DAILY

BARRIE, June 9 .- In the township of Vespra lives a wealthy farmer named Knupp, who has a daughter Annie, aged 16. This daughter is a prospective heiress to a valuable farm, which fact, added to her personal charms, tended to make her the recipient of marked attention from many young men. A young neighbor, named John Forbes, was more energetic and withall more successful in winning the affections of the fair Annie, but the parents not liking the young man, and moreents not liking the young man, and moreover being of the opinion that his motives were mercenary, forbade the suit. But John was not to be put out in this way.

May 26 last was a general holiday in the neighborhood, and on the evening of that day John took Annie to a concert.
On their way home they encountered the mother of the latter, and she ordered Forbes to go home and leave her daughter alone. This he refused to do, whereupon Mrs. Knupp, asked Annie to return with her. But it seems that a place where John was not received on a friendly footing had no charms for Annie, and she declared her intention of never again entering her father's door. John then offered to take her to his parents' home, and thither they father's door. John then offered to take her to his parents' home, and thither they went.

On the following Thursday he went to Barrie and obtained a marriage license from Mr. King of the Barrie Gazette, and on Eridday he and Annie were married at his father's house. The honeymoon was of short duration, for the next day a constable swooped down upon them and carried desolation into the family circle by arresting the bridegroom and his father, the latter on a charge of forcibly detaining the girl against the winkes and orders of her parents, and the former for fraudulently alluring her from her home. The old man Forbes, however, was liberated upon promising to appear when called upon, but as the prosecution was unable to go on with it an adjournment was made till Wednesday, Forbes being admitted to bail. The case was concluded on Thursday and the procession was unable to go on with it an adjournment was made till Wednesday, Forbes being admitted to bail. The case was concluded on Thursday and the procession of the charges specified above but committed young Forbes to stand his trial at the next assizes for perjury. This charge arises in connection with the obtaining of the license.

When it is reumembered that in order to than other the substance of the parents, it is necessary for the sex of the procession of the content of the death of the parents is necessary for the sex of the parents in the substance of the parents is necessary for the substance of the parents in the lady is of age, or that not being the case, that he has obtaining elicense it is necessary for the parents in the substance of the parents in the parents in the substance of the parents in t

After the trial the young couple promenaded the principal streets, attracting a good deal of attention. Annie's affection was of a demonstrative nature and she was loud in her profusions of loyalty to John, let the perjury case turn out as it

MONTREAL, June 9.—Henry G. Vennor, aged 45, died yesterday of rheumatism, with which he had been laid up for a long

Strange to say his brother died six weeks ago yesterday, his tather died two weeks ago and he died yesterday, the three deaths occurring on Sunday.

Mr. Vennor was educated in the high school, Montreal, and went on the geological survey some fifteen years ago. It was while exploring on the Ottawa that his attention was drawn to the possibilities of weather forecasting. In forecasting the weather Mr. Vennor's chief reliance was upon the resemblance which certain periods of weather in the past bore in regard to their general curves of temperature and rainfall, to weather immediately preceding the time of his forecast. He naturally assumed that where two distant periods were much alike the weather which followed would also be much alike. Of course there were also many other indications which aided him in forming an opinion of the probable weather. A few years ago Mr. Vennor resigned his position in the survey and opened an assayer's office in Montreal.

Scott Act Repeal in Halton. MILTON, June 9.—The officers of th anti-Scott association of Halton county met E. King Dodds here to-day for the pupose of deciding on the filing of the petition for the repeal of the Scott act in the county. A scrutiny of the lists showed that 2500 electors had signed the petition, about 300 of whom had three years ago signed the Scott act petitions. The largest parliamentary vote ever cast in Halton was about 3750. In answer to an enquiry as to the reason for thus attacking the prohibitionists in their stronghold, Mr. Dodds stated that he believed the majority of the electors in Halton were disgusted with the act and he proposed to fight them on their own vantage ground and show the electors of the other counties that the anti-Scott leaders were anxious to obtain a verdict where the act has had over two years' trial. He said he was confis dent that the repeal will be carried by a handsome majority.

