If it is acknowledged that the major need in housing is felt by those earning less than $7,500. If these recommendations will do nothing to help such people, to call the report a colossal fraud or flop is to use very moderate language. In other words, once again it is proposed to take government action in the field of housing to help those in the top income brackets, and ignore those who are in desperate need. This has come so customary a feature of government legislation in this field that one is entitled to believe it is orthodox Liberal theory—help those who have no need for help and ignore those in desperate need.

The report proposes to facilitate home ownership and it does so by suggesting, among other things, an increase in the maximum amount of an N.H.A. mortgage from $18,000 to $30,000. It proposes to allow mortgage payments to be amortized over 40 years instead of 35 years and it proposes to reduce down payments to virtually nothing. In short, it is a program for bigger and better debts for those who will be allowed by the financial institutions to contract such debts. As Dr. Rose says:

> In our past experience an increase in the maximum NHA loan did not restrain the relentless march of house prices; nor is it likely that the proposed extension of the limit to $30,000 will mean anything more than the probability that typical new house prices will reach $38,000 to $40,000 within two or three years.

I say this is fine for the house builders, fine for the select few. But it is stones rather than bread for the average Canadian. As Dr. Rose says, there is little likelihood that Canadian families with less than $10,000 a year can possibly undertake a mortgage of $30,000 in addition to paying higher taxes and meeting the expense of heating and other overheads.

The minister appears to lay great stress on the value of exhortation. He exhorts just about everybody. He exhorts the financial institutions, the insurance companies, the banks, the lawyers, provincial and municipal governments. They are all exhorted to behave in ways entirely different from those they normally follow. Institutions in the private sector are urged to generate new housing capital in the order of $20 billion. We read that private lenders should be able to meet the bulk of the mortgage demand, that the federal government should encourage much more research and co-ordinate efforts among private lenders to an extent far greater than hitherto. What reason have we to believe this will happen? Is there any basis for this optimism, this reliance on the private sector which runs counter to all experience? To think along these lines is to refuse to accept the lessons of experience.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: No government initiative is suggested in the form of taxation to help in carrying out the accumulation of the $20 billion required to meet the urgent housing shortage. The proposal to reduce interest rates by means of a federal subsidy of 2 per cent or more is ignored and has presumably been rejected. Nothing is suggested in the report about bringing down the rate of interest. We do find a proposal to throw the rate of interest open, but from the way the market has been behaving lately we may anticipate higher rather than lower rates of interest. The most unrealistic expectation is that bar associations and real estate boards will promote the reduction of the fees of their members. This is naïve but it is typical of the minister and of the report. It is rather like asking a shark to submit to an exodontist.

Mr. Hellyer: Does the hon. member not belong to one of those professions?

Mr. Brewin: Oh, yes I know them very well.

An hon. Member: That is why he said what he said.

Mr. Brewin: The worst feature of the report is the attack on public housing. After denigrating public housing the report calls for a thorough research program into its economic, social and psychological implications. It is as though the economic, social and psychological issues of public housing should not have been before the government for many years. Public housing is a widespread feature of the housing field and every civilized industrial society in the world has experience of it. Yet we are advised to conduct more research in this regard. But here are the key words: "Until such a study is complete and assessed, no new large projects should be undertaken." What are these new large projects which ought not to be undertaken? As I understand it, the Ontario Housing Corporation as well as other housing corporations have for a long time been against large public housing projects. But the hostile tone of the report indicates that public housing projects generally are to be taboo or restricted. This edict, this chill of death on public housing, spells the end to any reasonable hopes for decent housing for a large body of Canadians. The task force seems to brand public housing as an imported concept, as though there was something wrong about importing concepts that have worked somewhere else.

We are told there is something un-Canadian about public housing, that it runs counter to the general Canadian concept of social welfare and security. I say this is rubbish. It is perfectly true that Canadian governments have lagged miserably in the development of public housing. Federal funds have provided for only 38,000 units of public housing. In a population of 20 million which is suffering from an acute housing crisis, this is a deplorable record and represents a mere drop in the bucket. Certainly, we have not had too much public housing; indeed we have had too little. No other industrial nation, including the United States, the home of free enterprise, has attempted to deal with its housing problems without making a massive effort in the field of public housing. The same is true in Canada; without a massive effort the problem will not be solved.

This task force does no service to Canada and to housing as a whole when it denigrates the idea of public housing. Who benefits from public housing with rents that are adjusted to ability to pay? In metro Toronto alone 35 per cent of those who benefit are mothers on small incomes with a family who are alone and have nobody else at all to support their family. If there were no public housing, to whom would these mothers with small families turn for shelter for their families?

There are 14,000 pending applications for public housing with the Ontario Housing Corporation in metropolitan Toronto alone. This means that some 30,000 people at least are on the list waiting for housing. Hundreds of thousands of others who require public housing do not even apply for it because they know the situation.

I know something of this desperate need personally. In co-operation with the provincial member I have in my constituency what we call a service centre. We invite people with problems to come to us. There are no more tragic problems about which we hear than those raised by people looking for housing, who are desperately asking for advice as to where they can get housing. These are people with large families, people to whom landlords will not rent premises. They do not know where to go.

I want to pay tribute to the Ontario Housing Corporation. The minister speaks rather disparagingly of the provincial efforts from time to time. I am no friend of the provincial government, as he knows, but the Ontario Housing Corporation is the only place to which people can turn in their search for public housing. There is a long waiting list and a points system is in operation. One has to be in the position where one is about to be evicted from one's house before getting enough points to qualify for accommodation.

I wonder why the task force did not discover this? I wonder whether they bothered to inquire from the people who are really in need. Certainly, there is no sign in their report that they did. I should like to inform this house that families are regularly being broken up because of the lack of an adequate supply of public housing—not because there is public housing but because there is an inadequate supply of public housing. These are not problem cases; these people are steady workers of moderate means. I repeat, we need more public housing, not less.

Public housing does, of course, present certain difficulties, but the solution is not to throw out the baby with the bath water and abolish public housing, or even restrict it. It is, as the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants said, necessary to provide proper management, adequate recreational facilities and to give people in public housing some control over their circumstances so that they can develop a community spirit. We have not scratched the surface of the real problem here. The task force rushes in and says that there are psychological problems involved and away with public housing. Although it would like to abolish public housing, the task force thinks that that would be going too far and it just proposes to slow it down.

Public housing should not be considered a refuge for failures and misfits. Tenants should be given every encouragement to have a say in the management of their own residences. We have a lot to learn in this field. In my view, the major problem facing Canadians today is housing. I prophesy that this is going to turn out to be the Achilles heel in the record of this government. The Prime Minister seems to be bedevilled in this field with constitutional doubts.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could have the consent of the committee to report progress and to revert to motions for the purpose of putting a motion with respect to the standing committee on external affairs and national defence. The matter has been discussed generally.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee agree to rise, report progress and to request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS AND NATIONAL DEFENCE

PERMISSION FOR COMMITTEES TO TRAVEL OUTSIDE CANADA

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, may I have the permission of the house to revert to motions for the purpose of making a motion?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen):

That the members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence be granted leave to travel outside Canada between March 8 and March 22, 1969, for the purpose of furthering their work; and that the necessary staff accompany them.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The house will now resume its consideration in committee of the whole.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1969

The house resumed consideration in committee on Bill C-177, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1969—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight p.m.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order, please. House again in committee of the whole.

On clause 2—$222,254,283 granted for 1968-1969

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word or two on the estimates. Particularly, I should like to deal with the clause to do with regional development. During the last few weeks I have frequently heard the term "economic disparity in Canada". That phrase was used a good deal at the constitutional conference. I am happy to see that an expansion is planned for the department of government charged with responsibility for regional development and that additional expenditures in the supplementary estimates are included for that purpose.

Towards the end of last week the itinerant hon. member whose latest stopping place is Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands spoke disparagingly about the area incentives program. I represent an area the constituents of which have benefited greatly from that program. Between 2,000 and 3,000 jobs have been created by the program in my area. Over the years I have heard N.D.P. spokesmen condemning this program, as they condemned the auto parts treaty. I am sorry the leader of the N.D.P. is again not here this evening. If he were to go to my riding he could talk to those workers who are among the 2,000 or 3,000 who have benefited from the jobs the area incentives program brought to our area. Of course, if he would rather see those workers unemployed, if he would rather see them not benefiting from this program, if he would rather see their families suffering—

An hon. Member: Big joke.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I do not say, of course, that the regional development program or the area incentives program cannot be improved. If we remember that many Canadians are still unemployed we shall concede that all our programs must be improved.

Other measures to deal with other matters are being considered by the government. We have heard much talk about linguistic disparity, and tonight I wish to say a few words about that disparity. A few years ago Professor Parkinson told us of a law to the effect that work expands to fill the time allotted for its completion. Tonight I wish to mention another law known as the law of administrative concern. That law says that administrative concern varies inversely with the square of the distance between the administrator and the problem. Putting it another way, as the mayor of Vancouver said at one time, it is 3,000 miles from Vancouver to Ottawa but 30,000 miles from Ottawa to Vancouver. The premier of British Columbia recently responded to sentiments underlying that law when he proposed that British Columbia should take over chunks of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. He felt that British Columbia was physically closer to those areas and could do a better job of solving their problems.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I understood there was general agreement that at this stage we were to discuss the housing items in the estimates. There may have been a bit of confusion or misunderstanding about the details, but it was agreed to deal with housing at this time:

Technically speaking, we are on clause 2 of the bill, but we agreed to talk about housing. The Minister of Transport is here, and we all know that he is here for that purpose. I wonder, therefore, how we are getting into regional development and linguistic problems under this item, in view of our agreement.

The Chairman: It was also my understanding that there was such agreement. However, that agreement resulted from a statement of the President of the Privy Council and it is up to hon. members themselves to honour it. If the hon. member wishes to discuss something else on clause 2, I do not see how he can be ruled out of order. However if there is an agreement of the house, I think hon. members ought to observe it.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I knew we were dealing with clause 2 this evening but I was not consulted about anything else. I was talking on clause 2 and dealing with regional development.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I thought we were to have orderly discussion. It was agreed we would talk about housing. The minister is here to give his words of wisdom. I thought what was agreed was perfectly clear.

The Chairman: Possibly, it might facilitate matters if the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary were not to talk about regional development. An understanding does exist. It was not an order of the house but, rather, a consensus arrived at by house leaders. I know the hon. member is within his rights in raising any subject under clause 2; yet it seems to me, in the interest of orderly procedure and if the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary is agreeable, the committee could deal with the matter of housing and defer the matter of regional development. Is that agreeable to the hon. member?

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): I will bow to your wishes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak in this debate. I do not wish to mislead the house and say we have a crisis in housing—oh, no. But what we do have is about as close to being a crisis as can be imagined. When we think of housing, Mr. Chairman, we are thinking about the quality of life of our Canadian people. Nearly half our 21 million Canadians are under 25 years old. In view of this, it is necessary that we consider the problem, irrespective of what the minister has stated. He does not think the possibility of owning one's home is something with which we can contend. I am sure the average Canadian wants the opportunity to own his own little plot of land with a 30 or 50 foot frontage so that when the frustrations of this complex life reach him he can sit on his porch or in his own backyard. I maintain this is one of the prime objectives of the average Canadian, particularly those in the age bracket to which I just referred, who are thinking of buying homes. I fail to understand how these people can buy a home even with a salary of $8,000 or $9,000 a year.

I have a copy of "Commercial Letter" published by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce which deals with the population growth of this country. Because of the great impact of the population growth, the government must make drastic changes in its housing policy. I quote from "Urban Transportation in Canada":

> Canada's historical reputation is that of a country of wide open spaces and a sparse, mainly rural population. Yet today, roughly half of all Canadians are living in metropolitan areas with populations of over 100,000.
> This proportion of urban dwellers has increased dramatically since 1951, when it was slightly more than one-third of the total population. While the total population of Canada increased by one-quarter between 1956 and 1966, that of the ten major cities expanded at almost double that rate.

The most important part of this article reads:

By 1980, it is estimated, six out of ten Canadians will be residing in urban areas with metropolitan populations of over 100,000. One-third of the country's population will then be concentrated in Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver.

The Economic Council of Canada has indicated that within another 15 years or thereabouts there will be a population of some 10 million people in the province of Ontario. I would like to think we are facing a crisis because if we do not have a crisis now, then that crisis with respect to our housing problem will be reached in 15 years. As I said in my maiden speech, I do not think about the roof over one's head, nor particularly about the garden. I am thinking about the relationship between husband and wife that can break down because of the conflicts and frustrations of urban living. I am thinking about the congestion in cities, juvenile delinquency, pride and transportation. I know an hon. member was politely chastised for getting off the track, but I want to suggest that this government must think about transportation in terms of this mass impact caused by the population growth.

I think the Prime Minister has the right idea but I do not know what is the matter with the rest of the government. They do not want to move; they talk in cliches and at times they are arrogant or disinterested. Sometimes they are apathetic, conversant or indifferent.

In Edmonton last June the Prime Minister emphasized the need for research, lower cost construction, new cities to relieve pressure on existing ones, amendments to the National Housing Act to give more help to smaller communities. He stated funds would be appropriated for land assembly, services, house construction, acquisition of rental units and research into urban transportation. He stated discussions would be held with the provinces to encourage urban research by universities and the effective use of Crown lands. I do not know what discussions the government had with the provinces. According to the information I have received, Mr. Chairman, it apparently was a partisan fiasco whereby a task force travelled the country not looking for help from the municipalities and provinces, but rather a partisan jaunt into the wilderness in order to arrive at solutions.

[Mr. Alexander.]

I am a new member trying to get an answer from the minister. I have learned when you ask a question you receive an answer in generalities. If you ask "when" the answer is, "soon".

The Minister of Transport stated during the election compaign there had not been enough concentration on the housing situation but if he was re-elected he would break the red tape and translate the thinking into action. Those are great words, Mr. Chairman. The minister stated he wanted to keep the price of land as cheap as possible. The Prime Minister did not make expensive election promises. This would give him a mandate in automatic interest rates, unemployment and the housing shortage.

I like the Minister of Transport. I think he has the possibilities of producing, but not this year. It is questionable about next year. We do not want to speak about the third year because by that time we may be getting into another area of talking to people outside these hallowed halls. On June 9 the minister stated the Liberals would put Canada ahead in the world in regard to urban development. This was great news.

The Prime Minister asked the Minister of Transport to tour Canada and meet with provincial governments, municipalities, unions, lending institutions and social workers. The minister was to find the red tape and why there was a lack of co-operation between governments. I do not know whether the minister remembers saying", "I will write a new policy on housing and pull all the strings together". He said that in New Hamburg, Ontario last June 19. I know the minister has the quality of life of Canadians uppermost in his mind, but people want action not cliches.

There is a lot of money available as I understand it, and there is need for the federal government to put money into the housing field. I believe there is approximately $8 billion in pension funds and in five years there will be approximately $14 billion available. Has the minister considered this? The cost of housing has always been a problem for those on the poverty line. There are some four million people now on the poverty line. At the rate we are going now these people will never be able to own their own homes.

That is one area. Now we are moving into another area, and we find that people in the middle income group are meeting problems in trying to own their own homes. When a man makes $7,000, $8,000, $9,000 or $10,000 and cannot buy a home, don't you think that adds up to a housing crisis? There is something wrong somewhere. The Hamilton Area Co-operative Housing Association points out that in 1956, a three bedroom, one floor, brick home of 1,050 square feet cost $11,900. Do you know what the same house cost in 1967? It cost $21,500. That is fantastic. Now, we are talking about increasing the amount of mortgage to $35,000 at 9⅜ per cent interest. I do not want to calculate how much interest that is.

My colleague from Halifax-East Hants has computed the interest on a $20,000 mortgage, and has shown that a person winds up paying $27,000 on top of the $20,000 principal. When we talk about a $30,000 mortgage the figure becomes astronomical. When we talk about housing, and I know this will be difficult, I think we have to approach the problem by trying to reduce interest rates.

With interest rates as high as they are very few people will be able to afford their own homes. Those of us who have homes now are indeed fortunate. We must also start thinking about whether we should allow interest on mortgages as a deduction for income tax purposes, and about whether we should allow land tax on our homes to be off-set as a deduction for income tax purposes. We must give the incentive somewhere.

Regardless of the jurisdictional problem between the federal government and the provincial governments, there has to be dialogue in order to ascertain what is feasible. I know the government will say, "Where are we going to get the money if we do what you suggest, or if we take off the 11 per cent tax on building materials?" In this area we will have to talk about priorities. If we take off the 11 per cent tax on building materials, then obviously we will have to decide where we must concentrate our priorities in order to alleviate the situation.

I do not want to take up too much time, Mr. Chairman, because I know there are other hon. members who have a lot to say, and I do not want to be repetitious. However, I do wish to deal in closing with urban renewal. I know the minister is interested in this matter. Urban renewal is certainly a part of the housing program. Urban renewal is of prime importance.

When I travel this nation as a federal member of parliament trying to learn about the several problems this country is facing, I continually hit the problem of urban renewal in our major cities. They want to know what is happening. They have urban renewal programs in the first, second or third phases, and they need direction and leadership from the government because of the commitments they are facing. If they do not learn soon which way the government is going to go, they will be in trouble, not for 15 cents or $100,000 but for millions of dollars. The minister must come up with an answer with regard to urban renewal projects that have already been started and have reached the point where commitments must be satisfied in the near future.

As I said in the first instance, Mr. Chairman, housing is not a crisis but it is going to be a crisis in a few years. It is advisable that we examine this problem, come up with solutions and give answers to the Canadian public. We must know whether the government is going to follow the pattern it set prior to June 25 last, when its members said they were going to cut red tape, make housing available, and lower interest rates. If they do that, we will be half way on the road to the just society.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, my remarks tonight are made more in a tone of sorrow than in a tone of anger because I am going to say that the Minister of Transport, who is in charge of housing, must go. His performance to date has been a tragic failure. His attitude has been one of smug indifference to Canada's most critical problem, housing.

The minister tabled the report on housing on January 29. To date he has done nothing of any consequence except promise legislation in the near future. When one reads the declaration of principles in the report of the task force, that every Canadian should be entitled to clean, warm shelter as a matter of basic human right, one is moved; but one is not impressed with the performance of the minister.

The task force devotes half its recommendations to improvements in mortgage financing, mainly to improve the housing opportunities of those of average incomes and above. It does nothing to meet the demands of those whose housing needs cannot be met through the private market, and who compose roughly 35 per cent of all Canadians.

The minister and others take refuge in the popular sport, making public housing the whipping boy. I would be interested in knowing who wrote this report. Surely, it would not be the minister. I would be interested in knowing who signed this report because not one signature appears to it.

There must have been some difference of opinion among the members who composed the task force. Yet, there is not a single dissent. I ask the minister who wrote the report? Were there dissenters with regard to these recommendations?

Mr. Hellyer: No dissent.

Mr. Gilbert: The minister has just said "no dissent." I am really surprised.

Mr. Hellyer: A unanimous report.

Mr. Gilbert: I am surprised at the parrot-like performance of the members of the task force, especially when one realizes the composition of that force. First of all, there is the chairman who has a record as a successful builder. Then, there is Dr. Boyle, a sociologist, whose main effort in Toronto was to tell some people in a public housing project that they should not have a telephone so they would be able to save up the down payment for a house; Mr. Carter, a mortgage manager, Mr. Campeau, another successful builder, Dr. Gillies, an economist, Dr. Dansereau an ecologist, and Dr. Pratt, an architect. The chairman never thought of asking for a representative from the trade union movement. He never had a representative on the force from any consumer group, or from any public housing authority. Is it any wonder the report is so slanted?

There are a few things in the report which I would like to draw to the attention of the minister. First, I would like to see him set up the new Ministry of Housing and Urban Affairs to encourage, support and co-ordinate expanded urban research programs with greater priority on the initiation of practical research programs including private projects. Why not do that now? We have a bill before us to reorganize government departments. Why not set up this new department so that the minister can set forth a program worth following? Why doesn't the minister give leadership instead of hiding behind the constitution? Why doesn't he set up this new ministry to assess the housing needs of all Canadians, and program, finance and direct the proper mix of residential homes, apartments, public housing, senior citizens' housing and co-operatives?

The minister well knows that the provinces cannot do it alone. This possibly is one of the reasons he supported the recommendation to establish a separate ministry. Now, he has an opportunity under the reorganization bill to do something and I would ask him to appoint a minister to get on with the job. There is a certain aspect in respect of finance. Why does the minister not give a new direction to financing? The report says we need one million homes in the next five years. This is approximately 200,000 units a year. I find this rather surprising because Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation had a projection of 225,000 homes. I might ask why there is this difference. I imagine the minister could quite easily tell us because he is so well informed on this particular subject. We in the New Democratic party set 250,000 homes as the figure to take care of the short-fall in previous years.

The minister knows that in 1966 we added 134,000 homes, in 1967 we added 164,000 homes and in 1968 we added 196,000 homes. The minister knows the appreciable shortfalls we have had in the past years. Why does he not accept the target set by C.M.H.C. of 225,000 homes? Having done that, I would ask the minister to call the financial institutions to Ottawa right now and obtain written commitments from the insurance companies, trust and loan companies, banks and other financial institutions. With a target date of March 15, I suggest that he should bring them down and obtain written commitments from them that the necessary mortgage money will be available. Then, by August 15 if they have not lived up to their written commitments, the necessary legislation could be introduced. The builders then would have a steady flow of mortgage moneys and we would have a definite building program for this year.

Last August when we faced a housing shortage, the minister called representatives of the finance institutions down to Ottawa and asked them to put more money into housing. They flatly refused. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the people had to get money, which was government money marked for public housing, and direct it into the housing needs of Canada. So, I suggest that the minister should not depend on the social conscience of these financial institutions but should obtain their written commitments by March 15. Then, if by August 15 they have not lived up to those commitments, pass the necessary legislation.

Now, I should like to chat with the minister about his naïve idea that by lifting the N.H.A. ceiling we will have lower interest rates. I am surprised because here we have a successful builder of houses in the past who comes forward with this idea at this time. He appreciates that the interest rate at the moment is 9⅜ per cent under the N.H.A. and 9½ per cent and 10 per cent under private loans.

I shall ask the minister to recall what happened when we lifted the ceiling from the bank interest rates. The interest rate on bank loans was 6 per cent. When we had a review of the Bank Act a number of bank officials came down to plead with the members of the committee to lift the ceiling of 6 per cent from the bank interest rate. The government supported them and the rate was lifted. What happened? Well, last year the banks had a record year. One bank had a profit of 48 per cent over the previous year. The average profit was 37 per cent. Now, I ask the minister if he is going to be naïve enough to lift the ceiling from the N.H.A. rate and subject Canadians to higher interest rates because, as I said before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, money has no conscience and has no patriotism.

I do not always agree with the hon. Leader of the Opposition, but he has pleaded with the minister to keep that ceiling. I must say that the Leader of the Opposition is a man of conscience, a man of decency, of compassion and understanding. I am sure the minister who at times shows the attributes of understanding and compassion, will leave that ceiling on the interest rate. He will tell the financial institutions that the mortgage interest rates they are charging now are high enough and that any increase would be unconscionable. Unconscionable is the nice word one might use in place of the biblical word "usury". I am sure the minister would not be one to promote usury among financial institutions. After persuading the minister concerning the interest rates I doubt, Mr. Chairman, that he would dare take such action.

The next item I should like to mention is the abolition of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials for homes. I stopped at the word "homes"; but I would add the words "up to $25,000". If we offered a bonus to people who are in a position to purchase expensive homes by lifting the 11 per cent sales tax we would be doing a disservice to most Canadians. But if the 11 per cent sales tax were lifted on homes valued at less than $25,000 the people would have some indication of the minister's concern about lowering the prices of homes. I am sure he is anxious to lower the prices of homes. He has stated on different occasions, as has the report, that there is a necessity to cut down the cost of homes. I would ask the minister to persuade the Minister of Finance to lift the 11 per cent sales tax in respect of homes up to a value of $25,000. If the Minister of Finance, in his very pontifical and Buddha-like way, says that he cannot do that because we would lose $250,000 I am sure the minister of transport could say to him that a capital gains tax on land deals would obtain the moneys to compensate for the loss of the 11 per cent sales tax.

Mr. Carter, in his report, suggested that $5 billion in Canadian money is lost every year because of tax evasion and that in comparison this 11 per cent sales tax is a mere nothing to the Minister of Finance. I know the Minister of Transport in charge of housing, in his very persuasive way, will be able to show the Minister of Finance the error of his ways and convince him of the necessity to remove the 11 per cent sales tax in respect of homes up to a maximum value of $25,000. If he does not do so then he will have demonstrated to all Canadians that he is not very much interested in lowering the cost of homes; that he is tagged to the financial institutions and to the get-rich boys in the housing field.

Much has been said in respect of public housing and urban renewal. The hon. member for Greenwood this afternoon went into detail concerning this important subject. I am sure that after reading the press reports, and after receiving the briefs from the different organizations, the minister will not put a freeze on public housing until we have a study in respect of the economic, social and psychological effects of public housing. I am surprised that the minister would use those rather cute but effective words, the economic, social and psychological effect of public housing. I am surprised because he comes from the same city I do and represents a riding much the same as mine; that is a workingman's riding.

Last week I received four telephone calls from people in my riding asking for public housing. On Thursday, I received one call from a widower with five children who is being put out on Thursday evening. I had to say to him that there are 14,000 people in the city of Toronto waiting for public housing. I cannot believe for one moment that our Minister of Transport in charge of housing could be that cold-hearted and that ruthless, that he would put a freeze on public housing and urban renewal until he makes and economic, social and psychological study of this important subject. That is not in keeping with this minister.

I am sure that after the minister reflects on the very quick study he made of public housing he will feel ashamed because the government has not passed legislation to provide recreational facilities for these public housing projects. I feel that he will see to it that recreational facilities are provided so that we do not have large concentrations of public housing, as we have had in the past, which will scatter these facilities all around, but that we will encourage those people in these public housing projects to have dignity, a sense of worth and the ambition to save the necessary money to buy homes of their own in the near future.

I call upon the minister to get up and say he will not put a freeze on public housing and urban renewal. The previous speaker spoke eloquently of the crying needs of cities now waiting final approval with regard to public housing projects. In the city of Ottawa there are 1,600 projected units, 800 of which are ready to go and waiting for approval by the minister. I should like him to get up and tell the hon. member for Broadview that he is going to approve those 800 units for the city of Ottawa immediately and approve those public housing projects that have already been commenced because he feels they are necessary to meet this critical shortage in housing.

I was rather impressed with the remark the minister made to the hon. member for Broadview when he said the report referred to the persuasion of different bodies, real estate boards and law societies, to reduce their fees. He asked the hon. member whether he was not a member of the legal profession. The hon. member said, certainly, and that is the very reason he suggested this was only a pipe dream.

Mr. Hellyer: It was the hon. member for Greenwood who said that, not you. You are mixed up.

Mr. Gilbert: It was the hon. member for Greenwood, and I am sure the minister got the import of the remark. He is a member of the legal profession and so am I. We know the difficulties the minister is going to have. I appreciate the remarks the minister made in respect of the high fees in Newfoundland, that province which needs tremendous housing projects and all the money we can pour into it to get away from the economic disparity that exists there.

Let me tell the minister the most practical way to initiate or demonstrate this lowering of legal fees. The first step he should take is to get the patronage list of the government and tell the lawyers—

Mr. Woolliams: And burn that list.

An hon. Member: You are on that list too, Gilbert.

Mr. Gilbert: He should burn it or set the tariff charges in respect of C.M.H.C. mortgages at about one half of one per cent.

Mr. Hellyer: That is a good idea.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you. I am glad the minister really appreciates the wisdom that is flowing forth this evening. He is a man of compassion and understanding, and I am sure he will act boldly.

As I have said, the minister should set up a new department of housing and urban affairs, and he should do so now. He should persuade the Prime Minister to amend the organization bill and then call down the financial institutions and give them a target of 225,000 or 250,000 homes to take care of the short fall. They should do this by March 15. On August 15 they should be called back to review the targets, at which time legislation should be imposed if it is found necessary. I notice that the hon. member for High Park is nodding his head in agreement. He also happens to be a lawyer. He practices in Toronto and has an excellent practice. He is also a man of understanding and compassion. Therefore, you have support, Mr. Minister.

Perhaps the minister has read the remarks of the hon. member for Davenport, who replaced Walter Gordon in a not very impassionate way. He said we should not thwart public housing and urban renewal because he appreciated the impact it would have on the people of Toronto. I am sure that—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Gilbert: I have one more sentence.

The Chairman: Is it the general agreement of the committee that the hon. member should continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, when I look across at the Minister of Transport I see in him the spirit of concern and understanding. I am sure he has knowledge of the biblical quotation that birds have their nests, foxes have their holes, but most Canadians have no place to lay their heads. I am sure after taking that into account the minister will bring forth the necessary changes to make this a better Canada.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to congratulate the other members who have spoken today. All of them will agree with the hon. member for Hamilton West, that there is a housing crisis. I do not intend to fool around by saying it appears there is going to be a housing crisis. There is a housing crisis now.

There are four or five factors we must think about when considering housing, particularly in urban centres. As hon. members know, I come from the city of Calgary. A lot of people talk about the affluence in existence there, but I suggest there is affluence in all cities and that all of them have their pockets of poverty. Let me say that I have read the great document before mentioning the five aspects of housing and urban development considered by the task force. It seems to me that first of all we must have land availability. Land must be available at a reasonable price to the average person with an average income. We also must have mortgage availability. Money must be available because persons on salary or operating small businesses cannot purchase homes if mortgage money is not available. We must also have down payment availability and builder availability. If you take these and put them together, you get more housing.

Let us consider land availability and let us take a look at what goes on in respect of it. May I say, with the greatest respect to the minister, and I am not being critical now, that there is much talk these days about dialogue. They are full of dialogue, monologue and whatever kind of "logue" they have, but it does not take a genius in the construction world, or even a man with the experience of the minister, to find out what Canadian people need so far as housing is concerned. So far as land availability is concerned, the first thing the government should be doing is to work in co-operation with the provinces and the municipalities of this nation to ensure that the large sections of land surrounding our cities are made available for housing. We know that 75 per cent of our population today live in urban centres, which includes villages and towns as well as the great metropolitan centres. What has happened has been that speculators saw there was going to be a great housing crisis in Canada, particularly because of the kind of government we have. I will have something to say about that in a few minutes but now I want to keep to the positive side of the subject.

