CHAPTER XVII.

The kitchen, the pantries, and Gosman's room underwent a thorough search, the most impossible places being investigated, but of course the person they sought was not to be found.

They were about to retire from the house when the balliff, who accompanied the party, and was one of the two officials mentioned, examined the bed and produced a great sensation by drawing from the straw mattress, in which it was hidden, the stolen watch of Lord Ashcroft.

This discovery was sufficient to render suspicion certain in the minds of the observers.

Dame Kepp uttered a shriek and went into hysterics, but Jessy controlled her own suffering to minister to hers.

The intruders finished their search and left the women to their anguish, continuing their investigations throughout the forest, in some nook or dell of which they hoped to find the object of their suspicions.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The search for Gosman Kepp proved unsuccessful. Not a nook or recess of the forest escaped scrutiny, but he was not to be found. His pursuers returned to the cottage, where Jessy Kay still remained to soothe the bewildered and frightened dame, and interrogated both the women, but Mrs. Kepp could not answer their questions, and Jessy would not. The girl did not profess ignorance of the movements of her lover, but she preserved an obstinate silence, which equally enraged Lord Egremont and the head-forester.

Lord Ashcroft, however, showed himself her friend. His chivalrous instincts were aroused in her favor, and he used his influence to divert attention from her, urging upon his host the girl's claim to respect and sympathy.

The forest having been gone through, the foresters' cottages investigated, the ornamental structures scattered here and there throughout served that they were all well thumbed.

"They might have been bought second-hand," suggested Lord Ashcroft.

"True, my lord," replied Indor; "but his own taste must have guided the selection. I observed that though there were a few general works in the collection, Kepp's library was principally made up of the lives of self-made men."

"Very excellent reading for an ambitious man of his rank, anxious to rise higher in the social scale," commented the Lady Alexina.

"But not good for him, I think," said Lyle Indor. "My theory is, that this under-forester had read so much of poor men rising to a high rank, that it has nearly overturned his mind, which could never have been well balanced or strong. And I think he is envious and jealous of those whom Providence has placed above him. There are plenty of such men. Discontented, envious, and narrow-minded, the intelligence of Lord Ashcroft's coming to Egremont was enough to quite upset his small amount of sense or discretion. He drew a contrast between the fortune of this honored guest and his own narrow lot, and developed a hatred against Lord Ashcroft. He could not bear that this more fortunate being should live in splendor, and be wedded to the heiress of Egremont, while he was obliged to toil for his daily bread, uncheered by the prospect of ever marrying the coquettish Jessy, whose father had refused her hand to him. In fact, I think that Kepp is a monomaniac. I do not doubt his sanity on all subjects but one; and I do not doubt there are moments when he deplores his infatuation, and has not strength to resist it. There may even be times when he doubts the infatuation itself, and looks upon the assaults of which he is accused as too incredible, believing himself incapable of them."

"Your theory is very plausible, Mr. Indor," remarked Lord Ashcroft, thoughtfully, his mind going back to the scene in the chalet, when Kepp had accused the head-forester of borrowing the fatal gun, and the latter had denied the accusation in a manner to confirm it.

"It is doubtless true," declared Lord Egremont. "It supplies a reason for Kepp's infamous and murderous conduct, which was all that was required. After finding your lordship's watch concealed in his bed, no further evidence can be desired of his guilt. If the fellow is hanging about Egremont, he will soon be caught, and justice done to him. I shall have a strict lookout kept for him."

The Lady Lorean grew very pale at the thought that her brother, whom she loved so tenderly, should have incurred the hatred of a monomaniac, and she was tempted to express aloud the wish that filled her heart, and leave Egremont, and return, with Lionel, to their fair, pleasant country home, where the young lord was regarded by every one with the truest and sincerest affection.

A further discussion followed, from which it appeared that the carafe of water that had been tampered with in Lord Ashcroft's chamber the preceding evening, had been examined, and part of the contents administered to a house dog, which had died in great agony from its effects.

"But, my lord," said Lyle Indor, "how came you to suspect the existence of poison in the decanter? Was the water colored?"

"No. It was as colorless last night as when I exhibited it this morning to you. I cannot very well explain how I discovered it," said Lord Ashcroft turning his head to conceal the flush that arose to his cheeks at the remembrance of her to whom he owed the preservation of his life—the Lady Aimee. "I am only too glad that my suspicions were aroused before I had occasion to drink of the poison."

His lordship's confusion was un-noticed, and Indor did not press the question, saying, simply:

"I suppose your lordship remarked a difference in the position of the carafe. It is well to have such methodical habits—it was particularly well last evening."

Lord Ashcroft did not reply, and the subject was dropped.

Lady Egremont introduced a pleasant, though less absorbing topic, and the Lady Lorean and Lyle Indor joined with her with apparent spirit. Lord Egremont gazed thoughtfully into the fire.

It was also emphasized that another time-saving device of this wonderful automatic system was that a simple act of hanging up the receiver instantaneously clears a line after a conversation is finished, the instrument being then ready at once for a fresh call.

On one instrument at Leeds, said the engineer, he had made six completed calls, including a reply from the called subscriber, in one minute.

York is the latest of 25 exchanges in Great Britain to be equipped with an automatic system. Now 1,500 subscribers in York know that all they have to do to complete a call is to rotate a small dial at the base of their instruments.

Recording the Calls.

The new exchange is the most up-to-date in the country, working on the same system as that with which London is to be equipped.

At one end of the exchange room stand a number of meters, in appearance much like a motor-car mileage meter. These record the number of calls made by each subscriber, but do not operate until the called subscriber also takes up his receiver. "No replies," and "numbers engaged" are not therefore charged against the subscriber. "Wrong numbers," however, are entirely his own fault, and for these he must pay.

The Candy Table will be there, and the Pantry Table will be doing business at the old stand as usual, at the Ladies' Aid Sale, in the Presbyterian Hall, Wednesday afternoon.—dec13,31

Tut-Ankh-Amen

The Jewish World publishes an article dealing with the identity of Tut-Ankh-Amen, and quotes Professor Selkowitz, the Egyptologist, who in the Jewish Forum of New York "provides a reasoned argument" for the belief that he was Joseph of the Bible.

If the Professor's surmise is correct, says the Jewish World, it follows that when the sarcophagus of Tut-Ankh-Amen is opened it will be found to be empty because when the Children of Israel went up out of Egypt they took with them the bones of Joseph.

Six 'Phone Calls in One Minute

Time-Saving Automatic System—The Latest Model.

An unexpected result of an automatic telephone service was revealed at the opening of the York automatic exchange by Mr. T. B. Johnston, the superintending Post Office Engineer of the North Eastern District.

In Leeds, where an automatic system has been in successful operation since 1918, he said the biggest improvement in the service had been in the time taken by the called subscriber to answer the telephone.

Whereas in the old days of normal working a subscriber who did not answer the telephone until the caller had rung him up, no such inquiry was possible on the automatic system. The dilatory subscriber thus was left in curiosity and doubt as to what important message he had missed. Therefore in time he learned to answer the call as soon as the bell rang.

It was also emphasized that another time-saving device of this wonderful automatic system was that a simple act of hanging up the receiver instantaneously clears a line after a conversation is finished, the instrument being then ready at once for a fresh call.

On one instrument at Leeds, said the engineer, he had made six completed calls, including a reply from the called subscriber, in one minute.

Murder of 27 Men
WANTS TO BE DEAD BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

His Last Word Will be a Curse on his Father.

HANOVER, Germany, Dec. 5.—"I want to be dead before Christmas," is the insistent demand of Fritz Haarmann, the Hanover butcher, whose trial for the murder of 27 young men since 1918 opened here yesterday.

Haarmann, who at the time of his arrest gloated over the murders he had committed, now acts like a man violently insane, jumping about, excitedly tearing his hair and suddenly breaking off in the middle of sentences, apparently losing continuity of thought. He stubbornly declines suggestions from the court that he retire for a while and try to calm himself, however, insisting upon having the trial hurried along.

Haarmann confesses to the murder of fourteen of those he is accused of slaying, but agrees with suggestions that his victims may have exceeded this number. He admits cutting up the bodies and disposing of them, a task which he says usually took him two days, but denies selling the flesh as animal meat.

Reference to his late father invariably provokes outbursts from the prisoner. "My last words before being beheaded will be a curse upon my father," he cried on one occasion. Haarmann's alleged chief helper, Hans Grans, denies all the charges of complicity in the crimes. One hundred and ninety witnesses will be summoned in the course of the trial, it is forecast.

PEACE ONCE MORE.

Throughout the long and fierce campaign of d Cripes and Bungstead wrangled in c h; and Cripes hit Bungstead with his plane, and Bungstead slammed him with his crutch. A stranger from a foreign shore, beholding these two in their fight, might say,

"The Peace Dove never more will hover round these warring wights. A feud like theirs must end in blood, in dagger's thrust or pistol's crack; no other end can stem the flood of insults banded forth and back." But strangers from a distant land don't know our cheerful little ways; it takes them years to understand the customs of our native jays. Before election day we scap and fill the air with fiery threats to wipe each other off the map, until the weary walkin' sweats. But when the boys have cast their votes and stood up for their chosen men, we fatten in our straying goats, and settle down to peace again. Thus Cripes and Bungstead, arm in arm, go wandering down the village street, no longer viewing with alarm, but lost in discourse calm and sweet. It is a trait we must admire, this trick of wrangling for a time, then slumping down from passion's fire, in one brief day, to peace sublime. We have our bitter old campaigns, we rant a while and paw the air, but when they're done we take great pains to spread good humor everywhere.

"Boys in Black Shirts"

Up to a certain moment the general public were fain to admit that the vast bulk of those who fought for Italy in the war were behind the Fascist and supported their political aims. Lately, however, there have been many secessions from the Fascist's Party precisely among those who were most distinguished for their services at the front. Italy's share of the great leader's enthusiasm is slackening. Some early supporters of Fascist methods are getting tired of seeing bands of youths, who are too young to have fought in the war, parading the streets and shouting their insolent battle-cry. These "boys in Black Shirts" are bringing discredit to the movement. Fascism is beginning to lose caste. As a correspondent wrote in the article that we published recently, it takes little to change the attitude of a Latin crowd from a cheer to a laugh, and still less to merge a laugh into a sneer; and Mussolini's popularity no longer counterbalances the unpopularity of his followers.—London Times.

Don't Squeal

I notice in certain quarters an attempt to detract from All Blacks' brilliant performance at Twickenham on the ground of their tactics with regard to obstruction and offside. This un-British habit of squealing after defeat is growing. After the South Africans beat us in the Rucker matches out there it was stated by some people that bad refereeing was the cause of our defeat. Our players soon contradicted this.

