CANADA

HOUSE OF COMMONS DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

FIRST SESSION—TWENTY EIGHTH PARLIAMENT

17 ELIZABETH II

VOLUME VI, 1969

COMPRISING THE PERIOD FROM THE NINETEENTH DAY OF FEBRUARY, 1969, TO THE NINETEENTH DAY OF MARCH, 1969, INCLUSIVE.

INDEX ISSUED IN A SEPARATE VOLUME

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER, OTTAWA, 1969

29180—361½

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 19, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—DOCUMENT ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN ISSUED BY HON. MEMBER FOR YORK EAST RESPECTING NEW RULES

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which I think should be brought to the attention of Your Honour and of the house, and in respect of which I have given notice pursuant to the appropriate standing order. This matter of privilege is one that I think affects to a considerable extent the members of this house; certainly it affects the hon. members on the government side directly, and I suppose all members indirectly.

I come directly to the point. My question of privilege arises from a statement that is made in what appears to be a form letter sent out by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) to what would appear to be the electors of his constituency. With much of what he says in his letter or circular I agree, and I want to make it plain that I am not making any charges or suggestion, or saying anything derogatory about the hon. member. The particular part of the letter that needs to be brought to the attention of the house reads as follows:

> The new rules are now in effect, in the House of Commons, and since you will recall that I fought for these changes for six years, I am pleased to report that the business of the House of Commons will at long last progress with some efficiency.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: I am glad the hon. members are seizing the only opportunity that they will have to applaud the contents of this letter. It continues:

> There have been some disappointments, mostly in the composition and power of the committees, because although the committees have been given a great deal of work to do, the government members of the committee have been instructed to make no changes to the bills, coming before the committee—

Some hon. Members: Shame.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Baldwin: I continue:

> —and to vote exactly as they are told by the government. However, since I have dealt with this at some length in a speech which was well covered by the press, I shall not go further into this subject, at this time.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Baldwin: If this letter is widely circulated in Toronto hon. members on the government side of the house may be subjected to criticism or abuse which this letter is bound to generate.

To show that there is some foundation to my question of privilege may I quote from citation 210 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, third edition:

> The privilege of freedom of speech enjoyed by members of parliament is in truth the privilege of their constituents. It is secured to members not for their personal benefit, but to enable them to discharge the functions of their office—

In some instances that rule has been exercised to protect hon. members from prosecution. To some extent the encroachments of the party system in the House of Commons have diminished this rule. Sometimes, on questions of principle, we vote by party. However, we were led to believe after June 25 that all this was to be changed and that the millenium had arrived, the golden age. While debating certain proposals in the Procedure Committee we were told that in the new committee system hon. members supporting the government, hon. members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and hon. members of all other parties could park their partisanship outside the committee room and, in the "clubby" spirit of the new committees, work with one another for the benefit of the people of Canada. If the contents of the letter I have referred to are correct, and I hope the Prime Minister will take the opportunity to contradict what the letter says, the government has destroyed the edifice of the committee system on which our new rules are predicated. Despite what some of the more experienced members of my party said, I was naïve enough to believe that partisanship would have no place in our committee structure. It appears I was mistaken.

Alleged Issue of Document on New Rules

It might be well to put on record again comments made by the Prime Minister a few short years ago. They appeared in a magazine, and were quoted at page 2801 of Hansard for November 15, 1968. In particular the Prime Minister, as reported on that page of Hansard, wrote these words as they are set out in the article in question:

I am only concerned with the anti-democratic reflexes of spineless Liberal herd.

We thought that those words applied to a situation of the past. I urge the right hon. gentleman to rise and say publicly that hon. members of his party have every freedom to go into a committee room under the committee system which now prevails and vote as they see fit; and that in the discussion of those questions which are important and of benefit to the people of Canada they have full freedom of expression which members of parliament must have to discharge their responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt that it is the intention of hon. members to have protracted discussion on the point of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River. The Chair has to decide whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. I think that the Chair can immediately, without further debate, make a ruling on that point. I am sure if one hon. member is allowed to participate further in the debate it may go on for a while. Wednesday is a short day, and perhaps we ought to go on to the business on today's order paper.

I suggest that if any group of hon. members or any one hon. member is concerned about the question of privilege, it would be hon. members of the government or the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). The matter has not been raised as a question of privilege by the hon. member for York East, and I doubt very much if, in the circumstances, the hon. member for Peace River has raised a legitimate question of privilege. In any event, the question has not been followed by a motion. There being no motion before the house I suggest that the Chair has no alternative except to declare that there shall be no discussion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is saved.

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Ninth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.—Mr. Gillespie.

[Editor's Note: Text of report above referred to appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SANDFORD, N.S.,—CONTRACTS TO L. W. SHAW

Question No. 914—Mr. Comeau:

How many contracts have been awarded to Leonard W. Shaw, of Sandford, N.S. since 1963 and what was the value of each?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Since 1963, the following contracts were awarded as a result of public tender calls on which he was the lowest bidder:

		$
1964
Comeau's Hill	Wharf repairs	5,287.00
Short Beach	Deck repairs	6,476.40
Lr. Surettes Island	Wharf extension	2,969.50
1965
Yarmouth	Paving	4,987.10
Bear Point	Deck repairs	6,476.40
Spectacle Island	Breakwater construction	9,919.00
1966
Short Beach	Breakwater repairs	8,939.60
Deep Cove	Breakwater	12,006.25
1967
Sandford	Groyne reconstruction	9,277.60
Seal Island	Skidway repair	8,667.00
Swim's Point	Repair floating breakwater	2,654.80
Pinkney's Point	Wharf widening	50,112.96
Port Maitland	Breakwater repairs	15,071.50

1968		$
Short Beach	Breakwater repairs	44,213.38
Chegoggin Dyke	Breakwater repairs	34,503.10
Goose Bay	Wharf repairs	6,771.50
Dennis Point	Wharf repairs	8,923.09
L. E. Pubnico	Wharf improvements	8,737.50

The following contracts were awarded as a result of invited tenders to not less than three (3) firms on which he was the lowest bidder:

1964		$
New Edinburgh	Wharf repairs	519.00
Church Point	Wharf repairs	2,140.32
Sandford Bridge	Reconstruction	1,250.00
Turpentine Island	Wharf repairs	2,308.00
Porter's Cove	Wharf repairs	1,299.00
L. E. Pubnico	Wharf repairs	3,679.75
Lr. Plymouth	Wharf repairs	432.00
1965
Bluff Head	Dredging	274.00
Salmon River	Breakwater repairs	1,625.00
Port Maitland	Breakwater repairs	4,966.05
Lr. Wedgeport	Float	2,930.00
Yarmouth	Float	6,239.00
1966
Newellton	Wave dampener	3,475.80
Yarmouth	Tide gauge	2,659.75
Port Maitland	Paving	3,275.35
Dennis Point	Deck repairs	3,298.00
Goose Bay	Fender repairs	565.80
Pinkney's Point	Barricade	98.00
Lr. Plymouth	Deck repairs	1,125.00
1967
Pinkney's Point	Barricade	98.00
Meteghan	Fender repairs	2,430.00
Newellton	Fender improvements	875.00
Wedgepoint	Barricade & remove debris	178.00
Carleton Village	Dredging	960.00
L. E. Pubnico	Wharf repairs	1,838.00
Saulnierville	Deck repairs	425.00
Amirault's Hill	Wharf repairs	388.50
1968
Porter's Cove	Barricade	106.00
Dennis Point	Breakwater repairs	4,265.00
Ledge Harbour	Breakwater repairs	5,725.00
Chegoggin Point	Breakwater repairs	367.70
L. E. Pubnico	Barricade	124.00
Wedgepoint	Wharf repairs	3,200.00
Short Beach	Dredging	2,160.00
Middle E. Pubnico	Wharf repairs	3,222.00
Stoney Island	Approach widening	616.00
Newellton	Fender improvements	894.00
South Side	Fender repairs	496.00
Falls Point	Derrick improvements	150.00
Swim's Point	Road repairs	1,455.00

Questions

The following contracts were awarded as a result of requests for quotations for minor or emergency work:

1965		$
Amirault's Hill	Wharf repairs	40.00
Cape St. Mary's	Float	900.00
Lr. Wedgeport	Wharf repairs	120.00
Amirault's Hill	Wharf repairs	100.00
Chegoggin Point	Deck repairs	75.00
Yarmouth	Wharf repairs	125.00
Sluice Point	Derrick	150.00
Cape St. Mary's	Wharf repairs	275.00
Yarmouth	Remove float	100.00
Pembroke	Dredging	150.00
1966
Little River Harbour	Wharf repairs	500.00
Salmon River	Wharf repairs	50.00
Cheboque Town Pt.	Repairs to guard	100.00
Cheboque Town Pt.	Wharf repairs	50.00
Bear Point	Ladder	60.00
Yarmouth	Wharf repairs	180.00
Dennis Point	Ladder	90.00
Short Beach	Breakwater repairs	1,200.00
Wedgeport	Dredging	750.00
Cheboque Town Pt.	Light	250.00
Yarmouth	Wharf repairs	426.00
Yarmouth	Wharf repairs	190.00
Sandford	Bridge repairs	75.00
Sandford	Breakwater repairs	200.00
Yarmouth	Float	100.00
Cheboque Town Pt.	Approach repairs	75.00
Cape St. Mary's	Float	455.00
Port Maitland	Derrick	1,020.00
1967
Yarmouth	Wharf repairs	60.00
Sandford	Remove sand	75.00
Short Beach	Ladder	150.00
Chegoggin Dyke	Dredging	425.00
Short Beach	Deck repairs	390.00
Sandford	Ladder	100.00
Sandford	Paving	472.50
Middle E. Pubnico	Ladder	300.00
1968
Cape St. Mary's	Wharf repairs	99.00
Kelly's Cove	Removal of debris	275.00
Sluice Point	Wharf repairs	75.00
Morris Island	Approach repairs	65.00
Abbott's Harbour	Wharf repairs	50.00
Sandford	Dredging	450.00
Lr. Wedgeport	Resetting float	90.00
Lr. Wedgeport	Derrick repairs	170.00
Port Maitland	Tide gate repairs	40.00
Towing Yarmouth-Digby	Float	300.00
Yarmouth	Derrick repairs	85.00
Short Beach	Breakwater repairs	100.00
Sandford	Clear deck	50.00
Kelly Cove	Clear deck	200.00
Yarmouth	Derrick repairs	475.00

[Mr. Laing (Vancouver South).]

PRIME MINISTERS CONFERENCE, JANUARY, 1969

Question No. 1,075—Mr. Mazankowski:

1. Who will be attending the Commonwealth Prime Ministers' Conference in London, England in January 1969, besides the Prime Minister?

2. What are their individual functions in the government at present?

3. What will be their individual functions at the Conference?

4. What accommodation has been reserved for the Canadian delegation, at what hotel, by suite and room type?

5. What is the expected cost of this accommodation per day?

6. Other than dormitory accommodation, has the government reserved any other rooms in this hotel, such as reception rooms?

7. What is the total budget allocated to this trip?

8. What was the total cost of the last Canadian delegation to the Commonwealth Prime Minister's Conference?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): 1. (a) Mr. R. G. Robertson; (b) Mr. M. Cadieux; (c) Mr. R. E. Collins; (d) Mr. D. M. Cornett; (e) Mr. G. G. Riddell; (f) Mr. Roméo LeBlanc; (g) Mr. Gordon Gibson; (h) Mr. Ivan Head; (i) Mr. A. Donnelly; (j) Mr. Vic Chapman; (k) Miss C. Viau; (l) Miss A. L. Walls; (m) Miss T. Brazeau; (n) Inspector Buchanan; (o) Mr. Raymond Robichaud; (p) Mr. James Walker; (q) Mrs. Sheila Sojonky.

2. (a) Clerk of the Privy Council and secretary to the Cabinet; (b) Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; (c) Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs; (d) Head of Commonwealth Division, Dept. of External Affairs; (e) Head of African and Middle Eastern Division, Dept. of External Affairs; (f) Prime Minister's Press Secretary; (g) Executive Assistant to the Prime Minister; (h) Legislative Assistant to the Prime Minister; (i) Assistant Press Secretary to the Prime Minister; (j) Press Assistant to the Prime Minister; (k) Private Secretary to the Prime Minister; (l) Executive Assistant to the Clerk of the Privy Council; (m) Secretary to the Prime Minister's Press Secretary; (n) Royal Canadian Mounted Police Officer; (o) Interpreter; (p) Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister; (q) Secretary to the Prime Minister's Executive Assistant.

3. Messrs. Robertson, Cadieux, Collins, Cornett, Riddell, Head and Walker will assist the Prime Minister on substantive matters within their areas of competence; the functions of the other persons are as indicated by their designations.

4. Accommodation for the use of the delegation was reserved at Claridge's Hotel, London. The accommodation consisted of a suite for the Prime Minister, a bedroom and salon for Messrs. Robertson, Cadieux, Gibson and LeBlanc, a bedroom for each of the other persons on the delegation, office space, a press briefing room, and a delegates' lounge.

5. The actual daily cost of this accommodation, including service charges and Selective Employment Tax, was: Delegates' accommodation, £254.5.6; Office space, £53.9.6; Press room, £49.9.0; Delegates' Lounge, £31.12.6.

6. See the answer to Part 4.

7. Expenses for international conferences of this kind are defrayed from the Department of External Affairs vote for International Conferences (see page 120 of Revised Main Estimates, 1968-69). The total figure for this item in the estimates is based on the number of conferences anticipated in any one fiscal year, and taking into account expenses of previous meetings, rather than by allocating a specific budget figure to each individual conference. A review of Appendix 7 of the Department's Annual Report for 1967 shows that Canada was officially represented at more that 200 conferences in that year.

8. $15,283.

DEATHS FROM ALCOHOLISM, DRUGS AND SUICIDE

Question No. 1,198—Mr. Caouette:

For each year since 1965, in each province, what were the number of deaths per thousand persons attributable to (a) alcoholism (b) drug addiction (c) suicide?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports as follows:

Attached is a table showing the number of deaths and the crude death rates per 100,000 population for Canada and each province due to or associated with alcoholism and suicide. No information is available on deaths attributable to "drug addiction".

Deaths Due to Alcoholism and Suicide, Canada and Provinces, 1965–1967

	Canada	Nfld.	P.E.I.	N.S.	N.B.	Que.	Ont.	Man.	Sask.	Alta.	B.C.	Yukon	N.W.T..
1965
Alcoholism	196	—	3	8	9	42	74	13	2	13	30	—	2
Alcoholic psychosis	28	—	—	—	—	3	8	—	1	3	13	—	—
Cirrhosis of liver—with alcoholism	378	—	1	1	3	107	160	19	5	21	61	—	—
Total	602	—	4	9	12	152	242	32	8	37	104	—	2
Rate*	3.1	—	3.7	1.2	2.0	2.7	3.6	3.3	0.8	2.6	5.8	—	7.4
1966
Alcoholism	225	—	3	7	7	44	95	9	7	20	31	1	1
Alcoholic psychosis	19	—	—	—	2	6	5	—	—	2	4	—	—
Cirrhosis of liver—with alcoholism	378	—	—	5	3	123	160	14	3	23	47	—	—
Total	622	—	3	12	12	173	260	23	10	45	82	1	1
Rate*	3.1	—	2.8	1.6	1.9	3.0	3.7	2.4	1.0	3.1	4.4	6.9	3.5
1967
Alcoholism	256	1	4	16	7	47	103	12	5	23	37	1	—
Alcoholic psychosis	29	—	—	2	—	7	6	1	1	3	8	—	1
Cirrhosis of liver—with alcoholism	422	3	—	4	5	123	174	22	13	22	54	1	1
Total	707	4	4	22	12	177	283	35	19	48	99	2	2
Rate*	3.5	0.8	3.7	2.9	1.9	3.0	4.0	3.6	2.0	3.2	5.1	13.3	6.9
Suicide
1965
No.	1,715	23	6	65	35	323	635	101	97	160	267	2	1
Rate*	8.7	4.7	5.5	8.6	5.7	5.7	9.4	10.5	10.2	11.0	14.9	14.3	3.7
1966
No.	1,715	15	8	69	25	365	661	102	77	146	240	4	3
Rate*	8.6	3.0	7.4	9.1	4.1	6.3	9.5	10.6	8.1	10.0	12.8	27.8	10.4
1967
No.	1,841	10	10	57	30	396	755	101	82	137	259	2	2
Rate*	9.0	2.0	9.2	7.5	4.8	6.7	10.6	10.5	8.6	9.2	13.3	13.3	6.9

*Per 100,000 population.

[English]

SASKATOON-BIGGAR INDIAN HOUSING

Question No. 1,210—Mr. Gleave:

1. (a) How many new houses were built in each Indian Reserve within the federal constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar during 1967 and 1968 (b) at what cost to the federal government?

2. (a) How many are expected to be built in 1969 (b) at what expected cost to the federal government?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): There are two Indian reserves within the federal constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar namely, the One Arrow and the Beardy (also includes Okemasis).

1. (a)

	One Arrow	Beardy (Okemasis)
1967	7	8
1968	5	9
(b)
1967	49,000	59,350
1968	35,209	64,773
2. (a)
1969	3	7
(b)
1969	21,000	49,000

*SUPERANNUATION FUND INTEREST RATE

Question No. 1,224—Mr. McCleave:

1. What interest rate does the government pay for the use of monies in the superannuation fund of federal employees?

2. What has been the range of the interest rate the government is paying for borrowings of money from other sources during the past six months?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): (a) Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Section 32(1) of the Public Service Superannuation Act, interest is credited to the superannuation accounts on the last day of each quarter in the fiscal year calculated at the rate of 1 per cent of the balance to the credit of the account on the last day of the preceding quarter, (b) In lieu of crediting interest at a higher rate than that described in paragraph (a), the government makes special credits to the superannuation account, pursuant to Section 32(2) and (3). It is estimated that during the fiscal year 1968-69, these special credits will be equivalent to interest at a rate of 3½ per cent to 4 per cent per annum in addition to the rate mentioned in paragraph (a). This is in response to the first part of the question.

In response to the second part of the question, the average yields at the weekly tender of treasury bills over the past six months ranges from a low of 5.43 per cent on August 28, 1968 to a high of 6.65 per cent on January 9, 1969.

The amount, coupon rate, and yield at time of issue of the government's borrowings in the bond market over the past six months are set forth in a table and I would ask the consent of the house that this table be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member have leave?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The table above referred to is as follows.]

Date of Issue	Amount of (M of $)	Coupon Rate (%)	Maturity	Yield at time of issue (%)
August 1	35	6½	15/12/69	6.65
August 1	105	6¾	1/10/70	6.75
August 1	260	7	1/4/73	7.00
October 1	35	6	15/2/70	6.11
October 1	200	6¼	1/10/71	6.25
October 1	200	6½	1/4/70	6.60
October 1	100	6½	1/10/95	6.60
December 15	50	6¼	1/5/70	6.28
December 15	100	6¼	1/4/71	6.36

29180—362½

Questions

RAILWAY CROSSING ACCIDENTS

Question No. 1,227—Mr. Lewis:

1. What are the figures on accidents at railway crossings for each of the years 1960 to 1968?

2. What research is presently being conducted into safety-warning devices?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows:

1.

Year	Accidents	Killed	Injured
1960	473	172	628
1961	444	145	542
1962	428	154	542
1963	476	160	618
1964	433	154	570
1965	452	150	540
1966	478	186	621
1967	447	177	521
1968	428	120	568

2. The Canadian Transport Commission has under continuing study and investigation the improvement of existing warning devices and the development of any new devices which come to its attention. Members of the Engineering staff of the Commission are active members of the Canadian Standards Association, the Association of American Railways and the American Railway Engineering Association who continually engage in research and investigation of methods of improving railway and crossing safety. At the present time study and experiment is being conducted, in collaboration with the National Research Council, on a type of revolving light for use on locomotives designed to give additional warning to motorists of trains approaching crossings.

AIRPORT CEILING AND VISIBILITY

Question No. 1,231—Mr. McGrath:

1. What were the number of hours when the ceiling was less than 200 feet and/or visibility less than a ½ mile for the following airports for the year 1967: St. John's, Nfld., Gander, Nfld., Stephenville, Nfld., Moncton, N.B., Sydney, N.S., Halifax International, Montreal International and Toronto International?

2. What were the number of hours when the ceiling was less than 200 feet to 400 feet and/or visibility ½ to ¾ of a mile for the following airports for the year 1967: St. John's, Nfld., Gander, Nfld., Stephenville, Nfld., Moncton, N.B., Sydney, N.S., Halifax International, Montreal International and Toronto International?

3. What were the number of hours when the ceiling was less than 500 to 900 feet and/or visibility 1 to 2½ miles, for the following airports for the year 1967: St. John's, Nfld., Gander, Nfld., Stephenville, Nfld., Moncton, N.B., Sydney, N.S., Halifax International, Montreal International and Toronto International?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. St. John's, Nfld. 608; Gander, Nfld. 254; Stephenville, Nfld. 220; Moncton, N.B. 202; Sydney, N.S. 323; Halifax International 787; Montreal International 51; Toronto International 135.

2. If it is meant when the ceiling was 200 feet to 400 feet and/or visibility ½ to ¾ mile the answer is St. John's, Nfld. 1275; Gander, Nfld. 675; Stephenville, Nfld. 374; Moncton, N.B. 620; Sydney, N.S. 1059; Halifax International 1098; Montreal International 174; Toronto International 204.

3. If it is meant when the ceiling was 500 to 900 feet and/or visibility 1 to 2½ miles the answer is St. John's, Nfld. 1712; Gander, Nfld. 1430; Stephenville, Nfld. 848; Moncton, N.B. 1114; Sydney, N.S. 1365; Halifax International 1570; Montreal International 807; Toronto International 809.

MONTREAL HARBOUR OPERATIONS

Question No. 1,245—Mr. Fortin:

1. Is the government taking steps to ensure that Montreal Harbour operates all year round and, if so, what steps and, if not, for what reason is action not being taken?

2. Does the government intend to increase the use of containers in Montreal Harbour and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does the government intend to impose a toll on the St. Lawrence River and, if so, for what reason?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. It is not possible for the government to ensure that Montreal Harbour operates all year round because the river can be blocked by ice jams which are the result of weather and other natural causes and which cannot be entirely prevented with the technology now available.

To the extent that it is possible, it has long been the practice to maintain an open channel for the evacuation of ice in order to reduce the incidence of floods and measures and devices for this purpose are constantly being studied and improved. Ships wishing to go to Montreal may use this channel when it is open and are assisted to the extent that government resources will allow.

2. Facilities for the handling of container traffic are available at Montreal Harbour. An increase in the use of containers is a matter for decision by shipping companies.

3. There are no plans at present for the imposition of tolls on shipping in the St. Lawrence River.

LAC MÉGANTIC, P.Q. RAILWAY CROSSING ACCIDENTS

Question No. 1,252—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many accidents have occurred at (a) the Victoria Street railway crossing in Lac Mégantic, P.Q., during the last twenty years (b) at other railway crossings in Lac Mégantic?

2. How many persons were killed or injured in such accidents?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission reports as follows: 1 (a) Two accidents involving personal injury; (b) Sixteen accidents involving personal injury.

2. These accidents resulted in fatal injuries to two persons and injuries to 33 persons.

AIR CANADA OPERATIONS

Question No. 1,263—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. How many persons work for Air Canada?

2. How many aircraft does Air Canada have and what number, by type?

3. How many airports are there in Canada and what is the location of each?

4. How many individuals have a pilot's license?

5. What was the number, the area, the cause and the type of Air Canada aircraft involved in accidents between 1965 and 1968 inclusive?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Regarding parts 1 and 2 only, the Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. 16,613.

2. 120, consisting of the following types: Viscount 39; Vanguard, 23; DC-9, 31; DC-8, 27.

3. Information provided in "Canadian Aerodrome Directory" available in Library of Parliament.

4. 31,517 as of December 31, 1968.

5. 1965 One, Toronto International Airport, April 24, 1965—Aircraft landed on runway with one wheel up due to missing clevis pin in undercarriage uplock system—No injuries —Vickers Viscount 757—CF-THL. 1966 One, Edmonton International Airport, December 17, 1966—No. 3 engine compressor and reduction gear section disintegrated shortly after take-off due to fatigue failure of the first stage impeller of the engine—No injuries—Vickers Viscount 724—CF-TGT. 1967 One, Ottawa International Airport, May 20, 1967—Failure to abandon a training manoeuvre under conditions which precluded the availability of adequate flight control—Three members of crew killed—Douglas DC8F-54—CF-TJM. 1968 Nil.

ST. FRANÇOIS RIVER DAM

Question No. 1,265—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Has the federal government purchased the dam located on the St. François River facing the Kruger Pulp Limited plant at Bromptonville?

2. If so (a) at what cost (b) has the government decided to renovate this dam (c) when will work begin and what amount of money has been allotted for this work (d) what is the expected completion date of the work?

3. If the government has decided to reconstruct the dam, are the plans for the erection of a new dam completed and, if so, are such plans available?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by several departments as follows: 1. No.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

*VISITORS SERVICE CENTRE, LAKE LOUISE

Question No. 1,271—Mr. Woolliams:

1. How many parcels of land have been leased by the Crown to individuals or corporations for motel development or other development in the Visitors Service Centre at Lake Louise?

2. (a) How many acres or lots are contained in each parcel (b) if there were lots, what are the measurements of the lots?

3. To whom did the Crown lease the parcels in question?

4. (a) What consideration was paid to the Crown by the lessees for each of the leases (b) what rental is prescribed to be paid?

5. Is the government prepared to table copies of any agreements in reference to the said land leases or sales?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development reports as follows: 1. One.

2. (a) Four acres and fifty-four hundredths of an acre, more or less; (b) Not applicable.

Questions

3. Montaineer Motel Company Limited.

4. (a) Nil; (b) A fixed annual rent and concession fees based on a percentage of gross receipts of the lessee.

5. No. Lease agreements constitute a confidential landlord-tenant relationship. The government does not table such documents, which would represent a breach of this confidence, without the express written consent of the lessee.

NATIONAL PARKS ENTRANCE FEES

Question No. 1,275—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What are the names of the National Parks in each province?

2. What is the entrance fee to each National Park?

3 What was the total amount of entrance fee collected at each park according to the last figures available?

4. Did the Minister authorize Mr. J. I. Nicol, Director of National Parks to state, at a recent news conference, that it was government policy to increase entrance fees for National Parks?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. British Columbia: Mount Revelstoke; Glacier; Yoho; Kootenay. Alberta: Banff; Jasper; Elk Island; Waterton Lakes; Wood Buffalo (partly in Northwest Territories). Saskatchewan: Prince Albert. Manitoba: Riding Mountain. Ontario: Point Pelee; Georgian Bay Islands; St. Lawrence Islands. New Brunswick: Fundy. Nova Scotia: Cape Breton Highlands; Kejimkujik. Prince Edward Island: Prince Edward Island. Newfoundland: Terra Nova.

2. The park motor licence fee for passenger cars is $2 for entering Mount Revelstoke, Glacier, Yoho, Kootenay, Banff, Jasper and Waterton Lakes. This licence will allow entry to any National Park which requires a licence and is good for any number of trips during a fiscal year. The licence fee after November 1 in any year is $1.

The park motor licence fee for passenger cars is $1 for entering Elk Island, Prince Albert, Riding Mountain, Point Pelee and St. Lawrence Islands. This licence will allow entry to any of the above parks only and is good for any number of trips during a fiscal year. A 25 cent single trip licence is also available for parks in this category.

A park motor licence is not required for Wood Buffalo or Georgian Bay Islands National Parks nor is one required for parks in the Atlantic Provinces.

Note: In addition to the passenger car fees there are fees for various other vehicles and trailers such as buses and different sizes and types of trucks. These are listed in the Schedule of the National Parks Highway Traffic Regulations but are too numerous to list in the answer.

3. For the fiscal year ending March 31, 1968 the totals were: Mount Revelstoke-Glacier, $306,244; Yoho, $9,133; Kootenay, $77,582; Banff, $622,183; Jasper, $105,877; Waterton Lakes, $82,190; Elk Island, $20,829; Prince Albert, $15,004; Riding Mountain, $47,019; Point Pelee, $39,559; St. Lawrence Islands, $5,568.

4. I have examined the press accounts following the news conference and noted that in answer to a question from the press Mr. Nicol indicated accurately that park entrance fees and other fees were currently under review. When the review is completed and recommendations made the decision as to whether there shall be an increase and if so, its extent, will be made and announced by me.

GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT BLIND LANDING EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,296—Mr. Robinson:

1. Does the Department of Transport intend to install blind landing equipment in government aircraft?

2. Is the government considering the possibility of requiring commercial airlines operating in Canada to install blind landing equipment?

3. Does the government have automatic landing equipment installed in any of its aircraft and, if not, will it consider the advisability of installing such equipment in government aircraft and will it also require that this kind of equipment be installed in commercial aircraft?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Defence and Transport as follows: 1. No, there are no plans for such an installation.

2. No.

3. The government does not have automatic landing equipment in any of its aircraft and no consideration is being given at this time to the advisability of installing such equipment. The provision of automatic landing equipment in commercial aircraft is not expected to be made mandatory.

*SEWAGE DISPOSAL, BANFF

Question No. 1,342—Mr. Woolliams:

1. Are enterprises in Banff, Alberta, departmental and otherwise, pouring raw sewage into the streams and Bow River?

2. Has the CPR constructed a sewage disposal plant in their hotels at Banff and Lake Louise, and is raw sewage being poured into the rivers and streams in the Park by these hotels?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development reports as follows: 1. Sewage from the Banff townsite sewer system is presently discharged untreated into the Bow River. The department plans a sewage treatment plant for the town of Banff in the near future.

2. The C.P.R. has constructed a sewage disposal plant at Chateau Lake Louise. Sewage from the Banff Springs Hotel enters the Banff townsite sewage system and is discharged untreated.

INFILTRATION OF LAOS BY NORTH VIETNAMESE

Question No. 1,363—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

Has the International Control Commission, on which Canada is represented, been requested at any time in the past six months to investigate allegations of North Vietnamese massive infiltration into Laotian Territory and, if so, with what results?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Within the last six months, the Royal Laotian Government has, on three occasions, complained to the International Control Commission about the illegal presence and activities of North Vietnamese forces in Laos as evidenced by attacks on the government post at Thateng in the southern panhandle adjoining South Vietnam (Royal Laotian Government notes dated November 29, 1968, December 14, 1968 and January 9, 1969). Despite the efforts of the Canadian Delegation to have formal investigations made of these complaints, only the first two were subjected to first-hand inquiry by Commission representatives but only in a preliminary way during an "observation visit" on January 2-3 of this year. As regards the third complaint, our Commission partners—India and Poland—voted against a Canadian proposal for an investigation and no further action on the complaint has been taken.

Final judgments have not yet been rendered by the Commission on the factual conclusions which can be drawn from the evidence available on these incidents. The Canadian Delegation has been attempting to obtain agreement on a Commission report not only of its visit to Thateng but of visits to other towns in the same area which the Commission made in February and April 1968 in response to similar complaints by the Royal Laotian Government.

Direct evidence regarding the exact extent of North Vietnamese infiltration into Laos is difficult for the Commission to establish because it is not permitted entry into the communist-controlled areas of Laos. Nevertheless, evidence of North Vietnamese military activity in Laos—in contravention of the terms of the 1962 Geneva settlement relating to that country—has been clearly established by the Commission in areas controlled by the Royal Laotian Government and has been made public and reported to the House on earlier occasions.

METEGHAN RIVER, N.S., CUSTOMS OFFICE

Question No. 1,367—Mr. Comeau:

Is the government considering closing the Customs and Excise office at Meteghan River, Nova Scotia and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): The Customs operations at the Outport of Meteghan River are currently being reviewed to determine whether services provided are consistent with existing needs and are fully justified in relation to administrative and operational costs. The review has not been concluded and I am therefore not in a position at this time to say whether or not the Customs office will be maintained at that location.

SECURITY SERVICE FOR FOREIGN EMBASSIES

Question No. 1,389—Mr. Robinson:

Does the federal government provide police and/or security service for Embassies and Consulates of foreign countries and, if so, what was the cost of the service provided during each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In so far as the Department of External Affairs is concerned, yes. The cost for each of the years 1960-68 was: 1960-1966 inclusive, Nil; 1967, $40,736.48; 1968, $31,059.50.

Orders for Returns

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

COMMUNITY ANTENNA TELEVISION

Question No. 730—Mr. Robinson:

1. What are the overall requirements to obtain a franchise or license in the field of CATV (community antenna television)?

2. (a) How many companies and/or individuals have been licensed (b) what are the names and addresses of the companies and/or individuals (c) who are the directors of the companies that are licensed in CATV?

3. Does the federal administration have control over the rates charged for the service?

4. Does the federal administration allow monopolies to exist in this field?

5. What revenue is received by government from franchises or licenses in CATV?

6. How many companies and/or individuals have received a franchise or license to operate in Metro Toronto, and (a) what areas have been allotted to each (b) is there competition in and for the allotted areas of franchise (c) what amount is paid for the franchise in each case?

Return tabled.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE, RICHMOND

Question No. 1,071—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. How many offices does the Unemployment Insurance Commission have in the federal Constituency of Richmond?

2. How many claims for unemployment insurance benefits have been made annually in each of these offices each year since January 1, 1965, by residents of the federal Constituency of Richmond?

3. How many claims have been accepted annually in each of these offices since January 1, 1965?

4. How many residents of the federal Constituency of Richmond have registered with the employment service annually since January 1, 1965?

5. Of those registered, how many have found employment annually since January 1, 1965?

Return tabled.

WOOD BUFFALO PARK DEVELOPMENT—HOUSING FOR INDIANS

Question No. 1,085—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What are the plans for development (a) in general (b) road construction (c) development of tourist facilities (d) development of tourist promotion (e) industrial development, for Wood Buffalo Park, for the next five years?

2. (a) What is the total number of new houses built on each reserve within the Athabasca constituency for 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968 (b) what are the plans for construction on each reserve for 1969?

[Mr. Sharp.]

3. (a) How many off-reserve houses were built for Indian families within the Athabasca constituency in 1967 and 1968 (b) how many will be built in 1969?

Return tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, on December 10 I filed question No. 1,008 relating to the establishment by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) of regional desks, the appointment of personnel, and volunteer advisers. It is now well over two months since the question was put on the order paper. The information must surely be easily available to the staff of the Prime Minister's office or of the Privy Council office, particularly in view of the Prime Minister's increased staff, and I am wondering why I could not have an answer by now.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): If I may give a word of explanation, Mr. Speaker, the question has not been answered because the regional desk system is not completed yet. We are reorganizing it; we are even adding to it, and I think it might be better if I could answer the hon. member once and for all when the thing is established, rather than answer him now and have him put supplementary questions later. I can assure the hon. member that it will not be very many more weeks until the system is completed and fully in operation.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notices of motions Nos. 65, 68 and 69?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

HAPPY VALLEY, LABRADOR, CHIP MILL

Motion No. 65—Mr. Marshall:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence between the Government of Canada particularly as represented by the Department of Public Works, the Atlantic Development Board and the Area Development Agency, and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland with respect to the development of a chip mill at Happy Valley, Labrador, a liner board mill at Stephenville, Newfoundland, and supporting facilities in these two areas.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the information requested by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) is of a confidential nature given to the government of Canada in the course of government investigation for particular purposes, disclosure of which could be detrimental to the competitive position of the firms.

I have spoken to the hon. member and explained this matter to him, I understand that he will consent to the removal of this notice of motion from the order paper.

Mr. Marshall: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Translation]

BUILDING OF WHARVES AND POST OFFICES IN THE CONSTITUENCY OF COMPTON

Motion No. 68—Mr. Latulippe:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all correspondence exchanged between the Government of Canada, particularly as represented by the Department of Public Works, the Atlantic Development Board and the Regional Development Corporation, and the Government of the Province of Quebec on the subject of the wharves and post offices which are supposed to be built in the federal constituency of Compton.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that no correspondence has been exchanged on the subject mentioned by the hon. member for Compton in his notice of motion and I wonder, in the circumstances, whether he would accept to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Latulippe: I agree.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion withdrawn?

Motion withdrawn.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motion stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

AIR CANADA

ISSUING OF COMMON SHARES—POSSIBILITY OF MERGER

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It arises from the statement made yesterday by the Chairman of Air Canada to the effect that Air Canada will need some $300 million more than it can generate from its own revenues to cover the obligations it envisages in the next five years. Will the minister say whether the government is now considering any request from this Crown corporation to issue common shares to the public?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not at this point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the importance of this service to the Canadian public and the importance of this corporation being able to make its plans well in advance, can the minister indicate the present status of the study regarding possible mergers with this corporation, and will he indicate when a decision will be forthcoming on this matter, as well as on the question as to how the corporation is to meet its various needs?

Mr. Benson: I am not aware of any such studies as my hon. friend mentioned. Perhaps I could refer that part of the question to the Minister of Transport.

The matter of financing Air Canada in the future, with regard to borrowing, has not been decided at this point. Discussions however, are going on between the government and the president of Air Canada.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which perhaps I should direct to the Minister of Transport or to the Minister without Portfolio. May we be assured that before any of these loans are negotiated the government will make a statement to parliament concerning its intentions about Air Canada, its corporate structure and any negotiations it might be entering into with Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I would be hesitant to give that assurance because I do not think the two things are necessarily related. One is strictly a financial mechanism which really comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague the Minister of Finance. It might easily be that he would say that was the best method of financing at some stage. I have already given the assurance that every opportunity for debate will be given before any decision is made public in respect of the latter part of the question.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Meantime are we to be led along the garden path?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance whether, in view of the length of time involved in making adequate plans to provide an adequate air service in the future, he would press for a clarification concerning the future of Air Canada, so that the country will be assured of a reasonable air service.

Mr. Benson: I believe adequate future planning is being carried out by Air Canada. The matter of financing future aircraft acquisitions, and so on, in respect of Air Canada is a matter for discussion between the officials of Air Canada and the Department of Finance. The best method of financing and the acquisition of aircraft will be determined after looking at the pros and cons of various alternatives.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister give the house an assurance that Air Canada, that great national utility, if I might call it such, will not be sacrificed in order to confirm or conform with the expressed wishes of the Minister without Portfolio from Manitoba who during the election campaign, stated that Canada should dispose of it?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I have asked a question. I cannot understand why the Prime Minister, who is usually very fast in trying to answer questions, would not take advantage of the opportunity to assure the people of Canada that this is not going to be sacrificed.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for York South.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONOPOLISTIC CONTROL OF SERVICE STATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs arising out of the report of a three year study in Alberta complaining about the monopolistic control of service stations by large oil companies. Has the report been drawn to the attention of the minister, and will he consult with the provincial attorneys-general in respect of appropriate action under the Combines Investigation Act or the Corporations Act dealing with this field.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): At the present time all I have is reports about the report. We have sent a wire to Alberta asking for a copy of the report, and when it is received it will receive our very close attention and study.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Is it true that his department has refused to cede to the Department of Transport the land that it owns in Farnham, for the construction of the future international airport in that locality?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that the question as put is in order. The hon. member is asking the minister to confirm or deny a news item and, for that reason, the question cannot be allowed.

[English]

OLD AGE SECURITY

REQUEST FOR PENSION INCREASE TO EQUAL COST OF LIVING INCREASE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As the cost of living has increased by 8½ per cent during the two years since old age pensions were tied to the cost of living, and since pensions have been raised by only 4 per cent during the same period is the government reconsidering the adequacy of the correction formula with a view to making sure that the old age pension increases at exactly the same rate as the increase in the cost of living.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is aware of the many improvements and progressive changes we have made to the old age pension scheme in the last few years. He is also aware that at the present time we have under review this particular scheme and all other programs in the old age security field.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, as the minister's answer confirms what I have suggested, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether this short-changing in respect of old age pensioners is a cornerstone of the just society?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INVITATION TO HOLD NEXT MEETINGS IN CANADA

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the government has extended an invitation to the secretariat of the Commonwealth association to hold the next Commonwealth meetings in Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hales: Is it the intention of the government to extend an invitation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to make a decision on that question at the present time.

TRADE

TEXTILES—REQUEST FOR LIMITATION OF IMPORTS

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether any consultations are taking place or consideration is being given to lessening the quotas of textiles allowed into Canada, particularly men's shirts from low wage countries? I ask this question because of the announcement today by Cluett Peabody and Company of Canada Limited that they are closing their plant at Stratford, which manufactures men's shirts and which will throw some 160 people out of work.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of this development which my hon. friend mentioned, and the difficulties that certain shirt manufacturing companies have recently had to face. Indeed it was because of the increase in low priced imports of woven shirts during 1967 and 1968 that last year we negotiated export restraint arrangements with several additional low wage countries in order to prevent further damage to Canadian shirt manufacturers. It seems reasonably certain that with the additional agreements now in effect imports of low priced shirts will decline in 1969 to levels which should provide some relief to Canadian manufacturers.

Mr. Baldwin: When you get through some of us will have no shirts.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, in respect of these agreements was Japan also included?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we negotiated quotas with Japan. We also negotiated quotas with other countries which are considered low wage countries.

[Later:]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): My question is directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. It arises out of the question asked by the hon. member for Perth concerning the closure of a Canadian shirt factory. Does the minister now realize that as a result of his policies Canadians are rapidly losing their shirts?

HOUSING

TASK FORCE—RECOMMENDATION FOR REDUCED LEGAL FEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport in his capacity or responsibility for housing whether he is considering a recommendation to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation that the fees charged by lawyers appointed by the corporation to handle mortgages on houses be reduced along the lines recommended by the task force.

Mr. Speaker: I believe this question was asked previously. If the hon. member thinks there is urgency in asking it a second time it might be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

SPORTS

EFFECT OF TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS ON NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he is meeting with a group of hockey executives tomorrow with a view to setting up a structure for a more effective national hockey team and, if so, what part if any will the recommendations of the task force on sports play in this issue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have some doubt as to whether the question is one of urgency. If hon. members are agreed that the question and an answer should be allowed I have no objection.

Mr. Hees: Let him answer.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings having suggested the question is urgent, it shall be allowed.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member, I am meeting tomorrow with the hockey executives and other people interested in the hockey situation in Canada, with the end in view of improving the Canadian position in international hockey. We will be considering the matter of bringing in those people to see whether the situation can be improved. As to what effect the task force recommendations will have on this development, we will have to wait until that force completes its findings and makes a report. It is bound to have some effect. Whether one of the courses of action will be a reference to a parliamentary committee to study the whole question, is something I do not know at this time.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether the government intends to have the whole relationship between professional and amateur hockey examined by a parliamentary committee?

Mr. Munro: As I have indicated, Mr. Speaker, this is a course of action to which the government will have to give consideration.

WATER RESOURCES

STEPS TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF BOW RIVER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question relates to an oral answer today in respect of a question appearing on the order paper. Pollution is a very important national problem facing Canada. The parliamentary secretary admitted that raw sewage from Banff township, which over 1,500,000 people visit each summer, is being poured into the river. Will the government now build the necessary facilities to make certain that the Bow River will be kept pure, in view of the fact that this affects some 750,000 people?

Perhaps in the absence of the minister I might redirect a question to the parliamentary secretary. In the event he has no answer I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question, because I know he has studied pollution and considers it one of the most important national problems facing Canada.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that from a government which professes to be in favour of increased dialogue we are getting an awful lot of non-answers and silence.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF FUNCTIONS OF MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of both ministers involved with Indian Affairs and northern development I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can enunciate clearly at an early date what the responsibilities and duties are of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) in respect of his association with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, because there is a great deal of doubt about this in the minds of the native Indian people. They should like to know what his functions are.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

MAN AND HIS WORLD—REQUEST FOR INTEREST-FREE LOAN

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Finance.

Since it has been reported this morning that Canada has just agreed to a $2 million loan to Ceylon for 40 years without interest, could the Minister of Finance give the house the assurance that a similar loan could be granted to the city of Montreal in order to save Man and His World?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Charlevoix.

Mr. Dumont: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

C.N.T.U.—INCENTIVES TO IMPROVE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Prime Minister. In its brief to the government the Confederation of National Trade Unions has pointed out that unemployment in the country has reached alarming proportions, especially in Quebec, and urged the government to devise economic incentives to correct the situation. Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether or not it is his intention to follow up the unions' proposal?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

I maintain that this matter is of an urgent and extremely important nature, since the rate of unemployment in Quebec is currently 8.2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

[English]

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

CONTROL OF EAST BLOCK SPACE BY HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, through you, whether he is in a position to advise the house when arrangements will be completed as to the turning over to the House of Commons of control of the East Block, necessitated by the need for office space made necessary by changes in translation and other services?

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—REDUCTION OF RELIEF FLIGHTS CAPACITY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, in view of the continuing starvation in Biafra, will the Canadian government exert diplomatic and political pressure on the Nigerian government to stop the terror bombing that has recently had the effect of reducing drastically full capacity relief flights at the Ulhi airstrip?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be more useful to put pressure on Colonel Ojukwu to agree to daylight flights; then the possibility of bombing would be greatly reduced.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SHARED PROGRAMS—FREEZE ON BUSINESS EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the freeze on the federal contribution to the federal-provincial cost-sharing program dealing with business educational facilities be melted, and if so, when will the thaw take place?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend must be talking about technical schools rather than business education. What was indicated to the provinces was the amount that we felt we could advance in the forthcoming year. If I have misinterpreted the question, I would appreciate my hon. friend telling me so.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister could take the questions as notice, because the information I have is that it concerns business educational facilities.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—POSSIBLE EXECUTION OF REFUGEES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he has conveyed to our member of the observer team in Nigeria the concern of this country about recent reports that all male Biafran refugees in Port Harcourt are in danger of being executed? Will the minister undertake to report to the house the results of any investigation of this matter by the observer team?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to convey this information from the hon. member if it is information. I will have inquiries made.

MIDDLE EAST—SAFETY OF CANADIANS ON AIR ROUTES

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I ask the minister what steps the government is taking to ensure the safety of Canadians from non-aeronautical hazards when travelling by air in the Middle East. Second, what can be done to prevent the escalation of these terrible incidents, the repetition of which occurred again in Zurich last night?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is deeply shocked and concerned by this further instance of interference with civil aviation by violent action. We strongly condemn such actions which endanger the lives of innocent persons and constitute a grave threat to international travel and communications.

The Canadian government endorses and supports the statement issued yesterday by the Secretary General of the United Nations calling for international action to prevent the recurrence of such events. These attacks are particularly to be deplored for the risk of escalation in the Middle East conflict which they carry, and for the hampering effect they are bound to have upon the efforts of Ambassador Jarring to achieve a peaceful and accepted settlement of the Middle East dispute.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the long standing problem in the Middle East and the recent events in Zurich, will the minister say whether a reassessment of Canada's policy with regard to the Middle East is part of our foreign policy review at the present time?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, our policy with respect to the Middle East is, of course, under constant review, because this is a matter of very urgent importance to all countries of the world. We are following events very closely. We are doing all that we can to support the efforts, particularly of the Big Four, to assist in bringing about a settlement. We believe this to be the most effective action we can take at the present time.

[Translation]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FRED—PLAN FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, because it was noisy for a while in the house last Monday, I misunderstood the question asked by the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall), who wanted to know if we were on the point of signing an agreement with the province of Newfoundland in respect of the FRED program.

[Mr. Danson.]

I thought he was referring to Prince Edward Island and I answered that I hope the agreement would be signed within a few weeks. I wish to make it clear that the answer concerned Prince Edward Island and not Newfoundland.

APPLICATION OF PROGRAM TO DEPRIVED AREAS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could he tell the house whether his new department intends to limit its program to a few pilot areas in Canada, or to extend it to all the economic regions of every province?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, we shall help as many as possible with the means and resources at our disposal.

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT OFF-TRACK BETTING

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Is it the intention of the minister to introduce in this session legislation amending the Criminal Code to prohibit off-track betting?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I discussed this matter with the Attorney General of Ontario, the Attorney General of Saskatchewan and the Deputy Attorney General of British Columbia last week during one of the free periods in the federal-provincial conference. At that time the matter was before the Supreme Court of Canada. The hon. member knows that on Monday afternoon the Supreme Court of Canada dismissed the petition for leave to appeal of the Attorney General of Ontario, without reasons. I have written all the provincial attorneys general asking for their reaction to the stated law as it now exists. On receipt of their replies we will have to consider just what legislative action should be taken.

AMENDMENT TO BAIL PROVISIONS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the difficulties the students in Montreal are having obtaining bail, has the minister given consideration to the early introduction of amendments to the Criminal Code with reference to the bail section?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that I have to remind the hon. member that the administration of justice and the task of interpreting the law as it now stands is the responsibility of the Attorney General of Quebec and the crown prosecutors in Montreal. As for the reform of or amendments to the law of detention before trial, and bail, it is the intention of the government to introduce as soon as we can a new, omnibus bill—not quite so omnibus—on wire tapping, bail and other allied matters.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister assure the house that the legislation governing fire-arms will be ratified before the next winter carnival?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, has the minister in mind a change in the right of a magistrate or judge to deny bail when he believes that in the interest of justice the individual who has applied for bail ought not to have it?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. member is tempting me to comment on a current judicial proceeding—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, I am not.

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): —and he would not really want me to do that.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not thinking of any present case at all, Mr. Speaker. I am simply asking the minister, does he have in mind changing the law so that the present discretion which rests with a magistrate or judge in the granting of bail will be determined by statute?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my view is that the law on bail is in need of a good deal of amendment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is speaking out of both sides of his mouth.

INTRODUCTION OF SECOND OMNIBUS AMENDING MEASURE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the minister has said that another or a second omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code will be prepared soon.

An hon. Member: It is not omnibus; it is ominous.

Mr. Woolliams: In view of this, does the minister intend making a statement on motions to tell us what he has in mind as far as amendments to the Criminal Code are concerned?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that the next time the estimates are discussed in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs would be a good time to discuss that matter, and I would be glad to do so.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate whether one of the proposed amendments in the second omnibus bill will include changes to the first one, that has not yet been disposed of?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): We will certainly get a simpler name for the benefit of the hon. member.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. In view of the rather general agreement which has for some time existed with regard to the outmoded use of corporal punishment, will this matter be included in the second omnibus bill to be presented by the minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLICATION OF PORNOGRAPHIC MATERIAL

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): May I direct a further question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether, when he brings in what I suppose one might call his "minibus bill" containing various amendments to the Criminal Code, he intends to include an amendment to the section dealing with obscenity, in order that pornography may not be published as it is being disseminated today, which by reason of judicial interpretation, is actually not subject to law?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I shall certainly take that suggestion into consideration. As a matter of fact, after the right hon. gentleman raised this matter a few weeks ago I asked the department to give me a resumé of the current chaos in the law affecting obscenity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his reply. May I suggest he should look at the situation in the state of Michigan, where the law has worked very well to keep pornography out of the homes.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Following his meeting with the Voice of Women this morning on some aspects of foreign policy, can the minister indicate to us what the government's present policy is with regard to Canada's joining the Organization of American States?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking for a policy statement from the minister. However, the minister may reply briefly, if he wishes to do so.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter is under consideration.

[Translation]

EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

PUBLICATION IN FRENCH OF RULES AND PROCEDURE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Is he in a position to tell us today exactly when the publication in French of the rules and general orders of the Exchequer Court which he promised in January, will be tabled?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I had been assured, Mr. Speaker, that those rules and general orders would be published in both languages in the near future, but I will seek information from the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Court.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

[English]

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT

DISCRIMINATION AGAINST MINORITY STOCKHOLDERS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister giving consideration to the situation of minority stockholders, who have faced apparent discrimination in connection with recent corporate mergers and take-overs, when preparing amendments to the Canada Corporations Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

PERSONNEL OF PRICES AND COSTS COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs whether he is in a position to announce the membership of the new board to be established in connection with the investigation of prices and costs and, if not, when we may expect an announcement in this regard?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; not yet. When this question was last raised I asked the hon. gentleman whether he had any suggestions to make with regard to the membership, but I have not yet received any.

Mr. Stanfield: May I ask the minister whether the country may soon expect to learn the composition of this board or whether it will have to wait as long as it waited for the white paper?

Mr. Basford: I said with regard to the white paper that the policy enunciated therein would serve as a basis for consultation with the interested economic groups in the country. I believe it would be wholly improper for me to name the board before that process has been completed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMOX-ALBERNI—INQUIRY AS TO HOLDING OF BY-ELECTION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he has yet had time to consider a date for the by-election in Comox-Alberni? It is next door neighbour to another constituency in which a by-election has already been held. I wonder whether the Prime Minister has had time to consider a date for the by-election in Comox-Alberni, and whether he can assure us there will not be too long a delay before it is called.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

HOUSING

ROLE TO BE PLAYED BY BANK OF CANADA

Mr. Lionel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Since the minister is trying by all possible means to sensitize the government to problems in the house field—and I congratulate him for it—could he tell us whether the Bank of Canada will have some part to play within the financing co-operatives to be established?

[English]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

THE PUBLIC EYE—CRITICISM OF PROGRAM CONCERNING INDIANS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Secretary of State, Mr. Speaker, but in his absence I should like to direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Has the Secretary of State received a letter from the president of the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood expressing grave concern about and strong criticism of the C.B.C. program, The Public Eye, of February 5, and the further program concerning the Indian people of Canada shown on February 17? If so does the government, through the Secretary of State intend to look into this matter?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): As the hon. member knows, the Secretary of State is away on a government mission in Africa. I have not had such a letter brought to my attention, but I shall be glad to look into it and if such a communication has been received, bring it to the attention of the C.B.C.

Mr. Simpson: Since it is apparent that the producers of this program went far out of their way to show the Indian people in as bad a light as possible, I would ask the parliamentary secretary to look into this immediately.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISING OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question for the President of the Privy Council. The other day I asked the minister whether he would give consideration to placing immediately before the Committee on Procedure the question of broadcasting our discussions in relation both to this house and to the several committees. Can the minister tell us whether this matter will be on the agenda, as the committee begins its work this afternoon?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Well, Mr. Speaker, the committee has a certain order of reference and I think it will stick to that.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In view of the considerable interest shown in this subject, may I ask whether the minister is giving consideration to setting up a special committee to examine the possibilities in this direction?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I am not considering the establishment of such a committee, Mr. Speaker.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

FRED—PLAN FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): My question is for the minister responsible for rural development and regional economic expansion. In view of the disappointment caused by his mistaken announcement the other day that a FRED agreement would be signed very shortly with Newfoundland, when he meant Prince Edward Island, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would now give special consideration to Newfoundland and to its FRED agreement with the federal government?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, we are having talks with the provincial authorities, and we hope to find the best solution available to assist Newfoundland.

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): In view of the fact that the program for the expansion of his activities has already been tabled, can the minister say when we may expect the ratification of such an agreement? We have heard a great deal about it, but we are not certain about the progress made toward ratification.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have every reason to believe that it will be a short delay and that the P.E.I. agreement will be signed in the near future.

[English]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister of Finance whether he would consider making a statement in the house, at his convenience with regard to employment conditions, particularly in certain parts of the country, and the answer then was that he would consider doing so. I wonder whether he has yet had ample opportunity to consider whether or not we can expect such a statement. Perhaps he can tell us when a statement is likely to be made.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I have considered the hon. gentleman's suggestion and discussed the matter with my colleague the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. No decision has been made on this point.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the tremendous support the minister received in his bid for the leadership of his party, is he prepared to respond by giving support to the new Ontario Liberal candidate, Judy LaMarsh?

Mr. Hees: Smile.

[Translation]

HOUSING

SHOWING OF FILM IN FRENCH LANGUAGE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Last Monday evening, in this building, the minister showed slides and films on the problem of housing. Everything was in English only. I would like to ask him whether he would be willing to show those films and slides once again, with French comments, for the benefit of French-speaking members.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member—

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will show them in French a little later, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. I would like the minister to assure us that the projection of those films and slides will be accompanied by comments in French, for the benefit of French-speaking members.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this presentation does not deal directly with the business of the house. Perhaps I am mistaken, but at all events, I would be glad to hear what the minister has to say.

Mr. Hellyer: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I hope to have the opportunity within a few weeks of presenting this in French.

[English]

INCOME TAX

COLLECTION OF SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT TAX BEFORE APPROVAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance supplementary to one that I put to him 12 days ago. Does the government intend to go on collecting the 2 per cent social development tax, even though the legislation has not been passed by parliament?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the usual procedure with regard to changes in the income tax, as my hon. friend knows. If we can move forward with the business of the house very quickly—and I am sure he will help us—we will have this legislation brought forward so that it can be ratified by the house—as I am sure it will be because it is for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question. Does the fact that this is the usual procedure of the Liberal government make it correct?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is not—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

• (3:00 p.m.)

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 5191).

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few brief remarks regarding Bill C-165, put forward by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act. Leaving aside the Income Tax Act, after much consideration of the points that have been put forward by the minister and the excuses made on behalf of the minister and the government by several private Liberal members, I must declare that I am against the amendments to the Estate Tax Act.

I wish to quote briefly from the Napanee Beaver for Wednesday, February 12. In an editorial the editor states:

> The Financial Post suggests that the most desirable move as far as succession duties are concerned would be to abolish them altogether... Abolition of succession duties has been recommended by the Trust Companies Association of Canada and professional estate planners and executors find the combined requirements of federal and provincial death taxation complex and baffling. The layman doesn't stand a chance if he tries to handle such matters by himself.

That is one reason I am not going to put any intricate statistics before the house today. I am just going to speak out to the best of my ability against this measure because I do not think it is good for Canada. I continue with the quotation from the Beaver:

> Death taxes should be levied by either one governing statute, or, at least, under uniform laws and administration. Or, better still, in the view of many, they should be eliminated altogether—
>
> Mr. Benson has indicated that death taxes are too good a source of revenue to be abandoned and has said that they have formed a favourite source of revenue for governments since the days of early Rome. This is true, but heavy taxation also led to the downfall of Rome because it was ruled by a government which became too greedy.

Ancient history tells us that one of the most damaging factors that destroyed democracy in ancient Rome was the rule of a triumvirate which led to a dictatorship. History now repeats itself. We have in this house a triumvirate. I am not going to foretell the future but it bodes ill for the progress of Canada to have a modern Pompey, Crassus and Julius Caesar in this house. The triumvirate that existed in Rome consisted of three warlike persons; this one consists of the ministers of culture, money and manpower.

I was one of those who two weeks ago, before we had the opportunity of debating this measure in the house, opposed it on television and radio and in the other news media serving my section of Ontario. Representing the riding of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington in the House of Commons, I realize that I represent an area where the family farms and the small businesses in the towns, villages and countryside have always been the most stable and the main sources of livelihood.

At this point I want to refute a statement made by a Liberal member, the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre), who in his speech last Monday clearly interpreted Liberal policy when he made excuses for the minister's severe taxation measures. As reported at page 5624 of Hansard the hon. member said:

> Unless estate taxes are used to prevent the pyramiding of family wealth, then it must follow we are going to move increasingly into a hereditary aristocracy of wealth in this country. It will not be basically from a titled aristocracy. It will gain power in the nation's political affairs by virtue of birth rather than by virtue of individual worth. I am convinced that this or any other form of class system is bad for Canada.

I interpret that to mean that Liberalism proclaims that family thrift is now something to be frowned upon. According to the record of the Liberal party and their socialist policies and tendencies, both on the part of the party and of their new leader, this is nothing but sheer nonsense. I will not allow the hon. member to say this about the people of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington who operate their modest but thrifty family farms and small businesses.

The same thing might be said about other ridings across Canada. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin talks about the menace of a hereditary aristocracy of wealth in this country that would emanate from the customary hereditary traditions, whereby a father and a mother try to save and to hand something down to their children. This is typical Trudeau liberalism and socialism. The old virtues of thrift and economy are now condemned.

Imagine the Liberal party, through this Liberal spokesman who is propounding its latest policies and opinions, speaking of the menace of the small family farms and businesses of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington or any other riding in Canada, of their forming a titled aristocracy and gaining power in the nation's political affairs by virtue of hereditary rather than individual worth. This is more Liberal socialistic nonsense.

In fact, if the people who operate the family farms and small businesses of this country could make their opinions and policies more known and workable at all levels of government, Canada would not be in the grave condition it is at the present time. The people who operate the farms and small businesses of this country operate them, by and large, in a sane and sensible way in order to earn a living. Rather than dissipate their assets in one generation, with good management and the minimum of government interference the owners of these farms and businesses pass them on to the next generation. This government, Mr. Speaker, with its socialist policies is politically bankrupt. Since its taxation policies are frantic, it is evident that it is fast approaching a state of monetary bankruptcy.

• (3:10 p.m.)

The minister's proposed tax provisions have been changed. He has reverted to the $50,000 estate tax floor which was included in previous legislation. I am glad that the representations made by the leader of our party and our party members have helped to check the smash and grab policies of the Minister of Finance. Formerly he proposed to levy tax on estates worth $20,000 and more. Even so, I am not satisfied that the proposed legislation as revised is good for Canada. This measure will still place a mortgage on most small businesses in Canada and on most family farms in cases where mothers or fathers bequeath their interest in the business or farm to a son. The measure is being brought in at a time in our history when small family businesses and farms are having difficulty just in keeping afloat and solvent. The inheritor must have enough cash on hand to run the business and, at the same time, to pay to government its huge estate tax, to say nothing about meeting the expense of living and bringing up and educating a family.

I have said I am against the estate tax, and I wish to put my thoughts this way: A parent ought to be able to hand down to a son or daughter the family farm or family business and the operating equipment thereof, without any estate tax being levied on that part of the estate forming the business or farm, provided that the beneficiary becomes or is the resident operator of that farm or business. Any other property in the form of cash in the bank, bonds, stocks, etc. should of course be taxed at appropriate rates. After all, that would be nothing more than an income tax. We cannot avoid income taxes.

I have received between 75 and 80 letters on this matter from the people of my riding. They are all good and reasonable letters; they all concede we must have taxation. But most of them say it should not be this kind of taxation. These letters point out that the estate tax is nothing but a duplication of taxation. Each letter protests that small businesses and farms are taxed heavily enough every year and ought not to be subjected to a tax that, on the death of the surviving owner, is tantamount to confiscation. I cannot read all these letters but I shall read one that is representative of all of them. It is from Mr. Donald H. Hough, R.R. 2, Napanee, Ontario. It says in part:

> If sons inheriting farms have to borrow large sums to pay estate taxes, this added burden of debt on Canadian agriculture can only add to the cost of production and force up product prices to the consumer. Also, the Department of Agriculture, and especially the Federal Dairy Commission have been working toward larger, efficient, units of production. This prohibitive rate of tax can only work against this principle, and will destroy larger units.
>
> I understand that part of the theory behind estate taxes is the objective of the "redistribution of wealth"; to accomplish through the use of taxation, an equalization of citizens and families down at a generally comparable level. Here a great injustice is being done to farm land owners, who require the land, livestock, machinery and equipment which forms most of their estate for the purpose of making an annual income, while wage and salary earners who probably have a much larger annual income over most of their lives need have only a house and probably a car for their estate—
>
> This estate tax rate will cause inflationary pressures because people will take the attitude "might as well spend it now". It will also cause less employment, as people will let their property depreciate, and men wil have no incentive to build larger businesses and then have the results of their labours or management almost confiscated.
>
> The land, livestock, production buildings, and agricultural machinery, to a farmer, are the same as an education or skilled trade to the professional man or worker for wages, they are a requirement to make an income. Since the education or skill cannot be considered part of the estates of those people, a farmer should be provided with sufficient exemption to permit him to pass to his son an economic size unit of land, livestock and machinery, as long as these are actually being used for agricultural production. The value of residences, automobile and personal possessions and cash and investments could be taxed on an equal basis with estates of salary and wage earners if anyone must be subject to such a grasping tax.

I think Mr. Hough's opinions are well worth listening to and heeding. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, and most hon. members can readily agree with him. It is my further opinion that the government should drop the estate tax bill. Let there be income tax, as there has been since 1917, I believe. That tax should be commensurate with the needs of the government. I am referring to the many worthy economic and social services this government has to supply. Let the income tax be commensurate with the annual profits of small businesses and farms which are handed down as estates. In my submission, if one considers all the circumstances this tax has no merit and there is no place for it in our society.

To further support this view, may I now read an extract from the Toronto Telegram of Tuesday, February 11. In an address given the previous evening L. G. Greenwood, president of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, is reported to have made certain comments. The newspaper report of those comments in part is as follows:

> Ottawa should consider abolishing inheritance taxes rather than proceeding with its plan to increase revenue from them ... Reducing exemptions in estate taxes would run counter to other government policies and could weaken Canada ... His criticism of the inheritance tax changes was part of an attack on government tax and welfare policies which, he claimed, promote inflation and reduce the individual's incentive to work—
>
> "Small businesses, often they are family businesses, do much for the strength of Canada. Why should they be put in jeopardy when the owner passes on?", he asked.
>
> The general tendency to increase taxes erodes incentive and leads to "alienation from work," said Mr. Greenwood ... The failure of productivity in Canada to keep up with wage increases is one cause of inflation which he termed "an insidious disease, a destroyer of values."
>
> It would be "tragic" if Canadians lost their initiative because of government policies, he said. "The better life must be earned. It is not something that can be created by an act of Parliament," he added.

I am sure Mr. Greenwood means that legislation has increased the burden of taxation. That burden, when shouldered by the small businesses and farms of Canada, will serve to decrease their future productivity. The estate tax takes away all incentive for the proprietary channels to save. Liberalism and its present policies are not Liberal policies at all basically, but socialistic policies. They are not traditional with the former line of Liberal thought.

• (3:20 p.m.)

There is another point being made at this time across the length and breadth of this country. I hear people on the streets of towns and villages in my riding discussing the inconsistency of Liberal policy. Regardless of what excuses the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or any member of the cabinet may make, splits in the cabinet and the utter worthlessness of the government's present policies are pointed out, as well as the impending damage being done to the Canadian economy.

Although the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), who is also the minister responsible for housing, stressed in his report the need for more housing and advocated the abolition of certain taxes which discourage more housing, for example, the 11 per cent sales tax on lumber and building materials, the Minister of Finance said "no" to this recommendation. I commend and support many of the policies recommended by the Minister of Transport in his report which encourage more estates. It is true that every house built by a young couple or family is the beginning of another estate. On the other hand, the Minister of Finance is proposing a taxation measure which will destroy thousands of estates and stagnate and stultify the founding of potential new estates. This, Mr. Speaker, is a typical example of Liberal contention within their own ranks. The minister responsible for housing says, "Yes, go ahead, Canada, as soundly and economically as possible". Then we have the Minister of Finance saying, "No, you cannot go ahead, Canada, until you pay me my pound of flesh."

Canada, as a corporate body, is only 102 years old. I am sure most hon. members will agree that with the exception of a narrow strip along the 49th parallel of latitude, the St. Lawrence Valley and the Maritimes, Canada is largely undeveloped. There are too few estates in this young country to have an estates tax. That is the reason I oppose it.

In this country, as well as in this house, one must be of one opinion and purpose. Once cannot equivocate. I deplore the adverse effect of Liberal policies and Liberal administration upon the progress, growth and development of Canada. Furthermore, I oppose a capital gains tax, as this has been likened to, or any similar measure. With all the support I can possibly summon I oppose this estate tax. Most hon. members will from time to time pay tribute to and espouse private enterprise. Here is a chance for us to support private enterprise at its very best by opposing this bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): I rise to speak in this debate, Mr. Speaker, as a layman. Should I live to be a thousand years old I will probably never accumulate an estate on which estate tax will have to be paid. The more articles I read written by people who are supposedly experts in the financial and taxation field, the more I read newspaper reports of what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has said, the more confused I become. I am to blame in part because of my ignorance in this field. I do not want to give the impression that I am taking the position of being both for and against this estate tax proposal. I hope I can be logical in presenting my position as I think the majority of the people of this country support it. My colleagues and I support in principle the levying of estate taxes.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the hon. member answer a question?

Mr. Benjamin: I will be glad to when I am finished. While I do not always agree with everything written by Douglas Fullerton, I would like to quote from one of his articles which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of February 8:

> One might go even further in suggesting that in a truly egalitarian society there should be very severe restraints on the transmission of property from one generation to the next.

I agree with that point wholeheartedly.

> Children of the middle classes and the rich start off now with many advantages in competing with their poorer fellows—better home environment, better food and medical care, and usually better education.

Their advantages in all of these respects are better than those of their poorer fellow citizens. Mr. Fullerton goes on to say:

> Why should they have the further advantage of inherited wealth as well?
>
> Privilege is something that should be earned, not transmitted from father to son—

In that light I am convinced many thousands of people in Canada support the principle of taxing estates. But the levying of such a tax must be progressive and equitable. As with all taxes of this nature, it must be based on ability to pay. I wish that the government, as well as the official opposition, would be as concerned about the thousands of millions of dollars of undertaxed and untaxed incomes in this country as they are with taxing those in the low and middle income brackets.

[Mr. Alkenbrack.]

• (3:30 p.m.)

The N.D.P. amendment reads as follows:

> That Bill No. C-165 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should give consideration to a complete revision of the federal estate tax legislation with a view to making the rates of taxation under such legislation truly progressive and equitable.

That is why I am opposed to this bill. The principle of taxation based on ability to pay, progressive in its application and equitable, is not to be found in this legislation. I know that bits and pieces attempts are made in various parts of the legislation partly to apply this principle. But in totality not only this tax but the overwhelming majority of tax legislation in Canada is not just, equitable or sufficiently based on ability to pay.

For the record I would like to read the policy of the New Democratic Party as expressed in writing before and during last year's election campaign so that there can be no possibility of any member misunderstanding it, particularly those sitting to my immediate right.

> Canada's system of taxation is unjust. The middle and lower income groups pay too much and many privileged persons and corporations get off very lightly. The New Democratic Party believes in a complete reform of our tax system and at the same time protection of the family farm and the family business. Provision will be made for the transfer of the family farm or the family business from one generation to the next without impairing that enterprise.
>
> There will be no inheritance tax on a farm which on the death of a husband passes to his wife and dependent children. Inheritance tax on a farm unit passing directly to a member of the family, ought to provide for payment of tax over a long period and tax credits if the farm stays in the family for a period of years. At no time will it be necessary to sell farm assets in order to pay inheritance tax.
>
> A farmer's retirement fund is frequently in his land. On selling the land when he retires a farmer should have the right to invest a lump sum, with income tax exemptions, in an approved retirement plan.
>
> The farmer must always have a free choice between use of the cash or accrual system of accounting for tax purposes.

I emphasize the last sentence in that portion of our party's policy pertaining to inheritance tax:

> At no time will it be necessary to sell farm assets in order to pay inheritance tax.

We in the New Democratic Party believe it is socially desirable to have family-owned and family-operated farms and small businesses. While we believe that an estate tax is all right in principle, we submit that the application of the principle requires exceptions and exemptions so that these socially desirable objectives of family-owned and family-operated farms and small businesses are not inhibited or destroyed.

Many hon. members have welcomed the change proposed by the minister whereby a six-year period will be provided for payment of estate tax. I submit that this will not be really sufficient in a number of cases and that in certain isolated cases the requirement that the tax be paid within six years is likely to force the sale of the assets of a family-operated farm or business unit or will necessitate additional borrowings resulting in a burden of debt from which recovery cannot be made.

With the government's majority the minister will get his legislation passed, but I hope that the regulations he promulgates to implement it will permit the stipulation at his discretion of an additional number of years over and above the six specified in the bill during which family-owned and operated farms and small businesses can pay estate tax and thus not be placed in jeopardy by having to sell some of the assets or take on additional debt. I also hope that the regulations will permit every case to be judged on its own merits. This can be done because in reality 80 per cent or more of Canada's population will never even come close to having to pay an estate tax.

I am often amazed about the concern expressed at great length by those in the insurance, estate planning, trust company and banking fields. But when they protest and say that inheritance taxes or succession duties should be done away with, I am somewhat suspicious of their desire to help the small estate or the individual whose income throughout life has been low or very moderate, in view of the fact that those who have the most to gain from the abolition of estate or inheritance tax or succession duties are those who do not need their abolition.

Having listened to a number of hon. gentlemen in the official opposition raise so much fuss about estate tax, I would appreciate it if some of them would give the house an explanation of why, in 1958 or 1959 when they were in office, they made major changes in Canada's tax legislation that did away with a great amount of tax legislation pertaining to succession duties and substituted for it an estate tax. I would appreciate hearing from members of the Conservative party the reasoning behind this. I can see some good administrative reasons for it. It is easier to keep track of and collect estate taxes than it is to do these things with succession duties. But if there are a lot of arguments in favour of doing away with inheritance duties I would still be grateful to hear an explanation for the actions of Conservative members when their party formed the government of this country.

I wish to add my view to that already expressed by many hon. members in support of estate tax regulations that should not endanger the operations of family-owned and operated farm and small business units.

• (3:40 p.m.)

It has been mentioned before but is worth repeating that for a not very large grain farm in the prairie provinces one can arrive at total assets of $200,000. Two sections of very average land would be worth at least $90,000. The machinery required to operate a farm of two sections of land with average crops and good management would be worth at least $25,000. If one were to take a line of machinery containing each kind of machine perhaps two or three years old for that kind of operation, the value of that machinery would be at least $25,000. The buildings on a grain farm of that size would be worth at least $15,000. Most farms of that size at the moment would have anywhere from 30,000 to 40,000 bushels of grain in store on the farm. I think it would be fair if we were to estimate the value of that grain at at least $45,000. A farm of that size is only large enough for one family to operate. It cannot be divided among more than one son because then there would be two units which could not survive. These figures total somewhere between $180,000 and $200,000.

Let us also assume that some amount of debt is owing on that farm. There may be an amount of debt on the land and there is bound to be on the machinery and buildings. For the sake of argument let us say the debt amounts to $50,000 and the net taxable value is $150,000. According to the minister's tables, if the farm were to be left first to the widow and upon her death to one son the taxes would amount to $26,700. If I read the minister's tables correctly, this is less than what the tax would have been under the old estate tax provisions. But I submit that if the $26,700 has to be paid off in six years—it really amounts to five rather than six but we will take six years as the period—this means that over $4,000 per year must come out of the annual revenue of this two-section grain farm on average land on the prairies, as payment on the estate tax.

I know many grain farmers in Saskatchewan who have anywhere from three-quarters of a section to 15 sections, but I certainly know of no one who has three sections of land or less, even if he is lucky enough to have an eight bushel quota, who has sufficient cash income in any given crop year that he can pay $4,000 from his income in one year for estate tax payments. This is why I strongly suggest to the minister that in a great many cases a period of six years is not nearly long enough. I submit that 12 or 15 years, or in the odd very rare case as much as 20 years, will need to be allowed if the minister and his laws are not to cause forced sales. I submit also that extensions and allowances of this kind should apply only as long as the family farm operation remains in direct line in that family. Immediately it is disposed of to a stranger or to some distant relative it should then become subject to the normal tax regulations.

Another reason we must ensure that no estate or inheritance tax is allowed to cause the forced sale of a family-owned and operated farm or business is that this provides an ideal hunting ground for the land hogs, and there are some of them. This provides an ideal hunting ground for the speculators, none of whom I have any sympathy for. I do not think the minister will get nearly as much in taxes as he should from operators of that kind. I have no sympathy for those who buy up farms for a hobby, for fun or as a means of evading taxes. One can go into any city in this country and its outskirts and find choice farm land which has been bought up at outrageous prices by the so-called nouveau riche, the people who operate in the oil game and the finance business. Some of these people have done well in some of the professions. They buy up property of this type for fun or for the purpose of evading taxes and as a result land prices in the rest of the area are forced up.

I have urged upon the minister some things which have been mentioned many times before by a number of speakers in this debate. This does not mean I support the kind of legislation the minister is presenting. Our amendment points this out. It may be partly due to my lack of knowledge about these subjects, but after looking at the minister's tables, reading what he has said and listening very carefully it seems to me there are too many areas in which I can find no rationale for the proper implementation of these tax measures. I just do not understand the situation when one considers the principle of applying a tax based on ability to pay and equitability. Surely the amount of relief is too high proportionately when $80,000 less tax, in the case where there is one child, is paid on an estate valued at $1 million and only $2,000 less is paid on an estate valued at $100,000. I should like to hear the minister's rationale for this. I submit that our amendment points out this kind of thing. Surely the greatest burden of payment of these taxes should fall on estates valued at $1 million or $500,000.

I mentioned earlier that I wish those who are concerned about the dangers to small family farms and small family businesses—and I quite agree there were and still are dangers—were as much or more concerned about the billions of dollars of undertaxed and untaxed income in this country. I cannot help but be suspicious of those who say we should do away with inheritance taxes. I cannot help but suspect their reasoning. I fail to understand why they would propose this move in view of the fact that it would not help small farmers and small businessmen but rather those who need help the least. This proposal flies in the face of any kind of civilized society in which all men are equal.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Until the minister and the government bring in a total reform or overhaul of the federal tax structure which is based on ability to pay and is more just and fair, I for one cannot support these pieces of legislation brought in by the minister. This is only the first of many pieces of legislation which will only fiddle with the problem. This is only one of many bits and pieces of legislation which provide crumbs to the low income people. There are one or two crumbs in this legislation now that the minister has changed his mind. This may be helpful to some small family farms or businesses, but the minister and the government are perpetuating a tax system which is, from one end to the other, unjust, inequitable and unfair. It allows too many freeloaders to have control of wealth which they have neither earned nor deserve. Over the next two or three years I hope the government will do a lot of soul-searching, stop trying to be all things to all people, and bring in genuine reform of our tax system.

When some of my hon. friends to my right talk about this measure as being socialistic I can only say: Good Lord, this is unbelievable.

They can call it a middle of the road policy if they wish because that is what the Liberals like to call it. The trouble with the middle of the road is that it is neither on the one side nor the other, and it is always in the middle of the road that most accidents occur. When accidents happen, more often than not it is the innocent who are hurt the most. I am not easily insulted, but I am insulted when someone suggests that this legislation is socialistic, particularly when it comes from members sitting to my right. It was a conservative government that made major changes to our tax laws in 1958 or 1959. They instituted estate taxes as a substitute for succession duties. It is amusing when hon. members of the official opposition say this legislation indicates the socialistic attitude of the present Liberal government. Actually they are a latter-day version of the Mackenzie King administration, and you could hardly call that administration socialistic. I believe that history will put it down as a conservative administration, and I think the present government will prove to be a duplication of it.

I support the principle of a tax on estates and inheritances, but I say that in the application of such a tax there must be exceptions and exemptions which will help to maintain socially desirable objectives in our society. No one in this house will dispute that it is socially desirable in Canada that there be a maximum number of viable family-owned and operated farm units and small businesses.

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, after listening to this debate on a number of occasions it was not my intention to speak today because I felt that any contribution to be made by this party had already been made. However, there are a number of questions which I feel should be answered before this measure goes to a vote. This is my purpose in rising today.

Let me make it perfectly clear at the outset that I am not opposed to reasonable estate or inheritance taxes, but I am concerned about any legislation which attempts to reduce the future effectiveness of wholly owned farm or business units. I am concerned about what criteria will be used by his assessors in evaluating estates. Will valuations of estates in 1969 be based on today's inflated prices or on purchase prices? If a property was obtained 15, 20 or 30 years ago this might have a bearing on the eventual assessment.

I appreciate the minister's reconsideration which resulted in increasing the exemption from $20,000 to $50,000. What criteria will be used in respect of a private home, forming part of an estate, which may have been purchased five years ago with a mortgage at 6¼ per cent? Is it unreasonable to assume that today that home, with modest improvements, would be worth $5,000, $6,000 or $7,000 more than a similar home, perhaps built by the same contractor, in an urban area with a mortgage bearing interest of 9¼ per cent? What criterion is to be used? Will the assessment be based on the purchase price, the market price, the asking price, or will it be based on the municipal tax roll? I think all these things could make a difference.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would like me to inform him, let me say that the value of an estate is based on fair market value at the time of death. I should point out that this is the net value after deducting any debts. In addition, the value of an estate is subject to appeal.

Mr. Skoreyko: I am glad to hear there is an opportunity for appeal. What is the situation in respect of farm land adjacent to a city which, based on its production value as a farm, might be worth $100 an acre? By the same token, in a year or two this land could be subdivided as a housing development and could be worth in excess of $1,000 an acre. How do you arrive at fair market value? I hope the assessor will not evaluate property of that kind on the basis of the developed value because that could wipe out the estate.

The same principle applies to small business. What happens in respect of a small family farm when the farmer, because of ill health, continues to live on the farm but cannot contribute manual labour and holds back one of his sons, if you like, to continue the work of developing that farm? In this situation some consideration should be given to reward. This brings me to the speech made in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Norfolk-Haldimand (Mr. Knowles), who read into the record a letter from a farmer constituent who is 48 years of age, is concerned about buying his father's farm, and is also wondering what his son will do when he passes on.

• (4:00 p.m.)

This legislation is punitive in the sense that the bill affects all existing trusts. Most trusts are irrevocable. I would like to know what law is available or is contemplated by the federal or provincial governments so that trust adjustments can be made in accordance with the law. I would also like to know where the provinces stand in this entire picture, particularly those provinces which before October 23, 1968, relied heavily upon estate tax revenues. The estate tax is punitive because in my opinion it indeed penalizes thrift. I think it is discriminatory. I believe it discriminates against family-owned enterprises as opposed to public companies. In fact it discriminates against all those companies which are wholly family-owned.

Much has been said in the last day or two of this debate about the table made available to us by the minister. I refer to the table of deductions on estates of certain value. It is strange that most speakers have referred to item 1 on the first page of the table. This item deals with estates left outright to the widow, and on her death equally amongst her adult children where the number of children is—and then the number of children is set out. It is true that in some cases the new tax is less than it is under the existing scheme. Nobody seems to take into account or give serious consideration to estates left in trust where the income is paid to the widow during her lifetime and the assets are divided equally amongst her children on her death. The figures for Ontario perhaps do not reveal that there are very many people in this position, but I am sure hon. members will find that in other parts of Canada a great many people come under the heading of item No. 3 of the minister table. There is a direct penalty for those people who have dealt in trusts.

I read with interest the submission made by Michael B. Jameson of McCarthy and McCarthy, Toronto. I think every member of this house has received a copy of it. This submission was made before changes were made to the estate tax legislation, but it contains a number of points that I think are worth considering. The document is a quick summary of Mr. Jameson's reaction to the legislation then proposed. His first point is:

> No private executors will dare venture (into) the field of trusts, except on peril of his life, and tax.

His second point is:

> One cannot really argue with the inclusion in the tax base of gift tax paid in respect of gifts which are themselves included in aggregate net value.
>
> 3. How will existing trusts be changed if they are taxable, or will they be exempted? Most are irrevocable and can the Variation of Trusts Act be used which all provinces do not have?

[Mr. Skoreyko.]

He says in point No. 4:

> What about Alberta? Will all widows now retire there so their estates receive a 75 per cent credit or will Alberta be legislated against—since Ottawa knows best?

Then he puts forward a few more points of view and says:

> Is the motto of the future to be "Work, spend and be merry for tomorrow we give all to Ottawa", or perhaps "Widows shed your mourning and enjoy the life your husbands couldn't give you inter vivos"?

I think Mr. Jameson's point No. 10 is an important analysis of what the legislation could ultimately mean. He says:

> Will the will of tomorrow be made conditional upon the surviving spouse entering into a covenant to remarry within 90 days someone ten years younger, such covenant to run with the will or property in perpetuity, so that property will pass free of tax from spouse to spouse to spouse, etc., etc., etc?

As I say, Mr. Speaker, this legislation is punitive because it discriminates against the small, family-owned unit whether it be a farm, business or whatever. It discriminates against those people who have the faith to deal in trusts.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate for two reasons. One is that the people I represent, the constituents of Red Deer, as I interpret and understand their opinions are almost unanimously against the estate tax legislation. This does not apply only to those who happen to belong to the Conservative party, for in the correspondence that has come to my hand I have found that many who support the government party reject the legislation. In fact, the opposition to the legislation is more widespread than I had realized. It is certainly more widespread than the opposition to many other pieces of legislation which are considered to be controversial. I have in my office at the present time between 1,100 and 1,200 letters. I draw to the attention of the minister that these letters were not politically solicited but were spontaneously sent by people I represent. Three-quarters of the letters are from the constituency itself, with the balance coming from across the country.

I would not be true to my responsibilities as the representative of the people of my constituency unless I expressed in the strongest possible terms the objection which I believe the average person has to this type of legislation. I am not talking about the millionaires. I address these remarks to the hon.

member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin). I am not speaking about those who are wealthy or those who are above the average and are in fact well off. I am speaking about the little man who is struggling to survive on a farm or in a family business.

• (4:10 p.m.)

I am sure I am not the only member of the house who has received letters of this sort. I must, therefore, express to the minister and to the government on behalf of these people the strongest objection to the legislation. I must also speak against this legislation because of my own conviction inasmuch as I believe the principle is wrong. I do not say this because I am against the taxation of estates which are sizeable or because I favour placing any level of income of the Canadian people in a position of special privilege. Taxation is necessary as the source of income for governments. Nevertheless, it is imperative that taxation policy be equitable; it must apply to everyone on an equal basis subject to special consideration for those who have less.

Having said this, I must add that I believe the principle of this legislation to be basically wrong. It is a democratic principle—and I think most hon. members agree with this concept—that once income has paid its share of tax to the government it should be free of further tax. The development of our democratic institutions was influenced in a major fashion by people who believed in this principle. If there is within an estate income which has not paid its share of taxation, then I believe it should be taxed. But this legislation taxes in the most vicious manner those who can least afford to pay. I believe the rate of tax as it has been calculated is not basically fair. If it is to be fair, taxation should respect the estate dollar which has been saved through the thrift and hard work of those involved. It should respect savings which have already paid their share of taxation. In particular this principle should apply to those who are least able to pay.

I must express appreciation to the minister in connection with several aspects of the amendments. I believe the exemption of widows or widowers from the burden of estate tax is a correct step. In my own experience as a Member of Parliament I have encountered scores of cases where under the previous taxation policy widows had great difficulty in clearing up the estates of their deceased husbands. They were often left in difficult circumstances. The exemption now proposed is sound.

I believe the extension of the gift tax provision in the revised bill is also on the right lines. The new provision with respect to trusts is an important one and it should make estate planning much easier for families. I am glad the minister has sensed the overwhelming opposition to the decreased exemption, and that the floor has now been raised to $50,000. However, it should be pointed out that in the days when $40,000 was the figure established in this regard, the dollar was of much greater value than it is today. It seems to me that for the legislation now proposed to be sound in this respect the exemption should be raised to $80,000 or even $100,000 because of the very fact that inflation has taken away so much of the value of our currency. Consider what this means, for example, to those who seek to provide for themselves in their latter years, or to enable members of the their family to get a start in an economy in which it is increasingly difficult for young people to become established on their own. Farming is a particularly good example. Conditions today tend to pressure an increasing portion of our working population into the category of wage earners as opposed to that of legitimate entrepreneurs.

As I listened to various speakers expressing their views in this debate I was surprised at the limited logic they seemed to apply to this subject. I can understand the inclination of government supporters to defend legislation brought down by the government even though they may not have had an opportunity to offer their views or comments with regard to it before its presentation to parliament. Nevertheless, it seems to me that many statements by hon. members opposite have shown exceedingly narrow judgment with regard to this legislation, and it occurs to me that if they were really representing the opinions of their constituents, as I understand those opinions to be, they would be working to correct what I hold to be errors in the measure before us.

I do not quarrel with those who say that our tax policies should be revised. Neither do I argue with those who contend it is unfair that certain types of income should be either untaxed or undertaxed. But to be wise in our taxation policies we must protect those aspects of our economy which have made this country strong in the past and permitted it to grow more rapidly than any other in the history of western nations.

Some of the principles involved relate to the responsibility we have to family enterprise. This applies particularly to the family farm. I realize this is not a debate on agriculture so I will simply say that the strength of the agricultural industry in this country lies in the family enterprises which are at its roots. In Canada we can produce not only enough food for our own people but for a population four or five times as great. Compare this situation with that in other countries which find it extremely difficult to produce enough for their own population, and we gain an insight into the efficiency and enterprise of Canadian agriculture.

At the heart of our agricultural industry is the family farm. We should not act in such a way as to destroy it. We want it to grow. At the heart of our commercial operations domestically in this country is the family business enterprise. I am willing to concede that the trend is for such enterprises to become larger in order to survive Yet the basic principle is still of the utmost importance to our country. Instead of weakening or destroying this kind of enterprise we should be strengthening it. I can understand why so many Canadian farmers and businessmen are protesting against this bill. I can understand why I have received such a large volume of mail with regard to it, not just individual letters but petitions signed by as many as 200 or 300 people.

One aspect of the family farm situation is that many a son has worked and laboured as part of a unit, developing a family farm together, without having been adequately repaid in terms of salary or remuneration. His return has been the prospect of a share in that family farm unit. When his father passes it on to him, either at the time of his father's death or before, the father is not passing on something that belongs only to himself but belongs actually to the family. I suggest that our estate taxation must take cognizance of that circumstance.

• (4:20 p.m.)

It is impossible today for young men to accumulate sufficient capital so they can start from scratch to shape an economic unit in the farming industry. It is only as they are able to participate in the family farm, with the continuity this provides, that they can take their place in that family farm unit. Therefore I believe that the family farm and the family business deserve greater financial exemption than that provided by the proposed estate tax.

[Mr. Thompson (Red Deer).]

The provision of five years in which to make six payments of estate tax is all to the good but in many cases, particularly if the market value of the family farm or family business goes up in proportion to the inflationary trend in our economy, this period will not be long enough. It will be necessary under this legislation for those who inherit a family enterprise to sell part of it in order to get enough money to pay the tax, and this I suggest is completely wrong.

I am also concerned about the effect that this tax will have on incentive. Many a father of 50, 55 or 60 years of age will think that under this legislation there is no real point in his continuing to work and labour to develop further his family farm for his children, that he may as well sell it, let it move into the realm of corporate farming, take the proceeds and live a little easier than he has hitherto.

There is also the danger that those who are not part of private enterprise, be it farm or business, will say that these people must take their chance along with those who are wage earners. I suggest that if one were to calculate the amount of wages earned by people who work on family farm units or who own or participate as a member of a family in a family business, one would find they receive far less than the minimum wage in return for their labours. There is a general tendency to look upon the farming community as being wealthy, but when considered in terms of hours of work for pay received I suggest it is not a highly paid calling. Therefore, for this reason as well I think consideration must be given to this fact in our estate tax policies.

This is why the province of Alberta has decided to refund its portion of the estate tax, and this has worked very beneficially for the people of Alberta. Not only has it helped the family farm unit and the private businessman; it has also drawn a lot of capital into the province that is needed by the province further to develop its resources. It has proven to be a very commendable policy. So commendable has it been in its results that the legislature of the province of Saskatchewan now has legislation on its order paper to do the same thing.

I would ask the members of this government who have raved about the tremendous benefits to be gained from this legislation to go to Saskatchewan and ask members of their own party why they feel it is necessary to adopt a similar policy to that adopted a year or two ago in Alberta. They are doing so because they realize that even under the old legislation an inequitable situation existed as far as farmers and private businessmen were concerned, and that it should be corrected. They have been unable to convince the federal government that it should change its policy in this regard, but they have moved to take care of this matter as far as the province is able to do so within the limitations of federal estate tax policy. This is why the province of Saskatchewan is now going to do the same thing.

Another aspect of the benefits that have accrued from this type of policy, as I have observed them, is that there is a greater incentive to put the savings and capital of Canadians to work in Canada. I am reminded of the fact—I mentioned this to some of my friends to my left and some of those in the government—that the total savings of the Canadian people in 1968 amounted to approximately $1,300 million. Out of those total savings over $600 million went to the United States alone in the form of U.S. stocks and bonds. In addition, a great deal of the remainder went out of the country altogether.

If I interpret correctly what is going to happen as a result of the estate tax bill that is before us now, more Canadian capital will be driven out of the country. One of our greatest needs today is capital. There may come a day when the estate tax policy will have to be changed, when greater heed will have to be paid to making sure that untaxed or undertaxed capital is taxed more effectively than it has been. But I do not think that day has yet come. In fact, I do not think we can afford this kind of taxation policy. We need desperately to convince the Canadian people that their savings should be reinvested in the development of Canadian resources.

It is difficult for the economy in a country such as Canada to generate enough capital to develop our resources adequately at a pace that will keep up with trade and developing economies across the world. Why further weaken our position by bringing in tax policies that drive capital out of Canada instead of encouraging capital investment in this country? As I say, this is one of the great dangers of this type of taxation policy, over and above whatever effect it may have upon family farms and family businesses. It discourages incentive on the one hand, and the retention of capital in Canada for investment purposes on the other hand. I am not the only one who holds this view; authorities all across the country who are specialists in the taxation field are saying this. The only thing is that the minister does not seem to hear.

May I summarize briefly my opposition to this tax bill under a number of logical headings. First of all, I believe it discriminates against family enterprises, be they agricultural or business.

Second, I believe that the rate of taxation provided for in this measure is discriminatory. I believe that it affects those who can the least afford to pay and it lets off those who are better able to pay, those who have a lesser load.

I also believe it discourages incentive. It discourages the head of the family from trying to build a family enterprise, be it farm or business. I believe that it discourages incentive even for those on a higher level of income so far as developing our resources, commerce and trade are concerned. I believe it will be detrimental to our own capital needs in that it will drive capital out of this country into foreign investment portfolios.

There may be other reasons for my opposition to this measure but these are the most important. I urge the minister and the members of the government, some of whom have painted this measure as a great step forward in the development of an equitable tax policy, to think about these things. They are only looking at one side of the picture. Hon. members on the government side will suffer as much as hon. members on the opposition side if the present measure is adopted.

• (4:30 p.m.)

On behalf of the people of my riding and of Canada I urge the government to put no impediment in the way of those who wish to prosper. It is important that enterprises in this country be successful and those undertaking enterprises ought to be encouraged and not discouraged in their endeavours. The government ought to adopt tax policies that will help this nation to grow and become what we wish it to become.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I rise reluctantly to take part in this debate since, under the new rules, any debate seems superfluous. I think all hon. members know what an hon. member of the Liberal party confessed in a letter read in the house earlier. Government supporters have been instructed to go to committees and, no matter what is in a bill, to take the pill, so to speak.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Government supporters are told to introduce no changes to bills. If opposition members ask questions, those questions are to be sidetracked. Wherever possible, amendments are to be ignored.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: I see hon. members smiling. They may say, "Oh, but these new rules will help us to get on with the job." We shall soon find out what sort of job is being done when we examine the provisions of this bill.

I am reluctant to take part in this debate because I am reluctant to play games. That is all debates in this chamber are now—games. No matter whether hon. members are talking on second reading or third reading, they are indulging in games and wasting their time. Their speeches are exercises in publicity because this chamber has become a forum of publicity. Under the old rules, when the house went into committee of the whole the opposition proposed useful amendments, some of which were accepted. I remember when Judy LaMarsh was in opposition. She proposed an amendment in committee of the whole with respect to a bill to amend the Criminal Code. The Minister of Justice of that day, Mr. Fulton, accepted the amendment which had the effect of giving protection to every policeman in Canada. That does not happen under the new rules because now we play games. I might spend hours preparing an important speech or spend no time on it at all. It makes no difference in this factory created by the Liberal party.

I know the new members are not happy with what is going on. If they do not know what is happening, it will not take them long to learn.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. I have listened most attentively to the hon. member and, as I recall, he said all members of the Liberal party received certain instructions. I am a Liberal party member and I have received no instructions from any member of the government. If I had received such instructions I would not have obeyed them, because I was sent here to do a job and I intend to do it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Furthermore, I know of no Liberal member who received instructions similar to those contained in the letter that was read earlier. In my opinion the writer of that letter should be brought to task—and I point out that here I am speaking strictly for myself.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: I am happy to hear from the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). He is breaking in a new set of harness and likes to look important. May I point out that another Liberal member has admitted that such instructions have been given.

An hon. Member: Name him.

Mr. Woolliams: I see the hon. member carrying on as he does in committee. I think we all know what has been happening under the new rules. Actually I am disappointed at the calibre of debate. Anyone reading Hansard will concede that about the best speech made on Bill C-165 was made by my leader during the early stage of debate. When the budget was originally brought down he put his finger on the problem many hon. members have referred to. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) spoke eloquently this afternoon about that problem.

Unintentionally the minister left with the house a wrong impression with respect to the floor of the new exemptions. Newspaper reports may be partly to blame for this erroneous impression. Also unintentionally, the minister misrepresented the change made with respect to tax liability under the increased progressive rates.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Another hon. Member: Which side of the fence are you on?

Mr. Woolliams: I see hon. members are beginning to heckle. May I say to the hon. member who has just interrupted that I intend to send copies of Hansard to his riding so that his constituents will know what sort of member represents them. I do not think the hon. member's constituents sent him here to heckle. They sent him to get on with the business of the country and not to talk a whole lot of tommyrot.

At the outset the minister left the impression that the basic exemption had been increased to $50,000. From my reading of the bill it seems that estates worth $50,000 and less are not taxable. Nevertheless, all estates worth more than $50,000 have a basic exemption of $20,000 plus certain other exemptions included in this bill. The minister's remarks seemed to imply that the basic exemption for all estates was $50,000 and therein, I submit, lay the misrepresentation. In part, articles like the following one which appeared in Time magazine of February 7 may be responsible for existing misconceptions. The article in question says in part:

Benson restored the rule that estates of $50,000 would remain tax-exempt—

The idea is that a person with an estate of $100,000 enjoys an exemption on the first $50,000. I do not think that is correct.

Mr. Benson: A person may have an exemption on an estate worth $100,000.

Mr. Woolliams: That is possible, and I will deal with that point. But a man might have an estate of $51,000. On that he enjoys an exemption of $20,000 and has to pay tax on the other $31,000.

Mr. Benson: I never said the absolute exemption was $50,000.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not suggest the minister did. I can only suggest that those reporting the minister's remarks misunderstood him. You know, Mr. Speaker, this bill reminds me of a little story. One day Robert Browning wrote a poem. Next day he went to visit Elizabeth Barrett Browning, who was sick, and after he read the poem to her she said, "But what does it mean?" He looked at it and walked round the room. Then he said, "You know, when I wrote that poem only God and I knew what it meant. Now, I confess, only God knows what it means." I agree that the minister did not intentionally leave wrong impressions about the provisions of the bill. The press misquoted him or misinterpreted his remarks.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I quote again from Time magazine:

Benson restored the rule that estates of $50,000 would remain tax-exempt, and proposed to allow heirs to stretch out tax payments over five years. Meanwhile . . . Canadians will have an adequate chance to change their wills—

The situation was reported to Canadians in that way by the skilled writers of Time, a magazine that deprives our Post Office Department of $700,000 annually. The minister and I are on all fours. There is no $50,000 exemption. If an estate is valued at $51,000 there is a $20,000 exemption and tax is paid on the balance of $31,000. The minister and I both know that is the situation, but it is misunderstood by the public.

As I read the bill, estates under $50,000 are not taxable but estates over $50,000 may have a basic exemption of $20,000, plus additional exemptions depending on the category of the person to whom the property is left. A child inheriting property at the age of one year has a different exemption than a person inheriting property at the age of 24 years. As an example, if A leaves B an estate of $60,000, under the proposed new act the basic exemption is not $50,000 but may be $20,000. The rate applies to $40,000 and not $10,000. Let me repeat there is no $50,000 exemption provided for in this bill.

In a speech last night an hon. member spoke about homework. I would like him to listen to what I have to say and then perhaps he will do a little more homework. Many people believe the basic exemption will be $50,000, and I will quote examples of this in a few minutes. Before doing so I want to make some general comments regarding the effect of a progressive increase in rates on property passing from husband to wife and wife to children. If Bill C-165 becomes law, it will have a serious effect on second generation Canadians. In other words, when a husband leaves property to his wife and the wife in turn leaves it to the children, it is the children who will suffer.

In western Canada today there are many Canadians who originally came from Ontario and Quebec. These people had to tolerate a cold climate and terrible conditions in order to have grain to take to the elevators. They worked under these conditions in order to build an estate for their families to enjoy. They certainly did not work under these conditions in order to lose it in a socialistic and communistic manner as this government is now proposing.

Today farms are more valuable than 20 years ago. Farms in Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan are worth $125, $150 and in some cases $200 per acre. These estates have increased in value through inflation. The government has been aggravating and stimulating inflation since it was elected in 1963. The government has not done anything to control the situation. All it believes in is spending money to buy votes. The motive behind this inflation has been to inflate the value of property to over $300,000, and when the person is deceased the government then receives half of his estate. At the cost of farm land and equipment today it does not take very much to build up an estate of this value.

The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin), a spokesman for the New Democratic Party, stated that the Carter commission report was like the Bible to a Christian. On the death of a farmer his son is in a strait-jacket because of provincial legislation.

The legislation states that a farm mortgage cannot be foreclosed without the consent of the court, so he is unable to obtain a loan in western Canada. The result is these farms and ranches must be sold.

A member of the other place, Senator Hazen Argue, in quoting a Saskatchewan commission stated that 24 per cent of the large farms in the Regina plains were owned by United States syndicates. Some cabinet ministers agree with the Watkins report that United States capital must not be encouraged. However, under this new legislation when sons inherit a farm they will have no choice but to sell to United States syndicates. It is in this manner the family farm will be affected. It is in this manner the family business will be affected.

Some politicians have been peddling the philosophy of the Carter commission like that other Carter peddles his liver pills. The farmers, ranchers, small businessmen and salaried men who have taken care to build up investments so that their children will have a good start in life would all suffer if the recommendations of the Carter commission were implemented. The recommendations I refer to are to be found on pages 472 to 490, volume 3 of the report. If time permits I will show that the gift provisions of this new legislation have "out-Cartered Carter". The proposed act will replace the Estate Tax Act of January 1, 1959. The act of 1959 replaced the Dominion Succession Duty Act which had been in force since 1941.

During the last election campaign members of the N.D.P. told the farmers across western Canada that the Carter commission report was the greatest thing since Carter invented a pill. These same members said, "We are for the farmers. It is those rich beggars in the city who are stealing all the money. They are making all the millions." I hope these socialists never return to the farm belts and compare the Carter commission report to Carter and his pills.

• (4:50 p.m.)

I heard M. J. Coldwell speak on many platforms when I was taken to election meetings by my father. He talked about every farm in western Canada having a mortgage and implied that the government might as well own them anyway. I cannot see that the N.D.P. has changed a lot since the Regina manifesto was published. Incidentally, it has always puzzled me why it is called the Regina manifesto. It was created in the Palliser Hotel in Calgary. My hon. friend from Regina-Lake Centre knows something about Calgary because he married a Calgary girl.

Let us see what Carter had to say:

> In appraising the present system, it is also useful to compare the level of estate taxes in Canada to those applicable in the United Kingdom and the United States. Table 17-1 indicates, for estates of certain sizes, what the tax impact is in each jurisdiction. The figures for Canada and the United States are to some extent understated, as non-creditable provincial and state taxes are not taken into consideration.

That is the level existing before we implement this bill, which will go through the committee with the proper instructions.

> It is evident that the present level of estate tax in Canada is substantially less than that applicable in the United Kingdom, but, except for very large estates, is greater than that applicable in the United States. In particular, the United States tax is subsantially lower on that portion of the estate passing to the widow.

In other words, Carter's first point is that Great Britain has a higher tax than Canada and the United States has a lower tax. Why should we have the same tax as Great Britain? This is a land of resources. We have our mines, our factories, our farm lands. We have our cattle which come off the grass of Alberta, the grass of Saskatchewan and Manitoba. Those resources properly developed increase the gross national product of this nation and provide the revenue to give the Canadian people the services they demand.

If the government takes the capital away from sons who have the know-how, how will Canadians get the capital to develop their ranches, mines, cattle and other industries? Great Britain in former years had a different type of economy. It was an island that brought in cheap raw materials from the colonies, processed those materials and exported the finished products to other markets. Why should we pay the same high taxes as Great Britain, particularly when we want to develop the northern part of our nation, and when we have the vision to develop ideas and the initiative to carry them out? This is the kind of society I live in. At least it is the kind of society I have always thought I lived in. People have been free in this country to invest their capital. That is why people who had initiative left the east and went west.

Again returning to the Carter report, I quote from the third volume, and I hope that members of the N.D.P. never go out and say this to the farmers, even to collect votes, because things like this excite the farmers:

> Despite our inability to find support for this alleged unfortunate incidence of estate taxes, it appears reasonable to conclude that taxation imposed on the value of a business will in some instances influence the owner to sell part, or all, of the business. It is highly unlikely that sales of businesses will result from one motive only, and if estate tax is a contributing factor its impact will vary in each instance. However, assuming the extreme position where a business is sold only to meet taxes, the result of the sale may in economic terms be good or bad depending on whether or not it advances the future prospects of the company.

He says the same thing about farms. I am speaking of this great socializer, Carter. This is the bible that the N.D.P. go out and campaign on. This is the great line, the cruncher:

There is little evidence to support the position that businesses tend to prosper to a greater extent because they remain in the same family.

In other words, Carter asked why farms should be passed on to families, why businesses should be passed on to families. In his view they might be better off in the hands of strangers; it might be better to drive sons off the farm. Did the N.D.P. say that in Saskatchewan when it was winning farm seats there? I don't think so. Did the N.D.P. say this to small business? No one operates a business of any size in Canada today under a quarter of a million dollars. That is peanuts following the inflationary period through which we have been passing. Carter recommends that—

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and just to keep the record straight, may I ask the hon. member whether it was not the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, when he was prime minister, who inaugurated the Carter tax study?

Mr. Woolliams: I am quite prepared to say he did not write the report. Mr. Fleming appointed Mr. Carter and I said to Mr. Fleming, and I think Mr. Fleming admitted it himself, that it was a great mistake. Carter was told to look at changes in the estate tax and income tax. He was not told to bring in a socialistic bible. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I do not have to live with the sins of the Diefenbaker cabinet. I never was graced by that opportunity.

These recommendations are like Carter's little liver pills, and I do not think my hon. friend should recommend them to the farmers. I think he is too intelligent to do that. I want the farmers of Saskatchewan to know what they were voting for, particularly in those areas that went socialist. Coming from one of those belts I have never understood how they could be socialist. If the people in those areas are not capitalists there are no capitalists in Canada.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) does not like it when he hears talk about socializing farms. If one is attempting to win farmers' votes then I must agree with him. You must ask, does it affect my little old pocketbook and my little old ballot box, when you are running to be a member of parliament.

To return to my quotation from the Carter Commission report:

It is not the purpose of the tax system to cause businesses to be sold or to protect them from sale. Taxation should be levied in the most neutral manner possible. However, this does not mean that if a taxpayer elects to place his resources in such a way that they are not readily realizeable, he should secure a tax preference over other taxpayers with liquid assets.

In other words, Carter says that if the estate tax, or this new tax bill which has out-Cartered Carter, makes a farmer sell his holdings, or a businessman sell his business, or a family sell its shares in a big industry that it controls, so what? Let these assets fall into a stranger's hands. If the grandfather went to great pains to build up a business or an industry, to create something for his heirs, let it be destroyed. There is only one system like that in the world.

If this proposed change is adopted we may destroy the small businesses of Canada, the farmers and the ranchers. Even those salaried people like deputy ministers, who probably get around $45,000 a year and put their money in investments, or who buy into a company when they retire, will not be able to pass the benefits on to their sons. Yet Carter says this is all right.

The T. Eaton Company is one of the richest family controlled enterprises in Canada. Grandfather Eaton did more to develop the west than any other living industrialist in Canada. He brought supplies to the farmers through his catalogues. The tragedy of the situation is that through legislation like this we may force the grandson to sell the business to Americans, or have the state take it over.

Speaking in Weyburn the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that inefficient farmers have to go. I have a clipping of his speech in my possession. I was quite surprised to read that.

I say to the members of this House of Commons that the situation in Canada is far different from that in Great Britain. We are a country that needs capital in the hands of individuals who have the know-how, the initiative, the creativity and the daring to develop the resources of this land which are in abundance north, south, west and east. This is also important in the oil industry. In Britain their economic development came about by processing raw material bought throughout the world at a cheap price and processed and sold as finished products in a captive market. In Canada, on the other hand, we have the raw materials. What we need is capital left in the hands of individuals to process our own raw materials into finished products so that we will own our own industries and have jobs for Canadians. I say jobs for all Canadians. As I said once in Drumheller, when the coal mines are broke the miners are out of work.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Only through production and trade will the gross national product grow so that this great country can afford the services that our people demand and maintain equality by the implementation and promotion of the same. If the Canadian government by increasing the estate tax and reducing the exemptions skims off the cream of the capital as it is doing by this new bill, the United States will own more of our industries than they do today. Out goes the Watkins report. Carter said: Tax the people and give them services. The N.D.P. always talks about the Scandinavian countries. When I was in Denmark and spoke to the taxi drivers they said there was no opportunity there.

More businesses, more farms, more ranches, more mines, more industrial concerns will fall on the auction block and be sold to United States interests. I do not have the figures but, as I have said, many farms in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta are owned by United States interests. Carter says, if you have to sell the farm, the ranch, or the small business to pay high estate taxes, so what? His suggestion is, sell it, get rid of the people.

In order to have an efficient farm, ranch or small business today you must have an investment of at least $250,000. That does not frighten me. The price of land in the rural areas and indeed the price of land in cities plus the price of equipment in business or agriculture will verify my statement.

Now let us take a look at some figures. I want to put these on the record because some phases of this bill have been misrepresented. Let us take an estate valued at $100,000 which is to be left to two sons 25 years of age. Do not ask me what would happen if their ages are between one and 25; it would take a computer to figure it out. On a $100,000 estate, under the proposed tax the amount would be $8,700. On a $150,000 estate the amount is $21,000. On a $200,000 estate it is $36,200. On a $300,000 estate it is $75,700. This is a 25 per cent increase over the former rate. On a $500,000 estate it is $174,200, an increase of 40 per cent. On a $750,000 estate it is $299,200, an increase of 40 per cent. On an estate of $1 million it is $424,200, an increase of 35 per cent. In any small industry in ordinary business circles $1 million is not much. If you have a printing press in the city of Calgary or Toronto with a $1 million investment it is not a big enterprise any more.

An hon. Member: What's a million?

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad a Liberal yelled that. That is what C. D. Howe said. But the tax you pay is $424,000. By this bill the capital is being skimmed off so that the sons will have to borrow money in this competitive world where one has to deal with unions and make adjustments in respect of labour. I am not complaining about that. However, it is difficult to survive. These figures do not tell the whole story. If a husband's estate is $200,000 and the wife has inherited $20,000 during her lifetime, say from her father, and she wants to keep her inheritance in her family the rate of taxation on her estate will be on the combined amount of $220,000. It cannot be 100 per cent. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is so kind that he says that when they get that grabby they will only collect 50 per cent.

The minister's computers will be kept busy recording social security numbers so that no one can escape the social security axe. When the social security cards came in we were told they did not mean anything. Now the number is put in a machine. Judy LaMarsh admitted in her book that she had enumerated every Canadian by a number. This is the social welfare prison in which we now find ourselves, and this is endorsed by our good friends. Time does not permit me to go into all husband and wife trust conditions, but one thing is sure. The Carter family unit pill has now been handed to every Canadian and this government has told the people to swallow it. It is the castor oil treatment: Open your mouth and we will give you the medicine that is good for you.

Under the bill the exemption for children inheriting property progressively becomes less from age one to age five. At age one I believe it starts out at $35,000 and at age 25 it is reduced to $25,000. It is in respect of the gift tax that they have really taken the bite. Under the old act you could make on $4,000 gift or you had a means by which you could make a gift exempt from tax of half the difference between your total taxable income and your tax. For example, if your taxable income was $35,000 and your income tax was $12,000 the difference was $23,000 and therefore you could make a gift of $11,500. You could make a gift of $11,500 if you earned $35,000 in that year and your tax was on that basis. You could also make during your lifetime one gift of $10,000. We know about the agreement between father and son. The father would sell the son the farm, the son would pay $4,000 per year and there would be a gift of $4,000. That is how they gifted away the homestead so that the son could obtain title to it and be able to operate it.

Today the ceiling on gifts if $2,000 and they are cumulative. For example, if you have a $300,000 estate when you die and have made gifts totalling $125,000 you will pay a tax on a total estate of $425,000. Then you work out the difference between a high and a low, whatever that means. Do not ask me to explain this because only God understands it now, but some experts will perhaps work it out. The gift tax is added to the estate so you pay a tax even on the gift tax. The minister shakes his head. I cannot tell you the name of the man who gave me this information, but he is the head of one of the trust companies in this land. If I am challenged I will give his name. I see my farm friend shake his head. He is an expert. I am not; I sought knowledge.

We all know that reasonable taxes must be paid but high progressive death taxes spell the death knell in respect of children inheriting enough money to develop the resources of this nation. What is the difference between this system and a socialistic state whether it exists in the U.S.S.R. or anywhere else in the world? I heard the leader of the N.D.P. say during the rules debate that there are two ways to arrive at a totalitarian state. One is by revolution—and they are even trying that in this country—and the other is by the subtle method. He mentioned that he met the Prime Minister at a political meeting a number of years ago and said that the Prime Minister is never at a loss for a word or leaves one out and does not intend to. He said that he thought he was using the subtle method to take over this country. This is another method by which you take over farms. It is not the method used in Russia. It is done here by taxation.

• (5:10 p.m.)

I have two or three more comments to make. I was very impressed with the federal-provincial conference for this reason. The federal government has been implementing tax legislation in fields exclusively delegated to the provinces. We have observed federally implemented taxes in those fields as a way of changing the constitution without consent and without amendment to the constitution. I have not time to read the entire section, but section 92 of the British North America Act covers those things which fall within provincial jurisdiction, and medicare is one.

Perhaps I should not say that medicare falls exclusively within provincial jurisdiction, but this is one field in which the federal government has legislated. They gave the provinces the pill and then said, we will negotiate. The government suggested it would consult with the provinces only after they had the pill in their systems. In other words, you do not see the doctor first. You take the pill first and then see the doctor. That is co-operative federalism. That is what the government is doing when it legislates in provincial fields.

Some people ask, why should we care when 75 per cent of the money goes back to the provinces? The deputy premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Steuart, said they did not want this kind of legislation. The federal government should stay out of provincial fields. The Prime Minister suggested that he wanted the nation to stay out of bedrooms. We want a strong central government, but if that government intends to survive it must stay out of provincial fields.

We must remember that in the long run it is the citizen who pays. He is the one who puts out from his pocket both for provincial and federal schemes. Consultation with the provinces after implementation is like giving the patient the disease first and supplying the pill and the water later.

The N.D.P. members make promises about the implementation of the Carter commission report in respect of farmers and businesses. They cannot see why anyone would object to this bill except that the voters might see through the bride's negligee. That is what might happen and they are frightened. Never was there such a deception—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless there is the unanimous consent of the house to allow him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I can conclude my remarks within two minutes. There never was such a deception. I grew up with the party in Saskatchewan. It has been a great party of reform in many ways. They went into Saskatchewan to defeat the Liberal and Conservative members and to bring about reform, but when they told the western farmer that the Carter commission recommendations should be implemented because it would take money from the millionaires and leave it to the farmers' sons they did not tell the truth. Many of their candidates were told this through the literature sent out by their headquarters. They did not even know the colour of the covers on the Carter commission report.

I hope I receive good good news coverage on what I have said today. Perhaps I am being selfish, but almost every farmer subscribes to the Western Producer which is financed by the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. This is the main publication that the western farmer reads, and it is in effect put out by the farmers' co-operative, the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool. I hope my remarks will be printed in that publication in order that the farmers of Saskatchewan will know that what the N.D.P. has told them is untrue. They had better look out because their sons will lose the farms. I am sorry for the Liberals because they have tried to out-socialize the N.D.P. There are many Liberals sitting over there who are true Liberals, and I am sure they must feel very uncomfortable.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I am a little hesitant to speak at this time because I am afraid the contrast between the previous speaker and myself will be so great that some hon. members may fall asleep. In any event I should like to make a few comments about this tax proposal which has aroused a great deal of controversy across the country.

The most controversial aspect of the new tax proposal by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) seems to be in relation to estate and gift taxes. Tax is eliminated under the new proposal when an estate is passed from the husband to the wife or the wife to the husband, but the rate of taxation is increased drastically when the estate is passed to a daughter or a son. I heard one government member state: We will get our money a little later, but we will get more of it so we do not mind waiting. Surely this is true.

I think it is fair to say that this tax proposal has caused great consternation throughout the country, and that the government has received more protest mail than in respect of any other matter before the house, including the abortion bill. Any time that legislation is brought forward and creates so much controversy, there must be something wrong with it. Let me refer to a letter I received from the president of the Investment Dealers' Association, Toronto. He stated:

> This legislation, if implemented, will, in our view, seriously reduce the amount of capital available for Canada's future development and will unfavourably affect the ownership of Canadian industry by Canadians. Clearly, any diminution in the flow of capital investment will reduce the employment opportunities available to our expanding labour force.
>
> We urge that no action should be taken on the proposals until their full implications are analysed and assessed.

The Ontario Economic Council in its report on transfer taxes, their effect on productivity and control of our economy, had this to say:

> Learned critics over many years have debated the pros and cons of transfer taxes. Such critics have almost invariably been men of law concerned primarily with the justice or impartiality represented rather than with economic consequences.
>
> Undue concentration of wealth resulting from a complete absence of transfer taxes tends to destroy incentives which contribute to productivity.
>
> Over-imposition of transfer taxes, on the other hand, has the same effect—

That is what is happening here. The report continues:

> —not only by reducing the national urge to save and build, but by contributing to the loss of control of the nation's material resources.
>
> Obviously there must be a mid-position. What is it and how closely do our practices approach it?

Under the old taxation system, in the happy days of yore, if one's estate was $40,000 or less no estate taxes were paid. After the estate size reached $1,500,000, one entered the 50 per cent estate tax bracket and 54 per cent was paid on everything above $2 million. Those were the ranges. Under the present system the exemption is prescribed as $50,000 and, as the previous speaker mentioned, if the estate happens to be larger than that taxation begins at $20,000.

I feel rather critical of the minister on this point in that it seems to me the public was misled in some way into thinking they were actually getting an exemption of $50,000. The tax on the remainder is increased to a point where an estate worth $300,000 will be taxed to the extent of 50 per cent of the value. Such a tax in practical terms means confiscation of half the assets of the estate. Since very few heirs can finance such a tax and a farming operation as well, especially if there are brothers and sisters who want immediate cash for their share of the estate, the family farm is in danger. Farmers and farm leaders across the nation are very upset about this situation. The ultimate effect may be the wiping out of the family farm. The immediate effect could be the wiping out of the incentive to build up a family estate since, in the long run, it cannot be kept in the family anyway and nobody really wants to labour into his old age for the benefit of the tax collector.

One of the farmers who communicated with me had this to say:

I believe in keeping the family farm in existence. In my opinion the corporate farms, especially when financed by huge feed companies, oil companies, and other such giants are the ones which should be taxed a greater percentage as these will surely destroy the family farms.

These are the organizations which will be taxed less under this proposal. They were taxed to the extent of 54 per cent and will now be taxed to the extent of 50 per cent. This farmer goes on to state:

If farms are kept at a reasonable size more people could earn a living at it and prices might be more favourable. I would like to see governments encourage small operators, not force them to quit, so that they can join the already unemployed.

• (5:20 p.m.)

He goes on to say:

If the present trend continues in regard to larger and larger farms, it will mean more unemployed, more housing problems, more ghost towns. What will become of places which depend on the local farmers for existence? Bonnyville, with a population of over 2,000, is an example——of a town depending on local farmers. There is no industry other than farming to keep this town going. Where would all these people go if there were only a few farmers farming the whole municipal district?

That is a town in my riding.

The family farm should be preserved. It is the foundation of Canadian agriculture. It is one of the essential components of Canadian society, and it could surely be destroyed in one short generation if this new tax went unchallenged. I would like to quote from another letter I received from a farmer in the riding. He expresses opinions which summarize pretty well most of the communications I have received. He says:

I am writing to inform you of my strong disapproval of your proposed new Estate Tax Act as it applies to the smaller estates, and farms in particular—

The farms in our area operate as economic units largely because of the good management practices of the owners. If land, cattle or other assets had to be sacrificed in order to pay high estate taxes, the result could mean the dispersal of the entire estate. I consider this to be unfair, especially when the majority of heirs will have spent a good part of their lives helping their father (or mother) to operate and build up the family farm.

The hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski) last night said that under this new proposal even less tax will be paid if proper planning is used. I think this farmer was able to forecast that statement, because he went on to say:

If the owner could be assured of living to a specified age, he or she could make arrangements for the disposal of the farm to the heirs, but as is all too often the case, he or she can die suddenly while still owner. The heirs can then be left with the necessity of having to forfeit the greater part of the source of livelihood in order to pay this estate tax.

All too often the purchasers of these bargains are "big business" operations. I feel that this new tax will eliminate the family farm as a way of life for those of us who take pride in being independent and self-supporting. There are already too many cogs in the wheels of labour whose only incentive to work is to get a chance at drawing an unemployment cheque. We are people and individuals, not just statistics punched out on a computer card.

This fairly adequately summarizes the feelings in my constituency and, I think it is fair to say, those in all the west and possibly the east as well. I see this tax proposal as simply another step by the government to erode the freedom of the individual. This government seems to be obsessed with compulsion. Its history since 1963 has been to bring in a compulsory pension plan, compulsory medicare and a Criminal Code bill which includes so many clauses, so many different subjects, that it is impossible to feel that you have the freedom to discuss each one and vote on it individually according to your desires.

Having listened to some government members who have spoken on this bill, it seems that what used to be considered a good trait or reasonable trait is now something of which to be ashamed. I am talking about personal ambition and initiative to build up an estate. I do not think it is a shameful thing for a farmer or any businessman to want to build up an estate and provide security for his family. The hon. member for Provencher spoke about planning estate tax payments, and so on. He made some comments which I think are very interesting. I would like to quote one of them:

> No matter how you slice it, it ends up as a tax bait to the federal government.

That sounds a little paradoxical when compared with the general tenor of the hon. member's speech, but that is one of his statements. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) spoke like a Conservative for most of his speech except for the last portion, and I should like to quote some parts of it. He said at one stage:

> I now wish to speak about the new estate tax being applied to a $100,000 estate. I wish to take the case in which the tax bears most heavily, the case where the estate is left outright by a widower to one son, and not to two or three. Under the present law that son will pay $10,200 in estate tax. Under the proposed law he would pay $13,200, an increase of $3,000, which is considerable and which threatens the existence of the family farm.

Government members should take this into account. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin also said:

> It seems the state not only has the right to impose estate taxes, but in my opinion it has a duty. The alternative is very clear. Unless estate taxes are used to prevent the pyramiding of family wealth, then it must follow we are going to move increasingly into a hereditary aristocracy of wealth in this country. It will not be basically from a titled aristocracy. It will gain power in the nation's political affairs by virtue of birth rather than by virtue of individual worth. I am convinced that this or any other form of class system is bad for Canada.

I disagree that keeping a certain amount of an estate in the family is bad for the family. I think it is in fact good for Canada. I suggest that the minister reconsider some of his proposals in this vein. I believe that more consideration should and must be given to farmers' sons and daughters and to the sons and daughters of small businessmen, because in most cases they have spent many years working hand in hand with their parents building up the family farm and should therefore be entitled to a better deal than seems to be in the making at the present time.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to belabour the debate but there are a few things I would like to say in connection with the proposed changes to the Estate Tax Act. The first thing I would like to say is that I am very surprised at the lack of judgment and foresight displayed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). Surely a minister of his experience and background, a man who has been an accountant and auditor, should have foreseen the uproar that these tax changes would bring about. He should also have appreciated the need for precision and certainly in our tax laws. I cannot for the life of me understand how he made such a blunder in setting forth these proposed changes to the act.

I congratulate the minister, though, for one or two things in this bill. I may be a little selfish in my first congratulation to him. In December of 1963, about six years ago, I introduced in this house a private member's resolution suggesting that the Liberal government of the day take note of the situation whereby succession duties were payable within six months from the time of death. In the odd case they did give, at the discretion of the minister, an extension for the payment of these duties, but they were very rare. Succession duties had to be paid in cash within six months. I recommended at that time that the period should be extended and the normal rate of interest charged. I am glad to see that what I suggested is incorporated in the proposed legislation.

I remember so well giving the example at the time of a farmer who died without leaving a will and, very unfortunately, six months later his wife died without leaving a will. The farmer had two sons who were working with him on the farm. They had a first-class herd of purebred cattle. When the mother died, succession duties were payable in six months, not in the form of cattle, land or buildings but in cash. They did not have the cash. What did they do? They had no alternative but to call an auction sale, and their cattle were sold under the hammer to raise the money with which to pay the succession duties. Years of careful work on the part of the father and sons in raising this herd were lost because the succession duties had to be paid quickly. This has now been changed. The minister has suggested a period of six years and I congratulate him on this proposal, though it does not remove the problem of meeting succession duties which will still have to be paid eventually.

• (5:30 p.m.)

I think I would be remiss if I did not comment on some of the observations made last night by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Smerchanski). He said, among other things, that we on this side of the house had not done our homework. He also complained that the press had not done their homework in connection with this bill. I am sure he must have received as many letters in connection with this legislation as I and other members have received, and I think it is unfair for him to suggest that we have not done our homework. I am sure we on this side have done as much as he has done.

I hope he circulates Hansard to every farmer and small businessman in his riding so that they will have the opportunity to read what he has said. After all, I think the hon. member would agree that we are here to represent constituencies which, we hope, will grow increasingly to develop Canada as a first-class country. We want to promote industry and small businesses; we want to see profitable farms develop; we want to see greater employment opportunities provided. For the hon. member to suggest that this legislation will not have an adverse effect on Canada's farms and small businesses is, in my opinion, misleading. I should like him to distribute the Hansard in question to all his people and let them make up their own minds in this regard.

The hon. member spoke about tax-free gifts. As you know, Mr. Speaker, under these amendments tax-free gifts are restricted to $2,000 whereas the old limit was $4,000. The hon. member for Provencher says the effect is unchanged because a husband and a wife can each give $2,000, making $4,000. I ask the hon. member: In how many cases does a wife living with a husband pay tax separately? There are some cases, of course. In cases where she is a taxpayer she will be able to give $2,000.

Mr. Smerchanski: She does not have to be a taxpayer.

Mr. Hales: She has to be a taxpayer. It is not in every case that a husband and wife can each give $2,000.

Mr. Smerchanski: Sure they can.

Mr. Hales: Well, we will leave it to the lawyers to interpret. I have put my interpretation on it. The hon. member expressed the opinion that from a standpoint of dollars and cents the proposed estate tax is equitable. With regard to estate tax planning, he said, after August 1, 1969 one could opt either to take the old rates or the new rates. This is not the interpretation I place on the bill. After August 1, 1969 there is no such choice; the regulations have to be followed. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, who should be doing the homework?

Mr. Smerchanski: You should.

Mr. Hales: You tell me if I am wrong.

Mr. Smerchanski: You are wrong.

Mr. Hales: The hon. member talks about corporations paying between 60 and 70 per cent of their net profits taxes, taking into account the tax on dividends amounting to anywhere between 10 and 20 per cent. He talks about this as though it was a wonderful thing. Imagine a corporation having to pay 60 or 70 per cent of its profits in taxation. How can he, or anyone else with corporations in their ridings, expect them to survive when they have to pay up to 70 per cent of their net profits in taxation? After all, these firms must put something aside for research and for their necessary capital requirements to keep them up to date and in line with the times. I do not know how we can expect them to continue under this staggering taxation load.

Turning again to the subject of small businesses and succession duties, let me say I would have preferred the Minister of Finance to have done something to help these enterprises which are struggling to continue their existence. Let him go up and down the main streets in any of the towns and cities of Canada and see how many empty stores there are. Why are they empty? They are empty because small businessmen have been given no encouragement by the government. Instead of bringing in this type of legislation the Minister of Finance would have been better engaged in providing expanded opportunities for the operators of small businesses.

One point in particular occurs to me in this connection. In thousands of cases the wife of an operator of a small business works with him, serving in the store or corner shop. But the husband is not allowed to charge her wages as part of his operating costs. Yet if she did not work for him he would have to hire somebody else, and the wages paid to that person could be deducted as a legitimate business expense.

A few years ago a Conservative government introduced the Small Businesses Loans Act. I cannot think of anything else which has been done to assist small business. If the present situation continues we shall see more and more empty stores throughout the country. A good deal is said in this chamber about industry. I want to see encouragement given to industry to develop and provide jobs for Canadians. But when large corporations, small businesses and farms are all saddled with the proposed taxation the attitude of those engaged in them is: I might as well sell out. And where are they likely to find a purchaser? Very likely it will be a United States corporation. So we find ourselves recalling the stand taken by a former minister of finance, Mr. Walter Gordon, when he urged us not to let Americans take over Canada but promote Canadian investment in Canadian industries. The present government does not appear to think in those terms. It does not worry about the number of corporations which will have to sell out in order to escape succession duties.

We realize that under the minister's new proposal no estate duty is payable when an estate passes from husband to wife or from wife to husband. That sounds good. But it only represents a postponement of a final tax payment. What is the attitude generally to these proposed changes? Many have said to me: What is the use? We might as well spend the money. We saved it to give to our children but there is such a heavy tax on it we might as well spend it.

What is the effect likely to be? An attitude of this kind toward spending promotes inflation. It throws another log on to the fire of inflation and, goodness knows, that is what we want to avoid, because inflation is the greatest enemy facing Canada today. Nevertheless the government is making proposals which will only worsen this situation, and for the life of me I cannot imagine why they should wish to do so at this particular time.

• (5:40 p.m.)

As the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has asked, what does the government want to do? Force fathers to sell out? They do not seem to want to encourage their heirs to carry on the family farm or business.

I have received, as I am sure everyone in the house has, considerable mail on this subject, more than on any other matter to come before the house. I am not going to put all of these letters on the record, but there is one that really made me feel terrible. It is from a man who is a long way along life's road. He says:

> The political parties all seem not to give a half a damn about the electors who have a substantial estate. "Let's rob them" seems to be the slogan. Well perhaps this will work for a while.
>
> I will mention two items. My son-in-law is a Ph.D. in science from McGill after getting an M.A. from Queen's. He and Marjorie and family are living in the U.S.A. They always talked about the time when they would come back to Canada. But not now. They would be crazy to come back to this country and I told them so. John has applied for U.S.A. citizenship papers.
>
> The other item was told me by a Galt businessman, since the first of this year. A friend of his retired. His home was in Michigan. He had planned to settle in a nearby Canadian town, close to Galt. In checking items with a banker in that town the banker told him he would be crazy to come back to Canada. This chap and his wife are now settled in Florida. I think this could be multiplied many times across the country. If I were only ten years younger and had a wife the same age and well, I would get out of here fast. After spending 52 years in the shoe business I now find that it is practically impossible to pass any of my hard-earned savings on to my grandchildren—ten of them in Canada.
>
> My apologies for this long letter. At long last I am sorry that I am a Canadian.

Is that not a sad way to have to end a letter? This is a man in his twilight years who has worked in the shoe business in Canada since 1909, and who says he is sorry he is a Canadian. We do not want that sort of thing in this country. We want people to have the opportunity to work and to save, to show initiative and receive reward for their effort. It is only natural for a man who works hard to want to save a little money to hand on to his children. He paid tax on that money and he paid plenty. He should be allowed to hand on a portion of what he has saved after paying tax. I am not saying that succession duty should be abolished completely, but I do think some discretion in the amount of succession duty levied should be exercised.

As I said at the beginning, I am not going to belabour this point. I am concerned about small businessmen and farmers, those in my riding who are engaged in industry and who want to survive, to develop their industry and to receive some reward for their work. I do not want the owners of businesses, big and small, to say to me: "What's the use? I might as well sell out." If they have to sell out they sell to people from the United States, and they will eventually take over this country. Although I do not think that is the wish of any member of this house, I can see the day coming when this will be the result if the government continues to tax the Canadian people in the way that is proposed.

Mr. Smerchanski: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member who has just spoken quoted from page 5682 of Hansard, the tenth line from the bottom, and he is correct when he says it should read "before August 1, 1969" and not "after August 1". That accords with the proposed legislation. May I thank him for bringing that matter to my attention.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I would be derelict in my duty if I did not take the opportunity to rise in my place and register my strong protest at some of the implications of Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act.

First of all, I was not only appalled but amazed when about ten days ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) rose in his place in this house and implied that he had received no objections from members of the opposition with respect to these proposed amendments. I must give the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) full credit for taking it upon himself to raise a point of privilege following that implication by the minister in order to clear up the record. We finally got an admission from him that he had received eight or ten letters from opposition members.

I was one of the opposition members who registered my protest in as strong language as I could couch in a two page letter to the minister under date of January 22. I am not going to go into the details of it but I did send copies of the letter to the 18 weekly papers in my riding so they would know that the opposition was on the job in this house. At that time I was a little concerned whether under the new rules we have adopted I would even get the opportunity to register my protest. However, I have that opportunity now.

I am not going to belabour the point this evening because I feel that other members of the opposition have gone into thorough detail in their analysis of the effects of this bill upon Canadians in general and the people I have to honour to represent in particular. I am referring, of course, to the large number of farmers on family farm units and to small businesses, I was a farmer myself and a member of the farming fraternity for a number of years before moving into the business world. Therefore I am fully aware of the problems created by this proposed tax measure as applied both to small businessmen and to farmers.

I think the majority of Canadians agree with one provision of the bill, namely, the transfer of an estate without tax from one spouse to the other at death. This amendment was long overdue. But we find the government being benevolent on the one hand and taking money away on the other, and as many members have pointed out this is where problems arise.

In my letter to the minister I think it is worthy to note that I suggested we do away altogether with the principle of estate tax as outlined in this bill. I make that statement because the province of Alberta already refunds 75 per cent of the estate tax that it collects from people in that province. I believe the premier of Saskatchewan, the hon. Ross Thatcher, is on record as saying it is his intention to do the same thing in Saskatchewan, and if the record is checked I believe the province of Manitoba has indicated it is also considering this step. If that is the case, the inference is that Canadians, particularly those in western Canada, are definitely against the principle of this bill. Consequently, why does the federal government not follow up this trend of thought and eliminate this tax altogether?

• (5:50 p.m.)

The federal government will say that they must have tax revenue, and I agree with that. I also think that the principle of income tax is the fairest principle on which taxation can be based. Surely the government could recover by way of extra income tax levied on businesses or farms any amount which might otherwise be recovered by way of estate tax. It is only right that those who have worked hard to build up a business or farm should enjoy the fruits of their labour and know that those fruits will not be dissipated on their death.

I worked on a family farm some years ago. My father, brother and I worked day in and day out, year in and year out, from daylight to dark. We all hoped to share eventually in the family farm. Others who work in family businesses hope equally to share in those businesses. That principle has helped to build up farms and businesses in this country, particularly in the rural areas. If the prospect of inheritance induces people to work hard in a family farm or business it is unrealistic to expect that by imposing inheritance taxes we shall maintain the incentive of prospective heirs to work hard and build up businesses. It takes a lifetime to build a business, and on the deaths of the owners the government should not collect estate taxes which may cripple the business.

I regret that the Minister of Finance is not in the house. In fact, I see no minister here at all.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): One or two hopefuls are present.

Mr. Southam: We are discussing a major piece of legislation and yet no minister of the government is here to listen to hon. members.

Mr. Gray: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the hon. member and other hon. members that I have been asked by the Minister of Finance particularly to pay very close attention to remarks being made so that their value, which undoubtedly is high, will not be lost. It is now five minutes to six. The minister was in the house until two or three minutes ago. I hope that answers the hon. member's complaint.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I have some responsibility in this matter. The Minister of Finance mentioned to some of us that he had to go away on urgent business. I say nothing about other ministers. The hon. member who has been speaking did not know that fact, since he was probably outside the chamber preparing his speech. I repeat that the minister said he had to go away on important business.

Mr. Hees: Speaking to the hon. member's point of order, I submit it has been recognized practice in any government that if a minister himself cannot be present in the chamber to pilot a bill a colleague of his will take his place in the house. I find it shocking that no minister has been present for some time in the house. That shows the lack of interest of the government in this matter.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, I accept the statement of the parliamentary secretary. As the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees) suggested, it is the duty of the minister to delegate responsibility to a colleague who should be present in this chamber. I do not suggest my remarks are of earthshaking importance, but they represent views held by many in my constituency. The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales) who preceded me made an informative speech. I hope my comments are equally worthy of note.

In view of action being taken or to be taken by certain provinces in the field of estate taxes I urge the government to reconsider its position in this field. The present estate tax formula represents a retrograde step. The government should not introduce legislation which may have the effect of eliminating the family farm or small business. Although my remarks apply particularly to western Canada they also apply to the rest of Canada. Industrial areas of the country may not be concerned about the provisions of this legislation but the people of the rural areas feel that the proposed legislation will perpetrate injustices. I therefore submit that the bill should not be given passage in its present form.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As it is six o'clock this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 20, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the House has received from the Chief Electoral Officer certificate of the election and return of T. C. Douglas, Esquire, for the electoral district of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

NEW MEMBER INTRODUCED

T. C. Douglas, Esquire, member for the electoral district of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands introduced by Mr. David Lewis and Mr. Harold E. Winch.

MR. T. C. DOUGLAS

EXPRESSIONS OF CONGRATULATION AND WELCOME TO LEADER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government I welcome back to this house an hon. member who has enjoyed one of the longest active political careers in Canada. Perhaps a few months have been missing here and there but, by and large, I believe he has been sitting in legislative chambers or parliaments since 1935.

We must all face the hazards of political life. The hon. member who has returned to this house has shown that he persists in the pursuit of his ideals, that he has great sticking power and that he believes strongly in the principles he follows. These are virtues we admire in him.

He is also welcome because he has a great sense of humour and conducts himself in a lively fashion in debates. Of course the hon. members of his caucus will welcome the additional leadership he will bring to their united ranks.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: We know he brings to the house an intimate knowledge of his new constituency, where he has been meeting his constituents for some months. He will find the house a welcome place in which to be. It has changed a little. We now have a permanent or enduring Speaker, we have changed the rules a little, and some of the ministers are in the house, off and on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: The one thing that has not changed, however, Mr. Speaker, is the courtesy of hon. members and the friendships which develop among members of all parties. As a human being and as a man devoted to principle, the hon. member stands second to none. Because of this we welcome him back to the house.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in warmly welcoming back to the house the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), the leader of the New Democratic party.

The hon. gentleman has always enjoyed the highest regard and respect of his colleagues. He has always been in the public life of the country, first in the House of Commons as the hon. member for Weyburn, then as premier of a province, then in the house as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and now as the hon. member representing the constituency of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. His return to parliament is welcomed by all, and especially by those on the left—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I am glad they rise to that. Of course, I really mean to the left of you, Mr. Speaker. I am sure I can group most of us who are sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker, as being to the left of the government, as it is virtually impossible to be to the right of this government—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: —unless, of course, we were prepared to adopt the principles of Genghis Khan or somebody of that sort.

An hon. Member: Don't suggest it!

New Member

Mr. Stanfield: I hope I am not out of place, Mr. Speaker, in suggesting to the hon. member, who is taking his seat today, that his colleague the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has conducted himself eloquently and effectively as the acting parliamentary leader of his party. I hope this is not the kiss of death for the coming days. The hon. member for York South was so effective that the other day he was accused of demagoguery by the Prime Minister. I interpret that as being complimentary.

These are very strenuous days for parliament and the country. We all know the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands will continue to make a very informed and constructive contribution to parliament and the country. It is a great pleasure indeed for me personally and on behalf of my colleagues to welcome him back to this house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we in this corner of the house congratulate the new member and leader of the New Democratic party on his election; we notice that though he has not been too fortunate in general elections, he seems to have become an expert in by-elections.

Mr. Speaker, we will now have the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) on our right, and even though we do not always endorse his ideas because they lean to the left, we nevertheless appreciate his many qualities as a parliamentarian. I have had the opportunity of knowing him personally in 1962. During all the debates, he was a credit to the House of Commons, by putting forward the ideas of his party which he represented very well.

I take the opportunity to commend those who, during his absence, assumed the leadership of the New Democratic party in parliamentary matters. Even though their leader was not here, they were able to hold out and set forth the ideas which prompted their constituents to elect them to the House of Commons.

We therefore join our verbal flowers to the natural flowers which have been placed on the hon. member's desk; we assure him of our respect and wish him good luck for the future.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as the devil said when he was sworn in as a member of the cabinet, "It's nice to be home."

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I want, sir, through you to express my very sincere appreciation of the warm welcome which has been extended to me by members in all parts of the house, and particularly to say how deeply touched I am by the fine tributes which have been paid by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield), and the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), speaking on behalf of the Ralliement du Creditiste. I have been associated with politicians so long that I do not take too seriously what they say in their moments of euphoria; nevertheless I know from long experience and from having worked with members in all parties in this house that their tributes are sincere, and their welcome is a genuine one.

I am very happy to be able to resume my place in the house. As the Prime Minister has said, I have had many months away from the house in which to learn many things. I would even recommend it to some members of the house and of the government. I think that visiting logging camps, sawmills and pulpmills, fishermen on their boats, businessmen and consumer groups is a very valuable experience for one who has been a long time in public life. I am deeply indebted to the house for its kindness, and to the people of Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands for the vote of confidence they gave to me and to my colleagues in sending me here.

I would like to express my appreciation to the members of the New Democratic party who sit in this house for the fine job they have done during my absence. I am glad the Prime Minister has noted the degree of unity which obtains. I have had no difficulty with some of them wanting to get out of NATO, and some wanting to stay in NATO.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They have managed to develop a degree of unity which I have found most comforting.

It was a great experience, coming back last night; when I got off the plane some of my colleagues and supporters met me and presented me with a book called, "The Sayings of Chairman Diefenbaker." When I got into our apartment I found sitting on the table, a book my wife had been reading, one by the Prime Minister on federalism. In spite of those two very inauspicious beginnings I decided to take my seat, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank the members for their kindness and to say that at this very critical stage in Canada's history, when we are shaping the future of the country, I am very happy to be a member of the house. I have had the privilege over the years of serving in this house and serving in a provincial legislature. I hope that something of the experience which I have gathered may be of some value as we face the critical days ahead.

• (2:20 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

STATEMENT AS TO LEGISLATION TO BE CONSIDERED BEFORE SUMMER ADJOURNMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement with regard to the business of the house for the balance of the session. I believe that the house may find useful some information that I have drawn together about the work remaining to be done between now and the beginning of the summer adjournment.

My proposal is that the house adjourn for Easter at the conclusion of the sitting on Wednesday, April 2 and sit again on Monday, April 14. I am proposing also that we should try to be ready to adjourn for the summer on Friday, June 27. On that basis, after yesterday, taking into account the two additional holidays prescribed by Standing Order 2, we now have 83 sitting days in which to complete our work.

Of those days a total of 18 are committed as allotted days for the business of supply with, I assume, an additional three days for the final supplementary estimates. I am reserving six days for a budget debate. Naturally, I cannot say whether the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will want to initiate such a debate or, if he does, whether any budget bills will eventuate from his statement. This means that 27 days are committed. Any days that might be required for budget bills would be over and above that number. In other words, the maximum number of days that we can count on for the legislative business about which we now know is 56.

The House of Commons has before it, at some stage of the legislative process, a total of 19 bills. In the other place there are four bills with which the House of Commons has not yet dealt. On the basis of the list put forward by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on September 12, and my best knowledge at this moment, I can foresee 21 additional bills. This means that to the 19 bills now before this house at various stages we should add a total of 25 bills not yet before this house. There is also the matter of a proposed resolution dealing with Canada's anthems.

The following is a list of the bills not yet before the house and I should indicate that no significance should be attached, one way or another, to the order of this list: Investment companies Bill, S-17; Criminal Code (Hate propaganda) amendment, Bill S-21; Canada Shipping Act amendment, Bill S-23; Oil and Gas Productions and Conservation, Bill S-29; Canadian Educational Broadcasting Agency bill; Income Tax Act amendment—from the October 22, 1968 budget; Dominion Coal Board dissolution bill; Yukon Minerals bill; Canada Corporations Act amendment; National Housing Act amendment; Satellite Communications Corporation bill; Export Development Corporation bill; Federal Co-operatives bill; Old Age Security Act amendment; Loan Companies Act amendment; Trust Companies Act amendment; Canada Development Corporation bill; Indian Claims bill; Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act amendment; Foreign Insurance Companies Act amendment; Expropriation Act amendment; Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act amendment; Fisheries Improvement Loans Act amendment (No. 2); Expo Winding-up bill; Patent Act (fees) amendment.

We also hope to introduce an industrial incentives bill in respect of the department of my colleague, the minister of regional and economic expansion, a Canada water bill and a securities bill, but it would not be our intention that these should be passed during the course of this session.

This schedule means that we are confronted with about 45 items to fill our remaining 56 days for legislation. I have made available to the house leaders of parties opposite a list showing the bills passed, the bills in progress in this house and the work to come.

Let me conclude by saying two things. First, it is always possible that emergencies will require the government to come to the house with additional legislative proposals not now anticipated. Secondly, if we finish our work before June 27 I will be more than happy to join in a lobby for an earlier summer adjournment.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have had the pleasure—perhaps I should correct that word of "opportunity"—of reading the list which has been placed before us by the President of the Privy Council. The government has the assurance of this party that, within the limits of our capacity and our right to discharge our responsibility as Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, we will co-operate with the government in attempting to meet, as best we can, the schedule to deal with these legislative proposals within the time named. We do not however intend to be in any sense deficient in doing those things which as an opposition we have to do in the discharge of those responsibilities. I think I should make that quite plain, and I do so in no controversial spirit at all.

It is a fact that this has been an unusual session. There is the possibility of our having two budgets, at least time has been provided by the president of the Privy Council for this eventuality. There are a number of legislative proposals—and I am not going to be controversial about this either—which have been left over, but might well have been concluded in the normal course of events if the election had not been held. That was of course the right of the government.

If we can get all these things done by June 27, that is fine. If we have to stay a little longer, I and my colleagues will be very regretful, but we do not intend to be delinquent in the discharge of our responsibilities.

It is my hope that we can work out arrangements for business of the house. For today, for example, I am quite happy to propose that the legislation now before the house be completed today. This estate tax amendment legislation has had a great deal of consideration, and there has been an exceedingly good opportunity for debate. It has been canvassed from all sides of the house. I for one on behalf of this party would agree to an order, if the house is agreeable, to complete second reading, and go through the committee stage and third reading by staying today to complete this bill.

I would refer also to some of the other legislation before the house. For example I have in mind the Criminal Code amendment legislation. I understand from my colleagues who will be serving on the standing committee that when that measure goes to the standing committee it should not be impossible to work out an agreement, through consultation, as to the length of time with which the committee should be seized of that bill. Once it has been before the standing committee, and the government is ready to report the bill, we will know what amendments there are.

In accordance with our views as expressed earlier in this house, once through the usual consultative processes among the house leaders we know what will be involved and what amendments will be brought back to the house we can decide without inhibition what period of time will be required at the report stage in the house.

Finally, before I sit down may I suggest that when we look at the bills we have been through, and look at the peripatetic progress that has been made, while I realize that members of the government must from time to time be away from this house—and I would not want to inhibit their right—under such circumstances it would facilitate the progress of legislation in the house, and other measures placed before us by the government, if when a measure was initiated and brought into the house for debate, the debate could be completed without having to suspend it, as has happened from time to time, and resume it at a later date. I think that more orderly and reasonable progress could be made if this were done. Having said that, Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to co-operate and we hope the target dates will be achieved. We wish the government success in at least reaching those target dates.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I wish to thank the government house leader for having supplied us with a copy of the memorandum which he was using when he made his remarks. We believe it is very useful for us to know what legislation the government has in mind for the balance of the session. We also think it is useful and helpful to have a program so far as the calendar is concerned. I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that the important thing for this parliament to do is attend to its business even if we have to stay here, but we think it is a good idea to try and plan our time so we will get the important business done within reasonable time.

I should like to congratulate the government house leader upon including in the time schedule the necessary days for a budget presentation. He had to protect himself with respect to that matter, but we feel, because the country deserves a statement as to our financial position and because it is important to the new program that we worked out as part of our procedures to have the budget in the spring, it would be a good idea to have the budget presentation at that time.

I am interested, of course, in noting that the government house leader has included the proposed Income Tax Act amendment so as to make an honest man out of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), who is presently collecting a 2 per cent social disillusionment tax that has not yet been passed by parliament. In looking over the list of bills that we have before us, I am inclined to say that the important thing is not the number of pieces of legislation with which we are presented but the quality and value of those pieces of legislation. There are some notably missing. May I say a word or two about two or three which are on the list.

There is a reference to the Canada Development Corporation. This reminds me of the millions of times people pray "Thy kingdom come" but never expect it to happen. I hope that this time the government is going to go ahead with the Canada Development Corporation that has been mentioned so often. We trust that the housing legislation will have some real substance, some real content in it. I hope, too, that the reference to the Old Age Security Act and to the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act amendment means that we will not just be tidying up a few anomalies, but that the important needs which must be met under these acts will be dealt with at this session. I refer to the need for increased pensions.

I draw the minister's attention to the fact that there is not in the list any reference to the omnibus bill No. 2 to which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) referred yesterday, nor is there any reference to any legislation arising out of the Woods report which is being considered by the Committee on Veterans Affairs. Consequently there is no reference to war veterans allowance under such legislation. We think this matter ought to be dealt with at this session. I have one other comment, Mr. Speaker. We welcome the reference to the Indian claims legislation that is to be dealt with at this session but, as has been stated on previous occasions, we feel that this legislation should not be proceeded with until the views of the native people of Canada have been heard with respect to it.

The government will have our co-operation in trying to get this program of legislation through within the target dates that have been suggested, but we urge, again, that what is important is the quality of the legislation. We plead for quality and substance in the legislation referring to the Canada Development Corporation, as well as in the legislation dealing with housing and matters related to pensions and to our war veterans.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, can assure the government house leader of our entire co-operation regarding the legislative program we shall have to pass before the summer recess.

We have had the opportunity to become acquainted with the proposals already before us. Some bills require more careful consideration than others. That is why it is so difficult to come to a decision in advance as to the many pieces of legislation that the government intends to introduce and which have not as yet been tabled in this house, as we do not know yet their exact content.

At all events, according to the agenda submitted in conformity with the procedure, we shall have approximately 58 days, I think, to study the bills already before the house and those who are listed on the program we approved yesterday, and which was suggested in the house today.

Is it not strange that Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day which falls before June 27 is not mentioned before the adjournment of the house for the summer recess? Will we have to sit on June 24?

The government house leader did not mention this great feast day to which the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) attached so much importance last year, before the elections, and which was celebrated with great pomp in Montreal. I wonder whether we should attach a special importance to the celebration of Saint-Jean-Baptiste Day this year.

[English]

• (2:30 p.m.)

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

ESTIMATES

REFERENCE OF VOTES OF CERTAIN DEPARTMENTS TO STANDING COMMITTEES

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved:

That the Estimates of sums required for the service for Canada for the year ending March 31,

Reference of votes to Standing Committees

1970, be referred to the several standing committees of the House, as follows:

To the Standing Committee on Agriculture

Votes 1, 5, 10, 12, 15, 17, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 45, 50 and 51 relating to the Department of Agriculture.

Vote 55 relating to the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Votes 60 and 65 relating to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

Vote 70 relating to the Farm Credit Corporation.

To the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts

Votes 1, 5, 10 and L5 relating to the Department of Communications.

Vote 15 relating to the Post Office.

Vote L10 relating to the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation.

Votes 1, 3, 5 and 10 relating to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Vote 25 relating to the Canada Council.

Votes 30 and L145 relating to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Vote 40 relating to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

Vote 48 relating to the Company of Young Canadians .

Vote 50 relating to the National Arts Centre Corporation.

Votes 55 and 60 relating to the National Film Board.

Vote 65 relating to the National Library.

Vote 70 relating to the National Museums of Canada.

Vote 75 relating to the Public Archives.

To the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence

Votes 1, 10, and 15 relating to the Department of External Affairs.

Votes 30, 35, and L35 relating to the Canadian International Devel. Agency.

Vote 40 relating to the International Joint Commission.

Votes 1, 5, 7, 10, 12, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 45, 48, and 50 relating to the Department of National Defence.

Vote 55 relating to Defence Construction (1951) Limited.

To the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs

Votes 1, 3, 10, 15, and 25 relating to the Department of Finance.

Vote 55 relating to the Department of Insurance.

Votes 1, 10, 20, 25, 30, 35, L95, L100, L105, and L110 relating to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Vote 40 relating to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Department of National Revenue.

Vote 10 relating to the Tax Appeal Board.

Vote 25 relating to the Economic Council of Canada.

To the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, and 40 relating to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

To the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs

Votes 68 and L175 relating to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corp.

Votes 1, 5, 10, and 15 relating to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Votes 1, 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 17, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 41, and 45 relating to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Votes 50 and 55 relating to the Medical Research Council.

To the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development

Votes 1, 5, 10, 20, 25, 30, 33, 34, 35, 40, L40, L45, L50, L55, L60, L65, L70, L75, L80, L85, and L90 relating to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Vote 45 relating to the National Battlefields Commission.

To the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works

Votes 1, 5, 15, 20, 25, 40, 45, and 50 relating to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Votes 55 and 60 relating to the Atomic Energy Control Board.

Votes 65, 70, L15, L20, L25, and L30 relating to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited (Research Program).

Vote 75 relating to the Dominion Coal Board.

Vote 80 relating to the National Energy Board.

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, 50, 55, and 60 relating to the Department of Public Works.

To the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs

Vote 1 relating to the Department of Justice.

Vote 1 relating to the Department of the Solicitor General.

Votes 5 and 10 relating to the Correctional Services.

Votes 15 and 20 relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

To the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Department of Labour.

Vote 10 relating to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, and L115 relating to the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Vote 30 relating to the Immigration Appeal Board.

To the Standing Committee on Regional Development

Votes 1, 5, 10, L120, L125, and L130 relating to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

Vote 35 relating to the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

To the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications

Votes 1, 3, 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40, L150, L155, L160, and L165 relating to the Department of Transport.

Vote 45 relating to the Canadian National Railways.

Votes 50, 55, 60, and 65 relating to the Canadian Transport Commission.

Votes 70, 75, 77, 80, and L180 relating to the National Harbours Board.

Votes 85, 90, and L185 relating to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority.

To the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections

Vote 45 relating to the Chief Electoral Officer.

To the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs

Votes 1, 5, 10, 20, 25, 30, 35, 38, 40, and 45 relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

To the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates

Vote 50 relating to the Auditor General.

Votes 1 and 5 relating to the Governor General and Lieutenant-Governors.

Votes 1, 5, 10, 15, and 20 relating to the Senate and the House of Commons.

Vote 25 relating to Library of Parliament.

Votes 1, 5, 10, and 15 relating to the Privy Council.

Vote 20 relating to the Science Council.

Vote 30 relating to the Public Service Staff Relations Board.

Votes 20, 25, L135, and L140 relating to the National Capital Commission.

Votes 80 and 85 relating to the Public Service Commission.

Votes 1, 5, 15, and 20 relating to the Department of Supply and Services.

Votes 30 and 35 relating to Canadian Arsenals Limited.

Vote 40 relating to the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

Votes 1, 5, and 10 relating to the Treasury Board.

Votes 15, 20, 25, and 30 relating to the National Research Council.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, we in this party do not intend to oppose the basis of the allocation. We have some reservations about some of the detail, particularly in respect of the new departments being set up. I can only add we hope that when the government has come to the stage when it concludes that the problem will be solved by means other than the creating of new departments we might not need quite as many of these references to committees.

Motion agreed to.

FISHERIES

PURCHASE PROGRAM TO STABILIZE FROZEN GROUNDFISH MARKET

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, our Canadian groundfish industry, as many hon. members know, is in difficulties. It is in difficulties because the export price for a number of our frozen groundfish products has declined sharply since 1967. This industry, which sells close to 90 per cent of its output in the United States, is caught in a serious cost-price squeeze.

It is important to note that this squeeze has occurred despite the fact that the retail price for many of these products has continued to rise in the United States and elsewhere.

It is apparent, therefore, that the government's main objective must be to do what it can to bring about a permanent improvement in the marketing outlook for Canadian frozen groundfish products by reinforcing the industry's competitive position abroad. Such a program will be far more beneficial than short-term subsidies. The latter can create serious difficulties because of Canada's international agreements on tariffs and trade. Also, experience has shown that subsidies cause few, if any, long-term improvements in incomes and working conditions in the industry.

The government therefore proposes, by taking advantage of our fisheries prices support legislation, to enter the market itself. It proposes, in other words, to initiate a purchase program designed to strengthen and stabilize market prices for frozen groundfish products. Supplies accumulated in this way will eventually be sold through ordinary commercial channels. They will not be released, however, at prices less than those paid for these stocks in the first instance. Nor will they be sold until their export price is high enough to cover our basic costs of production in Canada.

These costs must include an adequate price to our Canadian fishermen. The government is not prepared to enter into any plan to assist the industry unless appropriate measures are taken to ensure that the fishermen share in the benefits. Close to 15,000 fishermen and plant workers, and their families, depend upon the Canadian groundfishery, and their welfare must be of primary concern to the government.

It is our intention to maintain a close and continuing liaison with representatives of the fishermen and the trade in order to devise means whereby fishermen can be assured of prices that will not fall below the average for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967.

• (2:40 p.m.)

The low market prices of recent years have put many plants in the position where they lack working capital. Some have had to close for this reason. Others are in a precarious position at present and lack the necessary funds to modernize their operations and to cut costs by improving productivity.

In order to overcome this problem of a shortage of working capital, and in order to ensure adequate returns to fishermen, the government also proposes, as a special emergency measure, to make loans available to fishing and processing firms in 1969. The government is furthermore prepared to waive repayment of these loans until after the market price for our principal groundfish products reaches a figure which will ensure adequate returns to our Canadian fishermen and to the companies involved in our Canadian groundfishery.

Mid-term and long-term measures are also contemplated. Advice which the government has received from its consultants indicates that important economies can soon be achieved, both at sea and in our processing plants. Our Canadian groundfish industry will therefore be encouraged to avail itself of the financial assistance which is also available under our general adjustment assistance program. This program, as hon. members will recall, was instituted in order to help Canadian producers take advantage of growing export opportunities resulting from the Kennedy Round of tariff negotiations. Assistance under this program is available to firms which are prepared to restructure their operations in order to improve their competitive position between now and the early 1970s.

The results of this three-way approach must have an immediately beneficial effect on the frozen groundfish industry. The provision of loans under the conditions already outlined will help with the immediate problem of finding working capital. Use of the fisheries prices support legislation will strengthen the industry's hand in the market. And this, coupled with the greater efficiencies made possible through the adjustment assistance program will narrow the gap between production costs and market prices.

Looking even further ahead we must plan for greater rationalization in the industry. Certain plants will have to specialize in selected operations, and greater diversification in terms of products will be encouraged. It is apparent also that beginning in the early 1970s our frozen groundfish operations will have to be centralized in fewer growth centres. Such trends, though economically desirable, create related social and other problems. These must be resolved by taking advantage of companion programs being developed by our new federal departments of regional expansion and manpower. Also there must be close liaison with the provinces concerned.

The government, in co-operation with the industry, will continue to intensify its efforts to encourage greater use of our fishery products in both our domestic and export markets. Even a small increase in the per capita consumption of fish at home and in the United States can produce significant results. It is encouraging to note that consumption of frozen groundfish products has, in fact, been rising steadily on this continent. Also, as I said earlier, the ultimate consumer has been prepared to pay more for our fish.

There is therefore reason for optimism. This is especially true because fish stocks are definitely limited from the long term point of view. It follows that as production begins to level off, particularly in the North Atlantic, and as consumption continues to rise, prices should firm up as well.

This is why the government has decided to enter the market itself. Our objective is to firm up the price of Canadian produced fish to a level, or levels, more in line with long term trends. We believe, also, that through the operations of our fisheries prices support legislation we can help to stabilize the output of our Canadian groundfishery and achieve permanent improvements in the economics of an industry which shows every indication of being able to stand on its own feet in the long run.

This statement has dealt exclusively with the frozen groundfish industry. The government is also studying, very carefully, the problems of the salt cod industry, again from both a short and a long term point of view. As stated previously, there is now under way an examination of the possible advantages of a salt cod marketing board. I hope to be able to make an announcement regarding assistance for this important sector of our Canadian fishery in a few weeks time.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, hon. members on this side of the house listened with considerable interest to the statement made today by the Minister of Fisheries concerning the government's overall policy and program for the continued development of the fishing industry in Canada, with special reference to the development of the fisheries in the Atlantic provinces.

While we welcome the minister's belated announcement, I say to him in all seriousness that it is a statement which is long overdue. The groundfish industry in the Atlantic provinces has now experienced almost three years of declining revenues and increasing costs. This condition has prevented any expansion in the earnings of fishermen and has resulted in operating losses for the processing industry which have been so heavy that a number of companies in the Atlantic provinces have been forced to close their doors.

I would point out that this period of difficult and disappointing financial experience followed one of expansion and modernization which began in 1958. From that year, up to 1966, investments in plants and fishing vessels was quite extensive and the optimism of our people was supported by strong demand and rising prices for the products of our industry.

The reversal of this expansionary trend is not due in my opinion to any weakening of consumer demand in our traditional markets or to any significant increase in raw material supplied to those markets. The causes of the serious financial dilemma faced by the freezing and the salt fish sectors of the Canadian groundfish industry are international tensions and the devaluation of foreign currencies, resulting in lower prices in our traditional markets. In the intense competition to sell frozen fishery products in the American market, our Canadian exporters were able to hold their own in terms of quality and quantity, but our position was retained only at tremendous financial cost. In fact, if the deficiency payment program had not been implemented from May to October in 1968, there is little doubt that still more of our fish processing companies would have found it necessary to close their doors.

This situation only serves to create further unrest and concern among thousands of our fishermen and their families who must depend upon processors to purchase their production, and their concern is sharpened by the knowledge that in hundreds of fishing communities there are no alternative occupational opportunities.

The government has proposed, by taking advantage of the fisheries prices support legislation, to initiate a purchase program designed to strengthen and stabilize market prices for frozen groundfish products. There is no indication in the minister's statement of the prices to be paid, or of the arrangements which will be made to hold these stocks. I would point out that fisheries products are not wheat. We are dealing here with a highly perishable commodity, one which must be kept in well controlled refrigerated conditions. I therefore suggest that to make this program effective it will be necessary to place greater emphasis upon the marketing of frozen fish. I hope the minister will enlist the good offices of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who will be able to discuss this matter at the United Nations.

I hope, also, that he will enlist the aid of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, because if this part of the stated program is to be effective much greater emphasis will need to be placed on marketing. I wonder whether the minister has given any thought to discussing with representatives of the industry the possibility of co-operative marketing.

The minister also told us that the government proposes as a special emergency measure to make loans available to fishing and processing firms, and that it is prepared to waive repayment of these loans until after the market price for our principal groundfish products has reached a figure which will ensure adequate returns to our Canadian fishermen and to the companies involved in the groundfish sector of the industry. This particular statement is somewhat vague. I can only express the hope that the interest rates to be charged on these loans will not be so high that the means will destroy the end which the government hopes to achieve.

The minister also stated that beginning in the early 1970s frozen groundfish operations will have to be centralized in fewer growth centres. This, I hope, will not necessarily be the same growth centres used by the minister of resource development. It may well be that by using this measure to develop some of the outlying areas of the Atlantic provinces this could well be of assistance to the over-all development of the entire industry. It is obvious that in implementing any program the government's prime concern should be the price that is received by the Canadian fisherman. It should be adequate enough to enable him to provide for the needs of his family in today's inflated, high cost society.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Finally, I note that the government is preparing a study of the salt fish industry. Looking at it from the short and the long term point of view, I would recommend that the minister study the previous report made on this matter by a royal commission. I am sure he will find that very helpful. It is a very complex problem and I hope he can resolve it favourably on behalf of the fishermen and the processors. In any event, the minister has now weighed anchor and set a course. Like any other voyage, to be successful there must be fair winds and a good crew. We on this side of the house hope that the voyage that has been embarked upon by the Minister of Fisheries will be helpful to Canadian fishermen.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize that while the statement has been lengthy the fishing industry, especially on the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts, is so terribly important to the total Canadian economy that the necessity for such a lengthy statement outweighs the disadvantage of having to go through it in detail. The announcement of the minister, as I see it, envisages the prospect of the government's entering into the buying and marketing of fisheries products, with an extension of the machinery for making loans to the industry in order to help it over a difficult period.