A Girl's Attempt at Suicide. LONDON, Ont., June 9 .- Minnie Wilson, tepdaughter of Jas. Partlow of the 8th on, of South Dorchester, disappeared from her home Tuesday last. The next day the girl was found in a straw mow, her clothes girl was found in a straw mow, her clothes dripping with water and covered with mud. She had suffered severely from nervous prostration, caused by exposure and hunger. She had evidently attempted to commit suicide by drowning in a pond on the farm, but the cold baptism must have brought her to her senses, and she crawled out of the water and into the barn. Various causes are given for the rash act, one being that on Sunday last she drove into St. Thomas with a young man, and into St. Thomas with a young man, and after attending the services of the Sabbath day returned home about 4 o'clock in the morning, when she was rebuked by her

The Algoma Election Case. The court of appeal, consisting of Chief Justice Hagarty, Judges Patterson, Burton and Galt, delivered judgment yester-day morning on the application made in the Algoma election case. It will be remembered that a motion was made before them to reinstate a number of charges of corrupt practices by certain members of the Ontario government, which had been struck out by Justice Burton. The court yesterday dismissed the motion with costs, on the ground that any charges of that de-

A sweeping Indian Measure.

Washington, June 9.—A joint resolution was introduced in the house to-day by Smith (Pennsylvania) relative to the future treatment of Indians. It provides that congress shall solemnly pledge the faith of the nation to the policy of never breaking faith with the Indians, not to hold a tribe liable for crimes of its members, the creation of a separate Indian department under a civilian secretary; to carefully regulate the powers and duties of Indian agents, to give them permanent positions and liberal sairs, no individual experiments by theoretical agents to be permitted; abolish all privileged traderships, absolutely destroy all traffic in liquors, control the sale of arms and ammunition, preserve absolute. Kingston against the action of Rev. Gallagher, but the synod dismissed the appeal. The appeal was then carried before the general assembly, on the grounds that if this were not done it would be an open avowal that marriage with a deceased wife's sister was legal. The general assembly however yesterday afternoon sent the case back to the synod of Kingston, to be dealt with "according to the laws of the church." This decision was arrived at by a vote of 82 to 40.

The report of the board of French evan The report of the board of French evangelization was read at the quasi public meeting last night by the chairman, Rev. Principal McVicar of Montreal, who supported it with a few terse remarks. Dr. McVicar's contention was that the work of evangelizing the French people is a necessity, from both a religious and a political point of view; and he evidently believes that the movement is succeeding and will succeed.

The report was to this effect: There are 54 missionaries engaged in the work: The report was to this effect: There are 54 missionaries engaged in the work; they have 17 mission schools, with 42 mission fields, with 965 families. There are 934 persons of French origin in full communion; 972 children attend the Sunday schools. During the past year 200 people were redeemed from the darkness of Romanism and a large quantity of bibles and tracts were distributed. The missionaries and a French paper, which was doing a

He was followed by Rev. W. Armstrong He was followed by Rev. W. Armstrong of Ottawa, who took up the question propounded the other day by The World, and assumed to answer it: Why should the presbyterian church spend a large sum of money each year in trying to evangelize a christian people? Mr. Armstrong said the question was a fair one, but he did not succeed in making out a case of justification. He described the French catholics as "foreigners" and "semi-heathens," who stand as much in need of the light of the gospel as other benighted people do, but he did not attempt to show whether tangible results are discoverable in the tangible results are discoverable in the localities where the money is spent.

Rev. Mr. Tanner, whose father was for many years a colporteur amongst the French, followed, but threw no more light on the question than his predecessors—indeed, not so much.

Father Chiniquy, the famous or notorious

Father Chiniquy, the famous or notorious—according to the point of view—converted French priest, was next brought out. He speaks with all the enthusiasm and volubility of his race, and seems to be sincere enough, but his appeals were not based on statistics of work accomplished a the result of past expenditure of money. His argument is something like this: The Roman catholics hate you, protestants, and would kill you, cut your throats, if they had an opportunity. I was a priest once, and thirsted for the blood of heretics, and since I became a protestant the priests and thirsted for the blood of heretics, and since I became a protestant the priests have instigated attempts on my life. You must fight these terrible people, not with earthly weapons, but with the sword of the spirit, the word of God. This kind of appeal is not new, and is not likely to prove effective unless it is backed up by facts. That it is losing its power is shown but the very limited appeals which least facts. That it is losing its power is snown by the very limited applause which last night greeted Father Chiniquy's energetic utterances, as compared with the rousing effect of his eloquence a few years ago.

The assembly then adjourned without taking action on the report.

