THE HONEST PHARMACIST. Will Tell You That Paine's Celery Compound is a Wonderful Medicine. Hundreds of Druggists Know of Cures Wrought by the Great Medicine.

Amongst the thousands of professional and business men who speak plainly and strongly in favor of Paine's Celery Compound there are none more sincere or outspoken in their praise than the druggists of Canada. Our druggists, who are thoroughly acquainted with every prepared remedy, are the special champions of Paine's Celery Compound. Why? Because no other medicine gives such universal satisfaction and health-giving results to ailing and sick men and women, and as a consequence the sales are larger than that of all other combined remedies. There are hundreds of druggists in Canada who can vouch for marvellous cures effected by Paine's Celery Compound. No stronger or better testimony can be asked for, as these druggists have supplied the medicine and watched its effects. If rheumatism, neuralgia, kidney trouble, liver complaint, blood diseases or dyspepsia, are making life a misery, go to your druggist without delay for a bottle of Paine's Celery Compound. If you have doubts about its efficacy or power, your able and honest druggist will give you the assurance that Paine's Celery Compound will make you well. Mouth of Jemseg. The day of the fair opened bright and clear which was very pleasing to those who have an interest in the Cambridge Agricultural Society. At ten a. m. everything was in readiness for the judges. Large crowds of people were seen wending their way to view the products of the farm. Large quantities of grain of various kinds were exhibited as well as a fine show of stock. The ladies department was beautifully decorated with paintings and fancy work of all kinds, too numerous to mention. The members of the Episcopal church prepared dinner and tea which was a grand success. The entertainment in the evening, which consisted of singing, recitations, and several selections on the gramophone by Mr. Armstrong of Wolford, was successfully carried out. The amount taken in during the day and evening was $77.00 which goes toward paying debt on parsonage. Dinner was prepared for the judges by Mrs. Luke E. Dewitt and was gotten up in a very creditable manner. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Johnstone and family, and Miss Brayley left by Starr on Thursday last for St. John. Among the late arrivals are Mr. and Mrs. Fred A. Wright and family, of St. John, and Mr. Reid Porter, of Boston, Mass. St. James church was beautifully decorated on Thursday night. The Thanksgiving sermon was preached by Rev. Mr. Cody.

Poetry.

"The Old Farmhouse on the Hill."

We have just received a copy of this beautiful home song, one of the greatest ever written, and it can be played either on the piano or organ. The words and music are by Mr. J. W. Lerman, the composer of the now famous "Couches-Couches Dance." The song is being sung in all the large theatres in the cities of New York, Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, etc., and it is received with great applause and making a decided hit.

FIRST VERSE.

There's a farm house I remember, 'twas my childhood's happy home,
And I'll ne'er forget its scenes while life shall last.
Oh! I often wish that I could cross its threshold as of yore,
And live once more the life that now is past.
With father, kind and gentle, and dear, sainted mother, too,
Who always tried their duty to fulfill.
I would that I were young again and had them with me now
In that dear old roomy farm-house on the hill.

CHORUS.

To me it was a palace of grandeur unsurpassed;
I loved it when a child, I love it still,
And no greater joy I covet than to visit once again
And live within that farmhouse on the hill.

The regular price of this song is 50c., but if our readers will be sure to mention the name of this paper, they will receive a copy by sending 15 cents to the Union Mutual Music Co., No. 30 East 14 St., New York.

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving remembrance of Charles L. Bishop, who died Aug. 28th., 1899.

Forgive our grief for one removed,
Thy creature whom we found so fair;
We trust he lives with thee and there
We find him worthier to be loved.

We miss thee from our home, dear one,
We miss thee from the place.
A shadow o'er our lives is cast,
We miss the sunshine of thy face.

We miss thy kind and willing hand
Thy fond and earnest care;
Our home is dark without thee,
We miss thee everywhere.

We cannot always trace the way
Where thou our gracious Lord doth move,
But we can always surely say
That Thou art love.

Spirit of purity and grace,
Our weakness pitying see,
But must adore the power divine
That called him to the skies.

His weeping friends could not revoke,
The sudden death, the fearful stroke,
But must adore the power divine
That called him to the skies.

Whilist God on earth permits our stay,
Our much loved friends are called away.
We're filled with grief, but must submit,
As Providence Divine sees fit.

Come, Lord, and wipe away
The tears that fill our eyes,
And make this blighted world of ours,
Thine own fair world again.

He's sleeping on the Saviour's breast,
His race of life is run;
The victory won, the crown is his,
For the battle strife is done.

AN IDOL OF CLAY.

What did she give for her wedding ring?
All that a woman may;
What did the gift to the giver bring?
Only an idol of clay.
All the sweet dreams of her girlhood years,
All that a heart could hold,
All of her hopes and all of her fears,
All of her smiles and all of her tears,
For one little circle of gold.

Told she the world of the bitter cheat?
An, no! With a smiling face,
She clothed her idol from head to feet
With the garments of her grace.
And no one knew of the tears she wept;
Her griefs they were never guessed,
For hid in her heart of hearts she kept
Her thorns of woe. And so she slept
With her hands across her breast.

IO VICTIS.