One aspect indicates a relatively new venture and proves, I think, what we have been alleging for a long time, namely that about the only element of our society that can protect the economic and social position of people who find themselves harshly done by in this so-called free enterprise system is the government. The minister has finally realized that this is also the case in this situation.

Regretfully I fear that the attempt to try to see that the income of fishermen does not fall below the average for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967 will not be that helpful, because this particular industry has been in great difficulty for a very long time. It is simply an attempt to maintain the income of fishermen at its present poverty level. Some more dramatic moves are required in this regard in addition to those announced by the minister.

The minister stated that this step has been necessary because the industry and the fishermen in the industry found themselves caught in the cost price squeeze. One result of this has been the problems faced by the groundfish industry.

Not too many weeks ago a number of mergers, takeovers and closures on the west coast were announced in the fishing industry. The Weston Corporation virtually owns, controls and dominates the fishing industry on the west coast. The reason given for the closing of certain canneries and plants on the Pacific coast, for certain mergers of companies, purchase of their assets and so on, was that the industry there found itself in the cost price squeeze and could not operate economically any longer in the manner it had in the past.

[Mr. Crouse.]

In Prince Rupert alone, because certain canneries have closed down and will not be operating this year, and as a result of the mergers that have taken place, there is a good prospect that 1,500—that figure is arguable, but it has been used as a round figure—shore workers, people working in and around the canneries, will be unable to find employment in the fishing and the salmon industries this summer. There is a great necessity for the minister, this new department of regional and economic expansion and the department of Indian affairs, to do something immediately with respect to the situation on the west coast.

Whether the venture that is being entered into, as announced by the minister, is going to do something that is really worth while, as far as the fisherman is concerned, is rather doubtful because the objective has simply been to see that the income of the fisherman does not fall below the 1965, 1966, and 1967 average income for fishermen. As I say, as far as we are concerned it is merely maintaining their income at the poverty level; nothing is being done to bring the real fruits of a just society to these people. If the minister had accepted but one small part of the ideas that party has advocated for years, the fishing industry would be a lot better off than it is now.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, although you had made recommendations regarding the length of comments following the minister's statement, we have just heard endless speeches and I noticed that you were getting fidgety. Therefore, I shall be very brief and say only that we fully welcome the minister's excellent initiative.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

SUGGESTED SPECIAL ORDER TO FACILITATE PASSAGE OF MEASURE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, a few moments ago the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated that he and his colleagues would be prepared to co-operate in the making of a special order for the purpose of ensuring that the estate tax bill will be disposed of at all stages by the close of business today. I wonder whether the house would be agreeable to making an order somewhat along these lines.

That, notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 72, all remaining stages of Bill C-165 shall be permitted to advance beyond more than one reading today and that, if not dealt with earlier, all questions necessary to pass the said bill shall be put immediately at the ordinary time of adjournment this evening; and that the sitting of the house be extended so as to permit the putting of those questions.

If the house were generally agreeable to that proposition it could be made an order so as to deal with today's business.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, usually these matters are dealt with by negotiation through the usual channels before they are proposed in the house. The first we heard of this suggestion was when the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) proposed it earlier today. I suggest that the motion be not put at this time. We can discuss it behind the curtains—but without prejudice, please.

Mr. Speaker: Is it understood that the proposal is not to be put at this time? There is no agreement.

Mr. Baldwin: The motion stands adjourned.

[Translation]

INTERPRETATION ACT

AMENDMENT TO MAKE SUBSTITUTION IN ENACTING CLAUSE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-174, entitled an Act to amend the Interpretation Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall not be long.

The purpose of this bill is to amend subsection 1 of clause 4 of the Interpretation Act, which reads as follows:

The enacting clause of a statute may be in the following form:—"Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada enacts as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the proposed amendment seeks to substitute the words "The Parliament of Canada" to the following: "Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and the House of Commons of Canada".

In our opinion, it is high time we got rid of such archaic British wording.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the house.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENT TO GIVE RELATIVES EQUAL COVERAGE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-175, to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Korchinski: Mr. Speaker, under section 58 of the unemployment insurance regulations, employment of a person in agriculture or horticulture shall not be included in insurable employment if the said person is related to his employer. The purpose of this bill is to eliminate such discrimination. It is intended that everyone in this industry, as in other industries, shall have the same opportunity to benefit from existing legislation since everyone is expected to pay taxes such as estate taxes.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

• (3:00 p.m.)

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—DISAGREEMENT WITH VIEW EXPRESSED BY "VOICE OF WOMEN"

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Do his statements made outside the house yesterday indicate that the government has finally decided to stay within NATO? If not, do those remarks constitute only a continuation of the dialogue that has been going on in public?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I expressed a good deal of disagreement with the representations of the Voice of Women. I thought I was quite justified in so doing and I think that has contributed to the debate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But does the Prime Minister think so?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We ought to know the government's position. Are we to assume from the statements made that the minister was announcing a decision? If not, when may we expect an announcement of government policy on this matter?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I assure the hon. gentleman that the foreign policy of Canada will not be that which has been recommended by the Voice of Women.

Mr. Bell: The minister is very brave.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the tenor of the representations, did the delegation from the Voice of Women perchance include the Postmaster General?

Mr. Baldwin: He is an honorary member.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.—ALLEGED DEGRADING REGULATIONS IN AKAITCHO HALL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. On Tuesday last I asked him about regulations I described as degrading which had been issued or promulgated in respect of Akaitcho Hall, Yellowknife. The minister said he would look into the matter. Has he had an opportunity to do so?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received telegrams from most of the students of that institution, but I have not received a complete report in this connection. I would beg the house to allow me to put the matter off until tomorrow when I shall be in a position to make a report.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister reports to the house on this matter will he be good enough to include the results of an investigation into the way the telegram he says he received and which I received—I imagine the telegram he received is a copy of the one I received—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I assure hon. members that I had a reason for putting my question the way I did. If that telegram is the one that has been signed by more than 100 students who live in the hall, will the minister be good enough to investigate the way in which it was sent?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the hon. member has received a telegram, but I know I have. These regulations were adopted by the students themselves and I shall inquire to find out whether they were forced upon them by the officials of the institution or whether the students had a chance to exercise their democratic rights in this matter.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the educational policies and programs pursued by those who live in these northern hostels, will the minister or his department consider investigating the conditions in all hostels in the north? That may be necessary.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the hon. member that the incident which he mentioned has been spurred by a comment allegedly made on a television program by someone who apparently has never set foot in the institution involved. I do not like to have doubts raised as to the merit of the institutions of the Canadian North, as I am sure they are generally well administered.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that we have reached the realm of debate. Perhaps we might go on to another subject.

[Translation]

COMMUNICATIONS

COMPOSITION OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO WASHINGTON

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, in his capacity as minister responsible for telecommunications.

Since 84 countries will be represented at the satellite conference due to open on February 24 in Washington, has the federal government appointed representatives of all political parties to represent Canada?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, a team of high officials from my department and the External Affairs Department will represent Canada next week.

EXHIBITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUING MAN AND HIS WORLD

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell us if he has considered in cabinet this morning the situation of "Man and His World" and if a decision has been taken? If so, what is the nature of this decision?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The decision will be announced in a few days, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CLARIFY BOARD POWERS, PROVIDE FOR APPEAL DIVISION, ETC.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since it was not included in the list of bills to be dealt with during the present session, presented earlier today by the President of the Privy Council, does the government intend to reintroduce a measure that was before the previous parliament, Bill C-186, which would divide labour jurisdiction between the province of Quebec and the rest of Canada, and was strongly urged on the government by the C.N.T.U. at its meeting with the cabinet earlier this week as well as having been strongly advocated by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration during the last election campaign?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not recall that that measure was announced in the Speech from the Throne.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May we take it that the government has decided to abandon that legislation after speaking of it so favourably in the previous parliament? Is this part of the government's hearts and flowers approach to the C.L.C.?

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON OFFER OF RECOGNITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether any word has been received yet from communist China in connection with the projected offer of the government of Canada to recognize that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes. I expect that negotiations or discussions will proceed normally.

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I ask the minister whether, in terms requisite to the recognition of Communist China, are included the cancellation of the debt of $12 million owing to Canada and the sacrifice of Taiwan?

Mr. Sharp: On the first part of the question, as I said the other day I think that matter can be dealt with much more efficaciously when we have diplomats in both our capitals. On the second point, the question of Taiwan really revolves around the aspirations of the nationalist government to speak for China as a whole. As I said before, if we recognize Peking as the government of China, it will certainly affect the status of the nationalist government which makes the same claim.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When did the minister and the Prime Minister find that out? During the election campaign they said that under such circumstances recognition would not take place.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that the supplementary question was in the nature of an argument.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a point of order. I cannot see anything wrong with asking when the government changed its mind and decided to sacrifice Nationalist China.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ROD SERVICE LIMITED—POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Could he inform the house if he is aware that the employees of Rod Service Limited in Montreal are threatening to strike? If so, are any negotiations going on in order to avoid this strike?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is exactly for this reason that I shall spend all day tomorrow in Montreal.

[English]

OIL

ST. ROMUALD, QUE.—COMPETITIVE POSITION OF FLOW FROM WESTERN CANADA

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the department conducted studies to determine the competitive position of western Canadian oil in supplying the refinery just announced for St. Romuald near Quebec City? If so, does the minister see any prospect of this refinery being supplied with Canadian oil?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, opportunities for the sale of western oil in any part of Canada are well known to the particular companies and interests involved. I am sure they will take steps to obtain oil in the way that is most beneficial to Canadian interests.

Mr. Burton: Have any government studies been conducted independent of studies made by oil companies?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): In relation to economic and industrial conditions in the country generally, the government is always studying the question of marketing products from one part of the country to the other as well as foreign markets.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. A government task force of three civil servants has recently been set up to study the impact of the oil supply of Alaska on the supply of oil in America. What is the name of the chairman? Will that report be presented to the house and, if so, how soon?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The then Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced in the house some time ago the composition of this task force. The work of the task force is going on. I cannot at this point give a time for delivery of any final report, when it will be available to the government or when further information will be available for the house.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister care to comment on whether the task force will be having discussions with high level United States authorities on this subject?

Mr. Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt): The task force will be exploring issues in all directions to gather the necessary information to advise the government with regard to oil policy. It may well be that members of the task force, in their capacity as members of the task force or as government officials, will be in touch with United States officials regarding these matters.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the minister. As part of the government's review of Canadian oil policy, is consideration being given to renegotiating the agreement with the Panarctic Oil exploration venture where it has 50 per cent of the risk capital and only one director on a board of 14?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that perhaps we are getting too deeply into this question. I would think that the supplementary asked by the hon. member might be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO CONTROL INFLATION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wished to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration but, in his absence, I shall address it to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Would he tell the house which action the government intends to take to remedy the weaknesses of government policy in matters of unemployment, industrial wind ups and price stability?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that the hon. member's question is of too general a nature to be asked now.

HISTORIC SITES

ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF VIMY MEMORIAL

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs following a telephone call I received from France this week, from a Canadian government employee in Vimy.

Could the minister tell the house if it is true that the administration and maintenance of the Vimy monument and park have been transferred to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission and, if so, what are the implications of such a decision?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt that the question can be asked now. If there is any urgency, it could be debated at the time of adjournment.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HARBOURING OF DESERTERS IN CONTRAVENTION OF ALLIANCE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I asked two questions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In answer to both questions he said he would take them as notice. I wonder whether he has the answers now? They have to do with the provisions of our collective alliance agreements with the United States and other countries.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I could find an occasion to answer later in the question period.

[Later:]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I answer a question put to me by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. The reason I have not yet been able to answer is that it is a highly technical question that requires us to examine many agreements before I can give the hon. member an answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTIONS FOR CONTRIBUTIONS TO AMATEUR SPORTS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Finance and also the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I would appreciate it if I could have a reply tomorrow to question 1,200 placed on the order paper on January 20. Industry, business and amateur sport consider this matter very urgent and important.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR EARLY PRESENTATION OF NEW MEASURE

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. In view of the related importance of the industrial incentives bill to be introduced shortly, would the minister consider presenting this bill for first reading or tabling it in order that its implications may be considered, together with the government reorganization bill?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I said that this bill would be tabled soon. I said that I would like it to be tabled during this session.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a further question to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development who is to accept responsibility for regional economic expansion. In view of the fact he indicated that the bill having to do with the important area of regional development may not be ready for some time, will he make a statement on motions shortly with regard to the implications of the bill so that a full understanding can be reached and a full debate had when we get to that part of the bill dealing with government reorganization in respect of economic expansion?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, we should have the opportunity, no later than next week, to clarify this matter on second reading of the bill. I intend to give some explanations to avoid any confusion.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Economic Development.

I should like to ask him if in his report he intends to deal with the problem of employment for university students during the summer holidays.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I shall deal with all matters relating to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

FRED—PLAN FOR NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development a question. In view of his statement yesterday, has he changed his mind with regard to the announcement that an agreement between Newfoundland and the federal government would be ratified, as reported in yesterday's Hansard?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I tried to clarify this point yesterday by saying that no agreement had been negotiated by the federal government and the government of Newfoundland. I was referring to the Prince Edward Island FRED agreement which I hope will be signed shortly.

Mr. Lundrigan: Yesterday I asked the minister if there would be ratification of a new agreement in view of his clarification of the mistake he made as to region and the minister indicated there would be a signed agreement within the week. It is reported in Hansard to the contrary. Did the minister have a change of mind?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I was referring to the P. E. I. agreement and nothing else.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF HAWTHORN REPORT

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Can he disclose to the house what has happened to part 2 or the second volume of the Hawthorn report?

[Mr. Marchand (Langelier).]

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are still waiting for the French translation. I hope to receive it within a few weeks. I was promised it this month. As soon as I get it, I shall be glad to table the report in the house.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

REQUEST FOR HELP IN ARRESTING TERRORISTS

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell us if he has received an official request from the Quebec government asking for assistance in proceeding to the arrest of the terrorists who are presently active in Montreal?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Solicitor General has already answered that the R.C.M.P. had been in touch with the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec, as well as with the Quebec provincial police and the Montreal police, with a view to helping them as much as possible.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—DECISION AS TO MEMBERSHIP BEFORE WASHINGTON MEETING

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the government be making a decision in regard to membership in NATO prior to the NATO meeting that is going to be held in Washington on April 10?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is the target date that we have in mind now. If possible we would like to make the decision even earlier than that.

Mr. Stanfield: Oh, don't strain yourself.

Mr. Cafik: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, will the government await the report of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, which is studying this matter, before making a final decision?

Mr. Sharp: I would hope that the committee will speed up its deliberations because it is most desirable that we reach a decision well in advance of the NATO meeting.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

TIMING OF INTRODUCTION OF AMENDMENTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Will the minister say when he expects to introduce the amendments he suggested yesterday will be made to the official languages bill?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I want to review carefully the discussions I had with the four western Attorneys General in Victoria on Monday. I also want an opportunity to visit the Prime Minister and the Attorney General of Quebec the week after next. Then I will be discussing the matter fully with the Prime Minister and my colleagues. After that, if any amendments are judged appropriate they would be introduced at the committee stage.

Mr. Ritchie: As a supplementary question, can the minister say what help the federal government will be offering to provinces faced with the problem of providing bilingual facilities in some of their courts?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member is not attempting at this time to debate the bill which may eventually come before the house. The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister with respect to his remarks earlier today on the cabinet roster system, which he made with some satisfaction. Is the Prime Minister aware that the Minister of Labour is bragging publicly that on his non-attendance days he has a long, leisurely lunch in a French restaurant and is not in his office—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite pleased to invite the hon. member—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mackasey: —to enjoy good cooking in an atmosphere of French culture.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This matter cannot be continued except as a point of privilege.

AGRICULTURE

CRESTON, B.C.—DECISION AS TO FEED GRAIN SUBSIDY

Mr. Randoph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has his department reached a decision in regard to the feed grain subsidy situation in the Creston, B.C. area and, if not, when is it expected that a decision will be brought down?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, there was a very important change made in this program beginning in July, 1968. We are studying the effects of the feed freight assistance program, and there is no specific date that could be set with respect to any amendments to it.

[Translation]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INTERVIEW WITH PAULINE JULIEN

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State, but in view of the fact that he is on an important mission abroad, I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary.

[English]

Could the parliamentary secretary inform the house whether Radio Canada, this Crown corporation which is always at the forefront in headlines, has mobilized its star reporters to greet and interview extensively that princess of separatism, Miss Pauline Julien, when she lands at Dorval shortly?

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

UNITED NATIONS

BIAFRA—SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF BOMBINGS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of constant reports of bombing, rocketing and strafing of hospitals and marketplaces and of children in feeding centres in Biafra, will the Canadian government consider asking the United Nations, or some other international agency acceptable to both sides, to investigate these allegations in the hope of alleviating the situation for the people involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman knows, there is no way by which the United Nations can investigate these reports unless there are allegations of genocide. A civil war is going on, and the sooner there is agreement on the basis on which negotiations can take place the better. The delay is not because of lack of mediators. It is because of lack of agreement as to whether Biafra is going to be part of Nigeria.

Mr. Nystrom: As a supplementary question, can the government of Canada help promote such negotiations by setting up some kind of indirect negotiation with the Biafra government?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NIGERIA—DELEGATION FROM SOVIET UNION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I also wish to direct a question to the minister. In view of the alarming reports today of a high level military delegation from the Soviet Union visiting Nigeria, is the minister able to report the implications of this visit to the house?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for me to go into an analysis of the political situation in Nigeria. I do not know there is a delegation visiting there from the Soviet Union. I think this is one of the reasons that it is highly desirable that this war should be brought to an end as quickly as possible, and I hope that all those who have influence on either side will use their influence to that end. A ceasefire is not the answer. The answer is a basis of agreement for peace talks. Until that is reached there is little hope.

[Mr. Speaker.]

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—AIRSTRIP TO FACILITATE DELIVERY OF SUPPLIES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question dealing with the matter of a truce and the conditions existing at the moment. In the light of the continuing threat of mass starvation in Nigeria, will the Canadian government reconsider giving assistance in the construction of an airstrip within the Biafran occupied territory, which could be used with the consent of all parties for the delivery of mercy supplies by day or by night?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is not opposed to the building of another airstrip, but I think everyone will agree that the best way to get supplies in immediately is by agreement for day flights to the airport that now exists.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's remarks to the effect that there must be peace at the earliest possible date and that members should use what influence they have on all sides to this end, would the minister on behalf of the government use his good offices to urge the federal government of Nigeria to initiate at least initial discussions without preconditions?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very difficult to urge upon the federal government of Nigeria a solution that contemplated the secession of Biafra.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I did not say that.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING SALE AND IMPORTATION—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I welcome him back from his interesting and different experience in the other place. Does the minister propose to bring in Bill S-26 with amendments to deal with the very interesting change proposed in the other place?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I intend to have the bill referred in accordance with the rules to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I am quite sure the committee will want to look very carefully at the issue raised by the Senate. The committee may well, within the rules of the house, make some amendments to the bill.

Mr. Baldwin: Will the hon. member for York East be on the committee?

[Translation]

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DELAY IN PAYMENT OF PENSION INCREASE

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

In view of the fact that the pension of disabled veterans was increased by the government on September 1, 1964, would the minister say why several of those pensioned veterans are still waiting to get that increase?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I fail to see what this is about. Pensions for veterans were increased last year, and all the people eligible for pension got it. If the hon. member wants to submit some particular cases to me, I shall be glad to hear him.

[English]

FARM MACHINERY

PURCHASE OF TRACTORS FROM UNITED KINGDOM

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that a group of farmers has purchased 16 tractors from the United Kingdom at a price about half the Canadian list price, will the minister assure the house that the Barber commission is looking into this aspect of the pricing policies of the farm machinery industry in Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that Dr. Barber is looking at the claim or allegation made by the federation which is arranging these sales.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might make the weekly statement of business. On Friday we propose to call for third reading the two agricultural bills, C-156 and C-157. Then we would call for second reading the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act. Next we would call the report stage and third reading of the bill to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, and that would be followed by the report stage and third reading of the bill to amend the Customs Act.

On Monday we propose to call the National Library bill for second reading and then the second reading of the Co-operative Credit Associations bill and the hazardous products bill.

On Tuesday we would return to the omnibus Criminal Code bill. Having already had five days of debate I would hope we would continue that stage to completion. Afterwards we would have the report stage of the drug prices bill.

On Wednesday we propose to begin the second reading debate on the government reorganization bill and continue with that measure at advanced stages on Thursday next.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Wednesday, February 19, consideration of the motion of Mr. Benson that Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Saltsman (p. 5191).

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few brief remarks in respect of this bill in order to pull together the ideas or criticisms put forward by my colleagues during this debate. I want to say to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) that my colleagues and I have given very careful attention to this bill and have come to the conclusion that it is not possible for us to support it for reasons which I will shortly indicate.

First, in order to make very clear the difference in our position from that of the Conservative party and its spokesmen who have taken part in this debate, may I say that we of the New Democratic Party are in favour of appropriate and equitable estate taxes. We regard a proper and equitable taxation system as being one that should serve three purposes. First, it should, of course, raise the revenue necessary to pay for the public services. Second, it should do this in such a way as to redistribute income and wealth. Third, it should be a system which would assist economic growth.

We believe, and I have always believed, that an estate tax is a necessary tax for the purpose of redistributing income and wealth in society. No one benefits more from the collective efforts of our total society than the son or daughter of a father who, no doubt through his own efforts, his capacity and hard work but also no doubt as a result of the organization of society as a whole and the organization of its economy, has been able to amass some savings, large or small, which he hands over to his children. When a child inherits wealth at an adequate level there is no reason in the world that that child should not pay taxes toward keeping the collective society going for all the people of this country in which he or she lives and works.

So we wish to make very clear and underline as strongly as I can that we favour an equitable and fair estate tax. When a person inherits considerable wealth that person ought to pay a fair share of that wealth in order to help carry on the business of the country and maintain all the other amenities from which he and his late father benefited in order to have the wealth which is now being distributed to the child.

We also make very clear that we are strongly in favour of the amendment to the estate tax contained in the bill which refers to elimination of the tax when the inheritance goes to the spouse. We recognize that it is useful when a spouse inherits from her husband, or indeed when a husband inherits from his wife, that there should not be a tax at that point and that the estate is more appropriately taxed when it passes to a stranger or the children. So we are in favour of an estate tax and very strongly support this amendment in so far as it removes the tax from the spouse who inherits the estate.

There are other aspects of the bill, however, which we cannot support. There are other aspects with regard to the reform of our taxation structure which must be taken into account. We cannot support the minister's bill because contrary to what he and many members of his party have said during this debate the bill is not truly progressive and the rate structure is not equitable. That is the reason the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) moved the amendment to the bill that it be not read the second time. We want an investigation of the entire estate tax structure to provide truly progressive and equitable rates in that structure.

The minister can talk for as long as he likes and hon. members behind him can speak for as long as they like but the fact remains that it is the low value estates in respect of which we should be concerned, the estates involving amounts between $50,000 and $100,000. These are the estates about which I am most concerned. I am much less concerned about the people who inherit from estates involving half a million dollars, $1 million or $2 million. They are not constituents of many members of the house; there are not very many of them. As a result of the progress made in the economy and more particularly as a result of collective bargaining there is a growing number of people in this country who, because they now have pension plans and life insurance policies which they did not previously have, are in the group of working people who may have estates valued at over $50,000.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Would the hon. member permit a question? I just understood him to say pension plans were involved in this. Under the estate tax, if a pension benefit went to a wife it would, of course, be entirely exempt.

Mr. Lewis: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker, but I am not talking about wives at this point. I am talking about the point at which the estate, having been first given to the wife, is distributed on her death to the children.

Mr. Benson: The pension is gone.

Mr. Lewis: The pension may be gone but the estate is distributed to the children and may involve homes and whatnot. As a result of these developments—and whether or not the pension is entirely gone depends on whether the pension is taken in a lump sum—it may become part of the wife's estate. It may be taken in monthly payments, but if it is taken in a lump sum then by some kind of actuarially related lump sum it forms part of the wife's estate which may later be handed over.

What I am saying, without arguing with the minister about the details—and I am happy to say, this—is that there will be greater numbers of people in Canada in the future than has been the case in the past leaving relatively small estates of $60,000, $65,000 or $70,000. The total number of people who will likely leave estates—I think the minister used this figure and I am told by other advisers perhaps not as competent as he but competent—which will be taxable is only about 5 per cent. So we are still talking about a very small number of people. Of that proportion there will be an increasing number of lower value estates included.

No matter how much the minister may argue about it, the fact is that his own tables, copies of which he supplied us, show that in the $50,000 to $150,000 level of estates, as a result of his amendment, the rate is higher and the amount paid is higher. In the case of a $60,000 estate, and I am doing this from memory but I am sure I remember correctly, the amount paid becomes $4,800 instead of $2,600 when the estate is eventually handed over.

The minister and hon. members sitting behind him continue to refer to the case where the estate is first deeded to the wife and when she dies goes to one child. If he looks at his tables he will find that in the case of a $60,000 estate it does not relate only to one child. If it involves one child the amount is $4,800 compared with $2,600. If there are two children the amount is $3,000 as against $2,600. The rate is increasing.

The other case to which the minister and the members behind him constantly point is the case where a stranger is involved in part of the bequest. Certainly the case here involves an estate left outright to a widow or stranger and an estate divided equally among the adult children. I am not going to argue with the minister across the floor because I would be out of order in any case, but I am satisfied after a careful study of these figures, as my colleagues are satisfied, that the tax which the minister is proposing is regressive at the bottom end of the scale. In some of the more important cases where the estate would be handed over the rate would be higher at the bottom end and the tax again would be higher. Let us relate that to what the economists call the effective rate rather than the marginal rate.

I hope you will forgive me for explaining that the marginal rate is the lowest rate applicable to the particular size of estate with which we are concerned. The effective rate is the rate of tax which in fact is being imposed on the taxable part of the estate after you have taken off the $50,000, let us say, and whatever other exemptions you may have the right to deduct. If you look at the effect of this tax structure the minister has presented to the house in terms of the effective rate, in other words, the rate which is applied to the taxable part of the estate, you will discover a really scandalous result.

If the taxable part of the estate is $1,000, $5,000 or $10,000, the effective rate is 50 per cent of those taxable amounts. If you get to the point where the taxable part of the estate is $30,000, the effective rate is 36 per cent. When you get to $50,000 the rate is 31.2 per cent. When you have a taxable part which is $100,000 the rate is only 29.7 per cent. If it is $150,000 the rate is only 23.4 per cent. After that it begins to climb again. So this is a regressive structure in terms of the rate that applies to the taxable part of the estate which, after all, is the part of the estate that is relevant in these discussions.

Despite the valuable parts of the amendments in respect of not taxing the spouse and having a six-year period for instalment payments, which is probably too short a period for small businessmen and farmers who do not have any cash but at least is a useful amendment, the first point we make after careful study is that it is still a fact that the rate is regressive at the bottom and in some cases it is equally regressive at the top. In some cases estates of $1 million or $1,500,000 will carry less tax as a result of this amendment than was the case under the old law.

I think the minister got himself into this position, and I give him the benefit of the doubt by thinking he was trying to make a genuine reform in this area of our tax structure, by making an a priori decision, the reason for which I cannot understand unless it was the result of pure conservatism with a small "c", if the Leader of the Opposition will permit me to use that word in respect of the Minister of Finance. He made an a priori decision that he would not raise any more from this tax under his new rates than he raised before. I think he said he would raise $2 billion altogether but would not raise any more through this tax. So when he came to the top, in order to achieve that totally undesirable purpose, he reduced the rate from 54 per cent to 50 per cent and then had to increase the rate at the bottom in order to make up the differences that might arise. In my opinion and in the opinion of all my colleagues, there is no reason in the world this tax should not raise this revenue for the government so long as the lower value estates are protected, so long as the spouse is protected and so long as the rates are genuinely progressive and equitable—lower at the bottom and higher at the top as rates ought to be.

The minister set himself what is to me the anti-social goal that he must not raise any more when he reforms the tax system than he did before, and for this reason, also we cannot support the bill. Above all, Mr. Speaker, we cannot support it because it shows the intention of the minister to amend our taxation structure piecemeal.

The minister has had the Carter report for a long time. He not only rejected the basic idea of the Carter report but he said in the house the other day that he does not accept the principle that a buck is a buck is a buck. We do accept that principle. We may not be able to treat every buck in the same way, but a buck in the hands of a widow with only X number of dollars cannot be treated the same way as a buck in the hands of someone with X million dollars. But the principle that the recipient of any income, whether it comes from an estate or anywhere else, ought to pay a tax relative to his total income is surely correct and just.

• (3:50 p.m.)

When you have an estate tax structure such as the minister now proposes, you do not take into account the income of the legatee. If one member of a family has been successful in his profession and already has half a million dollars and another member of the family has been unsuccessful in his work in a factory, and each gets $100,000 from the estate, under this proposal they each pay the same tax. It is unrelated to the total income of the man who already has half a million dollars. He gets an additional $100,000 and has a total of $600,000, but the other one may have nothing and gets the $100,000 and that is all he has. The rate of tax on each $100,000 is the same.

The minister gets himself into that box because he is saying he is reforming our tax structure. But he is doing it piecemeal. He is dealing with the estate tax now, and I understand from something I read the other day that he will probably deal with income tax next. I do not know whether this means that at that time he will not deal with any other tax such as a capital gains tax or any of the other taxes that may be involved.

We in this party are convinced, and I would be very surprised if most members of the house did not agree, that one of the bases of any decent and just society is a just taxation structure. There is nothing more significant about the criterion of equity in a society than the tax structure which the people have to bear. If the tax structure is unfair and inequitable, if it falls on the lower incomes unfairly, if it hits the working people and the low income farmers unfairly, if it is a tax on property which is regressive, then you have one of the major unjust components in a society. If the tax structure is genuinely progressive, if you take it off the back of the home owner, if you make the tax on the lower income people equitable so that anyone with a family who is making about $4,000, which is what we have suggested, should pay no tax at all, so that there is a minimum amount on which the family may live, if the tax structure is built from there on up in order to genuinely redistribute income and wealth, then you have one of the important elements of a decent and just society. That is what we ask for.

I have a philosophy which tells me that no one person in our present society makes economic gains or economic progress on his own. I reject the notion which I have heard repeated time and time again by hon. members of the Conservative party in this house, that this fellow worked hard. Sure he did. And for every fellow who works hard and makes a million dollars there are five million fellows who work hard and cannot make a million cents. So it is not merely the hard work that produces wealth; there are other things that produce it—the total environment of society and all the tools that society gives a person with which to make wealth.

If I am a successful lawyer—assume that I am for the moment—it was not done by my own efforts. I used a law school that was built for me. I used the law libraries that were built for me, and the whole wisdom and experience of generations that somebody attempted to put into my dull head. It is the collection of all this experience over the ages, the school which was collectively provided for me and the libraries which I used which were collectively provided for me, and all that goes with them that taught me my profession. I am talking nonsense if I stand up and say I make X thousands of dollars a year by my own efforts. The deuce I do. I do it as a result of the total social environment of which I am a product, which gave me the opportunity to get the kind of education and training that enables me to command a higher income. That is no reason why I should hang on to it. On the contrary, it is a very good reason why I should pay a large part of it to the state, to society, to make up for those millions of others who mainly for economic and social reasons were unable to get the same education and the same training so that they might make a higher economic income and have a higher standard of living.

It is in that context, as well as in many others, that we are determined to demand a proper reform of our taxation system, the application of the basic principles of Carter, the application of those principles which will make the tax structure a component, as I have said, of a just and decent society instead, as it is now in many instances, of a burden on those least able to bear it.

The Minister of Finance and the government cannot do that kind of job and will not do that kind of job because (a) they apparently do not believe in it, (b) they do not intend to, and (c) the minister is going about it in a piecemeal way. That is not the way to reform the tax structure. The greatness of the Carter report, whether or not one agrees with every word in it, is that it looked at the tax structure as a whole. It related each part. It related the question of what it called vertical equity to horizontal equity and all the other matters that go into a proper tax structure. The minister has not done that.

Certainly there are some improvements in the amendments before the house. There are many instances where one has to support a bill, even though one is not satisfied with it, because it makes some improvement. But that is not the case here. The improvements are not good enough, and as part of a total revision of our tax system the bill is a miniscule crumb. I did not say the minister was crummy. I leave it to other members of this house to describe people that way. I just said the bill was a miniscule crumb. We in this party do not intend to vote for so small and so ineffective an amendment. Indeed, we will fight, not only in this case but later when other reforms to our tax structure are put forward, for a genuine tax revision, for a really equitable tax structure. We do not intend to accept amendments such as these which do not accomplish anything in the way of fundamental justice for the people of Canada, except for the spouse, and that is not good enough for us to support the bill as a whole.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it had not been my intention to speak on this bill because many hon. members have spoken on it who are much more capable than I am to express opinions about such an important subject as the one before us. However, after listening to much of the criticism that has been made—as a matter of fact I have not heard any opposition speaker say that the minister has done very much to improve the situation at all—a fellow like myself can remain quiet for only so long without rising to express the thoughts that are in his mind. If no one else in this house congratulates the minister on doing a good job, I want to be one who does. I am not saying that because I happen to be a member on the government side. I am speaking now from the viewpoint of common sense. In the last few minutes we have listened to a speech by one of the finest speakers in the House of Commons. It was delivered in lovely English, but I want to say through you, Mr. Speaker, that what we just heard was the old story of socialism.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Normally, when the socialists talk they want to give money away for this or that purpose, whether the cause is just or not. Up with the poor, and down with the rich is their motto. However, the speech to which we listened in the last few minutes was a plea to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to take all he could from the rich because they do not deserve to be wealthy. It does not matter whether they work hard to get it. Take it away from them, and if you cannot get it from them while they are alive, get it as soon as they are dead.

Surely the people in that corner of the house have learned from history that although socialism may be all right in theory it does not work out in this tough old world. Take a country like England. My goodness, fifty years ago that little island in the Atlantic ocean controlled, whether rightly or wrongly, about a quarter of the whole world. Many of the things we hold dear in Canada have their roots in that island. Many of the customs, traditions and ties which are cherished in the United States and all over the world have their roots in that island, with its splendid history. I come from English parentage and I certainly make no apology for it. I feel sorry for Britain today. I say this because it has an anchor around its neck, an anchor called socialism. Speeches of the kind made this afternoon have been made in the House of Commons at Westminster on many occasions, and that is why poor little Britain has almost drowned in the waters of socialism.

I find myself wondering how any member in the government ranks or in the Conservative ranks can put up with this nonsense. No doubt the sentiments we have just heard were phrased in the best of English. No doubt they were put forward sincerely. But let us not drown Canada in socialism. Let us stick up for it. Let us remember that being rich is no sin in this world. I agree there are some who have fallen into riches, but there are many more who have worked hard for what they possess. Thank heavens we still have a few rich people to pay the taxes, because the way we are spending at all levels across Canada today we need some of these people.

I want to congratulate the Minister of Finance. It was suggested yesterday by one hon. member that we who support the government are under instructions to vote as the government directs. Let me tell the house that I have never received any such instruction.

I say to hon. members that if changes had not been made in the earlier proposals I would have been glad to stand up for my constituents and vote against the government on this measure. Changes have been made, however. They are changes which should probably have been introduced years ago, but the fact is that they were not introduced and now they have been. The situation for years, under both Liberal and Conservative governments, was that if a man died leaving money which both he and his wife had accumulated in partnership, the wife had to pay estate duty. This was the position not only in Canada but in many other countries. Now, for the first time, the Minister of Finance has recognized the fact that a husband and wife are a team who accumulate their estates together. In future, no matter how much the one leaves the other will have to pay no succession duty whatsoever. I congratulate the Minister of Finance on making this possible, and members of the opposition should congratulate him too.

I listened yesterday to hon. members on my immediate left in the Conservative party criticizing this measure. I could hardly continue to sit in my place because I never heard so much unadulterated nonsense in my life. Succession duties, they argued, should be abolished altogether, yet this terrible government, this terrible Minister of Finance, had refused to do so. But I notice that in advocating the removal of this tax they were careful not to suggest alternative ways of raising revenue or cutting expenditure. Do they want to reduce old age pensions or family allowances? Do they wish to reduce the amount we spend trying to aid nations abroad? Do they wish to cut down the defence budget, or the estimates of the Department of Veterans Affairs? No. All they want is to do away immediately with the succession duty.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservatives had their chance to do away with succession duties. Unfortunately for the country they were in power for five years not too long ago. Those who are criticizing today could have made it possible for the wife to inherit her husband's estate without paying succession duty at all. They had the opportunity to provide that estates worth less than $50,000 would escape tax. But did they take any action? No. They sat in their places and did nothing. Yet today they rise one after another to criticize the Minister of Finance for the terrible things he has done.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Would my hon. friend permit a question? Does he know that it was the Diefenbaker government which introduced the Estate Tax Act?

Mr. Whicher: I am glad the minister has brought that to my attention. It was to have been my next statement. There are very few things about the Diefenbaker government and taxation which escape my memory.

Mr. MacEwan: What memory?

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member said something but I did not catch it. Here is an example, Mr. Speaker. I am sure even those with Catholic views would agree that in some instances we should permit birth control. In fact I would not mind if it was made retroactive.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Whicher: The Minister of Finance has made possible something which was not possible before. He has given people faced with payment of estate tax six years in which to meet their obligation. Perhaps this should have been done before. Perhaps the Conservatives could have done it when they had the opportunity. There is no doubt about the fact that they failed to take advantage of that opportunity. I say to members of the opposition that they should not be afraid of saying on occasion that the government has done a good job. The Minister of Finance has helped those who have taxable estates; he is trying to keep men of wealth in Canada so we can afford to maintain the level of our services to people who need them.

I noted the statement of the hon. member for York South that he was not supporting this bill because if a man left an estate worth a million dollars the percentage of tax applied was less than in the case of estates worth between $50,000 and $200,000. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like to get more but the fact is that men of substantial wealth are leaving Canada simply because their estates will escape death duty, either altogether or to a great extent, in the countries in which they intend to live. You can only go so far in soaking the rich. There is a point of no return.

I want to say this to my Conservative friends. As many of them know, I have had the experience of being in the Ontario legislature under the Conservative regime for many years. Before I got there a certain thing happened in Ontario of which I am sure they are not very proud. I welcome to this house, as did the leaders of the various parties earlier this afternoon, an hon. gentleman who as yet I have not had the pleasure of meeting, though I know him by reputation. I am sure the hon. member, a politician of many years standing, will understand what I mean when I refer to an act passed by the Ontario legislature known as the charitable gifts act. That act was passed by the Conservatives in Ontario to extract $2 million or $3 million from the estate of the owner of the Toronto Star because he was head of a Liberal paper. They did not pass that act before he died; he died first and its provisions were made retroactive. If the Minister of Finance made the provisions of this bill retroactive, you would hear these people howl, Mr. Speaker.

• (4:10 p.m.)

Why do these members not stand up and say that they have not been perfect in the past? If they had been we would not need this bill; neither would we need succession duties. They, along with the rest of us, want the elderly people, and I want my father and mother, to get the old age pension. I want my kids to get family allowances and our veterans to be properly looked after, within reason. We can make a country that is second to none.

In spite of the fact that we all kick about taxes. I have never met any person who had returned from France, Nigeria, Biafra, Great Britain, Russia or Germany who was not extremely happy to get back to Canada and help pay these taxes. I hope that whoever is Minister of Finance when I die will get a whole heap of succession duties. I will not kick about that one single bit, and I am sure my hon. friends in this house will not either.

I think I have spoken for long enough, and I am sure there are some people here who think I have spoken too long. It really depends upon where one sits. The Tories in Ontario got after Mr. Atkinson after he died and took from him $2 million or $3 million under their charitable gifts act. The Tories in this house had the opportunity for five years to change the provisions of the succession duty law but did not do so; all they did was make enemies in the United States. They are not in power today so it is nice to stand up and hit the big men, whether in Canada or in foreign countries. I am glad to say that in my opinion, and in the opinion of most Canadians, the Minister of Finance is a pretty big man who has done a good job as far as this bill is concerned.

I want to close with this point. The last speaker criticized this measure as piecemeal taxation. I agree with that. I have heard the Minister of Finance make speeches not only in this house but in other places, and he has agreed that there is a lot of piecemeal taxation in Canada. For that reason he has told the members of this house and people in other places that there is going to be a complete review of the taxation methods used in Canada during the next few months or during the next year, and all of us welcome this. I should like to inform the Minister of Finance that he is certainly going to get my vote on this measure, and he can call it any time he wants.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, it is often said these days that there are no real differences between the political parties in the country. We are told that ideology is dead. I think that the legislation before this house and the attitude taken toward it by the different parties proves exactly the contrary. It reveals a wide difference of political philosophy on the part of members of this house.

The Conservatives, if I judge correctly from their remarks, basically seem to be against an inheritance or estate tax. On the other hand, the Liberals, in the name of reform, bring in some minor improvements to a regressive and inadequate tax system and reject any basic change in the system. The New Democratic Party stands for a new taxation system which would be demonstrably fairer, that would secure the additional revenue urgently needed if there were a reduction to be made in the crushing burden of taxation on people in the lower income groups.

We are opposed to this legislation not because we are opposed to an estate tax; quite the contrary. We believe that an inheritance or estate tax is one of the fairest means available to raise revenue. Generally speaking, an inheritance tax falls on those best able to pay, especially if we make sure, as we should, that widows and dependants are totally exempt and that the family is treated, as it ought to be, as a unit. It is also true that an inheritance tax with these exemptions falls due precisely at the time it can most easily be paid without hardship to anyone.

We in this party are opposed to the tax proposed in the bill because it deliberately repudiates the basic philosophy of using the tax system as an instrument of social justice, as an instrument to promote equality between Canadians. We oppose this legislation because it jettisons some of the main proposals contained in the Carter commission report for a fairer, more equitable system of taxation.

There has been a lot of talk about the Carter system. What, in effect, was the system recommended by the Royal Commission on Taxation? It will be remembered that it was a six-volume report of some 2566 pages. It was the product of four and a half years study by more than 150 tax experts. Some people may sneer at the accountants, tax lawyers, economists and others who prepared the report. I do not. I respect them for producing detailed proposals to create a completely new system of taxation in Canada based on equity and fairness. They were not doctrinaire socialists. Nor, as a matter of fact, do I consider myself to be a doctrinaire socialist. They took a careful look to see what was required to give Canada a tax system that would remove the undue burden of the existing tax system from the poor and place a greater burden upon those who can afford to pay, a burden on those who can afford to pay, without exemptions or chiselling.

[Mr. Brewin.]

The basic proposal of the commission was that all forms of income, regardless of source, should be treated alike for tax purposes, whether that income comes to the recipient in the form of gifts or inheritances, in the form of capital gains, in the form of earned income or income earned on property. Whatever was received would then be taxed on a progressive basis with generous exemptions at the lower level and a rising scale at the higher level.

I suggest that this is simple justice. Indeed, it is recognized in our present income tax structure. But very limited effect is given to this principle. In cases where income is earned from such sources as capital gains, gifts or inheritances, or from profits from certain tax-exempted income, there is either no tax at all—a complete exemption from tax—or there is a regressive rather than progressive taxation. Applying this general principle to the field of estate and inheritance taxes and taxes on gifts, the report of the royal commission on taxation recommended that the existing estate and gift tax acts be repealed. It also recommended that henceforth all gifts ought to be brought under the recipient's comprehensive income tax base and taxed at full, progressive rates in the same way as salaries, wages, business income, dividends, interest, capital gains, and windfalls ought to be taxed. To that proposal I say: Why not implement it? To use a crude but current expression, a buck is a buck, no matter what its source. The Minister of Finance says no. In my view the Royal Commission on Taxation was perfectly correct in saying that a buck is a buck, and the minister is wrong. A buck is a buck and ought to be treated as such.

Let me say this, Mr. Speaker. My party supports the contention that no gifts or inheritances between members of a family unit, between husband, wife and dependent children, ought to be taxable. The commission proposed that existing, gaping holes in the tax network ought to be patched so as to capture certain large gifts made by wealthy people. The result of adopting these proposals would have been a substantial increase in government revenue. The commission estimated that revenue from these sources of $140 million annually would be increased to $350 million if certain of its proposals were adopted.

I ask this question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister despise raising money from wealthy people? Does he not wish to create the means or powers that will permit him to relax the burden of taxation crushing the small wage earner or home owner? He would have acquired these powers if he had adopted the commission's proposals. What does the minister say to the royal commission's proposals? What does he say ought to be done to put taxes in this country on an equitable basis? Although I have read the minister's speeches, I have not seen in those speeches any explanation of this point.

In the debate of February 5 the minister said that once the government had decided to retain the estate tax it was necessary for it to decide whether that tax, under its proposals, was being levied in the fairest possible way. The government considered but rejected the recommendations of the Carter Royal Commission on Taxation and rejected the suggestions regarding inheritance taxes. During that debate the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) interjected and asked why the government was adopting that position and the minister replied in words to this effect: Because we have decided a buck is not a buck and because we have decided to keep the revenue yield about the same while instituting reforms to help widows, widowers and young children.

These reforms, Mr. Speaker, may have already helped some widows, widowers and young children of ample resources. The minister has already provided for generous exemptions on estates. Yet these reforms mean absolutely nothing for those earning less than $5,000 a year. If the recommendations of the commission had been implemented all taxes paid by those earning between $5,000 and $7,000 a year could have been reduced by 7 per cent. Those earning under $5,000 a year would have had their taxes reduced by 10 per cent. Farmers with incomes in the lower brackets would have benefited from these reforms. Speaking purely of income tax, it is estimated that if the commission's report were implemented those in the lower income brackets could save up to 40 per cent of their tax bills. Farmers in low income brackets would benefit particularly from such reforms.

Is it wrong to sympathize with those in the lower income brackets who must pay income tax on a modest income and not to sympathize so much with those who are more prosperous and accumulate enough to pay estate taxes on death? I wish to make it clear that I consider special circumstances require special administrative remedies. I do not suggest for a moment that measures ought to be adopted which would, in some instances, cause the forced sale of farms to be undertaken. Implementing the recommendations of the royal commission would mean that farmers at the lower end of the income scale would pay lower income taxes.

In rejecting the recommendations of the commission the government is helping the rich. Because of pressures from special interests it seems that the government is not able to reduce taxes for those in the lower income scales who already are heavily burdened. The government has chosen to act in favour of the rich, who need its help least of all. We therefore feel obliged to reject this measure although it contains a modicum of reform. Indeed, the proposals before us seem to me to be unprincipled in the sense no principle is discernible behind them. They are regressive in their general application.

In voting in this house we all bear in mind the interests of those who elected us. The interests of most of my constituents, no doubt, are opposed to this bill—and here I am not thinking of the handful within the constituency of Greenwood who will accumulate or inherit estates large enough to attract inheritance taxes. Most of my constituents are working people earning between $4,000 and $7,000 a year. When one considers today's cost of living and the burden of taxation such people have to sustain, it is clear they cannot accumulate estates on which succession duty must be paid. But that does not mean they are not vitally concerned about the matter we are dealing with here. They are being crushed by the present taxation system which has been described, and rightly so, as illogical, inequitable and inadequate. If the government ignores the proposals of the royal commission it will have to raise most of its revenue from sources other than the rich. It will have to continue the time-honoured system, illogical, inadequate and unfair as it is, of soaking the small and moderate income earner and not soaking those who are best able to pay. I cannot vote for a measure containing such a glaring and explicit message, that the government rejects a fairer and more just taxation system.

• (4:30 p.m.)

In my judgment the words "just society" and "credibility gap" have been overworked. I conclude by saying that we cannot have a just society without a fair and equitable taxation system. We cannot have a fair and equitable tax system if under pressure of special interest we disregard the advice of experts on how to achieve this fair system. The credibility gap will be expanded until the Canadian people wake up to the fact there are real differences between political parties and political philosophies and that there is no justice without a serious search for greater equality.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): As we approach the end of this debate, Mr. Speaker, the fact that there are less than 25 members in the house indicates there is very little which can be said that is new. It also indicates the general feeling of frustration members of parliament have been developing in the last year as a result of some of the actions of the present government.

I want to refer to the amendment proposed by the New Democratic Party. It reads:

> That Bill No. C-165 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house, the government should give consideration to a complete revision of the federal estate tax legislation with a view to making the rates of taxation under such legislation truly progressive and equitable.

Far be it from me to suggest reasons for the adoption of this amendment. I recall during the election campaign in the province of Saskatchewan that without exception the N.D.P. candidates were entirely in favour of this legislation. They said it represented their thinking through and through and criticized me as strongly as possible for daring to criticize this anticipated legislation. They find themselves in a difficult position today. I have some of their quotations here. They quoted from one another in their opposition to the suggestion which I put forward on behalf of this party that this legislation would be detrimental to Canada. The people remember that. I remember. I recall that in Prince Albert the N.D.P. candidate said I was speaking for the rich, was devoted to supporting the rich and because of that I was opposed to this legislation.

It is of interest now that with the development of strong opposition to this bill in the intervening months there have been changes in viewpoints. So far as the government is concerned, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said over and over: "We are not going to make any change. We stand together. What we have decided will be followed. This is the most equitable bill ever presented in connection with estates and their taxation."

An avalanche of objections was received in the minister's office as well as by the office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). This caused some second thought. The Minister of Finance, who has not been a very good prophet in the past, kept his record. He prophesied no change but he made a slight change, one that was designed to fool the people into believing that the detrimental effects of the original legislation had been obliterated by his suggested amendment.

I cannot say that today we have a government plagued by cabinet leaks because that would not describe the situation. The question has been asked, when is a leak not a leak? The answer is, when it is a flood from the cabinet of today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: While the Minister of Finance stood on the burning deck just like Casabianca, those around him sought refuge. No doubt in caucus these matters are discussed. It is surprising that today there are no leaks from the caucus but the cabinet is an open flood.

The minister stood, he would not move. Finally there was an alteration in the legislation. The people of Canada were advised: All is well, everything has been taken care of. There is no cause for any further complaint.

I am only going to make a few references to the bill. With the exception of the minor changes it is as bad as when originally concocted and presented to the house. Yesterday the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) quoted from a statement made by the Liberal member for York East (Mr. Otto). No doubt members of parliament criticized. They knew what was wrong because their constituents said so. It became necessary to apply pressure. The government whip is a gentleman with a very happy disposition, but he just cannot line them up. He was unable to convince them they were on the way to disaster unless changes were made. This system was evaluated and there was no change by anyone with a sense of responsibility.

I quote from the statement made by the hon. member for York East:

> The new rules are now in effect, in the House of Commons, and since you will recall that I fought for these changes for six years—

I can just see him. Were these changes as a result of the hon. member's ideas? I was raised in that area. I admire anyone who comes from that area, particularly when he has this capacity. I continue quoting:

I am pleased to report that the business of the House of Commons will at long last progress with some efficiency. There have been some disappointments—

One can imagine his thoughts when he used those words.

—mostly in the composition and power of the committees, because although the committees have been given a great deal of work to do, the government members of the committee have been instructed to make no changes to the bills, coming before the committee, and to vote exactly as they are told by the government.

• (4:40 p.m.)

That is what you call letting the cat out of the bag. He revealed the facts. This member valiantly stood for six long years and fought to bring about a new efficiency in parliament, but when the changes were put through this arbitrary government said to Liberal members: "This is the way you will vote." The government could have saved a lot of time if it had provided a ballot for its supporters to fill in. That would have saved a lot of discussion in the standing committees.

If the bill before us were sent to a standing committee people from all over Canada would appear to criticize it, people from all walks of life, even those represented by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford). I was out in his area and everybody I met there asked: "Where are we going in this country with a government that spends and spends and spends, and taxes and taxes and taxes?"

Mr. Basford: They have not been writing that to me.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They are beginning to realize the situation. Now we hear today that there is to be another budget.

Mr. Benson: Who said that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: At least time is set aside for one. The only hope the Canadian people have is that there will not be another budget because if there is the Minister of Finance will take another crack at them with taxes. The Minister of Finance has established for himself one of the most unenviable records for prophesy of any minister of finance in Canadian history. He prophesied that there would be a balanced budget. He was out by hundreds of millions of dollars. He prophesied that there would be only one budget. We got two within a year or a year and a half, and we are going to get another.

All across Canada people are asking, "When are we going to put an end to this spendthrift government?" I remember that when I was prime minister we spent $6 billion annually and it was said that was something terrible. Now the estimated expenditure is $13 billion. It rises all the time. But the ministers claim that they are a saving government. They save on those things where the savings are of no importance. When the Prime Minister decided that we were not going to fire guns off any more to honour the members of the royal family, all gave their acclaim. They said, "Isn't this wonderful? We are going to save $40,000. After all, there are better ways in which Canadians can show loyalty and devotion."

But then they added to the salaries of the highest paid civil servants tens and tens of thousands of dollars, and also added 50 per cent to the salary of the Governor of the Bank of Canada. "Be restrained, don't overspend, but let us go on and on," is their theory. That is what they are doing. But it is a surprising thing that while they do all these things they forget about the retired civil servants. Apparently they are not entitled to consideration. They forget about the veterans. They postpone and procrastinate but other expenditures mount and mount.

I shall be brief so that a vote can be taken at the earliest possible moment. I have tried through the years to follow a reasonably consistent course. I see an editorial in the Globe and Mail that has been subjected to some misinterpretation. It is entitled, "First—A Few Questions," and reads in part:

The members of the legislature think they need a raise in pay. Conservative Party Whip Leonard Reilly said last week that it was an all-party desire (naturally: this is the one area which only a John Diefenbaker would fail to recognize as non-partisan).

Some people have misinterpreted that. My attitude was clear and definite in 1963 when we raised our indemnities that the raise should not come into effect until an election enabled the Canadian people to approve. Some others had the same view, but I followed my vocal support of the principle that there should be no increases except after an election by actually doing something to which I have not referred previously. I repaid or made a grant to the government of Canada of the excess. In the year 1963 the gift amounted to $5,589.22, and in 1964 to $8,000. I returned those amounts to the Crown believing in a principle which apparently does not receive the support of the Globe and Mail if that editorial is to be interpreted as apparently it was intended.

Surely we in parliament must give an example to the Canadian people. I have followed this course. It was not to my own benefit. But when I speak here I speak according to my conscience. The present government is increasing salaries in the high echelons while unemployment is mounting at a very high rate, at an inexcuseable rate because in the United States the trend is all the other way.

We had unemployment when I was in office, but the United States rate of unemployment was higher than ours. Today we have unemployment mounting when there is a general level of economic advance. People are beginning to ask, "Isn't it about time for Canadians as a whole to join in a tax revolution?" They do not mean a revolution in the ordinary sense of the term but rather to say to the government: "You have gone as far as you are going. You have increased our income tax twice. You hit us with this 2 per cent social development tax, which is a complete misnomer."

According to the premiers of the various provinces who spoke at the conference last week, the 2 per cent tax is the equivalent of seven or eight points in income tax. Where is all this going to stop? The government gives no indication that it will stop. The Minister of Finance showed a lot of courage and determination in refusing to permit amendments to his proposals until he was inundated with protests and forced to back up. Then he produced the monstrosity which we have before us today and which is designed to deceive the Canadian people. They tell us now, "You are going to have a $50,000 exemption." That is the story that is spread across the country by Liberal members—

Mr. Benson: That is not true.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the Minister of Finance has done nothing to half that unjust suggestion of a $50,000 exemption. If you have an estate of $49,999 you pay nothing. If you have an estate of $50,001 you pay on $30,001, as I understand it. In other words, they are taking the people of Canada for another ride while pretending that they have done something to help them.

Mention was made by a previous speaker that this is a tax on the poor, and that is what it is. Those in the lower income brackets who save during their lifetime are going to be pillaged in death. That is what it amounts to, and I for one will not support this bill in any particular. I summarize its provisions as follows: the gift tax is greatly increased, from a present maximum of 28 per cent and accelerating to 75 per cent. Canadians do not realize yet what a ride they will get when this comes into effect because the government expects that those who might raise objection will be dead. They will be dead before there is a realization on the part of their legatees concerning the degree of taxation to which they will be subjected.

• (4:50 p.m.)

This bill in no way alters the views I expressed in April, May and June last when my friends of the N.D.P. in speeches all over the province of Saskatchewan said that this is great legislation, that it is lovely. I have the speeches here. I do not want to spoil Hansard by reading them. I shall epitomize them in this way: It is the finest thing ever; it will hit the rich. Let us see how it will hit the rich.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Were those speeches not in support of the Carter commission report? There might be a difference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They were in support of this particular legislation.

Mr. Benson: It did not exist.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was the estate tax that they were supporting. The hon. member is now trying to twist things. That is the reason for the N.D.P. amendment. It is for the purpose of getting themselves out of the cul de sac in which they find themselves as a result of subsequent events. They say, "tax the rich". This bill will strike a serious and widespread blow at Canadians everywhere. As I said a moment ago many people have been lulled into a false sense of security in the belief that it is confined to those with very large estates. As a matter of fact, on an estate of $6 million the amount paid will be less now than it was before. But who will pay the piper? It will be the smaller estates represented by the 5,700 Canadian estates taxed in the last year of record available. Eighty-two per cent of these estates are in the range of $50,000 to $300,000. These are the estates that will get hooked. When an estate reaches the figure $50,001 it is taxed on everything over $20,000.

To show how the little man will take the ride as I have stated 82 per cent of estates are between $50,000 and $300,000. Indeed, 70 per cent of that succession duty taxation has been levied on estates valued at less than $100,000. What does that mean? It means that a person who has saved or a farmer whose prices have been inflated will be subject to heavy taxation. The minister thought he had reduced something. First he said he would not change it and then he backed down and said, "Now you see it; it is fine; nobody is going to pay on anything up to $50,000". That is right. But when it reaches $50,001 that is when they catch them. This legislation will mean a drastic increase in taxes in respect of those who have saved during their lifetime to provide better opportunities for their families. This government has taxed and taxed.

The minister says there is no longer any danger that family and other small businesses will be ended. He says they are not going to allow these businesses to be sold. He says he will give them five years in which to pay. In other words, they will have five years of freedom from disaster; that is all. They are going to extend the extinction period by five years with regard to small businesses.

This legislation will spell the end of the family farm. A farmer's estate consists mainly of land and on that basis it will be almost impossible for most sons and daughters to inherit their father's farm. This is ridiculous. Here we have one minister spending money to keep young men and women on the farms and another minister taxing them off the farm. This legislation will seriously reduce the amount of funds available for investment and will unfavourably affect the development of Canadian industry by Canadians. If this bill becomes law it will diminish incentive, impoverish the provident who have worked a lifetime to give their children better opportunities in life than they have had, and will ultimately virtually socialize the Canadian economy.

Apparently this is one of the phases of the government's plan for a just society. All I can say is that it is just for the benefit of the government that it is extorting and extracting further taxation from the people. It is the act of a money-grabbing government which has been on a spending spree. I should like to hear the minister say that he will put an end to this. Some of the ministers have suggested that the government should be careful not to go on spending and spending. The government did away with the firing of $40,000 worth of gunpowder. This was done really for anti-monarchical reasons under the guise of being a saving of expenditure. I wish the minister would tell his co-spenders that this is the end and there is going to be no more increased taxation. I should like him to carry out his promise and that of his predecessors about a balanced budget, which we have not seen.

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is the house ready for the question?

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Saltsman) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Beaudoin
Benjamin
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands
Dumont
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Gleave
Harding
Howard (Skeena)
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Laprise
Latulippe
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
Matte
Orlikow
Peters
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Saltsman
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Winch—26.

NAYS

Messrs:

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Anderson
Andras
Asselin
Badanai
Baldwin
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Bell
Benson
Bigg
Blair
Borrie
Brown
Buchanan
Caccia
Cadieux (Labelle)
Cafik
Cantin
Chrétien
Clermont
Coates
Cobbe
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Crouse
Cullen
Cyr
Danforth
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Diefenbaker
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Fairweather
Forest Forget
Forrestall
Foster
Francis
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goode
Gray
Grills
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Gundlock
Haidasz
Hales
Harkness
Harries
Hees

Division

Hellyer
Hogarth
Honey
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Howe
Hymmen
Isabelle
Kaplan
Kierans
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Korchinski
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
La Salle
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Legault
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
Lundrigan
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEwan
MacGuigan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
Mackasey
MacLean
Macquarrie
McBride
McCutcheon
McIlraith
McIntosh
McNulty
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Mongrain
Monteith
Moore
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys)
Muir (Lisgar)
Munro
Noble
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Orange
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Paproski
Penner
Pepin
Pilon
Reid
Ricard
Richardson
Ritchie
Roberts
Robinson
Roy (Timmins)
Ryan
Serré
Sharp
Simpson
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Southam
Stafford
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St-Pierre
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve)
Thompson (Red Deer)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Valade
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Woolliams
Yanakis
Yewchuk—159.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Do hon. members want the vote on the main motion to be taken without the bells being rung?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Benson) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Anderson
Andras
Badanai
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Blair
Borrie
Brown
Buchanan
Caccia
Cadieux (Labelle)
Cafik
Benson
Cantin
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Cullen
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Deakon
De Bané
Douglas (Assiniboia)
Drury
Dubé
Duquet
Émard
Forest Forget
Foster
Francis
Gibson
Gillespie
Givens
Goode
Gray
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harries
Hellyer
Hogarth
Honey
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Hymmen
Isabelle
Kaplan
Kierans
Lachance
Laflamme
Laing (Vancouver South)
Lang (Saskatoon-Humboldt)
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Legault
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lind
Loiselle
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacGuigan
Mackasey
McBride
McIlraith
McNulty
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Mongrain
Morison
Munro
Noël
O'Connell
Olson
Orange
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Penner
Pepin
Pilon
Reid
Richardson
Roberts
Robinson
Roy (Timmins)
Ryan
Serré
Sharp
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stewart (Cochrane)
Stewart (Okanagan-Kootenay)
St-Pierre
Sullivan
Thomas (Maisonneuve)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Yanakis—114.

NAYS

Messrs:

Alexander
Alkenbrack
Asselin
Baldwin
Beaudoin
Bell
Benjamin
Bigg
Brewin
Broadbent
Burton
Coates
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Douglas, T. (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Dumont
Fairweather
Forrestall
Fortin
Gauthier
Gilbert
Gleave
Grills
Gundlock
Hales
Harding
Harkness
Hees
Howard (Skeena)
Howe
Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand)
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Korchinski

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

Lambert (Bellechasse)	Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys)
Lambert (Edmonton West)	Muir (Lisgar)
Laprise	Noble
La Salle	Orlikow
Latulippe	Paproski
Lundrigan	Peters
MacDonald (Egmont)	Ricard
MacEwan	Ritchie
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)	Rodrigue
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)	Rondeau
MacLean	Saltsman
Macquarrie	Simpson
McCutcheon	Southam
McIntosh	Stanfield
Matte	Thompson (Red Deer)
Monteith	Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Moore (Wetaskiwin)	Valade
	Woolliams
	Yewchuk—70.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there have been consultations at long range and I think there might be a disposition to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the house goes into committee of the whole, may I advise hon. members of the business to be discussed at the time of adjournment, which is as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Air Transport—Winnipeg, Manitoba—Recognition in setting fares; the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent)—research—responsibility for government scientific program; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—housing—task force—recommendation for reduced legal fees.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

INCOME TAX ACT AND ESTATE TAX ACT

The house in committee on Bill C-165, to amend the Income Tax Act and the Estate Tax Act—Mr. Benson—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

On clause 1—tax.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Chairman, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, wishes to move an amendment to clause 1. This is one of four amendments to various clauses of the bill which were brought to the attention of opposition financial critics a day or two ago. The amendments result from our having gone over the bill with prominent estate tax lawyers. We discussed the difficulties that might arise from changes in the Estate Tax Act, and the amendments incorporate several suggestions.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The amendment in the minister's hand is voluminous. He was good enough to furnish certain hon. members with copies of it. I shall be content if we take it as read. With the consent of the house, those amendments might appear in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That suits us, provided these amendments appear in Hansard in the place they would appear if the minister had read them.

Mr. Benson: Of course. I assume the text of the amendment will be printed in Hansard and in the revised bill.

Mr. Basford: I move:

That clause 1 of Bill C-165 be amended

(a) by striking out line 11 on page 2 and substituting the following:

'subsection (1) of section 27 or any of paragraphs (b) to (i) of subsection (1) of section 62;';

(b) by striking out lines 24 to 33 on page 2 and substituting the following:

'creation of a settlement under which

(i) his spouse is entitled to receive all of the income of the settlement that arises before the spouse's death, and

(ii) no person except the spouse may, before the spouse's death, receive or otherwise obtain the use of any of the income or capital of the settlement, or by the transfer of property to a trust that at the time of the transfer was a settlement to which subparagraphs (i) and (ii) apply, the creation of which constituted a gift by him to his spouse that was exempt from tax under this Part by virtue of this paragraph; and';

(c) by striking out line 47 on page 2 and line 1 on page 3 and substituting the following:

'the creation of a settlement or the transfer of property to a trust) made by a donor in a';

(d) by striking out lines 8 to 10 on page 3 and substituting the following:

'gifts (except a gift that is exempt from tax under this Part, a gift made by the creation of a settlement or the transfer of property to a trust or a gift in respect of which a deduction is claimed under paragraph (b)) made by the donor';

(e) by striking out lines 39 to 43 on page 3 and substituting the following:

'(a) there is only one beneficiary under the trust, other than persons who may receive, use or enjoy any of the property subject to the trust or any of the income therefrom only in the event of the death of that beneficiary before attaining such age, not exceeding forty years, as is specified in the instrument creating the trust, and

(b) that beneficiary was an individual who was living at the time when the gift was made,';

(f) by striking out lines 14 to 17 on page 6 and substituting the following:

'was made by the donor to his spouse by the creation of a settlement or the transfer of property to a trust and, before the death of the spouse, income or capital of the settlement was paid out to or for the benefit of some person';

(g) by striking out lines 27 to 37 on page 6 and substituting the following:

'(a) was income of a settlement described in paragraph (b) of subsection (1) of section 7 of the Estate Tax Act but to which clause (A) of subparagraph (i) thereof does not apply, and

(b) was paid out in accordance with the terms of the settlement.';

(h) by striking out line 35 on page 13 and substituting the following:

'property to, a trust, the trustee thereof,';

(i) by striking out line 19 on page 14 and substituting the following:

'on each portion of such tax at';

(j) by striking out lines 24 to 28 on page 17 and substituting the following:

'(ii) any deed or other instrument under or by virtue of which a usufruct or substitution is created or any real property or estate or interest therein stands limited to any persons by way of succession; and';

and

(k) by striking out line 18 on page 18 and substituting the following:

'of section 44 and in subsection (1)'.

[Mr. Basford.]

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, could we have a copy of the amendments moved by the Minister of Finance?

[English]

The Chairman: Would the hon. member kindly repeat his remarks. I did not hear them.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, could we have a copy of the amendments the Minister of Finance has just moved?

[English]

Mr. Benson: I would be pleased to supply the hon. member with a copy. I supplied the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) with a copy two days ago, I believe.

• (8:10 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, could the Minister of Finance send a copy of his amendments to the interpreters for the information of the French-speaking members?

[English]

Mr. Benson: I will be pleased to do this, Mr. Chairman. I have supplied copies to the table and I have an additional copy for the interpreters.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, clause 1 of the bill proposes to delete the whole of part IV of the Income Tax Act dealing with gift taxes. The text of the proposed bill consists of 18 pages. I do not know whether Your Honour wishes the committee to adopt amendments as we go along, or to hold discussion on them before we actually come to them. Perhaps a general discussion beforehand with adoption of the amendments seriatum would simplify our procedure.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, that is quite satisfactory to me. I think we could discuss the clause as amended and then, at the end of our discussion on the clause, consider the matter of adopting all the amendments to it.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Fine. As a result of these amendments to the bill, quite radical changes to the scheme of gift tax have been introduced. These have been discussed generally. I wish to put foward some brief observations at this time.

I draw to the attention of the Committee that, as a consequence of reducing from $4,000 to $2,000 gifts that are exempted from tax, there are quite considerable changes in the law. In the previous act the exempted amount was $4,000. This change is going to cause some difficulty to people who have orderly patterns of making gifts for the benefit of their children. This, of course, applies to parents who are making gifts inter vivos their children. As I say, this change will cause some problems.

In addition, it has been suggested by many that the general approach to the gift tax will change the pattern with regard to gifts being made to charitable organizations or educational foundations. The exemptions are still there. This is fully understood. I have two questions to ask. Where an individual is self-employed, such as a farmer or small manufacturer, and decides to make a voluntary payment to the widow of a former employee in lieu of a pension, will this be deemed a gift to be included in the estate? This is a matter of concern for estate planning departments of insurance companies and also tax lawyers, when advising clients regarding estates. Is the client in a position to make these gifts within the provisions of the Income Tax Act and not have these gifts included in his estate when he dies, because these are by way of a recompense for services rendered? I leave that question for the minister to answer.

The second point which I would like to draw to the attention of the house concerns Section 112 (2) (b). This section deals with the gift of real estate up to a maximum of $10,000, to a spouse or, in the case of farming operations, to a child. This is a provision in the Estate Tax Act of 1958. However, farm values have increased greatly since that time. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has made strong representations with regard to this point. I would like to hear from the minister why this figure was not upgraded.

The rationale of the government was to allow a husband to make a once in a lifetime gift to his spouse of a home or an interest in the home. Residential property values have sky-rocketed and this ceiling of $10,000 is now unrealistic. I agree a husband can make a total gift to his wife but this will be included in his estate when he dies. We are dealing here with an outright gift to the spouse of the family residence or a share of it. This is not included in any subsequent estate taxation. Under the proposed changes in the estate tax, the value of the home would be included in the estate. To that extent, the proposed changes would not benefit the widow.

What is the rationale in clause 113 with regard to marriage contracts? Under the civil law gifts made as a result of a marriage contract become an obligation and not really a gift. These should not be included in the person's estate when he dies.

My next point is in connection with clause 114 of the bill. As I understand the amendments, principal shareholders in major corporations who have earned an extensive bonus will be precluded from directing the corporation to pay this money to a charitable foundation such as a hospital, university or museum. It is my information this will now be deemed to be part of the taxpayer's income. Many hospitals, universities and art museums depend a great deal on private endowments. These will no longer be received.

I now want to draw the attention of members of the committee to page 11 of the bill dealing with the so-called progressive rates of tax on gifts. Under the existing act I believe the maximum amount payable was 28 per cent of the estate. The proposed act will now have a maximum of up to 75 per cent. I do not understand the purport of levying such a high tax. These remarks are rather limited at this time because we have already discussed the general principles, and I do not think anything would be gained by having a lengthy discussion.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could deal with a few of the points which were raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He was first talking about the gift to, I gather, the spouse of an employee who is deceased. I should point out that one year's salary can be given under the Income Tax Act, and there is an allowable deduction for the corporation or business which gives it away, and it is not income in the hands of the spouse.

In addition to this, periodic gifts could be made and would be treated as gifts, as with the $2,000 per annum per person, which is not limited to children or anything like that. You can give $2,000 to anyone, so that if it was an employee's spouse with five children and the employer decided to give $12,000 a year to her, it would still be a gift. If the gift is made by a corporation, the gift tax does not apply anyway, as my hon. friend well knows.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I think the minister has got the wrong point. I am talking about a payment by a farmer who has had an employee on his farm for many years. The man dies leaving his widow in somewhat limited circumstances. Perhaps five or ten years later on she is in a senior citizens' home and has only the old age pension, so her husband's former employer would like to give her $1,000. He does not pay gift tax, but would this $1,000 be marshalled back into his estate on his demise?

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Chairman, it would not be marshalled back. The only things that get marshalled back are taxable gifts, so that if you give $2,000 to 100 people in a year, a total of $200,000, they would be all non-taxable gifts and would not be marshalled back into the estate, unless of course the donor died within three years.

Another question raised by my hon. friend concerned the matter of marriage contracts. Our intention is, as indicated in the law under section 113, to treat as a gift the amounts transferred under marriage contracts when they are transferred, not at the time a promise is made but when funds are actually transferred. The mere fact that you said, "I will give something to you sometime," does not make it a gift. We are depending on the transfer of the funds as such. Otherwise, we would get into the matter of conditional gifts.

The other major question raised by the hon. member concerned the matter of redirecting of bonuses or funds derived from corporations. In our changes in the Income Tax Act, through the gift tax provisions, there is no change in this respect whatsoever. If it was income previously under section 5 or 8, or 16, the combination of one of the first two and the third one, it is still income. We have not changed the situation at all in this regard. If something was income in the hands of the individual before, and was therefore subject to the 10 per cent limitation when he passed it on, it still is income. We have not changed the situation in this regard.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have not the resolution before me. An individual could actually have a bonus owing to him by a corporation but he could disavow it entirely. He could tell the corporation, "Don't pay it to me; pay it to X or Y hospital." That can be done under the present provisions, but if this money is now to be treated as income in the hands of the person giving the direction to have the money go to a hospital, we will have some problems.

Mr. Benson: No, Mr. Chairman, I am informed it would not be handled that way. It is treated as a gift made by him, but it is a gift that is not subject to tax. It is a gift to charity. Of course, it is subject to the normal provisions of the Income Tax Act with respect to gifts to charity.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would it be treated as a gift within the limitations of his income? A man can make gifts to charity only within a certain limitation. This gift might take him well over that ceiling.

Mr. Benson: This has always been the situation. We have not changed it whatsoever. If gifts were made beyond the limitations, of course there were the averaging provisions with respect to them. If some things could be taxable under the proposed changes in the law they would have been taxable before.

Mr. Valade: With regard to the proposed new subsection (2)(b)(ii) can the minister tell us whether this is taking away the right of a spouse to leave some valuables to her heirs? The limitation here is to both the husband and the wife.

Mr. Benson: The provision simply allows a single gift of $10,000 in this regard. This is another question that was raised by the hon. member for Edmonton West. In changing the act it was decided to leave in the provision with respect to the $10,000 gift in the passing of a farm to a child. There is another point that I would like to clear up, and that is the amount of gifts that may be made to a child.

First, there is the provision of a $2,000 gift to anyone. Then, there is the unlimited provision of gifting to one's wife unconditionally, and she may gift to the same people or other people at her own discretion. Thus, one might achieve a position where a single child benefited to the extent of $4,000 from a husband and wife. It is quite possible, if a husband gave money to his wife and she decided to give $2,000 to her children at her own discretion, this would be quite a legitimate and tax free gift to the children. The husband of course could make similar gifts, so that one could conceive of a situation where over a period of 20 years it would be possible to give to each of one's children providing the wife wanted to give to the children as well—an amount of $80,000 per child, which is quite a substantial amount.

Mr. Valade: My argument was not on that. I wonder why this exemption does not apply to either the husband or wife. Take the case of a woman who may be financially independent of her husband and who would like to leave $10,000 to her heirs, and the father would like to do the same thing. You are now discriminating against one or the other. It has to be a joint gift.

Mr. Benson: The main reason for this is that we did not want to double up, and thus have a $20,000 transfer in particular circumstances. Under the gifting provisions, that $2,000 to each person is generous compared with the former provisions of the gift tax where you could not give more than $4,000 to any group of people if you went over $1,000 to one. We did not want to double up and provide $20,000 in this particular circumstance because we did not think it was necessary.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the wife must be a taxpayer in order to give this gift?

Mr. Benson: Of course not, Mr. Chairman. What is involved here is that under the new provisions one can give any amount to his wife at any time provided it is a non-conditional gift. Then, the wife has the same right to give $2,000 to any number of people and this does not affect the estate. The estate tax is not affected. There are really quite generous gifting conditions contained in this law. However, one would have to trust his wife.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister answered my colleague some time ago regarding a gift made in the form of a marriage contract. There is one point which I should like to clarify. If these gifts have a value of $10,000 or over during a period of 10, 15 or 20 years and are in the form, for example, of an automobile or something like that, are they taxable at the time of the gift or are they taxable at their value at a later date?

Mr. Benson: Such a gift would not be taxable at all. Under the new provisions one may give anything he wishes to his wife. The only point I was making to my hon. friend from Edmonton West was we would not consider it as a gift until title is transferred. But one may give any amount to his wife at any time and it does not attract any gift tax whatever.

Mr. Peters: The minister has used the term "wife". What provisions are there in respect of common law wives in the arrangement of estates?

An hon. Member: There is no legal status.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says there is no legal status, but I believe in many federal acts a legal status is provided in this regard.

Mr. Baldwin: What about children in common law marriages?

Mr. Benson: Under the tax laws in Canada there never has been a legal status for a common law wife. In the general review of the taxing acts in Canada which is being carried on at present I am not sure that this is not a matter that we should take into consideration, but in this law we are not changing anything. There is no provision with regard to common law wives.

Mr. Peters: Although I realize this probably is a matter which is not entirely within the purview of the bill we are discussing, I believe the federal government has made concessions in this area in respect of other acts such as the Veterans Affairs Act. I am particularly interested in the transfer of gifts given during the lifetime because certainly this would be a common practice, amongst those involved common law relationships. However, there is another situation. I have in mind particularly a case in my area which I would not like to see occur again. It involved a man who had been living with a woman for 35 years. Originally, he had been married. A divorce proceeding had been instituted but the final decree had never been issued for some reason or other. This man had a railway pension and little else except a house. The house went to the common law wife but the pension went to the woman with whom he had not been living for 35 years. She, too, was living common law with another man. She received the money from his government pension.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: I love these holier than thou members who think these things do not happen. I am pleased they can be so damned pure. There are many, many people who for some reason or other enter into common law relationships. I suggest we should write into this bill an amendment which would take care of this situation. I understand that in respect of the legislation affecting veterans the Department of Veterans Affairs applies a number of criteria that are fairly easy to establish. It would seem to me that, at least in respect of some of these provisions, a formula should be established by which a person may designate a spouse.

In the example I gave concerning the railway pension, the person concerned had thought this matter was taken care of in his will. He had written in the provision that the pension be left to Mary Jones. He gave his last name. In other words, he included the person's proper name and then his name. He spelled it out. This was good enough for the courts so far as the disposition of his house and property were concerned but the pension went to the wife with whom he had not lived for 35 years.

The criteria which I understand is used by the Department of Veterans Affairs is that the man must have lived with a particular woman in a community, established credit on her behalf, recognized her as his wife, provided for her fully and, in some cases, repudiated the previous wife. Despite some of the holier than thou members, I think the minister should give some consideration to this. I believe the minister will agree that this problem affects quite a number of people. I can think of a man in my own town who has two wives living in the community. I am sure he intends to leave something for both of them. He has a very large estate which runs into millions. The problem in such a case could be very great. Children are involved in one of the relationships.

This may not be the proper legislation under which to deal with a situation of this type, although I believe very often such a situation will have to be dealt with under this legislation. I suggest we should provide some type of protection for the person whom a man may designate as his common law wife or the wife with whom he intends to split the estate for the reason that he shared that estate with her for a long period of time.

Mr. Benson: My experience through having to deal with matters of pensions on the Treasury Board has been that the matter of common law wives is a very difficult one. The difficulty lies in deciding who really is entitled to receive a particular pension. Under the taxing statutes we have never really recognized the position of a common law wife, although I would hate to say how many people have filed tax returns stating that: My wife is Mrs. So and so, claiming them as such.

• (8:40 p.m.)

I should like to inform my friend that in the review of various taxation matters with a view to tax reform, it is my intention that this matter be looked into very carefully. It would be nice to work out some rules so one could be in the position of recognizing the realities of the particular situation without taking away the benefits that a person who may have been a wife might ultimately have had. This is a very difficult matter, but I can undertake to my hon. friend that this is under review and we are looking into the situation very closely.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to give away free advice or suggest an improper arrangement, but let us consider the case of a common law relationship. If provision were made, either at the time of death or before, to transfer property in the form of cash or otherwise to a person in this relationship for valuable consideration such as housekeeping or other valuable services, would that transfer not be taken out of the category of a gift? Unless there has been some change, would I not be correct in that regard?

Mr. Benson: That is quite true but the question arises to whether such transfer is income in the hands of the person involved. This is a complicated matter to work out. I hope that the unfortunate situation we have had in Canada in respect of common law wives, and various other marital difficulties, will be alleviated to some degree as a result of what I think was a very wise piece of legislation passed by this house last session in respect of divorce. I hope a great many of these cases will be cleared up. I undertake to carry through with an examination of the position of common law wives in respect of the matter of taxation.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister will pardon my ignorance in respect of this tax free gift of $2,000. Let us suppose a father gave $2,000 to each of five children, totalling $10,000. In respect of the giver and the receivers there is no tax paid. On the death of the giver is that $10,000 charged back as part of the estate, and does it become taxable as part of the estate?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman. The only circumstances under which it would be added to the estate is if the gift was made within three years prior to death. We have not changed that situation at all for estate tax purposes. If you look at the Ontario succession duty situation, which is quite a different matter, the period is five years. It is only those gifts made within three years immediately preceding death which are added to the estate, although all gifts over the $2,000 level are taken into account in determining the rate to be applied to the whole estate.

Mr. Hales: If the gift was not made within the three year limit and there were no estate what would be the situation?

Mr. Benson: Then, there would be no tax.

Amendment to clause 1 agreed to.

Clause 1 as amended agreed to.

Clause 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I believe that my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will move an amendment to clause 3. This amendment has already been circulated to members and critics of the opposition. In line with the agreement we arrived at previously, I assume I do not have to read the entire amendment but that it will be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Basford moved:

That clause 3 of Bill C-165 be amended

(a) by striking out lines 4 and 5 on page 21 and substituting the following:

that can, within six months after the death of the deceased or such longer period as may be reasonable in the circumstances, be

(b) by striking out lines 15 and 16 on page 21 and substituting the following:

six months after the death of the deceased or such longer period as may be reasonable in the circumstances, be established to be

(c) by striking out lines 37 to 46 on page 21 and lines 1 to 8 on page 22 and substituting the following:

capital of the settlement, and

(ii) no person except such spouse may receive or otherwise obtain, after the death of the deceased and before the death of such spouse, any of the capital of the settlement or any use thereof, or any of the income of the settlement to which such spouse is entitled or any use thereof,

or by the transfer of property to a trust that at the time of the transfer was a settlement to which subparagraphs (i) and (ii) apply, the creation of which constituted a gift inter vivos by him to his spouse that was exempt from tax under part IV of the Income Tax Act by virtue of paragraph (e) of subsection (1) of section 112 thereof;

(d) by striking out lines 15 to 21 on page 22 and substituting the following:

can, within six months after the death of the deceased or such longer period as may be reasonable in the circumstances, be established to be vested in the child for his benefit indefeasibly, or subject to defeasance only in the event of his death before attaining such age, not exceeding forty years, as is specified in the will or other instrument under or by virtue of which the property so passing became vested in him, except any such property comprising a gift described in paragraph (b) or (e) consisting of a pension or compensation described in paragraph (f) or (g)

(e) by striking out lines 24 to 42 on page 23 and substituting the following:

'tion, pension or death benefit payable or granted

(a) out of or under any fund or plan established for the payment of superannuation, pension or death benefits to recipients, or

(b) out of the revenue or Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or under or subject to any Act of the Parliament of Canada or of the legislature of Canada or of the legislature of a province, to the spouse of a deceased on or after the death of the deceased in respect of such death, subject to a provision that such benefit ceases to be payable to such spouse if he remarries, shall not, by reason only of such provision, be considered not to be vested indefeasibly in him.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, apparently this is one of the penultimate or ultimate changes made by the minister as announced on December 27 providing for the common disaster clause in wills. I am rather surprised that it has not occurred to the officials of the departments of finance and national revenue that in perhaps 75 per cent of the wills prepared in this country involving a husband and wife there is no disaster clause. In this day and age, I think the minister is quite right in providing a six month safe haven. I have not seen a reference in any document to this six month clause. The 120 day provision is by far the most extensive I have seen, but I think the minister's officials were wise in advising him to put in the six month period.

Aside from that I have nothing more to say in respect of this particular clause.

Amendment to clause 3 agreed to.

Clause 3 as amended agreed to.

On clause 4—Computation of tax.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw members' attention to the fact that in this particular clause we see how long the teeth are in this act. To use another metaphor, we see how big the bite will be in respect of taxable gifts. This is where we see the acceleration from a maximum of 28 per cent at the top range, as it existed in the old act, to 75 per cent, if the gift exceeds $3,000. In my initial remarks I tried to obtain a rationale from the minister as to why he decided to go so high.

Mr. Benson: In clause 4 we are dealing with estate tax rates rather than gift tax rates. Let me indicate with regard to the increase in the gift tax rates, which we passed a little bit earlier in the amendment to the gift tax part of the measure, that the reason for this really was that gift transfers from large estates in Canada were taxed at 28 per cent, thus avoiding the top estate tax rate.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am afraid I have introduced an element in so far as gifts and estate taxes I did not intend, because the maximum rate was 50 per cent on a much higher level, namely $1,750,000.

Mr. Benson: If I might conclude, what we have done in effect is close up what I consider to be a loophole in respect of very large estates. This low rate gifting did not apply to the average person, but only to very large estates. That loophole has been closed as a result of the change to the gift tax rate.

I should point out that I understand there is a proposal in the United States to do exactly the same sort of thing. However, gifts or bequests from a spouse to a spouse are entirely eliminated from taxation. So, a pension benefit given to a wife is not taxable in her hands and so on.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Also, there are some great advantages given for people who die and have young children. Perhaps I could just give an example. If someone has children aged five, seven, nine and eleven, and he dies, he would be able to leave in his estate $125,000 to the children, plus any amount without limit to his wife; and the whole estate would be entirely free of estate tax.

Another benefit included is with regard to invalid children. One thinks of spastics, mongolian children, and that sort of thing. The exemption for such a child has been increased. Therefore, if one had one child such as this, one could leave up to a maximum of $100,000 which would be entirely exempt from estate tax. In order to make up for this the rates on other estates had to be adjusted if we were to reach the position where we did not reduce the over-all revenue from the estate tax. This was done by reducing the top rate from 54 per cent to 50 per cent and moving it back to apply to marginal amounts from $300,000 upwards.

In spite of a great deal that has been said in this debate, if one looks at where the revenue will come from in the future you will see that the real bite will be on estates which are above $300,000; that is, the top hat estates. This is done in order to pay for the benefits given, first of all, to the surviving spouse, the benefits given to people who die and have yound children and the benefits given in the case of someone who dies and has an invalid child. This was really the theory behind the change in the rates.

Where there is a single child, the rates are somewhat higher than they would have been before. Let us look at the case of an estate to which three or four children are heir. If you look at the rates generally, you will find that the estate tax is less until one gets up to estate of approximately $200,000. But where there is a single child, the rates are slightly higher. For two children, the rates are slightly higher than they were previously. We tax more where the estate is left to a stranger. If I happened to have a rich uncle who left me $200,000, my estate tax would go up about $12,000. We felt these were circumstances where you could legitimately look for more funds with which to make up for the benefits given to those people I mentioned earlier.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, in some ways I am confirmed in the views I expressed during the budget debate, namely, that the minister had for some purposes abandoned the principle of estate tax and had gone back to the old succession duty. The differentiation is made with regard to the ultimate beneficiary. The rate depends upon the nature of the beneficiary. I remember the debate with regard to the proposal put forward by the officials of the Department of Finance and the Department of National Revenue, when it was said that this was a great step forward, that the law was being simplified. Now, the wheel is turning full circle. I rather suspect that now the minister has his toe in the door, we will see some further changes in this regard and will be back strictly to a succession duty type transfer where the nature of the beneficiary determines the rate of tax.

The minister may feel that he is transferring the emphasis of the tax load, with regard to estate tax, to the more affluent estates. I ask, what guarantee has he that those in the upper income brackets will just not leave this country? Already we hear very distinct rumblings of people going to some of the Caribbean countries, not only those who have estates of over $1 million or $1,500,000 but those with estates of lesser value. I have heard these rumblings from a great many business men in Toronto, Montreal and out west whose estates come into the $500,000 or $750,000 range. These men have been successful as a result of their operations during the last 20 years. One man told me the other day: If my children were not in high school here, I would leave right now and take everything with me. He said: They will clean us out.

This is the sort of mental attitude with which we must deal. It may be justified; it may not be justified. However, the minister cannot escape the fact that this attitude is very prevalent. These are the people who are providing the investment capital in this country. If the minister wants to drive away Canadians who have money to invest, he will have to find some other means of obtaining this capital. Therefore, he is taking a very grave, calculated risk, in my opinion. The minister is penalizing these people by simply saying: We will just transfer the load with regard to estate tax, and provide for other things.

The minister says that we must obtain this revenue. Not all these people have inherited large estates. When we were listening this afternoon to the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) I felt like saying that it is not just a case where a man has enjoyed certain social amenities like schools, colleges and what have you, and therefore he should repay his debt to society. A man may succeed because he is more prudent, has worked harder and has perhaps stayed sober more often than another fellow. He may not have spent as much time on the golf course as another man, and so forth. The result of this measure is an exceptionally high penalty on estates of the size that will be subject to a very heavy tax load.

The same thing has been done in Britain, and we know what has happened in that country. Capital has been driven out of Britain. The capital has left that country, and we have inherited the brains and ability from that country. This situation has resulted from the tax laws enacted in Britain which have driven the best people out of the country. We will do the same thing if we adopt what I think is a very shortsighted principle with regard to taxation in this country.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could give the committee some of the reasons why he did not take into consideration today's highly inflated prices of products and services. It is not a very large estate that adds up to $50,000 today, when one bears in mind the price of property, farms, and so on. It seems to me the minister has failed to take this fact into consideration in making these adjustments. The value of small businesses reach this sum in no time. The price of homes, for example, is today very high. I think the minister has completely overlooked the inflated value of property, businesses and estates in setting up these schedules and adjustments. No thought seems to have been given to these people.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: I can assure the hon. member we did take into consideration the problem of increasing values due to rising price levels, but I must get back to the point that we are trying to benefit certain people through this legislation and the bill for them must be paid somehow. Remember, no estate under $50,000 is taxed at all, even if it is left to a fourth cousin in Russia, or to a complete stranger.

Mr. Hales: But if it is $1 over—

Mr. Benson: Then fifty cents estate tax would be payable. That is all. In the second place, transfers to widows are entirely free of estate tax. Third, if hon. members look carefully they will find that the estate tax exemptions are much more advantageous where there are several children, making it easier to pass estates on to them. Over-all, under these provisions, families with three or four children are much better off than they were previously, until the estate gets up to a couple of hundred thousand dollars.

The money to make up for this has to come from somewhere, so it comes from people who leave money to strangers. Where there is one child, or two children, the tax is probably a little more, and estates worth more than a couple of hundred thousand dollars are taxed more heavily.

In the valuation of estates one has to have regard to fair market value. There has been a good deal of comment about unfairness in valuing land and other assets. I should point out that the initial valuation is made by the executor who files the return. The department looks at this and only if it appears unfair does it apply a different valuation. This assessment is, of course, subject to appeal through the normal procedures under the tax acts, so if it can be said that anyone can get justice in connection with the taxation of income in Canada it can also be said there is justice in connection with the taxation of estates as far as the value of an estate is concerned.

Mr. Hales: What the minister has said means nothing as far as I am concerned. The minister talks about officials appraising the value of a property. The price of the property is set by the prevailing price applicable to neighbouring farms, or property down the street. It is an inflated price. When he tells us he is taking more from people with larger estates, he is really saying that this proposal will penalize those who have saved their money and invested it, those who have helped this country to develop, and made Canada what it is today. The minister is penalizing those who have helped build up this country.

Mr. Benson: What the hon. member is doing is this: He is advancing an argument against estate tax per se. He is not putting forward an argument against the amendments I have made to the act. In fact, a great many of the arguments which have been advanced during this debate are not arguments against changes in the estate tax but arguments against the estate tax itself, which, I might point out, was introduced by the Conservative government when it was in power.

Mr. Baldwin: An important aspect of this question is what constitutes fair market value. Would the minister consider giving advice to the assessors of his department to bear in mind at the time of making an assessment the very doubtful value, present and potential, of the property concerned while the present government remains in power?

Mr. Benson: I should simply like to say that as long as the present government remains in power the value of the property is likely to increase. In times of Conservative depression, it might go down.

An hon. Member: You are getting cheeky.

Mr. Benson: No. Really, I am not. I should like to say that the value placed on an estate must be the fair market value, the price at which it can be sold today. Anyone who thinks he has been unfairly treated in this regard should go to the courts and get justice as I believe he can in the courts of Canada.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to clear up one point. No one has suggested there should be no estate tax. The objection has been to punitive taxation, what I call punitive taxation of excellence. And the people who hold the bulk of the investment in this country are selected as fair game. Everyone in this category is deemed to be a fat cat.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division.

Clause agreed to on division.

On clause 5—

Mr. Benson: My colleague, the Minister of Labour, would like to move an amendment to clause 5, one which has been circulated. I think it could be included in Hansard without being read out, as has been agreed with the Opposition parties.

Mr. Mackasey: I move:

(a) by striking out lines 25 to 27 on page 29 and substituting the following:
'secured (except'; and
(b) by striking out lines 39 to 45 on page 29 and substituting the following:
'municipality, negotiable instruments, and all other debts under seal except such of those other debts under seal as are owing by Her Majesty in right of Canada, shall be deemed to be situated in the place where the documents in evidence of the indebtedness were located at the time of death" '.

Mr. Hales: Would the minister give us the page number? This is a long bill and the clause is not easy to find.

The Chairman: This is on page 27.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In this connection, I should like it to be crystal clear what is deemed to be the location of the documents of evidence of indebtedness. Is it the share certificate, or the register office or the transfer office? There seems a great deal of difference in points of view in this regard.

For example, a person living in Saskatchewan who dies owning shares in a company whose head office is in Quebec, when there is no transfer office in Winnipeg, Regina or Calgary, has to transfer them through the Montreal office and they are hit by Quebec succession duty. For the purpose of this legislation, I want it to be absolutely clear where the situs of this evidence of indebtedness will be.

Mr. Benson: We do not deal with the location of shares in this particular change. It does deal with negotiable indebtedness, and the location of the indebtedness will be where the bonds, notes and so on are physically located. That is the position with respect to the estate tax. This applies to bonds, notes and so on. It is a matter of where they are physically located at the time of death.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What about shares which are not registered? What about open certificates which may be signed over?

Mr. Benson: Generally, the shares are located at the nearest transfer agency.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 6 agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Election by executor.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This Clause deals with the so-called election by the executor to defer tax. In the old act it was meaningless because the conditions were so difficult to comply with. Now, it is indicated that an executor may elect to defer payment of tax over a period of five years at a rate of interest. It has been stated this will likely be the market rate, but it seems to me, reading the amendment put forward, that the rate of interest will be 6 per cent. Would the minister kindly confirm this impression or indicate where I may be wrong?

• (9:10 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: The rate which will be used is the rate established by the Governor in Council. We have not up to this point established a rate, but we shall establish it when the act receives royal assent. I would think that the rate here needs to be somewhere near the current mortgage rate, though this is my personal opinion. We must not put ourselves in the position where we encourage people not to make payments to the Crown because they can invest their money somewhere else and get a greater return on it. In effect, they would be making money but not paying their estate tax. Therefore, I think we have to move somewhere near to the current first mortgage rate in this regard so that everybody is given the opportunity to make their payments over a five year period, at the same time extending no advantage to people who withhold funds from the Crown and invest those funds to make money.

Mr. McCutcheon: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the minister's remarks about mortgage rates, but would he be more specific? There are many mortgage rates in Canada today. For example, there is the mortgage rate of the Farm Credit Corporation which is 7 point something per cent. There is the mortgage rate under the National Housing Act which is 9 or 10 per cent. Then, there is private mortgage money probably at 10 or 12 per cent. Would he be a little more specific?

Mr. Benson: I am thinking not of a preferential rate, such as the Farm Credit Corporation rate. I am thinking more of a rate similar to the rate at which C.M.H.C. make direct lending, some rate such as that adjusted annually.

What we are trying to do is to refrain from putting people in a very difficult position. We are allowing them to pay their estate tax over a period of time. However, we do not want to put people—and I think particularly of those with large estates—in the position where they might find it of great advantage to get money from the government of Canada at 5 per cent and invest it at 9 or 10 per cent while withholding their estate tax for five years. We should not encourage that sort of thing. The rate should not be punitive but somewhere in the region of the rate at which C.M.H.C. makes direct loans.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, I think there is some illogicality in what the minister is saying. Surely, the executor will elect to defer payment of duty in a case where there are insufficient liquid assets to take care of the estate tax. After all, that is the purpose of the deferment.

Mr. Benson: That is right.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But if there are no liquid assets, how can the money be invested at a higher rate, in effect getting a benefit from the Crown at 7 or 8 per cent interest? The minister knows the problem here. We are considering the liquidation of shares in private corporations in cases where the market may not be ripe for it. We are talking about the liquidation of land holdings or any number of payments out as a result of the passing of farms. A five year period will mean tough going to clear that sort of thing.

I do not think that the minister is right in saying that people will take advantage of that situation. On the basis of the return made by the executor, it will be clear whether there are liquid assets. Surely, there will not be any possibility of their claiming they want to defer payment if they have the cash to pay the estate tax.

Mr. Benson: The Minister of National Revenue made a subjective judgment as to who should pay the tax and who should not. The aim of this provision is to give people the right to postpone estate tax payments over a five year period. Under the revision to the act this is now a right, instead of the matter depending upon a subjective judgment of the Minister of National Revenue.

Since that right will exist, the rate must also be fixed at the current market rate. Otherwise, people with large estates who have the right not to pay the tax if they do not want to will, if they can, invest the money and make a profit.

I should also point out that where somebody comes to the minister and says: "I can't pay and I should like to put the payments off and pay only the maximum of 5 per cent under the act", and the Minister agrees he will be permitted to do so; the 5 per cent provision is still left in the act. So, if somebody proves to the minister that his assets are non-liquid, that he cannot afford to pay the current market rate and asks for a postponement, he can still pay 5 per cent interest. But at the same time we have moved beyond that and given everybody the right to put off their payments, though they have to pay the current market rate if they choose to do that.

Mr. Hales: I think that the minister should be more precise about the rate of interest that is to be paid. This is left wide open. I do not know why the rate cannot be written into the act, say a rate that is one half of one per cent over the Bank of Canada rate at the time. As it is now we are buying a pig in a poke. The rate should be prescribed in the act, as it is in other cases.

Mr. Benson: We are not eliminating the 5 per cent rate in the act. If someone can convince the Minister of National Revenue that he cannot pay the tax, and there have been 40 such applications in the last ten years, then he can borrow money at 5 per cent. That provision is still in the act. If one built into the act the right for everybody to put off paying their tax for five years if they wanted to, then the interest rate would have to be subject to adjustment either up or down as the current rates of interest in Canada change. Otherwise, people with large estates would find it advantageous to postpone paying their tax for five years because they could borrow money from the government at 5 per cent and reinvest it at 10 per cent. We do not want this. We want to give them this right, but we do not want to give them an advantage. The rate of interest in the cases I am talking about is a rate that is approximately the prime rate of C.M.H.C. for direct lending.

Mr. St. Pierre: Mr. Chairman, I am rising because I want to seek clarification. A few minutes ago the hon. member for Edmonton West said that nobody suggested there should not be an estate tax in Canada. This has been suggested in precise terms by spokesmen for the Ralliement des créditistes and also by a spokesman for the Conservative party, the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. In his remarks, as reported at page 5719 of Hansard, he said:

> In my submission, if one considers all the circumstances this tax has no merit and there is no place for it in our society.

Then further on the same page:

> There are too few estates in this young country—

The Chairman: Order, please. Is the hon. member speaking to clause 8? The committee is dealing specifically with clause 8.

Mr. St. Pierre: I was asking for clarification of Conservative party policy.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I hope I misunderstood the minister, but I thought I heard him say that the 5 per cent rate is in the act and applies to persons who can convince the minister they are not in a position to pay the tax at that particular time but want to pay it in instalments. Did the minister say that this rate is now done away with?

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Simpson: Then, it is still in the act. In other words, in the exercise of his discretion the minister will allow certain people to pay their tax at 5 per cent on a five year basis; other people who fail to convince the minister will probably have to pay 9 or 10 per cent, is that right?

• (9:20 p.m.)

Mr. Benson: There is still provision in the act for those suffering from hardship to go to the Minister of National Revenue and, if they convince him that the case in fact constitutes a hardship, to be eligible for the 5 per cent interest rate. In addition, under this new bill everyone has the right to postpone payment of the tax for five years. Anyone so postponing payment will have to pay interest on the amount owed which, in my opinion, should be at a rate similar to that charged on C.M.H.C. mortgages.

Mr. Simpson: I take it, then, that there will be two interest rates or two rates of tax.

Mr. Benson: There will be two rates of interest.

Mr. Simpson: One of those will be at a maximum of 5 per cent, I take it, and the other one possibly will be at current C.M.H.C. mortgage rates.

Mr. Benson: That is right.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, we ought to look into this matter because here is a flagrant abuse of ministerial discretion.

Mr. Benson: The ministerial discretion is already in the act.

Mr. Hales: May I finish my remarks, Mr. Chairman? I submit that here we are giving the minister a discretion. He has the right to decide what are hardship cases and what are not.

Mr. Benson: It has always been so.

Mr. Hales: The minister said that hardship cases would be entitled to take advantage of a 5 per cent interest rate. What if those applying were members of the Liberal party—

Mr. Benson: Come on now—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Benson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the matter of ministerial discretion or judgment was included by the Conservative party in the provisions of the estate legislation that that party introduced.

Mr. Hales: I will withdraw my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: I remember when the members on the government side were in opposition, Mr. Chairman. We spent hours and hours discussing the subject of ministerial discretion and the granting of such discretion to the minister of national revenue and the minister of finance. I well remember how earnestly and sincerely Mr. Pickersgill spoke on the subject. Now, it seems, the minister has a double ministerial discretion. He has the right to do two things and I submit it should not be so. Someone may come to the minister with a soft story and say, "I cannot afford to pay because I have no money," and so on. The minister may reply, "All right, your interest rate is set at 5 per cent". On the other hand the minister may say to someone, "No. You cannot pay at the 5 per cent rate. You must pay the tax over a period of years, but we do not know what the interest rate on the debt will be since no rate is included in the act." It is clear that here we have ministerial discretion of the worst kind. It is much worse than any I have seen in other acts. You can have it one way or the other, but surely you cannot have it both ways.

Mr. Benson: The purpose of the amendment is to remove the threat of grave injustice that could be perpetrated as the result of using ministerial discretion. That discretion has always been in the act. In the last ten years I believe only 40 cases of alleged hardship have come before the Minister of National Revenue. Twelve of those applicants were deemed to be hardship cases. The other 28 cases had to pay their tax immediately. They had no right of postponement. That provision has been amended so that now the Minister of National Revenue may say either "This is a case of hardship, and the rate of interest to apply will be 5 per cent" or "This is not a case of hardship." In the latter case the applicant has the right, as has everyone, to pay his tax over a five year period, with current rates of interest applying to his debt. That is a big improvement over the old situation.

Mr. Hales: It is important, I submit, for us to have a better definition of hardship than we have at present.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister has been leading us astray a little.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I should like to see a better definition of hardship written into the bill. I represent a rural riding and am interested in how this bill affects the family farm. Last night, I believe, an hon. member on this side of the house spoke of one who inherited a farm and had to pay a tax of approximately $26,000. I do not know whether the minister is listening to me.

Mr. Benson: Of course, I am.

Mr. McIntosh: The inheritor of the estate, under the new legislation, I believe is liable for more than $4,000 in interest. I wonder how any farmer in straightened circumstances can afford to meet his payments when we consider that in western Canada farmers are on a six bushel quota and may be on that quota for some years. Farmers will not be able to make money on their wheat, largely because of government regulations. As a result, there will be many cases of hardship among farmers. I wish to know what will happen in such cases.

Mr. Benson: It is all a matter of whether cash is available to pay the tax. May I point out that section 16 of the Estate Tax Act has not been changed. It reads:

> Notwithstanding the provisions of this Part respecting the time within which payment shall be made of any amount as tax under this Part by the executor of the estate of a deceased or by a person as the successor to any property passing on the death of a deceased, where the Minister is satisfied that payment of any such amount as tax under this Part cannot, without undue hardship or excessive sacrifice, be made within that time, the Minister may defer the time for payment of that amount or any part thereof for such period, on such terms and on payment of such interest, not exceeding 5% per annum, as to him seems equitable and proper.

That discretion has been left intact in this legislation. Previously, if the minister found there was no case of hardship, the applicant immediately was liable for the tax in full. That has been changed. The only penalty an applicant must incur, under the new legislation is the payment of interest on his debt at current borrowing rates. As I say, previously he had to pay the entire amount owing.

Mr. Simpson: Does it not occur to the minister that in cases of hardship the imposition of a 5 per cent interest rate will mean a further hardship.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I ought to point out that such interest paid on estate tax debts is deductible for income tax purposes. That provision will reduce the effective rate of interest.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, under this legislation the minister has the option of ordering an applicant to pay interest at the rate or 5 per cent or at a rate current in the market. I wonder whether that provision takes into account all those with special problems. Might it not be wiser to have interest rates set at the discretion of the minister in all cases other than hardship cases?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, we have said in the bill that the rate is to be determined by the Governor in Council. I still think the provisions of this legislation are fair. The Minister of National Revenue may say, "This is a hardship case". In that case the rate of 5 per cent applies. But we do not want anyone to make money as a result of paying estate taxes a certain way. As I have said, the interest paid on estate tax—this includes those amounts paid where the interest is at 5 per cent—is deductible for income tax purposes. Therefore, the effective rate of interest will be somewhat lower than 5 per cent in hardship cases.

Clause 8 agreed to.

• (9:30 p.m.)

On clause 9—Property transferred or acquired under agreement, etc.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister the same question I asked previously. If a person who has his tax assessed goes to the minister in an attempt to prove his hardship and is unsuccessful, must he pay the higher rate? If during the succeeding years a hardship does develop, can he then return to the minister and have that rate reassessed?

Mr. Benson: I think, Mr. Chairman, we are getting into the matter of calculation of taxes. If the judgment was that it was not a hardship case and the person went to the minister stating he was unable to pay the tax, the Department of National Revenue would try to work out some method whereby the tax could be ultimately cleared up. It is similar to someone who cannot pay his income tax. A system is worked out whereby this is paid over a period of time, with interest. The Department of National Revenue has always been fairly reasonable in this regard. When I was minister of that department there was never an undue seizure of assets to pay taxes.

A system was worked out whereby taxes could be paid enabling the person to stay in business. Taxes cannot be collected when a person goes out of business. I do not know of any case where the Minister of National Revenue forced somebody into bankruptcy in order to collect taxes.

Mr. Hales: With this proposed double system of interest rate, Mr. Chairman, are the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Revenue prepared to receive letters from taxpayers complaining that they have been charged a rate of 8¾ per cent while their friend "John Smith" is paying only 5 per cent?

Mr. Benson: Of course I am ready to receive them. Undoubtedly, there will be such letters. I should point out that under the existing Section 16 over the past ten years there have been approximately 40 cases requesting the minister to defer the payment of taxes. Estate taxes have been collected on approximately 40,000 or 50,000 estates in the last ten years.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 10 and 11 agreed to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Would you identify the page numbers, as not everyone have their bills annotated?

The Chairman: Clause 9, page 37; clause 10, page 37 and clause 11 page 39.

On clause 12—Cumulative gift sum.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I move:

(ii) any deed or other instrument under or by virtue of which a usufruct or substitution is created or any real property or estate or interest therein stands limited to any persons by way of succession;

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps the minister would give the background of the amendment.

Mr. Benson: I would be very pleased to.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Every time taxes are being dealt with the distinction regarding the civil law in the province of Quebec is overlooked.

Mr. Benson: In connection with the amendment to clause 12, the Quebec Civil Code does not deal with trusts to the same degree as common law. There are arrangements which serve the same purpose and apparently the most common are what are known as usufructs and an arrangement known as substitutions. We had thought that our definition of the word "settlement" would cover most usufructs and substitutions but the Quebec lawyers have convinced us that a substantial number would not have been covered. The ones that would not have been covered would have been those that included property other than real property.

We therefore recommend that the definition of "settlement" be amended so that it specifically covers those two Quebec institutions and that the word "settlement" be used fairly well throughout the estate and gift tax act in place of the word "trust", to put usufructs and settlements on the same footing as trusts wherever possible.

This indicates one of the difficulties in Canada where federal law has to be drawn in such a manner as to take into account the common law and the Quebec Civil Code.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment to clause 12 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 12 as amended, carry?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I want to make sure this paragraph is correct. The reference in paragraph (1) dealing with cumulative gift sum refers to Section 115 of the Income Tax Act which is now being amended by this very bill. I want to make sure we are going back to that precise point.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clause 13 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time, by leave now?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave.

Mr. Benson moved that the said bill be read a third time and passed.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On division. Mr. Speaker, I trust you caught the words "On division" for passage of third reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Carried on division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Benson: Perhaps after a very hard day, the house would agree to calling it ten o'clock and continue with the questions on the adjournment motion.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it ten o'clock and proceed to the adjournment proceedings?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is agreeable, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps we should make sure that the ministers or parliamentary secretaries who are to deal with the late show questions are here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the intention of the house that I call it ten o'clock and adjourn?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, Mr. Speaker. I thought the understanding was that we call it ten o'clock and proceed to the adjournment debate. My question is very simple. Are those who will be answering the adjournment debate questions in the house at the present time?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 40 a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIR TRANSPORT—WINNIPEG, MANITOBA—RECOGNITION IN SETTING FARES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, February 12, as recorded in Hansard at page 5430 I asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. What progress is the government making in the matter of securing recognition of Winnipeg as an international gateway with respect to air line fares?

[Mr. Benson.]

The Speaker thought that this question should be dealt with at some other time than during the oral question period, and so I posted it for one of these late shows. This is a matter which has been raised on a number of occasions over the past few years, and of course the assurance has always been given that it is being studied, considered, reviewed and so on. But it seems to me that with the passing of time and with the development of faster aircraft and aircraft that can go farther on a non-stop basis, it is time for Winnipeg to be granted the status of an international gateway so far as air line fares are concerned. I press that this be done without further delay.

I shall give just a couple of examples of what we in Winnipeg mean when we raise this matter. According to the international authorities the airline distance from Montreal to London is 3,241 statute miles. The distance from Winnipeg to Montreal is 1,129 miles. That means that to travel from Winnipeg to London via Montreal requires covering a distance of 4,370 miles.

However these days many flights are made over the polar route and the direct distance from Winnipeg to London is only 3,908 statute miles, or 462 miles shorter than the route through Montreal. Yet because Winnipeg does not enjoy the status of an international gateway it is impossible to get for Winnipeg to London passengers the fare that should apply because of this shorter distance.

For example at the present time it is possible to get a 21 day excursion from Montreal to London for $299, but to get the comparable trip from Winnipeg to London costs $425, partly because there is no excursion fare between Winnipeg and London and partly because the fare has to be made up on the basis of the distance from Winnipeg to Montreal plus the distance from Montreal to London. In these days when it is possible for aircraft to make the entire distance non-stop, it does seem to those of us in Winnipeg that we should enjoy the advantage of our geographical position. It will be obvious that this would be helpful to Winnipeg and to Manitoba in many ways.

Another example of this situation with a slightly different angle to it comes up when one considers a flight from Winnipeg to Mexico City. If one wishes to make that flight today he cannot make it on a direct basis. He must go either via Toronto or via Vancouver. The cheaper way would be via Toronto. So, we find that while it costs $289 to travel from Winnipeg to Mexico City, the distance being 2,950 miles by way of Toronto, if the flight went direct from Winnipeg to Mexico City the distance would be only 2,200 miles and the fare at the same rate per mile would be only $215. I might say that all the fares I have given tonight are on a round trip basis.

There are two things of course which stand in the way of a trip of this kind. One is the fact that no authority to fly between Winnipeg and Mexico City has been granted, as indeed no authority has been granted to fly from Winnipeg to Chicago or to various other points south of our part of Canada. The other reason is the one that is basic to the whole question I am raising tonight, namely the refusal as yet to grant Winnipeg the status of an international gateway with regard to airline fares.

One understands how these arrangements came about. They were built up in the days of the piston type aircraft and the days when in order to fly the Atlantic one had to go to Gander and then perhaps come down in Ireland. Now, however, when planes can go all the way from the west coast of North America to the heart of Europe on a non-stop basis, surely the situation should be reviewed.

The Minister of Industry and Commerce of the government of Manitoba, the Hon. Sidney Spivak, has been making strong representations about this matter to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), the Canadian Transport Commission and the various airlines. I have had occasion to write the Minister of Transport about it and of course have had his assurance that the matter is under review. Well, we must somehow get something off that review list. That is where everything is since the present government took over.

Bearing in mind the raw deal we in Winnipeg received with regard to the Air Canada maintenance base at our city, I suggest here is something which is deserving on its own merits, which is logical and fair, and in respect of which the government of Canada could do something for our city. I therefore urge the federal government to put some real steam into its effort to get Winnipeg recognized as an international gateway for the purpose of airline fares. I hope the answer I shall receive tonight will be more favourable than it has been up to this point.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether or not the hon. member will be more satisfied than he was before with the answer. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) reports that fares on international routes are established in the first instance through agreements between the airlines at conferences of the International Air Transport Association. The fares so agreed upon are subject to approval of the various governments concerned. At an I.A.T.A conference which was held in the fall of 1966, Canadian I.A.T.A carriers at the request of the Canadian government proposed the establishment of trans-Atlantic fares on the basis of a constant rate per mile. They were not successful in securing the agreement of other airlines. However, since 1966, some promotional and special fares, applicable from Winnipeg and other western gateways, have been established based on the rate per mile. These are fares for groups of 15 passengers purchasing inclusive tour and fares for affinity groups of 50 passengers. At the last I.A.T.A conference, which concluded a few weeks ago, a new type of promotional fares for bulk inclusive tour was established on the rate-per-mile basis.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Acceptance of the principle of a constant rate-per-mile for the establishment of certain fares indicates a measure of progress. The government, through the Canadian Transport Commission, is continuing to press for wider application of this principle.

RESEARCH—RESPONSIBILITY FOR GOVERNMENT SCIENTIFIC PROGRAMS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, for some time I have been trying to determine two matters; which minister, if any, is responsible for coordinating the government's scientific programs and, what is the government's science policy or does it in fact have one?

I last raised these issues a week ago today as a result of a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). At that time in his answer the Prime Minister added a third name to the ever-increasing list of those seemingly involved in some way or another in coordinating the government's scientific program. The Prime Minister said that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) had been given this particular task.

At the same time the Prime Minister revealed that in effect the government has no science policy whatsoever at present. The government, he said "is considering making certain changes in that area." In respect of science then, as in respect of almost every other area of governmental policy, we have a research committee apparently at work trying to establish what we should be doing with no policy being established.

This does not mean, however, that the government has been completely inactive in science—not by a long shot. Last fall we saw the cancellation of the ING program, the intensive neutron generator program. Not long after, and perhaps the announcement was made on the same day or within a day or two, we saw the cancellation of the Queen Elizabeth telescope project in British Columbia—of course only after millions of dollars had been spent. In neither case was a cogent reason given for the cancellation, but the implication was that this would save money.

Finally, and perhaps positively, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Greene) announced last month that the government intended to expand its oceanographic research program. We also heard the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) state that the research and development policies of his department are under review.

What does this all add up to? It seems to me very clear that it means the government's program in respect of science is quite literally chaotic. As Simon Reisman, the secretary of the treasury board, expressed it, "In the end we get a national policy by accident."

What we need, and need immediately within a matter of weeks rather than months or years, is a federal science policy under the direct control of a minister of the Crown. The government must appoint one man whose job it is to bring a guiding principle to the hodgepodge of existing programs spread throughout the government's many departments. A set of priorities must be established, brought before the house and implemented. I repeat, this must be done now and must not be put off for an indefinite period of time.

The N.D.P. believes that a department of science and technology should be created. I might add that Mr. Solandt is also of this belief. The basic function of this department would be to organize, co-ordinate and control all government efforts in science. It is time our conservative, inactive government came into the 20th century and showed some leadership in this area.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the hon. member's argument. As a prelude to an answer, I would just like to say that this government is different from the kind the hon. member is suggesting, because it believes it is wise to look into matters before making policy, rather than making policy off the top of your head and then trying to make it work.

All I can add to the Prime Minister's reply to the hon. member's question, as reported at page 5465 of Hansard for February 13, is that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) is the minister responsible for co-ordination or science, not by virtue of being President of the Treasury Board but through his appointment as Chairman of the Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research. This committee was set up in 1916 under the same statute as the National Research Council, and its terms of reference include co-ordination of government research.

HOUSING—TASK FORCE—RECOMMENDATION FOR REDUCED LEGAL FEES

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question of February 19, like so many other questions asked in the house since the tabling of the report of the task force on housing and urban development, arises from the tremendous concern of hundreds of thousands of Canadians about the increasing difficulty of finding adequate housing at a cost which the ordinary citizen can afford. I am certain it was because of this concern that the government appointed the task force.

The task force brought forth a report which has been almost unanimously condemned by town planners, housing experts and people concerned with the problems of ordinary citizens in the low income groups, ordinary citizens who have to depend on public housing. It has been condemned because the report virtually ignored the problems of people in the low income brackets.

The report made a number of recommendations, some of them not bad. It pointed out that the cost of land has risen by as much as 200 per cent to 250 per cent, that construction costs have risen by 40 per cent in recent years. But it ignored the fact that interest rates on mortgages for housing have more than doubled in recent years and that the most substantial reason for the increase in the cost of housing is the increase in the interest rate.

The report suggests that Canadians have a right to own their own homes and says that in the near future, in four or five years I suppose if the recommendations of the task force are adopted, the majority of Canadian people can own their own homes. The report ignores completely the fact that last year 60 per cent of all housing starts in Canada consisted of apartments. More and more people in urban centres are moving into rented apartment units. This condition is not likely to change in the near future. The report has ignored that fact completely.

To the consternation of everybody looking at the question of the needs for housing except the members of the task force, the report completely overlooks the little we have done in the way of public housing. This is despite the fact that there are in every city in Canada tens of thousands of people who can only hope that through the development of public housing units they may obtain housing accommodation of an adequate nature at a price they can afford.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Despite this, the report heaps scorn and criticism on public housing. My question had to do with the recommendation of the task force that efforts be made by those concerned to reduce insurance fees, legal charges, commissions and other administrative costs. The report says, and I quote, with reference to the question of legal fees:

> In the case of legal fees the task force cannot escape the feeling that in most cases the work involved is being done by a competent legal secretary on pre-drawn forms provided by CMHC. Thus it is suggested that the provincial bar associations review existing fee structures, taking into account the routine nature of much of this work particularly in cases where a single lawyer or firm writes a large number of similar mortgages for a subdivision development.

I wish the minister well in his efforts to get voluntary agreement on the part of the legal profession or any other such group to reduce fees. But my question dealt specifically with a group of lawyers about whom the government has a great deal of say. I have in mind the lawyers who are appointed by the government to act for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Let us be realistic. I imagine that if I said that 98 per cent of those lawyers would be Liberals, while we have a Liberal government, I would be conservative in my estimate. For this reason, and for the reason that C.M.H.C. could employ other lawyers, I suggest that if the minister is really concerned about reducing legal fees his best course is not to go cap in hand to the bar associations which, in all likelihood will ignore his appeals, but to tell Central Mortgage to make sure that the lawyers it appoints to handle its end of the legal work in connection with the sale of houses, reduce their fees, and that failing such co-operation it would get another group of lawyers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Give us your own answer.

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the hon. member I do not know whether I should give this answer or not. But I have been informed by the minister responsible for housing that the recommendations of the task force on housing are currently being put into a memorandum to cabinet, and will be discussed at the appropriate time in this house.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 10.05 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 21, 1969

The house met at 11 a.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Sixth report in French and in English of Standing Committee on Agriculture—Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean).

Fourth report of Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs—Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull).

[Editor's note: for Reports above referred to, see Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACCEPTANCE BY PRIME MINISTER OF INVITATION BY PRESIDENT NIXON TO VISIT UNITED STATES

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house I have accepted an invitation extended to me by President Nixon to pay an official visit to the United States. The President very thoughtfully suggested I come to Washington shortly following the conclusion of his tour of Europe to permit him to share with me his impressions of the current situation there. I am happy to say that arrangements convenient to both of us have now been completed. I shall travel to Washington for two days of talks on March 24 and 25. I look forward to this opportunity to meet the President personally and to discuss with him a wide range of questions which are of mutual concern to our two countries.

A more detailed program will be released later, once it has been worked out.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I am delighted, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has received this invitation and is responding to it. I am sure this will provide an opportunity to improve relations between our country and the United States, which are so important to both countries.

We sometimes feel the weight of our great neighbour. I think we all agree there is very little that is more important to us in Canada than maintaining cordial relations between our country and the United States, together supporting our common interests and values in the world. The visit of the Prime Minister to Washington will provide a good opportunity to deepen the understanding between our two countries and their leaders.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that members in all parts of the house will be pleased the Prime Minister has received this invitation and that he proposes to accept it.

At this stage in world development I think it is increasingly important that the leaders of these two countries should discuss the many problems we have in common. I hope the Prime Minister will avail himself of this opportunity to impress upon the United States that while Canada wants to co-operate with our neighbour, at the same time there are measures which Canada must contemplate in order to strengthen our independence as a sovereign nation. That covers a great many items of which I am sure the Prime Minister is fully aware. We all wish him well in these discussions, and hope he will be able to give a favourable report when he returns.

• (11:10 a.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to know that the Prime Minister has received an invitation from the new United States administration for a discussion of problems common to both countries.

We hope that during his talks with the American head of state our Prime Minister will be able, among other things, to make the American government understand the nature of the present talks between Communist China and Canada, and that we will not be adversely affected in the future. We hope also that the Prime Minister will bring back the assurance that the American administration does not frown upon the agreements will have to reach soon on the recognition of Communist China.

In short, we hope that the Prime Minister's trip will further promote Canada-United States relations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE AGAINST FREEING OF INTEREST RATE ON LOANS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is really directed to the Minister of Transport, but in view of its importance and in view of the absence of that minister perhaps I might direct it to the Prime Minister. It is in connection with the report of the task force on housing. Because of the growing anxiety in connection with this question, could the Prime Minister assure the house and the country that the government is not seriously considering freeing the interest rate on National Housing Act loans?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is a policy question which we will have to announce in due course.

INDUSTRY

WATKINS REPORT—REQUEST FOR REPORT OF TASK FORCE ON FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister with respect to the report of the Watkins task force on foreign ownership and the structure of Canadian industry. What legislation does the government intend to introduce in the present session to implement the recommendations of this task force? I understand that some amendments are contemplated with respect to the Corporations Act for full disclosure of foreign control. With respect to the other recommendations is there any legislation in prospect for this session?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the legislative program for the rest of the session was announced yesterday, perhaps just before the hon. member arrived, and that should be the answer to the question. If it is a representation that the hon. member is making, I have heard it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if there is any committee of cabinet studying this report and if so how soon does he expect to receive a report from it. Would the Prime Minister consider sending the task force report to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we try to avoid indicating what cabinet is studying; its agenda is generally considered as confidential.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROTECTION OF CANADIAN NATIONALS IN PAKISTAN

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a question to the Prime Minister.

I would like to ask him if, following the recent disorders at the offices of the General Electric Company of Canada in Pakistan, the Canadian Government has taken steps to protect the Canadians who contribute personally to Pakistan's industrial development.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this question falls within the competence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and therefore I will pass it on to him.

[English]

INQUIRY AS TO VISIT OF HER MAJESTY THE QUEEN AND PRINCE CHARLES—REQUEST THAT PRESIDENT NIXON BE EXTENDED INVITATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, while a precedent was almost created by the visits of President Eisenhower and President Kennedy to Canada, as the first nation to be visited by new U.S. presidents on assuming office, and it is now too late to expect such a visit to precede visits to other nations, may I ask whether an invitation has been extended to President Nixon, who has been a good friend to Canada throughout the years, to visit Canada and to address parliament?

At the same time, in connection with visits, I should like to ask if there is any foundation for the suggestion that Her Majesty the Queen and Prince Charles, following his investiture as Prince of Wales, will be visiting Canada this fall? I should also like to ask whether such an invitation was conveyed to Her Majesty by the Prime Minister when in London.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first question, the idea of a visit by President Nixon to Canada was explored at the same time as discussions took place concerning a visit by me to the United States. This is still in the very informal discussion stage. On the second question I must confess I have not heard of such an idea, and did not discuss it with Her Majesty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the Prime Minister give consideration to inviting the Queen of Canada and the prospective King of Canada to visit Canada at the earliest possible date, following the investiture of the Prince.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Broadview.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was ready to answer. He is always willing to answer. I wonder why some other member was called. It was a perfectly proper question to ask, even today in Canada.

Mr. Trudeau: The question was whether I would give consideration and the answer is that I would. I had the pleasure of meeting the Prince in London. I must say that he struck me as being a very likeable, remarkable young man, and very mature and pleasant for his age.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. In view of the close relationship between Premier Smallwood of Newfoundland and President Nixon is it the intention of the Prime Minister to invite Premier Smallwood to join him on his visit to Washington?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

COMPLAINT BY CZECHOSLOVAKIAN REFUGEES AS TO CHOICE OF LANGUAGE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has he received a letter from a group of Czech refugees in Montreal, complaining that, despite commitments concerning the teaching of the two official languages of Canada, such commitments were altered unilaterally, and they are not allowed to choose their language of instruction?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not recall having received such a letter, Mr. Speaker. However, I can say that the Quebec premier, Mr. Bertrand, and myself, exchanged letters on that matter, and that the federal government is willing to co-operate with the province of Quebec with a view to ensuring immigrants in that province the opportunity to learn French. I am sure that neither Quebec's policy nor ours is to force immigrants to learn a given language.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like an assurance from the Prime Minister. Does the policy regarding Czech refugees residing in the province of Quebec differ from the one applied in other provinces? Are those refugees not free to choose the language they want to learn?

Mr. Speaker: I feel the hon. member is only repeating substantially the question he put earlier.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the meaning of your intervention.

Mr. Speaker: I suggested to the hon. member that his supplementary question was substantially the same as the one he put first.

[English]

INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS AND DISPUTES INVESTIGATION ACT

AMENDMENTS TO CLARIFY BOARD POWERS, PROVIDE FOR APPEAL DIVISION, ETC.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in the absence of any mention of the reintroduction of Bill C-186 of last session on the list of legislation presented to the house yesterday by the President of the Privy Council, I asked the Prime Minister whether the government intended to reintroduce that measure or whether it was to be abandoned.

The Prime Minister answered to the effect that, as far as he knew, it was not included in the speech from the throne. Let me refer to the speech from the throne, Mr. Speaker, as reported at page 7 of Hansard for September 12, where it is stated that a measure would be introduced to correct a number of particular injustices, including those resulting from certain provisions of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot make a speech. Would he kindly come to the question?

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I am simply trying to correct something that happened yesterday. At page 9 of Hansard for the same day it is recorded in the throne speech—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am willing to listen to the hon. member but perhaps he might ask his question directly, and as quickly as possible.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, I have to lay the background of my question. Perhaps I should do so on a point of order. On the next page we have item number 13 on the list of bills presented—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to hon. members that the hon. member should be given an opportunity to put the question.

Mr. Hees: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Following the speech from the throne the Prime Minister listed 47 bills that were to be dealt with this session. Number 13 was enunciated as a bill to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. My question is—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Thank you very much. I am sure hon. members will agree that it was well worth waiting for. My question is whether, if item number 13, with reference to the speech from the throne is not a reference to Bill C-186 during the last session, the Prime Minister will advise the house what it did refer to, in view of the fact there was no mention of a bill to amend the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act in the list given yesterday by the President of the Privy Council?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this item of legislation will result in legislation which we think will follow from the Woods report, which has not yet been tabled in this house. It has not yet reached the stage where the government has decided what precise policy it wants to apply. Therefore this will apply in the next session of parliament. We want to deal with these matters. I have taken note that the Conservative party stands for the adoption of Bill C-186.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Conservative party has expressed no stand on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

An hon. Member: No stand on anything.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the impression that we are now getting into a debate, and I am wondering whether we might not give the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond an opportunity to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Hees: I rise on a question of privilege. If I could state my own personal view I would say that Bill C-186 should not be reintroduced, and not passed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member has no point of order and no question of privilege, but the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond has a supplementary question.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AVAILABILITY OF ENGLISH COPIES OF ORDER PAPER

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I do not have a supplementary question, but in order to protect my priority I am rising on a point of order.

My point of order is that the English copy of the order paper today is not present, and since this government has always hidden behind the fact that French and English copies of legislation were not available, I do not see how we can possibly sit today under this government without the English copy of the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I have an English copy of the Orders of the Day in my hand.

An hon. Member: We haven't got it.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Therefore, Mr. Speaker, on the point of order, what has just happened now is an indication that the only way English speaking members of this house can get a copy of the Orders of the Day—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): The only way we are going to get copies of the Orders of the Day is by standing up and making a protest in the house. I think this is a ridiculous situation, when I must stand in my place and complain about the fact—

An hon. Member: You were right when you said "ridiculous".

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): It is ridiculous that when I come into the house—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: Every time.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the Chair might have the co-operation of all hon. members so that I may hear the point of order and make a ruling on it.

Mr. Ricard: Ask the Grits to shut up.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, again I repeat the same word, that it is a ridiculous situation when a member comes into the house and makes a request for the Orders of the Day, especially the English copy, and is told it is not available. Then when he raises a point of order the house leader informs the house that he has a copy, although many other members still do not have a copy. Then a copy is suddenly rushed over to me because I have raised a point of order.

I come back to the fact that this government continually hides behind the fact that they cannot come forward with certain measures because the French copy cannot be made available, or both copies are not available. I ask the Prime Minister to knuckle down, get to work and get things done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has made his point. I can assure him that an effort will be made, and is made at all times, to make sure that all the sessional papers are available to hon. members. I am not sure why there was a delay this morning. However, I shall make the necessary inquiries and ensure that there is no repetition of the delay, if in fact there was one.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Further to my point of order, Mr. Speaker, I keep running into the same harangue from government members every time I raise a point of order. I say to them that I can stand here and wait them out. This is not my choice of words, but if the bums continue to fall, hold them up.

OLD AGE SECURITY

PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX ON GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. He and I may not entertain the house so well as has been done in the last few minutes, but I have a serious question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Your halo is getting a little tight.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the fact that the president of the Privy Council yesterday left a few days in the spring schedule for a budget presentation, will the Minister of Finance take advantage of that opportunity, whether or not he does anything else, to correct the situation under which old age pensioners, when they get the guaranteed income supplement, have to pay income tax?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the very serious representations of my hon. friend.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR PRESENTATION IN SPRING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance has shown, if I may say so, the good sense to reverse himself in connection with the white paper on tax reform, I wonder whether he is seriously considering presenting the budget and reversing himself in this regard also, so that the country may have a full statement of its economic and financial position.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): In this regard, Mr. Speaker, I have not reversed myself in respect of the white paper. It was a matter of whether or not a bill would be in the white paper that was presented. The bill cannot be drafted by June. That is the reason for presenting the white paper without the draft bill included. On the second matter, we are continually looking at the economic situation, bearing in mind the forecast made on October 22, and if there are substantial changes I will present a budget. I have not indicated that I will not present a budget this spring; I have simply said it will depend on the situation. In any case, I have indicated to the house that we will present a review of the economic situation to the house, given an appropriate opportunity.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, When will the Minister of Finance be in a position to inform the house definitely as to whether or not we will have a budget this spring?

Mr. Benson: I would be pleased to do this in due course. I should indicate to my hon. friend that, like my predecessor, I am not tied to one budget in a year. If the economic situation changes materially, I would be quite willing to bring forward what the government considers to be the necessary economic measures.

HOUSING

COMPLAINTS AS TO IMPROPER USE OF STUDIES

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport who, according to the list, should be here today, perhaps his parliamentary secretary or the Prime Minister could take note of this question. In view of the claim by Mr. Martin Goldfarb that his firm's housing study commissioned by the task force was, to use his own word, bastardized, has the minister received complaints about the illegitimate use of other studies and, if so, how many?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. lady is asking, in effect, whether the government has received representations, and I would think that a question in those terms is not in order.

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): May I ask, then, whether or not the report of the Hellyer task force on housing will be referred to a standing committee of this house for study?

Hon. James Richardson (Minister without Portfolio): I will discuss that matter with the Minister of Transport. I do not know whether he plans to have the report studied by a standing committee.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

INQUIRY CONCERNING ACTION ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Can the right hon. gentleman state when he intends to go ahead with the other two major recommendations of the B and B Commission, namely, the amendment to section 133 of the British North America Act establishing two official languages, and the insertion of a new section 93A guaranteeing educational rights from coast to coast?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The first question was the subject of one of the items on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference two weeks ago. The question of bilingualism in Canada was referred to the conference by the continuing committee of officials, and it has in turn now been referred by the conference to a committee of ministers which is in process of being set up. I am writing to the premiers to that effect and proposing some dates in the near future for such meetings.

As to the second question, it is covered of course by the second volume of the report dealing, among other things, with section 93 of the British North America Act. This has not yet been looked at by the continuing committee of officials, but it has been referred to that committee for study, so that ultimately a report may be submitted to the conference.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

COMOX-ALBERNI—ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO HOLDING OF BY-ELECTION

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): May I take this opportunity to answer a question which was put to me a day or two ago about the vacancy in the federal constituency of Comox-Alberni? I should now like to inform the house that by order in Council No. P.C. 1969-342 dated yesterday a writ was issued for a by-election to be held to fill the vacancy in that federal electoral district on Tuesday, April 8, 1969.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF INTENTION ON GOVERNMENT MEASURE

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the reported statement by Mr. Massé in Quebec concerning the possible suspension of that province's language bill, on the grounds that it meets the requirements of neither French nor English, is it still the intention of the Prime Minister to go ahead with a federal bill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know who was quoted by the hon. member, but we are not generally deterred by some opposition to the language bill. Creeping bilingualism is not something which frightens us as much as it does some members on the other side of the house.

Mr. Coates: I must apologize to the Prime Minister for my lousy English in the pronunciation of French names. The gentleman's name is Massé—M-a-s-s-e. Has the Prime Minister yet received a report from the ministerial review committee, and can he say whether there has been any change in the government's plans as a result of that report?

Mr. Trudeau: I am not sure what the ministerial review committee is, Mr. Speaker.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—ARTICLES BY BRUCE HUTCHISON

Mr. Percy V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): My question is addressed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has he taken cognizance of Bruce Hutchison's two recent articles in the Globe and Mail on the subject of relations between Canada and the United States on the NATO question?

Mr. Speaker: The question is not in order.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

REQUEST FOR DECISION ABOUT MAN AND HIS WORLD

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

I should like to ask him if he has met or will be meeting today Mayor Drapeau who is presently in Ottawa, and if it is likely that a final decision will be taken in respect of Man and His World? Can the minister give us any particulars in this respect?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The means to arrive at a decision matter very little. In this instance it is the decision itself that matters and that decision will be taken within a few days, as I said yesterday.

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I have asked the minister whether he has met or is going to meet Mayor Drapeau today to discuss that matter, since Mr. Drapeau is in Ottawa now?

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question—

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I have directed a very specific question to the minister, namely, whether he will meet the mayor of Montreal today? It is quite simple. We want to know if he is going or not to meet—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can ask the question, but he cannot raise a point of order when a minister refuses to answer his question.

[English]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

EVICTION OF FAMILY OF MRS. JOHN DRIVER

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Mr. Speaker. Has he been made aware of the report that the family of Mrs. John Driver of the Garden River Indian reserve has been evicted to the streets of Toronto and, if so, what action does the minister intend to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have also read the article published this morning on the subject. The department has contacted Mrs. Driver and has offered to help her, but the lady told the officials that she could manage all by herself.

[English]

Mr. Simpson: Does the minister intend to recommend changes in legislation to allow the Government of Canada to extend to Indians who have left the reserves the same privileges as are available to Indians on the reserves, and to extend some or all of these services to the Métis people also?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I hope that we will soon be able to indicate our new Indian affairs policy, and I intend to propose that the services enjoyed by white people be extended to all the native people of Canada.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

DRUGS

L.S.D.—INVESTIGATION BY R.C.M.P. INTO ILLEGAL IMPORTATION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Solicitor General, Mr. Speaker. On Monday last I asked him some questions with regard to allegations concerning vast drug importations into Canada, and he undertook at that time to look into the matter and make a statement. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to do that now?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I take it the hon. gentleman is referring to his question as it appeared on page 5584 of Hansard?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is correct.

Mr. McIlraith: I take it the first question was based on a newspaper item of that day.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): And on other reports as well.

Mr. McIlraith: There was quite a headline on it. In any event, as to the newspaper report, I cannot gauge its accurancy and perhaps there is no point in my commenting on the story.

The latter question, which is more specific, had to do with the suggestion that the drug was being manufactured in Canada in Canadian government laboratories. There is no foundation whatever for that allegation—none whatever. As for the employee mentioned, the person to whom I think the hon. member referred is not an employee, and was in the process of being charged with being found in possession of hashish, not l.s.d.

GRAIN

COMPLAINT AS TO AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether in view of the increasingly serious situation in Northern Saskatchewan particularly, though this applies also to Manitoba and Alberta, in which farmers on C.P.R. lines are unable to market any wheat because of the shortage of cars in C.P.R. areas, although a few miles away farmers on C.N.R. lines have cars available, he would get in touch with the Wheat Board and with the Board of Grain Commissioners and have them communicate with the C.P.R. so that those affected will not be left, as they are today, without funds and without hope of being able to sell their wheat?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I could use the occasion to make a report on the situation as it is today, but I know you would stop me, Mr. Speaker. The answer to the question is that I am meeting on Monday in Winnipeg with the transportation committee and I have made a special request to both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. to send their top men. I will bring this representation by the right hon. gentleman, and previous representations, to their attention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his reply, because I have received representations today to the effect that no action has been taken, and farmers are absolutely desperate in these areas.

Mr. Pepin: I do not agree with that, Mr. Speaker, and I have accurate figures here to demonstrate that the situation has been improving. I think the figures demonstrate that there has been progress.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): A supplementary question. Will the minister also make representations on behalf of the numerous lumber and pulp industries in British Columbia which are presently being starved for box car service?

Mr. Pepin: That question shows the dimensions of the problem. If you use too many box cars to carry wheat, somebody else suffers. It is really a matter of adjusting the situation in the best possible interests of all concerned.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question put and the answers given. In view of the complexity of this situation, can the minister ascertain whether the railways are maintaining an equal supply of box cars for grain and for pulp movement, or does the number fluctuate from week to week? In view of the complexity of this problem would the minister also agree that the situation is serious enough to require the appointment of a transport controller?

Mr. Pepin: As I said before, Mr. Speaker, I have the full support of everybody involved, the producer organizations, the Wheat Board, the Board of Grain Commissioners. Everybody agrees that the best way to approach the problem is through the transportation committee. However, in order to make doubly sure, I have appointed myself supervisor over what the transportation committee is doing. That is the purpose of the meeting in Winnipeg on Monday.

Mr. Benjamin: A further supplementary question. In the course of carrying out these duties is the minister having any discussions with the officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and instructing them as to the requirements of the grain shippers?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I use the most diplomatic way of getting results.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister pointed out a few moments ago there is an obvious shortage of box cars in Canada. In view of this, would he draw the fact to the attention of the presidents of the two railways in order to get more box cars built, in a hurry?

Mr. Pepin: As intelligent as the hon. member is, I had already thought of that myself.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether in the course of his discussions he will endeavour to ascertain if there were something like 5,000 fewer box car loadings of grain in the month of January as compared with the previous year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—TIMING OF DECISION TO FACILITATE WORK OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs may I address my question to the Minister of National Defence.

In light of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs that the government will not wait for the recommendations of the external affairs committee before presenting its decision on NATO policy, would the Minister of National Defence indicate to the house and to the members of this committee at what date we can expect the government to come down with its decision, so that the committee can anticipate the date and attempt to get its recommendations to the minister beforehand?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker I do not think it is up to me to indicate a date. As everyone knows, the committee of the cabinet that is dealing with this particular problem is meeting as often as possible. I think both the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have indicated that a decision on this particular problem is going to be made in the very near future—if indeed it is not imminent.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of National Defence whether he can give the house any explanation as to why, in view of the fact that the government does not propose to wait for the recommendations of the parliamentary committee, there is any possible justification for a further delay in announcing government policy in regard to this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich is rising on a supplementary question.

Mr. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I prefer to wait until the question is answered either by the Prime Minister or the Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I might just clarify this by saying that I have had discussions with the minister, and we had expected the committee might be able to bring in its report sooner than apparently is the case, now that I have heard the date mentioned this morning. With the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of National Defence we are considering—

Mr. Stanfield: And the Postmaster General.

Mr. Trudeau: And the Postmaster General, as the hon. gentleman says—we are considering whether we will bring down our policy later than we had wanted. Our view was that we should make the announcement as soon as possible, so that the NATO meetings in Washington would be fully informed of Canada's position; that we tell our allies in advance what our decision was. However, we realize the importance of waiting for the report of the house committee, and this may make us reconsider the date.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question. Am I to understand from what the Prime Minister says that it is possible the government will not announce its policy prior to the meetings of the ministers, although the Prime Minister had previously indicated that this was the first firm objective of his government? Am I to understand that the announcement of government policy may now be delayed to some point later than the meeting of ministers?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not what I intended to convey. We are still looking at that date as the ultimate deadline—I believe it is April 10.

Mr. Stanfield: That is right.

Mr. Trudeau: We had wanted to get our decision in somewhere around the middle of March, so that after the cabinet had made up its own mind we would be able to inform our allies sufficiently in advance of this date. Now the new date for the report of the standing committee is known, we may have to postpone our decision to a date later than the middle of March; that is to say, if the committee does not submit its report earlier than it says it can.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. My reading of the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs at Carleton University is to the effect that the government did not intend to wait for the review committee decision, which I took to be the committee of cabinet that was reviewing this matter. May I ask the Prime Minister whether the question of not waiting for a report applies only to the standing committee, not to the review committee, or is the government prepared to speed up the work of the external affairs committee of this house so that both reports can be put before the government prior to any decision being made?

Mr. Trudeau: Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how the minister was reported, but as I understood the question originally asked was whether we were going to wait for the report of the committee of the house. I believe that was the question.

My answer to that is that we cannot determine the timing of the committee's report. The committee of the house will decide when it will report. We have now heard that the committee cannot report as soon as we had hoped, so we are considering postponing the date of our own decision. The decision will only be taken, of course, after the other review committee of which the hon. member talks, the governmental review committee, has completed its work.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Would a delay possibly be brought on by the imposition of a roster system on the cabinet committee?

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the other questions. Was the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating government policy at Carleton University when he is alleged to have said that Canada should maintain its traditional ties—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Brewin: Then may I rephrase the question. Is it the policy of the government to maintain our traditional ties with NATO and the Commonwealth, and to develop our interests in the Pacific and Latin America? Has this been decided as government policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member knows—it has been said many times—that this policy is under review, and we are planning to announce parts of it in due course. We have discussed the naval part, and we hope to announce our policy either by the middle of March or as soon thereafter as the parliamentary committee submits its report.

Mr. Anderson: A further supplementary question. In view of what the Prime Minister recently said on this point, can we assume that no decision will be made by the cabinet committee or the ministers involved until mid March? In other words, can the committee take until mid March to present its views?

Mr. Trudeau: Of course, Mr. Speaker. We had not planned to make our decision before mid March. I answered a moment ago that we were considering perhaps making it later, if that would accommodate the parliamentary committee of the house.

GRAIN

WHEAT—STEPS TO COMPLETE AGREEMENT WITH RUSSIA

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Has the Soviet Union indicated that it will take up the option on 150 million bushels of wheat in the current crop year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the answer given by the acting minister last Friday is still valid. Discussions are going on.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DRYING OPERATION

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It is several weeks since he reported to the house on the quantity and condition of grain that has been dried. Could he make a further report on the subject, say at the end of the month or at the beginning of next month, by way of a statement on motions?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is a report available from the grain board which gives the picture of the drying situation as of January 31. I will gladly send my hon. friend a copy of it.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That report deals with the situation as it was on January 31. I wanted to know whether the minister would make a statement on motions with regard to the situation as it will be at the end of February. He could make a statement at the end of the month, perhaps. Millions of bushels are involved and our information on this subject ought to be more up to date than that contained in the report he referred to.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, the report is a monthly one. A similar report will be issued at the end of February. I will gladly speak on the matter at that time.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It has become apparent that, although large numbers of dryers are available, farmers have not had cash to bring those dryers into correct positions. What steps will the government take to meet this emergency?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister of Agriculture could answer.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have had several meetings with the ministers of agriculture of the three prairie provinces. A system similar to that of co-ordinating committees has been set up in order to be helpful in positioning dryers where they may be of most benefit to farmers.

Mr. Speaker: Before calling orders of the day I think the hon. member for Churchill ought to be allowed a question that is supplementary to a previous one he asked.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, my question is a different one.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

AVAILABILITY OF ENGLISH COPIES OF ORDER PAPER

Mr. Speaker: I shall call orders of the day. Perhaps before doing so, however, I might be allowed to make a short reference to the point of order raised earlier by the hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond (Mr. MacInnis). It has been indicated to me that the unfortunate delay referred to earlier was caused by a mechanical breakdown at the printing bureau. The issuing of the order paper was therefore delayed and I apologize to hon. members for the delay.

Mr. Southam: Is that why Hansard has been delayed also, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that this is the case.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

ANIMAL CONTAGIOUS DISEASES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING COMPENSATION, APPEALS, ETC.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-156, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on third reading of the bill I wish to protest once more the government's method of handling bills related to the agricultural industry. I do not like the way those bills have been brought before the house. Although I do not question the government's good intentions in introducing amendments to agricultural legislation, I have grave doubts about the legality of certain procedures set out in those amendments. Those engaged in agriculture will have to avail themselves of a cumbersome machinery if they are to take advantage of the provisions of recent amendments.

When Bill C-156 first came before the house the members of my party protested the provision in it that would enable a government appointed inspector to seize animals or produce. We also protested the fact that appeals could only be brought to the assessor appointed by the government. A similar provision has been incorporated in other bills recently before this house. Furthermore the decision of the government appointed assessor is final, there can be no appeal to any court. It seems that the government has done all it can to protect itself from the claims of farmers, farm corporations or industries allied to farming. We feel the provisions of the bill are most unjust. In some respect they are harsher than the provisions of companion bills to do with agriculture. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Moore) will deal with some aspects of this bill.

I point out to the house that the wording of section 14A(3), on page 2 of the bill, is in part as follows:

> The provisions of Part II of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, with such modifications as circumstances require,—

The meaning of those words is clear. Once this bill has been passed by parliament, regulations to be drafted can only have the effect of curtailing the rights of farmers. At this point we have no idea what those "modifications as circumstances require" will be. I think the government is going about its business in the wrong way. We are giving a blank cheque to departmental officials when we tell them they may draw such regulations as circumstances may require. That language in the bill is absolutely unfair to the agricultural industry. In essence, those words mean that those drafting the regulations are responsible to one party only in any dispute, the government. Naturally they are duty-bound by their very occupation, sense of responsibility and obligation to ensure in each instance that the actions, intent and welfare of the government department are well protected. As I said previously, the original intent of the bill may have been good but the regulations are all one-sided. It is almost impossible for individual farmers or co-operatives in many instances to seek the redress which is available to other citizens and industries in Canada.

• (12 noon)

The minister indicated in committee and in the house that a judge of the Supreme Court or a superior court may be appointed an assessor. Any decision cannot be considered as that of a court as the judge is merely acting as an arbitrator. It is not right that once a decision has been made there can be no appeal to a court. Other aspects of this bill which I cannot accept are the powers of inspectors and the open-ended terms of the compensation which may be given. I will leave these to other competent members of my party to deal with.

I conclude by saying that as a responsible representative of the agricultural industry I cannot and will not accept the terms of this bill as prescribed.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, this bill was studied in committee and is now at the final stage of discussion in the house. The bill sets out the level of compensation to which a farmer or producer is entitled. As was stated by the previous speaker, the amount of compensation will be set by the Governor in Council or the government in their wisdom. On appeal the farmer or producer is limited to the compensation set by the Governor in Council.

The bill provides that there may be an appeal to an assessor where no maximum amount of compensation has been prescribed for an animal pursuant to section 12, or where the compensation awarded to the farmer is less than the maximum compensation prescribed under the act, or where no compensation is awarded to the farmer, on the ground that the failure to award compensation was unreasonable. It is within these limits that any individual who feels he has been unjustly dealt with must appeal. As I understand the bill, a farmer or producer cannot go to a court and claim that the basic amount of compensation set by the Governor in Council is wrong.

I give the government credit for their attempt to move forward in this field in order to deal more effectively and fairly with the farmer and producer. However, the fact is they have reserved for themselves the right to decide when they are being fair and when they are not. This is the point at issue. It is for this reason I feel they are more concerned about protecting the government than protecting the position of the farmer.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like once again to draw the minister's attention to the matter of compensation to be paid for pure-bred and grade animals.

I suggest that this question has not been thoroughly looked into by the committee. I do not know whether they are trying to ignore the situation or will not face up to the facts, but I wish to tell the minister that a review of the situation prevailing not only in our area but all over Canada would reveal that 60 to 75 per cent of our dairy cattle are grade animals.

And this is not a whim of the people but just an effort to get a better yield.

I know a number of farmers who have marvelous Holstein herds, for instance, mixed with Ayrshire or Canadian breeds. In our cold areas, where it is difficult to get a top quality herd, I know of—and I have no hesitation at all in saying so—a number of grade dairy herds which are superior to some pure-bred herds.

In my opinion, when you think that a farmer will receive for his grade animals a compensation equal to 50 per cent of their normal value, when at the productive and commercial level his animals are worth as much as pure-bred animals, I have no hesitation in saying that he is discriminated against.

I have already called the attention of the minister to this point and I think that the officials will have to take the trouble to consider the situation which prevails in our areas—I am referring mainly to my own—in order to assess the degree of injustice suffered in the past.

Last year mention was made of dairy producers who had incurred tremendous losses. One of them for instance had lost 95 good dairy cows and he managed to recover only 50 per cent of their value because his animals were not pure-bred. However, they had been selected for the past 25 years which means that this farmer, like a number of others, incurred a tremendous loss. I have mentioned only one case in passing but 80 per cent of the herds in my area have been affected by contagious diseases and the farmers have paid dearly for the simple fact that they own grade animals.

Therefore, I ask the minister as well as the specialists—since there are some and since they are capable of judging such cases—to study this problem which is most important for our agriculture, in view of the high percentage of grade herds that we find in our areas.

I think that the case of a farmer who devoted 20 or 25 years to build up a good herd and who gets from the government, in case of an outbreak of contagious disease, a compensation that is 50 per cent of what others get, represents, I think, an example of the grave injustice that is sometimes inflicted on the farmers of our area.

I think it would be preferable, from now on, to take as a base the value of the dairy production of the herd in order to compensate the farmer and to treat him more fairly instead of considering the colour, the weight or the breed of the animal.

I think that a good Canadian dairy cow is worth as much as any other, and that a good grade herd is worth as much from the productive point of view as any pure-bred herd.

• (12:10 p.m.)

I believe that in all fairness the compensation should be based upon the yield of a dairy cow. As regards the compensation, we were told in committee that it had been increased as compared with that of previous years. We are very happy about that, but we would still be happier if the amount of such compensation were set by the law.

The old law provided a certain amount for pure-bred animals as well as for grade animals. Indicating the maximum amount in the law is a very dangerous thing, not for the officials but for the department itself. The minister, I wish to repeat it, is well qualified. The technicians working for his department are also well qualified. But nobody is either infallible or immortal. Since it is said that written words remain, it would be preferable to set in this legislation the maximum amounts of compensation. Moreover, the amount granted for grade animals should be, if not the equivalent, at least 80 per cent of the one prescribed for pure-bred animals.

The department now works according to regulations. The legislation is passed, the general principle of the bill is approved and then we have to wait for the regulations that are to be enacted by the department's officials. That is not really democratic, I believe, because the representatives of the people have absolutely no say in the drafting of those regulations. I should like us to be able, as in previous years, to know where we stand. We should no longer have to wait for a law to be passed in the hope that the enacted regulations will be in accordance with it.

I once experienced difficulties with such a system of regulations, perhaps not with regard to agriculture but housing, for instance. I have already mentioned this in the house when I indicated that the regulations went against the legislation we had passed.

However, there is a danger, that of two or three less able officials who might turn up some day and change the regulations because they are allowed to do so every year or every six months, at will. The enforcement of this law, which is basically good, might be hampered by regulations which would not be adapted to it.

As for the right to appeal, I think that the three months' period is quite a reasonable one. However sometimes it is not enough because of all the red tape involved and mainly because the farmers lack information.

I would want the officials in charge of enforcing this law to go on dealing with complaints, just as they used to do, once the deadline has been reached. More often than not, whether through ignorance or otherwise, the farmer has proved unable to meet such deadline. Farmers are not here in the house to follow our proceedings and they need some time to learn all about the law. Indeed, at such times when, as it has happened for the past few years, there is an outbreak of contagious disease, they are apt to panic and to lose their heads. And when they have finally picked themselves up and want to direct their requests through the proper channels, the three months' period mentioned in the law is over.

I shall deal very briefly with the third point. I have had many complaints with regard to the disposal of the carcasses of sick animals which problem has caused me many difficulties. It is understood that the farmer gets compensation for the animal, but he must sell the meat.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the fact that the farmer has to sell a dead animal to a recognized slaughter house lends itself to criticism. Of course, criticism must be avoided as much as possible, but it is rather difficult. I think much of the criticism is due to the fact that often the farmers feel that some slaughter houses take advantage of the situation to pay a ridiculously low price for the meat while, most of the time, the meat is worth as much as if the animal had not been killed because of disease.

This is another question that should be studied by the minister and his staff. I do not wanted to dwell on the matter unduly, because it is rather touchy; we are dealing with buyers and sellers, which means that this is really a family quarrel. I merely wish to point out to those who will apply these bills in the future, that when they get a complaint they should weigh the pros and cons in order to do justice, not only to the slaughter house but to the interested parties in the first instance, the farmers, who in addition to having lost cattle because of an epidemic must also lose 50 per cent on the value of the meat when the cattle is taken to the slaughter house.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Speaker, those were the remarks I wanted to draw to the intention of the minister and his staff. I trust they will help to correct some of the deficiencies that have existed in the past.

• (12:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, I realize that this bill is designed only to modernize the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. This it does to some extent. The compensation formerly paid under this act was $140 each for purebreds and $70 each for grade cattle slaughtered under any herd disease eradication program. It must be admitted that these figures are ridiculously low at the present time. The bill proposes to change them to amounts to be prescribed by the Governor in Council. It is my understanding that the proposed amounts are $120 for grade animals and $200 for purebreds. These figures are more realistic especially when applied to beef cattle where the salvage value of the carcass may be higher. However, this is certainly open to argument, and I am sure that the beef producers might argue the point.

In the case of dairy cattle these amounts may be much too low. I think it would be fairer to ensure to the owner a percentage of the replacement value of the animal. At the present stage in the improvement of dairy herds most so-called dairy cows are the result of artificial breeding for many generations. The value of these animals is therefore much higher than what the value of a grade animal used to be. There could be great discrimination in the case of a man who has a herd which becomes infected by a disease. Many animals of this type are very high producers, and the producer may have been raising them for many years.

The number of reactors to tests for bovine t.b. and brucellosis or contagious abortion is much less now than it has been in the past. This points to the success of the establishment of disease-free areas, testing for both diseases, and calfhood vaccination against brucellosis. Adequate compensation for the relatively few animals that must be condemned would not place much strain on the economy and would ensure the maximum cooperation of the herd owner.

I can understand the reason for slowing down the calfhood vaccination program at this point since it does interfere with later testing and causes problems in respect of export. In some cases the disinfecting of premises could be very costly and an additional hardship to the owner who has already suffered some hardship if he has had reactors. So I think some aid here would be in order.

I should like for a moment to refer to the clauses which deal with an appeal to the assessor. This matter has been well covered by the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) and will also be dealt with by another speaker or two. It has been stated that there are very few cases where an appeal has been made in the past. But this in no way changes the principle that a farmer should have the right to appeal the decision made by an appointee of the government. This principle should be spelled out in any legislation.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my intervention in this debate is on the same basis as my intervention in respect of Bill C-155. I have been horrified by what I consider to be a massive bureaucratic assault on civil liberties involved in bills dealing with what are relatively minor problems although problems which merit consideration. We protest against the method being adopted. I recant nothing I said with regard to Bill C-155. Here again, as a result of some rather wrong drafting, by importing into one bill provisions of another bill that are not related, some of the objectionable features of Bill C-155 have been brought into Bill C-156. The minister was not present at some committee hearings where I said a great deal about what I think is a slipshod method of drafting. An individual who is interested in this act can obtain an office consolidation of the act, but he will find that it refers him to another act and back and forth he will have to go. I complained most bitterly about this procedure in respect of Bill S-4, an act dealing with the marking of articles made from precious metals. Suddenly, by reference, we found ourselves involved with the Fisheries Act because it dealt with the method of disposing of goods which had been seized. There is nothing worse than having to sort out this type of thing.

First of all, I have said this bill is bad from a drafting point of view. Second, I come back to the point about the non-requirement of publication of regulations. I and other members of the opposition will keep insisting that there must be a requirement within the act itself and not just a reliance upon the government. There must be a requirement that any regulation made under the act will be tabled in parliament.

We have gone to a good deal of trouble to set up a committee on statutory instruments. It is in its preparatory stages, but the intent is to review all delegated legislation. This can be done if the regulations are tabled. It is not sufficient merely to say that they may be published in the Canada Gazette. As the minister knows, having sat with me on the procedure committee, we may also acquire a cumulative index of documents tabled by the ministry so that members will know where they are.

• (12:30 p.m.)

I do not know why there is resistance and seeming reluctance to take what appear to be sensible steps to publicize the approved regulations. I recognize the fact that regulations must be made under most acts. Certainly you cannot spell out everything in statutory form. But what is wrong with requiring under the act that all regulations be published?

The minister may be the most benevolent despot there is; he may say that we can rest assured that as long as he is the minister every regulation under the jurisdiction of his department will be published. He may even go farther and seek leave of the house to table them. That may be the minister's own view but we must remember that he is exercising his own discretion. The minister is not immortal and this act is not just for a year or so. Ministers come and go. Sometimes they are promoted, sometimes they are demoted and sometimes they are defeated.

Mr. Olson: Sometimes they die.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, and sometimes they are incapacitated.

Notwithstanding all the good wishes and the intentions of the minister, I will let him in on another secret. Anything the minister says and any undertaking he makes during the debate is not worth one farthing in a court of law. It is meaningless in binding him or his officials in a court of law. The assessors, who will presumably conduct themselves as judges, will say that nothing said in parliament is meaningful in so far as the interpretation of the regulations or the statute is concerned.

For this reason I should like it written into the act that any regulations shall be tabled within 15 days after the coming into force thereof or, if the house is not then sitting, within ten sitting days of the opening of the session. This is how we do things in respect of many bills. Why was the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) so happy to do this in respect of the anti-dumping bill? There was no quarrelling about this on the part of the officials of the Department of Finance in respect of that measure or in respect of the Bank Act, for example. I do not see what is wrong with it.

Let me go one step further. Not only should the regulations made by the Governor in Council and the regulations made by the assessors be publicized but the rules in respect of the conduct of hearings must be made known. I point out that in so far as the rules for the determination of assessments are concerned, these are to be made by the assessors subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. They are not regulations made by the Governor in Council. Therefore I put it to the minister that they would not be regulations required to be tabled or published under the Regulations Act. For this reason it is absolutely necessary that the regulations made by assessors after approval by the Governor in Council be published. Obviously there will have to be guidelines and uniformity. Why can they not be published?

Mr. Olson: They will be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister may say what he wants, but they will not necessarily be published because there are no requirements for them to be published. We do not legislate on the basis of good intentions. The road to Hades is paved with good intentions.

Mr. Olson: I am not going there so I don't know.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Perhaps the minister and I will meet up there. But let me say this. Why can we not have in this legislation this simple provision in respect of the regulations? I will have the same thing to say about Bill C-157.

The next question I want to ask is, why is it that Supreme Court or Exchequer Court judges have been chosen to be assessors? The minister's colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner), and his predecessor have fulminated against this practice in this house. I do not know how many times the bar association and law societies have complained about the use of judges in extra-judicial proceedings. This practice has caused grave complaint. Nothing is said in this bill in respect of their remuneration. Are they to be remunerated on a per diem basis for taking on this non-judicial work? There is nothing in the measure which says anything about that. It is a serious cause for complaint that some judges have a predilection for taking on extra-judicial work because it gives them a greater return over and above their salaries.

Apparently judges are going to be named as assessors either under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act or the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act. I suppose there will also be an assessor under the next bill C-157. These are not judicial roles, yet these are the men who are being picked. I suggest it would be far better for the minister to appoint other people as assessors. It is possible to find men who are well qualified to act as assessors and then provide the right of appeal to a court. This would be far better and would, I think, satisfy the sense of natural justice in all of us who are forever complaining about the predilection of administrations, federal and provincial, to establish boards, assessment commissions and what have you from which there shall be no appeal. This is a denial of natural justice. There is a bureaucratic opinion which suggests that there must be finality.

Let me tell the minister something more in respect of the powers of the assessor. He says he will appoint assessors. The assessor is the one who will actually hear the appeals. Let us consider how far we are going to go. As I suggested yesterday, the government gives with one hand and takes away with both hands.

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister will have the right to speak.

Mr. Olson: I just wanted to ask a question.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Under proposed section 14A of this bill we find that a farmer can appeal, where the compensation awarded to the farmer is less than the maximum, on the ground that the amount of compensation awarded was, unreasonable, or that the failure to award compensation was unreasonable. The maximums are prescribed by regulations. If we refer to section 13 of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act we find that it states:

> Upon the hearing of an appeal brought pursuant to this Part, the assessor may
>
> (a) confirm the decision of the minister,
>
> (b) subject to any maximum amount of compensation prescribed pursuant to this act and applicable to the loss in respect of which the appeal is brought, vary the decision of the minister—

• (12:40 p.m.)

What hollow hypocrisy! That is all it is. It says that a farmer may appeal the decision of the minister with regard to the compensation to be fixed for the loss of an animal. The farmer can go to an assessor and the assessor will adjudicate on the question, but subject to the maximum fixed by the regulations. And who in the blazes fixes the regulations but the minister?

Mr. Olson: The Governor in Council.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, come now! Don't try to put us on.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister should sit down. He will have plenty of chance to be heard later.

Mr. Olson: I do not have the right to speak in this debate unless there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I for one will give you the right to answer. The minister has not spoken on third reading.

Mr. Olson: My information is that when you move third reading of a bill you are deemed to have spoken, whether you have or not and I moved third reading.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister can reply. He will have to, because there are so many holes being found in the bill from a legal point of view.

Mr. Olson: There are no holes at all.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says there are no holes at all. That shows the extent of his knowledge of the legal implications of the bill. The assessor may refer the matter back to the minister for such further action as the assessor may direct. But if the regulations prohibit the assessor from directing anything further, what is he doing? He is just spitting in the wind. The minister is not only playing in the game but he is fashioning the rules of the game and in many ways is acting as the referee. This is wrong.

The assessor has the limits of an award set out for him. Therefore how can you say that a man has a true right of appeal? If the minister, or the Governor in Council, in setting out the regulations makes the limits so narrow that they do not meet the requirements of special cases, what is the point of going to an assessor? You are just wasting your time.

These are the points I want to raise in regard to this bill. I will have much more to say about Bill C-157. I have not looked at the Animal Contagious Diseases Act to ascertain the rights of inspectors and matters of that sort, but I shall be dealing with that question. I just cannot accept the fact that under these acts inspectors, with no search warrant, no writ of assistance or similar legal document, may enter premises. Bill C-155 is concerned with a claim for compensation under the act. With regard to the bill to follow, Bill C-157, there does not have to be a claim for compensation; it is just a straight walk-in.

I will raise these points later, Mr. Speaker. I think these bills are badly drafted. They run counter to our principles of justice. They are an assault upon the rights of individual citizens. They are pure bureacracy run rampant.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. Olson: I do not want to foul up the hon. member's argument, but it seems to be based on a misconception of what we are asking parliament to do. We are giving the farmer the right of appeal. This is something he never had before. It is not a question of withdrawing rights but of granting rights.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What sort of right of appeal is being given? I have complained about the kind of right of appeal that is being given. What the government professes to give with one hand it is taking away with the other.

