A New Departure in Japan.

The current number of Illustrated Catholic Missions calls the attention of its readers to a seemingly well-informed statement in a recent issue of The Manchester Guardian, as to a decision of the Japanese Government which is likely to be far-reaching in its effects on missions in that country.

The Japanese Government have just come to an important decision with regard to the status of Christianity in that country. The subject is one of many connected more or less directly with the coming into force of the revised treaties. There is no State religion in Japan, although an active political party is now striving to gain this position for Buddhism, but both Buddhism and Shinto have a connection with the Government. Each Buddhist sect is allowed to elect its own chief according to its own rules, and its powers when elected over the appointments to shrines and temples, the disposal of religious property and the like, are very considerable, but are limited by a series of rules having the force of law, made in 1884. The sect, as has been said, elects its head in its own way, but his election must receive the recognition of the Government. When this is given, the person elected can proceed to exercise his powers within the very wide limits laid down by the law. But one principle is that no sect can be without a head, and he is obliged to supply certain information periodically to the Government about the temples, rules, organization, mode of preserving ancient documents, art treasures, religious property, and the like; and the bureau to which these reports are addressed aids in settling disputes and advising on points submitted to it. Each head of a sect selected according to these rules has a certain rank in the official hierarchy, and has the right of personal access to the Home Minister. The object is to secure order amongst the sects in the public interest. But hitherto Christianity has been disregarded by the authorities. Churches were governed as the members chose, and the Government cared nothing. The authorities were ordinary citizens in the eyes of the law, and filled no representative position whatever. But now the Government has come to the conclusion that Christianity is of sufficient importance both in the numbers of those professing it and in its organization to render it advisable to bring it within the law of 1884, and a decree in this sense will, it is believed, shortly be issued.

The practical result of this measure will be, in the first place, a direct recognition of the Christian religion as one of the religious organizations of the country by the Japanese Government. Christian Bishops and other heads of churches will be recognized by the authorities, and will have access to the Home Minister in a representative capacity, to discuss the affairs of their respective churches. They will be in a position to deal with local officials on an equal footing, and in return they must submit to the rules of 1884, which are hortatory rather than mandatory, and which probably restrict their dealings with religious property not nearly as much as they are restricted already by the constitution of the churches. The main practical point will be that heads of churches throughout the country will have the legal right to deal in all that concerns the position of their co-religionists on equal terms, and not, as heretofore, on sufferance, and as private individuals only. A powerful weapon is thus put into the hands of the Christian communities for securing equal rights and fair play everywhere, for representing persecution, getting sites for religious edifices, &c. The local official who knows that the Christian Bishop or pastor making representations to him can have his complaints made to the Home Minister in Tokio, will give a very different ear to what he would give to the more private clergyman wishing his aid. The measure is, therefore, nothing less than a revolution in the position of Christianity, and will so appear to every Japanese, whether an official or not.

To this was added the following statement in a subsequent number of the paper.

With reference to the decision giving a formal status to Christianity in Japan, which was mentioned here the other day, I have received statistics showing that there are now over 125,000 Christians in that country, of whom over 53,000 are Catholics, nearly 43,000 belonging to various Protestant denominations, and the remainder are attached to the Greek Church. Of the Protestants 13,000 are Congregationalists [a form of church government peculiarly suitable to the conditions of evangelization in Japan, as well as to the independent character of the native Christians] over 8,000 are Episcopalians, about the same number Methodists and over 12,000 Presbyterians. Government concern with them will be very small, and the authorities will recognize any head elected by even the smallest body amongst them. As soon as the missionary bodies in Great Britain and the United States become formally acquainted with the new policy of the Japanese Government in this respect, the public will doubtless hear a good deal of discussion about it. It is an enormous step in advance to have Christianity formally recognized in Japan as one of the religious systems of the nation with the liabilities, but also the rights, of those faiths which have existed in Japan for centuries.