"Worth $100 to Me Relieved Eczema and Piles"

Mrs. Peter A. Palmer, Saltburn, Sask., writes:
"Dr. Chase's Ointment has completely relieved me of eczema and piles. I also used this Ointment for my baby, who broke out in eczema. A few applications were all that was necessary in her case. Dr. Chase's Ointment has been worth a hundred dollars to me.—before using it I had spent a great deal more than that in unsuccessful treatment from doctors. We have also used Dr. Chase's other medicines, the Nerve Food having restored my health after suffering from severe nerve trouble when a girl."

Unexampled Results With Unexampled Economy.

It is true that the Chrysler Six performs in a manner that has centered the attention of America on this car. Yet the wonder of its accomplishments becomes all the more wonderful by reason of the economy with which these results are obtained.

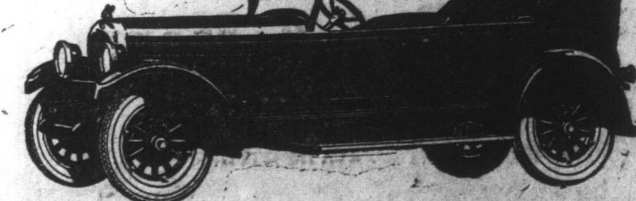

You get better than 20 miles to the gallon of gasoline--in itself an achievement for a car that can travel over 70 miles an hour. But this is not the whole economy story.

The oil-filter automatically cleanses all the oil in the crankcase every 25 miles; the air-cleaner prevents the entry of dust and dirt through the carburetor; the crankshaft revolves in seven bearings instead of three or five, thus preventing destructive engine vibration.

These are some of the contributing factors to motoring results that are revolutionary--not only in themselves, but in the lower costs at which they are obtained.

Ireland's Rights in the League Raises a New Subject for Controversy

Foreign Secretary's Speech Causes Disappointment--B. C. Bank Bandits Disappear with their Booty.--Commodore of the White Star Line to Retire.

A NEW PROBLEM. GENEVA, Dec. 15. The Irish question, raised by the publication of the British Government's reply to notification by the League that the Anglo-Irish Treaty had been registered with the secretariat at the request of the Irish Free State's representative at Geneva, over-shadowed in interest the second opium conference to-night. The British Government does not consider that either the pact or any league conventions govern the relations of the component parts of the British Commonwealth, and that article 18 of the covenant doesn't apply to the Irish agreement. League officials were of the opinion that the letter is bound to have a profound effect throughout the British Dominions. Ireland it is learned from Irish sources, will bring the question before the next council meeting or certainly before the next Assembly in the autumn and force the League to decide just what the rights and privileges of the various states of the British Empire are. The Irish viewpoint is that Ireland was admitted to the League, wherefore Great Britain had no right to propose her if she were not eligible to the full rights of membership as laid down by every article in the covenant and assured to every member.

AMENDMENT DEFEATED.

LONDON, Dec. 15. The first division in the new parliament was taken to-night when the Trevelyan Amendment expressing regret at the Government's policy in Egypt and Russia, was defeated by a vote of 363 to 132, after a debate in which the government was subjected to strong criticism from Labor and Liberal members. Austin Chamberlain's speech, which had been looked to as the chief attraction of the debate was considered somewhat disappointing inasmuch as it dashed the hopes that had been raised that the Foreign Secretary would make interesting revelations of what passed in conversations with the French and Italian Premiers in Paris and Rome and possibly throw some light on the international reactions of recent happenings in North Africa. His most interesting announcement was the Government's willingness to submit the Gazrah water question to a mixed commission on which both the Sudan and Egypt would be represented. Mr. Chamberlain was greeted with opposition shouts of "what have you said?" "what has happened?" during the opening passages of his speech, when he related all that he thought necessary to say about his recent conversations in Paris and Rome. They were, of course, ironical taunts that had a certain substratum of justification, for the Foreign Secretary's revelations were of a very non-committal character. Mr. Chamberlain admitted that he had not discussed the question of inter-Allied debts, explained that the desire of the statement he met in Paris and Rome had been to remove not create difficulties, and he asserted that the conversations had established relations of trust and confidence.

HIS LAST TRIP IN COMMAND. NEW YORK, Dec. 15. Sir Bertram Hayes to-day brought the White Star liner Majestic into New York for the last time at the end of his 39th trip as commander of the great ship, of his 44th year at sea, and his 60th year of life. He will retire from deep-water service when the Majestic reaches Liverpool again. Meanwhile he is writing his memoirs of the sea. Sir Bertram is Commodore of the White Star fleet. He expects to do shore duty for the White Star Line in England for a time.

CHINA'S CIVIL WAR ENDS. SHANGHAI, Dec. 15. The end of the civil war in China, after four months' fighting, was virtually secured to-day when the abandonment of further resistance to the regime of Tuan Chi Jue on the part of Chi Shich Yuan was made certain by the arrival here of the family of

The Children's Rink

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir--Seeing the Playground Committee and the Municipal Council are looking up a place to make an open air Rink for the children, why not think about Burton's Pond when it is such a nice cosy spot and almost free from wind, being in a hollow? There are men in there keeping the snow cleared away, and I think if they were given a chance and a few dollars extra they would look after the children pretty well, and besides that right by the pond there is a house that is used entirely for the skating convenience, changing their boots, etc. and always a nice bright fire, which makes it all the more satisfactory. Now then, gentlemen, if you would think it over I don't think you would find a much more suitable place as there is room on that pond for 3 or 4 rinks. Thanking you for space, I remain, ONE INTERESTED.

It continued to float peacefully on the water, basking in the warm sunshine until we were within very few feet of it. Search for Dead Son

DRAMATIC CONCLUSION TO BRITISH COLONEL'S QUEST IN THE BATTLEFIELDS. A poignant story of a father's four-and-a-half-years search for the body of his dead son in France and its dramatic conclusion comes from a Daily Mirror correspondent in Albert. During the war a young lieutenant in the Royal Artillery was killed near Albert. After the armistice his father, a colonel, went to France to find his son's body. Surviving members of his son's battery pointed out a spot where they had last seen the dead man, and digging was commenced, but without result. The father decided to erect a memorial on the spot, but a prohibitive price was demanded, and an Englishwoman-offered to sell at a nominal price a small plot of land near by. The colonel accepted the offer. Then Fate seemed to intervene. With the first stroke of the spade a body was revealed. This was identified as that of the dead son by two gold-filled teeth in the upper jaw and two platinum ones in the lower. Wrapped in a Union Jack, the body was given a proper burial on the same spot, and a little monument was erected.--Daily Mirror.

Irrigation Penalty— What it Means

An official explanation given on behalf of the British Government of various points in the Notes to the Egyptian Government was as follows: Egyptian Ministers have declared that the Sudan is Egyptian, and there is evidence that the riots earlier this year in the Sudan were instigated from Egyptian sources. They culminated in an outbreak by the Egyptian troops. We then removed the disaffected troops and indicated that we should do the same in similar cases. Hence it has now become necessary that all purely Egyptian troops and their officers should be removed from the Sudan.

As regards the extension of the areas to be irrigated by the Gezira scheme, we are building a dam to irrigate land in the north of the Sudan, and this aroused a violent but ignorant outcry in Egypt, because the Egyptians pretended that its effect would be to reduce the amount of water available lower down the Nile for the irrigation of Egypt. This would not have been the effect in any case, but to appease public opinion in Egypt Lord Allenby in 1920 voluntarily promised that the area to be irrigated should be limited to 520 square miles until a commission on which there were to be Egyptian representatives met to discuss the matter.

By the present Note that restriction is cancelled. The effect will be that the Sudan will not be penalized or prevented from irrigating whatever greater area the dam will provide for, but it will not diminish by a single drop the amount of water that Egypt receives.

In general the meaning of the Notes is that we have been too optimistic about the ability of Egypt to govern herself. In that we have been grievously disappointed, and we have been obliged to take these steps in consequence without revoking the decree of Egyptian Independence or upsetting the agreement of 1899 regarding the Sudan.

Most of what we have now done comes within the four reserved points in that decree, and we have been waiting for two years to settle those points by agreement with Egypt. Zaghul Pasha came to London this year to discuss them but without result, because his demands were so exorbitant.

In various ways the status quo has actually been infringed by the Egyptian Government, and in consequence it has been necessary for us to take these steps in regard to those four points with the object of protecting foreign interests and the interests of the Sudanese people themselves.

How Indian Prisoners Work

"Three yellow, five red, two blue," chanted the convict behind the growing carpet.

"As thou sayest so let it be done," chorused the convicts sitting in front of it, as they slipped it thread within the warp. Opposite them, and further up the long factory, and further back and opposite that, rose more chants, and after each the vociferation, "As thou sayest so let it be done."

It was a queer sight to come on in the middle of the central jail of an Indian suburb. It scounded from outside half like breakers on a shingly shore, and half like a school board at the multiplication table.

"That sounds like noise, you know," said the superintendent, "but really it's honest toil."

Inside was a long aisle of looms with many-colored carpets gradually creeping up them. One man called the pattern—the number of stitches, to be plaited in of each color; with a roar the brown backed criminals, squatting in a row over the carpet, picked out their threads and worked them in.

"Eight green, two pink."

"As thou sayest so let it be done."

The Oriental can't work in concert unless he chants in concert too. And he has a wonderful ear for his own uproar. Here, for instance, on the floor were two men bending over the same pattern-carpet: One was dictating to a gang on one side, the other on the other; they were at different places, and as each bawled out a direction to his men the others were revelling in their "So let it be done."

Yet there was not a mistake in either, though the carpets were only just beginning; each gang must have caught every word. At the big fifty-seven-foot carpet, of course, the directions are hardly needed; it has been a making for many months, until the leader reels off the colors and numbers by heart, and the dozen workers, each opposite his strip of pattern, put in the stitches like automata.

Spanish Dictator May Lose Out

Paris, Dec. 2.—General Primo de Rivera, head of the military dictatorship, which has been ruling Spain for a year is expected to arrive in Madrid to-day. But he is expected to return to Morocco, where he has been directing Spanish activities against the rebellious Moors, within a few days as High Commissioner.

King Alfonso is reported to have decided to eliminate the unpopular figure of the Dictator and govern the country through the rest of the dictatorship.

General Primo de Rivera as Dictator of Spain has governed harshly, exiling many of his enemies and imposing others for opposing his rule, but he has brought none of the promised reforms to the country, despite the fact that his power has been supreme since September, 1923.

He is an inexperienced politician, and to his mismanagement, the recent attempts at revolt, which resulted in some bloodshed before disorder was ended, were attributed.

Just Folks.

THANKSGIVING.

Dear Lord, accept our humble prayer
Of thanks for all Thy watchful care.
For yield of field and vine and tree
Our hearts give gratitude to Thee;
Now lies the frost upon the vine,
We see another year decline.
But through the pain and strife and
Thy blessings manifestly show.

