saw that he must no longer think of himself as necessary even to the movement which he led. No man was necessary to the divine purpose. He must count not his life dear unto himself, he must be willing either to succeed or fail, to live or die, as God should decide—that was surely the last message of his great dead friend which reached the heart of Gaunt that that midnight hour. He bowed silently beside the dead prophet, and rose purified and refreshed.

It was in that hour that Gordon preached the last sermon of his noble life, it was not preached in vain.

The effect of these midnight thoughts was a new spirit of composition in Gaunt's mind. It was most clearly manifest in his attitude to the dangers that threatened him. Hitherto his attitude had been one of cheerful defiance. He had been ready to challenge the enemy, he had felt something of that thrill of elation which all strong and courageous men experience in the face of danger. His courage still remained, but all lust of battle had left him. He thought of his enemies with commiseration; it was their folly rather than their hatred which he saw. Things would happen as they would happen; as for him, he heard the mystic voice which said, 'What is that to thee? Follow thou Me.'

The following morning was spent in consultation upon the best method of carrying out Gordon's last wishes. Gordon's connection with the League of Service, and his latter writings in which he had advocated its purposes, had naturally given him notoriety. At the time of his death he was no longer a forgotten prophet, but rather a prophet who had come into his kingdom. Thus his death was a public event, and it was clear that it would be impossible to divert his funeral of a public character.

'There are at least five thousand of our people who will wish to show our tokens of respect to Gordon,' said Palmer. 'In all probability you might neglect that number, and it would be a safe estimate.'

'The Mission hall seats only eight hundred; it might hold a thousand,' he added.

'That's not the only difficulty,' said Gaunt. 'Gordon wished to be buried with the poor in his death. It is impossible to mistake his wishes. It would be entirely contrary to his wishes if we filed the hall with our friends—and his, but shut out the poor.'

Butler had sat silent during this discussion. His face was anxious. 'Have you no counsel to give?' said Gaunt with a smile.

'I had rather state facts,' he replied quietly. 'It will be time enough for counsel when we get our facts clear.'

'Well, what have you to say?' said Gaunt.

'First, that we are bound to respect Gordon's wishes. The service must be held in the Mission hall, and the actual converts of the Mission are the first people to be invited. Gordon loved them; many of them loved him. It is quite extraordinary that he should have had so great an influence over them, for his visits to the mission were not frequent. I confess that I feel a kind of noble pathos in the fact. Five and twenty years ago he tried to reach these very people and failed. In his last days he found the way to their hearts. We may mourn him deeply, but none will mourn him more deeply than these poor people. He was the prophet of the poor; the poor have a right to their prophet.'

'Yes, that is certain,' said Gaunt. 'But something else is certain too,' said Butler. 'You can't get these poor people together in the day time. They can only come at night. Therefore the service must be held in the evening. That is where the element of danger begins. You know what the street is like at night. I have reason to think that the saloons will take this opportunity of revenging themselves upon us. It is a unique opportunity. They will have us all bunched together, and God knows what violence they may attempt.'

'Do you really anticipate violence?' said Palmer.

'I do,' said Butler. 'You will remember what I told you about my friend the ex-pugilist. He knows all the movements of the district, and he tells me he is certain that our enemies meditate violence.'

'Well, we must take our risks,' said Gaunt with a smile. 'They are your own words.'

'What if the risk is death?' said Butler in a low voice.

'Then we can but die,' replied Gaunt.

'Very good,' said Butler. 'I expected you to say that. But I thought it my duty to warn you.'

'Thank you,' said Gaunt. He grasped Butler's hand in a long embrace. Then the moment of tense emotion passed, and the three friends with complete composure returned to the task of planning the obsequies of Gordon.

When Butler had conjectured that many thousands of adherents of the League would wish to be present at Gordon's funeral, he had not overestimated the public interest. On the day after Gordon's death the Press was full of articles on his career, memoranda of his conversations, estimates of his character and influence, and these were almost wholly eulogistic. To Gordon had come the rare good fortune of having outlived the enmities which his early career had excited. Of his former antagonists but few were left, and they were no longer antagonists. These also now joined in the general acclaim.

Each man brought Gaunt letters of appreciation for the character of Gordon, and in every instance the writers of the letters expressed the desire to take some humble part in the funeral of the dead prophet. As Gaunt read this vast mass of correspondence, it became clear that in spite of Gordon's depreciation of any public ceremony, nevertheless his obsequies were bound to be attended with a great popular demonstration of respect and affection.