I sing the Hymn of the Conqueror, who fell in the battle of life;
The hymn of the wounded, the beaten,
who died overwhelmed in the strife.
Not the jubilant song of the victors, for whom the resounding acclaim
Of nations was lifted in chorus, whose brows wore the chaplet of fame.
But the hymn of the low and the humble,
the weary, the broken in heart,
Who strove and who failed, acting bravely
a silent and desperate part;

Whose youth bore no flower in its branches,
whose hopes were burned in ashes
away;
From whose hands alighted the prize they had grasped at, who stood at the dying of day

With the word of their life all around them, unpitied, unheeded, alone,
With death swooning down o'er their failure, and all but their faith overthrown

While the voice of the world shouts its chorus—its psalm for those who have won;
While the trumpet is sounding triumphant, and high to the breeze and the sun,
Gay banners are waving, hands clapping,
and hurrying feet
Thronging after the laurel-crowned victors, I stand on the field of defeat,
In the shadow 'mongst those who are fallen, and wounded and dying, and there

Chant a requiem low, place my hand on their pain-knotted brows, breathe a prayer,
Hold the hand that is hapless, and whisper:
"They only the victory win
Who have fought the good fight and have vanquished the demon that tempts us within;

"Who have held to their faith unswayed
by the prize that the world holds so high,
Who have dared for a high cause to suffer, resist, fight—if need be, to die."

Speak, History! Who are life's victors
Unroll thy long annals, and say;
Are they those whom the world called the victors who won the success of the day?
The martyrs of Nero! The Spartans who fell at Thermopylae's trust,
Or the Persians of Xerxes! His judges or Socrates? Pilate or Christ?
—William Wetmore Story.

WE BUILD THE LADDER.

Heaven is not reached at a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted
skies,
And we mount to the summit round by round.

I count this thing to be grandly true,
That a noble deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common sod
To a purer and a broader view.

We rise by the things that are under our feet,
By what we have mastered of greed
and gain,
By the pride deposed and the passion
slain,
And the vanished ill that we hourly meet.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we trust,
When the morning calls us to life and light;
But our hearts grow weary, and ere the night
Our lives are trailing in sordid dust.

We hope, we aspire, we resolve, we pray,
And we think that we mount the air on wings;
Beyond the recall of sensual things,
While our feet still cling to the heavy clay.

Wings for the angels, but feet for the men,
We may borrow the wings to find the way,
We may hope and aspire and resolve and pray
But our feet must rise or we fall again.

Only in dreams is a ladder thrown
From the weary earth to the sapphiric walls;
But the dreams depart and the vision
falls;
And the sleeper wakes on his pillow of stone.

Heaven is not reached by a single bound,
But we build the ladder by which we rise
From the lowly earth to the vaulted
skies,
And we mount to the summit round by
round.

TOO LATE! TOO LATE!

What sad and fatal words are these:
Too late! too late! too late!
The bitter words that were our last,
The broken vows behind us cast,
The chance to do a kindness past,
Too late! too late! too late!

What friendships true there might have been:
Too late! too late! too late!
The trustfulness that once was ours,
The sweet delights of happy hours,
Have wither'd like last summer's flowers,
Too late! too late! too late!

'Tis those who love that suffer most:
Too late! too late! too late!
Tender hearts are soonest broken,
Careless words—how easy spoken—
Soon exchanged for Love's sweet token,
Too late! too late! too late!

Give flowers and kindness ere they be
Too late! too late! too late!
While life, and health, and hope are
mine,
Let friendship, love, and truth entwine,
The dark remorse will not be thine,
Regrets may come too late!

ST. JOHN LETTER.

It is told that a young member of a city household limped home the other day and made a great outcry about an injury he had received on the street. His parents were a good deal alarmed and sent for a physician post haste. The physician arrived, examined the patient and declared that he was suffering from ecchymosis. Then there was consternation in the house. Was it contagious or infectious? The physician hoped for the best; good care and medicine would bring him through. Still there was a good deal of anxiety in that house until it was learned that the boy was suffering from nothing else than a stubbed toe. In the language of the learned a bruise is ecchymosis. It is by shallow tricks like this that some men make themselves famous.

There were 109 cases on the docket of the city court for trial last Friday.

Andrew Wilson is under arrest for criminal assault on a young woman on Brussels street last Tuesday evening. Such outrages are of frequent occurrence in the city because criminals of this class are rarely awarded anything but nominal punishment even if they are clearly proved guilty.

There is no peace for the wicked. The trials of the newspaper men are without respite, even on Thanksgiving day.

The grocery and provision markets are steady and few changes in prices have been noted during the last month. It is said that this season's crop of beans will be exhausted by the first of January and that prices are likely to advance to $2 per bushel. Pickled herring are arriving and are quoted at $1.75 to $1.90. Butter and eggs are unchanged.

A St. John boy, 10 years old, is under arrest charged with stealing a horse and wagon.

The Rev. Dr. Bennet, an accomplished scholar and thinker, is seriously ill, at his home in this city, and his condition occasions a good deal of anxiety among his friends. His eldest daughter, Mrs. Boak of Chicago, is now at the old home, and another daughter, the wife of Editor McCready of the Charlottetown Guardian, is expected home next week.

Edward Edwards.
St. John, Oct. 21.
Jemasok.

Oct. 23.—The schooner, Abbie Keast, that was launched here on the 14th inst., was built by Capt. W. F. Currie and C. J. Colwell under the supervision of Mr. Barnes of the Narrows. A large crowd gathered to witness the launching, which was acknowledged the smoothest and prettiest ever seen under like circumstances. As soon as the last block was removed from her keel she began to glide along the ways and slid into the water as graceful as a duck. She was warped to the pier amid loud hurrahs. The top rigging of the schooner Clarine was adjusted to the new vessel last week, and she set sail Saturday for Fredericton, where she will load lumber for Boston with Capt. Albert Erb as master. The Abbie Keast is owned by Alderman Keast of North End, St. John, Capt. W. F. Currie, C. J. Colwell and Capt. Erb.

Capt. J. D. Colwell returned home last week after spending a successful summer steamboating on the Mississippi. Mrs. Colwell and son Ernest, who spent the summer in Boston, accompanied the Captain home. Their many friends gave them a hearty welcome.