What has happened has been that these speculators have been allowed to buy up land at certain prices which have doubled, tripled and gone up the ladder, so that the problem today is centred on the cost of land. Let me speak of the first thing that the task force should have done, without these beautiful words and this beautiful dialogue which has been going on ever since the Prime Minister was elected and ever since he defeated the present Minister of Transport. Let us be positive and let us have a constructive approach to this subject. Let us work out a program together with the provinces and the municipalities to provide a land pool to be purchased by C.M.H.C. at a reasonable price so that it can be developed. That is the first thing that must be done. A task force is not needed to come to that conclusion. My brother-in-law came from the United States 20 years ago and said to me: "If you want to make money, buy up the land around the cities". Everybody can see that this is the thing to do. It takes little imagination and all you need is some capital. Someone asked whether I did it. The answer is that I did not have that kind of imagination and 20 years ago I did not have the capital.

The next thing we must provide is mortgage availability. I was impressed by what the hon. member for Broadview said. I said the same thing myself some time ago. Let us get together the banks, the insurance and the trust companies and all those institutions and corporations with a pool of capital and say to them: "We took the ceiling off the interest rates". I realize the Bank of Canada is charging 7 per cent today and this affects the rates that the banks charge and the rates that the insurance and trust companies charge. Let us get them all together and point out to them that there is a housing crisis. The crisis is not in the process of developing, it is in force right now. We should tell these institutions: "You control the pool of capital in this nation." It is true that we withdrew much of that capital from circulation, and that is what I want to deal with now. The Progressive Conservative Party has said for years, since we became the opposition, that the government should take heed. Even the Minister of Agriculture, when he was on this side of the house, warned the government of this impending problem. I could quote some of his statements.

We warned them when they brought in the Canada Pension Plan and took out a pool of capital, about which they do nothing, and we warned them when they brought in the civil service pension at 5 per cent. There is a big pool of capital there. I would have thought the minister would have been able to direct the flow of that money, which we warned them would have an inflationary effect. They told us they could not control inflation. The fact is that when the Liberals are in power there is inflation all over the world; this is a world problem. However, when other parties are in office, inflation is a problem of the party which is governing the country at the time. That is the difference between the views of the minister when he was sitting in opposition and his views now that he is minister. What we need to do now is to pool the capital which this government collected through its taxation policy. If it had controlled inflation better, this pool of capital would be larger. So, the thing to do is to get the institutions of the nation together and tell them they have a responsibility as corporate citizens of our nation to do something about housing.

The next thing we should consider relates to down payments. The former government was defeated in this house on its measure to increase income tax. Nothing was said about that during the election. They buried it, but when the Liberals came back they brought back the same people and the same policies. You cannot take the cream off the wages and expect the wage earners of this nation, some of whom are not protected by unions, to have money for down payments. There is not a law firm that does not know that the interest rate on second mortgages in Toronto, Calgary, Vancouver or Montreal is 15 per cent. In some cases, because of the bonus that is paid on the capital, the interest is as high as 20 per cent. So, what we need is down payment availability, and we cannot have it when you take the cream off the wage earner's wages or when we have the kind of policies we have had since 1963, which the Trudeau flowers have not been able to change. Blowing bubbles on flowers is not going to change the policies of this nation. It is about time Canada woke up and realized that this charisma will be dead pretty soon because there is nothing alive about this government's economic policy; it is dead.

The next thing we need is builder availability. We must not have all this red tape. The minister deals with this himself in his brief, or whoever was on the task force who wrote this. I think there is more Liberal propaganda in the statement than any sincere interest in improving the housing conditions of the nation. It is impossible to get builders who are able to get that kind of capital to stay in the construction business when there is a tight money policy, such as there is now, and to build the kind of houses that Canadians need.

So, if you take all these things together, that is land availability, mortgage availability, and down payment availability, and if you start now to provide the houses you will be dealing with the problem constructively. What will happen in this nation when the high school and the university students graduate, get married and look for houses? There are no answers that we can see in the report of the task force.

Now, what should be done? I will review what I have said. As I said at the beginning, we should immediately buy sections of land around the cities to make certain that inflation does not eat out the pocket book of the average Canadian who wishes to buy a home. Secondly, we should get together mortgage companies, banks and trust companies, as well as the government which should lead the way, to direct capital which they control into the housing business. The government should shape its policies in such a way that people will be left with sufficient money to make down payments. At the same time the government should encourage builders. The government must not make money available one month and then impose tight money the next month. The contractors of this nation have suffered under this Liberal policy on many occasions, starting with the policy of the former minister of finance back in 1956.

Take a look at what the government has done. We in opposition are sometimes criticized because we are too critical. Maybe we are. But since 1963 every budget brought in by finance ministers of the party opposite, whether by Walter Gordon, by Mitchell Sharp or by the present minister, has been an inflationary budget looking toward programs of a kind which make it more difficult to get streams of capital flowing into housing projects.

The minister said in Toronto, I believe, that the first thing we must do is remove the sales tax. We have been saying this ever since the tax was imposed. Hon. gentlemen opposite have got to make up their minds, though I know this will be difficult with all the dialogue that is going on. The Postmaster General has been talking about post office efficiency in one breath and about NATO in the next, and another minister has been contradicting him in another part of the country. At any rate, the minister has come to adopt Robert Winters' idea that the 1 per cent sales tax should be removed.

It is no good saying this out in Vancouver, because the minister's credibility—I am not applying this to him personally I am talking about his credibility when speaking as a minister of this government—is not very good out there. This has been promised before. Oh, the minister can smile. I do not mind him smiling; it is a nervous grin. I want him to sit around that new Privy Council table, with all its greatness and its flowers, and say to the Minister of Finance and to the Minister of National Revenue: It is time this tax was removed because there is a housing crisis. It may be a very bitter pill to swallow because we have been saying this ever since the government put on this tax. We were right then, and we are right tonight, five years later. This is one of the things that ought to be done.

Turning, now, to the question of priorities, it is amazing how the Prime Minister gets away with it. Think of the things he has said as Prime Minister. No other prime minister has made any statements like them. I will mention some examples by way of digression. Let me say first of all I have nothing against the idea that we should have a bilingual nation. But the right hon. gentleman says: If you can't speak French, you run elevators. As far as housing is concerned, the Prime Minister said it was a provincial responsibility. I say to the minister that while he is trying to solve the housing problem through his task force the Prime Minister is making it more difficult, as he did during the convention. He is saying, in effect: Why should we be spending money on a task force across this nation since this is a provincial responsibility, anyway; I wash my hands of it. Statements of that kind do not add one ounce to the credibility of the government.

Let us take a look at the solutions suggested in the report. I was in Calgary one morning and I turned on the radio. The minister was agreeing that we might direct the baby bonus payments into down payments on houses. Mr. Chairman, the very people who need a down payment to buy a house certainly need the baby bonus to keep the baby alive. But that was one of the minister's solutions. The second solution was that mortgages should be amortized for a greater length of time. What does this really amount to? Take a mortgage of $10,000 at 10 per cent. On a 30-year loan if you keep your payments up and if the government does not tax you to death, you will be paying in interest $21,057.20.

An hon. Member: And a lot more besides.

Mr. Woolliams: Those figures are by way of illustration. In fact, I am sure you would pay double.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Now take a 35-year loan. On a loan of $10,000 you would pay, in interest, $25,460.60, while on a 40-year loan your payment amounts to $29,998.40. This is the minister's great solution—

Mr. Gibson: Better men than you have been working on this.

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, that is the great Gibson. He is from Hamilton Wentworth. The only good thing that ever happened so far as he was concerned was that his father was born before him. Let us return to the facts of the situation, as I was dealing with them before I was interrupted by that house genius. On a 40-year mortgage what does the difference in payment amount to per month—how much less does one pay per month? Two dollars and ninety-four cents. Well, if $2.94 a month is going to determine whether anyone can afford to buy a home or not, he is not in a position to buy a house. The startling feature about this is the small margin of difference between the monthly payment on a 30-year mortgage as compared with a 40-year mortgage. By agreeing to pay an additional $2.94 each month an occupant can pay off his mortgage ten years earlier. And the saving in interest amounts to $8,941.20 on a 30-year mortgage as opposed to the 40-year mortgage. This is what is saved by agreeing to pay $2.94 extra each month according to an article by Richard H. Steacy which appeared in the Toronto Star last Saturday night. Yet, the only solution the Liberals have come up with is that people should extend their mortgages. The other solution is to try to use the baby bonus instead of feeding the baby. This is what I call a baby solution to a big housing crisis.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but is time has expired.

Mr. Hellyer: Perhaps I can take this opportunity to reply to some of the suggestions which have been made from the other side of the house and give additional information with respect to some of the ideas which have been introduced into this debate.

I agree this is a very serious subject. I have also said publicly that in some parts of the country, though not in every part of the country, it amounts to a crisis. I also believe there is no single solution applicable to all parts of Canada; one has to look toward a variety of solutions.

This is precisely what is proposed in the report of the task force. I do not know whether this is the best time to debate that report. I shall not attempt tonight to give the kind of explanation or support of it that I would be prepared to give on another occasion, but since so much has been said with respect to a few of the ideas contained in it I should like to discuss some of them at greater length and also to refer to some of the others which have not been mentioned in the debate.

It has been suggested we have been underproducing for a number of years. I think it is only true with respect to one year, 1966—the only year in recent years when production fell behind net family formation. To my hon. friend from Broadview I might say that one of the reasons for that was the fact that the interest rate was set at that time at a level which kept mortgage money from flowing into the market. Consequently, sufficient housing was not built. With that circumstance, the rise in interest rates during the last few years, plus the fact that the postwar babies are now reaching the age of going to university, are looking for jobs, are getting married and looking for housing accommodation, you have a combination of circumstances that is responsible for the present situation. This was really the reason the task force was set up last year and given such broad terms of reference to cross the country, enquire into housing and urban development in Canada, and to report on ways in which the federal government, in company with other levels of government and the private sector, could help meet the housing needs of all Canadians and contribute to the development of modern, viable cities.

The hon. member for Broadview suggested that in the choice of members for the task force we had neglected to include certain categories of experts which he enumerated. May I tell him that this was done quite deliberately. It was done so that we would have a task force composed of people with no preconceived notions and who could approach the subject with open minds; people of wide experience who brought to that experience a variety of disciplines which would complement each other and enable them, in the course of a few months; travelling across the country listening to evidence, to see whether a concensus could be arrived at.

As I indicated to my hon. friend earlier on, that is exactly what happened. This concensus could not have been struck at the time the task force began, but by the time the task force had finished there was a unanimous report, as the hon. member mentioned this evening. So this was a mini-jury of people from across the country of differing experience, but without preconceived notions and any personal identification with existing policies. Therefore, I think that their concensus is more valuable than it would have been had the concensus been arrived at by people who had been more directly associated with the subject for a longer period of time.

Some of the impressions gained by the task force have already been reported to hon. members, but I might mention some of them again tonight. As my hon. friend for Hamilton West indicated, much of the growth is taking place in the cities. This is where, to a very considerable extent, the action is. More and more people are moving to the great metropolitan centres, and this seems to be an irresistible trend. There is opportunity in the cities. There is opportunity in the cultural field, in the employment field and in the education field. There is the variety that many people seem to want, and consequently this trend to urbanization is very well established, particularly so in our own country.

Whereas 100 years ago about 13 per cent of our people lived in urban centres, today over 70 per cent—soon it will be 75 per cent, later it will be 80 per cent and it may go as high as 85 per cent—of all the people in this country now live in urban centres.

This creates problems—problems caused by lack of planning, the problems of urban sprawl, the problem of poverty associated with urban life, the problem of transportation, the ability of people to move about from place to place in an urban environment. These problems tend to create in many urban dwellers a sense of frustration, which takes different forms in different people.

As I indicated a few moments ago, in attempting to meet these problems one has to look at a variety of situations, at the way different people are affected in different parts of the country, to see whether some solutions can be found that will meet the needs of the people in the various areas. For example, we visited in Ottawa the Bayshore community, which is a rental community. We found that the average income of most of the people living there was fairly high by cross country standards, but they did not have the down-payment for a new house. Most of them indicated that they would like to buy if the opportunity were available to them. So obviously the problem for these people is primarily one of equity—the opportunity to be able to acquire a home without the large down-payment which in many cases applies at the present time.

Then in Thompson, Manitoba, a mining community, we talked to numerous people but one in particular stands out, a lady who lives with her two children and her husband in a basement not because they do not have the income to buy a home but because there are no homes available. The average income there is very high by national standards, something of the order of $7,500 for the miners. They can afford to carry a decent sized mortgage, but there is literally no accommodation available. So there availability of mortgage money as well as equity are the two things preventing them from finding accommodation.

In respect to the poor, for either rental or purchase, the problems are the cost involved, the rents that are set and in many cases again the equity required. Because even where houses are available in parts of our country at fairly low rates, the size of equity required is beyond many of the people who are willing to buy.

We found this problem too in respect of public housing, which has been given so much publicity. We talked to a variety of people who expressed to us their emotional problems. One in particular stood out, though there were many, I refer to the case of a young girl who, when she applied for a job, gave her aunt's address so that she would not be directly identified with the project in which she lived because of the stigma attaching thereto. This was not a unique occurrence; it happened in a number of centres.

We came to the conclusion that a variety of solutions was necessary. It has been suggested that we put the emphasis on single family home ownership, but this is not correct. I do not think that anywhere in the report one can find a recommendation that emphasis be placed on single family home ownership. We did report that this is what the average Canadian would like to have if he could achieve his ambition. We did not say whether it was right or wrong; we merely reported faithfully.

We did say, however, that the range of choice should be as broad as possible, and that we should do everything within our means to make housing available to all Canadians in the maximum variety of choice. There should be the maximum of choice in respect to renting or buying, living on the ground or in apartments, living in the old city core or in the suburbs. This should be the choice not of officialdom, politicians or bureaucrats but the choice of the individuals directly concerned. We felt that this was a requirement not just for the rich, not just for the poor, not for the middle class or for the new so-called affluent poor, but for all Canadians.

We made a number of recommendations. Some of them have been referred to, others not. I should like to go over some of them again, including a few of those referred to by speakers on the other side of the house.

I agree with quite a bit of what the hon. member for Calgary North said. I do not agree with everything he said by any means, but I agree with some of it. Certainly, availability of money, land and construction capability are fundamental. The prices of these are important. One of the most important tasks of the task force was to try and get costs down so that more Canadians could have better housing without increasing their taxes at the same time; in other words, better value.

This is not an easy goal to achieve and is different from the goal recommended by many of the briefs that were presented to us. A large proportion of those briefs indicated that the solution some people wanted was higher subsidies. Higher subsidies, unfortunately, must be paid for by the Canadian taxpayer; and if the net result of the recommendations is merely a redistribution of income, then we must look at all these relative changes and see how advantageous they are to each particular group being served. If we have better value in housing and if costs are brought down, then everyone benefits. That was the cardinal principle governing our approach to our task. So, we decided quite early in our investigation that one of the first and most important things to do was to increase the total supply of housing. There is no doubt in our minds that the shortage in many of our urban centres is a contributing factor to high costs. In most of the great urban centres in this country the vacancy rate is very low or practically nil. In a situation like that, if the landlord increases your rent by $20, $30 or $40 a month, you have two choices—pay the extra rent or live in the park. And it's not much of a choice. Under those circumstances, the matter of immediate urgency is to increase the total supply of housing to the point where there is a choice. Then, if the landlord decides to raise your rent you have the choice of paying the increase or seeking accommodation elsewhere. If people have that choice prices will be affected.

We were interested to learn that no one had conducted research to find out exactly what the relationship was between supply and price. We asked Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to commission a study which would look at this problem in a preliminary way. That was done. The results were not profound, in the sense that much more investigation will have to be undertaken to determine exactly what that relationship is; but the people looking at the problem concluded that there is a definite relationship between the two, and that by increasing supply you will affect prices, which will go down. We felt it was most important that in this country we should increase the total housing stock to the point where there is a vacancy rate in all our great centres of 3 per cent, 4 per cent or 5 per cent, so that competition might take place in the market place.

Of course, in order to do all that you must have a supply of money. My hon. friend suggested we should call in the lending institutions and obtain commitments from them. He will be pleased to know that although we have not done that, I have written to our lending institutions asking them to give me in writing their intentions for the year so that we may know, both on a national and regional basis, what to expect. We have not had a chance to tabulate those results in full, as yet.

Mr. Brewin: Will the minister permit a question. I should be extremely interested if the minister would table in the house the replies he has obtained from these institutions to inquiries he made.

Mr. McCleave: Table the requests, too.

Mr. Hellyer: I shall be glad to think about that and to report to my hon. friend.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hellyer: I really would not want to promise to do that until I have asked our institutions whether the information was given in confidence. I can tell my hon. friend, however, that the response so far has been most gratifying. Although we have not tabled the results of our inquiry, our initial impression is that capital will be available to meet the housing target for 1969. If that impression is correct, and I believe it is, we should have sufficient money along with that being made available by government to make inroads this year into the situation and to increase the over-all housing supply considerably.

We must also have enough construction capability to meet our target. It appears that the building industry is capable of meeting the need and of meeting the building target if the money is available. As we indicated, we have set a goal of 1 million housing units to be built in the next five years. This will require $20 billion, of which $10 billion is to come from private lenders.

Incidentally, when the hon. member for Broadview talked about C.M.H.C. figures of 225,000 units, he was referring to the 1974 target which has been set to allow for increasing demand.

Mr. McCleave: He also mentioned catching up with the backlog.

Mr. Hellyer: Provision is made in our figures for the catching up of the backlog in addition to the large number of demolitions of the immediate past.

May I continue dealing with some of our recommendations, Mr. Chairman? We wish to encourage more private lending institutions to fulfil their social responsibilities. From the response we are getting it seems they are interested in so doing. I do not want to leave the impression that our institutions are altruists and that more than anything else they want to—

An hon. Member: Give service.

Mr. Hellyer: —meet our housing needs. At the same time, it is only fair to report that most of them have some interest in doing just that and feel some responsibility towards the Canadian nation in making the necessary funds available.

Another of our recommendations was that we should have more efficient and more industrialized building firms in order that costs might be brought down. It is probably no surprise to hon. members to learn that about half the builders in Canada have been in the building business for less than five years. In the buildng business we need organizations with more capital and expertise, particularly professional expertise, if we are to have the necessary research and development of better projects. We need builders who will stand behind their products. Another benefit of large organizations of course is the benefit of scale. They have the ability to reduce costs through long production runs. These economies and long production runs have been impossible to bring about in the last few years. No sooner has an organization become geared to produce houses en masse than the flow of mortgage money has been cut off, the result being that the organization has been disbanded. If we are to have economies of scale, the kind of research and development that is necessary, and the sorts of companies that will back their housing products, it is imperative for us to have larger organizations which will continue to exist with greater amounts of capital.

Mr. Lewis: And how will you do that?

Mr. Hellyer: It is most important for mortgage funds to be available continuously so that the mortgage money tap does not keep going on and off as it has done in the 20 years since the war. The fluctuation in the availability of mortgage money has been the bane of those trying to do a good job in this field and made it virtually impossible for the kind of job which ought to have been done.

Mr. Lewis: May I ask the minister a question. I am interested in what he is saying. Is the minister suggesting that construction companies have failed to expand? Is he also trying to suggest that if more mortgage funds became available small builders would not continue building because they are under capitalized? I am afraid I do not follow the logic of the minister's thinking.

Mr. Hellyer: The answer to the first question is, yes. Because mortgage funds have not been continuously available, many companies have gone out of business. That has been a deciding factor. Had mortgage funds been continuously available I think they would have been expanded and we should have seen competition in the building business which only other large companies could meet. We must exclude, of course, small specialty building. Small entrepreneurs will always carry that on. I found that the larger builders were improving their product and leading the way in design and service. If these companies had been encouraged they would have made a much greater impact on the housing needs of Canadians had there been a continuous flow of mortgage funds available.

The next recommendation the task force made, and this is one which has not received the amount of publicity and discussion which I think it deserves, is the suggestion that N.H.A. mortgages be extended to cover all existing housing. I believe this is one of the most important and significant of all the recommendations because in many parts of the country there are houses available for $10,000, $12,000 or $13,000 and in some cases for $6,000 or $7,000. The main reason these cannot be purchased by the average working man is not income in many cases, but equity. If the N.H.A. applied to those houses the same way it applies to new houses, the average working man would be able to buy them in due course with a small down payment of 5 per cent or even less, as was recommended.

I agree with my hon. friend regarding the second and third mortgages. These are the bane of the existence of the average person. I know of working men who have managed to buy a house with a second and third mortgage, but when these mortgages came up for renewal and new bonuses were required, they lost their houses. They were not able to cope. I believe this is a terrible situation. This recommendation is designed to make it unnecessary in the future for people to go into the market—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Go ahead.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the committee that the minister continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Alexander: I would like to hear the minister talk about urban renewal.

Mr. Hellyer: I intend to get to that.

I think this is one of the fundamentally important recommendations because we found in places such as St. John's, Newfoundland, Winnipeg and many other centres across the country a lot of used housing available which people would buy and would be in a position to purchase if they did not need large equities or did not have to get involved in second mortgage financing at the high interest rates and with the bonuses and penalties which go along with it.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister answer a question? I am very interested in what he is saying. If the average wage earner could buy a lot at a reasonable price, then the same argument would apply to a new home. Is that not where the government should start working with other governments?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, indeed. I will come to that in a moment. What my hon. friend is saying fits in with the philosophy of the report, that is the maximum range of choice, new and used, between the suburbs and downtown, between housing on the ground and housing in the air. The people should decide themselves what they want within the limits of geography and economics, which are always the limiting factors. Certainly, it can be done in this field.

I think the reason the housing act did not apply to older houses in former years was that it was felt the emphasis should be put on new production and in this way the filtering down process would take care of the needs of people of all income groups. The system did not work satisfactorily and one of the reasons was that the financial terms available for used housing were much less advantageous than the financial terms for new housing. If you have the same kind of financing for both the old and new homes, then you overcome to a very large extent this disability and allow people to purchase at the level which they can afford, either up, down or vertical as their circumstances change. They will be able to move from one kind of housing to another as their families' circumstances or tastes change.

In the process of trying to get costs down, there were three major areas to be attacked. As my hon. friend said, the cost of money is unquestionably the No. 1 problem. We referred to this in the task force report. It was outside the terms of our mandate, but we could not ignore it because we felt it was probably the most important contributing factor to the increase in costs in the last few years. We said this should be attacked as a matter of priority by all governments in Canada and by the people as well, by business and labour. Only by getting interest lowered to a reasonable level and controlling inflation will we be able to do what we ultimately want to do and that is make good housing available to every Canadian regardless of his circumstances. I think that is fundamental. I never said it could be done overnight, in a month or a year, but I believe that it can and must ultimately be done.

Mr. Stanfield: And ultimately we will all be dead.

Mr. Hellyer: I hope it won't take that long.

Mr. Baldwin: We won't need as much land then.

Mr. Hellyer: If we all die more land will be needed unless there is a more efficient method of handling that particular process. In respect of land, my hon. friend suggested almost precisely what the task force suggested and that is that land around all of the big cities should be bought by the cities for development. This is one of the four most important suggestions in the report of the task force. We looked at the situation across the country to see how the various systems were working. We looked at the experience in Saskatoon and found that it was good. Historically this was a matter of accident. In the 1930's the entrepreneurs defaulted on their taxes. The city took over the land. They probably thought they had an unrealizable asset, but after the war they started to develop this land and sold it to war veterans as they returned. Fundamentally, the system worked reasonably well. In 1953 the city planned to get out of this business, but someone suggested this was a good system, should be continued and be part of the city's permanent policy. The experience has been so successful that in Saskatoon you can now buy a fully serviced lot for less than $3,000. This includes a $500 or $600 profit for the city. Another benefit is that the city is in the best position to design the urban environment. The city can make provision for future requirements such as parks, transportation corridors and all other public uses. The task force felt this was a good system and felt that loans should be available to municipalities to enable them to acquire land and to service it. This is the quickest way in which costs can be lowered. It is difficult to set quantities, but something of the order of 10 per cent to 20 per cent cost reduction, if done universally across the country, could be achieved. It would take a considerable investment.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Woolliams: Would the federal government put up that investment?

Mr. Hellyer: That was the recommendation of the task force.

An hon. Member: What rate would the municipalities be charged?

Mr. Hellyer: I could not say until it becomes a matter of policy. One of the advantages of having it done by the federal government would be having the federal government's borrowing rate, to keep the cost down as much as possible. It was estimated that the investment might go to half a billion dollars after about five years, perhaps somewhere between $400 million and $800 million, but the return to the Canadian people would be fantastic.

Mr. Stanfield: That is what we told you during the election campaign.

Mr. Hellyer: It wasn't a new idea then either, and it could lead to a reduction of $1,000 to $2,000 in the cost of every house built in perpetuity in this country. These are real savings. This is the kind of program which can get the cost of housing down for all Canadians. That, after all, is the object of the exercise. It is something that can be done. It is something that could start to work very quickly if the policy were adopted.

Then, we recommended freeing the interest rate on N.H.A. loans, and I would like to tell the hon. member for Broadview why this was recommended. It was recommended for the reason that I discussed with the hon. member for York South, to make sure that there is continuity. But equally important at the present time is that the present limit of 2¼ per cent above the government of Canada bond borrowing rate is too high.

We had discussions with the banks and insurance companies last summer, and from talking to them I got the distinct impression that they felt it was too high too. The old limit of 1¾ per cent above the government bond rate approved in 1966 proved to be too low, but the new limit of 2¼ points above is too high. Consequently, the rate has been floating at something less than that for the last few months, and as my hon. friend knows the chartered banks are making loans now at 9 per cent, and C.M.H.C. at 9 per cent, which is three quarters of one per cent below the limit.

My own personal belief, and you could not shake me in this conviction although I cannot prove it, is that if there had not been a ceiling on the rate on January 1 then the rate charged by the chartered banks and C.M.H.C. would have remained at 8½ per cent. So I think we are paying half of one per cent more now simply because that ceiling was there by statute.

There is something in the psychology of lending institutions in that they use the government rate in their communications with their customers. They say, "After all, the government set this rate, and we have little discretion in respect to it." If there were not a set rate I, personally, think they would be willing to make loans at somewhere between 1¾ and 2 per cent above the long-term government of Canada average yields. Because of this, I do not agree with the hon. member. I think the Canadian taxpayers would get cheaper money if there were not a fixed ceiling at the present time, and in the long run, and of almost equal importance, through the economies of scale the building industry would be able to achieve as much as a 10 per cent reduction of costs over a period of time. This would be an additional benefit to the Canadian public as they went out to acquire new or rehabilitated housing.

As has been mentioned on the other side of the chamber, we suggested taxing profits on land to discourage speculation because we felt this was a practice which should be discouraged by every possible means. This is not something directed at the legitimate developer. It is directed at the person who buys land and does nothing with it, who allows his neighbour to bring about improvements, develop the land, and then reaps the benefit. This is an unearned increment, a socially created value which in effect he has not earned. We felt this should be taxed because it is not consistent that people should have that kind of bonus from having done nothing.

Then, we suggested that the red tape should be cut because in our view one of the reasons that housing is so much in short supply, and that the range of choice is so limited, is because of red tape. There are literally thousands of regulations which are nearly all negative in their application. They are like the ten commandments—thou shalt not. They are all negative, they are all restrictive, and in a sense they may prohibit the worst but they also prevent the best. There is no question about it; they make it impossible for the creators to create, for the people with initiative and imagination to introduce new ideas and techniques and pass on the benefit of them to the Canadian people.

Before closing I would like to say a few words on urban renewal and public housing.

Mr. Simpson: May I ask the minister a brief question before he moves on. He has been talking about all the problems that he is confronted with in meeting housing demands, and he mentioned Thompson, Manitoba. The people there realize the difficulty with respect to C.M.H.C. housing funds. However, as the minister probably knows, they are very interested in C.M.H.C. loans for multiple dwellings and high rise apartments. If C.M.H.C. mortgage money is available for high rise apartments in Vancouver, Toronto, Winnipeg, Montreal and other large cities, they cannot see why they are not entitled to at least a share of that type of mortgage money.

Mr. Hellyer: As I told my hon. friend the other day, Mr. Chairman, his representations are duly noted. I am as determined as he is that there will be adequate mortgage money available in Thompson this year to meet the needs of the community and get some of the people out of the basements, because it is not right or necessary that they should live in them. I think there are sufficient funds available to meet that need and I will do everything in my power to make sure that something is done.

Mr. Simpson: You realize, of course, that it is in the field of high rise apartments and multiple dwellings that they are so keenly interested?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes. Having visited the site and looked at the land developments taking place, I realize it is a variety of types in which they are interested. This fits in exactly with the philosophy we have recommended, that there should be a range of choice, and that there should be some rental accommodation for people to move into until they decide they want to buy their own houses. There should be as much range of choice as possible.

Now, on the question of urban renewal, and I am going to have to be very fast, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Baldwin: You have all day tomorrow.

Mr. Alexander: Let us get pertinent answers, like yes or no.

Mr. Hellyer: A lot of urban renewal funds were going into primarily commercial redevelopments. Some of these projects may have reached the stage where they may have to go ahead now. We will have to look at each one to determine this, but if they have not reached that stage the task force felt they should be postponed until there is a vacancy rate of 3 per cent or 4 per cent in the dwelling accommodation of a city. Then, the housing needs of the people would be met first, and the commercial redevelopment afterwards.

In other words, it is a question of priorities. People's lives should be given first priority and when there is enough housing for everybody so that people do not have to move into parks if their rents are raised, then we can go back and start commercial redevelopment. That is the kind of criteria that hopefully will be applied with respect to urban redevelopment.

Mr. Alexander: I should like to ask the minister one more question, although I do not like to interrupt him since he is doing an admirable job. Is the minister now suggesting that the municipalities will have to come to the government, and lay their plans before the government in order to see whether they are proceeding in a proper manner and according to the priorities set? I could speak of several cities. One example would be the city of Hamilton which has a dual role with regard to housing and the concentration on the commercial aspect of it. I should like to know whether these municipalities are supposed to get in touch with the minister or will the minister get in touch with them?

