TO DIE DECEMBER 18.

Frank Higgins Sentenced to Be Hanged a Week Before Christmas

Prisoner Maintains His Usual Coolness—Judge Refuses to Reserve Case—Higgins Will Probably Appeal to Full Bench for New Trial.

Unless an appeal to the supreme court can be successful in obtaining a new trial or unless the clemency grace of the crown be extended, Frank Higgins, aged sixteen, will die on Thursday, December 18th, just one week before Christmas Day.

The effect was pronounced Tuesday afternoon. The boy convicted of the murder of his boy friend listened to the death sentence unmoved, and last night in the condemned cell, doubly haired and dark, he stood as peacefully as if the steady footsteps of the passing guard in the corridor were ticking the seconds that stood between him and the free world of shadows of which he lay.

Never has the wonderful coolness of this strange youth been more severely tested than yesterday, and never was his careless impassivity more apparent. He walked into the room and into the dock with steady indifference, eyeing the judge and the jury with a calmness that was not in his face, never flinching an eyelid nor changing color nor expression as he heard the solemnly spoken words that made the rest of his life a brief series of swiftly vanishing minutes and hours and days.

The crowd in the court room huddled together closely and breathed unsteadily as they watched and listened, but Higgins was absolutely unconcerned. The only change in his appearance was a slight reddish flush high up on his usually pallid cheeks. But this was there when he came in, varied not a tinge during the proceedings and was still noticeable at the grasp of the big guard he walked quietly out again.

THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

Yesterday morning was taken up with the hearing by Judge Landry of the arguments of Mr. Mullin in favor of reserving the case and of the attorney general. The judge has indicated that he would take a few hours considering the arguments and looking up authorities, and postponed his decision until the afternoon session.

When court resumed in the afternoon he said that he had spent some time in consideration of the objections made by Mr. Mullin. While he desired to afford every opportunity to the prisoner for securing a further hearing yet he did not think the contentions of Mr. Mullin sufficiently strong to warrant the case being reserved. He thought it unnecessary to take up the different points in question as his views on each were already stated. He therefore refused the application made by Mr. Mullin.

Dr. Pugsley asked that the prisoner, Frank Higgins, be brought into court for sentence. This was ordered.

Mr. Mullin requested that a copy of the proceedings be filed in the office of the clerk of the supreme court. Justice Landry agreed to this.

HIGGINS INDIFFERENT.

It was twenty minutes to three when the prisoner came into court in the grasp of Constable McLeod. He walked to the place easily, and after an interminable glance around the room sat in his usual corner of the dock carelessly.

"Frank Higgins, stand up," came the order from the bench, and the boy sprang to his feet, clasped his hands in front and gazed with interested attention at the judge.

"If you have anything to say, Frank Higgins, why the sentence of the court should not be passed upon you, follow the verdict of the jury. I will give you a chance to say it now," said Judge Landry.

"Nothing to say," was the indifferent response.

The prisoner sat down again, but upon another order resumed his former position, standing easily and facing the judge steadily.

As the judge began the briefly solemn address to the prisoner before pronouncing the sentence the first stroke of the bell tolling for some parents' soul vibrated in through the open windows and succeeding strokes in slow cadence punctuated the impressive words.

THE JUDGE TALKS.

"With me," said his honor, "the law leaves no discretion as to what I should do in cases such as this. Whether I should say anything to you or to the public through you is not quite clear in my mind. If I thought that words of mine would be of any benefit to you during the few days you have yet to live on this earth, or any good to anyone through you, I would utter them. There is no use now in reproaching you for your former life. The object of the law is not to make you feel badly or to torture you for your crime, but to prevent others from following in your footsteps. Society has found it necessary for its own protection that crime should be punished, not for the sole cause of inflicting misery on the criminal, but for its prevention. I think that the more kind words addressed to you and the more kind treatment you receive, will bring you to a sense of your position rather better than harsh words would do. It is impossible for me to hold out any expectations that the sentence I am about to pass upon you will be changed. I can give you no hope. In matters such as this no discretion is allowed me. You will be taken back to your cell and there will have an opportunity of thinking over your past. You had better see spiritual advisers. Profit by their good advice and wise counsel and by this means come to a full realization of your position and prepare yourself for what is to come. It is difficult to know just what has brought you to the place you are today. You must be able to assist society and the authorities in finding out. Perhaps you do not know, but whether you do or not, it is a hard problem for society to solve. It is possible that the company you kept and the literature you read may have had something to do with it. I venture the opinion that when you first commenced keeping that company and reading that literature, it was done innocently, and you did not know to what you were coming."

JURORS REPROVED.

Mr. Mullin here produced an affidavit made by Thomas McGrath, which was to the effect that while in the barber shop before the trial, Mr. McGrath had heard Mr. Pooley declare that Higgins ought to be hanged and Goodspeed let go. Mr. Mullin thought that a man who would make such a statement before the trial and after being sworn declare that his mind was made up, could not give an impartial decision. In making the statement which he did Mr. Pooley was not qualified to act as a juror. Having his mind made up he would not be indifferent.

The third ground was that under a ruling of the court, new evidence was admitted when none but evidence in rebuttal should have been admitted. This evidence which was in reference to the exact time at which Goodspeed had been at the Marsh Bridge, was not rebuttal but tended to strengthen the crown case and should not have been received.

JUDGE'S CHARGE UNFAIR.

Mr. Mullin's last ground was an objection to the judge's charge which was the attention of the jury was called to the silence maintained by Higgins. Nothing was said by him at any time. Perfect silence had been maintained, counsel had been obtained, and the silence continued. Mr. Mullin objected to this portion of the judge's charge on the ground that any person has the right to engage counsel and that after having done so to mind justly be believed that his subsequent line of action

SERMON.

In This Discourse Rev. Frank De Witt Talmage Draws a Broad Distinction Between Right and Wrong Ambition and Points Out the Duty of All to Grasp Opportunities as They Come Within Our Reach.

CHICAGO, Oct. 9.—In this sermon the preacher draws a broad distinction between right and wrong ambition and points out the duty of all to grasp opportunities as they come within our reach.

"Do circumstances make the man or man the circumstances?" is the theme of a never ending discussion. Some people are intense in their advocacy of the first half of this question.

Great opportunities are willing to knock at the door of only a handful few who have previously made great preparations to greet and to embrace them.

Almost every great man of history has declared that the result of his life's work was not due to mere haphazard chance, but to years of work, years of preparation and often years of inconspicuous toil.

THE CHRISTIAN'S PREPARATION. This premise being true, it is essential that the Christian should consecrate his life to Christ in order to be prepared for these great opportunities of Christian service.

Man proposes, but the Infinite is continually changing the plans of the finite. Man hopes, but God often builds an entirely different superstructure upon the foundations of those desires than that which he actually desired.
