LORD MORDEN'S DAUGHTER

THE TRAGEDY OF THE CEDARS.

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Will it take you long to read up this test case—this ruling of Judge Chitty? Fairfax, I believe in my heart that your fears are well founded, and I have revealed for hours in a fool's paradise."

"I am not sure that I have a complete digest of the case," Fairfax responded, "but you shall know to-night, as I know where to lay my hand upon the books."

"Then I will hamper you, but will come to your chamber later. Tell me what time I may come."

"I will be ready for you at eight o'clock."

"So late? And Dora all this time waiting for me!" Locksley exclaimed in distress.

"It cannot be helped, old man. I may even then not be quite prepared for you. Send her a telegram—'Unavoidably detained,' you know. It is hard, of course, but it might have been a great deal worse."

"You are right; it might have been worse. I will go to my club and attend to one or two matters there. Then I will send this wretched telegram; and if—and if I cannot go home—go to 'The Myrtles'—to my darling to-night. I will visit my father. It is a duty I owe to him."

He alighted at Piccadilly Circus, and Fairfax went on to his chambers in Fleet street.

Frank Rogers was waiting for him in the anteroom of the Prince Albert Club, and the young fellow was startled by the pallor of his master's face. He read his letters mechanically, scarcely comprehending half of their meaning, until he came to one written in pencil.

It ran this way:
Dear Young Master:—Your father wishes to see you. Most important. He has left "The Cedars" forever. I will call here again at six o'clock, and hope to find you. Don't tell any one that you have received this. Obediently yours,

THOMAS PETERS.

"Don't tell any one about this," muttered Locksley. "What can be the meaning of such mystery? What is my father doing so far from home in his doubtful state of health? Left 'The Cedars' forever!"

He put the letter away, his seething brain in a chaotic whirl.

"Frank," he said, "my troubles are not yet at an end—mine and my wife's. It is our wedding day, but I am advised that the marriage must be performed again to make it legal. This need not hinder the work you have in hand; indeed, I wish you to push forward with your inquiries concerning Lord Morden, so that the mystery of his strange disappearance may be solved, for my wife's sake."

"I am ready, sir, but I must draw upon you heavily if my plans are to be carried out, I want five hundred pounds. I intend telegraphing to several Colonial agents, and I must deposit money with their representatives here as a guarantee of good faith."

"You need not explain your modus operandi to me, Frank; I am quite satisfied to trust the matter to you. Go to work, and report to me here for the present."

He gave Rogers a check and the young detective went away, filled with the importance of his task.

At six o'clock promptly, Peters, the valet, put in an appearance, and Edmund was quick to observe the anxiety in the man's face.

"Do not speak above a whisper, sir," he pleaded. "This is almost a matter of life and death."

"I shall soon begin to think I am mad," Locksley said, "that everybody else is. What is the meaning of that extraordinary note you left here? Why has my father left 'The Cedars'? What freak is it?"

"Hush, Mr. Edmund! Do not ask me to explain. He will tell you all. Your letters have been kept back from him; he knew nothing of your projected marriage until yesterday. The scoundrel who calls himself Viscount Melville is at the root of the mischief. Your father needs you now—needs you to save him from an awful fate. Don't ask me to tell you more; I am running a great risk in speaking with you here. I will meet you on Waterloo Bridge, say at ten o'clock, to conduct you to my master, and I ask you to be prepared for a great change in him."

He suddenly turned away, for he was aware that he was being eyed curiously by a gentleman who had recently entered the room, and before Edmund could arrest his rapid movements, he had vanished.

"That's my old orderly, Peters, as I live!" exclaimed the newcomer. "Hallo, Locksley. I hunted you up at the time arranged, but you were not here. Any news from your father?"

"Bad news, general," Edmund replied, evasively. "It was indeed Peters, whom you saw leave me, and my father is too ill to see any one."

"Confound it," muttered Hassard. "Why didn't I stop Peters? You see, my eyes are not so good as they were, and I was not sure of my man until I saw him walk. It's deucedly strange that your father refuses to see me. I was a very old friend of Morden's, and I should like to hear how he died, and what became of his money. Have a cigar with me? By the way, I should like to have a chat with Peters some time. When he has a day to spare, let him call upon his old master. Here is my card."

Locksley mechanically took the bit of pasteboard, and promised to speak to Peters. He smoked a cigar with General Hassard, and heard the roll of his deep bass voice for half-an-hour without comprehending the meaning of a single sentence that he uttered.

When the clocks chimed the hour of seven, he stirred uneasily, saying: "You must excuse me, general; I have letters to write, and an important engagement in the city at eight."

"Certainly, my boy, certainly." Then he added: "You are a very old friend of my nephew, eh—Fred Fairfax?"

"Yes," replied Edmund. "A very old friend."

"I thought so—I thought so. Well, good-night. Don't forget to tell Peters that I would like to see him, and ask your father what became of Lord Alfred Morden's money. I happen to know that he was appointed executor. Morden wrote me about it."

He looked after the young man, and muttered:

"He seems all right. And, after all, where is the use in raking up the past?"

Edmund wrote a letter to Dora—a letter that made his heart bleed. This is it:

My Darling Sweetheart:—It seems that Fate must continue to be cruel to us, and I am penning these words with misery in my heart—the misery of having to pain and distress you. It is seven o'clock, and I do not find it hard to picture your dear face, your beautiful, anxious eyes watching and waiting for one who cannot come to you until another day. Oh, Dora, my loving, true-hearted Dora, it is like a knife in my soul! And now I will explain at least a part of my difficulty. My father is desperately ill—perhaps mad, for his valet has just left me, after bringing me the shocking news that he has deserted his own home forever—that he is in hiding, and must see me at a very late hour to-night. My darling, what can I do but obey? I am his only child, and if he needs my care, I should be a monster to evade my natural duty. There is not time to come to you and explain. It is seven now, and I am going to send you a telegram at eight. I have another engagement of vital importance, and at ten I have to solve the mystery of my poor father's at present inexplicable conduct.

I will come to-morrow, little wife, and I shall tap at the oriel window. Yours in life and death, EDMUND.

He posted this letter, on his way to Fleet street, and at the same time sent a telegram to Dora, explaining briefly the cause of his absence, and telling her that he had written a letter to her.

When he reached the barrister's chambers, it was half-past eight, and he walked up the dark stairway, like a man who prepares to face a stern and inexorable judge.

He had no idea that he had been followed from Piccadilly by a small man in a gray tweed suit. He had no idea that the man crept upstairs after him, and crouched in the shadow of the door that opened into the barrister's rooms.

Locksley passed in, and the door closed. There was no one there but Fairfax, and he sat reading the evening edition of the Standard.

He looked up, but did not speak, and motioned his friend to be seated.

"Your reply is ready?" questioned Locksley. "Yes, I know it, or I should still find you busy. My marriage with Miss Dora Deane is no marriage at all!"

"You are right, Edmund. She is not your wife in the eyes of the law, and I advise you to get married again without delay! You ought to thank me, instead of glaring about you in that dazed fashion. It would have been a terrible thing to find it out too late. Come! Have a nip of brandy. I wish I had never sold you that accursed house. You are the third who has met with misfortune there!"

"It will be all right in the end, please Heaven," replied Locksley, smiling in a wintry sort of way. "I am in need of advice now more than I ever was in my life. I cannot collect my senses—I cannot keep Dora's anxious face from before me. Tell me what to do, Fred—tell me what to do."

ABLE TO DO HOUSEWORK NOW

Sick a Year. Got Great Benefit from Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Bloomington, N.S.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for pains and backache, also for nervousness, sick headaches and sleeplessness. I was troubled in this way for over a year, and a friend told me about the Vegetable Compound and induced me to take it. I must say I have received great benefit from it and am able to do my housework now. I recommend the Vegetable Compound myself and am willing for you to use this letter as a testimonial."—Mrs. WILLIAM MOSES, Bloomington, Annapolis County, Nova Scotia.

Do you know that in a recent canvass among women users of the Vegetable Compound over 250,000 replies were received. To the question, "Have you received benefit by taking this medicine?" 98 per cent. replied "Yes!"

This means that 98 out of every 100 women are in better health because they have given this medicine a fair trial.

Mrs. Morse is simply another case of a woman receiving "great benefit" from Women's Friend. Give this dependable medicine a chance—and at once. It is sold at all drug stores.

ALL HONOR TO SOMEONE.

Once more I pay tribute to the people who do the difficult, and the dangerous, and the disagreeable things that have to be done by someone. Especially, this time, those who live in daily danger because of their work.