Once convinced of this, Gaunt did his utmost to make the demonstration effective.

He fixed Saturday night for the simple service in the Mission Hall, and invited all the people in the habit of attending the mission especially the known converts, to be present. Members of the League were requested to line the street, and to wait reverently for the conclusion of the service. At the close of the service the body of Gordon was to be conveyed to Madison Square Gardens, accompanied by the members of the League in procession. In that vast auditorium, which had seen the birth of the League, the body would rest through Saturday night; early on Sunday morning it would be laid to rest.

Relation of the Liver and Kidneys

Functions such that each suffers when the other is deranged.

When the liver becomes sluggish and torpid in action, or is given too much work by over-eating, the kidneys have to help out with the work of filtration. When the liver fails the kidneys have all this work to do.

The beginning is biliousness, indigestion and constipation and after a time the kidneys begin to be affected and there comes backache, urinary derangement and finally kidney disease.

Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills are the rational cure for kidney disease, just as they are the most successful, because they get at the cause of trouble and exert a combined and direct influence on liver, kidneys and bowels.

They promptly and thoroughly cleanse the bowels or intestines and by awakening the action of the liver take the burden off the kidneys. Thus by their direct action on the kidneys bring about the natural and healthful work of these organs.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JULY 23, 1909.

That great journal of the seaside, the Kentville Western Chronicle, has unlearned another sensation. This time it is not a modest agricultural society that is being hauled over the coals but the Potomac University of Washington, D. C., a correspondence school of more or less importance, that has failed to measure up to the standards of the zealous scribe. We know nothing of the merits of Potomac University save that it fails to meet favor in the eyes of the editor of the Chronicle. It will probably meet the same fate as did the Union Agricultural Society and other transgressors. When the Chronicle undertakes the extirpation of any offender it may be expected that the task will be executed with promptness and despatch.

Halifax Happenings.

Native berries, cherries, green peas, etc., bearing the names of western grocers, are the harbingers of that abundance which each summer and autumn lavishly supplies our markets and our tables, from the 'Garden of Nova Scotia.'

As your good things pour in upon us we annually thank a kind Providence for this country, and ask him to forgive your sins in sending us all the poor apples, which the foreign markets won't, and to which your packers do not take kindly.

But your strawberries, plums and pears are A. I., and will no doubt go a long way towards evening up your shortcomings.

Judging by prevailing prices in this market for lamb, pork, eggs and butter, the farmer, who to-day gives attention to these products, is in no immediate danger of 'going broke,' though the consumer may.

The outlook in Halifax is not as rosy as could be desired. The New Railway Board has lopped off 150 employees at this end of the Inter-colonial railway, which means a decrease of anywhere between 80 and 100,000 dollars per year expenditure in this city. It is said that work can be done more cheaply in Moncton and this is given as a reason for the reduction.

Small wonder that such is the case—antiquated machinery and in many cases a total lack of even this, is bound to make work expensive as compared with the product of machines of modern design.

Richmond shops with practically no convenient appliances have for years been trying to 'make good' against heavy odds.

Justice to Nova Scotia should certainly suggest an equipment capable of enabling Nova Scotia Mechanics to do the work which rightfully belongs to this province, work which originates on Nova Scotia lines, and in the haulage of Nova Scotia traffic. And it is up to the people of Nova Scotia, irrespective of class or party, to emphasize this fact in a way that will be effective.

A few thousand dollars judiciously expended in equipping our Halifax shops with proper machinery would obviate the necessity of cutting down the staff in the wholesale manner that has been done, for our men could then do work as economically as at any point on the I. C. R.

Your western counties, and any others which produce what we consume, have a lively interest in the up-building of Halifax. Cut off employment and shrinkage in population follows with a corresponding shrinkage in our consuming and purchasing capacity.

We are now keeping one eye on coal and another on bread. If the Sydney strike continues it will be in order for the coteries of coal dealers to decide that the consumer must pay a larger price for a very short ton.

If, out west, there comes a little more rain, or a little less rain, or a heavy frost, or any other kind of frost, the price of wheat will go up a notch, so just now it is a case of eye strain with one looking east and the other west.

About the only thing we are sure will not go up as winter approaches, is the price of ice.