They said it was in a good position, that it was serving the public well, and that their main object was to continue to so serve the public, and to make a reasonable dividend for the sharemake a reasonable dividend for the share-holders. Their object was not to make a fine situation for Mr. Lawson and his wife who got $600 a year and her board for managing the place. Col. Gzowski retained the warmest interest in the experiment and before going away left $1000 at the disposal of the directors if they should find themselves in need of it. TUESDAY MORNING, JUNE 10, 1884.

It is likely that the question of co-edu proceedings of the university of Toronto to-day. There are five girls who hav passed the third year examination in the course. These young ladies and those who are of the years below them feel very much tion of being itself independent of both the want of teaching assistance in getting up their work, but as yet they are unable o obtain it. There is no ladies' school which teaches the work of the arts course, and the doors of University college, which is the teaching side of the provincial university, are closed to them. An attempt has been made to throw open University college to women, and has been urged withmore or less energy in the public prints and in the provincial legislature. We admit that the young women should have as much assistance in getting up their work as have the male students, but we cannot see our way as yet to the adoption of the principle of co-education. We would much rather see a ladies' college erected in the park, alongside of the provincial university, where the professors and lecturers of University college might teach and lecture for the benefit of the young women. This is the plan adopted at Cambridge and at Harvard. It would cost very little to put such a scheme into force. A good building could be put up for a very reasonable amount, and the only additional expense, in the way of teaching, required, would be the employment of a lady principal and assistant. As the finances now stand they will not bear the burden of this additional expense, but the legislature, or the ladies of the province, might take upon themselves the responsithe right way, there ought to be no trouble in floating such a college, and were it started there would be no need for propos-ing co-education or any other measure so sweeping as this would prove to be. If such a college is not provided then coeducation, whether it be for good or evil, will have to be adopted. Perhaps Mr. Ross, the minister of education, will be

The Gravenhurst and Callander Link. It is reported, and we believe on good authority, that work on this important railway link will certainly be commenced before Dominion day, and completed within two years. That ought to be time enough to build about 110 miles of road present conditions being exceedingly favorable. The locality of the work can be easily reached from the front, and both has been further confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which would indeed save a little on the whole distance from Toronto to Winnipeg, but which would at the same time add so much to the length and cost of the link that the proposal could not be entertained by any responsible parties. It would be in effect the doubling of some forty or fifty miles of the Canadian Pacific railway main should at the same time add so much to the length and cost of the link that taineer, for $31.20 for the twelve months. It would be in effect the doubling of some forty or fifty miles of the Canadian Pacific railway main would veto and stamp out the barbarism old days of silevery. Whites as well as blacks are sold, and at a recent county young, untried and ambitious people—would probably attempt to do wonders, and might succeed. You would have the German—penhanged are too easily found. But, would probably attem line, a needless throwing away of a great deal of money, with only the smallest tractional benefit in prospect. What ought to be done, and what we hope to see done, is to run the line to the original Callander, at the east end of Lake Nipissing. By so doing the Canadian Pacific railway main line would be reached with but this is not all. The link line would thus traverse a valuable section of country, lying between Gravenhurst and the lake, which would be quickly settled, and out of which large supplies of timber would be

Both Toronto people and Hamilton people should rejoice that the day draws near for the commencement of this important work, with every prospect of its being finished "on time." The money being provided, there should be, no hindrance and no therefore fairly be expected that the link recting western Ontario with the Canadian Pacific Railway will be completed and in operation ere two years more have passed. By that time, again, the Lake Superior section of the Canadian Pacific railway ought to be completed too. Should all this be realized, then there are only two more winters to come—1884-85 and 1885-86—before we shall be able to go through by rail to Winnipeg on Canadian ground all the way. And this important addition to the material independence of Canada will be something to feel proud ot, when it comes. It will be one nail more, and a clincher at that, in the coffin of annexation, commercial union, reciprocity, and all such like. Canada wants none of them, she proposes to have a destiny of her own, and to work it out. A miserable and ignoble exchange it would being compelled to attempt the defence of an indefensible country. Secondly, the destruction which would befall Canada during the process of being defended. Let us notice what would happen here.

It appears to me that to-day Britain might fairly, for a certain number of these dynamite outrages, demand indemnity from the States. And it is pretty certain that America would grant nothing of the sort. A short time more and there will probably be cause for additional demands.