Mr. Olson: You are wrong.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not wrong. The proposed method of operation of the bill is wrong. If we had not considered Bill C-155 the day before yesterday I might have been tempted to agree on the surface with what the minister has said about giving the farmer the right of appeal. But the right of appeal granted under Bill C-155 is hardly worth the paper it is written on. The minister is giving the farmer nothing. This bill is just window-dressing.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, clause 1 of Bill C-156 repeals the provisions of paragraphs (a) and (b) of subjection 2 of section 12 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act and sets out new provisions with regard to compensation for animals slaughtered under a disease eradication program. The bill gives to the Governor in Council the power to set rates of compensation which in the opinion of the government are deemed to be equitable. There is, of course, an appeal from the decision of the department, and in the event of an appeal a decision is made by a government appointed assessor.

On the face of it this is little more than an empty gesture by the minister. Even though the assessor appointed may be a judge, in this situation he will be nothing more than a government employee. It seems to me this is a poor way for the government to arrive at an equitable decision as to the amount of compensation that should be paid. I join the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in protesting against the fact that there is no appeal from the decision of the assessor. This provision seems to be nothing more than a denial of the inalienable right of any citizen to obtain justice under our democratic processes.

The bill fails to provide that the regulations shall be published in the Canada Gazette. Even if they are published in the Canada Gazette I do not think they will be given wide enough publicity because very few of the people concerned see that publication. Therefore they will not know what their rights are under the act.

Mr. Olson: We will put out a newsletter.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): To whom will the newsletter be sent? If this information were tabled in parliament the minister's intentions would be generally known across the country.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) put out a newsletter the other day, too.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I do not think the minister is taking cognizance of the fact that since the act was first put into effect there has been a great change in the value of animals. If he has taken this fact into consideration, why is it not spelled out in the legislation? It seems to me the minister is taking too much unto himself and his departmental officials. He is not really allowing an appeal of any consequence to be taken against his decision.

The minister will be confronting the producers with a take it or leave it situation. This will be the attitude of the government. I would not think that the minister would want legislation of the type that does not give the producer any recourse in respect of a decision made by an assessor. I took exception to this provision in regard to the bill we were studying the other day. My objection applies to this bill also. I hope that before the bill passes the minister will tell us what he will consider to be fair compensation. As the hon. member for Edmonton West says, unless it is provided for in the regulations it does not mean anything.

• (12:50 p.m.)

I ask the minister to give us a hint of what he has in mind because from reading the bill we have no idea what the government intends to do. We are being asked to buy a pig in a poke. We have nothing on which to base our decision. The only decision we can make at the moment is that we do not like the way the amendment has been drawn up because it tells us nothing. Neither do we like the appeal provision because appeals are to be made to an employee of the government. There is no appeal to the courts to enable producers to protect themselves, and in my opinion this is a denial of their civil liberties.

Before the bill goes through I hope the minister will tell the house that he is prepared to spell out in the regulations what will be the compensation. I hope the producers will be given sufficient compensation to provide a fair return on the cost involved. I hope that the man with a registered herd will not be put out of business because he is unable to rebuild his stock again. As the minister knows, once a purebred herd has been dispersed it takes years to build it up again to the point where purebred stock can be sold. Actually what sells the stock is the name of the producer on the market.

In a case where a herd becomes diseased the producer suffers a terrific blow. I have a neighbour who was faced with that situation. He lost his whole herd because some of his animals were infected. All of his barns had to be completely renovated. Having lived alongside this man I know from personal experience that it took him years and years to rebuild his herd. By that time he was quite elderly and he was never actually able to build up his herd to the point where he could sell the stock as he had done previously.

Therefore I again appeal to the minister to tell the house what this amendment means. Why is the government repealing the present section 12 which does set out certain values for animals, even though in these days they are too low? I fail to see why the minister does not specify in this amendment what the farmer or producer may expect by way of compensation for slaughtered animals. If the minister did this it would be much easier for hon. members to examine the bill and to arrive at a decision upon it. I do not think there are too many members actively farming who like the bill as it stands. In addition, there is no doubt that there are some legal aspects of the bill which are, to say the least, questionable.

With those brief remarks I simply add that other members will deal with different aspects of the situation with which I am not familiar. I hope that before the bill goes through it will be one that will satisfy all members of the house.

Mr. Southam: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): When the house rose at one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, we were dealing with Bill C-156, an act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. More specifically, we were considering the matter of an increase in compensation to farmers or producers for animals slaughtered under an area or herd disease eradication program.

The bill has been reviewed at some length by the Standing Committee on Agriculture, and in the committee sessions a considerable debate took place on new section 14A which has to do with the right of appeal. Along with other members of the committee I took strong exception to the implications of this section. I do not intend to belabour the point because I believe several other members of our party, much more capable of dealing with it because of their legal training, will be speaking on this important aspect of the legislation. In fact, several of my hon. friends have already done so, including the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) who dealt with it at some length before the lunch break, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Danforth) and our house leader the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

I should like to question for a few moments certain aspects of clause 3 (1) of the bill which deals with the coming into force of this legislation and with making the payment of claims retroactive to September 26, 1968. How are these claims to be assessed? First of all, will each of these cases be reviewed automatically? Second, must a farmer make an application or an appeal on the basis of a former settlement? The bill stipulates that an applicant can make an appeal within three months. My third question is: in the light of the fact that it is now February 21, six months later than the date I mentioned, how is an appellant likely to be affected? Hon. members will note that no maximum or minimum amounts with respect to compensation are set out in the bill. Since some farmers may already have secured compensation under the terms of the old act, how are the officials, in appraising a claim under the new act, to determine the amount of compensation to be paid?

It seems to me that complications may well arise as a result of the failure to specify maximum and minimum amounts. I recall that in the committee we tried very hard to establish maxima and minima so that there might be at least an indication of the amount of compensation a farmer would receive. I believe difficulties are likely to arise in this connection. To put it in other words, farmers may be doubtful that it would be worth their while to appeal in the first place.

I could raise a number of other questions in connection with the bill but I know some of my hon. friends will be referring to them. Therefore I shall conclude my remarks by expressing the hope that the minister will explain the aspects of the legislation to which I have drawn attention.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse) : Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for giving me the opportunity of expressing my opinion on third reading of Bill C-156.

I am aware that some improvements are found in this legislation, nevertheless, I have a few reservations to make. I sincerely believe that it does not go far enough; more details could have been incorporated into the text of the bill. I know that the compensation rate which was fixed to make up for the losses of animals caused by contagious diseases was, in a way, limited to a certain amount by the former act.

If amendments were incorporated in the act, it is because it was necessary to do away with those figures, in order to determine new ones better adapted to the current market. However, the act provides that the governor in council may prescribe the maximum compensations. If in so doing, account is taken of the various factors that should effectively be considered to determine the actual value of an animal, we can expect improvements. In fact, if I understood well the explanations given by the minister to the standing committee on agriculture, those are maximums which will be reviewed from time to time so that they will always be in relation with the actual market value.

It would be advisable, however, that the Department of Agriculture could take the necessary arrangements to inform animal owners about the maximum rates prescribed for the various types of animals so that owners can determine a little in advance the amount which will be awarded to them to compensate eventual losses.

I know that previously this legislation was only applicable to the species mentioned in the law, i.e. horses and cattle, but I am wondering whether it would not be possible to include also sheep and hogs, because contagious diseases also strike those animals down and their owners often sustain damages which quite often are not reasonably compensated. At all events, I am suggesting this to the minister and I hope he will give consideration to it.

I seize this opportunity to draw to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) the fact that breeders and farmers also suffer considerable damage.

I have often received complaints from breeders who send their animals to the slaughter house and when the grading is done, they find that 10 per cent of their herd is condemned or downgraded, which causes them a considerable loss. The disease is determined by competent people who condemn these animals. In my opinion, these losses should be provided for under a law which would enable the breeders to receive a compensation, because profits in this field are not very high already.

As far as the right of appeal is concerned, I think this bill is an improvement. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has dealt with the judicial aspects of the matter a few minutes ago. I do not feel qualified to discuss the judicial aspect of this bill; however, I shall deal with its practical aspect.

[Mr. Lambert, (Bellechasse).]

Under the former legislation, that right of appeal did not exist. Since it now exists, if it not complicated by red tape which makes an appeal impossible, I think that the owner of the seized cattle could launch an appeal and hope that as soon as possible and not in 5 or 10 years, justice will be rendered to him. Now, it is really an improvement.

The legislation is made by human beings; they cannot be perfect, even if the Department of Agriculture is well-intentioned and accepts suggestions liable to improve legislation parliament is called upon to pass in the agricultural field as well as in others.

I think that members of the committee on agriculture made serious suggestions to convince the minister to establish reliable rates to determine the value of an animal. Then, the minister got out of it so well with wise arguments that the bill was not amended.

At this third reading stage, I wonder if we could not take those amendments in consideration. Any way, as a whole, the bill eliminates an injustice against breeders of top grade animals, because the real value was not considered under all its aspects. If the officials of the Department of Agriculture responsible for the application of the law takes all appropriate measures to give justice to producers then we could say that the legislation is an improvement to be welcomed.

In any event, there will surely be other sessions, and the act, in its present wording, will probably be passed by the government. Next year, an opportunity may be offered to amend it and I rely on the minister's sense of responsibility and honesty to do so, taking into account the recommendations and the suggestions to which the deficiencies of the present act may have given rise.

• (2:10 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-156, to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, has to do with the compensation which will be paid to farmers and livestock owners for animals condemned to be slaughtered because they have been infected with brucellosis, tuberculosis or other contagious diseases. This is a good amendment. It provides that from time to time the maximum amount of compensation to be paid shall be decreed by regulation instead of being fixed by statute. In other words, the act need not be amended to provide for increased amounts of compensation.

Hon. members of the opposition have suggested this amendment is not too important since only a few thousand farmers or livestock operators will be affected each year. One cannot over-emphasize the importance to this country of the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. They are the cornerstone on which a healthy livestock industry in Canada may be built. Hon. members will recall that in 1951 there was an outbreak of foot and mouth disease in Canada, with economic repercussions that represented the loss of many millions of dollars. It is most important that the border between Canada and the United States should be open for the unrestricted export of our cattle.

We discussed these amendments in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Although the suggestion was made that the maximum amount of compensation to be paid on grade animals should be $120 and on purebred animals $200, I hope the minister will reconsider these amounts since I feel the figures set out in the regulations should have some bearing on the actual loss suffered by a farmer. The suggested figures may be adequate to compensate for ordinary, grade cattle and other animals. For high yield dairy animals the figures are not adequate. I suggest the compensation figure ought to represent the difference between the price realized at slaughter and the actual, market value of a similar, healthy animal. Such a provision will not cost the government very much money. Of 4,000 head of cattle condemned to be slaughtered least year only 8 per cent were purebreds.

An hon. member of the opposition suggested that compensation should be equal to 80 per cent of the actual market value of the animal that has been condemned. I think the figure ought to be close to 100 per cent. After all, the farmer has the expense of disposing of the animal, no matter what its stage of lactation is. The value of the animal may vary according to time of year. In addition to losing the animal the farmer must also pay for the cost of disinfecting and cleaning his premises. For very good or very poor farmers, that constitutes no great problem. The farmer with a first-class diary operation has his buildings in excellent condition and has no problem in disinfecting them. Similarly, the farmer with buildings consisting of a shed with a straw roof and some huts can touch a match to his property and burn it down. No great trouble or expense is involved there. The majority of farmers lie between these extremes. Sometimes they may not have whitewashed or disinfected their buildings for many years and the cost of so doing is considerable. The costs incurred in such operations ought to be considered in the bill.

It is good to find an appeal provision in the bill. This is a fundamental right we expect to see included in government regulations of this type. The appeal machinery will be used seldom. As I said, there are only 3,000 to 4,000 compensation claims per year. Usually they are handled amicably by the inspector and the livestock owner. The appeal machinery will be used only where disputes arise.

In conclusion I wish to say this is a good amendment which will bring the act up to date and enable maximum amounts of compensation to be set by regulation.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make two or three observations. Undoubtedly future amounts of compensation paid under the act will increase. The bill has provisions allowing for great flexibility in that maximum amounts of compensation may be set from time to time by regulations. A government appointed inspector will investigate compensation claims and act on behalf of the government in a manner prescribed by regulation. The possibility of an appeal by a farmer to an assessor has been incorporated in the bill. In the future there will be many more cases of compensation and more appeals as more and more chemicals are used. The need for compensation will arise in many different ways and under different circumstances.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Under this bill, the assessor is closely bound by the regulations. In many cases the maximum will not be enough to cover special cases and there is no provision act whereby the assessor can award an amount higher than the maximum set by the regulations. I believe this should be changed. The assessor should be in a position to award more if there is good and reasonable ground for doing so. Does the clause which states that the assessor may refer the matter to the minister for further action suggest that the minister under certain circumstances could award more compensation than the prescribed maximum? I would be happy to hear if this is the correct interpretation of this clause.

I do not feel it is good for the assessor to be appointed by the government. It is wrong not to have the right of appeal to a court. The farmer should always be entitled to take his case to court if he does not agree with the award of the government appointed assessor interpreting the regulations. I strongly recommend to the minister that the farmer be given the right to appeal to a court.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) has left the house as I was going to compliment him on a very good speech. I agree with most of his remarks. However, I disagree with his closing comment with regard to the appeal clause, new section 14A. I suggest to him with all due respect that it makes a mockery of the word "appeal". It is not an appeal at all.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) asked the minister why this clause was even being included in the act. The minister's reply was that it was not there before. This will become the law. Under British justice any individual in Canada can appeal to the courts on points of law. This right has been taken away from those who raise cattle. They must now appeal to an assessor, the department or the minister. An appeal from what? From what the assessor, the department and the minister have said. This is no appeal. The right of an individual to appeal has been taken away by this clause. I agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West when he stated a few moments ago that this is very untidy administration and untidy housekeeping.

New section 14A (3) reads:

> The provisions of Part II of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, with such modifications as circumstances require, apply to appeals brought under this Act.

In whose opinion and under what circumstances are these modifications necessary? Will they be prescribed by the assessor, the department and the minister? Does the appellant have no rights whatsoever? What justice is there in appealing to the minister from a statement by his assessor or his department? Is this the just society? A colonel I know used to say, "I believe in democracy, but this is the way I want it done and, by God, this is the way it is going to be done." That is what the minister has said. Appeal? This is a mockery of appeal.

The hon. member for Edmonton West coined a phrase which I think is appropriate.

[Mr Ritchie.]

He called this provision a bureaucratic assault. It must have been officials of the minister's department who advised him. Surely they have enough trouble already with accusations of bureaucratic dictatorship being hurled at them in this house, by our constituents, and in the press. These officials are building up a bureaucratic dictatorship by taking away the right of the individual to appeal to the courts of our land. When speaking the other night on Bill C-155 I stated that the people of Canada can do without this type of legislation. We are losing more rights every day in this just society. I appeal to the minister to leave it as it was. We are quite satisfied that we have the right to appeal to the courts under our present system.

Under British justice this is the right of every individual in Canada. There are very few acts which do not allow the right of appeal to the courts. There is one section of the Income Tax Act which states that an individual is guilty until he proves his innocence. There is also one clause in the Canada Pension Plan which does not allow the right of appeal. This is contrary to our system of British justice. We as members of parliament have shirked our responsibility in this regard. This responsibility must be taken away from the bureaucrats and given back to the house. It is not the responsibility of these commissions which the government has set up. I do not think it is necessary to name them. They are doing a good job under our instructions. We are the ones at fault, not them. The Canada Pension Plan states that the interpretation of that act is the sole responsibility of the commission. That is not justice. Although it was done for a reason at the time, I think it should be changed.

• (2:30 p.m.)

The minister stated that judges of our courts would be appointed assessors. This is another responsibility that judges should not have. As one of my colleagues said a few moments ago, this will take away from their dignity as judges in our courts. It makes them a political tool of the government of the day, and judges do not like to be met with an accusation of political patronage. Under this legislation I can see circumstances arising when from time to time there will be accusations of political patronage, and I am quite sure the senior judges will frown on those who accept this type of work. I do not know what compulsion the minister can use to make judges accept it, but I am sure if it were left to their own decision they would not want to act in this capacity knowing it would place them in an impossible position. I again appeal to the minister to withdraw this clause because it will do more harm than good.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, we are being asked to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. We are also being asked to remove the set prices prescribed in that act of $70 for grade cattle and $140 for purebred cattle and to give the minister, or whomsoever he may appoint, the right and power to set the maximum amounts of compensation payable. This amounts to ministerial discretion, and all hon. members know my feelings about giving such discretion to any minister. We should avoid doing so at all times, and I want to be on record as opposing that part of the bill.

Since it is evident that the bill will be passed, I would like to know what protection members of parliament and the taxpayers of Canada generally will have following the granting of this ministerial discretion. How and where will we find a list of the names and addresses of those people who are paid compensation? Will it be published in the Canada Gazette? It used to appear in the estimates under "Compensation to Breeders" in the health of animals section. There used to be a list of names and addresses of those who had been paid compensation in cases where the circumstances were not covered by the act and the regulations, but that has disappeared. I could not find such a list in the public accounts for 1967.

I suggest to the minister that it would not be a bad idea if the names and addresses, and the amounts involved, were published monthly and sent to all the breeder organizations so that the public may see what is going on and that nothing is kept from the view of the public. We are giving the minister the right to set the amount of compensation. It is only right that we should know to whom he pays compensation.

There is one provision which appears in the estimates every year with the heading, "in circumstances not covered by the act". Some $8,000 was estimated under it last year. Maybe the minister would like to explain what that covers. I have an idea that it covers animals that die in transit or in accidents before the amount of compensation is arrived at, but I would like the minister to confirm this. Against my better judgment I shall agree to giving this discretionary power to the minister or whomsoever he may appoint, but it is only fair to ask him what protection we and the taxpayers will have after granting him this right.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, at first glance this legislation would appear to affect only a relatively small number of people, and the minister and the government may be disposed to feel that because only a relatively small number of persons may be affected they are at liberty to take very unusual steps in the legislation. I point out that even if only a small number of farmers are affected this house has a responsibility to protect the inalienable rights of every citizen, and that any injustice perpetrated against even one person is something this house must attempt to guard against.

However, this legislation, as I understand it could affect a very large number of persons. I recall that on the prairies a few years ago, when we had an epidemic of foot and mouth disease, hundreds of farmers were required to have their cattle slaughtered and the question of compensation was a very live, controversial and bitter one. As I look at this bill I cannot help wondering whether if it were dealing with mining companies, oil companies or other large corporations, legislation of this type would be introduced by the government, because this legislation deprives certain Canadian citizens under certain circumstances of some of their basic, inalienable rights.

I think the minister is wise in taking out of the act the stipulated figures with respect to the compensation which will be paid. With inflation continuing at the rate it is, I do not think you can put in a statute now the maximum amount that will be paid for either grade or purebred cattle that may have to be destroyed next year, two years from now or five years from now. Unless you are going to amend the act every year, any table of set compensation would very rapidly become obsolete. Therefore the minister has to ask the house, and I think in this case properly, for the authority to recommend to his colleagues in cabinet that an order in council be passed setting forth what the maximum compensation will be.

However, Mr. Speaker, it should be remembered that what is happening is that the government, which is going to pay the compensation, is the one which by regulation will determine the compensation. That, by the very nature of things, is quite dictatorial. It cannot be prevented, but that is the situation. The government, which itself must pay the compensation, is going to say by order in council what that compensation will be, or at least the maximum amount for which it will be liable.

• (2:40 p.m.)

Properly speaking there must be a right of appeal. The appeal is to be made to an assessor, but the assessor is not a free agent. Under the legislation before us he is confined within the maximum that the government has set. So the government, which must pay compensation, is stating by order in council what the maximum compensation shall be. Then it appoints an assessor who is to hear the appeal but tells him that the figure which has been set is sacrosanct and that he dare not go beyond it. He dare not go beyond the maximum. By what moral or legal judgment does the cabinet decide that the maximum which they set is an inviolate figure? If there is to be an appeal, surely that appeal ought to be to someone who is in a position to say that the figure which the cabinet has set at some previous time is no longer adequate and that in the opinion of the assessor the particular animal being slaughtered is worth more than the amount set by the government in the order in council. The assessor should have the right to recommend any figure which he thinks is in keeping with the situation.

It makes a farce of the whole question of appeal to say that a farmer will have the right of appeal and then in the next breath say that the assessor who is to hear the appeal will be limited to making his judgment within a maximum set by the very government which will have to pay the compensation. If ever there was a case of a government wanting to be the judge, jury and prosecuting attorney all in one, surely this is it. Then I believe the final indignity is to state that the decision of the assessor on any appeal brought pursuant to this part is final and conclusive and not subject to appeal to or review by any court.

I understand that my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) attempted to amend Bill C-155 when that bill was before us. His amendment was with reference to a clause which is applicable now in this bill, C-156. I cannot condemn in too strong terms the fact that the government would ask the house to write into the statute books a specific prohibition against the right of appeal to the courts. Surely this ought to be a basic right. As a matter of fact, some of us have fought for years to have established as a principle of law in this country that any individual can sue the Crown without a fiat from the Minister of Justice or the Attorney General of a province. During the time I had the privilege of being associated with a provincial government we removed the requirement that a fiat had to be secured in order to sue the Crown. If in our present society governments must acquire more and more power, which is the situation in a society as complex and complicated as ours, then surely the citizen should have as a last resort the right to sue the Crown when he or she feels an injustice has been done.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Instead of moving in that direction and removing the requirement that a fiat must be secured in order to sue the Crown, we are now asked to place on the statute books a specific prohibition against the right to sue the Crown. The government really is saying to a farmer who is affected by this legislation that his compensation will be set by the government, that he will be given the right to appeal but that right of appeal will be within the maximum limits set by the government. Then the government is saying that if he is not satisfied he does not have the ordinary recourse he would have in dealing with a private company of going to the courts and asking the courts to decide what is fair and equitable compensation for the loss he has suffered.

After all the years I have listened to Liberal speakers talk about the rights of the individual and the dangers of socialistic regimentation, they now bring down legislation telling the farmer that if he is so unfortunate as to have livestock that must be slaughtered or, in the case of Bill C-155, produce that cannot be sold, all he will be allowed is the privilege of appearing before an assessor who must hand down a figure in respect of compensation not higher than a maximum that has been set by order in council on the recommendation of the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. McIntosh: They took over when you were away.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, if this is to be the just society, then God save this country from any more of it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): If we do not have a serious epidemic of livestock disease in this country not many people may be affected. But I want to remind hon. members that we are being asked today to set a very dangerous precedent, the precedent of putting on the statute books a provision which prohibits a Canadian citizen from the right to go to the courts. We are here saying that the maximum figure recommended by the minister and approved by his colleagues is the final arbitration even though the figure they may have set may have become completely obsolete and irrelevant in view of changing conditions. This is a dangerous step.

I suggest that this is dangerous and vicious legislation and that the government ought to reconsider it before it asks us to approve this measure. I once heard Aneurin Bevan say that democracy in Germany died by the headman's axe but that in Britain it was in danger of dying from anaemia. I am not speaking of Britain but I say that in this country, if we continue to allow provisions like this to be placed on the statute books, democracy can die inch by inch by taking away from the ordinary citizen his basic rights to the point where this country will be ruled by ministerial decree and bureaucratic regulations. If this is the government's idea of a just society, then the sooner the Canadian people become aware of it and speak out, the better. I appeal to the minister to either postpone this legislation or introduce an amendment removing the provision which denies a person affected the right to go to the courts. That is the very least that should be allowed. I would like to see them granted the right to go to court and I would go a little bit farther.

• (2:50 p.m.)

From the minister's own point of view I think he would be better off in the final analysis to permit a farmer who is disgruntled and dissatisfied to have his case heard in open court rather than being settled by an assessor appointed by the minister and restricted to the maximum figures the minister in his wisdom or the lack thereof has set for the assessor. I hope the minister will seriously reconsider this matter. I hope he will not ask the house to pass the kind of provision to be found in this legislation. If he does and other ministers follow this practice, we will be weakening the whole basis of democratic government in this country.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, a number of members of the opposition, including the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), my colleague the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave), my leader, and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) have addressed themselves to the legislation before us with specific reference to clause 2. The minister has had an opportunity on previous bills to make some kind of a response to the criticisms and appeals made by hon. members, all of whom have pointed to the serious dangers that lurk behind the provisions contained in this bill. I feel as strongly as other members about this matter but because they have pointed out the dangers clearly I see little point in repeating them at this stage.

It is my hope the minister will come from behind the curtains, get on his feet and explain why the government does not see fit to amend this legislation so we will not be in the position of legislating, as my leader and the hon. member for Swift-Current-Maple Creek put it, to prohibit citizens from having access to the courts, particularly since this matter involves property rights. My leader may have been a little facetious when he said the Liberal party seems to have become very much preoccupied with giving departments and other government bodies more and more authority, but in this case there seems to be a great deal of truth in that statement.

Over the years the Liberal party has created the impression of emphasizing the rights of individuals; yet it appears to be nonchalant about a clause such as the one contained in this bill. This is indeed surprising. It is even more surprising because of the fact that the bill is sponsored by a minister who is apparently the heir apparent to the late William Aberhart. The Liberal party has put great emphasis on the rights of individuals relative to the state. In view of this attitude there certainly is cause for complaint.

At this time I do not intend or want to make what essentially would be the same protests made by other hon. members, but I hope the minister will indicate why it is not possible to remove this provision so there will be no impingement or prohibition in respect of the right of a citizen to take a dispute to the courts. Is it so essential to the administration that we include in this bill a clause such as that contained in Bill C-156? We strongly object to the fact that a decision of an assessor will not be appealable to the courts.

There is another matter I have not heard mentioned. There is provision here that anyone who wishes to appeal the decision of an assessor to an appeal board must do so within three months. This strikes me as an unnecessary restriction. We realize there is some need for a restrictive clause, but in most instances of which I am aware statutes of limitation involve periods of six months or a year, and in some cases five years or more. The minister is asking for too much when he recommends to hon. members a clause which states that every appeal to an assessor shall be brought within three months of the date the owner receives notification of the decision. Why can this not be six months or a year?

The minister knows full well that during busy times of the year an individual may not find himself in a position to take some kind of formal legal action within a period of 90 days. It might be inconvenient to the government to have a longer period but the important thing is that justice should be done, and every citizen should have an ample opportunity to exercise his rights under the law. I think it is a little bit too restrictive to suggest that if an individual wants to appeal he must do so within 90 days. Let us also hear from the minister as to why it is difficult for him to envisage a longer period of time.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, according to the minister the intention of this bill is to allow the government to pay greater compensation to those who have suffered a loss. I compliment the minister on this aspect of the amendment. He would have been better off had he put a percentage or some other kind of formula in the bill in respect of the value of animals, whether it be three years or five years from now. There should be some relation between the value and the market price in arriving at a reasonable figure for compensation. Under this bill the minister will be the judge, the jury, the lord high executioner and the paymaster. There undoubtedly will be some conflict as a result of the minister being all of these things.

I know a farmer in my area who raises purebred bulls. Whenever I go there to buy a bull he always wants a higher price than I am willing to pay. This man, if the bull or other animal were condemned, would probably want to appeal the decision of the Department of Agriculture, whatever it might be. While I might disagree with his judgment as to the value of the animal, I think he should have the right to appeal. I think it is a good thing to have the right of appeal within the department; but ultimately, if a farmer is not satisfied he should have the right of appeal to a court of law. I do not suppose many farmers would go to the Exchequer Court, for example, but as long as the right is there I believe the government would tend to be more circumspect with regard to the value placed upon carcasses which are disposed of. In this respect, I do not intend to imply there is anything wrong with the Minister of Agriculture, because I have a good deal of respect for him despite the fact he is a Liberal.

• (3:00 p.m.)

An hon. Member: He isn't really.

Mr. Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): That is right. I think the rights of people would be better protected if these things were put into writing so they knew exactly where they stood. Then, neither the government nor the farmer would be able to take unfair advantage of the act. The farmer would know he could appeal to an impartial tribunal, a judge, and he could ultimately take the matter to court and obtain a reasonable settlement if he could not do so in any other way. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will reconsider this matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We would like to hear from the minister, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must inform the house that, according to the rules, the minister cannot reply at this stage unless there is unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of things I could say in defence of this bill if I were to try and reply to all the arguments and allegations that have been made by hon. members today. However, I want to be as charitable as I can, and in keeping with that spirit I would say that we have heard a great deal of argument about many things that are not in the bill. There are three clauses to the bill. The first clause deals with removing the statutory limit on the maximum amount that can be paid for animals that are slaughtered because they have contracted named diseases. The second clause gives the right to appeal the amount which the minister may decide is proper for compensation. That is all it does. The clause does not provide for anything but an appeal in this respect. It is rather strange to hear my hon. friends argue how unjust this provision is, because at the present time and all through the years my hon. friends opposite were in office there was no right of appeal.

Mr. Danforth: How about the courts? There was always a right of appeal to them.

Mr. Olson: There was no right to appeal the amount of compensation to an assessor, a court or anyone else. My hon. friends know that. The third clause is concerned with the date of the coming into force of the measure. The reason the date is September 26 is that, in the event there are animals which show positive reaction to the named diseases, particularly tuberculosis and brucellosis, they will be disposed of without waiting and increasing the hazard involved in having the disease around the herd pending an increase in the amount paid by way of compensation. That is all there is in the bill. I think it is a useless debate to read into the bill a whole lot of other things that simply are not there.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Read clause 14A (3).

Mr. Olson: With regard to the right of appeal on the amount of compensation, that primarily involves an appeal to an assessor. That is why this person is called an assessor. In Bill C-155, the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, we specifically and very carefully wrote in the provision that these assessors must be either judges of the Exchequer Court of Canada or judges of the superior courts of the provinces. This provision is there. It is very clear that the assessors will not be people other than those. The argument has been raised as to whether a person should have a right of appeal with regard to whether he is guilty or not guilty. That is not a question that arises at all. The only question is the amount of compensation that can be paid out of the public treasury. If that amount has been set by the minister somewhere lower than the maximum, then the farmer can appeal to the assessor to bring it up to the maximum or to a point higher. That is all that is involved.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Was that a slip of the tongue? The minister said, "Up to the maximum or something higher than the maximum."

Mr. Olson: No, something higher than had been designated by the minister.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I take it that the assessor cannot set any figure higher than the maximum which the minister has already recommended to his colleagues and which was put into an order in council?

Mr. Olson: That is right. It is very nice to see the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) back in the house and participating in the debate. He usually makes a very eloquent argument, but usually for the wrong reasons and with the wrong conclusion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Olson: That of course happened again today, because the hon. member tried to build his argument on the basis of something that had happened respecting foot and mouth disease in Saskatchewan in February of 1952. If he had taken the trouble to inform himself, or if his colleagues had done so—and I think they should have—concerning the amended part of section 12 of the Animal Congagious Diseases Act, he would have found that this part of the act applies to four named diseases only, and one of them is not foot and mouth disease. The diseases named in the act are glanders, dourine, brucellosis and tuberculosis. That is all. There is a completely different basis for determining the amount of compensation paid in respect of diseases like foot and mouth disease because you have to introduce a program for the complete eradication of all the animals exposed to the disease. That is not applicable to this part of the act.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister another question? I understand that this provision applies only to the diseases the minister has named. But am I not correct that the appeal procedure as set out in part II of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, Bill C-155, will apply to all appeals under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act? If not, what will be the basis upon which payment will be made for any disease other than those outlined here, such as foot and mouth disease or hog cholera?

Mr. Olson: This is the fallacy of my hon. friend's argument and proves the point I was making a few minutes ago, about hon. members dredging up everything they can think of with respect to this matter and trying to apply it to the three clauses of the bill. I could go into a great deal of detailed explanation as to how values are arrived at for other diseases. But to put it very briefly, under an eradication program market values are used. In some cases the carcass has no salvage value because it is destroyed completely. This is not the case, for example, with animals which do not have an active disease but in fact show a positive reaction to a test for brucellosis or tuberculosis after proper inspection by our inspectors at the slaughtering plants. The salvage value of those carcasses is as high as if they did not show a positive reaction at all. Over and above that is the compensation which we are setting out in this measure.

Therefore, the brief answer is that with regard to those animals which have no salvage value at all, the market value is set down by a formula that we have used, very satisfactorily I may say, for a long period of time. In this way, we have arrived at the value and compensation that should be paid.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The-Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the minister quite understood my question. With respect to these other diseases like foot and mouth disease or hog cholera, is there no right of appeal, or is the procedure for appeal as set out in this legislation to be applicable in the case of other diseases? Or is there no right of appeal with respect to them?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure about the right of appeal in those cases, but there is a completely different procedure. For example, a committee is set up consisting of somebody representing the department, the nominee of the person or persons involved, and someone neutral. This committee decides on the value of animals in the case where an eradication program is required because of contraction of a contagious disease.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The-Islands): Why not in the case of these other diseases?

Mr. Olson: In many cases that is the procedure if a large number of animals is involved. However, what my hon. friend does not seem to realise is that there is a continuing program of testing throughout the country of what appear to be healthy animals. Whenever we find any animals that show a positive reaction to the test they are taken out of the herd, and compensation is paid to the producer on the basis outlined. Up until this time, there has been no appeal from a decision of the minister or the department.

The question was asked why we put the phrase "with such modifications as circumstances require" in clause 2(3). As far as I understand it, this is the English translation of the latin phrase that is used, "mutatis mutandis". These words do not change the provisions of the compensation act but allow for differences in wording between the two acts. Thus, they are a link between the two acts. However, some differences have to be taken into account so far as administration is concerned.

A number of questions were asked about whether or not the amount of compensation would be high enough, and whether cross-breds and so on, should be included. As I said in the committee—I think it is well to repeat myself here—the maximum amount that can be paid by way of compensation over and above the salvage value of the carcass today is $70 for a grade animal and $140 for a purebred animal. A purebred is defined as an animal that has been registered or that is eligible to be registered, whether registered or not.

I am going to recommend to the Governor in Council that these values be changed to $120 for grade animals and $200 for purebred animals. This is a very substantial increase; in percentage terms it is in the neighbourhood of 70 per cent. The fact of the matter is that these statutory limits have not been changed for 11 years, since 1958. Therefore, we think there is some justification for changing them.

Notwithstanding that the amounts may be higher, because of the very successful program we have been carrying on for a number of years to eradicate these diseases, the total amount charged to the federal treasury will, in our view, be substantially less under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. Statistics bear out that the program has been very successful over a long period of time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I do not want to interrupt the minister's train of thought, but before he leaves that point I should like to ask him how it is possible to set a maximum figure when dealing with purebred livestock. At every fair one sees purebred livestock selling at very fancy figures. Therefore, I would think that purebred livestock varies in value greatly, and I should like to know how it is possible to set a maximum figure. Is the assessor not to be allowed complete freedom, instead of some maximum being imposed? For example, the animal in question might be a prize bull that would fetch thousands of dollars; in such a case a maximum of $200 seems absurd.

Mr. Olson: This act is not intended to compensate at the kind of values that are sometimes put upon animals at auction sales. If anybody has a very valuable animal, such as the one described by the hon. member, it is usually insured. Certainly, insurance is available for such animals. That is one reason.

Another reason is that in some cases it is possible, through a reasonably satisfactory process, to arrive at a value for such animals. We take the position that there are so many exceptions to the rule in the process of arriving at the value of some of these animals that we need to set down a maximum so that everybody is treated equally and fairly.

I should also point out to the hon. member that the cost to the federal treasury is not simply the cost of the compensation paid to the farmer. A great deal of additional cost is involved in helping the farmer rid his farm of these diseases and to clean up his herd. This is of equal, indeed far greater, value to the farmer as the actual dollars paid to him in compensation. If we used market values or adopted some other means of doing away with the maximum amount of compensation, we would, it seems to me, be opening the door to a lot of litigation and expressions of opinion as to the value of animals. I do not mind this if those values are properly tested in the market place. But, of course, they cannot be tested. There is no way positively to test market value of an animal once it has become sick or has contracted one of these diseases. Therefore, we need to establish a maximum.

I might say to the hon. member that the point he makes has not proved to be a great problem so far as high priced animals are concerned because, in the first place, they are eligible for insurance and in most cases are insured. I do not think anybody could say that there is no way for producers to defend themselves in this kind of situation, which would be the case for lower priced or grade animals.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask the minister a question. I am not sure that the assumption he has made is correct and I should like to ask for clarification. The minister chastised a previous speaker for dealing with hog cholera and foot and mouth disease. The minister indicated that these diseases were not relevant to subclauses (1), (2) and (3) of clause 2. Is it not a fact that the section of the act that we are amending, section 14, which is the appeal provision, is not restricted simply to brucellosis and t.b., but applies to the act in its entirety?

Mr. Olson: I will have an answer to that question in a moment. I think that when I made that statement I was talking about clause 1, which is the clause that removes the statutory maximum that is set down for the four diseases I named a few moments ago. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) had a lot to say about this question, but what he apparently does not understand is that we are not taking away anybody's rights. We are in fact granting a right of appeal which has never existed before. I find it hard to understand any of these arguments seeking to show we are taking something away when really we are extending the right of persons to appeal on a matter which involves a charge to the public treasury. Appellants would be questioning the minister's decision as to how much would be the proper compensation. In most cases it will only be the amount which will be the subject of an appeal, though there is a possibility of appeal in cases where no payment is to be made, and where a more favourable ruling is sought. But in most cases the question of substance will be the opinion of the assessor as to whether or not, within the minima and maxima laid down in the regulations, the amount was fair.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I cannot understand how the hon. member can argue from both sides of the fence at the same time. At one point he told us that judges of the Exchequer Court and of the Superior Courts of the provinces should not be involved at all.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not as assessors.

Mr. Olson: He said there had been a great public outcry about these judges becoming involved in extra-curricular activities.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Extra-judicial.

Mr. Olson: All right; whatever the word was. Immediately after saying that, he told us these cases should be appealable to the courts, where the very same men would be seated.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But not as assessors.

Mr. Olson: Well, what would the courts be doing, if not assessing the amount of compensation, since compensation is the only question appealable? You see the difficulty about trying to satisfy all the objections of the other side, Mr. Speaker, when one of its spokesmen contradicts even himself within two minutes?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No, I did not.

Mr. Olson: I believe I have answered all the questions hon. members have asked me. There were one or two further questions, though. The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) asked whether an assessor could award more than the maximum. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) asked that question too.

We are now taking out of the legislation the statutory limits of $70 and $140 respectively and we are providing that these amounts shall be determined by order in council. In other words, parliament is saying in this session, and has been saying in 1958 and on all those other occasions when this act has been before it, that there should be a certain maxima. If we were now to say there could be an appeal to an assessor with no limit on the amount which could be awarded, then that assessor would be making law. Parliament has decided over the last 30 years that in the interests of the taxpayer and of the public treasury limits should be placed on the compensation which can be paid in connection with these disease eradication programs.

The remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) were, of course, not applicable to this bill at all. No man is guilty or innocent in this context. The only thing appealable is the amount of compensation.

The hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Hales), having heard the arguments to which I have just referred, wanted to know about the right of the taxpayers who provide money for the public treasury out of which this compensation is paid. This is a legitimate submission because, after all, we do bear responsibility for setting up the kind of rules which ensure that we are handling the public funds judiciously. Every member knows we must have rules and regulations to avoid excessive claims tantamount to raids on the public treasury. We are conscious of this need. The hon. member wanted a list of those who have been paid compensation. Well, the names are not secret. It would cost quite a lot of money to produce such a list, because in some years it would be very long, but we are not holding back any of this information. As for the other two or three points to which he referred, having to do with the blue book of estimates, I think it would be better if I waited to discuss them until the estimates are before the standing committee.

I have tried to answer all the questions which have been raised. I am glad many hon. members agree that instead of imposing statutory limits the Governor in Council should set them from time to time, keeping in mind the movement of the market.

I also believe hon. members will agree, on reflection, that giving the right to appeal the amount of compensation for the first time is a great step forward. The fact that the assessors who will hear the appeals will be judges of the Exchequer Court or of the Superior Courts of the provinces is a guarantee that the procedures under which appeals will be heard will be right and proper. I submit that with all these things written into one short piece of legislation hon. members will, on reflection, want to pass the bill quickly because it will certainly be of great benefit to those who are unfortunate enough to find their herds struck down by these diseases.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister a question? The one thing he did not deal with at all was why he found it necessary to write into Bill C-155, and make applicable to Bill C-156, a specific prohibition against the right of appeal to the courts.

Mr. Olson: I do not mind explaining things twice, or even three times, but I did explain this in detail in committee, and the evidence is available to the hon. member.

I do not know whether he has had the time to read it, but he will find it in reports Nos. 12, 13 and 14, all the way up to 19. Again, when an amendment was moved at the report stage of the bill I gave another detailed explanation why it had been done. Since the house has reached a decision with regard to Bill C-155, I doubt whether I should repeat all the reasons I gave, though they are readily available to the hon. member if he would like to read the evidence given before the committee, or consult the applicable copy of Hansard.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I am not talking about Bill C-155 but about Bill C-156 which specifically says, in clause 3:

> 14A (3) The provisions of part II of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act with such modifications as circumstances require apply to appeals brought under this act.

So, I am not discussing Bill C-155. I am talking about the application to the bill now before the house of a clause in Bill C-155 which becomes law under the measure we are now discussing.

Mr. Olson: I gave that explanation, too. At the outset I said that mutatis mutandis there are some changes which may be necessary in the regulations as applied to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act; that they would be slightly different in their application to the pesticide residue legislation but that the general procedure regarding the right to appeal would be the same in both cases. The general procedure in respect of the right of appeal will be the same under both acts.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Although the minister tried to bring in a Latin phrase, surely he means that clause 13(3) of Bill C-155 which reads,

> The decision of the Assessor of any appeal brought pursuant to this Part is final and conclusive and not subject to appeal to or review by any court.

applies to the bill before the house at the present time.

Mr. Olson: The answer is, yes. My officials and I have explained repeatedly why that provision has been included in Bill C-155.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have heard no explanation from the minister that satisfies me. I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. Olson: I am aware the hon. member has not heard the explanation. I think he will agree that three or four explanations are sufficient. I have made many explanations in committee and in this house with respect to Bill C-155 previous to this afternoon.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): The minister is being sarcastic.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended speaking in this debate but I am concerned about the implications of this bill. Potentially, many of my constituents may be affected. The chief difficulty here is that, apparently, members on the government side have one philosophy and those on the opposition another. The government's attitude seems to be that, with its officials, it knows what is best for the individual.

Mr. Stanfield: That is the mandate.

Mr. MacLean: Originally the act gave the minister power to have animals suffering from contagious diseases slaughtered. Compensation was to be paid with respect to those animals, as set by order in council. Nevertheless, if a farmer feels that as a result of the decision of the official appointed by the government he is not getting a fair shake, that the assessment is too low, he may appeal but may not take the appeal further than the assessor. The normal rights of the individual are being denied in this bill. The individual cannot appeal to the courts—I see the minister shaking his head.

Mr. Olson: The assessors will be judges. That is spelled out in the act.

Mr. MacLean: That is completely beside the point. Those judges are not acting as judges but as assessors. They have been appointed by the government to assess. We are not complaining about the individuals who may be appointed to act as assessors, I wish to make that clear. Our complaint is that judges will act in the capacity of assessors according to the regulations set out under the act. That is a major objection we have to this bill. I do not think the minister intended to leave a wrong impression, but the impression he left with me was that the provisions of this bill only apply to animals slaughtered under certain circumstances. I understood them to apply to all animals slaughtered under the authority of the act we are amending. The list of diseases governed by the act is to be found in section 2(d), which reads as follows:

> 'infectious or contagious disease' includes, in addition to other diseases generally so designated, glanders, farcy, maladie du coit, pleuro-pneumonia contagiosa, foot and mouth disease, rinderpest, anthrax, Texas fever, hog cholera, swine plague, mange, scab, rabies, tuberculosis—

And so on. Do not the provisions of this bill apply to all those diseases? I am not suggesting for one moment that most of the time assessments would not be made conscientiously, to everyone's satisfaction. Nevertheless, if an individual feels he has been hard done by he cannot appeal to the courts, because the bill does not give him the right to do so. Surely, that provision is not part of a just society.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask the minister a question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must inform the house that we are not sitting as a committee of the whole house. The house is beginning to act as if it were in committee. I shall permit the hon. member to ask one last question of the minister.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Considering what the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) said a few moments ago with respect to diseases coming under the provisions of this bill, would the minister clarify what he said a few moments ago. I believe he said that foot and mouth disease and several other animal diseases were not included in the provisions of this bill.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, the section we are amending in the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, section 12—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Is it not section 14?

Mr. Olson: We are amending sections 12 and 14. If the hon. member is referring to appeals and statutory limits with respect to compensation under clause 12, may I point out that that clause does not deal with diseases other than the four I named, glanders, tuberculosis, brucellosis and dourine.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I know the minister does not intend to mislead the house but may I point out that section 14(3) says:

> The provisions of Part II of the Pesticide Residue Compensation Act, with such modifications as circumstances require, apply to appeals brought under this Act.

Appeals under this part are governed by the entire act, and the act deals with all those diseases the hon. member from Malpeque (Mr. MacLean) mentioned a few moments ago. If the minister will look at Bill C-155, and at clause 13 he will see these words:

> (1) Upon the hearing of an appeal brought pursuant to this Part, the Assessor may—
>
> (b) subject to any maximum amount of compensation prescribed pursuant to this Act and applicable to the loss in respect of which the appeal is brought, vary the decision of the Minister,—

That applies to all diseases.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) should not get so exicited, because I do not think he understood the question. The question was, I believe, whether compensation under the amendments to the Animal Contagious Diseases Act contained in Bill C-156 apply to foot and mouth disease. The answer is that in so far as maximum amounts of compensation are concerned, they do not.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. When the minister replied to my question dealing with this matter he said in so many words that I ought to inform myself of the contents of the bill. I point out that I was dealing only with the appeal procedure under section 14(1)(a). My contention was that the appeal procedure should apply to all animal diseases defined under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. The minister has now admitted in so many words that that is the case. This appeal procedure would apply to farmers whose cattle were infected with foot and mouth disease or whose hogs were infected with hog cholera.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Olson: Everybody is out of order, Mr. Speaker, so I may as well be too. Section 14 of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act deals with specific diseases. Where it states compensation is payable in respect of cattle, I suppose an argument can be made. I believe Section 14A applies to diseases contained in that class. I will have the answer very shortly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

An hon. Member: On division.

Motion agreed to on division, bill read the third time and passed.

PEST CONTROL

REGULATION OF PRODUCTS USED IN CONTROL PROCEDURE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-157, to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals, be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister not going to make a speech?

Mr. Olson: I am not sure I ought to say anything regarding Bill C-157 because the new rules provide for detailed explanation of every clause in the committee. I think all hon. members realize that because of the limitation of time it was necessary to divide the work among standing committees so they could meet concurrently. That, Mr. Speaker, was the purpose of the detailed clause by clause study of these bills in the Standing Committee on Agriculture. It would be redundant to repeat these detailed explanations as they are contained in the reports available to all members.

The appeal procedure under the bill with which we have just finished dealing applies to all programs on which compensation is paid. All the diseases listed do not of necessity have slaughter programs attached to them. With regard to compensation, the right of appeal is applicable to all three bills.

As far as Bill C-157 is concerned, I hope there will be time for me to answer questions. I do not think it necessary to cover ground already well covered in the committee reports.

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Bill C-157 is another in a series of bills respecting regulations with regard to the agriculture industry. This particular bill also deals with an allied industry, the chemical industry in connection with pesticides manufactured by it and applied to products grown in Canada. This measure provides an even greater indication of the arbitrary powers being taken by this government.

I was happy to hear the minister, in his short address, explain the workings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. He said we had time to study this bill clause by clause. Although the theory of such a standing committee may be good, the operation of it leaves much to be desired.

There are two large industries, the chemical industry and the agriculture industry, influenced by the regulations in this legislation. This bill intrudes on the normal operation of these industries. When the committee was about to study this bill clause by clause, I was shocked to learn the government did not intend to call witnesses from these industries to present their opinions as to whether or not, the bill was advantageous and to express opinions on the various clauses of this bill. Although both these industries were to be regulated and regimented, neither were going to be given the opportunity to make representations. It was only after a great deal of discussion that the chemical industry was permitted to make representations.

The evidence provided by the representatives of the chemical industry was very informative and formed the basis for one minor amendment to the bill. It was an historic feat to have even one amendment accepted in committee which was not produced by the government. The provisions of this bill deal with most facets of the chemicals involved, that is, the composition, registration, packaging, storage, transportation, sale, utilization and a strict examination of their effects. We must be very careful when intruding to this extent on the companies involved. We must not be too cumbersome in granting adequate protection to the users of the products involved. We must not make it impossible for these two industries to take advantage of the newest developments.

This bill gives more rights to an inspector of the government than are given to an officer of the R.C.M.P. The fact that an inspector is a government employee and shows his identification, gives him the right to go into any building or property and require every person to assist him in his inspection. He is given the right to demand all books and papers he may deem necessary. In essence, an inspector is given all the powers of an officer of the law. He can take upon himself the power of controlling the distribution of such chemicals. As a matter of fact, he can require companies to cease the manufacture of a chemical. He can stop the transportation of it, or the utilization of it. He can impound all quantities wherever they are found on his assertion that they do not meet the requirements of this bill in respect of labelling, storage, transportation, or usage, or on the ground that the chemical may cause some danger either directly or residually to the food utilized for human consumption.

• (3:50 p.m.)

Absolute power is granted to an individual to intrude in the normal operations of two industries. Inspectors will operate under the regulations made under this bill, but those regulations are not spelled out. They are merely stated to be such regulations as may be prescribed. I object to these agricultural bills which do not make provision for an appeal to a court after an assessor has made a determination. It is left arbitrarily in the hands of a single inspector to stop the normal business of two industries.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, it is even worse than that. A company may spend hundreds of thousands of dollars on the preparation of a chemical specifically designed to aid agriculture. Under this legislation, the Company must apply to the government for registration before it can dispose, sell, transport or package the chemical for commercial use. In the standing committee, we heard evidence that sometimes it takes months before a determination is made by the department as to whether or not registration should be granted. With respect to the registration of a new chemical, it is quite possible that it will take weeks or months to obtain the necessary information from the various laboratories and testing fields. We have discovered that registration may be held up because of a difference of opinion between two government departments, the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Agriculture.

This bill is another example of government intrusion into business under the guise of benefiting the public. The intent is good, and we in the Official Opposition in no way say that the welfare of the people of Canada should not be protected to the n^{th} degree. This is necessary but when arbitrary powers are given to individuals, surely equal powers of review are necessary.

In the standing committee we heard from officials of the department that the registration of chemicals could take a matter of days, and that speed was essential when dealing with chemicals that are used on a seasonal basis. But when representatives of the industry appeared before the committee they said it sometimes was not a matter of days but of months, and in fact on occasion a matter of years before a decision could be reached. People engaged in agriculture cannot wait for years. In many instances they cannot wait for months. Farmers must have chemicals to deal with specific problems as they arise or else suffer crop failures.

I feel that when a product has been refused registration, the company concerned should have the right of direct and fast appeal. It should have the right of direct appeal to a minister or to the department when it feels there has been undue delay in granting registration. A company should have a right to appeal when there has been seizure or detention of a product on the decision of a single inspector. It should have a right to appeal against a decision respecting packaging, labelling and advertising when such decision has stopped the normal distribution of the product. A company should have a right to appeal when the government contends that an indictable offence has been committed by one of its agents or employees.

When representatives of the industry appeared before the standing committee the government relented and introduced an amendment to the bill granting the right of appeal. But then, as the government does in so many cases, it added the rider "subject to such regulations as may be prescribed." In my considered view, this killed the request made on behalf of the industry. I am concerned about this legislation brought before us under the guise of being of direct benefit to agriculture because it has become so cumbered with regulations, and so one-sided against industry. I feel the good intentions which gave rise to it have been nullified. I have great hesitation in supporting the bill, although I do believe that the primary intent was good.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions, and public bills.

Mr. Bigg: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, might I be recognized as calling it four o'clock so that I can be the next to speak on Bill C-157.

PRIVATE BILLS

THE HURON AND ERIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill S-7, respecting the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo) moved:

That clause 1 of the said bill be deleted.

He said: Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of the new procedure we adopted is that by giving second reading to a bill and letting it go to committee we can examine the implications of the bill; we can question witnesses in the committee, and we can get a fuller appreciation of what is involved in the bill itself. It is because this bill has received such a scrutiny in committee, and because of the evidence that was presented, that we in this party have moved this amendment.

I should like to commence my intervention in this debate by referring to volume 18 of the minutes of the proceedings and evidence of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee, page 989, where the position of the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation is put forward:

● (4:00 p.m.)

The request that we are making, sir, is for an increase in our authorized capital in each company in order to allow for continuing growth. There has been no increase in the authorized capital of either company for many years. The last increase in authorized capital of the Canada Trust Company was, indeed, in 1899. The last increase in the authorized capital of the Huron and Erie was in 1919.

There are a number of implications flowing from that statement. I am not sure what the authorized capital was in 1919 when the change was made, but at the moment their authorized capital is $10 million so presumably it was something less than that. In a period of 48 years these companies have not found it necessary to come to parliament for permission to have their authorized capital increased. They have been able to operate pretty much on their own and make their own decisions during that period. Now, they are requesting an increase in authorized capital double what they have.

Although I would not presume to say this increase would permit these corporations to go for another 48 years before coming to parliament, as they are at the moment, one could make a very strong presumption that it will be a long time before we have another opportunity to examine this particular type of request. My feeling is not that some time in the future this company should not be permitted an increase in its authorized capital. My argument is that at this moment, at a time when everyone is calling for great restraint, the restraint should be applied to all sectors of the economy both public and private. I suggest that in this particular case the increase in authorized capital should not be granted.

One could also question the position into which these companies have put themselves by asking for this increase in authorized capital. From the evidence at my disposal, it would seem their request does not result from the fact they ran short of funds in the normal course of their business but because they used some of their authorized capital for the purchase of other companies. I might add that if the sponsor of this bill feels at any time he has some information he would like to bring to my attention as the debate proceeds, I would be more than happy to accept any intervention to clarify some of these points. Perhaps we could have a more meaningful debate in that way.

An hon. Member: He is a Rhodes scholar.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, on a question of order; as is well known in this chamber the purpose of having a committee procedure is that an opportunity may be provided for hon. members to obtain information about the measures. I do not see why, at this late date, we should have to repair the deficiencies in my hon. friend's presentation.

An hon. Member: You are a great sponsor of a bill. I thought you were a Rhodes scholar and had a general knowledge.

Mr. Saltsman: This is typical of the people who sponsor bills in this house. They have no intention of providing information or of justifying their position. They must want to sluff off these requests and get the bill through as quickly as possible. On the other hand, we feel that examination is necessary. We have obviously scrutinized this bill and questioned the witnesses who appeared before us. We have obtained some of the information we require and are making some points about it. The suggestion I made to the sponsor was that we were interested in having a meaningful debate. We are not interested in having the sponsor sit there like a dummy. If the sponsor has some suggestions to make in respect of points which would make this debate more meaningful, we are reasonable people over here and are quite willing to listen. What we are suggesting is that he may be able to give us some valid reason or significant arguments concerning why the report of the committee should be accepted and why this bill should be passed. He does not seem to have any intention of doing this at the moment.

Mr. Blair: On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, the issue which has been placed before this house by my friend, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), is that the report should not be accepted. I submit it is for him to make a case if he can for this proposition. It really is quite out of order, I suggest, for him to try to make his case by addressing a number of rhetorical questions to me or to any other hon. member. I am interested in hearing what if any questions he has.

Mr. Saltsman: We are quite prepared to make our case. In the light of the considerable erudition of the sponsor, and his obvious interest in the welfare of this bill, I was hoping he might be prepared to accept the opportunity to make this debate more effective by participating in it. However, since he has indicated he has no intention of participating in this debate, beyond perhaps interrupting those speakers who wish to make their points, I will continue with my argument.

An interesting comment on this situation appears in the Financial Post of February 8, 1969 in a column headed "Annual Report". It reads:

> Huron & Erie Mortgage Corp., London, Ontario, expects a "modest improvement in 1969".

The right hand column of the article reads:

> Huron has applied for government approval to increase its authorized capital. Following the issuance of 911,856 for the acquisitions made during 1968, there is virtually no unissued capital, which is "not a good position for any growing company," Taylor said.

I think Mr. Taylor is the president of the company. So, in effect it would appear that Huron and Erie having used its available resources to buy out another company now finds itself short of authorized capital to continue its operations. One question which arises is how valid is this kind of an argument. Are we to allow authorized capital so that Huron and Erie can buy out everybody else? This would seem to be the point. They have arrived at this position because they made a corporate decision to expand rather than make the money at their disposal available for mortgages.

We are not being dogmatic about the question of size. If someone can demonstrate to me that the question of size is important and that Huron and Erie getting larger by buying up other companies will improve our economy or confer some benefits upon our people, then I have no objection to this. But what is the situation? Is Huron and Erie offering advantages to the people who go to Huron and Erie because the corporation has become bigger? I do not think so. Is this company lowering interest rates because it is bigger as a result of these recent acquisitions? I do not think that is the case.

The sole purpose of this bill seems to be to increase the profitability and powerfulness of this particular corporation in the market place. I do not really believe we are here to do this kind of a deed on their behalf, particularly when the only advantage would seem to accrue to the stockholders of the company.

• (4:10 p.m.)

There is an interesting comment made on this question of conglomerates and high organization by the management of the Great West Life Insurance Company of Winnipeg. This appeared in the Globe and Mail—

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I fully appreciate the difficulty my hon. friend faces in opposing the increase in the capitalization of a company which is devoting 85 per cent of its assets to mortgages on houses and more particularly because it operates in his own area. He might have to explain to his constituents why he is taking this stand. I must say that—

Mr. Saltsman: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. There is no point of order here.

Mr. Blair: I did not have an opportunity to reach my point of order, Mr. Speaker, but I will do so with your permission. The hon. member has referred to the conglomerates of Great West Life. This matter is not involved in the bill before us.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order. With all due respect for your perseverance in maintaining order during the debate, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) has now for the fifth time during this debate raised spurious points of order. I think we should try to suppress him, particularly if he does not wish to make any formal speech.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for his intervention. I agree that some of these points of order are irrelevant, but all the remarks of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton have been irrelevant, particularly the last remark concerning how I am going to have to explain this matter to the people of Waterloo. Of course, that is what I am here to explain.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I should like the hon. member to restrict his remarks to the motion before us, which he moved. He has moved that clause 1 be deleted from this bill. This clause deals with an increase in the capitalization of the corporation in order to have additional capital available. That is the only motion before the house.

Mr. Saltsman: I appreciate your vigilance and your injunction, Mr. Speaker, but, with the greatest respect, if you feel I cannot make remarks regarding the comments directed toward me by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) in respect of the general debate now taking place, I should like to appeal to you on a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has made a very serious charge, and it is a charge that should be answered. It is his privilege to say anything he wishes whether or not it is correct. However, I feel that the people of my riding would be very interested to know how fallacious his proposition is.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton asked me how I would explain, or perhaps how anyone would explain, this position of depriving this great benefactor of the public access to public funds in view of the fact it places 85 per cent of its funds in home mortgages. I am surprised that a man of his talent and knowledge would even ask this kind of a question, because he knows that the saving of money does not depend on the Huron and Erie Trust Company. This saving is made by the Canadian people. The expenditure of money in this society does not take place as a result of the beneficence of any particular trust company either. This money is going to be spent in one way or another, just as it will be saved in one way or another. What is important is how it is going to be spent, and that is the real point of this debate.

Is this money to be collected by a trust company which puts its money into areas where it will make the most profit without regard for social consequence? Is it to be collected by a public agency, which is the way we would like to see it done, which would be concerned about the almost three quarters of all Canadians who cannot afford their own homes? It might be possible for them to own homes if this money were collected in any other place than on the private marketplace. The private marketplace has its own terms of reference. Its objective is to make the greatest profit possible. This is the kind of society in which we live and with which we disagree.

There is nothing to say that this kind of thing has to go on forever or that most of our people have to have their housing needs remain unsatisfied because they do not earn enough money to qualify for a mortgage. The point of the argument is, therefore, that I am working hard on behalf of these people of the Waterloo riding. They call on me often to tell me that they do not have homes in which to live. The wealthy do not have any problems. If you want to build a $60,000, $70,000 or $75,000 home, there is no shortage in Waterloo. If you earn $5,000, $6,000 or, in many cases, $4,000 and you want to build a house you cannot do so because the marketplace is not organized to serve your needs.

What we in this party are concerned about is to have some changes made in the way the savings are accumulated and allocated in order that people at the medium income level have the opportunity to obtain homes. I believe that every Canadian is entitled to this opportunity as a right. The Huron and Erie mortgage company has shown it is obviously far more interested in expansion and acquisition than anything else. These were not sick companies it was buying, these were healthy companies. This corporation is more interested in using its own money for its own aggrandizement than making money available for housing mortgages. I am sure the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton would have difficulty in dealing with that argument, and I notice he is sitting quietly.

At page 991 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs we find that Mr. Taylor, the President of the company was asked this question by Mr. Portelance:

> Mr. Chairman, the question asked by Mr. Blair a while ago was: "What interest rate did the company concerned charge on loans for dwellings or low-cost housing?" Could somebody answer that question?

Some consternation broke out, and we finally got this reply from Mr. Taylor:

> Our prime rate at the present time, I am sorry to say, sir, is 9¼ per cent.

Let me say that we are sorry too, Mr. Taylor. He went on to say:

> I say that because high interest rates present just as much of a problem to us as they do to the rest of the country. We simply operate on a spread between the rate that we pay on demand and term money and the rate at which we lend. We are lending as I said today at 9½ per cent.

The other side of the coin is that we are borrowing at the highest rate we have ever paid for money. We are paying 7¾ per cent on 5 year debentures. That is a spread of 1¾ per cent and in our costing 1¾ per cent is virtually a break even point.

Let me digress for a moment to make the observation that this is the point at which one asks, if they are not making any money how do they manage? Perhaps the answer is the important thing is not the profit, it is the turnover.

Mr. Taylor went on to state:

We are making about 25 cents on a $100 debenture today on the mix because we are paying 7¼, 7½ and 7¾ per cent depending on the maturity, whether it is one year, two, three, four or five. The spread is extremely narrow—

Despite this very narrow spread, if we take a look at the record of January 29—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have the indulgence of the house to continue my remarks for a few minutes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am sorry, I heard someone say "no".

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) would rise to answer the extremely valid and well thought out points put forward by my colleague the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). Apparently they went over his head or he feels they are not worthy of response.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Blair: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if you could save me from these interruptions.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) on a point of order.

Mr. Blair: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It might even be a question of personal privilege. It will have been observed by every hon. member here that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) jumped to his feet immediately the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) sat down, and I had no opportunity to consider rising. But I am looking forward to the weak argument of the hon. member for Waterloo perhaps being advanced somewhat by the hon. member for Skeena. It might then be worthy of reply.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I am now speaking to the motion or should deal with the question of privilege or point of order, whatever it was, that the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) raised. I noticed that between the time he raised the point of order and the time he sat down there was a change of personnel in the chair. But even if you, Mr. Speaker, with your prescience, foresight and incisiveness, had paid full attention to the matter, you would have come to the conclusion that there was no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know that the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) is never out of order, so he may continue with his speech.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, an observation of that sort, however kind and generous to me, casts some doubt upon my opinion of Your Honour. Methinks you are mistaken. The bill relating to the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation is the matter before the house. There are one or two things I wish to say in connection with this corporation. Although they have been said before, I think it is necessary to reiterate them because they deal with the substance of the bill and the substance of a great deal of misunderstanding that arose in the committee as well as in the minds of many who have read the evidence upon which the report of the committee was founded.

The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation has at the moment an authorized capital of $10 million divided into five million shares of $2 each. It seeks, in effect, to double the share capital and the number of shares, but retain the par value of the shares and be in a position to raise, by reason of the additional sale of its share capital presumably, another $10 million. As I understand the situation, nearly all the authorized shares of the company have now been distributed and are outstanding.

There is, as was pointed out in the committee, a relationship between the amount of money a mortgage company can lend and the amount of money that it has in the treasury, or the amount of its share capital, plus the surplus. I did not find out, and I doubt very much whether this matter was gone into in the committee, what the surplus position of the company might be. There is no reference to it that I can find. I have looked at the trust and loan companies financial survey of industrials. This survey covers the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation and lists the consolidated balance sheet, but only the main items. It is difficult for me to pull out from that what the surplus of a company might be. It could be listed under another name, or it may be divided and put into other accounts or other sorts of funds. Therefore, I do not know what the surplus figure is. In any event, there is a ratio of 15 to 1 in terms of the lending of money, related to the amount of share capital plus the surplus. I assume this means, speaking in very small numbers and only by way of illustration, that for every $100 the company has as a result of the sale of shares, it will be able to lend $1,500 for mortgages, as a maximum.

Mr. Blair: Borrow.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It would be able to lend $1,500, not from its capital moneys but from money it had received on deposit or had borrowed. I see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton shaking his head. I do not know whether he is shaking it at me, indicating disagreement with what I am saying, or at his cabinet colleagues on the front bench who are speaking with him. I am at a bit of a loss to know what he means.

Mr. Blair: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to interrupt, but I think if my hon. friend would look at the statute more closely he would find that the ratio of 15 to 1 governs the borrowings that a corporation of this type might make, out of which borrowings it then has a fund from which it can make loans to the public.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I may have put it the wrong way around. Presumably the corporation is going to put all its borrowings out again. That is the theory behind the operation of this kind of corporation, namely, to keep your money in circulation. If it is more correct to say, in the jargon of the legal and accounting professions, that it can borrow 15 times more than is borrowed from it, I am content to put it that way. However, what I was getting at is that the ratio of 15 to 1 is permitted by order in council. There is a statutory amount beyond which the corporation cannot go after receiving permission from the Treasury Board, the government or an agency of government. This permission has already been given. At this point, I should like to read from the evidence given by Mr. Humphrys, the Superintendent of Insurance, to the committee on January 21. His evidence was on this very point, and I should like to put his words on the record because they may help to clarify my argument.

Mr. Humphrys, in reply to a question, said:

> The multiple for trust companies is 12½ times the capital and surplus, but it may be increased to 15 times subject to approval by the Treasury Board. For mortgage loan companies the limit stated in the law is four times, but this may be also increased 15 times subject to application by the company and approval by the Treasury Board. Both of these companies—

He was referring to Canada Trust and Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation.

> —had their ratio approved at 15 times which is the maximum permissible under the law.

I understand that a proposition is being put forward and is being looked upon very favourably by the government that this 15 to 1 ratio be increased to 20 to 1. If this is the case, the company will automatically be in a better position so far as its borrowings and subsequent lendings are concerned. But even on the basis of a ratio of 15 to 1, the corporation, with the expectation of raising an additional $10 million through the sale of shares, will be able to increase its potential borrowing position and, consequently, its potential lending position by an additional $150 million.

If this is the sort of money the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton was talking about being pumped into the mortgage lending field, it is very interesting and gratifying to note that it is the case. If the ratio is increased to 20 to 1, which I am told is quite possible, the amount would be increased even more and there would be a couple of hundred million dollars at least in additional money available for the company to borrow and, subsequently, to lend. The $150 million extra that one can assume, on the basis of the surface presentation of the company, would be available for mortgages will not be available at all. The company said this, as reported in the proceedings of the committee at page 1001, as a result of a question put to Mr. Taylor, the chairman of the board and president of the company, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray).

Private Bills

• (4:30 p.m.)

As reported at page 1001 of the committee report a question was put to Mr. Taylor, the chairman of the board and president of the company, by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Therefore, if these bills are accepted by parliament they will have the effect of providing a further $60 million to your companies to lend to individuals for single family dwellings?

To which Mr. Taylor replied:

Yes, sir.

Then, he went on to qualify his answer. He drew the distinction that the whole $60 million that they hoped to have available would not be for single family dwellings because they also intended to allot some money to multiple units, in the ratio of 70-30 per cent. I think we are entitled to go further into the question of the availability of mortgage money. If I may digress for a moment I should like briefly to relate an experience that I had some years ago when I was member of the provincial legislative assembly for the provincial constituency of Skeena. At the time there was great concern in my home community of Terrace and in other communities in that area, at the lack of mortgage funds available to build or acquire a home. On one occasion I was in Vancouver and visited the offices of three or four trust, mortgage and loan companies. I spoke to various officers of those companies. I do not know whether the Huron and Erie was one of the companies because I cannot remember the names, but they were all large, well established companies known across Canada.

I asked the officials of all of these companies what were the prospects of money being made available in communities such as Terrace, Prince Rupert and Smithers, these smaller, out of the way communities far removed from metropolitan areas of the nation. The officials of these companies gave me, in different terms and tones, the same answer. In effect, they said: "We can't be bothered because we are doing quite well in the city of Vancouver. We have enough business right here and don't have to go out of town to find opportunities to lend money".

In other words, they were not concerned. It was tough that these people lived 500 or a 1,000 miles out in the centre of the province but these corporations just could not concern themselves about that. I mention that as an aside because reference is made in the committee proceedings to the availability of mortgage funds in rural areas. As reported at pages 1004 and 1005 the officials of the company were asked questions on this point by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie).

I cannot deal with these answers in detail because they would take too long to read, but the gist of the answers given by Mr. Taylor is that there is slightly more money coming in from what he called western Canada, money that is being lent in the Toronto and Montreal areas, to meet the demand there.

The hon. member for Dauphin asked him a question that I think is worth setting on the record. It is answers to questions like this that put us in the position of doubting whether or not we are doing the correct thing by giving this bill immediate passage. If at the end of this hour the bill has not passed, I am sure the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair), and those like him who are responsible and reasonable, will not go running round the country levelling the accusations he made earlier against the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), accusations that are unfounded.

I am sure that the hon. member will not make the false accusation that we are opposed to more money being made available for mortgages, because we are not. But we are seriously concerned about some of the answers given in the committee proceedings, and this is why I want to put them on record. The hon. member for Dauphin asked this very important question of Mr. Taylor:

Is there any conscious effort—

That is to say, a deliberateness, not something accidental.

—on the part of your company to attempt to balance your regions? Do you attempt to lend back roughly what you take out of a region or is this impractical?

Mr. Taylor did not say anything about the practicality of this. He simply said:

No, I cannot say that we have done that, sir, over the years.

He then went into the history of the matter and said that in the early days most of their money was lent in the area of the Regina plains; that most of the money came from south western Ontario. Incidentally, in the early thirties most of the foreclosures were made by the same companies, Canada Trust and Huron and Erie.

The hon. member for Dauphin followed up his question with this one:

Do rural areas tend to give you a borrowing balance? I presume they do as compared to urban areas where you lend. Is this a noticeable factor?

Mr. Taylor replied:

I will ask Mr. Miller to answer that because I think he is better qualified to do so.

Mr. Miller is assistant general manager of finance and represented both Canada Trust and Huron and Erie. He replied:

Yes, I would say that more borrowings come in from rural areas than is lent out in rural areas on balance.

Then, the hon. member for Dauphin asked:

Do you think the difficulties of rural borrowers in acquiring money from companies such as yours, put them at a disadvantage as opposed to borrowers in a large city that have larger projects? Would this be a factor in less development in the rural area as opposed to a large urban area?

Mr. Miller replied:

I do not think you can generalize really because rural is a matter of degree. I do not think there is any problem in the rural areas around the metropolitan areas in obtaining loans, but if you get into the further, less accessible, rural areas I have no doubt that there is.

Even that well qualified and carefully phrased answer underlines the experience I had a number of years ago with trust and loan companies in the city of Vancouver, namely that Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation is damn well not interested in lending money in rural areas. It is just too bad people live out in the country as far as this company and other companies like it are concerned. These people are far too secure in their offices which I assume are in Toronto, though I do not know—to bother drawing money from the outlying parts of this nation. They prefer to concentrate their money in the cities where all they need do is cross the street or make a phone call to reinvest it.

The fact that Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation has over the years, not just this week or last month, not bothered to exert itself by providing mortgage money in rural areas concerns me. This is the company that gloats over the fact that it lends, as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton pointed out, 88 per cent, or 85 per cent, or whatever the figure is, of its money in the form of mortgages. But not mortgages for people in rural areas, in communities of the kind from which I come or those in Newfoundland to which my hon. friend referred a little while ago.

• (4:40 p.m.)

He knows, and others who live in the country know, that all the advantages accrue to the man who lives in the city, the urban dweller. He has no problem about getting mortgage money from the trust companies. But people who live in the country do find problems in this regard. There is also the fact that there was some misunderstanding, to say the least, in connection with the information which was presented to the committee, and that in addition there does not seem to be any desire even to attempt to bring down interest rates. For these reasons, I believe the bill requires a little more examination and study. There is no doubt in my mind that when five o'clock comes we may still be debating it. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) who is sponsoring this measure is too nice a guy to distort our views in the country. He is a friendly person. After all, he used to be legal officer for the co-operative movement. He has a feeling for people, and for good sense. Nevertheless, I believe we will have to examine this measure further or another day.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to observe such a good attendance here as I begin to make my erudite comments on this bill, Bill S-7, an act respecting the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation or, in French, La Corporation d'Hypothèque Huron et Érié. According to the explanatory note, the authorized capital of the corporation is presently limited to an amount not exceeding $10 million divided into 5 million shares of a par value of $2 each of which almost all shares have been allotted and issued as fully paid and non-assessable. The corporation now desires to have additional capital available for issuance.

The main clause of the bill, Mr. Speaker, is clause(1) which reads:

The authorized capital of the Corporation shall be twenty million dollars divided into ten million shares of the par value of two dollars each.

It is common knowledge that the report of the committee is now available, and appended to that report is an amendment by the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) seeking the deletion of clause 1 of the bill.

When I read the report, which is the product of close examination on the part of members of the committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, I found myself deeply impressed by the composition of that committee, which happens to be one of the highpowered committees of this house. Its membership includes the sponsor of this bill who has a wide knowledge of company affairs and legal matters. I understand he was a parliamentary agent for some years. He is a Rhodes scholar, along with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis). So, the hon. gentleman is certainly one whose remarks we should note and underline. Other members of the committee include the hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), a successful businessman before entering this chamber, and the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) who replaced the Hon. Robert Winters. Then, there is the hon. member for Waterloo South who is our financial critic. These men, among others, took a major part in the discussion in the committee.

Like many Canadians, I found it difficult to distinguish between Canada Trust and the Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation. It was a pleasure to read the remarks of Mr. Taylor who I believe is president of the company. I might draw attention to the fact that in dealing with these matters, the chairman of the committee wisely decided to consider both the present bill and Bill S-6, the bill affecting Canada Trust, at the same time. This afforded me an opportunity to become acquainted with the affairs of these two companies, so that I could clearly understand what we are being asked to do. As reported on page 988 of the minutes of proceedings dated January 21, Mr. Taylor stated:

> The two companies, if I may put it this way, are regarded by us as being one in everything but name. We have the same officers, the same management and the same basic policies.
>
> The Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation was founded in 1864 in London, Ontario, for the purpose of bringing moneys out from the old country and lending them to settlers who were establishing themselves in the rural areas of southwestern Ontario.
>
> At the turn of the century, in 1899, with the growth of inquiry for trust services, the Huron and Erie not being able to conduct trust services itself under its charter bought a trust company charter—the Canada Trust Company—and the two companies have functioned, as I said, virtually as one ever since with the Canada Trust Company as a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Huron and Erie.

So, we were given an opportunity to understand the background of these companies.

I understand the reason for this application is a wish to increase capitalization. Mention of the word "capitalization" makes a person like myself, who has had very little experience in corporation law, wonder what the application is all about. Again, we have been given some help, this time by Mr. Humphrys. It seems that Huron and Erie is attempting to double its capitalization because capitalization is linked with borrowing power. At page 993, Mr. Humphrys stated:

> The multiple for trust companies is 12½ times the capital and surplus, but it may be increased to 15 times subject to approval by the Treasury Board. For mortgage loan companies the limit stated in the law is four times, but this may also be increased 15 times subject to application by the company and approval by the Treasury Board. Both of these companies had their ratio approved at 15 times which is the maximum permissible under the law.

It was news to me, today, when some previous speakers noted with regard to an increase in capitalization, that the borrowing power of 15 times had been exhausted by the Huron and Erie and Canada Trust.

Mr. Blair: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Having in mind the fact that we are dealing with the affairs of large corporations I think it is extremely dangerous for anybody to make a categorical assertion that these borrowing powers, or indeed, any powers, have been exhausted. This was never said, and I am instructed it is not the case.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that he has raised a point of debate rather than a point of order.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It is a good time to raise points of order.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the comment of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton with regard to this particular point. As I say, having little or no experience in these corporation matters, I find them difficult to follow at times. I understand that borrowing powers are determined by the authorized capital plus the surplus. This means that if you take into account the authorized capital plus the surplus you can lend out 15 times the amount. I always thought the surplus was not included, but to my surprise I learned differently. The evidence indicated the multiple is only four times as far as mortgage companies are concerned and 15 times for trust companies, subject to approval. That puts me on notice that we ought to scrutinize carefully the activities of this company. In committee, representatives of this company proudly said that 88 per cent of their money is invested in mortgages. I point out that that money consists of the collective deposits of many depositors. Those deposits may take the form of savings accounts, guaranteed investment certificates or demand notes. When I hear the figure of 88 per cent I am reminded of the report tabled not long ago by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) which indicated that private financial institutions supply 42 per cent of the mortgage money needed in this country. Of that 42 per cent, 50 per cent is lent by insurance companies, 3.3 per cent by banks; 9 per cent by pension funds, and the rest by trust companies. It could be that a company investing 88 per cent of its money in mortgages does not have a balanced investment portfolio. I think it will be conceded that the investment policies of Canada Trust and Huron and Erie Mortgage Corporation are very similar.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Blair: Will the hon. member permit a question. Is he suggesting that lesser amounts of money ought to be made available to meet the housing needs of this country?

Mr. Gilbert: I appreciate the hon. member's interjection. He is concerned as much as I am about the matter of mortgage money and we both agree that more mortgage money must be found. The government has used methods of persuasion which have failed. Last August the Minister of Transport invited to Ottawa representatives of various financial institutions. He failed miserably to persuade them to put more money into mortgages. As a result, he had to take $170 million of public money in September and apply it to the field of public housing and building generally, so that the government's house building record could be maintained. Actually, the hon. member and I are ad idem on the serious mortgage problem.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I see the hon. member and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) both are specialists in Latin.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) asked Mr. Taylor, who appeared before the committee, questions about the priorities of spending in the public and private sectors of our economy. Mr. Taylor indicated he was concerned about the moneys being spent by federal, municipal and provincial governments. He said these expenditures were affecting the mortgage market. The hon. member for Waterloo then asked Mr. Taylor whether the private sector should not be in some way governed or restricted in its investment policies. That suggestion Mr. Taylor repudiated, maintaining that if the private or productive sector were restricted, the development of Canada's natural resources would suffer. Implicit in his remarks was the suggestion that the shocking incidence of this country's unemployment will increase and that inflation will continue spiralling upwards. To be fair to Mr. Taylor, he conceded that inflationary pressures in this country had resulted from the operations of the international money market.

Mr. Taylor indicated to the committee that on conventional mortgage moneys lent by his company the rate charged was 9½ per cent. He said that investors of the company were paid 7¾ per cent on their investments, leaving a spread between what was paid out and what was charged of approximately 1¾ per cent. Surely, then, if the company considers 1¾ per cent a fair return on a mortgage investment it does not matter whether the interest rate charged on the market is 6 per cent or 8 per cent.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time being five o'clock this house stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, February 24, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1968-69

A message from His Excellency the Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates (B) for the financial year ending March 31, 1969, was presented by Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the house.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the supplementary estimates my colleague the government house leader is prepared to make a motion to refer these final supplementary estimates to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. But after consultation I understand we will defer making this motion until later this day.

While I am on my feet I would like to table copies in English and in French of the booklets illustrating the new form in which the estimates will henceforth be prepared. I assume these will be distributed in the usual way to hon. members and I hope they will be of use to them in their study of the current estimates to which they relate in the various committees.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION CONTRACT EMPLOYEES

Question No. 629—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many individuals have been employed on a contract basis by the Department of Manpower and Immigration since the Department was established (b) what is the name and qualification of each person who has been employed under each individual contract since the Department was established (c) what has been the daily, weekly, monthly or annual salary for each person working under a contract for the Department (d) how much per diem did the Department of Manpower and Immigration pay for those individuals under contract while (i) in travel status (ii) at headquarters?

2. How many individuals are now working under contract for the Department of Manpower and Immigration and what specific Branch or Branches in the Department are they assigned to?

3. Could the work performed by individuals under contract be performed by the regular staff of the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

4. How are individuals employed under contract by the Department of Manpower and Immigration being hired (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) by the Department of Manpower and Immigration?

5. What desirable qualifications are required for those positions and what is the criterion used in making the selection in each case?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) 12; (b) See Appendix "A"; (c) See Appendix "A"; (d) (i) $16,987.12; (ii) nil.

2. Six. All are assigned to the Staff Training and Development Task Force.

3. No.

4. (a) No; (b) yes.

5. There are no desirable qualifications specified for these positions. The criterion used in making the selection in each case includes the following essential qualifications: a Bachelor's Degree in education, psychology, social work or business administration; five or more years experience in the field of staff training and development at a senior level; and the ability to manage, communicate and maintain effective interpersonal relations.

Appendix "A"

Department of Manpower and Immigration Individuals Employed on a Contract Basis Since Department was Established—January 1, 1966

Service Contracts Under TB 659318 and TB 670357 for 1967/1968

(b) Name	Qualification	(c) Annual Salary $
Bissonnette, E.	Professional Consultant	13,000
Bollen, J.	Training Specialist	19,000
Brooker, W. M. A.	Training Consultant	15,000
Dewis, G.	Professional Consultant	14,500
Fletcher, A.	Senior Technical Writer	14,000
Freisen, P. A.	Senior Technical Writer	13,500
McLean, C. (Miss)	Professional Consultant	12,000
Nault, C. (Mrs.)	Professional Consultant	13,000
Stevens, W. R.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Thibodeau, G. H.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Whitney, R. C.	Regional Training Manager	18,000
Zeitoun, L.	Professional Consultant	15,000

Note: Per diem amount (Applicable to the above contracts) 1. In Travel Status: In Canada $25; Outside Canada $32. 2. At Headqua rters: Nil.

REFERENDUM ON CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION

Question No. 756—Mr. Matte:

1. Is it the government's intention to hold a referendum on the constitutional question and, if not, for what reasons?

2. If the government intends to hold such a referendum, when will it be held?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. The government has no present intention of holding, and indeed can see no reason to hold, a referendum on the Constitution at this time.

2. Not applicable.

INFORMATIONAL AND CULTURAL TELEVISION

Question No. 907—Mr. Robinson:

Is the federal government planning, in the public television field, for a system of informational and cultural programming to acquaint the Canadian public with the works of governmental departments and the cultural heritage of Canada?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Not at present, but films produced by the National Film Board, touching these subject areas, have been shown on television, and other films of a similar kind are available.

TUPPER POINT, N.S.—GULF OIL REFINERY

Question No. 1,004—Mr. Fortin:

Has the Canadian Government studied a request by British American Oil to borrow a certain amount of money to enable its subsidiary Gulf Oil Corp. to construct a new refinery at Tupper Point, Nova Scotia and, if so (a) what is the amount requested (b) what is the proposed rate of interest (c) what are the suggested terms for repayment?

[Translation]

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): By an agreement signed on April 17, 1968 on behalf of the governments of Canada and Nova Scotia, Cape Breton Development Corporation and The British American Oil Company Limited, a grant of $4.5 million ($2.5 million from federal and $2.0 million from provincial funds) was made available towards the cost of an oil dock and ancillary facilities, estimated to cost $8.4 million, at the Point Tupper, Nova Scotia, site of the British American Oil Company (now Gulf Canada Limited) refinery currently under construction. The federal government is also financing the balance of the cost of the dock and will lease it to the company for 25 years at an annual rental which will amortize the cost of the dock, less $4.5 million, plus interest at the government rate. Under the terms of the agreement, title to the dock will be conveyed to the company at the end of the lease period.

[English]

CAR ALLOWANCE TO MINISTERS

Question No. 1,037—Mr. Coates:

1. In view of the answer received to Question No. 321, is it the intention of the Prime Minister and the Cabinet Ministers who have a chauffeur service provided to return the $2,000 car allowance to the federal Treasury?

2. Are Cabinet Ministers who have a chauffeur service provided required to make payments to the federal Treasury for the maintenance of vehicles used and, if so, how much has each Cabinet Minister paid out in the maintenance costs?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1 and 2. No Minister has been provided with a chauffeur-driven vehicle for his personal use. As was stated in the reply to Question 321, the 1968-69 estimates provide funds for a chauffered motor vehicle which is available to the Prime Minister during the performance of many of his official dutys, although he frequently prefers to drive his own car. In addition, as was stated in the same reply, some Ministers in the course of performing their official duties are occasionally driven in departmental cars or by departmental employees.

C.B.C. PROGRAM "AIR OF DEATH"

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Knowles (Norfolk-Haldimand):

1. With regard to the CBC program, "Air of Death", will the CBC study the special report of a three-man committee appointed by the Government of Ontario to investigate the allegations in the program?

2. Has any study been made, or will such be made, as to whether the program was a balanced presentation?

3. Did those preparing the program interview the local Medical Officer of Health or other doctors as to actual conditions of health of patients and, if so, how much, if any, use was made of such in the program?

4. (a) Did the program state that cattle had suffered "falling teeth" and that hundreds of cattle had died (b) on whose farm or farms did such take place?

5. Did the program state that people were suffering from fluoride poisoning and, if so, is such statement backed by medical evidence?

6. Are there any plans to present another program to meet the criticism directed at "Air of Death"?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Yes. A thorough study is being conducted.

2. Yes. The program has been the subject of intensive study within the Corporation.

3. An attempt was made to contact the Medical Officer of Health but he was not available at the time. An interview was conducted with Dr. W. G. Green, family physician to some of the participants in the program. This interview was not used because of poor broadcast quality of the voice track but information contained in the interview was used as background information in preparation of the script for the program.

4. (a) Yes. One of the farmers interviewed, Mr. Ted Boorsma, shown on camera with one of his cattle, referred to stains on the teeth and that sometimes the teeth fall out. Two additional references to loss of teeth appeared in the script of the program, based on statements of farmers in the Port Maitland area.

4. (b) Spokesmen for the local air pollution committee advised members of the C.B.C. production crew that "falling teeth" took place on the farms of Messrs. Boorsma and McAlonan and others. The committee also estimated that over a thousand cattle had contracted fluorosis and that many of these had died. The committee did not specify the name of the farmers on whose farms these cattle had died. However, the names of farmers compensated for fluoride damage, amounting to a total of $102,831.64, appear in the appendix of the report of the Ontario Government committee of inquiry into pollution (the Hall Committee). It is stated in the body of this report on pages 118 and 119, that the number of cattle compensated for was, in 1965—198 head, in 1966—125 head. The report does not specify the number compensated for in 1967.

A few months before "Air of Death" telecast of October 22, 1967, the Minister of Health for the Province of Ontario made the following statement in the legislature (on May 8, 1967): "In 1965 some 207 livestock were judged to have fluorosis. The figures for 1966 have not been completed as yet. To the best of our knowledge all cattle with fluorosis have been disposed of. We have no record of cattle being destroyed for other reasons." (Page 3116, official report, Legislature of Ontario debates, May 8, 1967).

5. Dr. George L. Waldbott, M.D., F.A.C.P., F.A.C.A., F.A.A.A., F.A.C.C.P., a specialist in allergic diseases, interviewed in the program, was introduced as having found that two farmers seemed to be suffering from fluoride intoxication. After describing the symptoms he found in the two patients he stated that first of all they should be hospitalized and more thorough and conclusive tests be carried out. Dr. Waldbott was asked "What's going to happen to these people who have fluoride poisoning if something isn't done for them?" He gave the opinion that if the persons affected were taken out of their surroundings the disease would clear up by itself but, if they continued to live in the area, eventually more serious damage would result.

6. No. Research is continuing on the general subject.

WORKING LANGUAGE IN CABINET MEETINGS

Question No. 1,249—Mr. McIntosh:

1. What is the working language of (a) meetings of the Cabinet (b) meetings of Committees of Cabinet (c) the Office of the Prime Minister (d) the offices of the Privy Council?

2. Is the Cabinet Room of the Privy Council equipped with facilities for simultaneous translation and, if so, is this equipment used at all meetings as a matter of routine?

3. If the Cabinet Room is not so equipped, in what manner may unilingual Members of the Cabinet participate in deliberations of the Cabinet?

4. Is Mr. C. J. Mackenzie, Secretary General of National Museums of Canada, Department of the Secretary of State, rated as fully bilingual by his department or by the Public Service Commission?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. (a) and (b); 2 and 3. All aspects of proceedings within the Cabinet and Cabinet Committees have always been regarded as confidential and subject to the oath of secrecy. It would not be in the public interest to depart from this well established constitutional position; (c) and (d) Both English and French are working languages in the office of the Prime Minister and the Privy Council Office and any officer may use the language of his choice.

4. Mr. Mackenzie, who is not fully bilingual, is improving his ability to speak French through language training courses given by the Public Service Commission. According to the Commission, Mr. Mackenzie is already well able to write and understand French to the extent required for him to perform his functions.

[Mr. Stanbury.]

PROVINCIAL DEBT

Question No. 1,273—Mr. Matte:

1. What was the debt of each province at the time of Confederation in 1867?

2. What is the present debt of each of these provinces?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. In 1867 only Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and the Province of Canada (divided into the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec by the B.N.A. Act of 1867) joined together to form Confederation. With the exception of Newfoundland, the other provinces did not exist as political entities at that time. The portion of the total debt of the Province of Canada attributable to each of Ontario and Quebec has not been established. The net debt of each of the three provinces on the eve of Confederation, June 30, 1867, was $9.0 million, $7.8 million and $74.4 million respectively for the provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Canada.

2. The Provincial Public Accounts show the debt of each province. However, because the provinces' accounts are not all on the same basis, these figures are not easily comparable from province to province. The latest available comparative figures can be found in the Dominion Bureau of Statistics Publication, Provincial Government Finance. As of March 31, 1965, the total direct and indirect debt, less sinking funds, for Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec and Ontario respectively were approximately $330,887,000; $365,322,000; $3,145,783,000 and $3,981,994,000.

APPOINTMENT OF INFORMATION OFFICERS

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many appointments to the Public Service in the classifications Information Officer 4 and 5 have been made since January 1, 1968, to date?

2 Were these appointments, if any, made from outside the Public Service or by promotion within it?

3. What are the names of those appointed and to what positions were they appointed?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. 14.

2. Six from outside the Public Service; eight from within the Public Service.

3.

Appointed as IS/4	Department
*Mr. Dwight E. Dolan	Indian Affairs and Northern Dev.
Mr. Alan H. Donnelly	Finance
Mr. Darrell Eagles	Indian Affairs and Northern Dev.
Mr. Keith V. D. Gardner	Trade and Commerce
*Mr. Denis J. Orchard	Finance
*Mr. Jean-Louis Delorimier	Trade and Commerce
Mr. Douglas A. Shenstone	Energy, Mines and Resources
*Mr. Benjamin C. Ward	Canadian Transport Commission
Mr. Harry M. Furniss	National Revenue (Taxation)

Appointed as IS/5	Department
*Mr. Paul Boudreau	External Affairs
*Mr. J. Reeves Haggan	External Affairs
Mr. Ken A. Prittie	Trade and Commerce
Mr. Kenneth F. White	Dominion Bureau of Statistics
Mr. Stanley K. Westall	Canadian International Development Agency

* Appointed from outside the Public Service.

CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER NORTH
POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,289—Mr. Coates:

1. How many post offices have been closed since June 25, 1968, in the constituency of Cumberland-Colchester North?

2. What are the sites of the closures that have taken place to date?

3. Are further post office closures contemplated in the present fiscal year and, if so, what are the sites of the proposed closures?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. None.

2. Not applicable.

3. In accordance with the policy to close smaller Revenue Post Offices, it has been decided to close the following offices: Londonderry Station; Upper Economy; Wentworth Centre; Head of Amherst; Old Barns; Thomson Station; Tidnish.

It is not expected that these offices will be closed before the coming Spring.

Further studies are being conducted with a view to closing additional Post Offices in this constituency within the closing program criteria but no decision has been made on any particular case as yet.

PENITENTIARY SERVICE AUSTERITY PROGRAM

Question No. 1,290—Mr. Coates:

1. Does the Canadian Penitentiary Service have an austerity program in effect insofar as employment of new staff is concerned?

2. If such an austerity program is in effect, has it had an adverse effect on the operation of penal institutions in the Maritime Provinces?

3. How many new employees were taken on strength in the Maritime Provinces in the last fiscal year?

4. How many additional employees were taken on strength in each of the fiscal years from 1963 to 1967 in the Maritime Provinces?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Yes.

2. No.

3. 43.

4.

Fiscal Year	Number
1963/64	17
1964/65	64
1965/66	93
1966/67	119

SPRINGHILL, N.S., YOUNG OFFENDERS
INSTITUTION

Question No. 1,291—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total employee and inmate strength at the Young Offenders Penal Institution in Springhill at the present time?

2. On what date will this penal institution be fully operational?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Medium Security Institution Strength (January 31, 1969): Employees, 192. Inmates being gradually admitted until Institution reaches full capacity. Present inmate population, 126.

2. This institution will be fully operational approximately July 1, 1969.

Questions

LOSS OF OLD AGE SECURITY CHEQUES

Question No. 1,295—Mr. Godin:

1. During the months of October, November and December 1968, were any Old Age Security cheques lost prior to their delivery?

2. If so, for each month and by province, how many Old Age Security pensioners eventually received duplicates of such cheques?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

2.

Province	Oct.	Nov.	Dec.
Newfoundland	4	5	4
Prince Edward Island	2	2	7
Nova Scotia	6	10	2
New Brunswick	6	14	14
Quebec	86	142	146
Ontario	99	107	30
Manitoba	10	9	9
Saskatchewan	8	7	2
Alberta	16	16	13
British Columbia	67	50	31
	304	362	258

CIVIL DEFENCE ADMINISTRATION COSTS

Question No. 1,303—Mr. Mather:

1. What, in dollars, was the federal cost of Civil Defence administration and operations in 1967 and 1968?

2. What, in dollars, was the same cost during the years, 1957-1968?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): In so far as the Department of National Defence is concerned, the Canadian Armed Forces' contribution to the Canadian Civil Defence program is only one of many activities in which military personnel participate. The personnel, equipment, facilities and other resources which would be allocated to that activity should the need arise, are employed in the course of any given fiscal year on other tasks or functions. Therefore, it is not possible to isolate costs which could be specifically assigned to civil defence.

In so far as the Emergency Measures' Organization is concerned, the reply is as follows: 1. $26,125,700.

2. $94,064,337.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

MONTMAGNY, QUE., HEAVY WATER PLANT

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Did the government have a study made concerning the possibility of establishing a heavy water plant to be located in the vicinity of the City of Montmagny or in the surrounding region and, if so, what was the result of the study?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): In so far as Atomic Energy of Canada Limited is concerned, no.

CUMBERLAND-COLCHESTER NORTH PROJECTS

Question No. 1,314—Mr. Coates:

What projects will be carried out in the constituency of Cumberland-Colchester North by the Harbours and Rivers Division of the Department of Public Works in the fiscal year 1969-70, at what locations and at what estimated cost to the federal Treasury?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Diligent River: Barricade; Five Islands: Wharf repairs; Joggins: Wharf repairs; Northport: Wharf repairs; Pugwash: Paving, Dredging by departmental plant; Wallace: Derricks.

It is not customary to give the estimated cost of a project before tenders are called.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,328—Mr. MacLean:

How many rural post offices have been closed in Prince Edward Island in each of the last five years?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1964, none; 1965, 3; 1966, 6; 1967, 3; 1968, 8.

NEWFOUNDLAND—POLLUTION AT LONG HARBOUR

Question No. 1,331—Mr. Harding:

1. What are the results of the investigation of the Fisheries Department into the dead fish discovered near the plant of Electric Reduction Company of Canada Ltd. at Long Harbour, Placentia Bay?

2. Was the main cause for the dead fish, waste material being pumped into the harbour by the above plant?

3. If so, what action is the government considering in order to eliminate this pollution?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries): 1. There was an accidental brief overflow in the new Electric Reduction Company of Canada plant during the start up, from a system containing water which may be contaminated with fluorine and phosphorus. This system is normally partially closed. Officials assured the Department that such an occurrence would not take place in normal operation. A localized fish kill occurred.

2. This appears by virtue of coincidence of timing of fish kill and overflow to have been the case, but analyses of dead fish have not detected sufficient excessive toxic dosages to confirm this without doubt.

3. A program of regular water samples from the outfall area was immediately instituted to monitor for possible contamination, and bottom organisms near the outfall have been inspected by Departmental scuba divers. There have been no indications of a recurrence of excessive pollution.

EMBASSIES AND CONSULATES IN CANADA

Question No. 1,361—Mr. Robinson:

How many Embassies and/or Consulates are there in Canada, what countries are represented and where is each Embassy and/or Consulate located?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There are 100 countries which have diplomatic representatives accredited to Canada. 63 of these are resident in Ottawa and 37 with dual accreditation are resident in Washington or New York. 80 of the missions are Embassies and 20 are Commonwealth High Commissions. There are also 283 consular and trade offices in various cities across Canada. Addresses are listed in the publication "Representatives of Other Countries in Canada" prepared by the Department of External Affairs.

OVERPAYMENTS ON TETRACYCLINE SALES

Question No. 1,378—Mr. McGrath:

1. Is there any evidence of price-fixing in Canada on the part of those drug firms making tetracycline and, if so, is the federal government considering laying charges to recover overpayments, as recently happened in the United States to the tune of 120 million dollars?

2. Has the Minister consulted with authorities of the United States Government on this question, with regard to other drugs which may be subject to price-fixing?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. On January 23, 1968 (unrevised Hansard, p. 5844) the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs informed the House that material obtained by the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act in the general inquiry under section 42 of the Act concerning the manufacture, distribution and sale of drugs did not indicate the existence of an arrangement to fix prices of antibiotic drugs among Canadian companies. He also stated that the Director was in touch with the Antitrust Division of the United States Department of Justice to ascertain whether any disclosures in their criminal proceedings under U.S. legislation indicate there might be a similar situation with respect to Canadian operations. The Director advises that after communicating with the United States authorities he was satisfied there was no reason to believe an offence had taken place in Canada. It should be added that the actions to recover overpayments in the United States are civil actions for damages laid by public and private purchasers from the drug manufacturers.

2. Apart from the consultation of the Director with the United States Antitrust Division, there have been no further communications.

TORONTO—BELL TELEPHONE-CABLE TV COLLUSION

Question No. 1,381—Mr. Burton:

1. Is the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs conducting an investigation into a case of apparent collusion between Bell Telephone Company and 5 cable TV companies in the Toronto area?

2. If so, what are the terms of reference for the investigation and by whom is it being conducted?

3. Is the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs conducting an investigation into the affairs of Bell Telephone Company and one of its subsidiaries Northern Electric Company?

4. If so, what are the terms of reference for the investigation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. In reply to questions asking whether inquiries have been instituted under the Combines Investigation Act, the general practice is that no information is given out as to whether a particular inquiry has been or is being pursued with respect to a particular group of companies or individuals unless and until a report is published.

2. See answer to 1.

Questions

3. Yes. An inquiry is being conducted under the Combines Investigation Act which concerns the relationship between the Bell Telephone Company of Canada and Northern Electric Company, Limited. The reason for disclosing the existence of the inquiry and the matters with which it is primarily concerned are set out in the Annual Report of the Director of Investigation and Research under the Act for the year ended March 31, 1968, at pages 54-55.

4. See answer to 3.

ST. JEAN-DE-LALANDE, QUE., POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,394—Mr. Rodrigue:

Does the government intend to build a post office at St. Jean-de-Lalande (Hamel Office), in the federal constituency of Beauce?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Not at the present time.

[English]

ROYAL COMMISSION ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

Question No. 1,427—Mr. Fortin:

1. When was the Royal Commission on the status of women established and who are the members of that Commission, what amount has each member received since that Commission was established?

2. What has been the cost of the Commission since its establishment?

3. When will the Commission present its report?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): I am informed by the Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada as follows: 1. The Royal Commission on the Status of Women in Canada was established by Order in Council on February 16, 1967.

The persons appointed to this Commission and the amounts received by each member are as follows: Mrs. Florence Bird, Ottawa, Ontario, $36,737.50; Mr. Donald Gordon, Jr. (resigned November 1/67), Waterloo, Ontario, $5,550.00; Mr. Jacques Henripin, Montreal, P.Q., $16,425.00; Dr. John P. Humphrey (appointed Feb. 2/68), Montreal, P.Q., $10,875.00; Mrs. Lola M. Lange, Claresholm, Alberta, $24,750.00; Miss Jeanne Lapointe, Quebec City, P.Q., $17,400.00; Miss Elsie Gregory MacGill, Toronto, Ontario, $22,750.00; Mrs. Doris Ogilvie, Fredericton, N.B., $23,550.00.

[Mr. Basford.]

2. The total cost of this Commission from its establishment to February 18, 1969 is $995,599.

3. The Commission is endeavouring to present its Final Report by the end of the year.

PENSION TO JAMES COYNE

Question No. 1,437—Mr. Coates:

1. Is James Coyne, the former Governor of the Bank of Canada in receipt of a pension at the present time and, if so, what is the amount of his pension and how much has he received to date in pension payments?

2. Have any actions been taken that would result in an increase in the pension of future Governors of the Bank of Canada who retire?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. The situation with respect to Mr. Coyne's pension was described by the Minister of Finance on November 18, 1963, in reply to a question by the Member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, Hansard page 4856. Mr. Coyne has continued to draw the same pension since that date.

2. The pension rights of future Governors of the Bank will depend upon their length of service, the salary they have received over various periods and the reason for their retirement. The present by-law relating to the pension rights of a Governor who retires for any reason other than age or disability is that approved by P.C. 1967-744 which appears in the Canada Gazette of May 13, 1967 (page 1365). It requires the payment of extra contributions to the pension fund in consideration of the special rights relating to retirement for reasons other than age or disability. While the specific wording of the question does not apply to the present Governor, the latter has advised me that he completed last year the payment of the extra contributions referred to above and that he had informed the Board of Directors that he would not draw more in pension under this by-law than what he would have been entitled to at the end of the period during which he made the extra contributions. Consequently the recent change in the present Governor's salary has no effect on his pension.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY BY KATES PEAT MARWICK AS TO CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of his announcement of the decision to make the post office into a Crown corporation would the minister say whether the study by Kates Peat Marwick and Company of Toronto investigating this question was received by the government before the decision was taken?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I made no such announcement. If one had read the reports of this in the Montreal Star, the Montreal Gazette, or La Presse of Montreal he could have seen that. I said that there were studies going on looking forward to the possibility of a Crown corporation and at that time, in the fall, I would submit such reports to my colleagues in the cabinet.

IMMIGRATION

TIMING OF DISTINCTION BETWEEN DESERTERS AND DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Would the minister inform the house whether at entrance points from the United States there is a difference in the policy applied to draft dodgers and to military deserters, and if so when that difference in policy was issued as a directive to the officers concerned.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I have already explained several times this distinction in policy. I would be happy to inquire as to the exact date of the formation of this policy. It is certainly not a new policy with regard to the department, since I became the minister.

Mr. Lewis: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister the other day is reported to have said there is nothing in the law which makes such a distinction, in so far as what I have read is concerned, and the fact that there is a great deal of confusion in the minds of many of us with regard to the distinction, would the minister indicate what the distinction is between the two classes of people seeking admission.

Mr. Speaker: I have the impression this is a point of debate more than the type of question which should be asked at this time.

Mr. Lewis: May I rephrase it with your permission, Mr. Speaker, and ask the minister whether he would consider tabling the directive that contains the difference in respect of the treatment to be given to those applying as draft dodgers and those applying who are said to be military deserters. When tabling that document would the minister also indicate what basis there is in the statute for such a distinction.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I will consider tabling such a document, but I should tell my hon. friend that these documents are internal in the department and are not normally tabled. However I shall consider whether in this case an exception should be made.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

REQUEST FOR DECISION ABOUT MAN AND HIS WORLD

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

This morning, the radio announced that a decision would be taken today concerning Man and His World, in Montreal. Could the Prime Minister make a statement in that connection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know what decision will be taken in Montreal, Mr. Speaker, but as far as the federal government is concerned, the matter is in the hands of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who at this time is in Western Canada. I know that he is to give consideration to that problem and I understand he is to meet the authorities of the city of Montreal tomorrow.

[English]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—SUGGESTION INVOLVING EXCLUSION FROM EUROPE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has the government of Canada received any exchanges from the French government or General de Gaulle personally relating to a new European relationship excluding NATO from Europe and if so what was Canada's reaction to such a suggestion?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; the Canadian government has not received any such representation from the French government but was made aware of the conversations between the British ambassador to Paris and the President.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask the minister whether the government of Canada had any discussion or conversation either with the French government or the General himself regarding Canada's role in NATO?

Mr. Sharp: Not so far as I am aware, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

FULL TIME FEDERAL MEDIATION SERVICE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is it the intention of the government to establish a full time federal mediation service as suggested by the Canadian Railway Labour Executives Association last Monday?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I made such an announcement on several previous occasions.

While I am on my feet I should like to congratulate the hon. member for his particular support of Bill C-186.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am 100 per cent against Bill C-186, but I should like to ask the hon. member a supplementary question. When meeting with the C.N.T.U. did that body express the opinion in respect of the government's dropping of Bill C-186 that it was the greatest example of political duplicity since the days of Mackenzie King.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Edmonton West.

FINANCE

SECURITIES COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to advise the house what progress he has been able to make with provincial authorities in arriving at an agreement for a national securities commission and, if he has run into problems generally, what is the nature of those difficulties, in view of the fact that the government has announced this legislation is to be considered later this session?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, because the discussions are confidential I think it would be premature on my part to divulge what was actually being discussed and what, if any, problems there are. I previously announced that I expect to lay before the house some legislation dealing with this situation, at which time the policy of the government will be known.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am not fishing for details, Mr. Speaker, but in view of the fact that a lot of people support the idea of a national securities commission, can the minister indicate what difficulties have been encountered, and that they are matters of detail rather than of fundamental principle?

Mr. Basford: I do not want to comment one way or the other, Mr. Speaker. In light of what the hon. member has said in observing that there is widespread support for some form of national securities administration, I would expect that any difficulties there may be will be overcome in light of that widespread support.

OIL

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF CANADIAN POLICY

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that President Nixon has taken over from the Secretary of the Interior responsibility for oil import policy, what steps have been taken or are in the process of being taken by the Canadian government to put Canada's position and its necessities before the president, so far as the export of oil from this country to the United States is concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, whatever steps are being taken are being taken by the minister responsible for energy, mines and resources.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the last part of what the Prime Minister said, and I do not know who is responsible as far as this particular matter is concerned at this moment. That is why I asked the Prime Minister the question. I should like to ask him whether he can assure us that this is one of the subjects he will be taking up with the President when he meets with him?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this will be one of the subjects I will be dealing with when I go to Washington. The minister in charge is the Minister without Portfolio from Saskatchewan.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister assure us that Canada's oil market and oil production will not become a sacrificial lamb or a quid pro quo in respect of changes by Canada of its NATO policies?

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's supplementary question is more in the form of a presentation.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister is speaking with President Nixon about this very important matter of oil policy, will he see to it that President Nixon is asked to give Canada the same kind of square deal the Conservative government was able to get from the United States government on an earlier occasion?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSTPONEMENT OF CONFERENCE ON NATIVE PEOPLE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Minister without Portfolio, perhaps I could direct my question to whoever is substituting for the minister today. I should like to ask whether we might have an explanation as to why the federal conference on native Indian people scheduled for March 6-March 14 has once again been postponed?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The department will be under question tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I didn't ask you the question.

Mr. Trudeau: Whom did you ask?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ARDA AND FRED—EFFECT OF NEW PROGRAM

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister of economic and regional development whether he will consider making a statement for purposes of clarification, on motions or at some other time, as to whether or not the new regional economic development program which this government envisages will in any way affect the operations of ARDA and FRED in specific designated areas in Canada? I ask that question because of the growing impression that the new policy of the government will somehow or other affect the operations of these existing programs.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker there is no doubt that the new legislation will affect existing programs. Moreover, I expect that we will soon have the opportunity to discuss all these matters when the bill is before the house.

[English]

ATLANTIC REGION—STEPS TO ENCOURAGE ESTABLISHMENT OF INDUSTRY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the minister of regional expansion. Would the minister indicate whether discussions are now being held either by himself or his officials with respect to the immediate encouragement of the establishment of large scale industry in the Atlantic region, similar to the recent announcement made by the Ford Motor Company with respect to its $50 million plant to open shortly in Windsor?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me the hon. member is asking the minister to make a statement of very wide scope and general nature that perhaps should be made at the calling of motions. The hon. member may want to suggest to the minister that he make this kind of statement at the appropriate time.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Perhaps I may rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. I simply ask whether in view of many specific statements on this subject such discussions are going on at the present time with industry, in the hope of establishing large scale industry in the Atlantic region.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Certainly not through me, Mr. Speaker. I could find out if some department official is in touch with the people involved in this.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General, of which I gave him notice. In view of assertions made publicly by Mr. Paul Akehurst of Canadian Contemporary

Inquiries of the Ministry

News concerning depositions in a civil case in California indicating possible abuses of diplomatic privileges by Canadians abroad, including a possible connection with narcotics offences in Mexico, will the minister consider making a statement to the house tomorrow on this serious issue?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his courtesy in giving me notice of the question. I will be very glad to obtain the necessary information and bring forward a reply either tomorrow or Wednesday, depending on how quickly I can get the information.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ROD SERVICE LIMITED—POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the house if his meetings on Friday, in Montreal, managed to prevent the employees of Rod Service Limited from going on strike?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I was not expecting the employees of Rod Service Limited to go on strike.

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the minister tell us if his department intends to cancel some of its contracts with Rod Service Limited, and, if so, could he also tell us how the employees of that company will be affected by such a decision?

Mr. Kierans: I have already cancelled two contracts pertaining to mobile and special services, and we have hired some 27 employees of Rod Service Limited.

[English]

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1968-69

TREASURY BOARD—REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION OF ITEM 5B

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the President of the Treasury Board whether later in the day, when the motion is made to refer the supplementary estimates to the appropriate committee, the minister would make a full statement explaining the item of the supplementary estimates relating to vote 5B, for the sum of an additional $105 million for contingencies. This item relates to the estimates of the Treasury Board. Will the minister make such a statement at that time?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, this is a somewhat detailed question and I think perhaps it could be more reasonably asked of the committee, which is sitting tomorrow morning. I anticipate being asked this question and providing an answer there.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is it the intention of the government to set up a summer works program for university and high school students who will be seeking part time and full time employment within a few months?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the question of summer employment for students is presently under consideration in the department.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. I wonder whether, in view of the time of the year, and so on, relating to university students, the minister would avail himself of an opportunity at a very early date to make a statement on motions about the way in which his department is making plans for summer employment of such students, and how persons can avail themselves of the framework in which these plans are set up.

Mr. MacEachen: I shall be glad to consider that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

QUALITY AND COST OF AUTOMOBILE REPAIRS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Is the minister giving consideration to initiating in this country an inquiry similar to that carried on in the United States by a government agency into the alleged high price and low qualty of car repairs across Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, not at the moment. I have previously answered that question, to the effect that my officials are watching the inquiries being carried on in Washington by the Federal Trade Commission, and also the anti-trust proceedings in California, to determine whether there are conditions which would require appropriate action in Canada.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO PLANNING FOR FARM PROGRAM

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is the minister contemplating a meeting with the provincial ministers of agriculture prior to spring seeding in order to work out with his provincial counterparts suggestions for a desirable farm program for this year?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Much more than that will take place before the spring planting, in that an agriculture congress will be convened in Ottawa on March 24 when, in addition to many of the provincial ministers of agriculture, leaders from all sections of the whole industry will be here to discuss and to try to find acceptable solutions to many of the problems.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Agriculture. According to a news release from the minister's office today, the report from the royal commission on farm machinery prices is not expected until late 1969. I should like to ask the minister whether he has given consideration to asking the royal commissioners to try to have the report ready by the summer of this year so that action can be taken before 1971.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The hon. member knows that asking these royal commissions to report sooner than they feel is prudent is rather difficult, in view of the research which they need to carry out to provide proper answers to the questions referred to them. I have already advised the house that Dr. Barber will be providing us with an interim report, which can be the basis for a discussion of this problem at the agriculture congress next month.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON DRYING OPERATION

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that there is limited time left in which to dry the damp grain still on prairie farms, will the minister make a statement to the house in the near future on the progress that is being made in the drying of grain locally on farms in western Canada?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce announced on Friday, I think, we will have a report from the Canadian Wheat Board which will give us their estimate of the total volume of tough and damp grain left on the farms. Of course this is only an estimate. However, I do not accept the hon. member's premise that there is a limited time left for drying. It could be variable, depending on the weather.

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In addition to providing us with information from the Wheat Board on the volume of grain to be dried, will the minister also provide us with information as to the number of driers which have been set up locally and the estimated drying that can be done.

Mr. Olson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

DRUGS

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY CRIME

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I would like to direct this question to the Solicitor General. In view of the increasing reports of drug distribution, including not only marijuana and l.s.d. but heroin and hashish, will the government now give consideration to setting up a royal commission on international crime, as requested by several provincial attorneys general?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): I do not believe I can accept the premise on which the question is based. There are not requests for such commission from several attorneys general.

Mr. Paproski: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of the reference yesterday on C.B.C. "Sunday Supplement" to the effect that marijuana can be purchased in Edmonton seven days a week, and will he look into the situation?

Inquiries of the Ministry

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED NUMBERS FROM FRENCH SPEAKING NATIONS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of Canada's commitment to the new Francophonia agency, can the minister state whether there are any plans for increasing immigration from French speaking nations to Canada, as a means of assisting them?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am not sure whether I heard the hon. member's question correctly.

An hon. Member: Or wanted to hear it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Perhaps the minister would take it as notice, read it in Hansard and reply at his convenience.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

SUPPORT BY FRANCE TO EFFECT QUEBEC SEPARATION

Mr. Norman A. Cafik (Ontario): I have a question to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Does the Canadian Government contemplate any action regarding the alleged statement by the foreign minister of France that France would support efforts by Quebec to separate from Canada, if requested by that province?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am not aware that the foreign minister of France has made any such statement.

Mr. Baldwin: Aren't you on his mailing list?

EXTERNAL AID

BIAFRA—POSSIBILITY OF INCREASED RELIEF EFFORTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question to direct to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. It relates to the statement made on Saturday by President Nixon that the United States intends to step up its relief work to Nigeria and Biafra without becoming involved in the political aspects of the conflict, and his appointment of Professor Clarence Ferguson of Rutgers University to talk with both sides. In the light of this substantial alteration in United States foreign policy in connection with relief operations, is the government reconsidering its own policy to make Canada's relief efforts more effective?

[Mr. Paproski.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): We are always considering ways of making our relief efforts more effective, but I repeat, the best way of making them more effective would be to receive authorization from Colonel Ojukwu to allow daylight landings in Biafra.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In the light of this important statement by the President, would the Prime Minister see to it that this topic is raised during his conference with him toward the end of March, and meanwhile would he make himself more fully aware of the United States commitment in this regard?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): May I ask the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether it is not the case that Colonel Ojukwu's refusal resulted from the conditions set down by the federal military government in Nigeria, that no other planes would be allowed to land at Uli airport except relief planes and, if so, whether the Canadian government supports that Nigerian position?

Mr. Trudeau: That is not the Nigerian position as stated to Professor Head of my office by General Gowon himself last October. The conditions laid down were that daylight flights should be used only for relief purposes and not for the transportation of arms. That was the only condition demanded by General Gowon, and it seemed to us a reasonable one.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—BOMBING OF CIVILIANS AND RED CROSS OUTPOSTS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Has Canada protested to Nigeria against that country's daylight bombing of civilians and Red Cross outposts in built-up areas of Biafra? Has the Prime Minister expressed the abhorrence of Canadians for this type of brutality?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have not made any specific protest. War is a horrible thing, and the sooner it is over the better. Therefore, the earlier we can get agreement upon a basis for negotiation the better. At the present time such a basis does not exist. We may deplore the acts of war but we cannot stop them as long as war goes on.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Will the minister condemn the Nigerians for this type of activity and protest to them, since we have not done so already?

Mr. Sharp: There are atrocities on all sides in all wars, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

P.E.I.—REQUEST FOR FASTER DELIVERY

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): My question is directed to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. What does his department propose to do to speed up mail delivery service from Central Canada to Prince Edward Island? We might as well be living in Siberia, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask him whether or not the welcome sign is still on the mat for him at the office of his old union, the C.N.T.U. since his government so unceremoniously dumped his brainchild Bill C-186, once its usefulness in the election was over?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

VANCOUVER ISLAND—DELAY IN PAYMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received any complaints about long delays of up to four or five weeks in making payments of unemployment insurance on Vancouver Island, particularly to loggers who have been out of work since early in December, and if so what action has been taken by his department to rectify this situation?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I have received no such complaints directly in my capacity as Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. If the hon. gentleman knows of any particular case, of course I should like to deal with it personally, in view of the fact that I am rather happy to see him back in his seat. I can assure the hon. gentleman that all such problems are dealt with immediately and I doubt whether there is any basis for his allegation.

Inquiries of the Ministry

STUDENT UNREST

VANDALISM PROMPTED BY OUTSIDE POLITICAL FORCES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): I should like to direct this question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. While congratulating the right hon. gentleman on his forthright statement to student lawbreakers, I would ask him whether the federal government is taking any action to get at the causes of the outbreaks of violence across Canada, and to deal with the suggestion that various Marxist or communist groups are behind them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The Solicitor General has already stated in the house that his department and the R.C.M.P. have offered their co-operation to local and provincial police forces.

Mr. Paproski: Does the Prime Minister not feel that something more is required than a statement by himself to a Liberal meeting?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FARM MACHINERY

PURCHASES FROM UNITED KINGDOM AT REDUCED PRICES

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker, based on an answer which the hon. gentleman gave a few weeks ago to the effect that it may be many months before the Barber Commission is in a position to make a report to the government. In these circumstances, would the Department of Agriculture consider making a direct and immediate investigation into the alleged availability of British farm machinery to Canadian farmers at greatly reduced prices by comparison with current Canadian prices?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): We have considered that, but Dr. Barber has indicated that he is inquiring into this very matter at the present time, and rather than set up another inquiry I think perhaps I should ask him for an interim report on this particular aspect of the matter.

Mr. Danforth: Does the minister believe there is a prospect of an interim report being provided before it becomes necessary to purchase machinery for this year's crop planting?

Mr. Olson: I am not sure whether an interim report could be provided in so short a time. There are some farmers, I suppose, who think they should order the machinery they will need this spring right now, so they would have no time at all to wait for a report. However, I shall be in touch with Dr. Barber and we shall see what can be done by way of providing a report on his inquiries to date.

THE SENATE

INQUIRY AS TO MANITOBA VACANCY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that there is now a Manitoba vacancy in the Senate—

An hon. Member: How about you?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —would the Prime Minister make it clear that this vacancy will not be filled, so that we may begin the abolition of the Senate by attrition?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and I direct it to the Prime Minister. Would he, in considering this matter of filling the Senatorial vacancies for Manitoba, consult with the provincial government, which is obviously a popular government and close to the people of Manitoba?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISING OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Now that the legislature of Ontario has decided to initiate television coverage of its proceedings, would the Prime Minister inform the house of the steps being taken here to give this subject serious consideration, with a view to arranging for proceedings both in this house and in the committees to be televized?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking a question which he has already asked before. Even if there were anything new, he is asking the Prime Minister for a statement, and a statement of that kind should not be made at this time.

[Mr. Olson.]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): With respect, Your Honour, the question I asked on Wednesday related to one particular committee charged with examining the procedures of this house. Today I am asking the Prime Minister whether or not this important matter—and many hon. members feel that it is important—could not be dealt with and discussed in some other way.

Perhaps I might put a specific question to the Prime Minister and ask him whether he would be agreeable to allowing a day's debate at some time soon to ascertain the degree of support in the house for this suggestion.

[Translation]

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR DOCUMENT PREPARED FOR DELEGATES

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

In a news release handed to the hon. member concerning the congress to be held in March, mention is made of a document prepared specially for that occasion. May I ask the minister whether a copy of that document will be handed to members of the standing committee on agriculture before the congress so that they can look into it?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will check into that today. I was of the opinion that the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture had already received copies of three of the papers that are now ready for distribution.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of these papers not only to members of the committee but to all members of the house, would the minister see that they are distributed to all members?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, I will look into that.

AIR CANADA

TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES FROM WINNIPEG

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. I should like to ask him whether he can tell the house when he will be able to carry out his undertaking or commitment to go to Winnipeg and meet with the employees of Air Canada and the C.N.R., which undertaking he will recall giving some time ago.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have had many invitations from many parts of the country to pay visits. Winnipeg is very high on the priority list, but I will not be able to visit there for at least several weeks.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. My question had to do with the transfer of employees of Air Canada from Winnipeg and also the transfer of C.N.R. employees to Winnipeg.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Schreyer: May I ask the minister whether he intends—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is repeating the question that he asked in the first instance. In view of this the Chair recognizes the hon. member for Churchill.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FULFILMENT OF TREATY RESPECTING MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman could tell the house if the government is giving any consideration to a renegotiation of the Migratory Birds Convention Act in order that the government can once again fulfil this particular aspect of the Indian treaty rights.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter is part of the total question relating to Indians that is being considered by the minister of that department.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ATLANTIC REGION—REQUEST FOR OUTLINE OF AGREEMENTS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of regional and economic expansion. I should like to ask the minister whether he can tell the house if he is prepared to indicate to all hon. members the present and planned agreements that have and will be made between his department and the various Atlantic provinces in order to clarify some of this—not intended I am sure—confusion which surrounds the situation at the present moment.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I stated clearly enough, I think, that there was only one agreement to be signed with Prince Edward Island, that there was no planned agreement with any other province at this time, and that there would probably be none before the government organization bill is passed.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I and other hon. members have been asking the minister questions in the past number of weeks and there has been some confusion regarding the provinces of Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island. For example, on February 19—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should indicate for the benefit of the Chair what his question of privilege is, so that a ruling may be made. The hon. member might also indicate whether he proposes to move a motion as a result of the question of privilege he is now raising. I am prepared to hear it, provided it is a legitimate matter of privilege and the question is stated clearly for the Chair.

Mr. Lundrigan: I have to draw Your Honour's attention to page 5715 of Hansard where appear questions posed to the minister about the FRED program that is under negotiation with Newfoundland. The minister answered the question and indicated there was no such agreement. I posed further questions about whether there would be an agreement with the province of Newfoundland, and the follow-up answers indicated that there would be such an agreement within a week. On re-reading Hansard the following day no mention was made of a week; this had been changed, perhaps in the process of translation. In addition, on being questioned the following day the minister indicated that he did not intend to refer to Newfoundland, but rather to Prince Edward Island.

Therefore, perhaps the minister could take the opportunity to tell the house exactly what is planned or is being presently negotiated so that the whole matter can be cleared up. I ask Your Honour's indulgence to have the minister inform himself, because he does not seem to be aware of what he is talking about.

Mr. Speaker: I have to rule that there is no question of privilege. The hon. member has asked whether the minister would make a statement. That is a perfectly legitimate question, but it seems to me that the minister has replied to the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, with your leave, I would like to say a few words on the question of privilege.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think it would be preferable if there were no debate on the question of privilege. Obviously there seems to have been a misunderstanding in this matter. As far as the Chair is concerned the point is perfectly clear, and I have ruled that there is no question of privilege. The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have recognized the hon. member for Athabasca; I will return to the hon. member later.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether, aside from indicating to the house the state of the protracted agreement with Prince Edward Island, he would indicate tomorrow the present status of negotiations with other Atlantic provinces in regard to future agreements between those provinces and his department.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I have myself clarified this point three times at least for the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate and I think all he has to do is to read Hansard to understand what is going on.

[English]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, could I rephrase my question?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

STUDENT UNREST

VANDALISM PROMPTED BY OUTSIDE POLITICAL FORCES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Yewchuk: I thank hon. members for the kind courtesy shown to me.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Yewchuk: By way of explanation, Mr. Speaker, after giving the matter consideration, and in view of what happened last June 25, I decided to revert to the method that has withstood the test of time as a means of increasing the Conservative population of this country.

I should like to pose a question to the Prime Minister which is supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre. In response to a question on February 18 the Prime Minister stated that cabinet committees were looking into the problem of student unrest. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would be willing to state who are the members of these committees and what are their terms of reference.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is customary to reveal the membership of such cabinet committees, but I do not mind saying what I had in mind on this particular question.

The question is being studied by the Solicitor General, by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and by the Minister of Justice. We have occasion from time to time to discuss this problem in one guise or another in one or other of our cabinet committees. There is no special cabinet committee set up for the purpose.

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question. In due course will a statement be made on motions concerning the results of these investigations?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General may consider doing that. The practice is that no report is made while investigations are pending. Once they have been terminated he may consider either taking action or making a statement in the house.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

NATIONAL LIBRARY ACT

MEASURE RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION, POWERS OF LIBRARIAN, ETC.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Secretary of State) moved that Bill C-171, an act respecting the National Library, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

• (2:50 p.m.)

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, from—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanbury: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should point out that the applause, although appreciated, is not for the same reason as that accorded to the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) a few minutes ago.

From concept to reality, the gestation period of Canada's National Library was even longer than that of medicare. Plans for a National Library were mentioned by Sir John A. Macdonald as early as 1883, but it was not until 70 years later, on January 1, 1953, that our National Library came into being. Now only 16 years old it is one of the youngest of our national institutions but already one of the most important. At a time when knowledge is multiplying at a dizzying pace, a national repository of fact and thought is assuming growing importance.

We must be certain that the legislative framework for such a vital institution does not restrain its ability to respond to current and future needs. In the 17 years since the National Library Act was first framed, the role and function of libraries have changed greatly and will be evolving rapidly in coming years.

The age of electronics is creating new opportunities for libraries to serve as complete information centres. As the key-stone of our country's library network, the National Library must be able to serve as the nerve centre of a fully integrated and highly automated information system at the disposal of the Canadian people and their institutions. The purpose of this bill is to update the charter of the National Library so it may assist Canadians to cope better with the current explosion of research and publications, which is a world phenomenon. It reflects the changes of the past 17 years in the library world and permits the National Library to assume the dynamic role required of it today. The bill also aims at avoiding costly duplication during this period of explosive library developments, while ensuring the best possible service with the human and material resources available. Automation is coming to libraries. Data banks will have to make bibliographic information available to all libraries through an inter-library communications network. Such developments are necessary, but expensive. We must ensure that they occur with adequate co-ordination so that we will get full value for our investment.

The National Library is now being asked to assist in the planning and co-ordination of collections in research libraries and of electronic information retrieval systems. Two factors make such planning particularly urgent. First, considerable funds are now available to university libraries for the purchase of books, and there is wide recognition of a need for co-ordination of acquisition policies so that unnecessary duplication may be avoided. Second, the advent of electronic techniques for storing, processing and transmitting bibliographic information has had considerable impact on library methods and techniques. It has become imperative to achieve compatibility among the systems to be established by the principal libraries of Canada. The National Library of Canada must be at the very centre of our National Library network; at the same time, it is the logical instrument to co-ordinate Canadian efforts with those in other countries.

Government libraries, no less than others, can profit from co-ordination. They collectively own resources from which the entire country, as well as the government itself, can benefit. Within the government, as outside it, better co-ordination of book collections and the establishment of common services using electronic techniques should be ensured. The National Library should take the lead in developing the network of government libraries, as well as that of other research libraries in Canada.

This bill seeks to enable the National Library to fulfil its role more adequately at both the national and the international levels. Clauses 7, 8 and 9 are the key clauses in this respect. Paragraph (2) of clause 7 states:

> (2) Subject to the direction of the Governor in Council, the National Librarian may co-ordinate the library services of departments, branches and agencies of the Government of Canada including
>
> (a) the acquisition and cataloguing of books;
>
> (b) the supply of professional advice, supervision and personnel; and
>
> (c) the provision of modern information storage and retrieval services including photocopying and microfilming services, electronic and other automated data processing services and facsimile or other communication of information services.

Clause 8 provides that the National Librarian as may enter into agreements with Canadian or foreign libraries in this respect.

In order to assist the National Librarian to carry out such a program more adequately, it was considered advisable to reorganize the National Library Advisory Council so that the National Science Library, the Library of Parliament, the Public Archives, the National Museums of Canada, the Canada Council and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada would have ex officio representation on the council, which will be known as the advisory board. These provisions are found in Clause 9.

It is desirable that new Canadian publications be listed as soon as possible in the national bibliography, Canadiana; accordingly the time limit for deposit is being reduced from one month to one week. The present act requires the deposit of a single copy when the retail value of two copies exceeds $25. Enacted 16 years ago, this provision is no longer realistic and under clause 11 publishers would henceforth be required to deliver two copies of their books, unless the retail value of one copy exceeds $50.

Clause 15 repeals Section 52 of the Copyright Act, which calls for the deposit of two copies of a book at the time of its publication. Considering that this deposit in no way adds to the protection afforded a book through registration; that Canadian publications are deposited by virtue of the National Library Act; and that the majority of publications deposited under the Copyright Act are foreign publications which the National Library has no desire to receive systematically nor to keep permanently, it seems advisable to repeal this clause. This proposal is being made with the approval of the various agencies concerned.

I look forward, Mr. Speaker, to hearing hon. members' remarks on this subject. Detailed questions will be dealt with in the standing committee. If at that time there are proposals for amendments, I am sure the minister will be pleased to consider them.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): As has already been indicated by the Parliamentary Secretary of the Secretary of State (Mr. Stanbury), Mr. Speaker, the moving of the motion for the second reading of Bill C-171 is an important occasion in the parliament of Canada as well as throughout the nation generally. It was in 1952 that the National Library Act was first approved by parliament. At that time it was thought that something concrete in terms of a building and facilities would be forthcoming in short order but, as already indicated, there was a long period of delay from conception through gestation until the actual library facilities became available.

While we in this parliament have the privilege of debating this important event, I do not think we should forget that many other

[Mr. Stanbury.]

Canadians, inside and outside parliament, have been responsible for the achievement of the last few years in establishing this important cultural and educational facility. In particular I would like to pay tribute to a gentleman who was Dominion Archivist and National Librarian from the time the act was passed in 1952 until his retirement last fall, Dr. Kaye Lamb. He and many others, including the Canadian Library Association and L'Association Canadienne des Bibliothécaires de Langue Française, have been closely associated with this project.

Then, too, Mr. Speaker, far too often when politicians leave this house they are gone and forgotten. I think we should recall that someone whom we all regret has retired, at least temporarily, from the political arena was the person who had the privilege of guiding the development of the new National Library building through its initial stages. I refer to the Hon. Davie Fulton who as minister of public works made the initial announcement that Canada would have a national library built in time for our centennial celebrations in 1967. This was one of the major projects that were designed to help Canada celebrate its centennial. Incidentally, it was one of the projects completed on time. In this respect there are others in the capital city, such as the National Centre for the Performing Arts, that have not yet been completed.

It is interesting to note that the National Library building was completed at a total cost of some $13 million, and it is not a bad building at that. I am sure the Parliamentary Secretary will agree with me in this regard, although I recall that Mr. Richard Jackson, at the time the building was first completed described it as the capital's ugly duckling. We have all sorts of architectural experts in the nation's capital who like to comment on the architectural style and achievement of individual building developments. Perhaps I might be permitted to quote from the article by Mr. Jackson in the Ottawa Journal of July 27, 1966, titled "Capital's Ugly Duckling," in which he wrote:

> Well for one thing, the new library "doesn't reflect an architectural awareness of its setting."
>
> Which means its too jammed up against Wellington Street, lacks the attractive framework that proper setting on the escarpment, overlooking the Gatineau, might have given it.
>
> And those windows.
>
> Like peepholes in a prison wall.
>
> He suspects that the library's appearance was conceived to blend with, if not exactly match the two twin, veteran's and trade buildings, across Wellington.

And those, looking like something straight out of East Berlin, have been called all sorts of things. None of them flattering.

I do not know why it is that when we consider establishing cultural institutions in Canada, in particular in the nation's capital, we do not give careful consideration to the architectural style and make certain that it conforms to the high purpose of their cultural intent. But we cannot do much about it now. The buildings are there, and at least they provide the facilities that make it possible for the Parliament of Canada to re-enact the National Library Act and bring it into line with the current and expanding needs of library services in Canada.

One of the reasons for the delay from the point of conception to the point of realization was that Canada, like many other nations, had become obsessed with the achievements of the mass media as opposed to the printed word. There was a great explosion in knowledge and information immediately following world war II. It was in 1948 that the Canadian Library Association in conjunction with its French language counterpart, L'Association Canadienne des Bibliothécaires de Langue Française, first approached the government of Canada with the suggestion that the time was long past when we needed a national library.

Unfortunately those earlier overtures coincided precisely with the time when we became obsessed, enchanted and almost hypnotized with the development of mass media, for that was the time when television was coming into its own. We were in the age of McLuhanism with its new gospel, "the medium is the message", and for a time we tended to forget that society as we know it today was made possible by reason of the availability of man's knowledge in the great libraries round the world. I know that Dr. Marshall McLuhan is at the moment the high priest of information, and I think we are still on the wave of McLuhanism which quite openly preaches that books are obsolete packages and that the real motivating force, from the standpoint of communication, springs from the idiot tube of the instant electronic medium of communication.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Some one has said that this has also resulted in the creation of an instant electronic folklore which is able to generate almost over night, or at least within the space of a few days, myths that become more far-reaching and more embracing in terms of their grip on the minds of the people than the actual facts underlining a social situation. Someone also has said that our neglect of books and our tendency to become overly enamoured and mesmerized by mass media is one of the main reasons we are confronted with rather disconcerting examples of the generation gap today. We find ourselves confronted with a generation that has been educated almost exclusively by watching television with the violence and other selective distortions that are possible with this instant electronic creator of mythology. The result is that we have on our hands today a generation that has been cut off at the roots, as it were, and which has no deep and abiding connection with man's historic past or man's cultural past. We have what one might call a cut flower civilization, a civilization that has cut itself off at the roots and in which there are tendencies toward anarchy and even nihilism.

I wish to say these things briefly at the second reading stage because when the bill is before the committee we will deal with the mechanics of the legislation itself. I should like to emphasize, as I did in my opening remarks, that I believe this is a major development in the Canadian body politic because it means that at long last we are recognizing the importance of the printed word in maintaining the onward march of civilization. I think the pendulum is swinging back, as it must, in the face of some of the incidents which have been all too evident in Canada in recent weeks and months. There is a recognition that if we are to build for the future we must recognize that a creative and responsible future, and the young people who will provide the leadership for that future can only emerge if the young people become saturated—I almost used the word "indoctrinated" but it has a nasty ideological tinge today—with the values, accomplishments and cultural accumulations of the past.

While attending the University of Toronto I remember taking a course on empires and communications from that very eminent scholar, Dr. Edgar Innis. The thesis of that course was simply that the quality of successive civilizations, empires, or whatever you wish to call them, was directly related to the type of communications which prevailed predominantly in any particular period of man's history. I believe there is much truth in a thesis of that kind as reflected in the type of society and type of world in which we are living at the present time.

Actually there is not too much to say with regard to the bill itself. I have before me the brief that was presented to the cabinet, the government and parliament by the Canadian Library Association and l'Association Canadienne des Bibliothécaires de Langue Française. As I compare the brief with the bill we have before us it is evident that a good deal of the inspiration for the revision of the act came from the recommendations of the two main bodies active in the area of library development.

I notice, however, one discrepancy which I believe is of some significance. No doubt there will be some discussion about this at the committee stage when we reach that particular part of our study. The associations recommended that the National Library should be a truly national institution rather than merely another department of government. It seems to me this is in keeping with parliament's attitude toward the C.B.C. and similar activities of that kind because the C.B.C. operates in a sensitive area so far as parliamentary and political control is concerned, particularly with regard to education and dissemination of information.

We maintain the posture that the control of such agencies by parliament and the government should be minimal. We know in respect of the C.B.C that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) is the minister responsible for reporting to parliament for that body. I think it is for this reason that the library associations have recommended that the National Library of Canada should be set up as a Crown corporation to give it as much independence of action as possible in order to remove it as far as possible from direct and immediate governmental control and also to ensure that the objectives that are of major importance to Canada may be rapidly developed. I believe that this source of information should be a truly national institution embracing all aspects of Canadianism. The government has chosen not to accept the recommendation.

As I go through the bill I find it interesting to note that there are several clauses which specifically emphasize that the government is to have the closest possible administrative control. Let me refer for a moment to clause 4. Under the heading "Administration of Library" it states:

> The Minister shall preside over and has the supervision of the management and direction of the Library.

This is quite different from the solution applied in the reorganization of the national museums. That bill was passed last fall. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, as will other members of the house, that a board of trustees was set up which has the immediate responsibility for administering the affairs of the national museums in Ottawa as well as branches of the national museums in other parts of Canada. I suppose this was done because of the necessity in the cultural, educational and informational field of keeping the control by the government as far away from the agencies as possible. The government has chosen not to follow the same procedure in respect of this bill. We will be very much interested in finding out the reason this course of action has been taken.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I could refer to another clause, clause 7, which has the same sort of emphasis. Under the heading "Powers and Duties of Librarian" subsection 1 states "subject to the direction of the minister", and subsection 2 says "subject to the direction of the Governor in Council, the National Librarian may co-ordinate the library services of departments, branches and agencies", etc. So in every instance we find this strong, controlling influence to be exerted by the minister and by the Governor in council. This is a reversal of the usual formula which has applied to national educational services.

There is one other matter with which I should like to deal at this stage of our discussion. I want to pose a question, and perhaps this is not the time to do so as we will be able to deal with these matters in committee. However, I do want to give notice that members of the official opposition in probing this matter will be inquiring about the status of existing library facilities in the government service as well as in other parts of Canada.

The co-ordinating function is emphasized as one of the major purposes of the legislation. On this point a good many of the recommendations of library associations have been included in the legislation before us. Certainly the advisory board provided for by this measure is much more representative and broader than that provided under the original act of 1952 in that it includes persons such as the Parliamentary Librarian, the Dominion Archivist, the National Science Librarian and persons nominated by the National Museum and the association of universities and colleges of Canada. It also recognizes the professional status of librarians in Canada at the present time.

I note that the brief submitted to the government recommended that there be direct representation on the advisory board from both the Canadian National Library Associations as well as its French-speaking counterpart. We shall be inquiring as to why this recommendation was not accepted.

It would seem to me that library science is still in the formative stage. We know there is a drastic shortage of qualified professional librarians, and it would seem to me that these professional associations at this stage would have a very important function on the advisory board in advising as to how all the problems of a rapidly expanding service could be handled. In addition to that problem I am wondering about our Library of Parliament. Hon. members are and have been very much concerned about the welfare of our own library during the long interregnum which has been referred to during discussions in the house, while we awaited the advent of The National Library.

The Library of Parliament has served both as the national library and the parliamentary library. As a result of this dual function members of parliament were assured exceptional service in terms of the availability of current publications. Now that the emphasis is moving somewhat from the Parliamentary Library to the National Library I trust there will be sufficient co-ordination maintained in order that both the upper and lower chambers of parliament will have ready and immediate access to the great flood of information constantly pouring forth from printing presses in this and other countries of the world. We do not want to be placed in a position where we have to depend for our sources of information on the mass media. We might become badly brainwashed if we are restricted to the impact from instant electronic communications which are so successful in perpetuating many of the emphases eating at the foundations of our society. We will, of course, pursue this when the legislation is before the committee.

I wonder too about the fate of such an outstanding library as the National Science Library. The advisory board will include the librarian of the National Science Library, but it operates under the National Research Council and we must recognize that the National Library is essentially associated with the humanities and social sciences. I trust that in the gradual development and evolution of the functions of the National Library, programs will be sufficiently flexible to ensure the present high standard of our National Science Library.

I think my time has almost expired, Mr. Speaker, and before you bring me to an abrupt conclusion I shall voluntarily wind up my remarks. I have made these observations because we are moving in a slightly different direction in cultural development. We are giving close control to the government, the minister and the Governor in Council in an area of educational, informational and cultural development. This is a departure different from the government's handling of the C.B.C., the National Museum and other agencies of this kind. We will continue to prod the government in this regard before the committee to make sure there is going to be sufficient flexibility on the advisory board that we may get the best possible service from our National Library as a national institution in every sense of the word and not merely as an arm of government.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I am a little apprehensive in following the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) in that I had intended to say that with one qualification, to which I will refer shortly, this is a commendable measure the government is bringing forward. When the hon. member began to argue that the products of linear culture are sweeping in nature and contrary to our purpose, I wondered whether I should withdraw my support immediately and recommend that we burn down the library.

Mr. Dinsdale: Don't burn it down; we just put it up.

Mr. Broadbent: Fortunately some of us who are the products of the book culture as opposed to television culture tend to move in a somewhat non-conservative direction. I hope that a good number of those who use this major public facility will continue to do so.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I think this measure is a good one and is in one sense overdue. Canada as a political society has not been noted for its contribution to intellectual and scholarly activity. Even though we have begun to move in this direction only in recent years, this is no reason why we should suggest the measure is a bad one. It is a move in the right direction, and I and my party applaud the development of the National Library.

I was particularly pleased to hear the hon. member who introduced the bill say that the library has incorporated all the most modern electronic devices that good university libraries across the country have introduced in recent years. I was also pleased to learn that on its advisory board it has a place for representation of Canada's universities.

I would make two points, one of criticism and one of suggestion. Like the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, I was somewhat surprised to find that under clause 4 the minister is to be given such direct control over the library. I think that potentially this sets an unfortunate precedent. When the bill reaches the committee stage, perhaps some good reasons will be brought forward for this provision. Unless this is done I would prefer to see the administration of the National Library organized somewhat like the administration of the C.B.C. It should be independent of day to day political concerns. Perhaps a good explanation for this move will be presented to the committee. If not, we will have to raise very serious objection to it.

I hope the government intends to devote a lot of cash to this project in the years ahead. As I said earlier, we are not a country noted for the devotion of a high percentage of our resources to intellectual and scholarly activity, to understate the case by about 100 per cent. I would like to see Canada move much more vigorously in this direction in the years ahead so that our National Library will not become just a home for Canadian scholars but will acquire an international reputation in the academic community.

Another point I wish to raise is related to intellectual life but not specifically to this bill. I hope the government will, with regard to the physical sciences, soon show a corresponding interest and demonstrate vigour at the national level.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about this bill.

In the first place, a few general considerations. Surely, this is a national and essential service, since through the National Library we have access to the best source of information. The National Library is perhaps one of the most essential services available to legislators as well as to the Canadian public at large.

I have noted like other hon. members that the authority granted to the minister seems at first to be too extensive. Unfortunately, we often deplore the fact that ministerial responsibility is undermined, because some organizations enjoy a large degree of independence. I am referring to the C.B.C.

So I wonder why there should be criticism if the minister has precisely the entire responsibility, particularly in a matter that cannot give rise to controversy, because in my opinion, the service of the National Library is not likely to induce confrontation or disagreement.

The better the means of information of the National Library are, the more citizens will be able to take advantage of it and that much richer our national heritage will be.

In passing, I have a few comments to make on the microfilming of newspapers. I do not know why the microfilm service of the National Library is not better organized and why some dailies are not microfilmed.

In addition, I think the National Library should keep in constant touch and even make exchanges with the Quebec Library so that better information may be obtained.

Mr. Speaker, clause 2(e) reads as follows, and I quote:

> "Published in Canada" means released in Canada for public distribution or sale, otherwise than by Her Majesty in right of a province or by a municipality.

I do not grasp the exact scope of that clause but, as far as I am concerned, it looks as if the National Library did not bother with provincial publications.

I suggest a very close relationship should prevail at that level so that we may be assured to obtain all necessary information from the National Library.

Mr. Speaker, that is what I had to say on this matter.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts.

CO-OPERATIVE CREDIT ASSOCIATIONS ACT

PERMISSION TO SOCIETY TO BECOME FEDERALLY INCORPORATED

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-28, to amend the Co-operative Credit Associations Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the present Co-operative Credit Associations Act deals principally, as the house may know, with the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, incorporated by parliament in 1953, and with those provincial central credit societies that become members of this federal society. At the present time, therefore, the provincial centrals for British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Ontario are subject to this act.

• (3:40 p.m.)

This act, which was passed by parliament in 1963, applies to certain parts of the co-operative credit movement in Canada. The movement is organized on three levels. At the first level are the local credit unions organized on a parish, a community, or an employment basis. They accept deposits from and make loans to their members. For the most part, members are individuals falling within the group that the local credit union is organized to serve. In some cases these credit unions may have other co-operative organizations as members as well as individuals. The local credit unions are incorporated pursuant to provincial law and are supervised by provincial authorities.

At the second level are provincial central credit unions. These organizations act as central credit unions for the local credit unions. They accept deposits from their members and make loans to them. Their members are the local credit unions and sometimes other co-operative organizations. The local credit unions rely on their deposits with the centrals as the main part of their liquidity reserve to meet demands for withdrawal of funds. The provincial central credit unions are organized under provincial law and they do not have individuals as members.

Finally, at the third level is the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society. This society is authorized to receive deposits from its members, to borrow or raise money from its members and from chartered banks, and to lend money to its members. It also has certain investment powers. The federal society has for its members a number of provincial central credit unions and also a number of co-operative corporations carrying on business in two or more provinces. However, the act does not have any special application to these latter organizations other than indicating they are eligible for membership.

The original purpose of the federal society was to act as a central credit union for the provincial centrals, and also to some extent for the co-operative organizations doing an interprovincial business. This was to have opened the way for the exchange of funds from the co-operative movement in one region of Canada to that in another. A further purpose was to remove doubts that had been expressed about the constitutional position of the provincial centrals.

The bill before us amends certain provisions of the Co-operative Credit Associations Act. The amendments will have the effect of relaxing some of the restrictions now included in the act and granting some extensions of powers to the societies subject to it.

Over the past several years the credit union movement has asked that amendments be made to the act in order to permit the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society to be able to carry out more fully the purposes originally intended for it and to permit the provincial centrals subject to the act to continue their sound and orderly development, in the light of current conditions. The government is therefore proposing these amendments in order to meet these requests.

The main points dealt with in the bill may be outlined as follows. At present a provincial central may become a member of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society and subject to the act only if declared eligible by parliament. It is proposed, therefore, to enable this declaration to be effected by the Governor in Council. Also, provision is made to effect amendments to the act of incorporation of the federal society by letters patent.

The federal society may now borrow money only from banks and from its own members. An amendment would broaden the borrowing powers to enable it to raise money from any source. Organizations subject to the act are at present limited to a maximum of ten times the capital, reserve and surplus in the amount of deposits they may accept or money they may borrow. An amendment would raise this limit to 20 times, subject to approval of the minister on specific application.

Co-operative Credit Associations Act

A change would be made in the liquidity reserve requirements. At present, organizations under the act are required to maintain an amount equal to at least 5 per cent of their deposits in the form of cash and a further 15 per cent in the form of cash or government, municipal, or school securities. An amendment would delete municipal and school securities from the classes eligible to meet this reserve requirement since it is thought that municipal and school securities as a class are not always readily saleable and thus do not represent a good source of liquid funds to meet withdrawals of deposits.

Following the introduction of this measure in the other place, it has come to the government's attention that the immediate application of this change would result in undue losses to certain societies. The Goverment believes, therefore, that a transitional period should be allowed for its implementation in cases where undue losses might otherwise occur. It is proposed to suggest an amendment to this effect when this bill comes before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The change in liquidity reserve requirements would also permit provincial centrals to count as part of their liquidity reserve deposits with the federal society. The federal society may not now lend more than 10 per cent of its capital and deposits to any one member. An amendment would permit it to exceed this subject to certain conditions. The amendment would put the federal society on the same basis as the provincial centrals in this regard.

Investment powers would be changed slightly to make it clear that provincial centrals can invest in mortgage loan companies. The co-operative movement in some provinces has formed mortgage loan companies for the purpose of financing housing for its members. This amendment would clarify the power of a credit society to make an investment in such companies.

Certain other amendments are proposed by way of clarifying provisions of the act and transferring certain responsibilities from the Treasury Board to the Minister of Finance.

The Canadian credit union movement, including the caisses populaires, serves more than five million members, or approximately a quarter of our total population. It has accumulated nearly $3.3 billion of savings. As CUNA International, a voice of the credit union movement, put it in a brief to the finance committee of this house in 1967:

> The credit unions and caisses populaires in Canada serve their members as non-profit service organizations, and play a vital and essential role in the economy and growth of Canada as a whole.

This government recognizes the importance of the credit union movement and is therefore presenting these amendments as a way of assisting it in carrying out this key role. The credit union movement is active in many parts of Canada including my own city of Windsor, and as someone who is himself a credit union member I am pleased to urge the house to approve this bill by way of second reading.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the changes proposed by the parliamentary secretary to the Co-operative Credit Associations Act have two objectives, one of which is flexibility in changing conditions. When I look at what is to be achieved and what is the end objective of the bill, I am brought back to the considerations which I expressed at the time of the changes in the Bank Act, that more and more of these organizations such as credit unions and caisses populaires are actually carrying out banking functions. To me the amendments to this act point up the fact that we are getting a hodgepodge of legislation dealing with banking.

The other day the government house leader indicated that amendments to the Trust Companies Act and Loan Companies Act will be put before the house. There again we have concerns that are carrying on some banking functions. Therefore when we want to consider the whole Canadian banking picture we must refer to the Bank Act and to the Quebec Savings Banks Act, which banks, mind you, will revert back to the Bank Act. We must also look at the Trust Companies Act, and the Loan Companies Act, and now we have the Co-operative Credit Associations Act as well as a number of related acts.

Frankly it is my view that we would have a much sounder and saner banking picture if we described the functions of banking, and if any organization, whether provincial or federal, wishes to engage in one of the functions of banking then it must conform to that general banking act. We would have none of this nonsense of provincial governments saying that because they have incorporated a particular co-operative they control its operations in the field of money and banking.

• (3:50 p.m.)

This, to me, is an indication of the need for a complete revision. We must take a careful look at this picture if we are to have a sound banking system across the country. I remember occasions when we were dealing with associations incorporated under this act—I believe the last was from Saskatchewan—and when unfortunately there were certain complexities concerning the holding of shares. I shall not go into the details, but we had a difficult time. We shall consider the amendments more closely in committee, and I trust they will serve to iron out some of these difficulties.

The first major change indicated by the parliamentary secretary has to do with an amendment to section 4 of the act so as to allow the cabinet by Order in Council to authorize the inclusion in a co-operative credit association of a credit society incorporated under provincial charter. At the present time parliament has to declare itself on such applications. The amendment does not, of course, remove this power from parliament; it gives additional power to the cabinet. The exercise of these new powers is to be founded on Orders in Council and these, of course, will be published. I hope this does not amount to an expression of the mood of the government that more and more authority should be removed from parliament and placed in the hands of the Governor in Council. I see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) shaking his head as though this were the one thing farthest removed from the mind of the government. Personally, I am not so naïve as to take this all on trust.

We are to see a degree of flexibility introduced so that with the approval of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), which in effect means the approval of the Superintendent of Insurance, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) may alter a charter by issuing modified letters patent. I believe this is a good step to take. I do not think there is any need for the great majority of these co-operative associations to be asked to come to parliament for incorporation. The machinery within the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs should now be sophisticated enough, and its personnel sufficiently large and sophisticated in most cases, to enable these arrangements to be removed from parliament.

I shall reserve my opinion with regard to some of these proposed changes, particularly those relating to the powers and ability of these associations to borrow or raise money. If we refer to the original act—and I intend to make only incidental reference to section 8—we find that in this proposed amendment we are going far beyond the provision "to borrow or raise money from its members or from an association of which it is a member or from chartered banks in Canada...»

I do not think this is the purpose of such an organization as we are considering. This proposal is simply giving more and more people an opportunity to compete for money, whether or not as a result of competition they face from trust companies and the banks at the present time, which on occasion offer what I call deceptively attractive rates of interest that the financial situation of the country does not warrant. Now it is intended to give the caisses populaires and the credit unions the same right, and I shall want to say something on that aspect of the subject during the committee hearings.

There are other proposals which we shall need to consider in detail later but, basically, with the reservations I have mentioned and one or two others, we believe that by and large this bill should receive second reading, bearing in mind that it is to be sent to the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of the New Democratic Party I wish to welcome the amendments to the Co-Operative Credit Associations Act which have been placed before us by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray). I believe this legislation represents a step forward for the credit union movement in Canada and is an indication of the growing strength of the movement and of the increasing role it is playing in the Canadian economy and in promoting the welfare of the Canadian people.

This legislation was requested by the credit union movement, I understand, and the bill now before us is supported by the interested organizations. I also understand that it has been requested for some seven or eight years, and it is regrettable it should have taken so long to bring this bill before parliament. I trust the legislation now before the house is an indication that the government intends to proceed with the long-delayed introduction of a federal co-operatives act, as has been announced. Account must be taken, of course, of the experience of previous years when the introduction of such a measure was also announced but was not proceeded with for one reason or another. I hope the fact that we are now proceeding to consider these amendments relating to credit unions and co-operative credit associations is an indication that at long last the government is going to proceed with the other legislation I have mentioned.

The details of the bill before us will, of course, receive further study in committee. I understand that this measure provides for greater flexibility in co-operative credit arrangements, enabling credit societies to join in the operations of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society. I understand, also, that it extends the operating limits of participating members in ways already indicated by the parliamentary secretary.

I cannot join at this time in the reservation expressed by the hon. member for Edmonton-West (Mr. Lambert) with respect to the powers granted to the Governor in Council affecting new members coming under the scope of this legislation. I feel that adequate safeguards already exist to prevent any step being taken which is not in the public interest.

The credit union movement is playing and will continue to play a valuable and important role in the Canadian economy. In particular, it will continue to be of help to people whose financial circumstances prevent them using other financial institutions as they might otherwise wish to do. The credit union movement has developed and grown as a result of the initiative of people who joined together in voluntary co-operation to form their own organizations and develop them, often in the face of difficult obstacles. The present bill is to the credit of those who pioneered this development and carried it on to the point where the movement has become a sophisticated and mature organization on the Canadian scene. Often the progress that has been made has resulted in the face of grudging acquiescence or indifferent acknowledgement by government.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Many people owe some degree of financial stability and independence to the help given them by the credit union movement. I believe that in the future public policy needs to be geared to a greater extent to the encouragement and fostering of the growth of such institutions. Further growth of credit unions and related institutions is needed, particularly in face of the unprecedented acceleration and spiralling of interest rates that we are witnessing today.

I note that the credit union movement has also had to increase its interest rates in spite of its desire to hold them down. The increase has been necessitated by the need to compete for savings funds which would otherwise go to other institutions that have considerably raised their rates since they are no longer restricted by law in the matter of interest rates on loans. Credit unions find it very difficult to do their job in view of the nightmare growth in interest rates that has taken place over the past two or three years and the increased cost of borrowing.

Present developments respecting interest rates, the cost of borrowing money and financing illustrate the folly of unrestricted rates. At the same time, for the many little people in Canada the credit union movement represents a small island of hope for survival from the advancing swells of uncontrolled financing costs. In this respect I welcome this legislation and I hope that in future we will see a public policy in Canada geared to a greater extent to helping movements like the credit unions to grow and prosper on the Canadian scene.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to say a few words in support of these amendments to the Co-operative Credit Associations Act. I think it is significant that in this the first session of this parliament we as members should be presented, first of all, with these important amendments to this valuable piece of legislation and, second, that we should have been advised by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) on Thursday last that it is the firm intention of the government to bring forward a major bill providing for the federal incorporation of co-operatives. These measures indicate to me not only that credit unions and co-operatives have come of age and are important but that this parliament and the people of this country recognize their importance.

It is very difficult for me to add anything of a descriptive nature to the address of the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the parliamentary secretary, who spoke on second reading of this bill. The background of the legislation was described by him. I think it is well known by all those interested in the credit union movement that it started in various provinces of this country with the organization of local credit unions or caisses populaires. As these local units grew in importance they found it desirable and helpful to federate into provincial credit societies or organizations for a similar purpose, called credit union leagues, where their surplus funds were pooled. The aim of these organizations was to ensure that the surplus that might be on hand in one credit union at one time could be made available for lending to another credit union which might be short of funds.

As these organizations grew across the country it became apparent that the experience at the provincial level could be duplicated with profit at the federal level. This resulted in the development of a movement in the early fifties for the incorporation of a federal co-operative credit society. This legislation was passed in 1953, and in that year the first and only credit society incorporated under it, the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, was formed. This legislation is similar in form to other financial leglislation such as the Trust Companies Act, the Loan Companies Act and similar statutes which provide a general regulatory pattern for financial institutions and also provide that they must be incorporated by a private act.

At this stage in its history I think the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society can be said to have realized some of the purposes of its founders, but not all of them. This is recognized by the members and the directors of the society. To some extent the failure of the society to realize all the hopes of those who had a hand in its organization merely recognizes the democratic and free thinking mood of the credit union movement in Canada. Not every credit union or member of a credit union thinks alike, and as a consequence this society is not supported in its membership by all credit unions in the country.

I think it is also true to say that to a very large extent the reason the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society has not realized at this stage in its history all the hopes of its founders is that it has been inhibited and restricted by the conditions set forth in the Co-operative Credit Associations Act. It is extremely fortunate that this bill is now brought forward because it reproduces, I think faithfully, the request of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society for responsible amendments that will remove the main restrictions that have inhibited its growth and development.

I do not wish to create a wrong impression when I say that the organization has not realized all the hopes of its founders, because it has made very substantial progress and represents a valuable and responsible financial arm in the total credit union movement in Canada. The assets of this organization, as disclosed by its most recent balance sheet, exceed $577,000.

Of greater significance in measuring the strength of the credit union movement is the combined strength of credit societies in the four provinces which comprise the membership of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society. These are the British Columbia Central Credit Union, the Ontario Co-operative Credit Society, the Saskatchewan Co-operative Credit Society, and the Co-operative Credit Society of Manitoba. The annual report of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society presented at its annual meeting on April 8, 1968, indicates the strength of these four important member credit societies and the tremendous growth which they have achieved in the past decade.

• (4:10 p.m.)

In 1956 the combined assets of these four societies were $18,575,000. In 1966 the combined assets of these four societies had risen to $139,590,000. This is an indication of the growing strength and importance of the credit union movement in this country, to which the parliamentary secretary referred in his remarks. A total of more than $3 billion in savings are invested in credit unions. It is a matter of great significance that one of four Canadians is a member of a credit union.

I do not intend to repeat the description given by the parliamentary secretary of the proposed amendments. It would be more to the point to examine them in detail in the standing committee. But in view of the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) it might be helpful if I were to comment on two specific proposals. The hon. member referred to the fact that it will now be possible to add members to a co-operative credit society by Order in Council. I think the hon. member reserved his decision on whether this was a prudent move. He is probably completely unaware of the fact that this change has been urgently requested by the credit union movement and by the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society.

I will not go into detail as to the legal structure in the Co-operative Credit Associations Act. It is unique in the legislative history of this parliament and represents an attempt by parliament to meet possible problems of jurisdiction in a sensible fashion. This statute provides that any provincial credit society which becomes a member of any federal credit society obtains the benefits of a parallel federal incorporation and is invested with the powers and authorities of a federal credit society as well as the preexisting powers of the provincial society. Membership in a federal credit society carries with it the added status of a federal corporation.

It was the feeling of parliament in 1953 that any organization which became a member of such a society would be named in the private act. This was found to be a very onerous requirement because when a new member wished to join the credit society the private act had to be amended. The proposed change permits new members to be added under the authority of an Order in Council. This is a highly beneficial change which will be welcomed by credit unions.

Reference has also been made to the enlargement of borrowing powers of co-operative credit societies. Formerly they were restricted to borrowing from other credit societies and from chartered banks. These restrictions have now been removed and this will enable the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society to borrow money more generally. Anyone familiar with the co-operative movement in this country will realize the importance of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society having the power to raise money more generally by bonds and debentures and by the issuance of other securities. This will, I am sure, be supported by the members of co-operative associations.

The parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) have both spoken about the importance of the credit union movement in this country. This means of extending financial services has been important to people who for one reason or another do not have ready access to the banking system and the more standardized financial institutions. It must be borne in mind that credit unions over the years have filled a gap in the existing financial institutions of this country by bringing financial services close to people who needed them. They have been instrumental in providing instruction and knowledge in economics and in the wise use of credit to their members. They have in the very best and most realistic sense of the term provided for self-help among the people of this country. They have provided a realistic competitive regulator in the financial market. Parliaments should recognize the achievements of the credit union movement and not restrict its legitimate development. It should be the desire of all hon. members to encourage the development of credit unions in this country. This they can do by supporting this legislation.

Last week I attended the annual meeting of a large credit union in my constituency. It was a very happy occasion for people who had borrowed money from that financial institution. The credit union had achieved a substantial saving in the past year. The most important act of the credit union at that meeting was to pass a resolution reducing the interest paid on loans made to members by approximately one-fifth. This is reproduced all over the country time after time.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The actions and activities of credit unions have been greatly beneficial to Canada. The support they have received and the encouragement that has been given to them by central credit societies has been important, and the most important of these central credit societies is the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society created under this statute. I think all of us can be hopeful, if these legislative changes are made, that we will make a great and significant contribution to the further development of that society and of Canadian credit unions.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, briefly I wish to endorse the purpose of this bill. Its passage will allow the expansion of credit unions. In the area where I live these unions are a force for development. They are fulfilling a role not served by other institutions. Their growth has been tremendous, almost fantastic.

I recall that a number of years ago a Saskatchewan Wheat Pool delegate came to a farm meeting in my area to persuade us to start a credit union. He succeeded in interesting a number of individuals who took out a few shares. A few years ago the activities of that credit union passed the $1 million mark. It is an excellent example of people in action doing for themselves the things they want to do and providing good service for themselves.

In many towns credit unions provide the only available banking services. Some years ago many branches of private banks were closed down for the sake of economy. Credit unions have stepped in to fill the gap. They allow people to have some control over their own finances. They return excess earnings to their shareholders and in effect let their customers have money at cost.

The provisions of this bill will give the credit unions access to more funds. Passage of this bill will help the whole co-operative movement which is of great assistance to the farm community and to many urban sectors. This movement serves as a good balance wheel in our economy. I am pleased that the government has seen fit to introduce this bill and I hope it will have the approval of the house.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, credit unions in small communities are much more effective than many other types of financial houses. I understand one of the purposes of this bill is to provide for the transfer of surplus funds from one area to another, which I favour.

There is a housing factory in my area. The bill sponsored by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) regarding another financial institution, which was discussed in the house a few days ago, would make money available for loans to larger cities and towns. It would not provide money to smaller areas. That institution would be willing to take money from my area but would not lend it to the people there. Credit unions serve a different purpose. They raise their money locally and lend it locally. In my area they lend money to build houses and thus help to provide employment. For this reason I certainly favour this legislation.

I believe the effect of this bill will be beneficial. I hope the co-op movement will expand to take advantage of these amendments. With regard to transferring capital between areas, if we have a good crop on the prairies we may well have a surplus of money which could be transferred for use in other parts of the country. Alternatively, when there is a surplus of money in Ontario or Quebec it could be transferred on loan to Saskatchewan or British Columbia. For this reason I support the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. If the Parliamentary Secretary speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond briefly to some of the comments that have been made and to thank hon. members for the thoughts they put forward. I am sure we will have a very useful discussion when we examine these proposed amendments in detail in the finance committee.

I wish to confirm something the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) said when replying to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). He said in effect that the concept of having provincial centrals that wished to come under the provisions of the act included by Order in Council was a suggestion of the credit union movement itself. I wish to confirm this by putting on the record the following extract from the proceedings of the Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs Committee of January 17, 1967, page 1316. Mr. Wagar, who was then and I believe still is an executive officer of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, said:

> One of the requirements of the present legislation is that in order to add a member, or in order for any other provincial central credit society to become a member of the Canadian Co-operative Credit Society, requires an act of the parliament of Canada and we suggested that there be an amendment that other centrals might become members of the society with approval of the Governor in Council rather than by an act of parliament.

It would appear that those most directly concerned in the general community with the operations of this act feel that the amendment in question is a most desirable one. I conclude by urging the house to support this measure and look forward to a more extensive inquiry with regard to it in the finance committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

• (4:30 p.m.)