So much for this time. We want to say something about our city government but this will do next time.

Summer Complaints

Deadly to Little Ones.

At the first sign of illness during the hot weather months give the little ones Baby's Own Tablets, or in a few hours the child may be beyond cure. These tablets will prevent summer complaints if given occasionally to the well child, and will promptly cure these troubles if they come unexpectedly. For this reason Baby's Own Tablets should always be kept in every home where there are young children. Mrs. P. Laroche, Les Fonds, Que., says:—Last summer my baby suffered severely from stomach and bowel trouble, but the prompt administration of Baby's Own Tablets brought him through splendidly. Sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Standard newspaper of St. John, is the best paper in Eastern Canada for reporting latest trotting horse racing news' was the remark of a Wolfville horseman. He also remarked that he knew of no other morning daily in Canada that was reporting daily the summaries of the Grand Circuit, which is now racing down the line. It was last week at Terre Haute, Ind., and this week at Windsor, Ont. Next week it will be at Detroit.

Odds and Ends.

'I guess their religion can't stand the heat' was the rather scornful remark of a pious church goer the other Sunday, as he saw a wagon loaded with a large family and some baskets, leaving for the country, regardless of the church services soon to convene in Wolfville. The day was hot and oppressive.

There is a tendency which seems to grow more strong and wide each to abandon many customary religious practices during the heat of summer weather. It is practically certain that in all our churches this influence is seen in decreasing attendance and a lack of the interest which has characterized the services of a few months ago. The growth of liberty seems to impel the feeling that church going is not compulsory. The individual conscience is freer concerning the faithful observance of religious forms, and is less sensitive as to the particular form.

As a consequence people are disposed to leave the towns on these warm Sundays and seek the woods, fields and shores. Whole families, having lunch baskets and hammocks, go out to spend the day amid surroundings conducive to happiness and health.

To the superficial observer it would seem that in these present days religion was disregarded and the church of no account during the hot weather. However, we may differ in our religious ideas, we can all agree upon the principle that religion is life more than belief. It has to do with the happiness of the present quite as much as with the bliss of the future, or hereafter. Its relation to physical health, is just as vital as its relation to spiritual salvation. We are forced to the inclusiveness of the term religion. While a church service may develop the religious spirit and be conducive to the soul's interest as nothing else can be, it must be recognized by all that it is only one of many mediums whereby the aims of religion can be attained.

Primarily, the aim and purpose of the Sabbath was to give a day of rest to mankind. The present tendency seems to be a healthy revision in this direction. It is very questionable whether a man who has spent six days in a store or office is not doing the wisest thing in the world, and the most religious as well, in getting into that 'environment' in which there is most change and relaxation. For him to wear a church collar, and sit behind several big hats during an hour's service in the close atmosphere of a church filled with files, and unmentionable head gear, is not particularly conducive to soul culture. To clothe oneself in light holiday garb, to see his family arranged as Christians, to relax entirely the energies that have been exercised to the full during the week, and to come into touch with nature in some beautiful spot, has surely in it much of wisdom.

Religion it must be known is infinitely more than a matter of form, it is worth little as simply a church form or custom. Its reality is formed in life, the life of service and sympathy. It is revealed quite as much in a week-day action, as in a Sunday aspiration. It is not dependent in any way upon surroundings or occupation, but in the deed and the way in which it is performed.

Religion is not something to be found only in a church or to be hid behind when one goes for recreation. Everywhere people need sympathy. Everywhere is present an opportunity to do our part in making happier some human life. Let us therefore be sane and not too serious and translate our religion into kindly acts, and confine ourselves less to forms and customs of service.

ODDS AND ENDS.

Cricket Match.

The St. John cricket team which is touring the province stopped off at Wolfville for Sunday. On Saturday, Capt. Robinson, having obtained special permission to use the campus, got together some of the Wolfville club and sides were chosen, and a very enjoyable game was played. There are several young players in this town, who with the opportunity for practice would make excellent cricketers. Only four of the St. John club took part in the game. Rev. R. F. Dixon acted as scorer. The following is the score:

MR. ARNOLD'S TEAM.

Arnold	.....0
Popham	.....10
Wallace	.....2
Ramsden	.....0
Herbin	.....3
Wickwire	.....0
Chase (not out)	.....4
Huntington	.....1
Total	.....20

CAPT. ROBINSON'S TEAM.