Mr. Hellyer: In the case of Hamilton and some of the other municipalities which have made representations, we will be getting in touch with them in a very few days in order to arrange meetings to discuss mutual problems. We will go over each project individually to decide what should be done in respect of it.

In respect of public housing, this is where I received my greatest education while on the task force tour. I had never before been exposed to the views of persons who had lived on the inside of public housing. I had listened to Dr. Rose all my life, and other experts and officials, but I had never had the opportunity of sitting down and listening to the points of view of the people who live in public housing. Some of these points of view were outlined in the report of the task force, and I shall not repeat them tonight. Some were referred to in Dr. Goldfarb's report. They confirm much of what we had learned during our visits across the country. I would not want members of the house to think that these ideas are unique or that we were the first to discuss them. Apparently this is a point of view which is becoming much more widely known. It is becoming a matter of much greater concern in many areas.

In the few minutes remaining I should like to give some further examples of the points of view which were expressed. First, I should like to read from the Halifax submission to the task force. I shall read two paragraphs:

Are our tenants happy in Public Housing?

In certain areas and under certain circumstances "yes", in many more "no".

What are the reasons why they are happy?

1. Some of our "projects" are self-contained row houses, serviced by the tenants themselves and having open areas close by where children can play, off the streets.

2. These "projects" have no stigma attached as they have street addresses, so they are not identified as "project" people.

3. There are no high rise buildings for families with numerous children.

4. Finally, of course, all have decent accommodations that they would never have at their income on the open market.

What are the reasons why some are unhappy?

1. They live in "projects" and their address includes the "project name, thus they live under the stigma of "project" people.

2. They suffer the loss of job opportunities because of the stigma, known everywhere in Halifax, that they are "project" people.

3. They live in walk-ups or high rise buildings where they are unable to control their privacy.

4. They live in buildings crowded on the land in such a way that there is at best very inadequate safe open areas for their children to play.

That was the point of view of the Halifax submission. You will see it is almost identical to the report of the task force in respect of our findings across the country. I wish to refer to another one from Winnipeg. This is what the people of Winnipeg had to say:

Deployment of Public Housing.

Much has been said about the stigma attached to public housing. If such stigma exists, and there are many reasons to think that it does, then its existence is in large measure attributable to the fact that public housing in the form of large projects is readily identifiable as such. This stigma inhibits the integration into the community of the families who inhabit public housing and thereby undermines the desired social rehabilitation of those families residing in public housing who could most benefit from such rehabilitation. Furthermore the concentration of socially and economically disadvantaged families in identifiable public housing projects tends to perpetuate patterns of social behaviour which are not conducive to the betterment of living standards. Under these conditions damaged families are not motivated to strive for self-improvement.

It is our belief that some of these more negative aspects of public housing can be eliminated to a great extent through the discontinuation of large projects and the introduction of public housing deployed throughout different parts of the community. It is not suggested however that a deployment policy of this kind can be carried out indiscriminately and without regard for compatibility in accepted patterns of social behaviour. To suggest that families which have been accustomed to a certain amount of permissiveness in the conduct of their lives should be thrust into a community where fairly rigid standards of social conduct are expected is certainly not realistic.

To give effect to a policy of integrating public housing within selected parts of the community it is essential that small-scale housing developments amounting to perhaps only a few units be built in suitable locations within existing residential districts. The availability of small parcels of land in relatively large numbers is also a prerequisite and it would be an advantage to be able to acquire property of this kind as it becomes available on the market. Very often it would be necessary to acquire and clear on a selective basis property encumbered by substandard development in basically sound residential neighbourhoods.

I should like to give two more examples in the brief time which is available.

Mr. MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond) What do you mean "brief time"? You have been given an extra half hour already, after refusing somebody else the same privilege.

Mr. Hellyer: I did not.

I should like to indicate that the experience in the United States is almost identical. I wish to read from the report of the National Commission on Urban Problems. I admit at the outset that they encouraged continuance of public housing, but in a changed form.

Mr. Gilbert: Why do we not do the same thing?

Mr. Hellyer: That is exactly what we are doing. The quotation is as follows:

> The Commission is most emphatically in favour of continuing publicly subsidized housing for the poor. We vigorously support a wide extension of such housing, although with certain changes of emphasis and administration.
> But we do believe that the grave defects which at present afflict public housing should be either cured or greatly reduced. The housing of the poor will, in fact, be helped and not hindered by a frank discussion of these weaknesses. Only in this way can we gain the impetus which is needed for improvement.

Then, a little further on the report continues:

> High-rise projects which may have been inevitable on Manhattan and perhaps necessary near downtown Chicago have been built rather indiscriminately in many cities and sections. In New York and to a certain extent in Chicago, skyscraper living is practised by the well-to-do, and does not single out the poor. It may, in fact, give a certain social prestige to some. But in most cities of the country, high-rise public housing units clearly indicate what they are—large congregations of the poor. They stand out in many communities like so many sore thumbs.
> This concentration of large masses of the poor necessarily gives to many of them a pronounced feeling of inferiority in a society that emphasizes material success. The effect is especially marked among children. To a somewhat lesser degree it is similar to what youngsters used to feel and suffer who grew up in the "poorhouses" and "poor farms" of an earlier generation.

The Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

IMMIGRATION—TIMING OF DISTINCTION BETWEEN DESERTERS AND DRAFT DODGERS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise as a grievance the policy pursued by officers of the Department of Manpower and Immigration in respect of military deserters, particularly, seeking admission to Canada either as visitors or as immigrants at the border between the United States and Canada.

On a number of occasion other members and I have asked the minister to tell us what the policy was and to indicate whether the policy has been changed and why. I asked the minister whether he would not consider tabling the directive which was apparently issued to immigration officers in July of last year. On Thursday last, as reported at page 6012 of Hansard, the minister replied to a question by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) and said:

> Mr. Speaker, in this case such documents have always been regarded as privileged and by long tradition have not been tabled in the house.

The first point I want to make is that no one, it seems to me, can accept that answer in respect of this particular kind of document. When the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. MacEachen) or his department issues a directive to officers at the border as to how they are to deal with applicants for entry into Canada, what the minister is doing is issuing a statement of policy. It is surely desirable that the public and members of this house know what that policy is so we may advise those who ask us about it. This is not merely an exchange of a communication dealing with some internal matter which is usually considered confidential. This is either an elaboration of the act or a regulation, or the application of a regulation or a direction to an officer as to who he is to admit or who he is not to admit, what questions he is to ask and what questions he is not to ask.

In short, let me repeat that this is a directive or a statement of government policy with regard to the entry of certain applicants from the United States to Canada. It has, when issued that way as an instruction to the officer, the force of law. It is in a minor sense legislation for the guidance of those who carry the Immigration Act and regulations into effect. Therefore, I reject the minister's suggestion that this particular directive should not be tabled, and I still importune him to table it. If there is more than one directive, and if directives have been issued over a period of time, he should table them all so all members of the house, indeed the public and those people in the United States who are contemplating coming to Canada, will have public knowledge of what the policy actually is. The minister cannot, in my submission, hide behind the general confidentiality of intra or interdepartmental documents.

I think some shameful things have happened at the Canada-U.S. border. Let me start with the last incident which happened, and which I think was disgraceful and reprehensible to the nth degree. I am informed by many people that not only are military deserters from the United States not admitted across the border, and I will deal with that in a moment, but that in most cases the Canadian immigration officers inform United States officers that a certain person has not been admitted into Canada and that the refusal for admission was based on the fact the individual was a military deserter. I am informed that in numerous cases when the applicants at the border left the Canadian immigration office and went to the United States immigration office they were arrested for having deserted from military service.

Since when have we become the kind of satellite to the large power to the south of us that we make it our concern to act in this way? If these officers are acting in this way without authority from the minister it is about time the minister told them to cut it out. We are not a country of spies for another country, and it is a contemptible thing that any officer of this country at the border should act in that way.

This is not guesswork, this has happened in numerous cases. People have in fact been arrested as they went from our immigration office to the U.S. immigration office because of our refusal to admit them. On what grounds are we doing this?

There is nothing in the act that I have seen, and I have read the act, and there is nothing in the regulations that I have seen, and I have read them, that authorizes an immigration officer to ask any question whatsoever about the military status of anyone applying for entry into this country. The Immigration Act and the regulations set out certain assessment points, as the minister well knows, and the act sets out some very well defined classes of persons who are not admissible. There is not a word in those regulations about military status. May I remind the minister that the history of Canadian immigration is full of people who fled eastern Europe and some other countries in order to evade conscription in those countries because in conscience they could not accept the service which was being forced upon them.

I see no reason whatsoever, except a servile attitude on the part of Canada, for treating American young men who object to fighting an immoral war in Viet Nam differently from the way we treated literally tens of thousands of immigrants all through the years who refused to accept military service in their countries for similar reasons.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter that has been raised by the hon. member is a very comprehensive one, and it is quite impossible to deal in any detail with the many inferences, suggestions and charges that have been made.

On the question of the tabling of the directive, guideline or memorandum that was issued last July, it is a fact we all know that normally communications within a department are privileged. I said on two occasions, I think, that by long tradition these documents are not normally tabled. I told my hon. friend that I would consider whether in this case a special exception ought to be made to that policy. I am still considering whether it might not be worth while to table the document because the purpose is not to conceal it or to hide behind it. As a matter of fact, I welcome any discussion or suggestions about how we should treat this very difficult and sensitive problem.

My hon. friend spoke about immigration officers in a rather harsh, and I think somewhat unfair, way. I have been trying to find the hard evidence to support the charges that are now so commonly made against officers in the service of Canada. While we have to consider the rights of persons who want to evade the draft in the United States, or indeed we want to understand the motives of people who want to refuse to carry out their military service in the United States, I think also we should be careful about the rights of Canadian citizens who are serving Canada in the immigration service. My hon. friend spoke tonight about numerous cases of officers who have reported persons to the United States who were subsequently arrested. That is an important charge. I would like to have some evidence. I have asked other persons who have made these charges about cases of arrest, and cases of reporting, to provide the hard evidence, but I have not received it yet. I am quite concerned about it.

It is not the purpose of Canadian immigration officers to act as spies or agents for any power, the United States or any other. In the recent case of the four students who were apparently out to test Canadian policy in practice and who impersonated United States military deserters, it is difficult to know really, in law, in a technical sense, whether these men were really rejected. I think that at one point they may have withdrawn their application. As far as I can determine, and I have gone to some lengths to find, out, these officers did not call their United States counterparts and say: We are turning back some military deserters. As far as I can determine they passed no information with respect to the so-called military status of these persons. I understand that as a matter of routine at the border, when a person is not admitted this information is conveyed to the United States counterpart.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but the minister's time has expired.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—C.T.B. HALIFAX—PAY ADJUSTMENTS FOR PERSONNEL

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): The other day I endeavoured to attain some information from the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) with regard to a situation which has continued to affect many employees at the Canadian Forces Base in Halifax. The best way in which I can shed light on the situation is to quote from two letters involving two different groups, and then perhaps to ask the minister two or three brief questions.

The first letter from which I shall quote is one directed to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau)—it is one of a series of letters going back several weeks. This one is dated February 10 and it refers to renegotiation of certain contracts for labourers and helpers at the Forces Base in Halifax. I shall refer briefly to the second part of the letter because it has something to do with the overall question, that is, the wages of actual workers.

> Recent negotiations for wages in the General Trades and Labour Group, Zone No. 7 resulted in a considerable number of employees left out of the actual collective bargaining negotiations.
> The employer by accident or design did not provide the negotiators with the total number of employees in each classification and as a result this affected the asking price—

I interpret those last words to mean "bargaining price"

> —for these employees at the bargaining table. Further, these employees were not notified that they had a classification or level until after ratification was completed. These incidents were contrary to Bill C-170 Section 2, Sub-section (m), Sub-paragraph (VI).
> Labourers and trades helpers have written grievances in respect of this matter.

In summary, these representations were turned down in a memorandum dated February 12, the reason given being that the way in which a contract had been negotiated was not a proper subject of a grievance.

The essence of the difficulty which appears to be developing at the dockyard at Halifax is to be found in the following: The total number of labourers negotiated for was 52. The total number of trades helpers negotiated for was 39. The actual number of labourers employed and eligible under the act was in excess of 120. The actual number of trades helpers employed and eligible under the act was in excess of 62. In other words, a total of 182 as opposed to 91 was actually the subject of bargaining. This meant that these employees were given arbitrary wages based on negotiated wages which were inferior to what they would have received if their numbers and pre-1966 wages were available to the negotiators at the time of bargaining.

That is the essence of the point. Approximately 200 of these men are now being told there is no possibility of re-opening negotiations under these contracts until such time as the contracts automatically come up for review and renewal.

The second point that I will deal with briefly involves those employees that are casuals, those employed on a casual basis of six months or less. The only point that is of real continuing concern to the men at C.F.B. Halifax is the impact felt by a labourer or trades helper who, because of a compensatory accident, is laid off and then returns to work. There have been several instances where, although they were originally permanent employees in a sense prior to the compensatory accident, they were rehired at the casual rate, which consequently carried a much lower rate of pay.

The net result of these two situations is that at C.F.B. Halifax at the present time there are five different rates of pay for labourers. I know the minister is aware of certain communications from the Dockyard Trades and Labour Council on other matters that might be an omen of difficulties to come among the workers at the yard. But I want to stress the great urgency of reconsidering the opening up of these contract negotiations.

Over the last two and a half years my former colleague in what was then the dual riding of Halifax, now the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants, the present Leader of the Opposition, and I found ourselves deeply involved in these continuing problems as a result of representations from virtually each of these men individually. It is a matter of regret that the present situation still prevails. I suggest it will lead to a very serious decline in morale, and I do not want to predict that it might even lead to a more serious reaction within the work force at the yard in Halifax.

I think these men are entitled to be told why they were summarily rejected at the fourth level of the grievance procedure. It would appear to anybody who has been following the situation that this indeed is a proper subject matter for grievance. In fairness to these men, their families and to the general morale of the work force at C.F.B Halifax the minister should seriously consider reviewing the present situation, with the very definite object in mind of reopening contract discussions. Failing that, if that is not possible—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the hon. member's question, representation or plea, was with respect to a contract only recently completed. He asks that the matter should be reopened or renegotiated. I think the hon. member will appreciate that, as we are already behind schedule, the government is doing its best and is being exhorted to do even better in concluding the first round of contract negotiations. Therefore, reopening a contract that has just been completed represents, in the ordinary course of events, not only an instability in the whole bargaining process, but something that is inherently undesirable. Such action would impose very great difficulties on the timetable we have tried to observe in getting the first round of negotiation with literally scores of bargaining units completed. I am not personally aware of the circumstances surrounding the situation the hon. member has alluded to but I have taken note of his remarks and will look into the matter. I would be less than frank, however, if I were to appear to hold out any hope that reopening a contract just signed in order for it to be renegotiated is a procedure that is likely to be undertaken.

Mr. Forrestall: Then, you will have a strike on your hands.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STATEMENT RESPECTING OFFSHORE MINERAL RIGHTS

[Translation]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on December 2 I announced in the house certain steps being taken by the government and certain proposals being made to the provinces with respect to offshore mineral rights. At the same time I issued maps showing the location of mineral resource administration lines off the east and west coasts, and stated that similar lines would also be drawn in the regions of Hudson Strait, Hudson Bay and James Bay, together with a line defining the boundary between submerged lands adjacent to the provinces and those adjacent to the Northwest Territories and Arctic islands.

I am pleased to announce today that these lines have now been drawn, and I am issuing at this time a map showing their location.

[English]

As stated in my earlier announcement, the federal government will continue to administer and manage the mineral resources on the seaward side of the mineral resource administration lines. The coastal provinces are being offered the opportunity to administer all the offshore mineral rights on the landward side of these lines, and the federal government is prepared to concede to them the revenues derived therefrom. Furthermore, should this proposal prove acceptable to the provinces, we would in addition be disposed to place half the revenues accruing from the mineral resources seaward from these lines in a single national pool to be shared among the provinces on some basis acceptable to them.

[Translation]

I have sent to the Premiers a copy of today's statement as well as the new mineral resource administration lines map for the Hudson Bay-Hudson Strait region. I have been pleased with the general response thus far to my announcement of December 2. In particular, a number of oil companies are now proceeding with major programmes of exploration offshore and they seem to have obtained the necessary confidence to do this from the positive statement of federal policy. I hope and believe that we should now be able to work out with the provinces the details of financial and other arrangements to implement these proposals.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this matter, of course, has a considerable background in terms of federal-provincial relations. The government of Canada sought a legal opinion from the Supreme Court of Canada on the legal rights to minerals off the west coast of the country. The government of Canada having announced it was proceeding with this reference, there were discussions of the matter at federal-provincial conferences at that time. The then Prime Minister of Canada gave the provinces the assurance, upon the legal opinion being obtained, that the question of offshore mineral rights would thereafter be discussed with the provinces.

Therefore, there are two questions that immediately occur to anyone. The first question is whether the legal decision with regard to rights off the west coast is equally appropriate to the offshore rights off the east coast. There are a number of provinces that have argued very vigorously that this is not the case. The legal position regarding mineral rights under Hudson Bay is, of course, recognizably in a quite different category. I do not think the provinces have ever claimed any legal right to the minerals under Hudson Bay.

In my view, regardless of the merits of the government's position or of the outcome of any eventual negotiations or discussions, the government's method of proceeding constitutes a breach of the assurance given by the former prime minister to the provinces. I am convinced that the result of that breach will be a further deterioriation in the relations between the federal government and some provinces. The unnecessarily inflammatory statement was made at a time when every effort ought to be directed towards making federal-provincial relations as cordial and even as possible. I therefore again deplore the manner of the government's proceeding, which is bound to result in a further deterioration in federal-provincial relations.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's proposal seems a reasonable basis for negotiations. However I cannot help wondering if that statement was made without any prior consultations with the provinces; or is it the result of consultation with the provinces, and is this proposal their general consensus of the matter?

It seems to me that matters of this sort that have been the subject of controversy for a considerable period really cannot be settled by pronouncements from the throne. They ought to be settled by negotiations and discussions, in order that some consensus may be reached that is acceptable to the federal and provincial governments. If the provinces have not been consulted, then I hope the Prime Minister's statement is merely the basis for discussion rather than a final decision. I also hope the Prime Minister will be prepared to go one step further and tell us how this matter may be dealt with in a practical way. Unfortunately pools of oil and mineral deposits know nothing about lines drawn on maps. Often the only way to develop these resources is to unitize an entire oil field or mineral deposit. Joint action by the federal and provincial governments may be necessary to unitize an area in order that it can be developed to the maximum extent. I therefore hope the government will be prepared to sit down with the provinces and discuss the unitization of mineral and oil resources. I also hope that as the result of today's statement the Prime Minister and his ministers will follow up this matter so that some agreement may be reached. The matter has been long outstanding and the sooner a settlement acceptable to all parties concerned is reached, the sooner the areas in question will be developed.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the proposal made by the Prime Minister may have happy results if it is the basis for open and fruitful discussions.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

However if it is a final decision, that is if the federal government position is not negotiable, I want everyone to know that we will stand up for Quebec's interests. Quebec values the integrity of its territory like the apple of its eye. For some years, the provincial government has been taking more and more responsibilities in that respect. At a time when Quebec does not have enough financial resources, it is most important that it keeps the whole of its revenues accruing from its natural resources.

Understanding and generosity will have to be displayed towards Quebec if there is to be no more useless squabble between both government levels.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ADJUDICATION ON PROBLEMS OF MORALE—CURTAILMENT AND DELAY IN DELIVERY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had a question for the Postmaster General who was absent on official business. I have no doubt he is aware of the announcement issued on Friday by the council of the Postal Union denying his earlier statement regarding the morale in the Post Office and describing the situation as explosive. Will the minister say whether he intends to take any action either to provide for third party adjudication of the problems, or for some other action that will stop the steady deterioration in this department?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, members of the opposition insist on speaking of a steady deterioration in the morale of the Post Office. I know of no such deterioration. I see these statements from time to time, Mr. Speaker, and they do become expanded. There is no explosive situation either in Montreal or Toronto relating to the letter carriers or to the postal workers themselves.

A part of the statement made by the council mentions among other things that I was losing part of the gains by employing 500 supervisors. I may say there have been no additional supervisors employed since I took over this department. Over a year ago some 200 were budgeted for other purposes by my predecessor. It is in this way that many of the changes taking place come to be expanded, particularly by members of the opposition.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not answer my question and I have no right to persist in asking for an answer. I simply point out he did not answer my question. I would like to ask him whether his attention has been drawn to the instructions given by the unions to their members, which are described as the unions' interpretation of the collective agreement. If so, does the minister propose to take any action in this connection?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, my attention has been drawn to those instructions and in due course the attention of the leaders of the union will be drawn to the instructions which they have issued.

In direct reply to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to say there is no necessity for third party adjudication when explosive situations do not exist.

Mr. Stanfield: Yesterday I tried to get the Minister of Labour to offer his advice to the Postmaster General, but he was more modest. I would like to ask the Postmaster General a question arising out of the statement of the council of the Postal Union, that mail service is deteriorating and inefficiency is fast becoming a new guide of operation. I would think these men would be in a position to know. Will the minister today or on motions at a very early opportunity tell the house what action he actually proposes to take with regard to this deterioration?

Mr. Kierans: I have been very frank, Mr. Speaker, in admitting that in the triangle of Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto the physical facilities are what they were 20 years ago when this department was handling roughly one-half of the mail presently being handled. I said in the cities of Montreal and Toronto in particular that facilities have to be modernized, and the people working there would have to be given acceptable working conditions and the latest in automatic equipment. We are aware of this and are conducting many studies, Mr. Speaker, seeking to eliminate as much as we can the delays which are occurring.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I have a specific question for the Postmaster General. Can the minister explain why within the last month delivery of mail to Toronto has slowed down and that as much as four to five days is now required for the delivery of a first class letter?

Mr. Kierans: The majority of mail is delivered, Mr. Speaker, as it was formerly. Last week, for example, a person was kind enough to tell me that a letter posted in Hamburg on a Monday morning was delivered on Tuesday morning in Montreal.

An hon. Member: That is humbug.

Mr. Kierans: I will give you the postmark.

An hon. Member: I will give some too.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Kierans: The majority of the mail is delivered on time but a great deal of it is not, which I frankly admit. What I would like to point out, however, is that in the last six months a great deal of attention has been drawn to the Post Office, and people who now pay more for the services that they previously received are quite apt to question those services, and quite rightly so. Therefore—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Edmonton West on a supplementary.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): If there is no unrest among the postal workers, how about the minister's restoring some rest and confidence in the public paying for the service; and in particular would he advise businessmen, whose deliveries have been cut back not only to five days a week but to one delivery per day in many sectors, not only in Toronto and Montreal but in many cities of Canada, what he intends to do?

Mr. Kierans: The business delivery is normally twice a day, Mr. Speaker; and where it is only once a day, if the businessmen of that community want it twice a day they have only to advise me.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Come, now; come off your high and mighty!

Mr. Speaker: Order. I believe the Chair should now recognize the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, and if there is time later I will return to other hon. members who would like to pursue this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

STATEMENT ATTRIBUTED TO MINISTER RESPECTING FOREIGN INVESTMENT IN CANADA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question regarding the speech made in Washington yesterday by the Minister of Finance, which I assume the Prime Minister saw prior to its delivery. Since the Minister of Finance invited continued capital investment from the United States, without stating any conditions as to the exercise of extraterritorial rights by parent companies and the effects of American guidelines requiring subsidiaries in Canada to return a percentage of their undistributed profits to the United States, may I ask if this statement represents the government's policy with respect to foreign investment in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I confess I had not seen the speech. The mails were a bit slow in bringing it to me.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps it might be unfair to comment on it too fully, but I think it is obvious that the minister stated part of the government's policy. However, he cannot put everything in one speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a supplementary question may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has discarded the recommendations of the Watkins report regarding a state trading corporation and a government agency to supervise the operations of wholly owned foreign subsidiaries doing business in this country?

Mr. Trudeau: We have not discarded those recommendations, Mr. Speaker. We are still in the process of seeing what aspects of that report can be implemented.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): As a further supplementary question may I ask whether the Prime Minister would avail himself of an early opportunity, on motions, to state what action the government proposes to take regarding the recommendations in the Watkins report?

[Mr. Speaker.]

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS, MAN.—ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. However, in his absence I should like to direct it to the parliamentary secretary, with a request that possibly the minister could answer it upon his next appearance in the house. Has the minister received a letter or other representation from Chief Gordon Lathlin of The Pas Indian band making two specific requests concerning the administration of health services to members of his band? If so, I should like to ask the minister when he will be in a position to answer these requests.

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice, in order to submit it to the minister who will probably answer it tomorrow or on a day when his presence is required in the house.

[English]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the hope that his department might be able to bring about a fair settlement of the dispute, is the minister's department investigating the picketing of the Indian health clinic at The Pas, and the charge by the Chief there that the supervisor has discriminated against Indians.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of that matter; but I will inquire immediately and I hope to be in a position to answer at the next sitting of the house.

[English]

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—REQUEST FOR REVIVAL OF SURVEY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the same minister. In the light of the representation made to his department from the province of Newfoundland over the week end—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is not a supplementary question. However, I will allow the hon. member to put his question, due to the circumstances.

Mr. Marshall: In the light of the representation made to his department from the province of Newfoundland over the weekend, will the minister advise if he will accede to the request of the province to restart survey work on the proposed National Park at Bonne Bay immediately.

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, I have been told about that request and we are now considering it. We hope to be in a position to settle that conflict satisfactorily.

[English]

NATURAL RESOURCES

NEWFOUNDLAND—MINERAL AND FISHING RIGHTS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister and is in relation to the statement he made in the house today on motions. Has the government of Canada concluded negotiations with the government of France regarding offshore mineral rights, and fishing rights off the south shore of Newfoundland?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, we have not concluded such negotiations.

[Translation]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the rumors circulating in legal circles in Montreal, and after the publication over the week-end of certain newspaper articles revealing that some members of the Diplomatic Corps might be involved in some kind of narcotics traffic, can the Prime Minister tell us if he is aware of those incidents and whether the Minister of Justice or the officials of that department have briefed him on that matter?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recall that his question has already been asked.

[English]

WEST GERMANY—POSSIBLE CONFRONTATION ARISING FROM ELECTION OF PRESIDENT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question is for the Prime Minister. Within the limitations of security, what initiative is Canada, as a member of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, taking in connection with the potential confrontation in West Berlin, to endeavour to bring a halt to the slide downhill? What representations have been made and has there been any discussion between the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the ambassador of the U.S.S.R. in this connection?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there have been no discussions involving myself, but I cannot speak for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps it might be best to ask him when he is in the house tomorrow.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is the zero day so far as Berlin is concerned. Has the Prime Minister no knowledge regarding initiatives having been taken?—for after all this is one field in which the Prime Minister has an overriding prerogative.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, if tomorrow is zero day I would have thought the right hon. gentleman would have thought of asking the question yesterday, when the minister was here.

An hon. Member: Why don't you grow up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, the facetiousness of the Prime Minister with regard to a question as serious as this is not in keeping with his position. In view of the fact that there appears to be a selective judgment in respect of information supplied to the parliament of Canada regarding the future of people all over the world, does the Prime Minister not think it necessary to supply some information, even though he has been away from international affairs for the past two days?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the right hon. gentleman and parliament that I am not denying them any information. I do not have any information whether there has been any contact with officials in Berlin.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister refuses to give the information. Is there an acting secretary of state for external affairs, or will the President of the Privy Council, who is making silent grimaces at the moment, make an explanation?

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very serious developments that have taken place in the last 24 hours, as reported in the press this morning, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether any members of the NATO organization were consulted about the decision to have an election of the West German president in West Berlin or was the decision made by West Germany alone, or was it made in conjunction only with one of the occupying powers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to refer the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister, with the same earnestness with which I assume he is dealing with this important situation, that he bring this matter to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, urging upon him to make representations to the powers directly concerned with the situation, that they should not be ready to escalate it to a more dangerous point than it has now reached?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I should be glad to convey the urgency of the matter, as expressed by the hon. member of the N.D.P. to the attention of the minister.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATION AS TO PARTICIPATION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister to confirm that the government has now received a report from the federal task force studying our future relations with Europe and our defence policy, and that the report recommends that Canada continue its partnership with NATO.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the task force report is an internal document, and until such time as we decide to publish a white paper or make the report public, it is a secret document.

An hon. Member: The press has it.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

NATIONAL CAPITAL

REQUEST THAT HULL BE PART OF FEDERAL CAPITAL

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, if a few questions on Canada are allowed, I would like to ask one of the Prime Minister. The western region of Quebec, and more particularly that of Hull, has just been stabbed in the back by the government of Quebec and once again forgotten, this time when the faculty members of the University of Quebec were chosen. Does the government of Canada consider amending clause 16 of the Constitution in order to add the name of Hull to that of Ottawa, so that this part of Quebec threatened by economic suicide could become part of the federal capital of Canada?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt whether the hon. member wishes the Prime Minister to make a statement in reply to his own.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The matter was discussed at the federal-provincial conference, and I shall take into account the hon. member's important representations at the next negotiations.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF GENERAL MOTORS PRODUCTS TO EXAMINE SUSPECTED DEFECTS

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which relates to the recall of a large number of motor vehicles in the United States and in Canada for checking of faulty carburettors. In the United States this recall is being supervised by the federal government. Is the Minister of Transport or anyone in his department supervising the recall procedure in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, not to my knowledge. We have no authority at the present time to do this. As I indicated to the house the other day, under certain conditions a satisfactory arrangement was made with General Motors to see that all faulty cars are repaired to satisfactory requirements. I hope that in the not too distant future it will be possible to present legislation which will govern automobile standards at the point of manufacture, or importation into Canada. If that legislation provides for direct supervision, this will be exercised by the government at that time.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether his department has made any investigation into the complaints of last fall, that automobile manufacturers were over-pricing on the cost of manufacturing and installing automobile safety devices.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, pricing would not be our primary concern. We are concerned primarily with safety. If my hon. friend is interested in the price of automobiles or components, it would be better to direct his question to the appropriate department.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Transport is bringing in this new proposed legislation, will he make sure that legislation for safety is the same on both sides of the border?