Rev. A. T. Dykeman, of Fairville, St. John, N. B., will deliver a lecture in the Baptist church, of this place, on Wednesday evening, Nov. 1st. Subject: "The Model Man". Lecture in aid of the church.

The Rev. J. W. Blakely will preach his farewell sermon on the evening of the 29th inst.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Bingley are receiving congratulations upon the arrival of a boy baby.

Mrs. G. S. Springer spent Sunday with C. D. Titus.

Blake Purdy, who is attending the Currie Business University, was home last week.

Mrs. George Coy (widow of the late Deacon Coy, of Upper Gagetown) and daughter Teddy, of Fort Farefield, are visiting at C. Bingley Colwells.

Mr. and Mrs. George MacIntyre spent a few days last week with Mrs. MacIntyre's parents.

Exerciating Pains.
THE VICTIM A WELL-KNOWN AND POPULAR HOTEL CLERK.

After Other Medicines Failed He was Cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—Every Dose Counted in the Battle Against Pain.

There is no more popular hotel clerk in Eastern Ontario than Mr. Peter McDonnell, of the Grand Union Hotel, Alexandria. At the present time Mr. McDonnell is in the enjoyment of perfect health, and a stranger could not imagine that a man with the healthy glow and energetic manner of Mr. McDonnell could ever have felt a symptom of disease. There is a story, however, in connection with the splendid degree of health attained by him that is worth telling. It is a well known fact that a few years ago he was the victim of the most excruciating pains of rheumatism. Knowing these facts a News reporter called on Mr. McDonnell for the purpose of eliciting fuller particulars. Without hesitation he attributed his present sound state of health to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. "I am" said he, "63 years of age, but three years ago I did not expect to live this long. At that time I was connected with the Commercial here and as part of my duties was to drive the busses to and from the C. P. R. station, I was exposed to all kinds of weather and subjected to the sudden extremes of heat and cold. Along in the early spring I was suddenly attacked with the most terrible pains in my limbs and body. I sought relief in doctors and then in patent medicines, but all to no purpose; nothing seemed to afford relief. For two months I was a helpless invalid, suffering constantly the most excruciating pains. My hands and feet swelled and I was positive the end was approaching. My heart was effected and indeed I was almost in despair, when fortunately a friend of our family recommended the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began using them in May, 1896, and had taken three boxes before I noticed any change, but from that time every dose counted. The blood seemed to thrill through my veins and by the time I had finished the fifth box every trace of the disease had vanished. Ever since then I have been working hard and frequently long overtime, but have continued in excellent health. Whenever I feel the slightest symptom of the trouble I use the pills for a day or so and soon feel as well as ever. I feel that I owe my health to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and never lose an opportunity of recommending them to others suffering as I was.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills cure by going to the root of the disease. They renew and build up the blood, and strengthen the nerves, thus driving disease from the system. Avoid imitations by insisting that every box you purchase is enclosed in a wrapper bearing the full trade mark, and "first aids to the injured" that should always be ready for use. COOL REMINDER.—The weather of past Saturday and Sunday, caused about all of our readers to think more or less of the coming winter. If any shingling or plastering to be done don't put it off, get your shingles and lime and do it now. The foregoing advice is entirely free and it followed will go a long way towards producing the comfort we all wish for through our cold winter.

As for Lime for plastering and Hair to mix with same and Shingles and nails, as well as Stove Pipe in all size and shapes, it would be profitable to any in want of these comfort producers to study up the ad. of P. TWO FIERCE BATTLES

LONDON, Oct. 21.—A Glencoe Camp correspondent, telegraphing yesterday, says that a force of 8,000 Boers, led by Commandant Gen. Joubert, has been defeated severely by a force under Gen. Symons. At the time of sending the dispatch the fighting was still going on, but the defeat of the enemy was already complete and crushing, and it looked as though few would escape. This correspondent placed the British loss at probably three hundred killed or wounded, and that of the Boers three times as many.

GLENCOE CAMP, Oct. 20 (afternoon).—The battle today has been a brilliant success. The Boers got a reverse which may possibly, for a time at any rate, check all aggressive action.

The British artillery practice in the early part of the day decided the battle. The seizure of Dundee Hill by the Boers was a surprise, for although the pickets had been exchanging shots all night, it was until a shell boomed over the town into the camp that their presence was discovered. Then the shells came fast. The hill was positively alive with the swarming Boers. Still the British artillery got to work with magnificent energy and precision. The batteries from the camp took up positions to the south of the town, and after a quarter of an hour's magnificent firing silenced the guns on the hill.

The correspondent could see shells dropping among the Boer pieces with remarkable accuracy and doing tremendous execution, for the enemy were present in very large numbers and in places considerably exposed. By this time the enemy held the whole of the hill behind Smith's Farm and the Dundee Kopje, right away to the south, in which direction the British Infantry and Cavalry moved at once. The fighting raged particularly hot at the valley outside the town. Directly the Boer guns ceased firing Gen. Symons ordered the infantry to move on the position. The infantry charge was magnificent. The way the King's Royal Rifles and the Dublin Fusiliers stormed the position was one of the most splendid sights ever seen. The firing of the Boers was not so deadly as might have been expected from the troops occupying such an excellent position, but the infantry lost heavily going up the hill, and only the comparatively brilliant way in which General Symons had trained them to fighting of the kind saved them from being swept away.

Indeed the hill was almost inaccessible to the storming party and any hesitation would have lost the day. The enemy's guns, so far as the correspondent could see, were all abandoned, for the Boers had no time to remove them. A stream of fugitives poured down the hillside into the valley, where the battle went on with no abatement.