I stayed at a hotel one night recently opposite which a 12 story building was being built. I sat down by my window after breakfast and watched the workmen.

The scaffolding was up and some of the floors were in, but not in the three top stories opposite my window, yet men were walking about, stooping to pick up tools, pounding, hammering, working with the rivet machine, crawling out on scaffolding that overhung the 150 foot drop to the street.

Made Me Dizzy Just To Watch.

Just to watch them made creepy feeling go up my legs, and my head swim in sympathetic dizziness (wanted sympathy for their aboved not a sign of needing it). Once when one of the foremen went to the edge of the temporary flooring and leaned way over to see if some detail of the work was being properly handled, I almost lost my recently acquired breakfast—yet to him it was evidently a minor detail in the day's work.

I have seen 10,000, or more, tall buildings that someone had to build in this same way, and I have looked up from the street and seen them in process of construction, but I never before realized so vividly in what constant danger this someone who rears all these solid, safe, stone buildings must live while this calmly accepted miracle is being wrought.

Some of these are going to die. To be sure there is not the danger in it for him that there would be for us ground lubbers who walk down below, and yet even for him there is constant danger.

Whenever a building is to be built and the contracts are being figured, so much is always figured in for damages for the men who will be injured and killed. How many depends on the size of a building. Any engineer can tell you how many men are going to die (on the average) each sky scraper, and for each floor or other engineering feat.

Of course, each worker, though he knows the risk, does not think that thing will happen to him. How can that be, for then he would expect to be small die (we know it with our own eyes) but we don't sense it with our own—praise be!

Think Of Being Someone's Wife. Yet let him have a married wife and a few sleepless nights come to work with frayed nerves, and the moment of carelessness, a single misstep that would mean falling on the ground will spell disaster for one more someone, and his wife.

Think what it must be to be the wife of one of those men—to see go off every day to wonder if he will come back safely. Think what ringing of the telephone bell mean. Think of the whole world when he is not quite sure if he will stay home, and yet not quite sure enough to be wholly himself.

Once more I pay tribute to all those (and their wives), and the people who do the difficult, and the dangerous, and the disagreeable things that have to be done by someone. All honor to their courage.

The Condition of Industry

This is a time of the year when we expect unemployment to decline, and though there is some improvement the figures are higher than they were in the corresponding period of last year. Political partisans asserted that one of the reasons why the unemployment figures were high last year was because a labour Government was in power, and we were assured that when a Conservative Government took over the reins there would soon be a considerable improvement. The fact is the political complexion of the Government has practically no effect on trade or employment. No Government can eliminate foreign competition, and we are faced with foreign competition of a very intensive nature, added to which the purchasing power of foreign countries is greatly restricted. Moreover, we are loaded with debts which we are endeavouring to pay by submitting to heavy taxes. Hence our industries are handicapped at every turn, and it will need all our ability and energy to pull through. This is recognized by all sections of the community, and instead of futile squabbles conferences are being held between employers and employees to devise methods whereby the foreigner can be defeated in the industrial field. The country is not going to the dogs as some pessimists would have us believe, but is facing a bad period with courage and resolution, and we have every reason to hope that before long we will recover our old prosperity.

Though unemployment figures have not fallen as we should like there has been a slight decrease in the cost of living. This fall is chiefly due to the seasonal reductions in the price of milk and eggs, but we are hoping that the report of the Commission on Food Prices will indicate how profiteering in essential foodstuffs can be checked. This question of the cost of living is of the greatest importance, not only to employees, but also to employers. If the cost of living is forced up by the operations of trusts and combines, then wages have to be increased. The result is an increase in the cost of production, which may absolutely cripple industries that are dependent on foreign trade. It is essential that we should all pull together, and that no section should seek to obtain an unfair profit at the expense of the rest of the community.—Liverpool Post.

Small Craft to Carry Trio to Labrador

ADVENTURERS INTO NORTHERN WILDS BUY CHESTER AUXILIARY SCHOONER, AND WILL OUTFIT AT HALIFAX.

CHESTER, May 6.—The lure of the Labrador wilds is responsible for the launching of an adventurous enterprise from Chester, with a view to exploring the fish and fur trade, as well as exploration for precious metals in the far north.

Reuben Heister, builder of the "Dixie" and other fast yachts, has just completed the sale of a staunch Tancock craft, 35 feet over all, the auxiliary schooner "Iron Duke," to D. X. Holbridge, of Baltimore, and two friends, Messrs. Nelson and Robinson. The three were shipmates on a recent voyage, and there they planned the adventure on which they are about to embark.

Holbridge, about nineteen years of age, is the navigator of the party. His father is a retired deep-sea captain, resident in Baltimore, and the party brought letters of introduction from J. Kemp Bartlett, of that city, owner of the "Dixie" and late Commodore of the Chester Yacht Club.

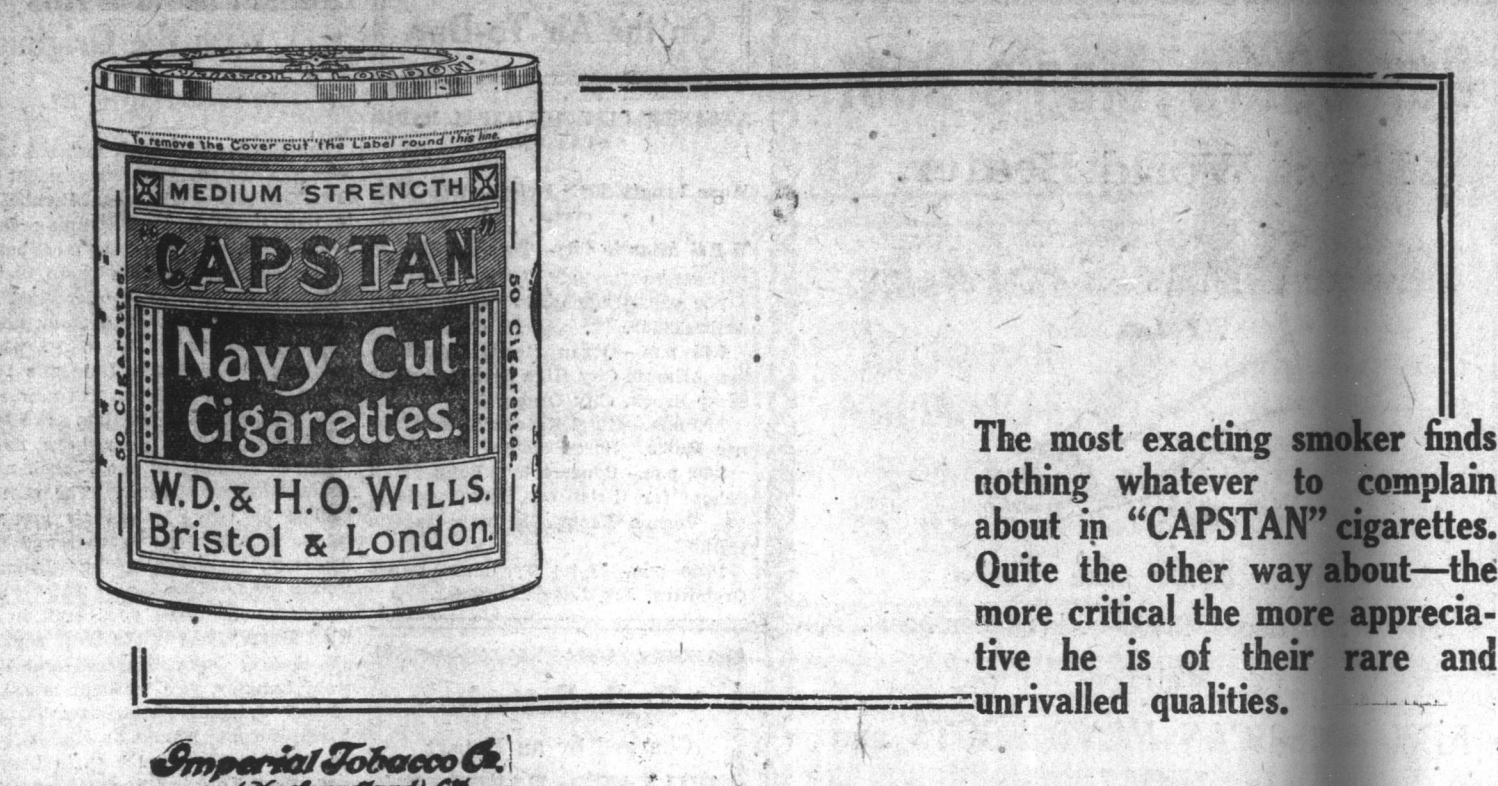

Nelson is familiar with northern waters, having made several voyages to Greenland and Iceland on a Danish fishing schooner, as well as one trip to the Labrador. Robinson is an Englishman, who came to this country in 1921.

