of your people now and in the future may no be met more easily by a British colony rathe than by a foreign country, the point of depart ure being a basis of mutual advantage. A you are probably aware of late years a large portion of our produce found a ready-sale it the United States, but this year that marke has offered small inducement, for the disposal of our sugars, and the prospect in the future of its releving us of our surplus produce is decidedly unfavorable. The West India colonies in the existing treaty between Great Britain and the United States are not included in the most favored nation clause, and it does not appear from the present political outlook that things are likely to have this privilege extended to them. To assist your chamber in weighing the subject we are proposing we append the following statistics:

A Blaze at Brockville. BROCKVILLE, Aug. 20 .- About 10 o'clock ast night an alarm of fire was given, and the brigade was soon out in full force. The fire originated in the second floor of a stone building on Perth, near Main street, occupied by P. C. Lennon, and used for keeping and sorting rags. The flames spread very rapidly to some frame sheds at the rear, traveling both towards Main and George streets, taking in its course and destroying nearly the whole of the buildings facing on Perth street between those two points. In fact only about one-half of Mr. Everett's hotel on the corner of George street was saved, and that badly damaged by water. At the rear of these buildings is a small drive way, separating them from the large wholesale grocery and provision warehouses of Y. Gilmour & Co. This structure is a two-story store, with gravel roof, extending back 200 feet from Main street, with wooden stores at the rear through to George street, then running east to John street. These frame buildings were filled with wooden wares, including a car-load of matches just put in. It was among these tinder-boxes where the ing and sorting rags. The flames spread

The Cardwell Election Case Dismissed. ORANGEVILLE, Aug. 20 .- The trial of the petition in the Cardwell election case gainst the return of W. H. Hammill, the duly elected conservative member, was ommenced this morning here before a full court-room. The presiding judges were Justice Ferguson and Justice Rose, Fulford Arnoldi acting as registrar of the court. Mr. Procter appeared for Thomas Smith, the petitioner, and Messrs. Walsh & Hands for the respondent. The court was duly opened, whereupon the counsel for the petitioner stated that there was no evidence to offer in support of the petition and read an affidavit to show his good faith. The court then asked, in the usual and read an affidavit to show his good faith. The court then asked, in the usual form, if any elector present desired to be substituted for the present petitioner. No one responding, the judgment of the court was delivered, dismissing the petition with costs. The conservative member therefore retains his seat for Cardwell in the legislative assembly.

ALVINSTON, Aug. 20 .- A fire occurred ere this morning, destroying John Glover's o Thomas Fawcett and J. T. Scandrett's billiard hall. Glover's loss is heavy on stock and household furniture; insurance $1800. Thos. Fawcett's loss is covered by insurance. His stores were occupied by E. Beall, who loses most of his stock and E. Beall, who loses most of his stock and household goods; insurance $200; and G. A. Eastman, whose loss is heavy on stock; insurance $4500; J. J. Scandrett is fully insured. The front of Angus McCallum's hotel was all broken by the heat; loss covered by insurance; also the glass in Livingston's butcher shop, and McIntyre's and Darvill's stove and tinware stores; no insurance. The fire 1s supposed to have been caused from a lamp in Glover's house. The estimated loss is $15,000.

Cleveland and Butter. It has been said that Butler was very anxious to see Cleveland's letter of acceptance before coming out with his own. Having, as some believe, got tired waiting, he gave his letter to the press on Monday night. Cleveland's letter quickly followed, appearing in the morning papers on Wednesday. It looks as if Cleveland's address had been purposely delayed, in order that he and his friends might first see whether there would be anything in Butler's specially requiring to be answered.

As was to have been expected, the burden of Cleveland's address is—the misdeeds of the republican party. Mrs. Sutherland did not think that the Mrs Sutherland did not think that the dangers her cousin had warned her to prepare for were of a very serious character, but being a woman "wise in her generation," she deemed it prudent to pour oil upon the waves before any signs of a storm became visible. A day or two after her new neighbors arrived, seeing Mrs. Cooper making some endeavor to improve the condition of a very neglected garden patch, Mrs. Sutherland stepped to the dividing fence and begged her neighbor's acceptance of a basketful of vegetables she had just gathered from her own thriving garden.