Gen. Symons was wounded early in the action, and the command then devolved on Major Yule. The enemy, as they fled, were followed by the cavalry, mounted infantry and artillery. The direction taken was to the eastward. At the latest reports the cavalry had not returned.

Some say that four or some say five guns have been captured. The Boer artillery firing was weak. A lot of plucked shells were used.

Although the enemy's position was carried soon after one o'clock, scattered firing went on almost all the afternoon. The British losses are very severe, but those of the Boers are much heavier.

The final rush was made with a triumphant yell and as the British troops charged to close quarters the enemy turned and fled, leaving all their impediments and guns behind them in their precipitate flight.

While this was going on, one battery of artillery, the 18th Hussars, and the mounted infantry, with a part of the Leicester regiment, got on the enemy's flank, and as the Boers streamed wildly down the hill, making for the main road, they found their retreat had been cut off, but they rallied for a while and there was severe firing, with considerable loss on both sides. Many of the enemy surrendered.

A rough estimate places the British loss at 200 killed or wounded and that of the Boers at 800.

LONDON, Oct. 22.—A correspondent in Glencoe Camp telegraphing on Oct. 20 and describing the fighting that followed the first engagement in the Boer attack upon the British position that day, says: "It was after the battle was renewed, following the lull that ensued upon the sharp commencing of the British silence of the guns of the Boers on Smith's Hill, that our casualties began. The Indian hospital corps of coolies, under Major Donegan of the 18th Hussars, ran out, keeping in the rear of the advancing infantry and artillery that had galloped from the second position through the town amid the cheers of the citizens.

"At this point the Boers became erratic. Our artillery was firing on the hill where the Boers were stationed in great numbers, but the return fire did little damage. The enemy kept up an incessant shooting, but our shrapnel began to tell its tale, with the result that the Boer fire visibly slackened. From a careless rattle the rifle fire dwindled to staggering shot, and "A corporal of the Dublin Fusiliers was carried past men to the rear on a stretcher. Major Davidson of the Irish Fusiliers was shot through both legs, and Color Sergeant Anderson of the Dublin Fusiliers was brought in wounded in the right shoulder.

"The artillery in front was shelling the hill, and the King's Royal Rifles on the right front were busy with the Maxim, making the Boers anxious about their position. Their artillery had been silenced by the splendid service of vipers.

"Meanwhile a squadron of the 18th Hussars and a mounted company of the Dublin Fusiliers were creeping around the enemy's left flank, while another squadron of the Hussars and a mounted company of the King's Royal Rifles deputed to the right flank, at the corn fields.

"The artillery continued to play on Smith's Hill, with a range of nearly 3,000 yards. Under its cover the Dublin Fusiliers and the King's Royal Rifles pressed forward. It was in the execution of this manoeuvre that the casualties to our infantry occurred, several men being killed or wounded.

"The firing now ceased off on our side, and only a solitary shot was returned now and then. Gen. Symons, taking advantage of the lull, rode forward with his staff in front of the guns, taking cover at the rear of the plantation, near the base of the hill. All this time our infantry, in extended formation, had gradually passed forward, watching the Boers from the rear of the artillery and massing on the extreme left of the hill.

"After severe firing our infantry carried the position, at 6.30 p. m. this was accomplished, the enemy standing his ground to the last, with courage and tenacity. The Fifth Lancers and a squadron of the Fifth Dragoon Guards charged thrice through the retreating 'Boers' in the dark, doing considerable execution.

"We captured the Boer camp, with tents, wagons, horses and all the guns. The Boer losses were very considerable, including a number of wounded and unaccounted prisoners. Among the former Gen. Koos and Piet Joubert, nephew of Commandant Gen. Joubert.

TIM'S INITIATIVE.

"I don't think we shall need you after tonight, Timothy."

The blow had fallen at last. Tim had expected it for weeks. In fact, from the moment Lawyer Dodd had remarked to his partner, "Well, we'll try him anyway," Tim had known he would not suit; and time had only confirmed him in this conviction.

The lawyers were so sharp and quick their remarks full of strange terms, hard to remember, and despatched to strange places, hard to find. And when he was left alone in the office, and other lawyers came in, all quick and sharp, like his own employers, how confused he grew!

How he blundered at the telephone! How he always failed to say the right thing to clients! How he hit upon the utterly wrong thing to say to the judge one day, and saw Mr. Dodd slip his long yellow envelope on the desk and swing his chair around and look at him, as much as to say, "You born dunce!"

"You don't seem to take hold as we would like to have you," explained Mr. Dodd, counting out two two-dollar bills, a dollar over Tim's usual week's pay, but the last that he was to receive from his employer—the last perhaps, he was to receive from anybody, he thought, as he shuffled disconsolately down the stairs.

It was a sad story to tell his mother; though, of course, being his mother, she would be easier than anyone else.

"Well, it's too bad, Timmie, losing your very first place, but I suppose you can look about for another one."

"Oh, yes," replied Tim, choking up at her sympathy. But when he went to his own room and looked out of the window, it really did not seem any use. It was the recommendation from his grammar school that had got him this place; but now he hadn't any recommendation. And who would take a discharged office boy?

However, next morning he faithfully copied out all the "Boy Wanted" advertisements in the Saturday paper, and on Monday started out early to try his luck. At noon he came home discouraged; at supper he had no appetite at all.

Sometimes the place had just been taken by another boy. The "Help Wanted" column had many readers, it seemed. Sometimes a bigger boy than Tim was wanted, and how Tim wished he was tall! Sometimes it was a smaller boy, and Tim regretted his long trousers.