Robinson	.....0
Webster	.....8
Dempster	.....0
McKens	.....0
Bill	.....9
McKens	.....2
Parker (not out)	.....3
Vaughan	.....0
Total	.....22

The bowling of Messrs. Robinson and Arnold was very effective and Webster took several wickets. He, Bill, Chase and Parker are born cricketers. It is to be deeply regretted that at present it appears impossible to obtain a ground for this noble game.

A Sweet Singer.

Mr. Austin M. Beattie, dramatic tenor, of New York, who visited his old home at Grand Pre last summer, and who spent the winter studying at Milan, Italy, recently made a very successful debut at a concert of Italian and English music given by Dr. C. M. Jordan with the London Symphony Orchestra at Queen's Hall, London, England. Referring to it the London Star says: "Perhaps the chief point of interest was the new tenor, Mr. Austin Beattie. Mr. Beattie is a Canadian, and has sung for some years in America, making New York his headquarters. He has a voice of exceedingly smooth and mellow quality, and his singing has a naturalness and lyric warmth which made its good qualities all the more conspicuous. Mr. Beattie's first part of the program was composed of Italian and the second part English songs, comprised of the following:—'Celeste Aida,' Verdi; 'La Donna e Mobile,' Verdi; 'Spin to Gentil,' Donizetti; 'Awake, Beloved,' Taylor; 'Undaunted Love,' Blow; 'Queen of the Earth,' Pissuti."

[It will be remembered that during his visit last summer Mr. Beattie sang more than once in St. Andrew's church, this town, as well as in the churches at Lower Horton, much to the pleasure of the congregations assembled.—En.]

An Incomplete Item.

The Yarmouth Times gives the following information:—Before leaving Berwick for Yarmouth, Rev. J. Bellars, the new pastor of Wesley church, was waited upon by his congregation and was presented with an address and a cheque for $50. As the Times doubtless desires to give all the facts, it might further state that among the members of the congregation present were postmaster C. R. Dickie, E. M. Beckwith, stipendiary magistrate, Mr. A. S. Burgess, and other well-known residents of Berwick. The greater part of the donation was the contribution of another prominent citizen, Sir Frederick Borden.—Berwick Register.

They purpose giving a lawn party about the middle of August. Full particulars in next week's issue of THE ACADIAN, also by posters.

The St. John Cricket team, who are touring the valley, were entertained at tea last Saturday afternoon by the Wolfville Tennis Club. The St. John boys played a tennis tournament with the Wolfville boys and some very exciting games were witnessed. Wolfville was very successful, winning in both the singles and doubles. The St. John players, who expressed themselves as having enjoyed the hospitality of the Wolfville club very much, left Monday morning for Windsor.

Wolfville was favored on Saturday last by a visit from the New Aberdeen, C. B. band, which delighted the citizens with an open-air concert in the afternoon. Their concert failed to materialize owing, no doubt, largely to lack of advertising, but the visit was not wholly unprofitable, judging by the generous collection given. The band is a fine aggregation of Christian soldiers of the Salvation Army. They are equipped with first-class silver instruments and render excellent music.

DRY GOODS. MEN'S CLOTHING. CARPETS.

That Watch of Yours. Let it running just right or perhaps it is still running but hasn't been cleaned for YEARS, and you in your false economy will let it go just as long as there is a tick in it.

Now a watch in common with any other piece of machinery needs to be cleaned and oiled occasionally and if neglected the bearings soon become worn and if left long your machinery is practically ruined.

Why not have your watch examined at once? Don't fool yourself thinking you are saving a dollar when you are in reality neglecting a watch worth 25 or 50 times what we would charge to put it in A 1 shape.

Our prices will not be the lowest, but they ARE the lowest possible consistent with first-class work guaranteed in every respect, which is the only kind we do at any price.

Yours for business, J. R. Webster & Co. Opticians, Watchmakers, Engravers and Jewellers.

Faithful Friends. Too much cannot be said about the importance of the color schemes, so necessary in it to have a harmonious effect in anything colorful, be that a picture, dress or interior house color.

The following suggestions will be of interest: Avoid rose color next to scarlet, orange or violet.

Do not place orange next to yellow, pink or violet.

Object of Pruning.