"It's so late in the season that I'm afraid you won't be able to raise much in your garden," she said pleasantly, "and as I have more garden truck than I can make use of, I shall be glad to have you help me dispose of it."

"Hi'm much obliged to you, ma'am, and as you've hoffered the garden-sass I'll accept it; but as a general thing me and my old man pays our hown way, and don't care to be beholden to nobody."

The lad Charlie she found it much easier to make friends with; he was a freckle-faced, black-eyed youngster of twelve or thirteen, with a head thickly covered with closely-coiled risgs of auburn hair. Noticing him one morning wheeling away a lot of weeds and rubbish from his mother's garden, Mrs. Sunderland saked him if he would like to perform the same service for her—of course, for a remunera.

Mrs. Sunderland advanced to the fence to help Frank, shivering and crying, to get over it. Her gentle temper, proof against insults or attacks directed upon herself, was at last aroused. Frank was a very delicate child, and the effects of such a shower-bath upon such a morning might be serious. With flashing eyes and face flushed with indignation, she turned upon her enemy, who did have the grace to look a little ashamed of herself.

"You are a wicked, cruel woman, Mrs. Cooper, and henceforth I will have nothing to do with you." Then she hurried Frank to the house, and mingled her tears with his as she helped him to attire himself in dry garments.

Of course, to such a speech as this no or course, to such a speech as this no civil reply was possible, so Mrs. Sunderland quietly withdrew from the scene of action, leaving her neighbor in possession of the field. The predicted quarrel had come, greatly to Mrs. Sunderland's mortification; for to have it known to the whole town the she was at a variance with her town that she was at a variance with her next door neighbor—as, thanks to Mrs. Copper's unscrupulous tongue, it speedily was—was felt by the widow to be a real

All that she could do to smooth matters All that she could do to smooth matters over she did, with no effect, however, except that Mrs. Cooper subsided gradually from a ferocious to a sullen mood, but lost no opportunity of exhibiting her dislike and ill-will in the numberless little ways which a near neighbor can always make

The quarrel between the boys was of a few days Charlie's red head was again seen bobbing over the division-fence, and Frank being responsive, the former intimacy was soon re established. When September came and the schools reopened the two lads became school mates and class-

Charlie was a bright boy, and his parents had kept him steadily at school, and were very proud of his attainments; but though he was two years older than Frank, the latter was more than his equal in school-standing. There was no brag about Frank, however, and there would probably have been no jealousy on Charlie's side had it not been excited by home influence. Mrs. Cooper was bitterly jealous and envious, and her sneers and innuendoes did much towards making her son as unreasonable and suspicious as herself.

A few months after the school opened, an examination was held for the purpose of promoting such of the scholars as were fitted for the advance to bigher described of promoting such of the scholars as were fitted for the advance to higher departments in the school. Frank Sunderland was the only boy in his class who was successful in passing the examination, though Charlie Cooper had not been far behind him, and his heart, and his mother's as well, had been set upon his obtaining

That he failed to do so was, in itself, a bitter disappointment, but that Frank should succeed where Charlie failed was a bitter disappointment, but that Frank should succeed where Charlie failed was a trial much harder to endure. Mrs. Cooper's undisciplined tongue wagged freely, and her opinion that the school was conducted upon the rankest principles of favoritism was widely disseminated. She would even have been foolish enough to withdraw Charlie from the school had not his father interposed his rarely exerted authority and put a positive veto upon any such absurd proceeding.

The examination for promotion was again held, and this time Charlie Cooper ranked first among five of his class who were promoted to the higher department. Mrs. Sunderland was sincerely pleased when she heard of the lad's triumph, and a few mornings later when she met him, she stopped to shake hands with him, congratulating him most cordially. "But how does it happen you are not in school this morning?" she asked.

"I—I—don't go to school just uow?" he stammered. "I've stopped awhile." any such absurd proceeding.

thing, fally appreciated. Though very well aware of the rumor of Mrs. Cooper's feelings toward her and Frank, Mrs. Sunderland was sensible enough to feel rather amused than irritated, even when Mrs. Cooper's conduct, on their chance meetings, verged upon actual insolence. The widow's cheerfulness and politeness continued to be quite invincible until the events of a certain morning proved to her that forbearance had at last ceased another bucket to fill, one that was already half-full of water, which she was shaking around in the bucket, preparatory to throwing it out.