For all the strength and wisdom sent
To him who is our President:
For those brave lads who in the sky
World-round were first of all to fly,
Adding new glory to our fame;
For every clean and honest name,
For every home where children play
We voice our gratitude to-day.

Dear Lord, for laughter and for song
Which have been ours. For rights wrong,
For steps of progress we have made,
For all the works of art and trade,
For science which has conquered pain
And given hope where hope seemed vain;

For all that helps mankind to live
This day to Thee our thanks we give.
Dear Lord, despite its pain and strife
We thank Thee for our richer life,
This is a better world for man
Than when this closing year began:
We who have suffered still can find
Proof of Thy love and mercy kind;
In all our works Thy hand we see
And bow in gratitude to Thee.

Long's Hill Stenographer Uses and Recommends Vaporizing
Ointment to Her Friends.

Miss Fern Morris, a local Stenographer who lives at No. 71 Long's Hill, writes: "I just want to tell you what Vicks means to me. I was on the verge of having a very bad cold, but my sister, who, by the way, carries Vicks around with her, practically forced me to use it. I put some in my nostrils every night before going to bed and, to my surprise, the cold I was in for never appeared."

"I would not be without Vicks now and, at the least sign of a cold, I rub it on my chest and put some in my nostrils."

For all the Family.
Miss Morris expresses the opinion of thousands of others who consider Vicks the family "standby" for all cold troubles. In the States, where it originated over 17 million jars of Vicks are used annually. This success is due to its two-fold action.

When Vicks is rubbed over throat or chest for head or chest colds, soothes throat, tonsillitis, bronchitis, croup or whooping cough, the ingredients—Menthhol, Camphor, Thyme, Eucalyptus, etc.—are vaporized by the heat of the body and inhaled with each breath directly into the affected air passages and lungs.

At the same time Vicks is absorbed through the skin like a liniment or poultice, taking out the tightness and soreness, and thus aids the vapors inhaled to break the congestion.

It is a severe cold indeed that can withstand this double-direct action of Vicks.

The Twickenham match was very ably conducted by R. A. Lloyd, the old Irish international, who knows all there is to know about the game. When the All Blacks got offside he soon penalised them, and free kicks were equally divided between the London side and the visitors. The only reasons for our defeat on Saturday were that we were out-weighted, out-run, out-stayed and out-played.

A Move in the Right Direction

We understand that at a recent meeting of the Fisheries Board it was decided to place before the Government a resolution recommending that in the coming session legislation should be passed to abolish the talqual system and to enforce a strict cull of fish.

This subject has been so frequently discussed in the past that we should almost regard it as hopeless to return to it, were it not for this action on the part of the Board, whose very personnel, consisting as it does of representatives of the fishermen, the fish buyers and the Government, including the Minister of Marine and Fisheries himself, is sufficient to warrant the belief that the recommendation will be favourably received.

It is not the first time that these necessary reforms in the fishery have been advocated in the Telegram both editorially and by correspondence received from all over the Island, and in giving their earnest attention to this matter it is certain that the Government will have the full weight of public opinion behind them.

In the haste to buy fish, little or no regard has been paid to quality, with the result that our reputation for honesty has been subjected to considerable criticism abroad, and no inducement has been held out to the fishermen to make a number one article. In fact every encouragement has been given him to take the least amount of trouble with his catch.

It matters not now who has been to blame in the past. The material fact is that a recommendation made by a body of competent men is now before the Government, and we rely with confidence upon their approval and adoption of the suggestion.

The passing of such a measure does not necessarily, and in fact should not, involve the Government in any heavy expenditure. What is required is an enforceable act, or to use a common expression, one which has teeth in it. The appointment of cullers should be made the merchants' responsibility, and the only officials needed would be general supervisors, say three at the outside, with adequate authority to compel strict compliance with the conditions laid down. Elsewhere in this issue will be found an article on this subject taken from the Trade Review, and while we hold a different view with regard to the appointment of cullers, we are heartily in accord with our contemporary on the urgent need of immediate action in this matter. In times of prosperity the shrewd business man makes provision against the day of depression. There is no time more opportune than now to look around and decide what can be done to retain our markets and to guard against by every means possible the fluctuation in the trade that has caused it such serious setbacks in the past.

Fish of One and Flesh of Another

On Friday a reference was made to the discrimination formerly shown between the Hospitals and such institutions as the Lunatic Asylum and the Poor Asylum in the drawing up of tenders for supplies of meat, and it was intimated that new regulations were under consideration and in order that the specification might be clearly stated, new tenders might be asked for.

From information in our possession it is evident that some drastic reform of this kind is necessary, and in undertaking the investigation the Government is acting in a manner consistent with their motto to give a square deal to all.

The practice has been to ask for tenders for beef and mutton without distinction of kind or cut, such as steer or heifer beef instead of bull or cow beef, and of first, second or third grades of its particular kind.

As a matter of fact the tenders reveal a well recognized difference in what might be supplied to the different institutions, the prices of meat for the Poor and Lunatic Asylums being invariably lower than for the hospitals, because it was known that poorer qualities would answer the purpose in the former and not in the latter, a curious and not altogether creditable official distinction.

The custom of giving to the helpless wards of the state food which is considered unsuitable for those who have the power to seek for themselves has been going on for years and has been made possible by the nature of the contracts. Poor kinds of meat, particularly bull meat, old cow meat and the left over cuts, have been the basis upon which lower prices have been tendered and contracted for in these institutions.

Formerly administrations were chiefly concerned with the question of economy, a vital matter with them, as the evidence which they left behind only too clearly indicates! Will the ordinary householders agree that the purchasing such meat, any economy is effected? The very fact that it is sold at a cheaper rate than the better cuts is sufficient to show that its food qualities are less, and even the least experienced housewife cannot be persuaded to purchase a portion which bore or grizzle forms the major portion.

Supreme Court

(Before F.W. Bench.)

King vs. James Whiteford McNeilly. This is an appeal to the Court sitting as a Court of Criminal Appeal against a conviction on the grounds hereinafter set forth:—

(1) That the verdict was ambiguous and did not find intent to defraud.

(2) That there was no evidence to warrant the jury finding a verdict of guilty either as to the acts or as to the intent charged.

(3) That the evidence of Mr. D. Carmichael was wrongly admitted.

Mr. Dunfield raised technical objections to the evidence given by Mr. Carmichael and quoted the Bankers' Books Evidence Act to show that some of the requirements of the Act had not been complied with.

Mr. Dunfield raised technical objections to the evidence given by Mr. Carmichael and quoted the Bankers' Books Evidence Act to show that some of the requirements of the Act had not been complied with. He submitted that this evidence should not be received. Referring to the main grounds of appeal he pointed out that the jury gave a verdict according to the evidence when they found not guilty upon the larceny charges. In the matter of intent to defraud he quoted the Forgery Act, 1864, and argued that at common law the prosecution must, in the absence of statutory provision, state and prove the person to be defrauded and how he is to be defrauded of it. As to "intent," when it is an element in the offence, it must be laid and proved where no statute dispenses with this being done. He quoted Corpus Juris, vol. 2-18, p. 468, and Webster's Dictionary to define the meaning of the word to defraud. In respect to the Forgery Act, it is a dead letter since its enactment in 1874, as only five or six cases under it were worth quoting in books. The jury's verdict, he argued, could be interpreted to say "We find that the accused did the acts with intent but we cannot find who was defrauded or what he was defrauded of." There were placed in evidence 12 receipts signed by the accused for 12 amounts. All cheques were to the Minister of Agriculture and Mines and duly deposited to the exchequer account. The bank would not cash one of these over the counter, even for the Minister, except for very special reasons. The prosecution says the accused did not steal these sums but upon receipt of each cheque he stole a corresponding amount out of the other money of the department.

Mr. Dunfield pointed out that there was no evidence that the department was in receipt of any such sums in coin or notes to correspond with the cheques. He also argued that at Mr. Hart's examination-in-chief he gave only inferential evidence, and there was no positive evidence of omission to make entry on the counterfoils. Department's books, as was charged. In closing Mr. Dunfield pointed out that here there was very little precedent to follow in criminal appeal practice, and only one case—that of Sprakin was heard some fifteen years ago. He asked that the Court scrutinize strictly the verdict of the jury and give the prisoner the benefit of the doubt.

The Court took recess at 1 p.m. to resume at 3 o'clock when the Crown Counsel, Messrs. Winter and Emerson will be heard. Mr. McNeilly is out on bail to appear on Thursday.

Prince Congratulates Newfoundland

ON EXHIBITION.

Mr. Victor Gordon, High Commissioner for Newfoundland, has sent to Lieut.-Col. W. F. Rendell, C.B.E., Secretary of the Exhibition Committee, St. John's, the following extract from a letter received from the Prince of Wales regarding Newfoundland's participation in the British Empire Exhibition.

As President of the British Empire Exhibition I wish to congratulate Newfoundland on the splendid manner in which her resources were represented to the public of the Empire at Wembley Park.

The decision for Newfoundland to participate came very late in the day, but, in spite of that, a fine picture was presented of the country which we are proud to claim as the oldest of the Overseas Dominions.

I trust that the people of Newfoundland will derive practical benefits from their participation in the British Empire Exhibition; certainly the people of the Home Country stand benefited by the opportunity given them of obtaining a better knowledge of Newfoundland.

Please convey to your Exhibition Committee, and to all others who have taken part in Newfoundland's display at Wembley Park, my sincere thanks for their work.

EPYS BEHIND THE SCENES

Dec. 15th.—Up betimes and abroad, and never in all my life did see such changes of weather as we are now having, being that in the few hours of the morning I do note three different kinds of climate, and the most difficult thing in the world to know what to wear to withstand these changes. Passing along Duckworth Street this day, I did see a huge crowd of people, young and old, gathered about the office of the Liquor Controller, and am told that the street is lined each morning and afternoon before the Bond Store opens so that it is the greatest possible trouble to pass along. This afternoon about my shopping for Xmas, and do first attend to mine own needs which are beyond expectation almost and do send how I will have little left to spend on presents for others. Among other things I do buy me some excellent cigars which I may only afford but once a year, and then only by the exercise of the greatest care in my expenditures. All the shops crowded with people and do seem how the Xmas trade this year is like to be much better than it was a twelvemonth ago. I am still greatly troubled concerning a stiff for my wife, albeit did the wretch receive her deserts it would be nothing at all I would give her, yet for the sake of decency and peace, must find her something. But Lord, she needs so many things that what I do buy her is sure to be the wrong one, since her very contrariness would make her say so. Home all this evening and to the business of my accounts that I may see if it is possible for me to start the New Year without debts which is a thing I have never yet done and would give me the greatest satisfaction now to accomplish.

