A Gritsman's Victory.

BEFORE this issue reaches our readers, it will be generally known that yesterday's contest resulted in a glorious victory for Dr. Jenkins, the Liberal-Conservative candidate, and that the noble County of Queen's, the largest constituency in the Dominion, has wiped out the stain caused by Mr. Davies' election at the head of the poll two years ago. The majority may appear small where so large a vote was cast, yet when we consider the lines upon which the election was run, and the influences which were brought to bear on the other side, we may rightly term the majority a handsome one. It must be borne in mind that Mr. Welch was undoubtedly the strongest man who could have been put in the field against Dr. Jenkins, and it must also be remembered that before he consented to run, he cut himself loose from all connection with the Grit party, and fought the battle on the independent ticket. Personally a popular and jolly good fellow, his large business transactions with the people through a period of many years, attracted hundreds to his support who had the contest been on strict party lines, would have cast their votes for the Conservative candidate. Knowing that as a straight Grit he had no chance whatever, Mr. Welch renounced his allegiance to his party and freely sought and obtained support on personal grounds. When we consider that the Grits were afraid to bring out one of their own men, and that hundreds of votes were polled for Mr. Welch by those who would soon vote for a Grit, it is then we feel that the victory is overwhelming, and cannot be reckoned by numbers.

At the meetings in the country Mr. Davies used to cry, "What send a man to Ottawa to vote against me, whom you placed at the head of the poll last election? Why, the thing's absurd. Yesterday's vote, we hope, taught Mr. Davies a lesson, and showed him that the constituency which elected a Grit in 1882, cannot today be captivated into returning even so poor a colleague for him as an Independent. Yesterday's vote demonstrated beyond doubt that the people of Queen's County do not believe the misstatements of Mr. Davies, but that they have every confidence in Sir John Macdonald's Government, and none whatever in Mr. Blake. Mr. Davies posed as the representative par excellence of Prince Edward Island, because he polled the largest vote in 1882, but when next he goes to Ottawa his feet neither will be plucked for yesterday Dr. Jenkins received the largest vote ever polled in this Province. Dr. Jenkins came out squarely—he did not hedge—there was no "irrespective of party" about his card—while he was not afraid to say that, to some extent, the interests of our Island have been overlooked, yet he declared that the general policy of the Government was the best for this Province. As a supporter of that policy and of Sir John Macdonald, he has been returned to Ottawa, and the people have every confidence that Dr. Jenkins will worthily represent them at the capital.

Below we give a correct result of the polling, so far as we have been able to ascertain:

BERNARD MOLLY.

BY JAMES JEFFREY ROGERS.

The man who carried me off was a clerk in your employ. His name was Jacob Morton. He took me to Australia, did he? That's a likely story. Yes, he was supplied with money by the doctor. But he did not like Australia. After a while he returned to New York, and there I was brought up in the streets, suffering every privation, while you were enjoying the property my father left. Well, have you got anything more to say? The tale does good credit to your invention. Three years ago—a little more, perhaps—I was you in New York. I brushed your boots on the steps of the Astor House. Better and better. I am expected to recognize a New York bootblack as my nephew? It was your fault that I was reduced to a bootblack. How happens it that you are not in the same line of business now? Perhaps you are. Jacob died and left me a few dollars, with which I came out West. Before he died he gave me a written paper, in which he revealed all the plot into which he entered with you. He gave you a paper, did he? Yes, from it I learned that I was born in Cincinnati, and I expected to find you here. But I looked in vain. After while I found my father's place in business. I introduced myself to Mr. Ferguson, and he gave me a place in his employ. On the strength of your ridiculous story, I suppose? Because he believed me to be the son of his old employer, John Grey. I thought Ferguson had more sense than to be duped by such a designing young rascal. He tells me that I bear a strong resemblance to my father. Look in my face, Uncle James, and tell me whether it is not true. Almost involuntarily James Grey fixed his eyes on the frank, handsome face of his nephew, and he stood irresolutely before him, and he was forced, however reluctantly, to admit to himself that the resemblance was indeed very striking. The case was getting more serious than he had expected. Gilbert had already been recognized as the missing son of John Grey, and that by a man whose testimony would carry great weight. Old Jacob had testified not only to his identity, but to the wrongful compact by which Gilbert had been spirited away to suit his uncle's rapacity. Were this publicly known, his reputation would be destroyed, and he would be deprived of the wealth which he had labored so dishonestly to acquire. Evidently the claim was not to be disposed of so easily as he had at first supposed. What do you call yourself? he asked. Gilbert Grey. Of course you would take the name of the boy you pretend to be? Then you don't believe I am Gilbert Grey? No, I do not. I believe that Gilbert Grey is dead. Are you willing to come with me to Mr. Ferguson's, and speak to him about it? No, I am not. I have not time. I must leave Cincinnati at once. Then will you tell me where you live? He advised me to. I suppose you pretended to have a headache, or something of that kind, said Maurice, with a sneer. No, I didn't. I never was better in my life. What did you go for, then? It seems to me you are very curious, Maurice, said Gilbert, good-naturedly. If you must know, I went home on a little private business, my own home as you call it. Very important, I suppose. Yes, it was important. Mr. Ferguson is very partial to you, that's all I can say. He wouldn't let me be away for a couple of hours in the morning, even if I did have important business. I have no doubt but I tell you that I am going out again this afternoon. And you get twice as much pay as I, said Maurice, with dissatisfaction. Gilbert, in spite of the discontent of his fellow-clerk, took his hat at half-past two, and went to the store. He reached the Burnet House about ten minutes of three, and left at once to the reading-room, where he was to meet his uncle. Mr. Ferguson was already in waiting. He was seated in an armchair, looking over a file of the New York Herald. I have come, Mr. Grey, said Gilbert, as you proposed. Hump! Have you the paper? Yes, sir. Here Mr. Grey showed signs of satisfaction, as Gilbert was quick-sighted enough to perceive. We will go up stairs to my room, said his uncle, raising and laying down his paper. We shall be more private there. Perhaps he thinks he can get hold of the paper better, thought our hero, though of course, he kept his thoughts to himself. Follow me, said Mr. Grey. Give me the key to No. 107, he said, to the hotel clerk. Gilbert followed him up several flights of stairs till he reached his room. Then, he said, unlocking the door, Gilbert drew up a chair for himself, and sat down, and he placed it between himself and the door. He thought of nothing off from once he had taken his seat. He was so feeling, as the name is, a queer sensation, as he thought of the attempt that might be made at violence. However, he was not wanting in courage, and he did not delay to give audience to his. Sit down, said Mr. Grey, abruptly. Gilbert drew up a chair for himself, and sat down, and he placed it between himself and the door. He thought of nothing off from once he had taken his seat. He was so feeling, as the name is, a queer sensation, as he thought of the attempt that might be made at violence. DARE AND DO RIGHT.

