Dance improved. The snow quickly came in storm and fog, producing such dire disaster to the fleet that eight ships were wrecked and hundreds were drowned.

There was the greatest rejoicing in honor of the double triumph the church has won. "Notre Dame des Victoires" it is no wonder that so much of the pious fervor of early Quebec is intertwined about this sacred building.

The little church was not always to escape unscathed. One of the Utrulite nuns prophesied that it would be ultimately burned by the British, who would finally conquer, and, in the bombardment of Quebec by Wolfe's batteries in 1758, it severely suffered.

It is interesting to note that the church is situated on a site which was the site of a small Indian village.

The pious veneration, like the creed, of these simple-minded people is the same to-day as it was before the British conquest of Canada.

The night is dark, and the endearing glow, Lead me on my way.

Keep them my feet; I do not ask to see The distant ones; one step enough for me.

I was not ever there, nor prayed that those Should lead me on.

I loved to choose and set my path; but now Lead me on my way.

Prayed the good day, and spite of fears I loved to rule my will. Remember not past years.

So long thy power has blessed me, sure it still Will lead me on.

Over moor and plain, 'er crag and torrent, still The night is gone.

And with the morn the angel faces smile, Which I have loved long since and lost awhile!

A Convert's Story. Since the appearance of Cardinal Newman's "Apologia" there has not been published a more deeply interesting account of a convert's religious struggles than that which is given in the "Confession of a Convert" by Mr. C. Kingley.

Mr. Kingley's conversion was a most interesting one, and his progress towards the true light of the Catholic faith was always a most absorbing attraction.

His colleague, Gabriel Lallemant, was a delicate and sensitive man, and he bore the torments nobly, and although at times faltering, yet he never wavered in his devotion.

self. In his new position Mr. Kagan Paul strove hard to improve the condition of the school, but his efforts were not without success.

Other books, such as "The Nun," by Mrs. Sherwood, and the tale, "Father Clement," meant to inspire him with a horror of Catholic practices, had a distinctly opposite effect.

MR. DAVIES AND HIS FRIENDS.

On Wednesday evening last, a meeting of Mr. E. H. Davis's political friends and supporters was held at the residence of Mr. J. D. Edgar.

Mr. Davis's feelings of gratitude were most intense, and he was bubbling over with enthusiasm.

He spoke about the tunnel, and about the opposition he had met with, and how anxious he had been to see the tunnel's completion.

thy pure brow—to bring back a name... which, won in a holy cause, will surely... bless one's heart—his heart, even now...

CHAPTER II... And the years went by—two, three, four... Margaret loved and loved to be loved...

CHAPTER III... Years passed; Sir Roland died in his... bed; a nephew had taken his place...

CHAPTER IV... Margaret crossed over, kneeling down... and kissed her mother's hand...

CHAPTER V... Margaret clasped her hands with a... look of agony... "My mother, forgive me if I speak...

CHAPTER VI... "My mother, forgive me if I speak... yet this once I'll not be merciful...

CHAPTER VII... "My mother, forgive me if I speak... yet this once I'll not be merciful...

CHAPTER VIII... "My mother, forgive me if I speak... yet this once I'll not be merciful...

And the maiden was left alone... along with her own thoughts... The sobriety of her face was forgotten...