The New Palace

Editor Evening Telegram. Dear Sir,—The first Roman Catholic Palace known to our forebears as the "Old Palace," stood on the ground where now stands the Star of the Sea Hall. It was destroyed by fire on July 23rd, 1874. The Palace on the site of which stands the new one was destroyed by fire Feb. 19th, 1921. The "Old Palace" was built by Dr. O'Donel and in it dwelt the Bishops and priests of the old days, amongst them the renowned Bishop Fleming, Roman Catholic Cathedral was built, Rev. Dr. Mullock constructed about seventy years ago, the Palace on which site the new edifice is erected. The present structure redounds to the credit of His Grace Archbishop Roche and I pray that it may last for many years as a monument to his veneration for the welfare of his priests and as a source of pride to his flock. A short while ago I had the pleasure of viewing its interior, and I found that it was as its outside appearance denotes constructed for comfort and durability. You would confer a favour upon me if you would permit me to say further in connection with its erection that all those who were engaged thereon are deserving of praise, and the general contractors, Messrs. Pidgeon and Murphy are deserving of a special mention. I know of no two men who show more closer attention to their calling than these gentlemen. With thanks, I remain, Sincerely yours, CITIZEN.

Terrific Gale Hits Little River

Home Of Mr. Sears Tompkins, Lifted From Its Foundation.

NORTH SYDNEY, Dec. 11.—News reached here this forenoon from Newfoundland, telling of one of the worst gales that ever visited Little River, a famous fishing resort near Tompkins, noted for its salmon fishing.

The wind was driven with awful velocity, wrecking the beautiful home of Mr. Sears Tompkins. The structure, a ten-room building, was lifted clear from its concrete foundation, carried clear over a fence, striking into a pasture where it tore up several feet of earth. About this time the wind seemed to freshen, rolling the building over until it came in contact with an old green house, demolishing it and smashing into smithereens the last vestige of the former beautiful edifice.

There was not a single thing left intact about the building except a doll's cradle owned by one of the daughters of Mrs. Tompkins, and the front door of the house. All along the route the building took in its mad flight were strewn pieces of furniture, china and other things belonging to it. Had the house been a victim of a German air raid it could not have left a trail of devastation more awful.

The catastrophe took place in broad daylight, about 9.30 Tuesday morning, and the few who witnessed the sad spectacle were awed by the awful sight and ran for shelter, not knowing what was going to follow. The roar of the wind added to the tumult and made the scene one that will live forever in the minds of those who witnessed it.

The only fortunate thing about the affair is the fact that the house was vacant at the time. Had there been anybody in it when the storm carried it off its foundation, they certainly would have been killed. Some time ago Mr. Tompkins and family left for New York, where the former is employed, and the house was left in care of his brother James, proprietor of the well known hotel of the same name.

Beauty Revue a Splendid Success

WANS TO CAPACITY BUSINESS IN CASINO.

Marshall's Beauty Revue unspun step at the Casino Theatre last night and the verdict was that all expectations were realized. Everything that the heart of a revue admirer could wish is to be found in this company and you can make up your mind to see it now because your theatrical shopping will be incomplete without this big bargain in beautiful costumes. Costumes of undreamed beauty, stately show girls seem like ornate creatures from some gorgeous planet. To the mind the most beautiful number of the entire show was the Toy Soldier number by little Dolly Deane, a charming petite blonde of youth and Anderson and Lynch brought forth a comedy which is indeed delightful. The 1925 Vampires as lead by Homer Roberts, the man with the voice sang several ballads, all of which were encored, which shows that this gentleman has already won the hearts of admirers thru his beautiful voice. He is a baritone of good range and excellent quality with a marked dramatic feeling. The prima donna, Dorothy Knowles sang beautifully and also had a respond to curtain calls. Another great number was the one by Dorothy Knowles and Homer Roberts which received a tremendous applause. Fred Hapenny proves to be the stepping kid, and puts over a great variety of dances which nearly brings down the house. Ollie Perkins, the soubrette, does a dainty number that goes over well. The chorus is particularly good being excellent steppers and singers.

The staging is done in beautiful effects in costumes and draperies and the lighting is indeed a revelation. The whole show is beautiful both from an artistic and entertainment standpoint. The same bill will be repeated to-night and Wednesday night to be followed by a complete change on Thursday, with everything new but the name.

Lady Allardyce has kindly presented to open the Sale of Plain and Fancy Work, in the Presbyterian Hall, on Wednesday afternoon, December 17th at 3.30 p.m., for the Ladies' Aid of St. Andrew's Church.—dec13.31

Radiology

Mr. Roy Weagant, until recently chief consulting engineer with the Radio Corporation of America, has been elected vice-president and chief engineer of the De Forest Radio Co.

Don't let your aerial touch the woodwork of the house. Efficiency counts.

A new material for panels is being introduced. It is named INSULINE and the makers claim it is insulative and substantial. No scratch can show on its surface, and there is no glaring lustre to become smudged and dull.

The fan who goes to bed before midnight has had his radio set for some time.

Don't try to add one more tube to your cabinet set. Better build all over again if you are dissatisfied.

Never take the caps off your earphones. They are adjusted by the makers.

Dust and dirt make poor connections. Keep your set covered when not in use.

Cure of Fish (Trade Review.)

If we are to retain our foreign markets a radical change will have to be made next year in the curing of fish. Legislation is the only thing that can stop the discouraging system of putting up French Shore and Straits fish as Labrador-cure.

The fishermen of Iceland are now exporting to European markets in the Mediterranean a fish cured in imitation of our best Labrador, and as it is more carefully cured and cleaner and whiter than ours, they are fast driving us out of certain markets.

In Spain we have lost entirely the Carthagen market, where we used to sell 60,000 to 70,000 quintals in the old days, and nearly the same condition of affairs applies to Valencia.

If people in Newfoundland persist in making bad fish the only course open to save the export trade to Europe is to go back to the old practice of curing. The tal-qual system is the greatest curse that was ever inflicted on the fishery and will eventually allow our competitors to get ahead of us in all the markets of Europe.

This is a question that concerns the whole future fish trade of the country and should be placed above party politics. If it is good for the country in general the Government should handle it boldly, and after a year or two those who are opposed to having the culling law will be forced to admit that it was the best regulation ever enacted for the good of the fishery.

The tal-qual system puts a premium on carelessness and leaves no incentive to make an effort to turn out good fish. Sworn cutlers independent of the merchant and the fisherman should be employed and the different qualities of Merchantable, Madeira, small and large West India, etc., like in the olden days thrown in separate bulks.

The Nfld. Shipping Board is expecting a steamer to arrive early in January to load fish for Market. Mr. Morlio who has been in the city for some time making fish purchases expects to load a steamer for Italy about the middle of January.

We shall have to put our best foot forward next year and make a speedy reform if we want to hold our markets, because the competition is growing keener than ever in Norway, Iceland and Denmark simply because out of an intrinsically inferior article of food the people of these countries turn out a cleaner and better looking fish.

If our fishermen and planters fail to do likewise, then the culling system only can save our fish trade.

London Letter

PANTON HOUSE For The Canadian Press.

LONDON, Nov. 21.—Eighteen hundred years ago or more, the Romans had a trail from Dover to London. On Nov. 19 the Prince of Wales marked the fulfilment of the task which has then begun, bearing witness to the wonderful continuity of British history, by cutting with golden scissors the tape and re-opening the great highway. "The ceremony," said the prince, "marks the completion of the trail which has been more than 1800 years old."

There are many of these old streets in the southern counties, which are remarkable by the geometrical straight line which they follow—no matter how the land could turn these streets into a path—and the solidity of their construction makes these streets almost imperishable. Two examples were first constructed in the second century of the road. The first was then excavated until a solid foundation was reached. Stairs were then laid on the foundation and consolidated by mortar; the second layer consisted of rubble, the third of fine concrete, and the fourth of a finely fitted mosaic of original pavement stones. The total length of the construction was frequently as much as 4 ft. The width was usually about 15 feet. Pavements of about 7 feet in width frequently bordered the Roman way. Some of the ancient Roman roads are in a perfect state of preservation to-day, and others form the foundation for more modern ways.

THE HIGHWAYMAN.

Film posters in London this week announce the picture "Claude Duval," which should interest Londoners, as Duval was one of the most thorough-going, though picturesque, scamps that ever graced, or disgraced, the august capital.

It is somewhat difficult to disentangle fact from fiction in his life, but that he was a figure of romance, and in his lifetime, cannot be doubted. It is said by some that he was a native of London, but it may be that others are right who say he came from France in 1650. It is thought that when he took to the road he lived in that queer district known as Whitechapel, which is south of Fleet Street, near the haunt of the Press, but in those days the haunt of all those who had placed themselves outside the law.

After the great fire Duval must have moved to the more fashionable, but less safe, neighborhood of Covent Garden, for it was here he was captured at a tavern named "The Hole in the Wall" in Chandos Street.

Most of his achievements were in and around London. It was on Hampstead Heath that he danced the "coquette" with a lady of fashion while the husband watched the performance from the coach, afterwards paying £100 for the entertainment. In Blackheath, the other side of London, he was the scene of another coach hold-up, where Duval is said to have threatened to shoot one of his associates if he did not at once return to its owner a silver feeding-bottle, which had been taken from a yelling infant passenger.

He was taken and tried at the Old Bailey in 1676, found guilty on six counts, and put into Newgate Prison. Here he was roused one morning by the bell of St. Sepulchre's opposite, which was provided by one Robert Lowe, who died in 1605 leaving 50 pounds for a bell, together with a fee for the sexton, for the purpose of rousing every criminal in Newgate under the sentence of death, of his approaching doom, so that he might have time to repent of his sins.

The condemnation were taken in procession to "The Tree"—near the Marble Arch—to be hanged; a stone on the road now marks the spot where the gallows stood. On the way to Tyburn the procession would make two calls. The first was at St. Sepulchre's where the victim was presented with a pint of mead and nosegay of flowers. The second was at a tavern, the landlord of which claimed the "privilege" of offering refreshment to every criminal who passed his doors on the way to the gallows.

THE SURETY.

King James in 1511 founded the hospital of King James in Charterhouse as an "lanthouse" home for 80 poor brethren and a school for 40 poor boys. Owing to a decline in the revenue the number is now reduced to 65. Each pensioner is provided with a room, dinner "in Hall," a black gown worn within the precincts and 252 year. Here they live in peace, in the very heart of the city's turmoil, a brotherhood of bachelors or widowers all over the age of 60.