The three adventurers sail shortly for Halifax, where they will take on their outfit for the Labrador. They plan to fish, hunt and explore the country, and claim to have good reasons for expecting their trip to prove very profitable.—Morning Chronicle.

The Roads of Corner Brook

Some hard has sung a song of mud about our little town. In doleful strain he makes his plaint, and on us seems to frown; Because our streets are muddy, the results of rain and flood; He gives one the impression that we've to wallow in the mud.

This patent that he has not seen the city of St. John's, Where after rain in Springtime the crossings are like ponds. Despite the use of tarvia and other modern costs, The streets are often wet enough for the boys to sail their boats.

This true there is some mud about our ungraded roads, The trail of tractors and of vans that carry heavy loads; But we are well provided for, and rubber boots are cheap; So after all is said and done we have no cause to weep.

Our hope is in the future when we may walk with ease, Along modern sidewalks, bedecked with pretty trees. Come then, O bard, and visit us in either drought or flood, And see again the pretty town whose name you thought was Mud. V.J.P.

And may we add: We envy the western townsmen the mud in which they tread. For it's only a sign of progress, while here, we look with dread On the slimy ooze and puddle which year by year grow worse. Their health and depth and dirtiness are a stigma and a curse.

In a report to the Board of Trade under date April 23rd, Messrs. Lind and Couto fish dealers, Oporto, say: "Since we last wrote you demand for British fish has not been very active, which is a pity as our market is much overstocked. Norwegian and other cures are attracting considerable attention. The Iceland fish cured here is now on sale. A further shipment of 3755 bales of French cod-fish arrived here on the 5th, on the S. S. Duplex. Fortunately the weather has been fairly cool up to the present, but we may expect warm weather at any time in which case inferior qualities will have to be cleared at large reductions. As it is prices of all qualities have fallen and if demand does not improve, the situation will soon become very serious."

Brilliant Musical Hits With the Originals

IN "STEPPING OUT"

The great enthusiasm aroused here over the forthcoming engagement of the "Originals, (Overseas Dumbells)" is well merited, for "Stepping Out" is the laugh maker and the "most beautiful singing production these clever entertainers have ever offered. This season has brought forth many novel ideas in the Originals' show, while many of the Original Dumbells favorites, together with several new soldier artists of distinction, are all "stepped" before, at the Nickel, next week, starting Monday. The cast is headed by two of Canada's greatest soldier artists, Gene Pearson and Bob Anderson, supported by Leonard Young, who directs the show and writes much of the good stuff in it; Alan Murray, one of the most popular old timers; Jerry Brayford and Bert Langley, two brilliant members of the "Originals" quartette; Thomas Dunn, Norman Blume, an English actor who has appeared both in London and New York with great success; Gus McKinnon; Jimmy MacDugald and Frederick Gordon. While much interest is centered in the new juvenile, Lionel Broadway, whose delightful singing and striking personality has stamped him as an artist of high calibre. The Company is under the management of H. P. Campbell.

Every form of entertainment is offered in "Stepping Out," a great number of smashing musical hits, some of them being specially written for the Originals, while others were secured in London. A snappy musical comedy which opens the first of the show, wherein the intangible Bob Anderson makes such a hit with "Turned Up"; Dances of varied nature; concerted work and a delightful one-act Operetta, are only a very few of the big surprises in this greatest of Originals Revues.

Seats are selling at the Nickel Theatre box office.

A Half a Ton Fish

Vancouver, B.C.—How would you feel if you had a fish on the end of your line weighing more than half a ton and reported to be a century old? That was the recent experience of Patrick Edwards, New Westminster fisherman. He was hauling in his gill net near Silverdale, on the Fraser River, when he felt a terrific pull. Bracing himself against the gunwale of his boat, Edwards prepared for a struggle. The line continued to drag and he could see the lashing of an enormous tail to the rear of his boat; but it was only after a fight of several minutes that the fisherman discovered that a sturgeon had somehow or other plunged into his net. The sturgeon was 12 feet, 6 inches long and weighed 1,015 pounds and valued at $200. Against this a loss of 135 feet of net had to be met.

Of late years sturgeon are infrequent visitors in these waters and the big fellow landed near Silverdale is one of the largest caught in British Columbia waters for years. If the experts are correct in estimating the age at one hundred years, Mr. Sturgeon was swimming around in the river before the first settlement was built on the Fraser, when the territory was known only to the Indian and the trapper.

Years ago when the Canadian Pacific Railway was being built to the coast the sturgeon, which according to ancient law was the sole property of the ruling British monarch, was plentiful here and was sold on the Vancouver and New Westminster markets. Now the species is very rare, and is under government protection. Occasionally a big fellow gets caught accidentally, but generally the catch is made by poachers.

It may sound like a fish story, but the biggest sturgeon are often caught by their tails. It is the practice usually followed by Indians, who have a special license to fish sturgeon. The method is to sink a line, along which is baited hooks are strung, about 15 feet from the bottom of a river or stream frequented by sturgeon. The line is strung with hooks facing downstream. The sturgeon works upstream and when they come to the swaying line of hooks they nose partly past the obstruction until the moving tail, their propeller, catches on the hooks. The Indians sometimes use rotted salmon as bait.

Archie Marks Players in Colorful Production

LARGE AUDIENCE WITNESSES GOOD PLAY AT CASINO.

Another large audience was in evidence at the Casino last night when Archie Marks and her players appeared in that fascinating social-drama "Why Father Left Home." As a play of this type it differs in many ways from the usual run of social dramas, the opening scenes being in the home of a millionaire and the last act is on a farm. It is an unusual bill and one that delighted last night's audience and to those who did not see it we advise them to secure seats for to-night's performance.

THE PLAYERS—Miss Archie Marks has never done better work than in the role of Eva King. She has a role that suits her admirably and portrays it with ability that brought forth the praise of her many friends and admirers. The entire cast is excellent. Paul Brady, an accomplished actor and a great favourite with Casino patrons is well cast as Adam Smith, the live-wire salesman, and Walter DeLuna gets a lot of laughs as Eva's millionaire father, while W. L. Phillips makes a subordinate role stand out prominently. Lindsay E. Perrin again treated the audience to a dish of reliable comedy which he puts over in his own inimitable style. Mr. Perrin is seen as Lord Andrew Gordon. Agnes Stutz gives a creditable performance of the role of Abbey, as also does Nettie Davenport in the role of Julia. Ray Wassman gives a good performance of Clinton DeWitt, a fortune-hunter who is desirous of getting into the King family because of their wealth and social standing.

THE PLAY—The production is correct in atmosphere and color and the realistic settings greatly enhance its beauty. Right from the rise of the first curtain to the final scene there is not a single dull moment, everything moves rapidly and with marked smoothness.

THE VAUDEVILLE—This portion of the program was well in keeping with the nature and calibre of the bill and contained abundance of pep. The musical settings to the play were well discoursed by the orchestra. To-morrow there will be a special matinee at 2.30 and on Thursday which is an entire change of program, the bill will be "Kick In" the greatest of all mystery plays. Seats now booking for this play. Watch for "Are You A Mason" on Monday next.

Phenomenal Success

Adams & Cheney's Musicals And "Temple of Venus", Enraptures Large Audience.

Adams & Cheney sprang a series of new surprises last night at the majestic and the large audiences present were enraptured with the various items. The classical numbers particularly appealed to all present and despite the very lengthy programme, they were compelled to respond to very lengthy encores. As a matter of fact, the patrons will never tire of the accomplishments of these two artists. There is no doubt but that Adams & Cheney are wonderful entertainers, and their willingness to cater to the wishes of the people only adds to their popularity. The enthusiastic applause of last night's recital must surely be of much satisfaction to the management as well as to the performers. Amongst the many admirers last night were quite a number who request Adams & Cheney to submit many numbers, including—"I Hear You Calling Me", "Rose In The Bud", "Where My Caravan Has Rested", "Parted" (Fort), also to give a special musical programme of Southern Melodies.

Just as predicted, the masterpiece of photography, "The Temple of Venus," opened in a blaze of glory last night. This is an extravagant venture, even for William Fox. This picture is a spectacle of the unusual sort, showing not only the beauty of nature on the entrancing little Pacific island, but the charms of a thousand west coast bathing girls transplanted by Director Henry Otto. Harry Phillips, Phyllis Haver and David Butler, are the principals and have the support of a capable cast.