CUSTOMS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALE AND ABANDONMENT OF GOODS, ETC.—REPORT STAGE

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue) moved that Bill S-10, to amend the Customs Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Hazardous Substances

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING APPLICABILITY TO CANADIAN DAIRY COMMISSION ACT—REPORT STAGE

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (for the Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill S-25, to amend the Export and Import Permits Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil) (for Mr. Pepin) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING, SALE AND IMPORTATION

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs) moved that Bill S-26, to prohibit the advertising, sale and importation of hazardous products, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford), will be joining us here in just a moment or two. He did not expect this measure to be called so soon, but he is now on his way to the chamber. I believe hon. members generally would agree that we have come to hear the feature attraction, the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski), so without further ado I shall sit down.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, one can only welcome this bill to prohibit the marketing of hazardous products and can only wonder why it took the government so long to get around to it. With particular reference to the hazardous ingredients in model plane glue, if this bill had been passed a year ago lives might well have been saved. It is not my intention to review the tragic roster of young children and some adults who have been found dead as a result of uninformed glue-sniffing, in many cases not even aware of the lethal effects. My only hope now is that the government will move with determination and force to keep these dangerous substances out of the hands of children and will not allow the prohibitory effect of the bill to be nullified by permissiveness in the regulations.

The minister and the officers of his department know as well as I do that the toxic substance in model plane glue is deadly dangerous, that young children have been induced by their friends to dabble in dangerous experimentation and that some have died. Therefore I wonder why the minister has placed this substance in a category in Part II of the schedule where the door can be opened to permissiveness under the regulations. If this happens and if definite action is not taken in spite of all the pressure that may be brought—and we know there is pressure—I warn the minister he will not have the confidence of the Canadian people. No one can tell me it is not possible for chemical companies who are always boasting about their research staffs to find a substitute for the toxic product in airplane glue or other model glues. It is up to them. It is not up to us to do their work for them.

I should like to bring to the attention of the house an article which appeared in the Toronto Star for January 25, 1969, which says in part:

> The development of new, harmless glues in the U.S. should soon make it possible to ban the toxic varieties altogether. One of these was developed at the request of New York schools and it has turned out to be an effective, all-purpose glue.

It is not up to this house, nor is it up to Canadian parents to encourage or tolerate a dilatory attitude on the part of the authorities. I say to the minister "Get this stuff off the market, and the sooner the better". Let the companies find a substitute that will not endanger the lives and health of children. This should have been done many months ago. It is an extremely urgent situation. That is why it is hard to understand the apparent lethargy with which the government has proceeded with this legislation. There is certainly no problem about getting it through this chamber. Every member is in favour of it and most people have been clamouring for it. That is why it should have been brought in earlier.

But now that we have it before us I am rather surprised at the inclusion in part II of the schedule, among substances like bleaches and other generally non-fatal substances, of this dangerous and toxic ingredient which has caused a number of deaths in Canada. Why is not airplane glue in part I so it would simply be prevented from coming into Canada? What is the thinking behind this stranger arrangement? I ask the minister that question. The minister is not here; he will have to read it in Hansard. He has his experts to advise him, but they are not here either. He should be able to obtain an answer. With that proviso—and I warn the minister it is a serious one because I am not joking about this matter—speaking for the party I represent I say we warmly support the bill. We do express the view, however, that it should have been brought in at a much earlier stage when lives could have been saved, and, second, we insist with all seriousness that there must not, regardless of pressure, be any loophole in the regulations which would permit the continued importation into Canada of this dangerous substance so that it could fall into the hands of young people.

Before this measure passes I should like to hear an assurance from the minister concerning the reason the name of the ingredient found in model plane glue has been placed in part II of the schedule with generally non-toxic substances. Second, I should like the assurance that no loophole will appear in the regulations whereby this substance can find its way into the hands of children. Once these assurances are forthcoming we will all feel better about this bill.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak very briefly in support in general terms of Bill S-26, to prohibit the advertising, sale and importation of hazardous products, I wish, on the one hand, to commend the government for bringing this measure before us and, on the other hand, to join with the previous speaker who regretted that it has taken so long to have this legislation brought forward. There is no doubt in my mind that had this legislation been brought in five or ten years ago many Canadians would have been saved a great deal of trouble. I certainly support the idea that it should be applied in respect of materials such as paints, particularly the prohibition in respect of advertising, selling or importation. Household products which are hazardous may be defined generally as paints, cleansers and sanitizers. I am sure there will be general agreement in the house and the committee as well as in the country generally that what the government is seeking is necessary.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In adding my measure of support to this bill I should like to draw the minister's attention to two bills dealing with hazardous products which appear in my name. I hope that a recommendation in one of my bills will receive detailed consideration when this bill is referred to the committee. I refer to Bill C-118 which has to do with the labelling rather than the advertising of hazardous products. The bill refers specifically to detergents and it was introduced last October. The explanatory note states:

> Many houehold products in the nature of detergents are used every day by housewives and many of them do constitute a danger to health if ingested or inhaled accidentally by children or even if used for the purposes they are intended for.
>
> It is advisable, in the circumstances, that the said products be labelled as hazardous to health.

I believe that the labelling of such products in that way might well be considered as a good move in addition to the purpose of the present bill which has specific reference to importation or advertisement.

The other bill which appears in my name is Bill C-53, a bill to include in food and drug legislation some control in respect of hazardous household products. This bill has reference to probably the most hazardous household product on the market—tobacco. It contains a proposal which would result in some control under the food and drug legislation. This matter might also be considered when Bill S-26 is being dealt with.

I am sure most members will now agree that cigarette smoking constitutes one of the greatest hazards to health in Canada. It is causing the loss of many lives and a great deal of illness. I hope my bills can be considered in conjunction with the bill now before us. I would be satisfied if this could be done rather than having to move an amendment to Bill S-26 introduced by the government.

In general terms I support this bill. When it is being considered by the committee I should like to put before that committee certain details in respect of the use of some products along with further recommendations which I hope will be considered at that time.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, like the two previous speakers, I should like to say how very pleased I am that this bill is being introduced today although, as was mentioned earlier, the government could have introduced it long before now.

Mr. Speaker, I think, that, on the one hand, it would have probably been easier, and even desirable that this bill be introduced a lot sooner but, on the other hand, I think that it was necessary to wait for developments, to protect the life of people by forbidding them to use certain products which can be found in almost every home and which are too often within the reach of children.

A few months ago it might have been difficult for the government to anticipate the danger of these products as it is rather difficult to anticipate that within a few months or a few years, other products might endanger the life of our fellow-citizens.

In my opinion, this bill introduced today fairly well covers all the dangers which can be brought about by certain substances contained in products of daily use.

I should like to ask the minister for some clarification with regard to this bill which, I hope, will deal not only with imported products but also with noxious products which could be manufactured in Canada. Besides, I hope that the bill will deal with products which can be marketed by some Canadian industries and which could be dangerous also for their users.

Mention is made in this bill of certain beans used in the manufacture of toys or ornamental pieces. I believe that we received some from Japan. I do not believe Japanese manufacturers wanted to endanger the life of Canadian people, but I feel it is up to the government to make sure that products used in the manufacturing of apparently harmless articles do not endanger people's life. I therefore believe the bill is justified and that nobody is opposed to it.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, we must also take steps to remove the danger from aircraft glue. But I wonder whether this is not a fad among our young people. We note—although it is not general—a certain getting-out of hand of our youth. As a matter of fact, it would seem as if some young people were seeking things they cannot find in well-organized environments, that is adventure. Well, they have found it in glue sniffing which permits them to get intoxicated, to get high. Buying glue is easier than buying cigarettes, marijuana, opium or other drugs. I believe the government should take steps in order to prohibit the sale of such products or to cope with the situation, as was mentioned a while ago by an hon. member from Edmonton, by inducing manufacturers to change their manufacturing process and make a non-poisonous product.

The same could also be said about plastic bags. They have been known to cause death, and can still do so. It is often suggested that their users should destroy them as soon as possible or perforate them.

Many other household objects can affect health, and even cause death. Consider, for instance, the excessive use of alcohol. Some people lose their health because of it. To my mind, the government has done very little to date to educate the people about the dangers of alcoholism. I would not go so far as to ask the government to past a law forbidding its use, because at times, alcohol can be useful; but when it is used unwisely, it can affect health and even lead to death. Alcohol is also, indirectly, the cause of almost as many accidental deaths on our roads as can be attributed to war.

The same goes for the immoderate use of cigarettes. I do not feel that the government should be asked to forbid their use either: yet, an immoderate use of tobacco can affect one's health.

Still, these things are available to thousands of people who, very often, use them without being aware of the dangers involved.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is timely although it comes a little late for some. To my mind, its implementation will lead not only to restrictions in the imports of dangerous products, but it will also constitute a warning about their use. This measure should be accompanied by a publicity campaign so that the people might know that we do not want to restrict their freedom but that instead we wish to protect them against the dangers involved in the use of certain products.

Mr. Speaker, for those reasons, we strongly support this bill.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speakers on this subject, I am very pleased that the government is bringing in this bill and I would like to speak in favour of it. I would like, first, to make reference to two particular matters which I feel are important. One is a subject with regard to which I brought in a private member's bill on October 15. Bill C-119 which refers to the labelling of products. The other subject is fire, which I think should also be discussed at this time. I would then like to refer to the bill itself and bring to the attention of the house an aspect which I think should be amended before the bill is passed.

On the question of safety generally, in Canada in 1966 there was a total of 11,400 fatal accidents, of which 2,200 took place in the home. A great number of these fatal accidents were caused by falls which, as we all know, are a major cause of death among the elderly. Of these fatal home accidents, 757 were caused by falls and 561 were the result of fires and explosions. There were a great number of suffocations, 327 in all. These, of course, were almost all children. There were 275 deaths from poisoning, 75 from firearms, 51 from drowning and so on.

I think it is obvious from these figures that fire and poisoning are very definite hazards in the home, and that the government should pay attention to household products. I suggest that the reason for many of these accidents is the tremendous range of household products on the market today. The consumer is faced with a bewildering array of different products from which to choose, and he or she may have no idea of their inflammability or poison content.

I think this is inevitable. As the range of choice increases, the knowledge of the properties of the products decreases correspondingly. For this reason I think it is important for the government to step into this area and assist the consumer in ascertaining what are the hazards of the products which he or she may purchase in the stores. I think that few members in this house disagree that this is a very legitimate concern of the government.

I now turn to the point which I mentioned earlier, namely fire. There are various methods whereby fabrics can be fireproofed. Unfortunately, all these methods involve considerable expense. For example, a normal household product such as a sheet can be fireproofed, but instead of costing, say, $3 as an unfireproofed product it costs $4 when fireproofed. In other words, there is an increase of 25 per cent. In addition, when fireproofed the life of the product is reduced by half. Therefore, instead of spending $3 for a sheet which will last for a certain length of time the consumer must pay the equivalent of $8 for the fireproofed product for the same period of time.

I think it is important to know that fireproofing is not something that simply requires regulation. It involves far more than that. In view of the fact that cotton, wool, silk, rayon and similar products are all to some degree inflammable, I think that the best the government can do is insist that manufacturers properly label their products so that, through a system of standardized labelling, the public will be able to tell at a glance the flammability of the product.

Some products should be excluded from such regulation and be banned outright because, regardless of whether the public knows of their degree of inflammability, they are a danger. In my opinion, government action should be to insist upon the proper labelling of fabrics so that the public is fully aware of the danger of fire therefrom. In this connection I might say that the public is, generally speaking, not particularly interested in fireproofing. The experience of various manufacturers selling fireproofed drapes, fibreglass drapes, is that the public is more concerned about having colourful or attractive drapes than the fireproofed product. Therefore I think the government will have to insist upon fireproof standards for all products. The public cannot be relied on to do so. I suggest that the government should insist upon proper labelling so that the public knows the danger connected with the product it is purchasing. I should now like to turn to the next problem area.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Public Service—superannuated federal employees—request for increased pensions; the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard)—Indian Affairs—request for statement of functions of Minister without Portfolio; the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Laniel)—Historic Monuments—administration and maintenance of Vimy monument.

Supplementary Estimates

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1968-69

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE ON MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES— FURTHER CONSIDERATION

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a question of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could have the consent of the house to revert to motions in order to put the motion that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) referred to earlier today with regard to the supplementary estimates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Has the minister leave to put this question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I move, seconded by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford):

(1) That, in relation to the consideration of a motion or motions to concur in the final Supplementary Estimates (B) presented to the house this day and the passage of any bill to be based thereon, the provisions of Standing Order 58 shall apply, subject to the conditions hereunder stated.

(2) That upon the adoption of this proposed order, the said estimates shall stand referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, as follows:

Votes 10b, 15b, 17b, 20b, 25b, 30b, and 45b, relating to the Department of Agriculture.

Vote 65b relating to the Canadian Livestock Feed Board.

Vote 10b relating to the Department of Communications.

Votes 1b and 25b relating to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

Votes 50b and L3b relating to the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Vote 75b relating to the Dominion Coal Board.

Votes 1b, 15b and L22b relating to the Department of External Affairs.

Vote 30b relating to the Canadian International Development Agency.

Votes 2b, 30b, 46b and L27b relating to the Department of Finance.

Votes 15b, 18b, 40b, and L32b relating to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry.

Votes 5b, 20b, 30b, 35b, 36b, L35b, and L65b relating to the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Votes 38b and L82b relating to the Department of Industry and Trade and Commerce.

Votes 5b, 12b and 20b relating to the Department of Labour.

Votes 5b and 15b relating to the Senate and the House of Commons.

Votes 6b, 10b, 15b, and 25b relating to the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

Votes 20b and 40b relating to the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Vote L83b relating to the Department of National Revenue.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

Votes 10b and 15b relating to the Privy Council.

Votes 15b, 20b, 25b, and 30b relating to the Department of Public Works.

Vote 10b relating to the Department of Regional Development.

Votes 1b and 2b relating to the Department of the Secretary of State.

Vote 40b relating to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

Votes 1b and L103b relating to the Department of the Solicitor General.

Votes 7b, 8b, 15b, 16b, and L104b relating to the Department of Supply and Services.

Votes 3b, 15b, 20b, 40b, L107b, and L110b relating to the Department of Transport.

Votes 57b, 60b, and 65b relating to the Canadian Transport Commission.

Votes 75b and 77b relating to the National Harbours Board.

Votes 5b, 6b, and 10b relating to the Treasury Board.

Votes 30b and 35b relating to the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Votes L116b, L117b, L118b, and L119b relating to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

(3) That, unless the committee has reported these estimates back to the house on or before February 28, 1969, it shall be deemed that the committee has so reported on that date.

(4) That there be allotted to the consideration by the house of the said estimates and the consequent bill a total of three sitting days before March 27, 1969, in lieu of the three provided under Standing Order 58(7) for the period between March 26 and June 30, but such days shall not form part of the number of days allotted to the consideration of the business of supply for the period terminating on March 26, 1969.

(5) That on the last of the three allotted days, if the bill be not previously passed by the house, the proceedings in relation to this proposed order shall be interrupted and disposed of in accordance with section 10 of Standing Order 58.

(6) That the hour for private members' business, if any, on any such allotted day be suspended.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this motion, as I have had the opportunity to read it, is in keeping with the new rules that we have adopted and therefore the form of the motion is acceptable to us. I feel, however, that I must register a protest against what is being done in so far as the supplementary estimates covered by this motion are concerned. These supplementary estimates (B) were tabled today, and I find in them 51 $1 items. I submit this is an abuse of supplementary estimates. One dollar items are items of legislation.

• (5:00 p.m.)

If this process goes much farther we could certainly shorten the session. We could have one bill with $1 items in it and the session would be over. As I say, I agree that these estimates should be referred to the committee and that we should deal with them for the three allotted days back in the house in keeping with what we agreed to, but I register my protest against a much wider use of $1 items than I have ever seen in the house.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, public bills.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

FINANCE

SUGGESTED CONSIDERATION OF MEASURES TO ELIMINATE INFLATION

Mr. Ian Wahn (St. Paul's) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give early consideration to measures for maintaining the purchasing power of Canadian currency by eliminating inflation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this notice of motion raises the question of the ever-increasing cost of living, the depreciation of our currency, and inflation. The cost of living aspect concerns most Canadian consumers while inflation and the depreciated value of our currency concern the economist, but essentially they are all the same thing.

In a way this is an anniversary for me because on looking back I see I first spoke on this subject in 1963, put a question on the order paper with regard to it in 1964, again spoke on it in 1966, and now in 1969 I find myself raising the question once more. There has been one important difference since I first raised it in 1963. At that time the cost of living was increasing at a rate slightly less than 2 per cent a year; now it is increasing at a rate slightly more than 4 per cent a year. My representations in 1963 and 1966, although I think eloquent, have obviously failed to achieve their purpose.

Since 1949 the cost of living in Canada has gone up slightly more than 50 per cent. That means that $1 today is worth in purchasing power slightly less than 66 cents in 1949. I compare the present time with 1949 because, as all hon. members will remember, that was the year when we first settled down after the second world war. There was a big jump in prices after controls were removed following the termination of the war. In 1949 prices settled down and we began to have what was then termed creeping inflation at the rate of 1 or 2 per cent a year.

As I said, creeping inflation has ceased to creep and has begun to run, and we now have inflation at the rate of about 4 per cent. I realize that, as has been pointed out by many experts, the figures established by the cost of living index do not necessarily take into account improvements in quality. Part of the increased cost of goods is no doubt due in some measure to increases in quality, better and more elaborate packaging, and advertising costs. We get our quid pro quo for advertising costs through free radio and television programs and that sort of thing. Nevertheless, after taking due account of all those factors, undoubtedly the value of our money is going down and the cost of living is going up.

The point I would like to make is that inflation is basically a tax. I believe that most economists would agree with this or at any rate would agree that inflation has the same result as a tax. It is a particularly regressive type of tax because it has the same effect as a sales tax on everything that is bought. In other words, now that we are having inflation at the rate of 4 per cent a year, it is the same thing as if the federal government set a universal sales tax at that rate on everything that is bought and on every transaction of purchase and sale in the country. The inflation tax is a tax for which the federal government is basically responsible, and I think every federal government should take the responsibility for this tax. I think it should be recognized as a tax.

Now let us consider who collects the inflation tax. I think that the government collects about a third of the total cost of the inflation tax to the consumer. I say that because it is generally recognized that governments today take about a third of the gross national product. Let us say that one-third of this tax which is levied upon everyone in the country, on every purchase and sale that takes place, goes to governments and presumably is used for useful purposes, so perhaps we cannot complain too much about that one-third.

Where does the other two-thirds of the tax go? It goes to any corporation or any individual who anticipates inflation and decides to raise his prices or services more than the inflationary rate. In other words, if a doctor or a businessman anticipates that there is going to be inflation at the rate of 4 per cent and is at all smart, he will sit down at the beginning of the year and say to himself that there is going to be inflation in Canada at the rate of 4 per cent and that in order to stay even and to make the same amount as last year he will have to raise the price on his goods or services by at least 4 per cent; but if he can raise it by 5 per cent he will make a bit more. So it is my guess that while governments get about one-third of the proceeds of this general inflationary sales tax, two-thirds go to those people who are well organized enough, smart enough or quick enough on their economic feet to anticipate inflation and profit by it. It is well established that there are people in any country who profit substantially from inflation and two-thirds of any inflationary sales tax goes to them.

When governments get one-third and two thirds goes to unnamed individuals and corporations which make up our economy, we know who gets the tax. But who pays for it? Obviously some of the people who pay the tax are those who are stupid enough to own government bonds or any bonds; because if you own a $100 bond at the beginning of the year and there is inflation at the rate of 4 per cent, at the end of the year your bond is worth only $96 in terms of purchasing power. So anyone who is stupid enough to own a bond, a mortgage or any instrument evidencing fixed debt is hit by the tax in full measure. Also, anyone who owns insurance policies or anyone who is on a fixed pension gets hit by it. The income of retired civil servants, for instance, has remained the same but at the same time it has been cut down in value every year by the inflationary rate which, as I said, is now at 4 per cent.

I can recall when a pension of $250 a month was considered a very generous and large pension for a retired civil servant who had spent half his life in the service of the federal government. Such a pension might have been adequate ten years ago but certainly is no longer adequate because of inflation. Those are the people who own debt instruments, widows, orphans and pensioners, unorganized wage earners and salaried people. These are the people who pay the general sales tax of which I spoke.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Obviously, therefore, the people who pay the tax are in most cases the ones who are least able to afford to pay it. For this reason it is natural that government should want to protect them in some way. Governments do try to protect these people to some extent. For example, under the Canada Pension Plan it has been agreed that the pension payments should rise as the cost of living rises. However, I believe there is a limit of 2 per cent a year placed on such an increase and, if so, it is not enough because the cost of living is rising by 4 per cent a year.

If we permit inflation to continue there must be ever-increasing government intervention to protect people against the effects of this particular tax. Increasingly massive intervention by the government in the economy will be necessary to give these people the protection they obviously need. Indeed, in the final analysis the whole process is self-defeating. If we begin compensating, through escalation provisions, for the increase in the cost of living, we increase the rate of inflation still further. It is like a dog chasing its own tail. He goes faster and faster but he cannot catch it. If he were to do so he would be very surprised.

In our case, we cannot catch up. Any suggestion that we can compensate all those segments of the population which cannot protect themselves, by writing in escalation provisions, is unsound. This would not provide effective protection. Many times in this house suggestions have been made that the government should, for example, increase the pensions of retired civil servants. This question comes up regularly and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) just as regularly points out that the matter is being constantly considered. I believe these pensions should be increased because in my view we have a special responsibility toward retired civil servants. But if these pensions are increased, what about all those people who retired under private pension plans? They contributed to the economy too. They have no claim upon their employers for larger pensions. If the retired civil servants get a pension increase should not the holders of private pensions be treated in the same way? So one could go on from one group to another, never finding it possible to achieve equity in these circumstances.

Very often one meets people who say that inflation is not nearly as bad as it is made out to be because, though the cost of living has certainly risen, disposable income in the hands of consumers has risen even more. Of course it has, because productivity has been constantly increasing and, obviously, if productivity goes up and if there is inflation, total disposable income must increase. But the question is: who got this increase? This argument really involves the hardship of averages. Total disposable income has increased faster than inflation because of increased productivity. The averages conceal the fact that many people who are least able to protect themselves have suffered a very large reduction in their effective purchasing power, though others who are better able to protect themselves have received substantial increases. In other words, the rich get richer and the poor get poorer whenever the state permits continuing inflation.

Someone on the other side said all this was the responsibility of the federal government which fortunately, at the present time, happens to be a Liberal government. I agree it is the responsibility of the federal government. There is even a provision in the Criminal Code which deals with the clipping of our coinage; it used to be section 398, and I have referred to it in this chamber on previous occasions. It says:

> Everyone who impairs, diminishes or lightens a current gold or silver coin with intent that it should pass for a current gold or silver coin ... is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for 14 years.

So this is a serious offence. Yet recently there was a wholesale exchange of our silver currency and nickel was substituted for silver. In other words, our currency was lightened very substantially so far as silver content is concerned, in the course of quite a normal transaction. It thus appears that one can practice coin lightening provided it is done on a large enough scale, when it ceases to be a criminal offence and becomes a legitimate operation of high finance.

To show that this is not just a concern of mine but that it is fairly general, I should like to refer to something which was said by Professor Clark in his report on social security submitted to this house some years ago. He was asked who suffered most from inflation and the rising cost of living, and he replied as follows:

> Inflation is inherently unfair to those economically or politically incapable of defending their interests. This includes some categories of salaried employees and those on pension—both private and government. Recipients of government old age pensions are in a position to exert some political pressure on their own behalf—

As we have seen.

> —but those on private pension usually have little opportunity, and no contractual claim to have their pensions raised to offset inflation since their retirement. Those widows, orphaned children and retired persons who are largely dependent financially on the proceeds of life insurance policies, annuities, interest on government or corporate bonds, or other investments at fixed, or nearly fixed, rates of interest, suffer from inflation with no prospect of relief.

Professor Kenneth Boulding, using somewhat less academic language, puts it this way:

> Inflation is a refined method of taking bread out of the mouths of the aged, the infirm, the widows and orphans.

Some views on this subject have also been expressed in recent years by the Economic Council of Canada and also by Mr. Rasminsky, the respected Governor of the Bank of Canada. At one time there were people who said a little inflation was good for the economy, that if there was not inflation at the rate of 1.5 per cent or 2 per cent a year there would be high unemployment rates, and that to keep the economy prospering a little creeping inflation was necessary. More recently it has been recognized that any degree of inflation is bad for us. Since this is an important point, I should like to quote a statement made by Mr. Graham Towers in January of this year. Mr. Towers was at one time Governor of the Bank of Canada. He was referring to a suggestion that a little creeping inflation was good for the economy.

> In discussing the thesis that we can and should accept inflation as a means of achieving high rates of output, the Governor of the Bank of Canada in his last annual report expressed the opinion that this option is not really open to us. He said, and I quote "It would soon become just as difficult to prevent price rises from exceeding a high target rate as it now is to prevent them from exceeding a low target rate. The same policies of restraint would come to be required. Nothing would be gained in employment or output; the difficult efforts to adjust to inflation would thus have been to no avail and our ability to grow steadily would be continuously threatened by the impairment of our international competitive position."

A little later Mr. Towers said:

• (5:20 p.m.)

> Another evil of accepting a certain degree of inflation as inevitable and tolerable is that it tends to make governments complacent. Why take politically unpopular measures to fight a rise in the general price level if a little inflation is part of the so-called "trade-off" against unemployment? Eventually, of course, steps have to be taken if only because substantially rising living costs are widely unpopular. But by that time the problem is more difficult to solve and all kinds of disruptions and distortions have occurred. Moreover, one can never in this modern world get back to the level of prices and the cost of living that prevailed in earlier years. So I believe that governments should and must set their faces against any continuing rises in the general level of prices. They may not be 100 per cent successful. But, if they try hard, they should be able to do a pretty fair job and avoid the quite disastrous effects of destroying public confidence in the value of money. If, on the other hand, governments accept continuing inflation as inevitable, even to a limited degree—often defined as 1½ or 2 per cent per annum —they are defeated before they start.

Before concluding perhaps I might also mention the effect of inflation upon what is of concern to all of us, namely, very high interest rates. Let us consider for a moment what happens when there is a 4 per cent rate of inflation. Suppose you go to a corporation which perhaps is in the 50 per cent tax bracket, or to an individual whose top income is in a tax bracket of 50 per cent, to borrow $100. This company or individual knows that if they grant you a loan of $100, at the end of one year, with a 4 per cent rate of inflation, they will get back only $96 worth of purchasing power. Therefore they must charge you 8 per cent interest just to stay even. We must remember that they are paying an income tax of 50 per cent on the interest and they have to cope with a 4 per cent increase in inflation. By charging 8 per cent interest the loss in purchasing power by making the loan to you is just cancelled out. Therefore it is pretty apparent that the combined effect of inflation and income tax rates at that level are bound to make interest costs high. There is really no way to keep them low except by subsidization. The problem we are facing in raising money for housing mortgages and other useful purposes at the present time is largely due to this factor I have mentioned—inflation.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret I have to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I heartily concur in this motion because in its terms it is as good a motion of non-confidence in this government as one could possibly devise. The hon. member says that he has put forward this motion in these terms since about 1963. That could be. But in discussing this subject I find myself in the position of not wanting to repeat my budget speech and other speeches made this year about finance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The poor Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) might perhaps suddenly decide there was some truth in what he said about inflation, having been a member of the administration in the past that blithely disregarded inflation and told us that it was nothing very serious. However, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has belatedly decided to lay the cornerstone of some sort of policy. Having seen the problem he now says he is taking care of it. He said that on television during the course of the winter, I think around New Year, and has gone around preaching restraint on the part of others but not the government.

I agree entirely with what the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) said about the reaction of the public to the spending policies of the federal government. The minister has been raising spending limits for this coming year to the tune of $900 million. We have had a budgetary deficit that was acknowledged in the estimates at the time to be some $730 million. We have also had some supplementary estimates in the amount of some $151 million, though the figures do not quite jibe in view of what the expenditures are now and what they were said to be at the time of the budget. I would say that the net result is roughly another $100 million expenditure. These supplementary estimates are Supplementary Estimates B. I am waiting to see the final estimates which will include the bill for agricultural price supports and a number of other matters. These will come in around the end of March.

I do not agree with my hon. friend from St. Paul's when he says that inflation is entirely the responsibility of the federal government. The federal government must provide leadership in meeting inflation but inflation, regardless of the way you measure it, results from the increase in wages, the difference between the demand for a return and the increase in the production of goods and services. That is what it comes down to and it is a modern phenomenon.

On the other hand I think the federal government can slough off some responsibility on to some of the provincial administrations. Most of the provincial premiers will declare that they have had a 15-year honeymoon, that they have gone on spending and spending until they have come to the horrible realization at the present time that they have to cut back their spending. This year we will see some agonizing reappraisals of provincial policies, but we will see some much greater agonizing reappraisals on the part of the federal government. One of these reappraisals will concern medicare. If there ever is a penny-wise, pound-foolish program it is medicare as presently designed. The Minister of Finance has to be credible in his government policies. One has only to note our bond prices to realize that the market does not for a moment believe the government.

The hon. member for St. Paul's gave us quite an academic dissertation on the causes and effects of inflation. Certainly the bond market is hedging against the inflation. Incidentally, in recent weeks we have observed that the cost of living index has changed its base, 1961 now equalling 100. I looked at the returns that came into my office this morning. They were most interesting. Today the cost of living index has risen to 122; under the former 1949 index, which I agree was a little unrealistic, we would be up to 160. If anyone is interested in this, the cost of living for the average individual last month rose by .27 per cent. The index is already almost four points higher than it was in January, 1968.

This sort of thing cannot continue. The government must show leadership by cutting expenditure, not by adding $900 million to budgeted expenditures. The Minister of Finance says it will be only $900 million, but quite frankly I do not believe him. I think it will be more than that. He has made no changes in his post-secondary educational program, nor in the hospital insurance program. He now wants to start on medicare. The first two programs have been blamed for the increase in costs. Lessons have been learned and the appropriate steps should be taken.

I would have thought that the recent speeches made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada were an absolute "back of the hand" from Canada's central banker to his superiors, the government, an indication that their spending policies were entirely unreasonable and unrealistic in view of the problems existing today. The provinces must share some responsibility. The drive or impetus is there whether it is municipal, provincial or federal. Currencies of other countries have been debased as a result of inflation. It makes no difference whether this inflation is slow, creeping or galloping. On the one hand the people are encouraged to be responsible, save their money and invest. On the other hand, the government is asking for permission to nibble away at these savings by establishing the Canada Development Corporation.

• (5:30 p.m.)

As there are many others who wish to speak, I will limit myself to those remarks. I am glad to have had the opportunity to speak on this motion. I commend it to all hon. members on the government side. May it pass.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether to be amused or pained by the inference of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) that this is a no-confidence motion, which seems to delight the hon. member. This is a perfect illustration of how difficult it is to persuade some members in this house that constructive criticism can come from members on the government side, as well as those on the other side, without in any way suggesting that the government is rocky at the knees or is about to fall.

When I had the honour of being elected to this house to represent the people of Winnipeg South Centre, I was expected to use what intelligence God had given me. I do not know if that intelligence is set aside when one joins another party. I have seen no indication of that in this party. On the contrary, I have had to scramble like the very devil to keep up with the intelligent discussions within this party.

I commend the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) for raising this subject. I think this discussion is very valuable, and I do not believe the motion is a criticism of government policies. Practically every government in the western world has these problems. No one has put forward a final, doctrinaire answer to be used as a guide line. We have attempted various methods, one of which has been to cut down our expenditures. A demonstration of this method has been the removal of the winter works program which no longer served the purpose it originally set out to do. We were damned for cutting out this program. If we had not done so, we would have been damned for keeping a program which was no longer useful.

There is only one member of the Conservative Party in the house at this time when we are discussing a matter which that party considers to be so important.

Mr. Dinsdale: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Osler: Not right now; do you mind if I complete my remarks?

This government shares all the broad goals which every civilized government in the world shares, such as full employment, economic growth, price stability, balance in external trade. Unlike the opposition, the government has to reconcile all the diametrically opposed elements within this objective which occur on a day to day basis. This is not easy to do. The government is fully aware of the fact that as long as there is inflation people will get hurt, mainly the older people and the poor. Elderly people who have given service have every right to believe they should be able to live without undue stress and strain in their old age. Nobody wants inflation. On the business side, inflation leads to troubles with which we are all familiar.

It is difficult to obtain money to invest in an enterprise. It is particularly difficult to get mortgage and bond money, which is the type of money required for government and social long term objectives. It has been suggested if people would restrain their wage demands, we would no longer have inflation. It is true higher wages help cause inflationary problems. Management helps cause inflationary problems when it is less than careful with expense accounts, or less than diligent in having the most up to date equipment in factories to cut down production costs. Management not only hurts operational efficiency and the workers' ability to produce, but society as a whole, when through selfish motives production machinery is allowed to become run down.

There are two sides to this question. There are those who want high tariffs for inefficient industries to hide behind. The problem is a broad one which has to be attacked in many ways. As the hon. member for Edmonton West intimated, it is not something for which we can completely blame the worker. A great deal of the inflation is caused by government spending. This government should not be criticized for attempting to rationalize spending and bring it under control. Instead of saying to the provinces you can have 50 per cent of X dollars, the federal government is attempting to define X dollars and the objectives for which those dollars will be used in order to rationalize and control its budget. I have great confidence that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) will be able to bring his budget under control. It will take time because rationalization will have to result from discussions with provincial governments. Provincial governments must use restraint, as must the federal government.

The new department of regional development is a great step toward rational growth in areas where it is desperately needed without fanning the flames of inflation. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) has proposed the creation of an independent public agency to study, investigate and report on the problems of rising costs and prices. There is no one single solution. I am confident that this government has as good brains as any government ever had. which is all one can hope to find. This government is attempting to solve a situation which has not been solved conclusively by any government anywhere. I would be less than honest if I did not say the government must be like Caesar's wife; it must appear to be irreproachable as well as being irreproachable.

• (5:40 p.m.)

A greater effort must be made by the government to spend less money frivolously on offices, to restrain itself. The government should think twice about expenditures that the public will take as examples of frivolous spending because people will say, "What the hell; if they are doing it, I will do it too."

There are areas in which we can all help the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). I would suggest that we, ourselves, think twice about whether we want an office repainted. Nobody has asked, me, as a backbencher, if I want mine repainted. If they did, I would probably try to act like a good Canadian and fight inflation by saying, "Let it be for a while." There are attitudes that members of the government can take that will help the general climate, that will help the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance to achieve their objectives. These objectives, to a great extent can be achieved by themselves, but to an equally great extent they have to be achieved by example.

I would like to close by reading from the economic report of the President of the United States to congress in January, 1969, which included the annual report of the council of economic advisers in the United States with respect to combating inflation:

> It requires clear comprehension by all groups of the overwhelming importance of this goal.

We are doing good things. We should continue to try to do those things and more. We should continue to try to set a good example in our own house so that people will not say, "If the government can spend money like this, then I can do it too."

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members will not mind if I bring to their attention the fact that a number of hon. members are anxious to participate in this debate and we are running short of time.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, since this is the kind of debate in which so many members wish to participate, I shall restrict myself to fewer remarks than I might have made otherwise. I have found that few worthwhile suggestions about inflation have been made in the debate to this point. Everyone is against inflation. We all realize that inflation creates problems. I am not at all sure that the previous speaker's suggestion that he would not repaint his office would make any significant contribution to the struggle against inflation in the Canadian economy. However, it was a worthy gesture on his part.

We must really ask the question, and it is a question which has not yet been asked, why have we got inflation? In my opinion, the answer is that we have reached a position where those who are strong in the market place laugh at the market place. Adam Smith may be dead a couple of hundred years but it is only today that his theory is being buried. Those able to dominate the market place and fix prices in oligopolistic industries are not subject to the kind of forces discussed in the day of Adam Smith. This is what we have to recognize. When the strong ignore the dictates of the market place, when competition has ceased to be a significant factor in our life, or as significant as it used to be, then the weak are going to suffer.

The answers are not easy; they are not simple. I, for one, face the future with some hesitation because I think the result is inevitable. Unless we bring in some measure of price control, we are not going to solve the problem of inflation. We are now getting the worst of both worlds. We are getting inflation and high unemployment. At one time one would have thought that if we had the kind of unemployment we have at present in Canada, inflation would have been contained. But that obviously is not the case now. Unemployment is not working to offset inflation. Unless we bring in some measure of price control, or at least a prices review board, we cannot stop inflation.

The question of adjustment in pensions was raised. This must be government policy because no matter what measures we may take to contain inflation, inevitably there will be some industries that must have their prices raised. Industries in which productivity cannot increase as quickly as in others will want to raise their prices and competition will have to be made to work in such cases. We shall have to make some very significant changes in our tax system.

I would like to deal for a moment with advertising and selling costs. We have a situation where it is obvious that the economy is under some strain so far as price increases are concerned. But what is happening? Everybody is breaking his neck to try and get people to borrow more money to buy things that are not really necessary. One of the difficulties is that advertising almost nullifies the government's attempts to encourage restraint. It is like trying to hold back the flood waters, and I think the government should have taken a lesson from King Canute.

I was particularly disturbed by the phrase used by the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) when he said it was stupid to own government bonds. Mr. Speaker, we are having enough trouble selling government bonds without supporters of the government adding to the problems of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). In some ways the government is responsible for the position in respect of bonds because the tax system as it now exists discriminates against the holders of government bonds. On the one hand we say, "Buy our bonds," and then we design a tax system which says, "Bonds are a bad thing for you to buy."

Certain things, like dividends from equity in Canadian corporations, are deductible from taxable income but income from bonds is not deductible. If we are serious about reducing the price of government financing we should neutralize the tax system, and realize that it is usually people of limited means who invest in government bonds. We should make it possible for income from government bonds to be deductible for tax purposes.

A country has only so many resources, whether in manpower or in money. It is very important that we start thinking in terms of planning our economy and the way we can allocate resources, because we must remember that what goes into one sector cannot go into another sector. We have to make some value judgments about what is important in our society and what sort of activities should receive the most resources. We have failed to do this, and it is important that we do it. Otherwise, the war on poverty and our efforts to overcome regional disparities will fall on barren ground. There is much more I would like to say on this subject but since there are other hon. members who wish to speak I conclude by saying that I appreciate having had the opportunity of saying these few words.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment a number of those who have already spoken on this subject. They have dramatized for all of us the seriousness of this question of inflation, but to state the seriousness of the problem is not to solve it. I was particularly interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) since he was prepared to admit that the federal government alone is not responsible for inflation or for curing it. I think this is something we too often overlook. Too often when there is a problem, we take the attitude "Well, let the government settle it."

The hon. member who spoke after the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) indicated that restraint was necessary, that we all had a responsibility for restraint. I think the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) underlined this when he referred to market power. Market power I believe is a significant concept in this discussion of inflation both from the point of view of those who are selling goods and those who are offering their services in the form of organized labour. Those who are in a position, because of their particular situation, to extract an 18 per cent increase in wage rates are in a position to affect unit costs. When this sort of thing occurs with some frequency, such people are in a position to affect the climate of opinion just as those who are selling goods and services and are in a position of market power can abuse their position. What I am attempting to say here is that inflation is very largely a question of attitude. It is very largely affected by one's expectations of the future. I think the federal government has recognized this problem and has underlined it on a number of occasions. I believe the budget presented to this house on October 22 underlined the government's attitude when the minister introduced measures which will balance the budget.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The minister underlined the seriousness of inflation when he met head on this whole question of expectation, the need to show those who are most concerned that we can in fact manage our economy. In this connection, I should like to say a word or two about the effects of inflation. Too often we talk about inflation as if the taxpayers who will suffer are not also lenders. I am suggesting that the beneficiaries of social security programs, such as pensions and life insurance, are also those who are the lenders in the final analysis. Their premiums are the savings which buy the bonds that are the basis of investment in the private companies in Canada. These savings also underwrite and finance government programs. I am saying that the lender is not the large institution, is not the life insurance company, is not the pension fund, but is the person whose premiums flow into the pension fund, or into the life insurance companies and which are invested on his behalf.

I believe that too often we tend to regard inflation as something which affects only a few, the weak. So it does; frequently, they are affected more than anybody else. I am concerned about this because they are least able to defend themselves. Equally, however, inflation affects almost everyone in Canada. Almost everyone in Canada now has an interest in a pension plan. I think the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn), when he referred to inflation as a tax, was accurate. I believe it is a tax. Not only does it tax everyone, but it taxes those least able to defend themselves. But inflation is not something which is generated only within a country; it is generated as well by events outside a country. I believe that in Canada we are particularly sensitive to the actions of the United States in this regard. Over 70 per cent of our trade is with the United States. What happens in the United States affects us quickly. The United States has been concerned with a major inflationary problem and has imposed a 10 per cent surtax on income taxes to cope with this problem.

I should like to add as well that I share the view of the hon. member for St. Paul's with regard to creeping inflation. I think the Economic Council gave more credibility than it should have to that suggestion by calling it a trade-off. I think the trade-off between a certain percentage of inflation, perhaps 1.4 per cent, to obtain the 3 per cent employment rate which the economic council says is a goal is no more than an invitation to the very thing to which the hon. member was referring. I was happy to see that the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Rasminsky, in a recent speech abroad drew attention to this question. He said:

> Expressions of concern about inflation sometimes draw the reply that we must choose between inflation and unacceptable rates of unemployment. I think we are today seeing more and more evidence that this is an illusion.

I should also like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that government policies are starting to bear fruit in this area. In the issue of the Globe and Mail for February 21 under the heading "Problem sector showing gains" there is an article which contains the following information:

During the past four months the rate of unemployment has dropped steadily from 5.1 per cent of the labour force in October to 4.3 per cent in January, after adjustment for seasonal factors. The rise in the consumer price index, on a year-to-year basis, declined during the same period from 4.2 per cent to 3.8 per cent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I say that the government has accepted its responsibility and, further, that its policies are bearing fruit.

Mr. Speaker: The hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

PROHIBITION OF ADVERTISING, SALE AND IMPORTATION

The house resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Basford) for second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs of Bill S-26, to prohibit the advertising, sale and importation of hazardous products.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, before the adjournment at six o'clock I was discussing hazardous products, in particular the inflammability of garments. Let me point out briefly that this is not the only problem which this bill is meant to cover. There are a great many other aspects to it, poisoning notably among them. In view of the fact we are perhaps a little short of time I will leave it to other members to discuss these other aspects, and move on to the Bill itself.

The actual wording of Bill S-26 in its present form is not acceptable to me, and it is my hope that at the committee stage and on third reading other members will consider seriously the points I will be bringing forward this evening. I am not a member of the committee and thus I ask for your indulgence in allowing me to mention at this time the specific provisions of this bill to which I take exception.

Clause 8, subclause (3) would require that any amendment made by the Governor In Council to the schedule of this bill must be placed before this house within two years of it being brought forward as an order in council. My personal view is that this would result in this bill being amended every year, for no minister could risk leaving these amendments to the final year. Keeping in mind the amount of legislation the government house leader wishes us to consider this year, would place an intolerable burden on this house and result in a serious uncertainty in the law. For example, as a result of an election or delay in passing legislation we may well be unable to deal with this specific amending legislation, and the various hazardous substances which the Governor In Council had decided should not be placed on the market would once more become available for sale in Canada. This is what I mean by uncertain law.

If you look at subsection 3 of section 8 sir, you will see that the Governor In Council is prohibited from bringing back any of these particular items which had been dropped from the list as a result of not being brought before Parliament. This would mean considerable uncertainty which would, I regret to say, result in hazardous products being placed on the market from time to time with attendant danger to the consumers, particularly children.

The essence of this legislation in my mind should be to allow the minister or the Governor In Council to act with speed. We do not want to have a dangerous toy sold in Canada for a period of time before something can be done about it, nor do we want this toy to come back on the market through too rigid legislation. We want to have something done quickly. A subsection such as subsection (3) of section 8 would nullify the intent of this legislation.

Let me give notice that if this measure goes to the committee and I am unable to have my views adopted there, I will propose an amendment to this house at the third reading stage. I will suggest that, instead of having a period of only two years during which time such orders in council can be presented to this house, we should have a period of perhaps eight years. This should meet the objections to the original bill of those who put in section 8(3). The bill should certainly not be amended by parliament every two years, but should remain in force for a substantially longer interval, namely eight years. Perhaps eight years is too short a period of time, and it should be longer but eight years is my suggestion.

If this bill is passed in its present form it would introduce an element of uncertainly and risk into the law. This is always unfortunate. If the legislation is examined, it will be seen that section 9 allows for a board of review, which is flexible and allows sufficient or adequate appeal from decisions of the Governor in Council. If we carry on with section 8(3) as it now is we would be introducing a guarantee which in my opinion is quite unnecessary and indeed damaging to the object of the bill. With those remarks, I will resume my seat. While I support the bill, I sincerely hope the committee will take note of my remarks. If it does not and the bill comes back to the house in its present form, I will propose an amendment along the lines I have suggested.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a point of order in respect of the remarks of the previous speaker who has just indicated that he will move an amendment in respect of the bill. While it was distinctly suggested by the house leader of the Conservative party that members of the government do not move amendments to bills, I wonder whether Your Honour would like to rule on the priority of the hon. member indicating that he would propose an amendment during the committee stage.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this does not involve a point of order but rather the grave danger in which the hon. member has placed his political career by daring to threaten the distinguished ornaments of the treasury benches who, from time to time when allowed, come into the house to discuss matters with which we are concerned. I will deal with those later.

I am very glad that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) has pointed this out because I think he has certainly opened the door to a very careful examination of what has taken place. Generally, however, I accept the remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) who, in a brilliant and eloquent speech, placed his position and that of this party on the record in respect of the bill as it is presently constituted. There are, however, two collateral lines which I want to pursue. During the course of the debate I was wondering who would bell the cat for the government. I have now found that the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) will, from now on, be the official cat-beller.

• (8:10 p.m.)

This opens a consideration of clause 8 and the amendment introduced in the other place. I hoped that the minister, rather than seeking some way to circumvent the very sound and statesmanlike decision which came out of the other place, would have accepted it. It must have been a chastening but enlightening experience for him to go into the other place and there be met with the wise and solemn decisions made by men who have served their country for years, the majority of them members of his party.

I have had an opportunity to read the reports of the other place. I have read the report of the Committee on Banking and Commerce, which committee examined the bill. I think eminently sound reasons were given for the amendments which have been introduced.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, I would be delighted to have questions.

Mr. Basford: I hope the hon. member is not implying in his remarks that we cannot expect wise and solemn decisions in this house, too.

Mr. Baldwin: I expect wise and solemn decisions from this side of the house, but in the light of experience during this session I am somewhat doubtful of the decisions which come from the government side. The government, through the medium of the minister and his officials and after what I presume was long and careful consideration, has carefully enumerated specific products which in part I are the subject of outright prohibition within the terms of the bill and in part II are the subject of conditional prohibition.

This is the basis on which I put it. If what the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich said is correct, and that is what the minister and his officials had in mind when they first framed the terms of this legislation, why have a schedule at all? Why did they not simply give to the Governor in Council the right to say that any product which had been examined had been deemed to be hazardous in accordance with the provisions of this act? We have a schedule because the government and its officials, having examined the whole range of products, have said this specific product and that named product are to be brought under the schedule. I accept this. As one who has lived in a household with children for many years, this defect in our law has long been apparent.

I believe that other approaches could have been made to meet the evil that exists, and provisions could have been framed in other ways. There is an evil in this respect. There has been a gap in our law, and I am glad to see that the government is attempting to deal with it. However, it is completely wrong to suggest that, because this is the case, we should give to the Governor in Council the right to add new products, without any limiting conditions.

I have said in this house on many occasions that it is necessary in the age in which we live to give to the government the right to move swiftly, firmly and directly if a product is put on the market, a toy or anything else, that is hazardous. If a government, when operating under this legislation, is of the opinion that a product should not be allowed on the market because of its dangerous characteristics, the government should have the right to move and should not have to wait until parliament meets in order to secure amendments to the legislation.

There should be the right to move swiftly and decisively in this regard. But if the government decided it was essential to secure the consent and approval of the majority of the members of this house and of the other place to say that certain products were hazardous, why should it not have to come here after taking care of the immediate danger to ask that additional products be added to the list?

I can see no danger arising when the government moves by order in council under the provisions of clause 8 of the bill. Then, the product cannot be sold because it falls squarely within the terms of the bill. There is a board of review in this respect. If the manufacturers, producers, or anyone affected wishes to do so, they can ask the minister to establish a board of review and in this way might be able to overcome the impediment which the bill places upon them. But if this is not the case and parliament has not said that product A, B or C is in fact a hazardous product, the government is compelled within the period of two years to come back to parliament to secure the approval of this house and the other place before the views of the government can be sustained.

This is apparent from a reading of the transcript of the proceedings in the other place and the statements made in the committee. I suggest that the attempt by the government to circumvent this very wise and sensible decision by persuading its members to secure amendments to comply with the government line is wrong. I hope there are members on the other side of the house who hear or will read what I have to say and will consult with the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) about this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Baldwin: I hope they will not be prepared to go along with the views expressed by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson) which I am sure conform to the views of the minister in this regard.

I suggest, therefore, that members of the standing committee should be vigilant and alert to ensure that the government is not allowed to circumvent the amendment which was proposed in the other place and which now has found its way into this bill. I urge members on the committee to ensure that this is the case. I suggest to them that in the light of the question of privilege which was raised, and which Your Honour held was not a question of privilege but which aroused some controversy, they will show the people of Canada that they will not toe the government line.

I will be happy to rise in my place when this bill comes back here if government members have in fact, as I hope they will, in co-operation with members of the opposition stood squarely against the government and the minister in their attempt to remove this amendment from the bill. I hope they will stand against that attempt and return the bill to this house unimpaired and with this amendment still in it.

I have been trying to be objective in these remarks. I have tried to rise above politics. I will try to rise even further now. This bill is a clear illustration of one of the grave defects in our political and constitutional system. The only way the minister can deal with this problem is to invoke the criminal law, as is the case with so many of the other aspects of our social structure which come under his jurisdiction, such as restrictive trade practices.

• (8:20 p.m.)

When the government tabled in the house its position paper for the federal-provincial conference with regard to constitutional change, there was one aspect of it which appealed to me very greatly, namely the proposition that the highest courts of the land will not be bound by the principle of stare dicisis. In other words, with regard to constitutional law—and this has been a great defect for many years—the highest court in our country is free, if it so chooses, on the facts which are brought before it, to disregard previous judicial decisions of either the Privy Council or the Supreme Court of Canada and to come to different conclusions. I am not suggesting that the Court should legislate to the extent which at times the Supreme Court of the United States does, but I do think there is room for a greater degree of freedom and for far more flexibility. I hope that the provinces will accept this proposal.

In any event, I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the government will seek ways and means of trying to bring about a change in our judicial practice at the highest level so that the Supreme Court will be entitled to disregard previous decisions. This is an example of a case where the government should not be compelled to try to circumvent the constitution, as judicially interpreted, by invoking the criminal law. The problem should be dealt with by regulation, the breach of which shall be punished by suitable penalties. The government should have the right to regulate and control, a right which does not exist at the present time.

I would like to think that, just as important as some of the other problems to which the Prime Minister has referred and which have been placed on the agenda of federal-provincial conferences, would be issues which affect so many millions of people, as certainly this bill does. Surely, the provinces brought together at the common table to discuss these matters with the federal government would be prepared to say that in many areas of our social, political and cultural life there is a means of giving the federal government the power to act and to regulate. I stand four square for the preservation of provincial authority in many aspects of our life. It is essential to keep those aspects on the basis on which they were established in the constitution on which our confederation was established. But in view of the mobility of people today we should be entitled to expect a uniformity of regulations and legislation in matters of this kind.

So, I say to the minister in all sincerity that I hope he and his colleagues will use their influence with the Prime Minister and with the Minister of Justice to see that matters of this kind are brought to the stage where we no longer have to worry about being able to legislate. When we come to deal with some of the great problems which will affect our society, problems such as water and air pollution, we will face precisely the same difficulty long before we may have accomplished our mission of dealing with such matters as language rights. I am not one to say they are not important, but to me these subjects are equally important and in some ways more important because they affect intimately the personal lives, the comfort and safety of so many millions of people. I hope, therefore, that this aspect of Constitutional problems will be regarded as the number one priority of this government and that, irrespective of other constitutional changes, ways and means will be found to ensure the right of the federal government, possibly in cooperation with provincial governments, to proceed not by invoking the criminal law but by means of regulations.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Before commencing some of my general remarks on the bill, I would like to participate in the discussion of the specific question of the powers that the minister may have by order in council to act without coming to parliament. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has pointed out, quite eloquently I think, the need for the minister to have authority on which to act rapidly in cases where substances come onto the market, and their chemical derivations cannot be anticipated because of the rapid changes which are taking place in technology. I believe that the minister needs some discretion to be able to take a product off the market. On the other hand, I recognize the validity of the argument put forward by the hon. member for Peace River that one cannot assign unlimited power to governments by order in council. I would like to suggest to the minister for his consideration, and this is just a thought that occurred to me as the debate was taking place, that there is another approach which we might take to this problem. We might give to the minister the power he requires but ensure that the decision of the minister comes back to parliament. Instead of giving him unlimited power to legislate, let us give him perhaps six months. If he decides to take a product off the market, then within the six months he would come to parliament and ask parliament to put it on one of the schedules. I hope the minister, and perhaps the hon. member for Peace River, will consider this proposition as an attempt to recognize the difficulty which the minister might encounter by not having the power to remove an item from the market which is not in the schedule now but which may obviously be a hazard to health in his judgment.

I am very pleased to see this bill come before parliament. It represents one more nail in the coffin of Mr. Caveat Emptor. Mr. Buyer-Beware has been buried with very little mourning. The government is accepting its responsibility to take a look at the hazardous substances that come on the market and to protect the public from the sale of them.

I would like to make a number of points on this subject. When the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) spoke he raised the question of cigarettes as a hazardous substance. I notice that the bill does not deal with cigarettes, but where it deals with advertising it seems to give a rather broad definition of that term. I wonder whether it could not be made quite evident that it is not only advertising that will be prohibited if the substance is considered dangerous to the public. For example, if one considers cigarette advertising, the manufacturers may be anticipating that some legislation will be passed soon restricting their ability to advertise cigarettes. They are already moving into a whole new range of gimmicks which may not be classified as advertising but which may very well be transferring expenditure in the publicity department from one form of promotion to another. I refer to such things as giving-away large sums of money, cars and so on. I think that the definition of advertising should be made clearer in order to ensure that it covers all types of promotion. In some cases, such promotions may be more damaging than advertising. I am thinking of door to door sampling and things of this type. I think it is fairly important for the minister to make sure that such a possibility does not exist.

• (8:30 p.m.)

There is one omission from this bill. Looking at clause 8, this bill lists what shall not be put on the market. I think that to be completely effective or to be more effective the bill should also include what must be put on the market. I am thinking particularly of containers which may be hazardous in themselves. They may contain hazardous or semi-hazardous substances, yet the container may be more dangerous than its contents—pill boxes of various kinds. I am wondering what provision the minister is considering to take care of this particular problem.

A while ago I raised the question of glue sniffing. I am pleased to see that glues are covered by this bill and that the minister will have power to remove them from sale. No one at this point can be certain what the answer to this problem might be. Eliminating the sale of glue might help in some cases, or legislation in terms of assisting persons who sniff glue by recognizing this as a psychiatric problem. I have a private members' bill to that effect.

The power to help is contained in this bill. I think all those concerned with this problem will breathe somewhat more easily knowing that, upon examination or following research, the government does have the power to take glue or substances similar to glue off the market or ask that they be modified in some way to make them less dangerous.

The overall impression I get of this bill is that while there is a schedule of some specific things such as bleaches, this term encompasses a whole area of production; namely, cleansers, sanitizers or household goods containing chlorine. There is a remarkably wide range of products covered by that definition. The impression one gets is that the minister will possess very great powers to act. Perhaps the big question which arises in my mind at this point is to what extent he will be willing to act and to what extent will he and his department be vigilant in the pursuit of these hazardous substances. It is not enough to have a bill which says certain things can be done. We know the government has all kinds of legislation now under which it could act in other areas and it has been very reluctant to take action; it has not used its power enough, rather than over-used its power, as is the fear of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Let me in closing congratulate the minister on this bill. I think it is a very good step in the right direction. I indicate I will support an amendment reviving the one deleted by the Senate, perhaps putting a time factor into that kind of amendment so that the power is not completely arbitrary.

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): I am pleased to rise to support the legislation now before the house. I have spent the day in this chamber listening to the debates. I am impressed by the broad support which the legislation has received from all parties. Of course, this bill has very broad support in the country; it has received the attention which it deserves and requires. It provides machinery which hopefully will be used to protect the interests of consumers in a very broad way. The interests of consumers are catered to by the bill satisfactorily, in my view. There has been discussion, as well, as to the interests of parliament. Will there be a right of review later? The Senate revision remains. There has been an interesting discussion about it. I intend to support in this respect the suggestion made, notwithstanding the views of the house leader of the opposition. I would prefer to see the legislation stand, without the necessity of the house going through the awkward business of reviewing a two-year accumulation of regulations.

I should like to turn to the area of the producer because there has been no discussion today of the interests of the producer, and with respect I should like to make one suggestion for an amendment which I hope may be introduced before the bill is finally enacted, that is, an amendment to section 9. As background, may I say that a very fair right of appeal is provided for any producer who is a victim of, if I may put it that way, an order preventing the goods he has purchased or imported from being sold. Provision for appeal is made and those who have imported goods and find they are the subject of an order in council which prevents them from being sold can, under clause 9, within 60 days, ask that a board of review be constituted to consider the order in council which was passed. Unfortunately, in the normal course of events the products to be considered would be products already in existence. More than likely they would be products someone had already paid for—either the producer or the importer. The producer or the importer would have a legal right to appeal but in fact they may not have a real appeal because of the fact that there is no requirement at all in clause 9 that the appeal be dealt with within any given period.

The board might be set up in the normal course. It might review the evidence in the normal course. However, the Board might take too long in arriving at a decision for an ordinary producer or a small producer to be able to take advantage of the right of appeal. He might find he was bankrupt with an inventory of goods which were considered hazardous and not have the opportunity, because of the fact that an appeal might not be heard in time, to save himself from what might be an injustice. In any event, I would point out that it would be most desirable to include a requirement in clause 9 that the board render a decision on the appeal within a time which would be meaningful to an ordinary producer or importer. In this connection, I suggest that a period of seven days might not be inappropriate.

Seven days is not a great deal of time within which to prepare a case, but one would hope that if an order in council had been passed against a particular product it would be supported by an investigation of the goods in question and that certain experts would be genuinely of the opinion that the goods were hazardous. So the case for the Crown, if I may put it may, would be immediately available.

If the importer or producer wished to have his case heard quickly he ought to be entitled to have it heard quickly by the representatives of the government. With that amendment, I intend to support the bill. I will support it anyway, but I do hope consideration will be given to the possibility of an injustice being suffered because an appeal is not heard in time save a producer from an unfortunate situation.

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have been in touch with consumers and housewives and other people across Canada and I am quite sure I have found out exactly what the minister has found: that this bill will be one of the most readily accepted pieces of legislation to have come out of Ottawa for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): But the original draft of this bill received more public approval than is going to be the case if this new clause 3, which the other place insisted on inserting, is passed. I say that in the interests of the consumers of this country.

Having said that, the bill is an improvement over the bill of last year. It is much broader than the bill that was proposed last year. Instead of hazardous substances, the bill refers to the hazardous products, a broader category. In addition to chemicals, glues, household cleansers, bleaches and polishes, the bill will include articles like matches, flammable textiles, mechanical toys, electrical appliances and dangerous lawnmowers.

Under the original draft of the bill, the minister was empowered to act swiftly and decisively to ban hazardous substances directly they came on to the market and before damage was done. I agree with what my colleague said a little while ago that there is much more chance of the minister's powers being underused than overused. Although the minister and I may differ on a lot of things, I trust the Minister with powers to act quickly in putting substances that really are dangerous on the schedule and safely out of the reach of people, rather than making him come back to parliament every time he wishes to add a substance to the schedule. People are worried about parliament today because they feel parliament moves far too slowly to meet the needs of this day and age. If the minister has to come back to parliament to debate and pass a measure of this kind every time he wants to deal with a fresh hazardous product then, I think the consumers of Canada will have a perfectly legitimate grievance.

When the original bill was drafted, the Consumers Association of Canada wrote to members of parliament indicating that the bill was a good measure and they hoped it would be supported. As I say, the minister was empowered under the original bill to add any substance he thought hazardous to the schedule. I believe the minister is quite capable of using his discretion in this regard. There are many experts to assist him in his department. With all the red tape in government departments there is far more danger of the minister not using this power than overusing it.

A similar situation arose when the drug bill was in committee. Some members worried unduly about the need for the insertion of what were almost impossible safety standards. This was really an expression of lack of confidence in the food and drug directorate. I feel that until such time as the food and drug directorate errs sufficiently to lose our confidence, it merits trust. In the same way, I think that this minister and his department can be trusted sufficiently to test a substance to determine whether it is hazardous. If it is, it can be placed on the schedule and removed from the reach of consumers before it can do any damage and before somebody gets killed.

I should just like to refer to the proceedings in the other place when this bill came up for debate. Dr. Crawford, the Deputy Minister of National Health and Welfare was quoted. He appeared in 1967 before the Senate committee on banking and commerce and was asked how his department had dealt with the emergencies that had resulted from the appearance on the market of necklaces made from the poisonous jequirity beans and the plastic ice balls from Hong Kong which contained contaminated water. In his reply to that question Dr. Crawford stated:

> Well, we had to deal with the provincial departments on this. We telephoned and telegraphed and told them of the hazard which was in their shops and they dealt with it provincially. This is how we had to handle that situation. Of course it was a pretty time consuming process.

Of course it was. If the federal government is going to show leadership in the matter of one standard of safety for necessary products for Canadians from Victoria to St. John's, the department must have some jurisdiction for determining what are hazardous substances so that they may be put on the schedule to this bill.

According to the latest available statistics in regard to accidents in the home, in 1966, 275 deaths occurred from poisoning. I say that is 275 too many. I suggest that if parliament has to give approval every time a substance that is determined to be hazardous is put on the schedule of a bill, then while the bill is waiting to be dealt with along with all of the other bills before the house, accidents involving the use of this substance will occur and prove to be fatal.

I was appalled to learn that the banking and commerce committee of the other place that inserted what I consider to be a piece of dangerous red tape in the first draft of the bill did so by a vote of nine to three, thus taking from the minister the power to determine what are hazardous substances and to place them on the schedule. While there may be some amendments moved in regard to various safeguards, in regard to the appeals machinery and so on, I hope very much before the house is through with this measure the provision to which I refer will be eliminated in one way or another. This will restore to the minister the power he should have through this legislation to protect the consumers of this country against hazardous substances.

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak briefly on this bill and to support the minister. May I congratulate him on his creditable performance and the leadership he has given since he assumed his portfolio last summer.

This bill, as hon. members are aware, is very similar to Bill S-22 which was previously introduced in the other place, passed there and placed on our order paper, but which with the prorogation of the 27th parliament died on the order paper. We are making progress in this house, though I am not suggesting that we ought to have more elections or prorogations.

I should like to recall a rather amusing book with the title "Mr. Blandings builds his Dream House". According to the book, the only way to build a perfect house was to build one, tear it down and then build another. In the same way, the reconsideration of this bill makes for refinement. As a result, I feel that Bill S-26 is better legislation than was Bill S-22. At the time Bill S-22 was introduced, there was no active Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs headed by the present minister. Aside from the subsequent hazard of substance, the other bill also dealt with another matter, the question of the advertising and sale of contraceptive devices. This part of the legislation should be under the jurisdiction of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

• (8:50 p.m.)

We have had a very commendable record in this country in ensuring purity and safety of food and drugs under our Food and Drug Directorate. However, there have been a great many products, and new products are arriving daily on the market, which cannot be classified as either food or drugs but at the same time are very important in the every day life of the consumer. In this respect, the legislation currently being introduced by the minister, covers matters that are important to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In the eyes of the consumer, we have been far behind our neighbours to the south and other countries of the world in providing legislation for the protection of the consumer.

I would like to refer, Mr. Speaker, to one particular section of this bill, namely the one covering poisons. Of 11,000 fatal accidents recorded for the year 1966, a little over 2,000 occurred in the home. I will not go into the details. As an hon. member previously mentioned, 275 of these resulted from poisoning.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

With 20 million people in our country, 275 is not a large number, but this bill will be important if even only one life is saved. There were actually over 400 accidental poisonings in the year 1966, 30 per cent of which occurred outside the home.

I would refer to the statistical evidence on poisoning accidents, every one of which could be a fatal accident. This evidence indicates 70 per cent of these accidents involved children under the age of five years. The very high incidence of drug and non-drug poisoning involving very young children points out the urgent necessity for control in this area. It is impossible to prevent every poisoning, but what is required is more awareness by parents and the general public; better labelling, improved packaging and other safety measures in order to reduce accidents to both adults and children and the potential serious injury or loss of life.

Schedule 1 of the bill is very specific. Schedule 2 is rather general in character covering many household cleaners, bleaches and solvents presently used in the home. There are many other hazardous substances in addition to the ones specified. We cannot, of course, know in advance what products will arrive on the market in the future or to what extent they will be hazardous. The Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) or his colleague the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) must be in a position to act by order in council to add or delete possible classes in schedule 1 and provide reasonable controls for the type of product included in schedule 2, subject of course to the other provisions of the legislation. I am very pleased to support this bill, Mr. Speaker, which is an important step forward in protection of the Canadian people.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I must inform the house if the hon. minister speaks now, he will close the debate.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): My first words, Mr. Speaker, must be of apology to the house for being absent when this bill was called for second reading this afternoon. Apparently, because of the new rules passed before Christmas, business is being dealt with very expeditiously in this house. I apologize for not being present.

I had the advantage of listening this afternoon and part of this evening to the debate, a debate which indicates that there is support for this measure in all corners of the house. It is gratifying to note that this important piece of consumer protection legislation is receiving the support of all parties.

In this legislation we, as parliamentarians and legislators, have recognized our obligation to protect the public against products that are a hazard to health or safety. Products that can predictably injure, maim, sicken or kill must be controlled or banned. The magnitude of this problem in Canada is impressive.

There is, of course, no easy explanation for accidents. Carelessness, faulty equipment, misuse of something through ignorance and human frailty play a large part in causing these mishaps. But a startling number of them can be traced to common everyday household products. The attractive, innocent looking bottle of cleanser or furniture polish which a mother sets down momentarily to answer a phone, becomes a lethal poison for her three year old child. Faulty wiring in a poorly made electrical appliance electrocutes an innocent visitor to a home. A young girl is permanently disfigured by a highly flammable sweater or hair band because of inadvertent exposure to a flaming match or lighter. A couple waterproofing their basement with an unlabelled chemical are burned to death because of its unrecognized explosive characteristics. Children are badly burned by explosive cracker balls which look exactly like cereal or candy but which explode when chewed.

Hon. members in the course of this debate have mentioned other examples of hazardous products. The ones I mention are purely examples of cases on file in my own department, the Department of National Health and Welfare, safety councils across the country, poison control centres and emergency wards in the hospitals of Canada.

I could go on describing the grisly details of injury and death caused by hazardous products, products which looked perfectly innocent to the user and which contained no warning of their potential hazard to health or safety, but I think I have made my point. The question now arises how can we prevent this unnecessary death toll and suffering? Because this is new legislation in Canada, Mr. Speaker, for the sake of the record I would like to outline very briefly what a few other countries have done with regard to the problem of hazardous products.

• (9:00 p.m.)

In Britain, a committee on consumer protection was appointed in 1959. As a result of this committee's recommendations the Consumer Protection Act was passed in 1961 giving the Home Secretary, after due consultation—and I might say to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin)—very wide powers to make regulations as to composition or contents, design, construction, finish or packing for any, and I repeat for any, class of goods, and requiring that they be marked or accompanied by appropriate warnings or instructions. The effect of this act in the United Kingdom was to authorize the compulsory imposition of standards and the provision of information about the goods by means of labelling in the interests of consumer safety.

Regulations made under the British statute, or kept in force by it, so far have concerned fireguards, portable oil heaters, children's cribs, mandatory flame resistant materials for children's clothing, and the safety of toys. Regulations now under preparation and consideration in Britain relate to the toxicity of pencils and crayons, and the colour coding of flexible cords attached to domestic electric appliances. The consumer council in Britain is looking at a number of other appliances to which regulations should apply.

The question of consumer safety has also been the focus of attention in the United States in recent years. Public concern regarding the flammability of clothing, which was a concern mentioned this afternoon by many hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson), was roused in the United States in the early 1950's following cases of serious burn injuries to wearers of highly flammable sweaters and cowboy play suits of brushed rayon which had appeared on the market at that time. As a result of these incidents and accidents the Flammable Fabrics Act was passed in 1953 and amended in 1967.

Another major piece of legislation in the United States in the field of consumer safety was the Federal Hazardous Substances Labelling Act of 1960, which introduced for the first time mandatory cautionary labelling of packaged, dangerous household substances such as detergents, waxes, bleaches and paint thinners. But this was a labelling measure only, and furthermore it was confined to hazardous substances that were packaged.

In 1966 the American Congress, recognizing the weakness of that act, amended it and renamed it the Federal Hazardous Substances Act. The amendment extended the requirements of the original legislation to cover all hazardous substances, regardless of whether or not they were packaged. It authorized the banning of household substances so hazardous that cautionary labelling was insufficient protection. It extended cautionary labelling requirements to include further warnings and data specifically related to children.

Perhaps, the potentially most significant measure taken in the United States recently in the field of consumer safety was the establishment in 1967 of a National Commission on Product Safety. This body is undertaking a comprehensive study and investigation to determine what type of household products could be consideed hazardous, the extent to which self-regulation by industry in the United States affords protection against potential hazards, the protection afforded at common law, and the extent and effectiveness of protection currently afforded by federal, state and local laws.

A list of some 200 household products is now being investigated by this national commission which has invited comments on the safety aspect of these products from all interested parties. When the legislation before this house is passed, as I hope it will be, I expect that the information flowing from this commission in the United States will not only be extremely useful to them but extremely useful to us in Canada in working out regulations under our Hazardous Products Act.

I mention what has happened in other countries, in Britain and the United States, to show that what we are doing in Canada today, and what we are asking parliament to approve, is nothing terribly revolutionary, nothing terribly radical, but is being asked in recognition of the need for parliament to protect the Canadian public against hazardous products, a need that the United Kingdom and the United States recognized some years ago.

We face in our country the same problems as the United States, Britain and other advanced countries where the proliferation and sophistication of consumer products have been accompanied by a corresponding increase of hidden hazards against which the consumer cannot defend himself unaided. We face the same high accident toll and the same complacent assumption by the public that what it buys is safe. Many hon. members who spoke this afternoon recognized this, and in fact some said that this legislation was five or ten years late. I would agree with them, and for the sake of those who have been killed, maimed or injured in the interval, I would have hoped that we could have had this legislation passed some time previously.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be introducing this legislation this evening. I point out that apart from the specific drug legislation which I introduced some time ago, this is really the first major piece of consumer legislation that this new department of mine has introduced. I think the fact of its being introduced and the fact that hon. members have recognized the need for it shows the wisdom of establishing a department of government on consumer affairs to devote itself to the attention, protection, interests and the welfare of Canadian consumers.

The hon. member for Kitchener (Mr. Hymmen), and a number of other hon. members, gave statistics during the course of the debate relating to accidental poisoning. The hon. member for Kitchener mentioned that in 1966 there were some 35,596 cases of accidental poisoning in Canada. It can be assumed, Mr. Speaker, that many more thousands of poisonings occurred but were not reported. As the hon. member pointed out, the striking factor about these accidental poisonings is that over 70 per cent of them involved children under five years of age. Products involved in the non-drug poisonings ranged from cleaning and polishing agents to fuel and lubricants.

To anyone involved in the field of consumer protection, of safety and of poison centres, it is clear that the major problem lies in keeping children and potentially dangerous substances such as A.S.A. tablets, bleaches or corrosive agents away from each other, except in cases of need and under supervision. Their improper use, mainly ingestion by children, can result in very serious tragedy.

Bill S-26 is designed to provide the authority to deal with substances of a poisonous, toxic, inflammable, explosive or corrosive nature which are hazards to the health or safety of the public. My department also hopes to be able to promote safety standards for consumer goods in co-operation with existing standards setting bodies and the proposed Standards Council of Canada. Such standards could be embodied in the regulations associated with this legislation to provide a basis for prohibiting or controlling hazardous substances and products.

Some examples of the kind of products that could be covered under this legislation have been mentioned this afternoon, and they include dangerously flammable clothing, defective matches, dangerous children's toys, power lawnmowers, household electrical appliances or any other type of consumer product that might be dangerous to health or safety if it has design or construction defects.

Hazardous products will be listed in the schedule, and as has been pointed out the schedule to the act is divided into two major parts. Part I lists hazardous products which cannot be advertised, sold, or imported into Canada; in other words products which are intended to be absolutely prohibited, forbidden for sale, importation or advertising. Part II lists products which may be advertised, sold or imported only when they comply with certain specified regulations prescribed by the act.

• (9:10 p.m.)

Many members have mentioned the kind of products which might be listed in part II and some types of regulations we might have. It was suggested that we might have warning labels in appropriate cases or, as the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) mentioned, that we might have safety packaging in some cases. The hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski) mentioned glue and the extent to which we would be able to regulate it under a provision of this kind in this piece of legislation. As has been mentioned in this debate, there are examples of products which are to be banned absolutely and outright. The jequirity bean grown in the Caribbean area and used to make necklaces and eyes for dolls has recently received notoriety and widespread publicity. One of these beans if chewed or swallowed contains enough poison to cause death in a few hours. Children's furniture or toys coated with paint containing lead compound beyond a certain allowable tolerance will be banned, as will extremely flammable paints or paint and varnish removers for household use.

As time and experience dictate, other products which are deemed to be dangerous to the health and safety of consumers may be prohibited. In general, products will be banned where it is found that the hazard involved in their use is so great that the public health and safety can be adequately protected only by removing the product from the market place.

The products which are placed in part II of the schedule are those that may be dangerous to the health or safety of the consumer if used in a manner not intended by the manufacturer. Examples of such products are household bleaches and cleaners. These products are often hazardous to children whose natural curiosity leads them into danger. Regulations will be required by the act compelling manufacturers to label these products with appropriate warning or cautionary statements. Instructions will also be required on the package prescribing the antidote to be taken or other necessary information in case of accidents.

Another example of products requiring regulatory legislation are those containing toxic chemical additives such as toluene and acetone. Hon. members are well aware of the problem of glue sniffing among young people. The hon. member for Waterloo mentioned that this is a social and psychological problem. I am the first to agree and concede that all the regulations in the world will not solve a social and psychological problem, but the information we have is that some regulation can help. During a recent inquest at the city of Ottawa a local police official reported coming in direct contact with 88 sniffing cases in the city during the year. Regulation will be proposed to prohibit the sale of these toxic substances unless they contain explicit cautionary labels which warn that the vapours in these products can cause serious bodily harm or death. We are also looking for other possibilities in respect of the regulation and sale of these products to minors. Before Christmas I sent an official of my department to the state of New York and the city of Washington to examine the kind of regulations they have in those two jurisdictions.

I repeat that the addition of a hazardous product to the schedule in the act will prohibit its advertisement, sale or importation into Canada if it is listed in part I, or will allow it to be advertised, sold or imported into Canada only if it complies with the regulations if it is listed in part II.

In order to protect legitimate and responsible manufacturers or distributors, this legislation provides for the establishment of a Hazardous Products Board of Review. This Board, consisting of not more than three persons, will be called upon to review the decision to add a product to part I or part II of the schedule if a manufacturer, distributor or person having the product in his possession files a request within 60 days in which case the Board will be established to examine into the wisdom of the order, the properties of the product banned and so on.

The hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Kaplan) made some remarks about clause 9 and the provision for the Board of Review. I cannot agree with his suggestion that the hearing should be held in seven days. I think that would create considerable difficulties, particularly for the manufacturer and distributor. I do, however, share his concern that the Board of Review be held forthwith upon application. I am advised by the law officers of the Crown that that is really what is provided by the bill; that is, that when it provides that a Board of Review shall be established there is a duty incumbent upon the minister or Governor in Council to act expeditiously if he should feel the applicant is entitled to apply for mandamus and have a board set up. But that is a matter which the committee can study in detail when it is looking at the bill.

The Board of Review will have the necessary powers under the Inquiries Act to inquire into the nature and characteristics of the product or substance which has been considered a hazardous product if a request for review is made. The bill as originally submitted in the other place did not make it mandatory—and this has been commented on at some length in this house—that the minister concerned, in this case myself, upon receipt of a request establish a Hazardous Products Board of Review. It was suggested, and I concurred with the members of the other place, that the bill should be amended to provide for the establishment of a Hazardous Products Board of Review as requested. The bill you have before you contains that amendment. I believe that provision for a mandatory Board of Review, and right to a hearing before a Board of Review by anyone who feels affected by the action of the minister or the government under this act, provides for full protection of the interests of anyone affected.

As has been mentioned, a further amendment was made in the other place to provide for a second review by parliament itself of actions taken under the proposed act to add products to part I or part II of the attached schedules. In the course of this debate, hon. members have commented both pro and con in respect of the action of the gentlemen in the other place. I will have more to say about this when the bill reaches the committee. I could not entirely agree with the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who said that I must accept explicitly the amendment made by the gentlemen of the other place. I am not sure, in saying that, whether the hon. member for Peace River was hoping for a call to the other place or not but as one can see from the debate this afternoon and evening, there is a good deal of difference of opinion in this house in respect of the action of the other place.

I would hope the amendment made by the other place to this bill will receive very careful consideration by the members of the Health and Welfare Committee when they are considering the bill. I will have something to say more than I have here. I do feel the amendment adds a degree of rigidity to the bill. I think the members of the committee would be well advised to endeavour to work out some arrangement other than that proposed by the other place. Some other arrangements have been proposed by hon. members in the course of this debate. I would hope some of those alternatives would be examined by members of the committee.

Surely, in considering that amendment and in considering this legislation, as the hon. members for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Anderson), Waterloo and Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis) pointed out, the paramount consideration here first and foremost is to design an effective piece of consumer protection legislation. That is the kind of legislation I introduced, and that is the kind of legislation I would hope parliament would pass, adopt and have as the end result.

• (9:20 p.m.)

The necessity for governments to protect the consuming public from injury, sickness and death attributable to careless or faulty manufacturing or design or inadequate information in product merchandising has never been more apparent than at the present time. The large number of products available today makes it almost impossible for ordinary customers to be always aware of the risks that may arise from the purchase of seemingly innocent household products.

Recently, publicity concerning poisonous jequirity beans, solvent sniffing and dangerous toys, illustrates the urgent need for legislation of this kind. It is once again the duty of parliament to protect the interests of those who no longer have the power to protect themselves. This legislation will ensure the customer his right to expect that the product he buys will not maim or disfigure because of a defect in construction or design.

At the very least, consumers must be warned of the precautions they must take for their safety after buying a product which is potentially hazardous if misused or left within reach of children. The government can, as parliament can and must, ensure that these rights for the consumer are protected. This is clearly an obligation we cannot escape. I hope that this motion will pass and that the bill will go to the committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs, where it will be considered as expeditiously as possible.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

FINANCE

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND EXCHANGE FUND ACCOUNT—REPORT STAGE

Hon. H. A. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-138, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreement Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, as reported (with amendment) from the Standing Committee on Trade, Finance and Economic Affairs on Wednesday February 12, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order purely for the purpose of clarification. I think it would be helpful if Your Honour would give the house your interpretation. Your Honour will note that the report included two minor amendments which were accepted by the committee. Under normal circumstances, it would have been deemed that the amendments to the clause would open a debate. This would be deemed to be the purpose of the amendment, and if there was to be an amendment at the report stage there could be a debate on the clauses. While it is true no formal notice has been given by any individual members or a member on behalf of the goverment in respect of these amendments as they were made in the committee, is it deemed that, having been made in the committee, they are brought in forthwith without debate and the motion is put and, if the motion is adopted, the bill stands as amended by the house?

If this is the case we could then proceed immediately to third reading. As Your Honour knows, if there are amendments at the report stage, there is a debate and the report is finally adopted and, there having been an amendment and a debate, we cannot proceed to third reading until the next sitting of the house. I should like to have this point clearly established. When a bill is reported by a committee with amendment, does this preclude the third reading of the bill on the same day without the leave of the house?

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for raising this point which has perhaps been left unanswered and uncertain because of circumstances which have occurred when we reached this stage of the proceedings on other occasions.

My understanding of standing order 75 (14) is that if the report from the committee does not include an amendment, at the report stage there can be third reading without debate on the same day. The standing order reads:

> (14) When a bill has been reported from a standing or special committee and no amendment has been proposed thereto at the report stage, and in the case of a bill reported from a committee of the whole, with or without amendment, a motion, "That the bill be now read a third time and passed", may be made in the same sitting.

The hon. member has referred to an amendment which was not proposed at the report stage, but was proposed and adopted at the committee stage. It is only when there is an amendment adopted at the report stage that there cannot be two stages on the same day. When an amendment has been made by the committee and there is no further amendment, then under the standing order there can be a debate on third reading the same day.

I am not sure this is completely clear but I hope the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who is I believe in agreement with my interpretation of the standing order, is satisfied with the way I have attempted to interpret the situation for the guidance of hon. members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps I may say a few words, Mr. Speaker. In doing so, may I first say I am in agreement with the interpretation you have given the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). However, there is one point in respect of something which Your Honour said I should like clarified.

May I say to the hon. member for Edmonton West that I think his point is covered by Standing Order 75(2) which says:

All amendments made in any committee shall be reported to the house. Every bill reported from any committee whether amended or not, shall be received by the house on report thereof.

In other words, I submit the implication is that the way the bill comes to us from the committee is the way we have to deal with the bill. But there is one other point, and this is my reason for rising, in respect of which I should like some clarification. Your Honour said if there was no debate at the report stage, there having been no amendment put down, third reading could be proceeded with that day as provided by standing order 75(14).

There is one qualification to this, and that is provided it does not override Standing Order 72 which says there cannot be two readings on the same day. In other words, if second reading takes place earlier in the day and then the report stage, third reading cannot take place that day except by leave.

Mr. Speaker: I am in agreement with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) in the same way I was in agreement with the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert). Obviously, standing order 72 always prevails. If there has been a previous reading on the same day, there cannot be a subsequent reading.

What we have before us is the report stage, not a reading stage. This is why we can have the adoption of the report stage and third reading the same day. Having said this, I will put the motion for third reading to the house.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mr. Olson (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may say something on the basis of a point of order. It is my understanding that there is no right of reply on third reading, under our rules as presently constituted, without the unanimous consent of the house. It is my understanding that several hon. members on both sides of the house wish to express themselves at this stage of the debate, and I wonder whether I would be permitted to, in effect, inform the house that it is my intention to reserve my remarks until other hon. members have been heard. Therefore, I will not only be presenting my own views on third reading, but I will be in a position to reply to hon. members' comments.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think that is quite right. The parliamentary secretary has not moved third reading and therefore, it is quite in order for him to speak. This difficulty arises only when the minister in charge of a bill proposes third reading and then, not saying anything, is deemed to have spoken.

Mr. Stanfield: He has spoken.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He has spoken, and will therefore have to seek the leave of the house to speak later.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I want to make it clear to the parliamentary secretary was rising on a point of order. The Chair would not deem that he has participated in this stage of the debate, and he can speak at a later time without seeking the unanimous agreement of the house.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be reasonably brief. Hon. members of the committee and of the house may wish to read the proceedings of the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, starting with volume No. 22 and moving through to volume No. 25 inclusive. They will find that the hearings of the committee on this bill were of considerable assistance to the members of the committee, as they will be to any hon. member who wishes to read them, on the subject of international monetary agreements.

We do not have to go through the whole panoply of methods or forms of financial resources that are at hand for participants in the International Monetary Fund, but having heard in detail what existed and what is proposed we can better understand the implications of the bill. We had in the committee the very competent assistance of officers of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada. In addition we were able to elicit testimony from economic advisers of two of our chartered banks. These people did not make representations on behalf of the banks but on their own behalf.

We heard arguments against the theory of fixed exchanges. Dr. Marsh of Montreal, in fact, said he wanted to get away from the idea of a fixed exchange rate entirely and believed, rather, in the idea of a fixed form of reserves under which each country would have to defend its rate on the basis of its performance. I think all committee members who followed the hearings in detail have a much clearer picture of how settlements between countries are now effected, what are the causes of disequilibrium, and what in many instances has caused some of the crises we have experienced in the last three years.

Notwithstanding all the explanations that have been given, the fact that the special drawing rights scheme has been set up and, hopefully, enough countries that participate will ratify this agreement so it will come into effect, we still have the nagging suspicion that all is not well because there have been recurring crises.

Let me say right away that the crises have been more intense each time. One might wonder where the shoe will pinch next, and who is going to start another crisis. One wonders where another crisis will happen and whether one of the European currencies will become embroiled in some form of raid. Or, we ask, is it perhaps the turn of the United States dollar again, or the Canadian dollar?

I suppose one would have to look at the background of each country to see whether certain conditions prevail which would make a crisis rather more possible; in other words, is it providing fertile ground? Here I think we can look to balance of payments problems, cofintrol of inflation and interest rates. In this regard, Canada is not entirely out of the woods. Therefore by the adoption of this change in the bill we, in Canada, cannot say we are completely safe and are sheltered from any further assaults in the international monetary field.

One of the interesting features that came about as a result of this examination was the form of international policing that can be carried out by the World Bank through the International Monetary Fund on, shall we say, the second layer or the second slice; first of all, the gold slice in the reserves. The country in question can draw on those unconditionally and has no problems. But when the country wishing to borrow from the International Monetary Fund starts to draw on its national currency reserves, the fund directorate can impose conditions. That is where I feel there is a better hope in a scheme of this kind than there would be in a scheme of a free and unfettered exchange. You might say, let the country carry out whatever policies it wants, and it has to defend its position. Its currency may be driven down, and let it take the consequences. I have a suspicion that there is here too much danger that we will go back to the pre world war II financial jungle conditions with regard to international monetary exchanges.

At least one of the witnesses who was in favour of liberalizing the fixed exchange system conceded that there was this power of policing the economic policies and performance of a country that was finding itself in trouble. The special drawing rights which are the subject matter of the amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act do not come directly under the policing, if one may call it that, of the International Monetary Fund, in that the drawing rights once established may be drawn upon by the country in question and used unconditionally. The special drawing rights are not designed to do away with situations arising out of crisis. They are, in fact, a line of credit established to provide working capital for greater world trade. In other words, the volume of world trade is such that the gold slice in the national currency reserves held by the International Monetary Fund and the countries' international or foreign exchange reserves held on their own account, were insufficient to deal with the volume of world trade. Therefore, these special drawing rights which are established by quota are available to a participating country and can be used for trade purposes, not for crises purposes.

• (9:40 p.m.)

However, I feel that there can be a form of indirect policing of the economic policies and performance of any individual country in the establishment of quotas because various indices which are laid down in the Bretton Woods Agreement with regard to the special drawing rights are used to determine the quota. When the officers of the International Monetary Fund allocate the quota of special drawing rights to a country, I say this is a form of judging, estimating, assessing and in fact policing of the economic performance of the country. Having said that, I want to say that we certainly have not completed the refinement of those things that countries can use with regard to their international settlements. Obviously, there is nothing that will replace confidence in one another's currency. Confidence in another country's currency is based upon its economic performance. What is its balance of trade? Is this a steady deficit? Is there a run away inflation? What about interest rates? What is the form of performance of the government?

There are a number of other factors which lead to a degree of confidence which other countries will have in your currency. As long as that confidence exists, there is less danger of negative movements with regard to one's own currency. There are other things that have to be done. I do not know just in what direction but, as I indicated at the beginning of my remarks, one is left with a nagging feeling that we are far from having settled the final form, and there may be further events. After all, 1969 has just started. In 1968 we saw two world monetary crises; the next one may be a lot worse. I am hoping that if there is to be one it will not be as bad. Frankly I do not think any good comes out of them anyway. The corrective measures that have to be taken to deal with crises, either the imposition of temporary surtaxes or temporary taxes which have their origin in economic nationalism, merely add to friction among countries. You can have as much economic friction with deleterious results as you can have military or political friction. I do not want to point the finger at any particular country or countries, but if we go back to 1968 we realize there was just as much international friction as a result of economic thinking and actions of France first of all vis-a-vis the dollar, then vis-a-vis the pound sterling and the German mark, as actions of the French government in other spheres. The action the British government has had to take to shore up its own economy only led to difficulties.

We have seen our exports to Great Britain cut back and we had to take action in order to replace them. It seems to me that economic nationalism is entirely negative. Therefore, what we want to do first of all is to remove one of the root causes of these various aspects of economic nationalism, that is to have as steady a system of foreign exchange settlements as may be envisaged under the Bretton Woods Agreement. It is not the final answer but I hope it will provide us with some improvement. It could be that perhaps a little more flexibility, as was indicated by some other hon. members, perhaps instead of a plus or minus 1 per cent above the fixed exchange rate 2 or 3 per cent would allow movement and would make those working on interest arbitrage much more cautious of entering the market and therefore upsetting it. This may be a partial answer. Perhaps averaging once a year on what was claimed to be a crawling peg or a movable peg, may be another satisfactory answer. However, having examined these things I believe that the alternatives have been put before us much more clearly by the committee and it has been for the benefit of the house. Therefore, I for one support the third reading.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) spoke of some nagging feelings about this measure when he indicated support for the bill. I, too will indicate my support for the bill on behalf of my party, but I support it with very strong reservations. I say this for a number of reasons. I do not feel that the examination of the bill in the committee was very helpful. I say this not because the chairman and the members of the committee did not do their best. I think they worked very hard. We had witnesses from the Bank of Canada and a number of people from the chartered banks of Canada. However, I suggest that this study was not sufficient to examine the implications of a policy as important as the one with which we are dealing. My feelings were that the committee was being appealed to on the basis of "let us be good international citizens". This is something all of us understand, appreciate and wish to be. The committee did not have the expertise to challenge the witnesses who appeared before us. We had to accept their word that this is a good measure for Canada. But there is much doubt whether an international banking bureaucracy is not developing and whether they have more in common with each other than they have with their own countries.

• (9:50 p.m.)

This may not be the case. I am prepared to accept the fact that our people are committed to international stability; that they are committed to the organization; that Canada believes in its role in world affairs, but until we can get a clear impression or a clear confrontation with the negotiators, that doubt remains. One is also disturbed by the fact that the one country in the world which has a veto is the United States, and one wonders to what extent the international monetary fund really reflects world opinion and to what extent it is more an instrument of American policy. We support it because we have been assured that it is a good measure for Canada and for the world, but for the record we indicate our reservations.

Canada is a very special kind of country and to say we have to behave the same as every other country in the world is to fail to observe the special conditions of this nation. It seems to me that the present arrangement with the international monetary fund whereby we are on a fixed exchange rate is not the best arrangement for Canada.

I do not think it can even be demonstrated that Canada being tied in this particular way is necessarily a good thing for the rest of the world, either. I think we should clearly look at our position with a view to continuing our examination of this question of fixed versus floating exchange rates. We are a very open country, a major trading nation, and this creates special problems with a fixed exchange rate. The greatest difficulty it has created is that on many occasions our domestic policy has been hamstrung because of the nature of the combination of fixed reserves and a fixed exchange rate. Until 1962, Canada was on a floating rate. It had worked very well until then and were it not for the economic panic of the government of that day it probably would have continued to work. The government of that day was pursuing disastrous policies with the exchange rate. On one hand, they were trying to support it and on the other hand they were trying to knock it down. Then they were trying to stabilize it. They did not know what they were doing. While the government was pursuing one set of fiscal policies, monetary policies were working in another direction.

They permitted our exchanges to get into such bad shape that they thought the only way out was to accept the conditions laid down by the international monetary fund in order to save the rate at that time. The conditions, imposed on Canada were severe. I do not think it was necessary for us to accept those conditions. The government had alternative methods. They could have brought in exchange controls; they could have used more intelligence in co-ordinating fiscal and monetary policies. They have left us a heritage of a fixed exchange rate which does not operate, in my opinion, in the best interests of this country.

The argument is made that fixed exchange rates permits stability or gives some indication of the relative values of currencies of the various countries. No statement could be farther from the truth. We know that a lot of countries in the world find ways around the restriction of a fixed exchange rate. They have various forms of taxation which they can use to subsidize their exports. They have ways to discourage imports, and the purpose of the fixed exchange rate, which is to provide stability, is frustrated in this way.

One has to wonder whether we would not be further ahead to have a full and thorough discussion and examination of the full benefits of one type of rate as against another. In this country all kinds of suggestions are being made at the moment but parliament has really not examined this question thoroughly. The effect of accepting the Bretton Woods Agreement is this: the condition is there, and it is a take it or leave it agreement; there is nothing which can be modified in any way, it has to be either accepted or rejected. This means that any improvements which some of us might think of making to amend the bill are out of the question.

The amendment would have one effect. It virtually doubles the price of gold and by creating special drawing rights under various conditions, each country gets, in effect, increased liquidity. The advantage of doing it in this way rather than doubling the price of gold is that presumably it does not have the same evil effects on those countries which do not hold their reserves in gold or which have dollars in reserve rather than gold as has been the case in Canada.

With these reservations, I hope the government will indicate its intention to place this measure before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for full examination, to call expert witnesses and to give the committee far more staff than it now has so that the committee itself can have some assurance that the witnesses appearing before it are receiving the proper examination, and that the answers given are not open to challenge.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, February 4, as reported at page 5113 of Hansard, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) whether certain sums of money in the estimates for the ensuing fiscal year which he had tabled that day, moneys which were to be placed in certain superannuation accounts, would be used to increase the pensions of civil servants already retired.

In his reply, the President of the Treasury Board said this was not the case but that these sums were for the purpose of covering certain actuarial deficiencies. He ended his answer with these precise words:

> I regret to say that as yet no decision has been taken to make additional funds available to superannuates.

I asked a supplementary question, but got nowhere with it. Then a week later, on February 11, as reported on page 5372, I asked another question on this subject and got the answer that has been given us hundreds of times, namely that the matter was still under consideration. In fact, on February 11 we were told it was under serious consideration.

A few days later, on February 17, one of my questions on the order paper was answered and the answer is to be found on pages 5572 and 5573. It gave some interesting statistics. Among other things, the figures told us the number of retired civil servants and the number of widows of civil servants who have been dying in recent years. If hon. members will look at these tables they will discover that the rate seems to be established at a little over 1,500 retired civil servants and a little over 500 widows of civil servants who are dying each year. This means that in the year and nine months since May 8, 1967, when a unanimous report was tabled calling for action to raise the pensions of retired civil servants forthwith, a total of 2,625 retired civil servants have died and a total of 875 widows of civil servants have died. That makes a grand total of 3,500. This figure does not include pensioners of the armed forces, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and so on.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard).]

• (10:00 p.m.)

A little earlier this evening, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) admitted his personal regret that a bill he was speaking to at that moment had not been brought in five years ago. He said that it was too bad people had been hurt during the past five years in accidents, or had lost their lives, as a result of the absence of the kind of legislation being discussed in the house this evening.

I submit that if the government is sincere in that position and really does regret that the absence of that kind of legislation has resulted in people losing their lives, then the government ought to be concerned about the fact that, while it is stalling on this question of increasing the pensions of retired civil servants, every month another 125 retired civil servants die without getting the increases that were promised them. Similarly every month another 40 widows die without getting the promised increases. Surely, this is not something of which the government can be proud.

The government continues to say that it is giving the matter serious consideration, to tell the house time and time again, as no doubt the parliamentary secretary will tell the house tonight, that there is concern about this matter in all quarters of the house. I will no doubt be told that the member for Winnipeg North Centre is not the only one concerned; there is concern everywhere. While this concern is being spread around, these people are dying without having had the advantage of the increase in their pensions that was recommended by the joint parliamentary committee nearly two years ago and which the government has said through all these months that it has been considering.

There is not time in the late show period—indeed I do not need to do so because I have done it so often—to make the arguments as to the rights that these people have and as to the obligation of the government to maintain the standard of living it promised these people. I again plead the force of the argument that a joint committee representing all parties in both houses has unanimously recommended on May 8, 1967, that action be taken forthwith. How much longer, Mr. Speaker, are we going to have to wait before that action is taken?

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am here this evening to respond to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), on behalf of and at the request of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury).

I must say I personally regret that there is nothing I can add to the response of the President of the Treasury Board when he answered the hon. member's question on February 11. However, perhaps I can repeat what I have said on other occasions when I have attempted to answer similar questions, namely that concern over the question of increased pensions for retired civil servants has been expressed by members on all sides of the house. The government has been giving consideration, and continues to do so, to this question of retired public servants. I can assure the hon. member that the matter continues to be, to paraphrase the words he quoted, under both serious and active consideration by the government at the present time.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF FUNCTIONS OF MINISTER WITHOUT PORTFOLIO

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on the 19th of the month I posed a question to the Prime Minister that I think I should re-read now. As recorded at page 5710 of Hansard I asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, in the absence of both ministers involved with Indian affairs and northern development I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can enunciate clearly at an early date what the responsibilities and duties are of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) in respect of his association with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, because there is a great deal of doubt about this in the minds of the native Indian people. They should like to know what his functions are.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in the house that day. He did not stir from his slumped position or even acknowledge that he had heard the question. I have no personal complaint about that, Mr. Speaker, but other people do have an interest in it. The question was posed to the right hon. gentleman because a number of native Indian people had asked me about the responsibilities of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras) and I was unable to answer. I acted partially as a representative of native Indian people who were concerned about this, and I got no response.

The hon. member for Port Arthur, wherever he spoke last fall left the impression with the Indian native people that he was concerned about the plight of these people. On many occasions he condemned the past failings of governments in their dealings with Indian people. He indicated that he had an insight into the problems of our native Indian people. As I said, he left a good impression.

When the announcement was made in this house regarding the reorganization of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the member for Port Arthur, the Minister without Portfolio, complained bitterly and publicly that he had not been consulted about that reorganization; that he had no knowledge of it and that he had doubts about its values as far as the Indian people were concerned. That was the first time we got any indication that perhaps the hon. member for Port Arthur did not really hold a responsible, authoritative position in the government.

The Prime Minister stated, when asked, that the hon. member for Port Arthur did not have any responsibility in so far as this department was concerned. It was this, plus other comments and the fact that the hon. member's involvement in northern affairs has declined in recent times, that has led many Indian people to wonder just what is happening. The Indian people wonder whether one of the ministers is a propagandist while the other who has the responsibility for doing something about the affairs of the Indian people so far has done relatively little.

As I have stated I do not mind that the Prime Minister chose not to give a reply to my question. This is one of the chances we take in this house. I do not feel slighted by it. If it is the Prime Minister's desire to ignore any member, he can do it. He has done it on a number of occasions.

• (10:10 p.m.)

But I submit that the Prime Minister of all people has no right to ignore, as he did, and in effect by ignoring thus insult the very people whom government has ignored for many years, our native Indian people. As I said earlier, the Prime Minister did not bestir himself, but if he had made some comment or recognition of the fact that it was necessary to outline the responsibilities of the hon. member for Port Arthur, when the question was asked on February 19, then the Parliamentary Secretary or whoever it is who is going to reply this evening would not have had to be here. We would have, in effect, had an answer from the horse's mouth.

I am looking forward to the reply that will be given in the hope that it will contain some clear announcement about the responsibilities of the hon. member for Port Arthur in order that our native people will know where they stand in dealing with him in the future.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to hear the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) speak so well of at least one minister of the Crown. I am sure the government will appreciate this very much. If my memory serves me correctly the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) dealt with a question similar to this in the House of Commons. I have not had a chance to refer to the particular question on the day mentioned by the hon. member, but I was in the house when the Prime Minister answered a question similar to it. At that time he stated that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) is the minister responsible for discharging the activities of that department. The Prime Minister stated as well that the minister is being assisted in one special aspect of his duties by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) from Port Arthur. The Prime Minister made it clear that the line of responsibility runs through the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) to the minister with portfolio.

I think it is common knowledge to us all how active have been these two ministers in past months in meeting with the native peoples of Canada so as to learn at first hand the problems and the desires of our oldest citizens. There is considerable evidence of the feeling of good will that has been engendered by these activities, a feeling which I am sure will continue throughout this administration.

As the Prime Minister has said on other occasions and as has been repeated by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the government has in principle agreed to the preparation of new legislation which will deal with the status of Indian peoples in Canada. It is in an attempt to determine the content of that legislation, and the policy most acceptable to the native peoples themselves as being the likeliest to meet their expectations, that the two ministers are now engaging themselves. Certainly, in the end result the beneficiaries of this activity will be, as we all want them to be, the native peoples themselves.

[Translation]

HISTORIC MONUMENTS—ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF VIMY MONUMENT

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether it is in order but I rise on a question of privilege to point out that as the minister has been detained in Montreal and his executive assistant informed me that the minister wishes to answer my question personally, I agreed not to discuss it to-night. However, I hope that the house will allow me to raise the matter again during the next proceedings on the adjournment motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I do not think there is a strict provision concerning proceedings on the adjournment motion, but I can tell the hon. member that his remarks have been noted and will be conveyed to whom it may concern.

[English]

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 10.15 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, February 25, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Tenth report of standing committee on finance, trade and economic affairs, in French and English—Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau).

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce a change in the business of the house. As I announced last Thursday we will be commencing today with the second reading of the omnibus Criminal Code bill, but there will be a change in the order of business when that is completed assuming it is completed today. I had announced last week that we would go on to the drug prices bill, but at the request of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) we have agreed to defer that. We therefore intend to call as the second item of business the third reading of Bill C-138 to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act and would follow that with second reading of Bill C-172 to amend the Financial Administration Act.

I should indicate in connection with the Criminal Code bill and the Financial Administration Act that my colleagues, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) are, I might say with our great regret at the occasion, both in Montreal attending the funeral of a former member for St. Lawrence-St. George, the late Claude Richardson. They will be returning later this afternoon. The Minister of Justice will be in his seat at that time during the debate on the Criminal Code.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

POSSIBLE RECONSIDERATION OF FREEZE ON PUBLIC PROJECTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport in connection with his responsibility for housing. Arising out of his meeting over the week end with the provincial ministers responsible for housing may I ask the minister, in view of the urgent representations made by these ministers, whether the government is reconsidering its freeze on public housing projects.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful meeting with the provincial ministers. I assured them the questions which are outstanding will be considered by the government of Canada and decisions taken just as soon as possible, and that as soon as those decisions have been taken we will notify them at once.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister tell the house whether it is a fact that in the past two months no federal funds have been approved, as an example, for Ontario's public housing projects, and I mention Ontario only for the purpose of giving an example, and that a very substantial number of public housing projects in that province as well as in other provinces are in fact held up awaiting the approval of the government of Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: I could not say whether it is a matter of fact or not. Some projects have been approved; others are pending awaiting the outcome of the policy review which is presently taking place.

Mr. Stanfield: Would the minister consider giving the house a report on motions at an early occasion in respect of his conference with the provincial ministers, particularly concerning those aspects of the housing program relating to the question of conflict of jurisdictions.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there would be much point in doing so at this stage. There was a good discussion. I think the press already have reported it in some detail, giving some of the points of view that were expressed. Because it was an informal meeting and because there was no agreement concerning the making of a report based on it, I feel it would be beyond my jurisdiction to try to report the position taken by the various parties. I can assure my hon. friend however that the atmosphere was one of the utmost co-operation and although one would not expect that many people to be unanimous in respect of everything, we do want to make decisions which will provide the best result, so that the Canadian people will receive the best value for their tax dollars, and decisions which will meet the housing situation wherever it is urgent in this country.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the minister. Is it a fact that housing developments involving some 3,000 apartments valued at some $38½ million are still awaiting federal approval? Does this mean that the minister is freezing certain aspects of the housing program and, if so, what aspects?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think at this point I should offer a word of caution about the form of the questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I think it is somewhat irregular to ask a minister to confirm or deny a fact, which it seems to me was the form in which the questions were put. I suggest it would be more consistent with the usual practice for the hon. member to ask his question directly.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Perhaps I might ask my question direct, Mr. Speaker. Are housing projects involving some 3,000 apartments valued at $38,500,000 still awaiting federal approval? Has there been some type of freeze on some aspects of the housing program? What aspects are now being held up, and for what reason?

Mr. Hellyer: As I just indicated, some projects have been approved, others are in process of being approved, and still others will have to wait a few days until the government has had a chance to review its policy in these matters. It is a fact however that housing construction last year was at an all-time high in the history of the country. This trend has continued during the first part of this year, and I hope it will continue throughout the year.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister whether the particular projects to which I have referred, namely the 3,000 apartments valued at $38,500,000, are being held up for any particular reason? Is this a matter of policy or merely a matter of processing the applications? Why has there been this apparent freeze in federal housing?

Mr. Hellyer: It is impossible for me to know which particular projects the hon. member is referring to.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact we are talking about freezing at this particular time, and because urban renewal plays a great part in housing problems in this country, can the minister advise whether the contribution of the federal government to urban renewal projects has or has not been frozen?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult, in fact impossible to give a categorical answer to that question, because the answer would be similar to the previous one. In some cases projects have been approved and are continuing. It is obvious in respect of some new projects that some will have to go forward. It is equally obvious that some can be postponed for a few years—and I refer to those which involve large commercial developments, purchases from entrepreneurs, factories, hotels and worn out stores. They can be postponed until such time as we have produced enough housing in this country to meet the urgent needs of Canadians.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member resume his seat? I note that a number of other members want to ask supplementary questions. We will soon have to go to another subject. I hope hon. members will exercise some restraint in asking supplementary questions on this matter. However, I will allow a supplementary question by the hon. member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to obtain a definitive answer from the minister, particularly as to urban renewal programs already commenced. There are some 300 cities involved with this type of program, and it would be a matter of great gratification if the minister could advise those cities that their projects are not frozen. I have in mind urban renewal programs already started. It would be of great help to all concerned if a yes or no answer could be given.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, it is just not that simple, because the hon. member is inquiring about 300 and some schemes which have not yet been started. Without reviewing each one of them it would be impossible to give an assurance as to whether or not they will go forward at this time, taking into account the over-all priority on government spending.

REQUEST FOR RECOMMENDATIONS FOLLOWING REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think it was about three weeks ago that the minister said he was making urgent recommendations to the cabinet arising out of the report of the task force. As I say, that was about three weeks ago. The minister at that time said we could expect a government statement on housing policy. How long do we have to wait until this statement is made?

Mr. Hellyer: Not very long, Mr. Speaker.

THE MINISTRY

POSSIBLE SHELVING OF URBAN AFFAIRS PORTFOLIO

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the strong objection by the governments of Ontario and Quebec is the federal government shelving the idea of establishing a ministry of urban affairs?

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the recent federal-provincial conference, the Prime Minister has taken pleasure in repeating on the C.B.C. network, during the program "Deux plus un" for instance, that money does not grow on or under trees. Could he tell us where money grows?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a question should be directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, you are right in referring me to the Minister of Agriculture, who is an expert in money growing, and to whom I direct my question.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—SHELLING OF CANADIAN HOSPITAL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SAFETY OF CANADIAN PERSONNEL

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Prime Minister relates to the Viet Cong, North Vietnamese forces making a shelling attack on the Canadian t.b. hospital in South Viet Nam, in which a Canadian doctor was killed and the hospital completely destroyed. I ask the Prime Minister whether the other Canadian personnel are safe, and will he tell us something about their well-being? Second, can the Prime Minister report to the house with regard to this incident, which I believe happened about three days ago?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot report because I do not know about the incident. But I am quite sure the Secretary of State for External Affairs, under whose jurisdiction this matter falls, will be pleased to do so when he is in the house.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.—ALLEGED DEGRADING REGULATIONS IN AKAITCHO HALL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He will no doubt recall that on two days last week I asked him questions dealing with the degrading rules and regulations to which the residents of Akaitcho Hall in Yellowknife are being subjected. In reply the minister said he would look into the matter. I wonder whether he can give an answer today.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was ready to answer Friday, but since the hon. member was not in the house, I had to wait till today in order to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I have considered the problem raised by the hon. member for York South regarding regulations in force at Akaitcho Hall, in Yellowknife, and I have asked the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Hodgson, to see that those regulations are not discriminatory. I have also asked him to discuss the institution with the authorities, the parents and the students, in order to come up with a solution that will maintain order and discipline, be agreeable to the parents and preserve the interests of the students.

The revision of the regulations has begun and I think it would have been better if the problem had been raised at the local level before being raised in Parliament.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would inform the minister that my roster keeps me away only one day a week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: We can allow you more, if you wish.

Mr. Lewis: That is, compared with the minister's roster. Has the minister received a second telegram bearing some 60 names, indicating that the purport of the telegram to which he referred last week was voted down twice at two meetings of the residents, and requesting an inquiry into conditions at Akaitcho Hall? If so, will the minister consider instituting such an inquiry?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, indeed, I have received that telegram. I also got many others from parents, and that is why I have requested the commissioner of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Hodgson, to look into the matter.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I would ask another supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with your permission. Is the minister aware of the existence of a report issued some time ago by someone called Steve Iveson, of the Company of Young Canadians, on conditions in Akaitcho Hall? This report contained a stinging condemnation of conditions there. If the minister is aware of that report, has he given it study and taken steps to see that the situation is remedied?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not received such a report yet. I believe that it should have been submitted to me before falling into the hands of an opposition member.

[Mr. Chrétien.]

[English]

CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the cost of living has risen substantially each month for the last 16 months—the longest losing streak on record—and that there is no indication that this current trend is about to be reversed, would the minister advise the house if the government is planning in the near future to introduce new initiatives to counteract this trend?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I would like to point out to my hon. friend that according to O.E.C.D. Canada had the third best record in the western world with respect to the cost of living.

An hon. Member: That is not good enough.

Mr. Benson: Secondly, I have indicated publicly that I think this is not good enough, and that all of us must practise restraint. I hope my hon. friend will support all my budget measures in this regard.

Mr. Hees: If this procedure is winning, I would hate to see us when we are losing. However, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Do the minister and his colleagues never get headaches from keeping their heads in the sand so long?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the only time they get headaches is from listening to my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his last question was not in order. I did not hear the reply but I suspect that that was not in order either.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ACTION TO DEAL WITH WALKOUTS AND ABSENTEEISM

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. It probably has to do with some headaches too. I am referring to the disturbing and obviously deteriorating conditions in the minister's department. Will he say how he intends to deal with the walkouts and large scale absenteeism under way in Ontario yesterday, and with the protests of 2,000 carriers in Montreal?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): They have already been dealt with. The conditions are normal in Hamilton, Welland and Toronto today, and they are just about normal in Montreal also.

Mr. Lewis: What does "normal" mean?

An hon. Member: Chaos and confusion.

Mr. Macquarrie: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the position of the Postmaster General that the backlog of 500,000 letters in Montreal as reported today is a normal circumstance?

Mr. Kierans: The figure is wildly exaggerated, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Does he also intend to restore to the public the service which was provided by the Post Office Department?

Mr. Kierans: I think that the service is improving considerably—

An hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. Kierans: —and when we take into account the fact that over 90 per cent of the people in the two unions favour the five day week, I think that this is a pretty good batting average.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am talking about service to the public.

SATURDAY DELIVERY TO RETAIL ESTABLISHMENTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I have a supplementary question for the Postmaster General. Is he giving consideration to providing a Saturday delivery service to retail establishments?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

PUBLIC WORKS

ST. ROMUALD, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF GRAIN ELEVATORS

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Since the federal government will have a deep-water wharf built at Saint-Romuald because two oil refineries will soon locate there, has the Minister of Agriculture considered building grain elevators in that locality to serve the south shore?

Mr. Speaker: I believe that the question as asked by the hon. member could easily be put on the order paper, and if there is any urgency, I would gladly come back to it with the hon. member to discuss it at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Dumont: At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

TRANSPORT

SUBSIDIES ON INTRA-PROVINCIAL FERRIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): My question is for the Minister of Transport. Would he advise the house if an agreement has been reached between the Canadian Transport Commission and the province of Ontario on the cost sharing of subsidies on intra-provincial ferries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair to determine whether the question as asked is one of urgency. If it is urgent, perhaps the hon. member would not mind returning for the purpose of considering the question at the time of adjournment.

WATER RESOURCES

SEWAGE TREATMENT PLANTS IN NATIONAL PARKS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I want to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a question arising out of an answer that was given to a question on the order paper. This question is connected with the national problem of the pollution of our rivers. Can the minister assure the house that the national parks under federal jurisdiction will be accommodated with proper sewage treatment plants this year?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, if I am well informed, the department will take the necessary steps to build a sewage treatment plant there as soon as possible, maybe this year.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might ask a supplementary question, since this promise has been made for two years, now. Is there an allowance in the estimates to establish such a plant to protect rivers in western Canada against absolute pollution, and thereby safeguard the health of those in the cities through which they flow?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not brought the estimates with me today.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S. ABOUT RECOGNITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): My question is directed to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the right hon. gentleman whether the Canadian government has exchanged correspondence or held any discussions with the United States on the question of Canada's relations with Red China and, if so, what has been the position taken by the United States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know of no such correspondence, Mr. Speaker, but of course we did talk with our United States counterparts on this question as we did with the external affairs departments of many other friendly countries. The outcome is the policy which we are now pursuing.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): May I ask whether the Prime Minister has received any advice from the government of the U.S.S.R. or held any discussions with that government on this question?

Mr. Speaker: I hope the hon. member does not propose going through all the nations of the world. Perhaps we might go as far as the U.S.S.R.

Mr. Trudeau: I should like to go that far, Mr. Speaker, and I will ask the minister directly concerned to report to me on it.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Is the recognition of Red China one of the subjects for discussion between the Prime Minister and Mr. Nixon at the forthcoming meeting in Washington, and was this so signified in the president's invitation?

Mr. Trudeau: The agenda will be negotiated between the President's office and mine, and our foreign affairs departments. Until an agenda has been established I would not want to go into details about it. But I hardly think this particular question would be the subject of many talks, because our policy is already established. I would be very glad however to extend some advice to the President of the United States, if he were to ask for it.

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Is it true that the State Department of the United States now believes it would be a good idea for Canada to recognize Red China?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSFER OF DIRECTION OF WORK AT TRANSCONA SHOPS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport? In view of reports from Winnipeg that the direction of work at the C.N.R. shops in Transcona is being transferred from Winnipeg to Montreal, will the minister make it clear that this will not mean the transfer of work from Transcona, as happened in the case of the Air Canada operation at Winnipeg?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I must admit I am not familiar with this particular problem but I shall be glad to inquire of the railway company and reassure the hon. gentleman, if that is the result of my consultation.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister do that in the house at an early date?

Mr. Hellyer: At the earliest possible opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

DIFFICULTIES IN OPERATION OF TURBOTRAIN

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, or for the acting minister to whom notice has been given. Has the minister any information on the turbotrain fiasco, and whose responsibility it was?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not sure that the question as asked is in order. Certainly it is in rather strong terms. Perhaps the hon. member might like to rephrase the question. In any event, I doubt that the question should be answered at this time. The hon. member is asking for a report which, in my view, ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I shall try again at your invitation. Has the acting minister any information on the latest turbotrain difficulties?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's question was put in an excellent way but it is still out of order, in the sense that he is asking for a statement which ought to be made on motions.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

RETRIEVAL OF CANADIAN STUDENTS FROM UNITED STATES

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. In view of the great difficulty it is expected will be encountered this coming summer by Canadian students, both graduates and undergraduates, is it the intention of the government to continue to send teams of men employed by the Public Service Commission into the United States to coax Canadian students back to Canada?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): This operation of retrieval has been going on for some time now, and it has not been discontinued.

Mr. Hales: Is it the intention to discontinue this retrieval procedure?

Mr. MacEachen: No consideration has been given to the discontinuance of a program which we believe to be in the national interest.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BATH-MILLHAVEN FEDERAL PRISON COMPLEX

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): My question is for the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works, Mr. Speaker. I might add that I have given the minister notice. Is the department aware that a certain sub-contractor who was recently connected with the construction of the Bath-Millhaven federal prison complex is failing to honour his local financial obligations and has issued many cheques for labour and services which have been returned marked N.S.F., causing great inconvenience in my riding?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Although the question may be of some urgency, it is the type of question which in my view should be discussed at the time of adjournment rather than asked at this moment.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INDIAN AFFAIRS

POSTPONEMENT OF CONFERENCE ON NATIVE PEOPLE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development whether the proposed national consultation on Indian affairs has been postponed and, if so, why?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Skeena asked the same question last night.

The consultations set for March have been postponed for the following reasons: 17 meetings with Indian representatives have been held across Canada since last July. The last one was held in Terrace, British Columbia, as recently as January 28. Many documents have been printed. The delegates have been provided with the reports on the first 15 meetings and the two last reports should be available soon. Those reports have now to be examined and assimilated.

The reason why this meeting has been postponed, Mr. Speaker, is that some Indian delegates have asked for a little more time to read those reports, and more so because two reports are still unpublished, as some consultations took place as late as the end of January.

[English]

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the minister what reply he has made to the complaint of the Indian Association of Alberta that it has been denied the degree of representation promised it at such consultation meeting?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have not yet answered the request of the Alberta Indians regarding their representation, but I do not believe that the Indians of Alberta should have a special status compared with the other Indians of Canada.

[English]

[Later:]

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to one asked a few moments ago by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and is directed to the Minister without Portfolio who is responsible for Indian affairs. In view of the fact that the Minister without Portfolio was present at the Alberta hearings when the Alberta Indians elected six delegates to attend the Indian hearings in Ottawa, why did the minister not state at that time that Alberta was allowed only four delegates?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is argumentative.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON "INDIANS AND THE LAW"

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. On December 18, some time ago, I posed a question about the prospects of the government or the minister making an announcement regarding government policy on the document "Indians and the Law". Since then we have heard nothing. I wonder whether the minister would mind looking at this, so that it may be digested, too?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the problem, but I do not think that I can table the order in council in question. I have not had a definite answer yet, but I hope to be able to give one to the hon. member this week.

[English]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the minister misunderstood my question. I did not ask him about an order in council. I pointed out that on December 18 I had asked whether or not the government would make a statement on policy with respect to the publication "Indians and the Law". I was told that that would be looked into. The minister now tells me something about an order in council and I do not know what the connection is.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: I will study the question, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

AGRICULTURE

COMPLAINT AS TO SEATING AT CONGRESS MEETINGS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact that some farm spokesmen have complained that they have been allocated only a minority of the 400 seats available at the agricultural congress that is to be held in March, will the minister consider a reallocation of seats in order to ensure to farmers the representation to which they are entitled at a conference that is going to decide their future welfare?

[Mr. Yewchuk.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, 175 of the 400 delegate seats have been awarded to producer groups. I think the hon. member's conclusion is unfair, because of the balance of 225 delegate positions, 105 have been allocated to the provincial departments of agriculture and the federal Department of Agriculture. In addition, 25 positions have been allocated to the agricultural faculties of universities across the country. So I do not think that the assertion of the hon. member is in any way fair.

Mr. Gleave: A supplementary question which bears upon my previous one. In view of the statement by representatives of western vegetable producers that no seats were given to any marketing board or marketing commission in western Canada at the proposed conference, would the minister be prepared to take a look at this area in particular and to take whatever measures are necessary?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

REQUEST FOR DOCUMENT PREPARED FOR DELEGATES

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a number of questions were asked yesterday about the agricultural congress, to which I could perhaps reply briefly. First, I am advised that copies of the papers for the congress have been supplied to the members of the Standing Committee on Agriculture. There is a limited supply of these documents, but if any hon. members are interested in securing copies and will so indicate to me, I will be happy to see they get them.

FARM MACHINERY

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): May I say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been in touch with the royal commission on farm machinery and they have informed me that they anticipate having available for release the study on all aspects of farm machinery pricing well in advance of the presentation of the final report. It is the view of the commission that an interim report covering solely the aspect of the relative pricing of farm machinery in Great Britain and Canada could be misleading and that the complete study will be much more useful. That study will be available shortly.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF FUTURE AIRPORT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

In view of the fact that more than 650 municipalities have sent resolutions and recommendations in favour of the site proposed by the Drummondville municipality for the international airport, could the Minister of Transport tell us whether those resolutions are to be compiled and examined and whether those municipalities will get an answer from the government?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): All representations are considered, Mr. Speaker. If the municipalities have sent in individual representations, I would expect they would in fact be acknowledged.

[Translation]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EMPLOYMENT OF ROD SERVICE PERSONNEL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

In view of the statement he made yesterday that 27 of the 110 employees laid off by Rod Service Limited had been hired by the Post Office Department, could the minister tell us whether the other 83 can also be hired by the Post Office Department in the near future?

Mr. Speaker: I think that the question could be put on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

EXHIBITIONS

REQUEST FOR DECISION ABOUT MAN AND HIS WORLD

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Since the cabinet made him responsible for advising it concerning the decision of the federal government about a contribution for the financing of "Man and His World", I would like to know whether the minister is now in a position to announce the decision of the government? If not, when will he be in a position to do so?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am suppose to meet the provincial and municipal authorities this evening, Mr. Speaker.

What I will now say is especially for the information of the press. If the decision is favorable, there will be a press conference. If not, there will not be any.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

If the decision is not favourable, does the minister intend to make statement tomorrow in order to explain the reasons?

Mr. Speaker: Order. In my opinion, the question is hypothetical.

[Later:]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It follows up the one raised earlier by the hon. member for Charlevoix.

Is the minister aware that only Montreal tax-payers are eligible for jobs at "Man and His World". So if the federal government is willing to grant some assistance to the city of Montreal for such an undertaking, does not the minister agree that such a restriction should be removed?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made to the minister representations which have been noted.

[English]

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE IN DRYING OPERATION

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recent statement by the National Farmers Union that under present government policy in regard to drying grain, an estimated 100 million bushels of grain will be lost through spoilage, is the government contemplating any further increase in financial assistance or any other measures to forestall such a catastrophe?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, whether any grain spoils or does not spoil, there will be no connection between such event and federal government policy. The fact is that the federal government has been very helpful in co-ordinating, to some extent with the provinces, maximum use of grain dryers on farms, as well as providing additional cash advances. I should like to advise my hon. friend that at the end of this week we will be having a further report from the Board of Grain Commissioners and the Canadian Wheat Board on how far we have advanced in the drying of grain on farms, and what will be the total volume of tough and damp grain remaining at the end of this month.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister receives this report will he communicate it to parliament immediately?

Mr. Olson: I think that could be done, Mr. Speaker.

FISHERIES

INQUIRY ABOUT STATEMENT ON ATLANTIC SALT COD

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Fisheries. Since he made a statement recently about the groundfish industry, may I ask whether he will soon make another statement about the salt fish industry in general, and Atlantic salt cod in particular?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I said at the end of my announcement last week, we hope in a few weeks to make an announcement about the salt fish industry.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. Is his department taking initiatives, in co-operation with the Department of Fisheries, to stimulate the United States market in fish?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a general statement which I suggest cannot be made at this time.

TRANSPORT

EXTENSION OF L.C.L. RATE FREEZE

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since most of the more than 100 briefs presented to the transport committee recommended the extension of the l.c.l. rate freeze to beyond March 3, 1969, will the minister make sure that the freeze is extended until such time as the transportation policy for the Atlantic area is defined and announced?

[Mr. Olson.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question is under urgent consideration at the moment, as indicated to the Atlantic premiers in my reply contained in a wire I sent them a few days ago.

HARBOURS

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF REPORT ON ADMINISTRATION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Will he undertake to table an already widely circulated departmental report on the administration of ports and harbours in Canada. At the same time will he assure the house and the people of Canada that no action will be taken on this report until it has been studied by this house and the department.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the report already has been tabled. I can assure my hon. friend that no action will be taken until the committee has had a chance to study it.

HOUSING

OTTAWA—APPROVAL FOR BUILDING OF PUBLIC UNITS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister responsible for housing. Is it his intention to give immediate approval for the building of 800 public housing units awaiting approval in Ottawa. That action may alleviate the already urgent housing situation in this area.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I believe a similar question was asked yesterday.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FULFILMENT OF TREATY RESPECTING MIGRATORY BIRDS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Has the minister received reports that across large sections of western Canada migratory game birds in winter feeding grounds are not being protected as they ought to be under the international agreement?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether we might not consider this question at the time of adjournment.

WATER RESOURCES

ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and is, in a sense, supplementary to the question asked a few moments ago about the matter of water pollution. Can the minister advise the house of any progress made with the provinces towards establishing a national advisory committee on water pollution? That proposal was outlined by the minister on October 16, 1968.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be in a position to report more fully on that matter in due course.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance.

In the supplementary estimates (B) tabled yesterday, we find under Public Works an increase of $4 over the main estimates. Could the minister tell us whether this substantial increase results from the construction of public buildings in Hull?

[English]

OIL

PROVINCIAL REGULATION AND CONTROL IN MINERAL RIGHTS AREAS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Considering the recent statement of the mines minister of British Columbia, that offshore oil drilling rigs are still subject to provincial regulation, may I ask if the federal government has any agreement with any province under which it will accept provincial regulation and control of operations in the offshore mineral rights areas?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member should be aware of the announcement some little time ago of the administrative lines which the federal government announced pursuant to the Supreme Court's decision on offshore rights. The federal government is administering offshore rights lying beyond the marked administration lines.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

The house resumed, from Thursday, February 13, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we are discussing the famous omnibus bill that I would call a catchall because it contains 120 clauses on matters as varied as the control of offensive weapons, betting, lotteries, the breathalizer test, and finally to inaugurate a new era of legalization, that of abortion, with very doubtful effects, one would think, besides clauses very short but heavy with consequences concerning the legalization of homosexuality.

Mr. Speaker, over and above the catchall character of the bill, members of all parties will have to vote for or against the whole bill, and will then be in the impossible and unacceptable position of having to approve it without restriction or to reject it without amendment. Far from accepting the procedure, Mr. Speaker, I wish to fight against it in this chamber, and in this regard, I am convinced that many of my colleagues from all parties intend to do likewise, even those who cannot speak—namely the members of the government party—because their leaders have muzzled them.

• (3:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) who sponsored this criminal bill, and above all the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) for reasons already stated, to know that if legislators use this procedure, it cannot but result in the adoption of an inappropriate, incomplete, inaccurate and even insufficient Act.

We are legislators; we are not necessarily experts in criminal law or even in medicine. However, the different articles of the bill require from the legislators enlightened opinions, a thorough study which will motivate his backing a given article. I am thinking, for instance, of the breathalizer, of lotteries, of the gun control. I should support such an amendment to the criminal code without any qualification for in my opinion that would meet a crying need, because the criminal code is absolutely inadequate in that field.

However, Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to the legalization of abortion and of homosexuality, for various reasons I am going to state presently.

Such is the impossible situation in which all the members of the House without any exception are put by the present government. That is why I want to ask the minister and the Prime Minister to allow all members to vote for or against a split bill, after grouping according to topics the 120 articles of the omnibus bill. This, Mr. Speaker, is a reasonable claim that deserves not only to be listened to, but also to be warmly welcomed.

The second aspect I want to deal with is as important, if not more, than the first.

Everybody knows that for most if not all members, the bill introduced by the Minister of Justice has several serious moral implications. In fact, we are in a quandary, since the passage of certain clauses could give rise to a real problem of conscience for many members, including myself.

I shall only mention, as an example, clauses 14, 15 and 18 all dealing with different aspects of abortion, and involving serious moral implications as to determining when life begins, since according to experts, there is some doubt as to the determination of that exact moment. Such a situation raises for any conscientious legislator a real problem of conscience an unbearable situation in which no government has any right to put them, because it is then assuming rights which are not his.

For those reasons and many others mentioned by several members, I therefore ask for a free vote, so that every member, regardless of his political allegiance, may express his personal opinion, after having consulted his constituents, because the entire population must be made aware of this question of life and death. Every member should be allowed to vote freely without having to go against his party, committing only himself and his conscience, according to his knowledge and without prejudice to this government.

No party leader, Mr. Speaker, has the right to impose his views regarding this bill. No political party is powerful, big, or efficient enough to force a member of parliament, whoever he may be, to place the interests of his party or of his leader before the dictates of his conscience, his family, his constituents or of Canada as a whole. Should a party leader do so, whether he be prime minister or not, it would be a criminal act, and it would have been better for him to have died in his mother's womb, during an abortion.

A free vote where each and everyone can express his opinion, without fear of retaliation, that is what I wish and demand, Mr. Speaker. A free vote where everyone can express his truly personal opinion, without causing the government to be overthrown, if any clause or even the whole bill should be defeated. I do believe that such a thing is possible, and that it deserves not only to be given some consideration, but also to be fully examined in depth and approved.

Our debates will be all the better for it, our legislation more human for it, and better adapted to our rapidly developing society. For is it not the purpose of the bill before us to update the Criminal Code? It has now become commonplace to say that our French- or English-Canadian society has developed at a startling pace, and it is only normal that legislators try to update the judicial system, and they have already started.

The primary instrument of the judicial power—the Criminal Code—must also be updated, and we must be happy about that, Mr. Speaker. There is no need to stress the fact that a complete revision of the Criminal Code is long overdue; it must also be adjusted to the new concepts of society. However, Mr. Speaker, in our effort to adjust our legislation to the new sense of values which the Council itself recognizes in putting less emphasis, for instance, on minor things, but more on the essential, the fundamental things, that is the human aspects, the individual and collective participation, the dialogue, etc., we must at all costs avoid falling into the other extreme.

If, on one hand, laws are too rigid, they quickly become inhuman, denying the freedom of individuals and their possibilities, their rightful desires to self-achievement, to development. Because I am Créditiste and because I believe in the self-achievement of the human being, I am happy to see that the government wishes to humanize the Criminal Code, for it is really a matter of humanization.

But if, for the sake of modernization, for the sake of humanization, of individual and collective freedom, we allow ourselves to be led into the venture of libertinage where the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice are leading us, then we are not going forward, because we are just replacing something wrong by something worse. There lies the huge responsibility which rests heavily upon legislators.

On the one hand, we must bring forward a legislation which is humane, and promotes freedom and security for individuals, while on the other hand, that very same legislation must be sufficiently firm to maintain that happy medium which will ensure that our society is based on order and not on disorder, on justice and not on injustice and crime, on honesty and not on perversity.

To illustrate my viewpoint, I shall say a few words of sections 14, 15 and 18 regarding abortion.

Mr. Speaker, it is generally recognized that abortion in all its forms, is being practised on a large scale, not only in Canada, but in many other countries.

It seems to me that abortion is a social ill which cannot be easily erased but as it has most serious implications, we must try to correct it.

The practice of abortion is the indication of a very deep problem which has existed for a very long time and which is more and more prevalent, even though it stems from an ill-balanced notion of sex. That is my opinion.

As the Foyers Notre-Dame have indicated, abortion is rather a last resort in cases where contraceptives have failed. The danger we are facing in this ill-balanced concept of sex, which is often due to an inadequate and unhealthy education or to a rotten social environment, is that when you allow abortion, women who resort to it begin to believe—it is already so—that this practice which I consider as a crime, is the best method of birth control.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that therapeutic abortion is irrational because it is based on false premises and can only warp the scales of values.

Whoever says abortion says interruption of the natural course of things, and the reasons that may warrant such an interruption cannot be, in most cases, anything but pretexts prompted by a false notion of sexuality, or the misfortune of a young girl who has been caught, wilfully or not, or else by the miscalculation of a couple who, for some reason, do not want a child, or still, through the influence of an unhealthy social environment where economic conditions, very often, only make matters worse.

To procure or secure abortion is not a natural thing. On the contrary, it puts an end, in a most tragic way, to the natural development of life.

On the one hand, Mr. Speaker, people talk of therapeutic abortion, which constitutes a formal contradiction. As a matter of fact, whoever says therapy says taking a step in order to re-establish the normal course of a thing. Whoever says therapy says natural treatment in order to insure health.

Mr. Speaker, doctors admit, even the specialists, that pregnancy is not necessarily an illness. Indeed, in these circumstances, some women suffer only a few minor discomforts, of a very temporary nature.

In general, thanks mainly to medical progress and new techniques that are almost one hundred per cent effective, few pregnant women get sick to the point that their health is endangered and, even less, their life.

Clause 18 of the bill before us is intended to add to section 237 subsection (4) (c) which reads in part as follows, and I quote:

—would or would be likely to endanger her life or health,—

—that is the pregnant woman's. That provision is much too broad and could involve numerous definitions, Mr. Speaker. For instance, these words "would endanger her life or health" need to be clearly defined. And in the same section, we find this:

—would be likely to endanger her life or health—

—that is the mother's.

Who shall determine whether the mother's life is or is likely to be endangered? That is the point that should be settled. Where the mother's life is really endangered, medical practioners must intervene to save the mother's or the child's life. The decision, I feel, should be made by the couple and not by the Prime Minister.

If the mother's life is likely to be endangered, decision must still be made, but now it is much more difficult than in the first instance. There is a difference, Mr. Speaker. The legislation should provide for various situations rather than lumping them all together, as if all human reactions could be foreseen.

• (3:10 p.m.)

We start on a false premise, I think, when we insert in the same clause, in the same paragraph, the words "would be likely" and "would".

In my opinion, these are two different implications. Responsibilities in these two specific cases are different, and the Criminal Code serves precisely to evaluate the degree of criminality of an act in relation to another one.

We cannot therefore put everything in the same basket. I shall make the same comments regarding clause 18(4)(c) which says "would endanger the mother's life or health".

I think that moral, criminal, social and family implications are not the same in the case where the pregnant mother's life is in danger and in the one where her health is in danger.

This is why, Mr. Speaker, I strongly object to clause 18 which stipulates a lot of things, which allows for the consideration of many factors, events, predictions and human reactions which cannot be put in the same basket since every woman and every couple are in a different situation. In this connection, the number of children is very important, since it can serve as a basis to evaluate the degree of the parents' responsibilities.

I therefore think, Mr. Speaker, that as a matter of conscience, every member worthy of that name should object to that clause because it is very precise, too wide in scope, inhuman and because it recommends a criminal act should the doctor propose or accept abortion when the pregnancy would likely endanger the mother's health. We open the door to all illegal abortions that could or even could not be imagined now, since any pregnant woman could claim that her health is likely to be in danger and then the physician, in accordance with section 18(4)(c) would say: "The Criminal Code allows it."

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, that clause is criminal. I support the provision which states that "it would endanger her life" but I strongly object against "would be likely to endanger her health". That inadequate measure would make possible the homicide of a child who has not asked to be born and who furthermore is innocent. Those provisions are much too broad, when one realizes that a pregnancy is not too dangerous.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that the life of the mother must be protected. The choice still belongs to the couple concerned. The bill must provide for it, that is fine. The humanization of the legislation has no doubt some advantages.

If the mother has already one, two, three, four or even several other children who of course badly need her presence, her home would definitely be broken by her death, because she is an essential element of family happiness. It goes without saying, Mr. Speaker, that if her life is in danger, the husband with his wife in accordance with the advice of several physicians could accept the abortion under the vigilant supervision of the medical board of an accredited hospital.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, because this is a typical case where the law must be broad enough to provide for the self-fulfilment of the human being, which respecting him in order that the family—and that is especially important—may go on living in progress and self-fulfillment.

Mr. Speaker, that is the limit! It runs absolutely counter to common sense, to respect for the human being and to life itself, to try and force us as the present government proposes to do, to adopt a clause providing for situations when the life or the health of the mother would probably be in danger.

The alternatives are clear, Mr. Speaker: either the woman was ill before becoming pregnant but pregnancy has made things worse and thus endangered her life; in such a case, I would accept the idea of a legal abortion, once the required checking was carried out by the medical board of the hospital; or, again, during the pregnancy, the woman contracted a disease not due to her condition, and then the same principle applies, provided her life is threatened and not her health. But the bill before us says and I quote:

—such female person would or would likely to endanger her life or health—

Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why, among government members, in particular those from Quebec who understand or are supposed to know the problems of that region, so few rise and express their position on that matter. Either they have no opinion and are stupid, or they have no conscience and are immoral.

Mr. Speaker, I think our sense of duty must be strong enough to allow us to say fearlessly and frankly what we think, even though the Prime Minister would like to prevent us from doing so.

Mr. Speaker, heavy responsibilities fall upon the legislator. This clause is too wide in scope and too vague, which is intolerable in a bill of such an importance. However, the main stumbling block comes from clause

14, which is absolutely unacceptable to any sensible man. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that section would make him guilty of murder who would cause to a child before or during its birth injuries likely to bring about his death, once he has become a human being; in other words, under the provisions of subsection 1 of the bill, once he has come out alive of his mother's womb.

Mr. Speaker, I find that clause most preposterous. It is absolutely unacceptable for many reasons. First of all, it is untrue to claim that a child is a human being only once he is born, as the law pretends it to be, for the premature baby who is born for example after four, five or six months of pregnancy can surely be "rescued", as the saying goes, thanks to incubators and other medical means which are now sufficiently developped to permit such an achievement.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the abortionist who would cause injuries to a five-month old foetus would actually kill, I think, a human being for were the child born prematurely, he would be recognized as a human being. It can thus be said that whoever brings about an abortion deliberately, by whatever means, from the moment when according to scientists life exists, commits murder.

Secondly, that clause is unacceptable because it is presumed that the abortionist, whether or not an expert—for in this area many illegal acts are committed which are not provided for in the law, even if the latter is more lenient concerning abortion—cannot afford to fail in connection with abortions, which I think is a sadistic attitude. In fact, if for one reason or another the child were to be born just the same, after suffering injuries, that abortionist could be prosecuted for murder, if the child dies after birth.

This compels the abortionist, or the doctor, to use methods that are absolutely sure, effective and drastic to kill the foetus while it is in the mother's womb, because, according to the new sections in this bill, it would not be a criminal offence to kill a foetus in the mother's womb as long as it is there. According to this bill, there would be homicide only if death occurred during birth or following the abortion. Mr. Speaker, I know hundreds of doctors who, in a general way, are opposed to this section and to this bill. Finally, there is another problem, the moral one and it is the most serious of all. Indeed Mr. Speaker, section 195(1) of the Criminal Code reads as follows:

> —a child becomes a human being within the meaning of this Act when it has completely proceeded, in a living state, from the body of its mother.

But, all Christians know that there is life long before the child is born. Experts who are atheists believe this also.

We should therefore expurgate from the Criminal Code a definition to the effect that birth is the beginning of life. It is well known, Mr. Speaker, that birth is not the beginning of life but a stage in life's progress and that life has begun long before the confinement.

I suggest that the Criminal Code cannot, unless it be expressly and criminally, state that life begins when the child has completely proceeded, in a living state, from the body of its mother, since most biologists agree that the birth of the child does not mark the beginning of its life but is rather indeed a stage in the progress of life.

In this regard, section 14 of the amending bill does not go far enough since it is necessary at all costs to define what we mean by a human being on the basis of modern concepts and modern knowledge available to us at the present time.

Therefore, it is not reasonable, Mr. Speaker, to keep in the Criminal Code if it is our intention to make it more human—and this is my wish—such a definition of life because birth would become the beginning of life while it is only a stage. At that rate, Mr. Speaker, all murders are permitted.

It is for these reasons that I strongly object to that amending clause which, in fact will solve nothing, which will not put an end to back street abortions but which will only increase them by encouraging the abortionist not to miss the mark for fear of being charged for murder. Is there anything more stupid, Mr. Speaker, more inconsistent and more inhuman than that? Under this new legislation we would accuse someone of murder if he had improperly killed, that is if he had missed the mark. It is horrible. It is immoral, it is inhuman and it is degrading that such a bill be put before us in 1969 when our medical, biological and other forms of knowledge are most highly developed. Mr. Speaker, this is totally unacceptable.

In my remarks now I shall deal with clause 7, on page 24 of this bill concerning homosexuality that is the exceptions regarding acts in private between husband and wife or consenting adults. The purpose of this bill is to change sections 147 and 149 so that its provisions cannot apply to the acts which I have just mentioned.

Mr. Speaker, I object to this amendment for certain reasons that I shall set forth in a moment. The purpose of this amendment would be to remove from the Criminal Code the subject of homosexuality and its implications.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, if we take it out of the Criminal Code, in view of the fact that at the present time it does not come under the Civil Code either, under what jurisdiction will homosexuality come? This is what I should like to know. Will it not become a personal matter?

In view of the speeches made by the Prime Minister when he introduced the original bill, and that of the present Minister of Justice, it seems that now we want to make it a personal matter and I strongly object to it.

I consider homosexuality as a sexual deviation, a kind of mental deviation and sickness, and as such as an affection which should be treated.

Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at all at this amendment sponsored by the Minister of Justice. In fact, the attitude of our governments, federal as well as provincial, is well known; they have attempted in every way, not so long ago, to degrade the alcoholic to make out of him a hopeless case, a vicious person, and until recently, they did absolutely nothing in order to fight such prejudices, which they fostered through their silence and inaction. It is not surprising that this same government should escape its responsibilities as regards this illness and should want to remove homosexuality from the Criminal Code, as they do not propose anything in order to rehabilitate those sick people.

Such are, Mr. Speaker, the comments I wished to make as briefly as possible, but which I was most anxious to make. To an oral question asked by an hon. member, Mr. Speaker, a minister answered that he was getting countless letters calling for the earliest possible adoption by parliament of this famous omnibus bill to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell him that we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, did not act in the same way as the majority of the Liberal members. We were not afraid to seek the advice of our constituents and we organized meetings in our constituencies. We sent circular letters, collectively or otherwise; we had radio broadcasts. By every possible means, we have honestly consulted people, not by setting them against the government, but by securing them objective information, in order to get their opinon.

Mr. Speaker, following the information gathered and the consultations held, at least in the 14 ridings represented by the Ralliement creditiste, one must conclude that in all our ridings, the people are quite opposed to the bill under study, and not necessarily against this government. I want to be objective and to underline that it is the present bill that is being opposed, since by adopting it, the government assumes to itself the right, by determining when life begins, to allow mass murder instead of humanizing this act.

Every day, a good number of people write to tell us that they are against this bill and they plead with us, as members of parliament or human beings—supposing there are still human beings in this house, because when we hear the members and the ministers speak on this subject, I am inclined to doubt it—they plead with us to oppose it, not in order to preserve the Criminal Code, outdated as it is, but in order to modernize it, to humanize it, so as not to prejudice the interest of mankind, as this bill seeks to do.

I have a letter here from Mrs. Thérèse Leduc, of Victoriaville, which reads as follows:

I am against abortion because our conscience says no.

She says: I thank you. I implore you to go even further and to fight against this bill on our behalf.

I have a letter from Mrs. André Hébert, also from Victoriaville. Indeed, I could spend all afternoon, all evening and again all day tomorrow reading letters. I simply wish to read this one, to show that the people in our ridings are perhaps not as stupid as some hon. members think they are because they are very well informed and they know where the present government wants to lead us with this bill.

Mrs. Hébert, of the rue Académie, in Victoriaville, tells me in her letter that I received this morning, and that I will read here—it is rather short—in order to show clearly to hon. members that they should think about it twice before they vote for this bill under the thumb of the Prime Minister, since they would then be doing something criminal. I quote:

> No, life should be protected, with the utmost care from the very moment of conception. "Abortion and infanticide are loathsome crimes."
>
> You, as members of the house, will have to vote on this overcrowded bill. In my opinion, it should be rejected. That is what the people would do if they were used to assume their responsibilities.

Mrs. Hébert puts forward the three following arguments:

> 1. You want to respect the life of criminals and make abortion legal.
>
> 2. The experience of other countries is quite enough for us.
>
> 3. Abortion cannot be considered just as a means. The best solution is birth control.

She ends her letter by saying this, and I quote:

> I should like to have more information about the contents of the bill in order to study it. The public is hardly given any information about this bill. It should be well informed.
>
> Mme André Hébert
> 108 Académie
> Victoriaville.

I could quote still other letters, Mr. Speaker. I even have here some petitions, but I do not want to waste the time of the house.

I simply want to make a few comments before concluding, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, the present government, the Minister of Justice, and Liberal members—and, I make no bones about it, Progressive Conservative members as well—are all afraid of having to face people with this bill. They are afraid of asking the people what they think of it. They are afraid of giving them information on it. That is why the government house leader and government members would like the bill to be adopted as soon as possible, without discussing it in detail, without really amending it. Last week, we even saw a Liberal member complain that he could not amend a bill in committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what will become of this bill C-150 if it reaches the committee stage? If what the member for York East (Mr. Otto) said is true, that is that government members were ordered not to amend bills in committee in order not to hold up the business, bill C-150 will be passed without resistance because the members will have been afraid to assume their responsibilities, and what is worse still, because they will not have consulted the people.

Mr. Speaker, I would not like to be in the shoes of the Liberal members who tomorrow will have to answer to their electors; for even now, we are starting to see that the people have had enough of anti-human legislative measures which do not really meet the needs of the people. Indeed, our real problems are family, economic and social problems, and the present government is doing absolutely nothing to alter the situation.

I must not take up any more of the time of the house, but before I bring my remarks to a close I call again for a free vote on this bill, so that every member of the house, regardless of party, religion, or politic allegiance, can vote freely, without running the risk of overthrowing the government.

To my mind, we would then be showing humanitarian feelings, proving how serious we are, instead of being irresponsible and cowardly as we are now.

I should like to hear people speak up on this bill according to the dictates of their conscience and not those of their leader.

I feel that there are times in life when human interests must take precedence over those of the party. It is most unfortunate that in this house—

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): May I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Fortin: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Isabelle: In his fine speech, the hon. member for Lotbinière told us, if I understood well, that thanks to modern inventions, such as incubators and a many other devices, it was possible to preserve life or to extend it. Did he actually say that with those methods, the life of a four or five month foetus could be saved?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the question of the hon. member for Hull and I apologize for it. Maybe the member for Hull is not used to speak in this house, because he does not speak loudly enough. Could he repeat his question?

Mr. Isabelle: I am going to put it again in French, Mr. Speaker. Did the hon. member for Lotbinière say in his speech that, with the means at the disposal of practitioners, and thanks to scientific advance 4 or 5 month-old feotuses can be saved?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I shall reply to the hon. member for Hull, who is also a doctor, that he knows the answer himself. I shall tell him that I was not afraid, as I said earlier, to consult people.

Therefore I have met several doctors in the district of Lotbinière. Last week, I met specialists of the University of Ottawa, and I even met the archbishop of Ottawa, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Marceau: That is easy to see.

Mr. Fortin: We shall talk about this later.

At any rate, according to my information it is medically proved that a child born prematurely at four or five months could actually be saved.

When my wife presented me with an heir—a Créditiste, if you please—shortly after the election, there was at that time, in the next room, a five-month premature baby. This child is very well today.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that some medical research is being conducted in this field. Biologists recognize that it is actually possible to save human lives while the foetus is in the mother's womb.

A while ago, Mr. Speaker, while I was trying to answer this question the hon. member for Hull had asked me, a Liberal member, who did not identify himself, said it was obvious when I mentioned that I had met the Archbishop of Ottawa last week on this subject.

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that I am not afraid of expressing my beliefs, but those people are afraid to rise. They do not dare state their principles, if they have any. I wish they showed as much courage as the Créditistes, and expressed their convictions, if they have any.

Then, Mr. Speaker, I would say that members of the New Democratic party attended that meeting with the archbishop of Ottawa, and I congratulate them for that. In fact, one of them had been invited and made it a point of being there, even though the New Democratic party is in favour of the bill.

I also accepted the invitation; however, no Liberal member took the trouble to go. They are afraid to contradict the Prime Minister who muzzles them. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I challenge any Liberal member to rise and tell me whether they have personal convictions or not.

Mr. Speaker, we are not living in a totalitarian country and although we are familiar with helicopters, "trudeaumania" and everything else, I think that hon. members are intelligent enough to vote according to their conscience. I have much respect for them, whether they are members of the N.D.P., the Conservative or the Liberal parties. I have very good friends in those groups, Mr. Speaker, and I think it would be possible to have an intelligent and human legislation.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, before completing—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Faulkner): Order!

Mr. Fortin: I have not entirely finished, Mr. Speaker—

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe on a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), I am not afraid to say that I made that comment earlier. I did, and I am not afraid to say it, because I will speak on the bill. I will try to prove that we were unjustly attacked and that our vote is not guided by the will of the Prime Minister. We have enough freedom to vote according to our conscience.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): You are lying, then.

Mr. Marceau: You are the one who is lying and we shall prove it to you.

Mr. Caouette: Both your hands are tied.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that we were never invited to the meeting mentioned by the hon. member for Lotbinière and which was held in Ottawa. If we had been invited, we would have gone.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Woolliams: That is the way to flush them out.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. May I inform the hon. member for Lotbinière that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I still have two minutes.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent of the house to allow the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I thank you, Mr. Speaker. I should also like to thank the house for its co-operation.

At the stage we have reached now I think that information should be supplied by newspapers, radio or other mass media. Today we live in a modern country where means of communication are extremely quick, efficient and reliable. Before passing of this bill we could easily consult a large part of the people, make some sort of sampling across Canada in order to know better and with greater certainty the opinion of the Canadian people with regard to this bill so as to make sure, if we are indeed responsible legislators, that this is a truly human legislation consistent with the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker, once more I should like to thank the house for its kind co-operation and I should like to ask the Liberal members who object to this bill not to be afraid to stand up since it does seem that the Canadian people back up all those who object to this bill, and in 1969 a Prime Minister cannot impose his views because the opposition is fairly watchful.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that there are not enough government members who rise and make their views known. I think that would be important. We should like to know what they think of this. We do not know yet whether they are under the thumb of a dictator.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to take only two or three minutes of the time of the house. By so doing I am not indicating my opinion of the importance of the bill because obviously the bill is of the greatest importance and is in the public interest, but it has had a full discussion. I rise at this time not to prolong the discussion but to indicate my own position at this stage of the proceedings. I have always taken the position of being in favour of a free vote on this measure.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: When the matter was first brought before the house I took this position because some clauses of the bill involve a question of conscience for a good many Canadians and a good many members of the house. Putting all these clauses together in the form of an omnibus bill has had the effect of placing a good many members in the difficult position that they may have to vote against the whole bill because they cannot in conscience accept part of it. I have therefore favoured splitting the bill along the lines indicated by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

More recently we have favoured a report from the committee in four separate sections which would have somewhat the same effect. We have advocated this for the same reason, that it would thereby remove a good many members of the house from the unfortunate position in which they have been placed by the omnibus nature of the bill. So the members of this party will be voting according to their own consciences.

While I have stated my objection to the omnibus nature of the bill and my disappointment that the government has refused to split it, nevertheless I will be voting for second reading of the bill and for its reference to the committee. Although I have some reservations about some aspects of the bill, I believe that on the whole it is constructive and that it certainly contains a number of measures which I favour sufficiently strongly to overcome whatever objections or reservations I have to some parts of the bill. Therefore I believe it should go to the committee.

As to some of the controversial sections of the bill relating to abortion and homosexuality, I doubt that in practice they really constitute much of a reform or will result in much change in so far as their enforcement is concerned by those responsible for enforcing the criminal law. With regard to the abortion provisions, I am not sure that their main effect will not make it more difficult in fact to obtain abortions in some of the more remote parts of the country, and I have some doubt whether the proposed amendment can be made to work equally across the country. I think this point of view has already been expressed and elaborated upon in the house. It has been said that in fact the effect of the change may be to create inequality rather than to make abortions easier to obtain.

As to the homosexuality aspects of the bill, again I doubt that the proposed change will have any substantial effect on what is the practice in terms of prosecution. I doubt that these changes will work against the kind of prosecutions which are now in fact conducted. If it is the view of the government that society has no right to be concerned about the moral climate in private society, I do not accept that point of view. However, I do accept the point of view that the criminal law is not necessarily the proper instrument for society to use in this connection. I adopt this view particularly since this law cannot, in fact, be enforced in practice and because when a law exists that cannot be enforced it tends to fall into disrepute.

• (3:40 p.m.)

In summary, on these two aspects of the bill I would say that while there has been a great deal of talk on the other side of the house about the extent of the reform, I doubt that there will really be very much change in the practice so far as the enforcement of the criminal law in concerned. While I perhaps have some reservations, particularly with respect to certain aspects of the changes proposed in connection with gambling, I find important features in the bill which I certainly wish to support at this stage. I mention, for example, those relating to highway safety. Therefore I simply wish to indicate that I shall be voting for the bill to proceed to the committee.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, today we have returned to the debate on second reading of the Criminal Code omnibus bill, C-150. This measure not only represents reform in many substantial areas such as abortion, breathalizer tests and gun laws, but also in the procedures of the criminal law in Canada. As such it probably marks one of the most significant changes in criminal law in the history of this country. The extent of public debate in Canada on its provisions in the last year indicates that the people of Canada are well aware of its many changes.

During the course of the debate we have heard a wide divergence of views on the many provisions in the bill. In deciding to leave the bill in its omnibus form it is my opinion that the government adopted the only practical course of dealing with this legislation. All the clauses are government measures which will be supported by the majority of the government party. This does not prevent individual members of the Liberal party from voting against a measure if their consciences prevent them from supporting it. Indeed, some have already indicated they will vote against the bill. Presentation of the bill in an omnibus form does not limit debate. Any member is free to speak on the legislation at its several stages.

The bill will receive a detailed clause by clause examination in the Standing Committee Justice and Legal Affairs Committee by very capable members from both sides of the house. The opposition will be able to propose amendments at appropriate times to any clause.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but does the hon. member think any of them will ever pass?

Mr. Foster: If they warrant it, maybe.

An hon. Member: That is beside the point.

Mr. Woolliams: It is not beside the point. It is the very thing that matters.

Mr. Foster: Many days of debate will be saved compared with the time which would be taken if we had to deal individually with seven different acts.

In the clauses relating to abortion the proposal simply legalizes what is effectively the status quo in most parts of Canada today. We do not prosecute doctors today who carry out abortions in order to save the life of a mother. Yet most legal authorities believe that technically these doctors are breaking the law and, this being the case, they are liable to criminal prosecution. The bill before us will legalize a situation which already exists, and in future this operation may be undertaken in an accredited hospital without penalty and in specified circumstances such as with the approval of a committee of doctors. The bill goes one step further by permitting therapeutic abortions to be performed when the health of the mother is at stake. It does not resolve one problem with which doctors are sometimes confronted where a young girl has been raped or been the victim of incest and has subsequently conceived. This is a problem which doctors must continue to work with.

A large part of the population of our country is apparently opposed to carrying reform as far as the proposals in the bill now under discussion do. The legislation we are dealing with today seems to be an accommodation of the vastly conflicting opinions within this country. As such, it is probably the best compromise to suit the opinions of the majority of our people.

The measure of gun law control provided in this bill will be useful and is long overdue. Most people in this country are urban dwellers who use guns mostly in the hunting season. My own area of Northern Ontario is a favourite place for moose hunting, and thousands of inexperienced people flock to the bush annually. Many of them engage in careless, foolish practices such as taking sound shots. A hunter shoots into the bush because he hears a sound which he thinks is game. Often the sound turns out to be another hunter. It is hard to believe that such things happen, but the fact is that many people are carried out of the bush each year, killed or permanently maimed. The bill before us will further control the use of firearms in such a way as to discourage the careless handling of weapons.

The provisions relating to compulsory breathalyzer tests for drivers suspected of consuming alcohol beyond the level of .08 per cent are very serious. Persons thus convicted will carry a criminal record for life with all its attendant difficulties. Were it not for the amazing results which have been achieved in Britain following the introduction of compulsory breathalizer tests, I doubt that this action would be justified. But here are the results in Great Britain, and I read from an Associated Press report from London dated December 2, 1967:

> Night-time road accidents in London dropped by a dramatic 42 per cent in the first month after Britain's new drink-drive law was introduced, Scotland Yard said today.
>
> The first official figures to be released since the tests began October 9 also showed a slump in accidents in other British towns and cities.
>
> Scotland Yard said that 54 people were killed in road accidents in London during October—28 fewer than in October last year.
>
> There was a 42 per cent drop in fatal and injury accidents in London between 10 p.m. and 1 a.m., when the total fell by 324.
>
> Accidents involving serious injury totalled 835—102 fewer than last October—and the number of people slightly hurt dropped to 4,221 from 4,668.
>
> As the tests covered only three weeks of October, the figures for a full month may show an even more dramatic reduction.
>
> "There have been notably fewer vehicles on the roads at night," a police spokesman said.
>
> "The reduction in accidents appears to be due to the breathalyzer," said Stephen Swingler, minister of state at the transport ministry.
>
> "It seems clear that the new drink and drive law is having some effect," Swingler added.
>
> Under the new law, police are empowered to direct motorists to take a test involving a breath-testing device.

So the results in Britain indicate that we can save lives on our highways, and by this yardstick compulsory breathalyzer tests are justified.

The changes in this bill relating to cruelty to animals are significant. One of the most important is the provision which will prevent persons convicted of cruelty to animals from keeping domestic animals for as long as two years from the time of conviction. This restriction may be applied by a court order. I know of instances in the past where persons raising dogs for medical research continued to follow this practice in spite of two convictions for cruelty; they continued to raise dogs for sale to medical research laboratories by disposing of them through other dog raisers. The medical schools and research laboratories are unaware of the origin of these animals. The new provisions of the bill will give a magistrate or judge power to make an order completely prohibiting these individuals from keeping animals for a period of up to two years.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I am not going to attempt to cover the many other provisions of this bill at this time. I believe that the bill reflects a balanced approach to the reform of criminal law in Canada, and for this reason I support Bill C-150.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, let me say at once so there may be no mistake that, for reasons I will deal with later, I propose to support the bill on second reading, and to some extent I do so for the reasons advanced by the leader of our party a short time ago.

The main thrust of my remarks has to do with what I consider to be the very improper position taken by the government regarding the method that has been adopted by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues in order to bring this matter into the house and secure the views of members, representing the people of Canada, at the different stages of the debate. I think that the attitude of the government has been arrogant, authoritarian, undemocratic and downright immoral.

Any talk of parliamentary reform, of participatory democracy, of giving a new prestige and value to the work of members of parliament seems to me to be glib and unrealistic in the light of the brutal and ruthless dragooning by the government of its supporters on certain of the issues involved in this measure. Long after these proposals have become law—and I am convinced they will become law—people will pause and remember that on issues involving certain moral and consciencious questions which should lie far outside the range of political partisanship laws were in fact placed on the statute books by most questionable means.

All too often governments explain their decisions by saying that the methods and means used are immaterial so long as they secure the passage of certain legislation. I oppose this attitude. I deplore it. I see too much of it in the way this government approaches its responsibilities. I challenge the assumption that the means are immaterial. In a democratic society they are tremendously important, and at times can even be said to outweigh the objectives. There was never a dictator who did not rationalize his actions with the statement, "It had to be done because the country needed it."

The debate has generally been a good debate of high calibre, save only that I must again express regret that in my opinion many of the government members have been inhibited in their approach to certain of the matters covered by the bill, and I think this has had a restricting effect. Nevertheless, the quality of the speeches, the sincerity of the motives, and the eloquence of the expressions which have found their way into Hansard have been a certain indication of the deep feelings and the strong emotions which have been brought into play not only in this house but in the country as a whole.

I am also inclined to think that the spirit which has been engendered in this debate has its foundation rooted in something even more fundamental than the issues here. Society is troubled, is stirring, is changing. People are challenging old values and are sometimes tempted to replace them with new theories which have not been tested or are not likely to be successful.

When society is in such turbulence as to seem likely to perish, it is good advice that we should seek to restore to it the principles from which it sprang. The Criminal Code, which nourishes many of the rules that govern society, should always be related to justice, and truth is the nursing mother of justice and must always be the light which guides a people groping to find their way.

Members from both sides of the house have delved into the merits of many of the proposals and I have but a few simple comments to make. I naturally reserve the right to make further comments after the bill has been through the standing committee and has come back to the house. As a matter of fact, under the procedure we are now following we are, in effect, taking a step in the mechanical process of moving this bill on a stage so that in committee it may be examined in detail and members may have the opportunity to consider it and to propose amendments that then come back to this house.

In reviewing the comments which have been made may I say I have nothing but respect for the differing points of view and opinions which have been expressed, and I do not think it right that any hon. member or group of members who cannot accept views which have been otherwise expressed should in any sense seek to disparage these alternative points of view. Certainly we must give the fullest effect to views of a religious nature offered validly and sincerely, particularly if those views are honestly held by a considerable percentage of our population. There is today, alas, too great a tendency for society, like a river, to find ways around the hard rocks of morality. Proposals must be examined in the light of their effect on the preservation of the basic unit which western civilization was founded, namely, the family. I do not regard myself as being among those who feel that the family has outlived its usefulness and may well be quietly rejected at this time. So if society does require the retention of the family we must be prepared to recognize and give effect to certain moral principles which are essential for that purpose, even to the extent of declaring certain acts to be a crime. This, I think, is the whole approach of our criminal law.

When people in their infinite wisdom and through the actions of their representatives have concluded that the continuation of certain specific acts which heretofore have been only moral or social offences have now become so widespread and so much a danger that they must be raised to the quality of a crime and subjected to regulation and punishment, then this must be so. A sin can become a crime if the act has become or is so abhorrent and repugnant to human belief and is so likely to cause a deterioration in our social behaviour that it must be brought under control. I say this because some of the statements that have been made in the house, with some of which I do not agree even though they may have been expressed by people who have come to the same conclusion I have by other means. This, of course, is not always an easy thing to do. It is in coming to determine what is a crime or what should not be brought into the category of a crime that we find ourselves parting company. I say this because, even though I may not agree with the views that have been placed on the record by some members, or with their assessment and evaluation of the facts, many of the people who have so spoken have based their convictions on morality and religion. I respect this position and I understand and appreciate the quality of their argument.

Let me conclude this portion of my remarks by repeating that I intend to support this bill on second reading. I do so despite the fact that I have very definite and grave reservations, as well as strong doubts, about certain aspects of some of the clauses contained in the amendments to the Criminal Code. People have said there is a right to personal independence. I prize that right. But let me say this—and here I think I am paraphrasing what some philosopher said—that the body we use to traverse the slim isthmus between birth and death is not a completely private carriage. Society has a certain interest in it and in what we do with it.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I must say—I hope my remarks will be accepted as an objective viewpoint but I must make them all the same—that it is not as easy as some have suggested today to have absolute personal independence and freedom. The curse of the overplanned society is all about us. Every day, in parliament and in the legislatures of this country, governments are encroaching on our freedom of choice to live as we like. I do not like this. I oppose it when and how I can. Those who approve and support restraints on independence and curbs on the social and economic freedom of mankind do not make the best advocates for some of the changes which are proposed in this measure. I say this not only because of some of the things I have said previously but because I have the feeling that all too often the government has not made any real attempt to meet squarely the various wrongs and injustices which criminal law should always be aimed at.

The feeling persists with me that there has been an effort to try to show that this government and party are progressive and forward-moving, that they have cried out and exclaimed about change and progress and said, "See how fast we are going," while all the time keeping an eye on public feeling and public approbation and trying to cover the widest possible spectrum of what, in the Liberal party, passes for popular support. This is always our difficulty—the eternal struggle between right and wrong.

That is simple to say. We can generally locate wrong but we are not always sure of how to remedy it. Again, the punishment of wrong will not necessarily result in the triumph of right. For those reasons it is improper for any government to try to make political capital out of some of the issues which have been brought forward in this bill. This, I think, is where the government falls down. They have this inordinate preoccupation with things which are new. To be new, Mr. Speaker, is not always to be right.

It has been said that we should so arrange things that we adopt new views only when they appear to be true views. Thus, when I see the government's overly political approach to this issue, it seems to me that this administration is beginning to emit an odour of mild decay. It is simply not good enough to look at these positions and say that this is all we can do at this time and that circumstances are against us. Man is not the creature of circumstance. Circumstances should always be the creatures of man, and any government which forgets this does not deserve to continue in office.

In viewing this measure I have tried to look at the over-all picture. A great deal of general good will flow from the vast majority of proposals put before us in this measure. Much benefit will flow from it to millions of people, and for that reason I support it. My only regret is that the government did not see fit to include a great many more proposals of reform with regard to the substantive and procedural aspects of the Criminal Code. In the light of existing criminal law jurisprudence based on decided cases, of new discoveries and experience in other lands, I submit we are woefully far behind a great many other democratic societies which have made improvements and discovered them to be effective and useful. Nevertheless, knowing that so much good will flow from these general proposals I must support the bill despite the fact that certain, particular measures contain proposals which I either reject or which do not meet the real problem in each instance.