Illustrated Catholic Missions adds a note saying that these statistics seem fairly accurate, and that according to the latest figures given by the Compté Renaud of the Paris Society of Foreign Missions, the number of Catholics in Japan last year was 53,872, divided as follows according to the four dioceses: Nagasaki, 35,643; Tokio, 9,114; Hakodate, 4,463; Osaka, 4,470.—The Tablet.

About Catholic Societies. Of late there has been a sort of awakening on the part of Catholics to the advantage of forming themselves into societies, orders, legions, associations and other such organizations. Women as well as men seem to have caught the fever; until at present it is difficult to find a Catholic man who is not affiliated with several organizations; and the Catholic women who belong to associations are every day growing more numerous. Many of these orders are to be commended. They have benefit and insurance features which are decidedly helpful. Through them Catholics are brought together in social and friendly intercourse—a most desirable result; and their influence is, in the main, excellent. But they do not go far enough. Their rules as to the personal conduct of their members are not strict enough. They do not insist upon that high standard of Catholic life which the Order expects from people who come together in her name. While all their members are supposed to be practical Catholics, it is a well known fact that many of even their high officials may be found who are careless in the observance of their religious duties; and the personal habits of more than a few can hardly be called edifying.

There is not much use in having a society composed exclusively of Catholics if the members do not show by their faithfulness to the Church, by their loyalty to her commandments, and by their proper appreciation of her spirit, that they really understand their position. When an association assumes the name "Catholic," or when it is understood that it is composed only of Catholics, by and for Catholics, as far as the generality of outsiders think, its reputation and that of the Church are bound up, one in the other; and if the society suffers through any discrediting conduct of its members, wrongly, of course, but none the less surely, the Church is held blame-worthy also. This is one of the most serious faults to be found with our Catholic orders—while their constitutions and laws and mottoes contain high-sounding phrases their is not, apparently, on the part of the members at large, any attempt either to understand or obey their spirit.

If these numerous and growing organizations were filled with a proper desire for the promotion of Catholicism, what a great amount of good might they not accomplish! What an impetus might they not give to God's work, which for want of help and helpers is now in so many places languishing!

It is the custom to point proudly to these organizations as a proof of Catholic progress, Catholic unity, Catholic strength, Catholic intelligence, Catholic activity. But surely the Catholic life which manifests its highest activity in smoke talks and pool tournaments and shabby little entertainments is not to be admired too highly; and certainly we have not progressed if the time which should be given to education and enlightenment is wasted in the mummery of the secret society. If for the ambition which possessed our men in former days to be good plain American citizens and good Catholics we substitute a craze for high-sounding titles in secret Catholic societies we have not gained much, but we have lost much.

Infringe on a common-sense and business basis is all right. So is sociability. So also are the many excellent features which our Catholic orders certainly contain, but there are many things for them yet to do, before they can become truly worthy of the name Catholic.—S. H. Review.

Catholics Among Christian Scientists.

It is a sad thing to hear of Catholics so ill-instructed in their religion and so little grounded in the practice of it as to be drawn away by Christian Science, which is most unchristian, and which scientists denounce as wholly unscientific. Like clouds without water, such persons are blown about by every wind of doctrine; they are so credulous that the alleged miraculous cures of the exponents of Christian Science, which rest on no better testimony than those of the vendors of patent medicines, are accepted as proof that these "New Christians" are the true Christians.

The difficulties experienced by the Catholics who have fallen under the hallucination of Christian Science are thus stated: "The command of Our Lord to heal the sick is no longer fulfilled by the Church; the neglect of it shows that a part of Christ's ministry is now done away with." "The Christian Scientists have found one weak spot in the power of the Church, and they exercise a prerogative that certainly belonged to the early Christians—namely, the power of healing bodily infirmities." Do you see no difficulty in these statements? We are asked, We do. They are erroneous statements, and the difficulty about them is that they can not be fully refuted in a few words.