The same programme will be repeated to-night, to-morrow afternoon

Adrian DaSilva Delights Patrons of Nickel

NOTED TENOR INCREASES HIS POPULARITY IN ST. JOHN'S.

Adrian DaSilva has already received the endorsement of the music loving public of St. John's by his beautiful singing at the Nickel Theatre. His numbers last night were (a) "Homing" (b) "Seventeen" (c) "Little Irish Girl." Following each song, Mr. DaSilva was greeted by a warm outburst of applause.

The feature last night was Victor Seastrom's great motion picture triumph entitled "The Confessions of A Queen" with the noted stars Alice Terry and Lewis Stone in the leading roles.

It is a cleverly written story, and the unexpected twist that the plot takes quickens the interest. In the earlier reels some of the scenes such as the interview following the wedding, when the king accedes to the queen's wish and withdraws and also the conversation with the prime minister regarding the necessity for an heir to the throne, have a Continental flavor, the subtleties being quite frank.

Added to this is the fact that Victor Seastrom has given the story fine mounting and excellent direction, some of the scenes being especially fine. It will probably prove a pleasing attraction and its clever touches would appeal to all.

An Achievement

A week ago the United Schools Campaign set out to accomplish a herculean task, and the result of their efforts, which was announced last night in the Presbyterian Hall, shows in an unmistakable manner what can be done by co-operation, enthusiasm in a cause, and absolute faith in the right of that cause.

The total reported for the week's work amounted to the handsome sum of $153,717.06, with other reports still to be received from various sections of the country.

Such a result is inspiring, and it reflects credit not only upon the organizing committee and their loyal band of workers, but upon the community as a whole, as it has been quick to understand the worthiness of the object, and as quick to provide the necessary funds to make that object attainable.

After the remarkable efforts which have been made in the past few years by the public in response to appeals for funds for educational purposes, and particularly after this great achievement, it can never again be said of Newfoundlanders that they are indifferent in such matters.

A Timely Warning

We must be altogether heedless of our own interests and utterly indifferent to the consequences of our folly, if we fail to appreciate the meaning of the following warning, and take steps accordingly to rectify the evil. The extracts quoted are contained in a communication to the Nfld. Board of Trade from the Valencia Overseas Trade Association, and read as follows:

MARKET SITUATION.

Undoubtedly you will have become aware, that during the past 3 years, the sale of Labrador Cod in this country has dwindled to only a fraction of what it used to be in former years. The reason for this is the defective care and the very poor appearance of the genuine Labrador Cod compared with the feildian Labrador style cured Cod, (S/S dried) which is rapidly pushing the Labrador Cod out of its market. Valencia used to receive in former years well over 100,000 quintals of genuine Labrador codfish during the season. Only a few years ago Iceland Lab. style cured cod used to sell below the prices asked for the genuine Labrador, but as the Labrador continued to be received in a bad condition, the Iceland Cod rapidly gained the field, and to-day, although everybody will admit, that the Labrador codfish is a much better fish than the Iceland Codfish, nevertheless, because the Iceland Lab. style cured Cod, being received here in its excellent condition, scrupulously clean and in clean packing, retaining the best qualities for conservation, whereas the CON-TARY is unfortunately the rule with the genuine Labrador, the sales of the latter have dropped down to-day to about 10 per cent. of what they used to be in former years.

A few years ago Valencia was the only port where Iceland Lab. style cured Cod was received. (Rafael Rindau was the first to introduce the fish. To-day, as a result, he does not receive anything else, with the exception of a few hundred cases of Labrador Cod not worth mentioning.) This season the principal imports at Valencia are Iceland Lab. style cured Cod, and Alicante also received two cargoes. Besides even Barcelona has taken a cargo of this fish, and during the coming season, it is anticipated, that increased quantities will enter Alicante, Barcelona and, it is said, that Mr. Lazo in Seville will find

It convenient to introduce this fish. Last season the Iceland Lab. style cured Cod used to sell at a small premium over the genuine Labrador, but now this premium has risen to six and seven shillings per quintal, and in spite of the higher price paid to-day for Iceland Cod, the sales of the genuine Labrador, are dropping still further. The buyers say with Iceland Cod I am able to make a fair profit, and by trying to sell Labrador I simply have to lose money. This is the whole difference.

If the Newfoundland curer will not turn out a cleaner and better cured Labrador Codfish, he will be gradually but surely lose the Spanish market. It seems as if the time has arrived when action should be taken to put an end to this deplorable condition.

But what the Icelanders can do with a poorer article it should be possible to do with the better quality fish from Labrador.

Brilliant Nfld. Student

AWARDED UNIVERSITY MEDAL.

S. P. Young, of Hearts Content, Newfoundland, is the winner of the University Medal in Medicine at Dalhousie, and L. F. Dolron, and C. R. Baxter are the runners up, in the returns which were announced by the Faculty of Medicine last night.

Thirty-eight students will receive the degree of the Medical Faculty at the convocation next Tuesday and this number includes two women students, Roberta Bond, daughter of Rev. Dr. Bond and Anna Murray.

Brilliant Career.

Mr. Young, the winner of the faculty medal is 26 years old and has had a consistently brilliant career during the years he has been at Dalhousie, in his final year he had won distinction in every subject in spite of the fact that during part of the examination period he was unwell. He is a Rhodes Scholar from Newfoundland and studied a year in England after which he decided that he wanted to study medicine and returned to Canada. He will practice in Newfoundland.

Building Permits Refused

Our attention has been called to a decision of the Council by Mr. James Ellis, by which the building of houses has been forbidden on land lying to the North of Macklin Street, on the grounds that there is no sewerage connections and that there is no street laid out on what is known as Ellis' Road. Mr. Ellis contends that the contention regarding a street line is incorrect, and that the refusal to extend the sewerage means a hold up in building houses in a suitable locality at a time when houses are urgently required. As to the pros and cons of the dispute we cannot express an opinion, but it is much to be regretted that every encouragement is not given to property owners to build on their land by an extension of the sewerage system wherever possible.

PEPPYS BEHIND THE SCENES

May 11th.—Up very betimes and abroad, but do find little news anywhere and do seem to be the season when men are too busy to gossip, and is indeed, the worst possible time for the poor news writer.

Talking with Porey this day, he tells me of a strange smuggling case on the West Coast, being that a fellow brings in rum hidden in cakes, which is the queerest method of smuggling rum that ever I did hear of. But Lord, the class of rum that comes to us these days is neither worth the trouble of smuggling or drinking, and myself, am resolved in the future to drink naught but beer or good whisky.

Captain W. Kean writes the morning sheet of the seal fishery, and do give it as his belief that the seals have found a new whelping ground, which indeed, is the opinion of many that I have spoken with. He do advocate the sending of a ship to the Northern Labrador to discover the truth of his theory. Among other things in his letter do tell a tale of men on one of the sealing steamers this past spring that did refuse to continue the voyage, and stresses the need of legislation to deal with such cases since a sealer is no seaman in point of law.

Do take a last look this day over my sealing sweepstakes but do find naught that would give me a prize, and indeed, the luck of the Peppys is confined to other branches of the family but not mine, for I have never in my life won a single thing.

This night asked to broadcast from station 8JJC, I do try my hand at it but am mighty nervous and do stutter badly in my talk, which is indeed, the silliest thing, and had no thought that I could be so conscious of myself.

What of the Nfld. Football League?

The condition of St. George's Field leads one to wonder if we are going to have the League games this year or not. This grounds are in a most dilapidated condition, the grandstand is thrown out of shape, doors and windows of the dressing rooms are open, and inside the state is so deplorable that it would seem they are only fit to be torn down. It is time that steps were taken to get the grounds in shape and we suggest that the Football League be called together as soon as possible in order that the necessary can be done before the season is further advanced.

The St. Bon's Sports—The big opening event of the year, will be held on Wednesday, June 10th.—May 12, 11.

Giving New Car Along With House

Speculative Builder Has Good Scheme to Boost Sales.

While the giving of spoons with pounds of tea, and exchanging household requisites for soap wrappers or charcoal coupons are well-known schemes for the advancement of sales in certain retail lines of business, it may come as a surprise to old-fashioned real estate dealers to learn that the system is finding its way into the selling of houses and property.

The nearest approach to this that has been extensively practised in Montreal in recent years, was the raffling of tickets which were handed out free to all who attended a certain series of real estate auctions a few years ago. The scheme did not meet the whole-hearted approval of the local real estate community, and has never been repeated.