Mr. Hellyer: To the extent it is possible, I think it is desirable from the standpoint of the manufacturers to have the same regulations in respect of safety on each side of the border. I do not think, however, that the parliament of Canada would want to limit itself to those safety features which have been approved in the United States. If we pass legislation I should think we would require authority to regulate standards different than those in the United States, if we felt those imposed by the government of the United States were not satisfactory for application in Canada.

POWER

URANIUM CITY—ELECTRICAL SERVICE SUPPLIED BY UTILITY COMPANY

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in view of the widespread dissatisfaction with the high cost and poor quality of the service offered residents of Uranium City by the private utility company presently supplying electricity to the area, can the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say whether Eldorado Nuclear Limited, the Crown corporation primarily concerned with the development of the community, has considered taking over this service directly, itself, or alternatively, using its considerable local influence to get the service improved?

Mr. Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that this question should be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

TESTING OF SAMPLES FROM FARM DRYERS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there have been reports that the Board of Grain Commissioners in Winnipeg have been unable to deal promptly with grain samples received from farm dryers and return reports promptly to those operating these dryers, will the Minister of Agriculture investigate and, if necessary, take what steps are needed to correct this situation?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that there has been a very significant increase in the number of samples coming in to the Board of Grain Commissioners for testing. Because the drying operators need to know as rapidly as possible whether the grain is of milling and baking quality, we are trying to meet the demand as quickly as possible.

I should also like to say because of the increased number of samples coming in with the use of more dryers, and the improvement in weather conditions, we can assume a much larger volume of grain is being dried on farms.

Mr. Gleave: Can the Minister assure the house that these terminals will report promptly the results of grain sampling?

Mr. Olson: Every effort is being made to get the information back to the farmer or operator as rapidly as possible.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

It was reported yesterday that some paintings stolen from the late Maurice Duplessis' collection had been offered to the Postmaster General's wife. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will make an inquiry to find out if the same offer was made to other members of his cabinet?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSOLIDATION OF ARMED FORCES BASES

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the government completed its examination of the study made by the Department of National Defence into the consolidation of Canadian Armed Forces bases? If so, is the minister in a position to advise us as to the regions which could be seriously affected by the change of status of any of those bases?

Hon. Leo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated previously, the study has been terminated for some time now, and the department is preparing submissions for the cabinet concerning the eventual dispensation of some of the bases of Canada.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister presents his recommendations to the cabinet, would he please keep in mind the serious effect that any re-slating of responsibility would have on the camp at Picton?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

NATURAL RESOURCES

OIL DRILLING—STEPS TO PREVENT DAMAGE TO FISHERIES AND WILDLIFE

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker. When the minister presents his Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question emanates from the announcement made today by the Prime Minister. Are any restrictions planned with respect to undersea oil drilling similar to those in the United States, in order to prevent possible oil spillage damage to our fisheries and wildlife?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to assure hon. members that regulations already exist which assure safety in drilling. The requirements in respect of the depth of casings of approved wells in Canada are very extensive. Therefore there has been significant safety in respect of all drilling that has taken place. These safety precautions exist already in the regulations.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have these regulations been discussed and worked out with the provinces so that there will be some general arrangements, some universality, about the regulations, even under the measures proposed by the Prime Minister?

[Mr. Hees.]

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I look forward to these discussions and have no doubt that in this matter, as in matters of unitization referred to earlier, discussions and negotiations with the provinces will be very easy.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Have there been no discussions to date?

Mr. Lang: There have been no discussions about concrete issues of co-ordination, beyond and behind the resource administration lines, since those lines were announced.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—BOMBING OF CIVILIAN TARGETS BY NIGERIA

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Inasmuch as the British Foreign Secretary, Michael Stewart, summoned the Nigerian High Commissioner in London yesterday to express the British government's anxiety about reports of Nigerian bombing attacks on civilian targets in Biafra, in order to supplement this British initiative will the Canadian government inquire into the matter and reinforce the British government's representations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have discussed this matter with the minister, and I am sure he will be in a position to say by tomorrow whether any action has been taken.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Because of the widespread demands by members of parliament in Britain, and the press and public, to re-examine British foreign policy regarding the shipment of arms to Nigeria, will the Canadian government now consider asking the British government not to ship arms into Nigeria?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I have stated before that we made this representation to the British government. I have stated it publicly, and I have stated it privately. Now that the hon. member says the public in Britain is pressing the government in that sense, it would seem to me there is no need for those of us on our side to intervene.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Do I understand that the Prime Minister is now saying his government has made representations to the British government urging the government of Britain not to ship arms to Nigeria-Biafra, whereas I understood previously that the Prime Minister had simply indicated that it was the view of the government of Canada that it would not ship such arms, and generally that other countries should not? Am I to understand from the Prime Minister now that specific representations were in fact made to the British government urging it specifically not to ship arms to Nigeria?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I stood up in this house and said that we disapprove the shipment of arms by any country—

An hon. Member: You say "any country". That is not the same.

Mr. Trudeau: It is not the same, eh?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see any great difference. If I say "by any country", it certainly includes the United Kingdom, because that is a country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Since it is quite clear that the Prime Minister has said the government communicated with the United Kingdom government—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member ask the question.

Mr. MacInnis: Again, on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have made the remark before and I make it again: If the bums and idiots want to keep it up, I will outwait them. I was saying that the Prime Minister has indicated that the Canadian government has communicated with the government of the United Kingdom. Would the Prime Minister table that communication?

Mr. Trudeau: It would be a little difficult to table, Mr. Speaker, because I made the representations verbally when I met the Prime Minister of Great Britain—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Now, where are the bums this time?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nielsen: You told them in London where the bums were.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ROD SERVICE CONTRACT CANCELLATION

Hon. Martial Asselin (Charlevoix): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General.

Would the Postmaster General tell the house why he has cancelled the contract of Rod Service Limited in Montreal, and also if that company will receive compensation for this breach of contract?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I had a meeting with the owner and the management of Rod Service Limited yesterday. We have signed a contract and we shall acquire a number of vehicles. Moreover, as of March 15, we shall assume mail delivery in the Montreal metropolitan area.

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question. Could the minister tell the house whether the whole staff of Rod Service Limited will be able to get jobs in the Post Office Department, since they are losing their present jobs and are now unemployed?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, I have already issued a press release in which I made some details clear. We are going to hire most of the drivers who wish to work for the federal government. As to the others, we shall offer them part-time jobs and in the meantime we shall meet the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, with a view to offering those people a retraining course should they wish to take advantage of it.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise to welcome the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona. I am glad to hear that he preaches the same doctrine as his colleague the hon. member for York East.

WATER RESOURCES

BOW RIVER—DUMPING OF RAW SEWAGE AT BANFF

Mr. Allen B. Sulatycky (Rocky Mountain): Mr. Speaker, can the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development advise whether the government has reached any decision with regard to curtailing the dumping of raw sewage into the Bow River at Banff?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the officials of my department have been advised to start elaborating immediately a program respecting the establishment of a sewage treatment plant on the urban site of Banff. We hope its construction will be terminated toward the end of 1970.

We also know that there are similar needs in Jasper national park and we hope that a sewage disposal plant will be built in the town of Japser as early as 1971.

[English]

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a supplementary question arising out of his use of the word "immediately" in connection with the pollution problem. Will he act with the same dispatch with respect to such items as the Indian Claims Commission?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

COMPENSATION FOLLOWING CLOSING OF RURAL OFFICES

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my question is relative to the one asked earlier of the Postmaster General, by the Leader of the Opposition, regarding postal services. In light of the minister's recent statement that some 3,500 small, rural post offices would be closed as an economic measure, what compensatory action does the Postmaster General intend to take to alleviate the consequent serious problem to the thousands of postmasters on being relieved of their jobs?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the problem he is bringing to the attention of the house is very general in nature. Perhaps he should ask the minister whether a statement on motions will be made on the subject.

Mr. Southam: This is a matter of great urgency, Mr. Speaker, not only to the postmen taken out of service but to the customers themselves in western Canada.

EXHIBITIONS

EQUALITY IN DISTRIBUTION OF GRANTS

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Is the government developing a program of grants or aid to exhibitions and fairs which would be available to all parts of Canada on an equal basis?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): This is under consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Horner: I see the Prime Minister is conferring with the Minister of Agriculture. Will the right hon. gentleman instruct the Minister of Agriculture to remove the freeze on loans to exhibitions and fairs which was imposed some five years ago by a former minister of agriculture?

FISHERIES

SEALS—COMPENSATION UPON DISCONTINUANCE OF HUNT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): This question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, and it has to do with the approach of the seal kill. First, I should like to compliment the minister on what he has already announced.

In view of the descriptions of seal killing which appear in many newspapers in the United Kingdom, France, West Germany and other countries, indicating that the conscience of humanity is being aroused, is the hon. gentleman giving consideration to ending this hunt and substituting something in the nature of assistance to those who have in recent years made at least a portion of their living through the killing of seals?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): My answer to the right hon. gentleman has to be this: I have not as yet personally seen the seal fishery. I am going down at the end of this week to see it at first hand. Representatives of humane societies in various parts of the world will be there also. We shall review the situation and after this season is over and in consultation with other members of the government we shall decide what to do about the hunt in 1970.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Is it a fact, as reported by the C.B.C. at noon today, that 2,500 seals were brutally slaughtered last night and this morning before the season was even started?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member cannot properly ask a question in those terms, but perhaps to save time the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Davis: I have not been advised to that effect but I shall certainly look into the allegation.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Before any decision is taken in this regard, will the minister take into account the importance of this industry to the fishermen of Newfoundland?

Mr. Davis: That is a very important consideration, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Will the minister give the house an assurance that he will approach his investigation, and I am sure he will, with an open mind to avoid conclusions drawn by a lot of people who don't know the hell of what they are talking about?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify my position, which has been grossly misrepresented.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: There has been an indication from the Minister of Fisheries that there is a possibility of the seal fishing being ended. All I am saying is that the investigation should be conducted without any prejudice, one way or another, likely to affect the decision in advance.

CRIMINAL CODE

OPPOSITION OF ORGANIZATION TO AMENDING BILL

Hon. Théogène Ricard (Saint-Hyacinthe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Has he received from the Central Conference of Priests copy of a resolution to the effect that that organization, which comprises 3,250 English-speaking Catholic priests from Ontario and Quebec, is against the adoption of Bill C-150 in its present form?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that his question relates to legislation before the house at present, and in my view it should be raised during the debate on the said legislation.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE SICOTTE CASE—POSSIBLE ABUSES OF DIPLOMATIC PRIVILEGES BY CANADIANS

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. I wish to ask him whether he will be kind enough to answer questions put to the Acting Prime Minister on Friday and again yesterday.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Does the hon. member wish to ask them, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Fairweather: I asked the Acting Prime Minister on Friday, and again yesterday, about an independent judicial inquiry into the Sicotte case, and I received an assurance that the question would be passed on to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will realize that I am trying to be helpful, in the sense that we have already by a few minutes gone beyond the time allotted to questions. I was trying to ensure that a few additional members might ask questions, while this one was being considered on the government side.

Mr. Fairweather: I do not often rise on points of order, Mr. Speaker, but I do now. I have sought with a good deal of care during the past week to raise a matter which I consider to be of fundamental importance to the integrity of one of the finest public services in the world, and I would expect by this time to have an answer from the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Trudeau: I did discuss this matter with the minister under whose jurisdiction the problem might fall, Mr. Speaker. There have been answers given in the house and the Solicitor General has told the house what aspects of the case he has considered. He has referred to the fact that one person, who is not a public servant, is now before the courts, I think in two respects. I know of no way in which the public interest is damaged by the present situation. There are certain aspects of the case about which I have sought information and with regard to which I have not yet received an answer, but I see no reason for the government to make a statement. I note that the aspects of the case which might interest the house have already been dealt with by the Solicitor General.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MISSILE SITE IN WINDSOR AREA

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence.

Would the minister give us an answer today to a question that I put to him a few days ago about the location of an antiballistic missile centre in the vicinity of Detroit?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe that, at that time, the hon. gentleman asked me whether I had any comments to make about an American official's statement with regard to the eventual location of an anti-ballistic missile centre in the Detroit area. I said that the Canadian government policy had been clearly stated at the time of the renewal of the NORAD agreement, when the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicated that Canada was not participating in the installation of an A.B.M. centre. So, I do not see how I can usefully answer a question concerning a city located outside Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to hon. members that the rules have already been fractured to some extent by the Chair, inasmuch as we have gone more than five minutes beyond the question period. Perhaps hon. members could wait patiently until tomorrow, when I will make another effort to see that as many questions as possible are submitted to the house.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1969

The house resumed from Monday, March 3, consideration in committee of Bill C-177, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969—Mr. Drury—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Monday, March 3, clause 2 of the bill was under discussion.

On clause 2—$222,254,283 granted for 1968-69.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Chairman, last evening the Minister of Transport outlined to the committee some views regarding housing and the report of the task force on housing. One very pertinent question we must ask ourselves when we consider the views expressed by the minister is: In what capacity was the minister speaking to us last night? Was he speaking to us as a spokesman for the government announcing government policy? I think the clear answer to that question is that he was not. He was merely explaining to the committee his views as chairman of the task force on housing.

Let me say immediately that I agree with a good many of the recommendations of the task force. I have to, because a good many of them seem to have been taken from the election program of the Progressive Conservative party in the last election. I want to be very frank this afternoon, without in any way being abusive, and tell the minister that his explanation to the committee was really of very little use. We have no way of knowing how many of the views expressed by the minister may become government policy. We have no way of knowing which of these views will be adopted by the government. We have no way of knowing which views will actually be recommended by the minister to the government.

I must say quite frankly through you, Mr. Chairman, that the position of the minister at this juncture is simply not credible. First of all, the Prime Minister has placed the minister in an absurd position. For some time prior to the publication of this report the minister was boasting about his revolutionary program. He boasted about how he was going to cut red tape and get ahead with the housing program. But the Prime Minister, as has become his practice in some instances, proceeded to cut the feet from under the minister.

I should like to quote one or two remarks made by the Prime Minister in this connection. In the house on February 14, as reported at page 5525 of Hansard, the Prime Minister made the following statement:

Until the constitution is brought into the 20th century in some of these respects—

He was referring to housing policy and urban renewal programs.

—governments are to a large degree powerless to solve the problems either by acting alone or in co-operation with other levels of government.

There we have a very clear statement by the Prime Minister that it is to a large degree impracticable for the governments of this country, either alone or in co-operation with each other, to deal with the housing problem in Canada. Thus a curious state of affairs has been created. On the one hand we have the Minister of Transport boasting of how he is going to get the program moving under the present constitution, boasting of how he is going to cut red tape. On the other hand the Prime Minister rises in the house and says that to a large degree the governments of the country, presumably including this government, are powerless to act until the constitution has been revised.

Then we had the spectacle of the Prime Minister returning to his own constituency and discussing this question with his constituents, but apparently in a different capacity. It must have been in a different capacity because the Prime Minister took a very different line. He is reported as having said this:

—practically all federal Liberals then said—

This is two years ago.

—they did not want to start becoming involved in constitutional questions. There were more urgent problems—housing, integration, poverty,—"and the constitution was pretty low in order of priorities."

"I was saying it, and the Liberal party in Ottawa was saying it"—

Said the Prime Minister. So you have the situation where in his own constituency the Prime Minister says that housing, integration and poverty are far higher in the scale of priority than reform of the constitution. Yet in this house the Prime Minister says that nothing effective can be done with regard to housing until the constitution is reformed. Just how cynical can a government get?

We have also had a phoney NATO review. In this regard the government has been facing in both directions. We now see the Prime Minister trying to look in both directions at once on the question of the constitution. When we place the poor Minister of Transport in the context of the remarks made by the Prime Minister, there is certainly very little ground for the Minister of Transport to stand on.

Clearly the Prime Minister is a reluctant reformer of the constitution. He indicates in his speech that his hand has been forced by members of the opposition. Yet the other day in this house he said that, without substantial constitutional change, both his government and other governments in this country were virtually powerless to act in regard to housing.

Put the two positions side by side and the conclusion is inescapable. The Prime Minister believes that the government is powerless to act because of the constitution. Yet he did not seek constitutional change. Any government which, through its Prime Minister, simultaneously tries to adopt two positions is patently insincere when it tries to persuade the country that it is genuinely concerned about the urgency of the housing problem in this country. For that reason alone the minister's image as a reformer lacks credibility. The Prime Minister himself considers the Minister of Transport powerless under the existing constitution to carry out certain reforms. From what the Prime Minister said it is clear that there is no real will within the government to bring about constitutional change.

I do not accept the position that governments in this country are powerless to deal effectively with problems of housing, pollution, and so on. There are ways in which the provincial and federal governments may co-operate, but the Minister of Transport did not chose to follow the path of co-operation. He did not, as he ought to have, involve the provinces in the establishment and work of the task force. From the beginning he did not follow the road of co-operation. In short, once again this government is up to its old tricks, like the one performed with medicare where the government produced a program and asked the provinces to take it over.

Clearly, the Minister of Transport was operating in an area of divided jurisdiction. Nevertheless, he acted from the beginning in this matter without taking cognizance of the proper role of the provinces in solving the housing problem. It would have been much wiser to involve the provinces. They could have enlightened the task force considerably about certain aspects of the problem, and there would have been a better measure of real co-operation in the solution of our housing problem. The minister concerned turned his back on the provinces, and I will not be surprised if he achieves nothing substantial in the solution of the housing problem.

The Prime Minister thinks that little can be done under the present constitution; he persists in making inflammatory statements which do little to enhance federal-provincial co-operation. Because of the Prime Minister's views, the position of the Minister of Transport lacks credibility.

As I have said, the Minister of Transport was not prepared to co-operate with the provinces. But I have another reason for saying that his position lacks credibility. Under his direction the task force, among other things, recommended that in certain instances the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials ought to be abolished. Clearly, that recommendation emanated from the minister; equally clearly, the Minister of Finance, who also has responsibility in this field, has no intention of going along with this recommendation. It was bad enough when the Postmaster General poked his nose into the affairs of the Departments of External Affairs and National Defence and expressed views in public contrary to those known to be held by the government. Whether he did so to hide the chaos in his own department or because someone had asked him to undermine the position of the Secretary of State for External Affairs is beside the point. But in the housing field two ministers who are jointly responsible, in a manner of speaking, are in open conflict and are apparently recommending different policies.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, what goes on in this government? How often will the government look both ways at once? How often will it wear two faces at the same time? We have seen it doing that on the NATO question, on constitutional questions, and we are now seeing it with regard to the 11 per cent sales tax. The minister's present position is patently phony. If the government does not act on the recommendation of his task force that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials be abolished, will he resign as a minister of this government? Is he prepared to resign? If he is not prepared to resign, his position is patently phony and insincere.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: Get tough with him.

Mr. Hellyer: You just want to get rid of me.

Mr. Stanfield: We want the minister to behave as he ought to behave, to have the courage of his convictions and to stand behind the public positions he takes. It is time integrity was restored in matters of public behaviour and it is time ministers stuck to their principles.

[Mr. Stanfield.]

Last night the minister advanced an argument regarding removal of the ceiling on N.H.A. loans and strengthened our conviction that he cannot be believed. Since coming to Ottawa I have never heard anything more absurd than the position the minister advanced last evening. He argued that removing the ceiling would ensure a steady flow of mortgage funds, and the inference I drew was that interest rates would climb above the present ceiling. Then in the same breath he argued that this action would reduce mortgage interest rates. Well, he cannot have it both ways. I only hope that no one in the government will pay the slightest attention to that recommendation which can only send up interest rates on mortgages when funds are already in short supply. Although the minister explained his report last night, his position lacks credibility. We hope that at least one of his recommendations will not be adopted by the government. Of course, we did not really need to hear the minister explain what his task force was recommending. Through carefully contrived leaks or releases many of the recommendations of the task force had already been made public even before the report was tabled in the house.

We were told that the report constituted a revolutionary approach to the housing problems of Canada. I ask, what was revolutionary about it?

Mr. Gibson: The films we saw.

Mr. Stanfield: What is revolutionary in its recommendations? The majority of its valuable ideas, such as the abolition of the 11 per cent sales tax, the development of land banks, use of existing housing for public housing purposes and subsidization of rentals, were originally brought forward by hon. members of other parties. Many of them I advocated, but when I advocated them my hon. friends opposite said they were socialistic. They scorned those ideas.

Mr. Hellyer: They are respectable now.

Mr. Stanfield: I am glad to hear that. I hope the minister mends his ways and co-operates with the provinces, because by so doing we shall see brought into being a system governing land banks. Regretfully, it appears that the minister will not co-operate with the provinces in the solution of these problems.

And what about other proposals in the report, such as lengthening the period for repayment of mortgages and reducing down payments? It is said that this will help some Canadians, but I say it will not help to any perceptible extent the hundreds of thousands of our countrymen who already have great difficulty in carrying heavy interest rates. They will not be able to carry the amortized payments over longer periods. The minister admitted that lowering down payments would help only some Canadians. What in this report gives any hope or encouragement to those Canadians who cannot carry mortgages at existing rates? There is nothing, Mr. Chairman. The report and the minister himself are complete washouts.

When it comes to dealing with the problem which the minister said was probably the most basic difficulty facing housing in Canada, the cost of money, what did the minister say? All he did was to state his faith that ultimately it could be met. I had to remind him that ultimately we will all be dead.

The minister talked about the importance of the flow of mortgage money into the housing field. This, of course, is important. He spoke about it being turned on and off in recent years and gave the impression that this is anybody's fault but the government of Canada of which he is a member. Who is responsible for the supply of mortgage money being turned on and off in recent years? Nobody but my hon. friend and his colleagues. They are the ones responsible. This kind of difficulty will continue. As long as this government has such a weak and inflationary program, more and more Canadians will be unwilling to invest in fixed rate term obligations such as mortgages. Yet we have no effective action in the field of fighting inflation.

We got the most enormous misrepresentation in Canadian history in connection with the budget. The government finally reported an actual deficit which was hundreds of millions of dollars higher than they forecast it would be. After many months of studying the question of inflation, a white paper was presented to the house which could have been written by a group of people in two or three hours. That white paper recommended the importance of a study committee to study fighting inflation in this country. A popgun! The problem with regard to the supply of mortgage money will continue as long as this inflationary psychology continues.

The minister spoke about the size and difficulties of building companies. He suggested this is really due to the turning off from time to time of the supply of mortgage money. I agree that this no doubt is the case, but he is not producing anything to ensure a steady supply of mortgage money so these companies can continue to build houses on a steady basis.

Nothing has been done in connection with the cost of interest to a person borrowing money. Nothing has been done to restore confidence, and we have higher taxes imposed by the government. I have great sympathy for those Canadians who need to acquire a home and have been forced because of the inflationary policies of this government to pay fantastic interest rates. I feel a very good case could be made for the state providing these people with some relief because they have to pay these high taxes to some extent as a result of the mistakes, bad judgment and lack of restraint by the government of Canada. It was because of my conviction that the government owed these people some consideration that I made a modest proposal of some form of tax relief which would provide a modest degree of relief to these people and at the same time preserve their incentive to borrow money. I put forward an equitable proposal which was scorned by my hon. friends opposite, apparently on the ground that it was upsetting to Bay Street. This proposal would have cost approximately $25 million a year. My proposal apparently was too modest in its sweep, particularly in view of what has happened to interest rates since then. It was a reasonable proposal.

I point out that in the case of the tenant who lives in an apartment built by an entrepreneur who borrowed money, the interest paid on that money can be deducted from the income tax of the establishment. Therefore, under the existing income tax arrangements the tenant does get some relief indirectly by reason of the ability of the landlord to deduct interest payments in computing his net income. A very good case could be made on this ground in addition to the grounds of equity and responsibility. The government has the moral responsibility for putting these hundreds of thousands of unfortunate Canadians in the terrible position where they have to undertake to pay 9 per cent or 10 per cent interest for many years. If the government wants to do something to offer some relief on the very matter that the minister said was the most important problem, this is a very simple thing to do. It is not possible to put the home owner in a completely satisfactory position, but the government can act at modest cost to the taxpayers of this country.

The minister made some extraordinary statements last evening which I never would have believed had he not made them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did you believe him then?

Mr. Stanfield: I have to believe these statements, Mr. Chairman, because I would think any minister would be too ashamed to admit to them unless they were true. The minister stated that the federal government has obviously been involved in housing for many years in this country. He said that there had been no research done to determine the effect of supply in relation to rents. There had been no research done to see what the effects were of a 3 per cent or 5 per cent vacancy rate in a city. I find this almost impossible to believe even for this government, Mr. Chairman. I would not have believed it if anybody else had said it, but when the minister responsible said it I had to accept it. It really makes me wonder whether the government is capable of properly managing anything in connection with housing.

The minister made an amazing statement regarding public housing. He said it was the first time he had been exposed to the views of tenants. I daresay that is true although some of the rest of us have been. Is it credible? It must be, but it is hard to believe that a Crown agency involved in assisting in the construction of public housing and encouraging municipalities to engage in public housing would not follow up on its projects to determine the attitude of the tenants in such public housing. Can you imagine, Mr. Chairman, any competent government putting a good deal of money into public housing and then not taking the trouble to determine whether these were good healthy surroundings for the tenants?

I cannot believe that the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are not fully informed on this matter. Here I must believe it was the minister who was ignorant. I cannot believe that the officials who are putting all this money into these public housing plans had not taken the trouble to inform themselves as to what satisfaction these projects were giving to the people living in them. I cannot take the minister seriously on that one.

Where do we stand with regard to these projects in the future? The minister purported to be very specific and definite. He suggested it was only where urban renewal schemes involving business development were concerned that there would be postponements, but I defy anyone to go over what he said and determine what is the actual position now with regard to public housing projects. We are not a bit wiser today than we were before he spoke and, of course, before he spoke we were not a bit wiser than we were when he refused to answer questions in the house a few day ago. The minister's position is very obscure. When the minister stands up in the house and says there was only one year in which there was any real short-fall in the construction of housing, then that is about the end of it. I do not see how he could expect any of us to take him seriously after that statement.

We all agree that there is no simple solution to the housing problem. Presumably the government is going to continue to exercise the authority granted it by the people of Canada, and presumably it will hold office for the normal term. I presume this will be the case and that the minister or somebody else will have the responsibility of moving forward with housing programs. Therefore it is important that the minister and the government restore their credibility in this field.

It is important that we have some clarification with regard to the constitution and the effect of the constitution on the minister's programs. Is it virtually impossible, as the Prime Minister suggested, for us to proceed with a housing program under the present constitution? If this is so, how does the Prime Minister explain that constitutional reform is low on the scale of priorities? I would like to hear the Prime Minister explain that to the house some time. I would like the government to take a credible position with regard to this matter. I would like the minister and the government to move to restore their relationships with the provinces.

Today we had another sign of the government going off half-cocked in connection with offshore mineral rights, violating undertakings given by previous prime ministers to engage in consultation with the provinces. This is exactly the way that the Minister of Transport is going about solving the housing problem which the Prime Minister says cannot be solved under the existing constitution.

I say, stop the farce with regard to the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Stop exposing us to the spectacle of one minister urging its abolition and then the Minister of Finance pouring scorn on the idea. Let them stop the pretence that they are doing anything to lower the cost of money to the homeowner. Stop the pretence that they are busy doing something by way of an anti-inflationary program. Let them provide some relief along the lines I have suggested, or along other lines, to those homeowners troubled with the fantastically high interest rates for which the government is primarily responsible.

At the moment the minister's position is completely incredible. I have gone over the reasons for this and through you, Mr. Chairman, I want to tell the committee that we are very concerned about the condition of housing in this country. We believe that the problem can be attacked. We do not share the view of the Prime Minister that the present state of the constitution makes an effective attack virtually impossible. If the government will improve its relations with the provinces, obviously an effective attack can be made.

There are some good ideas in the task force report. There have to be other ideas added to them. These ideas are being discussed. We in the Official Opposition will support and assist the minister in launching and carrying out an effective and comprehensive housing program but we want it to be credible, we want it to be sincere, we want it to be straightforward. We have had enough of these positions of duplicity.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Chairman, I have listened carefully to the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition. One thing that should be added to them is that in effect for the first time the federal government has focused its attention on the question of housing, which has provincial and municipal implications, and has produced a report on the problem which is perhaps the most comprehensive ever made on it in our history. In doing so the government has provided all those interested in searching for a solution with the opportunity to choose priorities and to decide on the kind of orientation we wish for a federal housing policy. In the past few years a large number of conferences on housing have been held and many speeches have been made. But never before has there been a study that has condensed in so comprehensive a manner all of the various aspects related to the issue, perhaps the most formidable and difficult issue facing any government in the western world, an issue that must be resolved.

It might be very easy to resolve the housing problem under different economic conditions in other parts of the world, but in the western world with its free economy, with an explosion in population, in a country with such vast distances as Canada, with such diverse climatic conditions, with population increases continually taking place in some major urban centres and not in others, it is extremely difficult to produce a policy which will make everybody happy and will meet the needs in every corner of the country. On that score alone the Minister of Transport ought to be commended for having undertaken such an enormous task and for having produced in such a short time a document for us to debate and improve upon. I believe it is the beginning of a new trend wherein the federal government by virtue of other circumstances has found it necessary to focus its attention on municipal matters and on powers given to other levels of government, including the municipal level.

From examining the report everyone interested in the subject could perhaps arrive at different conclusions and different priorities with respect to the final policy which ought to emerge, and there are a few points I would like to submit in contributing to this debate as best I can.

The report in its declaration of principles says that the housing needs of most Canadians can and should be met through the private market. This is quite true so far as the production of housing is concerned in the form of new apartment buildings and new houses of a certain size. But the pattern in large urban centres, and I can only speak from experience of large urban centres, indicates that the private sector has not been in a position to produce public housing. Therefore the government, in its priorities and orientation, should include public housing. In doing so it could draw on and benefit from the studies which have already been completed and carried on over a number of years. It could draw on the experience of others.

When we speak of public housing we hear criticisms in respect of the shortage of certain social facilities such as day nurseries, recreational centres and the like. This is the very kind of thing that could improve the quality of future public housing projects. In some situations, for instance, in the city of Toronto, the term "social housing" has been coined recently in order to indicate that much more is really needed than the provision of shelter when it comes to public housing, that society derives from public housing social benefits in many different related and perhaps unrelated areas. Therefore this is a field of human endeavour which deserves a continuity of effort.