At six o'clock in winter and nine o'clock in summer a curfew bell is rung and probably has been rung, with one short break, since the foundation of the convent. The custom is to ring the bell once for every "brother" of the little flock, so if you listen some day when you visit London you will hear the strokes of the bell telling you if there is a vacancy should they not sound the full number, that is, bar accidents, for not long ago the bell-ringer caught cold, sneezing so violently that he lost count, ringing 80 strokes and causing much consternation among the old boys, who thought their privileges were being tampered with.

The bell is no longer rung as a signal to put the lights out, which was the purpose of the curfew bell of old, but to indicate closing time.

INCURS ORIENTAL HOSTILITY. VICTORIA, B.C.—(By Canadian Press)—Protests against the bill introduced by Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith, Liberal, Vancouver, to prevent the employment of Orientals in homes where white girls work, were registered with the Government by Lin Pao Heng, Chinese consul in Vancouver. He asserted that the bill, if passed, would be a drastic discrimination against his countrymen and he claimed that such a measure was not justifiable in view of "conditions maintaining in British Columbia homes."

The Vancouver Consul protested against the introduction of racial issues on such slender grounds as the Janet Smith murder case offered. The Premier promised to consider the Chinese consul's viewpoint.

According to Mrs. Mary Ellen Smith girls working in the better class homes in Vancouver where Orientals are employed, are leaving their employment in large numbers. Mrs. Smith says she has the names of 23 such girls, who left their positions following the murder of Janet Smith. She also says that other provinces are likely to introduce similar legislation, and mentions receipt of a letter from J. T. Haig, member of the Manitoba Legislature, stating that he will introduce a bill similar to that now before the British Columbia House.

Amendments to the Adoption Act are being sponsored by Mrs. Smith. They will strengthen the act considerably, and will make it possible for relatives of children to interfere with the actions of foster-parents in cases where, after adoption, such interference is felt to be in the best interests of the children.

The Choice of Most Women

Pearline washing Powder is selected by many women who know what a real good washing powder is. Pearline costs only ten cents a package and saves dollars in toil and labor. Years ago Pearline was the favourite—it is still the favourite with all its numerous users. Your grocer knows that Pearline is considered the best of all washing powders and this is why he will recommend it every time you ask his opinion. For cleaning pots, pans, kettles, etc., there is nothing like Pearline. For all washing or scrubbing a little Pearline added to the water makes the work much easier. Every woman should use Pearline. The Boy Homestead Idea Supported

The police court news, in the city dailies, of Monday last cannot but cause a feeling of sadness and horror to even the careless reader, and the thoughtful one will question himself as to who is the real culprit in the case, and to what extent each one of us is responsible for the occurrence, and the neglect it emphasizes. The facts as stated are these:—two young lads, of tender years, who were living in poverty and wretchedness in one of the poorer sections of the city, under the care of a father 70 years of age, stole, with others goods to relieve their hunger. They were caught and brought before the Court, and the Judge, rather than sentence them to gaol, where they would rub shoulders with criminals of every kind, ordered them to be lashed, and then released, to return to the same distressing surroundings and conditions. This was, it is said, the only treatment possible in the case. What a sad commentary on our country's wisdom!

Once again the crying need of a reformatory is emphasised,—some place where such youths, who err more through the almost inevitable results of their circumstances than through their own fault, could be placed, and receive the necessary care and instruction which would prove the means of making them desirable members of a community, instead of returning them to conditions which must, almost unavoidably, tend to draw out what is worst in them.

The cost will be one of the first objections offered to the proposal, but we contend such a cost need not be very great, and certainly is a legitimate one; no country hesitates at the cost when it takes measures to provide the necessary machinery to preserve order and uphold its laws, and surely such a work is but a branch of the same undertaking. The prevention of future crime and of the making of a criminal class is indeed (apart from its moral side), but a form—and an excellent one—of insurance against future distress, discomfort, trouble and expense.

One of our city contemporaries, in the course of an excellent article on the same subject, contends that one great obstacle in the way of this often discussed, much-needed, but never-undertaken reformatory is the denominational question. Surely such does not apply! Our prisons, and government benevolent institutions are free from such an obstacle, and this branch of our law machinery could just as easily be kept free of this matter.

The reference of the above-mentioned article to the establishment of such a reformatory at a distance from the capital, where in the midst of virgin country the work of farming might be taken up, is, to our minds, a capital idea. It has already been tried and found excellent in the U.S. and elsewhere. One of the quickest, easiest and best ways of healing diseased minds and bodies is to bring them into intimate touch with kindly Mother Nature, and at the same time that this is being done to learn a way to support and help themselves in the future.—Hr. Grace Standard.

Boy, Six, is Declared Mental Phenomenon

CAN'T READ OR WRITE, BUT IS WONDER AT FIGURES.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Nov. 30.—Could you tell the interest on $1,600 at 6 per cent. for a period of three months, without using pencil or paper and not take more than two seconds to do it? And could you tell the answer in Chinese, Russian or perhaps even Danish?

Well, Bobby Harris, 6 years of age, can do these things, although he has never been inside of a schoolhouse and cannot read or write.

Bobby upset the dignity of his father, J. J. Harris, shortly after his fourth birthday, when he began doing small division and subtraction problems in his head faster than his parents could with pencil and paper. Although his father and mother attempted to discourage him in this kind of mental work because of his youth, the boy has reached the stage where his intelligence is classified by psychologists as equal to that of a high school student.

The boy, who does not know how to figure with a pencil, cannot explain the manner in which he unravels the problem, although scores of psychologists have attempted to make him explain.

Besides his mental arithmetic problems, the boy has memorized the numerals up to 100 in nine languages, and can give the answer to his problems in any of them.

Ghosts Around the Cenotaph

On Armistice Day the spirit photographers were busy once again. Mrs. Deane took some photographs which Miss Estelle Stead says have been most successful. At first they only claimed that in one sea of faces completely hid the Cenotaph, and in the second that there was a crowd of spirit faces at the base of the Cenotaph. A day or two later some of the spirit faces were identified as well-known athletes, among others the negro pugilist Battling Siki! A spiritualist suggested to a Daily News man that the appearance of faces of living people is due to the radio-active properties of people in the crowd round the Cenotaph who were thinking of them at the time. Dr. Paterson, the footballer, and Jimmy Wilde are also on the plate. If Mrs. Deane's camera only photographs what people in the crowd are thinking about, what is there left of the spiritualist theory? And why, in the name of wonder, should a crowd of people solemnly assembled to commemorate the dead be thinking more of living boxers and footballers than of the dead friends whom they are mourning?

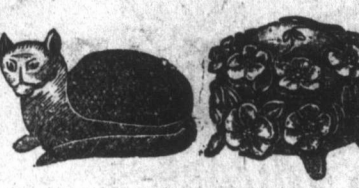

Lady Molesworth expressed the hope to the Daily News man that "he would not be a back number and suggest that the spirit photographs were not genuine." This is a new way of being up-to-date, to swallow every absurdity these people put forward. But perhaps Lady Molesworth was thinking of back numbers of Truth, which hold much useful information about Mrs. Deane. Many of my readers will no doubt remember her. Before she developed her gifts as a camera-medium she earned her living—more usefully, I should say, but probably less profitably—as a charwoman. She first became known in spiritualistic circles by the production of spirit photographs at the College of Psychic Science, Holland Park. Two years ago she came out, as she has done now, with astonishing spirit photographs taken at the Cenotaph on Armistice Day. One of them, a two minutes' exposure during the silence, a large number of heads appeared in a sort of mist. As the photograph was taken from a window in Whitehall, and as many of the faces were quite large, it is difficult to understand how the faces got into the air. Sir A. Conan Doyle advanced the hypothesis that when spirits come to be photographed they materialize inside a bag of ectoplasm, and when they are ready the bag is ripped open and the spirit face appears. This is very obliging of the spirits. Anybody who can believe, let alone publish, this explanation is beyond hope and argument.

The spiritualists admit that Mrs. Deane had the box of plates used for the photographs in her possession for three days before November 11th. How can they expect any sensible person to believe that they were not tampered with? When Mrs. Deane is offered plates which she cannot possibly interfere with she falls lamentably. Two years ago the ex-charwoman was asked to take photographs with plates supplied, stamped, and sealed by a photographic firm. She refused—for only one reason that I can see. In 1922—the date is important—on one of her colored spirit photographs which was reproduced in Light was the face of a Red Indian, described by her as a spirit guide, which turned out to be the cover illustration of My Magazine of October, 1920. This craving for publicity in a spirit cannot be too strongly depreciated. It is of the earth earthy.

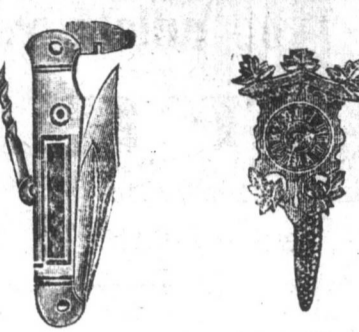

In Truth last May Professor Schwarz, of Rhodes University College, Grahamstown, explained one easy method of faking plates. There are many others, some of which Mrs. Deane doubtless knows well. One Sunday paper deprecated "the destructive tendency of the press" because it poured scorn on Mrs. Deane's pretensions. It is, surely, allowable to expose humbug when you see it. Imposture can hardly take a more obnoxious shape than in deluding bereaved mourners and exploiting a day and place of national mourning as an occasion for getting a cheap advertisement by conjurers' tricks.—Truth.

Smuggling in Canada

DEFEATS OFFICIAL VIGILANCE.

OTTAWA, Dec. 10.—The Department of Customs and Inland Revenue is fully seized of the seriousness of the present situation with respect to smuggling, and is as much disturbed because of the loss of revenue involved as Canadian manufacturers are by reason of the destructive competition occasioned through the wholesale bringing in of commodities on which duties have not been paid. But the Department as at present constituted appears to be practically helpless to cope with the situation. The total appropriation for inspection of ports, appraisal of goods and preventive service is about $350,000 per year. Included in the preventive service is the upkeep of half a dozen cruisers, and it is estimated that not more than $100,000 is available for land service, a sum entirely inadequate to cope with the present situation on a boundary of 3,000 miles.

In the past smuggling was carried on in a comparatively small way. Today it has become a wholesale traffic, and it is estimated that to cope with it a sum of not less than a million dollars will be required for preventive services. Inasmuch as the estimated loss in revenue to-day is in the neighborhood of $15,000,000, there is little doubt that the estimates at the coming session will be heavily increased. In the meantime the Dominion Smuggling Preventive Association, formed by the manufacturers for the purpose of co-operating with the Department, is preparing for a conference with the Minister of Customs this week.