It is astonishing to find Catholics whose ignorance of their religion is so gross that they do not know that the Sacrament of Extreme Unction, though primarily intended for imparting strength to the soul, has the power of restoring health to the body when God sees it to be expedient. Remarkable cures so often follow the reception of this Sacrament that we have known Protestant physicians to express solicitude for its early administration.

"The sacred formula which accompanies each anointing of this Sacrament," says Dom Guersanger, "has the power of restoring bodily health at the same time that it drives away the remnants of sin, which is the chief cause of all man's miseries, whether of soul or body. Such is the interpretation put by the Church on the words of St. James (v. 14), and we have continual proofs that our Divine Master has not forgotten the promise of twofold efficacy which He gave to this Sacrament. Hence it is that, after having anointed the several senses of the sick person, the priest addresses God in earnest prayer that He would restore strength of body to him (or her) whose soul has received the efficacy of the heavenly remedy. Nay, the Church looks upon the restoration of bodily health as so truly a sacramental effect of Extreme Unction that she does not consider as miracles, properly so called, the cures produced by its administration."

To say that "a part of Christ's ministry is now done away with" because His representatives no longer heal the sick as was done in the early ages of the Church is to speak foolishly. It was not the bodies of men that Our Lord came to heal, but their souls. "The prophecies and His own words," as Bishop Hedley remarks, "point to a far wider field of wonder-working compassion than was offered by the blind and the lame who gathered around His progress through Judaea and Galilee." Christ was to establish a Church and institute sacraments, by means of which the wondrous work of our justification was to be effected, all the wounds of our souls healed, and all the obstacles removed that prevent union with God, our last end.

One of the chief characteristics of the Church, and one of the grounds of our faith, is miracles, as every Christian is aware. These shall never cease. It is true that they are not so generally wrought as they were in the first ages of Christianity. It was necessary for the immediate followers of Our Lord to be able to present orientals proving that they were His disciples, ambassadors of the Most High. But as the Church spread throughout the world the great miraculous movement died out. It was natural that it should, Christ promised that certain signs should follow them that believe, and such signs have never failed. Witness the extraordinary cures incessantly wrought at Lourdes, and the authenticated miracles performed by saints of our own country. As St. Augustine said, any one who asks for prodigies in order to believe is himself a prodigy.

The essential error of the Christian Scientists lies in substituting temporal for spiritual blessings. These "New Christians" are like the Jews of old, who valued the loaves and fishes more than the words of eternal life.—Ave Maria.

A ward of the Irish Court of Chancery recently determined to enter the Jesuit novitiate. All important steps taken by wards of court are recorded in minutes, which in due course come before the Chief Clerk of the Court of Chancery. When the minutes in this case came before the Chief Clerk he attached a note stating that the Society of Jesus was an illegal body. The Lord Chancellor then declined to sign the minutes, and it stands for argument in the Chancery Court. The continuance of this penal enactment will, it is understood, be challenged.

A graceful tribute has recently been offered to the Dominican nuns at Balway for their care and nursing of the sick in the Memorial Hospital since 1874. The movement was initiated by Captain the Hon. A. Lawley, the administrator. The tribute took the shape of an address and a silver watch to each Sister (they are forbidden to wear objects of a more precious metal), together with the sum of £5,000 toward the erection of a permanent home for the Sisters in Balway.

The historic edifice of St. Mary's, Moorfields, once the Pro-Cathedral of Cardinal Wiseman, is about to be torn down. The site, with the adjoining schools and clergy house, has been sold for £202,000, a moiety of which will be devoted to the church building funds of the Archdiocese of Westminster. Throughout the Catholic world St. Mary's is celebrated for its magnificent altar piece the "Oratorio." At the closing services held in the ancient edifice the congregation was invited to inspect the chalice and altar vessels, presented to the church in 1820 by Pope Pius VII, who had been the prisoner of Napoleon I. The chalice and the gold goblets weigh twenty pounds, are richly jeweled with diamonds, pearls and emeralds and are valued at over £7,000.