While dispersed acquisition of houses in any given community in respect of public housing might be very desirable from a social viewpoint, this policy will not add to the housing stock available. It will actually diminish the housing stock available from the private sector and therefore would have the effect of increasing the cost of the units available on the market. There is the suggestion, for instance, that perhaps loans should be made available as subsidies for the payment of rent. I would rather see a different objective. If loans are to be made available as subsidies I believe they should be made available not for rental purposes, because they would eventually end up in the pockets of the landlord in one form or another, but as loans toward the purchase of a housing unit.

It must also be emphasized that when we speak of housing programs and projects for the Indian, Eskimo and Métis people in many parts of Canada our attention should also be focused on the situation in the major urban areas of Canada where there is a large influx of immigrants. This situation will certainly require our attention because immigrants who will arrive in years to come will find difficulty in obtaining accommodation upon arrival.

Much has been said on the subject of urban renewal. In this regard I think the views expressed in the report are very useful for the purpose of focusing attention on what has been done so far and on the shortcomings in the techniques which have been adopted so far. I do not know that great benefit will be derived by the suspension of urban renewal schemes. I would rather that we continued our efforts and eliminated the feeling of uncertainty which has been created in some of our centres because of the suspension. Some of the projects which are awaiting approval are of a highly sophisticated nature and would meet the thinking, expectations and hopes of the task force even beyond their dreams. These projects have been produced by local groups with the co-operation of the local government and through a process of dialogue over a period of months and years of co-operation.

Therefore the question of urban renewal perhaps should be approached in the light of experience. Perhaps it could be expanded in a way so that rather than doing it on a limited area basis of a few blocks or a square mile it could be done by approaching it as a renewal project for any given municipality. Thus it could be incorporated in the same way a municipality would incorporate a public works program. This concept should be the broadest possible within the confines of the municipality and should eliminate the atmosphere of uncertainty and discomfort that some urban renewal schemes have created in the past.

The question of loans and grants for the rehabilitation of existing housing is a very crucial one. It is a question of great importance in the older portions of our cities. I submit it is not possible to expect an elderly couple who live on a fixed income to receive a loan for the renewal of their house. It would perhaps be desirable to develop a system whereby rather than a loan a grant would be made available for the improvement of the property and this grant would then become an encumbrance on the title of the house. The repayment of the grant to the lending authority could be worked out on that basis. At present I believe it would be unrealistic to expect people to renew their homes on the basis of loans, particularly when they have a limited income.

There are several more points which I could discuss such as the question of individual rehabilitation which has taken place in some areas and the theory of the filtering down of housing. What is happening right now in large centres is that houses are no longer filtering down from one social stratum to another but are actually filtering up. Many people find it desirable to buy a home at a reasonable price on the market, improve it and then sell it on the market at a much higher price. So we are actually experiencing a reverse process which could be called filtering up.

In closing my remarks I should like to submit a few thoughts for consideration. When one considers the long list of names of people waiting for accommodation in the large metropolitan areas—Toronto alone has something like 12,000 or 14,000 names on the waiting list—it seems to me that public housing projects should be continued in the light of the experience so far rather than have to await additional studies. I believe it would also be desirable that a program of income supplements be initiated to permit low income families to purchase property. It would also be desirable that legislation be introduced to provide financial assistance through grants for the rehabilitation of low income property owners in urban renewal areas.

As I said at the outset, Mr. Chairman, we must appreciate that in our society it is desirable that we arrive at policies which reflect our concern for those who need housing. In this regard it is time to do some thinking in conjunction with municipalities and metropolitan centres such as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg. When considering the relationship between the federal government and these metropolitan areas we must ask about the desirability of dealing directly with urban centres. We have large urban centres with populations and resources greater than those of several provinces. We must become concerned with the life of the millions of Canadians living in these centres.

At this point in history, we might ask ourselves whether there is a possibility of redrafting our constitutional relationship, when it comes to the redevelopment of Canadian urban centres. Can we correct inadequacies of this kind, the source of so many difficult situations? Can we resolve these difficulties by establishing direct bridges between urban centres and the federal government? These are relevant matters. With the help of the task force report we have the opportunity of constructively improving upon this situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I listened very attentively a while ago to the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) on the housing legislation and supplementary estimates we are asked to approve, in order to give better assistance in the housing field in Canada.

This housing legislation is of outstanding importance since it is of utmost concern and interest to thousands of Canadians calling for better dwelling and a housing program adapted to the average Canadian, not programs like those that are submitted to us, involving very high rates of interest supposedly to fight inflation.

The cost of money is going up all the time and the reason given for that is that we must fight inflation. On the other hand, the minister introduces a piece of legislation to increase housing credits, on the pretence that we need new dwellings. There is in all this a glaring inconsistency.

Under the present housing act, Mr. Chairman, a Canadian worker who decides to buy a $15,000 home must now pay interest at a rate of 10 per cent. If it takes him 35 years to pay for his house, it will have cost him more than $60,000, including the interest, and excluding municipal and school taxes. This is, to me, an inflationary scheme in itself, for that $15,000 home will never be worth $60,000. Yet, that is the bill we are asked to pass.

Where are the Canadians who will be able to pay $175 or $200 a month for 35 years to own their home? Indeed—and the minister is aware of it—many small home owners who bought a house 5, 6 or 8 years ago now have to give them up, losing by doing so the savings they had accumulated over 10 or 15 years, because of the increase in school and municipal taxes, and the cost of rental or monthly payments.

For instance, is there an E. B. Eddy employee in Hull who can pay $200 a month for a $15,000 home? There is not and the minister knows it. Built-up areas are multiplying in the suburbs of Montreal, Toronto, and other large centres.

Yet, in Montreal, hundreds of houses are empty, because workers cannot hope to live in that type of housing. Even if $600,000,000 or even $1 billion were spent to build new housing units, if the terms and conditions are not within the reach of the Canadian buyer, people will certainly not be helped towards better housing.

Thousands of families are still living in Montreal slums; they cannot hope to move to a more comfortable and decent home, and pay $175 or $200 a month.

The minister and the government know this is impossible, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) goes on repeating across Canada that money does not grow on trees and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) also agrees with this. There is a lack of money and it costs too much.

A while ago, the Leader of the Opposition was saying that the cost of money should be reduced. How would he go about it? We do not know because he is not telling. What would he do if he were the present minister or heading the present government? We do not know. We know ourselves that interest rates are too high and that is why we have been fighting in this house since 1962. I was doing so way back in 1946—23 years ago—and I used to tell the government: Why not finance those projects of national importance through interest-free loans by the Bank of Canada as this is being done for India, Africa, South America, China and other countries throughout the world? Why not assist Canadians in the same way through the services of this financial institution which belongs to all Canadians, that is the Bank of Canada? On the contrary, this control is left in the hands of Canadian bankers who tell the Bank of Canada what to do. This institution does not exert any authority over the chartered banks of which it is the servant instead of exercising its own sovereign powers as a servant of the people and abiding by the decisions of the Parliament of Canada. It is merely the toy of outside financial interests which are dictating their own terms to the government.

The government is now willing to guarantee loans. To whom? To the companies which, in turn, will lend at an interest rate of 10 or 12 per cent, if not 15 or 20 per cent. That is what is being done by the insurance companies and by the banks. Insurance companies, incidentally, do not give any credit. Money does not grow in their case but, on the other hand, it grows in banks. This is where it is born through the law which allows bankers to multiply by 14 every central government bond. Would it be more difficult for the central government to make the multiplication by 14 itself instead of entrusting with this task some individuals who, in turn, lend to the government at outrageous interest rates? It is in order to protect those financial bloodsuckers that the government brings in such laws. One has not even the right to rise in order to protest against these rights granted to financiers.

Mr. Chairman, the Créditistes are the only ones who have the courage to object to this shameful exploitation of the Canadian nation and of the Canadian government. Money does not grow on trees. No. It grows in banks. The insurance companies borrow from banks and, in most cases, it is they that grant loans to people who need a home or want to develop resources and so on.

The banks are the masters because they are the greatest power in Canada. Without their permission, nobody has the right to breathe. It is as clear as that. The trust companies, the finance companies and the insurance companies constitute, as it were, the offspring of the banks. One hears people criticize the insurance companies, the trust companies and others by saying: let us get rid of these companies. Let us kill the children and let the mother live. I think it is the best way to insure that she will have other children in a few years. The only way to prevent the exploitation of the Canadian people is to take away from the banks the power to encourage the creation of trust companies.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Chairman, the housing problem does not concern Ottawa only. Besides, the minister, the Prime Minister and the government admit it. It concerns also the provinces, the municipalities and the citizens. A while ago I heard a Liberal member say that, in the future, the central government would have to reach a compromise directly with the authorities of the great cities. Solving the problems of the provinces would be easier, in my opinion, for the provincial authorities than for the federal government because those problems are closer to the former than to the latter, and when the provinces insist on having more say in the field of housing, I believe they are right.

I do not think there is any need to amend the constitution for the sake of giving the provinces a larger measure of responsibility in the field of housing. I bet the Premier of Quebec has seen the slums of that province more often than the Minister of Transport under whose jurisdiction comes the question of housing. I am pretty sure that the provincial authorities are more aware of the situation in Montreal than the federal minister, the Prime Minister or the central government. It is agreed that, under the constitution, it is a field directly pertaining to the federal authority. It is in fact, its very own field: I am referring to the matter of financing. The question of money and credit is Ottawa's business and not that of the provinces. That is why the representatives of the provinces come to Ottawa and ask the minister or the government: Give us the financial means, for, at the moment, all we have is the responsibility.

Such is the problem facing the government in every field, specially in housing.

So the provinces come to Ottawa, saying: Give us the funds. Ottawa answers: We do not have any. Money does not grow on trees. Such is the kind of answer given by the Prime Minister. Then where does money come from? The Prime Minister does not know. He knows, but he does not have the right to tell. As for me, I know it and I have the right to tell. And I do. Whether you like it or not, the truth is there and I say it bluntly.

Mr. Chairman, financial means should be made available to the provinces thus enabling them to enact a law on housing to provide every Canadian with the means of buying a decent home but not at the present rates of interest. The present situation should not be allowed to last or to deteriorate for it is worse than it was five years ago, as far as housing is concerned. In fact, to live in a small family home costs a lot more today than it did five or six years ago.

Assistance has just been granted to Montreal—and that has nothing to do with housing. The Minister of Transport is aware of it. It has to do with the granting of rather important sums of money, interest free, to make up Expo's deficit. We begin to understand that to pay off deficits, we will have to resort to a procedure advocated by the Créditistes for the past 30 years. I am referring to interest free financing. In order to help out Expo in Montreal, the central government undertakes now to back it up with $8 million under an agreement with the province and the municipality, and without interest. It is a form of assistance and not a gift. It is a loan that the City of Montreal will have to pay back but without interest.

Why? Because it is a deficit incurred by Expo. I do not blame the government for granting an interest-free loan to the City of Montreal, on the contrary I congratulate it for that. It should do the same for the municipalities which are short of money.

There are not only municipal deficits; there are also provincial deficits, school deficits, personal deficits. People have gone into debt for 5, 10, 15 and even 35 years to buy a house. I said earlier that very few people will become homeowners if purchasing plans of 25, 30 and 35 years are established. If a Canadian gets a house when he is 35 or 40, and pays for it little by little that is by instalments spread over a long period, he will be 70 or 75 before he is through paying for it. Who will live until 75 with an old age pension of $107 a month? Who will still own his house at that time?

Mr. Chairman, we will probably leave that to our children, thus mortgaging the future of our children and that of their own children. The present Minister of Transport or myself will not be around then, but the inheritors of our debts will. We are the ones who will have voted those debts in this house.

Mr. Chairman, housing is a national matter of which both Ottawa and the provinces are responsible. I repeat that the provinces have all they need at their disposal to proceed with housing projects for the materials and the workers are available. Moreover, there are 200,000 unemployed in the province of Quebec alone, which is amazing in 1969, when there is so much to do. There are 80,000 unemployed in the city of Montreal alone. What a marvelous situation!

Why are there unemployed in the province of Quebec and elsewhere in Canada? Would it be because there are no more resources to develop, no more houses and no more highways to build, nothing more to undertake. Certainly not, Mr. Chairman. It is because money does not grow on trees because trees are not productive at the present time. There are no developments, because of procrastination, introduction of legislations, but all that does nothing to improve the economic situation in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the central government ought to provide banks with financial means by allowing them to make use of the Bank of Canada; then you will see houses being built up for families, rather than families being planned according to houses as proposed by the C.M.H.C. For families with eight or ten children, they build small four room houses. Can you imagine 12 people crowded into four rooms. This does not make any sense. However, that is what the national housing act provides.

But one never hears about houses being built for large families, because they would be much too expensive. It is not on account of a shortage of building materials, manpower or land, but because the cost of money is too high; the money problem is the only problem they refuse to correct, to deal with. Money does not grow on trees. We take it in the pockets of Canadians. But where does it come from? Where does it grow? The government knows it, but it does not have the right to tell us.

Mr. Chairman, we maintain that a responsible and sovereign government should see to it to make financially possible what is physically feasible and desirable. On the other hand, the governments, whether Progressive Conservative or Liberal, have not taken their responsibilities, I think, in a number of fields, specially in the economic field. They have been satisfied with statements of principles, with talk about their love for the Canadian people, our natural inexhaustible resources, the vastness of our country so dear to everyone. Even in 1935, the then Prime Minister, Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King, made a statement that I always keep in my pocket, because I always fall back on it and find it of much value. Besides, in the good old days of 1935, I agreed with Mackenzie King. I quote:

[English]

Once a nation parts with the control of its currency and credit, it matters not who makes the nation's laws. Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation.

[Translation]

But let us consider the situation in which we find ourselves at this time. Here is what the Rt. Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King had to say, and I quote:

[English]

Usury, once in control, will wreck any nation.

[Translation]

What action is being taken in the housing field? I see my colleague from Chambly (Mr. Pilon) and he knows that I am telling the truth because he believed in Mr. Mackenzie King.

Mr. Chairman, I shall quote what the Right Hon. Mackenzie King used to say:

[English]

Until the control of the issue of currency and credit is restored to government and recognized as its most conspicuous and sacred responsibility, all talk of the sovereignty of parliament and democracy is idle and futile.

[Translation]

This is what Mr. William Lyon Mackenzie King used to say and he was right. But, who ever put those ideas into practice since that time. Even Mackenzie King had forgotten about them himself during the last years he was a member of the house. I was here from 1946 to 1949.

Mr. Chairman, the same problem is still with us in 1969. In 1931, 38 years ago, Pope Pius XI said: "Those in control of money and credit are the masters of us all and nobody is allowed to breathe without their permission". This is just as true nowadays as it was then.

The government has to deal with this kind of system. In times of war, are the governments, whichever they may be, worried about financial problems? No. All of a sudden, it is decided that whatever is physically possible for war must be made financially possible. Guns are manufactured, soldiers are dressed and sent to Europe on the battle-fields as quickly as it is physically possible and feasible; finance is adjusted to reality.

One has never heard that there was a shortage of 25 cent coins to manufacture a gun. That is impossible because of the rate of interest—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless, of course, the committee wishes to give him unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Caouette: Just for a minute, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

My sincere thanks to my colleagues for allowing me to carry on with my comments; they may rest assured that I shall not take undue advantage of their courtesy.

In two minutes, I shall demonstrate to what extent Canadians have to deal with a crazy system. We can never say it often enough: we live among crazy people and we are governed by the craziest among them, and here is the proof.

In 1963, I purchased a small house at 33 Meunier Street in Hull, with a loan from the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada. What is more interesting is that this was a $15,500 house on which I have been making payments ever since. But, when I bought this house, my monthly payment was $104. Today, it is $134, that is $30 more in about six years. That was the situation as of December 31, 1968.

It will be said that I mention my case as an example, in black and white. That will appear in Hansard and everybody will know that I am still paying for the house where I live in Hull. I had a mortgage of about $12,000, and I still owe $11,874,84. Last year, I paid $771.64 in interest to the Mutual Life. I paid $598.80 in municipal and school taxes, and the principal, that is what I paid back on my house, amounts to $285.56. Such is the purchasing plan of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I repaid the mortgage at the rate of approximately $22 per month, but I paid $771 in interest and $598 in taxes, and that at a rate of interest of 7 per cent. With the new rate of 10 per cent, the monthly instalments will only pay for the interest and the taxes, and the homeowner will never repay the price of this house, so that he will never be one of the home owners in his country, Canada.

We are against that policy which we have been fighting for a long time, and we urge the government to take its responsibilities and to put the financial system at the service of the citizens of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (4:20 p.m.)

Mr. Asselin: Mr. Chairman, several members have stressed the importance of the matter before us, that is the housing problem. We know the problem is fundamental and and nation-wide. We also know that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) seems much concerned about it, since he said recently, in Vancouver I believe, that he would be willing to leave his present position to head a department of housing if it were established by the government.

Considering the importance of the Department of Transport, I wonder if it would be in the best interests of the Canadian people to entrust the minister with new responsibilities and ask him to deal with the housing problem. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) should relieve the Minister of Transport and entrust someone else, a Minister without Portfolio for example, with a matter as important as housing. Of course if the Minister of Transport would rather look after housing, he could leave the Department of Transport and become solely responsible for that important and essential matter which we call the housing policy.

I do not question the good intentions nor the good will of the minister. Indeed, he has established the so-called task force, a study group to consider the various aspects of the housing problem in Canada. I have studied that report like all other hon. members but I find in it very few practical solutions. It is obvious that excellent suggestions are made, but they are long-term suggestions which could not immediately solve the very important housing problem.

The main improvement has been an extension of the refund period of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. And, as many hon. members have repeated it in this house, Mr. Chairman, that measure does not in any way settle the matter.

Yesterday, replying to an opposition member who was criticizing the organization of the task force which has drafted the report we are studying, the minister said that he had chosen the finest authorities in the field to advise him.

I take the minister to task because if the federal government wants to take the responsibility of housing it should consult the provinces before proceeding with the detailed study of that very important problem since, as has been said by many hon. members, housing falls in the legal category of property and civil rights and hence under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. So, I wonder—perhaps the minister will give me an answer later on—if he intends to raise another constitutional conflict with the provinces. I think he should have included in this task force some provincial representatives who could, in the light of their government's information, provide the minister with most valuable data on housing.

A member said earlier that the provinces and the municipalities are much closer to the people than the federal government, which is true. It is also the responsibility of the provinces to discuss with the municipalities the problems of housing, property rights, and civil rights. So I do not see how the minister can, constitutionally speaking, discuss directly with the municipalities of the country without doing so through the provinces. Besides, the minister knows that in constitutional matters, he has no authority over municipalities. By insisting on going forward with a housing policy without consulting the provinces, I wonder if the minister is not about to create another constitutional crisis between the provinces and the federal government? The minister is well aware of that since, at the recent conference of representatives of municipalities and provinces held in Toronto, which he attended, he was severely warned, especially by the province of Quebec, not to elaborate detailed policies without consulting the provinces, and especially Quebec, because that is a field that falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the minister's behaviour is strange. I do not blame him for attempting to help Canadians, for bringing forward policies likely to solve the housing problem in some sectors. The minister may want to point out that under the constitution, the federal government must look after the welfare of all Canadians and the minister would be right. But until the Canadian constitution is amended, neither he nor the federal government have the right to interfere directly in a jurisdiction that belongs exclusively to the provinces.

In fact, the first step the minister should take would be to invite the provinces to a conference on the housing problem. Conferences have already been held in 1965 and 1966, and the minister will remember—even if he was not the minister responsible for housing then—that the provinces had raised objections with regard to the constitutionality of the exclusive control of housing by the federal government, wondering whether that problem did not lie exclusively within the provincial jurisdiction. We remember that at that time, the conference had dealt with one definite point.

I am surprised today that the government and the minister are now asking us to vote supplementary estimates in an effort to solve the housing problem. I am wondering whether in view of the differences of opinion expressed by some provinces in this constitutional field, the minister should not rather begin by calling together the provinces in order to discuss the problem with them and to work out plans which might solve housing problems in Canada.

The minister knows that several provinces, including Quebec, already have a housing corporation. Everything must be done to avoid duplication, in which case the same service to be available both at the federal and at the provincial levels of government. This is why provinces are complaining; they need fiscal resources in order to establish their own housing corporation.

Presently, the Quebec housing corporation is borrowing from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at an interest rate unknown to me, but which is below the rate approved by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). Then, the Quebec housing corporation lends money to Quebecers so they can build houses. So, Mr. Chairman, we have, sharing the same field, the Quebec housing corporation and Ottawa's Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which are competing on the same market. In my view, we should settle this once for all. However, I submit that even if the minister established committees made up of experts the main problem would still remain, we still would have to call together the provinces with a view to define responsibilities at each level of government and to draw up a comprehensive program which could help all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate the minister on his good will, when he expressed his intention to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

It is known that since 1965 when this tax was imposed, and even before that, we, of the Progressive Conservative party and of the official opposition, have made representations to the Minister of Finance suggesting that this tax would only slow up the development of this important sector, housing. If the minister considers not only the urban centres—which we hear so much about in the house—but also rural areas like the one I represent, he will realize that there are also in the latter housing problems.

In my home town, for instance with a population of 6,000 inhabitants, some people are unable to find an apartment to rent. There are also people who live in dilapidated houses, when they might have enough capital to build their own house. But how can they do it, when they must pay first of all an 11 per cent tax on building materials, which is an inflationary measure?

When the minister made a statement suggesting that he was in favour of removing the 11 per cent tax, he was right. And I think he should try to convince the Minister of Finance as well as his colleagues, to do so because it is a matter requiring first priority.

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Would the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. Asselin: Yes.

Mr. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member might suggest how we could replace the $300 million that is derived from this 11 per cent tax?

Mr. Asselin: To the hon. member who has just interrupted me, first of all I shall reply that we are not the government. It is the government's responsibility to administer the nation and find the necessary funds to try and balance its budget—if it wants to balance it. However, I suggest that the 11 per cent sales tax that the government persists in maintaining is an inflationary tax. And even if the minister was full of good intentions, if, with his cabinet colleagues, he persists in maintaining that tax, he will never succeed in solving the housing problem in Canada.

Mr. Ricard: The minister said that he was ready to remove it.

Mr. Asselin: The government member who has just interrupted me might perhaps ask the minister how he could obtain the equivalent of the 11 per cent tax, since, at last, the minister is in favour of its removal. Therefore, I would ask the hon. member who interrupted me—I do not recall the name of his constituency—

Mr. Stewart: Cochrane.

Mr. Asselin: —the hon. member for Cochrane to use his good offices to persuade the Minister of Transport and his colleagues that the repeal of the 11 per cent tax must at all costs be the highest priority with respect to housing, if Canadians are to be interested in building their own house and owning it.

To start with, let us deal with the first priority. Even if the Minister, should, under the terms of the bill, make millions of dollars available to the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation, he must bring the cabinet to agree to the first measure needed to help those who wish to build a home, that is, the removal of the 11 per cent tax on building materials. Should the minister decide to ask for the help of the opposition to force the cabinet to adopt this measure, he can count on our full co-operation.

Mr. Chairman, several hon. members wish to speak on this bill, but I reaffirm what I said at the beginning of my remarks. Due to the negative attitude of some provinces on the constitutional aspects governing housing, I say that if the minister wants at any price to avoid this constitutional crisis and those frequent arguments between the provinces and the federal government on matters of constitutional jurisdiction, he should first of all call a federal-provincial conference for the purpose of determining responsibilities and jurisdictional powers and to establish overall programmes with the provinces in order to avoid the duplication of public expenditures as well as to bring about some planning to arrive at the best possible solutions of this urgent problem.

As it was said a while ago, housing is the most important problem Canada is facing now. In fact, hardly a week goes without this problem cropping up in our constituencies. The hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Gendron) who is sitting in front of me listens to representations made by the people on this problem whenever he goes to his office at Rivière-du-Loup. This is an urgent problem to be looked after by all hon. members and not only by the government members.

Therefore, as the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) was saying a short time ago, we are prepared to help the government solve this very urgent problem. However, the government must, in the first place, elucidate its constitutional position in order to first obtain co-operation from all the provinces when the time comes to establish programs which will contribute to solving the housing problem.

[English]

Mr. Comeau: Mr. Chairman, I wish to participate in this debate because I feel we have not paid enough attention to low-income Canadians in rural areas and in the cities. The task force did not pay enough attention to them, and for that reason I wish to make a few comments.

There is nothing new about our present housing crisis. There has always been a housing crisis for Canadians with low incomes or no incomes. As we know, the housing shortage has grown and now affects the middle-income groups. The government set up the task force because the shortage has become a political issue. Many votes are to be gained among middle-income Canadians. Our middle-income groups became concerned about the crisis and finally they wanted answers. They realized they could no longer have adequate and decent housing, and for that reason we are engaged in the present debate. I do not say the task force ought to have visited every little village in Canada, but it did not pay too much attention to our rural population mainly, I suspect, because about 75 per cent of our people live in urban centres.

What does this government propose to do for our low-income families? To qualify for a mortgage loan one's income must be in excess of $8,000. I understand. I do not know how many of the recommendations of the task force will be adopted, but I wish to ask this question. Does the minister intend to make housing available to families with incomes of $5,000 a year? It would be good if we could achieve that. But what of families with incomes of less than $5,000 a year? Many such families exist in our cities and rural areas. Many of our simple, hard-working citizens earn between $50 and $75 a week. They are honest and deserve homes. But, from my reading of the task force report, no provision is made for them.

• (4:40 p.m.)

A news release of the Canadian Conference on Housing quotes Dr. Albert Rose, Proffessor at the University of Toronto School of Social Work, as follows:

> The most important change that could be made in our national housing policy would be a formal declaration that the federal and provincial governments intended, during the balance of this century, to discriminate in favour of families and individuals at the bottom half of the income distribution.

The news release continues:

> This group he says includes Canadian Indians and members of other minority groups; the elderly and the not so elderly who are single, widowed, or otherwise alone in society; families headed by women with dependent children; families of chronically ill male heads, and so on.

This is quite true. In a town in my own constituency, out of a total of 2,695 wage earners 965 heads of families earn $2,000 or less per annum. This is typical in rural Canada and in many instances in urban Canada. Many Canadians fall into this category. Leaving aside for a moment wage earners in the low salary bracket and dealing with the $3,000 to $5,000 a year group, 60 per cent or two-thirds of our wage earners are in this group. The government is attempting to provide housing only for those earning in excess of $5,000 a year.

There are many in Nova Scotia earning $250, $300 and $400 a month, and I believe the same holds true all across Canada. They are perfectly honest hard-working citizens, but they cannot afford a home. The only way these people in my area are able to have a home is if their father owns a small farm and provides them with the land, lumber and help. These people usually know how to handle a hammer and saw and can help in this way. Many tradesmen are not able to borrow in order to build a home. In urban areas it is almost impossible for someone earning $250 or $300 a month to purchase a home with the cost of living as high as it is. The government is offering nothing to families where the head of the family earns less than $5,000.

I have nothing against raising the mortgage ceiling from $18,000 to $35,000, but what does it do? It provides those who can already obtain a loan or a home with better housing. There is nothing wrong with that, but it does not provide adequate housing for those in the lower income bracket. These people cannot afford high interest rates of 9 per cent on the first mortgage and possibly 15 per cent on a second mortgage. This government is not interested in solving the housing crisis but simply in creating the impression that they are gods in this field. They really do not intend to do much to solve the problem. It has become a political issue. The government is trying to satisfy the middle-class people and provide better housing for those who can already afford a home.

Many good suggestions have been made by the task force. The leader of the Liberal party in Nova Scotia last night stated that Nova Scotia has the greatest housing crisis in the country. I hope he will make representations to the federal government. If the government is not interested in the low-income groups or cannot solve the housing crisis in those groups, then at least the task force should have recommended ways and means for people with low incomes to raise their standard of living. Possibly they should have recommended steps to be taken by the new Department of Regional Economic Development in order to raise the standard of living for these families so they would qualify for loans under the act.

The members of the Progressive Conservative party, and I am sure all hon. members, are interested in seeing that all Canadian families are provided with adequate and decent housing.

Mr. Harries: Before making a comment or two about housing, Mr. Chairman, I should recognize the most generous gesture made earlier in the day by my friend from Edmonton Centre who welcomed me back to the house after I had spent a week end in my constituency. I knew the hon. member had moved his family to Ottawa, but I did not realize that his trips to his constituency were becoming so infrequent that he was getting homesick. From personal observation I can assure the hon. member that his constituency seems to have improved since he left. I will undertake to keep him advised of the progress taking place there.

An hon. Member: How can you? You are here only two days a week.

Mr. Harries: If I may deal with a rather narrow aspect of the housing subject, it seems quite clear that price increases over the past five years have been a major factor in making the housing problem in Canada more critical. I would like to deal with the problem of price and more particularly to refer to the "gold" paper on policies for price stability issued by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in December of last year.

• (4:50 p.m.)

In the foreword to that document the minister suggested that the paper might serve as a basis for further consultation with interested economic groups. But surely any policy to maintain price stability must look to having an important impact on housing. I think that there may be the lingering thought in the minds of some people, certainly in my constituency, that the idea of establishing a prices and incomes board on a voluntary basis might be construed as simply another blatant pitch for more empire building and that indeed it would not go very far toward meeting the kind of problems that the report discusses.

The paper issued by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs describes the Prices and Incomes Commission and what it might do in these terms:

> It will be charged with the responsibility for conducting studies of incomes and price developments in Canada, and for producing regular reports on its findings. The purpose of the commission will be to discover the facts, analyse the causes, processes and consequences of inflation, and to inform both the public and the government on how price stability may be achieved. It will not play the role of policeman. It will not intervene in the particular price and income decisions of individual persons, business firms, or trade unions. It will be empowered, however, to undertake research and inquiries and issue periodic public reports on current trends and prospects for prices, costs, incomes and productivity for the economy as a whole; to make similar studies and reports on various broad sectors and industries; and to engage in related investigations of other broad issues which may have a bearing on cost and price movements . . . To carry out this broad and difficult role, the commission will be given adequate powers of inquiry. It will be provided with the necessary budget and an expert staff. It will also be authorized to engage consultants, and to arrange for the conduct of research by the universities and other bodies as it finds appropriate.