Sometimes the faces of the women clerks, looking sideways from their desks as the candidate for Harry or Charlie's position, froze his courage completely. His voice sank low, and he grew in his own esteem twice as shabby and humble as he really was. Then he saw clouds of doubt gathering on the face of the manager or floor-walker, and heard him conclude the examination with a blunt "You won't do"; or, perhaps the more evasive, "Well, I think we'll make other arrangements; or, gentlest of all, but knelling with no less certainty the doom of his modest application, "Leave me your address, so that if we should need you we shall know where to send."

Two weeks of constant rejection sapped Tim's hopes most lamentably. He dreaded to turn an office door-knob. He began to look upon employers as a class apart from other men, of stern, inquisitorial temper and disposition that could not be pleased.

"It's too bad we haven't some friend who could get you a place, Timmie," said his mother. That was just what Tim had been thinking, himself. Naturally, he and his mother had certain traits in common. "But I can't think of any; so you keep on trying, like a good boy, won't you?"

"Oh, yes, replied Tim, "I'll keep trying."

But two months went by, and he had not energy left for a real hearty try. To be sure he dreamed every night of golden strokes of fortune, and usually started toward town in the morning determined to "do something, anyway." But even this vague determination ceased away after he had crossed his threshold; and the upshot of every journey was a random saunter through the streets with his hands in his pockets, and a far-away, desolate look in his eyes.

Now and then he would stop at a store window with a sudden jerk, then turn aside after a short survey, move to the next corner and halt a minute before he decided whether to proceed to the right or to the left. He ran to all the fires. He stood in line with the crowd on the curbstone to watch the procession. He idled into the reading-room of the public library; everywhere an easily recognized picture of irresolution and failure.

One evening, as Tim came home, tired, despondent and a little sulky, he met Nellie at the gate. This was no unusual occurrence, as Nellie lived next door, and their families used the same passage-way.

Now Nellie was as brisk a girl as ever swung a broom, which was just her occupation this evening. She had the gift of making things and people go her way. The babies, no matter how many, could not overtake her for a minute; and arm skimbos, with a stamp of her foot, she could scare the surliest prowler from her yard. Moreover, unlike Tim, she liked to talk to people, to put out into the world and expand her knowledge and experience.

With these qualities, she made an excellent housekeeper for her father, and although barely sixteen assumed capably the place of the mother who was gone. Her sleeves were rolled up to the elbow; her eyes were on Mamie and Eddie, straying a little too far up the street; and the open house door showed that she had left some unfinished task behind her.

"Hello," she said, as the wanderer shambled in.

"Hello, Nellie."

He saw that her eyes were fixed on him critically, and felt that he was not altogether fit for inspection.

"Aren't you working yet, Tim?"

Now this question, when put by anybody else than, of course, his mother, was in Tim's sensitive ears a thrust, a veiled innuendo, an unfavorable verdict. But he and Nellie had for a long time made friendly eyes at each other and exchanged intimate confidences. For, if Tim was unfortunate, he was also, according to the standard of that neighborhood, distinctly "nice." So Nellie's voice had a ring of sympathy in it, which hid the highness of the most embarrassing question.

"No," said Tim, "not yet."

"Why can't you get a place, Tim?"

"I don't know," he answered, with a sickly little smile. "I wish I could."

"I guess you try hard enough."

"Oh, yes, I've tried." Tim was truthful. He put his statement in the present perfect tense. "But it's pretty hard."

"Other fellows get jobs. There's Jack White, only graduated with you, and now he's clerk in a dry goods store."

"Yes, but Jack White's a fine writer, and I'm no good at writing."

"Well, there's Walter Craig works in a meat shop."

"Yes, I know. He got the place I was going to get. His big brother goes with the man that started the store and—"

"Oh, well, there lots of other places. Don't you ever see any chances?"

"Yes," replied Tim, slowly. "Yesterday I went in to get a place, but the man asked me if I could make change, and I never made change—"

"But you could! Of course you could! And you've got to make them think so. Spunk up to anybody. That's the way to get along. Why don't you try selling papers?"

"Oh, I'm too old to sell papers?"

"You aren't as old as the Martin boy."

"Oh, well, he always sold papers."

Nelly flicked some dust off the wooden gate. "I know what I'd do. I'd get a wagon and peddle."

"Oh, people wouldn't buy anything of a boy like me."

"Nonsense! You went round with Dineen last summer, and everybody said you hollered fine."

Determined as he was to deny himself every imaginable virtue, Tim could not contradict Nelly's last assertion. His voice was famous, both for power and quality, although curiously enough, when he tried to say the simple words, "I saw you wanted a b-b-boy," it would sink to the feeblest, huskiest whisper that any employer ever heard from an applicant.

"Anyway, I haven't any wagon or anything," protested Tim, more fertile in imagining obstacles than expedients.

"That wouldn't cost much," said Nelly, a little doubtfully, because the price of wagons was beyond her range. "How much do you have to pay for a horse?"

"Ten dollars. That's what Dineen paid for his."

"And a wagon—a second-hand one, I mean?"

"Oh, I don't know anybody that has one to sell."

"Well, if I was a boy, I'd make one," said Nelly, sharply, and when Tim looked in her eyes this time, he saw that she were not quite like his mother's, after all. They were sympathetic, but they also seemed to be examining him, probing him, just like the eyes of those terrible managers and floor walkers and employers.

"Where's Dineen's wagon? He isn't peddling this year," said Nelly.

"Oh, I forgot that. But that's all—old and kinder—"

"Couldn't you paint it up?"

"Oh, I'm no good at painting."

"You're too—too bashful to live, Timmie Tighe. You just want somebody to plant you in a chair, and put a pen in your hand and tell you what to write, and you'll write it. But they never will; and you'll write to the bad, if you don't look out. That's what you'll do."

"Oh, no, I won't do that, Nellie."

"I wish I was a boy."