I hope that certain changes will be made in committee. This hope, of course, is a faint one in the light of our recent experience when the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) stated his disillusionment in no uncertain terms.

Mr. Woolliams: He was very truthful.

Mr. Baldwin: The measure of diluted, dictated democracy conjured up for us in that epidode does not give me too much confidence that the government will permit its docile supporters to introduce any meaningful changes. Nevertheless, in the light of the views I have expressed and bearing in mind with deep respect the contrary views of others, I must support this measure at its second reading stage. May I say that I am proud to be a member of this party which will, as indicated by my leader and by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), permit a free vote on those issues which must bother the consciences of many.

I end by saying to the Prime Minister, the Minister of Justice and other members of the government that if they do not listen to what we on this side of the house have said and to what supporters like the hon. member for York East have said, the mild odour of democratic decay which hangs over their party will soon become the stench of decomposition and dissolution.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on Bill C-150. I am a member of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, and when the bill is referred to the committee we shall study it in greater depth.

I had hoped to see the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) here this afternoon. He is referred to as the boy with the silver spoon in his mouth. Since I am sometimes known as the boy with the wooden spoon in my mouth I thought, because of our differences in family, financial standing and social and educational backgrounds, that we could carry on a sort of dialogue this afternoon and recount our different experiences which stem from our different walks of life.

Many Canadians have said there is a law for the rich and a law for the poor, probably because of experiences in encountering the law or from reading or hearing of the experiences of others who have had dealings with the law. Many may hold this opinion of the law because of the narrow base on which it rests. The criminal law, in particular, says that protection of the person and property is paramount. As is well known, in the past most criminals came from low income groups in our population. These days, however, they come from the more highly sophisticated sectors of society, as is evident when one studies cases of stock fraud and fraudulent bankruptcy. Clearly, criminals today may also come from the higher income groups.

In the past the criminal law was mainly concerned with retribution. The law dealt out revenge. Although in modern times a timid approach has been made toward reforming and rehabilitating offenders, I submit that we have not gone nearly far enough in this direction. We have placed too much emphasis on the guilt of offenders and too little on why offences have been committed and what corrective measures are necessary to solve our problems.

I remember what Judge Stewart and Dr. Blatz said about juvenile delinquency when I attended law lectures at university 25 years ago. They suggested that we ought to place less emphasis on guilt and that we should set up a panel of doctors, psychiatrists, psychologists, sociologists, members of the clergy and members of the business world to plan a strategy that would bring about the reformation and rehabilitation of young offenders. This idea has slowly evolved in the juvenile courts, and we should attempt to apply this approach to the adult courts by experimenting with young offenders between the ages of 18 and 25 years. These are the critical years of youth. Studies have shown that if a young man does not get into trouble in his tender years the likelihood of his committing an offence in his later years is very remote. Therefore this age group is of vital importance.

• (4:10 p.m.)

This does not mean that we should ignore men over 25 years who have committed offences. We have to set up decent prisons. We have to have proper training and retraining programs. We have to have an adequate parole system. We have to have after-care with regard to employment. In this regard I pay respect to Harold King who has a farm outside Toronto and attempts to help young men released from prison find their place in society. It is a shocking disgrace that men like him cannot call on the public treasury to assist them in their rehabilitation work.

This is why we of the New Democratic party, although we support the measures in the bill, would supplement it by introducing immediately measures such as the abolition of corporal punishment, the expunction of criminal records, reform of the bail system, the right to legal counsel at trial and a prohibition against wiretapping. These are not mollycoddling measures. They are necessary steps to develop right attitudes and respect for our laws, for the police and others who enforce and administer the law. However, we must start with youth.

I recall that in 1966 the then solicitor general tabled a report on juvenile delinquency. I also recall a conference of social workers at Lake Couchiching in May, 1967. These social workers, after making a detailed study of the report, anticipated great changes in the treatment of youth. Thus far there have been no changes. There has been inaction by the government, and more particularly a general apathy on the part of the present Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith).

I rather admire the Solicitor General for some of his past performances but I find very little to admire in his approach to amendments to the Juvenile Delinquents Act. I find very little to admire in his approach to the expunction of criminal records.

Mr. McIlraith: What do you know about either of those subjects?

Mr. Gilbert: We appreciate that the former solicitor general presented a memorandum to cabinet last spring containing proposals with regard to the expunction of criminal records and the reform of the bail system, and prior to the election had the consent of the cabinet to proceed with such amendments. But almost a year later we have had no action with regard to these vital areas of criminal law. Possibly we might have a reorganization of the Department of Justice and the Department of the Solicitor General so that one minister would be responsible for both departments and provide the cohesion and direction needed at this time. It may be that the Prime Minister will help us out in this dilemma by appointing the Solicitor General to the other place. In the meantime we shall have to persuade, cajole and use all means to get him to act in these vital areas.

The federal government has an over-all responsibility to society to bring about decent housing, full employment opportunities, decent levels of income, and educational and cultural opportunities. The federal government cannot opt out of its responsibility to the individual in society to help him to fulfil his social and material needs. Measures of this kind form the underpinnings of a just and civilized society, and until we attain them we shall have to make the best of the halfhearted measures that come from the government.

Having made these general remarks I would now like to deal with the bill. These amendments have been referred to as catch-up measures. Nevertheless we in the New Democratic Party welcome them. They represent a timid attempt to update the law. They are at least 15 to 25 years behind similar reforms in other jurisdictions. We in Canada are never leaders in reform; we are always followers.

My colleagues have set forth my party's position on the main areas of reform regarding abortion, homosexuality, lotteries, firearms, etc. We have recognized the honest differences among our members arising from problems of conscience and religion. We have stated that there will be an opportunity for all members to put forward amendments when the committee has made its report to the house, which will obviate the necessity of voting for the entire package.

With regard to the main problem of abortion some say that there is no change in the present law by the addition of the word "health" in the phrase that continuation of the pregnancy would be likely to endanger a woman's life. In the minds of some hon. members the addition of the word "health" only brings the law up to date as interpreted by the courts. This may be so but to me it creates a different atmosphere and different attitudes. We are beginning to regard the problem of abortion as a human or social problem rather than as a criminal act. No Canadian wants a continuation of backstreet butchery. Most Canadians want women to have doctors, clergy and social workers available to think the problem through with them and to bring forth their understanding, compassion and guidance. Therefore this amendment is a step in the right direction.

It seems to me that we can analogize the abortion amendment to our present law on divorce and its relationship to the divorce law of England. In the divorce field we have not proceeded as far as England has, where the breakdown of a marriage is the main ground for divorce. We have not gone that far. Neither have we gone as far as England in our approach to the law of abortion but, who knows, with a little experience, a little education and persuasion we may be able to update in the near future not only our divorce law but the law concerning abortion. We may again refer to the approach of the English jurisdiction for guidance.

With regard to homosexuality many have said that it is necessary to get the state out of the bedrooms of the nation.

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Gilbert: Certainly.

Mr. Valade: Could the hon. member tell us how the amendment with respect to abortion is going to get rid of backstreet butchery?

Mr. Gilbert: I appreciate the question of the hon. member and I would respectfully suggest that with this amendment we are developing a new atmosphere and new attitudes with regard to abortion. As I said, when a young woman is pregnant she will now be able to have the assistance of social workers, doctors and the clergy to help her think through the problem so that she can make the right decision. We have not gone as far as the law in England goes. We have not instilled confidence in our young people with regard to the pregnancy problem, but with the patience, understanding and encouragement of the hon. member who has just asked me this question I am sure we will attain maturity with regard to this problem.

• (4:20 p.m.)

With regard to the problem of homosexuality I have said, as have many Canadians including the Prime Minister, that it is necessary to get out of the bedrooms of the nation. Attitudes are changing with regard to homosexuality. In the past homosexuals were looked upon as lepers by society. People had almost the same attitude toward homosexuals that some of the early Christians had concerning lepers. Now people have an attitude of regret rather than revenge. When one reads the Wolfenden report one appreciates the understanding and compassion of the members of that committee in dealing with the problem. Experience has shown that very few first offenders charged with an offence involving homosexuality have been sent to prison. The report stated that only 30 per cent of first offenders in England were committed to prison. My experience in Canada in this field indicates that most first offenders have a fine imposed upon them. Many of them are placed on probation with a term attached to the probation that they attend a forensic clinic for treatment.

One of the recommendations of the Wolfenden report was that information should be obtained with regard to first offenders before a magistrate or judge imposes sentence. This is an excellent recommendation in view of some of the psychiatric and psychological problems first offenders have. One of the problems with which many Torontonians have been confronted in respect of homosexuality is the frequency with which homosexuals hang around public washrooms and lavatories. In fact, members of the morality squad in Toronto take up positions in washrooms. They bore a hole in the wall and by that method of detection have brought some homosexuals to court. This seems to me to be a rather nauseating approach to criminal detection. This is one reason I welcome the change. I think many members of the morality squad feel ill at ease when applying such detection methods.

Mr. Woolliams: You are not suggesting that this bill makes that permissive.

Mr. Gilbert: No, I am not.

Mr. Woolliams: Then why do you bring it up?

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I have just had an interjection from the hon. member for Calgary North. I believe he is saying this amendment will bring about no change in the method of detection. I remind the hon. member that there will be a new attitude and approach to this problem and that the same number as in the past will not be hanging around these places. There must be protection for young persons who use the public parks and public lavatories. It has been suggested in the Wolfenden report that municipalities pass bylaws to prevent loitering by homosexuals around public washrooms. The Wolfenden report also indicates that homosexuality is not a disease but that total reorientation from complete homosexuality to complete heterosexuality is very unlikely indeed. As part of the corrective treatment they indicate there should be, first, a change in the direction of sexual preference, second, a better adaptation to life in general and, third, greater continence or self-control. Those are some of the corrective methods suggested in the Wolfenden report. They also indicate there is a place for the psychiatrist, the clergyman, the social worker and the probation officer in helping to deal with this problem.

In respect of lotteries, personally I am opposed to lotteries being conducted in Canada, especially as a device to collect moneys to help finance our social programs, hospitals, medical care and education. When one hears about the experience of countries like Ireland which have had lotteries for many years one is tempted to think it is a tragedy that Canadian money is going to Ireland instead of remaining in Canada to be used for social purposes. If one were to examine the hospital and educational institutions in Ireland one would very quickly realize that they have made little or no advance in these areas. When one thinks of the huge amount of money collected and the small amount used one cannot help but be greatly discouraged by this attempt to meet the cost of social programs. The experience in New York State, and I would think in the city of Montreal, has shown that this approach is not one which has met with success.

I believe that lotteries create an emotional instability among members of our community. In many instances, because money is spent on gambling families are deprived of some of the necessities of life. It is a rather sad commentary to note that churches, which are the guardians, educators and teachers in respect of our moral and spiritual life, should use bingos and lotteries as a means of financing the building of churches. I do not think most Canadians like to think it is necessary to use such methods to build churches. I for one am strongly opposed to the lottery clauses in the bill.

With regard to the provisions in respect of the breathalyzer test I am sure most members are in agreement with this because of the murder on our highways which in many instances is due to the use of alcohol. One of the members from British Columbia set forth the practice in that province whereby the police, after stopping a person whose ability has been impaired, give him an opportunity either to park his car and go home or take a breathalyzer test. The person must surrender his driving licence for a period of 24 hours. Considering that a conviction carries with it restriction in respect of employment, travel and bonding, I would hope members of the committee would give serious study to the approach taken by British Columbia.

A recent survey by the Ontario Addiction Research Foundation shows that the greatest danger to high school students in Toronto is not drugs but alcohol. Robert Robinson, the foundation's director of education, stated after results of the survey were known:

> There is no doubt that alcohol is more dangerous than marijuana, glue-sniffing and L.S.D., because it is more widely used and because of its long-term effects.

• (4:30 p.m.)

One appreciates the changes in the law in other jurisdictions, more specifically in Great Britain. The note I have indicates that authorities in Great Britain believe that under the new U.K. drinking law the breathalyzer may have saved 1,000 lives in the first full year of its use. For the ten months to the end of July deaths were down 1,075 or 12 per cent from the previous comparable period. Cases of serious injury dropped by more than 10,000, or 9 per cent.

I think this is the reason most Canadians are in agreement will the change involving the use of the breathalyzer. We welcome the amendment bringing about improvements to the Parole Act. I would hope that when we reach the committee stage we will invite representatives from the Canadian Corrections Association, who have already filed a brief in respect of this matter, to attend the committee and inform members of their views as to further amendments to improve the act. We also welcome the changes in respect of summary conviction appeals. Any lawyers who have had experience in this field I am sure have found many hang-ups, and I congratulate the government for attempting to correct this problem.

We appear to be at the cross-roads of society. We need a new lift and a new outlook. This is why so many Canadians are looking to the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General for the development of bold and courageous initiatives to update the law so that Canadians will be able to say they live in the most updated community in the world.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, having listened to the comments made by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), I thought it would be only natural for a government member representing a constituency in the province of Quebec to set forth his views on the bill now under consideration.

I do not believe it would be advisable to prolong the debate. Since this bill will eventually be referred to the committee on justice and legal affairs, there will likely be lengthy discussions there and, on third reading, there will probably be other comments in the light of the conclusions the committee will have arrived at.

However, at the request of the hon. member for Lotbinière, I wish to tell him I have taken as an insult his false utterings as regards the government members.

Of course, I have not the advantage of having a well-prepared speech. But this will perhaps enable me to give my own opinion rather than the views of others.

I must admit, Mr. Speaker, if that may please the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, that at the outset, I had some doubts about the value of this bill. However, I thought I ought not rely on my personal opinion and I somewhat followed the method used by the honourable member for Lotbinière. I too held consultations throughout my constituency and throughout the ones adjacent to the Saguenay-Lake-St. John area.

I will say at the outset to the honourable member that I received a few letters, from my constituency only. To be honest, I must say those letters were not in favour of this bill, however, after consultations with civil and religious authorities, I must say quite frankly to my honourable friend that I was surprised at the comments I received.

I expected that the striking argument of our friends of the Ralliement Créditiste to the effect that life was a gift of the utmost importance and that morals should prevail in the vote that will be taken would prove to be the most convincing one.

To my great surprise, I got the following answer: that bill represents a permission, not an obligation. And by way of answering the hon. member for Lotbinière who said that there existed the following dilemma: either we were stupid, we members of the government, for not intervening in this debate, or we were inhuman. I think he forgot another option. Either the members who do not intervene are stupid or they are inhuman or idiotic. I regard as imbeciles those who cannot understand the extreme importance of this bill which represents a landmark in the Canadian life. I regard as an imbecile the man who could not make the people in his riding understand that this legislation was extremely advantageous to them because it opened new horizons to them and allowed them to make a distinction between religion, morals and the law.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker, they din into our ears the principle that life is the most precious thing. I quite agree, and this is why I am in favour of this bill. I consider, Mr. Speaker, that although I am a Catholic—and by saying so I probably want to avoid every attack that could be made against me about my former intervention because I am a Catholic and I am proud of it—this does not prevent me from considering those who practice another religion as not following the right track. I do not think I can assure that I have a monopoly on truth, but I believe, on the other hand, that if a person is pregnant and believes that her morals and her principles allow her to ask for an abortion, I cannot in all conscience let her die because I am a Catholic and therefore against abortion.

I consider, Mr. Speaker, that it does not belong to me to pass judgment on the intentions of others who do not practice my religion. From the moral point of view, I am not in favour of abortion, but as a legislator in this house, I think that in our pluralist society everybody has the right to follow the principles that he regards as just and I do not think I have the right to prevent him from doing what he wishes. Indeed, I think that the bill under study takes into account the Canadian context in which we also live in the province of Quebec.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I would not say I have consulted everyone of my constituents, for this would not be true, but I am happy to say that I have probed rather deep into the matter and had quite a number of consultations, regardless of the political allegiance of my correspondents.

Of course, as a representative of the riding of Lapointe, it may seem rather strange that I should speak in favour of the government. I understand my friends of the Ralliement créditiste have always been accustomed to hear, in this riding, a voice expressing distrust towards the government in power, but, this does not mean that my predecessor, whom everybody knows, had only shortcomings. On the contrary, I will say this about him that he was sincere and understood in his own way the role of French Canadians in society.

I do not necessarily share his opinons but, I would not go so far as labelling him as some people have. It is the first time I have the opportunity to talk about him and I must say I am always glad whenever I meet him. Even though we do not share the same views this does not prevent us from being what I would call casual friends.

Mr. Speaker, I shall not say that the bill under consideration is perfect, nor that I endorse all its provisions. The breathalizer test, for instance in my opinion, implies very important principles which tend to change the entire picture of our criminal law. As most members know, the accused is presumed innocent. This is the basic principle of our criminal law, a principle that we have somehow imported from England, and, in my opinion, it is a good one, although it differs completely from the French principle of law whereby the accused is presumed guilty.

Now, in this new bill, the accused is presumed guilty and it is up to him to defend himself and prove that he is innocent of the charge laid against him.

I must say that I have certain scruples about this, perhaps as a lawyer and as counsel for the defence. But, on the other hand, considering the number of accidents we deplore in Canada, and considering the principle outlined by the Minister of Justice, (Mr. Turner) to the effect that he who drinks must not drive, we are confronted by a drastic principle, and under those circumstances, I might be inclined to support government members for that reason. I must admit however that some questions need answering and I trust that members of the opposition and my other colleagues of the government will enighten me on the advantages of such a measure, and on the possibility of perhaps making the law more efficient and more acceptable through other means.

All this to say that, contrary to what my hon. friend for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) said, I do not tag along behind the Prime Minister and I shall not vote even if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) were to tell me to do so. (Laughter)

Some members smile across the way; I wonder if they could say as much.

I accepted freely to join the Liberal team and if ever I realize that I must forego my freedom of action, my free vote, I shall not hesitate to go back home. But I am still confident within my party, there is still enough freedom and honour for me to be allowed to vote according to my conscience and convictions.

I feel that is an insult for the prime minister, who has given the impression of being a sincere man to be told that he is capable of imposing his will upon the members.

Knowing the sense of humour of the hon. members for Lotbinière and Témiscamingue, I am sure that in making those assertions they wanted to tease us.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, in the case of paroles, the bill does not go far enough. A while ago, an hon. member mentioned that the bill should allow the destruction of criminal records after a while, and that there was a recommendation to that effect. I want to state emphatically that in my opinion, such a provision should be included in the bill. I am in a position to know, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of fact, some people have come to me with a criminal record going back four years. They were turned down from interesting jobs in spite of their qualifications, simply because they had a criminal record going back several years.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the rehabilitation of convicts is essential and that we should do something in order to enable those people, especially young people who have made a mistake because they were influenced by others, to rehabilitate themselves and take back their place in our society.

In the lottery field, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I heard the arguments of the previous speaker who is against lotteries. I should say that the problem is not so serious in the province of Quebec, at least in my area. I have heard favourable comments about this question, but when I consider that lotteries could become a means of taxation, I am perhaps not ready to accept such a view for the time being, and I hope I will get some clarification in committee and through discussions with my colleagues, who could perhaps convince me that this would be the best solution.

To sum up, Mr. Speaker, I think I represent the opinion expressed by the majority of my constituents when I say that I am in favour of this legislation. I should add, Mr. Speaker, that at first I was not in favour but after consultation I think it is my duty to indicate to this house that I shall vote for this bill, but that I hope we shall have the opportunity in committee to bring in some useful and efficient amendments in the interest of all Canadians.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend in a definite way, to participate in the debate on Bill C-150.

I heard this afternoon my colleague, the hon. member for Lotbinière, deliver a magnificent speech that he had prepared himself and I draw the attention of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) to that point.

Again for the information of that charming colleague, I shall tell him that all members of the Ralliement Créditiste are able to prepare their speeches themselves, and speeches clever enough to retain the attention of the house, speeches that mean something, even about an omnibus bill which deals with abortion and all kinds of things.

I understand, as the hon. member has just said, that the bill will be sent to committee, after the vote on the motion for second reading. But, in committee, Mr. Speaker, what happens in this house happens all over again.

The government is still in a majority. That is the point we come to with its decision taken in advance. Even if we introduce amendments, nothing will ever be changed, for it is the government which leads the way, within the committee as well as in the house, because the government holds the majority. That is why I always stated and I still do—that a government in a minority is more helpful to Canada than a government in a majority that enforces its opinions, as is the case nowadays.

• (4:50 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Lapointe said that he also had consulted civil and religious authorities, and that the bill was opening new horizons. We have been hearing about abortion, homosexuality, etc. for a long time. However, it is the first time in Canadian history that those matters are dealt with in legislation. I would say that the bill constitutes a general abortion, even if we asked that it be divided.

With regard to lotteries, the bill shows that it will be the abortion of the financial system.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: With regard to carrying weapons, that is a very important question. It might be considered as the abortion of understanding between individuals.

Homosexuality is in some way the abortion of marriage between a man and a woman, and not between two men.

With regard to the breathalizer test which makes it possible to know whether an individual has been drinking or not, it is the abortion of sobriety or of breweries, as the hon. member for Lévis (Mr. Guay) said; his area has experimented the abortion of breweries.

Parole is the abortion of justice.

Mr. Speaker, this is a bill of abortion.

Now, getting down to business, this afternoon the hon. member for Lapointe complained of vicious attacks made by the hon. member for Lotbinière who described exactly what is taking place. The hon. member for Lapointe rose and expressed his opinion; he was against the bill at the beginning and is not yet for it. He still does not grasp all its consequences, all its implications, but he informs us that he will vote for it and that it is a matter of personal conscience.

A few weeks ago, Pope Pius XI declared, I mean Pope Paul VI—I often quote Pius XI to enlighten my friends on economic questions—that conscience must not be permitted to choose whatever path it pleases, that it must be guided, for without guidance, chaos ensues. If the human conscience is not guided, we will witness protest movements, such as we are witnessing now, and bomb explosions in the very heart of Montreal. If a man's conscience tells him to go and place a bomb at the stock exchange in Montreal, he will go. Personal conscience moves people to become enemies. Why? Because we have neglected to give such conscience the guidance it needed.

The men in their forties or fifties have received conscience-guidance from their parents at an early age, from their teachers during their first years of schooling, and later on, from their university professors.

At that time, we protested in our own way, for example against the fact that you could not smoke during recess, or against being followed by a supervisor. Still, one must admit that the guidance we received in matters of conscience has made responsible citizens of our generation. We do not regret the education we received. There existed then guidance for the conscience, a respect for authority, which no longer exist today. And what we are witnessing now are the results of too much freedom of conscience. Let us live according to our own conscience. To a young 17-year old boy we say: live according to your conscience. They are still in diapers, but they are told to act according to their conscience. What a strange political philosophy.

It is for those very reasons that one sees revolutions, wars, anarchy, etc. It can be explained by the lack of authority of those who are supposed to use authority. When the authority has no respect for itself, situations like the present one will arise. The authority is mainly afraid of losing votes.

Mr. Speaker, did the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) draft this bill? Pressure must have come from some quarters. From where? I have not made suggestions to the Prime Minister, nor have the Liberal members. They are not the ones who suggested to the actual Prime Minister, when he was Minister of Justice, to bring forward the original Bill C-195. I am convinced there are powers at work behind the scene who have drafted the bill and compelled the government to put it before the house. Today we are receiving letters of complaint about this bill.

I am sure the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) will vote in favour of the motion for second reading of the bill and reference to the committee. He knows the opposition will not be able to do anything in committee. So it is a lot of nonsense. Tonight on the C.B.C. network, we shall hear our usual loud-mouths say: The hon. Leader of the Opposition is in favour of the bill on second reading, so it can be discussed in committee. But he will not even be there to discuss it in committee.

An hon. Member: It is true.

Mr. Caouette: It is true, Mr. Speaker. A Liberal member has just said that I am right. I know that there are some Conservative members who agree with me.

Mr. Speaker —

Mr. Valade: The Prime Minister will not take part in the debate in committee.

Mr. Caouette: At the next election, the Prime Ministeer will not be there either! During the election campaign last June, did any Liberal member consult the members of religious orders,—brothers, fathers, nuns —to ask them what they thought of Bill C-150?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I hear some hon. members say "yes". Why do they not rise from their seats to tell us what the members of religious orders said to them at that time? The Liberals told them: You must vote for the Liberal party, it is the great national party par excellence. At that time, the parish priests, the curates, the brothers and the nuns all fell for those sweet words, but when they voted for the Liberal party, they voted for this bill respecting abortion that is now under consideration.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: Fortunately, everyone did not fall for that sweet talk, in all parts of the country. In my area, the nuns know for whom to vote, as well as the members of religious orders, the parish priests and the curates. These people know that I say exactly what I think and not what someone else thinks. I believe this bill should never have been introduced in the house.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that it is five o'clock?

[English]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Canadian Economy—remedial measures contemplated by government; the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis)—Indian Affairs—Yellowknife, N.W.T.—regulations in Akaitcho Hall; the hon. member for Frontenac-Lennox and Addington (Mr. Alkenbrack)—Public Buildings—Bath-Millhaven federal prison complex.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

Canada Elections Act

PUBLIC BILLS

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING AGE OF VOTERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville) moved that Bill C-21, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at this time I take pride in introducing Bill C-21, an act to amend the Canada Elections Act with regard to the age of voters. The bill, if passed, would reduce the eligible voting age in the whole Dominion of Canada from 21 to 18.

• (5:00 p.m.)

At the outset I want to make an assertion which is essential to my cause in presenting this bill today. It is that voting at the age of 18 is, in my opinion, a right which should have been granted to young people many years ago. Participation in the political process should not be a part-time job; it should involve young people at all times, and this means providing them with that basic right, the right to vote. All too often politicians use young people only to lick stamps or place stickers on car bumpers during election campaigns and political conventions. Lowering the voting age to 18 is long past due.

In order to get people involved we have to work to extend the political base as much as possible. Years ago, only people who held property were allowed to vote. This limitation was relaxed to the benefit of all Canadians. Women received the franchise and this, too, resulted in benefits to the Canadian people.

I should like to summarize briefly the history of the lowering of the voting age to 18. The C.C.F. government in Saskatchewan, soon after its election in 1944 under the leadership of the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), lowered the voting age to 18 in that province, enabling young people to vote at that age in the 1948 election. The age limit was subsequently reduced in Quebec, British Columbia, Alberta, and in Newfoundland where the voting age is 19. We also find voting ages of less than 21 years in the United States in the states of Georgia and Kentucky as well as in the new states of Alaska and Hawaii. Nearly 40 countries have adopted a voting age of 18, countries in all corners of the world on both sides of the iron curtain, countries with differing political ideologies. It seems ironic to me that Canada should still have a voting age of 21. We are still debating the mediaeval concept that persons are not mature until they attain the age of 21. This concept grew out of an age when a person was not thought physically able to wear armour until he became 21.

I appeal to members to vote on this bill, not to talk it out. All of us know that similar bills have been presented many times by members of all political parties. All political parties at one time or another have been in favour of reducing the voting age to 18. I believe that as far back as 1962 the committee on privileges and elections unanimously recommended that this should be done in Canada. But the proposal never seems to come to a vote, or when it does it is defeated, or the issue is tied up in committee after committee.

The former prime minister of Canada, the right hon. Lester Pearson, speaking to the house on November 18, 1963, came out in favour of reducing the voting age. But nothing was done about it. As reported in Hansard at page 4858 Mr. Pearson said:

> This party has been committed to the reduction of the voting age to 18 years of age for some years, and we are anxious to see that it is done as quickly as possible.

I suggest the time has come when we should stop talking about this matter, both here and outside the house, and pass a bill giving effect to this proposal.

Young people have been expecting to get the vote at the age of 18 for a long time. I picked up an article the other day in the Globe and Mail of November 16, 1963, which raised this hope among many people, and I should like to quote a paragraph or two from it:

> It is virtually certain that all Canadians who have passed their 18th birthday will be able to vote in the next federal election. The Commons election committee was unanimous, this week, in approving the reduction of the voting age (at present it is 21); and all parties have indicated they will support the change when it comes to the floor of Parliament.
>
> The arguments in favour of the change scarcely need repetition. People can now vote at 18 (provincially, but not, of course, federally) in Saskatchewan and in Quebec; they can vote at 19 in Alberta and British Columbia.
>
> All over Canada they can work at 18, marry at 18, drive a car at 18, go to jail at 18. They can fight in wars at 18—and in fact, as servicemen, can vote in federal elections at that age. The ultimate logic of this is to give all of them the federal franchise at 18, and this is what Parliament is about to do.

That was in 1963, nearly six years ago, and still nothing has happened though members have brought bills such as this one before the house in each and every session. For this reason I appeal to hon. members today not to be hypocrites but to do something about the situation when they have the opportunity.

One of the greatest reasons for the cynicism of young people about the whole political process today is that nothing ever seems to happen. Part of the fault is attributable to Members of Parliament on both sides of the house. All too often we tend to be redundant and repetitive, talking about the same things year in and year out and using the same speech on occasion after occasion. As a result, parliament has become ingrown and out of touch with many segments of our society.

We give young people responsibility for carrying out many of the laws which are made by our society—I have already mentioned a few of the obligations placed upon them—but we do not allow them to participate in the decision-making process which determines the laws they must obey. All too often we as politicians and society in general adopt a domineering attitude. We think young people are good enough to lick the stamps and do the Joe jobs, the mechanical tasks, but when it comes to making decisions they are just not capable in our eyes.

In the last election campaign the Prime Minister went across the country inviting young people to become involved in the political process. Yet he has been denying them a fundamental right, the right to vote. This is the point at which private Members of Parliament should take action. All of us know that young people are ready to become involved. This happened in the course of my own campaign during which hundreds of young people participated actively in making the decisions as well as knocking on doors.

There is a growing awareness in the youth community of events around them, an awareness which is logical, given the society in which we live, a society in which automation and technology play a leading part. Information flows in quickly from all over the world. We can see evidence of the starvation in India and Biafra, of the condition of those who live in urban ghettos and the depressed areas of Canada. In such circumstances young people today are more aware of events in the world around them than they were even ten or 15 years ago. Because of advances in technology, people today possess many of the mechanical and quantitative goods for which their parents strove years ago and as a result more stress is placed on the quality of life and on values other than material values. Young people are more keenly aware of these things than they were 20 years ago. Indeed, it appears somewhat ludicrous that we should still be talking about lowering the voting age in the year 1969.

We hear a good deal about the generation gap and the difficulties some find in understanding young people. There is one way in which we can help improve this situation and it is by getting young people involved in doing things others do. If we ignore them, we cannot understand them, and this is the point at which things become very dangerous.

I should like to outline some of my reasons for thinking that young people should be allowed to vote. First of all, I consider it to be a right. Moreover, I believe they are mature enough to vote as intelligently as anybody else. In many provinces they reach legal age at 16 or 18. They must then be responsible for their conduct, they must appear in court when summoned and go on to gaol if sentenced. They are liable for military service if called upon. It is ironic to me that a person should be considered old enough to kill or be killed for his country when we do not give him the franchise here at home. They are considered intelligent enough to be trained to fight but not intelligent enough to vote.

Today many young people are organizing groups in an attempt to have the voting age lowered. One organization known as "Down Three" has circulated leaflets to all Members of Parliament on the issue of military service and I should like to quote one paragraph:

• (5:10 p.m.)

There is a great deal of inconsistency in the status of a young person in Canada. Eighteen-year olds, in time of war, can be conscripted for military service. Are 18-year olds adults or children? If adults, surely they should have the right to vote in time of peace, as well as in time of war.

This is the kind of inconsistency that appears in our society time and time again.

As we look around us we observe the many financial and social responsibilities a young person has. Many young people between the ages of 18 and 21, even younger, are married and have families of their own. Many of them are working and paying income tax. Many have responsibilities at home as well as responsibilities to the community at large. Since a driving licence can be had at the age of 16 most of them drive a car. They can hunt and carry a gun. Many churches in the country have already recognized that people are responsible for their actions before they reach the age of 21.

We should also give young people the opportunity to become involved in society at an earlier age. A better balance should be struck in Canada between the young and the elderly in the matter of voting. In this regard there is quite a disparity. As Maclean's magazine pointed out in an article last June:

> Nearly half the Canadian people are indeed under 25—some 9.8 million out of 20 milion, according to the 1966 census—but only 1.4 million of these are old enough to vote. Among 11.2 million voters they are 12.5 per cent, or exactly one in eight. And though they are the largest of the five-year age groups into which the census figures are broken down, outnumbering the next youngest voters by about 220,000, they are still less than one-fifth as numerous as that vast army of the middle-aged and the elderly, the 7.4 million electors who are 35 and older—

If young people were given the vote I submit there would be a better balance in the representation of the Canadian people.

Lowering the voting age is but a toe in the doorway, as it were, toward opening up society for the participation of youth. Our young people are impatient. They are demanding a number of radical socio-economic changes. They want to eradicate many disparities. We need to create a society that offers far more avenues to explore. Lowering the voting age would be but a start toward the accomplishment of these things. Many of our present institutions are very cold and de-personalized.

Our young people want democracy but democracy in its truest sense. They want democracy not only in the parliament of Canada and in the government but also in the private sector of our economy. They want universities to be democratized. Our Indian people want more say in making decisions, and many of our workers in factories want a greater participation. The public wants more control over corporations that affect a large part of their daily lives.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Let me conclude by saying this: If we do not go even as far as to extend the voting age, we are only asking for trouble. We will be ignoring basic facts. It would be but a small step toward opening up society and increasing the opportunities for people to participate. This is why many people are losing faith in our present democratic system. Even many moderate students are asking why they have to demonstrate or hold a sit-in before people will listen to them. We do not want this sort of thing, and like to accomplish things quickly and in a democratic manner. Unless we do so we will encourage more and more activity outside political channels as we know them today. Therefore I ask the house to give this matter serious consideration and to pass this bill today.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Thunder Bay): Mr. Speaker, over the past several years private members from all parties now represented in the House of Commons have presented bills to provide that the age of voters under the Canada Elections Act be 18 years instead of 21 as at present. During the life of the 27th parliament nine public bills were introduced by private members to amend this section of the act. These bills were either talked out or referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections. In November, 1963, the standing committee actually approved an amendment to the Canada Elections Act to lower the voting age to 18. Although since 1960 prominent members from both government and opposition have agreed with the argument that the voting age should be lowered, as yet no government action has been taken to bring about this change. This state of affairs seems to suggest and to lead one to suspect that although lip service is paid to arguments in favour of lowering the voting age, in fact the most convincing considerations must be those that are against doing so. This is what one is led to assume from what has happened in the house in this regard since 1960.

A strong feeling undoubtedly persists among many that young people are particularly susceptible to radical or extremist elements. Since they are likely to be influenced by unscrupulous factions, so the argument goes, they should not be trusted with the franchise. Such an attitude really calls for proof positive that young people will handle the franchise intelligently, even before they have the opportunity to vote.

The same impossible demand was made by the opponents of female suffrage. It was claimed that women lacked the experience to vote intelligently, that most of them really did not want the vote anyway, that they would tend to vote in blocks and would be easy prey for demagogues, that such a volatile electorate would destroy our institutions and, finally, that they were just not ready for the franchise—some day maybe, but not just yet. These were the arguments of those who opposed female suffrage in Great Britain and the United States.

In respect of our youth at the present time, there are those who, on the one hand, seem to fear the influence of the youthful voter, whether it is expressed or whether it is merely felt. There are probably many members of the House of Commons as well as people outside the house who somehow fear the influence of the youthful voter. On the other hand, there are those who see in our youth a new generation—impatient, idealistic, and having a more thoughtful attitude toward national and world affairs. Between these two attitudes of fear and caution on the one side and praise and urgency on the other, there is probably a middle road of truth.

According to several surveys, young people in their teens show no significant difference from older people in their attitude to or understanding of political issues. If such be the case, why not leave the voting age at 21, an age that has long been recognized as the legal attainment of one's majority? If the need for change is pressed upon us, then why should the voting age be set at 18 rather than 17 or perhaps 19? The answer in part is that the establishment of 21 years as the age of responsibility in voting has no relevance in the 20th century. As is well known and as was mentioned previously, the present standard is borrowed from ancient English common law which designated 21 years as the minimum age for knighthood. This was supposed to be the age at which a young man would be strong enough to bear the weight of armour. We all know there is no magic to the age of 21 years. There is no guarantee that a person will assume adult responsibility as soon as he reaches his 21st birthday.

• (5:20 p.m.)

What justification is there for selecting 18 years as the voting age in preference to 21? The fact is that those falling between the ages of 18 and 21 are considered adults for many purposes. They can marry, begin having families, pay taxes, drive cars, serve in the armed forces, and so on. Eighteen years seems a good age to have as the voting age; it is approximately the age when young people leave high school to enter the labour force or to proceed to higher education.

Studies in the United States have shown that persons 21 years of age are among the most delinquent voters. It has been concluded that the reason for this is that by the time these young people have turned 21 many have become so far removed from the stimulation of the educational process that their interest in public affairs has waned. Consequently, some of these young people may be lost as voters for the rest of their lives.

Perhaps the most compelling reason for lowering the voting age is that Canadian politics needs the transfusion of enthusiasm and interest that younger voters would give it. Through the years young people have been a great help to political parties and candidates—as helpers but not as voters. Since young people have played important roles in many campaigns it is disturbing to find they can persuade others to vote but cannot vote themselves.

Lowering the voting age to 18 years would tend to bring about a better and more equitable balance in the electorate of this nation. As the life expectancy of our people rises the number of older voters increases. A corresponding expansion in the number of younger voters would broaden the political base and perhaps provide concurrently a more balanced approach in the nation's general political outlook.

We know from history that it is usually a difficult task to expand the electorate. Often a strong measure of agitation is required, as was demonstrated by the Chartists, the suffragettes and the United States negroes. In due course political parties and leaders somehow become capable of embracing new ideas and people, but the process generally is slow. In time the federal government will extend the franchise to those between 18 and 21 years of age, but by then it will be following the practice of most provinces in Canada. To date, five provinces have lowered the voting age either to 18 years or 19 years, and the question is being considered seriously by other provinces. It seems a pity that the federal government is not giving leadership in this matter. Our youth generally deserve this right. Recent public opinion polls have shown that the number of people in favour of lowering the voting age to 18 years has increased considerably.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer briefly to another change which is urgently needed in the present Canada Elections Act. I am concerned about the problem of the absentee voter. In my constituency of Thunder Bay many Great Lakes sailors lose their votes because they are away from their polling places on election day. During the advance poll they may find themselves at a location where they are not registered. In Canada we have persons who, because of sickness, infirmity or incapacity—they may be away travelling or absent for any number of reasons—are unable to attend their polling place.

May I point out that the Report of the representation commissioner in 1968 on methods of registration of electors and absentee voting recommended that in this country we should follow the Australian method of absentee voting. There one may cast one's ballot at a different polling place but it must be in the same province. The report also recommended that postal voting, the mailing of one's ballot to the place where one is a registered voter, should be introduced into Canada.

The need to lower the voting age and to provide for the absentee voter must be resolved before the next general election. I hope that these amendments will not be under debate still in the 29th and 30th parliaments.

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, may I have your indulgence and the indulgence of hon. members on the government side of the house to speak for five or six minutes in support of the bill brought before this house by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). It is significant that a measure similar to the present one has been before the house on nine occasions. Considering the interest the youth of this nation has displayed in this question, I think it ought to be decided very quickly.

We must ask ourselves, will we permit our youth to face responsibilities and help in the solution of problems which are causing inequities in this complex life we live? I have been fortunate in being involved with youth in my travels across the country. I am pleased to see the involvement of youth in the political arena. Surely it would be unrealistic for us to contend that we should not lower the voting age as this is not the proper time to do so.

In Hamilton aldermen 22 years old are elected. I am pleased to see that one of the youngest members ever to sit in this house is the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville. Surely the youth of certain elected representatives is significant of something. Perhaps the significance lies in the preoccupation of our youth with politics.

May I put it this way, Mr. Speaker. I was fortunate enough to have involved in my election campaign between 500 and 600 young people. As a result of their vitality, energy, know-how—I am speaking of political know-how—and advice I was elected to this house. I stand here very proud and very honoured that young people were involved in my campaign. At the same time I am concerned about any communication gap that may exist between the younger and older generations. Although we are prepared to say our young people are responsible enough to go to war, to come before the courts and to drive cars, at the same time when it comes to what may be termed the "nitty-gritty" of life we are reluctant to give them certain rights and responsibilities.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Participatory democracy is a phrase much used on the other side of the house. I am interested in it. I want to see more people involved. One of the most important groups in this great dominion of ours is the under 25 age group which makes up half the population. I do not think it takes a great deal of brains to understand what is happening at this particular juncture in time, when we think that half of the people in this country are under the age of 25 years. That is a significant statistic.

We must be prepared to accept the fact that there are many responsible people within this group. The restless minority is one thing. We hear about Sir George Williams College and about the University of B.C. Let us not become beclouded by the actions of the restless minority; their actions of violence; their actions of intimidation; their actions of blackmail. Let us look to the responsible ones who have the ideas, who have the energies, and who have the philosophies that can play a part in our political life.

The only proper forum for the energies, the restlessness and the excitement of youth is the parliamentary caucus, not on the street demonstrating, waving flags, exciting and inciting. The proper forum is within this grand chamber.

I would hope, Mr. Speaker, that this is a time when we can be realistic not only in attitude but in action. It is all right to be committed but let us have a commitment with deeds. I think we have a lot to learn from the young people. As I listen to them, as I read about them throughout this nation, I believe we must start now reducing the communication gap, that gap which now-a-days means that if you are not under 30 you "aint with it". It is very unfortunate when young people have to seek leadership from within their own group without relying on the wisdom and experience of those who have had an opportunity of laying a foundation for them.

That is why I am concerned and hope that this bill does not get talked out. This talking-out business is starting to confuse me. I see so many good things proposed, but then during private members' hour I look at my hon. friends on the other side of the chamber, and how many of them do I see? I see, one, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen of them. Are they going to talk this bill out? To my hon. friends opposite I say, let us be realistic. Let us face facts. I hope this chamber will send this bill to the standing committee which can deal with the matter in greater detail.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased I can devote a few minutes to expressing my opinion on this very serious question indeed. Young people have a very important part to play in our country, as in all communities around the world, and everyone, young people or adults, and especially we, the members of the house, should consider that problem carefully, with a view to finding a definite solution as soon as possible.

We all know that, for some years, that question has been discussed by the various executive committees of our pressure groups, such as the Chambers of Commerce and other organizations, as well as by our legislatures and the legislative bodies of almost all the countries in the world.

Today, as a matter of fact, I was reading a book written in the United States in 1949, by a Mrs. Julia A. Johnson, entitled The Lowering of Voting Age. The author makes an individual and almost exhaustive study of the whole question and reviews all the arguments for or against giving young people between 18 and 21 years of age the right to vote.

I realize that since then the same ground has been covered in our own circles. I remember that the question was debated in the province of Quebec in 1964, on the occasion of a political rally, with warmth and enthusiasm. Naturally, there was much excitement among the young people attending. For my part, I voted for the passage of a legislation to grant the franchise to 18 year olds.

Since then, and especially now with this bill, I go in for this slightly less radical approach as this matter is so important that, in my opinion, it should rather be introduced by a group of members of Parliament. Because also of all the aspects of this problem, many provisions may be neglected or forgotten if only one member presents such a public bill. I think that franchise for young people should be taken into consideration, but within the framework of the complete revision of our Elections Act which, I presume, will be made before long. And I suppose that in a short while we shall be able to study it in committee.

Young people must evidently be appreciated at their real value because, as we all know, they have many good points but they also have responsibilities. I am not one of those who say that they represent a group with dangerous opinions. I rather think that among them, those who make a lot of noise are a minority. They are the ones who cry the loudest while most of our young people are seriously preparing themselves either through studies or some form of training to assume in future the role assigned to them in order to replace adults when they attain their majority and maturity.

I think that a distinction between those two terms, majority and maturity, is necessary.

Maturity results from the complete development of an individual or a group, while majority is established through legislative enactment.

Our youth have a part to play at the present time. They will play their most important part in the development of our society, once their studies are completed, as we have done ourselves.

Indeed, over the ages and still at the present time, youth have been of special interest to politicians, businessmen, industrialists, for various reasons and motives, some commendable and others—we must admit it since it is human—less commendable.

Throughout the world, many politicians have been interested in youth for mere electioneering purposes or mere partisanship. I feel that when we, here in Parliament, are seriously considering to grant a special status to youth, we have to ask ourselves if the reasons impelling us to give them the right to vote or any other right are above electioneering or partisanship. I do not mean to say that electioneering or partisanship are good things. In our democratic system in Canada and elsewhere, those techniques of electioneering, party organization and partisanship are important, worthwhile and good. However, when youth especially is involved, we have to consider principles which are on the same level as politics in the best sense of the word. By doing so, we are taking into account the principles which will contribute to the development of Canada and will enable us to solve more quickly present priority problems.

It is not a matter of granting somebody a right just to please him or to get his vote at the next election.

Besides, the majority of our young people are seriously getting ready for the future, to fight for society and their own, as we are presently doing.

They long for truth, frankness and efficiency, and they do not particularly like those flatterers who try constantly to lure and beguile them.

All agree that the matter is important; to me it is also very complex. That is why I believe it is better to wait until our Elections Act is revised and I wonder if the fact of debating a private member's bill for an hour could cover all aspects of the problem and get the results we expect from our statutes.

A member of the opposition said earlier that during election campaigns, we use our young people to put stickers to automobile bumpers. I have a different opinion. Young people and adults render services to politicians, but in most ridings, the young are interested in politics all year long.

[Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski).]

• (5:40 p.m.)

In the Rimouski constituency and in the province of Quebec in general, we have a group of young people really interested in politics. And what are their goals? They do not strive for the right to vote in the near future. They are eager to improve their knowledge in politics, and their general knowledge as well.

First, they want to know the mechanics of our parliaments. They have an interest in politics between electoral campaigns, and they are most active groups, as most of those we have in our constituencies.

As I was saying a moment ago, this question has been widely commented for years. One has only to go through the Hansard of the Commons, the reports of associations, clubs and political conventions to realize the extent of the discussion. But perhaps it has not been properly dealt with, for nothing has been settled in that respect, at least at the federal level.

I was reading today in the November 1964 issue of MacLean Magazine an article written by a well-known newspaperman, Mr. Norman DePoe, who investigated the matter and covered almost all aspects of the voting right for 18-year old people.

As far as 1964, Gallup-type polls conducted among young people revealed that some were for the right to vote for 18-year old people while others were not and preferred to keep the status quo, so that they get a better preparation. They were looking forward to replace in a few years those on the front line either in politics or in the management sector.

For that reason, Mr. Speaker, I sincerely believe that it would be better for the government to make a general revision of the Canada Elections Act before arriving at a decision on this question.

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words on Bill C-21 introduced by the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) the object of which is to lower to 18 the age of voters.

Unfortunately, I am not quite in agreement with the hon. member, in spite of his good intentions when introducing this bill.

In the present situation, in a country in turmoil, in a country where too much confusion prevails, where the young lack leadership and do all sorts of things, it would not be advisable to adopt such a policy, that is to lower the voting age to 18.

At 18, the young are all schoolchildren, they all attend classes. So, they certainly do not have the time to keep abreast of politics, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that if we authorized voting at 18, some 18 year-olds would run as candidates in the elections.

The responsibility for things done during an election campaign, if taken seriously, is more serious than one might think because they are intended to improve the economy. Positive, carefully considered decisions must be taken and I do not think that the majority of the people who are not 21 yet are mature enough to make any valid political decisions. I think that it would be unwise on our part to grant the right to vote at this time to young people of 18 because many of them at 21 know absolutely nothing about politics and therefore cannot come to a decision or express valid opinions in that respect.

I agree that among those who have not yet reached the age of 21, some may be more advanced than others.

In fact, there are some who, at 18, are quite responsible but there are very few. Most young people at 18 are not responsible enough to come to a positive decision on matters such as the subject we are discussing now.

I have seen with my very own eyes, during the last election campaign, wealthy politicians organize dances and send invitations out to young people who were not old enough to vote. These young people are not concerned at all with politics; they would rather drink, dance, date this or that young lady. They are concerned with the car in which they will ride, it is the only thing they care about. Therefore, there is no sense of responsibility at all. I have seen in my riding meetings organized by old political parties at a cost of several hundred dollars, where there were almost only young people. There were practically no serious-minded people at those political meetings or dances organized in order to secure votes. Therefore, if the right to vote had been given to those 18 year olds, the politicians with the greatest financial means, the ones that are the most gratified by their own party and who organize dances, might have obtained their votes by being able to win them over more easily.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we must dwell upon the way people may act. We must also recognize that we are not merely mossbacks. An 18 year old is not an old-fashioned person, but a young man. It is a man who is supposed to have had some education, to be somewhat serious-minded, to have even a certain maturity. However, at the age of 18 years, according to several enquiries that were conducted, to the numerous questions asked to most of the young people, the answers were rather shifty, and quite negative. This shows that people of that age are not mature enough to vote logically and intelligently at the time of elections, especially in a country like ours where great changes are now taking place.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) said earlier that young people must have certain qualities; they surely have qualities and nobody questions that. Young people have qualities that should be taken into account; we must guide young people, we older politicians. Young politicians must also guide the young people who have the right to vote or are involved in politics. They should teach them politics; they should show them what is to be done, what is to be changed, what is to be improved in an economy, and that is almost untouched upon in the schools. When young people of 18 have finished their studies, they have learned almost nothing about political economy.

• (5:50 p.m.)

I think it would be beside the point to say that it would be useless to allow these young people to play a part in our politics and in our economy, which must be reformed and which needs people who have been thinking, people who have been reflecting because we are now on the eve of a revolution. The young people are about to revolt.

Young people no longer believe the old politicians. They think they are old fogies, all of them. The old politicians do not do anything for the young because they have no maturity, because they do not know the consequences they do or might do eventually.

I object absolutely, as the hon. member for Rimouski used to say, to the study of this question. It should be considered far more thoroughly so that we might know if it will be reasonable one day to lower the voting age.

In the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage's party lowered the voting age and that was fatal to it. If the provincial Liberal party had not lowered this age limit, it would probably be still in office.

Mr. Speaker, I am not suggesting that young people have always cast their vote without being aware of what they were doing but there is one thing I can tell you: they do not vote just for the sake of voting, they vote to be able to enjoy a dancing party or for what little money they can get to move around and enjoy themselves. That is what the majority of them have in mind, for they are not that much interested in politics. As I said earlier, there are exceptions to the rule, but I am sure that most of our young people think that way.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons, we cannot bring down the age of the voters in order to enable these young people to go to the polls, especially where federal elections are concerned since these are more important and carry more implications than provincial elections. Indeed, action taken by federal members is not confined to the provincial level but has a bearing on the international scene. We know what we are doing but we have yet quite a lot to learn and though we have attained maturity, many of us still make sometimes very serious mistakes. Just imagine then what could happen with a young chap who is unaware of the consequences of his acts.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the said bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: I should bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) had the floor at six o'clock. He relinquished the floor to the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell). May I take it there is agreement in respect of this course of action?

[Mr. Latulippe.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Scarborough East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to know whether I may—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have not yet settled the first problem. Let me bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Compton relinquished the floor at six o'clock. Certainly, no other member can take possession of the floor for the purpose of moving a motion unless there is unanimous agreement on the part of hon. members to allow him to do so.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): D'accord.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, by leave I move:

That the order for second reading of Bill C-72, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters) be discharged and the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Speaker: I understand there are now two motions before the Chair. I will put the first one to the house. Mr. Forest, seconded by Mr. Deachman moves:

That the said bill be not now read a second time, but that the subject matter thereof be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest, seconded by Mr. Deachman, with the unanimous consent of the house, moved:

That the order for second reading of Bill No. C-72, to amend the Canada Elections Act (age of voters) be discharged and the subject matter of the said bill be referred to the standing committee on privileges and elections.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: The hour set aside for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. I now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for mentioning that it was the riding of Témiscamingue in the province of Quebec.

Before the supper adjournment, I was saying that the bill under consideration, Bill C-150, should never have been introduced in the House of Commons. Most of those who favour its introduction conclude their studies by saying that we should respect everyone's conscience.

As I mentioned earlier, Pope Paul VI said just a few months ago that the conscience should be guided and directed by Christian moral law rather than partisanship.

The hon. member for Lapointe said that he would vote according to his conscience. He will, but following a lecture by his party's organization. Therefore, is it according to moral law or to partisanship that hon. members state they will vote for Bill C-150?

Mr. Speaker, in practically every country in Europe, people who have followed the dictates of their conscience can be found. Let us consider for example countries such as Greece which for a while—and I do say so—was the stronghold of civilization, India, Persia and Iran which in the past were highly developed countries. I would add even France and England which, a few centuries ago, were also highly developed countries. Let us see what is happening now in Greece with its concept of free personal conscience.

Let us consider, for instance, Iran where 83 per cent of the people are illiterate. I happened to be in India lately where out of 530 million people, 97 per cent cannot read or write.

Instead of teaching these people how to produce to feed their fellow men, we have chosen to work towards birth control. At the present time, about $2 is paid to every man who agrees to be sterilized for birth control purposes.

In India, instead of studying the production capacity necessary to feed the people—and I suggest that India could feed at least five times its present population—its people are being taught birth control to help the food shortage, so that within a few years, 25 to 30 years from now at the most, the population of India will be made up of old people and there will be no one to take over from them.

Here in Canada, while we are dealing with birth control, in Quebec as well as in the other provinces, there is inconsistency. On the one hand, some people say the birth rate is decreasing noticeably and that people are up against it; on the other hand, people are showing the so-called advantages of contraception, of birth control or advocating abortion projects, which is entirely against human nature.

Try as we may, we can pass parliamentary legislations, the Creator will ignore them. It is He who has given us life and no man has the right to take away such a life from whoever it may be.

My colleague from Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) recently had a questionnaire sent around in his constituency. I also had consultations in mine. My colleague from Bellechasse precisely asked the electors of his constituency the following questions about the bill under consideration:

Are you in favour or not of therapeutic abortion, when the life of the mother is quite seriously endangered?

Are you in favour or not that the serious decision, namely whether or not there should be abortion, that such a decision be taken by several practitioners (medical committee) after consultation with the mother, the father or the guardian?

Do you believe that in all other cases, abortion should be considered an illegal and punishable act, under the present provisions of the Criminal Code?

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, those are objective questions, not partisan ones. Now I have here a few answers—I could quote hundreds of them from all the constituencies of the province of Quebec—namely one that comes from Sainte-Perpétue in the constituency of Kamouraska, that of my excellent friend the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Dionne). The lady who wrote that letter is not afraid to sign her name. She is Mrs. J.-C. Bélanger, from

Sainte-Perpétue, l'Islet county, mother of 15 children, I quote:

Sir:

I want to give you my opinion on abortion. I do not know where we are going with those confounded laws passed by the government. Confound it! To kill or to have one's innocent child killed is an abominable crime. I daresay it is the greatest crime that will be perpetrated in the world.

We are farmers and we would never dare procure the abortion of a cow—

I wish to stress those words, Mr. Speaker, and keep on quoting:

—we would fear for its life, we would fear for its health. We do not know how to call those gentlemen who dare introduce such a bill. Think a while and hold on until the last minute and God will bless you.

I hope that several people will give their opinion like I did and that it will be taken into consideration.

Mr. Speaker, this lady was not afraid to have children since she had 15 of them. And today, I would say that the supporters of abortion do not approve of it for medical reasons only, but rather, in most cases, for purely economic reasons.

Let us consider, Mr. Speaker, the case of a 22 year-old young man who has just finished his studies and who is courting a young lady who has also just finished her studies at the age of 21. It is normal to be in love with a 21-year old young lady and to wish to marry. Suppose they decide to marry. The young man has a job which does not pay too much. So the young lady says: Let us marry and I will try to work to increase our family income. However, let us try and agree not to have any children for the next five years or so. The two young people who are 22 and 21 years old get married, which is normal and nobody has anything against it. After their marriage, of course, they make love but precautions are taken in order to avoid immediate pregnancy. But, at a certain time—this is what is called bad luck—the young bride becomes pregnant. Then, necessarily, the child will be born normally after nine months. This disturbs the young bride who will have to quit her job. This very fact will decrease the family income and will bring to this home not bitterness perhaps, but a kind of fear that they will not be able to make ends meet.

Mr. Speaker, any member, whether he belongs to the Liberal, the Progressive Conservative, the New Democratic or the Créditiste parties knows that such situations exist today. The young bride who does not want to lose her job will try, in many cases, to find means to free herself from the child she is bearing even after two or three months. At that time, the young bride will perhaps be blamed. But, Mr. Speaker, is the bill which will legalize this practice consistent with Christian morality?

I am 51 years old. I was born in Amos, Abitibi, in 1917, when the only means of transportation was the C.N.

We were far away from any important centre of the province of Quebec. My mother bore 14 children, out of which 8 are still living today, and we managed to get through the recession. My father was a small employee with the provincial government and earned $90 a month—and we used to sit 10 around the table! In those days, I was attending the College of Limbour, not far from Hull, and later the College of Victoriaville, run by the Brothers of the Sacred Heart. I was the second child of that family of ten who had to manage with $90 per month, and, Mr. Speaker, as we scrambled through this recession—which was a catastrophe for many Canadians and for all the people of Quebec—on Sundays, the parish priest would say from the pulpit: "Do not be afraid to have children; large families will have less trouble than the small ones." And he was right, Mr. Speaker. In fact, large families fared better during the recession than the small ones. I have seen bachelors who were practically starving whereas large families always managed to get through with a cow and a dozen hens. However, in those days, our dwellings were not, perhaps, as comfortable as those we have today, but we could live in them like human beings.

Today, at this very moment, if we toured the riding of Kamouraska, along the banks of the St. Lawrence, on the north or the south shore, we would see houses built 300 or 400 years ago, in which hundreds of little French Canadians were born. They never starved, Mr. Speaker.

And today, under the pretext that civilization is progressing, that we must become more civilized, we advocate birth control. Instead of passing laws to enable families to live decently, laws are being passed to limit the number of children. Let us go around Montreal: what goes on there? Instead of building the type of house families need, high-rise buildings are built that look like chicken coops, and have no space for children.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: There are no yards for the children to play in, but instead, four-room apartments, for families of six or eight. Of course, one looks a little stupid, Mr. Speaker. There is a lack of space; is it because there is a shortage of land? Not so. But because first of all, there are material interests which defy all morality and impose such bills as Bill C-150.

Mr. Speaker, I have another letter here from a citizen of the county of Bellechasse, Mrs. Poulin; she writes:

Mr. Caouette, please give to the member—

—this letter—

—thank you. This is the first time a member has sent a referendum to his electors for a serious cause, as this one surely is; the reply is no.

Why abolish the—

As you can see, she has no university education, but rather that of a farmer with a lot of good common sense. And I continue the quotation:

Why abolish hanging for convicted murderers—

—under the pretext that we have no right to make an attempt on the life of others, in order to civilize the world.

—and allow the murder of an innocent—

—a child who is about to be born—

—who has not asked to live—

It is God who gives it to him.

He needs it and other people want to kill him. The responsible parents do not know what they are doing; they enjoy life foolishly—

Such is their purpose.

And that other member who said last week that life starts after three months, as if a being deprived of life could develop; Parliament has too many of those members, and to think that those empty heads are so well paid.

I do not know which empty head spoke at that time, for if I knew, I would name him.

And you Mr. Caouette, so courageous for the past thirty years, I am listening to you, no one speaks like you, people think that nothing can be achieved, they are so used to being whipped——with such political parties as we have.

—Thank you for taking the trouble of writing to me; it is a just cause that, I hope, you will win.

Mr. Speaker, this is a letter from the constituency of Bellechasse. Here is another from a constituent of Dorchester who thanks the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) for sending him that questionnaire.

I thank you for enabling ordinary people to express their views on Bill C-150. In view of the interest that you are taking in the matter, I am taking the liberty of setting forth my reasons for taking such a stand.

Since your questions are put outright, I have to answer them in the same manner, the more so as I have not seen the full text of the bill.

Yours very truly.

And the answer to the questionnaire is quite simple. It is clearly against abortion and against homosexuality. Signed:

Jean-Gérard Poulin.

Mr. Speaker, I want to quote another letter from Saint-Pacôme in Kamouraska riding:

I congratulate you for your concern for your constituents by asking their opinion on the omnibus bill. All M.P.'s could have done like you in order to know the opinion of their constituents. I am not from your area, but I give my opinion anyway: I am dead set against the omnibus bill, against abortion, against free homosexuality and against divorce.

When there is too much freedom and no authority, nothing good or nice remains!

I believe that the man (rather the husband) and the wife must take all responsibility in some very exceptional cases; why generalize for a few exceptions? Thank you for your kind attention towards the problems of one of your faithfull readers.

Mr. and Mrs. Louis-Philippe Alexandre, Saint-Pacôme, Kamouraska county.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, we have heard the remarks of several members. I heard recently the member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) tell the house that he had the misfortune of losing his wife and his child at the same time, in child-birth.

Mr. Speaker, that really happened. We bereave such unfortunate happenings, of course. When my mother died in 1960, I lost everything. I did not know who to turn to and that was tough luck. But that does not mean we should legislate in the way of immorality by interfering with Christian morals.

Someone said that personal conscience must be respected. I am all for that, Mr. Speaker, but it should also be guided. Some people say that certain religious authorities support their views. And yet I have here statements which are taken from a very serious study by Reverend Father Paquin, a Jesuit, the author of a book entitled: "Ethics and Medicine", which deals precisely with direct abortion, criminal, abortion, therapeutic abortion, eugenic abortion, in short, with all kinds of abortion. And here is what Father Paquin writes:

> Direct abortion is always immoral and profoundly illicit:
>
> In ethics, such distinctions do not exist: any direct abortion, whatever the reason behind it, and even if it is approved by the state, always has the same moral significance.

It is officially forbidden by the moral code to practice abortion.

Mr. Speaker, here are the principles of natural law mentioned by Father Paquin:

> The murder of an innocent being is always considered a murder, and it is the more repulsive as the victim is less capable of defending itself. No one is master of a fellow-creature's life—

Of his father's, his mother's, his wife's, his child's.

> No one is master of a fellow-creature's life, even if that creature is known as a foetus.
>
> Neither the mother nor the doctor nor the State can be free to decide. The consent of the mother and of the State are worthless consents which could not alter the immorality of a murderous action.
>
> Such is the nature of abortion that it must be compared to foeticide. To reject the foetus out of the mother's body, without which it cannot live, is tantamount to wounding it mortally; it is placing it, in an immediate and direct manner, in an impending and sure danger of death.

Father Paquin continues as follows with respect to therapeutic abortion:

> In general, therapeutic abortion describes a technically indicated abortion to save the mother's life.
>
> Those indications can be numerous or limited, according to scientific advance, according to current opinions in medical circles, according to special knowledge of such and such a doctor or a surgeon. In fact, it is very arbitrary.

And that is not only in connection with the birth of a child, Mr. Speaker. About 25 or 30 years ago, when one had appendicitis—it was not called appendicitis, but "body tied in a knot". When one's body was tied in a knot, he died there was no recovery possible. Finally it was found out that by removing a small gut of about three inches long, the knot was untied and health was regained.

How many of our Liberals are now tied up, Mr. Speaker. Even with therapeutic medicine, they cannot be untied.

I am still quoting Father Paquin when he refers to moral judgment:

> Whatever may be the medical viewpoint, moral judgment cannot be different for a so-called criminal abortion and a therapeutic abortion. The general condemnation we have established previously holds for all cases of abortion, since an end, even excellent, can never justify the use of means which are essentially bad.

Mr. Speaker, it is in the name of Christian morals than we are protesting and not because we do not want to save lives. On the contrary, we want to save all lives. When the good Lord allows a human being to be born, man has no right to decide whether or not he must accept it. This new life is sacred. It is not a life given by man, but a life given by God, and nobody has a right to smother it, whether it be through medical means or any other means. Reference is made to abortion in other fields. I was quoting earlier an excerpt regarding eugenic abortion, with a view to effecting race selection. For instance, a cripple would not be allowed to sleep with a woman, or should a woman become pregnant from such a union, she should seek an abortion. In other words, the child should be killed in his mother's womb.

Mr. Speaker, I think all members—everybody perhaps—have seen perfectly healthy couples, a highly intelligent man, a superiorly intelligent woman, give birth to a moron. This happens through no fault of theirs, nevertheless they have in their family a sick child whom they will not even be able to keep with them. On the other hand, not too healthy people have been known to have very intelligent children, children who developed well and became prominent citizens later in life. We have seen that and it proves that if man proposes, in the long run, God disposes. Men may be ready to propose this law on homosexuality, abortion, etc., but regardless of what they do, in the long run it is God that will dispose. And, Mr. Speaker, the Ralliement Créditiste is happier to be on the side of God's teachings than on the side of the Liberal party's teaching.

[English]

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise my voice in protest against some of the features of this bill. The First is the refusal of the government to permit the separation of the contraversial features, second, the permissive clauses relating to homosexuality and, third, the relaxation of prohibition against abortion. These are matters engaging the consciences of Canadians and members of parliament. It is in incredibly bad taste on the part of the government to force members on both sides to vote on these matters on a purely partisan basis. In so doing, they have reversed the trend in this chamber in recent years of members being allowed a free vote on matters of conscience, such as capital punishment. Now, we have a government which, even on questions such as homosexuality and abortion, must assume a partisan posture. This is a rather regrettable and sad spectacle.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I ask hon. gentlemen opposite, why all the concern about homosexuality? I point out to them that we are living at a time when taxes have never been higher; interest rates are escalating; inflation has gone out of bounds; wheat sales are dropping; we have no national oil or national science policy; unemployment is shooting up; disorder and violence are stalking the land; and the government nerves itself to a mighty effort on behalf of homosexuality.

In all humility, I ask hon. gentlemen opposite: Why? Why the concern of the members opposite about homosexuality? What does this bill accomplish? It gives a green light to homosexuality. It makes respectable what heretofore was not respectable. It takes off "the wraps". One of the dangerous features of homosexuality is compulsive conversion. It is no use hon. members opposite saying this is not so. It is not only the experience of the medical profession but the accumulated experience of humanity through the ages. Homosexuals proselytize, and in so doing endanger young people before they are at an age to realize what is involved. That is why in flashing a green light at this time the government is embarking on a course fraught with dangerous consequences. A similar problem exists in connection with abortion. It lies in the difficulty of control. I ask the government how, once this legislation is through, it proposes to control homosexual activities? How does it propose to keep them from becoming even more blatant than they are now? Apparently, the government is not concerned about this. It is understandable, of course, that a government which looks with tolerance on marijuana and takes no interest in the destruction of millions of dollars worth of university property should be unconcerned about exposing young people to uncontrolled homosexuality. But the question is, what degree of control can be exercised?

Coming to abortion, the same question presents itself. How can a panel of doctors decide the issue? A woman who demands an abortion will get it because there are no grounds on which it can be refused. This government is therefore in a position where at the same time that it is legislating uncontrolled homosexuality it is also asking us to accept unrestricted abortion. I refuse to do so.

I do not intend to go into detail on the moral questions involved in abortion. I think the simple fact of taking away the life of an unborn child is serious enough to impress most people. Once life is there surely a child has the right to its continuation. We have spent millions improving maternal welfare, prenatal and post-natal care, and on lowering the death rate of newborn babies. How casual some of us are about destroying a foetus which otherwise would live.

We know what the arguments are; such a step is in the interests of the mother's health, mental or physical. This includes possible inconvenience or embarrassment, because "health" can include every reason under the sun. The simple fact is that we have agreed that a child before birth has no rights. It is part of a philosphy of our time which is a kind of anti-life philosophy. There is something about new life that seems to frighten some people. Surely, once life exists it must be maintained.

I am against abortion as defined in this bill for the simple reason that there is no way of ensuring that life will not be destroyed unnecessarily or frivolously. Personally, I am against the extinction of life by the hand of man under any circumstances. But the act itself gives no assurance that life will not be destroyed for the most frivolous reason—that is, simply on request. That has been the experience in other countries and it will be the experience here.

We have been given figures showing the enormous numbers of abortions being performed illegally, as though this were an argument to have them performed legally. Surely, these children have a right to be born. Rather than participate in their destruction, why does the state not allow them to be born and undertake responsibility for looking after them? Facilities for child treatment and child care in this country are disorganized and chaotic. Hardly a day passes but the press carries an account of child beating, child neglect, child abandonment. Surely, something could be done in this area by the federal government in co-operation with the provinces.

We have a government that wishes to reserve for itself only those areas of jurisdiction which are politically profitable. Where there is a real need, such as preventing the destruction of university buildings, or for child welfare, it shies away and, like Pontius Pilate, washes its hands. Is it not better to do something about looking after unwanted children in a country suffering from a shortage of population instead of destroying them before they have a chance to be born? I say this is a callous and heartlessly anti-social provision. You cannot control the granting of this permission. You cannot say no when an abortion is requested, and you will not say no. The simple request will be enough. It may be cheaper than building institutions or children's villages to look after the unwanted, but it is certainly not a Christian or a positive social concept. It is a concept both negative and destructive, a shrugging off of responsibility.

Why not let these children come into the world and grow up as Canadians? Why not accept the responsibility of providing for them? Why not look after the mothers and remove the stigma attaching to unwed motherhood? Why should there be a stigma? This bill perpetuates that stigma by somehow suggesting that a child about to be born out of wedlock has no right to be born. This is an anti-social, heartless attitude.

I leave these matters to the conscience of the government and its supporters. As for my own conscience I am, thankfully, responsible only to myself and I shall vote against a barbarous betrayal of my beliefs.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could reply to the hon. member who has just spoken by telling him the reason for the homosexuality clause and perhaps even for the abortion clause, though I certainly would never presume to speak on behalf of the government. I believe the reason is simply that these laws are unenforceable. In other words, the legislation relating to homosexuals has not been enforced. The number of convictions is almost nil. Therefore, when a law is not enforceable it becomes a dead letter on the books and is better removed. I believe the government used a similar explanation to justify abortion, the subject with which I shall deal mainly this evening.

I find myself in this embarrassing position. I voted for the abolition of capital punishment when we had a free vote.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Paproski: Will the hon. member permit a question. How does he suggest the law in private homes will be enforced with respect to acts of homosexuality?

Mr. Reid: I am sorry I did not hear that.

Mr. Paproski: How does the hon. member suggest that the law with respect to homosexuality should be enforced? I am talking of acts in private homes.

Mr. Reid: I understand the proposal is that there should be no law on the matter. Acts between consenting adult males are permitted.

Mr. Paproski: What about acts between those who are not adults?

Mr. Reid: I am speaking to the general principle of the bill. I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) will be glad to answer that question.

Mr. Paproski: At the same time perhaps he will define consent.

Mr. Reid: As I was saying before being interrupted, I am in the embarrassing position of having voted for the abolition of capital punishment. The argument that justified my stand was that there was sufficient danger under our legal system of having an innocent man convincted of murder and sentenced to death. Those risks were sufficient to justify the complete abolition of capital punishment. Now, however, I am asked to vote for a piece of legislation which will permit what I consider murder in a different form, murder in the form of abortion. The government's position in introducing this measure is that the present abortion law is unenforceable. Evidence presented before the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare, which was chaired by Dr. Harley, now retired from politics, indicated that many abortions take place in hospitals under the guise of operations of various sorts, and on kitchen tables, with quacks operating.

Since the abortion section of the Criminal Code is not enforceable, the government feels it is justified in bringing forward this new legislation. In other words, you cannot have legislation that is not enforceable, because then the law becomes a laughingstock. At any rate, that seems to be the major plank on which the government is resting this particular clause of the legislation. No doubt, if I were a member of the cabinet, I should have little hesitation in agreeing that it is the duty of the government to regulate law and order, even if in so agreeing I had to overcome any moral scruples I might have. It should be noted that the legislation is not mandatory, but permissive. Nobody will be forced to have an abortion.

I find difficulty in accepting the concept of legalized abortion, which I consider murder. I argued, when arguing for the abolition of capital punishment, that human life was sacred. Science has demonstrated that there is no abrupt beginning or ending of human life. When conception has taken place life has begun. If the process begun is not disturbed a baby will eventually be born. In other words, if the normal process of life after conception is allowed to continue, a child will be born. Anything that destroys the continuity of what has taken place will destroy life.

Science has demonstrated the conditions under which the human race exists. We live within a fairly narrow range of temperatures under precise climatic conditions. We must breathe oxygen. If you destroy any of the factors making up the conditions under which I live, I will die. For instance, if you cut off my oxygen supply I will die. If you destroy the conditions under which the foetus may live, you kill it. I think there is a clear analogy between the two examples I have raised.

My opinion is that when we are dealing with abortion we are dealing with the taking of human life, which is murder. It would be easy for me to end my remarks on this note, but I do not think that would be fair to me or anyone else. As I said before, the government's argument is that the abortion section is not enforceable and that the law with regard to it is breaking down. That consideration must weight heavily with the cabinet which is charged with the responsibility of governing this country. As a private member, no such responsibility rests on me and it will be possible for me to vote against this clause during the debate on the report stage. At present I have not made up my mind, but my inclination now is to vote against this amendment.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't worry; you will be whipped into shape.

Mr. Reid: If no additional evidence is brought before the committee to change my mind, I shall be bound, in all conscience, to vote against this clause.

I now wish to talk about the definition of life and death; particularly, I wish to talk about death. A series of heart transplants has taken place during the last two or three years, as a result of which we have had to redefine death. At one time it was said death ensued after the heart stopped beating. Now, it has been defined as the moment when the electroencephalographic or chemical waves cease within the brain. The latter definition is most important since many old people in hospitals show no signs of brain activity yet are kept alive by modern medical methods. Since the Minister of Justice has said that another reform to the Criminal Code will be brought forward, I suggest these points might be considered in that amendment.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, the amendments to the Criminal Code now before the house have been extensively debated. It is not my intention to repeat points that have already been discussed adequately. However, there are some points I wish to discuss further at this time.

The Criminal Code deals with many areas of the functioning of society and legislates with respect to problems that develop in the interrelationships of people. It touches many matters that involve deeply held views on morals, ethics and social philosophy. This was attested to by the great volume of mail received by most hon. members.

In common with other hon. members, I received a large volume of mail on many aspects of the Criminal Code. Much of my mail was from people expressing an individual point of view. They presented those views in a straightforward manner. Some of the mail was the product of organized campaigns, either in the form of petitions or in the form of a series of letters. This is a legitimate means of expression. I might say that, with few exceptions, my mail was free of undue or unwarranted pressure.

A matter of considerable interest to me in recent years has been legislation with respect to impaired driving. I witnessed the aftermaths of a few catastrophic accidents in which there were indications that one of the drivers involved was impaired because of alcohol. Such events leave a lasting impact on one's mind. I expect hon. members who have had similar experiences appreciate that. I am in favour of a fairly tough line on impaired driving cases and am happy to see the 0.08 per cent blood alcohol level included in the legislation. Experience in many jurisdictions shows that this figure with respect to blood alcohol represents a turning point in one's ability to control a vehicle.

• (8:50 p.m.)

At the same time, I must say that I am not technically qualified to judge the adequacy of the tests that are proposed. I hope the committee will make certain of this matter before reporting the bill. I must also express some reservations about the powers given police to take breathalyzer tests. While the law as proposed may appear to be clear, I think in practice there will be difficulties when police confront people and on the flimsiest of pretexts demand that they take the test. Will a person who refuses to take a test have a criminal record?

A major portion of the bill deals with firearms control. Again, I must express support for this provision although I feel it would be folly to rely too heavily on the measures proposed as being a solution to the problems involved. There is no question about the need for a tough law for the careless hunter. However, problems of gun control in our large urban centres are difficult to resolve. I received a number of letters from people who were concerned that the proposed legislation would infringe on the legitimate activities of pistol and gun clubs. I followed up these representations and, in the final analysis, people who examined the legislation agreed that it would not interfere unduly with such activity.

Throughout the bill I noted a large number of instances where discretionary powers are granted provincial attorneys-general. While I am only a layman so far as law is concerned, I must question this matter. It seems to me that the possibility of abuse must be considered with respect to some provisions where the guidance set out in the law is minimal. For example, the powers given an attorney-general on lotteries are wide. On the other hand, an attorney general is placed in a difficult spot where he has to judge matters with too little legislative guidance, and indeed this makes it easier to place pressure on an attorney-general.

A number of representations which I received contained a curious mixture of opposition to the proposals dealing with lotteries, homosexuality and abortion. Opposition to lotteries is based on long-standing moral convictions. Frankly, I have no basic views in opposition to lotteries as such. As a matter of policy I would be opposed to state lotteries as a means of raising public funds, but I have not seen reasons why this opposition should be expressed in the form of a legislative prohibition applying to all governments in Canada. Opposition to the proposals with respect to homosexuality is based in large part on a lack of understanding of the nature of the problem and of the opportunities for blackmail which are made possible under the present law. Thus, I feel that the proposals in this bill are in the right direction.

Possibly the most difficult single matter for hon. members in this bill is the amendment with respect to abortion. Widely divergent views are held on this matter, ranging from the view that it is a matter of simple medical procedure with no greater import than that to the view that absolutely no measure to allow abortion under any circumstances is morally tenable. As legislators, we must also take cognizance of the incidence of illegal abortions often performed at great risk to the life and health of the mothers in question. It has been suggested that, as with some other problems, each person might follow the dictates of his conscience. It is not as simple as this with respect to abortion. Here, we are dealing with life itself. The state has an obligation and duty to protect human life where it exists. Extremes of views exist on the question of when human life begins.

These views range from the proposition that human life begins at the moment of conception all the way to the view that it begins only when the umbilical cord is severed. I hold no dogmatic view on this question. Indeed, I think no one can assert with finality on this question. However, it is clear that human life does exist prior to birth. Various indicators of the progression of life, such as the stage at which viability is possible, beginning of movement, and foetal heart beat, are constantly being pushed back to an earlier stage of pregnancy, and show that there is no one moment during pregnancy which represents a sharp change in the stages of development. Indeed, more evidence points to the fact that development of the foetus is gradual and continuing throughout the entire pregnancy.

Under these circumstances, it is incumbent upon the state to be extremely careful in legislating. Steps should not be sanctioned that could represent the taking of life. I reject any attempts to justify abortion legislation on the grounds that the state through other actions, such as in police action, war, execution of criminals, etc., has been deemed to have the right to take lives or take action that may or will result in loss of life. Surely, no comparison can be made between an innocent unborn child and an adult who has no regard for life or who may be defending other lives.

Indeed, it would be well for hon. members to reflect on the fact that unborn lives in the womb are the same sort of lives possessed by ourselves, our families and all members of society. The unborn child has rights as well. Indeed, it might be well to note in comparing our lives with unborn lives that none of us had any say or control over our coming into existence, our birth, and indeed we were well into our lives before we could have even grasped the thought that we have some control over the question of whether we should continue our own lives. Thus, I cannot see my way clear to supporting this section of the bill. It is very vague in some of its wording and meaning, but gives full recognition to a principle that I am not now prepared to recognize.

At the same time, I urge that more work be done to resolve the outstanding questions involved. This involves a decision by many people to allow a full and honest inquiry into all aspects of the matter, and means that some people must be prepared to examine fully previously held dogmatic assertions and assumptions. Other proposals may come forward. Indeed some of my colleagues, as stated by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), will move an amendment to remove the abortion provisions altogether from the Criminal Code. In some respects this may be preferable. It would mean that we as legislators, would not be giving legislative sanction to this particular matter. Nevertheless, it leaves the question of whether we, as legislators, are avoiding an important responsibility.

In my views on this subject I differ from the policy of my party and of the majority of my colleagues. I respect the sincerity of views held by those who differ with me and I acknowledge and appreciate their respect for my views. It made me proud to be a member of the New Democratic party when I witnessed the ready recognition of these rights and the absence of pressure to conform. I know some hon. members opposite who not only have to wrestle with their consciences but also have to face the pressure of party whips and of the cabinet will envy my position.

I recognize that there is a widespread disposition to approve the amendment on abortion. If it passes it becomes the law of the land, but I sincerely hope hon. members will give further study to some of the implications of the amendment. I wish to enumerate some of the points that concern me.

1. Is not health a very vague term to include in the section as a justifiable reason for an abortion?

2. How will this provision operate in practice? There are a number of factors such as the relationships of doctors, hospitals, etc., which need to be carefully considered.

3. Is the position of the hospital that does not want to have abortions performed protected, and is the position of hospital employees who do not want to participate in an abortion protected? The doctor is protected who does not want to perform an abortion because he can simply refuse to do so, but nurses and other employees who refuse to do so may find their jobs in jeopardy. Certainly, their position should be protected.

4. Should there not be provision for a review after five years, such as is the case with capital punishment? This would involve continuing studies during that period which could contribute to a more knowledgeable decision when the time comes.

Thus, Mr. Speaker, I am in the position where I feel some items such as legislation against wire tapping, the abolition of corporal punishment, reform of the bail system and other matters are not included in this legislation, although the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) has indicated that some further amendments are forthcoming. I feel most of the bill represents a step forward in criminal law. However, there is one major item with which I do not agree, and that is the amendment with respect to abortion. The opportunity, however, is available for all members of this house to decide on this one particular provision. Since most of the bill represents a step forward in criminal law, and since it has been acknowledged that in practice the new abortion section is not likely, as it is worded, to result in extension of the practice, I feel I should support the bill but will oppose the section on abortion when an opportunity is presented.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief because I rise for the purpose of protesting the action of the government in bringing to this house Bill No. C-150 in its present form and giving us no alternative but to vote either for or against a package which deals with many varieties of situations. This package is given to the members of the house to swallow as if it were a pill. I find some of the contents of the package are acceptable, but they probably make up the sugar coating of the bill and are probably intended so to be. I am convinced, however, that inside the sugar coating there are some ingredients which may be properly classified as poison so far as the general public good is concerned. For that reason, I protest the presentation of the bill in its present form.

Let us just read the motion which is before us:

> —motion of the Minister of Justice for the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of Bill C-150, An Act to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act.

If there ever was a bunch of hash all put together in one package, this is it. Then, the minister has the effrontery to sit here and smile about it, as if it were something we should enjoy. Not only do I not enjoy it but I find a good many things about it entirely unacceptable. Our leader this afternoon informed the house that so far as our party is concerned, the vote will be free. I listened very intently to various speeches made in connection with this bill because I consider it a very important one and something which should not be decided quickly.

I heard the opinion advanced by some members that we should vote for the bill because of some of the good things contained in it. I find myself inclined to vote against it because of the bad and undesirable things contained in it. That is my reaction. The purpose of the bill is to legalize certain things which I submit are demoralizing and degrading. I refer especially to homosexuality. I should like to ask the minister whether, before this debate is concluded, he would inform the house what the practice in past years has been when amendments to the Criminal Code have been submitted to the house. I would wager, Mr. Speaker, that such amendments have always been presented as amendments to the Criminal Code and have not been wrapped up with a lot of other things. That is my opinion, although I have not looked up the previous procedure.

Surely, the members of this house are able to deal with such questions on a non-partisan basis, on a basis which they are convinced will result in the well-being and general good of the people of Canada. Surely, that is a proper approach. In dealing with something as important as amendments to the Criminal Code, why should we not deal with amendments to the Criminal Code only? Instead, we find these amendments wrapped up with the various other statutes which I have just mentioned, including the Customs Tariff. What is the relationship between the Criminal Code and the Customs Tariff?

[Mr. Flemming.]

In presenting the bill as it has, the government has left itself open to the charge that since there are so many things in one package there must be something to hide. I submit the procedure is capable of that interpretation. Therefore, whether that is or is not the case, I am sure all members will consider they should examine the bill with great care.

I am not speaking about the bill from a legal point of view or from a therapeutic medical point of view. I am just dealing with this matter as an ordinary citizen of Canada. I object to having our Criminal Code amendments wrapped up with a lot of other things which certainly have no connection whatsoever with the Criminal Code. I submit that the government is deserving of the censure of the house for having presented the bill in this form.

I speak from the standpoint of what I believe may contribute to the improvement of the general moral tone of our people; I speak from the viewpoint of conscience, if you like. Certainly, I am a person who has no reason to advance an argument concerning why a person's approach to a decision of this nature should not be made in the light of his conscience. There certainly is nothing wrong with that. I believe our effort should be to improve things, to restrain evil and to contribute to the well-being of all our people. So, I object to the mixing up of these amendments with other statutes.

We are still considering second reading and referral to a committee. Well, the approval of second reading has been approval in principle, and I presume still is. This afternoon the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), to whom I listened with great attention and who I believe deserves a lot of credit, asked for a free vote. So do I, and that is what we in our party are going to get. The feature in the bill to which I particularly object is the homosexuality feature, because I do not think that anything that degrades the moral tone is good legislation.

I know hon. members might argue that it is necessary to do something because homosexuality is already being practised. But that same argument could apply to murder because murder is not non-existent; it could apply to stealing; it could apply to many things which come under the Criminal Code. So, if one wanted to argue, he might say that we must legalize stealing, we must legalize perjury, we must legalize murder because there are occasions when they are practised. I submit the fact that they are practised is no reason to place the label of respectability on them. That is my point. The Minister of Justice laboured the other day in an attempt to justify this measure, but I for one think he did a pretty poor job. Usually he is very convincing and persuasive, but in this case he was arguing against something which, in my opinion, he did not believe. One cannot do that and make it stick. That is what he was trying to do. He did not do as good a job as he usually does.

• (9:10 p.m.)

What do we do when we vote on this measure? We have to vote either yes or no. We must know what is the responsibility of the government in presenting a bill in this form. There are some items in the bill which are acceptable; for instance, those items in respect of safety on the highways. Nothing could be more important. There has been some mention of lotteries. I am not sure I have any strong views in this regard, but steps are being taken to deal with this situation and I have no doubt these steps are considered to be steps in the right direction.

Why should we wrap up all these measures together? I assume the government is trying to hide something. We are being asked to legalize homosexuality if we vote in favour of this bill. There is no question about that. We are being asked to put the stamp of respectability on something many of us do not feel is respectable. I, personally do not propose to do this and I am not going to vote for this section of the bill. I find no fault with someone who does vote in this way because that is an individual's right of choice. I cannot vote to place a stamp of respectability on something that is degrading and demoralizing to our people. I realize—

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) is rising to ask a question.

Mr. Broadbent: Would the hon. member permit a question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Flemming: I do not think I should yield the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: Not to him, anyhow.

An hon. Member: Let him make his own speech.

Mr. Flemming: Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why the hon. member cannot make his own speech.

I have not dealt with the subject of abortion. It is my feeling that this is a difficult question in respect of which one cannot make a snap decision. I was impressed with the speech this afternoon by the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). Obviously he has made a great study of this matter. He cited various changes in words that could bring about a lessening of the restraint and respect for embryonic human life. I am sure everyone will acknowledge the importance of human life, whether it is embryonic or full-fledged.

This is a question which can best be answered by medical people. Perhaps members of this house can argue this question, but nevertheless it does involve a form of human life. I find it difficult to argue this subject because I have not given it the attention which I think its importance deserves. I do believe, however, that we must all acknowledge one fact. The government should have presented amendments to the Criminal Code in such a way that it would be possible for members of this house to give attention and care to these separate and important matters.

I listened to speeches by hon. members on the other side of this house who referred to the question of abortion. No doubt they felt they were justified in arriving at the conclusions they tried to put across. I find no particular fault, but I do say it is difficult to argue one way or another in view of the conflict that exists in the specific situations presented to the house this afternoon.

Let me content myself by saying I feel that the government is deserving of censure for the way it has presented this bill. It should have presented an amendment to the Criminal Code on an absolutely non-partisan basis, and in such a way that it could be examined by a committee. In this way, members would receive the advice of expert medical men and the opinions of experts from other countries which have made changes. All of these things could have been done had we concentrated on one thing at a time.

As a result of the way the government has presented this bill, the committee will be examining seven different things. According to the remarks of one member on the government side of the house, government members are told not to tamper with any bills before committees. That is what one member on the Liberal side has said. They have been told not to make any changes. What is the use of referring these matters to committees when members know that their efforts have been throttled before they begin? Those are not my words, those are the words of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). I have a copy of his letter. Someone sent it to me but I do not think it was sent by him.

In concluding my remarks, let me say that I appreciate the attention of hon. members in the house and I hope that I have made my point in connection with the bill before us.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult for me not to speak on this bill before it is referred to the committee, if it ever is. However, I want to spare the house the obligation to listen to my comments on every clause of Bill C-150, as well as on the clauses that are not in it.

Most members of my party have spoken on almost all of these clauses in order to bring them to the attention of the committee.

I personally have had the opportunity to speak on Bill C-195 sponsored by the then Minister of Justice, now the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), which is a true copy of Bill C-150. That is why, today, my remarks will be restricted to the clauses dealing with abortion and homosexuality, after having agreed in principle to all the other clauses of the bill.

Even on those two scores, I shall limit myself to a short review of the present debate and dwell mainly on the positions of the various parties pointing out afterwards some statements that were made in the house. I thought that in so doing we could reach conclusions beneficial to hon. members and instructive for all the committee members.

In order to dispel any possible ambiguity concerning statements that all my colleagues tried to make clear, I shall summarize our positions.

First of all, with the exception of the clauses covering abortion and homosexuality, we shall support the amendments contained in Bill C-150, perhaps with some minor changes.

Secondly, as homosexuality and abortion involve religious and social responsibilities, we shall require that those subjects be treated separately, in order to allow separate and free votes on each of them.

Thirdly, I dare hope that the committee will grant us what the house has always refused us, namely that the right-thinking members of the committee will vote in favour of deleting the words "mental illness of the mother" from the section on abortion.

[Mr. Flemming.]

And lastly, we require that the amendment concerning homosexuality be simply deleted from the bill.

I have noted that most of the English-speaking Liberals, for very few French-speaking members dared talk openly before their constituents, tried mainly to defend and support the bill. The hardest task was to find worthwhile arguments to make people swallow the pill. I believe that they have not succeeded. The medicine is by far too bitter, especially for Roman Catholics. Nevertheless, I wish to congratulate those hon. members who had the courage to stand up for their religious and social convictions. Anyway, we feel comforted when we realize that even though there are among our Liberal friends some elastic consciences that I might compare to balloons, we have reason to thank those who still know how and are anxious to preserve their identity. And thank God this is the great majority, both among Liberals and members of the other parties.

I shall make no secret of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that I have talked to many of them and that they do not all agree since some will object or will abstain from voting if the amendments proposed are not accepted in committee.

I was most interested by the reaction of the Liberals to certain petitions asking them to oppose the bill as it now stands. I understand how hard it is for them to find a valuable excuse in the face of the growing increase of objectors. Here is what they most often reply. It was imposed upon them on the order of the great chief who so ruled it. Abortion is not so serious since the bill tends only to save the mother's life. It is an over-simple and childish answer which does not reveal all that is hidden in the substance of the amendment to the act.

They reply also that the amendment on homosexuality only aims at preventing police agents from breaking into private bedrooms so that adult couples of the same sex be not disturbed or still that the amendment relating to homosexuality does not tend to legalize homosexuality. A law is probably introduced to "delegalize", something of which I would have never thought, Mr. Speaker.

Are they not conscious of the fact that this bill will legalize cohabitation and all sexual relations between two men or two women. they should stop laughing at people with this matter of relations between men and women.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gauthier: It is still another contrivance of the big chief, I suppose. Some made a point of adding to their comments on the bill stories which could bring tears to the eyes of the most hardened persons, stories moreover, which were unrelated to the specific point to which we object.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if that amendment was solely meant to save the life of the mother, we would not have to alter the present legislation. I would even add that all our consciencious physicians have always respected that compulsory reservation. But the bill goes still farther, since it adds:

—to protect the mental health of the mother—

This is a door opened to abuses. There remains only to establish a small board made up of three physicians specializing in abortions and that is it. It is easy for a physician who wishes to do so to diagnose symptom of mental illness in a pregnant girl or woman. Since according to the testimonies of the highest medical and religious authorities, any abortion is a real murder, who would be ready to authorize such a butchery of innocent and harmless unborn children?

Some suggest that it is not a religious matter. They are free to do so, but any practising Catholic must condemn such a criminal act on account of the great commandment: Thou shalt not kill. Indeed, if all sins are not necessarily criminal, on the other hand, all crimes are necessarily sins.

All true Christians to whom the law of Christ forbids to take part in such a crime, and all decent men to whom the mere law of nature inspired the bill of rights should be strong enough to stop the movement toward legalized infanticide.

Indeed the bill of rights says that the greatest of fundamental rights is the right to live.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Therefore, I appeal to all Catholics and all Christians who represent about 80 or 90 per cent of the house. I also call upon atheists who have still a little sense of humanity, to remove from the bill on abortion the words I mentioned earlier and, for goodness sake, let there not be any more ridiculous comments such as those we have heard a few days ago from someone who likes to criticize everyone else without ever looking at himself in the mirror at night. In fact, that member concluded his comments by saying: Mr. Speaker, personally I am against abortion and homosexuality and I shall vote for both. After that, the only thing to do is to dry up.

The Conservative members who spoke insisted that the bill be divided, in order to vote separately on each aspect.

We have supported them because we refuse to swallow the pill. We also realize that among them, opinions are divided according to religious denominations and it is only natural to find differences among lay people on such delicate matters. Besides, the same disagreements can be found among theologians.

The member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) has presented himself as a theologian—something I never doubted—although we have not read the same authors nor had the same professors, and it is only normal that we should differ regarding the bill, because I emphasize particularly that I am discussing only what is written in the bill, not what should or could have been in it.

As for the members of the New Democratic Party, most are well known for their avant-garde ideas, that they call sophisticated. But I always considered these ideas as being not too catholic. The leader of that party in the house made it very clear when he stated that part of our criminal legislation was formulated at a time when the clergy was greatly influencing popular beliefs and morals and dictating to our society most of its attitudes.

Since then however, he said, our society has evolved. We now have a pluralist society, where it is no longer possible to impose on a religious group the generally accepted views of society.

If the remarks of that hon. member could be applied to our financial system, it would be marvelous. But in the realm of religion, I will tell him that whatever he may think it is certainly not progress to follow the downward path of a materialistic and atheistic minority.

Unfortunately that is the modern trend. Indeed we had a sample of it when listening to certain New Democratic party speakers. One always wonders what they are driving at. If there is a traitor to hide, they join in. If there is a notorious criminal to defend, they join in. If there is a revolutionary principle to expound, they again join in.

They are the ones, probably in collusion with the Liberals, who abolished the death penalty, and that in spite of the opposition of 90 per cent of the population. At that time they were crying over the fate of the worst Canadian criminals.

Now they are urging the government to legalize the murder of innocent beings, and immorality in all its forms. Moreover, according to the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch), the minister does go far enough in his legislation. After speaking on everything that was not in the bill, he begs the Minister of Justice to have much harsher legislation passed for the protection of animals, which he claims to love with all his heart. What should one think about such reasoning, Mr. Speaker? I think that it is simply preposterous, and the committee must examine all his statements to help him compare contradictions.

I am sure that we have in this committee enough members who still have a conscience and who are still able to use it with all freedom, and I ask them to make a Christian gesture, a human gesture by simply removing those two sections from this bill. And, in order to help them, I shall quote a letter. I had as good as promised you not to quote any one, but I am almost compelled to quote this letter I received from a parish priest from Quebec. He makes his opinion known. It may be of help to the committee members! This is what this priest has written:

I want to add some explanations to my answer—

—about abortion and homosexuality.

If I had to vote on this bill, I would vote against it, as the Prime Minister is not willing to split it. Yet there are many good things in the bill—

I mentioned it at the start also.

—as the bad is deliberately mixed in with the good, while it would be so easy to separate the two, my conscience would compel me to vote against it.

Incidentally, by refusing to break up this bill, the Prime Minister is committing an outrage against the conscience of the members of his party; they are compelled to choose between their conscience and their loyalty to the party. I am afraid that, in the liberal camp especially, servility—

—if you will forgive the expression—

—before a Prime Minister who abuses his authority by not respecting the conscience of his members, partisanship, or loyalty to the party may win over conscience. If there were several liberal members with courage enough to say frankly to the Prime Minister: "Split the bill and give the members a free vote, or else we shall vote against this measure even if the government must fall; we prefer to follow the dictates of our conscience than to abide by the requirements of party solidarity"—I am sure that the Prime Minister would then give in. But I very much doubt that there are at present in Ottawa, in the liberal party, enough men with the necessary courage to do this.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

By the way, I am personally convinced that there will be enough honest liberal members to amend some sections of this bill. I quote further:

—As to the bill on abortion, it is lousy.

A—It is supposedly an attempt to legalize what was being done illegally. Big deal! the government does not have to give in to immorality, but rather to make sure the rights of the citizens are respected; and the first of these rights is the right to live.

B—It was said that this bill had to be passed because we lived in a pluralistic society.

What a stupid argument! It is the duty of a government which realizes its functions to protect the weak against the abuse of the powerful. No pluralistic argument can authorize a government to side with the executioners.

Is there a weaker and more defenceless being than a tiny child in his mother's womb?

C—This bill is a backward step for civilization. In the past, a father had the right of life and death over his child. The advances of civilization led to the realization that God alone was the Master of our lives; this right is passed on to the State under certain definite circumstances.

Whether they admit it or not, when passing this legislation on abortion, the government legalizes murder.

This bill brings out their revolting inconsistency.

Last year, capital punishment was abolished by a legislation for a number of criminals; however this year with another piece of legislation we are condemning some innocent beings in their mothers' womb. As far as logic is concerned, we have seen better examples of it.

Mr. Speaker, that was just a letter from a parish priest and if ever you wish to collect them, we have received them by the thousand. In fact, we have asked for them and sent out questionnaires to our constituents, and I can assure you that today in Quebec, 95 per cent of the people share our opinion.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Loiselle: That is not true.

Mr. Gauthier: Somebody shouts that it is not true and moreover it is an hon. member from Montreal. I invite him to look into the reports I have and out of 2,000 letters—

Mr. Loiselle: They are not all ignorant people in the province of Quebec.

Mr. Gauthier: I have nine. They may be ignorant but they are moral. It is much better to be moral than to be too learned and immoral.

I had others, Mr. Speaker, namely the one from—

Mr. Loiselle: Do as your vicar tells you and you will go to Heaven.

Mr. Gauthier: —l'Alliance pour la vie. Besides, all the members got it and that is what I find surprising.

While we are trying to plead our cause, we hear them bleat over there. It hurts them. But let them go back to their own constituency to clear up things. They will hear some squawking. Let us stop all this cheating, misleading people; let us tell them what this rotten bill is all about. If we speak today it is so that people may understand every word in the bill.

I am sure that if a referendum were held on this bill in the province of Quebec, the bill would be defeated right away.

Mr. Loiselle: Come to Montreal for the next elections.

Mr. Gauthier: I went on the island of Montreal and although it is now called a bomb city I was surprised to see that there are still serious-minded and right thinking people there.

Mr. Loiselle: You were not elected either.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the time allotted to me is running out and I would like to know what the hon. member is saying because we hear them...

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The honourable member for Roberval has the floor right now.

Mr. Gauthier: I thank you very much Mr. Speaker for taking care of the situation because he is gobbling up all my time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gauthier: I have been a member of this house for seven years. I have always found it strange that, as soon as we wish to debate a problem there is always a small group of French Canadians who try to "block" us. I find that discouraging. Some of them are good as I said, and I thank them. On the other hand, it is always the same ones who come and gather here, who often change seats in an attempt to make noise and prevent us from speaking. Well, no, Mr. Speaker, I am a bit like St. Paul: I cannot help speaking. (Applause)

I hope that my remarks will be useful to the committee and to all my Liberal friends, and that they will light again the little flicker of conscience that remains in them.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I thought that the honourable member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Loiselle) wanted to speak—

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, the member for St-Henri has already made up his mind. It did not take him a seven day debate to do so.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Loiselle: You will get a taste of your own medicine. You will fall into the canal and stay there—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is a very basic rule of this house which states that no member who has the floor must be interrupted.

The honourable member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise).

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, it is my turn to express my opinion on Bill No. C-150, which the Liberal government suggests we should adopt today.

The minister seems in a hurry to have this bill passed on second reading, which would acknowledge the principle of it and I would fail in my duty if I did not freely convey in this house the opinion of a large majority of my constituents who have taken the trouble to write to me, either individually, or collectively, asking me to oppose a number of clauses of this bill which are inconsistent with everything that is human and Christian.

In my opinion, the subject matter of this bill should have been divided among several different bills that the members could have considered more fully. This would have enabled them to better understand the implications of the proposed measures, and to do a better job.

By packing Bill No. C-150 like an overcrowded bus, the government gave the Canadian public the impression of having something to hide and it tried to take the opposition members by surprise, or at least those who object to some of the reforms proposed in the bill.

There are, in this bill, some amendments which seem excellent to me and which could have been approved very quickly, had they been introduced separately. Those amendments will suffer from the delay due to the stubborn refusal of the government to give parliament a square deal.

Since the time allotted to me is running short, I shall not waste it on measures which appear acceptable to me such as the use of the breathalizer which has become a necessary method of stopping the slaughter on our highways. The results obtained in countries where this measure is applied, especially in England, lead me to approve this drastic measure designed to protect our drivers. A few months ago, a Conservative member of Great Britain was telling me that even if he had objected to that legislation when it was passed in England, he had to admit now that it was a good one since it had reduced by 33 per cent the number of fatal accidents.

There is also a clause legalizing lotteries, naturally, under certain conditions; while I agree with that amendment, I do not feel that it will be the key or the solution that will save the provinces or the large municipalities from the stagnation in which they find themselves; at best, they will be a voluntary tax, where the tickets may be sold under pressure and of which the individual will pay the cost.

Other amendments are proposed in the bill which are of great importance; they deserve that we reflect upon them at length because of the results which can be foreseen if they are adopted and implemented. I am thinking of the amendment legalizing homosexuality and abortion.

I tried to understand why the government should want to legalize homosexuality. The Prime Minister himself has told us that the government has no business in bedrooms, and I agree with him.

At the present time, the government or the police cannot see what goes on between two people behind closed doors; but it is the responsibility of the police to see that certain things do not go on in public, are not seen in theaters, on street corners or in public places. Fortunately, the proposed amendment will not allow more freedom in public than before.

The only effect the proposed amendment on homosexuality will have, if it is passed, will be to indicate that the government approves what God himself condemned so emphatically.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, to support my allegations, I would like to quote a few paragraphs from an article recently published in "L'Equipe":

> For Christians, Saint Paul's warning in his Epistle to the Romans is cause for reflection; speaking of the moral concept of pagans towards creation, Saint Paul wrote:
>
> "For this cause God gave them up unto vile affections: for even their women did change the natural use into that which is against nature:
>
> And likewise also the men, leaving the natural use of the woman, burned in their lust one toward another; men with men working that which is unseemly, and receiving in themselves that recompense of their error which was meet."

And the article adds this

> It is about time that one seeks to revalorize the roles of man and woman rather than enacting "legal" measures which degrade them.

• (9:50 p.m.)

> It would be much more profitable to teach men how to become more masculine and women how to become more feminine; all would benefit and the society would be better off. Otherwise, we are heading directly towards revolution, if not decline.

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this debate, we heard hon. members speak in favour of legalized abortion, others against it. For personal reasons and also because of representations received from my constituents, I am opposed to the legalization of abortion.

I read with deep interest the proceedings of the committee on health, welfare and social affairs which received briefs and heard eloquent and well-prepared evidence on abortion and all its implications.

The hon. members are not the only ones who have considered and weighed this amendment to the Criminal Code. Other highly qualified people and organizations, after serious consideration, have declared themselves against making abortion legal as it is proposed to do.

I have here a petition signed by 100 citizens from my constituency. These people are opposed to the legalization of abortion for reasons which I would like to enumerate:

> In regard to the amendments presented to the House of Commons by the Minister of Justice—

It was then Bill C-195, which has now become Bill C-150.

—we wish to bring to the attention of our elected representatives our position on the matter of abortion.

In keeping with the human rights, based on natural law, we reaffirm the basic principle of the right to live for every individual and of the respect for life.

I. Whereas abortion constitutes an irrevocable act of aggression against an embryo or a foetus,

II. Whereas the embryo or foetus are regarded by almost every scientist as human beings, existing at a given stage of their development,

III. Whereas our present legislators have rightfully brought the respect of life to the point of abolishing the death penalty except in some definite cases,

IV. Whereas public morals and the commonweal are seriously jeopardized through the acceptance of a bill in favour of abortion "when continuation of pregnancy endangers or could endanger the life or the health of the mother",

V. Whereas the experience of several countries indicates that the terms of this legislation could very easily be wrongly interpreted by ignoring the sacred principle of the right to live.

For all these reasons, we object to any further extention of the abortion bill.

Moreover, we feel it is our most strict and urgent duty, as well as for our representatives, to urge those who govern our country to pass most urgently, not negative measures nor short cut solutions such as abortion, but rather positive and preventive measures, the only true, efficient in-depth solutions to problems which, unresolved, leave abortion practices as the only means of escape.

Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what my leader, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was recommending earlier in the evening.

I continue my quotation:

In consequence, we recommend the establishment of social and sexual education organisations, including all consultation, guidance, support, and protection services, and at all social levels and in full respect of strictly constitutional jurisdictions, namely: training courses for youth in school and recreation, subsidized premarital courses, consultation centres for couples in trouble, family courts, protection and rehabilitation courses for unwed mothers and abandoned youth, etc.

Mr. Speaker, that is a petition I received; it is signed by over 150 of my constituents, and if anybody wants to check the list, I have it here.

Besides, more than 500 people have written to me personally to let me know they are against this bill. Others, through the Foyers Notre-Dame, a highly respected organization sent me advice in the name of their group which represent the Foyers Notre-Dame from the dioceses of Amos and Timmins. I would like to quote their remarks.

The present legislation only considers a child as a human being when it has completely proceeded from its mother's body.

On the basis of this restricted definition of a human being, the legislation considers as two different crimes the fact of killing a child when it is out of its mother's womb and the fact of killing an unborn child.

Why the difference?

We submit the legal definition of a human being should be revised in order to consider as human being every fecundated ovule from the moment of the conception.

In effect, from the moment male and female cells unite, the new being thus produced possesses in itself the principle of organization which will allow the initial cell to grow, to multiply and to give birth to all internal functions which will become its organs and later will make a complete human being of it. Life begins as soon as the being makes a whole, bearing in itself the principle of its internal organization and development, which happens at the moment of the conception.

Therefore, bringing about the death of an intrauterine child should be considered in the legislation as murder and punished as such.

No doubt there will be no question in the course of further debates of allowing all types of abortion. One will only ask whether therapeutic abortion should not be allowed for certain medical, social, psychological, eugenical or other reasons.

The present law allows steps to save the mother's life, even if this accidentally causes the death of the child that she is bearing (9).

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must draw the attention of the hon. member for Abitibi to the fact that it is ten o'clock.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might make a suggestion. Since we have had quite a discussion at this stage and I think we over here are in accord, I was wondering whether it might be possible within a few minutes to finish the debate tonight and to have the vote so as to determine whether or not this bill should go to a committee?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, we strongly object to the proposal that the hon. member has just put forward as we think that some very important legislation must be passed. Moreover, some members of our party still want to speak on the omnibus bill.

• (10:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The time being ten o'clock, the motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been put and seconded under the provisions of Standing Order 40. The question therefore is that this house do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN ECONOMY—REMEDIAL MEASURES CONTEMPLATED BY GOVERNMENT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday, I asked the following question:

Would the minister tell the house which action the government intends to take to remedy the weaknesses of government policy in matters of unemployment, industrial wind ups and price stability?

My question was made up of three different parts. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me tonight the opportunity to discuss this problem. As a matter of fact, it is a problem that can be discussed very rarely because there is not enough time to do it, even if it is a problem of the highest importance.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for the privilege of asking my question again to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand).

In taking this opportunity, I am asking once again the same question to all hon. ministers and members, specially to those who are particularly responsible for the economy on the national scale. Unemployment, bankruptcies or industrial wind ups, increase in prices, those are three economic factors that prove the weakness of the government policy in the economic field.

Why is unemployment increasing? Why do our industries close their doors or fall into the hands of foreign capitalists? Why do prices increase during a period of growing unemployment? Those are the various questions that I want to bring up tonight and to which I would like some answers.

Those three obvious indications of nationwide economic trouble should open our eyes, should make us aware of the weaknesses of our economic policy, and compel us to correct the causes, before the population is even more adversely affected.

Let us not waste any more time proving that such difficulties exist. Everyone admits that they do. Newspapers mention them every day. All sociologists are agreed that the rich are getting richer while, at the same time, the poor are getting poorer, within the boundaries of one country and in all the countries of the world.

This gap is forever widening, Mr. Speaker, between the poor countries and the rich ones, between the under-developed countries and the highly industrialized ones. But even in the latter, there are the same widening gaps between the prosperous citizens and the indigent ones.

The trouble being general, it is all the more tragic. Instead of letting it spread, we should without delay look for adequate remedies. There is no point in maintaining the same economic policies to correct the ills that they have brought about, directly or indirectly. It is our responsibility therefore to call the attention of the ministry on that point while avoiding criticizing anybody.

I find that since the new government took office on June 25 last, the same dropping curve persists and the same economic policy on the part of the government inevitably leads to the same results. Consequently the economic situation deteriorates instead of improving.

There is more and more division in Canada as the gap widens between the poor and the rich and the system proves increasingly unfair with the rich getting richer while the poor are getting poorer.

That situation being recognized and accepted, I might point out that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), as reported in yesterday's newspapers, stated before the students of the University of Montreal that the true solutions to the problems of our day have not been found yet.

In that respect, I would say that the Prime Minister is right—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to use these few minutes to reply to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), who, in his question, has touched upon three different subjects: unemployment, the closing of some industries and price in stability.

We have just heard the hon. member's plea. While listening to him, one would believe that Canada is now in a state altogether deplorable, terrible and not to be envied at all. One should not always look on the black side of things as the hon. member does in respect of the various bills introduced by the government.

A while ago, he was referring to another bill that he considered to be abominable and inconceivable. I am still looking for some coherence from that party. Of course the government will most probably bring some emendations, but to claim that the solution may be found at a moment's notice is an entirely different matter. I do not believe that any member in this house has found the magic wand and it is a foregone conclusion that is will not be found hy the Ralliement créditiste.

Some hon. Members: We want an answer.

Mr. Loiselle: Well, if you want an answer, let me have my say and I shall try to give you that answer.

First of all, one must see things clearly. You are elected by the people and your job is not to constantly attack and criticize the government, to tell them what to do and what not to do.

What are you suggesting as an alternate solution?

Since the beginning, you have done nothing else but criticize. Certainly no Créditiste government will correct the situation.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must remind the parliamentary secretary to direct his remarks to the Chair.

Mr. Loiselle: You are perfectly right, Mr. Speaker, but when hearing certain things one sometimes lets one self be carried away. That is what happened to me.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if I can try not to lose my temper over the unkind remarks of the member for Compton, I would like to point out to him that with regard to unemployment, hiring has increased. In July last, there were 5,533,000 positions and in January—when unemployment is usually worse—there were all the same 7,753,000 positions.

The rate of unemployment in January is still lower than in December. Indeed, it went down from 4.8 in December to 4.3 in January. Mr. Speaker, from January 1967 to January 1968, there were in Canada some 324,000 new positions. I do not think that any one can say that conditions are deteriorating, since within a year, they—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. The time alloted to the hon. member has expired.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

INDIAN AFFAIRS—YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.—REGULATIONS IN AKAITCHO HALL

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, the question which I have asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) about Akaitcho Hall arose out of the fact that never since I first read Dickens have I known of a school residence where the conditions were as outrageous as they are in this residence under the direction and the authority of the minister and his department. The people in this residence are treated in a way which is puritanical, oppressive, insulting and degrading. I cannot speak indignantly enough about this situation.

You are dealing, Mr. Speaker, not with children you are dealing with 200 people the average age of whom is 18½ years, ranging from 14 to 24. The hall was originally built to accommodate 96. It now accommodates about 200 and instead of two to a room you have four to a room, just about as serious overcrowding as you can have in a school residence. These young adults are treated like children. They cannot leave the building without obtaining a pass, and when they return they have to hand in their pass. Their language is censored. They are told they must not chew gum in the hall. We are dealing with grown people. The type of clothing they wear is regulated. In fact, if the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) wore an ascot and sandals and appeared at a cultural hall, he would be dismissed from the school. They cannot visit their friends in Yellowkinfe without special leave or enter any home in Yellowknife without special leave from the superintendent or one of the supervisors. They cannot have visitors without special permission. Riding in cars or taxis on the streets is prohibited. If someone comes to Yellowknife to stay at the school that person's car must remain parked for the entire duration of the visit. The behaviour of these young adults with the opposite sex is governed by a degrading, insulting and childish regulation. I have a copy of the regulation before me, and I shall read it:

> Young people of opposite sex are naturally attracted to one another. There is no intention on the part of staff members to destroy such friendships. However, such friendships must be kept strictly controlled in conduct.

What is the conduct that is permitted? I shall read further:

> Specifically, the holding of hands on walking trips to town and perhaps occasionally in the hall will not be objected to, but any personal contact other than this is not acceptable.

I am reminded of the personal contact the Prime Minister had during the last election campaign with the opposite sex. There is supposed to be a student council but the student council is composed of five members, three of whom are appointed by the superintendent and supervisory staff. One member is responsible for the boys and the other is responsible for the girls. When an attempt was made to set up a proper student council everyone concerned with the attempt was intimidated and coerced in a terrible way. I have in my possession also the report by a volunteer of the Company of Young Canadians which sets out all the details together with examples of dismissals, expulsions, coercion and discipline for infractions of incredibly harsh and stupid rules.

The other day the minister referred to the fact that he received a wire. I suggested it was the same wire I had received. I knew it must have been, and of course it was. That wire said, in effect, "We thank you for trying but think we can settle our own problems". The fact is that the proposal to send that wire was defeated by the students at two meetings in the noon hour and in the afternoon in the cafeteria, but the superintendent sent it nevertheless. I know the minister has received a second wire which the students signed. About ten of them signed both wires. This is the usual result of intimidation, as I have found in long practice in labour relations.

The second wire is addressed to me. It reads:

> We thank you for your concern and would like to ask you to investigate the situation at Akaitcho Hall. Could you send someone to us to get the real impression of our unique problems here. We hope you are with us.

Then, these students tell us about the first wire. I have in my possession a letter from one of the residents of the hall. It is from a 20 year old girl who says she is still treated as a child. In the letter there is this sentence:

> We desperately need help and will be most grateful for any that we may receive.

If I had more than seven minutes, there are literally dozens more incidents and instances I could cite. I wish to use my last minute or two to tell the minister, who is courteous enough to be here this evening, that the responsibility rests with him and his department. It may not be his entirely because he has headed this department for only seven, eight or nine months and these regulations date back to at least 1964.

[Mr. Lewis.]

The responsibility for this situation, however, does lie with his department. If the departmental officers did not know this was happening, they are a bunch of incompetents who ought to be fired tomorrow. If they did know what was happening and did nothing about it, they are a bunch of sadists who ought to be sent to a psychiatrist instead of being responsible for the education of the men and women who are native citizens of this country.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I have come to the house this evening to answer the hon. member.

I think that the terms he used were a little exaggerated and I feel that the situation is not as bad as he suggested. It is a quite delicate situation and as soon as I was told about the problem, I asked the authorities of the Territory to conduct an inquiry. Now as I have full confidence in people who have acquired some experience in labour relations —like the hon. member for York South— I have asked the Commissioner of the Northwest Territories, Mr. Hodgson, a formeer labour leader, to deal with the situation himself and to see to it that any abuse is corrected.

Evidently, we must take into account that in the house of commons, we are always told, that the people in the North should make their own decisions and enjoy self-determination.

That is a local problem. The situation had not been reported to the local authorities, but only to Ottawa. I asked the commissioner to investigate and have consultations with all interested parties, mainly the authorities responsible for keeping order in the institution. The hon. member will appreciate that it is necessary to have certain internal rules in order that an institution can work and that be protected the interests of the parents who send their children, for when boys and girls of different age groups attend an institution such as this, one must realize that some to be very sensitive about the situation.

Furthermore, there are in those institutions persons with a different background and of different ethnical origin, and it is necessary to be verey sensitive about the situation.

One must also consider the interests of the students who attend those institutions. I think we should consult them in that regard. Naturally, rules are perhaps a little too strict, and for this reason I asked the commissioner to examine the problem. I know that the regulations are being revised.

I personally visited some of those hostels and I wonder whether the hon. member has had that privilege. In fact, when I went up North, I visited a hostel in Inuvik, one night, and young people were dancing there just as they would in any hall here.

I know that in such circumstances, rules may sometimes appear strict, but they are enforced leniently. That is why I asked the commissioner to inquire, to try and find a solution to the problem and conciliate the interests of the institution, those of the parents and those of the students concerned.

[English]

PUBLIC BUILDINGS—BATH-MILLHAVEN FEDERAL PRISON COMPLEX

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my reason for rising tonight is the result of a question I asked the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Langlois) in this house this afternoon during the question period. This question pertained to certain financial irregularities relevant to a subcontract on the Bath-Millhaven federal prison complex situated in my constituency of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, in the County of Lennox and Addington.

Let me remind the house that this project will call for a financial expenditure of over $20 million. The present contract, which was awarded to Argo Incorporated of Montreal, is part of the total and amounts to over $10 million.

The subcontract in question here tonight was awarded to D. Leblanc Incorporated of 750 Boulevard Labelle, Chomedy, Laval, Province of Quebec. This latter firm is reported to be in receivership as of approximately February 13, and I believe their management and staff have returned to the Province of Quebec. I am sorry to report to the house that before doing so they left thousands of dollars in worthless cheques, refused and declared n.s.f. by the bank they were issued on, namely La Banque Provinciale du Canada, 5990 West Boulevard Gouin, Montreal, Quebec.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The estimated total liability of this firm's cheques in Lennox and Addington County and the Bay of Quinte district is reported to be many thousands of dollars. As one constituent said to me, it seems that they went back to Montreal one week end and forgot to come back. When I questioned the representative of the prime contractor, Argo Inc., at their office on the job near Bath, they told me that unfortunately this subcontractor was not bonded. I call on the government and the minister to explain this situation and the dire lack of management on the part of the government for not ensuring that all subcontractors on the job were bonded with a pay and performance bond the same as Argo, the prime contractor.

Like any other job of this size being performed in any local community, the labouring men on the job worked with implicit confidence that the cheques they received would be honoured. This is a huge government project. In turn, the local businessmen and the banks, all part of our economy, cashed the contractor's cheques without any doubt as to their validity. These cheques were for the most part issued to cover the wages of labourrers. For example, the owner of the closest grocery store to this project, the Millhaven grocery at R. R. 3, Bath, is holding about 16 cheques totalling $1,180. These cheques are not worth the paper they are written on. I hold in my hand photostat copies of them.

The Royal Bank in Odessa has seven cheques totalling over $400, and their branch in Bath holds 37 payroll cheques totalling $3,-003.50. This has been a very costly affair for the working men, businessmen and the financial institutions in my riding. The damage goes even beyond my area, because I am informed that several business places in the city of Kingston hold some of this worthless paper.

I declare that this situation indicates that someone, including the government, is not looking after business. Why was this contractor not bonded? Surely, it is a statutory requirement that all contractors working on federal government jobs must be bonded as to pay and performance. I have mentioned that people in a typical Canadian community such as ours co-operate with confidence in accepting and cashing a federal contractors' cheques, especially from such a multi-million dollar job as this. In this case, they all received a slap in the face or, I should say, a kick in the pants from the rear.

Some lawyer might tell me that the way to solve this vexing problem would be for each holder of a worthless cheque to ask the man who gave it to him to make restitution, and so on all the way down the line. But this company is now reported to be in receivership, which means that what they will pay in bankruptcy could amount to a very few cents on the dollar, or perhaps nothing.

I call on the government and the prime contractor in this matter to reimburse the labouring men and businessmen of Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. This $20 million project, and the government, will be viewed with suspicion from now on if restitution is not made immediately, the whole matter set straight and the wronged parties reimbursed. There is a tremendous amount of ill-feeling in our district because of this situation.

I have not yet learned the particulars of the contractual relationship between Her Majesty the Queen and Argo Inc., the prime contractor, and Leblanc Inc., the defaulting subcontractor. But in the name of fair dealing, over-all good faith and justice, I call upon the government and the Department of Public Works to compensate our people, labourers, businessmen and local banks for the inconvenience and loss they have so innocently sustained.

Mr. Paul Langlois (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, regretfully I have to confirm that there appears to be some bad paper circulating in the area to which the hon. gentleman refers. It has been a continuing concern of Public Works over many years to draft and include in all contracts a code of working conditions that is fair and equitable to all contractors and which at the same time minimizes the chance of bad debts and workmen's liens. This code has been developed with the co-operation and approval of the Canadian Construction Association.

The department has received representations that cheques issued by the subcontractor have been returned "N.S.F." and, on this basis, has dealt with the general contractor, advising him of the situation. The general contractor has undertaken to redeem any cheques issued for direct labour by the subcontractor and not yet cashed. Anyone holding such a cheque should contact the prime contractor. Furthermore, the Canadian Department of Labour has placed an investigator on the project and has asked this department to withhold from the prime contractor's next progress claim an amount of $30,000 while they investigate claims of employees of the subcontractor who have deposited or are holding cheques. Any claims accepted by the Department of Labour will be covered by the $30,000 withheld from the prime contractor.

I am assured that the bonding company and the prime contractor are fully aware of the situation that a number of unsupported cheques have been recovered, and that both the prime contractor and the bonding company are investigating the extent of the trouble with all due diligence.

Mr. Speaker: The motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been adopted. The house stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, February 26, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Second report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in French and English—Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier).

[English]

Third report of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts—Mr. Reid.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF REVISED CONSENSUS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on February 14, immediately following the conclusion of the constitutional conference, I laid on the table of this house a document entitled "Consensus of the conference". The secretariat of the conference now informs me that that document contained an error in the text of one of the resolutions and has asked me to apologize to the house for any inconvenience that this may have caused. That office has now prepared a corrected version, in bilingual form, which is available for distribution to all members, and I wish to table this today.

LOBBYING

MEASURE REQUIRING REGISTRATION WITH CLERK OF PARLIAMENTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-176, respecting the control of lobbying.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Expliquez.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require registration with the Clerk of Parliaments of all lobbyists; persons employed by others in an attempt to influence the public's elected representatives for or against enactment of laws. It would in no way interfere with lobbying or the right of citizens to express their wishes to members of parliament, but as is done in several of the United States now, it would require the identification to the public of the private interests and motives of paid lobbyists.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to announce a change in the business of the house, which occurred as a result of discussions this morning. In view of the fact that we did not complete the debate on second reading of the Criminal Code last night, we agreed this morning that it would be desirable to change the order so that the debate on second reading might be resumed today in the hope that perhaps a decision will be taken before the close of this day. If that decision is taken we will then call the bill amending the Financial Administration Act for consideration during the balance of today.

The timetable in respect of the proposed government organization act will therefore be set back one day. We will commence the debate on that tomorrow. If it is not completed through the appropriate stages by tomorrow night, we will continue with that debate on Friday.

There were also discussions as to the manner of debating the government organization act. Perhaps I might take advantage at this time to put the suggestions on record. There might be general agreement on a relatively short discussion at the second reading stage, with possibly only one speaker from each party. Instead of lengthy and varied discussion on the first clause in the committee of the whole it might be agreeable that we deal with each part of the bill as an integral unit before proceeding to the next one. In this way we hope that the chairman of the committee might be more lenient in permitting a more general debate on the clauses at the beginning of each part, in respect of each department, than would normally be the case. It would seem possible in this way to deal with this in a more systematic and structured fashion.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

QUEBEC—AID TO CLASSICAL COLLEGES

Question No. 952—Mr. Caouette:

Did the government grant financial aid to classical colleges of the Province of Quebec and, if so, what colleges received aid and how much did they receive over the past five years?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): During the past five years, no operating grants were paid by the Government of Canada to classical colleges of the Province of Quebec either under the per capita university grants scheme (to 1966-67), or under the provisions of Part II of the Federal-Provincial Fiscal Arrangements Act, 1967 (from 1967-68). Any payments to classical colleges would have been made by the Government of the Province of Quebec.

DEFENCE—EXPENDITURE ON MODERNIZATION PROJECTS

Question No. 1,128—Mr. Broadbent:

1. For each fiscal year, what have been the number of projects and annual expenditures of the Industry Modernization for Defence Exports Program established in 1963 in the Department of Defence Production and transferred over in 1967 to the Department of Industry?

2. For each fiscal year, what have been the annual expenditures of this program shared by the federal government and the defence industry?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1.

Year	No. of Projects	Federal Expenditure $
1964/65	19	474,000
1965/66	40	2,440,000
1966/67	98	8,000,000
1967/68	95	10,581,000

Note: This Program was established in the fall of 1963 and no money was spent until FY 1964/65.

2. Project costs under this Program are shared equally by the Federal Government and the defence industry.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE FINANCING

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. What was the government's share in the financing of the National Arts Centre?

2. Was the federal government the only contributor to the financing of the National Arts Centre and, if not, who were the other contributors and what was their share?

3. What is the date set for the inauguration of this National Arts Centre?

4. What person or persons have been appointed for the internal management of the National Arts Centre?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows: 1. The Federal Government paid all the construction costs of the National Arts Centre.

2. While the Federal Government was the only contributor to the Centre's construction cost, the City of Ottawa contributed 89,917 sq. ft. of the 254,649 sq. ft. of the Centre's site.

3. The Centre's inaugural festival begins Monday 2 June, 1969.

4. The operation and maintenance of the Centre is the responsibility of the National Arts Centre Corporation consisting of a Board of Trustees composed of the following persons: Members appointed by Order-in-Council: Mr. Lawrence Freiman, Ottawa, Chairman; M. Paul Hébert, Montreal, Vice-Chairman; Mr. Leonard A. Kitz, Halifax; Mme Andrée Paradis, Montreal; Mr. William Teron, Ottawa; Dr. Robertson Davies, Toronto; Mlle Madeleine Gobeil, Ottawa; Mr. Anson C. McKim, Montreal; Mrs. Percy Genser, Winnipeg; Dr. Dorothy Somerset, Vancouver; Dr. Arnold Walter, Toronto. Members ex-officio: the Mayor of the Corporation of the City of Ottawa: His Worship Donald B. Reid; the Mayor of the City of Hull: Son Honneur Marcel D'Amour; the Director of the Canada Council: M. Jean Boucher; the President of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation: Dr. George F. Davidson; the Government Film Commissioner: Mr. Hugo McPherson.

The Board of Trustees appointed Mr. G. H. Southam as Director of the Centre for a term of five years effective 1 April 1967.

COMMERCIAL PILOTS—COST OF TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,207—Mr. Lewis:

1. What was the cost to the Department of Manpower and Immigration (a) per trainee, and (b)

the total cost of training 20 men to commercial pilots license standard at Lakehead Flying School (the class graduated in June of this year)?

2. Are future courses of this nature contemplated and, if so (a) where (b) what are the dates?

3. How many unemployed pilots were registered with the Canada Manpower Centres at the time the course referred to in part (1) above was begun?

4. Of those commercial pilots registered with Canada Manpower Centres at the time in question, how many subsequently gained employment as pilots through the efforts of Canada Manpower Centres?

5. What is the procedure followed by Canada Manpower Centres in attempting to place a pilot?

6. On what basis were the students referred to in part (1) above selected and were they (a) members of the Air Cadet League of Canada (b) currently licenced as private pilots (c) other, please specify (d) did they go before a competent selection board or did they simply apply for such training?

7. Was the flying school involved a member of the Royal Canadian Flying Clubs Association?

8. By whom were the pilots graduated from the course referred to in part (1) employed and at what salary?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) Average cost per trainee $2,343 (Training cost $1,811.20—Training Allowance $531.82); (b) $51,546.50 for 22 trainees starting the course.

2. Not in the foreseeable future.

3. 143—pilots in all categories, not necessarily "bush pilots". Many seasonally unemployed or not interested in moving to Northern Ontario.

4. 11.

5. Manpower counsellors keep in touch with the needs of the industry and contact employers on behalf of clients who are seeking new positions. Applications with details of the pilot's training, licence, endorsements, experience, flying hours, etc., are, when the client is interested, circulated to Canada Manpower Centres where opportunities might exist. Pilots who lack the training, experience or licences with the endorsements required by employers are helped to obtain other types of employment. Pilots who follow the occupation on a seasonal basis are also assisted with their search for alternative off-season employment.

6. The availability of the training and the selection criteria were broadcast by Radio Stations CFTA, CKPR and CJLX, Television Station CKPR-TV and published in the Port Arthur News Chronicle and the Fort William Times Journal, to attract potential trainees who would be suitable for "bush flying" operations.

The criteria were: Valid private pilot licence—minimum requirement; Medical category to Commercial Pilot standard; Academic standing—functional Grade 10 (determined by mature adult test) or higher; Suggested age 35 or under. Actual decision made on the basis of experience or physical ability to handle "bush pilot" position which includes loading and unloading freight; Flight test; Motivation and definite willingness to accept employment in bush operations in Northern Ontario. (a) Not known; (b) Yes, minimum requirement; (c) Four trainees had commercial pilot licences; (d) Trainees were selected by a competent selection board from applications received.

7. No.

8. Twenty-two pilots commenced the course and 13 of the 20 graduates obtained employment with nine employers in Northern Ontario. The salaries of the 13 were as follows; one pilot, $250 per month plus four cents per mile; four pilots, $250 per month plus three cents per mile; 1 pilot, $10 per day plus four cents per mile; 1 pilot, $500 per month; four pilots, $400 per month; one pilot, $300 per month plus room and board; earnings of one pilot unknown.

QUEBEC—FEDERAL AIR POLLUTION PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,266—Mr. Beaudoin:

Has the government any programs to combat air pollution in the Province of Quebec and, if so, what is the nature of each such program?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No. However the Department of National Health and Welfare provides financial assistance to the Quebec Department of Health through the national health grants program for support of research and other projects in the field of air pollution. A list of current projects is attached.

Questions

Environmental Health Applications To The Public Health Research Grant
Department of National Health and Welfare

Name	Project No.	Title of Project	Amount Requested $
Air Pollution Studies
BARIL, Marcel (Dr.)	604-7-674	N—Sure and swift methods of identification of pollutants (particularly dusts) in the air of urban residences	8,836
JEGIER, Sigmunt (Dr.)	604-7-663	N—Effects of atmospheric pollutants on antiproteolytic and neurohumoral enzymes.	21,350
JEGIER, S. (Dr.)	604-7-603	T—Formation in the atmosphere of oxidizers harmful to public health
JEGIER, S. (Dr.)	604-7-602	C—Evaluation of the degree of atmospheric pollution by photosynthetic measures	18,950
PANISSET, Maurice (Dr.)	604-7-679	N—Determination of the amount of air pollution from a given outlet by means of altitude observations	16,540
PANISSET, M.	604-7-593	C—Air Pollution and Heat Islands	31,000
PANISSET, Maurice (Dr.)	604-7-678	N—Study of the precombustion of aliphatic hydrocarbons with a view to modifying the amount of aldehydes, non-saturated hydrocarbons and "NO" in burned gases	16,340
WHITE, F. T. M.	604-7-608	C—Studies in Industrial Dustiness (a) Comparative Evaluation of Assessment Techniques. (b) Abatement of Dusts by the Application of Froths and Foams	9,500

[English]

POST OFFICE LOCK BOXES

Question No. 1,299—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What is the cost to the Post Office Department of administering post office lock boxes?

2. What revenues are derived from rental of these boxes?

3. What portion of the costs mentioned in reply to part 1 are capital costs?

4. What portion of the costs mentioned in reply to part 1 are operating costs?

5. What are the principal factors making up these operating costs?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. For the fiscal year 1967-68, $4,633,074.30.

2. $2,497,700.

[Mr. Munro.]

3. Nil.

4. $4,633,074.30.

5. Collection of rentals, administration and services rendered by other government departments such as, accommodation, equipment, maintenance and installation principally provided by the Department of Public Works.

CANADIAN FORCES SUPERANNUATION FUND

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Coates:

1. Was a decision made by the federal government to increase the contribution rates under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and, if so, for what reason?

2. How much additional revenue will be provided to the fund in a full fiscal year?

3. What was the balance in the fund on March 31, 1968, and did the fund increase in the fiscal year from March 31, 1967 and, if so, by what amount?

4. What would have been the estimated increase in the fund from April 1, 1968, to March 31, 1969, without an increase in the rate of contribution and what will be the additional increase in the fund as a result of the increase in the rate of contribution?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. As announced on 22 November, 1968, it is the government's intention to propose an amendment to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act to increase the contribution rates under the Act.

2, 3 and 4. This information will be available when the Bill to amend the Act is before Parliament.

IVORY COAST REPRESENTATIVE

Question No. 1,311—Mr. Fairweather:

What is the name of the representative of the Ivory Coast referred to in the answer to Question 1,104?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): It is not normal practice to specify the names of representatives of foreign governments coming to Canada for confidential discussions and in any case it would be inappropriate to name the person referred to in the reply to question 1,104 without the concurrence of the government concerned.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT C.B.C. FESTIVAL SERIES

Question No. 1,312—Mr. Coates:

1. How many complaints were lodged with the CBC by individuals and organizations in Canada over programs appearing in the Festival Series on television during the present season?

2. What is the break-down in complaints for each of the dramas to date?

3. What is the estimated cost for the series of programs that will be produced for Festival and what has been the cost of each program shown to date?

4. What has been the revenue obtained from advertisers for the Festival Series?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. As of February 6, 1969, viewers' letters and telephone calls to C.B.C. about the current season's Festival play totalled approximately 650 favourable to Festival and 900 unfavourable.

2.

October 30, 1968	The Write-Off	48 favourable	6 unfavourable
November 6, 1968	Yesterday the Children Were Dancing	39	33
November 13, 1968	A Scent of Flowers	16	121
December 11, 1968	Reddick	77	72
January 1, 1969	A Penny for a Song	7	14
January 15, 1969	Neighbours/The Basement	64	611
January 29, 1969	Cancellation of "Noises of Paradise"	394 protesting cancellation	10 supporting cancellation
	Festival series in general	5 favourable	32 unfavourable

3. The approximate total cost of each Festival drama, including cost of production staff, talent and studio facilities, is $93,000. Each drama in the series has been produced within this average budget figure.

4. Nil. The Festival period is not available for sponsorship.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—VETERANS LAND ACT COMPLAINTS

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Rose:

How many complaints did Veterans Land Act Offices in British Columbia receive in 1966, 1967 and 1968 because of the inability of sub-trades to collect money owed them by sub-contractors of bonded contractors?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): 1966, none; 1967, none; 1968, one.

REGISTRATIONS FOR SECOND CLASS MAILING

Question No. 1,326—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. As of September 1, 1968, how many publications registered successfully for 2nd class mailing privileges in each of the following classes: general news, religion, sciences, agriculture, forestry, fisheries, literature and the arts, public health, business and trade, trade unions, co-operatives, church congregations, political parties, others?

2. As of February 1, 1969, how many publications in each of these classes were using 2nd class mailing privileges?

3. How many publications were refused second class mailing privileges?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. As of 1st September 1968 a total of 5,291 publications were authorized to mail at a second class rate of postage. The records of the Department have not been maintained in such a way as to permit a breakdown by class as of the date requested. Commencing 1st April 1969 departmental records will be maintained in such a way that such information can be provided.

2. As of 1st February 1969 a total of 5,267 publications were authorized to mail at a second class rate of postage.

3. 79 publications were refused mailing privileges in 1968.

C.B.C. FESTIVAL SERIES, "NOISE OF PARADISE"

Question No. 1,327—Mr. Coates:

1. For what reason was "Noise of Paradise" cancelled as the drama on the CBC television series Festival on January 29, 1969?

2. What is the explanation for the delay in reaching the decision in question and did the final decision relate in any manner to complaints lodged with the CBC over other programs previously shown in this series?

3. Did the CBC make payments to any individuals or firms in regard to "Noise of Paradise" that will result in a loss to the corporation if the drama is not televised at a later date?

4. Were any advertising revenues lost as a result of the cancellation of this program and, if so, what was the amount of the loss?

5. Have any advertisers cancelled their patronage with the CBC as a result of programs that have been shown on this series and, if so, what is the estimated loss in revenue from these advertisers to the CBC?

Hon. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. "Noises of Paradise" was withdrawn for review. It may be rescheduled on the network at a future date.

2. Senior C.B.C. officers screened the program immediately they became aware of possible concern over its content. This was done as a result of reaction to previous Festival dramas together with complaints about on air promotion based on scenes from this particular production.

3. As stated above, the drama may be rescheduled at a later date. If this is not done there will be a loss.

4. No. The Festival series is not sponsored.

5. No.

MONTMAGNY WHARF—DREDGING

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. When was the dock and access channel to the Montmagny wharf last dredged?

2. What was the total cost of this work?

3. What company carried out the work?

4. How many days did the work take?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. During 1959-60.

2. $411.

3. The work was carried out by rental of bulldozer on hourly basis.

4. About one week.

C.B.C. FRENCH LANGUAGE BROADCASTING STUDY

Question No. 1,338—Mr. Serré:

1. When did the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation establish an internal committee to study French language radio and television broadcasting?

2. Who are the members of this committee?

3. When is it expected that the study will be completed?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. March, 1968.

2. The committee was composed of 15 members, five from the Corporation's Quebec Division and French Networks, seven from other C.B.C. production centres across the country and three from Head Office. These people were drawn from the programming, technical and administrative areas. It has not been customary to require C.B.C. to list the names of individuals assigned to internal studies.

3. The committee reported at the end of October, 1968. The suggestions and recommendations contained in this internal document are being evaluated as to feasibility and cost.

TORONTO AIRPORT PASSENGER RAMPS

Question No. 1,343—Mr. Skoberg:

1. For what reasons are the enclosed passenger ramps at Toronto International Airport not in use at all times for the convenience of passengers arriving and departing?

2. For what reasons were the enclosed ramps not in use for the convenience of passengers arriving and departing on Flights 906 and 400, on February 3, 1969?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. Passenger ramps, or loading bridges, are located only at Finger 6 at Toronto International Airport and this Finger has no access to Customs and Immigration areas; therefore they can only be used for domestic flights. Work is presently in process which will make it suitable for international flights.

2. The passenger ramp was not used for Flight 906, February 3, because the aircraft was to be routed onward to New York for a trans-border flight, which is normally pre-cleared at Finger 4; therefore the incoming aircraft for Flight 906 was positioned directly at Finger 4 in preparation for its departure.

Flight 400 is operated with Vanguard equipment and the passenger ramps at Toronto International Airport are not suitably constructed for use with this type of aircraft.

POTATO EXPORTS

Question No. 1,348—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many (a) seed potatoes (b) table potatoes (c) processed potatoes (in cwt) were exported in the years 1960 to 1967 to South American Countries, to the West Indies, to Europe?

2. What is the name of each country?

3. Of this amount, what percentage was exported from (a) New Brunswick (b) Prince Edward Island (c) other provinces?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1 (a), (b), (c) and 2. Exports of potatoes are recorded in the following export commodity classes:—

	Commodity Class	Year	Commodity Class	Years
seed potatoes	1460	1960	91–80	1961 to 1967
fresh potatoes	210	1960	91–82	1961 to 1967
potato products, frozen	92–80	1963	92–82	1964 to 1967

The full details of these exports by countries are published in the December issues of Trade of Canada, Exports by Commodities (Dominion Bureau of Statistics catalogue No. 65–004). These publications are obtainable from the Queen's Printer, Ottawa, and available for reference in all public libraries and in the Parliamentary Library.

3. (a), (b), and (c). The percentage of exports of "potatoes" from New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, and other provinces are as follows:—

Year	New Brunswick	Prince Edward Island	Other Provinces
1960	61.8%	19.9%	18.3%
1961	47.2%	24.3%	28.5%
1962	64.5%	13.8%	21.7%
1963	55.1%	17.1%	27.8%
1964	58.2%	14.1%	27.7%
1965	38.2%	25.0%	36.8%
1966	56.2%	14.2%	29.6%
1967	44.8%	20.4%	34.8%

Questions

PRESERVATION OF MALISEET LANGUAGE

Question No. 1,350—Mr. Corbin:

Has the federal government been asked to contribute to the preservation of the Maliseet language in New Brunswick and, if so, what contribution has been made and when?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): Yes. However, no contribution has yet been made as this request is still under consideration.

STATIONS CBAF AND CBAFT, MONCTON

Question No. 1,357—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many persons were working with radio stations CBAF and CBAFT of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in Moncton in December 1968?

2. What was the number of men and women in each of the positions?

3. How many persons were from (a) New Brunswick (b) Quebec (c) other Maritime Provinces?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. As of December 31, 1968, there were 14 C.B.C. employees at radio station CBAF and 17 at television station CBAFT plus 21 integrated radio and TV personnel, several of whom also have responsibilities with respect to the C.B.C. English language radio station CBA at Moncton.

2. Of the total of 52 employees, 41 are male and 11 are female.

3. (a) New Brunswick, 39; (b) Quebec, 10; (c) Other Maritime Provinces, one; plus two from Ontario.

LA RONGE AND URANIUM CITY TELEVISION SERVICE

Question No. 1,374—Mr. Korchinski:

1. What are the present plans for extension of television services in Northern Saskatchewan, particularly as they affect the areas of La Ronge and Uranium City?

2. Are there any plans to initiate improvements serviced out of Prince Albert by the relay station at Greenwater?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to the Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. A C.B.C. application to establish a "frontier coverage package" TV station at La Ronge will be submitted to the Canadian Radio-Television Commission by February 25, 1969, and it is expected that this can be considered by the CRTC in June. The C.B.C. has been operating a similar station at Uranium City since October 1968.

2. The C.B.C. is aware of technical problems recently experienced by the privately-owned affiliate CKBI-TV, Prince Albert, which controls several rebroadcasting stations including one at Greenwater Lake. The station is attempting to correct these difficulties which are not within the purview of C.B.C.

THETFORD MINES, QUE., AIRPORT

Question No. 1,375—Mr. Dumont:

1. Have studies been made by the Department of Transport into the possibility of constructing an airport at Thetford Mines and, if so, what decision has been arrived at by the Department?

2. If the project has been approved, what amount of the assistance has been provided for construction of the airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes. The studies concluded that a contribution of $75,000 would be justified. However, an engineering study has shown that the minimum cost of developing a suitable facility would be $114,000. It was therefore concluded that until additional evidence becomes available of either reduced cost or increased potential use by air travellers or air carriers, it would be necessary to accord a relatively low priority to Thetford Mines.

2. Answered by "1".

APPLICATION OF SALES TAX TO MUNICIPALITIES

Question No. 1,382—Mr. Mongrain:

Are municipalities exempt from the payment of federal sales tax on the purchase of materials for use in municipal works and, if so, under what circumstances?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Not all materials for use in municipal works are exempt from sales tax, however, Part XII of the Excise Tax Act provides for exemption from sales tax in respect of the following: 1. Certain goods sold to or imported by municipalities for their own use and not for resale, as follows: (a) culverts; (b) equipment, at a price in excess of five hundred dollars per unit, specially designed for use directly for road making, road cleaning or fire fighting, but not including automobiles or ordinary motor trucks; (c) fire hose including couplings and nozzles therefor; (d) fire truck chassis for the permanent attachment thereon of fire fighting equipment for use directly in fire fighting; (e) goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and, for the purposes of this exemption, any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the Minister to be a municipality; (f) laminated timber for bridges; (g) precast concrete shapes for bridges in public highway systems; (h) structural steel and aluminum for bridges.

In addition, the sales tax paid on materials used in constructing a school or other similar education institution and public libraries operated on a non-commercial basis is refundable.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES STRENGTH

Question No. 1383—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. What is the strength of the Canadian Armed Forces in the following Divisions (a) sea (b) land (c) air?

2. What is the strength of the Reserve Forces?

3. What is the strength of the Regular Forces?

4. How many and what types of aircraft are employed by the Armed Forces?

5. How many and what types of ships are employed by the Armed Forces?

6. How many Canadian servicemen are stationed outside the country and at what locations?

7. What is the annual salary of a Private in the Armed Forces?

8. What is the annual salary of officers, according to rank?

[Translation]

Mr. David Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. As of 31 December 1968 (a) 17,740; (b) 37,751; (c) 42,350.

2. As of 30 September 1968, 27,158.

3. As of 31 December 1968, 97,841.

4. CSR110 Albatross, 9; CP107 Argus, 32; CC115 Buffalo, 15; CF100 Canuck, 43; CF101 Voodoo, 60; CF104 Starfighter, 183; CC108 Caribou, 8; L19/L183 Cessna, 24; CF5 Freedom Fighter, 10; DHC1 Chipmunk, 51; CC109 Cosmopolitan, 9; C47 Dakota, 76; C45 Expeditor, 53; C45 Falcon, 7; C130 Hercules, 23; DHC3 Otter, 38; T33 Silver Star, 213; CT114 Tutor, 179; CC106 Yukon, 12; CS2F Tracker, 69; H21 Vertol, 6; H34 Sikorsky, 3; H44 Vertol, 4; CH112 Nomad, 20; CF113A Voyageur, 9; CH113 Labrador, 6; CHSS2 Sea King, 38; HO4S, 5; CUH1H Iroquois, 10.

5. CVS (aircraft carrier), 1; SS (submarines), 4; DDH (destroyer helicopter carrier), 9; DDE (destroyer escorts), 13; AOR (operational support ship), 1; ARE (escort maintenance ship), 2; YMT (diving tender), 1; FHE (anti-submarine hydrofoil), 1; PCS (patrol craft), 4; MCS (coastal minesweepers), 6; YMG (gate vessels), 5; QW (training yacht), 2; AGOR (research vessels), 6; AO (oilers), 2; Tugs, 27; Auxiliary Vessels (miscellaneous civilian manned working craft), 99.

6. As of 17 February, 1969, there were 12,191 Canadian servicemen serving outside of Canada in Australia, Belgium, Bermuda, Britain, Cambodia, Cyprus, Czechoslovakia, France, Germany, Ghana, India, Israel, Italy, Japan, Jordan, Korea, Laos, Lebanon, Malaysia, Netherlands, Norway, Pakistan, Poland, Sweden, Tanzania, Turkey, United Arab Republic, U.S.A., U.S.S.R., Vietnam, Yugoslavia.

7. The minimum annual salary of a private is $2700, the maximum, $5460.

8. The basic annual salary of officers is as follows: Officer Cadet, $2,316; Second Lieutenant, $4,668; Lieutenant, $7,116; Captain, $9,348; Major, $11,952; Lieutenant Colonel, $14,388; Colonel, $18,012; Brigadier General, $21,444; Major General, $25,320; Lieutenant General, $27,684.

DEFENCE CONSTRUCTION CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,402—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the total number and the respective amounts of the contracts awarded by Defence Construction (1951) Limited for each of the last four years (a) to Canadian contractors (b) to contractors in the Province of Quebec?

2. How many of the contractors who were awarded contracts during these years went bankrupt while carrying them out, and what were the losses suffered by (a) Canadian contractors (b) contractors in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Insofar as Defence Construction (1951) Limited is concerned: 1. (a) Canadian contractors: 1965, 341, $20,347,956.54; 1966, 397, $19,150,596.02; 1967, 381, $19,930,310.52; 1968, 301, $12,242,526.53; (b) Quebec contractors: 1965, 57, $3,027,229.57; 1966, 78, $3,221,710.29; 1967, 66, $3,730,108.00; 1968, 61, $2,792,902.28.

2. (a) 1965, 4; 1966, Nil; 1967, 1; 1968, Nil; (b) 1965, 3; 1966, Nil; 1967, Nil; 1968, Nil.

The losses suffered by the contractors is not known.

[English]

APPLICATION OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 1,409—Mr. Caouette:

1. Does the 11% federal tax on building materials apply to works of art and, if so, what was the total sum received to date from this source by the Department of National Revenue?

Questions

2. Does this tax apply to materials used in the making of frames for works of art and, if so, what is the sum received from this source?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): 1. The sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials applies when these materials are used in producing works of art.

The amount of revenue is not determinable since manufacturers of building materials rarely sell materials directly to persons who produce works of art.

2. Sales tax at the rate of 11 per cent on building materials and 12 per cent on other materials used in the making of frames for works of art applies. It is not possible to determine the amount of sales tax received from this source for the reasons outlined in 1 above.

CANADIAN FORCES INSTRUCTION STAFF

Question No. 1,422—Mr. Robinson:

1. In what countries does Canada provide Canadian forces staff for instruction and/or information purposes?

2. Does Canada provide any (a) supplies (b) installations (c) equipment for the Armed Forces of any other country and, if so, to what extent and what is the cost to Canada for each country?

3. Does Canada provide exchange officers and/or personnel from the Canadian Forces for training purposes in other countries and, if so, which countries are involved and is the arrangement reciprocal?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. For instructional purposes: Ghana, Malaysia and Tanzania.

2. Canada provides a Mutual Aid Program to support the T-33 Silver Star training aircraft being flown by the Royal Hellenic Airforce and the Turkish Air Force. The cost of this support program for the calendar year 1968 was $439,000.

3. Yes, reciprocal arrangements exist between Canada, Britain, France and the United States of America to exchange officers and men for training purposes.

MILITARY INSTALLATIONS TRANSFERRED TO FRANCE

Question No. 1,423—Mr. Robinson:

1. What was the total cost of military installations, buildings and equipment utilized by Canadian forces and subsequently turned over to France?

[Mr. Caouette.]

2. Has any agreement been made between Canada and France whereby Canada will be reimbursed for installations, buildings and equipment?

3. What was the original arrangement and/or agreement whereby Canada would locate Canadian force personnel in France regarding (a) duration of arrangement (b) provision of installation, buildings and equipment (c) removal of installation, buildings and equipment?

4. What is the cost to Canada to relocate the Canadian forces for installations, buildings and equipment?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. The capital cost for Canadian financed facilities at Metz and Marville was $11,014,000.

2. Not yet, this matter is still under review.

3. Canadian Forces were located in France under the provisions of the Franco-Canadian Airfields Agreement of 14 May, 1952. (a) The Agreement was to remain in force as long as the two governments were bound by the North Atlantic Treaty signed in Washington on 4 April 1949, or until it was terminated by agreement between the two governments; (b) and (c) Under the provisions of this Agreement, Canada retained the right to remove any equipment, facilities or other moveable property, including prefabricated structures, which Canada had financed, and to which the NATO Common Infrastructure program did not apply.

4. $5,000,000.

CHANGES IN ONTARIO MEDICAL PLAN TO ENSURE ELIGIBILITY FOR MEDICARE

Question No. 1,454—Mr. Kaplan:

What changes would be required to federal medicare legislation and regulations to make eligible for federal contribution, the provincial medical insurance plan presently in force in Ontario?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The provincial medical insurance plan presently in force in Ontario, OMSIP, covers approximately thirty per cent of the population of Ontario.

In order to permit federal contributions to be made, either present coverage would need to be increased to meet the initial ninety per cent requirement of the Federal Act and minor adjustments made to portability provisions, or the Federal Act would need to be modified in these respects.

TOTAL REVENUE FROM TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 1,512—Mr. Latulippe:

What is the total amount of the tax on building materials collected in all of Canada and in each province?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): Sales tax applicable to building materials is not segregated but is included in the total sales tax collected.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

EXPENDITURE FOR FEDERAL EMPLOYEES IN YUKON

Question No. 766—Mr. St. Pierre:

1. How many federal government employees lived in the Yukon and Northwest Territories during the last year for which full records are available?

2. What was total payroll in that year for these employees?

3. Of this total, how much was Northern Living Allowance or similar type of bonus?

4. What was the value of free or subsidized home rentals, free or subsidized home heating and other similar benefits supplied federal employees in these regions?

Return tabled.

DOUGLAS AIRCRAFT COMPANY— FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Question No. 1,091—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Has the Government of Canada provided any financial assistance to the Douglas Aircraft Company of Canada since its formation in 1965 and, if so, for what purposes and under what conditions?

2. Is the Government of Canada presently considering financial assistance to the Company and, if so, for what purposes and under what conditions?

Return tabled.

EMERGENCY MEASURES ORGANIZATION— COMPOSITION AND POLICY

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the policy of the federal government regarding the Emergency Measures Organization?

2. How many sub-units of EMO are established in Canada?

3. What are the terms of reference of each EMO unit?

4. Where are each of the EMO units located?

5. What was the cost of each of the units during the years 1960-68 inclusive?

6. Does the federal government provide any grants to municipalities that have EMO units?

7. Do municipalities contribute financially to the EMO undertaking in their municipality?

8. Do municipalities provide assistance by way of buildings and/or service to EMO and where are such provided and what is the value of same?

9. What was the total cost of EMO to Canadians in each Province of Canada for each of the years 1960-68 inclusive?

10. What was the cost of EMO in each of the following cities: Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Vancouver, Calgary, Edmonton, London, Windsor, Ottawa, Quebec City, Victoria, Halifax, Saskatoon, Regina and St. John's?

11. Does the federal government propose to continue this program?

12. What service does EMO provide?

13. How many Canadians received training through EMO in each of the years 1960-68 inclusive and what kind of training was received and what qualifications were given?

14. Was any money spent on advertising EMO in 1960-68 inclusive and, if so, how much was spent for each of the years?

15. What courses of training are offered by EMO and who is eligible to take the training?

16. Is EMO co-ordinated with the Canadian Forces, are any joint exercises held and, if so, when and where was the last one held?

17. What is the composition of EMO?

18. Who are the Directors?

19. How many people are directly involved in EMO?

20. How many sub-units are there (a) where are they located (b) who is in charge of each unit (c) how many staff people are at each location (d) what training is carried out at each location (e) what courses are offered?

Return tabled.

STANDARDS FOR RADIATION

Question No. 1,286—Mr. Reid:

1. Are there standards governing the amount of permissible radiation, including X-Ray, emitted by television sets in Canada and, if so (a) what are such standards, and by what means were they arrived at, and (b) if there are no standards, for what reason?

2. Is there a difference between Canadian standards and those of other countries, and, if so, what are the reasons for such differences, and does the government intend to change Canadian standards to bring them in line with standards of other countries and, if not, for what reason?

3. Does the government operate a system of checks to ensure that television sets produced in Canada, and imported from abroad, conform to government standards and, if not, for what reason and, if so, what is the means of operation of this system of checks?

4. Is the government aware of any research designed to cut down the amount of radiation and X-Ray emitted by television sets, and does the government keep a running check on developments of this nature and, if so, how does this system operate and, if not, for what reason?

5. What department of the federal government is responsible for this problem?

Return tabled.

[Translation]

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 77, 78, 80 and 81 for production of papers are acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the government authorities concerned.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that notices of motions Nos. 77, 78, 80 and 81 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CORRESPONDENCE IN FIELD OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

Motion No. 77—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and any person or company engaged in the public relations field since July 1, 1968.

Motion agreed to.

CONTRACTS IN FIELD OF PUBLIC RELATIONS

Motion No. 78—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all contracts entered into since July 1, 1968, between the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and any person or company relating to the general field of public relations.

Motion agreed to.

DOCUMENT "EMPLOYMENT OF INDIGENES IN TERRITORIAL INDUSTRIES"

Motion No. 80—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the document entitled "Employment of Indigenes in Territorial Industries" prepared in the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Motion agreed to.

CONTRACTS BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND CANADIAN COMPANIES

Motion No. 81—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters, communications, reports including contracts signed, exchanged between the Government of Canada and/or the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the following companies (a) Williams and Wilson Limited, Vancouver, B.C. (b) Crockett Writers Company, Winnipeg, Manitoba (c) Berger, Tisdale, Lesly, Toronto, Ontario (d) Jacques Gay Incorporated, Quebec, P.Q.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notices of motions Nos. 69, 71, 72, 73, 74 and 75?

[English]

HOMICIDES AND ASSAULTS IN PRISON

Motion No. 71—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report resulting from the study of a survey of homicides and assaults in prison.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the reports referred to in notices of motions for the production of papers Nos. 71 to 75, inclusive, are not yet complete. Therefore there are no such reports at the present time with which to meet the terms of the motion. I would ask the hon. member, in the circumstances, if he would withdraw the motions.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Reference was made to these documents in the annual report of the Commissioner of Penitentiaries, and I therefore assumed they were available. But in view of the explanation of the minister and conversations we had earlier about this matter, I withdraw them.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

BREAKING AND ENTERING OFFENDERS

Motion No. 72—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report resulting from a comparative study of Indian versus non-Indian "Break and Enter" offender types.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

GUARD-INMATE COMMUNICATION

Motion No. 73—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report resulting from a study of guard-inmate communication in a correctional institution.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

PAROLE AS A CORRECTIONAL INSTRUMENT

Motion No. 74—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report resulting from the study of the effectiveness of parole as a correctional instrument.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EFFECT OF IMPRISONMENT ON RECIDIVISM

Motion No. 75—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the report resulting from the study of the effect of length of imprisonment on recidivism.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

HOUSING

PROVINCIAL PARTICIPATION—COMPLAINT RESPECTING STATEMENTS BY MINISTER AFTER QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising from the statement courageously made by the minister outside the house after the question period yesterday to the effect that the public housing proposals were being held up by the federal government because one province was trying to grab as much money as possible. I ask the minister whether he made that accusation when he met the provincial ministers last weekend, and if so what explanation he received in reply.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it serves any useful purpose—

An hon. Member: Don't give us that.

Mr. Hellyer: —I think it is a matter of public record that one province has availed itself of the opportunities presented in the act perhaps more vigorously than some of the others.

An hon. Member: What a crime.

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think there is anything wrong with this, except perhaps that it should be considered in the future whether or not some more appropriate balance should be worked out. I am sure my hon. friend would agree with that because his province is just as much in need of housing as are the others.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister would identify the province to which he referred in his statement, or whether he takes personal responsibility for the statement of one of the anonymous shadows of his office, that the province to which he was referring was Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure whether this line of questioning—

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There are rules, and these rules have to be respected by all hon. members. There is a standing rule of course that some restraint must be exercised in asking questions on statements made outside the house, and the Leader of the Opposition—

An hon. Member: Stop making difficulties.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Edmonton West should wait to put his question of privilege until the Chair has finished speaking. I suggest to hon. members that I have exercised considerable leniency in even allowing the first question. I am not sure to what extent the line of questioning should be pursued. This is the caution which I thought I should bring to the attention of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: If I may speak to the point you have raised, sir, I submit that the rule forbidding the asking of questions concerning statements made by ministers outside the house is becoming more and more irrelevant in view of the deplorable practice of the ministers of rushing out of the house following the question period, and either answering questions they would not answer in the house, or giving answers different from those they gave in the house. I submit that this rule was developed under different conditions, and was certainly not intended to apply under conditions such as we have today. I suggest in all sincerity that when a minister leaves the house and gives information on a subject on which he has been questioned inside the house, his answers should be treated for this purpose as if they had been made inside the house.

I also believe, Mr. Speaker, that I and other members of the opposition should be allowed to pursue a reasonable line of questioning.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Without entering into any discussion on the point raised by the Leader of the Opposition, may I say that it is because a situation of this kind was taken into account by the Chair that the original question was allowed.

Mr. Stanfield: May I just ask the minister one further question, as far as I am concerned. Having regard to the statements he has made outside the house on this subject, as to these projects being ill-conceived and creating all kinds of psychological and sociological problems, will he make a statement to the house on motions at an early date justifying his position so that it can be discussed and dealt with here in this chamber?

Mr. Hellyer: I shall be glad to give consideration to that suggestion. I think a more thorough discussion of some of these issues would be well worth while. If the hon. gentleman would consult with his unofficial member of the task force I think it will be found that he came to many of the conclusions which were reached by the other members of the task force, and it would be a good idea to discuss them on a suitable occasion.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the minister's statement outside the house gave a great deal more information than the answers he gave inside the house, I should like to ask him now whether all the housing projects awaiting federal approval come within the category of being ill-conceived, and temporary only.

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. There are many which are perfectly good, and first class, and they are being processed in the normal course. What I said in that context applies, I would say, to only a small minority of projects, though to a considerable number of units.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Can the minister tell us what is holding up federal approval of the rest of the projects, since the ones to which the minister has referred represent only a small part of them?

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Mr. Hellyer: I think largely the length of the question period, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Here is a minister who consistently refused to answer questions put to him yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and myself, and who then went right outside this chamber and proceeded to give information to the press. Now he refuses to answer questions arising out of the statements he made to the press. I submit that the kind of smart-alec, offhand reply—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —which we have just heard is not in keeping with the dignity of this house or with the responsibility of the office the minister holds. We have tried to abide by the rules of the house and, under your very able guidance, to follow the procedures laid down for our conduct, but if smart-alec replies of this kind are to be allowed as answers to questions the opposition will have no recourse but to press matters even beyond the rules as you have outlined them today.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the minister, Mr. Speaker, arising from the request of my hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition that the minister should make a statement on this subject. In view of the fact that, under the guise and subterfuge of dollar items, the supplementary estimates contain provision for the expenditure of many hundreds of millions of dollars under the housing program, will the minister come into the house at the beginning of next week, when these supplementary estimates will be before us, to justify and defend his position?

An hon. Member: Some chance.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, if it is the wish of the house I would be delighted to do so.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Is the refusal of the Minister of Transport to answer questions today in keeping with what he had in mind when he told the electors that this government intended to engage in more dialogue with parliament and the Canadian people?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

According to the supplementary estimates (B) presented to us on Monday, his department gets an increase of $2. The main estimates provided for an amount of $1,647,324,-300 and the supplementary estimates adds $2 to it.

Would the minister tell us whether this amount of $2 will be used to increase family allowances in Canada?

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SUMMER CLASSES TO RELIEVE MEDICAL MANPOWER SHORTAGE

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the serious medical manpower shortage, has the minister had any meetings with the provincial ministers of health and officials of the universities to establish the feasibility of operating the medical schools during the summer months?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, a federal-provincial task force that is going into the whole question of medical manpower and costs has been set up and is composed of federal and provincial officials. The Ontario government is participating fully in this study.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the serious situation of medical complexes that are trying to produce more medical graduates to alleviate the acute shortage of doctors, will the government give consideration to restoring the $2,000 per bed grant which the government cut off, as this is vitally important to producing the doctors that the country needs?

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I should like to indicate that there are much higher priorities in the education and training of medical personnel than the $2,000 per bed for hospitals.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question. If this is so, why has the minister and his government seen fit to reduce the annual rate of this assistance?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Munro: As was indicated at the health ministers conference held recently, there is some necessity over the next year or year and a half, as the Leader of the Opposition has himself often said, to limit costs and expenses.

Mr. Hees: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that there have been a number of supplementaries, and that this line of questioning is developing into a debate. I should like to pass on to another subject.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—USE OF R.C.M.P. TO INVESTIGATE BOMBING INCIDENTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. In view of the bombing of the premises of the Queen's Printer in Montreal and the earlier bombing of many other premises, including military armouries, can the Solicitor General tell the house the extent of the active investigation by the R.C.M. Police of this whole series of bomb attacks, and is there any intention of significantly increasing R.C.M. Police activities in these investigations?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, there are a great many questions wrapped up in that rather lengthy question, and if the hon. member would find it agreeable I would prefer to take this question as notice, and see whether I can bring forward a carefully worded reply at a later date.

FISHERIES

JAPANESE VESSEL WITHIN EXCLUSIVE ZONE—ESTABLISHMENT OF STRAIGHT BASE LINES

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Could the minister recount to the house the situation on the west coast as a result of the seizure and arrest yesterday by the Department of Fisheries of a Japanese longliner that was fishing inside Canadian territorial waters or fishing zone?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, about this time yesterday the Canadian Fisheries Protection Vessel Tanu intercepted a Japanese fishing vessel that was operating within our 12-mile fishing limit. Its crew boarded the Japanese vessel which has been taken into Prince Rupert. The department is presently requesting that the Department of Justice take action under section 3 of the Coastal Fisheries Protection Act concerning disposal of the vessel and its cargo.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question that is related to the entire matter of our territorial sea and fishing zones. What progress is the minister making towards the establishment of straight base lines?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we are making considerable progress. The matter is under active discussion at cabinet level. I think the interception of the Japanese vessel within the 12 mile limit and the use of our new fisheries protection vessels will also make our position clear internationally.

Mr. David Anderson (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker. Has the government of Canada given to the government of Japan or to Japanese fishing companies charts showing the area confined by the 12 mile fishing limit, which comes within our exclusive fishing zone?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, we have made it quite clear that our fishing zones extend 12 miles from our shores.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can he indicate what progress is being made in his discussion with other countries towards agreement on our continental shelf rights and our straight base line legislation, which was brought before the house in 1964.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Fisheries has already said, there is active discussion of this matter at cabinet level. We have already had a number of discussions with various countries. They do not all agree with our position, but we are pursuing the matter.