"What are you doing in my lot sir, may I ask?" she said, as she noticed the intruder. Frank colored, and took up his still empty bucket.

"Never mind, Charlie," said he; "we can get the ice out of our own bucket; I'll go back, now."

Charlie was provoked at his mother, and his temper being as ill-governed as her own, he turned towards her angrily, crying: "What's the use of being so hateful? you ought to be ashamed of yourself!" at which words his nother's anger rose to the exploding point.

"Ill thank you to mind your own business, Charlie Cooper!" she said; and then turning ferociously upon inoffensive Frank, "as for you, young haristocrat, I want you to get hoff my premises, and stay hoff 'em. We don't want no favorites round here." Therewing the contents of her bucket, not absoldtely at frank, but with an utter disregard of what she was doing, she dashed the water in such a way that the lad was completely drenched. dashed the water in such a way that the lad was completely drenched.

Mrs. Sunderland advanced to the fence him if he would like to perform the same service for her—of course, for a remuneration. The offer was eagerly accepted, and after that Charlie Cooper earned many a dime by little services performed for the widow lady.

Frank Sunderland and he became quite well acquainted in the course of these labors, and, as a general thing, the two boys got along together remarkably well; but one day some accident happened to Charlie's wheelbarrow, and he chose to Charlie's wheelbarrow, and he chose to think Frank was the cause of the disaster. The evil temper which had hitherto lain dormant sprang suddenly to life, and Charlie gave utterance to such a torrent of profanity as utterly appalled not only Frank, but Frank's mother, who witnessed the scene from her kitchen window. She called Frank away at once, and, after a few words of rebuke to Charlie, spoken far more in sorrow than in anger, she sent him home, saying that she could not allow any boy who swore or used bad language to be the companion of her son.

Charlie departed in tears with his broken wheelbarrow, and probably gave an account of the trouble from his own point of view to his mother, for a few moments later Mrs. Sunderland was startled to see coming over her back fence first a cabbage, then a peck or so of potatoes, and finally the basket in which she had that morning sent to Mrs. Cooper the vegetables

Then she turned and saw Charlie Cooper. The boy's swollen eyes showed that he had been crying, but Mrs. Sutherland looked at him apathetically, and when she had realized what it was he wanted, turned quite calmly towards the coffin and

Charlie gazed for a few moments on his Charlie gazed for a few months, though dead school-mate, awed and silent, though the tears chased each other down his cheeks. In a little while the mother kissed cheeks. In a little while the mother kissed the marble brow, still with that unnatural calminess, and recovered the face.

Charlie was trembling from head to foot with repressed agitation, and Mrs. Sutherland almost unconsciously laid her hand upon his shoulder as if to calm him. At her touch the boy's self control gave way; with a child's instinctive desire for com-fort and support in sorrow, he flung his arms around her, and dropping his head upon her bosom, burst into a violent fit of weeping.

"Oh, Mrs. Sutherland,"he cried, "I can't bear to have him die; I can't—I can't—he bear to have him die; I can't—I can't—he was always so good to me."

The mother's lips quivered; her features worked convulsively; the healing tears came at last to her aching eyes, and with her face bowed upon Charlie's carrly head, she, too, wept swiftly and softly and with the blessed tears the first bitterness of her anguish passed away.

Mrs. Sutherland's friends came to her and took her away from the scene of her and took her away from the scene of her bereavement. All that affection could do was done to cheer her, and after a few months her healthy, cheerful temper began to reassert itself, and so aided the effort of benificent nature that by September she felt able to return to Greenville and her boy's grave, and to become again, in a measure her old calm and gentle self boy's grave, and to become again, in a measure her old calm and gentle self.

The schools had just reopened, and though the remembrance of one short year ago, when her own boy was there, the brightest and most hopeful of the young throng who commenced the school year together, brought a pang of almost unbearable pain to the mother's heart, she endured this suffering as she had endured all the rest—uncomplaintly.