Dog's Grief Fatal

When Master Dies

Dies in Favorite Garden Spot During Burial Service of Popular Judge. BAYONNE, N.J., Nov. 27.—Judge Hyman Lazarus, Senior Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of Hudson County, New Jersey, died at his home here and was buried, but Rajah, his pet police dog, didn't go to the funeral. For two years Rajah had followed his master almost everywhere he went, looking to him for petting and guidance. When Judge Lazarus died suddenly of heart disease on a recent day, Rajah sensed a tragedy had come into his life. He refused to be consoled. Although tempting food was put before him, it remained untouched.

About an hour before the judge's body was removed from the home, Rajah left the house and went into the garden. A few minutes later a member of the judge's family found the dog dead beside a little bush where his master had often stopped to pat him. Rajah had died of a broken heart. There was no doubt about it. No other cause of death could be found. The judge's funeral was one of the largest in Hudson County's history. All Hudson turned out to do him honor. Services were held in Temple Emanuel by Rabbi Benjamin P. Lotkin, and thousands surrounded the synagogue during the services. Prominent men were honorary pall bearers.

Hanged at Lindsay, Ont.

FOR SHOOTING HIS SWEETHEART, WHILE MOTORING.

Father of Murdered Girl Not Allowed at Execution. LINDSAY, Ont., Dec. 5.—Frederick William McGaughey was executed at four o'clock this morning for the murder of his sweetheart, Miss Beatrice Fee, on May 25 last. The shooting occurred while the couple were driving near here in a motor car and when the subject of their marriage was being discussed.

The hanging this morning was two hours ahead of the prescribed time and ten seconds after the condemned man, stepped on the gallows the execution was completed. Pulsation ended forty minutes after the trap was sprung. Relatives of McGaughey visited the jail last night and said farewell to the young man, his aged mother being among the visitors. Rev. A. McIntosh, his spiritual adviser, remained with McGaughey throughout the night, and this morning declared that he fully repented his act.

McGaughey went to the gallows this morning with a steady step, and after the execution, executioner Arthur Ellis announced that the fracture was a perfect one.

The funeral took place at 6.30 o'clock this morning with interment in Lindsay Cemetery. No relatives of the dead man were present, however, the minister and undertaker being the only persons to witness the burial. William Fee, father of the murdered girl, had requested permission to witness the execution but this was not allowed by the authorities.

Diamond Tells Its Story

... would not have known me for a diamond when first I saw the light. I was then a little pebble like a bit of gum, but with a dull surface similar to ground glass. I came to the bottom of a vast pit, hundreds of feet below the surrounding African plains.

... I had been washed I was packed with others in a package and shipped to a steel safe.

... is the great market for diamonds, and ultimately my parcel arrived there and was handed over to a man for sale. He strolled from the garden of Hatton Garden, where he ended at the Diamond Club. My keeper then began to play billiards with a friend. His coat, loaded with gems, he hung carelessly on a chair, taking no precautions.

... an Englishman strolled in and spoke to my owner for a moment. He then went to his coat, hauled out the parcel, handed it to the Englishman, turned his back, and went on his way.

... The Englishman sat down near a table, opened the parcel, and looked at the diamonds carefully, paying special attention to myself. Then he asked the price of the parcel. The other answered: "Eight hundred pounds," and the Englishman wrote out a cheque, for which he got the parcel.

... I went with my new owner by train to a Bond Street shop, and from there I was sent to Maiden Lane, where I was to be cut into a brilliant. The cutter labbed me against a diamond, flaking off pieces until he had brought me to the proper shape.

... Then I was washed down into the sea at the end of a stick, and I floated away with dust of diamonds. My work was long and painful, and I was elapsed before I was finished by a flashing brilliant.

... I came back to the Bond Street shop to be set in a ring, shown in the window, and finally sold for sixty pounds to the gentleman who presented me to my present owner, a very girl just engaged to be married.

Fighting Senility

Experiments recently made by Dr. ... at the General Hospital, of Prague, and by Professor V. L. Mladovsky, at Marienbad, Czecho-Slovakia, with a vegetable extract of Drosera rotundifolia and colloidal silicates, have brought out a remarkable assisting effect on the ailments of old age. While Drosera has long been highly regarded as a good remedy against arteriosclerosis, Prof. Mladovsky's experiments show blood pressure to be reduced by the action of these chemical and physiological substances made at a Marienbad chemical laboratory finally resulted in the production of an extract containing all the active components and which, after a few days' use, was found to bring decided relief to persons suffering from arteriosclerosis and insomnia. It is contended that this product contains no harmful ingredients. According to a personal report from Professor Mladovsky, the effects of the new treatment are surprising, many desperate cases having been cured or greatly relieved. Angina pectoris, asthma and other serious symptoms often will disappear after a few days. Apart from these remarkable phenomena, the substance used by Professor Mladovsky shows very interesting chemical reactions.

Churchill is Target for Humorous Sally by Sir John Simon

LONDON, Dec. 9.—(P.)—Sir John Simon, one of the prominent Liberal members of the House of Commons, had fun at Winston Churchill, Chancellor of the Exchequer, in a speech last night in support of E. D. Morel, the Liberal candidate in the election in Dundee caused by the death of E. D. Morel, Labor M.P.

... John referred to Winston Churchill as a meteor in the political sky who would not long remain in that position. He added that there was a new jazz dance, called "The Winston Constitution." You took a step forward, two steps backward, a step to the right, and then reversed. This sally was greeted with loud laughter.

SYNDICATE BUYS BOND ISSUE OF SEAMEN KENT.

The recent syndicate purchase of $400,000 first mortgage 20-year sinking fund 7 per cent gold bonds of the Seaman Kent Company, Limited, soon to be offered to the public, brings into prominence an industry whose history is of genuine interest to every Canadian. That industry creates an essential commodity, or one at least that is very much desired by property owners the country over—hardwood flooring.

Starting twenty-five years ago with one small factory, in days when only the very rich considered the possibility of laying hardwood floors in their homes, the Seaman Kent Company, Limited has become the largest manufacturer of this product in the British Empire. Moreover, it has brought hardwood floors to the mass of the people, by quantity production which has lowered the price of such flooring to a fair level for the public purse.

The possibilities in this business have attracted wealthy interests and this company has for some time past been in the control of M. J. O'Brien Company, of Ottawa. J. A. O'Brien, is the president of the new company.

To finance the expenditures incurred through the building of the new mill at Renfrew and to provide additional working capital, the present $400,000 bond issue was made and a syndicate headed by Johnston and Ward have purchased the issue and will offer it to the public.

The company's balance sheet shows assets in excess of $3,100 for each $1,000 of bonds issued, with net earnings of more than three times the annual bond interest requirements. A sinking fund to commence in 1925 will be sufficient to retire the entire issue by maturity.

John Ambrose O'Brien, president of Seamans, Kent, Limited, who represents new financial interests in the company, is vice-president and managing director of M. J. O'Brien, Ltd., Ottawa, general contractors. He is also president of the Great Lakes Dredging and Contracting Company, Limited; vice-president of the Deloro Smelting and Refining Company, Ltd.; vice-president of the Missouri-Cobalt Company; vice-president of the Blair Engineering Company of Canada, and a director of the Travellers' Life Assurance Company; the Interprovincial Flour Mills, Limited; the Canadian Paper Company, Limited, and many other corporations. He is a son of Senator M. J. O'Brien, and has been in business ever since he graduated from the School of Practical Science in Toronto.

(Boston News Bureau, Dec. 8th.)
MARLAND OIL CO.

N.Y.—Pres. E. W. Marland says Marland Oil Co. for 11 months ended Nov. 30 made substantial progress in various departments, the prospecting departments having added many valuable properties, most of them by discovery at low cost.

"These discovery values," he added, do not show in any of our published statements. Production department has given us an average net production for the year to date of over 22,000 barrels daily. Our daily average net production for November was over 20,000 barrels, and present net production is 32,000 barrels.

"Pipe line department has run from wells over 13,000,000 barrels so far this year has sold over 9,000,000 and has added to storage over 4,000,000. Our stocks of crude now are approximately 5,750,000 barrels, all high grade crude. Our refinery processed approximately 4,000,000 barrels of crude oil, products of which have been currently sold. Our markets for crude oil and refined products have greatly expanded during the year and we are looking forward to 1925 to still further increase this branch.

"We have already sold for 1925 delivery 15,000,000 barrels of crude oil and refined products. We will probably still further increase these commitments by 7,000,000 barrels, making a total volume of 25,000,000 barrels sold for 1925 delivery, prices to be those prevailing at the time of deliveries."

Marland said subsidiaries in California and Texas are showing excellent progress, adding they have brought properties into production and he expects they will add substantially to production next year.

Fooling the Character Analyst

An ultra-fashionably dressed young lady with a bewitchingly attractive face, decided the other day to visit the character analyst. This interesting gentleman is a very popular adjunct of Paris just now. Truth and candor are his handmaidens, and he reads one's weaknesses and petty faults as easily as if they were written in scarlet letters on a white page. "I have decided to have my character analysed," said this fascinating little person. "I want to go to an art school, but mother thinks I'm better fitted for charity work, and wants me to study sociology at the Paris University."

The magnetism in her lustrous orbs drew his eyes to them, and so bereft him of his senses, that it was several moments before he could speak. He closed his eyes, truth must prevail, and he felt himself weakening. "I find your eyebrows to be very highly arched," he finally announced. "As a rule, the arched eyebrow is indicative of an artistic temperament, but I must be honest with you—you are so exaggerated, that they indicate instead a fickleness of nature and an inability to look at things from a sane, common-sense view."

"Oh, the arch is artificial," exclaimed his client, as she arched her eyebrows still higher at his artlessness. My eyebrows were originally heavy and flat, so I had them plucked and trained into an arch."

"Of course, of course! How terribly stupid of me!" stammered the character analyst, growing red in his embarrassment. "Really your eyebrows appear so natural an arch, that I did not dream that they could have been plucked."

"I don't see how my character can be influenced by a few little hairs on my forehead," said his client.

"No importance whatsoever," exclaimed the analyst. "As long as we agree on that point we can progress to your eyes. They are of the highest importance in revealing true characteristics."

He gazed into the deep blue wells. "Er—you want me to be quite frank don't you," he inquired unhappily.

"Why?—yes, of course."

The analyst cleared his throat and swallowed hard. Well, I dislike to say it, but your eyes are a great deal too brilliant. To be perfectly frank, they are so pronouncedly vivacious as to make you unreliable, variable, fantastic, and too impulsive."

He smiled very sweetly when he said this, to take the sting off his words, and went through the pantomime of washing his hands.

Oooh, my eyes don't naturally sparkle so brightly, I put bella-donna in them, because they are inclined to be lifeless. It's the fashion now, don't you know?"

"Ah yes, I see," said the analyst as he rumbled his hair with a wild sweep of his hand; he mopped the beads of perspiration that were flooding his brow, and silently cursed his course for not having prepared him for such contingencies.