A visitor from a city in the United States, who arrived in Montreal last week, and who bought a house in her home town not long ago, brings news of a real up-to-date bonus scheme, which put the auctioneer's little raffle and the spoon in the tea-packet into the shade.

She received a brand-new, fully equipped automobile with her little self-contained bungalow. According to her own statements, the bungalow contained three bedrooms, an aloe kitchenette and a sun porch. It included a garage at the rear, and cost $6,500, payable in instalments, with no interest chargeable on outstanding payments, and with the light car thrown in as makeweight.

The argument of the speculative builder who is erecting and selling these houses is, that as they are a few miles from the centre of the city, and involve either the maintenance of a car, or the frequent use of street cars, the purchaser is justified in expecting the builder to furnish the means of overcoming this difficulty. This he does, by giving a car away along with the house.

Britain's Egg Supply

In 1923, the latest year for which statistics have been published, there were imported into Great Britain 20,045,943 great hundreds (a great hundred—100 eggs—of eggs in shell valued at £13,815,896. This was in addition to eggs not in shell valued at £3,098,909. According to advices received by the Bankers Trust Company of New York through its British Information Service, these importations of eggs came chiefly from Denmark from which the imports were 6,757,300 great hundreds valued at £5,486,300. The next largest source of supply was the Netherlands from which were imported 1,435,392 great hundreds valued at £1,075,400, and then followed Poland, including Danzig, from which the imports were 1,294,900 great hundreds, valued at £710,909. 1,309,322 great hundreds valued at £628,400 came from Egypt and 1,113,000 great hundreds valued at £643,936 came from China. The United States shipped only 240,000 great hundreds valued at £198,000. 3,980,700 great hundreds came from the British possessions, chiefly from the Irish Free State from which in nine months ago, 3,845,000 great hundreds valued at £1,593,000 were received. It is believed that there are great opportunities for the increase of egg production in Great Britain and both the Ministry of Agriculture and the leaders of the poultry industry who are in close touch through the Ministry's Poultry Advisory Committee and otherwise, are constantly considering methods of assisting the industry to take advantage of them.

Auction of Horses

There was quite a large attendance at the auction sale of horses at the Abattoir premises this morning. The prices ranged from $50 to $230. A nice driver sold at $215.00. Truck horses were not in demand although one animal fetched $230.00 and another was up to $140.00 but did not sell. A couple of locals sold at prices ranging from $50.00 to $80.00 and one, a former mount belonging to the Constabulary, could not find a purchaser for $80.00.

Travelling Without Knowing It

At school we learned an arithmetical table called Long Measure, which went on through inches, feet, and yards to miles and leagues. There it stopped. But there are many different long measures, and a mile in one country is not necessarily a mile in another. Yet every country has its standard, from which all its measurements are reckoned.

In Britain we say that the diameter of the earth measures 8,000 miles, and that the distance round the earth at the Equator is 24,000 miles. That would seem to be the maximum measurement attainable by man, the longest distance measurable on earth.

Yet there is an actual straight line which, instead of being only 24,000 miles long, is 198,000,000 miles long! That, in fact, is man's longest measuring rod—and he can use it. He uses it to measure our distance from the stars.

It takes a geometrical observation of a certain star, say, at the vernal equinox, March 21st, and another at the autumnal equinox; or he may choose, instead, the summer and winter solstices. In either case, in the intervening months, the earth has done "half a lap" round the sun. In other words, it has travelled, at an average speed of eighteen miles a second, 291,600,000 miles, and the distance between the points where the observer finds himself at any portion of the year is, in round numbers, one hundred and eighty-six millions of miles distant from the place he was in, in space, six months before.

London's Roman Relics

The Bank of England is to be closed shortly for extensive repairs and additions, and as a good deal of excavations will be involved the Society of Antiquaries has appointed a committee to examine any Roman relics that may be unearthed.

It is almost impossible to dig to any depth in the City area without finding some trace of the Roman city. One of the surprises awaiting visitors to the London Museum, as well as to the Guildhall Museum, is the enormous amount of articles and relics of all descriptions which have been found in the river and during excavation work for the foundations of City offices. A recent site excavated, close by the Safe Deposit building, proved one of the richest mines of Roman relics ever discovered, and the Bank site ought to yield much of interest.

That London in Roman times was no mean city is shown in a remarkable way. Not only have many articles been found, but upon them no fewer than three hundred names of makers have been deciphered. Only the other day, in Tokenhouse Yard, a plate of Samian ware was dug up with the maker's name upon it.

It is thought some mischievous youth threw a lighted match through the open window and set fire to the curtains.

Magistrate's Court

A 17 year old youth appeared before court this morning charged with a breach of section 25 of the Alcoholic Liquors Act and a second charge of disorderly conduct on the public street. This case, which is the first of its kind for a minor under the Act, was allowed to stand over for the present so as to give the police a chance to find out where defendant obtained the liquor.

Several civil cases were disposed of.

Improved Conditions

Labor conditions in the city greatly improved within the past night, as is evidenced by the fact that the weekly relief list at the Public Relief Bureau has dwindled to 300 names. It is understood that giving of relief will cease in a few days as it is expected that waterfront dock and hotel construction will absorb all the labor available.

alarm and in some quarters it was believed to be a very favorable development and to have provided Germany with a much more stable government than the election of the other candidate would have. England's return to a gold basis is a constructive factor of outstanding importance. That the stock market received the news with complacency may be attributed to the fact that the event had been expected. It will be remembered that the big piece of constructive news in 1924—the Dawes plan—had no immediate effect on market sentiment.

The week's trade developments were not of unusual interest. The U. S. Steel Corporation's statement was in line with previous estimations. Earnings on the common stock equalled $2.93 per share and only $1.75 per share was distributed, in spite of working capital far in excess of current or prospective needs. Further weakness in the sugar markets, slight improvement in copper prices, record-breaking car loadings and an advance in the prices were other developments of some interest.

A survey of the situation and outlook does not reveal reasons for dissatisfaction or apprehension. A moderate falling off in volume of business after a period of unusual activity does not, in the light of past experience, mean a protracted period of dullness, as some commentators would have it. After a period of unsatisfactory stock market movements, the tendency is to magnify the importance of minor developments of an adverse nature and forget that fundamentals are favorable.

We believe that many stocks are destined for much higher prices before the end of the year.

British Ambassador and Secretary Davis DESIRE CORDIAL RELATIONS.

WASHINGTON—Eloquent address delivered by Sir Esme Howard, British ambassador, and United States Secretary of Labor Davis at the Canadian Club banquet last night, emphasized the earnest desire of British and American statesmen to advance the cordial relations so long existing between Canada and the United States. Secretary Davis was born in Wales and he could therefore speak with sympathy and understanding to United States citizens of Canadian birth. He made it plain that the inclusion of undesirable aliens was a benefit to both countries, and expressed the hope that both countries might have a population devoted to liberty and representative government.

Sir Esme Howard showed no sympathy with those who feared that closer relations between this country and the Dominion would be prejudicial to the British Empire. He spoke enthusiastically of the proposed visit of the United States Pacific fleet to Australia and New Zealand, and guaranteed that the American sailors would receive a rousing reception.

The Excellency spoke in part as follows: "It is indeed a pleasure to me to have been able to accept the kind invitation of the Canadian Club of Washington this evening. I recognize that every meeting of this kind helps to cement and strengthen the rapidly growing sentiments of friendship and good-will between the nations of the British Empire and this great commonwealth of the United States, whose but will also be of service for the general maintenance of peace."

John Bull Rejoices.

Sir Esme Howard, after a brief allusion to the close and intimate relations between the people of the United States, and the continued evidences of this comradeship between the two great English-speaking democracies of North America, said that the Dominion, and the United States were so closely related, and for their mutual benefit, that some people thought that British subjects in the Old Country were looking askance at this long-enduring, and increasing friendship.

In this connection he said: "It is possible that there may be some foolish—very foolish—people who do so. I cannot answer for all the short-sighted people in the world. But, believe me, the great mass of the British people are glad at all signs of growing confidence and goodwill between all parts of the British Empire and the United States. The man in the street in Great Britain desires nothing more than sincere and hearty co-operation with this country wherever that co-operation may be secured without at all threatening the fundamental interest of either of us. We have complete confidence in the absolute good faith of the Government of the United States, and in the friendship of the great mass of Americans."