"Besides,"—the idea of the peddler's wagon haunted him strangely—"I'd have to have a license, anyway."

"What of it?"

"Where'd I get the money?"

"Your mother has some. She could set you up. You could get a license easily enough, and a wagon, too, and a horse, and stock, and everything, if you weren't such a great big baby."

Tim looked once more in Nelly's eyes. Now Nelly was not a queen nor a heroine of any sort. But the fire which she flashed forth at that moment was the very inspiration which had urged kings and conquerors to their greatest achievements—some of them no more adventurous in the beginning than our halting friend, Tim Tighe. Tim read it correctly. He saw fate in those eyes; he saw initiative. They said "Must"; they said "Will"; they refused with scorn to accept any paltering negative like "Can't."

A week later he announced casually to Nelly that he had bought Dineen's old horse and wagon; and the look in her eyes was friendly once more. It had been hard work to persuade his mother to advance so much money; but if a boy cannot persuade his mother, what hope has he of moving the world outside?

Tim's first investment was a stock of blueberries. Columbus journeying westward, in momentary peril of falling over the brink of the world; Nansen, pushing north, nearer and nearer to the pole, but farther and farther from kin and success,—neither of these heroes could have felt more venturesome than Tim Tighe, daring to drive his newly-painted wagon through the strange city streets, and to send into the cold ears of residents and passing pedestrians that loud clamor of his:

"Blueberries—all ripe—three quarts for a quarter."

The first time he shouted, the sound of his own voice startled him; he seemed to hear the words thrown back in derision. But Willy, Nelly's ten-year-old brother, who sat on the wagon seat to "mind the team," seconded his effort with such a shrill, cheery chirp, "Yeer they are blueberries—all ripe!" that Tim felt ashamed of his timidity.

They had resolved to experiment in a distant quarter of the city. For fully fifteen minutes their cries were unanswered; but at last a neat old lady called Tim to her doorstep, inspected his berries, and ordered three quarts.

That three quart order was the making of a man. Tim did not sweep the berries off level with the top of his measure. Far from it! They rose in a great mound from the middle of the box, and when he turned them into the lady's brown earthenware dish, they actually spilled over at the sides.

He counted out the change with his left hand with a new feeling of importance; and the very horse started with excitement when he tossed the measure back into the wagon and sang out boldly, with florid variations of his tone:

"Nice ripe blueberries yee—three quarts for a quarter!"

At dusk one great box of berries was empty and another well hollered in the middle; Willy was hoarse, and Tim, who did the walking, was tired; but his pockets were heavy with silver, which he jingled for Nelly's satisfaction—she happened to be at the gate again—and counted out on the table for his delighted mother.

Next evening the return was larger. Gradually customers began to watch for him and he for them. His cry was a warning signal which in quiet quarters could be heard a block away. It distinguished itself sharply from other peddler's cries. Really it was like a song compared with theirs. Perhaps that was why the nice old ladies called him so often to their door steps. His being a boy did not deter them in the least.

For a week he did not venture to peddle in his own neighborhood. But one evening as he was driving home, a stray customer tempted him, and his call was heard by some schoolboy acquaintances, whose curiosity was aroused.

"Hello, Tim! Where's Dineen?"

"This isn't Dineen's team."

"Whose is it?"

"Mine."

The others raised their elbows before their faces, which, being interpreted, meant "Get out."

"It is, too!" said Willie, on the wagon seat.

"Where did you get it?"

"His mother bought it," said Willie.

"Did she? Aw, you can't jolly us!"

"I ain't trying to."

"Gee! You've got the cheek!"

A week before Tim would have witted this contempt. Now his views had changed; he knew it was a compliment. It was their way of saying he was enterprising.

The period of his awakening was vacation time one year ago. This summer Tim's stock includes all kinds of fruit and vegetables in their season. If you should see him reaching over the tail-board to fill a peck measure with tomatoes, you would hardly recognize the desolate wanderer who used to stop so often at the store windows. Watching him expand the "orbic flex" of his mouth to emit the full fortissimo of his splendid lungs, you would not believe that he could ever say, "I saw your advertisement for a b-b-boy," in such a half-inaudible whisper that the employer quite mechanically doubled the volume of his stenorian "What?"

His whole air is fearless and prosperous. The very horse realizes a change. The mere way in which Tim shouts, "Get up!" or snuggles down a loose end of the blanket, or pulls Dobbin's ears under the strap of the feed-bag, or hops up on the seat and stands there, shaking the reins, his eyes alert in all direction for a customer, stamps him as an independent proprietor.

To be sure, all he owns is a peddler's wagon; but it is well-painted, not lopsided like some, and as tidy on top as any fruiterer's stall. And although Tim gives good measure, and knows that it "weighs," he has learned that such wasteful generosity as that which he heaped the measure for his first sale depresses his bank account.

The other day he met Mr. Dodd, the lawyer, on the street, and the two had a chat of several minutes, at the end of which Tim politely but firmly dismissed his old employer in order to serve a customer.

Of course there is nothing he would not do for Nelly Gray. There good understanding continues. In fact they meet every morning and evening. But Nelly has grown singularly shy lately. If anything happens between them, it will have to be Tim who takes the initiative.

"Are you willing to work for your dinner?" asked the woman.

"Dat depends on wot you wants done," replied the tramp.

"I want you to beat that carpet hanging on the line over there," she said.

"Lady," answered the wanderer, "I'm poor and I'm hungry, but I'm honest, and I'm not going to begin beatin me way through de world at dis late day."—Chicago news.

Wheels. "I feel as if I had wheels in my head!" groaned the man.

"It must be the truck you ate for dinner, rejoined his wife, innocently enough."

"Did you hear what Aunt Hetty say?"