The sixteen year old son of Mr. Joseph Meade, of Rollo Bay, met with a sad death on Thursday last. It appears that while he was engaged in unloading his horse at Souris on Wednesday, his nose started to bleed. He was immediately taken to a physician who stopped the flow, but it started bleeding again the next day and could not be stopped, resulting in the boy's death.

The number of exhibits sent by Canada to the Paris Exposition is said to greatly exceed those sent to any previous exhibition, the World's Fair not excepted, if the live stock is not counted. The total number of entries up to the present time exceeded 800, and it is thought that by the time the books have closed there will likely be one thousand.

The Wiltshire cheese factory has disposed of the last of the season's make of cheese at Meade. Dillon & Spillars, they being 277 boxes of October make, for 113c. They had a most prosperous season, having doubled the output of last year.

BE HUSHED, YE BELLS!

BY THE VERY REV. P. A. SIKKENS, P. P. The bells break out upon the air, And burst us with their throbbing pain Of memories that, faint and sore, Come thronging to the wild refrain.

That chides them with affected joy— Grey ghosts, that in the cabinets Have stared at the gay Hours' employ, With stunted face of dead regret.

Hush, O ye bells! Silence is sweet! She lets us idly think and dream; And surely dreaming is most meet For souls that, on the slumberous stream

Of Time, float down the enchanted way That dies on the enchanted sea, Whose farthest crested ripples lave The cloud-shores of eternity.

Go back, grim spectres of the past! Relax your restless, stony stare,— Call back your memories that o'ercast Our sunshine with a cloud of care.

Leave us our present heritage,— The leafy promise of our hope? Even the bare, unshined wreath Of eyes that stare and hands that grope.

Only draw down your veiled veil And cloak your past of horrid shapes; But shake the folds from which the pale And pined-down face of Hope escapes.

And let her sail adown the wave, And let her sleep with plumes un-urled,— Be hushed, ye bells! We pilgrims crave The peace that sleeps on yonder world.

A Victim to the Seal of Confession.

A True Story, by Rev. Joseph Spillman, S. J. Published with the permission of Mr. B. Herder, publisher and bookseller, St. Louis, Mo.

(Montreal True Witness.) CHAPTER XV.—(Continued) A short pause ensued. "The stranger, a grave, rather stern-looking man, whom the Archbishop had empowered to set in this affair, first broke the silence."

"Are we to understand that you have but little hope of clearing the character of this unhappy priest, who has caused so much grief and anxiety to the Archbishop, unless you can manage to unearth this scoundrel?"

"I hope that we may succeed in doing so, but we must have something more definite than hope to trust to. So much depends on whether the feeling of the jury is hostile or favorable to us, and it must be acknowledged that in the first place circumstantial evidence is very strong against us; and secondly, we have a very formidable antagonist in the person of the Public Prosecutor."

"That is rather a bad outlook. But what use would this scoundrel be to us? As far as I have heard, all your researches have only confirmed the fact of his absence at the time of the murder."

"There appears, it is true, every reason to believe that the man took a ticket for Marselles the evening before. But did he make use of that ticket? And where did he put up at Marselles on that eventful 20th February? These and many other questions he will have to answer, and be confronted with the witnesses. And if he failed to give account of himself on one point, he could not succeed in proving an alibi. In fact it would be evidence against him, for why should he make such a fuss, and publish to everybody that he was going on a journey, if it was not a blind to avert suspicion from himself? If I can only prove that this scoundrel, or some other person acquainted with the circumstances and familiar with the premises may have been concealed in the house, we may count on Father Montmoulin's acquittal as certain."

"I think our learned friend is quite right there," observed Father Regent, gently, his eyes resting on the Archbishop's delegate, who sat toying with his snuff-box, whilst pondering upon what the solicitor had said. Scolding a reply was expected from him, he replied: "Of course, it is much to be desired that this man should be forthcoming. But how do you propose to accomplish this?"

