Having considered this matter I think the first and fifth grounds are fatal to the law and evidence. the first and fifth grounds are fatal to the agreement and the action is the indorse maintenance of the action. I have come to the conclusion that the note sued on is not a negotiable promissory note.

I am unable to distinguish between the form of the note in this case and the form R. 275 (1894) in which it was decided that the paper written was not a note. The words in that case are "the title and right "to the possession of the property for "which this note is given shall remain in "which this note is given shall ren the (vendors) until this note is paid.