"No. What now?"

"She says she wonders why they don't build cities in the country, where there's more room."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Ikey—"Please, farder, gif me a dime for ice cream. I vas so hot!"

Father—"Ikey, mein shon, dot is a vaist of money. I vill tell you a fine ghost story dot vill make your blood run cold."

End-of-the-Century Offer.

AN EXTRAORDINARILY LIBERAL PROPOSITION.

FOR LESS THAN THE 2 PAPERS AND A... PRICE OF ONE PAPER
300 PAGE BOOK

FIRST, and properly, in making a choice of reading for the home you select your own home paper. However good may be the reading of other papers, there is none that comes home so closely to you as your local weekly. It is to further increase this interest by adding to our lists that the following liberal proposition is made to subscribers. We have been careful to form combinations only where we knew we were touching nice ground and could thoroughly recommend the publications offered. Read carefully every word of this offer for it means a saving of money to you.

The Montreal Daily Herald

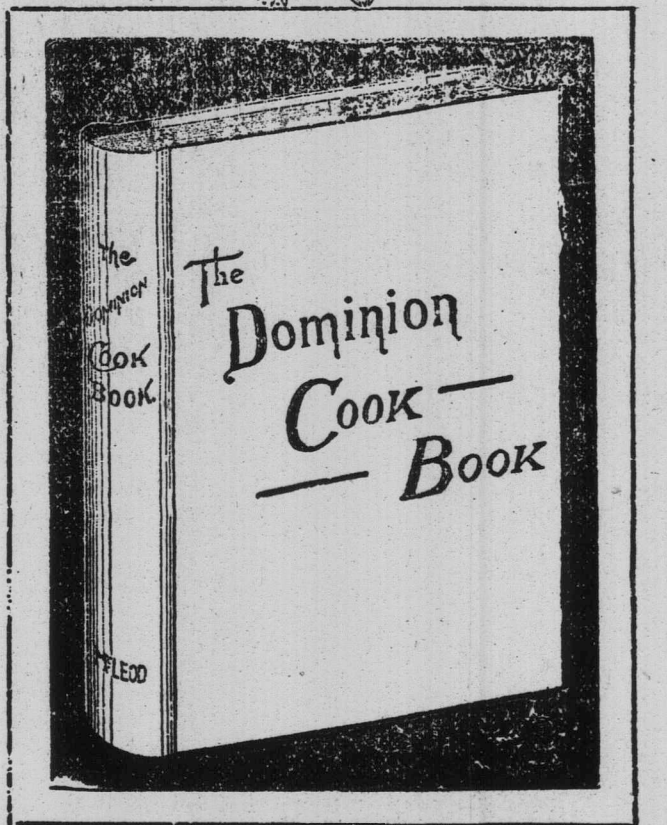

A GREAT METROPOLITAN DAILY

WE are pleased to announce that we have been able to make most extraordinary liberal arrangements with the publishers of one of the greatest of Canadian dailies—The Montreal Daily Herald.

The Herald has achieved a well-deserved reputation for the remarkable value it gives its readers. It is one of the most enterprising newspapers in the Dominion, and in thousands of home circles is welcomed on account of the great interest it manifests in subjects of special interest to women of Canada. To the farmer and business man, it appeals through its accurate market reports and business columns. To the young men, through the attention it bestows on clean, manly sport. To the lover of fiction, through the excellent stories appearing regularly in its columns. To the politician, through the calm and moderate tone of its editorial expressions.

The only reason which prompted the publishers of The Herald to make us the offer, which enables us to club the two papers at the extraordinarily low price given below, is their desire to immediately introduce the Daily Herald in large numbers in this neighborhood. The offer they now make will hold good for a limited time only.

It should be mentioned that subscribers to The Herald during the next few months will enjoy to the full the opportunity which this paper is offering to all readers to secure valuable books at merely nominal figures.

The... Dominion Cook Book

A Copy for Every Subscriber

IN the best sense of the term this is an Ideal Cook Book—ideal in being a practical book—a book which the housewife will want to keep constantly by her side and can depend on, because of the simplicity and reliability of every recipe. Starting with a chapter on soups, naturally the first course, throughout its three hundred pages and over there are to be found more than 1,000 recipes, winding up with an excellent chapter on sick room cookery. Following the cookery section there is a department entitled "The Doctor," in which are recipes selected from eminent authorities, and which will be found invaluable where the doctor is not readily available. The recipes are numbered throughout the book, and each is prefaced with a list of the ingredients called for by the recipe, rendering it unnecessary for the housewife to read through the entire recipe and make calculation of what is wanted. Size of page is 5 inches by 8 inches, bound in handsome cloth covers. It would be a mistake to confuse this book with any paper-bound cook book that would go to pieces in no time.

Wisdom suggests taking advantage of this offer quickly. If you are now a subscriber to either paper, and your time has not yet expired, by taking advantage of our big offer promptly, your subscription will be extended one year from date of expiry. Everything will go to you at once. The Herald, during the closing months of 1899, will make some wonderfully liberal offers to subscribers. The Cook Book is mailed to you promptly on receipt of order, and coming along Fair Time and Thanksgiving Day, and later Christmas and New Year's, you want this book beside you. Drop into the office the first time you are in town, or, if more convenient, sit down now and write a letter, enclosing amount, and everything will have our prompt attention.

THE DOOM OF THE DRUNKARD'S CHILD.

The early sun of a June Sunday morning struggled between the eags that stopped many holes in the window of a desolate room in South London. The scene was a marked contrast to the "early brilliance of the sunshine. On the floor were sleeping a father and mother and their six children, with scarcely anything for beds, and but little covering.