Let us suppose these demands made and refused—arbitration proposed and rejected —the British and American representatives withdrawn from Washington and London, What the sufferings of the non-combatant Pacific railway ought to be completed too. cation will come up at the commencement although in the latter case the result may be somewhat tardier in approaching. Every once in a while society is startled and a small or large circle of friends called and a small or large circle of friends called upon to endure reproach and humiliation, borce. A good building could be put up the cause an investigation has been made into certain accounts, and the only additional expense, in the way of teaching, equired, would be the employment of a ady principal and assistant. Colonel Burnside was cashier of the postoffice department at Washington and a salary of $2100. The colonel kept slature, or the ladies of the province, night take upon themselves the responsibility of carrying it out. Gone about in he right way, there ought to be no trouble as the color of the post of the society here in plenty, and well as the circles in the old country, we have somewhere in Canada, though no body here, I believe, has yet discovered their position. But arms and munitions would be pressed into swould certainly be here in plenty, and every available man would be pressed into the service. There would be such an all-embracing draft of men for military purposes throughout all Canada, from Quebec to Vancouver, as few countries have seen. For the hope would be that if the Americans were seriously defeated in the first accounts, and the only and the work. But, unfortunately, instead of the work. An independent commercial policy, and an independent railway system—these together must form the material basis for the continued political existence of Canada as an independent nation. And a link of some importance in the whole material chain is this very bit of railway now referred to, which is to have the further recommendation of being itself independent of both the canadian Patron of being itself independent of both states, which, since their protective pro-

Britain, while she can afford subsidies, will seldom want allies. There is something exceedingly captivating to the military mind in the idea of damaging one neighbor at the expense of another, and it is highly probable that, in a. war with the States, which, since their protective proclivities, are not the most popular with Europeans, she might get troops not far from where she got them before. Armies are larger now, where she got some from where she got them before. Armies are larger now; where she got some thousands she might get many thousands, and the many might be transported to America perhaps as easily and cheaply as the few were a hundred years ago, when the passage across might be anything from a month to a year. You remember the story of the German general. They from a month to a year. You remember the story of the German general. They had been a long while out, and he presented himself in full uniform to the English captain, "Sir," he said; "I am aware that here I am subordinate; but my duty to his serene highness, the grand duke of Hesse-Darmstadt whose troops I have the honor to command, compels me to enquire

Britain is not famed for commencing wars wisely, and therefore, probably she would send her troops and those of her allies to the Canadian frontier. Besides, she would naturally wish to obtain the services of those six hundred thousand trained riflemen whom, it is reported in well informed circles in the old country, thousands would willingly take up arms.
Those who hesitated, there would be plenty of British and colonial troops to compel.
Some few hundreds, maybe thousands, of Canadians would come back from the

and in this feeling, combined with the natural indetermination to resist attack, many whisper to those who expressed surprise that "his wife had received a legacy," seemed to quiet nearly every doubt how the colonel managed to make both ends meet. But Postmaster-General Greeham was not satisfied with such a vague statement, and in an unlucky moment, for the colonel, he ordered an investigation regarding the legacy. It was ascertained that the legacy was "speculation," and an hour's examination of the cashier's accounts showed that he was $45,000 short.

In nearly every walk of life, when the desire to live higher than the income affords is indulged in, it becomes an irresistible impulse and then a fixed habit, Something must be done to cover the deficiency, and that something generally involves the thoughtless man more and more would only be limited by what they could get in before their ports were blockaded. Yet nobody questions the beart, or personability of this to the frontier, and the demand for arms and ammunition of all sorts would only be limited by what they could make in their factories or what they could get in before their ports were blockaded. Throughout the country generally the number of recruits would only be limited by the capacity to arm and drill them. Vast camps would be established in many parts and large bodies of men would begin to march to-deeply. Sometimes he speculates, again be bearing the borrows, with faint hopes of getting balabor and supplies can be obtained at reasonable cost. Steel rails never were so cheap as they are now, and on the whole were no reason why the work of construction should not be done both cheaply and expeditiously. There should not be any able-bodied men going idle on the streets of Toronto after this work gets stated.