Mr. Stanfield: And getting nowhere, I suppose.

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of recent newspaper reports that the United States government does not fully accept Canadian sovereignty with respect to the 12 mile limit off the Arctic islands, will he inform this house whether our position on this matter is being made clear to the United States government.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had a number of discussions wtth the United States government about the definition of our territorial waters and fishing zones. As I said, we do not always obtain agreement on our position, but we are pressing it as effectively as we can.

CANADIAN COAST GUARD

PROGRESS REPORT ON WEST COAST SERVICE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, which arises from earlier questions. Will the minister on an early occasion give us a progress report on the government's present and future plans for the coast guard service on the West coast.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been no substantial change recently, and I fail to see the urgency of discussing this matter before the estimates of the department are considered. Nevertheless, if there is some particular aspect of the question my hon. friend wishes to deal with, that could be considered.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

REQUEST FOR DECISION ABOUT MAN AND HIS WORLD

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. As press conferences on Man and His World are scheduled simultaneously in Montreal and Quebec for three o'clock, could the Prime Minister inform the house of the decision to be made by the government, through the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, so that parliament may get the news before the press?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot, since the federal minister has negotiated various positions with the provincial government and the municipality and the decision to be made depends on the positions to be taken by those two authorities. Our position is known to us but is conditional, of course, upon the acceptance of some proposals by other authorities on whose behalf I cannot speak.

Mr. Valade: A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell us if the minister is to come back to the house before holding a news conference about this decision?

Mr. Trudeau: That would seem rather difficult to me, Mr. Speaker, since the news conference must take place at three o'clock. As for us, we have negotiated once more with the municipal and provincial authorities and they are as eager, I think, as the hon. member to know the outcome of such a discussion. There is no need, I believe, to wait till tomorrow at 2:30 p.m.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTH VIET NAM—REPORT ON CANADIAN PERSONNEL FOLLOWING BOMBING ATTACK

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which is a sequel to the one I asked yesterday about the bombing attack on the Canadian T.B. hospital in Viet Nam. The Prime Minister and Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to this matter previously. Since there are conflicting reports about the well-being of Canadian personnel in the hospital, can the minister inform the house whether Canadian personnel are safe. What is the general situation, as it relates to this Canadian aid project?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report that the two Canadians serving at the Canadian T.B. Centre at Quang Ngai, Dr. Michel Jutras and Mr. Arthur Ludwick, are well and uninjured. There was a night attack on February 23 in the vicinity of the town of Quang Ngai, apparently directed at military establishments, which resulted in damage amounting to an estimated $16,000 to the equipment T.B. Centre. Arrangements are Canadian T.B. Centre. Arrangements are being made to repair the damage and it is considered by the Canadian Medical Director of the project that there should be no interruption in services. The situation which is being kept under continuous review does not appear to warrant any evacuation of Canadian personnel at this stage.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POSSIBILITY OF REVISION OF BUILDING HEIGHTS LIMITS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question either to the Minister of Public Works or to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development in his capacity as minister responsible for the National Capital Commission. In view of recommendations made yesterday to Ottawa city council concerning building height limits in the City of Ottawa may I ask whether the federal government will revise its plan with respect to the height of the National Defence tower and other public buildings, in order to conform with these recommendations?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, this report will be studied by the National Capital Commission, which will no doubt make recommendations to the minister who in turn will inform the cabinet. We shall also have consultations with the city of Ottawa, but for the time being the situation remains unchanged.

BANKRUPTCY

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO EFFECT LIMITATIONS

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Justice. Would he tell the house if his department intends to take steps to intervene directly and determine why the number of bankruptcies among retail furniture dealers doubled during the first nine months of 1968?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The administration of the Bankruptcy Act, before criminal proceedings are taken, comes under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

[English]

TRADE

GUYANA—SHIPMENTS OF BAUXITE TO CANADA

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. What measures are contemplated by the government with respect to the reported announcement by the government of Guyana that all exports of bauxite to Canada will be cut off in the near future. I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because of the serious economic consequences to Canada, and in particular to the aluminum industry, that would result if this threat were carried out?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I take the question as notice. It is the first I have heard of the matter and I should like to examine its authenticity, as well as its possible consequences.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General able to answer the question I asked on Monday?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker on Monday last, as appears at page 5847 of Hansard, the hon. member asked me the following question:

> In view of assertions made publicly by Mr. Paul Akehurst of Canadian Contemporary News concerning depositions in a civil case in California indicating possible abuses of diplomatic privileges by Canadians abroad, including a possible connection with narcotics offences in Mexico, will the minister consider making a statement to the house tomorrow on this serious issue?

I replied that I would be very glad to obtain the necessary information and bring forward a reply either Tuesday or Wednesday, depending on how quickly I could get the information.

I have examined this matter carefully. The facts are that the husband of the person involved in the civil case now before courts in California is a public servant who had been posted abroad prior to 1951, but who has not been posted abroad since that time. Nothing in the files involved him in any questionable activity and there were no abuses of diplomatic privileges by him. Allegations of abuse of diplomatic privilege were brought to the government's attention many years ago and were investigated at that time, but no evidence was found to support them. Those allegations only indirectly concerned him and did not directly or indirectly involve anyone else in the Canadian diplomatic service.

The allegations concerning narcotics offences involving the party to the California litigation were investigated at the time they were made, and no basis for criminal action was discovered. The investigation did indicate that the person concerned was under the care of a physician, and drugs that were not narcotic drugs were being prescribed for the medical condition.

Although the question by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal did not ask about other investigations, I think I should add that there have been investigations relating to a bankruptcy in November 1966. This last mentioned matter is still current.

As to the civil proceedings now before the courts in California, I am sure the house would not wish me to make any comment.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Did the Trustee in Bankruptcy, Phillip Marglese, formally recommend in 1967 a prosecution on this aspect of the case on the grounds of fraud and misrepresentation? If so, what action was taken as a result of that recommendation?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I am not sure, Mr. Speaker, exactly what the hon. member is referring to. To which precise recommendation of fraud is he referring, and against whom was the charge to be preferred?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In the course of the investigation did the Solicitor General find anything messy in this case to justify the use of the word "messy"?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, I did not use the word "messy". I do not know where the "messiness" arose.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Since it has been stated that there is little foundation for some of the allegations which have been made, would the minister be willing to secure a copy of Mr. Akehurst's broadcast text and table it, so that the house may have full information.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I obtained it immediately after it was made. I read it over carefully and I wonder whether the association with "messiness" might not lie in that text?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): A further supplementary question arising from the minister's answer. May I ask the minister whether he has looked into or, if not, will look into certain debts alleged to be owed by the person referred to, but not named in the reply which he gave this afternoon? Certain debts are alleged to be owed by this person to Air Canada. How long have those debts been owed, and what, if anything, has been done to collect them? Were the R.C.M.P. involved in this?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, the R.C.M.P. were not involved in this. I did look into the matter. I tried to look into all aspects of it. There is a judgment of the court against the person involved. I believe that judgment has not as yet been paid. It is a current matter.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary, if I may. If the minister has looked into the matter, would he inform the house how long that court judgment has been in effect and whether any steps have been taken to collect the money on the basis of that judgment?

Mr. McIlraith: I believe the date of the judgment, Mr. Speaker, is March 13, 1968. This is a matter of public record in the Supreme Court of Ontario. Subsequent proceedings were taken and instructions were given to the solicitors. I do not have a report and do not know what stage the solicitors have reached in carrying out their instructions.

BIAFRA—CO-OPERATION WITH CO-ORDINATOR IN RELIEF OPERATIONS—ACTION TO TERMINATE HOSTILITIES—EXECUTION OF REFUGEES

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made by President Nixon that a special co-ordinator had been appointed to aid relief operations of the Red Cross and other organizations in Biafra and Nigeria, will this government consider keeping in close touch with the co-ordinator, with a view to assisting any efforts he may recommend to relieve human suffering in those areas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): We have been very closely in touch with all relief efforts relating to Nigeria and Biafra. We have offered to co-operate with any of those who will be making donations. I do not think it would be appropriate for us to keep in touch especially with United States co-ordinator. If there are international co-ordinators, we will keep in touch with them. There are voluntary and government relief efforts here in Canada and they are very well co-ordinated. We do not anticipate any problem in that direction.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can tell the house whether he or the government have taken any initiative with regard to bringing about a solution to the struggle in Nigeria instead of repeatedly saying that it is necessary for them to agree among themselves to stop fighting?

Mr. Sharp: As I said on many occasions, Mr. Speaker, there is no lack of mediators. There is lack of agreement on certain fundamental conditions. When the leaders of the Nigerian government and the Biafra authorities agree on the basis for negotiation, then we can proceed. So far there has been no fundamental agreement. There is nothing we can do about it. We stand ready to help in any way we can, once they decide they would like to get together.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Am I correct in assuming from what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, that nothing is being done with regard to this matter?

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This relates to a question I asked the minister the other day as to what had been done to implement the minister's promise given in the house on November 26 that the government would work toward a better legal framework within which humanitarian assistance could be provided to people affected by civil conflict. The minister said he would consider this and give me an answer. I am wondering if he is ready to give this answer now?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have had an answer for a number of days. I hoped my hon. friend would ask the question again.

Mr. Woolliams: You have your book of notes. Go ahead and read it.

Mr. Sharp: May I answer another question while I look for that one?

Mr. Hees: You haven't even got it? What a government!

Mr. Sharp: The other day, February 19, the hon. member for Egmont asked me a question which I promised to answer. He is more diligent than the hon. member for Greenwood in following up his questions, so I will answer his question first.

The hon. member for Egmont asked me whether I would investigate a recent report. I quote the hon. member's words:

All male Biafran refugees in Port Harcourt are in danger of being executed?

The report originated in a Radio Biafra broadcast of February 17 which alleged that all able bodied men in a certain refugee camp had been transferred to Port Harcourt for execution and that 120 men were executed during the week beginning February 10 at Port Harcourt.

First I would note that the Lagos government denied these reports on February 18. Second, General Hamilton, the Canadian representative on the Observer Team which visited Port Harcourt February 18 to 20 inclusive has informed me that the team visited the federal prison in Port Harcourt, and two refugee centres, the latter housing 3,000 and 4,000 refugees respectively. There was no evidence to support an allegation that all male Biafran refugees in Port Harcourt are in danger of being executed. Refugee camps appear to be well administered and are receiving medical aid and food from the Nigerian Red Cross and the International Red Cross. Many male refugees were seen and ample opportunity was afforded to them to voice their complaints or fears. None was offered. The team spoke to many civilians, including the head of the I.C.R.C. there. If 120 male refugees had been slain rumours would certainly have reached them.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, relating to the ministers' reply to the Leader of the Opposition with respect to the conditions being attached by both sides in order to effect some kind of cease fire. In view of the statements made last Friday by foreign affairs commissioner Arikpo referring to new proposals for a cease fire allowing for more latitude than previously mentioned by the Nigerian military government, has our government or its representatives taken any steps, particularly at this time when there is a two day truce, towards initial discussions for a cease fire?

Mr. Sharp: Nothing would please me more than to see an agreement between the two sides upon which the initiatives could proceed.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Now may I answer the question of the hon. member for Greenwood—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the minister's concurrence with my view but I wonder whether he would answer my question concerning whether we are making use of the opportunity to further such discussions.

Mr. Speaker: I remind the hon. member and the minister that we are running out of time and I notice there are a number of other members who seem to be anxious to rise to ask questions.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might now reply to the question of the hon. member for Greenwood of February 4. We have been actively engaged in consultations with representatives of certain other countries, both at the United Nations and elsewhere concerning the co-ordination of relief to civilians who may be suffering as a result of armed conflict. We have also been in touch with the International Committee for the Red Cross. Consultations are continuing and I hope arrangements will be worked out soon for some solution of this problem in an appropriate United Nations body. The Economic and Social Council is to meet shortly. Canada is not presently a member, but some of the other countries which are represented on ECOSOC are taking the initiative for us.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH ARTEC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour if he can advise the house whether or not he has received a report of the conciliation board in respect of the dispute between the C.B.C. and ARTEC? If he has not received this report can he tell us when he expects to receive it, and can he report to the house on the state of the situation at the moment.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I have not yet received the report of the conciliation board headed by Professor Arthur. When I will receive this of course is entirely within the competence of the chairman of the board of conciliation to decide but indications are that it will be very soon.

[Translation]

TELEVISION

REQUEST FOR SERVICE AT CHAPAIS AND CHIBOUGAMAU

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to put a question to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I will direct it to his Parliamentary Secretary.

Could the Parliamentary Secretary tell us whether a final decision has been taken to provide the towns of Chapais and Chibougamau in the Villeneuve constituency with free television service in 1969?

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion, that question should be put on the order paper.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

PROTECTION OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS BY ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General.

In view of the work done by the municipal and provincial police as well as by the R.C.M.P. as a result of a series of bombings in Montreal, could the Solicitor General tell us whether the Province of Quebec has requested that the public buildings be watched by members of the Canadian armed forces? If not, does he recognize that it is essential that public buildings in Montreal be watched by the Canadian Army?

[English]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any request having been made by the province for army surveillance around federally occupied buildings,—if I understood the question correctly; but there is quite close co-operation between the police forces on this whole question of bombings in the area.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—DISCUSSIONS IN SWEDEN AS TO RECOGNITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he could bring the house up to date on the discussions which took place at Stockholm on Monday between the Canadian ambassador and the leader of the Chinese delegation.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There is nothing further to report, Mr. Speaker. I have given in the house as complete a report as I can up to the present time.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. As a result of the oversight in respect of the Atlantic region in the estimates of the Department of Public Works can the minister confirm whether this department is revising its estimates with the Prime Minister's concept of regional disparity in mind?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Athabasca.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, may I rephrase my question?

Mr. Speaker: There are only a few seconds left. I have recognized the hon. member for Athabasca.

IMMIGRATION

VIOLENCE AT SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS AND OTHER UNIVERSITIES—RELATIONS WITH WEST INDIES

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fears of a backlash developing against foreign students in Canada as a result of the events at Sir George Williams University, will the minister make a statement outlining his discussions of Monday in this regard with Clarence Bayne of Sir George Williams University?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on Monday I received a delegation of students, professors and others who were interested in the Sir George Williams affair. I had originally intended to give them half an hour, but decided they needed a couple of hours to express their views. I did so because I was deeply concerned about any possible repercussions there might be in respect of our relations with the British West Indies. I am sure members of the house would consider it most unfortunate if these events should have any unhappy consequences with respect to the very good relations we now enjoy with the British West Indies.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. We have gone beyond the time allotted. I might allow the hon. member for Calgary North to ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to ask this question of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but I shall address it to the Prime Minister. As the Department of Manpower and Immigration exercises its discretion to keep out United States deserters, has the government instructed the officers of the department to exercise the same discretion in respect of keeping out revolutionaries and other disturbers who come to our universities from other countries.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the minister has dealt with this previously in the house, but I am sure he will be prepared to deal with it again.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

MAN AND HIS WORLD—STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER AS TO TERMS OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): In view of the question put to me earlier by the member for Sainte-Marie about Expo, I should like to inform the house that I have just received information which could be given to the house since it will be announced in Montreal very soon.

At a meeting held in Montreal yesterday and attended by representatives of Canada, of the province of Quebec and of the city of Montreal, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, on behalf of the government of Canada, accepted the proposal made a few days ago by the Finance Minister of Quebec, Mr. Dozois.

The three governments have agreed to an acceptable arrangement in order to pay the share of the city of Montreal in the deficit of Expo '67.

Under this agreement, Montreal will reimburse its share of the deficit over a period of eight years, as of April 1, 1969.

As for Quebec, an adjustment was made to the conditions for reimbursement previously negotiated. Reimbursement of the $5.5 million payable during the fiscal year 1969-70 will be deferred until 1972. This arrangement will help Quebec to finance "Man and his World" in 1969. The press release indicates the numerous ways in which the government of Canada has supported "Man and his World" in 1968, and refers to a number of million dollars that Canada has contributed to Expo. (Applause)

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, as this statement was not made on motions, it is difficult for members of the opposition to comment on it. Can the Prime Minister assure us that the Minister of Industry will make a more substantial statement tomorrow, so that we may express our views on the document and also in order to give us more details about the agreement, for instance, the rates of interest and the conditions of payment?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I was reading this in answer to a question. I suggest that with regard to a statement, an inquiry may be made of the minister tomorrow. I shall mention it to him on his return.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

If the statement of the Prime Minister is really official, would he object to its being appended to Hansard?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have read notes which I received from the minister and which are not a document that can be made available to the house. I am convinced that if the minister has to make a statement, he will see no objection to tabling the substance of his text, but I have only my notes.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I think that the Prime Minister, in his capacity of leader of the cabinet, could commit himself, on behalf of the government, to ask the Minister of Industry to make a statement giving us the particulars—

[English]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. I should like to ask the minister how the indebtedness of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal will be treated in this year's government accounts, and whether it will appear as a debit.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of a deficit; it is a matter of an outright receivable, presently to the Expo Corporation, but when it is wound up it will become a receivable of the government of Canada. It is not a matter of writing it off. The amounts are receivable from the province and municipality.

TRANSPORT

FAILURE TO INCLUDE MARITIME FREIGHT RATES IN HOUSE BUSINESS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I tried to catch your eye during the question period, but perhaps I might be allowed to raise a point of order now. My question arises from the outline of legislation given by the President of the Privy Council and the government house leader on February 20, as set forth at page 5743 of Hansard. There was no reference to Atlantic transportation and the Maritime Freight Rates Act. I had hoped that the Minister of Transport would assure the extension of this act as part of the government's program.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much that this is a point of order. I suggest to the hon. member that he has made a representation for the consideration of the President of the Privy Council, but I would not think that the Chair should be expected to rule on the point as raised.

Mr. McCleave: The difficulty that arises is that the business can be announced one day by the government house leader, who is invariably here, yet invariably the minister involved in this particular case is not here. That is why I attempted to raise the matter in this fashion. If he would say yes or no, we would know where we stand.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CRIMINAL CODE

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton) that Bill C-150, to amend the Criminal Code, the Parole Act, the Penitentiary Act, the Prisons and Reformatories Act and to make certain consequential amendments to the Combines Investigation Act, the Customs Tariff and the National Defence Act, be read a second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

I wish to inform the house that I have approximately 25 or 30 minutes left to speak, and I noticed last evening that the house, or at least a number of members, seemed to agree that the question be put.

Therefore, in order to allow the house to vote on the advisibility of referring Bill C-150 to the committee for consideration, if the house agrees that the question be put, I am willing to consider my speech completed, otherwise I will proceed with it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: I want to rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

I want the house to know for sure that I have not taken my decision at noon as a result of representations or of intimidation by the hon. member for Saint-Henri (Mr. Loiselle), who said last night, as recorded in yesterday's Hansard, page 5955, and I quote:

> You will get a taste of your own medicine. You will fall into the canal and stay there—

Well that is not the reason why we came to that decision today.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do hon. members agree that the question be put? I realize that the hon. member for Abitibi has risen on a point of order and suggested that if the debate is to continue, he will go on with his speech. Perhaps I should recognize the hon. member for Abitibi.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There seems to be some difficulty.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie (Mr. Valade) want to take part in the debate?

Mr. Valade: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

I would just like to say that I was to take part in the debate today. However, I approve the proposal that has been made. My colleague, the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Asselin) had also showed his intention to speak as well as my colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, Mr. Ricard. But we are ready to cooperate with the hon. member who has just put forward the proposal, in order to speed up the work of the house.

Division

Mr. Speaker: Does the house want the question to be put now?

[English]

Is the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Turner, Ottawa-Carleton), which was agreed to on the following division:

• (3:10 p.m.)

YEAS

Messrs:

Alexander
Anderson
Andras
Badanai
Baldwin
Barrett
Basford
Béchard
Beer
Bell
Benjamin
Benson
Blair
Blouin
Breau
Brewin
Broadbent
Brown
Buchanan
Burton
Cadieux (Labelle)
Cafik
Cantin
Chrétien
Clermont
Cobbe
Comtois
Corbin
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Cyr
Danson
Davis
Deachman
Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Drury
Dubé
Émard
Fairweather
Forest Forget
Foster
Gendron
Gervais
Gibson
Gilbert
Gillespie
Givens
Gleave
Goode
Gray
Groos
Guay (St. Boniface)
Guay (Lévis)
Guilbault
Haidasz
Harding
Harries
Hees
Hellyer
Hogarth
Honey
Howard (Okanagan Boundary)
Howard (Skeena)
Hymmen
Jerome
Kierans
Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre)
Laflamme
Laing
Langlois
Laniel
Leblanc (Laurier)
LeBlanc (Rimouski)
Lefebvre
Legault
Lessard (LaSalle)
Lessard (Lac-Saint-Jean)
Lewis
Lind
Loiselle
MacDonald (Egmont)
Macdonald (Rosedale)
MacEachen
MacEwan
MacGuigan
MacInnis (Mrs.) (Vancouver-Kingsway)
Mackasey
Macquarrie
McBride
McCleave
McIlraith
McNulty
Mahoney
Marceau
Marchand (Langelier)
Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo)
Mather
Mongrain
Morison
Munro
Murphy
Nesbitt
Noël
Nowlan
Nystrom
O'Connell
Orlikow
Osler
Otto
Ouellet
Penner
Perrault
Peters
Pilon
Portelance
Pringle
Prud'homme
Reid
Richard
Richardson
Ritchie
Roberts
Rochon
Rock
Rose
Roy (Timmins)
Ryan
Saltsman
Schreyer
Serré
Sharp
Skoberg
Smerchanski
Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi)
Stafford
Stanbury
Stanfield
Stewart (Cochrane)
St-Pierre
Sulatycky
Thomas (Maisonneuve)
Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley)
Tolmie
Trudeau
Trudel
Turner (London East)
Turner (Ottawa-Carleton)
Wahn
Walker
Watson
Whelan
Whicher
Whiting
Winch
Woolliams
Yanakis
Yewchuk—158.

NAYS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Asselin
Beaudoin
Caouette
Carter
Coates
Comeau
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dionne
Downey
Dumont
Flemming
Forrestall
Fortin
Gauthier
Godin
Hales
Harkness
Howe
Lambert (Bellechasse)
Lambert (Edmonton West)
Laprise
La Salle
Latulippe
Lundrigan
MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond)
MacLean
MacRae
McCutcheon
McGrath
McKinley
Marshall
Matte
Mazankowski
Monteith
Moore (Wetaskiwin)
Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys)

Noble
Paproski
Peddle
Ricard
Rodrigue
Rondeau
Rynard
Scott
Skoreyko
Southam
Stewart (Marquette)
Sullivan
Tétrault
Thompson (Red Deer)
Valade—54.

• (3:30 p.m.)

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT

AMENDMENTS DEFINING VARIOUS TERMS AND AUTHORIZING THE EXERCISE OF POWERS

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-172 to amend the Financial Administration Act be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, surely the minister intends to make a statement, even if a brief one, on a matter of such consequence as this, setting out the reasons for this proposal so that we on this side may be able to respond. I am not inviting the minister to make a two hour speech, of course. I want to make that quite plain.

Mr. Drury: I accept the invitation extended by the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and take note of the suggestion he made that my observations should be limited.

At various times since the publication of the Report of the Royal Commission on Government Organization, better known as the Glassco Report, this government has informed the house of the progress which has been made in the study and implementation of the recommendations contained in that report.

Hon. members are doubtless aware of conditions which existed in the days preceding the commission inquiry. There were many defects in the machinery of government. A failure to adjust the concepts and processes of public administration to a dynamic society had severely limited the capacity of departments to manage effectively their large and complex operations.

The commissioners, in the report on their inquiry, noted the formidable structure of detailed central control, which they described as costly, unproductive and frustrating. These were controls which not only divested departments of the authority deemed essential to effective management of operations, but controls which had seriously weakened the sense of responsibility of departmental managers. Organization and systems had become unresponsive to changing conditions, needs and priorities.

The commissioners found that techniques of modern management, appropriate to public or private enterprise, were almost totally lacking. It followed logically that staffs were not adequately equipped to develop and implement concepts and systems essential to efficient operations.

Against this background of a vast organization, limited in its effectiveness by proliferation of controls, by divided responsibility, by an absence of modern management concepts, and by an all-pervading sense of frustration with the unreasonable restraints of the system, Glassco set out a concept of management that would revolutionize the machinery of government.

The challenge of the Glassco Report was quickly taken up; there followed a long series of events and hard work which have resulted in dramatic change in the style and calibre of administration in the government of Canada. Following study of the commissioners' recommendations, central agencies quickly reorganized to provide the leadership that would be needed to pilot the implementation of those recommendations. Extensive training programs were developed in a number of specialized areas, but especially in accounting, and departmental staffs were prepared for new and greater responsibilities.

Where senior level staff resources were inadequate to launch the program of administrative reform, we turned to the private sector and attracted highly-qualified personnel into the service. We also brought in consultants to speed up the process of reform and our staff learned from them. At the same time we developed our own specialized consultant capacity, so that the momentum of management improvement would be maintained.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Now departments have reached a level of managerial competence which could hardly have been contemplated when Glassco and his distinguished colleagues were commissioned to undertake their inquiry into government organization and operations. A full exposé of accomplishments to date would be difficult. However, by way of a further example, the introduction of program budgeting is unquestionably one of the historic milestones in the development of public administration, and Canada is recognized as a leader in this development.

Many other measures have been taken to implement Glassco's basic concept of management and his specific recommendations. Financial management throughout government has improved quite dramatically. The wisdom of Glassco's main theme and his faith in people to react positively when given authority and responsibility have been amply demonstrated.

Throughout government much has been done to reap the benefits of the Glassco commission report, and we are on the threshold of implementing the remainder of the most fundamental proposals respecting financial administration and organization. Now, with some measure of pride, I am able to propose in this bill to amend the Financial Administration Act significant and far reaching changes for improvement of efficiency and effectiveness of government operations.

It is not a coincidence that the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act is closely related to the government organization bill, since the latter bill will also implement major Glassco recommendations. Where, in the bill that I have placed before the house, the control functions of the Comptroller of the Treasury would be transferred to departments, in the government organization bill the office of the Comptroller would be the base on which would be built the services side of the department of supply and services. This organization would have a new and vital role to perform in government operations and in pursuit of efficiency and effectiveness in support services. All of this was visualized by Glassco where he discussed a new approach to the tasks of management and the concept of common supporting services.

Because the Financial Administration Act and the proposed amendments are rather technical, I imagine hon. members will want to take some time to study the bill. Therefore, I believe it would be appropriate if I merely highlight the most significant proposals.

A moment ago I spoke of the proposed transfer of financial control functions to departments. This change would involve the offices of the Minister of Finance, Receiver General and Comptroller of the Treasury; and the functions of pre-audit, commitment control, allotment control, keeping the accounts of Canada, and preparation of the public accounts.

The proposal would end the duplication of work and divided responsibility in the area of financial control which Glassco criticized, quite correctly in my own view, and it would permit—indeed it would require—departmental managers to assume full responsibility for their own financial management. In this situation, managers could be held accountable for their performance in managing their operations. In addition, considerable economies may be expected from implementation of this proposal.

Hon. members will know it is proposed that the office of Receiver General would assume the statutory responsibilities of the Comptroller of the Treasury, other than those which will be transferred to departments. In addition to current Receiver General responsibilities, that office would be assigned responsibility for such major functions as cheque issue, keeping the accounts of Canada, and preparing the public accounts.

Other proposals for amendment, while not specifically related to Glassco recommendations, or with reorganization, are important for improved efficiency and effectiveness in government operations. Included in this group is one respecting fees and charges for services, which would permit the introduction of a more efficient system for setting fees and charges. Glassco dealt at some length with the question of non-tax revenue and the need for improved management in this area.

Currently, the statutory framework for the determination of fees and charges to be made by departments for services which they provide creates a number of difficulties in managing this aspect of public administration. In addition, the act is not in a form that encourages departments and agencies to keep under constant review the level of charges. Furthermore, certain charges are fixed by statute and therefore remain unchanged for many years. The proposed amendment is designed to rationalize and improve the effectiveness of the administration of charges for services.

Part V of the act, which deals with public stores, is now considered inadequate to meet the needs of modern property and materiel management practices and should therefore be amended. It is proposed, first, to rename the Part "Public Property", so that the amended part would cover both real property and materiel, and second, to empower the treasury board to regulate the custody and control of public property.

The section which refers to revolving funds would be deleted. I believe that it would be infinitely more effective and realistic to use the device of regulations for the very extensive and complex directions which are needed today in respect of revolving funds, since these funds now cover a wide variety of activities not contemplated in the existing sections, which concern only stores activity.

A proposed new Part VIIIB, which would be titled "Assignment of Debts Due to the Crown under Payment Bonds", is the last major proposed amendment I wish to mention. This proposed part concerns the assignment of debts due the Crown under labour and material payment bonds. These bonds are purchased by contractors who enter into government contracts, and are designed to protect sub-contractors and suppliers in the event of the bankruptcy of the main contractor. The purpose of this new part is to give sub-contractors and suppliers working on federal government contracts the right of action before the courts by making them assignees of the right of the Crown to sue under payment bonds. Sub-contractors and suppliers working on federal government contracts will then have protection similar to that afforded by provincial mechanic's lien legislation.

I have discussed very briefly only some aspects of this bill. However, I would be pleased in committee to go into detail on the Clauses of the bill and to answer, to the best of my ability, any questions which hon. members may wish to ask.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there are a few comments I should like to make in connection with this bill. As the minister has said, a good deal of it is technical, relating to matters of detail that members of the committee will wish to inquire into very carefully.

The minister referred to the Glassco report and the implementation of that report, which I must say seems to some of us to be a very slow process, indeed unnecessarily slow. When he spoke of the improved financial management that had taken place as a result of the steps that the government had already taken, it caused me to wonder just what the minister does regard as improved financial administration in view, for example, of the great discrepancies between the estimates that were originally tabled for the current year and the expenditures for the current year that we now know the government has made. I cannot help but wonder, if this is the result of improved financial administration, what we would have been confronted with in the absence of these improvements.

It seems to me that a good deal more than the kind of reorganization contained in this bill is going to be required before the country will have confidence in the financial administration of this government, in view of the experience this past year. In presenting this bill the government assumes, of course, that the bill relating to government reorganization will pass. Certainly, some provisions of the present bill, including the schedule, cannot be effective unless the other bill passes.

• (3:50 p.m.)

I now wish to raise a question having to do not only with financial administration but also with the supervision over expenditure and finance in general to be exercised by an officer of parliament—I think that is a correct designation—the Auditor General. I think it is proper to discuss the Auditor General under this bill. From what has been said, it appears that the government is presenting its accounts to the house in such a manner that they are confusing. That is not my phrase; the minister used it. The government apparently is trying to be deliberately confusing. In future it may no longer be possible for parliament to supervise government expenditures. We may not have reached that stage yet, but we seem to be heading in that general direction. If the government continues to try to confuse the house and country with the sort of estimates and accounts it now presents it will be very difficult for parliament to maintain any watch over government expenditures. Each year those expenditures increase. This year they are about $1 billion over the expenditures of last year, and in the coming year they will be about $1 billion over this year's expenditures. With those increased expenditures come increases in taxation. Many hon. members of the house do not approve the form those increases have taken.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary to labour the point. It is of increasing importance to the country that parliament should have effective power in scrutinizing government expenditures. Obviously, the office of Auditor General is becoming increasingly important. Although the government may confuse ordinary hon. members of the house, it will not confuse the Auditor General if he has adequate staff at his disposal for the job he is supposed to do. It is urgently important, therefore, for legislation to be introduced with regard to the office of the Auditor General. The Auditor General must not be an appendage or emanation, so to speak, of the Financial Administration Act. He must be independent and legislation ought to be introduced specifically to ensure the freedom of action of the Auditor General. Provision should also be made for him to have the necessary means to inform parliament and the country. He ought to have adequate staff and facilities to enable him to report to the House of Commons about the financial affairs of the country.

It is inherently wrong for Treasury Board to control the administrative funds and staff of an officer who has the responsibility of reporting to parliament on the government's financial actions and wrong for Treasury Board to have power to veto suggestions the Auditor General considers necessary for the adequate carrying out of his duties. I do not suggest the Auditor General should have a blank cheque; but I think we ought to establish machinery under which the Auditor General can ask the house directly for funds he considers necessary for the adequate carrying out of his office. That machinery should become part of our routine.

This house ought to vote directly on the Auditor General's requests with regard to the establishment of staff. The consequences of having Treasury Board control the administrative expenditures of the Auditor General are becoming increasingly serious. That officer is supposed to audit and check government expenditures and I cannot emphasize too strongly how important it is to have present inadequacies in this regard corrected. I will not feel secure, and I do not think many other hon. members will, until adequate arrangements have been made for the Auditor General to secure the staff and facilities he needs so that he may report to parliament on the financial condition of the country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I begin my remarks by using a word that gave the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) prominence in the newspapers. I do so by saying that in this bill we may be dealing with one of the ineluctable facts of life. Nevertheless, I do not think we should accept everything as ineluctable.

I agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that we are in danger of losing almost complete parliamentary control over government expenditures. I recognize that conditions over the years have changed very much. Government operations have become so massive and extensive that administrative methods satisfactory a generation or a century ago will not fill the bill today. Accordingly, it is desirable to have the whole problem examined in the way the Glassco commission did in order to see what improvements can be made to the government's financial operations.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

I have the impression, Mr. Speaker, that we are now setting up the government as a kind of crown corporation, a kind of colossus that is out there by itself, running itself, and parliamentary control over it is little more than a fiction.

May I be specific about one or two aspects of this bill which I think have that effect. There is a clause in the bill which, I admit, carries forward a section that was in the old Financial Administration Act; but it carries it forward and underlines it in a way that I do not believe is necessary. I refer to the clause which makes it possible for money relating to an item in the estimates to be spent by the government even though that item has not yet been passed by parliament. I draw to the attention of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) the fact that some rather extensive changes were made in the rules of this house during the course of this session. One of these changes requires that the main estimates shall be voted on and decided by the House of Commons by June 30 of each year. Under the former rules, the estimates did not get passed until the fall and sometimes not until December, January or February. Under those conditions, one could understand the need for certain administrative latitude but these new rules changed all that.

• (4:00 p.m.)

I speak as one who had the privilege of being a member of the committee on procedure and I can say that one of the motivations in making this change was to have more parliamentary control over government expenditures. We agreed to the abolition of Committee of Supply because we felt the discussion of supply estimates on the floor of the house was really just debate on various subjects and not on examination of the estimates. We agreed it would be better to have a minute examination in committee. With great emphasis, our eyes wide open and with determination, the provision was made that parliament ought to make its decision on the estimates by the end of June of each year. Our reason was clear. We wanted to get away from the practice which has been in effect for so long of spending money before it was provided by parliament.

The section to which I have referred has been redrafted and makes it even more clear that money can be spent as long as it has been included in the estimates, even though those estimates have not yet been passed. I think the government should have moved in the other direction when bringing forward this section. Otherwise, the talk of trying to get more parliamentary control over expenditures is meaningless.

I turn now to the proposal to abolish the Comptroller of the Treasury. I recognize the arguments put forward by the Glassco Commission in this respect. The attempt is to put government on a business basis, or to delegate responsibility. As I understand it, the main function of the Comptroller of the Treasury was to certify before money was spent that there was parliamentary authority for it. This authority is now to be transferred to the several deputy heads of the departments. Now, instead of having one man responsible to parliament to make decisions as to whether or not it is proper to spend this money, we will have 20, 25 or perhaps even more. These men who will now make the decision to spend money are the deputy heads of the departments who are involved in policy and in spending. These are not employees or public servants with the same approach as an auditor, or the approach of one who is trying to keep a check on things.

I studied the bill as much as possible in the short time which I had it. I listened to what the President of the Treasury Board had to say. I realize some of the functions of the Comptroller of the Treasury are being transferred to the minister or to the Department of Supply and Services. His main function as far as parliament is concerned is the checking of expenditures before they are made. That is now being transferred to the deputy minister of each department.

The minister can use his favourite word and tell us this is one of the ineluctable facts of life in a modern government, but how far does it go? Do we lose completely the parliamentary control of expenditures. I believe it was last February when members of the procedure committee visited Britain in order to study their rules. We learned that it was decided over a century ago in Great Britain that control could not be maintained over such a large operation by the Committee of Supply performance which they had or which we formerly had. It is my impression that Great Britain has replaced the control of the Committee of Supply with a tighter control on the part of the Auditor General and of an officer such as the Comptroller of the Treasury. I feel we are going in the wrong direction.

We had no option but to change our procedures so far as the Committee of Supply was concerned. We can do a better job of examining the estimates in committee, but in that process we are giving up a certain area of parliamentary control. A full year's estimates have not been handled under the new rules. Next week there will be three days' debate on supplementary estimates with Mr. Speaker in the Chair. The day the main estimates are to be passed at the end of June, there will be no discussion in the house. This will have been done in committee. We will vote only on the ones upon which hon. members decide they want to vote. This will be done in the house with Mr. Speaker in the Chair. We will rely on the various committees having done their job. If along with that, we extend to departments the right to spend money before it is voted and if we abolish the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, this final operation will be even further removed from parliament.

The argument is put forward that this is a responsible government and if it acts wrongly, it can be defeated. That is rather fictional. It is not only fictional, but too late. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the committee to which this bill will be referred will take a close look at it. The clauses dealing with management of property are sensible and businesslike. The clauses dealing with debts owing the Crown and the clauses dealing with various accounting details are important, but I think the general picture is not good and should be studied again. My impression is that financial operations involving $10 billion or $12 billion, and maybe $20 billion before too many years, are something which we must accept because there are faithful civil servants working hard, thinking they are going to receive a good pension. These people will be fooled when they reach retirement age, like many who are now retired.

I looked in vain in this bill to amend the Financial Administration Act for some modification of the section which makes it possible for the government to make rebates or remissions or to forgive money owing to the Crown. As the minister is aware, several of us have complained about some abuses which I think have been exercised under this provision. I refer of course to the classic abuse of 1962 when the government of that day managed to increase duties by a combination of raising them under the Customs Act higher than they wanted to and then cutting them back by using the section in the Financial Administration Act in respect of rebates. This has been done in quite a few cases. One example is the interesting Brinco case in respect of which the government, seeming to think it had to do something for that outfit down in Newfoundland, used this rebate section in the Financial Administration Act to provide relief from a tax that parliament decided was to be paid. As I read that section in the Financial Administration Act, it would not seem to confer that kind of authority at all. When it was used in 1962—I believe wrongly—the government that came in a year or so later received advice that it had better legalize the previous action by a statute, lest in the courts it be proven this was an abuse. I think that is a section in the Financial Administration Act that ought to have been dealt with in this bill.

● (4:10 p.m.)

This might seem to be a little different tack than the one I have been taking, but it is in the same field. What I am concerned about is parliamentary control over expenditures, over the government and over the executive. I do not for one moment ask that we go back to a committee of supply operation such as we had in this House of Commons in the 1870's or 1880's when the Canadian financial operation was a very small proposition. I admit that the financial operation must be set up on a business basis and that there must be an operation with people in charge; but they should not be left as czars unto themselves. There should be a responsibility to parliament. Parliament should have precise people like an Auditor General and a Comptroller General. Parliament should say the money cannot be spent until it is voted. I think unless we do that sort of thing we will be surrendering more and more parliamentary control over the expenditure of money. In my view the government must make its operations more businesslike, yes, but let us remember that it is not a private business; it is the people's business. We represent the people and the final say on these things should be ours here in parliament, on their behalf.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would be angry with myself for not saying a few words at this stage of the motion for second reading of Bill C-172, concerning the Financial Administration Act.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

This bill is a first step. I hope the government is sincere in its desire to reform the financial administration. Having attentively considered every clause of this bill and attempted to foresee its consequences, Mr. Speaker, I still believe it is a first step and I still consider it definitely insufficient.

As regards the main effects of this bill, I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who spoke before me, has explained them well. I believe the only result of this bill is to pursue what has already been so well undertaken, namely to deprive parliament more and more of its power to control the financial administration in order to put it into the hands of deputy ministers or "deputy administrators". Thus, Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons is steadily losing its privilege and its power to control efficiently the administration of the common weal, not in its political aspect, but essentially from the standpoint of the financial administration.

Mr. Speaker, my comments are based upon seven points with which I will deal very briefly.

First, I say that the government spends the money before it is voted by parliament. I suppose several hon. members have looked into the famous Glassco Commission report, which considered the oer-all problem of government reorganization. The Commission advocated a more modern, more efficient and simpler administration.

As one considers the bill, Mr. Speaker, one can see that it will not solve the problem that has faced us for so many years. Indeed, the government spends money even before it is voted by parliament. This is why I dealt with this subject at the beginning of my speech; I want to oppose it tooth and nail, because I claim that the House of Commons is the supreme institution, the people's institution in the highest sense of the word, the institution where responsible ministers must account for the administration of their department and for the various crown corporations and financial institutions for which they are answerable to parliament. Mr. Speaker, it is essential that administrative questions be referred to parliament even before the estimate are spent. This situation shows to what extent the house of commons, as far as financial administration is concerned, is compelled to play a ridiculous part, since all a member has to do is to approve the expenses made by the government in the past year. And by the way, Mr. Speaker, I think that any intelligent, alert and experienced administrator will agree with me that to approve expenses already made, is no way to manage a private concern and even less a government.

I wish to refer to the suggestion of the Glassco Commission about a complete reorganization of the government, whether it be Liberal, Conservative Progressive, New Democratic or Créditiste in the financial and administrative fields. If you will have a look at the bill introduced by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), you will notice that this measure goes precisely against the proposals put forward by the Glassco Commission.

The Glassco Commission acknowledges not only implicitly but also explicitly, that all the ministers and Crown corporations are responsible to parliament for their administration. Though we are willing to lighten the responsibilities and the financial burden of the ministers, we must all the same allow them to keep in touch with the financial management of their own department, so as to enable them to give an appropriate account of it to parliament.

The purpose of the present bill is to abolish a number of administrative posts in the office of the Treasury Board and to transfer these duties and responsibilities to what we could call "deputy administrators" which means public servants who will have no responsibility whatsoever towards the people.

They only do it through a minister who, more often than not, lacks the time to be fully informed or to keep track of what is going on in his department.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I believe that the step we are taking now in the field of administration is a step backward rather than a step forward. On the other hand, I would not like to be too drastic on this matter for we should not of course load one and same man with the burden of too many financial responsibilities. After all, we are human beings and there is a limit to what a man can do. This applies especially in the case of ministers, considering all they have to do. In fact, they have to assume the responsibility of the whole department and keep in touch with everything that is happening there.

It is interesting to note that the work will be distributed. But, on the other hand, I should like the house to be assured that the ministers will be answerable to parliament, to a greater extent, for the financial administration of their departments. After all, it is not the civil servants who are answerable to the Canadian people, but the members of parliament.

Mr. Speaker, thirdly, I should like to point out that this delegation of powers to subalterns is not generally desirable. Although this practice has some good points, the bill before us does not give us, to my mind, the guarantee that the accounts of the ministers will be accurate, serious and complete.

I feel that the bill is lacking, especially because it does not guarantee that the members of parliament will be as well informed on the administration of the departments as they are now or, as I would wish, that they will be even better informed.

I should also like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the administrative machinery is not very flexible because it is controlled by what my English colleagues call the establishment. Indeed, until such time as the President of the Treasury Board proves the contrary, I shall claim that the establishment has far too much control over the administration, compared to members of parliament.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I do not mention it necessarily as a Créditiste, but merely as a member of parliament. I should be very glad, whatever the government may be, to be better informed about the administration of the various departments.

I believe that this the responsibility of every minister. Some of them, Mr. Speaker, do give us information about their department, and co-operate fully with the members of parliament in providing them with the information they need to answer the questions of their constituents, and thus to participate in an intelligent and sound manner in the work of this house.

However, some others may, under this act, refuse to give this kind of information, and I think that even government members know which ones I am talking about.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat that this bill is inadequate. If the government's financial administration apparatus is to be overhauled, I think it should not be done piecemeal. We should go to the bottom of this question and put everything back in order.

At the very beginning when news got around that the City of Montreal was to close down "Man and His World," I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if he agreed or if he could not consider the possibility of creating a tripartite commission to take over the administration of "Man and His World," to look and see if the exhibition could continue.

Mr. Speaker, the first answer was "no, we have no money". I did not give up and the Prime Minister finally answered that if the hon. member for Lotbinière agreed that no more aid be granted to his riding, that his constituents, those of Trois-Rivières, Bellechasse and all other constituencies receive no more aid, then perhaps government support for "Man and His World" could be considered.

When we ask him, for example, to provide assistance for any project, in Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, or any other provinces, it is always the same problem, a matter of finance.

Here is another interesting example, Mr. Speaker. There is in the constituency of Lotbinière an industry called "Caravane Val Bar" and which is located on the outer limits of a designated area. It employs over one hundred employees and will employ close to two hundred in a year to a year and a half from now, depending on government assistance. And so I communicated with different government officials, because the ministers are usually out of reach. But the officials answered that it was impossible to provide any kind of assistance for this industry because the government had no money. The same industry applies to the Quebec government; the answer is the same: no money.

Mr. Speaker, whether it turns to the municipal, provincial or federal governments, the answer is always the same: no money. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, with what do we administer?

When we look at what was handed to us a few days ago about the financial administration of the various departments, we realize all the waste taking place in every department, and especially in Crown corporations. I will come back to that subject before concluding my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, there is too much waste in departments, compared with our investments in municipalities in all the provinces, to really promote regional development.

A new department is going to be established in the near future, the Department of Regional Economic Development. What an auspicious name! I have here an editorial that appeared in La Presse on February 19, 1969 and which is very interesting in this respect, because it shows how financial administration under the present government as well as under previous governments is sheer nonsense, since nobody understands anything about it. It is certainly not with Bill C-172, which is definitely insufficient, that such a situation will be corrected.

[Mr. Fortin.]

I am quoting Mr. Roger Champoux, an editorialist of La Presse who, on February 19 last, wrote an article entitled: "Operation Rescue" regarding the setting up of this new department to encourage further investment with a view to promoting development of areas in Canada which are underprivileged economically, socially, etc. Here it is:

> For long we lived under the illusion that the country was so rich that its normal growth would never create serious problems. Well, we sing a different tune now!

And Mr. Champoux goes on to say:

> The question is not one of poverty only, but of large areas whose economy is at a standstill . . . and where social circumstances are shameful. A rich country and a precarious economy:

I for one would say an inadequate administration. Mr. Champoux adds:

> The situation is absurd. The new department will be concerned with "development". The word implies everything without stating the size of the problem to be dealt with, however.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize that we can expect great and excellent things from the setting-up of that new department. Nonetheless, Mr. Speaker, if one considers the present administration in other departments, there is absolutely no guarantee that the new one will be skillful enough to cope with the increasing needs of the Canadian population and of the depressed areas which are becoming more and more numerous in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I said a while ago that I would conclude my remarks by touching upon the Crown corporations. That is a matter which we could discuss during a whole afternoon and which is also linked to the very obscure subject of financial administration. Very few hon. members venture on that ground, indeed, acquaint themselves with the financial administration of the Crown corporations, be they agencies or not, or mixed corporations.

Mr. Speaker, there is tremendous waste. I do not say that because we have a Liberal government; I have been saying it since Crown corporations have been created. The administration of these corporations is something to be ashamed of.

First of all, there is the question of the language used by their officials. These corporations are Anglo-Saxon reserves, without any exception. Hon. members who are aware of the questions I have been asking have been able to find out what discrimation there is among these Crown corporations against the French Canadian race and the French-speaking population, since, generally, the administration of Crown corporations belongs to English-speaking people. The same situation exists in the government departments.

I would like to speak about a second point dealing with the rendering of accounts, the subject now under consideration. I challenge here any hon. member to try to find out what is going on at the Polymer Corporation, for example. It would be of no avail. I challenge any hon. member to find out what is going on at the Eldorado Mining, for example, he will be unable to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I have been working in the Parliament building for 4 years. I have been secretary to the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), and now I am a private member but I have not yet succeeded in learning how those companies are administered. I know that legally, there is a difference between proprietary corporations, departmental corporations and agency corporations.

We are now told that the Post Office department will become a Crown corporation. This possibility is now under consideration. However, Mr. Speaker, hon. members should obtain the assurance that the same thing will not happen in the case of that future Crown Corporation because it would truly be disastrous.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this matter can give food for thought to all hon. members. I would like to encourage my colleagues from all parties to get acquainted with the financial administration of the various Crown corporations. Of course, many good things are being done at the administration level, but in general, Mr. Speaker, there is a stupid and arrogant attitude towards the Canadian people, who have the right to know how their money is spent and managed.

• (4:30 p.m.)

With regard to Crown corporations and departments in general, I would like to say that it is absolutely unacceptable that the financial administration be under the control of English-speaking people. I do not have statistics here and even if I had any, I would keep them to myself because I think that my colleagues can realize the situation and study it by themselves if they are interested in the administration of public affairs.

However, Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian and a French Canadian, I want to object as strongly as I can to the kind of administration that prevails in Crown agencies. To me, there is pure discrimination against my French Canadian fellow citizens.

When we consider the proportion of French Canadians who hold positions with salaries of $17,000 and over in each of the Crown corporations and in many departments in comparison with that of English-speaking Canadians, we see that French Canadians are drawers of water and will remain so for a long time still if hon. members do not wake up. I think the situation should change in 1969. I firmly hope that the next bill dealing with official languages will contain provisions in that regard.

However, I am still puzzled about a sound and fair sharing of responsibilities, at the administrative level, between French and English Canadians within crown corporations. As a typical and most scandalous example, may I mention that, of all federal agencies, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is the most fanatically English, at the administrative level.

Mr. Speaker, this is only one example among many others, and I hope I can prove at the first opportunity that the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Supreme Court —both are very similar in this regard—are the two most anti-French institutions that exist. They would be more appropriate in England or elsewhere than in Canada. We are fed up with an administration that does not reflect a true image of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I should like to comment briefly on the auditing of the books of crown corporations and government departments. Most of the former have their books audited by private firms, at a very high cost, while the work could be done by the Auditor General of Canada. In every one of his reports since 1966, he has offered to audit the books of departments and crown corporations. But he is only allowed to audit those of a few departments and of a few crown corporations, and prevented to do the rest.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the group of workers and the civil servants who are auditing books, as well as the Auditor General himself for the tremendous job they have accomplished. The Auditor General does not fear to report, to divulge the good as well as the bad practices of the administration. The government hires good Liberals to audit books, but they show only the good side of the story.

I conclude my remarks on that, hoping that they will not fall on deaf ears, or into oblivion, but in a soil rich in ideas, so that some changes will take place, specially within crown corporations.

Before concluding my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like once more to remind the house and the minister who sponsored this bill that we would be very disappointed if this move were aimed at depriving of members of their right to participate in the financial administration of the country and giving it to the establishment. Should the present situation persist, we could rightly call the House of Commons a national debating society and we would not be administering anything anymore. Then, perhaps the Prime Minister might reasonably say that money is not growing on trees. However, it is not the establishment which is going to tell us where money is growing.

Mr. Speaker, our constituencies have great needs to fill, especially the constituency of Lotbinière. I am happy to see the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) is here. I will remind him that Air Canada seriously considers abolishing its service at the Trois-Rivières airport. That will surely be prejudicial not only to his riding but also to mine, since we are neighbours, and to the whole central area of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, that should show the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that members of parliament have no control at all over Crown corporations. He also should protest against the abolition by Air Canada of its service at the Trois-Rivières airport. That is just an example among many others we could give this whole afternoon and evening and throughout the day tomorrow. This shows how the administration of departments and of Crown corporations is increasingly taken away from parliament. In fact, hon. members have less and less influence and control over the financial administration I am even convinced that the cabinet also has less and less influence. It is a bit like in Quebec where a certain establishment is in control.

Mr. J. A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, at last real legal minds have worded Bill C-172. They give us an explanation the layman can readily understand. This debate must take place in the right context, so I quote:

> His Excellency the Governor General has recommended to the House the present measure to amend the Financial Administration Act to provide for the further deletion from the accounts of certain obligations or debts to Her Majesty or of certain claims by Her Majesty; to provide for appropriation allotments; to authorize in certain circumstances the making of contracts or other arrangements when Parliament is not in session that involve current expenditures; to extend the range of certain payments to discharge certain debts; to authorize the Treasury Board to prescribe regulations governing the custody and control of public property; to provide for the assignment to persons for whose benefit a payment bond is held by Her Majesty in right of Canada or a Crown Corporation, of the rights of Her Majesty or the Corporation to recover under the bond; to provide for the abolition of the office of Comptroller of the Treasury, the transfer of duties, and, for other consequential and related purposes.

• (4:40 p.m.)

For once, it can be understood fairly well by the layman, which is seldom the case. Ordinarily, the legal practitioners manage to prepare documents which we cannot understand and which, quite often, they cannot understand themselves. We sometimes hear of learned lawyers arguing in court among themselves for days and weeks, and even judges in disagreement on legal texts.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I wish to apologize for the inconsistency of my remarks, but that can easily be explained. I want to follow, to a certain extent, the order of the arguments put forward so far. They could not, of course, be perfectly logical, since they came from three different sources, thus reflecting three different points of view.

First, I want to say that more than half the speech made by the member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) was out of order. We did not want to tell him because we believe that such liberties can be taken in parliament. But, I should also be allowed to transgress the rules, in order to answer some of the member's arguments or to complement the information he asked for.

First, I must say that I agree with him on many points. Among other things, he said that the C.B.C. could perhaps discontinue its service in Trois-Rivières, and by the way, I was told about that possibility a few months ago, unofficially however, and for the obvious reason that the C.B.C. loses money every time it—not the C.B.C. I am sorry, but Air Canada. In fact, the C.B.C. is an obsession with me these days, and that explains my slip of the tongue. Air Canada has always been losing money every time one of its aircraft lands in Trois-Rivières. But for his information, I say to the member for Lotbinière that we have been considering for the last few months the possibility of setting up a formula to replace Air Canada by something else, in case it should discontinue its service.

I am happy to inform the member for Lotbinière that we are dealing with this problem, which goes to show that quite often in this house, some opposition members blame government members for not dealing with their problems. But our working methods cannot be the same as the ones used by the official opposition. Its role is to blame the government for everything and anything at every opportunity, as ours is to accomplish concrete things and meet certain requirements. So we try to co-operate with ministers and their officials in order to get results. When such results are public, we are happy to announce them, because public interest is at stake.

As to Trois-Rivières, I should be glad to give some explanation to the member for Lotbinière, because since that city is a large center in the heart of Quebec, not only do I want all those services to be maintained but also to be extended and improved.

I think that with the plans under consideration, if Air Canada should discontinue its service, we would get an even better service than the existing one, since the only flights now are in the morning and at night.

Mr. Speaker, the criticisms made could be summed up as follows: the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said that those are steps in the right direction, but they are long overdue. As to the member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), he feared that parliament might lose some of its control over public funds. The hon. member for Lotbinière said the same thing, while giving me the impression at times of contradicting himself, because be said, at one point: I realize it is a heavy burden for a comptroller of the Treasury or a minister, and that duties must be distributed, yet parliament should not be discharged of its responsibilities, and he added: members should even retain some administrative control. It might be better to agree on the term "administrative control", because if 265 members take it upon themselves to administer the country, we shall be able to quote the old saying: "Too many cooks spoil the broth".

To my mind, control of the taxpayers money is divided so that the whole question will no longer depend solely on the Comptroller of the Treasury who, of necessity, cannot be a specialist in 26 or 28 different fields; it will not be the responsibility of the deputy minister, who knows what goes on in the department and manages it in close co-operation with his minister who in turn is answerable to parliament. In this way, better control of the taxpayers' money is assured because, in the final analysis, the deputy minister will only have the power to act within the limits of the credits we will have voted.

As for the expenditures he will eventually have authorized, they will be studied by the house when financial statements are studied. The government therefore controls the public funds.

Mr. Speaker, to my mind, all hon. members are of good-will and recognize that the new system of parliamentary committees gives us a far more adequate control than we ever had over public funds, since the estimates are studied in sections in the committees assigned to analyse them, where we can examine all the votes with the help of high officials.

We can question them and ask them for the whys and wherefores of various situations. I should like to give an example to show precisely how efficient this control is.

The committee of which I am a member spent part of the day yesterday with high officials of a Crown corporation. We discovered by talking with them that there was a vote of $5 million which will not be needed this year. We will therefore recommend to parliament that this vote be cancelled in the estimates; that is one type of control hon. members can exercise.

This could also occur in other cases. I can give more details on this particular instance, Mr. Speaker. This year the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Company applied to the government for a $5 million loan for an investment on which I shall not dwell because it would be too long. Now that the officials of the Company have brought in their estimates, they have discovered that their profits for last year were such that they could now get along on their own. We are therefore going to cancel this item from the proposed estimates. Im my opinion, Mr. Speaker, any fear about parliament being deprived of its control over public funds is sheer nonsense a fanciful delusion. On the contrary, with the present system of parliamentary committees to scrutinize the estimates, I believe hon.

members will have more control than ever over public funds.

I sincerely believe that this bill is a step in the right direction. You will, of course, object and say that it is not perfect. The federal government is a very large plant, a huge machinery, so big, in fact, that I cannot understand how the hon. member for Lotbinière can think a member could even try to control every thing that goes on in the government. I would rather see a member specializing in his field, sitting on certain committees and trying to scrutinize and pass through a sieve all the government expenditures.

The hon. member for Lotbinière made earlier a remark which was out of order but which I feel I should answer. I share his view, to a certain extent, but I do not agree with the way he puts the problem and finds answers such as when he refers to the scandal of the lack of high-ranking French-speaking public servants.

I am, like him, one of those who deplore the fact that there are not more French-speaking people in higher positions, in the top salary brackets. But I also feel that we will not solve this problem by blaming the government for it, and that is where I disagree with him. I believe it is a problem we can solve by trying to convince the qualified people at home—when I say at home, I mean the province of Quebec—to accept to serve here, which will be something rather new in the civil service, since for more than 100 years—and I know what I am talking about because I have tried myself for many years to get some efficient people to work for the federal government, some objections were justified.

I am not saying, however, that the hon. member for Lotbinière is wrong in emphasizing, for instance, that there may be conflicts of personality. There are certainly, in some departments, senior English speaking officials who assist in the promotion of their English speaking friends; that is sure. But that is a human problem that will also crop up when there will be senior French speaking officers. That is a truly human phenomenon, and I agree with the hon. member that it should not exist and that we should take steps to cope with such a situation. I will even go further. I am positive that in the public service, which was created specifically to prevent favouritism, many cases of patronage arise at the officers' level, since those officers are not responsible to the administration.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

As for those French-speaking people who would not hold these senior posts or who would not get big salaries, the best way, I think, to correct this situation is, first, to admit that there has been progress, instead of merely crying shame, which is incredible. For example, a few years ago, nobody would have thought that the commander in chief of the Canadian armed forces could be a French Canadian. That was unheard of. Now, this is indeed a fact. We also have ministers who hold important portfolios as well as deputy ministers whose duties are far from being unimportant. Within the C.B.C. and Air Canada, French Canadians hold important administrative posts.

I understand that there are still some companies that are exceptions. A possible explanation might be the fact that in Quebec, it has not been very long since people began specializing in higher technical fields. We were told, during a whole century, that our calling was an agricultural one. Our seminaries used to train priests, notaries and lawyers, rather than economists, sociologists, engineers and specialists in all fields. For about fifteen years now, thank God, many people have been willing to get into the public service because they realize that employment in the public service pays more than ever. They realize that, today, they get quite a welcome, whereas 25 years ago—I agree on this point with the hon. member for Lotbinière—that was not the case probably. So, there is more proficiency and promotion is granted normally. Besides, I do not believe that it should be granted on the basis of language only; but rather on the basis of proficiency. Therefore, let us encourage our people in Quebec that are proficient to enter the public service so that they can show their abilities. And if they are victims of discrimination at the level of their immediate superiors, such cases can be discussed with the ministers concerned.

• (4:50 p.m.)

For example, I could tell the hon. member for Lotbinière that at the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, which he mentioned earlier, I was personally aware of cases of discrimination. I did not believe that the best solution was to bring the problem before the house. So, I went to see the minister concerned and gave him evidence of what had come to my attention. He summoned all the interested parties, and I feel that the problem will be solved shortly. If I had brought the case to the attention of the house, there would have been a tendency to generalize, even though the case was an isolated one. In such cases, I feel that this government, as well as its predecessors, have always tried to do what was best.

Mr. Speaker, I think that this bill is a step forward, even though some people say that it is overdue, that is it is not perfect yet, and objections are raised against the redistribution of the controlling powers at the deputy minister's level. I think that such a decentralization is necessary since it enables parliament to retain its control, and since we consider estimates in parliamentary committees.

I would agree with the hon. member for Lotbinière with regard to Crown corporations, Mr. Speaker, since, it seems to me the government does not have enough control over them. The hon. member for Lotbinière referred to Polymer and other corporations, including Eldorado. As for me, I am obsessed by the C.B.C. these days and that is why I would like a reform of the whole system so that ministers responsible for those Crown corporations can exert a better control over the expenditure of money.

I do not wish to be unreasonable or unfair in my expressions but it is a fact, I think, that some Crown corporations administer public funds in such a free and easy manner that it is almost scandalous.

For instance, I do not understand how the C.B.C., after showing a deficit of $165 million, can dare to ask us an additional amount of $14,500,000, when in this year 1969 of austerity, the government has levied an extra tax of 2 per cent, has cut off the winter work program and has cut investments nearly everywhere.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is unbelievable. The minister should be able to say: "Gentlemen, tighten your belt like everybody else." I am not only referring to salaries. I can understand that salaries must follow the rising curve of the cost of life, but I am referring to some expenditures which seem extravagant to us unless they can be justified.

To illustrate what I have in mind, I say that when the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation sends in South America, Africa or in Central America a team of 10, 12, 15 or 25 producers accompanied by their wifes or mistresses, at the expense of the taxpayers, this constitutes an extravagance. I feel the Corporation should produce less exotic programs and resort to less costly items. Let us tighten our belts a little, so that it will not always be the turn of the same people to do so.

In the recreational field, if we can call it that while referring to the C.B.C., we might reduce expenditures. That might be one of the weaknesses on which I would agree with the hon. member for Lotbinière, in other words, the responsible ministers should have more control on the moneys granted to the Crown corporations, on their investments and also on the way they spend such funds.

As I said, there are areas where everything runs smoothly. A while ago, I mentioned the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. Since its inception, that company has never been in the red. Never. It showed a surplus almost constantly. That corporation could be quoted as an example.

I shall mention the exact reverse, the case of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Mr. Speaker, I cannot believe that we can be justified for making up the $165 million deficit of that Crown corporation and for paying $14,500,000 more this year, while it is a well-known fact—reported by everyone—that the corporation indulges in foolish expenses. That Corporation should tighten its belt just like everybody else.

I fail to understand it for another reason. Some television and radio networks operate at a profit. Not only are they not asking the government for $175 or $200 million to finance their foolish expenses but they make money.

This may be one of the recommendations I should like to put into the official record of the house now that we are dealing with Bill C-172. It could be taken up in committee and attempts could be made to find a solution that might enable the minister, parliament let us say, to "tighten" a little more, so to speak, the expenses of the Crown companies.

As for the rest, Mr. Speaker, I have confidence in this new system under which deputy ministers will control the expenses of their department within the limits of the estimates passed by parliament, provided that their expenditures are approved by parliament when the financial statement is brought in.

As for the allegation according to which the government is asking to be authorized to spend funds which have not yet been approved by parliament, it should be kept in mind that it is not utterly impossible to imagine situations where this could happen. For example, let us suppose that a government is suddenly defeated and that the estimates have not been passed. Should the administration of the country come to a stop? Would all civil servants be left unpaid until after the election and the opening of parliament? There can be such extreme cases, but nevertheless the public administration must be carried on.

I think that the new standing orders—this is where I do not entirely agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—will better ensure that the budget will be passed within the allotted time, so that those exceptional cases will become fewer and fewer.

Such cases should nonetheless be foreseen because it is inconceivable that the public administration should be paralysed.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, having read the bill—and I repeat it is drafted in a way that laymen can understand—I say it is a step forward and that we should adopt it. Besides, I believe that the criticisms of the opposition were not fundamental but related rather to details and it must be admitted that they were quite constructive. It is sometimes comforting to realize that in spite of differences of opinions, there can be a positive attitude as was the case this afternoon.

[English]

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I intend to be very brief, Mr. Speaker, in the hope that this bill may be passed and sent to the committee. I listened with interest to what the minister had to say. I noted particularly his observations with regard to the Glassco Commission recommendations and I was quite surprised, because it is not a subject of pride on the part of this government. There lies halfway between Banff and Jasper the Columbia ice field which moves at the rate of a few feet every 100 years.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is fast.

Mr. Baldwin: I was going to say, in comparison with the celerity with which this government introduces sections of the Glassco commission report, the Columbia ice field can be likened to a space vehicle heading toward the moon.

My leader had something to say about the Auditor General and his staff. I concur in what he said. I hope the minister will pay some attention to this subject. He is looking very studious and he nods his head every once in a while as if to indicate agreement. I am sure that what will happen when he leaves here is that he will say to himself: "Thank God that's over". All the sound and salutary proposals that have been made on this side of the house will then be put into the ash can until the next time the Financial Administration Act comes up for discussion.

I want to refer to some statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I support his views regarding government control. There is no doubt that we are slowly—though sometimes more rapidly—putting ourselves in the position where parliament is losing the sort of control that it should have over the financing of government expenditures. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre referred to one aspect of this and I want to refer to another, the question of Governor General's warrants which comes up perennially in this house, in the reports of the Auditor General, and which is discussed in the public accounts committee.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out today, as a result of the recommendations of the procedure committee there now exists, within some limitation, a measure of certainty as to the extent to which and the time in which parliament votes money to the government. The total amount of the estimates must be passed by a definite date in June of each year. This means there is no longer any need for a government or for a Prime Minister—because it is the Prime Minister who exercises the right—to call snap elections without first securing from parliament the funds required to carry on the business of the country during the interval.

There is a reasonable amount of discretion still left to the Prime Minister. I forget how many hundred millions of dollars were made available through Governor General's warrants as a result of the election called by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) in June last year, but under the conditions that exist today I suggest it is completely improper for the Prime Minister to retain this right. He and the government have every opportunity to come to parliament and secure interim supply by a definite date. That interim supply then carries the government through until the estimates are finally adopted. I suggest it would be an affront, both to this house and to future parliaments, if what was done in 1965 and again in 1968 were repeated. It was improper, and I hope the government will bear what I have said in mind.

I want also to deal with the relationship between the Auditor General and the public accounts committee of this house. The Auditor General has seen fit to refer to the fact that a very substantial number of the recommendations that he made, and which were discussed by the public accounts committee, became the subject of proposals put forward by the public accounts committee. But what happens to such proposals? They are tabled with the report of the committee and are forgotten until the Auditor General, in the schedules attached to his next report to parliament, indicates that 55, or 60, or 65 recommendations that were made by the public accounts committee have been gathering dust.

That is not the way it should be. Australia, our sister country in our great Commonwealth, has a much more practical and useful way of dealing with this matter. A booklet is published periodically during the year containing the recommendations of the public accounts committee, side by side with a statement on what the government departments are doing about them.

Let me say at once, having discussed the matter with Mr. Speaker of the Australian house of representatives who was here last summer and with members of the Australian house of representatives, that it is clear governments do not dare delay either implementing or reporting on the steps they have taken with regard to proposals made by the public accounts committee.

In Australia this committee is a very useful one, composed of members of both houses. They hold regular meetings in public, and minutes are published in the same way as they are in Canada. Officials of the departments involved are most eager and very vigilant to ensure that they pay attention to what has been recommended by the committee. That does not mean that the government has to accept all the recommendations. The government could have a valid reason, which may not be made known at the time, for not implementing certain recommendations of the public accounts committee. However, there is no excuse for the government failing to give its reasons for not complying with what has been proposed.

I do not know whether we will be able to introduce this suggestion into the recommendations of the Committee on Procedure and Organization, but I would hope that from now on, when the public accounts committee does make recommendations that are contained in a report, such report is made the subject of debate in this house. I am not going to suggest there be a long, tedious debate; but if 10, 15, 20 or 25 recommendations are made by the public accounts committee, then, having in mind the speed and celerity with which this house now deals with matters of government business, and with all due regard to members of the opposition discharging their responsibilities, there is no reason at all that time should not be set aside for such debate. Then, if the government indicates it cannot accept certain proposals, let it be prepared to come into the house to defend its stand.

We have had an opportunity lately of reading in the press—I can only refer to the press; I am not allowed at this stage to refer to the transcript of evidence in the public accounts committee because its report has not yet been made—about some very unusual experiences in the Department of National Defence regarding the Bonaventure and other vessels. These press reports make shocking and astounding news to the people of this country who have been listening to the government preaching its intention to try to keep expenditures under control. When we hear what has happened to the Bonaventure and learn of the fate of other vessels in the Canadian armed forces, then I think it is about time some attention was paid to the question of avoiding this sort of thing.

I am no longer a member of the public accounts committee. I did have the very great honour of serving as chairman of that committee. It is a very good committee. I think there is a degree of non-partisanship there that ranks as high as that of any other committee of the house. At least, that was the cast at that time. When that committee makes, as it usually does, unanimous recommendations, it is not fit or proper to ignore them. Those recommendations should come before this house and be the subject of debate. The government should have an opportunity to defend its position. If it has no valid reason for not implementing certain proposals at that time, let an appropriate minister of the government say so. The point is that the people of this country are becoming increasingly conscious of the mounting tide of taxation.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Although there are many fixed or statutory charges that cannot be varied or dealt with, there are other expenditures which are flexible. On those expenditures, the government could listen to the recommendations of the Auditor General and the Public Accounts Committee. Cases involving extravagance, stupidity and the mediocre uses by civil servants of moneys provided by the people of the country could be investigated. It is the duty of the Public Accounts Committee to insist that these matters are debated; there is a corresponding duty on the part of the government to debate them and to justify positions where charges of extravagance or stupidity have arisen.

I am using the debate on this bill as the vehicle for my plea. I hope the government will listen to it and that its attention will be reflected when next the report of the Public Accounts Committee is presented here.

Mr. Mongrain: Will the hon. member permit a question? A few minutes ago the hon. member said he objected to having the country administered on certain occasions through the use of Governor General's warrants. I should like to know what ought to be done in the case of a minority government, for instance, that has been defeated and must go to the people. How would such a government obtain money with which to carry on the administration of the nation?

Mr. Baldwin: I wonder if the hon. member's question indicates that the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) may soon be joined by other members of his party and that the government may face the risk of defeat?

An hon. Member: Don't worry about that.

Mr. Baldwin: The change in the rules will take care of the situation. Now there may be only one motion for interim supply and estimates must be passed by the end of June. The power of the Prime Minister is very great. If the government is defeated that defeat should carry with it the right, if the estimates have not been quite completed, of allowing the Prime Minister to secure from the house any money that is necessary to tide the country over until after the election. Although the Prime Minister's power has become very great, I do not think we should take this power away from him. Nevertheless, we should weaken his grasp on this tool and see to it that there is no repetition of the bad practices of the past.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I shall be reasonably brief. I have always been interested in the subject matter of this bill, the controlling and spending of government money. All governments of Canada including the federal government ought to be brought to task for overspending and for not examining expenditures closely enough. If this bill will allow the government and members of the House of Commons to scrutinize more closely government spending, I say it is a good bill.

Since the war, all across Canada we have been spending money as if it were going completely out of style. Even though I sit on the government side of the house, my remarks apply to the present government. We are caught in a box because governments have not adequately scrutinized expenditures in the past. I do not know as much about federal expenditures as about expenditures made in the province of Ontario, so perhaps hon. members will excuse me if I talk about expenditures made by that province. In 1939, the year the war started, Ontario spent a total of $90 million on highways, education, welfare, lands and forestry and all those other matters provinces look after in Canada. Expenditures in 1969 will be much greater.

May I point out that 30 years after the beginning of world war II, the interest on the debt carried by the province of Ontario is greater than the total expenditure of that province on all departments in 1939. I have cited 1939 because we all remember vividly the year the war started.

You can walk the streets of Ottawa or go around the corridors of parliament and talk to hon. members and hear them say, "When is this spending going to stop; how long can it go on?" You see, Mr. Speaker, we are not competing with ourselves, but with the rest of the world. Even though the United States spends $30 billion a year on the war in Viet Nam, that expenditure being about two and a half times what our government in Ottawa spent annually, taxes down there are lower than they are in Canada. The money that is spent on the war is wasted; you might as well throw it into Lake Huron or Lake Ontario. So, I suggest that our financial men in Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver or Quebec City will have to sit down together and try to solve our financial problems because we are overspending ourselves.

We can only do so much and we can only go so far with our resources. We have a limited number of people and we are trying to keep up with our great neighbour to the south who, has a population ten times the size of ours and a gross national product 14 times the size of ours. And what does that prove, Mr. Speaker? My hon. friends here can talk about all the gold, wheat, pulp and paper and industry they want to talk about. But they will have missed the point if they do not realize that people create wealth. For the past 100 years in Canada, governments have not done a good job of attracting people. I suggest that if the government were serious about solving our financial crisis it would instigate an immigration policy which would open up this country and allow many more people to come in.

Mr. Badanai: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: We should become more like the United States and admit people from all parts of the world. It is our people who will create wealth and help to solve our financial difficulties. The present situation is not the government's fault and I do not criticize the minister who has brought forward this bill. He is doing the best he can to make sure this house controls government expenditures.

• (5:20 p.m.)

I appreciate what hon. members have said about the necessity of having the Auditor General and his staff audit the books of Crown corporations. The Auditor General is the servant of the House of Commons. By the same token, the C.B.C. Canadian National Railways and Air Canada should also be subservient to the house. The books of those Crown corporations ought to be audited by our servant, the Auditor General, and not by some large firm in Toronto, Montreal or Vancouver. They should be accountable to this house through some minister. We should be able to look over their estimates. When they are not accountable as various government departments are, they have a tendency to go away out in left field so far as expenditures are concerned. Too much money is being spent without enough thought being given. In comparison to our neighbours to the south, we are taxing ourselves right out of business. I say to the minister, all hon. members of this house and particularly members of my own party, the people of Canada last June 25 voted for a breath of fresh air. The people wanted a complete and absolute reorganization, not only of our taxing system but the spending of public money in Canada. This is our duty to the people of Canada.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): I understand there is some desire to hurry along, Mr. Speaker, but I would ask the minister when he replies to take a moment to deal specifically with the matter of the Bonaventure and the new tendering system which was introduced. The minister, acting in another capacity, announced in this house with a great deal of pride and satisfaction that he was introducing a new method of tendering which would save the country thousands and even millions of dollars on the Bonaventure. We all know the fiasco which resulted and I do not expect the minister to go into the details which are being considered in the other place. I think the minister should tell us what went wrong with his plan to take the Bonaventure from the allocated yards in the maritimes to the St. Lawrence which resulted in the loss of millions of dollars.

I would like to know also whether these amendments will ensure that a crazy minister will not get the opportunity to do this again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Bell: Surely, the minister has been challenged with regard to the Bonaventure. Would this not be an opportunity for the minister to simply say that he did not mean to do this?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I must advise the house if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Drury: I had not proposed to make a concluding statement, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that, with one exception the suggestions put forward during the course of this debate will be discussed in the committee at that time, there will be an opportunity to examine these suggestions in greater detail. I must, however, make reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster (Mr. Bell). The hon. member seems to be confused as to what this debate is about, as well as in his understanding of the proceedings of the Committee on Public Accounts. The hon. member has challenged me to deny that a crazy minister has ill performed his job. I accept that challenge and deny this. I would exhort him to inquire into the proceedings of the Public Accounts Committee and follow them a little more closely. He will discover that the repairs to the Bonaventure were initiated prior to the introduction of the bidding processes in relation to so-called unsings, I will not be more technical than that. I look forward to further examination of this bill in committee.

I move, seconded by Mr. Davis, that the house be now adjourned.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The bill should be passed first.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): We must dispose of the bill before this motion. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It has been moved by Mr. Drury and seconded by Mr. Davis that this house now adjourn. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 5.27 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, February 27, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Third report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in French and English—Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier).

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

ASSISTANCE TO MINIMIZE LOSS FROM SPOILAGE—FINANCING TERMS ON AGREEMENTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce asking him whether, in view of the imminent danger of wheat still held on farms spoiling during the warmer months that are now approaching, the minister could tell the house if the government is formulating any plans for the assistance particularly of those parts of western Canada that will encounter especially severe problems in this regard.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture usually answers this type of question, while I am mostly involved in questions of wheat transportation and marketing. With the consent of the hon. member we might wait until the minister comes in and let him answer that question.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a supplementary question for the minister to pass on to the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister urge the Wheat Board and the transportation agencies to pay particular attention to the situation in northern Alberta and in the Peace River country where, as a result of difficult weather conditions not only last fall but the year before, many farmers are in desperate circumstances.

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that it has come to our attention that many of our competitors in the wheat markets of the world are now making long term agreements with their importing nations for the duration of 20 years at interest rates which are as low as 3 per cent, is the federal government contemplating the adoption of a similar policy with regard to our surplus wheat stocks?

Mr. Pepin: I announced five weeks to two months ago that these facilities existed for the developing countries that are in need of better financing terms to buy Canadian wheat. They were approved by the cabinet and we are now making efforts to find a number of countries which could be classified in that group and would use these facilities.

REQUEST FOR FINAL PAYMENT

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister advise the house when farmers can expect their final wheat payment cheques for last year?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have said that they would be received by the first week of April.

AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Can the minister tell the house whether, in the course of his personal supervision of the railways in their allocation of box cars he has also requested the companies to pay attention to the distribution of cars among shipping points that have not yet delivered the units or the one or two bushel quotas. Do they get priority, to the exclusion of points that have completed delivery of three and four bushel quotas?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): This was indeed brought to the attention of the railways at the last meeting in Winnipeg a few days ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INCREASED SHIPMENTS THROUGH WEST COAST PORTS

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): May I be allowed to say something cheerful, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: This may be out of order, but perhaps I should hear the minister.

Mr. Pepin: I have been sitting here, Mr. Speaker, hoping that somebody would do me the privilege of asking me whether transportation to the west coast is improving. It is. On the first occasion I attended the Transportation Committee in Vancouver on February 5 there were 22 ships waiting. Now there are only nine.

Mr. Hees: They got tired of waiting and went home.

Mr. Pepin: No, except for the two I have already acknowledged left in early February—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the minister is anxious to give pleasant news but perhaps he should wait until the opportunity has arisen. If a question were asked—

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The minister says things are improving as far as the box car situation is concerned. Mention was made of the Peace River area. I have from time to time drawn attention to the situation in northern Saskatchewan. Can the minister say whether he has made clear to the C.P.R. the fact that northern Saskatchewan is being discriminated against in this area served by the C.P.R. and that action should be taken in this regard?

Has the minister brought this situation to the attention of the railroad and pointed out the serious position in which farmers find themselves because they are unable to market any grain in certain areas of Saskatchewan?

Mr. Pepin: I believe I have already answered that question, Mr. Speaker. I was trying to look at this from the western point of view rather than from a local point of view, which I recognize is important too. I just wanted to say that the rate of unloading has been improving throughout the month—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if we should not go onto another subject?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Is the right hon. gentleman rising to ask a supplementary question?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am happy to see the minister so anxious to give his story about something else, but I ask him what he is doing about the situation in northern Saskatchewan except to issue statements full of hope and optimism.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Can the Minister of Trade and Commerce indicate to us whether there has been an improvement in the grain situation?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would it not be more appropriate for the house to give consent to revert to motions, at which point the minister could make a statement?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deachman: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I was interrupted by the hon. member just as I was putting a question to the minister. My question has not been answered. May I have a reply to my simple question, as to whether or not there has been any improvement in the rate of grain shipments from the Port of Vancouver?

Mr. Pepin: I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, and give two figures only with reference to grain unloadings on the west coast. In the first week of February the railways were unloading between 300 and 350 box cars a day. In the second week the number rose to 400 to 450. In the following week the average was 550, and this week, for three days, we have an average of 625 box cars unloaded on the west coast.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I call the attention of hon. members to the fact that if we spend too much time on the first one or two questions, some of our colleagues who do not sit in the first or second rows will be most unhappy because they have not had an opportunity to ask their questions. I would ask the co-operation of all hon. members in the hope that we can move on to the next subject.

PENSIONS

CONSIDERATION OF UNIVERSAL PRINCIPLE OF ESCALATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare and it is supplementary to a question and answer of last November 19. Can the minister say what progress is being made by the review committee which is studying our welfare and pension programs? Can he say whether attention is being given to the possibility of increasing the old age security pension in proportion to the increases in wages and salaries?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, all of the income maintenance programs and social welfare programs are being reviewed in this study. No firm conclusions have been arrived at, so it is impossible to say whether any conclusions will relate to an increase in old age security or to some other solution that may be adopted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question. Can the minister say when we might expect to learn the results of that review?

Mr. Munro: I hope in due course, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—INQUIRY WITH RESPECT TO RECOGNITION

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Would the minister tell this house whether any steps have been taken to break off diplomatic relations with Nationalist China and to establish such relations with continental China?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as both the hon. member and the house know, we are now engaged in discussions with the Peking authorities. This is bound to affect our relations with the nationalist government of China, but in what way the future alone can tell.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Secretary of State for External Affairs say whether in this connection, prior to the discussions which are now going on, any action was taken or whether a special emissary was sent to contact Peking authorities, over and above the recent contacts, with regard to our establishing relations with Red China?

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacLean: A further supplementary question which perhaps I should address to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister say whether at any time during the past several months he has used the good offices or services of Professor T. K. Lin of McGill University to discuss this matter with the government at Peking?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It is difficult for the Chair to determine whether discussions had with one particular individual involve a question of urgency. If there is urgency, which is not apparent to the Chair, then the question might be answered by the Prime Minister.

Mr. MacLean: Mr. Speaker, this is a very urgent question. At the present time, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, this matter concerns both governments, and negotiations are underway. We feel we should understand the background against which they are taking place.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, having carefully considered the question and the urgency, the answer is no.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister of external affairs let the house and the country know the identity of these negotiators for Canada? Who are the people who are negotiating?

Mr. Sharp: At the present time, Mr. Speaker, the contacts are being made through the Canadian ambassador in Stockholm, who I think is a very respectable gentleman.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

REQUEST TO REFER REPORT OF WOODS COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Veterans Affairs of which I have given him notice. Would the minister advise when the Woods committee report will be referred to the Standing Committee on Veterans Affairs?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I answered before, the government is now preparing a white paper and both the white paper and the Woods committee report will be referred to the committee later this session.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TELEVISION

QUEBEC—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Secretary of State. Has the federal government refused a broadcasting licence to Radio-Quebec? If so, for what reason? Before the Secretary of State answers, Mr. Speaker, may I ask him to take it easy so that the people translating, in the confessionals, can keep up with him. He talks a little fast and we cannot always understand the translation.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps if the minister were allowed to answer the question in writing it might be easier.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government presently having talks with provincial authorities on the question of the sharing of jurisdiction over educational television? If so, when will the minister announce a policy on this matter?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hillsborough.

An hon. Member: Let the minister answer, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems that not only the people in the confessionals are having difficulty in hearing the question. The minister did not seem to hear it.

Mr. Paproski: May I repeat it, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Secretary of State whether the government is presently having talks with provincial authorities on the question of the sharing of jurisdiction over educational television. When will the minister announce this policy on this matter—s'il vous plaît.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the first question, I believe you asked the hon. member to put it on the order paper, at least that is what I understood.

As for the second question, I must say that talks are going on with many provinces about the construction of transmitters for educational television but those talks do not have any bearing on the division of constitutional responsibilities in this field.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the minister about the granting of a T.V. licence to Radio-Quebec. Will the decision be taken by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission or by the cabinet?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, broadcasting licences are granted by the C.R.T.C. It follows the policy which has been that of all Canadian governments since 1932, and that is not to grant licences to provinces or their agents. Formal instructions are now being drafted and will be communicated to the C.R.T.C. in a few weeks.

On the other hand, I wonder what prompted the hon. member's question. To my knowledge, and although I have been away no application for a licence was submitted to the C.R.T.C., but perhaps it escaped me.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I have another supplementary question.

How can the minister give such an answer when a licence has been granted to Station CKUA in Alberta?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is an argumentative question.

Mr. Asselin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The minister just said that he has not received any application for a licence from Radio-Québec and that, if he received one, it would be through the normal channels. However, the Canadian Radio-Television Commission has already granted a permit to Station CKUA, in Alberta, which is precisely a commission acting as an agent of the government of Alberta. I would like to know what direction the minister will give to his policy.

Mr. Speaker: It is obvious that the matter raised by the hon. member is argumentative and, for that reason, I do not think his supplementary question is in order.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question to the Secretary of State.

In answer to the first question put to him on the matter, he mentioned agreements with various provinces, without naming them, however. Would he do it now, and tell us as well if an agreement has been concluded with the province of Quebec on that matter?

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I did not speak of agreements, but rather of talks, contacts and discussions. Now the study group who is specifically charged with the setting-up of educational television, that is with the installation of transmitters, has met with high officials of many provinces, some being from the province of Quebec.

I do not have with me a report of those talks, and even if I did have one, I am not at all sure that it would be appropriate to reveal its contents before the study group has finished its own report.

[English]

ESTABLISHMENT OF STATIONS IN SASKATCHEWAN

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Can he inform the house of any progress in establishing certain television stations in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a statement of a very general nature which should be given by the minister on motions.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

MONTREAL—THEFT OF MAIL BAGS

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to a minister whose words never outrun his thoughts, the Postmaster General. Has he anything to report on the investigation into yesterday's theft of mail bags in Montreal. Also, is he taking steps to protect valuable consignments on passage through the mail?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can report that an investigation is being conducted by three different forces, postal investigators, the Montreal police and the provincial police. May I say that the amount in question was exaggerated. Although it is a very large amount it is, according to our best information, somewhat less than $200,000.

REFUNDS ON BOX RENTALS

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Postmaster General announce any plans to refund extra payments made by the holders of many post office boxes in cases where those box holders have responded to post office demands this year for extra payment—in other words, where double payments have been made.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Orders have already gone out to the effect that increased amounts of money demanded of people who had signed contracts prior to the announcement of increased rates are to be refunded. In other words, where we have asked those people to absorb increases after their original contracts were signed, we shall refund the extra money asked of them.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF WOODS COMMITTEE

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): May I direct my question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker. Is he now prepared to say when we may expect the tabling of the Woods report on industrial relations in French and English?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I cannot announce that, but I can tell the hon. gentleman that the problem with the French translation has been overcome. When and if the Prime Minister decides to table the Woods report we shall make a statement as to how we will proceed with it.

Mr. Broadbent: May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is he prepared to say at this time when the government intends to table the report?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

GUYANA—SHIPMENTS OF BAUXITE TO CANADA

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): May I direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I asked that minister what measures the government is prepared to take with respect to the reported statement of the Prime Minister of Guyana concerning the cutting off of bauxite supplies to Canada, a step that would bring serious hardships to certain industries of this country. Is the minister now prepared to answer the question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a report yet from our office in Guyana, but I have spoken to officials of Alcan. As I understand the situation, the Prime Minister of Guyana did not go beyond any statement he had previously made on the same subject.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister has made inquiries to that extent, may we know what the previous statements on the same subject were?

Mr. Sharp: I can only assume from what I was told that the officials of Alcan did not think there had been new developments that caused them any additional concern.

Mr. Nesbitt: May I ask a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sorry to keep questioning in this manner, but this is an important subject. Was not the statement made by the Prime Minister of Guyana either yesterday or a few weeks or months ago, to the effect that supplies of bauxite would be cut off to Canada if certain conditions were not met?

Mr. Sharp: This, Mr. Speaker, is the information that I have requested our office to obtain from Guyana. I thought my interim report might help to allay the hon. member's fears.

ESTIMATES

ATTENDANCE OF MINISTERS BEFORE COMMITTEES AND IN THE HOUSE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I have a question for the President of the Privy Council, but in his absence I will direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that we on this side of the house agreed to the sending of the final supplementary estimates to the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee in the belief that there would be ministerial attendance to deal with the votes, some of which are of an unorthodox nature, will the Prime Minister try to ensure that there will be ministerial attendance so that questions raised on that committee will be dealt with?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I might answer that question because I may be one of the ministers involved. My presence was requested this morning at one of the committees of the house. I would have been there had I been notified. I apologize anyway. I will be there next Tuesday.

Some hon. Members: Too late, too late!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe I am just rephrasing the question, but may I ask it as a supplementary. What we are interested in is ministerial attendance in the house when these estimates come back next week. Can we be assured that when the supplementary estimates are before the house under the new scheme on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday that the individual ministers will be here rather than one minister piloting through the whole bill?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I will take this up with the house leader. If he knows in what order the estimates are to be presented he will ensure that the ministers are here. I do know plans have been made for one minister to be here because this question was asked of him yesterday and he said he would be present for discussion next week.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I believe my colleague from Peace River was referring to the attendance of certain ministers at the session of the Miscellaneous Estimates Committee where there are one dollar items of a legislative nature. I refer specifically to the Minister of Transport responsible for housing, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and also the President of the Treasury Board who is responsible for this bill.

Mr. Trudeau: In the case of the Minister of Transport, I know he did give an undertaking yesterday to be present at a time mutually convenient to the opposition parties and to ourselves. I know he made this suggestion for a possible date. Regarding the other ministers I might ask the President of the Treasury Board to answer.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): It is my understanding the Minister of Transport, one other minister and myself will be present to answer questions.

HARBOURS

VICTORIA, B.C.—SUGGESTED DEEPENING AND DRAINING

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): I have a question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce which might aid in the solution to the question posed earlier today by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Has the minister asked the Minister of Transport to recommend to his colleague the Minister of Public Works the immediate deepening and draining of the depth of water, a comparatively speedy, inexpensive and simple undertaking alongside the wharves of Victoria, where there is a very fine elevator belonging to the Alberta Wheat Pool—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is referring to communications between the ministers. The question is not acceptable on this basis.

WATER RESOURCES

STEPS TO PREVENT POLLUTION OF BOW RIVER

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): My question is directed to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. This question is in reference to the national problem of pollution and the report from the provincial government that the Bow River and other rivers in western Canada have reached a serious state. Is it the intention of the department to remedy the situation with regard to pollution under federal jurisdiction?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I already answered that question a few days ago. I am studying the problem now. I have received representations from the hon. member for Calgary South and I hope to make a report in this respect in the near future.

[English]

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I appreciate the hon. member for Calgary South is also digging the minister. Is this included in the estimates of this year? Surely the minister can tell us that.

CANADA WATER CONSERVATION ASSISTANCE ACT

INQUIRY AS TO HOUSE REVIEW

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Can the minister inform the house when we can expect the Canada Water Conservation Assistance Act to come before this house?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): When the house leader announced the order of business for the balance of the session, he stated this measure would receive first reading during this session.

[Translation]

EXHIBITIONS

MAN AND HIS WORLD—REQUEST FOR FURTHER INFORMATION ON AGREEMENT

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Can the minister tell us whether he has any supplementary explanations or information concerning the statement made to the house yesterday by the Prime Minister as to the proposals the minister has made to the province of Quebec about "Man and his World"?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this subject will be submitted to the municipal council by the executive committee of the city of Montreal, on Friday. It will then be decided whether or not the city of Montreal agrees to our proposals. In so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, I was in touch, a few minutes ago, with Mr. Beaudry who is the Minister of Industry and Commerce for the province of Quebec. He informed me that his government is still considering the proposals I made Tuesday evening and Wednesday morning.

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

In connection with the proposals made to the Quebec government, is that government not bound to guarantee the deficit of Expo, for 1969, before it is in a position to operate Man and his World?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated clearly yesterday that our proposals covered two points. First, there is the Dozois proposal which is well known. Secondly, there is the matter of an agreement by the city of Montreal to settle its share of the Expo deficit. All these points must be agreed to by the three governments concerned.

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

Has the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce considered granting an interest free loan in order to guarantee to the province the financing of Man and his World?

Mr. Pepin: No, far from it, Mr. Speaker. The federal government will in fact pay the interest.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INCREASE IN WOOD PRODUCTS PRICES

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria-Haliburton): My question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the fact that within the last two months there have been price increases ranging from 25 per cent to 40 per cent on wood products related to the building industry, raising the cost of new homes anywhere from $1,000 to $2,000—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member cannot preface his question this way. He should ask the question directly.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Scott: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister inform the house what steps are being taken to investigate the cause of such incredible increases in such a short space of time?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): The Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act watches all significant price movements, and studies them, to determine whether they are as a result of any actions which may constitute an offence under the Combines Investigation Act.

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP OF PRICES AND INCOMES COMMISSION

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Can the minister say when the prices and incomes commission is going to be established?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I welcome the eagerness, Mr. Speaker, with which the hon. member looks forward to the establishment of this commission. I have almost completed my consultations with interested economic groups. There will be some consultations with provincial finance officials and I hope to appoint the commission next month.

[Translation]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

ST. ROMUALD, QUE.—INQUIRY ABOUT WHARF FACILITIES

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I would like to put my question to the future Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Since he has stated that a $5 million subsidy will be paid for the construction of an oil refinery and a deep water wharf at St. Romuald, could the minister indicate also whether that will include facilities for the export of asbestos?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question could well be put on the order paper.

[English]

COMPREHENSIVE PLAN FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): My question is to the minister of regional and economic expansion. It relates to earlier questions I asked with regard to signing of the comprehensive development plan for Prince Edward Island. Can the minister now give the date when and where such signing will occur and who will be the signing officials?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): I hope in a few days to be in a position to give this information to the house.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Would the minister say whether this agreement will be signed by the Premier of Prince Edward Island in his capacity as premier, and not merely as president of the Economic Improvement Corporation? In other words, will the agreement be between the two levels of government?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): No. Should an agreement be reached, it would be between the two governments.

[English]

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As a further supplementary question, since there has been some indication that the plan might be decided a week from tomorrow can the minister confirm if this is correct or not?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I hope I can confirm or deny it soon.

IMMIGRATION

TIMING OF DISTINCTION BETWEEN DESERTERS AND DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Three days ago the hon. member for York South asked the minister whether he would consider tabling the directive issued in his department, making clear the distinction to be used between deserters and draft dodgers for immigration purposes. Has the minister decided what he is going to do in this matter?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in this case such documents have always been regarded as privileged and by long tradition have not been tabled in the house.

Mr. Broadbent: Then would the minister consider making a statement on motions in the early future?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did indicate to the house some time ago that this question was under review. When the review is completed I will be making a statement in the house. I cannot predict at the moment when that occasion will be, but the statement will be made.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Barney Danson (York-North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that one of the student rioters at Sir George Williams College is claiming friendship with a distinguished Canadian noted for his persistent efforts to overthrow the government, would the hon. gentleman in question be asked to join his hippy friends in incarceration?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

BANKRUPTCY

STOA GALLERY, LTD.—ALLEGED FRAUD AND FALSIFICATION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this is a follow-up to my question of yesterday to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Did a trustee in bankruptcy recommend in 1967 that the President of Stoa Gallery Ltd. of Montreal be "brought before the courts to stand trial for fraud and falsification," and what action is the government taking?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The facts in the hon. member's question are correct. At the time the report was made by Mr. Margiese, the trustee, the subject of bankruptcy was and had been for some time under intensive investigation by the R.C.M.P., at the request of the Superintendent of Bankruptcy. Whatever evidence was discovered as a result of that investigation was, as is the usual practice in these matters, submitted to the Department of Justice.

Mr. Fairweather: As a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice may I ask whether charges have been preferred against the person involved as yet?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): No, sir.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

C.F.B. HALIFAX—PAY ADJUSTMENTS FOR PERSONNEL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. Can he advise the house what is the present status of the approximately 200 labourers and trades helpers at C.F.B. Halifax who have been waiting over two and a half years for their pay adjustments?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member does not feel that this is a question that might be considered at the time of adjournment in view of the fact that it refers to these people who have been waiting for two and a half years. Is that not an indication that the question might be debated at the time of adjournment?

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the matter is under very active consideration by the department, and the minister might be able to give some answer. This concerns a small pocket of men and the question must be resolved within the department.

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister which unfortunately I have asked him several times over a period of several months. Can he tell us when we may expect to have tabled in the house the report of the commission on security?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I don't know yet, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

INDUSTRY

TEXTILES AND SHOES—REQUESTS FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to the fact that the applause is not for me personally, but for my sustained efforts.

I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

In view of the fruitful and sustained efforts of the federal government to protect the wheat trade in Canada, could the minister tell the house whether the cabinet or the Department of Finance are considering taking effective steps in the near future to protect particularly the Canadian textile industry, which employs 23 per cent of the Quebec manpower, and which is experiencing more and more difficulties?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Minister of Finance is responsible for short term policies in this field, and I think he will make the relevant statements in due course.

As far as I am concerned, that is in respect of long term policies, my department as well as several others are conducting at this time a study on the textile industry in Canada, and I hope to receive in a few months the conclusions of that study, which will enable me to answer this question.

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Would the minister be kind enough to have an investigation made on the footwear industry which is going through a very difficult time?

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEETING WITH REPRESENTATIVES OF BLIND PERSONS

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister advise whether he has received a request from the Canadian National Institute for the Blind and the Canadian Federation of the Blind for a meeting with himself and his colleagues in the near future, and if so, has a date been set?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I do not know the precise details but I do believe I am meeting with them next week.

CIGARETTES—SIGNS IN AIR CANADA AIRCRAFT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the appalling increase in Canada in lung and cardio-vascular diseases has the minister had any meetings with the Minister of Transport regarding the signs on Air Canada planes stating "cigarette smoking only"?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will take the matter under advisement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—BOMBING OF CIVILIANS AND RED CROSS OUTPOSTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider sending a special representative again to see General Gowon, this time to request him to take steps to have the consistent bombing of hospitals and other non-military targets in the Biafra area stopped?

[Mr. Pepin.]

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Because of the most recent bombings of Red Cross hospitals and headquarters in Biafra will the Canadian government now consider requesting a full scale investigation of these atrocities by some international agency such as the United Nations in order to alleviate conditions for civilians?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I thought any such action by the United Nations would be useful I would not hesitate, but I doubt if this could come before the United Nations, since it is an internal matter affecting the internal affairs of a member state of the United Nations, which would not agree to it being discussed.

Mr. Nystrom: As a supplementary question, would the Canadian government issue a formal protest to the Nigerian government deploring the most recent bombing of hospitals?

Mr. Sharp: I think it would be just as appropriate to make representations that the war should come to an end by the cessation of the resistance.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-151, an act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act, without any amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Government House
Ottawa
27 February, 1969

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. D. C. Abbott, P.C., Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 27th day of February, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain Bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

• (2:50 p.m.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, at this time perhaps I might ask the house leader as to the nature of the business for the rest of this week and next week.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the house leader who is in Winnipeg today I should like to advise the house that today we will be dealing with the motion for the second reading of Bill C-173 respecting the organization of the government of Canada. When we have completed that stage we will deal with that bill in the committee of the whole house. We are to continue with that bill again tomorrow.

Next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday have been set aside by a special order for the Business of Supply relating to the supplementary estimates. If it appears that this business may be completed before the time of the daily adjournment on Wednesday the house leader, after consultation, will let us know what the additional business will be. Next Thursday is to be a regular allotted day for the Business of Supply.

Finally, next Friday we plan to resume the debate on the motion for the third reading of Bill C-138, relating to the Bretton Woods Agreement Act. After that we would take the two agriculture bills, Bill C-157 respecting pest control products and Bill C-112 respecting the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto, be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole.

He said:

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in moving second reading of this significant and substantial legislation, I do not intend to go into details about each clause. This bill relates to many government institutions—some new, some already existing. It will be up to the responsible minister to deal with the relevant provisions for each department, agency or corporation which might come under this legislation. As for the questions of a general nature that might be raised by the proposed amendments, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) will deal with them. Consequently, I intend merely to emphasize the principles on which the provisions of this act are based.

Government agencies, as well as all social institutions, are subject to constant changes to which we must adapt ourselves from time to time. As representatives elected by the people, all hon. members are duty bound to keep constantly up to date on such changes. And we must be ready to consider and to adopt any bill that could enable the government of Canada to accomplish its functions in a better way, as it is faced with new conditions.

That is why the present government has to assume particular responsibilities, regarding this house and the people of Canada. In fact, its role is to set up a vast program of reform and reorganization of all the governmental apparatus.

[English]

Since last June this government has proposed or instituted major reforms in three key areas of government. First I announced a restructuring of the cabinet committee system which enables the cabinet to function more effectively. This has been done, and we think with great benefit to the efficiency of the executive arm.

One member of the cabinet, as a consequence of this, who has been most active both within the cabinet and as a legislator is the government leader in the other place. As the work load of that body has become more demanding, his responsibilities for supervising and co-ordinating legislation has also increased. One of the provisions of this bill will bring his office under the Salaries Act and thus place him on the same footing as his cabinet colleagues.

Improvements in the cabinet's methods of processing questions of policy are important to our parliamentary system, and so are improvements in the legislative procedures of this house. The changes in the house rules which we adopted before the Christmas recess are making it possible for us to handle more systematically the greatly increased volume of legislation and other business which has been coming before us in recent years.

During the debate on the house rules the opposition argued that in a democratic government the criterion of efficiency should be applied to the administration rather than to the legislature.

While many of us do not accept the part of that argument which applies to the legislature, we can all agree that efficiency is a desirable goal for an administration. The new rules will enable this house to add a large number of laws to the statute books at each session, and we must assure ourselves that the public service is organized to administer those laws as effectively and economically as possible. That is the purpose of the many changes proposed by the present bill. Each of them has been planned in response to a clearly defined need.

In one case an area of relatively new and rapidly expanding activity has called for the creation of a new department. We can foresee that the whole field of communications will be of growing importance to Canada and will require increasing federal government involvement.

For example, the impact of man-made satellites on our everyday lives is going to be revolutionary, and we can only guess at the implications of the new techniques of information storage and transmission. Canada is playing a leading role in the development and manufacture of these new instruments of communication. In our second century they may well prove as essential to the unity of our country as our transportation systems have been since confederation.

The government must be prepared to deal with complex questions of public administration and policy in this wide ranging field. Under the terms of this bill, this responsibility will be assigned to a single minister heading the department of communications.

[Translation]

The reorganization proposed in this bill will in some cases enable the government to face more effectively problems which are not new but could not be solved adequately within the present structures.

We know—and this was often said at the recent constitutional conference—that regional disparities have existed since the very first days of Confederation. We also know that the federal government has attempted, especially for a few years now, to reduce such disparities by having recourse to equalization payments, cost sharing programs and an increasing number of regional development projects. Most of those regional development programs were the responsibility of five ministers, I should say of several departments and various agencies.

Mr. Speaker, after all such programs have been consolidated under the sole Department of Regional Economic Expansion, we shall be clearly in a better position to achieve real coordination and centralization of our endeavours and undertakings in such a worthy and vital sphere in respect of our country's future. At the same time, we can group the many experts who, up to now, were trying to implement the regional development programs inside various departments.

However, we shall not content ourselves with merely following up what has been under way until now. The new department at the present time is in the process of revising the traditional notion of regional development.

The new policies will benefit from past experience, but they will also take into account today's new economic conditions. Later on, during discussions, the minister will have the opportunity to state in detail how he intends to consider the whole matter. But, on the other hand, he will be sufficiently empowered by the provisions of the act to implement the new policies of regional expansion.

[English]

Another example of an activity which will be continued within a new structural framework is the work of the Medical Research Council. In the last eight years the federal government's contribution to medical research has increased tenfold from $2.3 million to $26.9 million. The Medical Research Council, which administers these funds, was originally set up as part of the National Research Council. To better provide co-ordination of the federal government's activities in the field of health, while at the same time maintaining the degree of independence presently enjoyed by the Medical Research Council, the bill establishes the council as a separate corporation, responsible to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

• (3:00 p.m.)

The bill also establishes the Science Council of Canada as a separate corporation. Under the existing Science Council of Canada Act, the council has been subject to ministerial supervision. This bill will accord the council an independent status similar to that of the Economic Council of Canada. Like the Economic Council, it will become a separate employer and will have the right to publish its own reports.

In one case the bill grants additional powers and responsibilities to an existing department which complement those which it presently exercises. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs was set up during the last session of parliament to provide a focal point for the protection of consumer interests. As we are all consumers, the department's activities have aroused a great deal of interest and support both in Canada and in other countries. The provisions of this bill will enlarge and strengthen the department's role by assigning to it a number of regulatory activities, designed to protect the consumer, which are presently carried on by other departments. These include the prevention of fraud and misrepresentation in advertising and packaging, and the maintenance of standards of safety and quality in food and drugs. The inspectors designated by the minister under the provisions of this bill will ensure that these standards are maintained in retail outlets. This will provide more effective protection for the Canadian consumer.

[Translation]

The main purpose of some other amendments in the legislation is to increase governmental efficiency while at the same time reducing administrative costs. The most significant suggestion in that regard concerns the establishment of a Department of Supply and Services. The Glassco Commission had recommended the grouping, within a single department, of common services such as purchasing and supply, in a way that such a concentration would be advantageous. Only in the volume of the operations involved, the government can make substantial savings. It also happens that experts with much diversified knowledge will be brought together and will, therefore, combine their abilities. In the last few years, following the recommendation of the Glassco Commission, the purchasing services have been systematically organized within the Department of Defence Production. The proposed department will be responsible for procurements as well as for other administrative services.

That will enable us to enforce the supplementary recommendations of the Glassco Commission and to provide most of the common services needed by the various government departments.

[English]

In two cases the bill provides for the consolidation of two existing departments or of an existing department with a branch of another existing department. The Department of Industry will be merged with the Department of Trade and Commerce, and the forestry branch of the Department of Forestry and Rural Development will be transferred to the Department of Fisheries. In both cases the objectives of the component parts and the services provided by them are similar in nature or complementary. The new departments, therefore, will be able to provide a wider range of co-ordinated programs while achieving substantial administrative savings.

I want to emphasize, Mr. Speaker, that the over-all effect of the many changes proposed by the bill is not to increase the number of governmental departments. Although the bill creates five new departments, it consolidates or abolishes five existing departments. So the total number of departments remains unchanged. Despite the length and complexity of the bill's provisions, our purpose has not been to make the government itself larger or more unwieldy but to eliminate duplication, to simplify administrative structures and to provide better service to Canadians.

I want to add only that we are doing all this in order to keep up with the changing times. I know that there has always been objection over the years to various forms of change or reorganization. I thought that as a matter of co-operation and dialogue with some of those who might object to the provisions of the bill I would supply them with a very good quotation which, for obvious reasons, I cannot use myself. But it might be worth reading. It is a statement by a certain Roman gentleman of 2,000 years ago who, talking of this process of reorganization, said:

> We trained hard—but it seemed that every time we were beginning to form up into teams, we would be reorganized. I was to learn that later in life we tend to meet any new situation by reorganizing, and a wonderful method it can be for creating the illusion of progress—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau:

> —while producing confusion—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: It seems that hon. gentlemen opposite do not want to hear the rest of the quotation.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Nowlan: This is the best part of the speech. It is the first emotion in the speech. And after all, it is 2,000 years old.

Mr. Trudeau: I am glad that I have been able to draw the attention of a few hon. members of the opposition. I should not be surprised if I have even evoked the attention of a few of our own members on this side. This gentleman, Mr. Petronium Arbiter, speaking just about 2,000 years ago, was indicating a frame of mind which we of course reject. We believe that to live is to change, and that to progress is to adapt and modify to such changes. This is the spirit which on our side inspired this bill. But hon. gentlemen on the opposite side of the house, or at least some of them, are welcome to use the quotation if they want to do so.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it might not be unfair of me to commence by saying that some of us might have expected the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) to give us a few constructive insights into some of these problems.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We have learned that this never happens.

Mr. Stanfield: Let me say to the Prime Minister that as far as the note on which he ended is concerned, certainly life is full of change and certainly governments and people must be encouraged to change with the times, but one of our quarrels with the present government is that it talks a great deal about change but does very little indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: As to the bill itself, I do not propose to comment in detail on very much of it. Apart from the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the bill obviously is part of what one must expect to be a continuing process in government, a continuing process of new organizations to some extent and the disbanding of old organizations as conditions change. It certainly does not appear to us from anything in the bill, or anything the Prime Minister said this afternoon, to represent any very revolutionary or far-reaching change in the approach to the administration of government in this country.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I am disappointed with one major point in the bill. I touched on it yesterday and will not refer to it at length today. But since the minister to whom I was speaking yesterday did not see fit to make any comment, perhaps I might evoke some kind of reaction from someone on the government benches. I am referring to the need for reforming and changing the status, the position and the legislation governing the Auditor General. I will simply content myself with referring the Prime Minister to the few very wise remarks I made on this subject yesterday and commending them to the attention of the members of the government. It is a matter of disappointment to me that neither the financial administration bill nor the government reorganization bill face up to the increasing importance of the Auditor General being made fully independent of the government and fully responsible to parliament. I doubt that any question involving public administration in this country is of such great importance today as the one I raised yesterday and which the minister did not consider important enough even to respond to.

There are some things that are a little difficult to understand and are perhaps not of fundamental importance so far as this bill is concerned. Some of us were surprised to see the Department of Fisheries and the Department of Forestry put together, and we certainly did not obtain any enlightenment from what the Prime Minister said this afternoon. It is a little difficult to see how these two departments mesh. It would seem, to some of us at least, that they should continue as separate departments because they are quite separate functions, even though on appropriate occasions they might both be presided over by the same minister. Certainly the Prime Minister, regardless of what a minister may say on the matter in the future, did not give the house any explanation with regard to this change.

I think the decision to place the Science Council of Canada on an independent basis will surely commend itself to the house generally.

Reference was made to the new Department of Supply and Services, the establishment of which was recommended by the Glassco commission. I expect this will command the support of the entire house.

The new Department of Communications to which the Prime Minister referred is, I think, an obviously appropriate step to meet changing conditions and it represents a reasonable concept, although on reading the bill I was surprised at the very narrow definition of the responsibilities of the minister. In view of the roving responsibilities that the minister seems to be discharging today, if he has to stay within the narrow confines of the provisions outlining the duties of his new department he will find himself very severely restricted indeed as to the number of subjects with which he can deal. Certainly the bill leaves the future of the Post Office Department in some uncertainty. Certainly the reorganization of this department is a pretty clear indication of something that the Prime Minister touched upon in closing. He pointed out that it was said by a Roman nearly 2,000 years ago that reorganization per se does not necessarily produce a better service, and we are certainly seeing this today in the Post Office Department. It is a fairly clear indication that reorganization in itself will not necessarily result in improvement.

The Department of Industry has been merged with the Department of Trade and Commerce and has become the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. My recollection is that the Department of Industry was set up a few years ago by a Liberal government with tremendous fanfare and with loud announcements of what it was going to accomplish. People on this side of the house questioned that at the time, criticized the establishment of the new department, said it would involve a waste of money and predicted it would not produce good results and would be a very costly venture. It seems now that there is no disagreement on the subject after a lapse of a few years. It seems to be agreed again that industry should go along with trade and commerce and that this aberration which lasted for a few years should be eliminated. This seems to involve the admission of a substantial error on the part of the government.

The main change in the bill, so far as the effect on the country as a whole is concerned, relates to the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I should say in passing that I do not know whether it represents the totality of the government's war against poverty. I am not sure I know what happened to the government's war against poverty except that it seems to have died somewhere along the way. Certainly the poor people have lost the war so far. But where is the war against poverty? There is nobody in the house, unless I am under a delusion, who believes that a program to attack regional disparity will in itself eliminate poverty in this country because it has been made very clear by the Economic Council of Canada, among others, that there is a great deal of poverty in areas that do not suffer from regional disparity. I must make the point in passing that so far the government has not given any indication of a determination, either by itself or in co-operation with the provinces, to start the war on poverty which was declared by the Liberal government some years back and then abandoned. When we ask about it the Prime Minister is prone to say that he does not have to read the report of the Economic Council of Canada to learn about poverty. I do not think anybody in the house does. I do not claim we first discovered poverty, but the question is: When is the government going to do something about it?

The new department is being established as part of the government's attack on the problem of regional disparity in the country. Dealing with the problem in the country as a whole and not with specific reference to the Atlantic provinces where a special agency has been in operation, I point out that the new department will involve a greater degree of co-ordination of the federal agencies concerned with this question today. I should emphasize that it does not involve anything like complete co-ordination of the activities of the federal government or of the federal agencies concerned in this matter. Virtually every department of the federal government is involved in the problem of regional disparity. The policies of the Department of Finance are obviously important, the policies followed by the Treasury Board in fiscal matters are obviously important, and the policies followed by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) are also obviously important.

I want to emphasize as forcefully as I can that the agencies which are being consolidated in the new department must not be understood to involve anything like an adequate degree of co-ordination if the government is going to make an effective attack on regional disparity. It would be very unfortunate indeed if members of the house or citizens of Canada deduced from what the Prime Minister has said that the new department will in itself provide the necessary degree of co-ordination.

One of the dangers in establishing the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion and giving this responsibility to a minister, a danger that must constantly be kept in mind by the government as a whole, is that there may very well be a tendency on the part of other ministers to say, "Let Jean do it" and not accept any particular responsibility for, or even wash their hands of, the whole problem of regional disparity. This is something the minister will have to fight against every day that he holds this portfolio, and it is a matter which I want to emphasize as forcefully as I can.

This bill does not assure anything like the degree of co-ordination which there must be among the departments of the government if regional disparity is to be attacked effectively. Second, it certainly does not assure anything like an adequate degree of co-ordination or co-operation with the provinces. There have certainly been many possibilities in recent years for this government and the provinces to work at cross-purposes. I do not think it would be difficult to produce examples where this has happened in the area of development.

● (3:20 p.m.)

The ADA program, for example, might very well have tended to work in a number of provinces in a direction contrary to that which the provinces involved in regional and industrial development might themselves have wished. Certainly there has not been a full measure of co-operation.

This bill gives the minister and the Governor in Council very wide and, indeed, extraordinary powers, and it is most important that these powers be exercised in co-operation with the provinces and in close consultation with them. There is, for example, no clear indication in the bill as to how the minister and the government will select the regions in which special efforts are to be made. We do not know, for instance, whether or not there is to be one definition common across the country, or to what extent the provinces will be consulted. We are left in doubt whether the concept of regions will be tailored within certain limits to meet special conditions in individual provinces or to integrate with the policies of the provincial governments concerned.

These are matters with which the minister will have to deal specifically when he speaks to the house. There must be co-operation. We do not know how large these regions are likely to be and some explanation would be very helpful in enabling us to judge the wisdom of delegating these substantial powers which are capable of being exercised in a quite arbitrary way.

The bill fails to indicate the kind of aid which can be granted to industry. Here again, the government is given very wide powers of discretion. There is a danger in this regard of distrust arising between different regions of the country because it may be felt that the government is adopting different standards in different parts of Canada with regard to aid of this type. It is important that the government define as clearly and as rapidly as possible the measures by which it is intended to provide aid for industry. I think it is clear enough that the minister does not know the answer yet, because something could have been set out in the bill if more precision had been reached. It is important to eliminate distrust. It is important that those connected with the development of industry on a local or regional basis should know as precisely as possible the kind of aid which is to be available.

Industry will not wait around for very long, Mr. Speaker, while the Treasury Board makes up its mind whether or not a particular type of aid will be granted. In the meantime, developments might very well go ahead in other areas where such assistance to establish on a solid foundation is not required. These wide powers could be a source of conflict and misunderstanding in a number of directions. Unless exercised carefully they could lead to constitutional conflicts with the provinces, or to the government of Canada and the governments of the provinces working at cross-purposes in terms of development policy. Co-operation and consultation are therefore imperative, and the success of this new department will really depend upon the way in which it is administered.

These wide powers are important also in relation to the suspicion they may engender in connection with their administration. Of course, if they are exercised in a vague way without definition they may simply result in confusion and ineffectuality in the field of regional development. Again, I say we need as precise a definition as possible as quickly as possible in order to learn how these powers will be translated into orders in council.

The minister has indicated one or two concepts which appear new to him and to the government, ideas which it is intended to use in an attempt to solve the problems caused by regional disparity. He has admitted—and I do not try to make anything of this—that efforts made in the past have not proved to be particularly successful, and he has spoken about the utilization of growth centres in regional development as a means of speeding up industrialization and development. He referred to growth centres as though they were something new which had just been discovered. Actually this concept has been familiar in the United Kingdom for many years. Reference to it was included in the recommendations made to the governments of the four Atlantic provinces a number of years ago by Professor Wilson, the Adam Smith professor of applied political economy at Glasgow University. In my former position of responsibility, I tried to persuade the appropriate federal authorities, ministers and agencies, to recognize this concept at least to the extent of not discouraging the development of growth centres, but without success. Provincial institutions such as the Nova Scotia Economic Planning Board long ago commended this principle to their governments.

The idea, of course, is that some self-generating growth of continuing momentum can be developed based upon centres which have a certain amount of concentration of industry and services. It seems this is the best way in which one can develop some economic dynamism in regions of slow growth. Though this has been urged upon the federal government, its policies for the last five years have worked precisely in reverse of this concept, and the very least I can say today is that through perversity, through a lack of willingness to examine the experience of other countries, the federal government has pursued policies working in the opposite direction to the principle of the development of growth centres, as a result of which the country has obviously lost valuable time despite the expenditure of large sums of money intended to ease economic disparity.

I warn the minister that general acceptance of the concept of growth centres will require a good deal of education and selling across the country. In this connection it is important that the minister should not overdo the concept now he has recognized it. It is particularly important that he should not establish too few growth centres, that he should not try to concentrate growth in only a few centres. If this concept is to be accepted it is vital to avoid this mistake. It is necessary that there should not be too few centres selected. In this context it is important that the minister and the government should not confuse the necessity of some degree of concentration of resource industries, such as the fish processing facilities to which the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) has referred, with the concept of growth centres. There is no reason in the world why a centre of resource development and concentration should have to be in one of these growth centres. The government should be most careful, to the extent that it influences the choice of location or the concentration of resource industries, to keep in mind that it is not at all necessary to locate these industries in growth centres.

• (3:30 p.m.)

It is important that the minister should not push the growth centre concept too far, because if a region is to be developed it has to be developed by a balanced program. To date the growth centre concept has been underplayed. The policies of the government have directly worked against growth in areas of growth. It would be a sad mistake indeed if the government now swung over in the opposite direction, selecting too few growth centres to start with and ignoring the possibilities for developing resource industries throughout the country. There must be a balanced program of development if the concept is to work.

If I may say so without offence, now that the minister has seen a little of the light I express the hope that he will not allow that little bit of light to dazzle or blind him. I say to him: Do not overdo it. Do not oversimplify the matter, and do not neglect the important possibilities for resource development.

The second concept that the minister is adopting is that of being prepared to pay part of what one might call the break-in cost of a new industry for a period of one, two or three years. I congratulate the minister on finally accepting this view. It is another practice that has been followed in the United Kingdom. It was one of the recommendations of Professor Wilson to the governments of the four provinces. It was one of the ideas that we tried to sell to the federal government and its agencies.

Under the former trade training agreements one could get a little help for a new industry. It must be very clear to everyone that a firm or an industry which sets up business in a town or a city that does not have a highly developed industrial complex will experience much higher costs in connection with training labour and integrating an efficient work force for a year, two years or possibly three years than that firm or industry would experience on moving into a highly industrialized area.

That is as plain as the nose on your face, Mr. Speaker. Unless there is some such program as the minister is now proposing, and similar to what used to be done under the former trades training program, we cannot hope to get much industry in areas of slow growth.

This is a very important measure that the minister is proposing to adopt and I support it. I regret that it has taken the government four or five years to come around to this way of thinking, but better late than never. If this aspect of the program is an essential one, then I am pleased to see action taken on it.

I have emphasized the need for full co-ordination among all federal departments and agencies, between the federal government and the provinces, and among the federal government, the provinces and private groups and individuals. This goes far beyond the concept of co-ordinating the few federal agencies that will now come under the wing of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Co-ordination is required right across the country.

In the Atlantic provinces a special federal agency has been established for development purposes. It was first established as an advisory council that would conduct studies and make recommendations. In the year 1963 the Liberal government made a tremendous amount of noise about converting the Atlantic Development Board into an administrative agency.

I had some reservations about what was done. In the first place, I had some reservations about the allocation of a specific sum to the Atlantic Development Board, and I was by no means convinced that the step being taken at that time was right. But the government and its supporters of that day trumpeted this change from the housetops, declaring it would accomplish tremendous things for the Atlantic provinces. There was practically no end to the benefits that this step would confer upon the Atlantic provinces. This conversion of what had originally been established into an administrative agency was going to mean that money would be put in its hands in order to lick the problems facing that area. At least, that was the story four or five years ago.

I admit that there have been disappointments. Certainly the hopes that were held out by the government of Canada were illusory. Most of us who followed the work of the board were disappointed that it did not develop some kind of plan that had a reasonable degree of activity. Were my hon. friends or their predecessors in the same party completely wrong in 1963 and 1964 when they conceived this new and magnificent idea which they announced with such noise? I think it is pretty clear now that they think they were completely wrong to create this administrative agency at that time. They exaggerated the results that could be obtained. As I say, we were all disappointed that the board did not develop a plan, but during the course of the last five or six years it has gained in experience.

I suggest, as I have suggested previously, that instead of emasculating this agency the government should strengthen it to some extent. It now seems to be agreed that this region must be developed as a whole. The Atlantic Development Board could be the central focus for economic development for the region as a whole. It could be the central focus in terms of co-operation with the provinces and with the whole community, both of which are certainly necessary.

What the minister is proposing now is to put regional development into the hands of a highly centralized bureaucracy in Ottawa. Instead of there being more movement into the region in terms of effecting solutions, instead of there being a more effective involvement of the region in its own problems, there is a movement toward a high degree of centralization in Ottawa. Without being offensive or unfair, everything is now going to be in the hands of the minister and Tom Kent. Everything will depend on these two gentlemen.

As I say, I think the Atlantic Development Board should be strengthened. The board could be converted into an effective agency for co-ordinating developmental efforts in the region. It could be an effective agency for co-ordinating the activities of all federal departments and agencies in the region, not just the agencies that the minister is going to administer. It could also play some part in tailoring programs to the needs of the region.

I suggest in all sincerity that the same kind of agency could be very important and of great assistance in that part of Quebec east of Three Rivers, an area that is properly of such great concern to the minister. I would recommend that instead of emasculating the Atlantic Development Board the minister consider using it as an effective co-ordinating agency. The government of Quebec should be consulted on the establishment of a comparable agency to supervise and co-ordinate the developmental job required, particularly in the eastern part of Quebec.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I apologize for interrupting the Leader of the Opposition but I wish to remind him that the city of Three Rivers does not exist. Its correct name is Trois-Rivières.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I apologize to my hon. friend. I shall be careful to call Trois-Rivières by its correct name in future. I thank my hon. friend for bringing this point to my attention. It seems that some of us do not yet understand some of the finer points connected with place names.

As I was trying to say, I hope the minister is fully aware of the implications of my remarks. I ask him to reconsider what he has in mind about the Atlantic Development Board. He ought to use it for the purposes I have suggested. Also he ought to consider consulting with the province of Quebec on the establishment of a similar agency to meet development problems east of Trois-Rivières dans cette province-là.

I suggest that changes in the Atlantic Development Board will weaken it and will involve loss of time and continuity in solving certain problems. Those changes will also bring about a degree of centralized bureaucracy and the minister will find effective coordination difficult to achieve under the new proposals.

I wish to ask another question about the general policy of the department in question. No doubt the minister is aware that the Economic Council of Canada, when discussing the problem of regional disparities, placed great emphasis on the development of growth related services in provinces which have not yet reached an adequate standard of growth. The Economic Council paid a great deal of attention to this matter in its report a couple of years ago. Although the bill empowers the government to make grants to provinces to help with the building of provincial infrastructures—I presume the grants will go toward certain kinds of development, road building, assistance to transportation, and so on—I wonder whether the bill envisages the kind of assistance the Economic Council of Canada regarded as essential if some regions of slow growth in the country are to move forward as rapidly as they ought to. I therefore ask the minister to consider seriously whether the bill fully incorporates the recommendations of the Economic Council in this regard.

An hon. Member: It does.

Mr. Stanfield: Someone said it does. I do not know whether the minister said those words. I will not trespass much longer on the good nature of the house, but we must ask ourselves whether this government and the Liberal party are not swinging around like a windmill in certain areas of activity and responsibility. One year they set up a Department of Industry, which many said was not needed or necessary. Then, two or three years later they discovered their mistake and put the industry portfolio back under trade and commerce where it ought to have been all along. The government at one time appeared to be opposed to the establishment of so-called growth centres; now we wonder whether it may go to the other extreme. They took the Atlantic Development Board, which prior to 1963 had been set up as an advisory council, and made a great fuss about converting it into an effective administrative agency. Then in 1969 they decided after all that that step was an awful mistake and they reduced the status of that agency to that of an economic advisory council. From my reading of the bill that council will not meet very often.

From what I have seen, the government has really been going around in circles. The number of agencies potentially available for development purposes in the Atlantic provinces has been reduced. I know hon. members from the west as well as those from the east are concerned about what will happen to programs like ARDA and FRED. Others wonder whether there is truth in the rumours that P.F.R.A. is to be abolished. Hon. members on both sides of the house wish to be reassured on these points. Certainly it would be tragic if inadequacies under P.F.R.A. were to be the scapegoat for the inadequacies of other federal programs in western Canada. So I repeat to the government; Stop going around in circles. Do not swing too far in either direction in the concept of growth centres.

I assure the minister that he will run into political trouble over the growth centre concept; nevertheless, he will not find me giving him trouble unless he pushes the concept too far in either direction. Although I shall support him in that concept, I think he will find there will be no public acceptance of it by people across the country until it has been fully explained and sold to them. I ask him not to swing too far in either direction and to explain to the house exactly what he has in mind with regard to the definition of a region. Does he intend to consult the provinces on the definition or location of a region? Also, could he explain precisely the form of aid he proposes to make available to certain industries?

The bill, which is now before us eight months after the election was held, is only a skeleton. I hope the minister will put flesh on the bones.

Finally, may I make this point. It will not offend the Minister of Finance who is not present in the house. To be effective, any program must have available to it financial resources. It is one thing to pass a bill and create agencies to administer a program, but it quite another to make a program work. If the minister is to do the job I know he hopes to do, he will need massive financial backing from the government. The entire effort must be massive if we are to overcome regional disparities in this country. The present measure ought to be regarded only as part of the war against poverty in Canada. I hope that very soon the government will continue by other means its attack on the prevalent problem of poverty in this country.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I propose to deal with the principles underlying this bill. Several of my colleagues will deal with the various parts of the bill as they are brought forward in committee of the whole.

This measure for government reorganization deals solely with the mechanics of administration. It should be remembered that government departments are established to fulfil certain obligations and responsibilities in response to agreed government objectives and goals. Government departments are tools, and the effectiveness of those tools depends entirely on the purposes for which they are used.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that unfortunately we have had no clear statement today from the Prime Minister either on what our national objectives are or on what priorities have been established to attain those objectives. There is little advantage in talking about government reorganization unless we know what it is the government is seeking to accomplish. Before someone starts to design a vehicle he wants to know the kind of terrain over which it will be expected to travel, whether it will be devised for carrying passengers or heavy loads and what speeds are considered desirable. The kind of vehicle that one designs is therefore determined by the purpose the designer has in mind.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

• (3:50 p.m.)

What we need in Canada is departmental reorganization with a purpose. We need to know what the government's goals and objectives are, what priorities have been established, what allocations of human, material and financial resources have been determined. It is only when we know these facts that we are in a position to assess whether this reorganization is adequate. In the opinion of the members of this party reorganization is an exercise in futility unless there is government planning at the centre. Someone has said that planning is something which everyone does who has any sense of tomorrow. So far we have not had from the government any clear statement with respect to the goals it has in mind, and certainly the statement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) this afternoon has added nothing to the information which we require. I suggest it is about time that the government stopped believing in the myth of an invisible hand which will guide the economic system through to its optimum performance. The old laissez-faire doctrine that if the economy is left to itself it will resolve its own contradictions is both unacceptable and dead.

This reorganization measure is only one of many reorganization measures which have been submitted by a Liberal government. Some people have a tendency to forget, and the government seems to want them to forget, that while this government may have a new Prime Minister it is not a new government. A Liberal government has been in office for almost six years and we have had a steady progression of programs and reorganizations introduced with great fanfare but with very disappointing results.

I can understand the Prime Minister quoting from Petronium Arbiter. I thought he had a bit of a guilty conscience when he reminded us that over 1900 years ago a wise man said that sometimes reorganization was used for creating the illusion of progress, because that is what we have had. In nearly six years of Liberal government in this country we have had a series of new programs and reorganizations without results; they are like a man moving around the parts of a jigsaw puzzle in the hope that somehow or other some picture will emerge.

I submit the government's failure to set clearcut goals and its failure to allocate resources have made all of these past reorganizations both ineffective and fruitless. Mention has already been made of the fact that when the Liberal government took office in 1963 there was a great deal of fuss regarding the setting up of the Department of Industry to encourage economic growth. Many of us pointed out then that unless it had enough financial resources and unless it was the fulcrum for a series of other policies it would be useless. The government has now taken the Department of Industry and laid it to rest along with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

The government then introduced a series of measures to help the underdeveloped areas of Canada, particularly the Atlantic provinces. They set up the Atlantic Development Board, the area development agency, the fund for regional economic development, and Devco to bolster the declining coal industry in Cape Breton. Members of this party pointed out that the designated area program had a formula which was irrelevant, unrealistic and would be of little value. We pointed out that the multiplicity of unco-ordinated agencies which had been set up by the government would result in confusion and sterility.

After all this time the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) has now told the people of Canada that in these programs $1 billion of the Canadian taxpayers' money has been spent and about half of it has been wasted. That is quite a confession. As Mark Twain once said, confession may be good for the soul but it is bad for the reputation.

Then there was the war on poverty which was launched with the blowing of bugles and the beating of drums, but the government lost that war without ever firing a shot. Anyone who reads the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada will realize how badly the government lost that war. In this country, with all the rich resources we possess, one-fifth of our people are living in a state of poverty and another one-fifth live in a state of deprivation.

Some of us will recall that when the government removed manpower training from the Department of Labour and set up the combined Department of Manpower and Immigration it said this was going to solve the problem of unemployment. I must say that the program was well conceived, but it failed in its objectives because of a lack of an adequate placement program and the lack of adequate machinery for ascertaining the needs of industry. The result is that in the past few months I have met scores of men who were trained under the manpower training program and who find it impossible to get employment in the work for which they were trained, so that we have merely substituted skilled unemployment for unskilled unemployment.

• (4:00 p.m.)

We remember how the government launched a program to solve the housing crisis. A former minister of labour, Mr. Nicholson, was given this as his special task. Housing conferences were held all across the country culminating in a great housing conference in Ottawa just a little over a year ago—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Culminating in his going to Victoria.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The effectiveness of that attack upon the housing crisis can be shown by the fact that last summer the government set up a task force to deal with housing. It became known as the travelling circus, and after spending thousands of dollars of the taxpayers' money it brought forward only one really serious recommendation, namely, that the government should remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, something which the opposition had been trying to tell them for the last five years, and at no charge at all. The only proposal that came out of the task force's efforts was immediately shot down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) who said he had no intention of removing the sales tax from building materials. Apparently Hellyer proposes and Benson disposes. To revise the old saying, Hellyer hath no fury like a woman scorned.

I am not criticizing the idea of reorganization. I am pointing out that these reorganizations of departmental responsibilities may have been admirable in themselves but that they failed for the lack of any over-all planning and because the government did not allocate to them the resources necessary to make them effective.

The inevitable fact is that the government has never seriously adopted the goals which were set out by the Economic Council of Canada in its various reports. Starting with its very first review in 1964 the Economic Council began to delineate objectives toward which the country should move. The major goal they established is that we must have a maintenance of economic growth and full employment. They suggested three things which had to be done if we were to meet that goal. First, they recommended a growth rate of 5½ per cent in constant dollars for the gross national product, and a 3.4 per cent per capita growth. But the economy is not operating at that level. In 1968, at least in the first nine months which are all we have figures for, in real terms the economic growth rate per year was only 4.8 per cent and the per capita growth rate only 2.4 per cent. For the previous year, 1967, the G.N.P. increase was only 2.8 per cent, and the per capita growth rate less than 1 per cent, so that after nearly six years of Liberal government we have not attained the goal which was set for maintaining full economic growth in Canada. We have a short-fall of economic production which constitutes a loss of probably some $3 billion a year because of the government's failure to implement the recommendations which were made by the Economic Council of Canada.

The second goal they suggested was that we should keep unemployment at 3 per cent or less of the labour force and that we establish this as a desirable goal; they believed it was an attainable goal. I point out that in most of the countries of western Europe 3 per cent would not be accepted as a desirable goal. Many of the countries of western Europe have kept well below 2 per cent and some of them below one and a half per cent.

In Canada in January of this year the unemployment figure reached some 465,000, some 5.9 per cent of the labour force. The fact is, that the economy of this country is not growing fast enough to provide jobs for the thousands of young people who are entering the labour market every year, and the prospects for the future are far from encouraging. The lastest reports indicate that an increasing number of university graduates are having difficulty in securing prospects of employment this year, and that there will be an even larger number of students unable to get summer work despite the fact that last year was one of the worst years we have had for a long time.

The third goal which was suggested by the Economic Council was that we should endeavour to keep price increases below 2 per cent per year. But in January, 1969, the cost of living was up 3.8 per cent over January, 1968. The increase in the cost of living over the past five years has averaged 3.3 per cent. In consequence we have the anomaly today of rising prices on the one hand and unemployment on the other. We have inflation and pockets of poverty side by side. The reason is that the government has never committed itself to the attainment of the objectives outlined by the Economic Council of Canada and has not introduced the kind of policies that would have made that attainment possible. The failure to attain these goals has been due to the lack of government policies and the lack of over-all co-ordination.

It is not the function of government agencies or departments to set over-all goals. This is the responsibility of the government and the government alone. Only the government can establish the priorities for utilizing the various resources required to attain national goals. For instance, the government has failed to establish capital priorities and to place special emphasis on economic growth with proper regard to the relationship between the demand for private capital and the requirements for social capital.

The government has failed to introduce fiscal policies to promote a redistribution of income. As a matter of fact, contrary to the recommendations of the Carter commission, which said that too heavy a share of the tax burden was falling on the middle and lower income groups, the government has continued to increase the burden on these groups, and the final blow was the implementation of the so-called social development tax which seems to summarize the views of the Prime Minister for a just society, namely, that everybody should pay the same tax whether his income is $8,500 a year or $85,000 a year.

(4:10 p.m.)

The government has failed to establish any type of monetary policy to allocate our financial resources with a view to permitting economic growth. The government instead has allowed the allocation of our financial resources to be determined by the market and the ability of certain segments of the economy to pay exorbitantly high interest rates.

The government has failed to introduce any measure of price controls on basic commodities despite the fact that corporation profits for the third quarter of 1968 showed an increase of 5½ per cent over the previous quarter and 15.4 per cent over the same quarter in 1967. For the first three quarters of last year total profits showed an increase of 13.6 per cent over the first three quarters of 1967.

If the government wants to know what one of the factors providing inflationary pressure is it should look at the very sharp increase in profits in this country. The government has done nothing either to ascertain the extent to which exorbitant profiteering has been responsible for rising prices or taken any steps to prevent it. Surely the lesson is clear. The government's refusal to plan and its refusal to co-ordinate the economy can mean only growing unemployment, rising prices and economic dislocation.

In the measure before us the government is going to establish a department which will be responsible for attempting to eliminate regional economic disparities. This is a sound proposal. Members of this party have long advocated that a department of government be given this particular responsibility. It should be kept in mind, however, that regional disparities can only be eliminated in a growing and expanding economy, and that poverty is not only located in some areas to a greater extent than in others but that pockets of poverty are to be found in almost every part of the country.

The department which is to be set up to deal with regional disparity can only be effective if it is given adequate financial resources. The fact that it is being allocated merely an additional $37 million would indicate to me that the government does not intend to make any radical departure from its past policies. Merely moving some of the five various agencies which have been operating into a single department and abolishing the Atlantic Development Board and setting up an advisory committee is not going to deal with this problem unless the government is prepared to make massive sums of money available to this department to launch an all-out attack on poverty to remove some of the regional disparities which, if not removed, will tear confederation apart.

We submit that the proposed departmental reorganization gives no indication whatsoever that economic goals are being set or that economic policies are being put into motion to attain those goals. There is a growing need in Canada today for a department of government which has over-all authority to co-ordinate and supervise those activities which have to do with economic growth and full employment. I think what we really need is a department of economic affairs which would have the responsibility of co-ordinating the monetary, fiscal and investment policies being implemented by various departments of government. If the government is not prepared to do that there ought to be some co-ordinating body established, preferably in the office of the Prime Minister, whose task it would be, having been acquainted with the goals set by the cabinet to see that the various departments of government play their part in carrying out the various programs so that the goals set by the government could be achieved.

I would be interested to hear from the government as to where the Canada Development Corporation is going to fit into this reorganized government structure. I think the Canada Development Corporation should be under the direction of whichever minister is going to co-ordinate the government's economic programs. If this agency is to be a genuine economic tool and not merely a mutual loan fund with the government as a silent partner, it has an important role to play in attaining some of the goals set by the Economic Council of Canada.

I think the Canada Development Corporation ought to be given three important tasks. The first task is to promote the processing of more of our primary products here in Canada. The fact is that at the present time more and more of our extraction industries are in the hands of foreign investors who have set up subsidiaries in this country purely for the purpose of supplying their parent companies with certain raw materials. Because they are selling to their parent companies they can sell at the lowest possible price. Consequently their profits are low and they pay very few taxes and can use their low profitability as an excuse for paying low wages.

Most serious of all, these companies are primarily concerned with getting raw material out of the country in its most primary state. We see this, for instance, in the province of British Columbia and in my own constituency where sawmills have been closed allegedly because of a lack of logs yet every day boatloads of unprocessed logs are going out of the ports of Vancouver Island. We are exporting jobs. British Columbia is shipping out coal and iron ore. We are exporting copper ore, and in other parts of Canada we are exporting nickel, lead, copper, zinc and pulp.

I am not suggesting we should not export any raw material. I am suggesting that if we are going to have economic growth and full employment, and if we are going to provide jobs for the young people we are training, then more processing must take place in Canada. This means supplying the necessary capital to expand existing Canadian-owned industries and to start new Canadian-owned industries for the purpose of processing raw materials to develop the Canadian economy. I think the Economic Council of Canada has to be charged with the responsibility of rationalizing our industry so we can break out of the branch plant syndrome which is inhibiting our economic growth. Finally, I think the Canada Development Corporation has to be given the task and the means of increasing Canadian ownership and control of the Canadian economy.

• (4:20 p.m.)

I would like to know from the government where in this reorganization there is any machinery or program for implementing any of the recommendations of the Watkins report. The government has been very casual about that report. Here is a report which says that no other country in the world has so much of its economy owned and controlled outside its borders as has Canada. Here is a report which indicates that we are rapidly reaching the point of no return, that we are rapidly losing control of our economic affairs. Any person who studies history knows that inevitably political control always follows economic control.

What does the government propose to do about the Watkins report? What is there in this reorganization that will give to some department or agency of the government the responsibility for developing greater Canadian ownership of our economy and eventually regaining control of that part of our economy which is now in the hands of foreign investors? I can find nothing here that indicates the government intends to do anything at all about the recommendations of the Watkins report or about the dangers to which it drew the attention of the Canadian people.

We cannot object and we do not object to the government shifting around its departments and reallocating responsibilities to various ministers. That is the prerogative of the Prime Minister. But I have been disappointed, as I am sure many members have, and I think the people of Canada will be disappointed, that in his entire statement today the Prime Minister said nothing at all about the goals and objectives which this reorganization proposes to make possible. The Prime Minister talked about reorganization so that the departments could administer the laws. But surely departments have the task of doing something more than merely administering laws. Surely departments are tools to be used for the purpose of setting up and following certain definite social and economic programs. Surely the task of government is to set desirable goals and to organize and co-ordinate all the resources of government to make possible the attainment of those goals.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

There is nothing in what the Prime Minister said today which indicates that the government has any concept at all of what the role of government is in a modern society. I do not wonder that the Prime Minister closed by quoting the phrase that reorganization can be used as a method for creating the illusion of progress. I suspect that that is all this measure will turn out to be, an illusion of progress.

Unless the government, in the course of the discussion in committee of the whole, can give us some idea of what its goals and objectives are, I think we will be justified in concluding that this is merely another reorganization, that it is a playing around with departments and agencies which are in search of a policy, that this is a government with no clearly defined goals and with no concept of what it is trying to do or where it is going. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it is a sad day for Canada that a government starting a new term of parliament has nothing better to offer the Canadian people than this sterile reorganization of departments without any clear indication of what those departments are supposed to accomplish or what the Canadian people can expect them to achieve.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to take part in the debate on Bill No. C-173. This very thick bill contains all kinds of clauses, namely provisions to set up new departments.

Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to say that the new departments will certainly not straighten out the present economic situation, which is upside down and maladjusted, because the more we set up new departments, the more we increase government expenditures which make taxation necessary, and in turn, taxes reduce the purchasing power of the people.

To ensure the welfare of society, it has to be left with some purchasing power consistent with the economy and the gross national product. However, by setting up new departments, we upset the balance, we tax and overtax the people so that new departments can exist, new civil servants can be assured of salaries of $15,000 to $30,000 and new positions can be created for new university graduates. That will be the result of the new departments. They will not change anything to economic conditions. The more departments we establish, the more troubles we create in the economic area.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, I am strongly against the creation of those new departments which will be of no help to the economy and will contribute to reduce the purchasing power instead of increasing it. It is not the establishment of new departments that prevents industrial development, but the limitation of the people's purchasing power. In fact, industries know what to do and what to produce even if they do not have money. But the people have no money to buy their products. There is no lack of production in this country, Mr. Speaker. We have accumulated a production surplus in 1968. We have been accumulating surpluses since 1944, even since the war, and those surpluses are being used up through exportation only or in time of war.

Mr. Speaker, if Canada's economy is to operate freely, normally, the purchasing power must be left in the hands of the Canadian taxpayer, who is the main consumer. We are facing a problem of consumption, not one of production. It seems they want to solve the production problem through the creation of new departments. They want to produce more, when we do not know what to do with the present production. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his colleagues know that the industry can produce more, but the fact remains that there are a million unemployed people in Canada who do not produce at the present time.

If we had a sound economy and a reasonable purchasing power, the industry could function because the purchasing power would move constantly in the hands of the taxpayers and would keep our industry and our economy moving.

Mr. Speaker, there are several things in Canada that must be changed but it is only a question of balance. We have no problems in the field of production; our problems are now located at the level of the consumer. I do not know whether the departments will engage in production. I do not know whether they will provide for transportation.

A government exists only to balance the economy of a nation, and not to take the money of the taxpayers and to spend it for them. It does not exist to create all sorts of troubles for the taxpayers or to prevent them from investing, from developing their industry, or to prevent all sorts of economic agencies from expanding. These problems would not exist if the purchasing power was constantly balanced with production and consumption.

It is in this field that changes should be made in order to improve our economy.

I feel I am completely in order and even in agreement with the views expressed by the Prime Minister this afternoon by suggesting very briefly as part of our regular parliamentary proceedings, a somewhat original way to present the problem in order to grasp the easiest, most efficient, most constructive and most realistic solutions.

I do not want to put the ministers to shame but may I tell them very frankly that, so far, they have only found and given answers to imaginary problems. The basic problems have not even been located and they are applying poultices right beside the sore spots. How could we find remedies to problems which are yet to be diagnosed? How can we heal our wounds by putting bandages on the healthier parts of the body?

That is exactly what has been going on since June 25, 1968, since the day the new government came to power with a full majority, something that had not been seen in seven years. The government has simply raised the rate of interest on capital belonging to millionaires. They are now paid 7 per cent instead of 5 per cent interest, which is $20,000 more every year, for every million, without any additional work, but that is done by taxing all Canadian citizens even those who get no revenue, either from their work, or from their capital.

The salaries of the best-remunerated civil servants are being increased. For instance, those who were making $50,000 a year, will get $75,000; those who were earning $35,000 will now earn $45,000 and those who were getting $26,000 will now have $35,000; in addition, the tax-free allowance will be increased from $6,500 to $8,000 and so on.

The creation of new departments is the wrong way to balance our economic system, because no one wants to put it in balance, no one wants to take the time to study the situation and place our economy on a pivot.

But in the meantime, the cost of living increases, for every child, every student, every sick person, every blind person, every invalid, every pensioner, every mother of a family, more than 13 million citizens without income must pay more for their basic needs.

In the meantime—and of this the ministers and the members of the Canadian Parliament are aware—we see the salaries of our steadiest wage-earners going up, as well as the rates of interests charged by money lenders of every category. Why don't civil servants do something about it? It seems to me that they could do so, since there are now 21 departments.

To summarize, 8 million citizens-producers through their salaries and their interests, earn increasingly high annual incomes, while 13 million dependent citizens, children, students, pensioners, unemployed, mothers at home, and the sick, see the cost of living going up without getting any increase in the income they are already drip-fed by the civil servants of the department of social or antisocial welfare.

I am not accusing anyone. I am only showing the obvious results of an economic policy which dates back to about 1944, the end of the last world war, to the decisions that stemmed from the Bretton Woods agreements, in July of 1944, and to the introduction of family allowances, which have been the same for the last 25 years. I am not disputing the fact, I am only asserting it. And my observations are so accurate that they reveal immediately the real source of the problems as well as their solution, for the problems are diagnosed and localized in the facts themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the ministers and all the members who represent 21 million Canadian citizens to realize that I am a Canadian citizen and to forget, for a moment, that I am a member of the opposition. They will then understand that we have all to suffer and to enjoy the economic guidance which our government is forcing upon our great Canadian businesses and which will be reflected in our villages and towns as well as in the slums of of our large cities, such as Montreal, Toronto, Halifax and Vancouver.

In a twinkling, Mr. Speaker, for the benefit of 21 million Canadians, without hurting anyone, we can re-establish and maintain the economic balance between family and corporation incomes.

This is where we must intervene. The officials must look after that problem. They must consider if there is some balance among the various classes of society.

• (4:40 p.m.)

Revenues, expenses and profits must be balanced. No organization in the world can operate if it does not balance its revenues, expenses and profits. But in Canada, this is of no concern. New departments are simply established and the taxpayers' money is spent to no purpose, because if the Canadians do not have a purchasing power, departments will not operate.

The present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) will have a fine department. He will have many things to do, but he will not have the money to do them. Who, in that department, will be responsible for increasing the purchasing power so that our economy will be balanced?

Mr. Speaker, a balance must be established in the case of requirements, costs and prices. There is no one looking after this situation at the present time. The cost of living is rising because of increased salaries and interest rates. Money is loaned at 9, 10 and 24 per cent because the government lets exploiters bleed the people. Canadians as a whole are being exploited. Inflation is attributable to a few individuals who take advantage of the present system. They are allowed by the government to increase their interest rates which in turn increase their personal incomes totalling billions of dollars.

I say, Mr. Speaker, that in 1968 capital gains amounted to $28 billion and $40 billion were expended out of a total production worth $68 billion. This tremendous economic imbalance must be made to disappear. Nothing is being done about it. New departments intended to establish other agencies are being created. Farmers and industrialists will be told they are ignorant and that "smart alecs" with university diplomas will show them what to do, what to produce and how to export. For instance, if there are no funds available for production or consumption, nothing is done about it.

A balance is essential between management, employees and dependents. Nothing of the kind is provided with the establishment of the new departments. Moreover, there must be a balance between capital, labour and the right to live. The bill makes no provision whatsoever for that balance. It simply provides for expenditures on the part of the government side; as far as the people are concerned, it provides for new taxes.

How can we acheive balance with such plans and rataplans? Balance must exist between production, consumption and capital ization. Actually, in Canada, there is too much capitalization and not enough consumption, for which there is no money left. Almost everything relates to capitalization which, incidentally—I have previously quoted figures in the house in that connection—is protected by the State.

Large capitalizations are realized, on which no tax is levied. There are direct and indirect capitalizations. Some capital is set aside; in fact, the State allows reserves on which no tax is levied. Small wage-earners are taxed; their pay envelope is emptied. They get only the stub of their pay cheque. They have nothing left. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, what is there to improve in Canada?

I have before me an article published in the June 24, 1968 issue of La Presse. It is about a report on bankruptcies in the furniture retail business throughout Canada. I quote:

> During the first nine months of 1968, last period for which statistics are available from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, a total of 89 furniture and electric appliances stores went bankrupt in Canada. Their deficits totalled $6,651,000. This amount is double that of the same number of bankruptcies during the same period in 1967, the value recorded for that period being $3,430,000.

Therefore, the number of bankruptcies in the furniture business would have more than doubled in a year! How can the industry survive? What is the department going to do in such a situation? Will the department give the people more purchasing power so that they can buy the products and keep the stores from going bankrupt?

Businesses are going bankrupt because they cannot sell their goods. They are compelled to sell them at a loss, and then have to go into liquidation.

This happens all over Canada not only in the furniture industry, but in all industries generally, except big businesses operating with millions of dollars and who are supported by the government and protected by taxes and duties.

There are new departments to deal with regional disparities, but the industries already established cannot operate because they do not know if they will find a market for their products.

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Latulippe: What is the trouble, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for St. Boniface rises on a point of order.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I would like only to point out that the hon. member speaks so rapidly that I have trouble following him. Could he repeat one of the things he has mentioned?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I think that the hon. member for Compton has duly noted the remarks of the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. Latulippe: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I apologize, indeed, for speaking a bit fast. As a matter of fact, one does not always realize that simultaneous interpretation is in progress and that other people want to listen. I am going to try and speak more slowly in order at least to enable hon. members to understand and to catch the main points of my argument on the situation of our economy.

Then, those 21 factors—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Would the hon. member be kind enough to speak more slowly and to limit his remarks to the bill now before us?

Mr. Latulippe: I think, Mr. Speaker, that I am complying with your suggestion, since the bill provides for the setting up of new departments which are intended to administer the nation's business.

Since the state does not produce anything and that its only task is to administer the country, it is only fair that it should do its job equitably, in such a way as to allow Canadians to live reasonably well in a country of plenty.

At all events, Mr. Speaker, I shall try not to depart from the object matter of the bill and if you think I am going off the track you will only have to remind me again.

These 21 factors of our personal, familial, social and national economy must be kept in balance at all times, under the learned guidance of a government aware of its responsibilities, within the framework of our present monetary, economic and political systems and our constitution.

We do not want to change anything, to upset anything, because our present economic system is good, in spite of some abuses that must be corrected. Hon. members on the government side should understand us when we say that we are in favour of credit, rather than ignore us.

• (4:50 p.m.)

They will not listen to us because they think we want to upset everything, but we do not want to upset anything at all. We want to keep everything which is good, which is of service, we want to keep the agencies which are functioning well. When these federal agencies do everything they can to be of service, we give them credit for it. We do not object to that at all but we do object to the setting up of new agencies, new departments which are going to cost millions when the people already lack the necessities of life and what they need to keep the country's economy working properly.

In fact, it is not by taking from the people its capital and by putting it into the hands of officials earning $25,000 to $50,000 a year that we are going to keep our economy in operation.

There are enough departments at the present time. The point is to guide them towards sound goals, a complete balance of our economy. Our present departments, with their qualified officials are in a position at the present time to perform reasonably this task so as to bring about the development of our citizens.

Such principles are clearly set forth in the Universal Bill of Rights passed by the United Nations on December 10, 1948—20 years ago—and in the Canadian Bill of Rights passed by this house on August 10, 1960, which can be found in chapter 44 of the Revised Statutes of Canada.

It would be so easy to bring these great principles into concrete form through technical legislation adapted to the intellectual capacities of ministers and hon. members.

That is the point I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker. I believe all members will agree with me. Our economic chariot has a large wheel and a small wheel, and it is turning round in a circle. Instead of bringing the small wheel to the size of the big one, so that the chariot may go straight, all we do is to reduce more and more the size of the small one, and the more we do so, the more we turn round in a circle. The new departments will do nothing else but reduce the size of the small wheel of the economic chariot, which means that we will keep on turning round in a smaller circle. It is the only thing those new departments will do, I am sure.

Included in this bill, Mr. Speaker, is the question of credit. We may refer to personal credit, family, municipal, provincial, federal, national or international credit, because it has always something to do with finance. No matter what kind of credit we are talking about, personal, family, social, municipal, provincial, federal, national or international, it must first of all be human, logical and intelligent. Whether we have to do with the personal, family, social, municipal, provincial, federal, national or international capital, it must first of all be human, logical, intelligent, suited to man and his material, intellectual and spiritual nature.

Such is the task we should get down to, that is what, according to the Bill of Rights, we should emphasize, consider and put into practice. Credit too must be logical; it must enable us to fulfill the purpose for which credit or capital was created, or legalized. And credit, that economical fact, must be intelligent too; it must meet efficiently the needs of the human being.

All men are created to live in a community, in an ascending hierarchy, the highest degree of which, above ministers, senators, governors, presidents and members of parliament, kings and princes, popes and cardinals, is God himself, sole creator of all visible and invisible things.

Mr. Speaker, to speak fairly, in our society, one must start by knowing what is a human being and, if we adopt laws, it is for him. Therefore, it is to help the Canadians to grow, to prosper and to fulfill themselves that we legislate, and not to trouble them, to burden them with mortgages, to get them into debts and to let them live in uncertainty. Our present system is an uncertain one in which all Canadian citizens are concerned, taxed and taxed again extremely. It is no longer possible to tax those citizens because it is taking the bread out of their mouth. However, there is bread and wheat in Canada. We do not lack anything but we are not able to get the upper hand, to put together the methods and the techniques that are necessary to get our economy to function properly. We find it impossible to fit the economic chariot with wheels of equal size to enable it to follow the right path and to render a service to everybody from the smallest to the biggest.

The government must administer the common weal and if possible go too far in the society, if there are enormous capital reserves that are not taxed, it should see to it. It is not the new boards that will see to it because they have no business to intervene in this field. This is why I would ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to intervene, with all his organization, in order to take away the surpluses where they exist and to distribute them where there is need for them.

We have 21 million Canadians in Canada. This means we need buying power for 21 million people. If we have 13 million people lacking this buying power, it is up to the government and to the ministers to balance the economy, so as to allow every citizen to have whatever he needs to fulfill himself. In that respect, socialist or communist minded laws will be of no avail because they deprive the individual of his freedom. The individual was born a free man and a free man he must remain as long as he does not interfere with the freedom of his neighbour.

I would have much more to say, Mr. Speaker; however, I will just ask hon. members and the government to think it over, to consider the economic position of Canada and to find out what is wrong with it.

The answer is not to increase the output of an industry by mechanizing it, thus putting three others out of business. Nor is it to subsidize an industry, employing 10 people while another one employing 100 workers is compelled to go out of business because it cannot sell its products. This is no answer. As everybody knows, today industry depends on science, on technology and hardly on manpower. Industry will never be the answer to the problem of manpower. The answer is elsewhere. Industry does not pay salaries which enable citizens to enjoy a decent living. For an output of $10,000, salaries average $1,500; and with a salary of $1,500 you cannot buy $10,000 of products. This is a truism. One need not be a genius to understand that.

Once more, Mr. Speaker, I urge our ministers and our officials to assume their responsibilities so that we may give our people the benefit of our capital in circulation instead of wasting it on salaries to employees.

I am not against university graduates, I am not against high-ranking officials, but I think we have enough of them at the moment. Let those who are in office assume their responsibilities and discharge their duties properly since they have all the qualified personnel they need.

The dissatisfaction of society is not due to the civil servants, but rather to the fact that families do not have what they need to live decently. Everything is there to meet their medical or housing needs except money, because with a 10 percent interest on loans, housing construction is restricted. That is where there should be real control. A managed economy is acceptable in the field of housing, but instead the sales tax on building materials is increased to 12 per cent and the rates of interest on loans for housing are also raised.

• (5:00 p.m.)

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Translation]

Has the hon. member finished his remarks?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have finished but I oppose this motion.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-173, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto. As it is five o'clock I do now leave the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed the following bills without amendment: Bill C-148, an act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation; and Bill C-152, an act to amend the Veterans Land Act.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Moose Jaw (Mr. Skoberg)—Canadian Pacific Railway—request for survey of train accommodation; the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Foster)—Transport—subsidies on intraprovincial ferries.

The time being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

GILLESPIE MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster) moved that Bill S-22, respecting Gillespie Mortgage Corporation, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is brought before the house in order to change the name of Gillespie Mortgage Corporation to City Home Mortgage and Savings Corporation, and, in French, Habitat Urbain, Société d'Hypothèques et d'Épargne. The company was incorporated by statute in 1955 under chapter 70 of the statutes of that year. It was owned by a well-known Vancouver businessman, Mr. Harry Gillespie, who operated the company until 1960 when he went into semi-retirement. The company remained dormant or inactive until 1967. In that year an agreement was effected between Mr. Gillespie and Home and Dominion Investments Limited under which the Home Company agreed to purchase all the shares of the corporation. The Home Company was owned by a Mr. Pyper of Kamloops, British Columbia, in the main. All the other shareholders of the company are Canadian citizens.

Part of the arrangement with respect to the purchase of shares is that, since Mr. Gillespie owns other concerns, the new owners of the company will change the name of the company so that Mr. Gillespie's other companies will not be confused with it. All aspects of the purchase have been concluded, with the exception of the change of name.

Essentially, the bill is very simple. Clause 1 changes the name of the corporation. Clause 2 empowers the company to contract under the new name and binds the company to any contracts heretofore made under the old name. Clause 3 states that nothing in the bill affects the existing rights of the company. I urge the house to consider this bill in committee, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Hogarth: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order. I have spoken to my hon. friend and to other hon. members, and I understand it is their intention to talk this bill out. I further understand that members of the hon. gentleman's party have no particular objection to this bill but, because of provisions in the rules, wish to utilize the time available at present. May I therefore suggest we call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to accept the suggestion of the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I suggest we revert to committee of the whole.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I am advised we must wait until the Royal Assent. Is it agreed that I rise and resume the chair?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Is it agreed that we suspend the sitting until 5.40 p.m.?

SITTING SUSPENDED

At 5.10 p.m. the sitting of the house was suspended.

• (5:50 p.m.)

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 5.40 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, it is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General that this honourable House attend him immediately in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act to amend the Customs Act.

An Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

An Act to regulate interprovincial and export trade in freshwater fish and to establish the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation.

An Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act.

An Act to amend the Veterans Land Act.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest the house return to the committee of the whole?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Six o'clock.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

[English]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of the whole on Bill C-173. The committee will turn to part I, fisheries and forestry. Shall clause 2 carry?

On Clause 2—Department established.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, Bill C-173, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada, goes a long way toward bringing the administration of the nation's non-renewable resources together in a single department. Our fisheries are renewable and our forests are renewable. Both are very important national resources. Bringing them together in a single department makes sense, because good management in both cases involves the same principles of conservation. It makes sense also because these two great resources are often found in close proximity one to another.

Physically and economically speaking, our fisheries and forest resources have a great deal in common. Often they are found in, or are dependent upon, the same great watersheds. Usually a healthy forest resource means a healthy fishery. Often the wise harvesting of our trees serves to perpetuate our fishery both from a commercial and a recreational point of view.

There are conflicts, of course. The thoughtless spraying of trees to control insects and disease damages our fisheries. Also, a "cut and get out" philosophy in our forests can lay waste, not only a great deal of future forest land but also many miles of our best fishing rivers and streams. So, we have to be careful. We have to manage the total resource, the forests and the fishery, with the same general idea in mind, that of maximizing the total benefit to the Canadian people as a whole.

In talking about our fisheries and forests, I am tempted to add wildlife. I have noted, for example, that the Glassco royal commission on government organization recommended that wildlife be included along with the fisheries. If wildlife were included along with fisheries and forestry, we would have a complete package. We would bring most of the nation's renewable resources under a single administration, under a single government department in Ottawa. We would have, in a single department, all of the "wild" living resources whose reproduction and growth have a great deal to do not only with the improvement of our general environment in Canada but with the preservation of our great outdoors and the long run health of Canadians.

Jurisdictionally, we have an interesting contrast here. Fisheries, under our constitution, is totally a federal matter. Forestry, meanwhile, is largely provincial. Fish, collectively, are a national resource. Trees, in the main, come under provincial jurisdiction. Hence the name of the new department, Fisheries and Forestry.

The word "fisheries" comes first because we in this parliament, our national parliamentary institution, have all the powers necessary in order to not only carry out research on fish as a resource but also to conserve, manage, process, and market, fish and fish products.

The word "forestry" comes second in the name of our new department, Fisheries and Forestry, because here we are confined, in the case of forestry, largely to the role of research. The federal government's role in research is very important. The industry of ideas, research, in effect, knows no boundaries. It is therefore important for us to do collectively, and without regard for our provincial boundaries, as much research as we can at the national level.

But when it comes to the administration of our forest resources, the provinces are paramount. It is up to the provinces to say which trees are left alone and which are cut down. It is up to the provinces to say which companies do, and which do not, get tree farm licences, and so on. It follows that the protection of this resource, in the sense of the prevention of disease, insect damage and forest fires is basically a provincial responsibility, even though the federal government may from time to time help out in this respect.

I have said that the federal role in respect of forest research is a dominant one. It is big relative to that of the provinces. The federal government spends, roughly speaking, one dollar on forest research for every dollar that the industry spends on research and development. For every dollar the federal government spends on forest research and development, the provinces collectively spend about ten cents. So, the federal role in respect of research and related development is a large one indeed.

The federal government's forest research bill adds up to about $18 million per annum. This figure appears small at first glance when compared with the total value of our forest products, which currently is about $5 billion per annum. In other words, less than one-quarter of 1 per cent of the national income is being spent by the federal government on forest research and development. One half of one per cent, is the figure for government and the forest industry together. This figure is low compared with many industries. It is low compared with agriculture, which in this country spends about three-quarters of one per cent on research. In the case of mining, the comparable figure is 1 per cent or roughly double the forestry rate. In the case of secondary manufacturing, it is about 3 per cent. In the case of certain growth industries such as the chemical industry and the electronics type industries, the figure is upward of 5 per cent of their total sales which goes to research.

[Mr. Davis.]

• (8:10 p.m.)

To repeat, in forestry we spend about one quarter of 1 per cent federally and a comparable figure is spent by industry, totalling one half of 1 per cent of the gross sales of the forestry industry. So, the total effort in Canada on forestry is low relatively speaking, and as compared to other industries and even the federal effort which is roughly half the forestry total, is small in over-all industrial terms.

Now, I should like to turn to fisheries, where our research effort is a large element of the departments responsibility but is not the total picture because, in the fishery, where we have national pre-eminence we are responsible also for conservation, for management, for processing and often for marketing as well. Confining my comments for a moment to research, the federal effort mounted through the Fisheries Research Board and through the Department of Fisheries itself is of the order of 5 per cent of the gross sales of the commercial fishing industry in this country. So, you can see that the total research effort in the fisheries area is much greater proportionally than it is in forestry.

As I have said, the responsibility of the federal government in the fisheries area includes development. We spend in total about $50 million a year on fisheries. This $50 million should be viewed in the context of the total output of the commercial fishing industry of about $400 million. In other words, roughly $1 is spent by the federal government on research, development, conservation, management and so on, as compared for every $8 of total sales of the product. If I were to confine the calculation to raw fish, to the fishermans income, the ratio would be one in four. So the federal taxpayers role in respect of the commercial fishery in Canada is a very substantial one indeed.

The roles of the federal department include inspection, which is very important particularly in connection with the maintenance of the quality of fish. The good reputation of fish as a food is dependent on quality and hence on our inspection service. This is true especially in the case of freshwater fish caught mainly on the prairies and in respect of a number of our groundfish products on the east coast. The Department of Fisheries, particularly in recent weeks through the fisheries price support legislation, has also entered the market to a greater extent than ever before. As a result of legislation which was passed recently, a federal agency is being set up to act as a single seller of freshwater fish, principally in the United States.

The fisheries price support legislation is effective in respect of the Great Lakes where the federal role has been to stabilize the price of the freshwater fish from that source. We are looking ahead to 1970 when the federal government will, under federal price support legislation, stand ready to buy frozen groundfish products, to bid the price up in the market and to stabilize the price, particularly to fishermen, for many years to come. So, the Department of Fisheries is concerned not only with the resource and with its optimum management but also with inspection, the quality of the product and the marketing process.