"The first thing is to find out where he is. Happily we have a photograph of him, and he is easily recognized on account of a cicatrix across his face. He was seen in the company of a party of sailors in Marselles, and it is presumable that he embarked on board one of these vessels that left the harbor between the 22-d and the 26-th of February. I have a list of vessels, happily they are not very numerous. We ought to send a description by telegraph to the police at the ports for which each of them was bound, and inquire if any one answering to the description had landed there, and if so, have him kept under surveillance. And if an affirmative answer were returned from either of the places, it would be necessary to send out an agent to collect information on the spot. In a word, as I said before, both time and money would be required."

The stranger from the palace took a pinch of snuff, then he asked: "Supposing your agent actually found this wretched scoundrel, say in New York or Rio Janeiro, would he be able to compel him to return and appear as a witness? One can hardly imagine that he would come without compulsion, if your surmise is correct, and he was the real perpetrator of the crime."

"He could not oblige him to appear, but it is probable that a man who understood his business could contrive to get something out of him when he was off his guard which would warrant him in arresting him on suspicion, and that we, or rather the Government, when the evidence was submitted to the proper authorities, would demand his extradition. I freely admit that all the trouble and outlay might be in vain, but at any rate we might have the satisfaction of knowing that we have done everything within our power to avert an unjust sentence and prevent a terrible scandal."

"Would it not be as well for us to confer with the Archbishop on the subject, and acquaint him with this gentleman's proposal? Father Regent said to his companion: "What do you think would be about the amount required for these researches, which, as you yourself say, might very possibly be futile?"

"I inquired the official, without paying the least heed to the remark addressed to him. "It would be difficult, more than difficult, impossible to name any figure beforehand. All depends upon how and where we come upon some trace of the man. Twenty or thirty pounds might be enough, or we might want three or four hundred. Good detectives must be well paid, then there are travelling expenses and the like. Besides we might have to offer a reward for the man's apprehension."

"Three or four hundred! And all on bare chance. No, I should not feel warranted in advising his grace to go to such expense. You know, Father Regent, how many claims there are on the funds at his disposal, poor convicts, orphanages, missions, not to mention the rebuilding of the seminary. It is out of the question, our means will not allow of it."

"Another objection might perhaps be made amongst the clergy," Father Regent suggested, somewhat timidly. "The official shrugged his shoulders. "The first brought in very little," he said. "The clergy are as a rule poor, their salary is small, and a part of their scanty pitance goes of necessity to the destitute. Can not we make the Government find and produce this witness—whom you think to be indispensable—at the public expense?"

"Yes, I certainly might make the demand, but I am sorely afraid the prosecutor would put a spoke in my wheel. In order to do this he will himself prove an alibi for the scoundrel, thus placing me, I fear, in an awkward and unpleasant position. If we could undertake to make all the inquiries on our own account, I could easily apply for a prolongation of time, on the plea that the interval was too short to allow me to prepare the defence, and we should thus gain some months, until the next assizes. The Easter recess commences on Holy Thursday. But I see, Sirs, that you do not feel disposed to take so large a sum on an uncertainty, and it is not for me to say that you are to blame for it. So it is no use discussing the subject any more. Can you spare me a few minutes longer? You see the accused—I am speaking to you in confidence, and only for the purpose of asking your counsel—Father Montmoulin has several times, in fact as often as I have mentioned this unlucky scoundrel to him, betrayed a strange embarrassment which he attempted in vain to conceal, and appeared intentionally to avoid saying anything about him. Now it occurred to me that his lips might be sealed by some professional obligation, the secrecy of the confessional, for instance."

"That is most probable," said the Archbishop's envoy. "I happened to know that the scoundrel in question had not fulfilled the Easter precept for a great number of years. Complaint was made by the Ordinary to the Mayor on account of this, and his dismissal urged, but of course to no purpose."