Referring to some remarks made by the Globe, and a letter in reply published in the same paper, we took occasion to ask whether there were two Callanders, and, if so, which was the right one. We believe the writer of the letter in the Globe was right in saying that there are two—the original Callander, at or near to the southeastern corner of Lake Nipissing, and Callander, at or near to the southeastern corner of Lake Nipissing, and as letter or the proper location of the connecting link has been further confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the larges and and a search of purposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the larges and a search of purposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the larges and a search of purposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the of purposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the confused by a proposal to run the confused by a proposal to run the confused by a proposal to run it away west of Lake Nipissing, which was the confused by a proposal to run the confused grade, and we are shown quotations from the highest authorities, to satisfy us that faulty modes and habits contracted in the lower grades, are either almost or altogether incurable. Then, if we try a school of the lowest grade, we are told, perhaps in a sort of noli-me-tangere tone, that the little of the work done there, was just about perfect, and that the mischief complained of must have been done at some of the pupil's stopping places on the way up. Then, as a last chance, we try an inter-

It is probable that none of these divisions would number less than a hundred thousand men, while that sent against Montreal would be much larger, and there would be plenty in reserve to reinforce or to increase them.

Both health and spirits are depressed. Their occupants have not only the depressing effect of the lack of light and sun to contend against, but the reaction consequent upon living in unwholesome conditions. All the rooms in the house should have both light and sunshine freely admitted at all times, whether they are wanted.

Nelson Sizer once said, when making a phrenological examination: "Be as much as possible in the sunshine. People who live in dark rooms and wear black are pale all through." You cannot have too much of light and sunshine, either in your lives or in your houses, for good health. You may live; but is not all of life to live, Merely to exist is but a small part of our work in this world. We should so live that body and mind are at all times in their heat condition.

so, could do, when he knew it, was to go away and cry. I didn't shed a tear. To me it seemed to make him more of an angel. We didn't need words, he and I; we could talk without them.

"I staid with him as long as they would keep me; but the time came when they began to think of teachers for him and of making him manly, and a nurse was wanted no longer. I went to another child; but every year, in summer time, I paid him one visit. He was always glad to see me, and I always found him waiting for me; at first on the porch, or at the garden gate; but by-and-by, as he grew to be a big boy, he used to come down to the river one had to cross just there, and wait with a pretty boat they owned, to row his old nurse across. And well he used the oars, and a blithe, bright young fellow he was, though he'd never heard a sound or uttered a word in all his life.

"And they had taught him to write and to draw. I've a picture he made of me now. And he could ride as well as row, and was a boy to be proud of.

"Year by year I saw him grow, and every year brighter and handsomer.

"He'd grown to be 16, and I was ten miles away, caring for twins, when one midsummer there came a letter from Mr.

almost ran down to the river side, wondering who would row me over. Master Eddie was ill. I thought it might be Black Peter, the coachman, who could tell me just how my boy really was.

"But as I got near the bank I saw, just as I had seen every summer for years and years, the pretty boat lying there, and it it a slender young figure, with gold brown hair, leaning on an oar and looking out for me. I was ready to dance with joy at the sight.

"You're better, then, Master Eddie," I said, just as I'd have spoken to one who could hear. I often did that, and often he seemed to understand me. But he did not jump up and kiss me, as he always did be-fore; he only made room for me in the boat, and looked at me with his great eyes, boat, and looked at me with his great eyes, greater than ever, and his face as pale as any lily; such a frozen look on his features too; no change in them, as there used to be—now a smile, now a little puzzled frown, now a dimple you'd not have guessed at a moment before. I saw he had been very bad, and I told him on my fingers that he should have been in bed and not there was nothing but a stone-mason." "I know where you got that information," quietly remarked the

I trembled all over as I thought it, and I looked again. His eyes met mine in such a strange, strange way, that I turned cold. After that I did not try to say anything to him. He rowed the boat slowly and softly, and I sat and looked at him, just as cold, from head to foot, as any lump of softly, and I sat and looked at him, just as cold, from head to foot, as any lump of ice. It took five minutes to cross the river, and it seemed at least an hour from the moment we left one bank until we touched the other. I had not put a hand upon my darling; somehow I did not dare, he seemed so different from himself.

"I was frightened and sick. I could hear my heart beat, and my hands shook as they lay together in,my lap; but all of a sudden all those strange feelings left me.