The management of the resource presents a problem, particularly in international waters beyond our own Canadian jurisdiction. Hence the importance of including as much water area under Canadian jurisdiction as possible. In the case of certain resources, including those in salt water which like the crab and the lobster extend to the edge of the continental shelf, we have the complete say as to what is caught, how much is caught, and how this catch relates to the sustainable yield from that source. But in the cases where we are competing with other nations, it is a catch as catch can situation, a no-man's land, an unregulated fishery.

I think it must always be the policy of the government to endeavour to bring order out of chaos in this particular industry. In the case of some treaties, we have managed to limit the catching effort of other countries, and in some cases we have had to limit our own catching effort. In those circumstances, it has been possible to develop the resource in an orderly manner, to maintain production and to get an economic yield from that particular fishery. However, these cases are exceptions rather than the rule.

We have endeavoured, particularly on the west coast and now also in the case of the lobster fishery on the east coast, to institute systems of licence limitation. We can only do this when the fishery in question is totally under Canadian jurisdiction and control. The main objective is not to limit the catch but to limit the amount of gear, the number of vessels, to the point where the income of the average fisherman is as high as it can be. Its administration should be such as to create a reasonable differential in favour of the fisherman relative to the income of the community in which he lives. The principal objective in licence limitation is to raise the income of the average fisherman, but it also has the effect of better conservation and the wise management of the resource itself.

There are other side benefits to the dollars spent on research, conservation and good management, than that of the commercial fishery itself. I am referring here to the sports fishery, to recreation. In many parts of North America today the investment in pleasure boats, in gear and in services for the sports fisherman is a multiple of the investment of the total commercial fishery in that area.

For instance there are six times as many privately owned sports craft on the west coast today as there are commercial fishing craft. The total investment in the sports fishery on the west coast is considerably in excess of commercial fishery. So, the dollars spent on the propagation of more fish of higher quality—in this case of salmon—also creates a benefit for the whole community. Therefore, the earlier figure which I gave of an investment of about $1 by the Canadian taxpayer for every $8 in commercial yield would have to be modified for this very considerable yield in pleasure and convenience to the sports fisherman and the pleasure boat owner.

Several hon. members have already spoken on this bill, and I would like to refer very briefly to their comments related to fisheries before I sit down. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) was concerned about the ever increasing expenditure by federal government departments. I would like to point out that the combined department of fisheries and forestry in 1969 will spend less money, fewer taxpayers dollars, on its administration than the two separate departments did in the immediately preceding year. The employment in terms of man hours of the work force in the department will also be down as compared to 1968.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was concerned about growth centres, particularly as they relate to the expansion of the economy of the Atlantic region. He made a request that in the development of our resource industries we should not be unduly preoccupied with the idea that a few centres should be the only centres in the future to attract investment, particularly investment which can be influenced by federal government policy. I would like to assure him that in the case of the forest industry, and also in the case of fisheries, it will be the intention of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry to make sure that the expansion of our resource industries takes place where it is most likely to be profitable to the owners of companies and more particularly to those who work in the industries and earn a wage either in the mills where forestry is concerned or as fishermen.

• (8:20 p.m.)

In other words, there will not be a conscious policy of directing new industry and investment to metropolitan areas. But I must also tell the hon. member that we shall be very concerned about improving the efficiency of both the forest industry and the fisheries industry in order to make them commercially viable, able to stand on their own feet and to get along with less federal aid in the form of subsidies in the future.

Finally, I should like to refer to the comments made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) who talked about national objectives as distinct, so to speak, from departmentalised objectives. I agree we must always have national objectives and goals. These goals are unlikely to be spelled out under the names of departments such as that of Fisheries and Forestry. I think the principal objective of the Department of Fisheries and Forestry should be more comprehensive. Conservation in the sense of good management is such a goal; in other words, keeping the future in mind so as to yield the greatest possible return to those who use these resources, and at the same time minimize the burden on the Canadian taxpayer.

The management of fisheries, forestry and wildlife resources should be carried out in such a way as to extend their commercial use as much as possible and to increase their other values like recreation which only now are coming into focus as more and more Canadians are able to take to our woods and waters.

I have covered only briefly the activities of this department. I believe the department can expand in a meaningful sense in the direction of conservation and resource management. In the case of remote communities which may be abandoned in the future, small ones mostly, there is a great future in tourism and in recreation. My experience on the west coast has been that the abandoned fishing communities of a decade or so ago have now been occupied by a wave of tourists from the United States and by Canadians who are getting to know our coast better. I am sure this will happen not only on the west coast but on the east coast and on our inland waterways as well.

[Mr. Davis.]

Mr. Crouse: I welcome this opportunity to speak on Bill C-173 which will be known as the Government Organization Act, 1969. I listened with interest to the comments just made by the Minister of Fisheries and I hope a little later to make a few observations on them.

There are 15 clauses in this bill calling for new departments and amendments with regard to existing ones. We on this side are not asked to deal with these items on an individual basis; it seems to be the purpose of the government to bring in measures in wholesale fashion grouping fish and chips, telecommunications and postage stamps, industry, trade and commerce—which, we believe, should never have been separated by the Liberal government in the first place—and so on. The bill before us calls for the establishment of a Department of Regional and Economic Expansion, authority for which should have been sought in a completely separate measure in view of the vast area covered and the many complex problems involved.

The bill also calls for a Department of Supply and Services, amendments to sections of the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act, a substitution for the National Health and Welfare Act, the establishment of a Medical Research Council, the establishment of a Science Council of Canada, the granting of corporate powers to the Royal Canadian Mint, an amendment to the Ferries Act, amendments to the Government Companies Operation Act, increases in the salaries of ministers and members of the Privy Council, plus changes in the Senate and House of Commons Act and transitional changes in ministerial functions.

As far as I am concerned, this bill is a legislative nightmare. It is impossible to deal with it in its entirety. It is the product, it seems to me, of a confused and uncertain government which can do no better than bring this hodge podge of legislative proposals to the house and dump it in our laps, saying, in effect: this is the best we can do.

Though it is true the present Prime Minister has only been in office since 1968, Canada has had a Liberal government ever since 1963 and the present bill is a sorry admission on the part of the right hon. gentleman of failure to organize the administration, in particular the various ministries, into an effective unit.

The first part of this bill, dealing with Fisheries and Forestry, is really a housekeeping measure. It moves the Department of Forestry away from the minister of rural development and places this important primary industry under the administration of the Minister of Fisheries. It is obvious that the government has been planning this move for some time because, since, the beginning of this session the book of estimates has listed the expenditures for fisheries and forestry under the heading "Department of Fisheries and Forestry". I do not oppose this change, but I have reservations about the manner in which the problems experienced by these two important industries can be related directly one with another, especially in the Atlantic provinces.

For example, when spraying was carried out in New Brunswick in an effort to control budworm infestation in the forests of that province, the spray was washed from the trees and carried to the rivers and streams, destroying large numbers of trout and salmon and creating considerable problems for departmental officials both federally and provincially. I cannot but wonder which hat the minister will wear when such problems come to his attention. Will he try to aid the fisheries or will he try to help the forestry people when a conflict of interest arises?

I note the bill calls for one deputy minister to be responsible for assisting in the administration of the combined Department of Fisheries and Forestry. Whoever fills this position will have to be knowledgeable in both industries, since every province of Canada counts either fishing or forestry, or both, among its primary industries. Then again, conditions in the fishing industry vary greatly as between one coast and another. It goes without saying that they are altogether different from those in the forest industry.

To all who are concerned over the present economic state of the fishing industry on the east coast, the announcement on Thursday, February 20, by the Minister of Fisheries in which he outlined the program of assistance for the groundfish industry was welcome news. The minister said tonight that the federal role with respect to the commercial fishery is a very substantial one. With this, I would agree.

• (8:30 p.m.)

I should like to point out at this point that some 75 or 80 per cent of all our fish production is exported. This is helpful in bringing foreign exchange to this country. It also helps our balance of payments problem. In other words, we are only showing good business sense when we spend something like 5 per cent—I believe that was the figure the minister gave—on research for our fishing industry.

The government's main objective, which was outlined a short time ago by the minister, is to bring about a permanent improvement in the marketing of Canadian frozen groundfish. In order to do this, the minister has proposed to take advantage of the fisheries prices support legislation by entering the market and initiating a purchasing program that is designed to strengthen and stabilize the market. It is planned to sell the supplies accumulated through ordinary commercial channels, and it is proposed to hold the reserve stocks until the export price is high enough to cover the basic costs of production in Canada.

These costs must include an adequate price to the thousands of Canadian fishermen in the Atlantic provinces who are completely dependent upon the fishing industry, who have no alternative means of employment, and who are facing serious financial difficulties while endeavouring to provide for the needs of their families in this inflated, high cost economy in which we are living today.

The guideline that has been suggested by the minister as a fair price to our fishermen is the average price paid for the years 1965, 1966 and 1967. I find no fault with this proposal, but I would point out that the minister's plan can only succeed if sales of groundfish are expanded both in Canada and in the United States.

The minister's proposal is initially a holding operation to enable funds to be supplied to the processors in order that they can proceed with the orderly marketing of their products without dumping them on the market at sacrifice prices. The fact that this government has finally shown some backbone, that it has at long last decided to recognize the regional disparities that exist in the Atlantic provinces, and that it has finally decided to aid these people by announcing a policy for the fisheries development, giving new hope to the people in the Atlantic provinces, has had a salutary effect upon fish prices. Instead of acting like a rudderless ship that is exposed to every wind and wave fisheries now has a sea anchor in the form of the government's announced policy to aid the industry in meeting the intense competition our processors are facing in our tradititional markets from foreign suppliers.

I think it is regrettable that this government, like the Pearson government that preceded it, waited so long before it took action; that it waited until some of the processors in the Atlantic provinces had to close their doors, until all the processors' funds had been spent and the fishermen had used up their resources and were desperately seeking aid while their debts piled higher and higher.

That was the situation, and the government cannot say that it was unaware of these desperate conditions because speaker after speaker on this side of the house who came from the Atlantic provinces made very effort to acquaint the government with the needs of their people and to encourage it to accept its responsibility by taking action to deal with this problem.

As I said earlier, part of the minister's program for the fishing industry is a holding operation, the success of which will depend upon marketing more of our fisheries products in Canada and the United States. To do this the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will have to enlist the aid of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, utilizing trade commissioners and every sales minded person within the department in the hope that we can increase our exports of fish and fish products not only to our traditional markets but to other parts of the world. We must also put out better literature and encourage more people in Canada to eat more fish.

I suggest that while the literature that has been published to date has been helpful, it has lacked imagination. Perhaps I am being bold in making this suggestion, but I should like to suggest to the minister the adoption of a new slogan that would go something like this: "We dare you to be thin by consuming more of Canada's nutritious, non-fattening seafood". I ask the minister to try that for a heading and then to follow it up with a series of recipes that would be helpful to anybody who was desirous of losing weight. Certainly, this sort of nutritious protein food is very helpful to anybody who is trying to follow a diet and take off a few excess pounds. However, I leave that suggestion with the minister.

It is my understanding that a study of the marketing of fish in Canada is presently underway, the cost of the study being shared by the industry, through the Fisheries Council of Canada, and the federal and provincial governments. To date we have heard nothing of the results of this study. I hope the Minister of Fisheries will find it possible to give the house an interim report on this matter in the not too distant future.

While we are on the question of surveys, I understand that the Atlantic Development Board was conducting a study in depth of the marketing of Canadian fish products in the United States. However, this board has now been swallowed up by the proposed department of regional development and will be replaced by an advisory council, as proposed in the bill, to be called the Atlantic Development Council. I cannot help but wonder whether this study has been finalized and, if so, whether a report is available. If the study has not been completed, then have the funds for this work which had been granted to the Atlantic Development Board been returned to the minister of regional development and handed over to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry so that this very worth-while project on behalf of the fishing industry can be completed? Perhaps the minister would comment on these matters, which have always been important but which are even more important now.

The long term loans proposed by the minister as a special measure for the fishing and processing firms in 1969, plus the mid-term and long-term measures that are contemplated for restructuring the operations of the processors between now and the 1970's, will be helpful in improving our competitive position. Any program that makes for greater efficiencies in any industry cannot help but narrow the gap between production costs and market prices, thereby putting the industry on a sounder financial footing.

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry suggested in his over-all program that beginning in the early 1970's it will be necessary to centralize our frozen groundfish operations in fewer growth areas. The minister is no doubt aware that such a program, while highly desirable from the point of view of efficiency, creates serious social problems for our people. I believe that the suggestion that we centralize our frozen groundfish operations was first made by the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council, and in view of the larger ships that are required to conduct a year round fishery, and also in view of the emphasis placed on the expansion and development of our offshore fishery, the trend toward centralized growth centres was a natural evolution in the fishing industry.

• (8:40 p.m.)

However, in my opinion, the change need not be so disturbing to our people socially as was first anticipated, providing that the moves are made gradually after careful planning by the industry and the provincial and federal governments. Communications are a vital part of this program. If good highways are built to provide easy access from country areas to the centralized fishing centres then fishermen and fish packers will have little difficulty in commuting to their places of work. This type of living is preferred by many Canadians; and though travelling to and from work for a considerable distance is time consuming, many prefer travelling instead of living in congested areas where rents for accommodation are generally very high. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that in today's society it is almost impossible to obtain suitable accommodation in the congested centres of Canada. However, before beginning on a program of centralized growth centres for the fishing industry, the federal government should realize that it must also be willing to share in the cost of highway construction in the provinces concerned so that easy access may be provided for people living in the country to established growth centres. I urge the government to give a problem of this magnitude top priority for discussion at future federal conferences so that the provinces and the federal government may co-operate on this matter to the best advantage of all concerned.

Finally I point out to the minister responsible for fisheries and forestry that his announced policy for the fishing industry has already helped in that it has given our people new hope where little hope had existed for the past two years. But this policy alone will not cover all problems of the fishing industry. If he and his officials are thinking in terms of developing centralized growth centres in the early 1970's, the time to start planning those centres is now. A study should be made of all existing plants processing fresh fish, salt fish and frozen fish blocks. The areas surrounding these plants should be studied in an effort to determine the distances travelled by existing fishermen and plant workers. I am glad to see the Minister of Public Works present in the house. I submit that the Department of Fisheries and Forestry ought to work in co-operation with the Department of Public Works to determine what will be potential growth centres, so that funds may be earmarked for suitable wharves, breakwaters, skidways, freshwater supplies, channel and harbour lights as well as suitable dredging programs to take care of today's modern trawlers.

The Minister of Fisheries and Forestry ought to be working in co-operation with the minister responsible for regional economic expansion on the type of planning to which I have alluded. There is one thing I should like to know, however. Who will take initiatives? Who will go ahead with these types of projects? In my native province of Nova Scotia, when the captain of a ship becomes ill and the mate takes over, unless there is agreement between the mate and the bos'n on the course that will be followed, that ship will go around in circles. If the ship is in port and the captain is not aboard that ship will not even begin its voyage. That may illustrate one of the weaknesses of this bill. It defines certain powers for the minister responsible for regional development; it gives certain powers to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, there are 15 parts to the bill, and powers are divided so greatly that one may wonder from which source the initiatives to begin much needed projects will come. I hope that as a result of the provisions of this legislation one minister will not say, "Let George do it," and shrug off his responsibilities. That is the danger inherent in this type of legislation. Organization and co-operation with all governmental departments whose activities are in any way related to the fishing industry should be the watchwords of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry in the next few years. Only through well planned and well co-ordinated programs can the Atlantic fishery reach its full potential and play its role in the future growth and development of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, I intend to speak only on that part of Bill C-173 dealing with fisheries and forestry. My remarks will be confined to part I. I am sorry that the minister responsible for fisheries in the Conservative government, the hon. member for Malpeque (Mr. MacLean), is not here. I am sure he could have made some interesting observations on the matter under consideration.

Our party, Mr. Chairman, does not object strongly to the establishment to the new Department of Fisheries and Forestry. We do not see any sinister motives behind the desire to establish it. By the same token, we see no great point, in the light of past experience, in establishing it. No doubt the minister will justify the government's position. He is a very articulate and plausible spokesman. That will not hide the fact that the Department of Fisheries has been shunted around from one part of the government structure to another. Formerly, it was controlled by the Department of Agriculture. We hope that in this bill we shall see more than mere structural changes. We hope to see the government display a change in attitude.

Although the minister is responsible for fisheries, including inland fisheries, I am disturbed at the idea that the Freshwater Fish Marketing Board may not have come under his aegis, since I submit it would have been logical to bring that board under the minister's jurisdiction. While fisheries are primarily the responsibility of the federal government, forestry comes under provincial jurisdiction to a large extent. Consequently, the new department will be mainly concerned with fisheries and not so greatly concerned with forestry matters. Both industries, however, are controlled by large monopolies and in both industries the employment potential is declining. On the west coast there are really only two fishing companies, B.C. Packers, which is part of the Weston food octopus, and the Canadian Fishing Company which is owned, of course, by New England interests. These companies co-operate one with another. They own other subsidiary companies, the most notable of which is Todd Brothers. Similarly, the forestry industry in British Columbia is controlled by three or four large forestry concerns which are mainly subsidiaries of United States companies.

A moment ago I mentioned declining potentials for employment in our two basic industries. The minister said the damage might be offset by encouraging more sports fishing in the area. Nevertheless, that will not solve the problem of what we ought to do with those who are displaced by the decline in these industries. May I cite an example, Mr. Chairman. It is clear that the inshore fishery of Newfoundland is in a difficult position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rose: Up the Bullet! I was in the province last week. The federal government is making available this year, as it did last year, $1.5 million for the relocation and assistance of those who are scattered on the islands surrounding the Newfoundland mainland. That indicates to me that there must be a real difficulty in the inshore fishery, since the federal government would not spend money to the tune of $1.5 million on programs of relocation and assistance if there were no difficulty. My concern is this. Many fishermen who were, independent—they may not have enjoyed a high living standard—will be shipped to urban centres and lose their independence. The rural poor may become the urban poor. I do not want the rural poor to be shipped to larger centres just to provide cheap labour for pulp industries and the various packing concerns. We must guard against that happening. To avoid that, we must upgrade the skills of those being moved and make them more competitive with others living in urban centres, As I say, it is no good taking fishermen who are independent and shipping them to urban centres under relocation programs if those fishermen have not been trained to meet the challenges of urban society.

• (8:50 p.m.)

In British Columbia this year, for various reasons, three canneries will have to close. One is at Sunnyside, the other is North Pacific Cannery and the third is the one at Klemtu. What is going to happen to these people who depend not only on fishing but also on cannery work for their livelihood? Many of these people are native fishermen. Will these people be once again forced to the lower part of the economic totem pole? I think we have to consider these things. I am told there are meetings going on now between the unions and industries to investigate possible retraining programs for these people, but the proposals seem ludicrous. As usual there is too little, too late. The suggestion being advanced by the department of manpower is that half the cost of this retraining should be paid by the department, one-quarter of the cost paid by the fishing companies and the remaining one-quarter by the union. Why should a worker who is being replaced pay for this retraining when he has already paid for it through his taxes? I do not object to the companies paying because, in my opinion, they do not pay their share of the corporate income tax. If they did, then I would feel this training should all be paid for by the department of manpower, as it is their responsibility.

But the essential question about joining Fisheries and Forestry under one ministry really boils down to this.

Will the basic philosophy of joining the Departments of Fisheries and Forestry under one minister be one of conservation or will it be one of continued exploitation? In other words, will private interests take precedence over public interests? Fisheries interests and forestry interests have traditionally been antagonistic to one another. The forest industry has been guilty of severe crimes contrary to the interests of the fishermen. An example of this is the denuding of mountains, the "cut and get out" philosophy which is responsible for the flash floods which destroy the spawning beds. Another example is the logs being driven down the river destroying salmon beds.

The Department of Fisheries had the power to stop this rape of the salmon beds in the Stellako River, but they pulled their punches. The provincial interests concerned with logging moved in and; to hell with the salmon, the logs went down! Various native communities such as Greenville and Aiyansh, which depend for their livelihood on the fishing industry, are at the mercy of Columbia Cellulose. The responsibility for such situations is that of the Minister of Fisheries. He has the power to have the department put a great deal more effort into conservation activities rather than exploitation. Certainly, it is desirable to harvest our resources at the maximum yield, but this has to be correlated with the possible long term effects. Spawning grounds which survive river driving are threatened today by pesticides being sprayed on the trees which ultimately leach through the ground to the rivers.

I have attempted to give examples to the minister and to the house of how the logging industry and the fishing industry very often work at odds with one another. I am certain the minister is completely aware of the problems in this regard. I hope the minister will recognize that the people are concerned about the future of our resources.

Why not have a government policy to stop river driving? Why not compensate the fishermen for water pollution? The Minister of Agriculture recently introduced a bill under which farmers will be compensated for soil pollution. Your new department, Mr. Minister, gives you a tremendous opportunity to right many wrongs. It all depends upon which side you are. I know you are a reasonable, plausible, articulate and even eloquent man. I ask you to consider some of the suggestions which have been put forward by our party. Get on the job in connection with international fisheries treaties and stop talking about them.

An hon. Member: The hon. member should address the Chair.

Mr. Rose: The Japanese and Russian ships, Mr. Chairman, are invading the halibut fishery in British Columbia waters. I have received information that the halibut industry will suffer a $3 million loss of revenue this year. Plug the holes in the 12-mile fishing limit around the Queen Charlotte Islands before foreign interests have time to establish so-called historic fishing rights. Salmon licence limits should not be proceeded with as they will turn the fish boat business into something similar to the taxi business in many large cities where a car, because it bears a licence, sells for a price out of all proportion to its value. The vertical integration of the industry must not be contributed to by allowing Class A licence holders, notably the fishing companies, to purchase any more boats for approximately five years. This moratorium will prevent company control from happening.

On the subject of vertical integration, it would be helpful if fisheries improvement loans could be used to refinance mortgages now held by boat owners in debt to the fishing companies. The government should listen to the Prince Rupert Co-operative which owns no boats and runs the risk of being frozen out by a limited number of fishing companies and by ownership which is in the hands of interests not necessarily concerned with their welfare. They should listen to the Pacific trawler's and the fishermen's union. Because of the licence limits, the fishermen will be unable to tie up their boats for one year because they may lose their licences. We are likely to have more boats than ever chasing fewer fish.

Aid to the Atlantic groundfish industry was announced at the same time the transportation committee arrived in St. John's, Newfoundland. This took a great deal of steam from the Newfoundland Bullet issue. The government should make certain this aid does not get into the hands of the packers and the fishing companies. Some of it at least, should trickle down to the fishermen. One of the problems of the east coast fisherman is he does not get an adequate return for his fish because he is at the mercy of the fishing companies. Codfish selling in the United States for 26 cents a pound gives a return of 1½ to 2½ cents to the fisherman. This is not good enough. I think it is even worse than the return to the farmer.

The New Democratic Party, Mr. Chairman, sees much potential for evil and much potential for good in the fisheries and forestry reorganization and merger. However we must insist, on behalf of the people we represent, that structural changes are not enough. A whole new system of attitudes and priorities must manifest itself. Eminent people such as Dr. McTaggart Cowan and Dr. Peter Larkin claim that the whole world's food chain is imperilled by chemicals scattered carelessly, such as defoliants in war and pesticides in peace.

• (9:00 p.m.)

The question then becomes much more than the cost of a few fish or of some esthetic value such as scenery. Our whole oxygen supply is threatened if we do not mend our ways. The minister has a responsibility to make certain that determined leadership is exercised so that all Canadians can see the government is dedicated to the welfare of future Canadians. He must resist stubbornly any efforts by the fast buck boys to destroy what is irreplaceable. Sir, we will all be watching.

[Translation]

Mr. Dumont: Mr. Chairman, we are informed that the house will study Bill C-173 entitled "Government Organization Act, 1969" providing for the establishment of a Department of Regional Economic Expansion with the object of insuring social justice and economic balance, according to the hon. member for Langelier who is the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand). Such legislation would thus contribute to create a decent living standard for those who want to live outside large urban communities.

I would like at this time to remind the minister of his hope that his new department would assist certain areas to further their development.

For instance, let us consider the case of my own riding, the country of "white gold", as asbestos is sometimes called. Its mining would help in the development of this region if industries were established there, and the refining of this crude product would result, for example, in the manufacturing of asbestos shingles, insulating mineral wool and asbestos fibres used in the processing of fibro-cement.

I notice that this bill deals also with the designation of special areas and I quote:

> The Governor in Council may, by order, designate as a special area, for the period set out in the order, any area in Canada that is determined to require . . . special measures—

All these statements appear to be very well meant. Should these industries be established in the near future, our 400,000 unemployed would find work, especially those 200,000 who, as everybody knows, live in the province of Quebec. Besides, I think the government would automatically reach its intended objective which would rid Quebec especially of the terrorist activities we are witnessing at the present time.

Who will venture to think that we will be able to prevent such terrorist acts as long as there are economic disparities such as those which now exist.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I will kindly remind the hon. member for Frontenac that we are now considering Part I of the bill which deals with the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, and not the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. The hon. member will have the opportunity to speak of regional expansion when we come to that stage of our proceedings. I would ask him to confine his remarks to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Dumont: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, for your remarks.

Like the previous speakers, I was summarizing the bill and I was just coming to the object of this debate when speaking of the possibility of eliminating certain regional disparities.

As our agriculture is in an appalling state of stagnation, it would be advisable, for instance, to see to it that the province of Quebec is reforested that would be useful to farmers since such an undertaking would represent unusual wealth for the next 20, 25 or 30 years. Moreover, when I heard some hon. members deal with the problems of fisheries, freshwater fisheries and others, I was saying to myself that if we undertook intensive reforestation throughout the country, more fish might survive, because how many times have we not noticed that fish disappear as forest borders move back?

In that connection, I know that everyone who spoke before me recognizes that, in Quebec, people do not live on freshwater fish or miraculous draughts of fishes. But the fact remains that we can surely contribute to progress by supporting the resolutions capable of assuring the greatest development of those industries. In Quebec, we are faced mostly with problems of deforestation. We therefore invite the new minister to turn his attention to this crucial problem. At the present time, if there are 200,000 unemployed in Quebec, it would only be logical to hire them for reforestation work. This undertaking would provide them with a job while ensuring for tomorrow the abundance that mother nature was good enough to give to our rich country which, unfortunately, was overexploited in the past. In fact, by thus misusing our riches, we have prepared the way for very serious problems which, today, force us to create new departments in order to remedy these difficulties.

Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to talk endlessly on these points, but I realized a while ago, while listening to those who spoke before me, that there is now in Canada a certain rivalry between the fishing industry on the west coast and the one in the Atlantic provinces. Some hon. members for Newfoundland and Nova Scotia were happy to learn that the fishing industry on the west coast had suffered losses. But since in Quebec we are level-headed people, who are willing to co-operate, let us join hands in order to make sure that each Canadian receives a sufficient income. Thus, we will see terrorism disappear and abundance reign in Canada.

[English]

Mr. St-Pierre: May I say in opening, Mr. Chairman, that the Minister of Fisheries is a gentleman for whom I have the highest respect. I think many of us in the house appreciate the calm, studied, very sane and common sense way in which he brings his case to the house from time to time. It had not been my intention to speak tonight except that the minister himself brought up an aspect of his department which I felt did deserve some comment from me. My comments will be brief.

He spoke of the importance of drawing base lines for establishment of a 12 mile limit of Canadian territorial waters. I jotted down his remarks at that time. This may not be them precisely, but I think I have the sense of them: "Hence the importance of delineating lines to contain as much water area as possible for Canada." This strikes particularly at a point on which Canadian governments for some time have shown very little but timidity and apparent indifference to the needs of fishermen on both the east and the west coast. As I intend to point out in a few moments, this apparent indifference is now extending to the question of sovereignty in the Arctic waters.

However with regard to the west coast, and I know the minister knows this well, the failure to draw the base line from the northern tip of Vancouver Island to the southern sections of the Queen Charlottes has left two very valuable fishing banks of the groundfish industry open to foreign invasion. Foreign fleets are in there in force, particularly Japanese and Russian. They are taking more fish than our Canadian fishermen and they are endangering the fisheries resources on these two banks in the Queen Charlotte Sound. They are doing so essentially because the Canadian government refuses to stir itself to draw this line from Northern Vancouver Island to the bottom of the Queen Charlotte islands.

• (9:10 p.m.)

I have spoken of an apparent indifference and timidity on the part of the government. If I did not use the word "apparent" in conjunction with the word "timidity" I use it now. It is to me seemingly rather timid if countries such as Ecuador and Iceland are capable of drawing lines to establish sovereignty around their coasts but we are not. Canada, with the longest coastline of any nation in the world, still has not established its lines despite the fact that we declared a 12-mile limit and drew some of these lines in 1964.

What I should like to refer to during these few minutes is the question of how much real concern there exists in respect of this important issue among those members who sit in the front benches across the house. As an example of this, let me deal with something which has arisen in the last few days as referred to in the public press and in the house. I have in mind the question of Canadian sovereignty in Arctic waters.

As hon. gentlemen probably know, the United States plans to send the ship Manhattan through the Northwest passage, sometime this summer breaking her way through ice without benefit of icebreakers. As far as can be learned Canada will not have an observer on the Manhattan. It appears that the United States disputes that we can hold Parry Sound, which is part of the Northwest Passage, as Canadian territorial water.

In this regard I asked a question yesterday of the Secretary of State for External Affairs and I should like to read that question and the answer which appear at page 5978 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of recent newspaper reports that the United States government does not fully accept Canadian sovereignty with respect to the twelve mile limit off the Arctic islands, will he inform this house whether our position on this matter is being made clear to the United States government?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs answered as follows:

Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had a number of discussions with the United States government about the definition of our territorial waters and fishing zones. As I said, we do not always obtain agreement on our position, but we are pressing it as effectively as we can.

Yesterday in this house the minister said we were pressing our position effectively. As it happened, last night on a national television program, another person had something to say about this matter. I can name her as I happen to have been a colleague of hers for years. Miss Pat Carney of the Vancouver Sun had something to say about this matter. As I said earlier, I have considerable respect for the Minister of Fisheries as a minister. I can also say to the house that Miss Carney is an extremely accurate reporter and it is her custom to double check her facts. I consider her to be one of the most reliable reporters in this city.

Let me read a part of Miss Carney's report to the nation yesterday in respect of the Canadian position on Arctic territorial waters.

She said, and I quote, "one gets the impression that nobody in Ottawa has bothered to sit down and figure out what we should be doing in the Arctic. Officials cannot even agree on whether Parry channel lies in Canadian waters." I urge hon. members to listen to this statement and realize how four departments feel in this regard. "The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, which administers the adjacent islands, is sure it does. The Department of External Affairs thinks it does, although a spokesman says the issue is fuzzy. External affairs minister Mitchell Sharp said in the house today that there are some points in dispute". Again to quote Miss Carney, "some transport officials insist that Parry channel is an international waterway outside our territorial limits because the entrances are between 40 and 60 miles wide, well in excess of the traditional three mile limit". The C.O.T. hasn't yet caught up with our position of 1964. And finally the Justice Department; "The Department of Justice has never heard of Parry channel."

In view of these facts can we believe there is real concern and real sense of purpose in the government in respect of this important issue involving national sovereignty over Canadian arctic waters? This will have a great effect on the welfare of our fishermen on both coasts. Therefore, I urge the Minister of Fisheries to impress upon his colleagues that this is a vital matter to the fishermen and the nation. I thank hon. members for their attention.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this part of Bill C-173 which unifies or integrates the responsibility for forestry with the fisheries portfolio. I have serious reservations about using the words "unification and integration" because we are all aware of the chaos which developed when these words were applied to the change of our Canadian forces. I hope very seriously that the results of this change will not be as drastic.

In so far as the province of Newfoundland is concerned, this change is a very important one because these two natural resources are very closely allied in that province. I say this to emphasize the close relationship of fisheries and forestry to the needs of a great number of Newfoundlanders. I welcome this change because the forestry portfolio will now be the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries who I feel is one minister who does not spend all his time dialoguing, but appears to be trying to use a common sense approach. His introduction of the prices support legislation in the groundfish industry is the only marked development or improvement I have seen in my short few months here in parliament. I hope that the promised legislation for the salt cod industry will be forthcoming very soon. I emphasize my concern because in another month Newfoundland fishermen will be preparing their gear for the coming season. Judging from their feelings and their experiences last year, which result from the weakness of their industry, there is very serious doubt about their willingness to bother fishing at all this coming season.

It is my hope that after so many years of the floundering attitude and approach of the minister's predecessors, we will see a marked and steady progress in this important industry. I am sure this change was the result of the realization of the critical state of this industry. The action was brought about by the sincere and lengthy appeal of my colleagues on this side of the house who emphasized the neglect of the industry in the Atlantic region over the past year.

When I emphasize the importance of the alliance of forestry and fisheries in Newfoundland I do so because over the years, due to the limited length of the fishing season, fishermen have turned to the forestry industry for employment. Therefore, I hope that the minister will realize the important relationship of these two great God-given natural resources and the great contribution that can be made by intertwining his department's planning and studying. I note that in the annual report of the Department of Forestry and Rurral Development much time and money have been spent on various research programs and studies to develop our forest potential. I note, too, the specific problems with which we in Canada are faced.

• (9:20 p.m.)

I, therefore, hope there will be a concerted effort of communication while the change is taking place, so that we will not once again become overpowered with research studies, conferences, task forces, royal commissions, duplication and the ensuing waste which will result. I say this because all the research has been done and all the studies must be completed, if I can judge by the booklets and pamphlets that come flooding into my office daily.

I am deeply concerned, however, and I hope the government is also, with the infestation of insects which is causing a serious deterioration of our forests. I refer to the spruce budworm in New Brunswick and Ontario, the jackpine sawfly in Quebec and the balsam woolly aphid in British Columbia and Newfoundland. The hemlock looper has become a serious threat to our forests, and unless something is done very quickly this infestation will seriously affect the two main paper mills in the province, Bowater and Price Brothers Limited, which are by far the main employers of our work force in the central and western areas of Newfoundland. Indeed, if this disease is not stopped it will destroy the economy of a large portion of the province.

This infestation is nationwide. I am sure the minister is aware of the situation. I cannot stress forcibly enough how important it is to tackle the control of this disease which threatens our vast timberlands right across the dominion. This industry is so vital to our economy. I am sure that everyone in this house is aware of the importance to the nation of the paper industry as well as the other products of our forests.

The planners in the department of forestry are well aware of this threat and are recommending immediate action. I hope their advice will be heeded so that we do not have more serious problems in years to come. I hope, too, that the importance of federal-provincial co-operation will not be overlooked in the important areas of conservation and preservation of our forests. In this connection, need I mention the great hazard of forest fires, which must be controlled by continuing surveillance?

While on the subject of federal-provincial co-operation, I am concerned that, in spite of our vast timberlands in Newfoundland, the price of building materials in that province remains higher than in any other part of Canada. Most of our building lumber has to be imported. It seems very strange that a certain type of lumber that sells for $72 per thousand board feet in Montreal sells for $172 in Newfoundland.

I point this out, Mr. Chairman, to try and impress upon the government the need for the consideration of priorities. In a province where the need for housing is so great, and earning power so low, we must be cognizant of the danger of giving away our timber rights to ambitious speculators who have no concern for the province but are concerned only with their greed. I hope the minister responsible for housing will take note of this problem when considering his solutions to the housing shortage in Canada.

I should like to refer to the views of the Prime Minister on the interrelationship between departments. I express my concern with regard to equating the priority of the conservation of the potential beauty of the forests of Newfoundland with other pertinent factors. I refer to a proposed second national park in the Bonne Bay area of Newfoundland, where the cloak-and-dagger tactics of various levels of government and departments, and a complete lack of sincerity, will destroy a potential Mecca of forest development not equalled in the whole of the nation. Because of evasiveness and intrigue, it is impossible to determine from anyone in government the facts about an area which could be the means of bringing great prosperity to a province through the development of a national park that is considered to be of fantastic value by everyone other than those who can do some good for the Canadians they represent.

There is great potential wealth in our forests. The by-products of our timber resources do not stop at paper and building materials. The paper industry is finding new avenues of use for these resources, even in the field of clothing materials. The prospects in this field are only being tapped at the present time.

But the mere changing of a department will not cure the problems. The continued changing of names of agencies under departments will not solve them. The solution of our problems in all phases of government activity lies in the use of practical, common, business sense. This is a basic principle that seems to be forgotten in this way-out intellectual age. I refer to action.

I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that many other hon. members will have more to say as Bill C-173 progresses through the various stages. I conclude by repeating my hope that the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry will give this important, new responsibility the attention it deserves, for the benefit of all Canadians.

Mr. Groos: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up too much of the time of the committee, because we are only on part I of Bill C-173, the purpose of which is to amalgamate the Department of Fisheries with the Department of Forestry and give the minister the job of handling both fisheries and forestry. Coming from British Columbia, this makes eminent sense to me. I think it will make eminent sense to many British Columbians. I congratulate the minister on his new portfolio and wish him every success in it.

We have heard a fair amount this evening about the commercial fishing industry. I would like to put in a plug for the sports fisherman, since no one has as yet mentioned his part in the industry.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The minister did.

Mr. Groos: Unfortunately, I was not here to hear the minister's remarks. However, I am very pleased to note that he was the first to draw attention to the importance of the sports fishing industry. This industry is particularly important in the province of British Columbia, where the dollar value of the sports industry is so great, when you take into account the fact that the value of the engines and sports equipment used in it far outweighs the net returns from the commercial fishing industry. As we all know, the sports fishing industry is growing and becoming more important all the time.

While on the subject of the sports fishery, I would point out that out west we have in the last few years heard rumours of a possibility that there may be a licensing provision applied to sports fishermen. I hope the minister will discard this idea very quickly, if it is ever brought to his attention.

Mr. Davis: Agreed.

Mr. Groos: This sport is one of the few things a man is able to do free these days, namely, to go out in a boat, cast a line out in the ocean and catch a fish. I hope we will be able to do this for nothing, certainly as long as I am a member of this house and the minister is Minister of Fisheries. I trust that the minister will retain the commercial fishing free zones in order to allow the sports salmon to escape from the ocean to the mouths of the rivers in sufficient quantities to replace their stocks as the years go by, thus permitting the sports fisherman a chance to catch these salmon free from commercial fishing operations which in the past have decimated entire runs of salmon in certain rivers. Over the years commercial fishing operations have so depleted the stocks of salmon available to sports fishermen that the annual take per boat has diminished very considerably.

I am very comforted by the action taken over the past couple of years by the minister's predecessor, who permitted commercial fishing free zones. I have noted an increase in the take per boat. In the area of southern Vancouver Island, in particular, this is very heartening to the sports fishermen. I know these people will be 100 per cent behind the minister if he continues, and expands if necessary, the commercial fishing free zones.

• (9:30 p.m.)

I would also like to commend to the minister's attention the development by private industry in co-operation with both the federal and provincial governments of the "plus tree program" which, as you know, is the development of super Douglas fir trees. As I understand it, the program is limited at present to the Douglas fir species, but in my opinion it certainly holds great promise for the future of our province which stands pretty high in the export of forest goods. As all hon. members of the house know, my province also stands very high in fishery products export and production. Of course, this will require continued co-operation among private industry, the federal government and the provincial government. As a conservationist, I am particularly heartened to note the co-operation that has existed and continues to exist between industry, the two senior levels of government and the sports conservation groups, all four working together for conservation purposes, generally.

The amalgamation of the two portfolios, as I said, makes eminent sense to me for a number of reasons but principally because so much in conservation involves forests, fishing and water. With this joint portfolio it is you who will be able to bring new life—

The Deputy Chairman: I regret that I must advise the hon. member that he must address the Chair and not the minister directly.

Mr. Groos: I apologize, Mr. Chairman. It is the minister who will be responsible for the various conservation programs. I am most impressed with what has been done recently and I trust it will continue at an accelerated pace in the future. It certainly shows great promise if it continues to increase productivity at its present rate.

Finally, I should like to remind the minister that in future plans an oceanographic institute is to be established in the Victoria Esquimalt harbour area. I hope these plans will not be allowed to remain dormant for too long. An oceanographic institute in Victoria similar to the one in existence in the Bedford Basin at Halifax will be of great benefit, not only to our community but to Canada and the world at large.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Chairman, I believe my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West set out very clearly and succinctly a number of points about which we are greatly concerned now and have been for some time. I want to touch on only one of the items initially raised by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. But before I do so, I would like to make a brief comment in passing about the reference to the salt fishery by my friend, the hon. member for Victoria. I am sure he knows, as should everyone else on Vancouver Island, that there is a tremendous amount of abuse of our fisheries by people from the United States, almost with the aid and succour of the customs officials one would think. It is common knowledge that a number of United States citizens, some of whom even boast of it, supplement their pension income by coming over from Port Angeles to Victoria and engaging in sports fishing activities off the Qualicum Beach, Campbell River area. These people drive mobile campers and engage in a process of catching salmon by the dozens and canning them within these trailers or campers. Then, they take case after case of salmon back to the United States.

In many instances, they sell the canned products in the United States and boast about this means of supplementing their pension incomes. This practice has been going on year after year. No one knows the amount of fish that is caught in this way because it is done to some extent illegally and by subterfuge. The fisheries department knows about this, the conservation officers know about it, the provincial government knows about it, the customs officials know about it, and the general public knows about it, but no one does anything. It goes on and will probably go on this coming year. I am sure the minister has heard about it. With all the value that the sports fishery may have, this practice is destructive because it is an extraction from a resource that is already presumably overfished to a large extent on a commercial basis. Commercial fishermen whose livelihood depends on salmon find that their fishing season is curtailed, but right out in the bay or in the harbour they see so-called fishermen engaging in a semi-illicit commercial canning operation the products of which are taken back to the United States. So, with all the concern about the sports fishery, I think some concern should be shown about this practice.

However, the item with which I wanted to deal relates to the point raised by my colleague, the hon. member for Fraser Valley West. I refer to the straight baselines and the 12-mile limit, a point which was underscored by my friend the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin. I think it is perhaps an almost accepted fact of political life that members of the opposition can spend many months and years in parliament complaining about a particularly grievous situation, raising questions about it and proposing solutions. However, when a member on the government side engages in the same sort of condemnation of government indifference, there is a tendency for people to sit up and take notice. The matter is extremely important. Because of the way in which the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin approached it, I think the house owes him a debt. We should be grateful to him for having developed this into an almost non-partisan complaint. Ever since 1964 when the Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones Act became law, we have been making speeches in parliament and outside it and we have been asking questions of the government as to just when the straight baselines on the Pacific coast would be drawn. For years, we got answers from Mr. Paul Martin that we could not decipher, but none the less they were answers which added up to nothing except perhaps that sometimes he was engaging in negotiations with the United States. We got answers from Mr. Robichaud, who was the minister of fisheries at that time to the effect he really did not have much to do with it because the matter came under the Department of External Affairs. He would always bow to Mr. Martin.

• (9:40 p.m.)

In those years, one thing was obvious. It was that the government took no action. In retrospect I think I can assert that it intended to take no action. That is the logical conclusion. One of the most ridiculous aspects of it then was the fact that here the Parliament of Canada had passed a law giving Canada the right to draw straight baselines by order in council, while on the other hand the Government of Canada was engaged in negotiating the position of those baselines with a foreign country. In other words, the government went to the government of the United States to ask: Where would you like us to put these baselines? Presumably, this is still the situation. As a consequence, almost five years later we still do not have any straight baselines on the Pacific coast, at least. Yet an absolute guarantee was given us by the government of the day in 1964 that these straight baselines would be in effect on the basis referred to by the hon. member for Coast Chilcotin, namely, from the northern end of Vancouver island to the southern end of the Queen Charlotte's.

The former prime minister, Mr. Pearson, said they would be in effect by the end of 1964. Well, 1964 came and went, and we had no baselines. The year 1965 came and went, and still we had no baselines. It is like a broken record. And even today no baselines have been drawn. The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin points out in extremely lucid language what is likely to happen to us if we continue much longer to procrastinate in drawing these baselines, one, where it was promised they should be drawn and, two where they should logically be drawn. In this situation a government promise and common sense happened to coincide. An hon. friend behind me says it might be done in time for the by-election. Mr. Chairman, I don't care when they do it, as long as they do it quickly. If the effect is favourable from the point of view of the government in the riding of Comox-Alberni, that will be all right, too. But something has to be done about it soon, because as every day passes foreign nations are putting themselves in a position where they can claim historic fishing rights in what would otherwise be Canadian waters.

We had enough of that when Mr. Pearson was prime minister, after the announcement was made that Canada intended to institute a 12-mile limit. The first thing the former prime minister said to the President of the United States was: Don't worry about it, because we shall guarantee that your historic fishing rights off the west coast will not be disturbed; we shall give in on this before we begin to do anything. This sort of thing is typical of the Liberal party and the Liberal government as far as our relations with the United States are concerned.

The other day a Japanese long liner was arrested for fishing within the 12-mile limit we now have, the one which follows the sinuosities of the coastline. Instances have been reported on a number of occasions on which fishing boats of the soviet Union have been observed fishing within area which would today be Canadian waters had the government of the day drawn the baselines where it promised to draw them. But all this has been ignored so far.

There is an item in the current edition of the Pacific Troller in which a west coast skipper, Gary Cadorin, describes an encounter with one of the vessels. He writes in precise detail, giving the geographic co-ordinates of his position, the weather conditions, the depth and other factors at the time. He tells how he was caught up in the net of a Russian side trawler, SRTM 8-461 of the Mayak class, 178 feet in length, and gives a lengthy description of what he saw. Other fishermen have had similar experiences. I asked the minister about this early in the session—on October 8, as a matter of fact. I asked him when it was intended to move along the lines I have just been advocating. Let me quote, in part, from his reply. I must say that those who have congratulated the minister on being articulate, on his precision of language and on his ability to say what he means ought to look closely at this statement. The hon. gentleman glossed over the whole issue completely and ignored the whole principle by saying, for example, that there had been no fishing by Russian fishing vessels within Canadian fishing zones.

That is probably quite true. But in my original question and in the presentation I made later on the subject I never claimed there had been. The minister says that by Canadian fishing areas he means areas within 12 miles of the Canadian coastline. The Russians have been observing our 12-mile limit so they are within their rights, said the minister. That is just a lot of rot, and the minister knows it. It is just a lot of bunk. The Russians have been observing our 12-mile limit, he says, and I have no quarrel about that statement being factual. But this simply means that the Russians have not gone in further than the 12-mile fishing zone which exists at the moment. But what about that area in Queen Charlotte Sound to which the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin referred? What about the area which would be encased by a line drawn between the upper end of Vancouver Island and the Queen Charlotte Islands? This is the area we are talking about. We are not talking about the 12-mile limit which exists now as an extension of the sinuosities of the coast. There was no question of the Russians establishing historic fishing rights within our 12-mile limit as it exists today, and for the minister to have referred to that was, I suggest, an attempt to evade the facts, the use of a red herring to draw attention away from the point at issue.

The Soviet Union is certainly in a position of being able to establish historic fishing rights in an area we might include as territorial water if we were to draw straight baselines from headland to headland. The minister will not deny this; it has been documented on more than one occasion.

Perhaps I can sum up no better than by quoting from the publication Pacific Troller of February-March, 1969, because there is an article here which puts the matter in its correct terms as far as the fishermen of British Columbia are concerned, as far as British Columbians and all Canadians are concerned and as far as the minister ought to be concerned, too. Beginning at the bottom of page 3 of this publication, we read as follows:

> To us, Vancouver and Queen Charlotte Islands are not mere pinpoints of rock on the horizon, but two large segments of our mainland stretching along two thirds of our coast—not barren rock, but a continuation of our mainland populations, industries, business and security.
>
> To us, a mere gap of water between these two large bodies of land does not constitute a freeway for any foreign nation to legally enter, rape our fisheries and endanger the defence of our domains, from the security of a narrow strip of international water. To us, those waters lying within the outside headlands of Vancouver and Queen Charlotte Islands are our waters and we should declare our legitimate and exclusive right to utilize them for the security of our outer and inner domains, for commuting between two areas of our province, for harvesting our fisheries and for conservation of our fisheries.

• (9:50 p.m.)

It is too bad the minister did not say that and do something about it.

[Translation]

Mr. Corbin: Mr. Chairman, after speeches by five or six hon. members, I realize that several of my ideas and opinions have already been emphatically stated.

I personally feel that the merging of the Departments of Fisheries and Forestry is a step in the right direction to work out a closer control on the rational development of our natural resources. I agree with some of the comments made by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) although I do not always share his opinions.

The natural balance with regard to the development of our forests creates serious conservation problems. I live in one region where lumber operations are sometimes done in an intelligent manner and always on a large scale, but sometimes with the most serious consequences for this natural balance.

For the past twenty years, freshwater sport fishing has declined considerably in our area because of the lack of consideration on the part of some developers who have no respect for nature and demolish practically everything in their way. The result is that our lakes and rivers and their fauna are on the verge of disappearing.

In my opinion, the stocking of our lakes and streams—not their poisoning (untranslatable pun on "empoissonnement" and "empoisonment")—should go hand in hand with the rational development of our forest resources. Creating and developing fish hatcheries ought, or at least should, closely follow lumber operations. I realize that many officials do not quite share this opinion.

Fortunately, considerable progress has recently been made in that respect in New Brunswick, through the establishment of an important salmon breeding station at Mactaquac. Consequently, two smaller trout breeding stations had to stop their activity and since then my area has been left without any suitable stocking facilities.

My own province of New Brunswick is also faced with the problems of fish extermination, owing to the uncontrolled use of insecticides to exterminate the spruce budworm. And heaven knows how much irreparable damage has been brought about by that practice which seriously affected the balance in nature. And, eventually, let us make no mistake about it, we are the ones who suffer for it.

Uncontrolled exploitation of the forests should no longer be permitted. I congratulate the government and the minister, Mr. Chairman, for the way they are choosing to follow. Perhaps someday we shall be able to put the management of our national parks in the hands of the minister of Fisheries and Forestry. I think that this is very desirable.

However, I would ask the minister—and this is my last request—to establish a public information campaign more extensive than any undertaken so far on the conservation of our renewable natural resources, such as trees and fish, with emphasis on those species most popular for sport fishing. Some work has been done in this direction, but I think much more could be done.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the minister will give serious consideration to this suggestion.

[English]

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, it is very close to ten. Do you wish me to continue?

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee wish to call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY—REQUEST FOR SURVEY OF TRAIN ACCOMMODATION

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, on February 12 I asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) whether he would initiate an investigation into whether or not there was adequate space for the travelling public aboard the Canadian Pacific Railway train "The Canadian".

In 1919 it was said in this house that if there was one thing that had bedevilled the public life of this country it had been the influence of railway corporations. Again, in 1936, it was said that the railways in Canada were far from being merely an economic problem; that they were born of, nourished in, are, and will continue to be, part of Canadian politics. I appreciate those two comments very much.

On January 21 I posed a question to the Canadian Transport Commission, drawing to their attention that Canadian Pacific had taken off a daycoach from its coast to coast run from Vancouver to Montreal. At that time I asked the commission whether they would initiate an investigation to determine why a number of people were left standing on the platform as a result of this daycoach being removed. It was suggested that there were not the number of people left standing on the platform that I had indicated, and that really there was no need for alarm.

Another question that I addressed to the president of the Canadian Transport Commission at a meeting of the Transport Committee, was whether or not the railway company could deliberately reduce the quality of passenger service with the ultimate objective of eliminating that particular train. To this date I have received no reply.

In 1966 Canadian Pacific ran a train called "The Dominion". Similar statements were made at that time as are being made today in connection with their train "The Canadian". At that time it was said that if "The Dominion" were taken off an additional 20 cars would be required on "The Canadian". Today, we have less than 10 cars on "The Canadian", and cars are being taken off day in and day out.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Another question may be raised with regard to a telegram sent to the agent in Calgary under date of February 2, I believe. It was to the effect that train No. 2 at Moose Jaw had 31 passengers in sleepers, although there was accommodation for 116. In this connection also, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that Montreal sleeper No. 205 was removed from service on February 8, although there was a great demand for sleeping accommodation.

An acknowledgement of these matters was received from the company's passenger representative through the C.T.C. He suggested that the telegram ought to have been sent to the sleeping car conductor of Train No. 2 at Medicine Hat. He also suggested that the space referred to in the body of the telegram referred only to accommodation being released by passengers detraining at stations east of Regina, through to Winnipeg. He also suggested that if a person ticketed, say, through to Indian Head were occupying certain accommodation at Vancouver, a message would be given to the sleeping car conductor indicating that space was available from Indian Head to Winnipeg. In that case, the conductor could sell the space as far as Winnipeg. There was confirmation of the fact that there were 31 passengers in sleepers at Moose Jaw, although the figure of 116 spaces being available was said to be questionable. It was also said that there was no lack of available space to accommodate passenger traffic.

However, when one examines the situation, certain discrepancies appear. The information I have certainly points to the fact that fares were reduced on January 1 for local and short haul traffic but that this reduction was not made known to conductors working the trains I have mentioned. Apparently ticket agents for Canadian Pacific Railways have not heard of the reductions. The explanation may lie in the fact that although the reductions came into effect in January, fares had previously been raised to accommodate Christmas traffic. That may explain part of the difficulty.

As for the matter of the sleeping car conductor selling space at Moose Jaw, it seems that the conductor was off duty at that point and could not have done what was suggested.

It has also come to my attention that cars 205 and 105 were removed from service on February 8 and February 13 respectively west of Winnipeg, and that all space was taken in the sleepers with the exception of space in the car which comes off at Regina. "The Canadian" now has two through sleepers, an observation car with three compartments, and a diner. May I refer to Order No. 4642 of the Railway Transport Commission. Section 3(2) says:

> The notice and request required by subsection (1) of this section shall be accompanied by data showing the number of passengers carried on the train or trains during the two years immediately preceding the date of such notice—

Bearing in mind all these factors, I thought it most important to instigate inquiries into the situation and put the results of my inquiries on record. I am sure hon. members realize that sleeping car accommodation on today's trains is far from adequate to meet existing demands. Only tonight I heard that people were trying to book space on trains leaving for western Canada. No space was available and will not be available for some time. It seems impossible to obtain accommodation on trains when one needs it. I draw these matters to the government's attention and ask, when will the government assume its responsibility to the people of this nation by having Canadian Pacific provide adequate passenger train accommodation?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed by the office of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) that the Railway Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission is at present investigating complaints relating to difficulties experienced by potential passengers in obtaining reserved space on "The Canadian". The reduction in the size of this train and the type of service presently rendered by this train are also being investigated. Inspectors of the Railway Transport Committee are presently riding these trains as part of the current investigation.

HISTORIC SITES—ADMINISTRATION AND MAINTENANCE OF VIMY MONUMENT

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois): Mr. Speaker, the question I directed last week to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) may have seemed of little importance to some people. This is why I thought advisable to hark back to the subject tonight on the adjournment motion.

I understand the department is considering—or even has already taken the decision—to transfer the administration and maintenance of Vimy Park to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. However, I strongly object to this decision, and this for several reasons.

Believe me, I hold no grudge against the Commission. On the contrary, I feel it takes admirable care of war cemeteries in Commonwealth countries around the world. Since I have had the opportunity to visit several of them in six countries of Europe, I am well able to testify to that.

However, Mr. Speaker, I make a difference between a war cemetery and a commemorative park of the size of Vimy Park, which lies behind a field where Canadians surpassed themselves in bravery, and where several of them sacrificed their lives for the defence of freedom and democracy. As a matter of fact, this park is part of the Canadian territory and remains a lasting remembrance on the European continent. It is made up of 250 acres in France, where stands the most imposing and the finest of monuments in all of Europe and where thousands of tourists, both Canadians and Europeans, go each year.

If we hand over the administration and maintenance of that park to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission, we shall no doubt blur the identity of that Canadian territory in France, even if some Canadian employees are kept. The administration will be British, the technical board will be composed of representatives from London or Arras. Therefore, I am convinced that our influence will decrease gradually, in the long run, and I would say that the same remark applies to the Beaumont-Hamel park, known as Newfoundland Park.

Such a decision will, I think, raise political issues which were surely not contemplated by the civil servants who made that recommendation.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the rather lukewarm relations which have been existing between Canada and France for a few years, especially between Canada and the great general who does not care too much for Great Britain, we give him a splendid opportunity to create difficulties for the Canadian government and we open the door to all kinds of innuendoes on his part.

Those who are called upon or have been called upon in the past to arrange remembrance celebrations on French soil know from experience how small details like those can have their importance in certain cases.

The department has already accepted compromises which in certain cases I considered as unfortunate and I suggest to the minister to check on that matter with his officials and our ambassadors in Paris and London.

More important still are our relations with the French people, those who really remember, and I do not understand why we should not assume ourselves the task of ensuring the maintenance of our commemorative monuments and the parks where they are situated.

I will even go farther, Mr. Speaker. I am one of those who believe that the Canadian government should be more interested in Vimy Park. We should develop this Canadian territory in France by constructing a commemorative building—perhaps for the second world war—which could house a military museum, a restaurant, lounges and also other services which could be self-supporting, most of them I think.

[Mr. Laniel.]

• (10:10 p.m.)

I know in advance the reply I will get to my representations because I inquired these last few days from certain employees of the department. I have been told that the superintendents of the Vimy and Beaumont-Hamel parks will be retained and that the technical direction only will come from the regional office in Arras which is under the authority of London.

But I am not satisfied, Mr. Speaker, because I have the impression that in the long run Vimy Park—and I repeat it—will lose part of its Canadian identity and will be considered as all our other cemeteries, small parks and monuments in Europe, when it should be the contrary.

Another decision that I deplore is the gradual disappearance of the office of the Department of Veterans Affairs at our London embassy.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell you that I am greatly disappointed by those two decisions. I intend to bring the matter up again, to do everything in my power to have those decisions re-examined and I ask the minister whether it would not be possible not to go any further until the matter has been deferred to the Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all may I thank and congratulate the hon. member for Beauharnois (Mr. Laniel) for the interest he has always shown and continues to show in the problems of our veterans.

With regard to the question he has raised tonight, I should explain first of all that there are in Europe 13 monuments recalling Canada's participation in the first world war.

The upkeep of those monuments, except for the Vimy and the Beaumont-Hamel ones, has for many years been entrusted to the Commonwealth War Graves Commission under an agreement between Canada and the Commission.

Under the terms of this agreement, Canada reimburses the Commission for the expenses incurred in this regard. The hon. member for Beauharnois has agreed that the work done by this Commission is of exceptional quality.

Since the beginning, our department and the Commission have always co-operated very closely, and our relations are excellent. Of course, Canada is a member of that Commission.

To give a more definite answer to the hon. member's question, it is true that we recently entered into negotiations with the commission with a view to incorporating in the agreement the maintenance of the Vimy and Beaumont-Hamel memorials, so as to take advantage of the Commission's experience and resources in that field. If those negotiations are successful, I can assure the hon. member for Beauharnois that the identity and distinctive character of Canada will be fully respected. I want to point out—as it is my duty to do so—that if the agreement is entered into, it will apply to the maintenance of those two monuments only. The Minister and the Department of Veterans Affairs will always continue to assume the responsibility of the decisions to be taken as far as those two memorials are concerned. As in the past, the Canadian supervisors will be remunerated by our department, according to the scale in force in Canada. As far as the memorial ceremonies are concerned, their organisation will continue to be a Canadian responsibility.

Before I sit down, Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Beauharnois that the standard of maintenance will remain very high and that, come what may, the Canadian character of those monuments will be entirely maintained.

[English]

TRANSPORT—SUBSIDIES ON INTRA-PROVINCIAL FERRIES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of my question in the house directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) was to inquire if any agreement had been reached between the Canadian Transport Commission and the province of Ontario on the cost-sharing of subsidies on intra-provincial ferries. I am aware that several months ago an approach was made by the Canadian Transport Commission to the province of Ontario to decide on future cost-sharing for the ferries serving Manitoulin Island in my riding of Algoma. This island has been served for the last five years by three ferries. These ferries have been subsidized by the federal government by an amount in excess of $200,000 per annum. They operate during the late spring, summer, and early fall months.

Two of these ferries are large and ply between Tobermory, at the tip of the Bruce Peninsula, and South Bay Mouth at the eastern end of Manitoulin Island. This service has been in existence for many years and, because more and more people have been seeking the beauties of Northern Ontario in recent times, the service has become inadequate. It is now common to have people waiting in their cars at the ferry dock at Tobermory for 12 to 14 hours during July and August. We need a larger and faster ferry to serve this area. With the advent of longer holiday periods and more people travelling every year, this bottleneck will only get worse.

At the west end of Manitoulin Island during the past five years we have had a ferry service operating between Meldrum Bay on Manitoulin Island and Blind River on the north shore of Lake Huron. This ferry has also served Cockburn Island once a week. I have been told by the Canadian Transport Commission that this service is to be discontinued this year. This is a backward step and will have a detrimental effect on the tourist industry at the west end of Manitoulin Island. This government is committed to an aggressive attack on regional economic disparity. How can a region develop if the government withdraws one of its communication links? As a separate item, the subsidy of some $45,000 per year may appear to be a large amount to provide a ferry service. However, as an investment to stimulate the economic development of a whole region it is not a large amount. Government departments should not be compartments isolated from each other. This subsidy is warranted from a regional development point of view and should be retained.

I realize the government believes the provinces should pay part of the cost of a ferry service operating entirely within the province. The province of Ontario does pay for many ferries operating entirely within it, such as the St. Joseph island ferry and the Glenora ferry operating between Prince Edward county and Adolphustown. These ferries are paid for 100 per cent by the provinces.

The people of Manitoulin island do not care whether the provincial or federal government pays for the ferry service as long as it is retained at Meldrum Bay and improved at South Bay Mouth.

I believe that consideration should be given by the water transport committee of the Canadian Transport Commission to the retention of these two ferry services as a package deal as far as the subsidy is concerned, and to approaching the shipping industry on a competitive basis to ensure good services. Nothing makes for a poorer service than the lack of competition. When the shipping industry receives an operating subsidy which automatically fills any deficit, it does not tend to get out and dig for business.

I feel this has happened in the case of the ferry service between Blind River and Meldrum Bay. There has to be some new formula worked out for this subsidy to encourage an aggressive selling campaign of the service to tourists. Then, and only then, will this ferry be more self-sufficient and less of a burden on the government.

Five years ago when these operating subsidies for Manitoulin Island ferries were established, a public hearing was held on the island by the Canadian Maritime Commission. I have received many letters from organizations and individuals requesting that a hearing be held this year by the Canadian Transport Commission on Manitoulin Island. These are the people most concerned with this matter. These are the people whose lives and livelihood are affected by the decisions of the commission. Therefore, it is natural that they want the hearing held there.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The shipping season is now only a matter of a few months away. Decisions must be made now in order that a good transportation service will be available for the summer tourist season. I believe the federal government should bring pressure to bear on the government of Mr. Robarts in Toronto, which seems to be dragging its feet on this matter, in order to resolve the question. The people of my constituency not only want to know what service will be provided this year, but what plans are being made for a future, improved service. The time is late. We want answers now.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the future of the Tobermory-South Bay Mouth ferry has been raised with the government of the province of Ontario and a reply is awaited indicating what interest the province may have in the continuance of this intra-provincial service. The federal government has indicated its willingness to discuss the future of the service, but could not undertake to participate in any improvement or building of docks without having reached a satisfactory agreement with the province.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, February 28, 1969

The house met at 11 a.m.

"- -A HOST, OF GOLDEN DAFFODILS"

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, again this year spring has arrived early on Canada's Pacific coast. The British Columbia daffodils on display in the house have arrived here by Air Canada. British Columbia members of all parties invite their friends in other parts of Canada to join our celebration because spring is here.

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the minister wants to participate in the motion. I have the impression that the procedure is irregular in that the green chamber is being transformed into a greenhouse.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not really wish to participate, except to thank our friends from British Columbia for this gesture. We are as pleased as they are that the snows have gone and that now flowers are back in evidence. The way we think of that wonderful province is now reborn in the approach of spring.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Fourth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, in French and English—Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier).

[Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

SHIPPING

REPORT BY TRANSPORT COMMISSION AS TO OWNERSHIP AND REGISTRATION

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to table in English and in French two copies of the report prepared by the Canadian Transport Commission following the inquiry by the water transport committee into the operations of the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act governing the ownership and registration of ships in Canada.

An hon. Member: Was that a study in depth?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

OIL

INQUIRY AS TO RESPONSE FROM PROVINCES RESPECTING OFFSHORE RIGHTS

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, last December the Prime Minister made a statement in the house in regard to the question of offshore mineral rights in which he indicated that he would be in touch with the provincial governments with regard to a proposal he outlined. I wonder if I could ask the Acting Prime Minister if responses have been received from all the provincial governments, premiers and prime ministers, and if so whether an agreement has been reached. If that is the case, can the minister tell us when the house would be made aware of what the agreement is?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am sorry that I am not in a position to report on this matter this morning, but I did not realize it would be raised. However I will be glad to bring it to the Prime Minister's attention.

CANADIAN OWNERSHIP IN NORTHERN ARCHIPELAGO

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the Acting Prime Minister would be able to answer this question, but in recent days maps have been issued by the United States indicating ownership of potentially valuable oil areas in islands in the northern archipelago. Have representations clearly defining Canada's right to the sovereignty of the north been made to Washington and has Washington been informed that the fact that United States technicians are in the northern areas or that United States investment is being made in the area in large, or potentially large amounts, in no way derogates from Canada's sovereignty and that we insist on the ownership of all those northern areas?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I will take this question as notice for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sure there have been discussions and representations although I would not care to make an offhand reply to the question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INVITATION TO COMPANY TO PLACE OBSERVER IN VESSEL "MANHATTAN"

Mr. Paul St-Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister also inform the house whether an invitation was issued to the Panarctic Oil consortium to put an observer on the ship Manhattan when she attempts to force the ice of the northwest passage this summer? If the invitation was issued, was it accepted and if not why not?

Hon. Paul Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this question as notice.

SEA TRIALS IN TRANSPORTATION

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Was the Government of Canada consulted in connection with the sea trials of oil transportation in the northwest passage to be undertaken by the United States this summer?

HOUSING

POSSIBLE AMENDMENTS FOLLOWING TASK FORCE REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the minister has indicated that he is not going to make a statement on motions regarding housing, I want to inquire if he is asking the government for any priority in introducing his amendments to the National Housing Act and if he can give the house some idea when that legislation is likely to come before us.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend is aware, when the business for the balance of the session was announced the other day by the house leader amendments to the National Housing Act were included. I hope they can be brought forward at an early date.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister with respect to recommendations 11, 12, 19 and 25 of the task force which have to do with the private sector of the economy and the representations which are to be made regarding the reduction of insurance fees, legal charges and estate commissions, whether any representations have been made to the responsible bodies having to do with these matters and what responses the minister has received.

Mr. Hellyer: I am not sure I can answer that question without notice, Mr. Speaker. I think I recall correspondence with one or two interested parties in which, if I remember correctly, it was suggested they might use their good offices to see what could be done to reduce costs in these areas. I would hope that in the weeks and months ahead additional representations can be made to all interested parties, including labour unions presently engaged in wage negotiations with the building industry, to use moderation so as to keep down as far as possible the cost of housing to all Canadians.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Will these representations be accompanied by some investigation into the sharp rise in the cost of building materials which has occurred in recent months?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not want to indicate exactly what action may be taken in this field but as the hon. gentleman is aware we did point out that this is an area which should be investigated. It has been referred to the appropriate people for investigation and I would hope that if there is any evidence to warrant action being taken, action will follow.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Is it the intention of the government to assist the Ontario government with regard to the implementation of rent controls in view of the experience the federal government has had in this field?

Mr. Hellyer: I am not a constitutional expert, but I believe that other than in wartime this is a matter which lies exclusively within provincial jurisdiction.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): I have a question for the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker.

Since he indicated here that he would arrange meetings in order to bring down the interest rate for the beginning of the building season, would he tell us whether there have been any results yet?

[English]

Mr. Hellyer: I am not sure which meetings the hon. member is referring to but we have, of course, made representations to the various lending institutions with respect to the supply of more money during the current year and the initial reaction to that inquiry has been most favourable and most encouraging.

With respect to the cost of money, I would not wish to comment on that question at the moment, but I still believe the suggestion in the report of the task force, that we should free the interest rate rather than set an artificial ceiling as is the case under the law presently, would result in some reduction in the interest rate—perhaps not dramatic but at least worth while—and that this should be considered by parliament at an appropriate time.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): In view of the fact that no C.M.H.C. money is available for urgently required multiple housing, particularly of the high rise type, in Thompson, Manitoba, would the minister take a look at this situation and see whether something could not be done about it?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): I was about to ask the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister responsible for housing in what way the Goldfarb report was, according to Mr. Goldfarb, improperly used in the report of the task force. Would the minister consider tabling the Goldfarb report so that members of the house can see exactly what Mr. Goldfarb found?

Mr. Hellyer: If I might answer both these questions, Mr. Speaker: first of all I shall be glad to inquire into the mortgage situation in respect to Thompson, which was one of the areas of urgent need that we visited. It is my intention to take every possible step to make sure that enough mortgage money is available to meet the needs of that growing community during the coming building season.

With regard to the second question, personally I have no objection to tabling the report. As far as I know there is none, but I will make inquiries and if that is the case I will be glad to table it. I do not think any improper use was made of the report, or that Mr. Goldfarb said there was. I think what he said has been misinterpreted; at least, he indicated to me that that was the case. He had no real quarrel with the conclusion of the task force report that a very careful look should be taken at this whole area before any permanent policy is announced.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member does not think that we should move on to another subject. We have spent ten minutes on the same subject and various other members are rising. I suggest we move on to another matter.

Mr. Lewis: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, there is a question that is directly related to the Goldfarb matter, but if Your Honour wants to pass on to another subject—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member may proceed with a further supplementary.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I did not use the word that Mr. Goldfarb used. He said that the report had been bastardized. In order to avoid using that term, I said that it had been improperly used.

I should like to ask the minister whether he has in writing from Mr. Goldfarb a statement to the effect that he has no disagreement with the task force report's conclusion regarding public housing. If he has anything in writing from Mr. Goldfarb, would he also table it?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge there is nothing in writing. He gave me this information during the course of a telephone conversation, so I presume that that is his view. Concerning the other allegation just made by my hon. friend, if I recall correctly I think Mr. Goldfarb said that the report of what he had said bastardized what he intended to say.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Hellyer: So that rather than speak for him—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings.

EXHIBITIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION—PLEDGE OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE BY FORMER PRIME MINISTER

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Since the government announced it is willing to assist Man and his World does it intend now to honour a pledge which was given on behalf of the federal government by former prime minister Pearson in a speech at the opening of the Canadian National Exhibition in 1965, and repeated two years later on a similar occasion, to the effect that the federal government would give financial assistance to the Canadian National Exhibition in order to make it, as he said, a great national showcase?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I can only say, Mr. Speaker, that members of parliament from Toronto sitting on the government side of the house are fully aware of the advantages to the City of Toronto of revitalizing the Canadian National Exhibition, and of changing its form and shape in order to make it even more attractive to visitors from our province and outside our province. The hon. member may be sure we will do everything possible to co-operate in the development of that great Canadian exhibition.

Mr. Ricard: That's why nothing is done.

Mr. Hees: The minister has made a most interesting hometown speech. My question was, does the government intend to honour the pledge of former prime minister Pearson?

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to ask a supplementary question. Now that the principle has been established that the federal government is to assist local exhibitions, is the government to designate the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or any other minister as its representative to whom local fair boards should apply for financial assistance?

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF GENERAL MOTORS PRODUCTS TO EXAMINE SUSPECTED DEFECTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport which has an important bearing on certain transportation matters. Bearing in mind the massive recall of millions of General Motors cars and trucks for examination of suspected defects, will the minister look into that situation as it affects Canadian consumers and the safety of Canadians.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The answer is yes, Mr. Speaker. The director of auto safety has already had meetings with officials of General Motors. Every necessary action will be taken in this country to assure the safety of the travelling public.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering recent disclosures, are members of the minister's department charged with auto safety prepared to introduce regulations setting standards of minimum safety in order to obviate in future incidents such as we have been discussing here.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the house a few weeks ago, at the conference I attended in Quebec City of provincial ministers of transport, and ministers responsible for auto safety, it was agreed that the federal government would introduce legislation with respect to minimum safety standards for automobiles at the point of manufacture or at the point of entry into Canada. So far as I know that proposal will be proceeded with as soon as reasonably possible. I should point out however that that kind of legislation gives no guarantee that the kind of fault that has just been found will not occur again. Often there are design faults which show up only after weeks, months, or in some cases, years of service. Although design standards to protect the travelling public will be set there will always be the possibility that experience will disclose errors in design. When that happens, corrective action must be taken at the earliest opportunity. That has been done in this case.

FINANCE

LOAN TO COMMONWEALTH TRUST COMPANY

Mr. Douglas A. Hogarth (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Did the federal government directly or indirectly at any time recommend to the government of British Columbia that that government should extend a $3 million loan, or any loan, to Commonwealth Trust Company of British Columbia to subsidize the losses of that company or its subsidiaries?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX

APPLICATION TO INTEREST ON ANNUITIES BEFORE AND AFTER MATURITY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. It affects many Canadians holding annuities and insurance policies, and I ask it to clear up a misunderstanding. Does the new income tax apply to the interest element on annuities before and after maturity? I am interested in what happens before maturity. Does it apply also in a similar way to annuity planned insurance policies, even if the person in question elected to postpone acceptance of benefits prior to the implementation of the new tax?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that he is asking the minister for an interpretation of the statutes, and that therefore is not a proper question.

Mr. Woolliams: Maybe I could rephrase it. It is not an interpretation. I might just mention, Mr. Speaker, various people who are holding policies and annuities are now questioning how they can shape their affairs. Maybe I can put it more succinctly. Does the tax now announced apply to those interest elements of the annuities and insurance policies prior to maturity?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I still think the question as asked is not in order, because we might have a number of members asking the minister to interpret the statute involved here, or any statute, and particularly taxing statutes. I doubt very much whether the question can be asked.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to debate it at ten o'clock. I still say with the greatest respect this is a question of policy, and not interpretation.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: Surely we can find out the taxes of the land. That is what I am asking the minister. Where do the taxes apply?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AIR TRANSPORT

AMALGAMATION OF REGIONAL CARRIERS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Has the Canadian Transport Commission given approval to the announced merger of Eastern Provincial Airways Limited and Nordair Limited? I ask the question, Mr. Speaker, because such an amalgamation of major regional carriers if allowed could easily introduce a third main line, which is contrary to C.T.C. policy.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I will be glad to refer this question to the Canadian Transport Commission, Mr. Speaker, and get a definitive answer for my hon. friend.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister is making an inquiry regarding the merger of Nordair and E.P.A. would he also ensure that the service to be provided, particularly in E.P.A. runs, will be up to the standard set when they received their initial application to fly from Montreal through Charlottetown and the Magdalens?

Mr. Hellyer: I will refer that question also, and get the answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

TRANSFER OF DIRECTION OF WORK AT TRANSCONA SHOPS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): While I have the floor, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might reply to a question asked two or three days ago by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in respect to the C.N.R. Transcona shops. May I say, Mr. Speaker, that any report of reduction in personnel, work or possible closing of the C.N.R. Transcona shops is completely false, as I am sure the hon. member is aware. No such move has ever been considered. The only change is an administrative one where the works manager of the Transcona shop reports to the systems headquarters office, rather than the regional offices as was done in the past. The systems headquarters office is in Montreal.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, can the minister give assurance that this is not the thin edge of the wedge for a wider change?

Mr. Hellyer: On the basis of information given to me, I can certainly give that assurance. I can give unqualified assurance, and perhaps go even further and say that the present plans indicate a quite enlarged work force in the Transcona shops requiring additional personnel rather than contracting the work force.

[Later:]

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. While the minister gave the assurance to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that the transfer of C.N.R. administrative offices from Winnipeg to Montreal was not to be followed by any transfer of work force, does he recall that 20 years ago when Air Canada transferred its administrative offices from Winnipeg to Montreal this was followed by the transfer of the work force?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

RAIL MOVEMENT TO SHIPPING POINTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): My question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact those responsible for the movement of grain have 20,000 freight cars in their commitment to deliver grain, what steps is the minister taking to ensure the Vancouver fiasco is not repeated at the Lakehead, where terminal elevators are only 50 per cent full a few short weeks before the opening of Great Lakes navigation?

Mr. Speaker: I am not quite sure the question is put in the correct terms, but in view of the importance of the matter the minister should be allowed to reply.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): At the last meeting in Winnipeg with the wheat transportation committee, the situation at the Lakehead was studied. A certain objective was assigned to the railways with respect to filling the elevator capacities at the Lakehead, and the two railways have assured me formally that this will be done on time before the opening of navigation.

Mr. McIntosh: As a supplementary question —and I might say to you, sir, this question is just as important as the fairs in Montreal or Toronto so far as national urgency is concerned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: I ask the minister, in view of the fact that he mentioned the Winnipeg conference between the railway companies, was there a difference of opinion between himself, the self-appointed supervisor of this, and the railway officials, as to who was responsible for the fiasco that happened at Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the supplementary as asked is argumentative.

Mr. McIntosh: Well, I will rephrase my question, Mr. Speaker. Was there a difference of opinion between the officials of the railways and the minister at Winnipeg late this week?

Mr. Pepin: I will say there was a good healthy debate on the subject between all parties represented at the Winnipeg meeting; but we, I think rightly, decided not to emphasize differences but to move forward with the solution to these problems.

Mr. McIntosh: Was it determined at that meeting who was responsible for this fiasco at Vancouver, with respect to the handling of grain?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member persists in asking questions in a way which is not in accordance with the practice in this house, and I would point out to him that I have to interpret the rules in the way that in my opinion they ought to be interpreted.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that spring has arrived in British Columbia can the minister assure us that grain unloadings by rail at Vancouver will meet our grain export requirements this spring?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, that is too complicated a question to be answered by a yes or no.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, will the ships lying at anchor at the head of the lakes, which are now empty, be loaded in anticipation of the shipping season and, if so, when will this take place?

Mr. Pepin: This is part of the accepted objective, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, for several days we have been endeavouring to find out from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce why box cars are not made available on C.P.R. lines. Did the president or one of the highest officials of the C.P.R. on the occasion that the minister met with him in the last few days say that the responsibility was that of the minister, because when wheat was not made available last fall the C.P.R. had many cars prepared to transport wheat?

Mr. Pepin: That is a debatable point, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what he said to you.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

COMPREHENSIVE PLAN FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, in response to questions asked yesterday I am happy now to announce that I expect to be able to sign the development agreement with Prince Edward Island on March 7, a week from today. I understand there were earlier reports of this from Charlottetown, but I should say that they were premature. For some time we have been aiming at that date but it was only this morning that I completed the negotiations that make it possible.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in view of this agreement, because of its importance to the province and the country, and its comprehensive nature, would the minister prefer to make a statement on motions some time next week indicating to some degree the nature and details of this plan?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): I am willing to consider that, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot make the statement before the agreement is signed.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

QUEBEC—USE OF R.C.M.P. TO MEET TERRORIST ACTIVITIES

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. I have a very serious question for him arising out of a statement made yesterday in the Quebec legislature by Mr. Lesage, the leader of the provincial Liberal party. Is it a fact, as indicated by Mr. Lesage, that the government of Quebec has declined or at least not requested the assistance of the R.C.M.P. in investigating terrorist attacks in that province?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have no knowledge of the statements made yesterday in the provincial assembly in Quebec, but it is a fact that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are co-operating with and assisting both the Quebec Provincial Police and the Montreal City Police.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Is the minister in a position to answer the question I asked him two days ago on this area?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I prefer to answer that question on Monday.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MISSILE SITE IN WINDSOR AREA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Inasmuch as Governor Milliken of Michigan has made representations to the government of the United States against the placing of a proposed A.B.M. site near Detroit, and as there is considerable concern in Windsor and vicinity about this whole matter, will the minister look into it and discuss it with his colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and perhaps make representations to the United States government about it?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): I will consider this question very carefully, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, in view of the importance of this matter to our country can the minister tell us whether the government is giving consideration to including in its report on defence, to be made at the end of March a statement as to its own position with respect to this matter?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I think the position of the government was stated last year when the renewal of the NORAD agreement was announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think he said at that time that Canada was not participating in A.B.M.'s.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): As a further supplementary question, I wonder if the minister would see to it that in this statement at the end of March there be included some statement as to our position with respect to installations near Canadian territory?

EXHIBITIONS

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION—REPRESENTATIONS AS TO FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings to the Acting Prime Minister in relation to the Canadian National Exhibition. I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he is aware of any positive representations that have been made to the government regarding specific plans for assistance to the Canadian National Exhibition?

I would also like to ask if it is improper for members from metropolitan areas to ask occasional questions, as suggested by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before a supplementary question is asked, may I inquire whether the hon. member is asking a supplementary to the question asked by the hon. member for York North, because I found it difficult to determine whether the hon. member for York North was asking a question or making a representation?

Mr. Danson: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. My question was in relation to any specific proposals for the Canadian National Exhibition that might have been made to the Canadian government.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Peace River.

Mr. McIntosh: On a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: Seeing he mentioned my name, and he being a new member in this house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: Just a moment. The hon. member, being a new member here, should be acquainted with the rules and regulations of this house, and as you know well, Mr. Speaker—and maybe he does not know,—any question at this period in the day should be of national importance and of urgency and—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: —and as I said before—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. McIntosh: —I think it is your duty, sir—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed to complete his remarks. I have the impression that what he is saying would be of interest to many members of the house.

Mr. Baldwin: My supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. Would he use his good offices to make sure that the members of parliament from metropolitan Toronto are given the freedom asked by the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) to make representations in standing committees regarding matters such as this?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Most certainly, yes, Mr. Speaker; and I agree that a renewed, revitalized, modern Canadian National Exhibition is a matter of national concern and interest.

Mr. Hees: Then would the minister answer my question? Is the government going to fulfil the pledge of the former prime minister to give this great national exhibition the financial assistance it has asked for?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have the impression that this question has given us enough difficulty this morning. The right hon. member for Cape Breton-East Richmond.

[Mr. Danson.]

TELEVISION

TRANSACTION BETWEEN GOVERNMENT AND GEOFFREY STIRLING

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether representatives of the C.R.T.C. discussed the ethics of any transaction between Geoffrey Stirling and a minister of the Crown.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I really do not know, but I will refer the question to the responsible minister.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would think the Acting Prime Minister should be responsible. However my question is this: Why is it that the minister who had this question put to him several months ago did not come up with an answer? I suggest this question cannot be ruled out of order because the ethics of a cabinet minister are of urgent national importance. I ask just what he is hiding.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because of the urgency and importance of the ethics of any cabinet minister. This is a question which has been before this house on a number of occasions. If the ministers in the cabinet do not feel the ethics of any of their colleagues is their responsibility, then I think it is time this government took the responsibility and came forward with the truth. If need be, this urgent and national question will be put before them every week.

Mr. Hellyer: On the same point of order—

Mr. Speaker: This is not a point of order. The hon. member knows similar questions have been raised before. My feeling has always been that if a member wishes to make a charge against another member on one side of the house or the other there is a way to do it, according to the rules. For the protection of all members on both sides of the house I think we should adhere to the rules in this regard.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I too, think the ethics of ordinary members of parliament are important. I think for ordinary members of parliament to commit character assassination through innuendo is beneath contempt.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege now arises from the remarks of the Acting Prime Minister, who mentioned character assassination by innuendo. All I ask the Acting Prime Minister to do is prove that this is innuendo, and prove to this house that there is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is obvious to me that this certainly is not the House of Commons at its best, but I will hear the hon. member.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is pretty hard to have the house at its best when the Prime Minister himself refers to them as bums and idiots, and some of them now refer to themselves as fools. They seem to be taking objection to their Prime Minister's words. These were not my words: It was the Prime Minister who referred to them as bums and idiots.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest the hon. member has made his point. The Minister of Transport has replied and I am wondering whether we are accomplishing anything by proceeding with this matter. I have no objection, because I must sit here, whether it is to hear points of order, questions of privilege or questions during the question period. However it seems to me that hon. members would like to go on to the other business before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On the question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I make it quite clear that it was not any member on this side of the house that had the press indicate they had borrowed $2,000 for video equipment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE BUDGET

POSSIBILITY OF JUNE REPORT TO HOUSE BY MINISTER

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It is based on an interview he had a few days ago with Victor Mackie, whom we all know to be a veteran reporter of high repute. Has the minister now decided to make an economic report to parliament in May or June and if so will it be a budget, a non-budget or something else?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): As I have stated in the house I intend to make a report regardless of whether or not any tax changes are to be brought forward. There are various definitions of a budget. One definition says it can be simply an economic report, and another says it involves a change in fiscal measures. Nevertheless I have indicated that from time to time, whether it is through a formal budget speech or through other methods—and this could be arranged of course, because budget days are really opposition days—I would bring forward a statement to indicate how well the economy is moving forward and how good the forecasts were that we made last October.

Mr. Baldwin: In spite of the government.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the minister give a definite date for this and, particularly, will he make his statement before the boom busts?

Mr. Benson: I do not think the boom, as my friend calls it, is going to bust. I think Canada can look forward to a very good year economically this year. I cannot give the exact date.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister in his interview with Mr. Clive Baxter of the Financial Post indicated the government is considering the imposition of a capital gains tax, has he made any decision on this?

Mr. Benson: I gave exactly the opposite impression, as my hon. friend would see if he would read the article. I simply said the government had not made up its mind in this regard. That is all I said.

FINANCE

TAXATION—SUBMISSIONS TO PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. Will he clarify whether, after the introduction of the white paper on taxation, the public will be invited to make submissions to the parliamentary committee and be given the widest possible latitude.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): It is to be referred to the parliamentary committee. It will be up to the committee to decide whether or not public hearings are held, but I would sincerely hope they would have them.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE SICOTTE CASE—POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Does the government recognize that the public interest is seriously involved in the Sicotte case, as it has been for some years, and if so may I ask what steps have been taken to have an independent inquiry made into this situation.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing further to add to what the Solicitor General has already said in respect of this question. He has already indicated that the facts are being investigated. I do not think it will be helpful for me to say anything beyond that.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister undertake to bring this question, which is presented seriously, to the attention of the Prime Minister for an answer by him when next the right hon. gentleman is in the house.

Mr. Hellyer: The representations made by the hon. member will of course be brought to the Prime Minister's attention.

OIL

MEETING BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT NIXON—MARKETING POLICIES DISCUSSION AND CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Acting Prime Minister. Will future oil marketing policies be discussed by the Prime Minister when he meets with President Nixon, and will Canada's policy be one of integration with United States supply, or will there be greater emphasis on developing Canadian and other markets for Canadian oil?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister said the other day, the agenda for the meeting is not yet set.

Mr. Speaker, may I use this occasion to say, on behalf of the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that after full consultation with the Canadian government, the government of the United States has made publicly available the text of an exchange of correspondence dated September 25, 1967 between our two countries relating to arrangements for the export of Canadian oil to the United States. The immediate occasion for the declassification of this correspondence has been a request from a company involved in proceedings before the Interstate Commerce Commission relating to the supply of Canadian oil to the Chicago area.

May I now, on behalf of the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, ask the permission of the house to table the documents.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by the minister in reference to a question asked by an hon. member, would he be prepared now to table this correspondence which may cover the period 1967 and 1968, so we may analyse just what the negotiations were?

Mr. Pepin: Would my hon. friend help me get support from the rest of the house to do so?

Mr. Speaker: Has the minister leave to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ST. ROMUALD, QUE.—USE OF WESTERN OIL IN NEW REFINERY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the government carrying on any discussions with oil or refining interests with respect to the possibility of using western Canadian oil as a source of supply for the new refinery at St. Romuald, Quebec, or does the government intend to undertake such discussions?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I am not acquainted with the details of this matter, Mr. Speaker, but it would certainly be a complete change from the national oil policy as it now stands.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION OF THE VATICAN

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister perhaps his parliamentary secretary will take this question as notice. Has the Prime Minister done anything about his undertaking to sample public opinion in regard to Canada's recognition of the Vatican?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): I will see that this question is brought to the Prime Minister's attention, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD—RECOGNITION OF MEMBERS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A number of members on this side of the house have been trying, without success, to get Your Honour's eye since the question period started. Many members have not been able to get Your Honour's eye, although they have attempted to do so. I ask Your Honour to take this into consideration at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member realizes that there are only 40 minutes allowed for questions. Nothing would please me more than having an opportunity of calling on all hon. members. This is why I very often suggest to hon. members that the questions asked in the first instance sometimes take, in my view, too much of the time of the question period.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The first, second or third questions usually go on for 15 or 20 minutes, with seven or eight supplementary questions being asked. When the Chair attempts to disallow a supplementary there is always a very convincing argument put forward by hon. members, as to why the supplementary should be allowed. I might mention also that the question period was allowed to go on this morning for four minutes longer than the prescribed time, in the hope that a few more questioners might be allowed to participate.

I do try from day to day to take note of hon. members who have unsuccessfully attempted to ask questions, and I make an effort the following day to recognize them. I will certainly keep in mind the suggestion made by the hon. member for St. John's East.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Thursday, February 27, consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose last night clause 2 of part I of the bill, relating to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, was under consideration.

On clause 2—Department established.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to hold up the passage of this clause but I would like to say a few words on fisheries and forestry. Before commencing my remarks on this matter I must say that it is rather nice to have a little touch of British Columbia in the chamber today. The beautiful daffodils that most hon. members are wearing are just a sign of the early spring which we usually get in British Columbia. It gives me just that much more pleasure to be able to speak on a day like this.

The Chairman: Order, please. I wonder if we could have quiet in the chamber, please, particularly from behind the curtains.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; it was rather noisy.

The few remarks I would like to make on this clause deal with the matter of the conservation of our forestry and fishing resources. There is today more than ever before in the history of this country a desperate need for very close co-operation between the federal and provincial authorities on all aspects of the forest industry. The minister may say that forestry is primarily a provincial responsibility, and this is so; the provincial governments do the cropping, and there is no doubt that they lay out the program which companies must follow as far as forestry resources are concerned. But it must be remembered that the forest industry supplies many hundreds of millions of dollars to the federal treasury. We have our hand in the forestry till right up to the elbow. I am of the opinion, and have been for years, that we do not return a sufficient sum of money to perpetuate this resource. I believe this applies to every province in the Dominion of Canada.

A few years ago the general feeling was that we had such a vast abundance of trees and fish that we did not have to bother too much about conservation measures. As a consequence, we embarked upon a wild spree to see how quickly we could, in effect, get rid of some of these resources, and today, in 1969, we find we are in serious trouble on all fronts in this respect. The other day an hon. member asked the minister which cap he will wear when dealing with fisheries and forestry. The hon. member was referring to the spraying of various type of trees to prevent disease, and the spray getting into the rivers and killing some runs of fish. I will come back to this problem. I think the members of this house have a job to do in regard to resource conservation, and we must face up to that job.

I believe we need a co-ordinating committee to co-ordinate the activities of all departments as far as resource conservation and management are concerned. I have all the respect and regard in the world for the minister's abilities, but he will have a tough job ahead of him. I know he is not in a position to go to a provincial government and say: You cannot build a pulpmill here, or a pulpmill there. But this is part of the planning that I am talking about. This is an area in which we must have far more co-operation provincially and federally than we have ever had before.

• (12 noon)

Someone has mentioned that this problem should be taken up at another constitutional conference, and I certainly agree with that. I think we should sit around the table with the provincial authorities and come to some clearcut, definite agreement on how and where the two levels of government can augment each other's programs for the benefit of all Canadians. It would be a tragedy if we were to allow the depletion of a resource. For example, let us consider the case of a pulpmill. If we were to allow the effluent from the pulp mill to pollute the streams it would wipe out the product on which the livelihood of a number of people depends, namely, the fish which spawn in these streams.

To date there has not been sufficient co-operation between the two levels of government to wipe out the problem I have mentioned. I can give instance after instance—and the minister is well aware of them—where we have started to develop one resource without any over-all plan. The consequence has been that within a few years' time another resource has been adversely affected. We are trapped in plans of our own making because, as I said, there has been a complete lack of liaison and co-operation between the two levels of government. It is absolutely essential for us to break this down if we are really to plan for proper resource development both at the federal and provincial levels.

I should like to come back to forestry for a few minutes, but I will not spend too much time on this subject. I am well aware of the programs which are being carried out by the federal department concerned with forestry and of the research that has been undertaken in this field, but I believe that better use should be made at the federal level of the economic returns which come into the federal treasury and that this should be done in co-operation with the provincial authorities.

Let us consider reforestation. There has been great negligence in this area and every provincial government is almost equally as guilty. Our forests have been cut down and there have been insufficient replanting programs. This has occurred in practically all the provinces with the exception of Saskatchewan where a pretty good program was initiated a number of years ago under the C.C.F. government. They looked to the future in their replanting and cutting programs. We find in British Columbia today that many thousands of acres are lost every year through burning and cutting and that different types of trees grow on them which form a cover over the acreage. The first thing we know we find millions of acres of good land in British Columbia covered by rough growth which could and should be producing crops. This is one field where further assistance could be given by the federal authorities. There is also a shortage of nurseries for growing nursery stock, but most of all there is a shortage of money to hire people to replant some of these areas.

I suggest to the federal government and to the minister that the returns to the federal department justify more thought on the subject, and more effort should be made to replant this waste land. It can be called waste land because it will take a long time before natural regeneration can take place and another crop of trees can mature. The return is in the hundreds of millions of dollars, and I believe that this problem must be taken care of if our forestry program is to be satisfactory.

There is another aspect of forestry where federal assistance could be provided and that is in the prevention of forest fires. A vast co-ordinating system should be set up in this country and expenditures should be made by the federal government to assist the various provinces when the scourge of forest fires hits them. This is another aspect which I would like to bring to the minister's attention, and I suggest that something should be done along these lines. There are all kinds of training programs and techniques which some of the provinces possibly cannot afford, and in this regard they should be assisted by the federal government.

We were speaking about resource conservation, a subject in which I have been interested all my life. Over the years I have collected much interesting material on what can happen when resource conservation is not properly carried out in the cropping of some of our resources. There is a good example on Vancouver Island which I should like to give to the house. Four or five years ago there was an improvement in the situation due to federal planning, I am glad to say. One cannot blame the federal government for the small problem which I will describe. It has really been a provincial program which has allowed a logging operation to be carried out at the headwaters of the small streams on Vancouver Island with the result that an entire run of salmon yielding over $1 million a year was wiped out. The minister cannot tell the department of forestry of British Columbia that they must prevent this from happening. This is where the careful nurturing of these resources must take place. There are some difficulties to be faced. For example, where does logging in the watersheds stop for the good of the community generally?

I have here a few notes which I would like to read to the house. They deal with a little river called the Tsolum, a small stream on Vancouver Island that runs into the sea. A few years ago before logging took place in the upper reaches of this river it had a fine run of different types of salmon which normally come to the coastal rivers as my friend the minister probably knows better than I. Pink and chum salmon used to swarm up the 22 miles to the foot of Mount Washington from which this stream came down where the shale outcrops formed walls and halted the salmon in their search for spawning ground. Just about every mile of this stream was used by the fish prior to the logging operation taking place. More than 150,000 chum, 200,000 pink salmon and, later in the fall, 50,000 coho use this little stream for spawning. Year after year they return to the river to spawn and, of course, the fry make their way to the ocean eventually to mature.

• (12:10 p.m.)

Hon. members can try to estimate their value in terms of dollars if they like. The International Salmon Commission estimates, that for each salmon on the beds, between 2.4 and 4.2 salmon have been caught by the fishing fleet. Let us take an average of three. This produces a figure of 450,000 to 600,000 pink salmon from this one little stream. They are worth about 50 cents each to the fishermen, so the total amount would be between $225,000 and $300,000 derived from this one species of fish alone. There are the runs of chum at 18 cents a pound. These fish weigh about eight or nine pounds each and the return to the fishermen runs between $675,000 and $900,000. Then there are the coho. Fifty thousand used to spawn and they too have value. Making allowance for natural disasters the value to the fishermen derived from this one little stream would be at least a million dollars.

What happened? Logging of the watershed began. This illustrates the point I am making; we are so foolish and stupid about these things. Trees were removed from the watershed and in the absence of forest covering the stream dwindled to a hot trickle. The federal government attempted to divert water from elsewhere to build up the flow during summer and repair some of the damage done. This was a good conservation move but it would not have been necessary if proper care had been taken by the provincial authorities who were responsible for the trouble in the first place. Last year, was a wet year and conditions were relatively good, but the year before there was only a trickle of water flowing. As a result, the number of chum spawning in the channel was cut to less than 100 and in 1963 it was down to 25 from the vast number which had used the stream earlier. This is what I have in mind when I talk about the conservation of resources. These are things to weigh in the balance. I am thinking of the log run which might have harmed the salmon fishery last year, of the dispute between the province and the federal government, of the continuing pollution in our streams, of the continuing pollution of the Fraser. If we are not careful, we are going to destroy some of the finest salmon spawning beds in the whole of Canada.

These are some of the realities we must face. The minister will find himself in a difficult position. I understand that his responsibilities are federal, but the need for a co-ordinated attack is essential. More work has to be done. This is my appeal to the minister and to the house today. The fishing industry perhaps does a good job in trying to preserve certain species of fish. But then we allow some stupid move, some unco-ordinated action by another department, to destroy all the good which has been done. This is why I appeal for better co-ordination in the over-all set-up. For example, if the debris from strip mining is likely to pollute our streams and desecrate our countryside, it should be checked. Each one of us has a share in this work and every single Canadian has to play a part. Some people will be hurt. Some unpopular decisions will have to be taken. But we are reaching the point at which our resources are dwindling. A good deal more could and should be done.

There is one more point I should like to make in connection with forestry. Every year we see the raw material leaving Canada in increasing amounts. It is time members of this house, members of provincial legislatures and members of organizations all over this country rose up in protest. We are shipping logs to Japan from British Columbia in ever-increasing quantities while half our own labour force is out of work because there are no logs for their mills. When will we learn that it is the fabrication in our own country of raw materials of this kind that provides work for our people? We are losing tens of millions of dollars by shipping out raw material which could and should be fabricated in Canada, giving jobs to Canadians in the Canadian setting. We have been negligent in this connection. Again I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity to put the subject of resource conservation before the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to unduly delay the passage of this particular clause of the bill. Friday seems to be becoming a traditional fish day in the house, perhaps to the chagrin of the Minister of Fisheries, but I am grateful to have this opportunity to refer briefly to the statement made by the minister on February 20 which to my mind is certainly the most important statement ever made in this house on the subject of the fisheries and one which amounts to a real breakthrough in fisheries development in Canada.

I am glad the opportunity is afforded to me in connection with part I of this bill to say to the minister that I think his statement was an excellent one. This is a view shared by the groundfish industry and by the government of Newfoundland. It is also shared by the fishermen's union in Newfoundland and, I submit, by most of the members of this house. The minister is to be complimented on his statement. My only regret is that he did not make the statement last fall.

[Mr. Harding.]

• (12:20 p.m.)

Having said that, there are a few matters I should like to mention to the minister. I particularly wish to express a concern of mine which is shared by a number of hon. members. Will the fishermen be the ultimate beneficiaries under this plan? I hold no brief for the operators of fish plants with the exception of their role in fisheries development and operation. But in my view I do have a great deal of responsibility for the ordinary fisherman.

It was pointed out last night by one hon. member that one of the features of this new policy will be the raising of price levels for frozen groundfish products. My concern is whether this will have the effect of raising the income level of the fisherman. As pointed out last night, and it bears repetition, the commodity item we are talking of here, frozen cod blocks, range in price anywhere from a low of 19 cents a pound to a high of 29 cents. The price to the fisherman who does most of the work and takes the risk will range anywhere from one and a half cents a pound, depending on buyer and area, to three and a half cents a pound if he is lucky. As a consequence of this injustice, the fishermen of Newfoundland enjoy the lowest income of any group in Canada, an income so far below the poverty line that it makes one wonder how they can possibly survive. I realize that the minister shares this concern. I should like to hear him say at some future date, or perhaps during the course of this debate, that the government will take steps to ensure that the level of income of our fishermen is raised to the point where they can at least retain their self-respect in the community.

I invite any hon. member to go to a settlement where there is a fish plant. The disparity of income is obvious. In a big house on the hill lives the owner and operator of the fish plant. In modest little frame houses below the hill live the fishermen who are denied the amenities of life to which as Canadians they should be entitled. They are denied these amenities because up until this point they are, as primary producers, the forgotten segment of the industry.

Hon. members will be interested to know that when the minimum wage law of Newfoundland was amended last year to bring the minimum wage for men up to $1 per hour from 70 cents and for women up to 70 cents from 50 cents, the people really deserving of the protection of that minimum wage law were excluded from the provisions of the act.

Fish plant workers, who work 50 to 60 hours a week, were excluded from those provisions, and as a result it can be said that in Newfoundland the industry is being subsidized by the fishermen and workers.

The minister has been to fish plants. He knows that workers there have to stand at a table in the cold and damp for ten hours a day cutting fish that has been packed in ice in a trawler. It is the most difficult and uncomfortable type of work that a person could engage in. Yet these people are excluded from the minimum wage legislation in Newfoundland. I hope that the Minister of Fisheries will show a greater sense of justice and fair play to the fishermen and plant workers of Newfoundland than has been shown them by the government of that province.

I should now like to refer briefly to the centralization program in which the federal government is engaged co-operatively with the government of Newfoundland. To my mind the government has not taken sufficient precaution to ensure that the consequences of the centralization program are such as to improve the lot of the people who will have to be moved. I am very much afraid that the government of Canada has been hoodwinked in this regard.

I say that because in my view one of the principal features of the centralization program is that the administration of welfare programs by the government of Newfoundland is made easier. I urge the government to look very carefully at what they are doing here. After all, when human beings are moved from one settlement to another it is almost a forced migration. These people dare not resist the government since, owing to circumstances over which they have no control, they are totally dependent on the government. They are forced to move from villages and ancestral homes to centralized welfare ghettos—regrettably, that is what they are —where they very rapidly lose their dignity and sense of security, having been uprooted from their own homes and villages in which they grew up and in which they felt at least some sense of security both from the elements and from the bureaucracy.

I am not suggesting that everything about the centralization program is wrong; it has many good features. What I am suggesting is that human lives are involved in it. We are not talking about herding cattle into central areas; human beings are involved. It is not enough for the minister to say that mistakes have been made but that the program is being improved all the time. I submit that not a single Canadian ought to be obliged to leave his home unless the government has satisfied itself of the wisdom of its action and has examined very carefully the social consequences flowing from this type of move as well as all other circumstances. In my view, those who have been moved find themselves living under conditions considerably below the standards they enjoyed in the villages from whence they came. I am concerned about the matter and I hope my remarks do not fall on deaf ears.

• (12:30 p.m.)

In his statement on February 20 the minister indicated that the government was contemplating bringing in a measure to set up a marketing board for salt codfish. We await the announcement of the establishment of that board with anticipation. To my mind, the fishermen of Newfoundland who catch and cure the fish have benefited little in the past 20 years from any advances made in sales of cod, largely because they are the victims of ruthless competition in this field. Our exporters who sell cod to low income Latin, Mediterranean and Caribbean countries have had to compete with highly subsidized exporters from countries like Spain, France and, I believe, Norway. A salt fish marketing board will cure this injustice. After it has been established I hope it will be permitted to come under the aegis of the Minister of Fisheries and not the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In my view, the peculiarities of marketing salt cod can only be dealt with adequately by the Department of Fisheries. All the same, despite the great promises in the new policy enunciated by the minister on February 20, I cannot help feeling concerned about the future of the salt cod industry. Steps must be taken to protect this important Canadian industry from setbacks it might suffer as the result of fluctuations in foreign exchange rates. The more quickly the minister makes his statement about the new marketing board, the happier I shall be.

I now wish to raise the matter of river wardens' pay. Anyone who has had the golden opportunity to fish for salmon in our rivers no doubt has come up against the river warden who must work 24 hours a day in season. Poachers do not operate in daylight, and our wardens have great responsibilities in conserving the fish stocks of our rivers. For their duties they are grossly underpaid, not having had a pay increase for a great number of years. Even 20 years ago our wardens were underpaid. They are the forgotten men of the Department of Fisheries. I hope the minister will have a chance to wet his line and go salmon fishing this year. He may then talk to some of these fine men who protect our rivers and conserve our salmon stocks. When the estimates are finally brought down for the next financial year I hope that consideration will be given to the plight of the river wardens and that they will be recompensed not only for the work they do but for the period during the winter months when they cannot work. These dedicated men love their work and protect our rivers. Unfortunately they are not being paid enough.

I hope that forestry matters in the new department will not absorb too much of the minister's attention at the expense of our fishing industry. In my view, it was a mistake to merge the fisheries and forestry portfolios. Nevertheless, in its wisdom the government has decided to merge them. I hope the minister will not lose sight of his tremendous responsibilities to our fishing industry. Perhaps he will consider enlarging his department and appointing two deputy ministers of fisheries, one responsible for the west coast and the freshwater fish industry and the other responsible for the Atlantic fish industry.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make three brief comments. It might be apt for me to say to the minister who comes from British Columbia, which is celebrating the arrival of spring, that the Halifax area had springlike weather from mid-December until the first day of this week. We are not grateful to British Columbia for getting rid of its winter weather and dumping it on the Halifax area.

The first point I wish to raise concerns conservation. Lobster fishermen in my area advise me that scuba divers operating from yachts out of Halifax have been terrorizing the lobster population in places like Sambro harbour. Pretending they are out on innocent scuba diving operations, the divers go down to the bottom and, with hand pots, take the hapless lobsters. By the time our lobster fishermen get to the area the lobsters have been devoured. I submit that the enforcement officers of the department ought to examine this problem which is of serious import to our lobster fishermen. For the fellow on the yacht the exercise is simply a playful diversion, but for the fisherman it means a loss of livelihood.

[Mr. McGrath.]

My second point concerns the amplification of the lobster licensing program announced by the minister. In particular I wish to deal with the provision which says that where lobster boats were jointly owned and operated in 1968 and were permitted under the regulations of that year to fish with 50 per cent more lobster pots they may continue fishing with 50 per cent more lobster pots. Apparently permission to fish with the increased number of traps is withdrawn when one of the partners in the enterprise withdraws from lobster fishing. I point out to the minister that very often a lobster fishing boat is run as a father and son operation. In most instances the partnership is broken up on the death of the senior lobster fisherman, the father. With a certain class of boats it is an absolute requirement that at least two people be fishing from them if the boat is to work effectively.

• (12:40 p.m.)

The minister may find that new problems will be created by suddenly wiping out the 50 per cent extra privilege. As an example, the capital burden will have to be borne by the survivor rather than by the two people. In the case of a father and son, if the father dies the surviving owner would have to hire somebody and would not be able to give him the advantage of joint ownership of the boat. In addition, the survivor would have to bear the financial burden involved in a catch only two-thirds of what was previously permitted. I realize the minister and his officials have shown good will and great adaptability in listening to the points of the fishermen, for which I thank them, but I utter the warning that this is a problem that may cause them great difficulties in the future.

I am sorry that the reorganization bill does not give the minister more power in the building of wharves. The wharf program as it relates to fisheries should be handled by the Department of Fisheries rather than the Department of Public Works. The Department of Public Works could still supervise the building, but the capital program should be the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries. The disadvantage of it being the responsibility of the Department of Public Works is that when the government cuts down spending public works programs are affected, and I think this is to the detriment of the fishing industry.

Part of my constituency is the Sambro area where the swordfishery has developed to the point that it is the swordfishing capital of the North Atlantic. It is operated from a wharf built in the days of R. B. Bennett. The underpinning of the wharf is reaching a serious stage of deterioration. Some day the wharf may float out to sea. The Department of Public Works has looked at the problem of replacing the wharf and this has been recommended to the central authorities in Ottawa. On one occasion before the election I persuaded the then Minister of Public Works to have this project included in the estimates. After the election new estimates were presented; the Sambro wharf was not included and it was not included in this year's estimates. I am at present taking this matter up with the Minister of Public Works and I hope to have the assistance of the Minister of Fisheries in having the estimate restored. A new wharf in this successful fishing village will promote revenue in an area that now suffers because of a lack of such facilities. I think the minister is aware of this type of problem.

Government reorganization is a recurring phenomenon of our times. When reorganization is dealt with again I hope the Minister of Fisheries will have his own wharf program to enable him to build up growth in natural fishing areas in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Davis: I would like to comment, Mr. Chairman, on some of the remarks by hon. members. The hon. member for South Shore asked if a market study is being carried out by the Atlantic Development Board. I am informed that this study is nearing completion and the results will be made available not only to the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion but also the fisheries department. This information will be used in our own evaluation of the frozen groundfish market. I know the information will be most useful to the Fisheries Price Support Board when it is determining what action to take in order to stabilize prices for frozen groundfish, particularly in the United States market.

The hon. member also asked about the timing of our announcement with regard to frozen groundfish. One of the considerations was the state of the market itself. I think the timing of the announcement has been fortunate as our selling price is now beginning to move up and I hope will move up appreciably in the next few weeks. As several members have stated, the price for codfish blocks has been in the 20 to 21 cent range. It is now firming up, rising several cents since my announcement. I am hopeful it will rise in the near future to 27 or 28 cents.

The hon. member for Fraser Valley West asked about the Indian fisheries program in British Columbia. The Department of Indian Affairs has a joint program with the Department of Fisheries. The budget for this program is $4½ million. This fund is available to fishermen wishing to purchase old or new vessels or gear. It will also enable the Indian people to instal inshore processing facilities and otherwise to expand their role in the fishing industry. This is a special provision for the native people on the west coast, and I hope it will go a long way toward overcoming the serious unemployment problem in the inshore fishery in B.C.

The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin raised the question of offshore limits and also the question of the establishment of base lines. I am hopeful that in the relatively near future we will be able to satisfy him in that regard.

The hon. member for Victoria asked about sports fishing licences on the west coast. I assure the hon. member I have no intention of setting up a sports fishing licence scheme in respect of the salt water fishery of the west coast of Canada.

The hon. member for Skeena was concerned about what he called the abuse of sport fishing privileges. He must realize that particularly in those areas near Vancouver there is a large number of sports fishermen who have a very substantial investment in sports fishing gear. The recreational interests of those numerous taxpayers should also be borne in mind.

The hon. member for Kootenay West stressed the need for conservation of our resources of both fish and trees. We need a co-ordinated approach to resource development for all our renewable resources, including forests, fish and wildlife. The maximum benefit as far as the Canadian community is concerned must be paramount. This thought must be uppermost in our minds.

I have had discussions with a number of provincial ministers responsible for resources development in an endeavour to co-ordinate our activities, both federal and provincial, in the areas of fisheries and forestry. In particular I have had discussions with the hon. Ray Williston, provincial minister of lands, forests and water resources in British Columbia, in this connection. I am confident he and I will be in touch with one another with regard to joint resource development problems, like river drives, as floating logs can interfere with the salmon resource, and the efficient operation of the forest industry in river systems which are also vital to our fishery.

• (12:50 p.m.)

There are particular cases where pollution from forest industries, for example, pulp mills, is a problem. I am keeping a close eye on a possible new pulp mill in the vicinity of Ashcroft on the Fraser River in British Columbia, and I am working closely with the hon. Ray Williston in this connection. I am hopeful we will be able to work out a program which in no way will be harmful to the salmon industry and yet will allow a new forest industry to go ahead in B.C.

We have a similar problem in New Brunswick. However, there is another element of federal participation in the sense that federal funds are, or will soon be, made available for the construction of additional pulp mill capacity on the Saint John River. In this case I think the federal government must insist that the necessary clean-up facilities be installed in the mills, and indeed the performance of those facilities to a very high standard be guaranteed, before federal money is paid out for the construction of these plants.

We must rehabilitate the Saint John River in New Brunswick for the salmon. We have already spent a great deal of money there on a fish hatchery. It must not be wasted by wilful exploitation of the forest resources upstream, and I am working with the minister of resources for New Brunswick to ensure that we will have the best of both worlds, the best in respect of the fishery as well as the best in respect of forestry.

The hon. member for Kootenay West referred to the problem of exports of logs in the round from western Canada to Japan. I have had a quick look at this problem. My understanding is that less than 2 per cent of the total timber cut in British Columbia is exported to Japan on the average. However, we have had a problem with winter snows this year, and there is now a shortage of available logs for the sawmills in what is a rising market, a very demanding market.

With the prospect of some unemployment in the mills we have, jointly with the minister of lands, forests and water resources in British Columbia, been in touch with the companies responsible for log exports. These exports have now been terminated or will shortly be terminated. This suspension will continue until the log supply problem is resolved, or until September of this year.

I am also taking a look at our longer term policy with regard to log exports, and have some reservations in this connection. Members should know, however, that most of the logs we export to Japan are not acceptable to our mills in any case. Because the Japanese value wood, any wood, more than we do and because they cut more selectively, the Japanese are able to use what we call culls to make useful products, and so a trade of this nature has some desirable features.

The hon. member for St. John's East raised three important issues. One was the question of whether the fishermen will benefit from the policies we have announced with regard to frozen groundfish and whether they will benefit as a result of the policies we have yet to announce with regard to salt fish. I would like to reassure him to this extent, that the main purpose of these policies is to maximize the income of the fisherman. The hon. member knows as well as I do that the fisherman in the Atlantic region gets on the average three to four cents for his fish in the round. He also knows that the delivered price of frozen groundfish in, say, Boston has been of the order of 21 cents.

That looks like a big spread, but the hon. member also knows those figures are not comparable. The price that the fishermen get, say three to four cents, must be multiplied by a factor of three to allow for the two-thirds of the fish which disappears in the processing phase. It follows that the comparable price to the fisherman is of the order of 9 to 12 cents out of the 21 cents. Roughly speaking, this is true of the fishery all over the country. The fisherman gets about half of the wholesale price of the finished product.

Having said that, I again want to underline the fact that the intention of our policies is to maximize the price to the fisherman. I am sure we will be able to do this in large measure by stabilizing the wholesale price for export. We will endeavour to stabilize this price at as high a level as possible so that the return to the fisherman is also as high as possible.

The hon. member for St. John's East also touched on the difficult problem of what is called centralization. This is really a program for helping people to move where the great majority of them want to move to another centre. As I understand it, the centralizing program, which is a joint federal-provincial program, helps people to move by giving them financial aid if 80 per cent of the people indicate that they want to move.

This program, which runs for another 12 months, is under very active review. Undoubtedly another program will take its place, but whether this new program is to be administered by the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion or the Department of Fisheries and Forestry remains to be seen. Personally I think a lot can be said for the regional development approach because some of these people, perhaps a majority, will not continue in the fishery or at least will not be able to find gainful, productive, and satisfactory employment in the fishery in their new location. It is not exclusively a fisheries problem. It is a problem of employment regardless of the type of occupation that these people take up after their move. So I would say this is a program for the future which must be continued, which must be modified to suit the circumstances, and which most certainly must have regard to employment opportunities over and above those available in the fishery itself.

Finally, the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants raised the question of lobster fish boat regulations. We have instituted a program of licence limitation on the west coast in order to raise the income of fishermen. That is the main purpose of the licence limitation scheme in regard to the lobster fishery on the east coast as well. Mr. Chairman, I think I have covered very briefly most of the points raised by hon. members.

Mr. McGrath: The minister forgot to mention whether it is the intention of the department to raise the unjust income of the fish game wardens. I think they now get about $270 a month for long work and tremendous responsibilities.

Mr. Davis: I will look into that matter.

• (1:00 p.m.)

Mr. Crouse: The program that the minister has announced is one designed to strengthen and stabilize the market price for frozen groundfish products. Could the minister indicate the species of fish that will be supported by this program? This has not been made known in any phase of his announcement. Does it cover all groundfish products or is the minister at the present time at liberty to tell the house the types of fish that are covered by this program?

Mr. Davis: I would say it covers all groundfish products. I would not want it to be inferred that the support would necessarily be there for all groundfish products at any one point in time. If the price for flatfish or flounders should be higher than the long-term trend, we would not be endeavouring to support that price. But if the price on cod blocks, for instance, was lower than the long-term trend we would undoubtedly be in the market supporting the price of that particular species.

Mr. McCleave: Would the minister make a comment on my suggestion that the Department of Fisheries undertake the wharf program?

Mr. Davis: It is an interesting idea. I will confer with the Minister of Public Works on that matter.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

Mr. Kierans: One o'clock.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Isabelle): There are just a few more clauses.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I believe it is the unanimous wish that we dispose of clauses 4, 5 and 6.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister has called it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Isabelle): It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2 p.m.

On Clause 4—Duties of minister.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, clause 4 of the bill provides that the duties, powers and functions of the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry shall cover not only the seacoast and inland fisheries but the forest resources of Canada as well. When the bill establishing the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation was brought before the house, it was piloted through the house by the Minister without Portfolio. Can the Minister of Fisheries now tell us whether the functions of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation come under his authority, under the authority of the Minister without Portfolio, or under the authority of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce? Perhaps this point could be clarified in respect of clause 4.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, the act has yet to be proclaimed. The minister responsible can be a minister of any department, as designated by the Prime Minister. The final disposition of that legislation has not yet been determined in that regard.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I find myself still in a somewhat confused state. Even though this clause provides that inland fisheries will come under the responsibility of the Minister of Fisheries, am I to understand that the minister cannot inform the house yet whether he will have responsibility for inland fisheries when the act establishing the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation is proclaimed? Is this the situation? I submit this creates considerable confusion, and heaven knows we are confused enough already in dealing with a bill of this magnitude which contains 106 clauses and combines apples with oranges and horses with rabbits. Can we not get down to some basis whereby on fisheries matters we can speak definitively and direct our inquiries to the Minister of Fisheries or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with some certainty that they are being directed to the proper minister? Unless something is done to establish direction, I submit we will—

Mr. McGrath: We will end up like the wheat farmer.

Mr. Crouse: One of my colleagues has said that we will end up like the wheat farmer and the problems he faces. We will be like the story that is told about Columbus; we will not know where we came from or where we are going, and when we get there we will not know where we are. Surely the minister can give us a more definite answer than that this matter is still in the hands of the Prime Minister. Anything he can tell the committee by way of information at the present time will be of assistance to us. It will be better than being told that the situation is still up in the air. Does such a situation still exist?

Mr. Davis: It is not up in the air, Mr. Chairman. It is in the hands of the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: He is up in the air.

Mr. Davis: The hon. member has alluded to Christopher Columbus. He arrived at a very good place, and I am sure the freshwater fisheries legislation will do likewise. In any event, the Canadian constitution gives the federal parliament authority with respect to all fisheries wherever they may be carried out, whether offshore in the oceans or inland.

[Mr. Davis.]

The hon. member also knows that the freshwater inland fisheries have in large measure, been delegated by the nation to the provinces. That was a unilateral act and theoretically can be reversed at any time. But the hon. member has a good point with respect to the freshwater fisheries and I can assure him that the ultimate destination of the responsibility for the freshwater fisheries will be one which is satisfactory to him and to the House.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 and 6 agreed to.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, could we now proceed to part II of the bill, dealing with communications?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Clause 7 is the next clause.

Mr. Drury: I would hope we would not deal only with clause 7 but with part II, communications as a whole, which would be clauses 7 to 12 inclusive.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (2:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: We are now on clause 7.

On clause 7—Department established.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I assume the understanding is that on clause 7 we will have latitude to discuss the whole communications department and that this will not preclude discussion of the other clauses after we have passed clause 7.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, the second section of this bill concerns the creation of a new department of government, a Department of Communications, to be headed by a Minister of Communications who will, at one and the same time, be responsible for the Post Office. Involved, therefore, is a new cabinet title, a rearrangement of existing ministerial responsibilities and, most important of all, the creation of a new department responsible for a field of activity that is relatively new in terms of its importance in national affairs, which is undergoing rapid and decisive change and which has, quite aside from its scientific and industrial importance, profound implications, social, cultural and political. For these reasons my speech will take a slightly unconventional tone; it will also be relatively long, which is not, I am afraid, unconventional. The duties and the areas of responsibility of the new department are described in the bill itself and in necessarily juridical prose. These, I believe, can best be studied at the clause by clause stage of the bill. Instead I intend to address myself to more basic questions: What the department is, what it is doing and, above all, what it hopes and intends to be doing.

First, what is the department? The simplest explanation is usually the most descriptive: It is a department of communications. Communications, to resort to a dictionary definition, means "to transmit information". The word is derived from the Latin, communicare, meaning to transmit, or to participate. These two root meanings of communications, the one a passive act the other an active one, are both integral to the purpose and functions of the department as I shall explain later in my speech. The origin of the department dates back to July 12, 1968, and a statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) which I quote:

> The growing importance of communications and the government's increasing involvement necessitates that one department and minister be made responsible for all government activities in this field. Consequently, a new department will be formed, to which will be transferred the functions of the Post Office Department.

[Translation]

This legislation executes the Prime Minister's statement of intent, with one change in structure which I will explain in a moment. Combined and rationalized under a single minister are all of the government's activities in the field of communications, that is both communications in its modern, electronic sense, and communications in its traditional sense of the Post Office. Our responsibility will be with the medium, not with the message, but, as I shall describe at the end of my speech, these two functions are inter-related and inter-dependent, and we intend to be fully aware of the inter-action between the two.

As the Prime Minister stated, the object of this legislation is to make a single minister responsible for all government activities in the field of communications. As honourable members will see from the departmental chart which has been distributed to them, the Minister of Communications is responsible for two departments, each headed by a deputy minister, and also for a number of government agencies. The departments are, of course, the Department of Communications itself and the Post Office. The agencies which will now report to parliament through the Minister of Communications are the C.O.T.C., the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation; the Canadian Transport Commission, but specifically only that segment of the C.T.C. concerned with the regulation of telecommunication rates, and, once it is established by legislation, the domestic satellite corporation. To ensure that all these institutions operate in the closest co-operation and consultation, there will be created a policy review committee, coordinated by the Deputy Minister of Communications, and comprised of the senior officials of the two departments and of the crown corporations.

Before dealing with the Department of Communications, which is totally new, I would like to deal with a department which is old, and familiar to all—namely the Post Office. This legislation directly affects the Post Office only to the extent that the responsible minister will now carry the title of Minister of Communications.

There is here, perhaps, a small element of confusion. The Minister of Communications will be at one and the same time the Postmaster General. The title Postmaster General will remain on the statute books and for administrative reasons will continue to be used to an extent within the department itself. It will, however, disappear from public usage, much in the same way that the Minister of Finance is also, but is rarely so referred to as, the Receiver-General.

[English]

Postmaster General is an old and honourable title, one of the very few portfolios unchanged in name through the 100 years of political history since confederation. I am the 47th minister to occupy the portfolio. The most renowned Canadian to hold the title was the first, Sir John A. Macdonald, although I must add that he held it for only 24 hours.

An hon. Member: He quit while he was ahead.

Mr. Kierans: The Post Office, as hon. members know, is today undergoing rapid and radical changes. It has to if it is, almost literally, to survive. Lawrence O'Brien, the former postmaster general of the United States, has described the post office in his country as in "a race with catastrophe". These changes may take many forms but their end objective is a post office restructured as a modern, efficient system of communications able to serve the public by finding its proper place in this age of electronic, total and instant communication.

One possible change under study is that of the desirability and feasibility of recreating the Post Office as a Crown corporation. In the meantime, no matter what may or may not happen in the future, the mail must still be delivered. The Post Office payroll is 48,000, easily the largest of all civilian departments. In a sense it is the most "national" of all departments: There is a post office in every sizeable community in the country, more than 8,000 in all which is more, I might point out, than all the branches of our nine chartered banks combined. Because of its size, because of its complexity, and because it is undergoing massive change, the Post Office will continue to operate as an autonomous department, responsible to the new Minister of Communications rather than become, at least until its future is defined, one arm of an integrated Department of Communications headed by a single deputy minister.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Between the two departments of Post Office and of Communications there will be the closest possible working relationship. To give one concrete example, the research component of the Department of Communications will undertake, as one of its prime responsibilities, research into the vital area of electronic sorting and distribution equipment. We intend, as I have said before, to consider the Post Office not as an organization in the business of moving mail but as an organization in the business of communications—that is, of print communication as opposed to audio or visual communication as with the telephone and with television—and hence as an integral part of a total national system of communication. All I have said to this point, Mr. Chairman, is essentially explanatory background. I intend, now, to address myself directly to the new Department of Communications.

The operations of the new department will fall into four broad categories: administration, planning, operations and regulation, research and development. The administrative component is identical with that of all government departments so I need say no more about it at this point.

The function of research and development will be headed by an assistant deputy minister, Dr. John Chapman, who was formerly deputy chairman of the Defence Research Board. Under his guidance there will be established a research and development office which will, essentially, generate research policy. It will identify research projects of prime interest, either because of their industrial potential or because of their relationship to actual or planned government communication operations. In other words, it will be concerned about the future. For example, it would direct research into future types of communication satellites, particularly those able to broadcast directly to homes.

The actual research work will be performed at the communications research centre, as well as at other facilities across the country such as the satellite earth station at Mill Village, Nova Scotia, where, I may say for the information of hon. members, I will formally open a new commercial satellite earth terminal in a few week's time.

The Communications Research Centre, to which I have referred, is being formed from the existing defence research telecommunications establishment, a branch of the Defence Research Board. Its staff currently numbers 520 and is composed of five principal laboratories: the national radio propagation laboratory; the national space telecommunications laboratory, which was responsible for the Alouette I, Alouette II and ISIS-A research satellites, the last of which was launched last month; the national communications laboratory and defence telecommunications institute and, finally, the electronics institute which conducts research on a range of electronic systems such as solid state devices and lasers. In terms of broad policies the communications research centre will be mission-oriented, geared to meet the needs of government as well as those of industry. Our resources are limited and to make the most of them we will have to, and we will, work in close co-operation with industry and with universities.

As hon. members will have noted from this broad description of the research programs, the Department of Communications will be concerned both with telecommunications and with satellites. The communications research centre, as the repository of satellite expertise in this country, will assist in the development of our planned communications satellite and, more directly, with our next research satellite, ISIS-B, due to be launched early in 1971 and intended, like its predecessors, to gather information about the ionosphere. In a broader sense, the department will represent Canadian interest in negotiations at INTELSAT and other international bodies on such crucial issues as allocation of frequencies and of orbital "parking spaces", and it will be required to co-ordinate any future government telecommunication satellite systems, such as those which might be used for surveying earth resources, for meteorology, or a satellite able to broadcast directly into the homes of Canada.

[Translation]

The Operations and Regulation section will also be headed by an Assistant Deputy Minister. Mr. Gilles Bergeron is the designated official, and many will recall him from his work on the Centennial Commission. The bulk of the staff of this section of the department—some 630—have moved over from what was formerly the Telecommunications Policy and Administration Bureau of the Department of Transport. They will continue to administer the Radio Act, that is the technical regulation of radio-frequencies and the licensing of users, whether these be for taxi radios, microwave relays, telephone systems or television broadcasting transmitters. In addition, as I shall explain more fully later, this branch of the department will be deeply involved in a far-reaching review of telecommunications legislation and regulation.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, there is the area of planning. Planning must start with the acquisition of comprehensive information about the national communications industry, and we will have to work fast in a field that is in a state of constant and rapid change. We will, shortly, be appointing a Director General of Policy and Plans who will in turn report directly to the Deputy Minister, a post for which the designated official is Mr. Alan Gottlieb, formerly Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs. The purpose of planning will not be regulation for regulation's sake but regulation, where and when needed, for the public good. We intend to evolve a national communications plan and a national communications policy to integrate and rationalize all systems of communications whether those of today such as telephones, microwave relays, telex, TWX, telegraph and the Post Office, or those of tomorrow: communication satellites; sophisticated information retrieval systems linking computers which exchange and store information of all kinds; waveguides; lasers, and on up to the 'wired city' of tomorrow.

All of this is what the department will be doing. I intend now to describe what it is doing.

Our largest single current project, as everyone knows, is the development of a domestic communications satellite system to go into operation by 1971-72. Legislation to set up a mixed, public-private, satellite corporation will shortly come before this house and hence I cannot, at this time, add anything useful to what is already public knowledge. It would be, Mr. Chairman, a mixed satellite corporation. Full information, I can assure my hon. colleagues, will be provided at the appropriate time.

However, I can perhaps usefully define the three essential objectives of this major project. We intend to use it as a means to promote Canada's scientific know-how and industrial potential in the vital field of communications. We intend to use it to bring the North and the under-developed parts of this country closer to the mainstream of Canadian life by means of instant telecommunications and by live television—a northern vision of the 1970's, and I deliberately use that phrase in acknowledgement of the foresight of the great parliamentarian who first coined it. Finally, Mr. Chairman, we intend to use the system to place in space above us a satellite that will speak both French and English to all Canadians, no matter where they live. Confederation was built upon the mile upon mile of steel rails laid across this country; Confederation will be renewed, as the Prime Minister put it so well yesterday, by a communications system that meets the needs of all Canadians and which provides them with the go into operation 1971-72. Legislation to set means to fulfil their talents.

• (2:30 p.m.)

[English]

A second project under way, our interest in which is reflected in the joint study with Sweden carried out for the United Nations committee on the peaceful uses of outer space, is on the feasibility and implications, technical, political, cultural, sociological and diplomatic, of direct broadcasting by communication satellites. I have already tabled in the house the first paper to be produced as a result of this study. It represents a significant and imaginative initiative by Canada and Sweden. Direct broadcasting communication satellites are some seven to ten years away from economic use, but that point will be progressively reached as the signals emitted by satellites become more powerful and the necessary earth stations become smaller and, most important of all, cheaper.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister, but the time allotted to him has expired. Does the house agree to let him finish his speech?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed? Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Kierans: A vital first step will be an international agreement on the use of frequencies, and this will be dealt with by the World Administrative Radio Conference scheduled for late 1970 or early 1971. I will keep hon. members closely informed of developments because I know they will be keenly interested, both from the standpoint of the implications of such technology upon national sovereignty and from that of the far-reaching implications for developing countries of such a low-cost system of television.

Finally, among projects under way I want to describe one that is, considered over the long term, unquestionably of special importance. Telecommunications legislation and regulation as it now exists is, to a considerable degree, unco-ordinated and in certain areas inadequate. Much of this existing legislation developed as a by-product of transportation considerations, as can be seen by the titles of the relevant acts—the Railway Act, the Telegraphs Act, the Canada Shipping Act.

In March, 1968, the government's white paper on the satellite communications system drew attention to the increasing need for comprehensive telecommunications legislation and regulation to cover telecommunications services, both satellite and terrestrial. With the transfer of responsibility for telecommunications from the Minister of Transport to the Postmaster General, earlier studies have been continued and much preliminary work has been done.

We now intend to move one major step further. As the basis for a complete overhaul of telecommunications legislation and regulation, and coincident with the approval by Parliament of a new Department of Communications, I will set up a special task force to collect comprehensive information on the national communication industry, to study present and future communication needs both of the public and of the industry, whether carriers or users, and to draw up recommendations for a national communications policy and plan. This task force, a sort of telecommission, will be chaired by the deputy minister of communications. Its membership will be drawn from the department itself and other government departments and agencies. In addition, the telecommission group will work closely with, and request information and advice from, industry, universities and other governments. In addition to in-house studies, research contracts will be placed with outside experts. The report of the telecommission is intended to be completed by the end of 1970.

That concludes my summary of what the department is and of what it is doing. I will conclude by attempting to describe the kind of department we intend to become.

Communications is the nerve system of our society. No field of science, with the possible exception of space technology, is changing at as fast a rate, and no field of science, with the possible exception of genetics, contains within it greater implications, good or bad, for society and for the individual.

The Department of Communications, as I have said, will concern itself with the medium, not with the message. But the two cannot be separated. Without accepting uncritically the dictum that the medium is the message, it is obvious that the former affects the latter and that any message is altered and conditioned by the medium through which it is communicated. Television has had a galvanic effect upon our society, irrespective of whether its content has been good or bad, entertaining or dull. Those effects have not always been predictable. Television, on the one hand, expands our horizons by bringing an image of the whole world right into our living rooms; on the other hand, it contracts our horizons by reducing the opportunity and need for personal conversations and relationships. And, specifically, television has robbed parents of part of the responsibility and joy of passing on their stored wisdom to their children. Telephones have had the same schizophrenic effect. On the one hand, they unite people who are living or working at a distance from one another; on the other, they make it less necessary for people to go out to meet each other in person.

Communications constitutes the most important single element in the technological revolution that has overtaken us and which is carrying us along—willingly or unwillingly is virtually irrelevant—toward a kind of society which we can as yet only dimly perceive. As politicians hon. members will be aware, perhaps uncomfortably so, of the extent to which technology is altering our political system, and specifically of the extent to which technology is draining the ideological content, the traditional ideological content, from our political wars. A machine is non-political, neither Liberal nor Conservative nor New Democrat nor Creditiste. Nor for that matter is it a capitalist machine or a communist machine. No matter who designs it or where it is designed, a machine is a machine. How to grapple with the problems created by burgeoning technology, how to ensure that machines serve men and not the other way around, is, I suggest, a challenge that is going to thrust itself more and more into the forefront of our political consciousness and into national affairs.

I have made that excursion into, if you like, philosophy to indicate to hon. members that the Department of Communications will not become a two-dimensional institution concerned only with means and not with ends. We will be a highly technical department and highly science oriented, and must be if we are to execute our specific mandate. We will keep our place on the advancing frontiers of science wherever they may lead—to the second generation communications satellites, to laser pipes carrying great volumes of traffic—voice, data, visual—between major cities, to the possibility of three-dimensional television offered by the new science of holography.

Having said that, I want to make clear that while we will be scientific savants we will not be idiot savants obsessed with scientific problems and projects and unconcerned with their effects upon society, upon our politics, our culture, our social system.

• (2:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

The danger for any government institution, in fact for any institution, is that as time passes it does become composed of idiot savants, of individuals who are expert in their own field and rank amateurs at everything else. If we, in the Department of Communications, possess no clear-cut solutions to this familiar problem we are at least conscious of it. We intend to remain a small department—our payroll for 1969-70 is 1,339—and our mandate is not to operate new telecommunications systems such as the communication satellite but to bring them into being and to regulate them once in existence. If we will be small in quantity we will be high in quality. We will also recognize that quality is not enough. Communications is so complex, so fast-changing and so far-reaching a field that no group or institution could command adequate let alone comprehensive knowledge of every facet of the science. We will therefore, be an 'open' department, working as closely as possible with those in industry, in the universities and in governments here and abroad. One technique of co-operation and consultation which we intend to employ will be that of consultative committees composed of the ablest specialists we can find in the various disciplines of communications who can feed into the department a broad spectrum of knowledge and experience, to generate ideas for us and to criticize our performance.

By this means we hope to arrive at some answers to some of the problems and challenges which confront us. But let me make it plain—far from as yet knowing all the answers we don't even as yet know all the questions.

I will give three examples of areas where questions, the right questions, will have to be asked, and soon. No branch of communications is expanding at a greater rate than that of information retrieval, sometimes known as the knowledge industry, by which computers provide information on real time in response to requests from distant access terminals.

Here are some of the questions that need to be formulated: should the acquisition and distribution of information be regulated? What knowledge should be sorted? Who should have access to it? What protection can be provided for the rights of personal privacy?

Another area to be investigated is that of the inter-relationship between communications and transportation. In its most sophisticated forms—such as video-phones and inter-city closed circuit conference television—communication competes with transportation; it does away with much of the need for travel. We will have to consider what effect the communication systems of the future, most significantly that of the wired city, will have upon our transportation systems within, and between, major cities. And finally, there is the apparent contradiction, which I have already mentioned, that while communication unites people, it can also isolate them. It was in this context that I recently threw out the idea of using our nationwide complex of post offices as locations for communication centers, perhaps by bulletin boards, perhaps by a system of hot-line telephones by which individual members of the public could communicate directly with their government.

In sum, Mr. Chairman, the Department of Communications faces a challenge the dimensions of which are impossible to define with any kind of satisfactory precision. The communications systems, such as the communications satellite system, which we will either develop or regulate, are merely tools capable of being used for the public good, and capable equally of being misused. The department will have to grapple with the problems of the relationship between technology and sociology and of the conflict between mechanical efficiency and human individualism where nothing is black or white and where the best we can probably hope to achieve is a lighter rather than a darker grey. Nevertheless, despite all those qualifications, and imprecisions, I believe Canada has taken a long step forward in identifying the need for a Department of Communications. How effective a step will depend upon the department itself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it is time for the opposition to start asking me questions.

[English]

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Chairman, may I congratulate the minister on his address. I always like to read his speeches, especially those dealing with matters for which he is responsible as minister. In 20 minutes I will not be able to do justice to his 15-page address, a copy of which I received a few minutes ago together with a chart. Except for the fact that the chart was rendered illegible in stencilling I would have enjoyed studying it.

I congratulate the minister on his future exalted status of Minister of Communications. In passing, may I congratulate him for choosing an excellent man to become his deputy minister. I already know Mr. Gotlieb. In my opinion he is a man of outstanding ability and the minister is to be congratulated on obtaining his services. My remarks apply similarly to Dr. Chapman, who is an outstanding scientist and has brought credit to this country. I do not know so well others who will assist the minister. In general, I must say I have the highest regard for what the scientific community of this country has achieved in the field of communications.

I, for one, have no desire to delay the establishment of this new department because with it will come the establishment of important agencies like the satellite corporation. Creating that agency will be commenced more easily once the minister is finally ensconced in his new role. Since I am most anxious for the department to assume these new roles I will not indulge in any delaying tactics. Nevertheless, I hope that the establishment of the new Department of Communications will not be beset by difficulties similar to those encountered in the establishment of the Department of Industry some years ago. Quite obviously, creation of the latter department was an error. I hope it will never again be necessary, as happened recently, for a minister to confess to wastage of half a billion dollars on regional development. I hope, and I say this most sincerely, that we are more ready for the establishment of this department than the government obviously was for the imposition of five-day delivery and attendant changes which were apparently insufficiently discussed and prepared for beforehand.

The Prime Minister spoke about the illusion of change. A cynic might say that we talk so much about the waves of the future, new techniques, new developments and new vistas that there is a danger we may create an illusion of modernity. What a word! I doubt that this is the case. At any rate, these questions come to mind.

I have read carefully the clauses in the bill dealing with the Department of Communications and I wonder how embracing and all-pervading the functions of this new department will be in the field of communications. The minister gave us a lesson in the first conjugation using the Latin word communicare. I wonder whether in this communications field the minister is to become Caesar or just one of the consuls.

• (2:50 p.m.)

I wonder what is in store for the C.B.C.? It would be very easy to have that controversial organization report to the house through the Minister of Communications. This would seem to be a logical development. I notice that the Minister of Communications will replace the Minister of Transport in regard to the Broadcasting Act. As time goes by, will the C.B.C. come even more under the wing of the nation's chief communicator?

I notice a small change has taken place in the allocation of subject matters and estimates to standing committees. The estimates of the Post Office and those of communications formerly went to the committee on transport and communications. In terminology at least, this is the logical committee. The Post Office, communications, and C.O.T.C. have now been placed on the agenda of the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. Is this a coincidence, a mere housekeeping matter, or is it portentous ? This committee was always a normal arena for the Secretary of State, our minister of culture. Is he now going to become number two consul instead of number one in this realm? The hon. Mr. Cardinal speaks of satellites as blackboards in the sky and refers to provincial competence and concern since culture and education are involved. Is there a growing acceptance of this point of view?

These are speculations one is prompted to make. While these are only speculations, there are important questions we should ask as we legislate the creation of the new Department of Communications. I like the forward-looking and splendid statements of intent regarding the telecommunications field, but I wonder about the actual functional scope and the planned activities of this new department. How involved, financially and otherwise, are we going to get in programs such as satellite development?

I am very interested in the domestic satellite program. The McIntosh report has become one of those hidden reports about which Mr. Patrick Nicholson wrote so graphically a few months ago. It has been prepared by a very competent and outstanding man. We have been expecting this report. Where is it? I agree with the minister that this is an important phase into which we are moving, and therefore we should know something about it. In January the minister assured an audience in Toronto that the bill would be introduced this spring to set up a satellite corporation. We have been told today by the people of British Columbia that spring is here. So where is the bill? I would like to know what Mr. McIntosh thinks of this whole operation.

Canadians are interested in knowing what this country is doing on the international scene. We talk about Canada competing for the sale of component parts of satellites and for recognition of our industrial and technological competence. There is perhaps an opportunity for industrial innovation and expansion. How did the Whitehead commission, if I may call it that, get along? Where is that report? That commission reported many months ago and as yet we have not received this information. A spokesman for the C.O.T.C. recently expressed the opinion that Canada should have a larger share of what is available in this particular field.

I also wonder what is being done in connection with intra-national problems. The Prime Minister stated the satellite program was a sort of 20th century railroad to sustain confederation. Unless we see some evidence of more thoughtful consideration of some people in the provinces who have an interest in some aspects of the satellite program, it may not be such a unifying force as it could be. I am interested to know how much co-operation there is between technicians and technologists of Quebec and of Canada. These developments should be discussed before a situation arises resulting in conflict and controversy over something which could potentially be a great unifying agent. I hope there is nothing in the bill which will diminish the role of the C.O.T.C., a well established and important corporation. When I read Bill S-5 and certain clauses of the measure now before us, there seems at best to be an overlapping. It could at worst be pre-emption. This I would not like to see.

The powers of the C.O.T.C. are certainly ample. They are empowered to carry on the business of public communications, by cable, radio, telegraph, radiotelephone and any other means of telecommunication, between Canada and any other place. Their position should be secure. I listened to the minister's excellent speech on this whole program. The minister is a stimulating man. He speaks often and well, but frequently he speaks on many other subjects. It is a temptation at times to rise in the house to ask the Minister of National Defence how everything is going in the Post Office Department, but the rules would not allow it. I suppose it would be an impropriety to ask the Minister of National Defence to settle some of the problems developing in the Post Office Department.

An hon. Member: Ask him what he thinks of the five-day mail delivery.

Mr. Macquarrie: Being a kindly man and having the highest regard for both ministers, I would not make such a flippant suggestion, but it does go through my mind.

Mr. Woolliams: It sort of follows the de Gaulle line.

Mr. Macquarrie: I am aware that I have limited time to speak on this very large bill. I am not going to say all that I would like to regarding the question of communications, but I would like to say a word about regulations. Every so often I note in the minister's speeches that he refers to the importance and need of control as we become more and more integrated in the so-called global village. The minister has stated we would not have regulations for regulations sake. I fervently hope not!

It is of the essence that we move quickly into the satellite field, not only because we need an exercise in technical competence for our people and not only because we must get what is rather strangely called a parking space for our satellite. There is no shame in mentioning that there are also good and sound financial reasons why we should get into this field early. There is revenue to be gained. There is, one might say, gold up in "that thar" space area. It is conceivable, because the minister is having trouble with his Post Office Department, that he might be able with his right hand to drawn on something which might help the deficits on his left. I want him to know that when he is able to move on the implementation of a Canadian role in domestic satellites he will find every support and every encouragement from me.

• (3:00 p.m.)

I noticed the hon. gentleman's reference to the vision of the north. He paid a very fine tribute to the former leader of our party, the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert. I concur in that. I would only say in passing that that right hon. gentleman, while he was prime minister of this country, was capable not only of looking to the north but he also looked to the east and to the west. The people of the maritimes and the people of the prairies remember this very well and very vividly.

With reference to the Post Office, I hope we are not going to have a development whereunder the Post Office Department will become the step child of the communications department. I note very carefully what the minister said in their regard on page 4 of his statement. He said that "at least until its future is defined," the Post office will not become one arm of an integrated Department of Communications headed by a single deputy minister. I repeat that phrase, "at least until its future is defined." The thing that would frighten me is that it would become the left arm, the weak arm. I have the nagging thought on occasion then I note the minister talking about telephones in the sky and interesting developments in foreign policy, that perhaps he is diverting his thoughts from some of the real problems in the Post Office. I would not impute motives. Of course, you cannot do that. It is ungentlemanly. But I wonder if he might be engaging a bit in diverting the thoughts of the patrons of the Post Office Department from the problems which his policies are visiting on them.

We want satellites in the sky. Good Lord, we are all for that, but we want mail to move rapidly on the ground as well. There are some things happening in the Post Office of late which would cause people to wonder if somebody does not have his mind on something else while these things are developing. The imposition of the five day delivery has been changed in time and in scope. The original plans had to be abandoned. I wonder if the whole thing may not yet have to be abandoned.

I do not know whether I am plugged into the computer age, but I find it difficult to be convinced that you can move mail as rapidly by processing it five days out of seven as six days out of seven. This is a thing that has not yet been demonstrated by the backlog of mail in many parts of Canada. The half million letters lying around in Montreal were not only for the people of Montreal. Mail laid up in any important centre is inhibiting delivery of mail all over the country. This is very important and very serious.

There was insufficient consideration for the needs of letter carriers on the sort-through system. Without going into details, I would say there was insufficient consideration of very basic needs and working conditions of the most elementary kind. I am not at all surprised that there is controversy and indeed adjudication over this matter right now. There was insufficient consideration of the categories of mail which cannot properly be processed under the five day system.

I read in the Ottawa Citizen of February 26 a great concern expressed by medical people. I quote from the article in that newspaper:

> Medical laboratories fear some patients may be endangered by the cut in mail delivery from six to five days.
>
> Specimens mailed by doctors to the laboratories on Fridays will not undergo tests until Monday or even Tuesday.
>
> Patients could wait almost a week, instead of about three days, to hear the verdict.
>
> Another danger is that specimens will break down chemically or be affected by temperatures while lying in Post Office stations an extra day.
>
> A change in the specimen could result in some disease going undetected—
>
> "It very well could hamper a diagnosis," said a director of Douglas Laboratory Services, 150 Metcalfe Street. "Doctors depend on us for fast and accurate results."

The director of another laboratory said:

> "It doesn't do the test samples any good to be hanging around in postal offices another day... There could be a chemical change in some of the substances, particularly the proteins—they can break down very easily."

So, this is a very important question that was obviously not considered, although the Post Office must have been carrying laboratory supplies for a good many years.

I think, Mr. Chairman, and I have said this before—I have not been alone in saying it—that I find many Canadians are saying there is too little concern for purely Canadian publications under the impending new rates, particularly the non-profit publications. The minister has heard about this very directly and critically from some of the largest bodies of people in Canada, most recently the Canadian Labour Congress and the Canadian Federation of Agriculture.

Learned societies and many people who publish scientific and technical journals have tried to point out their problems. Some have expressed anxiety, and that is a mild word. It is known that Canadian associations of professional men have great difficulty in getting out publications, but they also have great need to get out publications. It is also known, and I am sure the minister knows this, that many of these publications are now already subsidized out of general membership funds.

Even in the electric age, even if the satellite is functioning, beaming messages and programming magnificently, the printed word is still of importance.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the hon. member may continue his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macquarrie: I must apologize, Mr. Chairman. This is the first time in 11 years I have ever gone beyond the set limit. It is only in emulation of the minister. However, I take the responsibility. His is the example; mine is the responsibility! I thank the House for its courtesy.

I would just like to say that on the question of publications there is a new and important element which is worthy of the most serious consideration and that is that in many fields the government itself has its own publications. The farm organizations try to get out their farm letters and magazines, and they have great difficulty because of the new rates. The Department of Agriculture brings out its bulletins under the franking privilege, which it has every right to. The people interested in international affairs have trouble getting out publications, but the minister's department gets out a magazine every month which contains the speeches of cabinet ministers. I do not think the Postmaster General has ever appeared in it, but others do who have more orthodox views. But you would not find much of the criticism of people like Professor MacNaught in that, so the people interested in a discussion of public matters will find that certain vehicles of opinion will not appear for their consideration; that organs of thought will be forbidden because of repressive rates from expressing views contrary to what might be described as the official line. This is a very serious matter.

The same thing applies to labour organs. Many people tell me that if these rates are not withdrawn many groups will have to depend for their member readership on the production of American magazines which are brought into Canada and, of course, carried free by the minister's employees. I repeat that this is a very serious matter.

We try our best, when we think about it, to develop the Canadian identity in thought, culture, and so on. Yet these measures are making it extremely difficult for Canadian ideas, Canadian ideals and Canadian points of view to be expressed by people with opinions and with a contribution to make.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Therefore, the competition which always is heavy from United States publications which have a much larger circulation is being made more difficult by competition from the government itself. The minister of communications, in my opinion, has responsibility for this. Surely, he has the responsibility, if his new portfolio is to mean what he seems to imply for the furthering and assisting of the transmission and communication of ideas. It is that of course which makes a nation breathe; the stimulation of thought and development of opinion whereby a democracy can become healthy. So, I bring this responsibility to the minister's attention.

I shall close my remarks by wishing him well in his new portfolio and in all the speeches he will be making in the future on whatever topic.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Hillsborough has shown a very profound and genuine interest in the field of communications policy. He told the house he would speak for only 20 minutes and then proceeded to speak for a much greater length of time only because, as I say, he has this genuine interest in the matter under discussion. If I speak for a shorter period I hope it will not be taken to mean I am any less interested.

I should like to begin by saying that I think it augurs well for the future of Canadian communications policy that this department will have at its head the former Postmaster General. The minister has the reputation of being a no-nonsense type of man who is action oriented. The minister, for some time now, has been involved in this new area of responsibility. We hope before the passage of many months he will be able to use his energies to come up with a communications policy that will have much greater definition and precision than is the case at the present time.

I for one feel it is rather difficult to speak on the merits of the bill before us because it refers to the creation of a new department of communications but does not mention the policy which will lie behind the department. This policy will have to be implemented and administered by the minister and, in large part, it is still an unknown factor.

I should like to make reference to some comments made yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition and by my leader when they said, in effect that a bill to reorganize various government departments in itself means very little. I would go further and say it means almost nothing until such time as we can see clearly what kind of policies these departments will be putting into effect. Fortunately, in the case of the department of communications there seems to be something genuine about reorganization. It is logical that we should consolidate the Post Office Department and certain other communications branches under one minister in one department. It is more logical than certain other aspects of the reorganization bill which is before us.

I do not mind saying that I believe the reorganization of other departments into a Department of Regional Economic Expansion will likely be a hoax. The references that have been made in the past few days to the government being committed to some kind of new policy in respect of regional economic development or changing the policy with regard to ARDA, FRED and all the other programs, is nothing but window dressing and may well prove to be a fraud. Only a short while ago in this House of Commons we gave approval to the establishment of a Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. That, in itself, was a piece of governmental administrative reorganization. Since that department has been organized and headed by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs the increase in the cost of living in this country has escalated beyond what it was before that minister took office. It seems to me the kindest thing the minister could do would be to remove himself from the office and recommend that the department be disbanded.

When a policy lacks definition one might ask what the point is in having such a department at all or what the point is in having a reorganization to change its name. I do not wish to take any more time in venting my dissatisfaction in respect of many aspects of this reorganization bill because I understand today we are expected to deal primarily with the subject matter of communications and communications policy. I should like, however, to take another second or two to say that my disenchantment with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the minister is equalled by my disenchantment with the minister responsible for housing. We can have all the administrative reorganization we like in this area and it will prove to be of no consequence at all so long as we have interest rates which are at the present levels. Only if the government is really serious about doing something relative to interest rates in this country will anything effective be accomplished in respect of housing construction. It seems to me it is futile and is perpetrating a hoax to pretend that the establishment of a task force or division or branch within a department will have any concrete effect on the problem of housing.

If I might return to the establishment of a Department of Communications, I should like to say that I found the minister's remarks earlier this afternoon enlightening and edifying, as they usually are. He used one analogy in particular which I thought was very appropriate. He referred to communications in our time as being the central nervous system of a society. This is an analogy which I like and in which I concur. If communications is the central nervous system of our society, it is all the more important that the government, the political instrument of the people, have some definite and close regulation of and involvement in that central nervous system. I refer particularly to the advent of communications by satellite. The minister said much about this in his speech this afternoon, as he has over the course of the past several months.

We all await with interest information concerning the policy of the government with regard to the establishment of a domestic communications system by space satellite. Leaving the technological aspect aside, I would be very interested to find out what the government has in mind relative to the ownership, regulation and control of such a system. I can imagine that the minister is under tremendous pressure from the private sector of the communications industry to leave the ownership and management of this communications system to them. Personally, I have nothing against the notion of utilizing the capability that exists in our private sector of communications to the fullest possible extent in research and development. I see nothing wrong with the concept of joint public-private capitalization of this system.

• (3:20 p.m.)

But I hope that if it is to be a joint public-private venture, the government will avoid the error that it made, for example, in the establishment of the Panarctic oil exploration venture. As I recall, 45 per cent to 50 per cent of the capital required for that venture was put up by the government but with regard to control, of the 14 directorships on the board only one was accorded to the government. I am not suggesting that there is any need to have government representation on the board of directors in exact proportion to the subscription of equity capital; but it is rather ludicrous to have the government using the taxpayers money to put up half of the capital and then having only one of the 14 slots on the board of directors. Not only is it disproportionate, but I think it is putting the one government representative in a very difficult position which may prove to be untenable. It would seem to me logical to have more than one, preferably three or four out of 14, for example.

In the case of this domestic communications space satellite corporation, I hope that between now and the enactment of the legislation the minister will correct any mistakes he may have already made if he has, in fact, agreed to have the government put up most of the risk or development capital but have only one or two slots on the board of directors of the corporation. I think this kind of arrangement is simply unacceptable.

The minister should look to the experience in the United States. About six years ago the U.S. Congress threshed out this question at the time of the establishment of the Comsat Corporation. My understanding is that the United States government did not put up very much investment capital, but despite this they have representation on the board of the corporation. This is important. I think the best arrangement, although on ideological grounds I suppose the minister would not accept it despite the fact that from time to time in the past he has sounded like a Social Democrat, for the development of a domestic communications space satellite system would be to have ownership vested in the public through a public corporation.

I do not mind saying that I am one of those who is enthusiastic about the notion that Canada should be developing such a communications system. We should be developing the scientific capability that goes with it. Some of the reasons for my enthusiasm about it are these: First of all, I agree entirely with the assertion made in the white paper tabled last April that this technology, this space satellite system, will enable us to do a great deal in the way of providing programming in both French and English to all parts of the country. It may well serve as an instrument for greater national unity in future years. That is one reason why it seems to me important.

The second reason is that when you look at the coverage provided by present microwave systems, you see that vast stretches of our country are not able to receive communications signals of any kind, television or commercial. With the advent of a space satellite system, for all practical purposes all of Canada, including the vast northland, would be within reach of television entertainment or communications signals of the commercial variety. All parts of Canada would be within reach of these signals. Perhaps because I am a westerner I believe this is very important. Therefore, even if the cost should be somewhat higher in the case of a space satellite system compared with building up a large ground relay system, I believe it would be worth the extra cost. I hope the minister will not let himself be talked out of the notion that the government should proceed, as a matter of firm commitment, with the research and development needed to launch and have in orbit our domestic communications satellite system.

As I said in a speech a few weeks ago, it would be helpful if we had comparative costs as between building a space satellite and a ground relay system which would provide equal coverage. I know it is difficult to compare these costs, but surely the minister concedes that we must have some comparitive figures before us. Otherwise, how is it possible for us to make any valid, worth-while series of suggestions with regard to the direction the minister should take in this respect?

Even if it costs more, it is worth it. I believe it is important for another reason in addition to the factors having to do with national unity and servicing our north country and frontier areas. The third reason is this. We must do whatever is practically possible, whatever is feasible, to build up a larger pool of scientific knowledge and technological capability in our country. Too often in the past we have seen instances where, because we did not go ahead with a particular project that required scientific expertise, Canada suffered the loss of some of its best scientific minds. Why should we allow this to happen if we have before us a concrete prospect of being able to employ and take advantage of the brains that exist in our country? The benefit and advantages gained would be shared by the country if these people were given an opportunity to work on projects which would use their talents.

I do not want to leave this subject without making some further extensive reference to the matter of a communications space satellite system and the relationship between government and private sectors in developing and owning such a system. I should like to quote to the minister an excerpt from an American business journal. This excerpt bears on the very point with which I am dealing:

> A number of decisions are now coming up—some of them to be made by the F.C.C., some by Congress, some by the White House, and some, in all probability, by the courts—that will largely determine the shape and direction of communication in the U.S. and the world for several decades to come. Hence a titanic struggle is under way, involving an impressive array of private, government, and quasi-public contestants in a bewildering variety of contests. Some of the contests are between governments—e.g., Great Britain and France against the U.S. Within the U.S. itself, some of the conflicts are between different agencies of the federal government—e.g., the F.C.C. versus the Defence Department. Some are within industry—e.g., Comsat versus A.T. & T. Some are between industry and government—e.g., Comsat versus the F.C.C; and some involve quite new and unexpected lineups—e.g., the Ford Foundation versus Comsat and A.T. & T. The stakes are huge—

I repeat that, for emphasis:

> The stakes are huge—for the governments, corporations, and foundations involved, and for everyone who uses the telephone or watches television.

Although this kind of jockeying for position or advantage does not exist to the same degree in Canada, and I have not pretended that it does, one must assume that it exists to some degree. That is what led me to ask just what pressure the minister was under, what pressure he was being subjected to from the private sector and those who were jockeying for advantage in this undertaking. The way in which these questions are decided will determine the shape, not only of the communications industry but of economic developments generally. The decision may set precedents that could determine how technologies as yet undeveloped are to be introduced in the future. I submit that we in Canada should try to avoid the mistakes that were made in the United States in 1962 relative to the communications policy and legislation. In the United States, although the research and development that went into the communications satellite field was and still is largely a product of government financing, and although the promotion of satellite communications is said to be an object of national U.S. policy, the corporation that was eventually established to operate in this area was a private body.

• (3:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired, unless it is the wish of the committee that he should continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Schreyer: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I will conclude in five minutes. In my opinion the fundamental question is: Who should have the right to put up and operate a domestic satellite system? That question has not been answered in Canada and it has not even been answered yet in the United States. Congress has passed legislation in this general area of communications by satellite, but the question as to who shall own and operate a domestic system in the United States, for example, has been left deliberately shrouded in ambiguity. Almost by general consensus the word is out that it was left deliberately shrouded in ambiguity so that there would be no dog fight in Congress when the bill to establish the concept was brought before it. I hope we can avoid this in Canada. I hope that members of all parties will not go back to the old clichés of yesteryear about private enterprise and socialistic state ownership, etc. The important thing is that if we are to accept the minister's own definition that communication is the central nervous system of our society, what member here can argue with logic and feeling that it could possibly, therefore, be left outside of public ownership? It seems logical to me that if something is the central nervous system of a society, the society must own its own nervous system. We await with interest the response that the minister and his colleagues will want to give to this question in the next few weeks and months.

I would like to conclude as quickly as I can by posing a number of questions to the minister on the record so that the minister will have something on which to ponder and to which to reply. In addition to the question about the ownership of new communications media such as satellites there are the following questions I would like to put on the record. Is the new department we are creating definitely committed to a domestic communications space satellite system of a more expensive synchronized orbit kind or is the department still weighing the alternative of cheaper types of domestic communications space satellites? There are cheaper kinds in terms of development and launching, but one presumes that in the long run they would not really be cheaper.

Another question I would like to pose is as follows: Is the government committed to a policy whereby television signals, for example, emitted from a domestic space satellite could be received directly by individual television sets, or is the government still considering a system whereby signals from the satellite would first have to be picked up by powerful ground receiving stations or by community antenna systems of one kind or another? I have no doubt that the latter would be much cheaper, but it would also be putting the owners of TV sets in many communities of the country, especially in the northland and in our frontier areas, at the mercy of any private operator of a community antenna system. Of course if the government intends to put up a number of ground receiving stations across the country, that is one thing; but if it is going to send up a satellite whose signal will have to be picked up by a ground receiving station or a community antenna system, either the government must own the latter or else the people who own the television sets will become captive customers of private operators and price regulation will become very important.

There would have to be more government regulation. Quite frankly, if there were a choice between a growing bureaucracy to regulate on behalf of the public and government ownership I would prefer government ownership in this particular domain because it is logical. Since it would be a utility it could well be publicly owned. We have some experience to go by already. If the government pauses to look at the present state of public policy relative to cablevision and if this government is fair, it will have to admit that our present policy is chaotic. I presume the minister will be involved, if not directly at least indirectly, with cablevision and community antenna systems because there is more involved than just television. The broader aspects of communications are also involved in these systems.

I have here a long article that the minister can read at his own convenience. It appeared in a local Ottawa paper a few days ago and states that the growth of community antenna systems in Canada in recent years has Ottawa in a dither. Ottawa is in a dither because there is a lack of a clearly articulated and designed policy. The result has been that over the past few years there has been a proliferation of community antenna and cablevision systems without adequate regulation and public control. When that occurs there can be no surprise that chaos results, which has been the case. All I am saying to the minister is that I hope whatever policy he adopts relative to the television aspect of satellite communication he will not opt for a policy that will leave the owners of television sets in the more remote communities dependant on private cablevision or community antenna operators. For $50,000 these operators can put up a community antenna system and draw the signal from the satellite. They are the only ones then in a position to relay the signals to the set owners. In effect, they have a monopoly, so the public will be at a tremendous disadvantage. Needless to say there is much more that can and should be said with respect to the establishment of the Department of Communications.

I will conclude now by making reference to one other item to which the minister referred, that is that his new department will have a research and development function. This is fine. I am sure the department will be capable of co-operating closely with the privately-owned communications industry and that much good will come of it. However, I want to know whether included in this research and development function of the department is responsibility for probing into the aspects of new electronic communications systems which affect public health and safety. This is nothing to be complacent about. If the minister thinks the Department of Transport or the Department of National Health and Welfare have been doing a job with respect to protecting public health and safety as far as radiation from appliances used in the communications industry is concerned, he is mistaken. It is generally acknowledged in the United States, where they have been doing much more research than we have been doing in this field, that a great deal is still unknown as far as electronic radiation is concerned.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Today when there is a virtual explosion of activity in the electronics industry and a proliferation of the amount of radiation, the hazards posed to public safety are growing. Unfortunately, there has been no proportionate increase in the efforts of those responsible for protecting public health and safety to provide against this hazard. I hope the minister will take a personal interest in this aspect at least to the extent of activating some branch of his department and encouraging them to look into it. I thank hon. members for their indulgence.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words on Bill C-173 regarding the government policy in the field of satellites.

We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, are in favour of every form of progress. We shall never do enough as far as education and information of the public is concerned. We are in favour of the greatest possible development in this field. We want every possible step to be taken in order to allow us to collect more and more information and to give the population of Canada the adequate services we need in this era.

The minister asked us: What should our policy be in the matter of satellites? Should the state have complete control over satellites or should private enterprises co-operate with the state? Should the state have complete control over all information? Does it have to take all necessary steps regarding satellites?

Mr. Chairman, I would answer that by saying I do not quite agree with our socialist friends who say that the state must take over everything, do everything and control everything. I say that this applies only to the international field. In the national field, private enterprise has already successfully passed the test, and it has the right to exist. As a matter of fact, it is able to take care of communications, because in education as well as in communications by satellites, in transport or in technology, private enterprise is very much advanced. I believe we would be taking a step backwards if we removed these fields from the control of private enterprise because it can do the job. Is it not true that in a number of areas, it can provide better administration than the state at half the cost?

In that field, as in others, I believe that private enterprise can provide valuable service; honest competition and more diversity. In the case of a single state station, you push the button and get one program only; however, what we need is the possibility of pushing several buttons and getting several stations.

At the present time, private enterprise is active in the fields of communications and transport, as well as in others, and it plays its part adequately. It pays taxes to the government, contrary to the Crown corporations, since, in their case, the enterprise is the government. The only source of income allowing the government to make up the deficits of those corporations is the taxpayers' contributions, since such corporations do not succeed in administering themselves as economically as private-enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, I am not making that up. As everyone knows it can be proven that private enterprise can operate more economically than the government because it looks after its own business. In private enterprise the owners have control while in state owned companies every citizen is boss and owner. Employees of such undertakings do as they please and that explains why such companies cannot compete with private enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, with regard to financing these satellites or agencies, we approve the millions spend on them by the government, because I do not know exactly how much they will cost. I speak of millions because millions of dollars have already been mentioned. Since it is a question of public funds, those millions should be used only to liquidate the national debt, so as to avoid having to pay endless debts, at interest rates of 8, 9, or 10 per cent on the millions we will have to borrow to build communications satellites, which will benefit a few people at the most. The government must assume its responsibilities in this field. The minister should insist that the millions he needs be provided by the federal bank, carrying the administrative costs only, and not at the fantastic rates of interest which are current today. Such rates represent nothing less than exploitation of the people and serve to throw out of balance the country's whole economy.