In its preamble the document explains the problems of price stability in its efforts to justify the creation of the commission, and it says:

> The conclusion drawn by the government of Canada from our recent experience is that the present policy tools are not sufficient to resolve the very real conflict that exists at the present time between the objectives of maintaining high level employment and restoring the price stability that is necessary for sustained economic growth.
> It may be that by applying the conventional monetary and fiscal levers with sufficient force, the inflation of the past three years could have been brought to a halt. But the immediate cost in terms of the level of unemployment and output foregone would certainly have been high.

I would like to remind the committee, if it be necessary, that the last federal surplus was in 1956. Evidently the fiscal levers that have been discussed here have been largely untried. According to received economic theory, a budget which is neither stimulating nor restraining is a surplus budget since the expenditure multiplier is higher than the tax multiplier. In the last several years, moreover, the money supply has been expanded at an abnormally high rate.

In order to receive exemptions from certain United States measures to halt the gold drain, Canada was committed not to hold more than a maximum number of U.S. dollars. In order to stay below this ceiling, and to keep the exchange rate between Canadian and American dollars fixed, it was necessary to expand the domestic money supply. If Canada were to revert to a floating exchange rate, monetary policy would again become available as a tool for fighting inflation, and I am suggesting, Mr. Chairman, that this is one of the points which has a very direct bearing on housing and the money that is available for housing purposes. In so far as conventional monetary and fiscal levers are concerned, it might be suggested that if we have not tried them we should not spend too much time knocking them.

As a justification for some sort of incomes policy the O.E.C.D. Economic Survey of Canada was cited. In this survey, published in 1968, the O.E.C.D. concluded its analysis of Canada's recent cost and price problems with the following words:

> Canada's price-wage performance in full employment conditions suggests that there is need for some sort of an income policy. A number of other O.E.C.D. countries have been active in this field in the last few years. No country can point to any spectacular success in controlling the rise in incomes this way. This perhaps is not surprising, given the nature of the problems involved progress could hardly be expected to be very rapid. There are indications, however, that income policy in some countries is beginning to play a useful role . . . The decentralized character of the Canadian economy may render the evolution of an incomes policy more difficult than in many European countries, but this may not be a reason for dispensing altogether with efforts in this direction.

It is interesting that two pages later a table showing rises in the consumer price indices of various O.E.C.D. countries reveals that inflation has been less severe in Canada than in any other country except the United States of America, and substantially lower than any O.E.C.D. country which has an incomes policy. Indeed, one can only reiterate, "No country can point to spectacular success in controlling the rise in incomes this way."

The causes of rising prices are again discussed in this report and the question is posed:

> What are the underlying reasons for our recent unsatisfactory price behavior? . . . We lack adequate statistical data and sufficient empirical research in the area of price and income determination in Canada. Thus we are confronted today with explanations that are contradictory and differ with the approach in the particular economic interests of those undertaking the analysis or offering their wage prescriptions—

The document expounds on reasons for changes in relative price, unused resources and so forth, and then talks about time lags in implementing monetary and fiscal policy. No mention is made of the time lag inherent in investigations by a prices and incomes commission into specific price and income changes and the introduction of remedies. Indeed, no indication is given in the whole document about what sorts of remedies might be appropriate to deal with any problems investigated by the commission.

The uncertainties as to how close to capacity the economy can operate without creating serious demand and inflationary pressures are mentioned. Bottleneck problems are also described, but again it is not made clear why these obstacles to the success of fiscal and monetary policy should be less formidable as obstacles to an incomes policy.

One question the document does not answer is: If resources are not to be allocated by a price mechanism, what other mechanism is to take its place? This question is relevant regardless of whether prices are kept down by regulation or through voluntary restraint.

The position of labour is an interesting one in this matter, and I quote from a comment contained in a document, "Labour Costs in Canada", issued by the Canadian Labour Congress:

> Organized labour would resist any incomes policy which, either by design or interpretation, placed heavy responsibilities on labour for exercising wage restraints while allowing other forms of income to find their own level. On the other hand, labour would certainly give consideration to, and be prepared to discuss with other groups, an incomes policy or set of guidelines which took the returns of all factors of production into consideration.

As I read this statement it seems that it simply says that if we are prepared to accept price and income control along with profit control and, indeed, a general control of business, we may expect to carry organized labour along with the concept of an income and prices control board. It seems to me this is hardly the road we ought to follow in meeting the problem of price increases, particularly when we examine the contribution a financial policy might make toward an alleviation of the housing problem.

In the housing report many commendable suggestions respecting methods and organization are made, but I have the uncomfortable feeling that in the face of a 9 per cent to 10 per cent effective interest rate on mortgage funds a lot of these suggestions must assume a relatively unimportant place. The idea of extending the effective term of a mortgage loan to 40 years does not seem to be one that really gets at the basic issue, although it is of some immediate practical assistance. If we cannot get the cost of money down, then it seems that a housing crisis will persist unless there is a substantial increase in incomes or, alternatively, unless we are prepared to create a special financial market for housing.

I do not see that it is possible to contemplate the kind of increase in incomes that is necessary, nor do I see the possibility of creating an effective money market for housing funds that is insulated from the general trend of interest and prices. Certainly I think it is quite clear that the creation of types of voluntary activity such as envisaged by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in the prices and income board is not likely to provide a solution. On the other hand, an effective reduction in interest rates can in my submission only come about as a result of a monetary and fiscal policy that explicitly recognizes the effect that massive increases in the supply of money, under what has been generally called an easy money policy, have had on interest rates.

If we are to avoid a continuing crisis not only in housing finance but in the financing of any small enterprise, I think it is absolutely essential that our efforts be directed and devoted to bringing the effective rate of interest down through a controlled fiscal and monetary policy. I do not believe this in any sense represents a solution to the housing problem but I would remind you, Mr. Chairman, that typically the rate of housing development has moved inversely with the rate of interest and that the supply of money has not been particularly large during times when the interest rate has been high. In other words, I think there is some historic evidence to support the proposition that you can get adequate flows of capital into the housing market in the face of relatively modest interest rates. I therefore commend that section of the housing task force report that deals with finances as being an important section. I would also suggest that a general review of our fiscal policy, having in mind the particular problems of housing, would be most appropriate and I would hope it would be done at an early date.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Chairman, if I might rise on a question of privilege I should like to say to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona that I am sorry I was not in the house at the beginning of his dissertation. I should also like to say that I would not want to deprive him of an odd week end in Edmonton and that if he would be so kind as to send me a few copies of his speech I will say to the people of Edmonton-Strathcona, "Yes, Virginia, there is a member for Edmonton-Strathcona".

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could rise on a point of order before the debate continues. I think it has been generally agreed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North will speak next on the question of housing and thereafter, notwithstanding the previous agreement, that the hon. member for Abitibi will be given the opportunity to speak on the question of regional development. Then after any response my colleague the minister responsible may have on the question of regional development we would once again return to the subject of housing for the purpose of completing the debate on that.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I just want to be certain that there will be a cut-off time with regard to the discussion of regional development. I know the minister has said so, but I should like to be sure that only one member will speak on that subject, plus the reply of the minister. We do not want to become involved in a debate on regional development when we have the subject of housing before us. As long as that is understood we are quite agreeable.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): One member would speak and then there would be the reply, if any.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order raised by the government house leader I should like to say that last night I asked the Minister of Transport to give answers concerning the four $1 items with which we are engaged at this time. The minister did not extend to me the courtesy of an answer and did not give the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates the courtesy of an answer either. If this debate is to have any pertinence, the minister must be accountable to this committee and let us know how close we are to each of the four ceilings set out in these items. I hope the government house leader will take his colleague aside and persuade him, when he does come back tonight, to give us this information; otherwise there will be a prolonged debate on housing.

The Chairman: Before I recognize the hon. member for Winnipeg North I might advise the committee of the subjects to be dealt with at the time of adjournment.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—Old Age Security—payment of income tax on guaranteed income supplement; the hon. member for Waterloo—drugs—Mace—tests to reveal possible dangers; the hon. member for Churchill—Sports—National Hockey team—invitation to Canadian Hockey Association.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, hundreds of thousands of people in this country are living in totally inadequate housing accommodation. I am being very conservative when I say there are hundreds of thousands of people in every city in Canada, in the rural areas and in the mining communities, as well as Indians and Métis, who are living in inadequate housing accommodation. Probably a million or more people who are either purchasing homes or renting accommodation are paying substantially more than they can afford to spend on housing. They do so simply because no other accommodation is available at prices they can afford. So it did not take a task force to tell the people of Canada or the members of parliament that we face a housing crisis.

We have had studies at the national level by government departments. We have had studies at the national level carried on by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. We have had studies at the provincial level by provincial governments, and we have had studies at the municipal level which have been carried on by the municipalities or by corporations established by the municipalities. If we had $1 for every study which has been carried out I am sure we would have sufficient funds to build a substantial number of the houses which are needed to meet the needs of the Canadian people. Therefore it made no sense to me when it was announced that a task force would be established to study housing needs in this country. Now that we have the report of the task force I am more than ever convinced that nothing useful can or will be obtained as a result of this study.

Before I go into what I think were the major faults of the task force I want to deal with some statements made yesterday by the minister. I am sure those statements satisfied no one but the minister and possibly the reporter for the C.B.C. who obviously has his housing problem solved. He did not see anything of value in what was said by members of the opposition.

The minister said there will be enough houses built in the coming year. He is confident as a result of discussions that there will be sufficient money available to provide the necessary financing. He went on to suggest that the freeing of interest rates on mortgages under government authorization, which took place some time ago, will sufficiently improve the housing situation to satisfy the needs of the low-income groups. The minister also suggested that we would meet the required 200,000 housing units this year. I suggest that this target is much too low, and that the interest rate of 9 per cent or higher will have the effect of freezing out more than 90 per cent of those people who wish to purchase homes.

The minister is not in his seat at this time but I hope he will pay attention to what I have to say as well as to the speeches by the hon. member for Greenwood and the Liberal member for Davenport. He pointed out the tremendous problems which exist in Toronto in respect of those people in the $5,000 to $6,000 income bracket who wish to obtain housing. Nothing the government has done up to now has had any effect on this situation, and nothing that the task force has recommended will have any effect.

Let me make a few remarks about the task force and its report. The minister said last night that its recommendations were unanimous. He took that as an indication of approval of the policies he recommended. Of course the recommendations of the task force were unanimous; the minister picked the members of that task force. He got a kangaroo court to act as jury and hangman. I have a great deal of respect for Mr. Campeau. He is an extremely successful builder, but he builds offices and buildings which he rents to the federal government and its departments at very high rents. He also builds houses and apartment buildings. I had the fortune or misfortune to live in one of Mr. Campeau's buildings for four years. It was a very good apartment building and I have no complaints about it. The bulk of the people in Ottawa and other cities who rent space in this kind of project find living simply impossible because they cannot afford the rents.

We have heard from that esteemed lady from Nova Scotia whose practical suggestion to the people living in public housing projects in the city of Toronto was that even those without children found it impossible to save money. I suppose they represent the people in the $5,000 to $6,000 income bracket. She suggested that they do without telephones as a means of saving money. In 100 years by saving $5 or $6 per month they might accumulate enough money to put a down payment on their own homes. That is the kind of people the minister put on the task force. Yet he now wonders why he received the kind of report he did.

There was not one single representative of labour or of co-operatives on that force. Dr. Laidlaw, the former secretary of the Co-operative Union of Canada, has had long experience in the field of housing in Canada, particularly housing for low income groups. He was not called upon for his advice or experience. There was not a single representative on the task force of the people who live in public housing projects already built. The minister wonders why we are dissatisfied with the report of the task force and its recommendations in respect of public housing.

The minister says it is his hope and intention that everybody in Canada will in the near future have the ability to obtain the kind of housing they want. What kind of a choice do the tens of thousands of people have who are receiving incomes of $3,000 or less? What kind of a choice do those people have who are living on welfare? What kind of choice do those thousands of people have who are separated from a husband or wife? Let me remind the minister that these people are trying to raise children. What choice do they have in respect of housing?

I suggest we have ignored those in the low income brackets who live in public housing projects. We have ignored also those people who would like to live in housing projects. The hon. member for Davenport mentioned that between 14,000 and 16,000 people in the city of Toronto have applied for public housing. What are we doing for them? We are ignoring them.

Michael Wheeler, an expert in the field of housing, in a speech he made to the annual conference of mayors and municipalities in 1967, pointed out that in the period from 1964 to 1966 some 84 per cent of the money the federal government spent on homes went to people in the middle and upper income brackets.

An expert in the field of public housing in Toronto once referred to this government practice as socialism for the rich. Only 6 per cent of federal government money is directed to housing for those people in the low income brackets. This is socialism for the rich and free enterprise for the poor. That is the type of housing program we have. We have ignored the needs of the people in the lower income brackets.

Now for the first time we have received a government document issued under the auspices of a minister of the Crown which in fact pours ridicule and scorn on the efforts we have made in the field of public housing. This document recommends that we stop even the miserably small effort that we have been making in this regard. Let me refer the Minister without Portfolio who comes from my own city to page 55 of the report of the task force. It states in part, as a recommendation of the task force:

> The task force therefore recommends:
> The federal government initiate a thorough research program into the economic, social and psychological issues of public housing. Until such a study is completed and assessed, no new large projects should be undertaken.

What has happened is that all federal housing projects have been suspended as of now until some time in the future. The minister has talked about the fact that the task force went out to interview people living in public housing projects and heard nothing but complaints. In case the minister does not know, let me tell him that if he talks to anybody living in public housing he will hear nothing but complaints. I can tell Mr. Campeau that I heard a great many complaints when I was living in his project, and it was a high-rise apartment, not a public housing project.

One question which the minister and the task force should have asked the people living in public housing projects they obviously did not ask. It is a very simple question. They should have asked the people living in public housing projects: How do these accommodations compare with those in which you lived before? We have in my constituency a large housing project, the Burrows Keewatin project. I have criticisms of that project, but I tell the Minister of Transport, and I think the Minister without Portfolio knows this, that the accommodations there are 1,000 per cent better than the slums from which those people came.

A new housing project has just been opened in a corner of the constituency represented by my colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. There is a good deal wrong with it. It has walls around it six feet high. I do not know why. This makes it look like a prison. I do not like that. But I tell the Minister of Transport that this accommodation is infinitely superior to that in which these people lived previously. Yet the minister does not say: We are going to do better in the future and learn from the mistakes we made. He says: We will suspend these projects. We are not going to go ahead with them in the near future. Nothing more disastrous for the ordinary people of this country has been said by a minister of the Crown since world war II. The task force goes on to say at page 57 of its report:

> As a further alternative to public housing, serious consideration should be given to a program of income supplements to permit low income families to rent or even purchase housing according to their own needs in the private market.

As long as we have the tremendous shortage of housing that we have at the present time, what will a supplement for low income people mean in the field of housing? I suggest that what it will mean is very obvious. It will mean a bonanza, a gift to landlords, particularly slum landlords. If this is what the minister is proposing, without a very substantial increase in total housing starts, particularly total housing starts for low income people, it will not mean very much to the ordinary Canadian citizen. The minister and the task force are proposing, in effect, a gift to people who are already making a substantial profit on their investment. Let me quote from a Financial Times news service item which was reprinted in the Winnipeg Tribune of May 1, 1968:

> Despite the widespread increases in wages last year, landlords and bond investors, not wage earners, made the biggest gains in income.
> Rent, interest and miscellaneous investment income rose nearly 13 per cent in 1967, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports. Wages and salaries averaged only a 9 per cent increase.

The minister is not addressing himself to the problem of providing more public housing, more housing for rent at prices which the ordinary person in the low income group can afford. Instead the minister proposes to stop this program temporarily—and we know how long "temporary" can be with this government. The report of the task force, which was of such high priority that the minister was absent from the house literally for weeks on end, has now been before us for almost six weeks and there is no indication at all that the government intends to bring forward legislation in the near future implementing the supposedly good recommendations contained in the report. The minister proposes that rent supplements be paid to tenants. I suggest this will immediately lead to increases in rents because landlords know that there is a shortage of housing accommodation.

The minister said a number of things last night which it is almost impossible to believe were said in a serious way. He said the government had commissioned a study by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to ascertain what the effect of a shortage of housing accommodation would be on the cost of purchase or rent of living accommodation. One does not have to be very wise to understand what will happen. The Liberal government believes in a laissez-faire economy and the law of supply and demand. Therefore it knows that if there is a shortage, as there is, of housing accommodation, the price of housing will stay at its increased level. The government knows that if houses are built for sale or rent in large quantities and there is a surplus, which we have not had for 30 years and probably will not have for another 20, the price of housing will go down.

The minister thought that what the government had done was great. He talked about the advantages of imposing on land developers a capital gains tax on unearned increment. My colleague the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre heard this and said that although the minister may not have accepted socialism yet he may come to that point 50 years from now because he has accepted Henry George's single tax idea. What good is it if the Minister of Transport, who is in charge of housing, thinks it is a good idea? We would like to know what the Minister of Finance thinks of this idea. We would like to know when we will have the kind of capital gains tax which was proposed several years ago by the Carter commission.

The minister and the task force have been great in making recommendations about things over which the minister and the government have no control. The task force made a whole host of recommendations about matters which are clearly the responsibility of the provincial governments. About these, of course, the minister waxed eloquent, as did the task force. We have to take into account what I consider to be the harsh, completely uncalled for, negative approach of the minister and the task force to the problems of public housing. The hon. member for Davenport mentioned that there are in Toronto a very large number of people who need housing. The same is true of Montreal, Winnipeg and Hamilton.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could have one more minute to roundoff my thoughts in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Orlikow: The task force has ignored, in fact, has done more than ignore and has heaped scorn on all the public housing projects which have been built up to now. It has called a halt to public housing projects. It has called a halt to urban renewal. It has done this precisely in those areas in which government action is needed most. It has completely ignored the needs of the people who are really in the worst shape so far as housing is concerned.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I am indebted to the house for this opportunity to discuss Bill C-173 for a few minutes. I shall not deal with the clause concerning housing but with that one regarding the estimates for the Department of Forestry and Rural Development which will soon become the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I also thank the minister for being in the house at the present time and I would like to give him the assurance that my remarks will be as brief as possible.

If I asked to have the floor, Mr. Chairman, it is because I must be in my constituency tomorrow in order to attend a debate on the unemployment insurance arbitration board, and when Bill C-173 is examined again next week, I shall have to go away once more for the Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, of which I am a member, will be meeting in several NATO countries.

So, Mr. Chairman, the question I want to raise this evening concerns a vast portion of the Northern Territories, not the Northwest Territories as such, but the territories north of Quebec, comprising Abitibi and what is usually called Northwestern Quebec.

Recently, I attended in Rouyn a symposium organized by social workers to make the government aware of the needs of the people of that area and try to find a solution to the problems faced by too many people of that vast area. There, I found out from data supplied at the meeting that over 40,000 people live on hand-outs from the Department of National Health and Welfare. As the total population is about 165,000, it means that 25 per cent of the population must depend on the Department of National Health and Welfare payments to live. Moreover, this does not include the many people living off unemployment insurance benefits, and many more whose income is inadequate to meet their obligations and also maintain a decent standard of living. So that is the situation prevailing in Northwestern Quebec now.

Some businessmen have suggested to start new industries to provide employment for the people of that area and to stabilize the industrial economy of Abitibi. But these men must face all the problems of competition against other areas getting better aid from the federal government. In fact, I see on the list of designated areas that Abitibi is surrounded by a sort of horse shoe. All around areas may benefit from the lesiglation on designated areas act, while my own area of Abitibi is not eligible.

Why? Because the unemployment rate, according to the criteria used up to now, and the employment rate in our area would seem adequate to prevent it from being declared a designated area.

I wished to open the debate tonight because I believed that the new department to be entrusted to the present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) will have more leeway to decide which areas should get grants to improve labour conditions.

Since we shall no more speak of designated areas but rather of special areas, I wish to call the minister's attention to the urgency of considering northwestern Quebec as an area whose population is in great need of assistance to attract industries that will provide work for the unemployed. Those people have to content themselves with public assistance, and theirs is the fate that awaits the young people soon to leave school.

Our region is now endowed with fine secondary schools which qualify our young people for the CEGEP or the university. They will want to go on with their studies and get degrees so that they may be able afterwards to put their knowledge at the service of their fellow-citizens. But if we fail to develop our resources these young people will go somewhere else, to other areas, to other provinces and maybe to other countries to find employment.

So, Mr. Chairman, it is urgent that the Canadian government should do everything possible to recognize this region as a designated area which will permit it to avail itself of its share of taxes so that its people may progress and find there the employment and economic welfare to which they are entitled.

A few months ago, a conference was held in Val-d'Or and the main speaker was Mr. Richard Rohmer, a Toronto lawyer and board chairman of the Foundation of the Middle North of Canada. I feel that this rather recent foundation is called upon to obtain great achievements in the near future. This is Mr. Rohmer's statement on that occasion and I quote:

> The inheritance of Canada is made up of its lands of the North and the Middle North. It is in those areas that is found our great wealth in national resources at ground level or underground. It is from the North and the Middle North that flows most of our economic power, the blood which will enable Canada to develop and prosper.

Mr. Chairman, I found that those words apply perfectly well to the northwestern area of Quebec which abounds in natural wealth of all kinds, forest, mines as well as people. The development of those natural resources would enable the entire country to profit therefrom.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will continue to read from the statements made by Mr. Rohmer on that occasion, because I feel that they are quite important. I quote:

> There will be about 100 million people in Canada in the year 2067. The figures come from a study of the present increase in population, that is by immigration and births, and are based on data from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.
> Considering the data, there must be a collective effort all over the country to establish and organize a long-term economic development plan for the utilization of the lands and resources of the inhabitable regions of the Middle North. Otherwise, our population will be concentrated along the border with the United States, particularly in the Great Lakes region.

Mr. Chairman, government support is often requested for the development of some areas and, from time to time, we hear ministers or heads of government say that the population must not rely on government assistance only.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, this remark by no means applies to the people of Abitibi, since it is the third winter that works are undertaken and financed exclusively by these people in order to build, as far as James Bay, a road which will be the first to join the south to the sea. It is the people of Abitibi themselves with their own resources, who cleared the land in order to build a road to the sea. No help has been granted so far by the government. This proves, Mr. Chairman, that the people in north-west Quebec are not lazy and do not rely on the help of the government, even if it is said and rightly so perhaps, that at the moment, the principal industry in Abitibi is social welfare. The people demonstrated with the help of businessmen and the general support, that they wish to develop their resources and their territory in order to place it at the disposal of all people.

At this stage, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say why we want to develop our region. We do not ask the government to finance these developments alone, but rather to help those people who have already started to clear new territories so that our young people may settle there before others do so. I would now like to quote an article that was published in the paper La Frontière, on the 6th of December 1967:

It is useless to open lands if trade and industry are not promoted to the same extent in order to absorb the products and the surplus of manpower.

One must go where natural resources are to be found. It is impossible to maintain artificially the economy of a region by vague promises and low subsidies.

The benefits to the people of the Northwest of this road—

—which is already under construction—

—can be summarized under three main headings:

A—Mines

B—Forests

C—Trade and tourism

A. Where mining is concerned, this road will open to the people of the Northwest and of the province of Quebec in general, a new area of prospection and development, available to all, whether by land or by sea. Cape Smith is surrounded with mountains of asbestos and nickel. The Trinity or Belcher islands have countless fields of magnetic iron and copper. Close to the Big Whale River, there are beds of lead and zinc. There are fantastic oil fields under the Phélypeaux islands. There is plenty of natural gas along James Bay. The limestone of the Phélypeaux islands is just as wonderful as the limestone you find in the Paris area.

[Mr. Laprise.]

Prospectors hired by the Selco Exploration Ltd. and by two other Canadian companies, the Canadian Rock Co. and Hard Metal (Canada) Ltd., are now digging for diamonds in the vicinity of James Bay and Hudson Bay. I guess this is enough—

Mr. Chairman, this is likely to arouse the interest of businessmen and governments in this area so as to make it available to the people who want to develop it. He goes on:

As for lumbering this road will open to our lumber contractors the invaluable wealth of forests located along the rivers flowing into James Bay. Trees there are now fullgrown and it is high time they should be felled.

I gather from a recent study conducted by Michel Cicé, an engineering expert, that it would be possible to set up three more pulp and paper mills in this vast area, and about 100 saw mills to process lumber.

You may well imagine Mr. Chairman, the inexhaustible opportunities for lumbering in this territory.

I go on quoting:

C—If we now consider trade and tourism, this road, while giving access to the Arctic and Atlantic oceans will enable our people to expand into an area hitherto out of reach because of prohibitive costs.

Huge commercial fisheries can then develop into a profitable enterprise the best fish in the world, that of the Arctic ocean. By considerably speeding up deliveries and exchanges in the James and Hudson Bays, this road will gradually promote trade.

The North Sea has now been spoken of for over 300 years. Needless to say once the road is completed, it will become an irresistible tourist attraction.

Mr. Chairman, I have pointed out these facts to the new Minister of Regional Economic Expansion this evening to give him all the reasons needed to recognize the northwestern area of Quebec as a special area so that it might obtain the required subsidies for the businessmen, the industrialists who wish to set up new industries, or process on the spot the resources found there, such as forests and mines.

As I pointed out to the minister last year, we cannot be expected, because of the distance that separates us from the large centres, to import raw materials to process them and then export them. We must therefore endeavour to develop and process our natural resources where we find them and then offer them to the Canadian or foreign consumers.

Mr. Chairman, I feel therefore that the Canadian government, through its minister, should study carefully the proposals submitted tonight and fully support the development of northwestern Quebec and, in particular, the construction of the access road from Abitibi towards James Bay so that the natural resources located there can be developed.

Being a member of the committee on Indian affairs and northern development, I know that the government spends rather large amounts of money for the development of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. I agree with the efforts the government makes to help them develop. I know that 40 per cent of the exploration costs in those two areas are paid for by the federal government.

I therefore feel that the government could put relatively large amounts of money at the disposal of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion for the development of the Abitibi region, that this area might also participate in the economic development we are witnessing in Canada today, so that its inhabitants, who want to live there and develop the area, can enjoy the same standard of living as other Canadians as well as the same advantages.

Mr. Chairman, I make those remarks for the information of the minister trusting that he will turn a ready ear to them and give effect to them.

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Chairman, I have not much to say about the comments made by the hon. member for Abitibi.

I agree with him on the problems facing that area. I think we shall have to find solutions; either through the legislation which enables us to designate areas or otherwise. I do not know. I think that the hon. member has no prejudice as regards instruments which can be used. He only wants the federal government, like other governments, to be able to help the area develop its natural resources.

Therefore, we are in complete agreement on the objective to be achieved.

I will probably have much to say on the bill establishing the department. I am convinced that during the debate I will have the opportunity to answer many of the hon. member's questions. I can assure him that I listened to his remarks this afternoon with an open mind.

[English]

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, there seems to be some agreement to call it six o'clock. If I may, I should like to call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock, the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Chairman, on July 17, 1968, the cabinet of the newly formed Government of Canada met and decided to establish a task force to look into the problem of housing in Canada. The transport minister was appointed to act as leader of that task force, the terms of reference of which were to examine housing and urban development in Canada and report on any way in which the federal government, in company with other levels of government and the private sector, could help meet the housing needs of all Canadians and contribute to the development of modern, vital cities. In theory, all this sounded beautiful. With a great burst of publicity the task force kicked off some time in August or September. For a short time it was impossible to turn on a television set or pick up a newspaper without seeing either the smiling face of the Minister of Transport or his sideburns, depending on the angle of the camera. I confess that the face was not an unpleasant one.

When the task force was set up the Canadian people were led to believe that finally, after many years, something would be done to solve our housing crisis. The task force took on the appearance of a travelling entertainment show or highly publicized circus, one might say. Unfortunately, the report it brought down did not live up to our expectations. The only tangible product of all the trips the task force made was an evening film show presented in a partially darkened room with a spotlight on the minister's face. We saw various slides of the housing situation across the country and heard a solemn voice describing the adverse conditions that were found.

Some recommendations of the report sounded reasonable enough, and I wish to talk about two or three of them. I wish to begin with the problem of interest rates. Speaking to the national conference of the Canadian Home Manufacturers Association, the minister said in Toronto on January 13, in part:

> As an indication of the achievement of the housing program between 1951 and 1961, the number of dwellings without a piped water supply declined from 26 per cent to 5.5 per cent—and more importantly between 1949 and 1964 the average cost for an NHA bungalow increased 36.8 per cent while disposable income per capita went up 87.2 per cent. Because the rise in incomes exceeded that of housing prices, the working man in Canada had the opportunity of buying and owning his own home.

I point out that the period when housing was in adequate supply ended in 1964, one year after the Liberal government returned to power. The minister went on to say:

Then a series of converging forces altered that favourable position. Housing starts in 1966 fell off drastically. In 1964 and 1965 there was an average of 165,000 housing starts. In 1966, this fell to 134,474. The culprit was largely rising interest rates that drew money out of the mortgage field and generally forced up costs.

I am glad the minister recognizes that the major culprit in our housing problem is high interest rates. It is, therefore, a paradox to find the minister recommending as item No. 5 in the report of the task force that:

The interest rate for insured loans under the National Housing Act be freed to find its own level in the financial marketplace.

That recommendation is not in keeping with the speech he made on January 13. If interest rates are to find their own level they will go up.

Next, I wish to speak about the recommendation regarding the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. The Canadian people were pleased when the minister announced he thought the 11 per cent sales tax ought to be removed. It must be remembered that similar announcements had been made during the election campaign in June. It does not seem that that recommendation will be carried out, however. Only a day or two after the task force report was tabled or released the Minister of Finance was asked whether he would agree to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. He stood up and said simply, no. He offered no explanation for his refusal. Here we have a senior cabinet minister recommending something one day and the very next day another senior cabinet minister saying no to this recommendation. To me that does not represent cabinet solidarity. If there is disagreement in the cabinet, the country suffers.

The third aspect I would deal with is the problem of housing, particularly with reference to people living in conditions of poverty. I would place in this group Metis, Indians and many white people with low incomes. Under the present legislation, N.H.A. mortgages are not available to people who earn less than $8,200 a year. I venture to say this covers more than half the working population of Canada. It includes Indians and the vast majority of Metis people as well as farmers who live on small mixed farms on the prairies. It also includes the vast majority of the labour force in the towns and cities.