Secretary Davis, reciprocating the friendly sentiments of Ambassador Howard, said nothing was more beneficial to both countries than the good understanding so happily prevailing between Canada and the United States. It had become important, he said, for the United States to exclude undesirable aliens, people who have no love for the free institutions of Britain and America. It was also important to maintain the standard of living and not have the labor market glutted by masses of unemployed men. He was glad that Canada was maintaining a high standard by which to measure the incoming immigrant.

"Add in Good Citizenship," he said, "going about their affairs in peace and quiet, are politically stable and economically prosperous." It was all-im-

The Road Beautiful

"The poets who used to sing so cheerily about the roads have been comparatively silent in recent years. For one thing, their songs have been drowned by the overwhelming traffic which pours incessantly along our highways; for another, the road has become associated somehow or other with swift and mechanical things which frighten the Muses," says the Morning Post.

"When we think of a road to-day, our vision is confronted by a tarred surface which is not exactly beautiful, by rushing motor cars, and by borders which too often remind one of dusty and lawdy backyards. Yet just as our weary passages through life ought to be brightened and lightened by the contemplation of beautiful things, so surely our journeys along the roads of our country should be blessed as much as possible by flowers and trees and all the green things which solace heavy eyes.

"Such considerations have apparently inspired the Ministry of Transport to father a Bill for authorizing its chief and other highway authorities 'to cause trees or shrubs to be planted and grass margins to be laid out in any highway maintainable by him or them respectively and to erect and maintain guards or fences' and otherwise to do anything expedient for the maintenance or protection of such trees, shrubs, and grass margins."

"What's in a name after all, and who would have ever associated a Ministry, boasting such a utilitarian almost forbidding title, with the cultivation of grass margins and the planting of shrubs? Yet we have the text of the Bill before us, and Colonel Ashley's name as one of its backers. "It is an official acknowledgment of the profound truth that there is something more in life than mere hurry, and that those who travel on a road, whether the road be a thing of macadam or an image of the mind, have a right to have their journey made as pleasant as possible.

"It is a sermon as well as a legislative measure; it is not only a demand on our purses, but an appeal to our souls. In a word, the Bill is helping to make the country beautiful by Act of Parliament, and what nobler purpose could Parliament serve?"

An Unexplored Zone in B. C.

Vancouver, B.C.—A strange valley in the wilderness of Northern British Columbia where tropical conditions are said to prevail, where there are ponderous animals so big that the Indians are afraid to hunt for them, is to be explored this summer by an expedition now being organized here.

The valley lies in the heart of the vast unexplored area lying north of the Skeena River. It is said to be only two hundred miles long and barely forty miles wide, but if the reports brought out by those who have made a partial investigation are true, it is one of the most remarkable places in the world.

Although hampered by snow-clad mountains, and surrounded by a territory which experiences a long and severe winter, this mystery valley is said to enjoy a tropical climate from one season to another. Moose and deer and all other game animals are said to be of great size and exceptionally tame, and with them dwell, according to reports, many animals and birds that at present are not known to science. The vegetation is luxuriant and quite different from that of the surrounding district. Rose bushes are said to be growing there as high as fruit trees and with branches as thick as a man's wrist.

It is more than a year since Frank Perry, Vancouver mining man and prospector, came out of the north and told of his discovery of the mystery valley. He related how, after climbing a mountain top, he had looked down a valley that was overcast by a bank of fog. This seemed an unusual phenomena in winter. He descended into the valley and found that it contained rivers of warm water that flowed from a series of hot springs. These, he said, accounted for the warmth of the area and the unusual variety and density of the vegetation. Perry travelled with dogs and claims to have spent eight years in the district "living off the land." He visited civilization occasionally, bringing out with him his sensational stories of a virgin game paradise.

For a time Perry's assertions were not credited, but he has convinced several well-known capitalists and he is going back this summer with an airplane as part of his equipment to make a more thorough examination of the valley. One of those behind the enterprise is Hon. Charles H. Macintosh, former governor of the Northwest territories. Another is Philip P. Lonergan, pioneer Seattle mining engineer.

An Ancient Mariner's Venture

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 30.—Commander Eustace B. Maude, 77 years old, and long retired from the Royal Navy, is going to sea again—this time in a 25-foot dory-type sloop in which he plans to sail from Vancouver or Victoria to Round Bay by way of the Panama Canal. He is now preparing for the "cruise" at his home on Marine Island and expects to get under way within a month.

"I expect to enjoy myself very much," said the veteran mariner. "It will be a long voyage, but it should be pleasant. I will head far out to sea after passing Cape Flattery, pick up the trade winds and boom down the coast with the wheel lashed and canvas taut. I have provisions for one hundred days and a complete edition of Shakespeare's works, so I will get along very well."

Despite his age and the disaster that has overcome most of those who in the past have undertaken similar feats, Commander Maude regards his plans in a matter-of-fact way and seems to think them not at all extraordinary. He will land only once during the long voyage—at Panama—and during practically the rest of the journey he will be out of sight of land. He intends to make his course with the use of his old nautical instruments. He has dug them out of his sea chest and burnished them anew. He has a good sea anchor and will use it when he wants a spell below in bad weather. His vessel is a seven sea boat, staunch, well-found and equipped with a five-horse-power gas engine, although the commander hopes to cover the entire journey by sail. Besides provisions, he is taking fifty gallons of fresh water and fifty gallons of gasoline.

Commander Maude has found it difficult to maintain his retirement. Twenty-five years ago he left the Royal Navy after serving on board Queen Victoria's royal yacht and with the British fleet in every sea. He bought a farm on Marine Island and tried to settle down. When the Great War broke out he offered his services at once and was given command of the Royal Canadian Volunteer Reserve at Esquimalt. When that unit seemed destined to remain at home for many months, he discarded his officer's rank and enlisted as a sapper in the British Transport, in which service he was later given a commission and sent overseas.

Commander Maude's proposed voyage brings to the minds of old-timers on this coast a similar feat a decade ago by Captain George Voss, who left British Columbia in a 30-foot Indian war canoe, schooner rigged. He went via Australia, Cape Town, and then to England, stopping at various ports en route. He always had one man with him, however. Captain Voss' trip was taken to demonstrate the efficiency of a sea anchor he had invented.

(A recent message stated that the ancient mariner had disappeared.)

portant, the Secretary insisted, that the two countries join hands in promoting a high standard of citizenship. Neither country had the right to make of itself a side door through which the undesirable immigrant might find entrance to the other country, and in this connection he said: "It is with these conditions in mind that we in the United States must consider the problem of the aliens who are coming to us from abroad."

The great Dominion to the north of us has an interest in this problem too, for whatever is ultimately best for the United States will be good for Canada. We must maintain on this continent a homogeneous united people, devoted to the principle of liberty under law and firm in its belief in representative Government.

Two hundred guests attended the banquet at the Wardman Park Inn, the most fashionable hotel in Washington, and the banquet hall was brightened by a profusion of flowers and a lavish display of the Stars and Stripes and the Union Jack. Among the guests of honor were former citizens of Canada who have made their mark in this country, including Dr. H. H. Kerr, one of the most famous surgeons on the continent, a native of Winnipeg and a graduate of McGill.

Little Jack Rabbit
by David Cory

Now let me think for maybe a minute or two. I must remember where and how I ended yesterday's story. Weren't the big Circus Elephant and the little rabbit playing numble peg? Of course they were, and the Yellow Dog Tramp had just begun to bark when, all of a sudden—and that was the reason for the old dog's warning—Hungry Hawk went sailing by overhead in the sky.

"I'm not afraid," laughed the little rabbit, smiling at the good old dog. "Hungry Hawk wouldn't dare come near here."

"I wasn't fearing that," answered the Yellow Dog Tramp. "I was wondering about Lady Love. She might just now be hopping out of Cousin Cottontail's little bungalow."

"Well, suppose you run up there," suggested the old circus animal, folding his Jack-knife. "A pound of prevention is worth a ton of cure." My, but that great animal talked in big terms, didn't he? When I was a little boy we always said, "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure."

At once the Yellow Dog Tramp sprang to his feet and hurried up the Old Cow Path. Without bothering to cross the old log bridge, he jumped over the Bubbling Brook and sped across the Pleasant Pasture and up the hill to the Old Brush Heap, under which Cousin Cottontail lived in her comfortable bungalow.

"Tipperty tap, rapperty rap! He knocked on the little front door. But very carefully, for he did not want to be seen by his strong front paw."