OR THE ADVENTURES OF TOM, THE BOOTBLACK.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ONLY AN IRISH BOY." CHAPTER XXVIII. ENCLAVE AND REVIEW. Our hero stopped short, and, being directly in the path of his uncle, the latter was compelled to stop too. Mr. Grey, said Gilbert. That's my name, said the other, who had not yet taken particular notice of the youth who addressed him. But as he spoke, he looked at him, and instantly recognized him. Gilbert could see that he did by his sudden start, and expression of surprise and annoyance. He couldn't understand how the New York bootblack had been metamorphosed into the well-dressed and gentlemanly-looking clerk. He regretted so soon acknowledging his name, and marveled how Gilbert could have learned it. What business have you with me, young man? he continued formally. I have wanted to meet you for a long time, said Gilbert. Indeed! said his uncle with a sneer. I am rather surprised to hear this, not having, to my knowledge, ever had the honor of seeing you before. I am your nephew, said Gilbert bluntly. Then he knows, said Mr. Grey to himself, rather disturbed. I confess, he said, in the same sarcastic tone, I am slightly disturbed at being claimed as a near relative by a stranger whom I happen to encounter in the street. May I ask how you happen to be my nephew? I am the son of your older brother James, said Gilbert. That can hardly be, young man. My brother had but one son, and he died. Disappeared, you mean, said Gilbert, significantly. There is no doubt that he died, said Mr. Grey, positively. Then he has come to life again, for I am he. You are an impudent impostor, said Mr. Grey, hotly; but you have missed your mark. I am not so easily humbugged. I denounce you and your pretensions as alike false. Let me pass. As he said this he attempted to pass Gilbert, but our hero had no intention of losing sight of his uncle. Of course you can pass, he said; but I shall follow you. You will! demanded his uncle, shaking his cane angrily. Then I will put you in the hands of the police. I don't think you will, said Gilbert, with perfect composure. Why not? What is to hinder me, I should like to know? It wouldn't be good policy for you to do it. Why not, you impudent young rascal? Because I should let the relationship be known. Well. And why is it that you deny it? Well, said Mr. Grey, his attention caught, why do I deny it? Because you are in possession of my father's property, which, of right, belongs to me! said Gilbert, firmly, looking his uncle in the eyes. It is your interest to deny the relationship. James Grey saw that his long justification had come home to him at last. How could this stratagem have succeeded what he had taken such pains to concoct! What was he to do? Was he to admit the boy's claims, and surrender the estate? He could not make up his mind to do it. He must state of the attack if he could. This is a ridiculous story, he said. Somebody has been making a fool of you. You have an older brother, named John? Yes, Mr. Grey admitted, unwillingly. Did he not have a son? Yes, but, as I told you, he died. He only disappeared. He was carried away for what object, you can tell. You are dealing in mysteries, I can't know what you are talking about. Mr. Grey said this, but his troubled look showed that he did not feel so unassured as he pretended. Gilbert continued:

THE LIME-KILN PICNIC.

ON THE LAST SATURDAY IN SEPTEMBER.

No matter what the weather was, said Brother Gardner, of Leime-Kin Club will hold its annual picnic. The affair will be an occasion for rejoicing. Also, for the watermelon and cucumber contest. Over 800 honor members of the club, cousin from Maine to Texas, will arrive here to participate in the festivities. Among the distinguished individuals I may name doctors, poets, editors, clergymen and men who have made fame by brain power. I shall do what I can to make the affair a success. The picnic will be held on the premises of the Burnet House. A picnic is a mighty nice thing without doubt, said our hero, who was not a member of the Burnet House. I have been home—to my boarding house. I shouldn't think Mr. Ferguson would like your leaving his business, said our hero, who was not a member of the Burnet House. He advised me to. I suppose you pretended to have a headache, or something of that kind, said Maurice, with a sneer. No, I didn't. I never was better in my life. What did you go for, then?