1. To modify the vigor of the plant.

2. To produce large and better fruit.

3. To keep the plants or trees within manageable shape.

4. To change trees from wood bearing to fruit bearing and vice versa.

5. To remove superfluous or injured parts.

6. To facilitate spraying and harvesting.

7. To facilitate tillage.

8. To train the tree to some desired form.

9. To remove parts badly infested with insects and disease.

The above points will make us see the importance of pruning right; far more than we generally realize and practice.—Southern Fruit Grower.

'What time is it?' 'Just struck twelve.'

'Oh, it must be later than that. You couldn't have counted right.'

OPERATION HER ONLY CHANCE

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Lindsay, Ont.—'I think it is no more than right for me to thank Mrs. Pinkham for what her kind advice and Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me.'

For thirty years I have been a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance. At last I was confined to my bed, and the doctor recommended this medicine for me.

When I wrote to her some time ago I was a very sick woman, suffering from female troubles. I had inflammation of the female organs, and could not stand or walk any distance.

Progress of Temperance. The general world-wide record as regards the progress of the temperance movement, is hopeful, and shows that civilized peoples are realizing, as never before, a mischievous nature and effects of the drunk habit and the drink traffic.

In the United States nearly 11,000 saloons were closed during 1908.

The liquor laws are being tightened up, and the territory under prohibition by local option is being extended in British possessions in other parts of the world, most notably in Australia, New Zealand and Newfoundland.

Sweden, Iceland and Finland are largely under prohibition. Not long ago the Finnish Parliament, by a great majority, adopted a law of total prohibition for the whole Grand Duchy, but so far the Czar has refused to sanction the measure.

Germany and many other countries report substantial advances along temperance lines.

It is somewhat remarkable that statistical reports do not show as much progress in the Dominion of Canada as in other countries during the past few years.

One reason for this difference is our increasing prosperity, and another is the influx of population from countries which have not so low an average of liquor consumption as Canada always has had.

The situation is very encouraging, however, for in all the Provinces there is an active campaign going on against the liquor traffic.

The above is part of a report made by Mr. F. S. Spence, and he concludes by saying:—'Local option will continue to grow in favor until a rapidly-developing public opinion supersedes it by more comprehensive legislation, making another step towards the day that is certainly drawing near, when the Dominion of Canada will not permit any form of traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes.'

BROTHER TOLD BROTHER

One Suffered for Fifteen Years, the Other for Thirteen. The convincing powers of a testimonial were never more clearly shown than in the case of Mr. Hugh Brown.

A brother, Lemuel Brown, of Avonville, N.B., read in the paper about Bro. John Costigan being cured by 'Fruit-a-Divine.' Knowing the Senator would only endorse a medicine which had cured him, Mr. Lemuel Brown tried 'Fruit-a-Divine' and was cured.

They cured him of Chronic Indigestion and Constipation, so he urged his brother to try them.

Hisland, N.B., Oct. 31st, 1907. 'Three doctors told me that I had Liver Disease and serious Stomach Trouble. My stomach was very weak. I took their medicines for thirteen years and grew worse. My brother (who was cured of terrible Indigestion by 'Fruit-a-Divine' after suffering for 15 years), recommended me to try these wonderful tablets. I bought half a dozen boxes and have just finished the sixth. I eat all kinds of hearty foods without distress and am greatly improved in every way. 'Fruit-a-Divine' also cured the Chronic Constipation which was so distressing in my case. (Signed) HUGH BROWN.

majority of pieces the prohibitionists were successful. In Wisconsin there was first the same 'ere of success, a license majority prevailing in the majority of cities voting, but enough pieces were carried for no license to make a good beginning in prohibition campaign which is sure to gain steadily.

Against Alcohol in Medical Practice. Dr. C. K. Millard, mayor of Leicester, Eng., presiding at a local Good Templar meeting, recently said that in giving receptions in connection with his mayoralty, he should entertain some 800 persons—but there would be no wine served at any function.

He had been in practice as a successful medical practitioner in Leicester for 36 years, and during that time he had treated a very large number of patients, but never once in any of his cases had he ordered intoxicating drinks. To him it did not matter whatever the nature of the disease.

'What is that you are reading, John?' queried the better half of the other half, who was deeply interested in a newspaper article.

'I don't know, my dear,' replied her husband. 'I've only read about two-thirds of it, and I'm not sure whether it is a love story, or a patent medicine advertisement.'