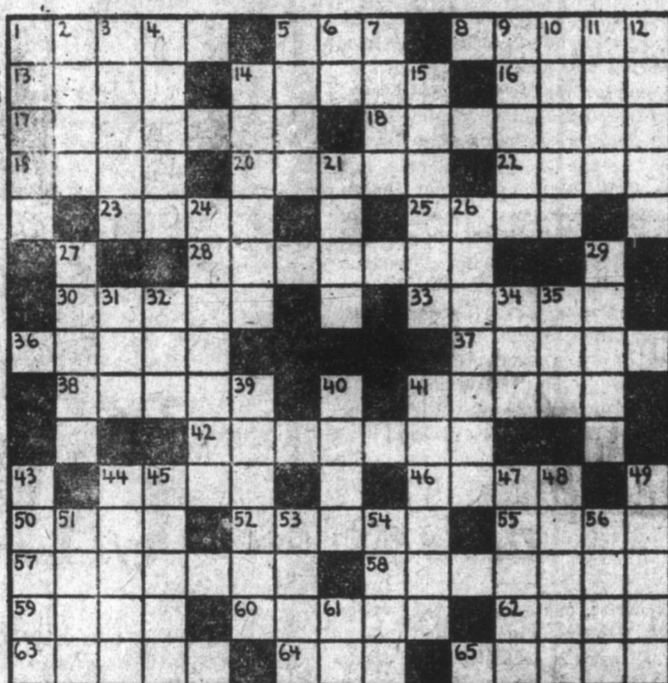

The next minute Cousin Cottontail turned the knob and asked:

"What's the matter. Why this clatter?" I guess the good old dog didn't realize he was pounding; he thought he was only tapping.

"Is Lady Love here?" he asked, with a wag of his tail.

"Dear, dear," suddenly thought the old dog. "Wonder if Hungry Hawk saw her as she hopped down the hill." And in the next story you shall hear what happened after that.

St. Mary's Parish

TO ERECT NEW HALL AND SCHOOL.

The parishioners of St. Mary's turned out en masse last night to discuss plans in connection with the erection of a new building to house school and parish hall. Rev. A. B. S. Stirling, the Rector, was in the chair and was supported on the platform by Rev. J. Goodland, assistant priest and Mr. G. F. Pike, people's warden and Mr. L. Whitten, rector's warden.

The proceedings centred round the report presented by Hon. Dr. Mosdell on behalf of a special committee which has spent several weeks investigating the project and devising plans for its consummation. Questions of location, materials and method of construction and plans for financing the undertaking were all dealt with and practical recommendations were in each case made to the parishioners. The discussion that followed was long, but interesting and to the point. It bespoke the careful attention, keen interest and practical knowledge of the big and enthusiastic gathering, in which the ladies, as well as the men of the parish were well represented. The report was received and adopted by the meeting.

The plans approved by St. Mary's parishioners provide for the immediate construction of a three-storey building of concrete, to be located on the site of the present hall, which will be removed as soon as the school year is ended. Provision is to be made for modern and well-equipped schools in the building and for facilities for the work of the various organizations that are doing so much valuable work for the Church of St. Mary the Virgin. One of the storeys, which will have greater floor space than the British Hall, is to be designed and equipped as a public hall and will have an estimated seating capacity of one thousand people. It will supply a great and long-felt need in the West End of the city.

After discussing building plans in detail and approving of ways and means of financing the project, the meeting of parishioners resolved itself into a Building Committee of the Whole for the realization of the scheme. An executive was formed, consisting of Hon. Dr. Mosdell, chairman; Mr. L. G. Chafe, deputy chairman; Mr. Max Colton, recording secretary; Mr. Bert Colton, corresponding secretary; Mr. D. R. Thistle, Treasurer; Mr. Harvey Skirving, assistant secretary. The Rector, Rev. A. B. S. Stirling, and the two wardens Messrs. G. F. Pike and A. Whitten are also members, ex officio, of the executive.

The building plans disposed of the meeting took up garden party matters. This event is staged for June 17th, and the parishioners plan to make it the best and most successful on record. All proceeds are to go to the Parish Hall fund and St. Mary's people are confident that their friends throughout the city will, in view of this special need, assist with their patronage even more generally and liberally than of former years.

The unannounced appearance of Rev. Henry Uphill on the platform last night shortly after proceedings began, thrilled and delighted St. Mary's folk, who gave him a regular ovation on his entry to the hall. The former rector made a brief speech in which he complimented the parishioners on their keen practical interest in church matters, as displayed by their presence. He congratulated them on their progressive ideas and ideals and created much enthusiasm by his exhortation for hard and united work for very necessary undertakings they had decided to shoulder.

Obituary

DUFIE MELIN NOAH.

There passed to his Eternal Reward at the General Hospital, on Sunday, Dufie Melin Noah, eldest son of Melin and Marion Noah, of this city, at the early age of thirty years. The late Mr. Noah entered the hospital for treatment, early in February last. Showing some signs of improvement, he left the institution to remain at home for a while and then to go to the Royal Victoria Hospital at Montreal. Unfortunately, his improvement was but temporary and, two weeks ago, he suffered a relapse and had to be taken back to the local institution again. There he lingered on for the last fortnight, when he was called from earth and its sufferings. Dufie Melin Noah was well and favorably known in business circles in this country. For several years he carried on business in White Bay, selling out this spring to Mr. H. J. Crowe, who is conducting the enterprise at Hammonds. He also had an extensive business at Deer Lake. He was a man not only of outstanding business ability, but was also well educated, having for five years been a student at the High School at Beyrouit, Syria, where he won golden opinions from his teachers and his fellow-students. Ever generous-hearted, he never failed those in distress who appealed to him and there are many who, remembering his kindness, will regret the passing of a true and practical friend. Left to mourn the early demise of Dufie Melin Noah are his mother and father, who are carrying on business on New Gower Street; five sisters, Mrs. Edward Faour, Misses Sadie, Genevieve and Madeleine, at home, and Miss Isabelle, who is conducting the Deer Lake business; two brothers, John, of Corner Brook, and Alphonsus. His brother Daniel predeceased him only eleven months ago. This paper extends sincerest sympathy to the family and friends of the late Mr. Noah. The funeral is set for to-morrow Wednesday from his parents' home, at 74 New Gower Street, at 2.30 p.m.

Poets With a Punch

HARDS WHO EXCELLED AT BOXING.

A Rhodes Scholar, Mr. Eddie Eagan, who went up to Oxford as the reputed challenger of Battling Siki, is now engaged on an epic poem in praise of the art of self-defence. He is said to have been inspired to this poetic effort by Browning's "The Ring and the Book," although the "ring" is not a twenty-four-foot one, nor the "book" the kind that is "made" and not written.

It may surprise many readers to learn that Georges Carpentier is a poet. He wrote the words for a song, "Vasbond Philosophy." Of course, M. Maeterlinck, like Sir Arthur Conan Doyle, is an authority on boxing and could probably write a treatise on the "straight left" or a sonnet on the "right hook" or the "short jab."

A Novelist's Broken Nose. Eyrton was instructed in pugilism by one of the "pets" of Regency days, and although he was lame from his early years he was very light on his feet, a fine dancer, and a renowned swimmer.

Dr. Johnson is usually represented as engaged in verbal battles, but he was, in reality, very useful with his fists, for he had a pugilistic relative, Uncle Andrew, who kept the ring in Southfield, and who instructed his nephew in the art of attack and defence. Boswell tells how Johnson was attacked one night by four men whom he kept at bay till "the watch came up, and carried both him and them to the round-house." Sir Walter Scott was attacked by three ruffians one night, and fought them single-handed for an hour before help arrived.

ENGLAND'S GREAT SPRINTER IS SERIOUSLY HURT AT MEET.

Blow To British Varsity Team.

LONDON, May 7.—Harold Abrahams, Olympic 100-metre champion and star member of the Cambridge track team, was seriously injured to-day while competing in the broad jump at a meet at Stamford Bridge. He slipped on the take-off, over-turned in the air and fell heavily on his side. He had to be carried from the field, and the doctors said they would not know how seriously he had been hurt until they could make a more thorough examination. Abrahams was expected to be a big point winner in the coming dual meet between the Oxford-Cambridge team and the Yale-Harvard team.

STRIBLING KAYOED CHILEAN FIGHTER.

Georgia Youth Won First Heavy-weight Bout With Quintin Romero In 4th Round, When Bout Was Stopped.

BOSTON, May 7.—William L. (Young) Stribling, of Atlantic, Ga., to-night won his first fight in the heavyweight class, when he was awarded a technical knockout in the fourth round over Quintin Romero, Chilean heavyweight champion. Although Stribling weighed in at only 179 to Romero's 192 3-4 pounds, he sent the Chilean to the mat twice in the third round with blows to the face.