"As I told you before, the importance of the eyes in an analysis of this kind is very negligible. We can ignore them and pass right on to the hair," he stammered in a pitiful attempt at airiness. With the hair he felt he was on safe ground. Being bobbed, there was not the slightest possibility of its being false.

"It's Auburn hue signifies an uncertain temper, and, judging from the way it curls, I should say that you are a little inclined to be frivolous," he said, as he ran his finger round the inside of his collar.

"My hair was straight until I had it permanently waved," protested his client with a little toss of her head. "Auburn is not its original shade either. It was dark brown before I had it dyed golden, and when the henna shade became popular, I had mine dyed that shade too."

"Yes, of course!" said the bewildered analyst, hoarsely, in an agony of despair. "It doesn't come off too?" he inquired wildly. His client snifed with indignation, and gave him a glance that froze the very marrow of his bones.

Like a drowning man clutching at a straw, he seized the opportunity to analyse the shape of the client's face. "Thank heaven there's nothing that can alter a person's type," he thought.

"Your face is convex, which is the exception of your nose, which is concave. Convexity of type indicates vitality and restlessness. Your nose, however, shows you to be inquisitive and lacking in the ability to think deeply."

"My nose was once hooked," giggled the young lady smitten by the humor of the situation. "I had an operation, and after the removal of several bones it has become quite retousse."

"Fine! splendid!" cried the analyst frantically, as he ripped off his collar with an abandon that showed the extremity of his desperation. Recklessly though, he plunged onward in his analysis.

"The redness of your lips indicates voluptuousness, your cheeks are rosy enough to signify an appetitive disposition, and the length and silkiness of your eyelashes indicates a nature inclined to be secretive and catty."

The maiden's outraged womanhood shrieked at the insults she had borne from this stupid ox. Angry and hurt she sprang from her chair in indignant wrath and stamped her foot.

"So much for my voluptuousness!" she cried wiping her hand across her lips and transpiring their blazing scarlet into a pale pink. With another sweep of her hand she removed the hectic flush from her cheeks. "And there's for my appetitive disposition," she shrieked.

Passionate tears coursed her cheeks and, riding the flood, were the long silky eyelashes!

"False, too," he grasped hoarsely. She tossed them angrily into his face, and founced out of the office.

There was only one thing left for the character analyst—to shut up shop and retire. To study character indications from the face may be possible when the subjects are men, but women, with their beauty-enhancing artifices . . .

Dr. James Moffatt's Bible

The Old Testament, translated direct from the Hebrew into modern and liberally phrased English, robbed of its "begats," its "bullrushes" and its "Noah's Ark," as well as its "mess of pottage," has made its appearance, published by the George H. Doran Co. The translation is done by the Rev. Dr. James Moffatt, of Glasgow.

The "begats" in this version is replaced by the idiom, "was the father of." Noah's ark is a "barge," and it is made of cypress instead of sopher wood. Esau sells his birthright, not for a mess of pottage, but for a "red smeltette," and the Garden of Eden becomes a "park." In general, the translation is parallel with that of the New Testament, done two years ago by the same Biblical scholar.

The book differs greatly in verbiage and in some instances in meaning from the King James version. A storm of comment, not all of it approving, is anticipated from the clergy throughout the world. Dr. Moffatt, who has honorary degrees from Oxford, has held the chair of Church history in the United Free Church College, at Glasgow, since 1915. Formerly he was Yates professor of Greek and New Testament exegesis in Mansfield College, Oxford.

The work carries none of the archaic rhetorical forms and none of the obsolete words that are found throughout the King James translation. The quotation of instances gives no complete picture of the work, inasmuch as isolated examples lack the characteristic tone of the whole. One striking change is that from "God's covenant" with Noah into a "compact" in the Moffatt version. Again, in Genesis vi. 10, where the King James version says, "And Noah began three sons," Dr. Moffatt's translation reads, "Noah was the father of three sons."

In Exodus, where the mother of Moses hides her infant from the Egyptians, Dr. Moffatt avoids the use of the word "bullrushes." The King James Bible recites the story as follows:

"And when she could no longer hide him, she took for him an ark of bullrushes, and daubed it with slime and with pitch, and put the child therein; and she laid it in the flags by the river's brink.

"And his sister stood afar off, to wit what would be done to him.

"And the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw the ark among the flags, she sent her maid to fetch it."

Dr. Moffatt translates it:

"When she could hide him no longer, she took a creel made of papyrus reeds, daubed it over with bitumen and pitch, and put the child in it, laying it among the reeds at the side of the Nile. His sister placed herself at a distance, to see what would happen to him. Now the daughter of Pharaoh came down to bathe at the river; her maidens were walking along the bank, and as she saw the creel among the reeds, she sent her slave-girl to fetch it."

In some instances, where quotations have become a part of the idiom of the language, Prof. Moffatt has not disturbed the verbiage of the King James scholars. An example of this is found in the story of how Jacob won from his father the blessing intended for Esau—a victory made possible by disguising his hands as he served the blind Isaac the venison for which he had asked. In the Moffatt as in the King James' version, Isaac's words are: "The voice is Jacob's voice, but the hands are the hands of Esau."

The garden of Eden appears, in the Dr. Moffatt translation, as a park. According to the King James script: "And the Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden."

The later book reads: "In the land of Eden, to the far east, God the eternal then planted a park."

Moffatt avoids the word "Babel" and writes:

"Down came the Eternal to see the city and the tower which human beings had built. They are one people, said the Eternal, and they have one language; if this is what they do, to start with, nothing that they ever undertake will prove too hard for them. Come, let us go down and make a babble of their language on the spot, so that they cannot understand one another's speech. Thus did the Eternal scatter them all over the wide earth; they gave up building the city. Hence it was called 'Babylon,' because it was there that the Eternal made a babble of the language of the whole earth."

The word "neighbor" has been supplanted by Dr. Moffatt by "fellow countryman." This is but one of many changes in the wording of the Ten Commandments, which Dr. Moffatt translates:

"You shall have no gods but me. You shall not carve any idols for yourselves, the shape of anything, in heaven above or on the earth below or in the sea, you shall not bow down to them nor worship them, for I the Eternal, your God, am a jealous God, punishing children for the sins of their fathers, punishing those who hate me down to the third and fourth generation, but showing kindness to thousands of those who love me and obey my orders.

BABE RUTH KNOCKS GOLF BALL DIZZY.

Playing his first round of golf since last February recently, Babe Ruth, home-run king, made a drive from the first tee at the Rancho County Club of Los Angeles, which netted 320 yards, the longest drive ever made at Rancho. Ruth sent the ball 322 yards in the air and an additional roll of 30 yards gave him the record.

Ruth is a mighty swimmer with the driver, it was declared by D. Scott Chisholm, his playing partner. Only a slight wind favored the 352-yard drive and the Bambino drove out two others over 300 yards and at the 18th hole he made a remarkable 295-yard spoon shot to within 10 yards of the pin.

He was hard on the golf balls, though, using five during the 18 holes, his drive on the fourth tee, according to Chisholm, gashed the ball like an "alligator's bite."

Our Manhood

The Telegram in a recent issue referred to the commendable spirit of one of our men, who went to the country to work, so that he could earn enough over his keep to enable him to pay for the treatment of his sick child at the Twillingate Hospital rather than be classed as a pauper. This spirit of eagerness is very prevalent in our midst, and when the able bodied relief was handed around during the two years, there were instances where men who were in worse circumstances than many who got the dole struggled with might and main to save the branding of a pauper. Some had to resort to the help of the dole as it was impossible to get work.

The one referred to in the editorial columns is Adolphus Sharpe, whose child is at present suffering from a diseased spine and is now in plaster of paris but doing favourably. Mr. Sharpe is a fellow townsman and were the tales fully told of the persevering spirit of many of our men, and women as well, it would be an interesting biography.

The subject matter of the Telegram's remarks pointed out that the folk here are eager to show a deep interest in the Hospital, and were endeavouring to help in its maintenance.—Twillingate Sun.

NOTE.—That was indeed the theme of our remarks, but the main purpose was to emphasize that the grant of $10,000 even when supplemented by such commendable effort locally was altogether inadequate. We trust the powers that be make a note of it.—Editor.

LOS ANGELES MAY GET 1928 OLYMPIC GAMES.

PARIS, France, Nov. 27.—Amsterdam's failure to show more aggressiveness in starting preparations for the 1928 Olympic games has aroused the international Olympic Committee, according to rumors in sporting circles here.

The committee is said to have urged the Amsterdam committee to speed up the preliminary work or resign as the host city for the next games.

If the Holland officials do not act soon, the committee threatened, it was reported, to take the games away from them and award them to Los Angeles.

SIDE TALKS.

Yet he is not one of those men who are never interested in other women. Far from it. He has eyes and ears.

He knows that there are other women as pretty as his wife and some prettier. He has met women whose society he enjoys and he has not hesitated to show it. His wife has never seemed to mind even though people who think she ought to mind sometimes try to encourage her to. You know the sort of thing I mean. "I don't like to tell you, but I really think I ought to just suppose we shall be able to get Jim to the country club dance this week now that Marion is out of town."

Why She Doesn't Worry.

Through such innuendoes and direct attacks Jim's wife remains perfectly serene, at least outwardly. And I have sometimes wondered a bit myself why she took Jim's evident admiration and enjoyment of other women's company so calmly.

I do not wonder so much now. She knows that the deeper things are hers.

She recognizes the fact that her husband has not ceased to have the capacity to enjoy other personalities because hers means so much to him, as nothing extraordinary or alarming.

Not Afraid Of Every Pretty Face. She knows that the bonds of sympathy and congeniality and comradeship which bind them together are not going to be lightly broken so she does not regard every pretty face, or every amusing friend with whom Jim likes to bandy wits, as a menace.

And out of Jim's own mouth she is proved right. Perhaps you will say that such a preference for a desert island companionship is too obvious to be any tribute. That, of course, any husband and wife who weren't actually headed for the divorce courts would feel that way and that marriage ought to mean far more than that. A man ought not only to infinitely prefer his wife to any other woman, but any other woman should mean nothing to him; in short marriage should be a sort of desert island for both in regard to friends of the opposite sex!

Less Pretense—More Genuine Feeling. I think myself that's all poppycock. I don't believe anyone really feels that way after two years of marriage. Oh yes, I know that there are many people who pretend to their partners for the sake of peace that this is true and that they wouldn't want it any different. And some who even pretend so to themselves. But I think if people didn't demand this pretense the deep genuine underlying bonds would be stronger.

WATCH FOR "THE COVERED WAGON"

To Urge Pity as Murder Defence

PLANS OF PRISONERS' COUNSEL IN HIGHT-SWEETIN TRIAL.