First one child and then another woke, but the mother slept with an infant in her arms, and the tears were not yet dry on her pale cheeks. He, husband and father, slept in the deep stupor that often follows drunkenness. At length a cry from the infant awakened the mother, and she looked around on the dirty, wretched room. There was now no peace among so many wretched children, so she rose. They cried for bread; they longed to be out.

Saturday had been a hard day, she had been out late trying to earn a few pence, so that this morning she had bread and dripping to see them through the day. As she cut the loaf, the children stared at her. There was something unusual this morning. Her face was marked— one eye black and swollen up; on arm with which she had tried to ward off the blow, was stiff and bruised and almost useless.

Last night he came home staggering and violent and demanded money, she had none. But she had covered the two-month old baby with a cloak, which she had bought at the second hand shop. It was worth a pot of beer, but she refused to let baby shiver through the night, and tried to prevent his taking it. In vain! she was felled to the floor and he took the cloak.

Bruised in body and crushed in spirit, the children's questions overwhelmed her. She fed them, as usual, but she felt a burning madness, and she resolved to drown herself and her baby, so, before nine o'clock, she stole out into the street and away. She had been brought up in the country, had been fairly taught, had read a good deal, and knew her Bible well. For five years her husband had been a drunkard, and she had drained the dregs of life's cup. Her years had been a night in Gethsemane. Still she hurried away forgetful of the strange sight she looked. Out of the narrow streets—out of the crowded neighborhood, along by the Thames, she had not seen such glories for years.

The waters sparkled in the sunlight, and the air was fresh and soft. From the distance came the sound of bells, and this poor, bruised, broken-hearted thing walked as if in a trance.

Wondrous hour was this—a brilliant June Sunday morning, nearly eleven—parsons, priests and preachers were making ready for their various work—not all dealing with the life around them. The lawgivers and lords of this realm had been perchance awake, or possibly they might have most cheerfully left their first pleasured feast of the day. The many magistrates who would be ready to sit in judgment on this defenceless creature to-morrow, were far from haunts of misery—not over earnestly inquiring into the cause of England's crime and desolation.

But she, footsore and faint, sought rest under a tree, and forgot the maddening anguish and despair. As she sat, she fell into a sleep of swoon, and there seemed to appear to her a sad-faced angel—the angel that guards human life, and mourns human misery, and, looking upon her, he said: "I mark the ravage of war, and I mean whilst thy triumph; but freedom has been bathed in blood, and justice has wielded the sound of battle, 'I often follow the flying pestilence. I sigh for the dying and I turn in sadness from their graves but have followed such mourning, and pestilence has been the grim herald of discovery."

"I fold my wings among the blighted forms of famine-stricken myriads. I ask 'Is this a law of life to men that death must crawl from their palaces, and crowd in their sanctuaries, whilst their sonorous music sinks into a dirge of lost life?' Yet from famine, industry and thrift have come forth as sower and reaper of an untold harvest.

"All this I see, and though oft times mists of sorrow dim my eyes, yet hope does not die, I can see streaks of light that strike the mountain tops of the future, and in that light I recognize the dawn of my native land, and I know that its soft radiance will fall on the field of battle, the lazar-house of pestilence, and the graves of famine.

"But when man torsores his high calling, prevents every power and sows despair, I see no light on the mountain top, nor can I hear one harsh note that may pierce the gloom, that shall mellow and swell into a song of praise.

"I have witnessed death's high revel of war, pestilence, and famine, and from the survivors of these I have seen unfold the glorious transportation of life. The orphans of war, the widows of pestilence, and the ruined homesteads of famine have all found their resurrection and clothed themselves with the pomp of prosperity and the splendour of hope; but nations dig and fill up with their own curses, there surer no assurance of that final victory, when right shall girdle the

Stains on Table Linen.

Hot water poured through the cloth will remove many fruit stains, especially if freshly made. If this is not effectual, rub with lemon juice sprinkle with salt and lay in the sun, afterward rinsing thoroughly with clear water that the acid may not injure the linen.

Transferring Bees.

There are still many bees in old fashioned box hives that are of little value. If transferred to a modern hive they would become a source of profit and would be under easy control. According to the New England Homestead. Transferring them is a very simple thing when the method is understood, and this is the season to do it. Select any modern frame hive and place near the old hive a common table. Move the old hive a few feet from where it stood, placing the new hive in its place, with sheet in front of it. Now pry off one side of the old hive, carefully remove the comb, brushing the bees onto the sheet. Then lay the comb on a soft cloth on the table and, placing the frame over it, cut the comb so it will fit inside the frame, cutting out all drone comb until the frame is filled. Now place this piece of wood on each side of the frame, or wind the same with string and set the frame in the new hive. Repeat this until all combs have been fitted in the frames and placed in the new hive and all the bees brushed onto the sheet and into the new hive. Then remove all the honey and the old hive to prevent robbing. In two or three days open the hive and remove the sticks or string from the frames if the combs are fastened in securely, and the transfer is complete. Always choose a warm day so as not to chill the young brood.

A Lady Misled by a Dealer Who Loved Long Profits

A lady residing in a flourishing Ontario town recently wrote as follows:

"Having some faded cotton goods to dye, I went to one of our stores and asked for two packages of Diamond Dye Cardinal for Cotton.

The storekeeper informed me that he was out of that brand of dye, and recommended strongly another make of package dye. I unfortunately bought the recommended dye and carried them home. I used them as directed on the package, but the work was not fit to look at, the color being a bricky red instead of cardinal. I was obliged to wash the goods so as to get rid of the awful color, and afterward re-dye with the Diamond Dyes which I procured at another store. I have used Diamond Dyes without a single failure for many years, and will never again accept a substitute from any merchant. The Diamond Dyes are true to promise every time."