It was Stribling's fight throughout. The bout opened with the Southerner sending long swinging lefts to the head to good advantage. He varied this attack with left jabs and right crosses to the jaw.

In the second round Stribling sent Romero to the ropes with a left hook to the head and followed this with rights to the head at will. In the third round Romero was knocked down twice. The fourth round saw the Chilean staggered and boxed into his own corner. He was again knocked down this time for the count of one and then rushed at his opponent swinging wildly. Stribling sent a left to the face in the centre of the ring, and the referee seeing that Romero was unable to continue, raised Stribling's hand and awarded him the decision.

Timberland Tract in Newfoundland

SOLD TO NORTH SYDNEY MEN.

NORTH SYDNEY, May 7.—Twenty-eight square miles of timberland have been acquired by John Pilkington and others of North Sydney, on the reaches of White Bear River, Newfoundland. The deal, which has been under negotiation for some time, was completed yesterday, and arrangements were made to-day for the sale of yearly deliveries of rough pulpwood to the Newfoundland Power & Paper Company, Ltd., Corner Brook. The property just taken up is estimated to be about one hundred thousand cords, and negotiations are now in progress for the acquisition of other tracts by the same group. The control of the areas, which are now held by Mr. Pilkington, have been, it is understood, offered to the North Sydney Lumber and Pulp Company, Ltd., of which the holder is President. The company is at present operating at different points in Cape Breton, and expect to make this season's first shipment of some twelve hundred cords to the United States within the next few weeks. The pulpwood will be loaded at points along the Bras d'Or Lakes. (If the above is correct, we trust the concessions do not include the right to export raw wood from this country).

Ranger Enquiry

The above was continued at the Central District Court yesterday afternoon, when Commander Howley was put in the box and cross-examined by Messrs. McNelly and Winter.

Mr. John Taylor, Shipwright, was also called and deposed as to the condition of the hull of the ship. Commander Howley, cross-examined by Mr. McNelly—Witness made an examination of the Ranger's boiler; he did not make a thorough examination of the boiler outside of the damaged parts, but as far as he saw it was in fairly good condition. In the case of an old boiler he would think it advisable to have a hydrostatic examination every year. It would be difficult to say if this was absolutely necessary; some engineers would make one every two or three months. If he was in charge he would make a hydrostatic test every three months. Witness did not think it necessary to have cement at the bottom of a boiler; he would not have it in any boiler. If he was an inspector he would have the cement removed every year and a hydro-static test put on it. Tapping is done to produce sound; sound is produced by vibration where there is anything solid behind it. As he saw the boiler after the ship came in, there was no danger of explosion, the principal danger would be the helplessness of the ship. Often ships get disabled from various causes; tubes often blow out, for many reasons, and have to be repaired. If the witness had been Chief Engineer of the Ranger, when the first trouble occurred, he would have insisted on getting to port, and blowing down as soon as possible. Steam blowing out of a boiler would cause erosion and the effect of this would depend on the condition of the plate. A test is very necessary on an old boiler; if it cannot stand the pressure laid down there is something wrong and the amount of steam should be less than before. Every boiler plate will stand a certain strain, but there is a point which, having been reached, it will not go beyond; this is called the elastic limit. (Here the witness outlines the regular formulae used in the testing of boiler plates). For a period of eight years witness was constantly employed inspecting boilers in the Navy, but not in the interest of the Board of Trade. In this time he never saw cement in a boiler; he understands now that it is a common occurrence for cement to be in the bottom of boilers of ships; he has not heard of it outside of this enquiry. As far as he knows, it is laid down in Lloyd's that there should be a hydrostatic test made every two years, at least he thought he had seen it. (At the request of Mr. McNelly the witness will endeavor to find in Lloyd's rules, and also look up the Canadian and American rules).

Cross-examined by Mr. Winter.

A hydro-static examination should subject all parts of a boiler to a like test. The cement will help to reduce the pressure on the plate where it was. In such a test if the boiler was in perfect condition all over you would not be able to put on sufficient pressure to make it burst out before some of the inside parts would have given away. In the present case the boiler would have burst out in the weak spots. It has been stated that cement is put in to protect the plates and rivet heads from corrosion and for convenience in cleaning out. Cement to the thickness of 2-3 or 3 inches is not necessary to accomplish the former, a cement wash, like paint would have done the same work. To take out the cement a chisel would have to be used. This would not cause any injury to the plate beyond making a mark. The cement would stand off the strain, but he would not suggest that it was put in for that purpose. The bottom part of the boiler is subject to corrosion on the inside and oxidation on the outside. When he saw the boiler his exterior was the same as it was before the ship went out to the icefields. You could tell if the plate had worn on the outside, but it would not be possible to say how much without measuring it. Looking at the plate of this particular boiler, in a casual manner, he would say it had worn. He would not test the thickness of the plate by tapping it; he would bore a hole through. This would be stopped by putting a rivet in the hole and screwing it tight.

Re-examined by Mr. Bradley.—At present there is nothing to show that there was danger of explosion. On the 11th of March it could not be said if there was or not danger from explosion. Steam coming out a boiler would cause erosion; where cement was it would cut a hole in the cement, but would not be responsible for the general thinning of the plate in the vicinity. In the case of a new boiler the pressure is tested on the plates before the boiler is made. No formula could be used on the Ranger before it was first ascertained the thickness of the plates. A cement wash would have done the same to the place and rivet heads as the cement. He is still open to conviction as to the necessity of having cement in the bottom of the boiler. In his examination of the boiler he had discovered that oxidation had been going on for some time. He also examined the engines and found them in working condition, as far as he could see without testing the various parts. After three years of service he would not think they would be in first class condition. He understands they are in the ship since 1871.

Mr. H. J. Taylor, sworn, examined by Mr. Bradley.—Witness is a master shipwright and has fifty years' experience of this work. He has known the Ranger for over 38 years; she is built of white English oak. She is now built 54 years, and is as good as the day she was built. In 1917 he gave the ship a general overhauling which cost several thousand dollars. There were put in new beams, new hatch combings, new deck, new bolting, new stern, sternpost and rudder. As far as the hull of the ship is concerned, it is as good as the first day the ship came to the country. It is in first class, seaworthy condition.

This finished all the evidence in the case, and all that now remains are the addresses of counsel engaged. On Thursday afternoon at 3:30 these will be heard.

A Market for Fish Products

VICTORIA, B.C., April 30.—With the demand for fish oil and fish meal and dried fish in the United States and the Orient far exceeding the supply, plans are under way for the construction of five or six new fish meal and fish oil plants at various points on the Vancouver Island and mainland coasts this summer. Several private concerns and one public company are in the field to take advantage of the lifted ban on pilchards on this coast, and will fish them on a large scale for reduction purposes, it is stated.

Inhabitants of the West Coast of Vancouver Island record the information that for ten years past there has been an unflinching run of pilchards, and one captain plying the West Coast route stated that he had recently sailed for six hours through an immense school of pilchards.

Nothing Like These Results
A Year Ago or Now

It is no trick to build a car that will go 65 or 70 miles an hour if it has a power plant big enough to haul a freight train.

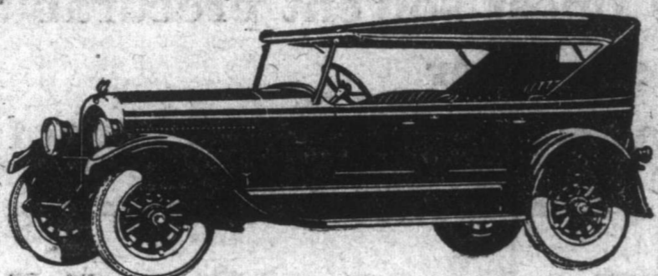

It's a great achievement to get over 70 miles an hour out of a motor of 3-inch bore and 4 1/4-inch stroke, with gasoline mileage safely above 20 miles per gallon.

And that's the wonder of the Chrysler Six—a wonder so different and so superior that Chrysler was forced to build over 32,000 cars to meet the first-year demand.

Of course you don't want to drive your Chrysler over 70 miles an hour. In fact you may never go that fast. But there is something you do want that only a speed-ability of 70 miles can give.

That something is sure, steady power for steepest hill or deepest sand, a pick-up to flash you out of a traffic tangle, sturdy, dogged pull so you can throttle to five, even two miles an hour, on high without "bucking."

That's Chrysler performance in a nutshell. You surely must drive the car. It's the only way you can fully appreciate that it is the best built car you ever rode in. We are always eager to demonstrate the Chrysler.