"We had touched the shore, and my boy had started up. He stood before me, with a beautiful smile upon his face, and both a beautiful smile upon his face, and both hands held out toward me; and I heard him, plain as I ever heard any words in this world—heard him, who had never spoken in his life, say 'Farewell!' that and nothing else; but he said it three times: 'Farewell, farewell,' and then there was no one in the boat but I.
He was gone; but I did not see him go.
"I did not faint or scream. I was like one in a dream. I hurried out of the boat, and up to the house. The shutters were closed, and there was crape on the door, but I did not need that to tell me Master Eddie was dead; I knew it already.

"I know people don't believe the story, but for all that it is true. I saw Master
Eddie in the boat beside me as plain as I see you, and I heard him say, 'Farewell heard it, and did not dream it. And shall always believe and hope that the boy who loved me so that he waited this side of heaven to say farewell to me, will wait somewhere there, it I win it, to welcome

NERVOUSNESS IN WOMEN.

American women is living too much in the darkness when indoors, says the Herald of Health. The rooms are kept dark to save the carpets and keep out the flies, and as a consequence both the house and the occu-pants lack the benefits of the fresh air and sunshine. Houses from which the sun is Somehow to her it was true, and this it excluded are not wholesome. There is alia. that has been achieved in modern science has been attained by the Dixon treatmen Craig. It was written a little careless and unsteady for him, but he prided himself on a fine hand, and was very particular about everything. And this is what it said:

"DEAR MARGARET: Come to see me at once. Eddie wants you; he's not very well. Skating last winter, he broke through the ice, and took a cold that has not left him. He can't talk to others as he can to you, and he is lonely. I'll recompense you for any loss, if you will be his nurse until he is well.

WARREN CRAIG.

In the grasp of persons with large-hearted, generous minds, there is a "whole-soul" expression most refreshing and acceptable to kindred spirits, but when a man presents you with a few cold, clammy, lifeless fingers, feeling very much like a dead fish, and expects you to do all the shaking, it will naturally make you think of the hospital and other cheerful things.

Contrary to this style there is a habit among a rude class of giving your hand a crushing grasp, which is often most painful. It these cases there may be great kindness and a "strong" affection, but it is as crude as it is hearty.

If the grasp is warm, ardent and vigorous, so is the disposition. If it is cool, formal and without emotion, so is the character. If it is magnetic and animating, the disposition is the same. As we shake hands so we feel, so we are. hands so we feel, so we are.

ed by a spirit which, so far as we know, we could not find in any English lovesongs whatever-a spirit of graceful and, to our minds, charming playfulness, so expressed that you never doubt for a moment that the light, sometimes derisive. words cover an affectionateness—not a passion, mind—so deep that but for the laugh it might give way in tears. English poets have many moods in their love-songs, but not, we think, exactly this one—not this union of sincere feeling with an inner sense of a certain comedy in the situation, as if the poet would not suffer himself to be quite serious. We could produce from not, we think, exactly this one—not this union of sincere feeling with an inner sense of a certain comedy in the situation, as if the poet would not suffer himself to be quite serious. We could produce from English collections specimens burning with passion, alive with worship, saturated with affectionateness, full of longing, of repture, or of that melancholy "want," that sense of something missing and never to be replaced, which is the distinctive note of the English poetry of love. But for the special tone of these Irish songs, this love-making by a man who is dancing the while, yet in dancing is full of the wish to win his love, and fearful lest in his highest jumps he should ever cease to seem as admiring as he feels, we should, we fear, in English poetry look in vain.

The Man-Frog and Man-Goose.

From Chambers' Journal.

The man-frog was first exhibited in 1866. at a French country fete. He had a stout ill-shapen body, covered with a skin like a leather bottle, and a face exactly like a frog's, large eyes, an enormous mouth, and the skin cold and clammy. He attracted a good deal of attention from the Academy of medicine, and a delegate was deputed to make him an object of study. He went all over France; and, at the end of a few years retired to his native place, Puyre, in Gers. The man with the goose's head was first shown at the Gingerbread fair in 1872. He was 20 years of age, had round eyes, a long and flat nose the shape and size of a goose's bill, an immensely long neck, and was without a single hair on his head. He only wanted feathers to make him complete. The effect of his interminably long neck twisted about was extremely ludicrous, and was so much appreleather bottle, and a face exactly like a At Vienna in the trial of Stellmacher yesterday he confessed to the murder of Detective Bloch, and said it was committed for the furtherance of anarchist designs, but denied he was concerned in the murder of banker Essert.