"Don't be so mysterious," said Mrs. Sunderland, her good-humored face beginning to wear a shade of anxiety. "Either tell me all there is to tell, or tell me nothing."

"There is nothing very dreadful to reveal, and what there is is no secret. You would have known Mrs. Cooper's reputation as well as everybody else in Greenville does if you were not a new-comer. She is said to be the worst-tempered woman in town, and has never lived neighbor and not work and and and as a shading around in the bucket, preparatory throwing it and the bucket, preparatory are they not?"

It was a cold day in January; Frank had gone to tike well to draw a bucket to fill of water, but found the well bucket half full of ice, so that it would not sink when low-town to the water. His mother came to water, but succeeded no better than he had done. Charlie Cooper was at the well in their own lot, scarcely a stone's throwing the darkened parlor, sat in the rocking chair and rocked and cried softly for a long time.

Then she went up stairs and opened a deep drawer in the bureau, from whence issued a strong perfume of withered rose leaves. She removed the linen towel that shrouded the contents of the drawer, and pille of school books, almost new. She opened the bucket, preparatory throwing it and the property it and the bucket, preparatory the property it and the bucket, preparatory throwing it and the property it and the bucket, preparatory throwing it and the property is and the property of the safety of the property is and the property of the safety of the property of the property is and the property of the property of the property is and the property of the property of the property of the property of the

"Yes," replied Mrs. Sunderland deprecatingly; "I hope you don't feel offended; Charlie told me his father did not feel able to buy the books he needed just now, and I thought it a pity he should be obliged to get behind his classes on that account." "My Charlie says them books is the ones you bought last year for your

A New Industry.

The New York Mail and Express says:

"A Broadway dealer says that the house decoration mania runs chiefly to plaster now. Busts, statuettes, plaques, reliefs, antiques, urns, vases are of the few things sold every day by the dozen. They are all made in the Italian quarter by newly-arrived emigrants, and cost almost nothing in quantity. Ladies buy them almost exclusively. They take them home, paint, gild, silver or bronze them. They then look almost as handsome as genuine antiques, and at one-twentieth the price. Of course it's shoddy, but it brightens up a sitting-room amazingly, and for people of limited means it's a good thing. Besides, it gives a decent livelihood to scores of young girls, who would otherwise be starving on needlework. They'll buy a dozen or two who would otherwise be starving on needlework. They'll buy a dozen or two casts for $2, color or fix them up for a dollar or more, and then, if they have good taste, and are careful in their work, they can sell them all the way from a half up to $2 apiece."

Perhaps it is about time to trot out the famous "sun cholera mixture," which is probably the best remedy for cholera, Asiatic or other that has ever been devised. It is nobody's nostrum, but a genuine remedy that has stood the test of lime. Here it is: Take equal parts of tincture of rhubarb, essence of peppermint and spirits of camphor. Mix well, when at last the coverings were again removed the then unnamed Fanny was found to be anything but subdued. She was, however, weak, and her furious bounds to reach the pit were short at first, and grew shorter with every effort. Then the natives began to angle for her. It was hard and dangerous fishing, but slowly nose after noose was dropped around her body, her forelegs were drawn tightly to her sides, and she was pulled up at last, firmly bound and powerless. Other cords were thrown around her, and with her feet in the air and her back down, she was agenuine remedy that has stood the test of lime. The Untertunate Baggage Gentleman.

From the Burlington Hawkeye.

An Aged Trunk sat back in the dark corner of the car and refused to budge, when the baggageman in great wrath advanced and seized the venerable Saratoga by the handle. "Gently, friend, gently," said the Trunk: "that thing you have hold of was not made to lift me by." But the baggageman gave it a yank she was put on board ship and despatched to Germany. When she landed in Europe, however, she had quite recovered, and Mr. Reiche, who is living in Germany, was delighted with her appearance. He gave her the name of Fanny arrived in New York in a villianous temper. She is at present confined in a small, strong iron cage in the rear of 55 Chatham street, where she growls ominously at all who approach too close. She is worth perhaps $2500, and until somebody buys her she will be an object of interest to frequenters of the Central park menagerie. She is two years old.