The report does not offer a solution to the problem of housing faced by these people. With regard to the Indian people, the situation is not as difficult. The Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development realized there was a problem and set up a program which I would suggest the Minister of Transport examine. The department assists the Indian people to build houses, not expensive houses but more or less up to date houses with most of the modern conveniences which people expect. On a reservation an Indian must provide $500 worth of work or cash and the balance is financed by the department. In this way the Indian becomes the proud owner of a new home.

In Alberta there are several colonies of Metis people which are administered by the Metis rehabilitation branch. There is a housing problem for these people who live in the colonies which allows them to receive a new house under similar circumstances. These people must also pay a certain amount of money, approximately $500, either in the form of cash, labour or materials and the balance is financed by the provincial government.

The program for Indian people is carried on in areas other than on reserves. If an Indian person is working away from the reservation he is still entitled to the benefits of this housing program. Most people do not realize the difference between Indians and Metis. Most of the colonies are not economically sound areas. They are presumably set up as agriculture areas and are not self-supporting. The Metis are forced to live in colonies to qualify for new houses. If they work in urban areas some distance away they are forced to live in a colony in order to get a new house. I am familiar with some Metis people who must commute 30 to 50 miles to their place of employment. I suggest that Metis people should qualify for houses away from colonies in the same way they qualify in colonies. The regulations should be similar to those for the Indian people who qualify for housing although they do not live on reservations. This would solve the problem for many Metis people. There is no reason why such a program should be restricted to Metis people. It should also be available to those who have only temporary employment or for one reason or another do not have high incomes. These programs are financed by federal and provincial government funds.

I was a little upset with one of the recommendations of the task force that, to some extent, public housing should be discontinued for the present. The suggestion is that until a study is made of the various psychological and sociological factors affecting people who live in public housing, no major starts in public housing should be made. I wonder if this is a good suggestion. I am inclined to think it is dangerous as it may remove the possibility of certain people in low income groups having adequate housing when there is no reasonable alternative plan. I hope public housing is not discontinued in the same way as the winter works program. The country was led to believe the winter works program would be replaced by a better program, but as yet nothing has been done.

I conclude my remarks by saying that the task force did produce a lot of useful information. Canadian people were led to believe that the problems of housing would certainly be solved, not necessarily quickly but positive suggestions would evolve. I am sorry to say that I have not seen any such results. This task force was another big hoax perpetrated on the public of Canada in the same way as the one on June 25. I hope the minister responsible for housing takes into consideration some of the suggestions put forward today and makes an honest and earnest effort to solve this major problem faced by Canadians.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, we have heard unkind words about the housing policy of this government and the minister responsible for housing during the past weeks, days, hours and minutes. Wild charges have been flung with abandon around the chamber. We have heard the words "hoax", "folly" and "fraud". These are very serious terms to be employed by responsible public servants. We have heard people such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North suggest that the housing task force report contains a recommendation that public housing in this country be abandoned. This afternoon we heard the suggestion that government is reneging on its responsibility to those in the unfortunate position of attempting to support a family on a marginal income.

This is totally irresponsible talk. The serious aspect about it is that it is causing serious concerns in the minds and hearts of low income families across the country. These are unjustifiable concerns. When an elected member of parliament stands up in his place and makes a statement that fraud is being perpetrated then he should be able to justify his remarks, but so far in this debate we have not heard any evidence advanced.

Yesterday, referring to the housing task force report, the hon. member for Greenwood assured all of us that "the document is a colossal flop," and the hon. member for Broadview told us the report is "a fraud". To be charitable, and it is difficult to be charitable after listening to this line of debate, and one can only suggest that members in the opposition, at least a number because some of them are ordinarily responsible, have failed to read the report and study its contents. We know them. We have heard them attempt to stir up the fires of division in this country. In this debate, their contribution has hardly added to the sum total of human knowledge and understanding of the task force report, the most important document produced on housing since Confederation.

The cabinet made its decision on July 17 last. There had been a great deal of criticism prior to that date. Members in the opposition had said, "This is a do nothing government. They are doing nothing about the housing problem." Some of them said, "What we want is a study of the problem." Then, the study was commenced on July 17, authorizing the Minister of Transport to establish a task force on housing, "which would report to him within six months starting in September."

The minister then proceeded to carry out this authorization, and he did so with dispatch. He established the terms of reference for the task force. Then of course criticism began to come from the opposition. Opposition members asked, "Why is the government studying the problem when it should be acting the way we would if we were charged with responsibility?" The opposition line changed. The concensus was that we did not need a task force, that instead we needed action.

As I say, the terms of reference were established:

—"to examine housing and urban development in Canada and to report on ways in which the federal government, in company with other levels of government and the private sector, can help meet the housing needs of all Canadians and contribute to the development of modern, vital cities."

Predictably, the attack began and one really began to wonder whether or not some members of parliament were more interested in trafficking in human misery than they were in trying to find valid solutions to the housing crisis which afflicted the Canadian people. They have not acted to achieve a greater understanding of the issues involved in housing. Had the government failed to establish the housing task force on July 17, the line would have been, "The government won't even study the problem." We know this.

I am not going to attempt a complete review of the report but after observing the task force in action in certain parts of the country I can only say that it conducted its deliberations with care, with attention, and with an eminently responsible attitude and a conscientious approach to the problems of the Canadian people. I think it is unfortunate—

Mr. Valade: Would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Perrault: If it is a short one.

Mr. Valade: It is a short one. When the task force was in Montreal, which has a population of 3 million people, to study the housing problem, it spent a day and a half there. Does the member imply that this is a serious study of the question?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, I will answer only by saying that for months the opposition said, "The problem is so urgent that we must act quickly." The task force itself said it did not have sufficient time to do the kind of study it would have wished. If you read the document you will find those words in the report. They did not spend enough time in Vancouver, in Regina, in Moncton, New Brunswick and many of the other centres, but the time they did invest was well spent. This is the point I am trying to make.

But I say it is unfortunate that after we ask a group of Canadians, knowledgeable Canadians, to form a task force on housing, these people are accused of fraud without any right of defence on the floor of this house. When we say that this report is a fraud, when we say it is a hoax, we are making a serious charge against knowledgeable and responsible Canadians who invested time, energy, intelligence and judgment in the preparation of the report.

Those who allege that the low income groups have been forgotten simply have not read the report. Either they have not read it or they refuse to believe its contents, or they choose to place upon the report a special construction for their own narrow, political ends.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Perrault: Despite the television broadcasts over the week end, and despite the statements made by certain members in the opposition, the report does say that the present program of low cost housing can be improved. It does not say to scrap it. The report does not ask for an end to decent, low cost shelter for low income groups and people with limited means. The report says that in a modern society surely we can evolve new and different criteria to guide our program, so that new and better housing can be provided for low income groups.

This nation, which is supposed to be a haven for this government which is perpetrating fraud, built 200,000 housing units in 1968. On a per capita basis, this represents more construction than was undertaken in the richest nation in the world to the south of us. And the 1969 outlook is even more encouraging, with the figures for January and February probably up.

Let me suggest to some of the critics in this house that many of them were noticeable by their absence from the meetings held across this country by the housing task force. There is a list in existence of those who attended, and I repeat that many were conspicuous by their absence. Had some of these vocal critics tramped around 25 public housing projects from coast to coast with the task force, in all kinds of weather, talking to people in all economic strata, under every conceivable condition, they would have tempered their judgment with a degree of reason.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Perrault: I attended some of the task force meetings and I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that some of these vocal critics were not there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I ask hon. members of the committee to be patient enough to listen to the speech being made. I have no doubt hon. members know very well the elementary rules of the house.

Mr. Perrault: I attended an excellent meeting at the Skeena Terrace project in the lower mainland of British Columbia. A group of government members were present, and it is too bad that the schedules of opposition members did not permit them to attend, to watch the task force in action and see the Minister of Transport who undertook a difficult job. I came away with the same conclusion as did the task force, that low income families need more help, but surely society can do more than condemn them to a housing ghetto.

Some of the statements which we heard at the Skeena Terrace project—and it is a good project of its type—were statements that I would not want to repeat on the floor of this house because they were framed in such bitterness and such disillusionment that they would shock many people. Severe and damaging results have ensued to many families in housing projects. The report simply says that we can provide better, more humane, more acceptable housing, and that we can produce more effective methods of assisting low income families.

Then, we might turn to page 55 of the report. I am afraid perhaps the pages in the copies which some of the opposition members have are stuck together because their copies have never been opened. Reference is made to a research program into the economic, social and psychological issues of public housing. I have a copy of the New Democratic party platform before me. I find at page 43 of the housing task force report, which is condemned in such bitter terms in this debate, that there are measures advanced to provide generous financial assistance to meet the housing crisis. What is the number one point in the New Democratic party platform on housing? It is to provide generous financial assistance to meet the housing crisis. Then, the second recommendation is to bring down the cost of mortgage money. When I turn to the task force report I find four proposals to bring down the cost of mortgage money. That is point number two in the New Democratic party platform. Then, their platform reads:

> Support the principle of integrated community development so that transportation, schools, recreation and shopping facilities are developed together with new and renewed housing.

Lo and behold, when we turn to page 55 of the housing task force report we find this:

> There are obvious limits as to what can be done by way of physical restructuring. But the members would suggest that every effort be made to utilize vacant or redevelopment space within the immediate area to relieve some of the present shortcomings for recreational facilities and open space.

Point number four in the N.D.P. platform is, "Encourage the development of new towns in areas of urban congestion." Then, I turn to page 75 of the housing task force report—

Mr. Peters: If you could get it from the N.D.P. platform, why did you have to turn to the task force?

Mr. Perrault: —where I find the following:

> The Federal Government, in co-operation with a provincial government, should seriously consider the construction of a "new city" as a pilot project—

Yet, as we know, this is a report condemned out of hand by the socialist members of this house. Despite that, it contains all the four main points in the N.D.P. platform for the last election campaign. We might ask what are the real motives of some of the critics and do they have a greater interest in amassing votes for a national election than in a real concern about serving the housing needs of the Canadian people? They have referred to the housing task force report as a hoax and a fraud. Does that mean that the New Democratic party platform is a hoax and a fraud?

We, on the government side, do not believe that the status quo needs to be defended. We say there is nothing sacred about the existing housing program. The only thing wrong with it is it could be made better. The task force has said, the minister has said, and government members agree that the present public housing program is not good enough. This does not mean a total withdrawal of the government from public housing projects, a partial withdrawal or any withdrawal. In fact, it means an expansion of the existent program with changes in style, design and layout—changes which would make shelter for low income families more compatible with family living.

Does a de-emphasis on public housing as we know it now mean a callous retrenchment as has been suggested? It means, among other things, that there will be more emphasis on limited dividend and co-operative housing and more help for these plans. Does the task force's concern about the social implications of the present style of public housing mean that this government is turning its back on the problems of the elderly, the students or Canadians of Indian and Métis origin? On the contrary, the special programs will go ahead with increased emphasis, support and determination by this government.

The sum total of the task force recommendations will make it easier for the working man and his family to buy decent shelter. This will be the result despite the contrived efforts of some members of the opposition to brand the report as a fraud before its recommendations have been weighed, tested or, I suspect, even read by most of them. This report says there are alternatives to the bleak multi-family high rise accommodation in Canada. It points out that Canadian technology, design, planning, engineering and finance can find better solutions to the shelter needs of the low income groups in our midst. It states that we need not be bound by concepts of the past.

We have been told the task force report constitutes fraud and folly. Was it fraud for the task force to say, as it did:

> Urgency. That certainly is among the strongest of the Task Force impressions. The need to act while reasonable action is still possible. Many Canadians, whose needs are of yesterdays, want adequate housing today and not tomorrow. Theirs is the voice of frustration that no longer will accept the explanation that it is "that other" government's responsibility to act. Theirs is the growing anger of people who, amid the material plenty around them, refuse to wait that "little bit longer" for their minimal share.

This is what has been branded as fraud and folly. I agree with what the task force said. Any reasonable member in this house will agree with it. Was it fraud for this allegedly cold-hearted task force to say:

> The Task Force is convinced that Canada has the resources, material, technological and intellectual, to meet these needs and problems. To believe otherwise is to despair and surrender to the inevitable.

Yet, there are members in this house who want to enshrine the status quo and who believe that public housing must be beyond criticism. Thank goodness we have some responsible groups in this country, like the urban renewal administrators of Canada, who endorsed the report in Winnipeg over the week end. That is one source that has never been quoted by the opposition.

Is it fraud and folly to suggest that the government encourage private lending institutions and growing pension funds to become more involved in making money available for housing? Is it fraud and folly to suggest that the federal government consider the establishment of savings and mortgage institutions to serve the residential mortgage market on a regional basis? Is it fraud and folly to propose a central mortgage bank to provide additional liquidity for existing lending institutions? Is it fraud and folly to free the interest rate? Is it irresponsible to propose alternate forms of insured loans under the National Housing Act to provide greater flexibility for lenders and borrowers?

Is it wrong to suggest that the maximum loan ceiling under the National Housing Act should be substantially increased? Is this fraud, when at the outset some 20,000 new Canadian families would qualify for loans because of this measure? In addition, there is the lengthening of the amortization period of the loans. Let these housing critics tell us of the fraud involved in the task force recommendation that down payments should be progressively reduced so that middle and lower income groups can obtain modest housing under a lease-purchase system without initial equity participation. We have been told that this is a hoax and an attempt to mislead the low income families. What about the proposal that purchasers of existing homes should be entitled to comparable mortgage conditions under the National Housing Act to those which apply to new homes. Is this a fraud? Is it fraudulent to suggest that insurance fees, legal charges, real estate commissions and other administrative costs be reduced and that the school tax should be removed from the family home?

Where is the fraud and the folly when the task force concerns itself with the low income groups once again by suggesting that greater encouragement be given to the use of limited dividend, non-profit and co-operative projects as a means of providing adequate accommodation for lower income groups? Does this report deserve to be condemned out of hand when it proposes that the federal government should make direct loans to municipalities or regional governments to assist them in assembling and servicing land for urban growth?

I should like to conclude, Mr. Chairman, by saying that the task force report is a document well worth study and consideration. Those who assembled it are good, conscientious Canadians who deserve something better than to be accused of fraud by certain members in this house. Opposition has a duty to oppose that which is wrong or contrary to the public interest. I suggest, Mr. Chairman, it has another duty, a duty to be fair and a duty to be responsible. Some of the criticism heard during the past weeks, months and days is not fair. It is an attempt not to be fair. Surely, we are sent to this place to make a more constructive contribution to public life.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I understand the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville wants to ask a question of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour. The hon. member's time has expired and this would be out of order unless there is unanimous consent of the committee. Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: I was wondering whether the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, in order to update activities in respect of housing, is in favour of the establishment of a department of housing and urban affairs?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, this recommendation is already contained in the task force report and I support it.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, in following the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, and at the risk of being accused of stirring up differences of opinion and dissension across the country, I should like to put a few things of interest on record during this debate on the task force on housing and certain recommendations contained in their report.

The hon. member, in his usual way, asked members of the house to refer to page 55 of the report. He suggested that perhaps these pages in the reports of hon. members in the opposition had stuck together since we had not read them. I would ask that hon. member to refer to page 48. I suggest that the Minister of Transport responsible for housing and the members of the cabinet probably had the pages of their copies at this point stuck or glued together. At page 48, the task force recommended that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials be abolished. I suggest that this recommendation has been a source of embarrassment to the minister and the government.

The Minister of Finance has already stated that despite the recommendation of the task force and the Minister of Transport responsible for housing, the government will not remove this sales tax. I am sure we all appreciate the fact that the Minister of Transport had the foresight and the courage to suggest to his colleagues in cabinet that the 11 per cent sales tax be removed. We regret that his colleagues have not had the same charitable feeling toward the people of Canada, and have not agreed with the minister in respect of the removal of this sales tax. In my opinion, the minister has been repudiated by his colleagues and his recommendations have been pushed aside.

This is a very worthwhile recommendation, and I am sure when this report was tabled some time ago all Canadians, especially those in the middle and low income groups, were delighted to know that this 11 per cent sales tax would probably be abolished. The joy was short lived. I am sorry to note that this has not been done. Members on this side of the house are very disappointed that the government has refused to accept this recommendation. Obviously, this government intends to maintain this sales tax.

This sales tax is a very important factor to married couples or people in the low or middle income range, particularly when it comes to building or buying homes. The 11 per cent sales tax adds about $500 or $600 to the cost of a home. This can make the difference between a person being able to afford to build a house and a person being unable to do so. I suggest that the government should reconsider the removal of this 11 per cent sales tax.

Another recommendation made in this report deals with the mortgage insurance fund. Most members know that this fund was set up in respect of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Originally, it was established so that people who obtained mortgages through the National Housing Act would be assessed 2 per cent of the amount of the mortgage, which amount was in turn set aside in a special fund. The task force report suggests that this amount be reduced by half. The recommendation is that it should be 1 per cent instead of 2 per cent.

Since the establishment of this fund in 1954, $224 million have been accumulated. One wonders why this fund is necessary. Since the inception of the National Housing Act 800,000 loans have been made. I understand there have been 6,700 claims against this insurance fund. Most of these claims have resulted from the situation which developed in the Elliott Lake area. I understand also that most of the houses which were repossessed there, or had foreclosure action taken against them, have since been sold or are in the process of being sold.

I would certainly recommend to the minister and the government that we should try to make housing available to the middle and low income groups. If we want to help people in those income brackets, there is one tangible way in which it can be done. We can do away with the 2 per cent charge that is now being assessed for the mortgage insurance fund.

I have mixed feelings in respect of public housing because we all know certain sociological problems are involved. We all know what has happened in some large cities. I know particularly what has happened in the city of St. John's. We have some excellent public housing complexes, but there are others which have become nothing more than ghettoes. This is one of the dangers in respect of public housing under the present concept.

One of the problems facing these people who occupy these subsidized rental units is related to the fact that rent is assessed on the basis of their gross income. This is very unfair in my opinion. I can cite hundreds of cases which occurred in 1968, particularly during the wintertime, when many individuals earned a certain amount of money as a result of working overtime. I understand their rent will be based on the amount of money they earned in 1968. This is very unfair because in 1968 these people earned this amount of money because they worked a considerable amount of overtime. This additional income is being added to the income they earn in 1969 for the purposes of assessing their 1969 rents. As a result, a hardship is being imposed on these people.

These people are being charged rent based on 27 per cent of their regular incomes in 1968. But because of the additional earnings throughout overtime worked in that year, the assessed rents in the following year could well amount to 30 per cent or more of their gross income. I contend this destroys the initiative of these people and discourages them from getting out to work a few hours overtime or to develop some part time employment. They are discouraged when they realize that of every dollar they earn as a result of overtime or a part time job 27 per cent is deducted and applied to their rent.

I would ask the Minister of Transport and his colleagues to give serious thought to changing the method by which rents are assessed in respect of people who live in subsidized rental accommodation. I think the present method is unfair and does not give the people concerned any opportunity to save a down payment and eventually buy a house.

The report makes several recommendations with regard to urban renewal schemes, studies, and so on. Having served for a number of years on the city council of St. John's, I am well aware of the red tape involved in trying to get an urban renewal or land development scheme off the ground. I know that a certain procedure must be followed. It is only reasonable to assume that this should be so. But I know from experience that a great deal of unnecessary hardship has been caused by typical civil service bureaucracy, typical civil service red tape. This should be eliminated if cities are to avail themselves of the urban renewal benefits of the National Housing Act.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour is very upset over some remarks made on this side of the house. He was almost crying for a few minutes. I found it almost impossible to avoid filling up, but thank goodness I recovered and could stand up and say a few words. I am the first to agree that in this report there are several worth-while recommendations. However, I do not think it is enough for a task force on housing, that has travelled the length and breadth of Canada at great public expense, to make many recommendations and not as yet have one implemented.

Mr. McCleave: Except cutting down public housing.

Mr. Carter: Interest rates have increased. The suggestion that the sales tax be removed has been thrown out. I suggest to the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour that it is not enough for the government to commission a task force on housing to travel the country and study the problems which the average and low income people are facing with regard to housing, and then to do nothing about those problems. This report, which has been compiled at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer, is only as good as the attitude which the government in power adopts towards the recommendations made. If the government treats the other recommendations as it has the one that the sales tax be eliminated, I suggest we might as well throw the report out, because then it will be useless.

Flowery phrases and recommendations will not alleviate the problems facing the people in my riding, many of whom are living in homes that are not fit for human habitation. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that unless the government takes this report seriously and finds some way to implement the recommendations contained therein, the minister's trip across the country will have been unecessary and a waste of public money. I suggest to the Minister and his colleagues that the co-operative housing concept should be studied. This is a program that enables a person who is not afraid to take off his coat and roll up his shirt sleeves, to go to work for himself and build his own home with government assistance. I can cite cases in my province and city where from 1951 to 1955 hundreds of new homes were built through the co-operative housing movement. This is a scheme whereby 9, 10 or 12 people get together, study building methods and ideas, financing methods, and so on, and then apply to Central Mortgage and Housing, through the province, and receive a commitment for a mortgage. They then go to it and build their own homes in the co-operative fashion, by buying co-operatively, in bulk, and thereby effecting considerable savings. This is one idea I would like the government to study. It should see if the co-operative housing concept in home building cannot be encouraged and taken advantage of by more middle income, middle class Canadians.

Those of us who live in the less fortunate provinces of Canada are well aware of the suffering and misery faced by people living in substandard homes. We agree that much has been done in this respect. Public housing projects have been built. But in many respects I think we have only scratched the surface, and a great deal more remains to be done. I believe it is obvious that the government must take the leadership and adopt policies that will help the average Canadian obtain a decent home for himself and his family.

I was very interested in the words of Dr. Albert Rose, professor at the University of Toronto, who said that the most important change that could be made in our national housing policy would be a formal declaration that the federal and provincial governments intended, during the balance of this century, to discriminate in favour of families and individuals at the bottom half of the income distribution. This is a very thought-provoking observation, because it is obvious that it is the sort of thing this government must do. The government must, in the balance of this century, discriminate in favour of the people who have been suffering for too long because they have lived in substandard housing. I hope that the Prime Minister's promise of a just society will embrace the proposition of providing reasonable and cheaper homes for people who are deserving of them.

These are the things I would like to see done in the next few weeks, Mr Chairman. I would like to see the government take the Minister of Transport off the hook, give him back his pride and allow him to again stand tall and walk straight. When he makes a recommendation to the cabinet, I hope they will accept his recommendation. With respect to this report, which was compiled at great personal sacrifice to the minister and at great expense to the Canadian taxpayer, I hope it will not be shelved, thrown aside, and its recommendations ignored. Let the government tell the people of Canada that it takes the Minister of Transport seriously, will reconsider its decision, and in fact abolish the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. Let the government show the people of Canada that it means business. It can do this by abolishing the 2 per cent insurance fee in respect of mortgages.

These are some of the things which could be done, and I hope for the sake of the less fortunate Canadians that steps are taken to make money available to people in lower-middle income groups to help them get housing. Under the National Housing Act at the present time, Mr. Chairman, a person who wishes to get an $18,000 mortgage must be earning in excess of $8,000 a year. When one considers that in many cities in Canada—I could name one—less than 5 per cent, perhaps, and certainly less than 10 per cent are in this category, we begin to realize what this means. What hope is there for the other 90 per cent? More than 90 per cent of our people cannot qualify for a National Housing mortgage. The recommendations contained in the report that the maximum should be increased and the amortization period extended are excellent suggestions and I hope the minister and the government will implement them.

Mr. Rose: Before I begin the main part of my speech this evening, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour on his fine defence of New Democratic party housing policy. I hope it will be my privilege to do as good a job, though I promise I shall not be half as loud.

We heard a fine speech in defence of the various proposals in the report of the task force but we are living in a fool's paradise because as yet we have not seen any legislation arising from the report. When such legislation has been brought forward we may be more confident that what is contained in the report will become a reality for most Canadians.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour told us the report had been defended by at least one authority. I have quotations here from several authorities who have been extremely critical of the report. I shall not read lengthy passages from these articles, only excerpts to indicate that there has been considerable discussion about the merits of the report and that much of the comment has not been favourable.

I should like to quote from the Toronto Globe and Mail on Tuesday, February 5:

> The important thing here is that Mr. Hellyer's position on public housing is far more important than an attitude. Although the task force recommendations have not been given parliamentary approval a freeze is apparently already in effect in the public housing field.

Michael Wheeler, the executive secretary of the Canadian Welfare Council's conference on housing has this to say as reported in the Toronto Globe and Mail of January 31:

> The critical flaw in the report is that it would halt those measures which now offer some hope to low-income groups without offering anything definite in their place except pious suggestions for further research and study.

A number of other authorities have expressed similar critical opinions. Leon Kumove, head of Toronto's social and community planning services and an expert in this field had this to say:

> It made far too many generalizations about the nature of public housing. Some of it is bad, but some of it is also good. You must change public housing, you cannot eliminate it.

Humphrey Carver, former chairman of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation's advisory group stated:

> These are two of the most difficult subjects. The task force was baffled by the problems it encountered, said it didn't like the whole idea of public housing and recommended it be virtually stopped. This is an elementary attitude to take and it has done a great deal of damage to the whole cause of getting housing for low-income families. Because of that report, a lot of people will go without proper housing.

Albert Rose, my namesake, but unfortunately no relation, has similar things to say about the findings of the task force, especially as they relate to public housing.

The provision of decent housing at a price people can afford to pay has been a subject of pressing concern for a great many years. Governments have stood around twiddling their thumbs, content to observe the rush to the cities and the postwar population increase, muttering pious hopes that a laissez-faire posture would solve the problem, or that it would somehow evaporate into thin air. But it has not evaporated, Mr. Chairman. It will get worse. To paraphrase what Will Rogers said about the weather, everybody talks about housing but nobody does anything about it. There is no real mystery about the causes of the housing crisis. Speaker after speaker has reiterated the major causes of this problem and, no doubt, other speakers will continue to do so.

[Mr. Rose.]

Here are some of them. First, high interest rates—9⅜ per cent when I last looked, and they are probably going up steadily. Then, there is the difficulty experienced by the many in the low income groups in raising the necessary down payment. Another problem is the scarcity and high cost of decent serviced lots. High taxes and the high cost of building materials are other contributing factors. I heard the other day that the cost of lumber had gone up by another $40 a thousand—I hasten to add I am not blaming the minister for this. A further cause of the housing problem is the inflexibility shown by municipal councils in refusing to permit a variety of accommodation within their borders. Too much emphasis is placed on single family dwellings and not enough on alternative proposals which I think would be a great deal more helpful and lead to greater efficiency in the use of land.

All these things are well known; I am sure other hon. members could add to this list. In my opinion, the great cause of this problem is the reluctance of the federal government, whether Liberal or Conservative, to become deeply involved in the housing issue at all. I believe there is an inbred prejudice against public participation in housing and I say this because as far as I know there have never been sufficient funds directed to housing to meet the need. It is implicity believed by successive governments that housing should be the private preserve of the private entrepreneur. The government's attitude to housing reminds me of the prevailing wisdom one hundred years ago, as expressed by the government's attitude toward public education. The feeling was that public education was unnecessary; that it would encourage people to be lazy and all sorts of unpleasant consequences would result. The same arguments have been used to sabotage the medicare proposals which are before us now. I believe we have learned by now that it is essential to put money into education and I think we shall learn that it is just as essential to put enough money into housing to meet the needs of Canadians.

Money for housing is allocated grudgingly to those in the middle-income brackets and above, because these people are a potent political force. But for those whose incomes are below these levels, little or nothing is provided. Mr. Chairman, we shall be forced into a change of attitude in this regard. People who are earning less than $8,000 a year will not tolerate for ever living in grim, jerry-built suites in cities or driving back and forth a hundred miles a day to work. I have people in my constituency who drive this distance to work and who are forced to live in unsatisfactory accommodation in trailer camps without adequate facilities, simply because we have not done enough soon enough.

The housing problem is really an income problem. There is no evidence that people with unlimited incomes have any problem at all with regard to housing. They do not suffer from the housing shortage and by and large neither do those who already own a house. But young families today, growing families, desperately need more accommodation. As the task force report says, all Canadians should be entitled to clean, warm shelter as a matter of basic human right. I hope that this is not just another empty gesture but is a principle that the government will follow when it brings down its legislation. If it does not do so, I am certain there will be many disillusioned people in Canada in addition to the ones we have at the moment.

In the province from which I come, British Columbia, the people who need public housing or financial assistance the most are not receiving it in their fair proportion under the N.H.A. legislation. If I might just put some statistics on the record, of the lower one third of the population income group in 1967 only 5.7 per cent received any C.M.H.C. funds at all. Here again is the application of socialism for the affluent.

The problem is also very serious in the community in which I live, Coquitlam. The local social welfare administration reports to me that 85 per cent of people on social welfare receive rent subsidies in addition to welfare payments because accommodation is not available to them without such assistance. If they are spending extra money on rent, obviously they are unable to spend it on things they need like dental care, clothing, food, insurance and other items.

At the moment, housing is taking up far too large a proportion of most people's income. In the same community, in 1967, 1,200 new homes were constructed. Thus 1,200 new families moved into the community. In the same area the average purchase price of these 1,200 new homes was $25,000. Since the average income in British Columbia is $5,600 per year per family, I should like to ask what kind of families moved into these new homes. Again, this supports what I said earlier: National Housing Act money is available to people whose incomes are high enough to qualify for loans, but not available to those people who are desperately in need of housing.

I am an ex-municipal alderman and can see the desirability of attracting quality construction to the community. The assessments are higher for tax purposes and treasuries that are short of money benefit. In addition, such developments are visually attractive to the community. There are fewer schools required because there is not the high density that exists in other areas. There is also probably much less drain on the various social services; usually these income groups have fewer problems. There are fewer broken homes, and so on.

Some very fine people have moved into Coquitlam and they were attracted to this area for the same reason I was. I had to make a decision. I had to decide whether I wanted to spend my money close to my job and pay high taxes on real estate, or whether I should move out to Coquitlam and spend my money on gasoline and tires and drive to work in Vancouver. I decided on the latter course.