MOUNT VERNON, Ills., Dec. 9.—A defence of pity will be constructed to save Lawrence M. Hight, former Methodist pastor and Elsie Sweetin from the gallows.

They are on trial here for murdering Wilford Sweetin, the woman's husband, by putting poison in his food. Both will be tried later for killing Mrs. Hight in a like manner.

First state witnesses will go on the stand to-day and the state expects to take at least three days in presenting their 100 witnesses, many of them fellow townsmen of Hight and Mrs. Sweetin, who had watched the secret love affair of the two prisoners.

Both defence attorneys in their opening arguments yesterday showed how they planned to construct pitiful tales of their clients, to batter the State's evidence and the two confessions Hight and Mrs. Sweetin signed.

Nelson Layman, attorney for Hight, pictured the minister as a man who had inherited mental eccentricities. He said he would show how Hight's mother died when the defendant was two years old; how the boy had lived with a brutal father; how his mind had become affected through injuries; that he was kicked on the head by a mule; once hit over the head by a yoke, and once had fallen from a barn loft and landed on his head.

The defence doesn't plan to admit the confession as Hight's true story. Layman said he would show how Hight had signed the confession, thinking he was talking to his own attorney rather than the State's representative. He said Hight didn't know what he signed, and didn't know how the confession read.

Mrs. Sweetin was presented to the jurors as a woman who had never had an opportunity to gain an insight to affairs of the world. Robert Smith, her attorney, told how she had been reared in the little community around Ina, had "worked out" for several years, then married Wilford Sweetin and settled down. He expects to prove that Hight was not at the Sweetin's death, and that both Mr. and Mrs. Sweetin became ill at the same time. He said Mrs. Sweetin did not know what she signed when she made her confession.

Passports for Five Years

NEW REGULATIONS STARTED ON DECEMBER 1.

It has been decided by the Foreign Office that passports in future shall be valid for five years, and may be renewed up to ten years. Under existing regulations passports are only valid for two years and cost 7s. 6d. They may only be renewed for four further periods of two years each, after which fresh passports must be obtained. The fee for each renewal is

2s. An announcement issued by the Foreign Office states that the new regulations will come into force on December 1. The fee for the issue of the five-year passport remains unaltered, and the passport may be renewed for any period for one to five years at the charge of 1s. a year. The total cost of a passport for ten years will therefore be 12s. 6d. as against the present charge of 15s. 6d. The official announcement states that from December 1 all British passports which have expired or are about to expire may be renewed from the date of expiration provided that in no case shall the validity of a passport be extended beyond ten years beyond the date of issue. The new regulations will be particularly welcome to business men and tourists who are continually travelling to foreign countries.—News of the World.

Inquiry to be Made

AS TO THE DEATH OF THOS. H. INCE, MOTION PICTURE PRODUCER.

LOS ANGELES, Calif., Dec. 10.—San Diego County has launched an inquiry into the death of Thomas H. Ince, motion picture producer, who died here recently, a few hours after returning from a yacht party in San Diego Bay, the Los Angeles says it learned last night.

Ince died of acute indigestion, inducing heart failure, according to the report of his attending physicians. The Times quotes the District Attorney as saying that the evidence of Dr. Parker and a trained nurse shows that Ince connected his illness with liquor. Aboard the yacht Oreide were William Randolph Hears, Elinor Glenn, Marion Davies, and Seena Owen, Dr. Goodman, head of the Cosmopolitan Productions, and others.

Science Conquers Strange Disease

X-RAY CURING YOUTH WHOSE NOSE WAS TURNING TO STONE.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 9.—Science has once more conquered a strange disease and Joseph Slaboda, of Trenton, N.J., who was dying by inches at the Howard Hospital of an ailment that was turning his nose to stone, is reported much improved to-day.

The youth was stricken with the malady known as rhinoscleroma five years ago. Slowly his nose began to harden, and the disease spread to the throat, threatening partial strangulation.

Slaboda came to the hospital less than a month ago, and physicians were baffled for a time as to how to combat the disease. Noted specialists became interested in the case, and the patient was given strong X-ray treatments followed by injections of tincture of antimony and chaulmoogra oil.

Successful results were obtained and Slaboda began to improve. Physicians said to-day that the case was the first on record in which a permanent cure could be hoped for.

Social Evening at College Hall

The Associate Classes of the Methodist College held a social evening in the College Hall last night, the pupils entertaining their parents and friends. An interesting series of instrumental and vocal selections, competitions and sketches, was held, and a thoroughly enjoyable time was spent. Refreshments served during the interval.

Be Sure Your Ingredients Are Right!

THEN GO AHEAD.

If every woman followed the above suggestion, there would be no failures in this year's Christmas cakes; for unless the best shortening is used, the cake will not be a success. When Crisco, (which everyone considers the best shortening,) only costs a few cents more than inferior products, it is "penny wise" to be without it. Try Crisco in your Christmas cakes and pastry.

JACOB & Co's CELEBRATED BISCUITS

SEA VOYAGES AND BISCUITS
The old Sea Dogs, with their hard dry biscuits, would have rubbed their eyes at the wonderful varieties that tempt the modern globe trotter. The delicious "WATER" biscuits, the attractive Dessert varieties in "KING'S OWN MIXED" and the charm of "CONFISERIES," for Afternoon Tea, are but three sides of the question. Many Steamship Companies well appreciate this, and supply Jacob's Biscuits throughout their Fleets.

If you cannot obtain these Biscuits from your Grocer, your order will be taken care of by us.

Everything must be of the highest quality in the Christmas cake. Great care is taken in arranging every detail; the fire, the oven, the eggs, the flour; everything must be just right. Young Painter Hanged

THIS MORNING, DESPITE APPEALS TO THE KING—CHURCHES FILLED FOR HOURS WITH PEOPLE PRAYING FOR CONDEMNED.

HULL, England, Dec. 9.—William G. Smith, the young painter, whose condemnation to death for the murder of a woman last August aroused intensive appeals for clemency, was hanged at 9 o'clock this morning. In a last desperate effort to save Smith, a number of local notables, including the Mayor's wife, this morning telegraphed an appeal to King George, asking him to exercise his Royal prerogative and spare the condemned man's life.

Before the appeal to the King, every conceivable effort had been made to obtain a reprieve from the Home Secretary, Sir William Joynson-Hicks, but a deputation, headed by Commander Kenworthy, M.P., and including six other Commoners, was forced to report failure.

The populace was greatly stirred over the case and filled the churches for hours while special prayers were said for the condemned man. A meeting of 10,000 persons yesterday threatened a general strike if their reprieve petition was not granted.

One of the arguments presented was that Smith had not been shown impartiality, as another man, proved guilty of murdering his wife at the same time Smith was condemned, was sentenced to only ten years imprisonment.

Evidence of high feeling were almost entirely absent at the end. A crowd of two thousand persons assembled outside the jail, but it remained orderly, indulging in no demonstrations.

The Longest Tunnel

By RALPH HAROLD BRETHERTON.

When the City and South London Tube re-opened recently trains ran through 10 miles of what will soon be the longest tunnel in the world.

The reconstructed South London is 7 miles long, but a link with the Hampstead Tube gives 10 miles of continuous tunnel between Golders Green and Clapham Common. From Clapham Common the tube is being extended to Morden. When next year this extension is opened another 4 miles of tunnel will be added, making 14 in all. Nowhere in those 14 miles will the tunnel have any direct opening to the surface.

So a little tube, originally only about a couple of miles in length, is becoming the longest tunnel that man has ever built. At present it is beaten only by the St. Gothard (9 1/4 miles) and Simplon (12 1/4 miles) through the Alps. Soon it will beat those two tunnels by nearly a couple of miles.

It is rather surprising, perhaps, that London, with her great system of underground railways, is only now coming into possession of the world's record tunnel. But it is a curious fact about the original Underground, now the Circle, that it has no great continuous length of tunnel.

Apart from the main-line tunnel at Fenge, under the Crystal Palace hills, there was no tunnel of more than a mile in length in London until the district was extended out to Bow about 20 years ago. The long tunnels of the country were the Severn (4 1/2 miles), the Dore, in Derbyshire (3 1/2 miles), and the Standedge and Woodhead through the Pennines, both about 3 miles. These were the tunnels that seemed as if they would never end.

Then came the tubes, and London had the longest in the country—some would have said the longest in the world. One travelled for close on half an hour in trains that made all the noise of speed and never had a glimpse of the upper world until one came up on the other side of London. But, for all London's need of underground facilities for travel and for all the ease with which tubes were driven through her clay, her longest tube, the Piccadilly, gave only 8 miles of continuous tunnel.

Business of the Teacher

The business of the teacher, said Sir Sydney Russell-Wells, a former Vice-President of London University, is to communicate learning and to train character. The education of a teacher, he pointed out, necessitates two things: first, that he shall have the knowledge to communicate; second, that he shall have the art of communicating it. These two things are quite distinct and are often confused in the public mind. Therefore Sir Sydney would make the training and the acquirement of these two portions of the teacher's are separate and distinct. He should acquire knowledge in the open forum of a university. He should take a degree where he will mix with men who are studying medicine, science, law, theology, and engineering on an equal plane so that in after life he can mix with members of all those different professions, and not only meet them on an equal plane but also with that understanding of their aspirations and ideals which comes almost unconsciously when one mixes in the common life of the university with

STEERS, LIMITED

A.A.U. APPROVES DISPUTED SPRINT RECORDS OF PADDOCK AND CLARKE.
Among other business completed at its recent convention in Atlantic City, N.J., the Amateur Athletic Union approved two sprinting records, one by Louis Clarke and the other by Charley Paddock after some dispute. Murray Hulbert, of New York, was elected president to succeed William G. Prout of Boston and Pittsburgh was elected as the 1925 convention city.
The disputed records accepted were a new American mark of 9.45 seconds for the 100 yards indoors, made by Clarke at Baltimore last February, and a record-equaling performance of 93.5 seconds for 100 yards outdoors by Paddock, in winning the national championship at West Orange, N.J., in September. Both represent world records.
Both marks were approved by a majority vote of the convention over the objection of the record committee, whose spokesman, Louis C. Gildsmith, of Philadelphia, refused to approve of either performance. The committee's objections were based in Clarke's case on the ground that one of the three timers showed ten seconds, while in Paddock's case a quartering wind was said to have aided him. Paddock's record-breaking time of 29.45 seconds in winning the 220-yard national championship at West Orange also was approved.
Tribute Paid To Paddock.
Tribute to Charley Paddock, national sprint champion, who represented the Southern Pacific Association as a delegate to the A.A.U. convention, was paid by William Prout, retiring president in his annual report.
"The selection of one of the finest athletes who ever competed by one of our district associations as a delegate to this meeting brings very forcibly to our attention the desirability of having our competing athletes retain their interest in the great cause after they have retired from active competition."