"That may be resumed the solicitor, but I have met with cases in the course of my practice, when criminals who are not utterly hardened have been so alarmed and filled with remorse after committing murder for the first time, as to act in a very unaccountable manner. They have not unfrequently been driven by the stings of conscience to seek relief in telling what they had done. Many, as it well known, have given themselves up to justice. Now suppose that Loser actually did the deed, and afterwards improbable as it may appear, confessed the crime to Father Montmoulin; doubtless, the latter, under no circumstances was justified in disclosing what had been told him in confession."

"Under no circumstances whatsoever!" both the priests exclaimed with one breath. "But would it not be permissible for him at least to say that Loser had been to confession to him?"

"By no means," answered Father Regent emphatically. "Under the present circumstances it would be a violation of the seal of confession."

"An indirect violation, at any rate," interposed the official. "That I can understand," the solicitor continued. "But surely he might go so far as to say that he saw Loser on the day of the murder?"

Neither of the two priests answered immediately. Then the official said that he hardly thought that the fact of seeing him came under the seal of silence. "If the man came to the priest for no other project than that of confession, I can readily imagine that he feels himself bound to keep silence on that point, for fear of revealing too much," Father Regent remarked.

"To the truth, the same idea suggested itself to me, but in a somewhat different form. I thought it might be possible that the murderer, fearful that Father Montmoulin might point him out as the probable criminal, thought to close his lips by means of a pretended confession. The fact that the good priest only the day before, preached, as I am a great sufferer until I gave it a trial, but now I have perfect comfort."

SMOTHERING SENSATION.

A Kingston Lady's Experience with Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills in Relieving this Distressing Condition.

"I have suffered for some years with a smothering sensation caused by heart disease. The severity of the pains in my heart caused me much suffering. I was also very nervous and my whole system was run down and debilitated."

"Hearing that Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills were a specific for these troubles, I thought I would try them, and got a box at Molson's Drug Store. They afforded me great relief, having toned up my system and removed the distressing symptoms from which I suffered. I can heartily recommend these wonderful pills to all sufferers from heart trouble." (Signed) MRS. A. W. IRISH, Kingston, Ont.

report of the legal proceedings must be obtained from Russia. The case of this Polish victim to the seal of confession will strengthen our cause immensely, if brought forward in court. Do you think so, Father Regent? You shake your head rather doubtfully.

"To speak plainly, I do not quite like the notion of this subject being dragged into the law courts. You are aware how greatly unbelief has spread of late amongst the educated class in this country. One dreads seeing anything so sacred handled by the profane. Besides I fear least we should place our poor friend Montmoulin in a very perplexing situation. Is there not every reason to expect that the Judge or the Prosecutor will put this question directly to him: Has the seal of the confessional anything to do with the case? And he would probably feel himself obliged to say it had not, for fear of in any way endangering the secret."

"This question might be forestalled, by objecting to it before hand, as one which the obligations of his sacred calling did not allow the prisoner to answer. We must depict very forcibly the embarrassing position in which the vow of secrecy places the priest, and the immense sacrifice it may demand of him under certain circumstances. I do not doubt that upon the jury, and it is that with which we have to deal. And as for any profane remarks about confession, I do not see that they are to be apprehended, the judge would silence them. There is too much good feeling on the bench to permit religion to be insulted in court."

Is Baby Too Thin? If so, there must be some trouble with its food. Well babies are plump; only the sick are thin. Are you sure the food is all right? Children can't help but grow if their food nourishes them. Perhaps a mistake was made in the past and as a result the digestion is weakened. If that is so, don't give the baby a lot of medicine; just use your every-day common sense and help nature a little, and the way to do it is to add half a teaspoonful of SCOTT'S EMULSION to the baby's food three or four times a day. The gain will begin the very first day you give it. It seems to correct the digestion and gets the baby started right again. If the baby is nursing but does not thrive, then the mother should take the emulsion. It will have a good effect both upon the mother and child. Twenty-five years proves this fact.