Mr. Chairman, if this government company is unable to find the necessary funds at a reasonable rate of interest, we will oppose this program, because it is a matter of saving the nation rather than putting it in a straitjacket. It is not fitting to compel the present and future generations to pay eternal debts. If those debts were reasonable, as well as the rates of interest, we would agree, but we are primarily for progress. And as I was saying earlier, we can never do enough to promote development and education for our people.

We have an urgent need of satellites, these modern means of communication, but if it is physically possible to establish them, it should also be possible to finance them at a reasonable rate of interest, in the same way as external aid, by lending them the money, free of interest, for 50 or 70 years.

I think that the same thing could be done with the telecommunication services needed by the Canadian people. We agree with the minister that they should be established, but on the other hand we do not want them to create hardship through the imposition of more taxes on the taxpayer.

That is the situation now. We should be able to provide these communication media for the country through low interest loans. The minister should work in this direction by including in his program—

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

I just heard the hon. member for Compton make an uncorrect statement, and knowing his concern for truthfulness, I wish to give him some information so that he will no longer make wrong statements.

• (3:50 p.m.)

He speaks of companies which are taking unfair advantage of the government. However, the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation is a Crown corporation which never showed a deficit. Moreover, it was about to ask the government for $5 million this year to ensure its normal expansion and it has just stated that it would not need it and that it can operate through its own returns. Thus, the hon. member is not entitled to say that government companies are taking unfair advantage of the government.

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the hon. member for Trois-Rivières is a newcomer in this house, but I believe he is not very conversant with that matter, because I can refer to several Crown corporations that do not succeed in operating by themselves, that run at a loss and are financed with the tax payers' money. If he is not aware of any, I am. So that is how I reply to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain).

I should also like to deal with community antennas. Someone said that the satellites will put out signals which will be picked up by community antennas. Once again, our friends of the New Democratic party say that those community antennas should belong to the state.

Several community antennas are now being operated by private enterprise, and they give very good service at fairly reasonable rates. I do not feel the state should step in and take over the responsibility of controlling everything.

The state should allow private enterprise to enter the field of communications by community antenna and get its share of the profits to be made. Indeed, individuals have the right to make a living. The government is not the only one who has the right to live, levy taxes and take money away from everyone. Private enterprise must find the money somewhere with which to pay government taxes. It is unthinkable that the government should take over all the profitable businesses, leaving only crumbs to private industry, and then depend on taxes from private enterprise to operate state undertakings.

Private industry has the right to live and to make reasonable profit. It has the right to exercise controls and to do business with other profitable enterprises. The State gets hold of everything. In the provinces for example, every efficient business is under the control of the provincial government.

The government controls the buying and selling of alcoholic drinks. It also controls electricity. Then, the citizens are taxed to pay for these controls and nothing is left to them. In short, they have no longer the right to live.

I wish to make a few remarks on this subject, Mr. Chairman. I would like corporations dealing with community antennas to enjoy the same rights they enjoy today, when that corporation is established. Again private enterprise should have the right to play a part in the development of the state in the fields of communications and transport. Private enterprise has certainly some rights and I think that we would go backwards if we did not allow these corporations to live and to operate properly what they can operate and to give the services that they are as capable as the state of giving.

As far as big business is concerned, Mr. Chairman, I think the state must exercise that control, as it were, because this responsibility is too heavy for private enterprise. As for everything that is not too expensive, the state should let private enterprise deal with it.

Mr. Chairman, thanks to satellites, we will have access to new mass media and we need them badly. All these mass media, all these instruments of publicity, and education should be available to the people. Indeed, it is for the government to provide them with these means. Again, as I said earlier, we should leave to private enterprises its due share in those fields. The state would then truly act as a pater familias. A father must not take everything for himself without leaving anything to the rest of the family. Every member of the family has the right to live.

A father must do his best to enable each and every member of the family to fulfil himself and freely enjoy the wealth of the family.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Latulippe: I shall conclude by thanking you, Mr. Chairman. Private enterprise—

[English]

The Chairman: Order. It being four o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

PRIVATE BILLS

CANADIAN ORDER OF FORESTERS

Mr. Hyliard Chappell (Peel South) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-18, respecting Canadian Order of Foresters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is the President of the Treasury Board asking for the floor?

• (4:00 p.m.)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for not rising a little earlier. May I ask the unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions in order that we may receive a message from His Excellency?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Drury: I beg your pardon, Mr. Speaker. I was under the impression the table had the requisite document. Perhaps we could defer this matter.

Mr. Chappell: Mr. Speaker, Canadian Order of Foresters was incorporated under Ontario law in 1879. It is a non-profit society which issues policies of life insurance to its members. It is exclusively Canadian, with head office in Brantford, Ontario. The objects of the society as set out in the constitution include, "to unite fraternally into the Order—for mutual fraternal benefits." Those benefits include the maintenance of an insurance fund.

The society was registered with the federal department of insurance under part V of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, as a provincial society. It transacts the business of life insurance in all provinces or parts of Canada. There are about 40,000 members in Canada.

Although the society had its beginning in Ontario, over the years it has extended into almost every province and now little more than one third of its branches are within Ontario. To facilitate the operation of the society in all provinces of Canada, it is desirable to make the society subject to the provisions of the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act respecting fraternal benefit societies as if the society had been incorporated by special act of the Parliament of Canada.

The change is further desirable because the identity of the society as a purely Canadian association operating only within Canada would be strengthened. In addition, administrative work would be simplified.

The Canadian Order of Foresters Act, 1968, a special act of the legislative assembly of the province of Ontario, which was sponsored by Mr. Makarchuk, N.D.P. member for Brantford, Ontario, authorized the society to bring this petition which, if granted, will have the effect of terminating its Ontario corporation.

What the society requests could be accomplished by incorporating a new federal society and then selling the assets of the provincial society to the federal society but this would involve a great deal of administrative work and expense in the transferring of thousands of mortgages from the Ontario to the federal society as well as in the transferring of policies and matters to do with the investments of the society.

To avoid the expense of continuing as a provincial society doing business in the other provinces or incorporating a new federal society and then selling or transferring assets, the society requests a change or an amendment to its corporate life in order that it may continue as if it had been incorporated in the first place by special act of the Parliament of Canada. To put it another way, the society is asking for a special act incorporating it as a federal society under the name of Canadian Foresters Life Insurance Society and, in French, Forestiers Canadiens, Société d'Assurance-Vie.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as is customary we feel that applications for this type of incorporation should pass the second reading stage after the sponsor has made his explanation. This matter is to be referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, where witnesses will appear and go into the matter in detail. We, therefore, reserve detailed comments on this application until the bill appears before the committee. I recommend that the house give passage to the bill and refer it to committee.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a few remarks to Bill S-18, an act respecting Canadian Order of Foresters. I do so not because I wish to oppose the organization of the Order along the lines of an insurance company but because there seems to be considerable dissention within the ranks of the organization with regard to what is being applied for in this bill. As I understand it, the Canadian Order of Foresters is seeking merely to change its form of incorporation. It wishes to operate under a federal instead of a provincial charter.

As many hon. members are aware no doubt, Canadian Order of Foresters is a fraternal benefit society and many of its members wish to preserve the fraternal aspect of it. I am informed by society members that the executive and rank and file membership disagree about certain steps that ought to be taken. Some members allege that the executive has acted in a high handed manner which borders on the improper. Although notice of intended action was given to the membership it was felt that, considering the time of year it was given, what was done barely met the terms of the constitution. The rank and file consider the notice inadequate.

When this bill was before the Banking and Commerce Committee of the Senate, Senator Grosart, I believe, in questioning a witness appearing on behalf of the executive, was assured there was no substantial body of opposition within the society to implementation of Bill S-18. It was also said that there was no significant opposition with respect to what the executive of the Canadian Order of Foresters proposed to do.

I am in no position to say categorically that the executive acted wrongly, but I am in a position to say that members of the organization feel quite sincerely that during the last two years the executive has acted in a high handed manner to suit its own convenience. The executive, further, seems determined to extend fewer and fewer privileges to the rank and file members and to convert the Canadian Order of Foresters into a full fledged insurance company. The rank and file maintain that they want the fraternal aspect of the company kept alive. They do not want the society turned into an insurance company only. They object to the drastic curtailment of the number of lodges, or courts, as they are known.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The executive has tried to disband existing courts. In some cases they have amalgamated courts in order to reduce the number of delegates representing lodges at a new convention. The next convention of the Canadian Order of Foresters will be held this July in Edmonton. It is the intention of the delegates attending this convention to discuss with the existing executive of this organization many points including the procedure followed by the executive in seeking a transformation from provincial to federal charter. I cannot explain, Mr. Speaker, why more information has not been given to hon. members by form of letter or circular from members of the local courts who feel opposed to the bill and to the recent action taken by the executive. This body of opinion exists.

I intend to quote from a circular prepared by the Foresters Information Committee, P.O. Box 636, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Part of this circular relates to internal operations of the organization, but part bears directly on this bill and points out the present mood that exists within the organization towards the executive. I quote:

To the officers and members of all courts of the Canadian Orders of Foresters:

Please have your Court consider the attached Notices of Motion which have been sent to High Court for debate at the High Court Meeting at Edmonton in July, 1969.

I would emphasize the following:

These motions are designed to bring back to our Subordinate or Local Courts and their members the authority that is rightly theirs. There are changes being initiated by the Executive that will, if unchecked, destroy our Court system. The Canadian Order of Foresters will then be a fraternal society in name only.

There are strong feelings on the part of many members regarding this point. I continue quoting:

Surely your Court cannot calmly watch the reduction of our Courts from 700 a few short years ago to somewhere around, or less than, 300 and still reducing in numbers.

Our Executive—

This refers to the headquarters organization of the Canadian Order of Foresters.

—now boast they do not disband Courts any longer. They simply amalgamate them. What a farce that is. Tell that to a Court that has been forced to amalgamate (and we believe most amalgamations are forced) with another Court in another town with which it has no natural connection. Sometimes these areas are 20 -30, 40 or more miles apart. When this happens, that Court has been disbanded.

The circular then goes on to deal with other proposed notices of motion for changes within the internal constitution of the organization. There is one more paragraph contained in this notice to members which I would like to put on the record:

There is no reason why members and especially delegates should not know who attended a High Court meeting, what courts they represented, and their addresses. This information has been refused by High Court. It should be available.

[Mr. Schreyer.]

The net effect of all this, Mr. Speaker, should be to point out to hon. members that there does exist an obvious and significant difference of opinion between rank and file members of this organization. Many members feel rather strongly about the fraternal society aspects of this organization, the function of the local court in the social life of their own town and the prevailing attitude within the executive. I understand the executive is now of the view that they must sell insurance and not bother with the fraternal court aspect of this organization. I do not think we as members of parliament, should take any action that will either intentionally or unintentionally have the effect of siding with one of the two sides in this disagreement.

We should not pass the bill at the present time; it should be left in abeyance for six months until after the biennial convention of this organization in Edmonton. The membership of this organization should decide whatever action they propose to take by majority vote. The results of this vote could be communicated to this house and if it is the intent and wish of the majority of delegates, the bill could be re-sponsored.

I wish to emphasize the fact that the authority which the executive feels it has is being questioned and challenged by some members who have spent many long years in this organization, who have attended conventions and high court meetings for many years, who know the organization intimately and have some feeling of attachment to it. Some of these people feel strongly opposed to the action being taken by their executive and they oppose the passage of Bill S-18 at this time. Do hon. members have the right to deliberately or otherwise show favoritism to one of the two opposing groups?

I do not think it will harm the organization to delay this bill six months. The convention will be held in four months at which time the membership could make their own decisions. Once this matter has been properly decided in their own organization, the bill requesting a federal charter could be re-introduced in September or October. A witness appearing on behalf of this organization assured hon. Senators that the requirements of their constitution relative to the procedure they must follow had been followed. I suggest it was abided by in the most technical way possible and that there was not an adequate opportunity for the full membership to have any say in this connection.

• (4:20 p.m.)

For these reasons I do not feel I am asking my colleagues to do anything rash or out of the ordinary when I simply ask them to withhold making any judgment in this connection, and to withhold giving consent to this bill for a few months at least.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): As for us, of the Ralliement Créditiste, we do not object to Bill S-18, entitled an Act respecting Canadian Order of Foresters, being carried on second reading, for the simple reason that the passage of this bill would allow us at the committee stage to examine its consequences more thoroughly than we could in this house.

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased with such a move which would enable the Canadian Order of Foresters to obtain a federal charter, in order to increase its social endeavours and to give Canadians in other provinces the increased benefit of the services it now provides to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, we would be pleased to see this bill carried on second reading, mainly on account of the "brotherhood" aspect of that corporation, as we are in favour of any measure to encourage groups whose guiding principle is brotherhood or co-operation.

Therefore, we support this bill and we would like it to be carried as quickly as possible on second reading, whereupon we could consider it clause by clause in committee, and finally approve the motion for third reading.

[English]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was very surprised on reading the proceedings in the Senate where this matter had been raised to learn that the question was asked which has to be asked in all cases, a question which is probably in a much different category with respect to a mutual insurance company than it is with respect to general life or general insurance companies.

In our form of government, the parliamentary agent has not really been an effective instrument. In England, the parliamentary agent is governed by very stringent legislation. Part of the responsibility of the parliamentary agent is to ascertain that certain steps which must be taken before officials of a company are able to take a specific action, have been taken. But in Canada it is doubtful whether the parliamentary agents have personally met with many of the people they represent, and I believe they serve only a very dubious function in our parliamentary and committee system.

However, as the committee system grows this will have to change. In this instance, it is very important that we have the type of protection that the parliamentary agent should provide by being able to assure members of the House and of the Senate, the sponsors of bills and others, that he has gone through the documents necessary for the filing of a petition and can say that matters in connection with them are correct in every form.

I notice, as recorded in the Senate Hansard of November 26 last, that Senator Grosart asked the question that is now being asked by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), as to whether the steps necessary in establishing this change in the act had been taken. At that time the sponsor of the bill said he did not know, but he would check and would be in a position to say yes or no when the bill came up before the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee. When the matter came before the Senate committee the spokesman for the company, Mr. R. T. S. McIntosh, general counsel of the Canadian Order of Foresters, said:

> First of all I would suggest that by the constitution the members of the fraternal organization and the policy holders are one and the same. There are different classifications of members, but the beneficiary members—that is, those who have voting privileges—are one and the same. I believe this is the answer to Senator Grosart's question which appears in Hansard of November 26.
>
> He also wished to make clear to your committee that the provisions of the constitution had been fully complied with in all respects. The proposal to proceed with the application now before you originated from the Need and Welfare Committee of the Canadian Order of Foresters, which is composed of the membership itself. They suggested before and after the last biennial meeting, the last general meeting of the membership, held in July, 1967, that this be proceeded with. Following that presentation of the committee the matter was considered by the Executive Committee, and it was then suggested by the former Senator Ross Macdonald, who was legal counsel at that time, that every possible step should be taken to see that this was brought to the attention of each and every member of the Order of Foresters, of whom there are some 40,000.
>
> The matter was then dealt with by the Executive Committee, who announced the holding of a special general meeting of the membership, which was ultimately held on February 1, 1968. Notice of that, in accordance with section 5 of the constitution, was duly sent to our subordinate courts and to each of the recording secretaries. The resolutions proposed to be dealt with at the time of the general meeting were outlined and were also sent with the notice.

Private Bills

In addition to that, notice of the general meeting to be held on February 1 was also published in a magazine that periodically goes out to each of the members, so this reached each of the members personally. All this was in accordance with the provisions of section 5 of the constitution, which states that 60 days' notice of such meeting must be given. The notices went out on November 15, 1967, which was in excess of the 60 days' notice required.

In addition to the general beneficiary members there is also a classification of affiliate members. These are individuals who do not belong to a local court; they are not sufficient in number to belong to a local subordinate court of the organization. Section 40 of the constitution, which deals with affiliate members, states that there must be 300 of them in any province before there is an association, say, of the affiliate members.

Notice was given to each of the affiliate members in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec on November 13 advising of a general meeting to be held on December 1, 1967. Twenty-five members constitute a quorum of affiliate members, but there was no such quorum at either of the meetings held in Ontario and Quebec. Incidentally, none of the other provinces is affiliated in this respect. Therefore there were no appointees of affiliate members because they did not have a quorum.

I would therefore suggest that proper notice was given in accordance with the constitution, and further that it was publicized in the magazine that goes out to each member to ensure that every member had full and adequate knowledge of the meeting on February 1, 1968. The meeting was then held. The resolutions were considered in detail; they were voted upon and received approval of more than two thirds of the voting members there, again fully in accordance with the constitution. Following the meeting of February 1, a notice was again sent out to each member, and again published in the magazine, advising each member that the resolutions had been passed.

Senator Pearson: What is the percentage of the voting members compared to the regular members?

Mr. Beaudoin: About 5,000 out of 40,000.

This, of course, is the crux of the matter. This is a fraternal organization and certain steps must be gone through to comply with the wishes of that organization. It seems to me that there is a considerable change involved in moving this insurance company out of the position it has held as a fraternal organization under the provincial government and granting it a federal charter. This is particularly so when we realize that it really was constituted before the change in the Insurance Act and therefore has the benefit of the provisions of the federal legislation prior to the early 1940's.

• (4:30 p.m.)

A number of changes are to be made which are fairly important. Most of us are aware that fraternal organizations should operate their own business in their own manner; but their constitution is very important. If you note the statement made by the representative and general counsel of the Canadian Order of Foresters you will see that in each case when he was talking about the calling of a special meeting he did not say each and every member had been informed through the magazine of the decision of the general executive which heard the representations at the annual convention or that executive were charged with bringing forth a number of resolutions in keeping with the discussion at that time. This is not what happened. The general counsel did not place the resolutions in the magazine for the knowledge of the general membership. What he put in was a notice that there would be a meeting and discussion of this general subject on February 1.

It seems to me there is a great difference between the publication of resolutions and the permission for lodges to make a decision concerning whether or not they wished to send representatives to oppose the holding of a general meeting for the purpose of discussing a subject the details of which are not within their knowledge. I believe the sponsor probably could clarify this matter if he would indicate, as has been done on a number of occasions what information was given to the general membership. Then, we would know that the terms of the fraternal organization and the terms of the right of an organization to petition parliament had been followed. In respect of an organization which is spread all across Canada, I do not consider 4,000 or 5,000 people from one general area to be sufficient representation for that organization. The leader of such an organization, especially when he is located far away from the individual lodges, could conceivably come to this parliament to ask that legislation be passed to allow the organization to become a common insurance carrier to provide insurance to anyone under such rules as the executive may establish.

One might ask where they would get the money. They would not have to get it off the street. They have it already. This is an old established organization. It would be very easy for someone who wished to obtain control of the organization to operate the organization for his own benefit. The information I have and some of the information given by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) would indicate that this may have happened. I, therefore, do not believe there would be any particular hardship on anyone except the members of the executive if it were necessary for them to delay the passage of this legislation until this fall. I would think the sponsor might consider this. Also I believe the hon. member who spoke favourably about referring the matter to the committee might be interested in this particular proposition because he is well aware that the convention is to be held in his home town in July of this year. Therefore, he should be able to attend the convention as a member representing that area. Then, he would be in a much better position when he returns in the fall to tell us whether or not in his opinion the executive have been given the authority to do this.

It is unfortunate that our private bills legislation does not carry with it the obligation to provide the information that would normally be provided in England. It bothers me when a fraternal organization comes before us and we receive correspondence which indicates the members are not in the least satisfied with some of the things that are going on. One motion which has come to my attention is in respect of subsection (6), section 8, page 9 which reads as follows:

This would allow any employed officer of High Court to run for an Executive position. There is reason to believe there are those, who because they are deeply disturbed by the direction our Fraternity is going, would contest seats on this Executive. Why refuse them this chance?

This relates of course to the argument that the general executive is not operating in the general interest of some of the lodges. It seems to me this is an indication they are not completely satisfied. Then, there is another motion which relates to subsection (5), section 8, page 9, which states as follows:

There is no need for such a subsection in our Constitution. If these officers are doing a good job the members of the Canadian Order of Foresters will re-elect them.

If they are not, why restrict replacing them to only six people from amongst our many thousands of members.

As long as the Subsection is in force it will prevent our Society, even if the need should ever arise, from quickly ridding itself of leadership that is poor or unresponsive to the needs and wishes of the Canadian Order of Foresters as a whole.

The Canadian Forester Echo, official publication of the Winnipeg council, for March, 1968 contained this headline:

Brantford High Court Delegates Defer Final Action Till Edmonton High Court in 1969. High Court Officers Claimed Ignorance of Federal Insurance Act Regulations.

The article goes on to outline the fact that the executive did not have the answers. And then the article reads:

One delegate's comments were that the officers seemed to answer most questions with "perhaps, maybe, not sure, don't know, never heard of this, etc."

• (4:40 p.m.)

These facts have emerged. Our executive had approached the federal Department of Insurance about a federal charter in January of 1964. This is a full four years before the Brantford High Court meeting. A regular High Court meeting was held last July in Hamilton. Despite the importance of a federal charter and name change, they were not mentioned in the motions for July.

In other words, at the Hamilton meeting these matters were not raised, although they had been raised originally by the executive in 1964.

These items were introduced to the July convention by a Good and Welfare committee report (which report we all know is prepared by the High Court officers) in the dying moments of the session. The delegates accepted this report to let information of the issues at stake.

As near as we can make out, it seems instead of investigating the executive actually tried to incorporate federally. But a committee report was not enough for the federal Insurance Department, they insisted on a proper notice of motion.

Next High Court calls a special High Court meeting at Brantford.

Here is the comment from a court delegate "notices were sent out at a time when the High Court knew that it would be hard to arrange meetings for delegates elections" also "the meeting day itself is the most inconvenient day of the week."

High Court called a meeting but gave no facts. The members of our society should not be denied information of the issues at stake.

Head office treats the courts like children "you can be seen but not heard, you can listen but not talk." Can we be blamed for thinking that head office's attitude is "If the members know nothing, they can say nothing and if they say nothing they can do as we please." The courts in this area initiated an investigation of the issues and found good reason to oppose the motion at Brantford.

Our delegates to Brantford have effectively stopped either change of name or charter until it can be debated at Edmonton.

This was done by adding a section to the original executive motion that defers final action on the questions until the High Court meeting in 1969.

If they have deferred action, the sponsor of this bill is not aware of it. Certainly, the Senate were not told that the Brantford court felt it had been able, by certain action taken under their charter, to stop this action. If we pass this bill the matter will not be referred to the convention at Edmonton in July of this year. Yet, the people who have investigated the matter seem to think they can discuss it and make the final decision at Edmonton.

We are dealing with an organization of fraternal members, benevolent members, members who belong to the beneficial side of an insurance company. They have the right to make the decision and use the machinery with which they are provided. This is not being allowed them. This article continues:

> Between now and Edmonton High Court every member should ask "Why was full information as to the effect of these proposed changes not sent out to the courts?"
>
> "What right has the executive to call a meeting to change our charter act, etc., if they do not know what these motions will do to the Order?
>
> All should ask—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. I regret to advise the hon. member that his time has expired. The hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan).

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the indulgence of hon. members to put on the record just a few more remarks made by the Brantford council, because I think it is important and I may be the only one who has this information?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Has the hon. member the consent of the house to do this?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): The hon. member for Spadina.

Mr. Peters: You don't want information, eh?

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, this bill, S-18, should not be impeded in its course, particularly because it is going to committee in the customary way. This is a simple rearrangement and is being made, as I see it, strictly for the purposes of convenience.

Mr. Peters: The convenience of whom?

Mr. Ryan: An Ontario charter will be replaced by a federal charter. It is a simple matter of rearrangement. My hon. friends across the way, despite all the verbiage, are simply making, I submit, a very large mountain out of a very few small molehills. There is every thing to be said for the passage of this bill. I think it has been said pretty well by the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell). I am assured by the hon. member for Peel South that he has sworn declarations in his file which prove that all the necessary legal proceedings of the company were carried out with propriety in this connection.

We have the further assurance of legal counsel in this respect. An Order of this size, and as responsible as it is, would not attempt to put through a rearrangement of this kind without proper legal advice. The hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) must realize that the other place must have been thoroughly satisfied in this respect.

There are across Canada 40,000 members of the society affected by this measure. I understand that about one-third of them are in the province of Ontario. The head office of the Order is in Brantford, Ontario. The strange thing is that Mr. Mitro Makarchuk, the N.D.P. member of the Ontario provincial legislature from Brantford, sponsored the first part of this rearrangement by helping process the necessary bill through the Ontario legislature. In fact, he led it through.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Ryan: So what goes on in this connection? Does the Socialist, two-headed, fire-breathing dragon, not know what is happening? Does one head not know what is going on in the other head? Why this quibbling by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) with regard to such a routine matter? Are there subsequent bills that the hon. members opposite are trying to block? Is this the answer? Why this filibuster? This is the kind of ploy which makes one wonder just what kind of marbles rattle around in the noggin of a Socialist. This bill should be sent to committee without further ado.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I listened very attentively to the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan). I heard the very best reason one could possibly hear from him as to why we should not proceed with this bill—the simple question of the difference of opinion as to whether things were, or were not, done properly.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I would be very happy to accept a question.

Mr. Ryan: Does the difference of opinion exist between the federal arm of the N.D.P. and the Ontario arm of the N.D.P.?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): There is one thing I would like to say to the hon. member for Spadina. I appreciate the narrow concept he has, belonging to the party to which he belongs, and the difficulty he has in understanding this; but we do not deal with things on the basis of politics. We deal with them on the basis of propriety and what is correct.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): If a member of the legislature of the province of Ontario, who belongs to the same party to which I belong, advances a certain course of action, this does not mean, as it does in the Liberal party, that everybody bows down and says, "That is correct". We do not have that sort of suppression of thought in our party. We are independent-minded in this party. We are concerned about what is correct with regard to this organization.

(4:50 p.m.)

Am I to accept the declaration of the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) that he has been informed that the sponsor of the bill, the hon. member for Peel South (Mr. Chappell), has affidavits in his possession that everything is hunky dory and correct, or am I to believe what is in the official publication of the Winnipeg Council, the Canadian Forester dated March, 1968 which points out that there is a serious difference of opinion as to whether the proper thing was done, and raises serious objection to the manner in which the executive were operating? The editorial signed by the editor goes into great detail and says that everything was not right and correct so far as the group in Winnipeg is concerned. Whom am I to believe?

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he not think that if this were the situation, if there were anything really behind it, legal proceedings of a civil nature would have been taken long before this?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I really do not think so. I am inclined to think that the Winnipeg Council of the Canadian Order of Foresters hopefully has enough faith in this parliament to believe we will not follow blindly what has been presented but will look at things in a subjective way. I see the sponsor of the bill rising and I think he wants to ask me a question. I will gladly give him that opportunity, but perhaps I can precede it with the suggestion that he should withdraw the bill because of the doubt and objection. In addition, within a few months a bi-annual convention will be held in Edmonton when all this may be resolved and then parliament will not be in the position of having to pick and choose sides. However, I will gladly submit to the question.

Mr. Chappell: Does the hon. member realize that he is referring to a publication dated March 1968, the bill did not receive royal assent in the Ontario legislature until April, and that this society is in the riding of the sponsor, Mr. Makarchuk, the N.D.P. member of the legislature for Brantford? The head office of the organization is in his riding, and he of all people would know if anything were wrong.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): This is the sort of question that does not need any comment. If there were any validity in it I am sure the hon. member would have mentioned it earlier. If he read the Senate committee proceedings he would realize that, regardless of the fact that this publication is dated March, 1968 and that the bill proceeded through the legislature at a later time than that, practically the entire evidence before the Senate Banking and Commerce Committee was based upon one little question. Mr. McIntosh went into extreme detail about the internal activities of the organization, about notices and meetings, whether there was or there was not a quorum, and so on. He wound up not being sure himself of the constitutional correctness of the meetings that were held. At page 95 of the committee's proceedings Mr. McIntosh, after a long and detailed explanation in which he seemed to be mostly protesting against the fact that anyone should question what the hierarchy was doing, said the following:

> I would therefore suggest that proper notice was given in accordance with the constitution, and further that it was publicized in the magazine that goes out to each member to ensure that every member had full and adequate knowledge of the meeting—

And he goes on and on in this way. Is the sponsor of the bill able to say with certainty that there was no difference of opinion and that everything is sweetness and light? Can he tell us that Premier Walter Weir of Manitoba, who, I understand, is a member of the Foresters presumably in the Winnipeg area, endorses this and that everything is hunky dory there?

This assurance cannot be given because the sponsor of the bill is not in a position to do so regardless of the affidavits, which he must be able to guarantee, that everything went through perfectly legitimately and that there were no disagreements in the Canadian Order of Foresters. I believe the sponsor of the bill, being a generous member of parliament, agreed to move the motion for the endorsation of this bill. Many hon. members find themselves doing such things out of courtesy and decency, although they do not endorse the principle of the bill. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) is the sponsor of some insurance bills here, and yet I know very well that in his heart he does not endorse the concept of foreign ownership of life insurance companies. This does not carry with it any simple endorsation.

The editor of the Canadian Forester wound up the article in this way:

> We end with the comments from a member who has attended many High Courts "at High Court after High Court our executive brought out the 'Old Bogey Man'—The Superintendent of Insurance". Remember how we were told of his displeasure because we held High Court meetings every two years. And the terrible things he might do if we did not go to three or four year conventions. If this ever was, he should have been in the Jolly Baron convention hall raising his voice, because now we hold High Court meetings every six months.

This is the end of the editorial and follows on the references of my friend, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). Surely, the high court officials do not refer to Mr. Humphrys as a bogey man, a man to be feared. If he is looked upon as a bogey man by the executive, then perhaps the executive has not been doing things correctly. If you live by the book you have nothing to fear from the law enforcement officers, but if you live outside the book then there is reason to look on the one who enforces the rules, who in this case is the Superintendent of Insurance, as a bogey man who is able to crack down.

Mr. Ryan: You are killing a just bill.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I am doing no such thing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. It being five o'clock the hour for private members business has expired.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1968-69

TABLING OF REVISED ESTIMATE FOR LABOUR

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): I have a message from His Excellency the Governor General which reads as follows:

> Government House,
> Ottawa,
> 28 February, Ottawa, 1969
>
> The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons Revised Supplementary Estimates (B) of sums required for the service of Canada for the year ending on the 31st March, 1969, and, in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867" the Governor General recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this estimate is to allow Labour, Vote 12b to cover all of the persons now receiving compensation for disability caused by silicosis as a result of their employment in the coal mines on Cape Breton Island which were taken over by the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

This purpose is to be accomplished by the addition of the words "and other persons" to the wording given in the original supplementary estimates (B) for this Vote which referred only to persons who are employees of the Cape Breton Development Corporation.

I should add that this addition is in keeping with the explanation given for this Vote before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and in these particular circumstances I assume the house would not wish this revised estimate to be referred to the standing committee. On Monday next we will be proceeding with this revised estimate and will not proceed with the of original Labour Vote 12b.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): It being five o'clock this house stands adjourned until two o'clock Monday afternoon. I hope hon. members enjoy the excellent weather that Ottawa is providing.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 3, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FRASER VALLEY RAILWAY SERVICE

Question No. 589—Mr. Rose:

1. Has the federal government participated in any discussions about the alleged need to rationalize the railway systems in the Fraser Valley?
2. If so, when did the discussions take place and what progress was made?
3. If not, does the government contemplate initiating or being party to such discussions?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Parts 1, 2, and 3. It is impossible to answer this question in the form presented since the meaning of Part 1 is not clear.

PRISONERS SERVING LIFE SENTENCES

Question No. 1,108—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. How many prisoners in federal penitentiaries are serving life sentences?
2. What is their average age?
3. How many have escaped over the past five years, and how many have been recaptured?
4. How many prisoners have been hanged by law since 1940 (a) in Canada (b) in each province?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. As of 19 December, 1968, there were 387 prisoners in federal penitentiaries serving life sentences.

2. Their average age was 36.7 years.

3. Four of these inmates have escaped over the past five years and all have been recaptured.

4. (a) 171.

(b)

Province	No. of Executions
Ontario	53
Quebec	49
British Columbia	23
Alberta	22
Manitoba	10
New Brunswick	7
Saskatchewan	3
Prince Edward Island	2
North West Territories	2

There were no executions during this period in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland and the Yukon Territory.

DEFENCE DEVELOPMENT SHARING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,127—Mr. Broadbent:

1. What are the terms and conditions under the Department of Industry's Defence Development Sharing Program?
2. For each fiscal year since its inception, what have been the annual number of projects and the annual expenditures of this program shared by the federal government, Canadian Industry and other foreign governments?
3. (a) Of the successful development projects under the program, what percentage of the total number of projects did the government award the originator of the development project with a contract for production (b) what percentage were transferred for production to companies other than those undertaking the research and development project?
4. What is the total federal government expenditure commitment to this program in the current fiscal year?
5. When were changes made in the Defence Development Sharing Program to allow civil-oriented projects to be eligible for the financial grants provided by the program?
6. What are the reasons for these changes?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Vote 5 is to develop and sustain the technological capability of Canadian defence industry for the purpose of defence export sales or civil export sales arising from that capability; (a) by supporting selected development programs; (b) by paying one-half of the cost of the acquisition of new equipment required for plant modernization, and (c) by supporting the establishment of production capacity and qualified sources for production of component parts and materials, on terms and conditions approved by the Treasury Board.

2.

Year	Federal Development Expenditure	No. of Projects
1959/60	$ 1,851,108	4
1960/61	$ 2,901,667	14
1961/62	$ 4,420,424	33
1962/63	$ 8,000,000	28
1963/64	$19,000,000	39
1964/65	$20,500,000	48
1965/66	$23,994,897	60
1966/67	$22,626,897	56
1967/68	$22,904,217	53

The above expenditure represents approximately 50 per cent of the cost of the development projects, the remaining 50 per cent is shared almost equally by Canadian industry and allied governments. Cost sharing for a given project may be between the Canadian Government and Canadian industry, between the Canadian Government and an allied government or all three.

3. (a) The Defence Development Sharing Program is concerned with development of defence equipment for sale to allied governments. The Canadian Government is not usually a customer. If the development project is successful and a production order is received it will normally be from a foreign government; (b) Less than 1 per cent.

4. Expenditure commitment for the development portion of this program in the current fiscal year is $24 million of $32 million authorized.

5. Changes were made on May 8, 1968 to include projects aimed at civil export markets arising from defence technological capability in Canadian industry. This change was associated with the combination of the Defence Development Sharing Program and the Industry Modernization for Defence Exports Program effected at that time.

6. The results obtained from the Program have shown that civil exports also arose from defence technology. The change permits recognition of this civil market potential of Canadian defence industrial capability and enables its exploitation in line with the objectives of the Program.

CAR TIRE SAFETY STANDARDS

Question No. 1,136—Mr. Mather:

What federal control exists in the field of setting and enforcing car tire safety standards?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): At present, the federal government is not enforcing tire safety standards throughout Canada. However, consideration is being given to legislation requiring minimum safety standards for new motor vehicles and parts manufactured in, or imported into Canada. It is contemplated that tire safety standards will be considered within this context.

The Canadian Government Specifications Board has issued the following two tire safety standards: CGSB 97-GP-109: New Pneumatic Tires, Passenger Cars; CGSB 97-GP-110: Tire Selection and Rims, Passenger Cars.

The CGSB standards are currently used by the federal government in purchasing tires for its own use.

CANADIAN EMBASSIES

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. In how many countries does Canada have Embassies?

2. In what countries is Canada represented and what is the name of our ambassador to each of them?

[Translation]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. 48

2.

Country	Ambassador
Argentina	Robert Choquette
Austria	J. A. McCordick
Belgium	Paul Tremblay
Brazil	Vacant
Cameroun	J. E. Thibeault
Chile	G. B. Summers
Colombia	J. H. Cleveland
Congo, Democratic Republic of	Marc Baudouin
Costa Rica	D. W. Munro
Cuba	Léon Mayrand
Czechoslovakia	T. B. B. Wainman-Wood
Denmark	M. H. Wershof
Dominican Republic	B. I. Rankin
Ecuador	J. H. Cleveland
Ethiopia	Michel Gauvin
Finland	H. H. Carter
France	P. A. Beaulieu
Germany	R. P. Bower
Greece	H. F. Feaver
Guatemala	S. F. Rae
Haiti	Léon Mayrand
Indonesia	A. P. Bissonnet
Iran	C. C. Eberts
Ireland	J. J. McCardle
Israel	R. L. Rogers
Italy	G. G. Crean
Japan	H. O. Moran
Lebanon	C. Hardy
Mexico	S. F. Rae
Netherlands	Vacant
Norway	G. K. Grande
Peru	J. F.-X. Houde
Poland	Miss P. A. McDougall
Portugal	J. E. Morin
Sénégal	J. J. M. Côté
South Africa	C. J. Woodsworth

Country	Ambassador
Spain	Benjamin Rogers
Sweden	A. J. Andrew
Switzerland	J. A. Roberts
Thailand	J. C. Britton
Tunisia	A. J. Pick
Turkey	K. Goldschlag
Union of Soviet Socialist Republics	R. A. D. Ford
United Arab Republic	Thomas Carter
United States of America	A. E. Ritchie
Uruguay	Robert Choquette
Venezuela	B. I. Rankin
Yugoslavia	B. M. Williams

For more detailed information the hon. member may wish to consult the December 1968 edition of "Canadian Representatives Abroad".

[English]

QUEBEC—REFORESTATION AGREEMENTS

Question No. 1,279—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Considering that the federal government has signed an agreement with the Province of Quebec for the implementation of a reforestation program in nine counties of Eastern Quebec in order to provide work for welfare recipients, I ask: (a) That the government release the list of these counties, (b) What is the nature of this agreement, (c) What amount has been spent on this program in the 1968-69 Estimates, (d) What amount has been provided for this program in the 1969-70 Estimates, (e) Will the federal government have any supervisory authority over the work done according to this agreement?

[Translation]

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): (a) Yes: Kamouraska, Rivière-du Loup, Témiscouata, Rimouski, Matane, Matapédia, Bonaventure, Gaspé South and Gaspé North; (b) This agreement is a project under the federal-provincial rural development agreement for the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé and Îles de la Madeleine pursuant to the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act; (c) None; (d) The amount of the total budget to be allocated to this particular project has not been decided; (e) No.

[English]

HOUSING TASK FORCE COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 1,294—Mr. Godin:

1. How many commissioners were employed on the federal Task Force on Housing, chaired by the Honourable Paul Hellyer?

Questions

2. What are their names and addresses?
3. At what salary were they hired?
4. How high was their expense accounts?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport):

1. Six.

2. Dr. Doris Boyle, 12 Tain Street, Sydney, Nova Scotia; Mr. Robert Campeau, Campeau Corporation Limited, Box 450, Terminal "A", Ottawa, Ontario; Mr. Peter Carter, 159 Dexhill Drive, Beaconsfield, Quebec; Dr. Pierre Dansereau, 76 Maplewood, Outremont 153, Quebec; Dr. James Gillies, 73 Fairway Heights Road, Thornhill, Ontario; Mr. C. E. Pratt, 430 Stevens Drive, West Vancouver, B.C.

3. $150 per diem.

4. As of February 6, 1969, their expense account payments have totalled $9,268.75. Final expense account figures are not yet known.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT OVERTIME

Question No. 1,301—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How much overtime was paid to employees of the Post Office Department in each of the following months: November 1968, December 1968, January 1969?

2. How much overtime was paid for the period of January 23 to January 31, 1969?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. November 1968, $1,161,440; December 1968, $2,420,903; January 1969, $1,062,774.

Note: In December 1968 an additional holiday, Boxing Day, was granted which increased the overtime costs. Also in December 1968, in addition to the overtime resulting from the Christmas Operations, a large amount of retroactive overtime payments were made because of the salary revision granted through collective bargaining with effect from 1st August 1967.

2. To determine the overtime costs for the eight day period from Thursday, 23rd January to Friday, 31st January 1969, would require a manual review of approximately 80,000 time records. Overtime is normally reported in hours for the whole month and the amount is calculated and cheques printed mechanically.

Questions

CANADA CORPORATIONS ACT CONSULTANTS

Question No. 1,308—Mr. Burton:

What are the names, addresses and occupations of the team of experienced businessmen and lawyers who are being consulted respecting proposed changes in the Canada Corporations Act?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Three panels of lawyers, accountants and businessmen were formed and met early in 1968 to review and comment, in confidence, on the recommendations for changes that were made by the Task Force on the Canada Corporations Act. These individuals are not involved in the current drafting of the Bill and will of course bear no responsibility for its contents. The panels were composed as follows: Panel of Lawyers: Mr. D. A. Berlis, Q.C., Toronto, Ont.; Mr. G. E. Creber, Q.C., Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Charles Scott, Q.C., Ottawa, Ont.; Mr. Jean A. Desjardins, Montreal, Que.; Mr. Gerald McCarthy, Montreal, Que.; Mr. Pierre Legrand, Montreal, Que.; Mr. G. B. Robertson, Q.C., Halifax, N.S.; Mr. Alan Sweatman, Q.C., Winnipeg, Man.; Mr. Harris G. Field, Q.C., Edmonton, Alta.; Mr. C. Francis Murphy, Vancouver, B.C.; Mr. Purdy Crawford, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Michael Greenblatt, Q.C., Montreal, Que.; Mr. J. S. Woods, Calgary, Alta. Panel of Accountants: Mr. A. Irvine Barrow, C.A., Halifax, N.S.; Mr. R. B. Dale-Harris, F.C.A., Toronto, Ont.; Mr. George Keeping, F.C.A., Toronto, Ont.; Mr. W. R. C. Patrick, F.C.A., Vancouver, B.C.; Mr. Jean Valiquette, C.A., Montreal, Que.; Mr. A. G. Watson, F.C.A., Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Francis Winspear, C.A., Edmonton, Alta. Panel of Businessmen: Mr. Jack Austin, Vancouver, B.C.; Mr. Ralph M. Barford, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. W. J. Cheesman, Hamilton, Ont.; Mr. J. W. Dobson, Montreal, Que.; Mr. Robert T. Morgan, Toronto, Ont.; Mr. Claude Tétrault, Montreal, Que.; Mr. J. W. Younger, Hamilton, Ont.

TOBACCO RESEARCH

Question No. 1,321—Mr. Douglas (Assiniboia):

In each of the three most recent fiscal years for which the information is available, what was the cost to the federal government, of research performed by the Department of Agriculture in relation to the production of tobacco in Canada, and any other assistance given to the industry?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1965-66, $403,724; 1966-67, $466,533; 1967-68, $850,416; Total, $1,720,673.

[Mr. Kierans.]

"MAIL EARLY CAMPAIGN" AWARDS

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How many newspapers, radio stations and TV stations were presented Award of Merit Certificates by the Post Office Department for generous assistance and co-operation in the 1968 "Mail Early Campaign"?

2. What other groups or individuals were so honoured and what was the total cost of these certificates?

3. What were the requisite qualifications for such awards?

4. In what previous years were such Award certificates presented?

5. What was the total cost of advertisements in (a) daily, and (b) weekly newspapers, for the "Mail Early Campaign" in 1968?

6. What was the comparable figure for the years 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. English, 490; French, 85.

2. A small number of business firms were so honoured and are included in the totals quoted in question No. 1. The certificates were provided free of charge by one of the department's suppliers as samples of available paper stock and designs. The purchase price of the envelopes used for mailing the Certificates was $11.69 including 12 per cent sales tax. Cost of overprinting envelopes before mailing amounted to $3.53.

3. The awards were based on assistance rendered beyond the paid advertising for promoting the program for the 1968 "Mail Early" Campaign.

4. No such Award Certificates previously presented.

5. (a) Daily newspapers, $27,972; (b) Weekly newspapers, $11,732.62.

6.

	Daily Newspapers	Weekly Newspapers
	$	$
1964	17,500.00	7,500.00
1965	25,950.30	7,247.19
1966	24,905.89	6,705.00
1967	32,402.50	13,954.37

BELLECHASSE, QUE.—ASSISTANCE TO INDUSTRIES

Question No. 1,344—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. Has the federal government assisted a number of industries located in the constituency of Bellechasse through the Industrial Development Bank and, if so (a) which industries (b) what amount was given to each industry?

2. If no assistance was given, have any industries requested assistance and, if so, which industries?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. and 2. The Annual Report of the Industrial Development Bank for the year ended September 30th, 1968, contains information regarding the number and amount of loans by size, by province and by type of business. Information on the amount or business classification of loans by constituency is not published.

OTTAWA—LEASED SPACE

Question No. 1,365—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Does the Government of Canada lease space in the following buildings (a) City Centre Building (b) Sir Guy Carleton Building, 161 Laurier Ave. W. (c) Gillin Building, Laurier at Elgin (d) building at Metcalfe and Slater Streets (e) Fuller Building, 75 Albert St.?

2. What is the period of the lease in each case?

3. What is the lease price in each case?

4. What is the date, in each case, at which such leased space was put into actual use?

5. In each case, where leased space has not been put into actual use until after a period of one month after commencement of lease, what are the reasons for the continued unoccupancy?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. (a) Yes; (b) Yes; (c) Yes; (d) Yes; (e) Yes.

2, 3, 4, and 5. Listed below:

Building	Period of Lease	Annual Rental	Date of Occupancy	Reasons for Unoccupancy
City Centre	12/11/64 to 30/9/69	$ 11,016	12/11/64	n/a
	15/9/67 to 30/9/71	117,780	15/9/67	n/a
	15/9/67 to 30/9/72	93,852	15/9/67	n/a
Sir Guy Carleton 161 Laurier Ave. W.	29/6/66 to 30/6/76	499,596	29/6/66	n/a
Gillin	22/1/65 to 28/2/75–	286,400	22/1/65	n/a
Laurier at Elgin	15/2/65 to 28/2/75–		15/2/65	n/a
	1/10/65 to 28/2/75	29,702	1/10/65	n/a
Metcalfe	18/7/68 to 31/12/74	54,150	18/7/68	n/a
88 Metcalfe St.	27/6/66 to 31/12/72	168,264	27/6/66	n/a
	22/2/65 to 28/2/66 (now month to month)	5,824	22/2/65	n/a
	1/9/67 to 31/8/69	7,020	1/9/67	n/a
	1/5/68 to 31/3/69	70,623	1/5/68	n/a
	1/6/67 to 31/5/68 (now month to month)	567	1/6/67	n/a
	1/7/66 month to month	1,458	1/7/66	n/a
	24/10/66 to 30/4/68 (now month to month)	972	24/10/66	n/a
Fuller	1/1/67 to 31/12/71	257,193	1/1/67	n/a
75 Albert St.	1/9/67 to 31/12/71	2,658	1/9/67	n/a
	1/5/68 to 31/12/71	1,440	1/5/68	n/a
	9/9/68 to 30/9/69	8,175	9/9/68	n/a

HILLSBOROUGH, P.E.I. POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,368—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. How many post offices have been closed in the constituency of Hillsborough since January 1, 1966?

2. Where were they located?

3. What were the reasons for the closure in each case?

4. As a result of these closures, how many people either postmasters or rural carriers lost employment?

5. What further post offices are scheduled to be closed in this constituency in the immediate future?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. Three.

2. Stanhope, P.E.I.; Tracadie Cross, P.E.I.; Union Road, P.E.I.

3. Limited usefulness.

4. Three postmasters and three rural couriers.

5. The Bedford Station, P.E.I. post office is to be closed in the near future.

Note: Further studies are being conducted with a view to closing additional post offices within the closing program criteria but no decision has been made on any particular case as yet.

"MUNICIPAL AUTHORITIES IN THE PILOT REGION (BAEQ)"

Question No. 1,379—Mr. Monteith:

1. What was the first date of publication of "Municipal Authorities in the Pilot Region (BAEQ)"?

2. How often is this report published?

3. How was the mailing list for this publication determined?

4. How many copies of Condensed Report CR-No. 16 of this publication were mailed?

5. What was the total cost of study made to produce the material contained in above-mentioned CR-No. 16?

6. What annual salaries are or were being paid to Mr. Jean-Guy Frenette, Mr. Leo Jacques and Jocelyn Breton, and how long were they involved in conducting their studies and preparation of the material going into CR-No. 16?

7. What was the total cost of conducting the studies, preparation of material, actual publication and mailing of CR-No. 16?

8. What was the total cost of producing this publication from the time of its inception to the completion of CR-No. 16?

9. What are the basic reasons for conducting these studies and the preparation of these reports?

10. Are such studies conducted in other parts of Canada and, if so, where?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. November 14, 1968.

2. Condensed reports in this series are published whenever interest warrants.

3. According to interest categories on a computer mailing list.

4. 4,560.

5. Study costs were not costed separately relative to CR-No. 16.

6. The individuals mentioned were not engaged by the federal government.

7. Not costed separately.

8. Material and printing $1,009.66.

9. These studies were conducted as part of the research leading to the implementation of a Comprehensive Rural Development Plan for the Lower St. Lawrence, Gaspé and Iles de la Madeleine area. The condensed reports provide information in English to interested Canadians.

10. No.

[Mr. Kierans.]

R.C.M.P.—AIRPORTS PROTECTION

Question No. 1,391—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many members of the RCMP are located at each airport in Canada and where is each of the airports located?

2. How many members of the RCMP are involved in (a) traffic control (b) security measures (c) criminal investigation (d) airport administration?

3. What legislative acts does the RCMP administer within the airport environment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. Toronto International Airport, 26; Montreal International Airport, 22; Vancouver International Airport, 14; Ottawa International Airport, 6; Winnipeg International Airport, 1; Edmonton International Airport, 1; Calgary International Airport, 1; Halifax International Airport, 1.

2. (a) All members in varying degrees; (b) Answer 2(a) applies; (c) Answer 2(a) applies; (d) NIL.

3. All Federal Statutes and Provincial Statutes where we have primary jurisdiction, or whenever a peace officer is required in the absence of another police department having primary jurisdiction.

AVERAGE TAX PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,400—Mr. Caouette:

In each of the last five years, by province, what was the average amount paid in taxes to the federal government by Canadian citizens?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): The information is not available in the form requested.

LANGUAGE TUITION FOR CANADIAN FORCES

Question No. 1,408—Mr. Caouette:

In each of the last five years, what was the amount paid by the Department of National Defence in tuition fees and school transportation costs, in order to permit all residents of Canadian Forces bases to attend (a) French-language schools (b) English-language schools?

[Translation]

Mr. David Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence):

	Tuition Fees (000)	Transportation Costs (000)
1963-64	$2,929	$ 90
1964-65	3,027	145
1965-66	4,084	249
1966-67	4,269	230
1967-68	4,942	261

Records are not maintained in a manner which would indicate whether such costs cover attendance at, or transportation to, either French or English language schools.

[English]

NEWFOUNDLAND POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,412—Mr. Marshall:

1. What post offices are to be closed in the Province of Newfoundland?

2. What is the reason in each case as to why such decision is being taken?

3. What was the annual revenue of each post office to be closed and the cost of operation?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:

1 and 3.

Post Office	Revenue $	Cost of Operation $
Champneys	541.00	1,800.00
Champneys West	455.00	1,400.00
Cuslett	226.00	1,000.00
English Harbour T.B.,	515.00	1,600.00
Point au Mal	234.00	800.00
Steady Brook	556.00	1,200.00
Trinity East	835.00	1,800.00
Fox Island River	49.00	600.00
Angels Cove	202.00	1,000.00
North Boat Harbour	110.00	800.00

2. Limited usefulness.

Note: Further studies are being conducted with a view to closing additional Post Offices within the closing program criteria but no decision has been made on any particular case as yet.

MAPLE SYRUP

Question No. 1,416—Mr. Aiken:

1. What action, if any, has been taken by officers of the Food and Drug Directorate with regard to the use of the word "maple" as it pertains to the use of pure maple syrup?

2. What action, if any, has been taken by the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to ensure that containers purporting to contain maple syrup do in fact contain pure maple syrup?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Health and Welfare and Consumer and Corporate Affairs as follows: 1. Under the Food and Drugs Act objection is taken to the use of the name "maple syrup" in advertising, labelling and on restaurant menus, if in fact the product referred to is not pure maple syrup. During the past few months a number of restaurants have been visited by inspectors of the Food and Drug Directorate. In two cases it was found that while menus indicated that maple syrup was being served, this in fact was not the case. The owners of the restaurants were sent warning letters and subsequent inspections have indicated that both restaurants have corrected the situation. Surveillance is being maintained by the Food and Drug Directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare at the present time. However, it is the intention of the government to transfer this responsibility to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

2. Until recently the General Service Division of the Production and Marketing Branch, Department of Agriculture, was entirely responsible for enforcing the Maple Products Industry Act. The inspectors of this Division were responsible for taking samples from stores at the retail level and sending them for analysis to the food and drug laboratories operated by the Department of Health and Welfare. While the inspection continued on a year round basis, it was at its most vigorous during and just after the maple syrup season. Since the transfer of the retail inspection service to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the responsibility for enforcing the Maple Products Act at the retail level now rests with the Operations Branch of the Bureau of Consumer Affairs. Maple syrup products will continue to be inspected at the retail level and the inspection service will be extended, where necessary, to give the broadest coverage possible.

LAWYERS IN CANADA

Question No. 1,426—Mr. Fortin:

1. During each of the past five years, what was the number of lawyers in Canada?

2. During each of the past five years, what was the average salary of lawyers in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pépin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Insofar as the Dominion Bureau of Statistics is concerned: 1. At the 1961 Census, there were 11,777 males and 311 females who reported their occupation as that of "lawyer or notary". The detailed occupational structure of the Canadian labour force is determined only at decennial censuses, and no data are available from DBS covering the past five years.

Questions

2. Based on a 20 per cent sample of lawyers and notaries reported at the 1961 Census, (including salaried persons as well as self-employed), the average employment income amounted to $11,310 for males, and $4,589 for females, relating to the 12-month period prior to the census date of June 1, 1961.

[English]

EFFECT OF ROBERTS BANK ON MIGRATORY BIRDS

Question No. 1,430—Mr. Anderson:

1. Has the Canadian Wildlife Service commissioned studies to determine the effect of the Roberts Bank development on migratory birds using the Pacific flyway?

2. Is the Canadian Wildlife Service represented at the planning and development levels of this project?

3. Will federal legislation on pollution and contamination control in the Roberts Bank area be placed before the House this year?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. No studies outside the Canadian Wildlife Service have been commissioned or contracted. However, the Service itself has carried out studies at the Roberts Bank area and plans to do so in future in order to evaluate the effects of the superport development there on waterfowl habitat.

2. The Service was consulted unofficially early in the planning stage but is not represented on any planning and development board.

3. No new legislation on pollution and contamination will be placed before the House under the auspices of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

CANADIAN PBX STORES

Question No. 1,440—Mr. MacLean:

1. Is it the policy of the Government of Canada to allow personnel of other NATO forces stationed in Germany to shop in Canadian PBX stores and, if so, does this amount to the subsidization by Canada of purchases by the Armed Forces of other countries?

2. To which countries are these privileges extended?

3. Have there been complaints, either official or unofficial, by Canadian Forces Personnel that personnel of other countries are allowed to shop in Canadian stores?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. Yes, except for the host country, NATO forces personnel are permitted to use non-public fund retail outlets at Canadian units in Germany. Except for space provided by the Canadian Forces, stock, shipping, salaries, etc., are paid for from non-public funds.

2. This is a reciprocal arrangement and extends to all NATO forces personnel except those of the host country.

3. Some minor complaints are received from time to time from personnel who do not appear to realize that reciprocal agreements exist with other NATO countries.

PSYCHIATRIST IN YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES SCHOOLS

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is there a full-time or part-time Psychiatrist working with school children in the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

2. How much time does he spend each year on this task?

3. How many schools has he visited in each of the past three years and how much time did he spend in each school?

4. How are the children examined by the Psychiatrist chosen?

5. When teachers refer children to the Psychiatrist do they submit written reports to the Psychiatrist before he sees the children?

6. After the examination, does the Psychiatrist report or make recommendations regarding each child to the principal or the teacher?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. No, but teams of consultants visit periodically.

2. N/A.

3. N/A.

4. Children may be selected for psychiatric examination by parents, teachers, welfare workers, public health nurses or physicians. Visiting consultant psychiatrists from Toronto in the Eastern Arctic, from Winnipeg in the Central Arctic and from Edmonton in the western districts carry out examinations and if evacuation is necessary examinations take place in major referral centres in the south.

5. There is no mandatory procedure. Public Health Nurses or local physicians are usually involved in the referral. The psychiatrist may review such information from teachers and medical reports as is pertinent, and may elicit further information by directing questions toward knowledgeable persons and to the patient.

6. This could involve a report to the teacher or principal where the school authorities will continue to be associated with a particular patient. As in southern Canada a psychiatrist takes whatever action is necessary and ethical in relation to patients who are referred to him.

EXEMPTION OF TEACHERS FROM INCOME TAX

Question No. 1,466—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. What number of teachers have applied for an exemption from Income Tax since the date of, and pursuant to, Information Bulletin No. 41, May 21, 1968, of the Department of National Revenue listed numerically by the home country?

2. What is the estimated amount of money which would have been received by the Crown if it had not been for the said exemption?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): The Department of National Revenue has no knowledge of the number of teachers who have claimed the exemption, their home country or the amount of tax that might have been collected in the absence of the exemption.

FREEZE ON BUSINESS EDUCATIONAL FACILITIES

Question No. 1,495—Mr. McCleave:

1. Has the federal government imposed a freeze on a federal-provincial cost sharing program concerning business educational facilities?

2. How long is such freeze expected to last?

3. How many programs, and in what provinces, are affected by the freeze?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. The federal government has not imposed a freeze on payments by Canada to provinces of contributions in respect of the capital expenditures incurred by the provinces on business educational facilities.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

C.M.H.C.—MORTGAGE INSURANCE PAYMENTS

Question No. 1,511—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the amount of mortgage insurance monies paid to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in the form of mortgage insurance in each of the years since the introduction of this scheme?

2. How is this money allocated, whether by way of reserve or possibly purchase of insurance from outside private agencies?

3. What is the amount of losses which required payment out of the insurance fund?

4. What reserve still exists?

5. Is the government giving consideration to reducing the present 2% mortgage insurance fee to a lesser amount?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. 1954, $2,389,850; 1955, $9,237,250; 1956, $9,839,746; 1957, $7,278,911; 1958, $13,816,071; 1959, $13,146,403; 1960, $8,456,279; 1961, $10,970,952; 1962, $11,576,518; 1963, $9,868,797; 1964, $12,063,480; 1965, $13,483,365; 1966, $14,290,873; 1967, $16,491,251; 1968, $14,640,563.

2. Money not required to pay claims is invested in obligations of or guaranteed by Canada.

3. $81,486,253 to 31 December 1968.

4. $224,393,164 at 31 December 1968, including real estate acquired as a result of claims, $6,336,025, and mortgages arising from the sale of real estate acquired as a result of claims, $69,166,611.

5. The report of the Task Force on Housing and Urban Development recommended a reduction in the mortgage insurance fee. This, with other recommendations of the Task Force, is now being considered by the government.

WAR REPARATIONS COMMISSION

Question No. 1,536—Mr. Laprise:

Did Canada establish a War Reparations Commission after the Second World War, and, if so (a) when was this commission established (b) what amount of money was assigned to it (c) how many naturalized Canadians benefited under this Act, and (d) from what countries did these Canadians come?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): (a) No, but a War Claims Commission was established on October 9, 1952; (b) $1—pursuant to Vote 696, The Appropriation Act No. 4, 1952, 1-Elizabeth II, Chapter 55, which authorized the Minister of Finance to establish a special account in the Consolidated Revenue Fund and to which were to be credited all moneys received by him from the Custodian of Enemy Property or from other sources by way of reparations by former enemies in respect of World War II; (c) The records do not distinguish between naturalized and natural born Canadians; (d) See (c) above.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD WHEAT PRICES

Question No. 1,542—Mr. Dumont:

For what reasons did the Canadian Wheat Board, on October 15, 1968, offer $1.86 at the Lakehead for No. 4 Northern Wheat and $1.99½ at the ports on the St. Lawrence?

Questions

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Canadian Wheat Board offered No. 4 Northern at $1.86 basis in store the Lakehead and $1.99¼ C.I.F. St. Lawrence ports on October 15 in order to make sales of that grade. The difference in the two prices reflects the cost of transporting wheat from the Lakehead to St. Lawrence ports.

[English]

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

FORT SMITH, N.W.T.—TEACHERS ON SCHOOL STAFF

Question No. 1,175—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many teachers were on the staff at the school at Fort Smith for each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (b) what was the total teaching experience of each teacher (c) what was the length of teaching experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of each teacher (d) what was the length of teaching experience at Fort Smith of each teacher (e) what was the university education, academic and teacher training, of each teacher at Fort Smith?

2. What percentage of the teaching staff at Fort Smith in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, possessed Canadian Citizenship?

3. How many Eskimo or Indian teacher aides were employed at Fort Smith in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

4. (a) What was the length of administrative experience in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, for School Principals and Vice-Principals at Fort Smith (b) what was the length of the administrative experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

5. (a) What was the number, duration, purpose of visits from the Department in Ottawa and of regional supervisory and consultative personnel in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, to Fort Smith (b) what was the number, duration, purpose of in-service training sessions held by the Department in Fort Smith for teachers in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (c) what was the form of pre-service preparation, if any, for teachers going to Fort Smith for the first time in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

Return tabled.

YELLOWKNIFE, N.W.T.—TEACHERS ON SCHOOL STAFF

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many teachers were on the staff at the school at Yellowknife for each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (b) what was the total teaching experience of each teacher (c) what was the length of teaching experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, of each teacher (d) what was the length of teaching experience at Yellowknife of each teacher (e) what was the university education, academic and teacher training, of each teacher at Yellowknife?

2. What percentage of the teaching staff at Yellowknife in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, possessed Canadian Citizenship?

3. How many Eskimo or Indian teacher aides were employed at Yellowknife in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

4. (a) What was the length of administrative experience in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, for School Principals and Vice-Principals at Yellowknife (b) what was the length of the administrative experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

5. (a) What was the number, duration, purpose of visits from the Department in Ottawa and of regional supervisory and consultative personnel in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, to Yellowknife (b) what was the number, duration, purpose of in-service training sessions held by the Department in Yellowknife for teachers in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (c) what was the form of pre-service preparation if any, for teachers going to Yellowknife for the first time in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

Return tabled.

INUVIK, N.W.T.—TEACHERS ON SCHOOL STAFF

Question No. 1,177—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many teachers were on the staff at the school at Inuvik for each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (b) what was the total teaching experience of each teacher (c) what was the length of teaching experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of each teacher (d) what was the length of teaching experience at Inuvik of each teacher (e) what was the university education, academic and teacher training, of each teacher at Inuvik?

2. What percentage of the teaching staff at Inuvik in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, possessed Canadian Citizenship?

3. How many Eskimo or Indian teacher aides were employed at Inuvik in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

4. (a) What was the length of administrative experience in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, for School Principals and Vice-Principals at Inuvik (b) what was the length of the administrative experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

5. (a) What was the number, duration, purpose of visits from the Department in Ottawa and of regional supervisory and consultative personnel in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, to Inuvik (b) what was the number, duration, purpose of in-service training sessions held by the Department in Inuvik for teachers in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (c) what was the form of pre-service preparation if any, for teachers going to Inuvik for the first time in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

Return tabled.

FROBISHER BAY, N.W.T.—TEACHERS ON SCHOOL STAFF

Question No. 1,178—Mr. Orlikow:

1. (a) How many teachers were on the staff at the school at Frobisher Bay for each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (b) what was the total teaching experience of each teacher (c) what was the length of teaching experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development of each teacher (d) what was the length of teaching experience at Frobisher Bay of each teacher (e) what was the university education, academic and teacher training, of each teacher at Frobisher Bay?

2. What percentage of the teaching staff at Frobisher Bay in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, possessed Canadian Citizenship?

3. How many Eskimo or Indian teacher aides were employed at Frobisher Bay in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

4. (a) What was the length of administrative experience in each of the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, for school Principals and Vice-Principals at Frobisher Bay (b) what was the length of the administrative experience with the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

5. (a) What was the number, duration, purpose of visits from the Department in Ottawa and of regional supervisory and consultative personnel in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68, to Frobisher Bay (b) what was the number, duration, purpose of in-service training sessions held by the Department in Frobisher Bay for teachers in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68 (c) what was the form of pre-service preparation, if any, for teachers going to Frobisher Bay for the first time in the years 1965-66, 1966-67, 1967-68?

Return tabled.

HUMBER-ST. GEORGE'S-ST. BARBE—LOCATION AND GRADE OF POST OFFICES

Question No. 1,223—Mr. Marshall:

Of all post offices in the Electoral District of Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe under the following headings, what are the location, grade, salary of postmaster, income from operation, and cost of operation?

Return tabled.

HEALTH INSURANCE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,269—Mr. Fortin:

1. What amounts have been spent by the federal government for health insurance?

2. What steps are being taken by the federal government to prevent disease?

3. What costs have been incurred by the federal government in connection with diseases resulting from (a) cigarette smoking (b) consumption of liquor?

4. Is the federal government considering the establishment of programmes designed to promote good health?

Return tabled.

Questions

QUEBEC—SUBSIDIES UNDER AREA DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVES ACT

Question No. 1,480—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What is the postal address of each Quebec industry which has benefited from subsidies under the Area Development Incentives Act?

2. What amount was granted and paid under this Act up to and including November 30, 1968 (a) for all of Canada with the exception of Quebec (b) in each of the provinces with the exception of Quebec?

Return tabled.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ADJUDICATION ON PROBLEMS OF MORALE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I had a question for the Postmaster General which I thought was important, and I was wondering whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs can inform us whether the Postmaster General will be in the house today.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker, he is not here. The Acting Postmaster General will reply.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The decimated ranks of Tuscany.

Mr. Stanfield: I have no doubt the attention of the Acting Postmaster General has been directed to the announcement on Friday by the council of the Postal Union denying the earlier statement of the Postmaster General concerning the morale of the Post Office and describing the present situation as explosive. Can the Acting Postmaster General say whether the Postmaster General intends to take any action to provide for third party adjudication of this problem? Can he, in short, say what action his colleague proposes to take?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to say what are the intentions of the Postmaster General in that regard. He is not here today because he is negotiating with some mail transport services in the city of Montreal.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[English]

FINANCE

INCREASE IN BANK RATE—REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, even though the Minister of Finance is not here there is a question that I should like to address to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the widespread effect on higher loan and mortgage interest rates that is bound to result from the increase in the bank rate from 6½ to 7 per cent, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether this step was taken with the approval of the government, after consultation with the Minister of Finance and other ministers?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is aware that these decisions are made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada. If, of course, the government had any reason to disagree, this would be indicated.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the effect of this important step, may I ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government will take the necessary steps to refer the matter of the increase in the bank rate, and the tightening money policy resulting therefrom, to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs so that the Governor of the Bank of Canada may be called to give evidence on the subject?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I would think that this is a subject that could be discussed generally when the estimates of the Department of Finance are before the committee. I do not think the government would be disposed to make a particular reference on this question.

Mr. Lewis: A further supplementary question. In view of the fact that the Governor of the Bank of Canada could not come here to express his views and give his reasons for the increase in the bank rate, would this cause the government to reconsider, and to have the standing committee deal with the matter so that the Governor of the Bank of Canada could explain the policies involved and also the objective of this increase in the bank rate?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to talk to the Governor of the Bank of Canada, so that he is available when required for this purpose; but I repeat what I said before, that it would not be the intention of the government to refer this specific matter to the committee.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the minister feels that there would be difficulty in discussing this matter with the Governor of the Bank of Canada when the Department of Finance estimates are before the committee, would the government refer to the committee the annual report of the Bank of Canada and enable us to discuss these matters in committee?

Mr. Sharp: I think that the committee could deal with this question on many bases; I do not think there would be any difficulty whatever. Therefore I see no reason for any special action on the part of the government at the present time.

[Translation]

APPLICATION OF INCREASED RATE TO SALARY OF GOVERNOR

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, in view of the answers we were given, I ask the minister whether the interest rate was increased in order to raise Mr. Rasminsky's salary from $50,000 to $75,000 a year?

At ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

OIL

CANADA-U.S. NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING DISCOVERIES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to ask this question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce but I will address it to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wish to refer to something that was proposed by the Canadian ambassador on behalf of the Canadian government.

In view of the letter dated September 25, 1967, which was tabled in the house, covering negotiations between Canada and the United States of America, have there been any negotiations since that date, particularly in light of the Prudhoe Bay discovery and other discoveries in the north?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker; there have been no direct negotiations between Canadian and United States governments recently on the matter. The implications of these discoveries are very much the concern of the two governments. I hope when the Prime Minister meets the President, as well as on other occasions, these matters will be discussed between the two governments.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question on this matter, that is important to our nation. Is the Canadian government prepared to consider discussing a continental oil policy? When the Prime Minister meets with President Nixon will he consider discussing a new approach to the oil industry? I ask this question because the minister seemed unaware of the extensive nature of the recent oil discoveries.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure all aspects of oil policy will be discussed between the governments in the near future.

Mr. Woolliams: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Alberta government made the suggestion to the appropriate minister in the Canadian government that a continental oil policy should be the heart of negotiations with the United States in maintaining and accelerating our exports, particularly at a time when there is serious danger of a deterioration in our oil market comparable to the deterioration of our wheat market?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, that was quite a speech.

An hon. Member: And a good one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: No such representations have been made to me, as Secretary of State for External Affairs. I think that question ought to be directed to the appropriate minister when he is in the house, tomorrow.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. In view of the severe limitation that has been imposed on all oil exports to the United States, will the government re-examine our oil policy and consider the possibility of building a pipe line to Montreal, as an alternative to a continental oil policy?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think that sort of question ought to be reserved for the minister who reports to parliament on these matters.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's East.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question cannot be asked because of the absence of the Minister of Transport and the Minister of Fisheries. I do not say that in any flippant or irresponsible manner. My question was one of urgency on Friday; obviously it is not considered urgent today.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—IMPLICATIONS OF CALGARY COMMENTS

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs in his capacity as Acting Prime Minister. Did his recent comments in Calgary on the subject of NATO reflect government opinion, or was he expressing his personal viewpoint?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be happy to send a copy of my speech to the hon. gentleman. He will find a clear explanation of the circumstances under which I made it.

Mr. Woolliams: You are backing down.

EXTERNAL AID

DISTURBANCES AT CANADIAN-PAKISTANI NUCLEAR PROJECT

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of reports of unrest in Pakistan in connection with projects for which Canada is providing external aid, for reasons that also prompt us to give aid to India, will the minister kindly advise the house whether these projects are in jeopardy and whether Canadians involved in the Pakistani project are safe? Can he also say whether there will be any further trouble with these projects.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as a result of disturbances at the site of the joint Canadian and Pakistani nuclear power project near Karachi, which are a reflection of the general pattern of unrest throughout east and west Pakistan at the present time, construction on the project has been temporarily suspended. Officials from Canadian General Electric are going to Pakistan to investigate the situation and to discuss with Pakistani officials the arrangements under which construction may be resumed.

The injuries that were reported to Mr. Pullen were not serious. The Canadian High Commission has now secured from Pakistani authorities concerned round-the-clock protection for Canadians at the site.

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

IRAQ—PROTESTS AGAINST EXECUTIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of reports that further public executions are to take place in Iraq tomorrow, I think, will the minister inform the house whether the Canadian government has made any representation to the Iraqi government on these proposed executions, protesting against them and asking that government not to carry them out?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is profoundly disquieted by reports that there may be further mass executions in Iraq following those which took place on January 27 and February 20. As hon. members are aware, we have conveyed to the Iraqi authorities our humanitarian concern about the developments of the past two months. In addition to humanitarian considerations, there is the danger that actions of this kind may reduce the prospect of achieving a peaceful and accepted settlement in the Middle East. I know that the Secretary General of the United Nations has been following this question very closely.

I asked my officials today what it was that the Secretary General had said. I am informed he gave a very careful statement which reflects the concern which we all have that we should not do anything to exacerbate the difficulties. The Secretary General said that he has been following this question very closely, has indeed been in touch with the two governments concerned over the week end, and that it would not be in the public interest to say more. I should very much hope therefore that the Iraqi authorities will avoid steps which may cause a further deterioration of the situation and prolong the search for peace.

Mr. Lewis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister inform the house which two governments the Secretary General of the United Nations is referring to? Are they Iraq and Israel? Would he also inform the house whether he has requested our ambassador in Teheran who, if I remember correctly, is also assigned to Iraq, to make personal representations on this matter today?

Mr. Sharp: It is my understanding, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary General was referring to Iraq and Israel. As the hon. member knows, I have had some representations from the Canadian Jewish Congress, and others, to try to take whatever action we could to help the position of the Jews in Iraq. It is in the light of that consideration that I feel I ought to act carefully. I will take his suggestion into account that we should make further representations. I would also ask him to consider that we may find there are other ways of achieving some benefit for those unfortunate people.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say how the arrangements are progressing regarding the possible acceptance by Canada of Jews from the Middle East, particularly from Iraq?

Mr. Sharp: These matters are progressing, Mr. Speaker, and I hope in a few days to be able to make a report.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WOODS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): My question is to the Minister of Labour. I do not know whether he can answer at this time, but I would ask the minister in regard to the Woods task force report whether the government intends to proceed by way of legislation based on the report, or by referring the report itself to the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): It is my intention, Mr. Speaker, to amend or revise the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act. Certainly I will take into consideration the recommendations of the Woods report. How we are to proceed with that report has not as yet been determined.

IMMIGRATION

ADMISSION OF UNDESIRABLE PERSONS—REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE STUDY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. My recollection is that Jerry Rubin, the yippie leader, was in early January officially declared ineligible for entry into Canada. My information is that he has been making speeches for the last week. Would the minister say what the circumstances were which changed the order which was made in January so that this revolutionary trouble-maker could come to Canada?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Rubin did spend a couple of days, or less than that, in Canada last week. He was admitted at Toronto airport. He attended three universities and the results were rather harmless. He did not make much of an impression.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I wasn't asking about the harmless results. I was trying to find out who slipped up, so that he got in through the immigration checkpoint?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the admitting officer in Toronto admitted Mr. Rubin. I think if he had known the full facts he might not have admitted him, but in any event he did admit him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has this immigration officer, and have immigration officers in general, received word or advice from the minister's department that Rubin was persona non grata in Canada and should not be admitted?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think it was last October, and then in December we determined in the department that he should not be re-admitted into Canada, and this word was sent out to the officers. In this particular case at the Toronto airport, the particular officer did not recognize the man he was dealing with.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Under what name did he come in?

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the fact that the government has arrived at a conclusion with respect to a known agitator, Jerry Rubin, has it arrived at other conclusions with respect to the admission or non-admission of other known agitators who have been in Canada in the past year or so, and as a result of whose admission the whole country seems to be living in fear of what is going to happen, in terms of student riots and the like?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the expression "known agitators" is not very helpful to the department in reaching a decision of this kind. The case of Rubin was clear cut. He had been in Canada last fall and had taken certain actions which we thought were not in accordance with the public order of the country. For that reason we did make a decision that his return to Canada would not be desirable. He did come back and he made some speeches, but the speeches did not have that earth-shaking effect that they might have had.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister discuss with the Chairman of the Parliamentary Committee on Manpower and Immigration the possibility of arranging shortly for a discussion of this matter, and the related matter of deserters and draft dodgers which has come up from time to time in the house and which is causing a great deal of confusion and unhappiness generally?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to discuss that matter with the committee chairman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that a decision was made to bar Rubin could the minister let us have the expurgatorious list covering the names of individuals who were in Canada last fall and who have since, as a result of a declaration by the department, been rendered inadmissible to Canada? Could he give us that list?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any list of that kind.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have you any other list?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Wellington.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, we must deal with these cases on an individual basis. I have explained the circumstances surrounding Mr. Rubin's entrance into Canada.

[Later:]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a further question arising out of earlier questions asked of the Minister of Manpower. Canada is about to be visited by "Red" Rudi Dutschke. "Red" Rudi has been refused admission to the United Kingdom I think and by the United States, and other countries in Europe. Is he on this list of those who will not be welcome? In addition to that, what about Alan Ginsburg who is about to visit British Columbia, not because of the salubrious climate there, but in order to disseminate his ideas about pornography about which he is an expert, having recently been convicted?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not as familiar with these characters as the right hon. gentleman. I will attempt to brush up on these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious that the department needs brushing up.

[Translation]

TELEVISION

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF TASK FORCE

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the honourable and wise Secretary of State.

Could the minister tell us when the task force he set up four months ago to study educational television will conclude its work and report to him?

[English]

Hon. Gerard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the task force is scheduled to complete its report somewhere around June 1, and up to now I have received no disturbing indications that they would not be in a position to do so.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT FOR STUDENTS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Is the minister or the government giving any consideration to changing the policy whereby people are imported or are brought into Canada to assist in the harvesting of Canadian crops while our own Canadian students are without work and are seeking employment?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend may be aware, I did announce on Friday the continuation of movement of farm workers from the Caribbean countries. It is a very important element in the development policy of these countries and is important to the farming operations in certain parts of Ontario. However the number coming into Canada will be a very small part of the total labour demands in Canada this summer, and there will be opportunities for students.

Mr. Hales: I was aware of the announcement, Mr. Speaker, but I was asking the minister whether he had decided to change his policy since that announcement was made, because of the great number of representations.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Mr. MacEachen: I have received no representations since Friday.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In line with his promise of last week concerning a statement regarding initiative by his department on behalf of students in Canada, would the minister tell us with a little more certainty when he will be prepared to make such a statement,—because I have received an increasing number of representations from a large segment of the Canadian student body, asking for such a statement.

Mr. MacEachen: I cannot tell my hon. friend when such a statement will be made. A statement will be made, however, at an early date.

QUEBEC—MEASURES TO COMBAT UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's recent statement that separatism in the province of Quebec is substantially due to the very high levels of unemployment in that province, I should like to ask whether he is prepared to announce to the house any program his department has for immediate implementation in that province to deal with that situation.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): I perhaps paradoxically said that to a great degree unemployment is due to separatism. Perhaps also separatism is due to the rate of unemployment. So, it is a question of the chicken and the egg. However any concrete proposal to alleviate unemployment in the Montreal region is primarily the responsibility of the new department of regional expansion, and the department of manpower, which is doing a very adequate job in retraining the chronically unemployed in that province.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. This seems to be his day. In view of the report that General de Gaulle is going to make a visit to the United States, may I ask the minister whether his department has instructed its border officials concerning what they are to say to him if he seeks to come back to Canada.

TRADE

RESTRICTIONS ON EXCHANGE OF GOODS WITH ITALY

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce. Have any changes in Canadian tariff or import rates or regulations been made recently which would have the effect of restricting Italian exports to this country, and hence the purchase of Canadian goods, particularly livestock, by Italians?

Mr. Speaker: I would think this question should be placed on the order paper. If it is a matter of urgency it could be placed on the order paper or notice could be given to the Chair for the purpose of debate at the time of adjournment then the question would be given priority.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—PROTESTS AGAINST SALE OF ARMS

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I wish to ask a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Can the minister assure us that representations have been made to every country selling arms to Biafra or Nigeria?

[English]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the attitude of the Canadian government on this question is well known to the world, as well as to them, by the statements made by the Prime Minister of Canada.

BIAFRA—STEPS TO IMPLEMENT RECOMMENDATION OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. In the light of repeated and contradictory reports on bombings in Biafra, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs say what steps he has taken since November to implement the first recommendation of the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

Mr. Speaker: I would think the question as asked by the hon. member is very general. He is asking the minister to make a general statement as to steps which may have been taken by his department or the government. The question as asked is not according to the rules.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION BY ONTARIO IN NATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether his department has any special proposal, or is willing to make any concession to meet the objections of the government of Ontario and thereby facilitate Ontario's entrance into the national medical care program as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker: I would think that this question is perhaps of the same nature as the one asked previously. It is very general. It seems to me the hon. member is asking for a statement concerning policy. I would think in the circumstances the question could not be asked unless put in very specific terms. I would suggest it should be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Speaker, may I reword my question. Is it the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to meet the Premier of the Province of Ontario to discuss the problems of that province so far as the national medical health care scheme is concerned.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to, if the premier would request it.

SPORTS

NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM—INVITATION TO CANADIAN HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. With reference to the meeting which the minister had recently with hockey executives in connection with the future of Canada's national hockey team, could the minister say whether an invitation was extended to officials of the Canadian Hockey Association, and if not why not.

Mr. Speaker: I think this is a question which might well be considered at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Simpson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: With great respect, it is a question which deals with Canada's national hockey team, which the government is sponsoring to a certain extent. The minister announced in the house that he would be having a meeting with hockey executives on this question, and I merely wish to find out whether one of the main groups of hockey executives in Canada had been invited.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could answer this very properly and more easily at the time of adjournment.

RESEARCH

STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE AS TO TREATMENT OF ANIMALS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the house leader. In view of the public alarm and indignation over bills now before the Ontario legislature which would force animal shelters and pounds to turn over unwanted dogs and cats to experimental research would the federal government ask the Standing Committee on Agriculture or some other standing committee to study and report forthwith on the matter of the treatment of animals.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would be glad to discuss that with my colleagues.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ABSENCE OF MINISTERS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Will he take up with his fellow colleagues in the cabinet the fact that four members of the cabinet who are supposed to be here today are not here, on a day when most of us are ready in our places to undertake the week's work.

An hon. Member: It doesn't look like it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

STATEMENTS BY PERSONS DECLARED TO BE UNDESIRABLE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address to the Secretary of State a question which is related to previous questions which have been asked of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. What is the policy, if any, of the C.B.C. with regard to the broadcasting of statements and opinions of persons who have been declared by the Department of Immigration to be so undesirable that they should not be allowed into the country.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not too well aware of the C.B.C.'s policy in that regard, but I will gladly pass on the hon. members' question to the corporation and make the answer known to him.

[English]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. When the officials of his department are listing the group of people they deem to be undesirable for entry into the country, could they send a list of these names to the officials of the C.B.C.?

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SECHELT, B.C.—ALLEGED HARASSMENT BY R.C.M.P.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General asking him whether any complaints have reached his ears about harassment, to say the least, and brutality in some cases by the R.C.M.P. in respect of native Indian people living at Sechelt on the coast of British Columbia and, if he has heard such complaints, what action is being taken in respect thereto?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I have heard no such complaints.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister whether he would mind inquiring into this matter which I understand, incidentally, was raised in the legislative assembly of that province not long ago?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to inquire into the matter.

PUBLIC WORKS

RECONSIDERATION OF NEGATIVE DECISIONS ON CAPITAL PROJECTS

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether his department is reconsidering negative decisions in respect of capital projects in some regions of Canada in order to co-ordinate the work of his department with that of the Department of Regional Development?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I gather from the question the hon. member has asked that he regards the distribution of work under my department as unfair in respect of the maritimes. I had a look at the program over the weekend, and I cannot agree with him. As a matter of fact, I think there is a very fair distribution of work in all parts of Canada.

Mr. Lundrigan: My concern is that this department has given up the ghost. I want it to take up the spirit.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES IN NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question in his capacity as the minister answering or reporting today for the Postmaster General. Having in mind the very large number of representations coming to members of the house from all sections of the non-profit press as to the very heavy increase they are now having to pay under the new rates, will the Secretary of State ask his colleague to take a second look at this situation?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will gladly draw that question to the attention of my colleague.

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE SICOTTE CASE—POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister when the government proposes to respond to my question of Friday about the public interest aspect of the Sicotte case?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not today, Mr. Speaker.

DRUGS

MACE—TESTS TO REVEAL POSSIBLE DANGERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he has had a chance to consider the question I put to him a few weeks ago about making a statement in the house regarding any experiments his department might have conducted on the use of Mace?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to look into this. I apologize to the hon. member for not reporting on it earlier. As far as I am aware it is not being used by any of the law enforcement units in Canada.

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Could the minister tell the house whether his department has conducted any experiments on its use and whether a report on its effects is available?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I doubt whether this supplementary question is in order. It might be placed on the order paper.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MONTREAL—USE OF R.C.M.P. TO INVESTIGATE BOMBING INCIDENTS

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, is the Solicitor General in a position to answer the questions I asked last week relative to the degree of investigation carried on by the R.C.M.P. in respect of bombings in the province of Quebec?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to give what information I can. The responsibility for investigating the bombings is, of course, primarily that of the Montreal city police force, the Quebec Provincial Police and other Quebec authorities. I want to add very quickly however that the R.C.M.P. is and has been co-operating fully, offering every possible help to those two forces. Meetings take place between the heads of the three major police forces from time to time and the general problems are considered.

In addition the R.C.M.P. is giving those two forces all the co-operation requested, and these other forces are completely satisfied with the co-operation they are receiving. I have assured myself on that point. The Montreal police and the R.C.M.P. have the best possible working relations at the working level as well, and they know that they can rely on the R.C.M.P. for any additional help that might be suggested or might be felt to be useful.

In addition to the work actually being carried on by the R.C.M.P. in conjunction with those two police forces in investigating bombings, the R.C.M.P. in carrying out its general responsibilities in other fields of law enforcement, is also very much aware of the need for any information which may be obtained in their work which would be of assistance to the provincial or municipal police forces, being made available to those forces.

I should also like to assure the house that I have checked and am satisfied that the matter of manpower is not a problem in carrying out investigations into bombings. I cannot of course go into the details as to the method of investigation or other matters in carrying out those investigations. I am sure the house will understand that.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HIGHWAYS

REQUEST FOR CONSTRUCTION OF SECOND TRANS-CANADA ROUTE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on an earlier occasion I asked the Minister of Public Works whether he had any plans for a national highway building conference in order that we could deal with the prospect of building a second trans-Canada highway, with federal government assistance. Is the minister in a position to make any response to that question?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, at this time the answer would have to be the same as I made the last time. There are no plans at present.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Is the minister aware that he gave no answer the last time, but that his parliamentary secretary has drawn this to his attention?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH ARTEC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that negotiations have been going on for almost a year and a half and there was a final take-it-or-leave-it offer from the C.B.C., can the Minister of Labour advise the house whether he or people from his department are involved in any direct discussion with either the C.B.C. or ARTEC and, if not, will he offer the services and offices of his department to obtain an early settlement of this dispute?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that the dispute between ARTEC and the C.B.C. is before a conciliation board headed by Dr. Arthurs. Until I receive a report from the board it would be improper for the minister or anyone in the department to intervene in this dispute. I understand however that the report is due within a matter of days.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, can the minister advise the house whether the conciliation board has ceased conciliation and is bringing down a report because the offer by the C.B.C. was on a take-it-or-leave-it basis?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest that the supplementary question is argumentative.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he would exercise the now well recognized right of any minister and give advice to the Postmaster General on how he should straighten out the staff problems in that department.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT AND COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE—ORDER DISCHARGED

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, which is not a point of order as much as it is a question. I notice on today's order paper a motion standing in the name of the hon. member for Manicouagan (Mr. Blouin), which was presented exactly three months ago. I should like to ask the government house leader when that motion for concurrence will be moved.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to deal with that matter. I have made suggestions to the hon. member's colleagues, to the house leader of his party and to other hon. members opposite that in view of the fact that the first part of that report deals with a motion that has already been passed providing for a study of maritime transportation, and in view of the fact that the second part of the report deals with a non-existent railway company, it seemed to me on the whole preferable that that particular motion be withdrawn.

However, to make it possible for the question to be dealt with which particularly interests the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer), namely the question of the Great Slave railway, we propose to refer the annual reports of the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. As I said, I have furnished opposition house leaders with copies of the draft motion, and if it is now found to be generally acceptable that we make such a move, perhaps the hon. member for Manicouagan could be given unanimous consent to withdraw his motion and we could move a motion referring the annual reports to the committee.

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it so ordered by the house.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

CONSIDERATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) 1968-69—MOTION RESPECTING ONE-DOLLAR ITEMS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In accordance with paragraph (4) of standing order 58 when two or more opposition motions are set down for consideration under the order Business of Supply, it is the duty of the Chair to decide which motion shall have precedence at this sitting. The two opposition motions set down for consideration at this sitting are almost identical, as hon. members will note on looking at today's order paper. Therefore in connection with this aspect of the matter, the task of the Chair is somewhat eased.

After the first of these motions has been debated, I have some doubts as to whether the second motion should be proceeded with, as this procedure would then be inconsistent with the usual practice of the house, and it might be difficult to proceed with the debate of the second motion when we have completed the debate of the first one. I therefore suggest that preference at this particular sitting should be given to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin).

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I beg your indulgence merely to say that I agree with the choice you have made between the two motions, since they are more or less the same. I also agree with Your Honour that if we have a debate on the first one it will be unnecessary to have a debate on the second one, which stands in my name.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Perhaps it might be helpful if I could refer to discussions which have taken place. I understand there is a general disposition to commence the discussion with the question of the one dollar items, and that after that subject matter has been dealt with adequately it is the proposal of hon. members opposite that we should proceed to the details of the estimates. My understanding is that their preference is to deal with the item in regard to housing first, and with the item on manpower and immigration second. I should like to indicate that I and my colleagues would be agreeable to that course of proceeding, and I would like to take this opportunity to make these discussions generally known to the house.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I also have a moment to concur in what the government house leader has said. I would just like to say that it was also agreed that the appropriate ministers would be here when we deal with their items.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River) moved:

That this house concurs with the views expressed by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates relating to the use of $1.00 items in estimates as set out in paragraphs one and two of the fourth report of the said committee on February 28, 1969.

He said: Mr. Speaker, before I launch into a discussion of the subject matter of this motion I think I will be pardoned for referring to the matter which was brought up by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with regard to ministerial attendance. I would be quite out of order if at this stage I were to comment on the fact that during the course of the question period fewer than half of the ministers of the Crown were present. Nevertheless I am in order when I say that on a motion which affects the government as a whole—not necessarily any one minister, but a government practice which forms the basis of my motion, and one to which we object strenuously—one would have thought that a large number of ministers would be here, not necessarily to hear what I and other members may have to say but to hear also the criticisms which have been and will be voiced, not only by members on this side of the house but also by members on the other side. Apparently however, in so far as this matter is concerned they have slipped their leash, and I therefore voice a very serious criticism of a bad practice on the part of this government.

I also want to say at once that I will not go into much detail on the particular items in question. In the first instance I was not a member of the committee, and in the second it is only a few minutes ago that the transcript of the proceedings of the last meeting of the committee have been made available to members of the house who are concerned about this matter, and who may wish to participate in the debate. I am not placing any blame upon the functionaries who are involved, but we on this side did agree to an order to facilitate proceedings whereby the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates would entertain a discussion of the final supplementary estimates. Then, it was agreed that today, tomorrow and Wednesday would be days upon which at the appropriate time the opposition would have an opportunity either to launch substantive motions or to have a discussion of the items in the supplementary estimates.

I must point out that it is very difficult for hon. members who are not on the committee to deal with this in detail unless the transcript of the proceedings is at hand. I only hope that in other situations which develop these proceedings will be made available.

Having said that, I should like to point out that since the motion which I have made deals with the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates I think I should put on the record the particular paragraphs of the fourth report of that committee which are referred to in the motion.

Paragraph 1 on page 2 reads as follows:

> Your committee expresses its concern at the extensive use of $1.00 items for the purpose of statutory amendments particularly in final supplementary estimates which are under time limit as to examination in the standing committee and for debate in the house. Appropriate legislative amendments should be made in all but the most exceptional and urgent cases.

The second paragraph reads:

> Your committee also noted with concern an even greater use of $1.00 items for the transfer of moneys from one account to another. In a number of cases an under-expended item served as a prolific source of funds for unrelated purposes in the same ministry.

These motions were proposed by my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert); and to show that this was approached in a non-partisan way, I am given to understand that they were seconded by the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson). They were passed in the committee and now form the subject for discussion by this house.

• (3:00 p.m.)

As I said, Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends will deal with specific charges related to definite items. I intend to make a general statement. Before doing so I would call attention to the fact that out of 29 pages of these supplementary estimates, dollar items appear on all but two, and a number of these pages have nothing on them but dollar items. This is the basis of supplementary estimates which, at first blush, are in terms of $150 million but which, having regard to these dollar items, amount in fact to a much larger sum.

These dollar items are the target of our criticism. I shall direct it to two areas in particular. The first is the improper use of these items in lieu of legislation. The principle involved here is not something we have just dreamed up for the occasion of this particular motion. For a number of years I, together with other members of this party, have subjected the government to what we consider to be valid and well-deserved criticism for including in estimates, supplementary estimates and even in final supplementary estimates, one dollar items which have the effect of legislation.

When we legislate we go through a complex process in parliament. Measures are introduced and given first reading. A fairly wide-ranging debate is permitted on second reading. Bills are referred to a committee where members have opportunities to pursue discussion and propose amendments. There is a report stage during which the house considers carefully and in detail the value of the proposal and the advisability of spending money in the direction indicated. Amendments can be proposed as considered necessary. Then there is third reading. Here, in place of this reasonable and necessary process, we find that in the form of a few lines in a vote in supplementary estimates appears a dollar item which in effect constitutes an appropriation of money to be used in most cases as the government thinks fit, with complete freedom and discretion. This amounts to a travesty of parliamentary control over the executive and in particular of control by this house over expenditures of money by the executive.

I agree there is a case to be made occasionally for dollar items in urgent situations where such items might be needed to give the government the right to expend money at some future date for a purpose in respect of which a minister must come before the house and make an explanation in great detail. This is not the case in the present circumstances. We are talking now about final supplementary estimates in respect of the fiscal year which ends on March 31, only a matter of weeks from now. Obviously, every one of these dollar items deals with expenditures which have already been made by the government without regard to securing prior legislation authority, and which they are now trying to cover up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: In order to avoid strong criticism from the Auditor General the government must obtain, by means of these dollar items, authority for expenditures which have already been made and for which there is no legislative approval at all. This is the development of a trend which has been apparent year by year, slowly eroding the right of parliament to say to the government: You must tell us what this money is for, how it is to be spent, and give us the right to propose changes. Bearing in mind the financial situation generally and the fiscal arrangements which concern us, I maintain this is a valid criticism and I hope the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and other ministers whose departments are concerned will appear to answer the charges which I and other hon. members will bring forward with respect to this issue.

Now I come to my second point. In these dollar items the government is seeking, post facto, the right to take money voted for one purpose and use it for something entirely different. There can be no question about that. Dozens of these items are accompanied by a provision that moneys unexpended under one particular appropriation may be used for something entirely different, something which parliament has not authorized. Anyone who takes the trouble to go through the pages of this supplementary estimates booklet will be able to find the votes in question. No doubt the government, possibly with the best of intentions, found reasons for spending the money in a different way, and no doubt its friends will put forward these explanations. But the principle that there should be wholesome restraint of the executive is being stretched to the point where there is no restraint, wholesome or otherwise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Baldwin: Taxation, I suppose, is inevitable, but what we are seeing now is taxation without effective representation and without the consent of the people who pay the taxes. This is a habit which I suggest is capable of growing until ultimately it becomes a chronic disease, and for this reason I sincerely hope hon. members on the other side of the house will join with me in rejecting it. I trust they will have an opportunity to indicate their support for the basic principle upon which this motion is founded.

The practice with which we are concerned today is but another indication of the tendency on the part of this government to oust the Commons and I push it to one side. We have seen this trend developing. There was the statement by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) a year ago about mastery of the house which he attempted to exemplify by his endeavour to force rule 16A down our throats. We have seen it exemplified in the increasing use of orders in council, and in almost every legislative proposal which has come before us. Increasingly, the government is arrogating to ministers, to departments and to emanations of the administration the right to deal with the lives and the property of our people by orders in council and ministerial decrees rather than by acts of parliament.

I know I have raised this question before. It was pointed out then that a committee is presently investigating this aspect. But if the trend continues it will take not one parliamentary committee but a dozen to cope with the extent to which the government is taking from parliament the right to legislate, thus preventing members of the house and of the other place from voicing their objections, if any. This is an unhealthy trend and one to which we must call attention. In this connection we recall a recent directive by the government to its supporters: Follow our line when you go to committees, you must do as we tell you; there must be no deviationists in the Liberal party. I have dealt with this before. The hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) is a wholesome exception to the general restraint. Having in mind the extent to which members of the other place have become increasingly independent of government, I am wondering when we can expect the hon. member for York East to be elevated and placed in a climate he would better fit.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Then there is a change in the office of the Prime Minister. There is a tremendous increase in regional desks, which will mean a bypassing of the House of Commons. I am not being irrelevant; I am merely trying to indicate, within the four corners of the final supplementary estimates for the 1968-69 fiscal year, yet another illustration of the serious movement toward too great government control which takes away from the House of Commons and from parliament the right they should exercise.

I think it is a tragedy that too many people accept this trend and take it for granted. They say it is quite normal. Many people say that governments are entitled to exercise this extraordinary power, and particularly to have increasingly unfettered authority to spend money. This is a dangerous frame of mind into which to allow ourselves to fall. I blame for this the government, the members of this house and parliament, and I also place a measure of blame upon the public media which see this happening but all too often are inclined to deal with matters which, politically speaking, have more sex appeal. In addition I blame the public for accepting this situation.

I think that an opposition party is not worthy to represent the people of this country unless it takes every opportunity, as we have in the past and as I am sure we intend to in the future, to call to the attention of the government, the house, parliament, the press and the public the dangerous situation that has now been brought about. All too often we are falling into the belief, one that has been sedulously encouraged and nourished by the government and its apologists, that all that our democratic process should now consist of is to elect a dictator every four years, hopefully a benevolent dictator but nevertheless a dictator, who will in fact have complete control, through the use of devices such as this, over the operations and fiscal policy of the government.

This would be bad enough if it worked, but it has not worked. It has not worked with this government. Our constitutional difficulties, the problem of poverty—the gap between the people in the lower income brackets and the rest of society is growing wider—our housing and our agricultural problems are still with us. For this reason it is becoming increasingly evident that governments alone, whether they are headed by a benevolent dictator or not, are unable to deal and incapable of dealing with these problems.

This is why I have taken it upon myself, with the support of our party and I believe of other hon. members on this side of the house, to move the motion I have. I am using it as a caveat to warn the house, parliament and the public of what is happening here. It simply is not good enough that this state of affairs be allowed to continue. This is part of the iceberg that is showing. I direct my words particularly to hon. members opposite when I urge them to join with us in this party and express their concern, their dislike of and apprehension of the kind of policy I have objected to and which forms the subject of the motion I have moved in this house.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion since we revised our rules in December on which we have had a debate of this kind, namely, a consideration of final supplementary estimates in the house with Your Honour in the chair. The subject that we are discussing is, in my view, a terribly important one. I realize the house is not full and that every member is not sitting on the edge of his chair waiting to hear what is said. However, I submit that the issue is serious almost to the point of being grave.

Initially Your Honour made reference to the fact that there were two opposition motions on the order paper. I concurred in your selecting for debate the first one, namely, that moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). Perhaps I might be permitted to include in my remarks the wording of the motion that was filed in my name just so that it will be seen that the opposition parties are thinking alike on this issue. This is the motion of which I gave notice on Friday:

> That this house concurs in the two recommendations in the fourth report of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, presented to the house on February 28, 1969, and in the concern expressed therein over the extensive use of $1 items in Supplementary Estimates (B) for the purpose of making statutory amendments and also for the purpose of transferring moneys from one account to another.

That wording simply makes it clear that what we want to endorse is the two paragraphs of the report of the miscellaneous estimates committee containing these two recommendations, which are to be found at page 756 of Votes and Proceedings for Friday, February 28:

> Your committee expresses its concern at the extensive use of $1 items for the purpose of statutory amendments particularly in final supplementary estimates which are under time limit as to examination in the standing committee and for debate in the house. Appropriate legislative amendments should be made in all but the most exceptional and urgent cases.
>
> Your committee also noted with concern an ever greater use of $1 items for the transfer of moneys from one account to another. In a number of cases an under-expended item served as a prolific source of funds for unrelated purposes in the same ministry.

I recognize that we are dealing here with matters that are somewhat technical and that it will be very easy for us in the course of this debate to get bogged down in detail. However, perhaps I can express my view of the situation in these words. People sometimes say that some day the computer is going to take over. I submit that as far as finances in government affairs are concerned, it already has. Parliament no longer has control of expenditures. We have the opportunity to engage in a debate like this, we have the opportunity to vote on package motions that deal with estimates, but so far as actual control of the public purse is concerned, it has gone.

Perhaps we should try to get back that control. I am not one of those who say we should return to the old methods that worked when the budget was a mere fraction of what it is today and when life in Canada was much simpler. It may be we are going to have to use other methods. Perhaps we will have to develop something in the nature of a public accounts committee of the house that will deal with expenditures before they are made rather than after. I think it is fair to say that since it has been the practice to appoint an opposition member as chairman, the public accounts committee has done a good job. But it can deal only with expenditures after they have been made.

• (3:20 p.m.)

The fact is that every month, every week and every day millions of dollars of public money are being spent. Those expenditures go through a computer or machine with which we in parliament have only a passing acquaintance. The point the hon. member for Peace River and I are trying to make, and which other hon. members no doubt will take up, is that the way these supplementary estimates are being handled demonstrates that parliamentary control over expenditures has gone through the window.

Reference has already been made to the fact that before us we have about 29 pages of supplementary estimates, most of them being made up of $1 items. There are 51 of them, as a matter of fact. Every one of these $1 items is either a piece of legislation being put through parliament by means of a shortcut or a proposal to transfer money from one account to another, something the Financial Administration Act says cannot be done.

The practice of inserting $1 items has been growing in recent years. I recall occasions in the past when 25 such items were included in the estimates; I do not recall ever before seeing 51. In the past when nine or ten $1 items were included in the estimates we objected so strongly that the government withdrew some of them and promised to reverse the trend. Nevertheless, the trend to include more such items has increased in recent years to the point where today the computer looks after our expenditures and we, in parliament, carry on a somewhat irrelevant debate on them.

In these supplementary estimates the $1 items may be divided into two main categories. One group of items legislates. In other words, we are not being asked to vote $1 in those items; we are being asked to use this device to legislate on something that ought to be done by way of an act of parliament. Because there is authority to include these $1 items, the matters they legislate on become the law of the land. I point out that it is not only the $1 items in these supplementary estimates that legislate. The government seems to be quite open and above board in item 5b of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Ostensibly it is asking for $3,185,000; yet when one looks at the detail of the item one finds the wording, "to include authority to spend", "to authorize the transfer", and so on. The government wants to spend money which has previously been voted for one purpose on another purpose. In other words, not only the $1 items are being used to give legislative authority for something to be done. Larger items in these supplementary estimates are seeking to do the same thing.

For instance, item 15b of the estimates for the Department of Manpower and Immigration seeks $6,200,000. When one examines the item one sees clearly that it is a legislative enactment. I will not take the time to read the wording of the vote but it, too, authorizes certain things. In earlier days what this item seeks to do would have been asked of parliament in the form of a bill. The same is true of vote 10b of the Department of Regional Development. Again, that item has legislative effect.

I wish to comment especially on vote 5b of Treasury Board and I shall do so later. The government seems to be quite open and above board in asking for $105 million. Yet when one examines the wording of the item one sees that what the item asks for would, in earlier days, have been the subject of an act of parliament. In other words, this item ought to ask for $105,000,001 to emphasize that it, too, is a legislative item.

As I have said before, for the government to bring in this mass of legislation under the guise of supplementary estimates and for it to think that somehow the house can exercise its function shows that what is being done is not only a gross abuse of the use of estimates but also that parliament does not control the pursestrings of the nation.

Many of these $1 items legislate, and many others have the effect of transferring money from one account to which it was previously voted to another. As everyone knows, I am sure, the Financial Administration Act says this cannot be done. It is not possible to transfer money voted for one purpose to another account where it may be used for another purpose. In fact, once a single appropriation has been made in the estimates a department must submit details of how it intends to spend that money. Any change in the original breakdown of how the money is to be spent must meet with the approval of Treasury Board. But the transfer of money from one vote in the appropriations to another is expressly forbidden and cannot be carried out, even with Treasury Board approval, unless there is parliamentary approval for that action.

What has been happening in these cases is that not all the money voted for other items has been spent and the departments in question say: Let us not go before parliament and ask for another $1 million—that would not look good—let us transfer the money we have left over, and we will get by if we insert a $1 item in the estimates. That demonstrates the validity of what I have been saying, that parliament has lost control over expenditures. The computer turns out bills in the form of $1 estimates; parliament has the right to discuss and vote on the items, but the job they undertake to do has already been done. As a matter of fact, most of these moneys that are being transferred have already been spent. This is March, and the fiscal year ends on March 31.

We are not children, Mr. Speaker; we know how these things work. We know that departments may be short in one area and long in another and they decide to spend the total amount of money they have been voted before the end of the year. Really, these supplementary estimates are a fiction—and I could use stronger language to describe them. The computer age will not overtake us in 1984; if we have lost control over our expenditures, it has already arrived.

• (3:30 p.m.)

I was a member of the Special Committee on Procedure which developed the new rules under which we are operating. I agreed that it was a farce to discuss many of these items in committee of supply, and that it was better to refer them to the various standing committees. I hope the various committees will be allowed sufficient staff and facilities to enable them to do a good job. But with the government legislating by means of items in the supplementary estimates it becomes very difficult for Members of Parliament to keep in mind the relationship between the government and the way money is spent. As I suggested a moment ago, it may be necessary to develop more machinery or some new way to keep parliament in the picture. It cannot be done here with only three days to discuss supplementary estimates with Your Honour in the chair. It was not done when we had a committee of supply, and I doubt that it was done in the committee on miscellaneous estimates. I think it will be necessary to have a standing committee which would replace the Comptroller General. Such a committee could check on what is going on at the start rather than after the fact.

It is in that light, Mr. Speaker, that we complain about this whole process. In the whole picture, it has now proceeded beyond the danger point. Parliament has now lost control over the public purse. This is underlined and brought forcibly to our attention by what is before us now, namely, 29 pages of estimates, most of which are merely asking the house to approve the shuffling around of new ideas, new appropriations and new authorities that the government's financial computers have set up for approval.

There is one item to which I referred when I talked about these items having legislative effect, not only the $1 items but some of the larger ones, which I would like to comment on. I refer to vote 5b under the heading of Treasury Board, contingencies, in the amount of $105 million. We are far enough post-C. D. Howe that even $105 million is not a large sum of money.

We are being asked to approve $105 million under vote 5b. We are being asked to approve of the proposition that money approved for the 1968-69 year for public service salary increases which is not spent before March 31 can be used in the new fiscal year for that purpose. It has been a rule in parliamentary control of financial matters that moneys not spent during the fiscal year lapse. As long as that rule was in effect, the government was under certain pressure to reach agreement with its employees, formerly by negotiation and now by collective bargaining, before the end of that fiscal year.

When in Winnipeg over the week end I found that the usual grievances against the government still persisted. People want to know when something is going to be done about old age pensions, housing, and the pensions of retired civil servants. But I had a particular grievance brought to my attention two or three times during the week end by federal civil servants who wanted to know when the salary increases being negotiated will come into effect. I had to say that I did not know the answer, and the reason for this is in vote 5b. If this item is passed it will no longer be possible to put pressure on the government to settle negotiations with its employees before the end of March because the government will be able to carry that money over into the next fiscal year. This vote goes even farther than that. It provides that not only can the government spend money in 1969-70 which was voted for 1968-69 but also that the government will have authority to set up a reserve fund for the years ahead. We are being asked to legislate by this item a whole new policy in respect of money for public servants' salary increases, the result of which will take the pressure off the government to act expeditiously in the handling of negotiations with its employees.

I agree with the hon. member for Peace River that this is a very important matter, concerned as it is with the control by parliament over finances. I think parliament has lost this control and something must be done or parliament will become irrelevant. We are also concerned with policies such as the one I just referred to, namely, public servants' salary increases. I hope the government will take a close look at this matter before the computor takes over the complete control of our finances. If this occurs, parliament will be indulging in irrelevant debate when it deals with estimates such as those now before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak early in this debate on the supplementary estimates (B).

I have noticed, as previous speakers have done, that there is much concern about this new method, especially about the abuse made in the estimates of $1, $2, $3 or $4 items.

The motion of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) reflects precisely the concern of the Progressive Conservatives who disapprove of this method.

I have also noticed, like the previous speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that he himself had brought forward such a motion. In fact, most of his speech was on that subject.

• (3:40 p.m.)

I should like to point out that while he did not move a motion, the leader of the Ralliement Créditiste (Mr. Caouette), through a question put to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) a few days ago, meant to ridicule and criticize this new method of getting money through $1 or $2 items.

Mr. Speaker, we are asked to pass after three days of debate supplementary estimates exceeding $200 million to enable the government to administer public affairs until the end of 1969. We feel that, on the whole, government needs money to pursue its administration.

A very well recall, Mr. Speaker, that during the last election campaign, we were promised a just society, the abolition of regional disparities and the opportunity for everyone to earn a decent living. Well, we still do not know exactly what the government is driving at with this concept of a just society, because, on the whole, its policies have not been clearly defined yet. In fact, before the house is a bill authorizing the creation of a new department, to be headed by the hon. member for Langelier (Mr. Marchand), the present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

During the discussion of these supplementary estimates, I wish mainly to deal with an important question, bearing on a large segment of the population of the province of Quebec and particularly of northwestern Quebec, and not exclusively on my own constituency, since the whole of Canada, of which—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I find it appropriate to indicate to the hon. member, that as he has just said, his speech will bear on the development of northwestern Quebec. I must remind him that the motion under study is that introduced by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), which reads as follows:

> This house concurs with the views expressed by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates relating to the use of $1.00 items in estimates as set out in paragraphs one and two of the fourth report of the said committee presented on February 28, 1969.

Therefore, I think the hon. member's remarks should be limited to the very contents of that resolution.

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for calling me to order. However, if I refer to the motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River, I think the discussions will not last three days, especially if we limit ourselves to that sole item.

I was under the impression that we were, during these three days, to duscuss the whole of the supplementary estimates (B), but I realize that for three days our discussions will deal exclusively with an amount of $1 to enable the government to carry on.

I imagine that I shall be brief, Mr. Speaker, if our debate is to be limited to this subject. I have listened attentively, not to the beginning, but to a large part of the presentation made by the hon. member for Peace River, and also to that of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. However, I would have liked to know beforehand what the views of the government were on the matter. Both the previous speakers have discussed at length the practice, which is gaining ground, of transferring credits from one account to another. Does this mean that some departments are unable to spend the money that the government or the house has allotted them, since such moneys are to be transferred to another department?

Mr. Speaker, I think that such a practice is really ridiculous. It shows that the government does not necessarily respect hon. members' viewpoint and, in my opinion, changes should be made in the way the estimates are introduced or in the manner in which the house is called upon to vote on them. The requirements of each department should be clearly explained. The supplementary estimates should inform hon. members as to how the government wants to spend the money it asks the house to vote, so that we may know what it wants and make the necessary recommendations.

Mr. Speaker, if such a practice does not change soon, opposition members will take the necessary steps to change it.

[English]

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask whether it is the intention of the President of the Treasury Board to deal with this matter? Having heard the initial statements, perhaps he could do so now so that we would know what his answers are.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, it had been my hope to listen to all the observations and then attempt some kind of an answer to them because I am persuaded that a more than adequate answer exists. From what the hon. gentleman has suggested I assume that no other hon. members wish to take part in the discussion of this motion.

Mr. Lewis: Not necessarily.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I say that I happen to know that the hon. member for Edmonton West wishes to speak. He happens to be in the phone booth in the lobby and he wishes to speak when he returns to the chamber.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, if the opposition cannot quite organize its troops perhaps I should go ahead and say a few words with the possible danger of making irrelevant all that the hon. member for Edmonton West would like to say. However, I would be glad to yield my position to him right now as I see he is back in the chamber.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to hon. members but I was called out of the chamber on an urgent matter. My first concern, as indicated by other hon. members, is the impression created by the minister in a news story on Wednesday last which quoted him as saying that parliament had lost or was losing control over the expenditure of public funds.

I was surprised that greater attention was not paid by the press and other commentators to what was happening in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. Many editorials have been written urging parliamentarians to make sure that every penny is accounted for and to insist that the government trim things to the bone.

• (3:50 p.m.)

In the committee we tried to get down to the real nub of the question. We examined these final supplementary estimates in a way that brought forward a lot of information. I commend to hon. members the transcripts of evidence which have now all been published, the last one coming in this afternoon, a little late in the day, and I shall have something to say about that in a little while. From these transcripts hon. members can see that full information was given. But how little comment!

I want to make it quite clear that I have no complaint at all to make to the minister about his availability to the committee. He was with us at the beginning of our studies, and following that the officers of the Treasury Board were very frank and open. On the last day, when committee members asked for certain ministers to be present, they came, I know at some inconvenience to one of them. I was appreciative of that effort. This is the sort of performance that will generate a degree of confidence between the government and the members of the various committees looking at estimates.

Members of committees will have to be reasonable about the attendance of ministers, but if ministers adopt a high and mighty attitude and will not come before committees then we will have difficulties. However, on the basis of last week's performance I have no cause for complaint at all either with the ministers or with the officials.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, I now want to complain about what I think was the deliberate action of the government house leader in devising the schedule for the study of these estimates and their re-appearance in the house. I complained about this matter in the committee, in particular in relation to the $1 items upon which we should have had much more extensive examination but which was not possible because the guillotine was falling.

A house order with reference to the committee's handling of the estimates was made almost concurrent with the tabling of the estimates, and hon. members did not have a chance to look at the final supplementary estimates and consider their implications. These matters cannot be fully appreciated in a period of five minutes. One has to study them and see what is involved. Yet the house was asked on Monday last to approve an order which sent these estimates to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and that committee started its hearings at 9.30 the following morning. Study of the estimates was to be completed by Thursday evening, if not sooner, and I suppose members of the government hoped it would be sooner. The net result was that we sat on Tuesday. On Wednesday there was a vote in the house and I think we sat in committee for about an hour and fifteen minutes. Then, of course, we started again at 9.30 on Thursday. I object to this kind of performance. True enough, the government was only asking for about $200 million. There is about $50 million transferred and about $150 million new money. But is the time to be spent on these estimates to be rationed on the basis of the amount of money involved? In other words, are there to be so many millions of dollars per hour allotted to the committee? To this I must object.

There is another very important point. I do not know how many people had to devote almost the whole week end in overtime work in the preparation of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence so that they would be available to the house this afternoon. By special effort I was able to obtain my copy of Thursday's transcript at about 2.45 this afternoon after I had come down to the house. I had to send out for it in order to get it. That is not good enough.

Hon. members are asked to participate in a debate and are expected to have acquainted themselves with the detail of what went on in the committee and yet they do not have the evidence. This is what I complain about. It is in the spirit of the proposed 16A. In other words, the government house leader reaches down into a committee and tells that committee it must have its business done by such and such a time regardless of whether or not it is complicated and regardless of whether or not the members unearth many things which require investigation. In effect he says that this does not matter one iota, that it must be done by that time and if it is not the house order has authority behind it and if it is put to a vote there will be no question but that the iron heel will prevail. I object to this procedure because it is an iron heel. The President of the Treasury Board may wince a bit at that, but it is nothing more than an iron heel. I say here and now that we do not find that acceptable.

I should like to refer hon. members to the proceedings and evidence of the committee, particularly pages 91 and 92. First of all, what attracted me most was the contingency item of the Treasury Board, item 5b. I agree with my friend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that it lends itself to abuse. I think the purposes have been stretched rather more than they should have been. I understand what the minister is trying to do, as I told him during the committee proceedings, but this is the wrong item for it. The contingency account of the Treasury Board is not a catch-all item; it is not a fund in which reserves are to be accumulated as is provided for in this item. There is nothing here that says there cannot be raiding. I can assure you this is something I am watching with a great deal of apprehension. Unless the house expresses its disapproval of the instructions in respect of the use of this account, on some occasion in the future when an emergency may arise because of the fact that the government cannot get legislation or certain estimates through, certainly not the type of contingency or emergency that this account is intended to cover, there will be a raid on the contingency account because the money happens to be there. I am fearful of what might happen.

So all I say is I do not like the practice, and other hon. members signified they did not like the practice. The minister himself did not like the practice. Here is what he said as recorded at page 91 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 7 of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates for Tuesday, February 25:

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am interested in, first of all, the use of the contingency account. I think perhaps you are establishing a general grab-bag here, Mr. Minister. I fully subscribe, I think, to the purpose that you are setting out, and we realize that you must have some funds available for paying these retroactive pay increases. But why use the contingency fund? This is the wrong use, I think.

Mr. Drury: I agree. It does not confine or meet strictly the notion that the contingency fund is for the sole purpose of looking after unforeseen, unpredictable contingencies. And I find the necessity for this not entirely satisfactory—

The minister was quite frank. I say to him that he and his officials must tax their ingenuity to find some other method of dealing with this problem with which they are faced and not hide it in a contingency account. I should like to refer hon. members again to the last paragraph on the right-hand side of page 91 and the top paragraph on page 92. My question was this:

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But, Mr. Minister, is it proposed to, shall we say, get away from the use of this contingency account? There is unfortunately also the temptation that, having put this money in here in a vote and you come up against some other emergency where the government might be pushed by reason of opposition or one thing or another, you resort to the contingency account to tide over in an emergency. That is not the purpose of the contingency account. The contingency account as such, is there for a purpose and it is a question of parliamentary control over government. I, for one, would insist upon that.

This business of creating this fund for your labour negotiations, this is something new, but I think you are going to have to find some other device, to place your money in some position, or in your votes, or in some other place. Using the contingency account is an abuse, and it certainly is an abuse of parliamentary control. It is for that reason that I question it. You have been frank with us here in saying what it is. But I personally think that it is not to be repeated, that some of your staff have got to use their ingenuity for something else.

Mr. Drury: As I have indicated to you, from the point of view of conveying information, this does not entirely please me. What we have been trying to do is to make the estimates as clear a representation of both past and future expenditures as we can. In this particular case, the object is not clarity.

It was clearly stated that the object was perhaps rather concealment, not parliamentary control. If the government is allowed to do this once with regard to this contingency account, it becomes very tempting to do it in other accounts and to conceal or, shall we say, simply leave the purposes not clear. I do not think that should be the purpose. The government must be frank with hon. members. If this administration feels parliament should not have control over the pursestrings, why does it not say so? Why do the members of the government not say clearly that they feel there must be another form of government, that we should no longer have responsible government and that parliament itself should no longer have control over the spending of money?

As to the $1 items, of course we saw eight statutory extensions at least. We have seen them in the past. I have here the Appropriation Act for 1967-68. Certainly these supplementary estimates are replete with $1 items. I have not counted the actual number but there must have been between 20 and 30. In appropriation Act No. 7, (1967-68) there is one item creating a statutory extension under the National Housing Act.

• (4:00 p.m.)

When one considers how these estimates were passed and how little attention was paid to them, now that we have examined them I say that this is a bad practice, certainly in respect of the $1 statutory extensions of which there are eight. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests there are others in some of the larger amounts and I think he may be right.

It is not that I object to the purpose of the vote. Let us take one item in the estimates of the Department of Labour, vote 12b. This is to provide for continuing compensation to some miners on Cape Breton Island who are suffering from silicosis. Of course we agree that the Government Employees Compensation Act should be amended to provide for this compensation and make it legal. But I do not see why an act could not have been put through with a proper schedule to provide for this compensation rather than using a $1 item. Someone will question this procedure in the future and suggest that it does not provide for payment to these people and others in similar circumstances. It will have been done through a $1 item in the Appropriations Act for 1969. This does not make for good administration. I think we should know about these things and I am sure it would have taken no time at all to pass this item as a direct legislative change.

We then have vote 25b in the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Again this is for some additional purpose not spelled out. I am sure it is of a kind that would be acceptable. I think I remember correctly that the assistant secretary to the Treasury Board said it was for types of training agreements that were not quite covered under the legislation or the votes provided, but still it is an extension.

Under Regional Development we have vote 10b which is a statutory extension. Under the Department of Finance the last item, L27b, is another extension.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is more an omnibus than the Criminal Code bill is.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It has to do with the Canada Student Loans Act. Very definitely that act provides for a limitation in respect of the amount of money lent or guaranteed in every province. This item provides for an extension over and above that limitation. Why not come in with an amendment to the act? If you are going to get additional amounts through the estimates or in respect of the administration, why not do it legitimately?

The last four items for C.M.H.C. are inexcusable. This will entail a debate, but having brought it on through the estimates with a guillotine, this is a guillotine imposed upon a housing debate. The situation today cries for a housing debate. As an individual member of parliament I cannot accept this practice and I certainly know that my colleagues on the committee did not accept it. Strangely enough, in respect of the first paragraph of the committee report to which I referred there was no dissenting voice. There were three Liberal members present with the Chairman and I can tell you that at least two put their hands up in full support.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They did not get the message.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): In so far as the second paragraph is concerned, there are some items under agriculture such as item 65 of Appropriation Act No. 4, the western feed grain subsidy estimate. In the supplementary estimates this particular item has served as a milk cow for the whole of the Department of Agriculture. In the same way, in the estimates of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development the Atlantic provinces national parks development item has provided well over $2 million for purposes within the Indian Affairs branch. Because of financial stringencies imposed by this government on that particular branch—and they have had some cut-backs—the department has now had to go and raid the national parks construction account. This is a bad situation.

As I pointed out to the President of Treasury Board, there may be a tendency in the future for various departments to set up accounts such as these where expenses may be justified in order to get them through the Treasury Board and the House, but with the intent that they shall be a prolific source of funds for other purposes within the ministry which have no real relationship to the original purpose. It is a long way from national parks in the Atlantic provinces to welfare and other services for Indian and native populations.

I am not objecting to the new and ultimate purpose of the expenditure. Undoubtedly it is well intended, but these should have been handled in the proper way from the beginning. It may be said that in respect of every $1 item the department has to come before the Treasury Board but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I can be finished in 30 seconds.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It may be said that they have to come before the Treasury Board with their new expenditures and justify them, that whenever there is a $1 item it is posted in the supplementary estimates and has to be justified. The tendency is to say that parliament has voted the money so why not go ahead with these expenditures? It will be suggested that under the old practice, if there was going to be a short-fall in expenditures in respect of an item, there was a tendency to say the money is there and it had better be spent or it will lapse. However, departments are going to ask for supplementary estimates and the practice will be the same. There will be no improvement and in some ways I think there will be a tendency to say that the money is there anyway and they should spend it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is how your wife gets a fur coat without it costing you anything.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With those remarks I intend to limit myself to the time allotted, but I must say I do not like these $1 items. They represent a bad practice that has been extended and which must now be curtailed.

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think there are a few points which have been made to which I should like to reply. First, let me refer again to the remarks of the committee:

> Your committee expresses its concern at the extensive use of $1.00 items for the purpose of statutory amendments particularly in final supplementary estimates—

The report also states:

> Your committee also noted with concern an even greater use of $1.00 items for the transfer of moneys from one account to another.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) drew attention to the fact that even Liberal members of the committee supported this expression of concern. I go along with those members and I share their concern. I think parliament should be concerned about the unwarranted extension of so-called legislation by $1 items. However, in the present circumstances I suggest that worry is unwarranted.

• (4:10 p.m.)

The hon. member for Edmonton West, and I think also the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), expressed some worry that the government was endeavouring to strip parliament of its control over public funds. Here they were trying to look into the supposed motives of the ministry without producing much evidence, I must say. I would remind them in respect of parliamentary control that for the past year we have endeavoured to present and to explain to parliament a new method of preparing and presenting the estimates so as to make parliamentary control over funding easier to achieve than has been the case in the past. In any event, as members of the public accounts committee are aware, the new method of presenting estimates will provide members with a sounder basis of knowledge regarding programs and purposes for expenditure than does our current scheme of presenting estimates.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): More knowledge but not control.

Mr. Drury: The purpose is to provide more knowledge, and I submit that knowledge in the parliamentary forum is power and ignorance is weakness. There is no scheme of procedures that will assure that ignorance will be in control. Indeed, I do not think we want such a dispensation.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

An hon. Member: The government is in control.

Mr. Drury: I agree it is, and if the government has control it is because of knowledge. If the opposition lacks control and authority, it is because of ignorance.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Smile, Bud.

Mr. Drury: I think members of the opposition cannot help but agree with this. What we are trying to do is to make it easier for members on both sides of the house to have more knowledge and consequently to exercise real powers in making proper and, I hope, enlightened decisions. This is exactly the reverse of what the hon. gentlemen to whom I have alluded have suggested is our approach to these supplementary estimates.

As I explained in the committee, these $1 items fall under two heads: One authorizes transfers of funds which, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, under the Financial Administration Act cannot be transferred without the authority of parliament, and it is this authority we are seeking. Why are transfers being made? The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) exhorted the government to restraint and charged it with lack of restraint and with spendthrift qualities. The purpose of these items is to be able to say to departments: If you wish to do things which appear to have a higher priority now than they had at some earlier date, then you must be able to select things which are less important and which are going more slowly. This accounts for the necessity of departments finding, where additional money is needed for an item emerging with a higher priority, a source which has a lower priority, and this means a transfer of funds.

These particular changes of priority are indicated in all these $1 items for the benefit of the house and the members of the committee. I suggest that this is a step in providing to members the kind of information they need to make intelligent judgments. The alternative to this would be merely to seek the additional amounts needed for the newly emerging priorities, and I think all hon. members will agree that even during the short space of one year priorities in a number of areas change. Things are changing very rapidly and we must be able to accommodate ourselves to change. The alternative would have been to seek supplementary estimates for the amount of the additional items and, to say nothing of those where slow-downs were being imposed, to find compensatory funds. I suggest that this would have been less informative to the house and to the public.

The $1 items authorizing such changes are in fact a demonstration of a real policy of restraint in relation to government expenditures rather than the reverse. Further, I suggest they provide more information to members, which should be the source of greater knowledge and consequently greater authority.

In respect of the $1 items which do not represent a transfer of funds from one account to another, I think the house would probably have to look at the individual items, as the committee did, to reach a conclusion whether these items represented substantial and meaningful legislation or some relatively minor change in the statute referred to.

The hon. member for Edmonton West made reference to Vote 12b of the Department of Labour as being a means for amending legislation relating to employees' compensation. The present legislation contemplates a certain framework of conditions under which compensation would be paid by the government in respect of its employees for disabilities incurred as a consequence of such employment. It is quite a comprehensive and long act which is accompanied by a schedule indicating those classes of employees to whom this legislation applies. In this particular case we do not want to change the philosophy nor do we want to change the legislation substantially. However, we do want to include under its provisions a group of men who appear, as a consequence of a recent corporate transaction, to have been left out in the cold.

As the hon. member for Edmonton West suggested, this is the kind of thing the government should do. We have done it, and the only question to be asked then is: How do we get this legislation amended to take care of this special circumstance? One way is to introduce a one or two-line bill amending the Government Employees Compensation Act and put it through all the deliberate and deliberative procedure of first and second reading, reference to committee, and report and third reading, or to provide the same kind of consideration in the house and in committee followed again by consideration in the full house under a supplementary appropriation act. As this is more a question of money than of the underlying philosophy of the act that is being changed, this would appear to be the more appropriate mechanism. Again, where various acts impose fiscal or chronological limitations, where a change is designed for specific purposes but without changing the underlying purpose and philosophy of the act, this seems a more convenient way of doing it and a more effective one having in mind the time of the members of the house.

• (4:20 p.m.)

As the hon. member for Edmonton West pointed out, there are already tremendous pressures on members' time. There is a tremendous amount to be done and most of us feel we cannot find the time in which to do it. If a method can be found which consumes less time while still providing adequate opportunity for consideration by those who are interested, then I favour it. I suggest it is in this spirit that $1 items, having the effect of legislating rather than merely transferring funds from one account to another, appear in these estimates. The purpose is not to deprive parliament of its control over the executive. The purpose, rather, is to allow parliament more time to deal with the larger issues. In other words, the time of parliament is not consumed in dealing with a series of relatively minor measures which nevertheless engage the whole majestic apparatus of this institution.

I do not believe there is much more I can add. The hon. member for Edmonton West referred to a news story quoting me as saying parliament was losing control over government spending. If there was such a story—and I do not doubt the hon. gentleman's word—I say it did not come from me. I myself think our new system of preparing and presenting estimates will increase, not decrease, the effectiveness of parliamentary control over spending.

Our present system is not good and it should be revised. With this, I agree. I believe parliament should have more effective control, not more control in detail but more effective control, over spending, and in my opinion the system to which we are moving will accomplish this. But I do not agree with the hon. member for Edmonton West that providing more roadblocks, more delays, more obstruction, without increasing our knowledge, will have the effect of improving parliamentary control. I suppose the ability to sandbag, the ability to delay, is a demonstration of control to some extent because, after all, stopping things amounts to controlling them. But this is control in the negative sense whereas what we are looking for is effective, positive control.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the Treasury Board generally continue to amaze me. I should like to take a few minutes of the time of the house in order to discuss some of the things which have been on my mind and some of the things to which the hon. gentleman has just referred. I shall not try to make anything of the proud boast he made about the government having everything under control, because it is not even necessary to refute that kind of statement at the present time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He knows better himself.

Mr. Stanfield: The President of the Treasury Board is talking to us about the desirability of increasing the information available to the house but really he is not paying the slightest attention to the criticism suggesting there is something wrong with the present procedure. I have been on my feet recently complaining about the inadequate support which the government is providing for the Auditor General who is an officer of this parliament very well able to ensure that the house does get information not only about expenditure—after the fact, admittedly—but also about appropriate procedures. I have put forward the case for important changes in the relationship between the Treasury Board and the house, but I cannot get the hon. gentleman to pay the slightest attention to this point, one which I think and will continue to think is of the greatest importance until someone on the government side at least takes the trouble to persuade me I am wrong.

I am not really surprised that a member of the government should not pay much attention to me, but I am surprised to find the President of the Treasury Board sweeping aside the opinion of a committee of this house with regard to the appearance of these dollar estimates. He sympathizes with the concern of the committee as though it were, so to speak, an abstract proposition, and then, without any real explanation, he goes on to say that in this case its concern is not justified. If we put the two sentences together and try to make sense of them, we find it amounts to this: in the opinion of the President of the Treasury Board the committee did not know what it was talking about. So it is not only a question of the relation between the Treasury Board and the Auditor General; the government is really not paying any attention to representations made by a committee of the house with regard to this matter.

The minister spoke about giving the house more information. He told us the aim of the government was to provide more information thereby giving the house greater control. Well, I suppose there will not be any more dollar items in the future with regard to transfers of money within departments. They will not be necessary since I understand there are to be so few votes that the government will not need to make any transfers. Hon. gentlemen opposite are arranging things in such a way that in future they will not even have to make reports involving dollar items. I think this is the case. Yet the President of the Treasury Board—and I do not like to be too critical of so honourable a gentleman—comes before us and pretends that the aim of the government is to provide the house with more information. In fact, though, it is clear that the government intends to place itself in a position where it will not be necessary to present any dollar items. Certainly, with a smaller number of votes the minister will not be obliged to report to the house that there has been some change in priorities here or there, that some money has been saved, and that it will be moved over and used for something else. He will be spared the embarrassment of coming before the house, if there be any embarrassment, with regard to these dollar items.

As to these new procedures, I believe the Auditor General has criticized the government for reducing the number of votes, not necessarily for the reason I have given but because the ultimate result will be to reduce the control exercised by the house over the expenditures of the government. It may be that initially the estimates will be presented in a manner which will give a more intelligible picture of what is going on. But if the President of the Treasury Board is suggesting that this change will give the house more control over the expenditures of the government, I dispute that contention. The debate this afternoon indicates this clearly. In future we shall not have even the kind of information which is given to us in these supplementary estimates. There will be no estimates involving changes of this sort because the government is taking the precaution to arrange things to ensure we shall not have supplementary estimates in the ordinary way. If I am wrong, I hope someone on the other side will correct me.

• (4:30 p.m.)

With regard to the use of this technique to bring about legislative changes, I think it is highly dangerous to make use of such an informal method. If this parliament is going to authorize a new procedure that permits legislative changes in this informal manner, then this procedure should at the very least be carefully defined. Who is to draw the line between the kind of legislation that is considered sufficiently minimal in importance to be proceeded with in this way and, on the other hand, the kind of legislation that is sufficiently important to be dealt with in the way we normally expect legislation to proceed through the house? I have no wish to exaggerate and if I am wrong I hope I will be corrected, but I regard this as a very sweeping change in the rules of the house without any proper consideration or authorization being given to it.

I think we have to regard this matter as a serious one. I do not accept for a moment that the changes that are being made by parliament are going to give this house more control over the expenditures of the government. I think they will give the house less control. I can only assume that this is a deliberate move in this respect on the part of the government.

I have also said that the government is making changes in the rules of the house relating to the passage of its legislation without such changes receiving the proper consideration of parliament. The government has just taken it upon itself to make these changes without prior discussion. I do not think this is a proper way to proceed. I will regard with a little more sincerity the protestations that have been made on the government side of the house that members opposite are anxious to facilitate the giving of information to the house and to safeguard the control of the house when I see that the Auditor General really is independent of Treasury Board and can go ahead and get his own staff, with some more adequate way of enabling parliament to pass judgment upon the matter, instead of having him hemmed in by the Treasury Board without our knowledge.

There are ways, important ways, to obtain increased control by this house, and the Auditor General is one of these ways. Far from increasing the control of the house, the proposed changes we are now contending with will have the result of reducing the number of the estimates, and the general behaviour of the government will obviously lessen the ultimate control of the house of the expenditures of this government.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise not to participate again in the debate; whether or not I would be entitled to do so, since this is a substantive motion, is beside the point because I am rising on a point of order. I wish to lay before Your Honour and the House the question of the procedure that might now be considered in order to bring this matter to a conclusion. I do so with more readiness since we have agreed that when the consideration of the supplementary estimates reaches the stage of the appropriation bill we will deal first with the housing items that appear in the supplementary estimates.

In response to a question of mine on Thursday or Friday the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) indicated that he wanted to be in the house to deal with this question. He is not here, though I make no point about that. However, the issue I am now raising may well want to be considered by your Honour after hearing members' views, and I suggest that after the question has been debated Your Honour might wish to devote some time to it and we might consider an adjournment.

The question I ask is whether or not a vote is permissible—and I am not indicating that our party is going to move for a vote on this particular motion. We are now treading in the uncharted waters of the new rules. This is the first time we have dealt with supplementary estimates since introducing the rules changes. It is quite certain that this motion is not a non-confidence motion. There is no question about our urging that it be considered a non-confidence motion. My original thought was that a vote might not be possible, that is to say, a vote where the house divides.

Reference to Standing Order 58 (3), (7) and (11) raises some doubt on this score. Certainly the three days are not part of the 25 days that are allotted to and divided among the three so-called semesters. In these cases you either have an allotted day on which you can move a non-confidence motion, limited to two in each semester, or you can move a motion that is not a non-confidence motion but is simply used as a peg upon which the relevancy of the debate will be considered.

The three days are in a somewhat different category. I am raising this point for consideration since the Standing Committee on Organization and Procedure is meeting from time to time. By its terms of reference the committee was directed to pay attention to the manner in which these rule changes would be considered. It is obvious that a vote would be permissible, even though it were not a non-confidence motion, if the committee were moving to delete an item in the estimates. Since this is the first time this question has arisen. I raise this matter for consideration so that we may have a ruling on it and know how to proceed in the future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Peace River has brought out into the open, if I may put it in that way, the fact that there have been some discussions on whether or not a vote of the house on this motion is one that it is proper for the house to take. I should like to argue that it is proper and that if five members of the house wish to have a vote on this motion they are entitled to have one. I may say that in my party we are unanimously of this point of view.

Mr. Mackasey: You are not right now.

Mr. Bell: Your attendance is as bad as the government's.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): But I am here and we speak with one voice. The house has before it a motion moved by the hon. member for Peace River. I submit that in the absence of a standing order providing that there shall not be a vote on this kind of motion, it is proper for the house to have a vote.

Those who argue that this debate simply expires either at the end of the day or when no further members wish to take part in it will, I submit, find it difficult to cite a standing order that supports that argument. Standing Order 58 (3) provides for opposition motions on allotted days. As you go through Standing Order 58 there are various provisions as to what happens to opposition motions on allotted days.

It is my thesis that this is not what is now before the house. The house is not considering an opposition motion on an allotted day. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to paragraph 5 of Standing Order 58 which provides for a certain number of allotted days in each of the three semesters of the session. That Standing Order ends with this sentence:

> These twenty-five days are to be designated as allotted days.

I urge on Your Honour the fact that there is no language anywhere else in these Standing Orders that says any other days are allotted days. It is clear that the five allotted days in the first semester, the seven in the second and the thirteen in the third make up the total of our 25 allotted days.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In paragraph 7 there is provision with respect to final supplementary estimates, which we are now dealing with. Incidentally, paragraph 7 speaks of those supplementaries as being introduced in the period between March 31 and June 30, but we passed a special order on February 24 that transferred the three days to that period prior to March 31. I therefore submit that the rules regarding the three days in the final period apply to the three days on which we are now launched.

The second half of Standing Order 58(7) reads as follows:

> —three days for the consideration of the motion that the House concur in those estimates and for the passage at all stages of any bill to be based thereon shall be added to the days for the business of supply in that period.

It does not say those three days are to be added to the allotted days; they are to be added to the days with respect to business of supply. In other words, those three days are a different kettle of fish. They are outside the 25 allotted days.

Paragraph 11 of the Standing Order says:

> Proceedings on allotted days on opposition motions which are not "no-confidence" motions shall expire when debate thereon has been concluded or at the ordinary time of daily adjournment, as the case may be.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that paragraph 11 cannot be made to apply to these three days because it clearly applies to what happens on allotted days. By definition, therefore, these three days are not allotted days but extra days added to the business of supply for the purpose of dealing with supplementary estimates. I suggest, therefore, that we have the right to have this motion treated as an ordinary motion which is subject to a vote. That is the general rule with respect to all motions moved in parliament. They are subject to a vote if the house wishes to take that vote. There are a few exceptions where we have provided otherwise. We have provided otherwise in Standing Order 26, under which a motion expires at the end of the day, and we have also provided otherwise with respect to non-confidence motions on allotted days. But we have made no such provision with respect to these three special days for supplementary estimates which have been added to the business of supply.

Therefore, now that debate seems to have ended, I submit that Your Honour ought to put to the house the question whether it wishes to concur. There may be no vote. After all, members of all parties were on the committee of the house that examined this matter, and agreement on many items was unanimous. It may be that we shall not come to a recorded vote, but I submit we have the right to test the will of the house.

It is also clear, I submit, that with respect to these three special days that have been added to the business of supply there is provision for us to vote against some of the estimates if we wish to do so. There is even provision for us to vote on the first or second reading of the supply bill to be based on these estimates and on the separate clauses. If there is the right to deal with the business of supply in that manner during these three days, I submit we have also the right to vote on the motion the hon. member for Peace River has moved. I support the principle that we take such a vote at this time.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, may I make a brief comment on the point that has just been raised. Your Honour will recall that last week, when we were considering the possible procedure for these days, I made representations to you indirectly that these were not allotted days and that under no circumstances could they be considered as such.

The motion that has been posted is that this house do concur in the supplementary estimates. The argument has been made that we should handle these three days as if they were allotted days. It is true that these are days on which estimates are being considered but, having heard the argument of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, I agree that they are not within the 25 allotted days. It is clearly spelled out in the rules that there are only 25 allotted days. Of course, one must determine what is meant by "allotted days". In my view, however, none of the procedures that apply with respect to allotted days applied here. We do not have the 24-hours notice for opposing or, shall we say, restoring or amending any item in the estimates. That is not required under the present procedure.

We have here a procedure arising from the fact that the house made an order that these estimates were to be considered in committee for three days and in the house for three days. We shall consider an appropriation bill and it will go to committee where it will be dealt with on the basis applying to any other bill. There is a special procedure under which we set aside three days for final supplementary estimates. I put it to Your Honour that if a transcript of our discussions in the procedure committee were available you would see that it was contemplated there would be a special procedure for final, supplementary estimates. What is now developing is in accordance with that thought.

Therefore I put it to Your Honour that we can take a vote. A vote should be taken on the motion moved by my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River, after which we could proceed with the motion of the President of the Treasury Board. As I indicated previously, a difficulty would have faced the Chair and the house if the motion of the President of the Treasury Board had been put at the beginning of this afternoon's proceedings, because there is no way of disposing of a motion before the house except by voting on it. The house cannot entertain two motions at the same time.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I did not attend the meetings of the committee to which this matter was referred. However, having listened this afternoon to those who spoke before me, I understand that this is a substantial point which should be considered, so as to study seriously all the matters dealt with.

As a result, there is talk of putting this motion to a vote, and from the views expressed so far, I understand that if there is a vote, the minister's proposal will be left out. So, I believe that we should get back to the matters dealt with earlier and we should ask ourselves once again if the house has not sufficiently recognized the fact that items are transferred in the estimates without its having anything to say or its exercizing any control.

In my opinion, this a matter of principle and we should examine the problem very carefully. That is why I endorse fully everything that was said by the hon. members for Peace River and Winnipeg North Centre. I think we should devote still more time to a debate on a major principle that has already set a precedent but which is being amplified to such an extent that the privileges and the prerogatives of this house are in danger.

• (4:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether I could make a brief reference to the arguments that have been made. I would rather indicate a viewpoint on the other side of the matter. Not only is there no authority in Standing Order 58, as produced by the special committee on Procedure earlier this session, for a vote in this type of motion, but when one looks at Standing Order 58(4) one sees there is no authority for a notice of motion of the kind put forward by the hon. member for Peace River or the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

I draw Your Honour's attention to the most relevant portion of Standing Order 58 (4)(a). It reads:

Twenty-four hours' written notice shall be given of an opposition motion on an allotted day—

This is not the case here, in the view of hon. members opposite.

—or of a notice to oppose any item in the estimates.

For this purpose I take it the reference is also under Standing Order 58.

Mr. Baldwin: You take it wrong.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for Peace River adds nothing to the discussion. The motions moved by the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre do not relate to any specific item in the estimates but rather offer a general comment. This is the first opportunity I have had to discuss and debate the matter and I would like to indicate my own viewpoint. In my view these motions are not receivable and for that reason we should not support these two motions if they come to a vote.

Standing Order 58 generally is a rather elaborate Standing Order, as you know, Mr. Speaker. Elaborate provision has been made for votes under certain circumstances and for not having votes under other circumstances. Since we did not provide in the committee for a vote, since we did not provide for this kind of motion in the first place, and since we did not stipulate a vote under the special order, we should stick within the strict rules of the Standing Order and not have a vote at this point.

[Mr. Matte.]

Mr. Aiken: I would like to make two comments, Mr. Speaker, on the motion being considered. A most ridiculous situation could arise if a motion were placed before the House of Commons, particularly of the type with which we are dealing which concurs with views expressed by a committee, without having the opinion of the house expressed in some manner. It might be possible that when the time allotted expired no vote would be taken but on the other hand, a vote might be required. In this instance the house is being tested on a substantive motion. I feel it would be contrary to all the precedents of parliamentary practice if a motion put on the order paper were moved, debated during the course of a day and then not put to the house and decided in some manner.

The second point I wish to make is that the President of the Privy Council has raised the point that this motion should not have been made, that there is no provision for a motion of this type in the rules and therefore it is out of order and should not even be considered, much less voted on. If that is the case, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that objection should have been made at the time the motion was moved and debate commenced. That time having passed, the motion should now be put to the house and considered. It would be contrary to all the rules of parliament merely to let it drop in the middle of a proceeding.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened very carefully to the arguments put forward by hon. members in connection with the interpretation of Standing Order 58 and the interpretation of the special order under which we are operating at the present time. I must say I agree with the general proposition advanced. What we have before us is a motion and that is the normal way for the house to consider its business. I believe also that this point of view has been advanced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). The House of Common must consider its business by way of a motion being put, discussion on a motion and the eventual disposition of such a motion ordinarily is by a vote. It is only where circumstances are such that a Standing Order specifically states, for example in the case of Standing Order 26, that there should be no vote, that the house will not proceed to a disposition of the matter by way of a count or by a division.

Perhaps it would be easier to make a ruling in this case along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) or by those who have spoken in support of his interpretation of the rule. But if from the start we had not placed ourselves in the position of operating in accordance with the Standing Order which some say could apply, and if these days are not allotted days, we would not be proceeding according to the terms which guide discussion on allotted days, I have trouble in deciding how the hon. member for Peace River and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre could file such notices because according to my interpretation of Standing Order 58, this is the Standing Order under which members of the opposition may file such notices.

The suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is that although the Standing Order and the special order refer to allotted days, this is not an allotted day.

I have given the matter serious and careful thought during the last few days because it was discussed outside the house with the members who are considered experts and who I suggest are experts in the matter of interpretation of the rules and with hon. members who were on the committee which adopted this rule and recommended it to the house. I am still as uncertain as I was in the first instance as to how this Standing Order should be interpreted. But if hon. members think there is some virtue or merit to my suggestion, I would make the proposition that because until this afternoon we have adhered to the provisions of the Standing Order and have received the 24 hours' notice, it would be difficult all of a sudden to determine that we are no longer applying the Standing Order, and that we are not dealing with allotted days and therefore we should take a vote on the motion.

The way some hon. member have spoken, there does not seem to be any clear indication that there would in any event be a vote on the matter if my interpretation of the sense of the house is correct.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Perhaps it would be wise for the Chair to have additional time to reflect on this situation and to study in Hansard the learned arguments advanced by hon. members and perhaps then be prepared, when we are faced again with a similar situation and required to give a ruling as to whether, when we are considering so-called allotted days, or designated days dealing with the consideration of supplementary estimates, or where special provisions of standing order 58 should apply.

29180—389

My view is that we have gone too far at the moment to turn back the clock as the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has suggested all along: but in my opinion proceeded on the basis of a 24 hour notice because these are special days, not allotted days of the normal type.

I also suggest for the guidance of hon. members that we are dealing with a special order, and I wonder if hon. members would want to establish a procedure, once and for all, at this point, when we are not dealing with our standing orders but with a special order of the house. This is a complicating factor, and in view of this additional consideration, and because of the fact that we do not have before us at the present time, a normal situation, where a motion would have been made in an ordinary way under the provisions of the standing order for the consideration of supplementary estimates during three allotted days, it is my view that it would not be wise to make a decision which would bind the house on every occasion in the future when it is asked to study a motion under that part of the standing order.

I have tried to suggest that it would be better to proceed at this point as though we were under allotted days which, according to my interpretation of the standing order, is that, when this discussion is terminated, and no other notice having been given, we should go on and put the motion to the house, that is, the motion that will be proposed by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) for concurrence in the supplementary estimates.

As a final word, it will be obvious that my decision is a non-decision.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Old Age Security—Payment of income tax on guaranteed income supplement; the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis)—Immigration—Timing of distinction between deserters and draft dodgers; the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax (Mr. Forrestall)—National Defence—C.F.B. Halifax—pay adjustments for personnel.

Business of Supply

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

CONSIDERATION OF SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B) 1968-69

Hon. Paul Hellyer (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That supplementary estimate 12(b) Revised, relating to the Department of Labour, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969, presented to the house, Friday, February 28, 1969, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1969, presented to the house Monday, February 24, 1969, less item 12(b) relating to the Department of Labour, be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Paoul Hellyer (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Bill C-177, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969, be now read the first time and printed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave.

Mr. Speaker: By special order made February 24, 1969, now.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (for the President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That Bill C-177, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969, be read the second time and referred to a committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: In accordance with section 1 of Standing Order 75 the preamble and clause 1 of this bill must stand. Clause 2. Shall clause 2 carry?

On clause 2—$222,254,283 granted for 1968-69.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, by virtue of an understanding which was reached this afternoon it was agreed that we should turn our attention in committee to the schedule and that a certain order would be accepted in dealing with it. It may well be that the house will want to get through the clauses of the bill but hopefully, as the minister is here to defend what some of us think is indefensible and as other hon. members are concerned with this matter, the committee might agree to direct its attention to the schedule and those items which come under the responsibility of the Minister of Transport in his capacity of dealing with housing.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the most defensible course of action would not be to pass the first six clauses of the bill, then proceed with the schedule, and then by special agreement call the item under C.M.H.C. first, notwithstanding that it appears last. If the committee were agreeable perhaps we could pass all the other items in the schedule and call the housing item, or perhaps we could reverse the order of the schedule and deal with the C.M.H.C. item first after passing the first six clauses.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not mind the little exercise in which the President of the Privy Council has engaged, but I think it would be more sensible if we allowed clauses 2 to 6 to stand and called the schedule and proceeded as we agreed with the housing items.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We did not agree to have them stand.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought we had agreed to go directly to the schedule.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I thought we had agreed to move them and then go to the schedule and call the housing item first.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am sure discussion on clauses 2 to 6 will be negligible, in fact nil, if first of all we have the discussion on the items in the schedule. May I interrupt myself and remind the minister that we are under a time limit of six o'clock on Wednesday, and if we spend our time on the detailed estimates in the schedule and then revert to the clauses we will not be able to debate them anyway. What we want to get at are the items under housing, immigration, and so on. The sensible thing would be to let all the clauses stand and call the schedule, and call as the first item in the schedule the C.M.H.C. item.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, the position that many hon. members of the committee will take on these clauses may well depend on, for example, the Minister of Transport and other ministers making a substantial and reasonable defence of some of the items in the schedule. For this reason I had thought we could go to the schedule. If these matters are properly covered then, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has suggested, when the time comes to deal with the substantive clauses of the bill it would be a routine matter provided we are satisfied on the other matters.

• (5:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That certainly was not the understanding I had. The understanding was that we would proceed right through the bill to the schedule and then agree to change the order in the schedule.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I am not arguing with the minister. I am sorry if there was any misunderstanding. I was engaged in the discussions and my thought was we would move through all the other stages as quickly as possible to get to the schedule but I did not think that meant we would pass all the various clauses without debate. Frankly, what does it matter? Once we get into the schedule we will be on it until six o'clock on Wednesday and then the clauses will be called without debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That seems to be the best argument for calling the clauses now.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: Clause 3.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Chairman, by passing clause 2 we in effect pass the schedule because that is the way clause 2 reads. How can we discuss the schedule, which may have many changes to the items depending upon the sense of the house, if we have already passed clause 2? That does not make sense to me.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I submit that you have called clause 2, which is the proper thing for you to do. Clause 2 refers to the schedule. This would now permit us to discuss the items in the schedule, and that is where the housing items are.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I understand it is the mood of the committee that we turn first to housing and deal with the four $1 items, this massive injection of new money into the housing problems that confront Canada. This is set forth at page 16 of the measures we are considering. It may be that the Minister of Transport would wish to make an opening statement on this subject. If so, I would defer to him because he obviously said very little before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the other day. Perhaps since then he has had an opportunity to do his homework and is now in a position to report to the house. If the minister wishes to rise now I will gladly bow to him; if not I propose to make a statement and ask questions to which I hope we will receive the answers which we did not receive during the hearings of the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the other day.

First of all, an important occasion always demands a preamble so I shall turn to some of the housing pledges that were made by hon. gentlemen opposite as recently as last April, May and June. First, let us take the words of one of the outstanding members opposite in a speech made in Vancouver on May 11 as reported by the Canadian Press. This gentleman said that the national housing situation calls for increased help to C.M.H.C. an aid to low-cost housing projects. What could be more just than increased emphasis on low-cost housing projects because everybody in this chamber is familiar with the fact that more than half the poverty in Canada is rooted in the metropolitan areas and it is important that the government meet this particular problem. The gentleman said in Vancouver that a Liberal government would give increased aid to low-cost housing projects. His words have perhaps a little more than ordinary weight since he was the architect of the phrase "the just society".

Then we go to another statesman not as distinguished as the first; one might consider him also obsolete since he has gone to the other place. Nevertheless, in a speech at Winnipeg on May 29 this year the government house leader in the other place said that high interest rates on mortgage loans will be reduced if the Liberal government is successful in its drive to reduce expenditures and achieve a balanced budget. This is the Delphic oracle at its best. Most people presumably took from this that expenditures would be reduced, the budget would come in balanced, and therefore high interest rates on mortgage loans would be reduced. As we all know now, exactly the reverse has happened.

Not to leave the present minister responsible for housing out of the preamble I would quote his remarks, again in Vancouver, on June 13 as reported by the Canadian Press:

> The Prime Minister has a policy of not making expensive election promises. This was in order to get a mandate that would give him a free hand in attacking high interest rates, unemployment and the housing shortage.

Mr. Woolliams: Who said that?

Mr. McCleave: That was the present Minister of Transport. The high interest rates have gone higher; the high unemployment has gone higher and the housing shortage has become more acute. These are the programs and policies—perhaps one could really call them prattle—that were given to the Canadian people last year on the important topic of housing.

Now, sir, in respect of the purpose of the four exercises in $1 amounts that we are being asked to give our blessing to, I think what is happening was well put forth in an exchange between the hon. member for Edmonton West and the minister before the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates at its hearing of last Thursday, February 27. I shall quote from page 241 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence:

> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): That is all I have on this except again the general proposition as to why this was done by supplementary estimate.
>
> Mr. Hellyer: In this case, Mr. Lambert, when we anticipated introducing amendments to the act within a few weeks anyway, we needed sufficient statutory authority to get us over the period in between. In that event, it makes sense to do it this way.
>
> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You just told me that you wanted to get through to March 31, 1970.
>
> Mr. Hellyer: There is always the possibility that Parliament might not approve legislation—

Well, that is something; we might not approve the legislation which is so necessary to get the program through.

> —or we may get run over by a truck or something.

That is the royal "we". The quotation continues:

> You never know, so it is wise to have a little ahead.
>
> Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): This is going to be the cushion, is it? This was coming under a guillotine. Mr. Minister, I am going to repeat, you heard me tell Mr. Drury, that this is a bad practice as far as many of us are concerned. It would be far more open, and I think you will be further ahead in the end, to come forward legitimately with statutory amendments rather than these $1 items.
>
> Mr. Hellyer: We will be glad to note that. Also, as I say, I will be happy if we can introduce amendments to the act and provide larger limits which will obviate the necessity of doing this.

It seems obvious from that exchange and certainly from all the unanswered questions in the committee that this was a measure of expediency, although the minister must have raised many eyebrows in the committee when he suggested the possibility parliament might not approve legislation and therefore this was a very useful way to get it done. I suggest the housing problems of Canada need more than expedient treatment.

The questions I should like to ask the minister arise from the four $1 items to which I have referred. These are the items which increase the amounts that may be advanced for direct lending, and I should like to know how close we are to the present ceilings now. The present ceiling is $4,600, million. The proposed new ceiling would be $5,200 million. My first question to the minister in respect of direct lending under the National Housing Act is, at what point are we now? Perhaps the minister could indicate how quickly he anticipates that the new ceiling will be reached.

• (5:20 p.m.)

My second question is similar and refers to the next item, L117b dealing with student housing. The proposed increase in the ceiling is from $350 million to $475 million under section 36C of the National Housing Act. I should like to know how close we are to the present ceiling of $350 million and how much student housing is anticipated over the next year.

My third question relates to vote L118b which deals with insurance of loans and the proposal to increase the ceiling for the aggregate amount of loans in respect of which insurance policies may be issued from $9.5 billion to $11 billion. How close are we now to the $9.5 billion and when is it anticipated that we will reach the $11 billion ceiling? I think this is a very important question because we are getting into the field of activity of private lenders.

Finally, under vote L119b, which deals with home improvement loans under section 26 of the National Housing Act, how close are we now to the ceiling of $500 million and when is it anticipated that we will reach the new ceiling of $550 million?

Of all the items we are asked to consider this afternoon I think none will give us more regret than the failure of the government to come to real grips with the problem of providing houses for the lower income groups in Canada. This is a conspicuous failure and it has been conspicuous in the past. The need certainly has not lessened because every day more and more people are being driven into the position of not being able to afford their own housing because inflation makes it less and less probable. Increasing interest rates make this dream less and less likely to be realized.

In spite of this fact one approach to the problem in respect of the poor people of Canada, and this is of particular significance in metropolitan areas where the problem is particularly acute, has been put in abeyance by this government as a result of a recommendation on page 55 of the report of the minister's own task force. It is that the federal government initiate a thorough research program into the economic, social and psychological issues of public housing, and that until such a study is completed and assessed no new large projects should be undertaken.

I do not blame people, certainly those in large public housing projects in Canada, for being angry and upset by what the minister has said or by what his task force has recommended in the paragraphs leading up to that recommendation. I cannot blame them for being angry about what one of the independent studies, on which the task force has partly relied, has said. I think people in public housing, particularly defamed projects, have a legitimate squawk. Those people who might qualify for public housing also have a legitimate complaint.

The fact is, though the task force report does not say this, that one of the reasons public housing has failed or encountered difficulties in Canada is that we have not gone far enough under the National Housing Act. We have not tried through the National Housing Act to create livable environments in many of these public housing projects because we have not provided any of the auxiliary features which make for good living. We have not provided assistance for the development of parks, recreational and community facilities which one would associate with large scale, high density projects. Every apartment of any size that is erected in the city of Ottawa has a swimming pool. This is at least a start on something in which the tenants can take pride, something in addition to mere bed and eating facilities.

When the task force categorizes public housing as it does, criticizes it and puts a stop to large projects without pointing out the reason for some of the difficulties that public housing has encountered, it can only annoy people without adding to an understanding for the poor who are in desperate need of decent accommodation. I regard the action taken by the minister through the four $1 items as partly to overcome difficulties of inflation and partly to place more appropriate ceilings on lending or insuring activities. This is nothing like the action one would expect a responsible minister to take to assist the low income groups.

It may be suggested that through the new approach to mortgages there might be help for these low income groups. Something was made of the fact that longer term mortgages should be allowed. The suggestion is that this would make it easier for people to own their own homes so that in some way the problems of the low income groups would be solved. There are some snares and delusions in this regard. I do not think this is a panacea to cure all ills. Let me refer to one very real snare or delusion. I refer to the suggestion that mortgages up to 35 years be permitted. Perhaps mortgages of an even longer period might be allowed but the interest tables I have are only calculated for up to 35 years. These figures are horrifying.

If one could get a $20,000 mortgage for a period of 35 years at 6 per cent the monthly payment would be $113.06, and the total amount payable over the 35 years would be $47,485.25. In other words, you will have noted, I am sure, the amount repayable over that 35-year term at 6 per cent would be $20,000 in principal and $27,485.25 in interest.

Let us see what a long-term mortgage would be at the cost of borrowing money today, and I have in mind about 9½ per cent. A mortgage for $20,000 at 9½ per cent over a period of 35 years would cost $161.57 per month or a total over the 35 years of $67,859.40.

• (5:30 p.m.)

In other words, the amount paid, would be the principal, $20,000, and $47,859.40 in interest, or more than twice as much as the principal. Unless these figures are examined we may picture this plan as the smooth and easy way out of the housing shortage in Canada. I suggest that to assume an interest burden at least twice the principal burden is getting into a realm of financing that is almost unconscionable.

We are sorry that the minister has not brought in more proposals at the present time. I think there would be a disposition to give the green light and an accelerated consideration to proposals on housing. I do not think anyone in the official opposition or in any party in the house quarrels with that, but in the light of the interest created by the minister's housing report we are prepared to get our teeth into the changes to the National Housing Act very quickly.

Certainly, the real problems will multiply and will be aggravated the longer we put off consideration of these changes. These are the problems of the low income groups. The other problems are not as acute, but the poor or those with lower incomes are people to whom inflation makes home owning that much less of a possibility. This is what we should set ourselves to do at once.

I think the one dollar items are of uncertain practical significance and I do not suppose anyone will know, unless the minister can spell out for us, how much it is proposed to advance for direct lending in the next 12 months; how much it is proposed to use for student housing in that period; what kind of picture the private lenders have indicated; and what kind of forecast the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is making in home improvement for the next 12 months. One dollar for each of these fields does not tell us anything, and yet I think our purpose is to see whether the housing program of the government is adequate. I hope the minister will take the opportunity to tell us exactly what he proposes to do.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, we are very glad to have this opportunity to discuss the most urgent problem facing most Canadians, namely the question of housing. If there is one thing on which we can all agree it is that the skyrocketing mortgage interest rates and the uncontrolled escalation of rents are imposing very real hardships on innumerable Canadians. The task force itself said:

> Housing and urban development are an urgent priority for the people of Canada and must be treated as such by their elected representatives at all levels.

The major element in the rising cost of living is housing and it is imposing an unbearable burden on Canadians with small and fixed incomes. The Dominion Bureau of Statistics bulletin on price movements this year shows that 32 out of 100 points in the consumer price index are devoted to housing, and the increase from January of 1968 to January of 1969 in the cost of housing was 5 per cent. This is, therefore, by far the largest single item in the over-all increase in the cost of living.

It should be remembered that this increase does not apply evenly to the population as a whole. Its highest incidence is not on home owners with fixed interest rates on their mortgages; it is upon the poorest sections of the community that this burden falls. It is on the recently married couples seeking to find homes of their own; it is on the wage earners with large families who have to rent because they cannot afford to buy; it is on the old age pensioners on small fixed incomes who suddenly find their rent increased astronomically. It would be wrong to assume that the lower income groups are the only ones affected by the urgent housing crisis. The task force report itself says that the average wage earner who earns $5,000 to $7,000 a year has no hope of owning a home, that it is a dream and nothing but a dream. He has to scramble around in the uncontrolled rental market for inadequate accommodation.

There is indeed an urgent housing crisis. But this government seems to be taking its time, to put it mildly. The Minister of Transport tabled the report of the task force on housing and urban development in this house on January 29. It is now five weeks since that date. On January 29 he told the house that he intended very shortly, and these were his words, to place before the government recommendations on some of the matters arising out of the report on which, as he said, he believed urgent action was required. So this government apparently thinks the matter of housing is so urgent that when its own minister in charge says he has urgent recommendations we have to wait for more than five weeks to have any sort of report at all on the attitude of the government to any of the recommendations, including the recommendations described by the minister himself as urgent. As I said, it is nearly five weeks later and no statement is forthcoming from the Prime Minister, nor have we heard a statement so far from the Minister of Transport himself.

We are left in complete darkness as to which of the various recommendations the minister considers require urgent action. We are left in ignorance as to the reaction of his colleagues. We can guess the reaction of the Minister of Finance to some of the recommendations, but we have no information as to what action if any the government proposes to take to meet the crisis or to implement the recommendations of this highly-touted report that the minister and his task force produced.

In the absence of any information from the government on this admittedly urgent crisis, the opposition can only comment on the report itself. I suggest that seldom has a commission, a task force or any other fact finding body under any other name or description had such a fanfare, such a beating of drums and such a crashing of cymbals as accompanied this task force report. It is my view that the report contains one or two useful recommendations, for example the recommendation for the creation of a department of housing and urban affairs.

It hardly needed however, an expensive task force to travel across the country to see the need for such a department and for a minister to devote his full time to this urgent subject. Indeed, this proposal has frequently been made in the house. It was made by my former colleague, the then hon. member for Danforth, Mr. Reid Scott, and it was often repeated in the house by my colleague, the hon. member for Broadview. It is a good recommendation and we would like to know what the government proposes to do about it. We also heartily approve the recommendation for a capital gains tax on profits derived through land transactions. It is long overdue. Indeed, it was recommended, as members of this house know, by the Carter Commission as part of a general tax on capital gains. We are all in favour of this and say it should have been adopted years ago to cut off exhorbitant speculative profits made by certain people. The task force urges the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. This has been advocated by opposition parties on innumerable occasions as well as by hundreds of organizations and individuals outside the house.

• (5:40 p.m.)

I should like to know how likely the government is to implement this recommendation now that the Minister of Transport supports it. Can we expect anything different? I imagine it is anybody's guess whether the government is likely to do anything about it. I have observed the stern, upright rectitude of the Minister of Finance in opposing any suggestion of this sort and I suspect the plea of the Minister of Transport will fall on deaf ears. Will the worth-while recommendations of the task force remain a dead letter and gather dust like the useful recommendations of so many task forces and commissions in the past?

As to the report as a whole, despite the fullsome publicity surrounding it, the document, in my judgment, is a colossal flop. I am being more polite than the hon. member for Broadview who described it as a colossal fraud. While I do not dissociate myself from him, I would substitute the words "colossal flop" for "colossal fraud", perhaps because of my habit of understatement.

Mr. Benjamin: It is the minister who is a colossal flop.

Mr. Brewin: Why do I say it is colossal flop? I cannot do better than use the words of Dr. Albert Rose of the University of Toronto, a well known expert in the housing field, as they appeared in the Globe and Mail of February 4. The minister shakes his head, probably in disapprobation. I am sure he has read what Dr. Rose has said, but I should like him to do so again. He wrote this:

> These recommendations will do little or nothing to meet the housing needs of the two-thirds of Canadian families whose annual incomes are below $7,500.