However, you cannot build a wall around a municipality and keep people out. It does not matter whether you build a zoning wall, a financial wall, or whether there is a gentleman's agreement to keep certain people out of certain subdivisions. Every urban area must make certain that it provides for a reasonable blend of single family dwellings and other types of accommodation. This is where we fall down. There are examples of all kinds of fine suburban dwellings, but there is only one price bracket. There is no new housing that is attractive and within the range of smaller families with lower incomes.

I do not think we can depend forever upon the concept of the filtering process. This is the process whereby those people who buy a new home move out of another home which becomes available for people in the lower income groups. I do not think that these houses will be available in sufficient quantities, and in addition this is not the way we should attack the problem. Although this process does take place, it is illogical to put it forward as a long-term proposition.

As I have said, one cannot blame the municipalities for wanting to attract high priced homes; but most municipalities, if not all, in my area suffer from an acute shortage of an adequate supply of serviced land. To illustrate the point, I should like to refer to part of a letter that I received from the municipal manager of Coquitlam who wrote to me in desperation because of the inability of the municipal council, and also as a matter of fact the regional district, to borrow money so as to increase the supply of serviced land, to instal such things as sewers, water, roads and so on. Part of his letter reads as follows:

> The problem which faces Coquitlam of course does not differ from that faced by all municipalities in British Columbia or for that matter across Canada. Marketing of municipal bonds and debentures has become virtually impossible.

How are communities going to provide more serviced land when they face a financial situation of this sort? I could go on and tell the committee how the regional districts are also faced with similar problems when it comes to selling bonds. Regional districts do not enjoy, in the matter of bond sales, the same status in the eyes of the Superintendent of Insurance in Ottawa as do municipalities, so the bond market is shot. The minister knows it is shot, the members of the house know it is shot and I know it is shot. So, at least this is a temporary barrier to increasing the supply of serviced land, and a great deal of space in the task force report was devoted to this question.

I sometimes wonder how the minister is going to encourage the various mortgage and trust companies to become more socially conscious and put more money in the housing pot. There seems to be no shortage of money for high rises, for shopping centres or for office buildings. It all depends where one can make the fastest buck, it seems to me, and at the moment our loyal financial institutions have concluded that it is not in housing.

Another problem facing housing is the inefficient use of land. Again, we cannot fault the minister or the task force report for this. Here I agree with the task force report, at least in part. Far too many municipal planners, builders and buyers think that there is something holy about the 66 x 125 foot lot. This is something that we have inherited from the horse and buggy days. We have inherited it from the time when we had to have a 125 foot lot to keep the outhouse far enough away from the main part of the kitchen; to keep the flies away; to provide a back garden in which to grow vegetables; and perhaps also to site the garage and have the garbage picked up. We also wanted a certain amount of privacy.

As an ex-alderman, I have found it difficult to change this concept. We do not live this way any longer. I much prefer, instead of a huge back garden to maintain, a little more privacy between myself and my neighbours. I think encouragement must be given to other forms of construction, to other designs of houses, and to other shapes of lots, because in this way I think we can achieve a much more efficient use of land.

Perhaps we could also encourage condominiums or row housing, as well as other forms of housing referred to in the report. This section of the report was good. As Minister of Transport, I am certain the minister will agree with me that urban sprawl complicates transportation problems. There are commuter problems all over the place as a result of unrealistic land use. We have exploited land; we have wasted it; we have polluted it. Roads use up far too much space. It seems to me that an ever-increasing sprawl is self-defeating and self-perpetuating; it is also never ending. As far as I am concerned we should look for far more planning in this area as well as in the provision of finance.

There are many other matters I could raise about housing and related topics, but in view of the short time available I cannot deal with them in detail.

My final and most important point is this. I wish to protest most vehemently against the inbuilt bias that exists against housing. The idea that there is some sort of bias against public housing permeates much of the report of the task force. I do not think that those who claim there is some sort of bias against public housing do so on ideological grounds. In approaching this problem the minister has been influenced by his background, no less than I would have been if I had been given the task of solving this problem. The minister, members of the task force and officials of C.M.H.C. are not against the concept of multiple housing, since 50 per cent of N.H.A. funds are now directed towards the construction of apartment complexes. But I think that these officials are prejudiced against the concept of public multiple housing and urban renewals. In the latter area especially, we have seen much foot dragging lately, and we can expect much more if events of the last few weeks are an indication of things to come.

Naturally, most Canadians with families prefer to live in single family dwellings. But, under present economic conditions they cannot do so. If the government plans to house the unfortunate part of our population, let it bring in legislation permitting it to do so. Members of our party probably will support that legislation. If the government has no such plans I see no alternative to public housing for the increasing number of Canadians who will need it.

I should like to see a housing authority and department of urban affairs set up. Nobody likes the stigma attached to public housing projects. Surely, it will be wise for the government to decentralize its housing program, to plan, to buy older homes and to rent apartments in private apartments blocks. If it does these things, it will have the support of our party. But, if the minister does nothing he will be made very uncomfortable by our snapping, carnivorous fangs puncturing him in the region of his posterior.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended speaking in this debate, since I represent a riding in rural Ontario which is fortunate in having no housing shortage. Having listened to some speeches, I thought it appropriate that I should make known my thoughts and give the committee some of my views on the subject. While it is true that the Minister of Transport headed the housing task force, we ought to remember that its report is not his report alone. Of course, it is a government report; nevertheless, some reputable citizens helped in its drafting. They are fine businessmen, successful in their professions, and not all of them are of the Liberal persuasion. These businessmen, along with the minister, went across Canada, studied the problem and drew up a report which, although it may not meet with the approval of all, nevertheless is a report of experts in this field. Therefore, when opposition members apply the terms, "hoax," and "fraud" to the minister and the report they are also applying those unparliamentary terms to some reputable Canadian citizens. It is a pity to have members of the most exclusive club in Canada indulging in the unparliamentary practice of calling the Minister of Transport names.

Hon. members who may have read the biographies of members of the task force will see just how good a job the members of that force have been doing in Canada. I repeat, it was unparliamentary of hon. members to apply the terms "hoax" and "fraud" to the minister and to these people.

As a supporter of the government I will be the first to admit that everything is not 100 per cent with housing in Canada, and that many improvements could be introduced. The report suggested many improvements that could be effected. In my opinion, that report shows evidence of considerable thought and work and should be examined carefully so that our housing situation in future will be better than it is at the present or has been in the past.

If we accept the fact that not everything is 100 per cent with our housing, how does that give the opposition the right to say that housing in Canada is in terrible shape? Let me ask, where in the world is it in better shape?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Is it not true that Canadians have the best housing in the world? Is it not also true that if the government is to be blamed for any of our shortcomings in housing it should be given credit for its positive achievements in the field of housing? On average, Canadians are better housed than are our neighbours to the south. I know many hon. members have been to the United States. Let them examine the slums of New York City and they will see how bad slums really can be.

An hon. Member: Does that excuse our slums?

Mr. Whicher: I will talk about our slums in a minute. If hon. members go south of our border they will see millions of people who breathe no fresh air, whose only glimpse of a piece of ground is the ground in a park. Or, if they do not visit New York let them visit Los Angeles, a considerable portion of which the negro population burned down two or three years ago, largely because much of their housing was in deplorable state.

We, on this side of the house, admit that many of our housing difficulties need to be remedied; yet our citizens have not begun burning down our cities. Let hon. members of the opposition go to Cincinnati or New York if they want to see deplorable housing conditions. Some members are to go to Europe. If they find time to drag themselves away from the night clubs of Piccadilly let them walk down to where the people live and they will see that the houses in London are not in the best of shape. Or, perhaps they will prefer Paris, a city I have visited many times. They will see housing conditions there are deplorable. If they do not like Paris they can visit the great city of Vienna, and find the same thing. The fact remains that this terrible, this monstrous government that the opposition has been crucifying for the last couple of days has provided its citizens not only with the best housing in North America but in the world.

Mr. Whicher: One criticism that may be levied against our housing program is that the 11 per cent sales tax should not be imposed on building materials. It would be wonderful if the government could say that from now on there would be no 11 per cent sales tax. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Transport agreed with that suggestion. The unfortunate thing is the government is spending approximately $12 billion on social and other types of services. Until the government finds some other source of revenue, this $300 million is required for old age pensions, family allowances, pensions for the blind and disabled, to provide new docks in Newfoundland, new ports, etc. I agree it would be good if the 11 per cent sales on building materials could be removed. I wonder if hon. members realize what is happening in this city so far as building materials are concerned? It is not all one sided. All the devils do not belong to the Liberal Party.

If a man purchased building materials valued at $1,000 in Ottawa tomorrow morning, he would have to pay 11 per cent federal sales tax amounting to $110. Unfortunately, that is not the only tax which must be paid. There is another government which had its headquarters in Toronto. This afternoon I listened to the treasurer of the province of Ontario present his budget. He did not say anything about sales tax on housing, and for a very legitimate reason. There is a provincial sales tax of 5 per cent which is payable not only on the actual cost of the building material but on the federal sales tax as well.

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Whicher: That is the way the Tories act in the provincial legislature.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, the federal government must give back the provinces approximately 25 per cent of moneys collected. The problem of high interest rates has also been criticized. The minister suggested we should have a floating interest rate. I say to the minister this would do no good at the present time because high interest rates are a world problem. There was an announcement in the newspapers last Friday or Saturday that the bank rate in England had been raised again. Interest rates are being raised all over the world, and this is a most unfortunate situation. The reason interest rates are rising is not because of a scarcity of housing in Canada, a scarcity of food in China or Biafra, but because there is a scarcity of money in the world. One reason for this is that the United States is spending $30 billion a year on the war in Viet Nam.

As I said on another occasion, they might just as well take that $30 billion and throw it into Lake Superior as it is not helping the financial stability of the United States or the world. This is the reason there is a shortage of money not only in Canada but everywhere in the world. I am sure all hon. members sincerely hope this war will soon end. A year or so after that happens, I feel sure interest rates will start on a downward trend.

There are several items in the report with which I agree. I do not understand how anyone in the opposition can disagree with the suggestion that there should be land banks. It is impossible for me to comprehend any criticism of the government in this regard. The minister would be the first to acknowledge that land banks should have been set up long ago. We cannot turn back the clock, so we must borrow tomorrow in order to have cheaper land a year from now. People are constantly moving from rural to urban areas and much more housing will be needed in our cities.

Four or five years ago I had the privilege of recommending to the legislature in Toronto that mortgages on old buildings should be included in the National Housing Act. I certainly agree with the suggestion made by the minister and the task force in this connection. A building which is only three or four years of age is classified as old. There should be government loans available which would allow this building to be sold as easily as a new one.

I listened to part of the budget presented by the treasurer of the Province of Ontario who I know very well. All things being equal, it was a reasonably good budget. Unfortunately, the minister stated that in two years there would be a provincial income tax and provincial capital gains tax. If the Minister of Finance were in the house I would suggest to him that he better get into that field soon or the province will beat him to it. Whether or not we agree with provincial income tax or capital gains tax, the fact is the treasurer of Ontario stated this would be a reality within the next two years. He was planning for the future.

I suggest to the Minister of Transport that when he is talking to his colleague, the Minister of Finance, he should suggest that the possibility of interest on loans for housing being a deduction from income tax should be investigated. When our friends to the south allow interest payments on mortgages to be deductible for income tax purposes there is no reason why we should not allow that in Canada. I hope the Minister of Transport, in his private conversations with the Minister of Finance, will urge that this be done. A new plan of financing must come.

Every government in Canada is floating around not knowing where to go in the financial field. We need new plans, and I am happy to be the first in this chamber tonight to give credit to the Ontario Provincial Treasurer who, in his budget speech today, suggested what will happen two years hence. Again, I urge that interest on housing loans be deductible for income tax purposes, and that municipal taxation on housing also be deductible to for income tax purposes. These are things we can control.

I respectfully point out to the Minister of Transport that we cannot control interest rates unless we wish to subsidize them. Surely, in a free enterprise economy, the type of economy in which I am proud to serve, we are not going to subsidize interest rates on housing loans. The one thing we can subsidize, or at least provide some relief against, is income tax by making the interest on housing loans tax deductible.

I am now going to say something that perhaps will not be popular in this chamber. For all I know it will not be popular with the Minister of Transport who has made a detailed study of this matter, and who is much more competent on this subject than I am. But I am going to suggest through you, Mr. Chairman, that as Canadians we must realize that while everybody deserves clean, warm shelter, as the report suggests, that does not mean that everybody should have the opportunity or indeed the right to own a house. There are some people, not only in Canada but throughout the world, who will never be able to afford houses.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, it is far cheaper for you and I to rent than to buy a house. Let us take the case of an average house in the city of Toronto costing $30,000. Let us take the cost of money today, whether you are borrowing it or lending it. For illustrative purposes let us say you are lending it, and it is worth 8 per cent. Eight per cent on $30,000 is $2,400 any way you add it up, and when you put taxes on top of that, repairs, depreciation of the house and all the other costs that go with ownership, you can see that it is cheaper to rent a house than to buy it. Some people just are not in the fortunate position of being able to put up the necessary amount of capital. We should realize that a certain percentage of the people will never be able to afford a house.

I have heard the moaning and groaning of the Opposition that people do not have enough money for the down payment on a house. If they have not enough money for a down payment, then they should not buy a house.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Whicher: I am sorry I have taken so much time, Mr. Chairman, because no doubt my hon. friend from Pembina, who is to speak next, has a much better speech to give on this subject than I. However, I wish to conclude by saying that this is not a heaven and everybody cannot have the opportunity to own a house. When a person has not got the down payment—I have been just as poor as anybody in this house and I know the situation—the best advice you can give that person is, go and rent a place somewhere. Then, if he has not got the money to rent it is up to the government, it is up to you and I as citizens of this country, to put our hands in our pockets and pull out money in the form of taxes to provide public housing.

Mr. McCutcheon: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Whicher: Certainly.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member's time has expired. Does the committee give unanimous consent for a question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCutcheon: I was very interested in the hon. member's remarks about mortgages on older homes. Has he any specific comments in connection with that?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, what I suggested was just what the report suggested, that this is something that should be done. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation should provide money so that older homes can be transferred with a substantial mortgage, on the same basis as a new house can be sold.

Mr. McCutcheon: Is the hon. member not aware that legislation was passed by the house a couple of years ago to permit this, and that mortgages are granted now on older homes?

Mr. Whicher: Yes, Mr. Chairman, but the amount one can borrow under these mortgages is not really as high as it should be.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, we have been treated to some schoolmarming tonight. It appears some hon. members are a great deal better at criticizing what other people say than they are at presenting positive thoughts of their own. I hope I do not fall into that trap. I think the task force on housing was long overdue. I am not going to criticize their efforts, nor the report itself, except to say it was too late, perhaps 20 years too late, and the task force members were forced into an almost panic situation.

I agree with the idea that there should be a land bank. This is something that should have been undertaken a long time ago. It may be too late to do it effectively now because the price of land around cities has sky-rocketed almost out of reach.

We do not live in Utopia, and I do not suppose we ever will, but that does not say that Canada cannot and should not be much better than it is. It gives me no pleasure whatever to look to tired, battle scarred Europe and say we are better with regard to housing than it, or to say we are better off in housing than South America. The truth is that we do not have housing that is either adequate or a credit to a vibrant young nation such as ours, with all our resources, energy, leadership, ambition and everything else at our disposal.

Housing in Canada, whether it is publicly owned or privately owned, is a disgrace. In so far as our native peoples are concerned, nine out of ten of them live in hovels. In the district that I represented before the last election there were 28 Indian reservations. If you think things could not be better in Canada all I suggest is that you go and visit any of those reservations. If you can find any more than 10 per cent of those senior citizens of Canada living in decent habitation, I will apologize to this committee. This is not because I did not try to correct the situation, and I did not leave because I was chased out. I am still welcome on all of those 28 Indian reservations because I sincerely feel for those people, and I strongly urge that we do something to help them.

I suggest that the task force, whether or not they did it in the form of a specific recommendation, at least might have suggested to the government that it should leave some money in the hands of the people of Canada so they would be in a position to build their own houses. I have a mortgage on my house. My house is one of the greatest pleasures of my life, even though it will cost me a great deal of money. I will try to keep making the payments until I own every lock, stock and barrel of it. I should like to see every family in Canada own a home at least like mine. It would cost a lot of money, but it should be possible. The governments at all three levels, federal, provincial and municipal, must co-operate. I suggest they could do this by consulting each other in an effort to find out how they might eliminate some of the double and triple taxation. By all means, an effort should be made to eliminate the triple taxation. Why should there be taxes on taxes on taxes? We are paying taxes on our mortgage payments, we are paying taxes on our provincial taxes and we are paying taxes on our municipal taxes.

Taxation can be an almost unbearable burden. As a conservative estimate, if you will forgive that word, I believe these three levels of government are taking now in the form of taxes at least 50 per cent of the average person's pay cheque. Once the figure is over the 50 per cent level it is crucial. The other day I read an article which indicated that consumer trade alone in 1968 went up an extra $1 billion, so this means $1 billion less is available. In many cases we are exposed to exorbitant interest rates which results in diminishing returns in business for Canadians. Governments apparently at all levels—and this is nonpartisan because we have Conservative governments in some provinces and Liberal governments in others—are all doing the same thing; they are trying to get a bigger and better share of the taxpayer's dollar in order to do bigger and better works.

I believe we are reaching a very dangerous level if we have not already gone over the hump. It begins to look like 1928 and 1929. I can tell by the grey hairs that there are a good many members in this house who went through that period. We probably would not survive a second bout of that disease. Let us try to put on the brakes now in respect of government spending at all levels and leave a little money in the hands of the people so they will be able to purchase their own homes. I still think a home is the finest anchor in a free society because one can be proud of it, work for it and be willing to defend it. Then, there is the matter of the exploited land value. Even before thinking of the expense of building a home, many people find they are unable to pay the price for a miserable 50-foot stretch of land. So, we have strike after strike and increase after increase in unemployment.

I should like to see a task force which would give a little more thought to equality of opportunity. Let us not close our eyes to the rising level of unemployment. We blame it on automation. Automation is here to stay and we must make sure it is worked into our society in such a way that the work force will be spread around. This might mean a reduction in hours of labour. The money must be evenly distributed to people and we must make sure that all do their share. Equality of opportunity means the right to share in effort, as well as in the distribution of wealth once the effort is made by other people.

I know, as I am sure the minister knows, that it is not just a simple matter of distributing publicly owned or publicly rented housing all around. The question of housing is infinitely tied up with the matter of transportation. It might well be that we should look into the question of whether or not automobiles should be allowed in the hearts of our major cities. Perhaps we should also look into the matter of rapid transportation systems. It might be considered advisable to keep the gasoline powered motor vehicles out of the hearts of the cities.

As I said, I am inclined to think that the task force did a good job in the limited time they had, but I wonder whether they have gone far enough. I certainly think more consultations could have been held. I am not laying the blame on anyone, but I believe there still are groups of people who might have been consulted. I do not believe we will get anywhere unless we have much greater co-operation between the municipal, provincial and federal levels of government.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

The Deputy Chairman: It being ten o'clock it is my duty to report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

OLD AGE SECURITY—PAYMENT OF INCOME TAX ON GUARANTEED INCOME SUPPLEMENT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Friday, February 21, as recorded at page 5797 of Hansard I put this question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson):

> In view of the fact that the President of the Privy Council yesterday left a few days in the spring schedule for a budget presentation, will the Minister of Finance take advantage of that opportunity, whether or not he does anything else, to correct the situation under which old age pensioners, when they get the guaranteed income supplement, have to pay income tax?

I was very pleased to receive this answer from the Minister of Finance:

> Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to consider the very serious representations of my hon. friend.

I earnestly hope that the consideration the Minister of Finance was prepared to give to my representations will result in his taking action this spring to correct this serious and very unfortunate anomaly in our income tax situation. I am sure it was never intended that people who have only the old age pension to live on should have to pay income tax on any portion of that pension. I am equally sure it was never intended, when the government came through with the idea of a minimum level of income that old age pensioners should have, that having given that minimum with one hand part of it would be taken away with the other; but for pensioners between 65 and 70 that is the result under the legislation as it now stands.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

I should like to use a few figures, and I shall use those which apply to 1968 because pensioners who are now faced with this situation have to pay income tax in April, 1969, on the basis of what they received in 1968.

If a single pensioner in 1968 received the full amount of the pension plus the full amount of the guaranteed income supplement his total income for the year was $1,285.20. If he was between the ages of 65 and 70 this means that his total exemption allowed would be $1,100; $1,000 plus the standard $100 for charitable donations. That would mean that he had to pay income tax on $185.20, which would mean that on last year's income he would have to pay $23.70 income tax. In other words, he would pay a tax of almost $2 a month which would wipe out the $2 a month he received because of the cost of living increase.

A married couple between 65 and 70 years of age, at least if the taxpayer was in that age bracket, who desired to report their income as a married couple, if both of them were getting the guaranteed income supplement, would receive $2,570.40 in 1968, but because the wife was in receipt of an income in excess of $250 the husband's total exemption would be only $1,100.00 and he would have to pay taxes on $1,470.40. His tax would be over $215. That couple could report their incomes as two single persons and cut off a certain amount, but they would still have to pay $23.70 each.

I am sure that even though the former Minister of Finance defended this when I complained about it some time ago, this was not the intent. Let me cite also the kind of case that is coming to my attention these days in relation to persons on pensions from private sources of say $1,200 a year. Such a person receives in old age pension $900 a year which brings him up to $2,100. That individual's income tax exemption is $1,000 plus $100 charitable donation, plus $1,000 for his wife, so he paid no income tax. If his wife happened to be a year or two younger, when she moved into the pension age bracket, she would receive $900, or $918 as it was last year.

This would bring the total income for such a couple to a little over $3,000. Because the wife had an income of $918 last year the exemption her husband would be allowed for her would only be $332, so his total exemption is $1,000 plus $100 for charitable donations, plus $332. He would have only $1,432 exemption which would mean he would have to pay income tax on the rest, and this would amount to $238.

The fact that this man's wife received a pension of $918 last year would mean that he has to pay a tax of $238. Surely, rates like this are unconscionable if deliberate. I suggest they were accidental. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that the present exemption rates of $1,000 for single people and $2,000 for married couples were set in 1949, 20 years ago. At the beginning of that year the old age pension was $30 per month. Later that year it was raised to $40 per month. In the years when those income tax exemptions were set those people had no problem. As time has passed and pensions have gone up from $30 to $40 to $75, to $105 and to $109 these exemptions have not been raised.

Because nothing has been done about these exemption levels, I submit that an anomalous situation now exists in respect of people from 65 to 70. I feel very strongly about this. Time will not permit me to say anything more about the situation tonight, but I hope the minister will deal with this anomaly this spring, without fail.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that other members have also drawn this matter to the attention of the minister. If I am not mistaken the hon. member for Notre Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) on an occasion prior to this question being asked put a notice of motion on the order paper as a means of raising this matter before the public. Under the system which is presently in use, and which has been in use for some time, changes in tax laws generally speaking are disclosed to the house only in the course of a budget presentation. Before this is done, no indication can be given of any changes that can be contemplated.

I am sure the hon. member knows this, since he has been here for many years, and I presume that he knew it at the time he asked his very interesting and useful question. Therefore, the only thing further I can say on this important topic is reiterate what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) himself said when he answered the question as originally put. At that time he stated he would be glad to consider the very serious representations of the hon. member.

DRUGS—MACE—TESTS TO REVEAL POSSIBLE DANGERS

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, on March 3, I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) in connection with tests carried out on the chemical Mace. I asked the minister whether he would consider making a statement regarding any experiments his department might have conducted on the use of the chemical. The minister replied that he had had an opportunity of looking into this matter. He said that as far as he was aware it was not being used by any of the law enforcement units in Canada.

While the minister's reply gave me some information, it did not really answer the basic question that I put to him. The question was whether the department was conducting experiments and, if so, whether a report had been issued or information was available on the use of this chemical. The minister's reply, that as far as he knew there were not any law enforcement units in Canada using the chemical may have been somewhat misleading. It might have left the impression that police units were not considering the use of the chemical Mace or did not have the chemical at their disposal. According to reports of suppliers of the chemical, at least 35 Canadian police forces have the chemical. If they have gone to the trouble of obtaining the chemical, one must assume they are prepared to use it.

Representations have been made on the use of the chemical, and criticism has come from many quarters. The B.C. Civil Liberties Association said that Mace is an offence against civil liberties. The B.C. Association of Social Workers said that more research is needed on its effect. The Vancouver Labour Council passed a resolution condemning the chemical Mace. Public agencies throughout the country have pointed out the dangers of the use of the chemical.

I am not in a position to really know what are the effects of the use of the chemical, but a sufficient number of questions has been raised to indicate that the Department of National Health and Welfare is under an obligation to make a statement indicating whether or not it has tested the chemical. It should let the public know to what extent the chemical is, or is not, dangerous. This was my purpose in asking for an adjournment debate tonight on this subject. I hope the parliamentary secretary, who is here to speak on behalf of the minister, can at this time indicate what tests have been conducted by his department and what were the results of those tests.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare has conducted a thorough study of the world's scientific literature on the observed and potential effects of Mace.

The department is not actively conducting experiments on the chemical Mace but is keeping in touch with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police on this whole subject. Several confidential reports on potential effects of chemical Mace and answers to specific questions have been made to the R.C.M.P. and, by agreement, the R.C.M.P. control their release.

To the best of my knowledge, the R.C.M.P. has decided not to use the chemical Mace and I understand the province of Ontario is considering requesting police departments in that province not to use this chemical.

SPORTS—NATIONAL HOCKEY TEAM—INVITATION TO CANADIAN HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) asking him about a meeting which was held early this month or late in February with hockey executives on the subject of the future of the Canadian national hockey team. I asked him whether an invitation had been extended to officials of the Canadian Hockey Association and, if not, I wondered whether the minister could tell us why these officials had not been invited.

I am not here, Mr. Speaker, to criticize the minister for not inviting these representatives but I should like to make clear one or two of my reasons for feeling that these people should have been invited. The meeting was called, as I said, to discuss the future of Canada's national hockey team, and ways in which it could be improved. I can understand that the minister is liable to say that representatives of the Canadian Hockey Association were not invited because it was the feeling of the government that the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is the governing body as far as amateur hockey in Canada is concerned.

This may be correct to some extent, and it is something we have to accept. However, if the national hockey team had called a meeting of hockey executives and only invited representatives of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association it would be understandable, because they have an agreement with the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. But why were officials of the Canadian Hockey Association not invited? I am not here to criticize in any way the past performance of our national hockey team. I, for one, believe that those responsible have indeed done the best they could with the material available. Regard must be paid to the fact that those who recruit players for this club have to compete with the National Hockey League for the talent they wish to attract. In these circumstances, it is very difficult under our present system for Canada to get a club which is capable of beating teams representing certain European nations.

I, for one, am not too disturbed because we have not been able to beat clubs from Russia and Czechoslovakia. As everyone knows, we are playing their best but we are not using our best. As I have often said, if the day comes when Russia has a professional hockey organization such as operates in North America, and we play the teams which do not qualify to play in their professional hockey association, I do not think there is any doubt we could beat those clubs with the type of club we are sending across today.

I point out to the minister that another meeting is being held this Friday in Toronto, and I submit that representatives of the Canadian Hockey Association should be specifically invited to attend. Although it is recognized that the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is the governing body in amateur hockey, and has been for many years, times have changed in Canada. We now have in existence this new Canadian Hockey Association. At the present time seven of the players on our national hockey team have played in the western Canada hockey league which is now under the jurisdiction of this Canadian Hockey Association.

It is also common knowledge, if one talks to scouts for the National Hockey League teams, that in the opinion of these scouts ten or 11 of the top junior hockey players in Canada are playing under the banner of the Canadian Hockey Association. These are not my figures; these are the figures of the scouts for the National Hockey League.

I should also like to refer to one or two other matters in order to try to impress upon the minister the desirability of having representatives from the Canadian Hockey Association attend these meetings. If people are going to sit down and hold a round table discussion on how to improve our national hockey team, then I think it is only advisable to have present the people who are operating some of the clubs that might be expected to contribute players.

For example, I can safely say there are players in the western Canada hockey league today who will be able to assist our national hockey team in its planned trips overseas. However, the representatives of these hockey players are not even being invited to sit down with a group of people whom the minister, or someone, has called together to discuss this important subject.

I understand representatives of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association are being invited to the meeting. They were invited to the last one and they are probably being invited next Friday. I also understand there will be representatives from at least two National Hockey League clubs. I assume there will be representatives from Canada's fitness council. Why should there not be present representatives from the Canadian Hockey Association who are operating a strong league in western Canada consisting of over 160 junior players, and who also operate a league in eastern Canada that consists of some 120 junior players?

I am not saying that these clubs would be able to make available immediately players to assist our national team. However, if representatives of this association were invited to sit down at a round table conference of the type envisaged, I think they could put forward some ideas for assisting our national hockey team.

In closing, I should also like to mention that it is apparent that the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association has in some manner blacklisted the Canadian Hockey Association simply because it has not operated fully within the rules and regulations laid down by the C.A.H.A. I give the Canadian Hockey Association credit for one thing: they have decided to operate on their own for one specific reason, namely, that they contend junior hockey players should be at least 21 years of age. The C.A.H.A. requires a player to be under 20 years of age to play junior hockey. In the days when there was a good brand of senior hockey played all across Canada, perhaps this provision was quite acceptable. Now we have all these various pro leagues, the time has come when we should have junior hockey—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Hockey Association was not represented. The Canadian Amateur Hockey Association is the officially recognized body by the International Ice Hockey Association. Any player who plays for Canada must be on the C.A.H.A. list. Because the Canadian Hockey Association is a breakaway organization, players within their jurisdiction are not on the C.A.H.A. lists. This is a potentially difficult situation and it is the wish of all Canadians interested in our national team that arrangements can be worked out so that the best possible national team can be put forward.

The Department of National Health and Welfare has not interceded in what is basically a family quarrel. I would mention though that the Hockey Canada meetings were very representative. Members from the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association, Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Union, Professional Hockey and Professional Hockey Players Associations were represented, together with the government and the public spirited hockey fans who, I am confident, will help to make Hockey Canada a success.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, March 5, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

SPORTS

PHILIP ESPOSITO—ACCOMPLISHMENT OF HOCKEY PLAYER

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, last weekend a great Canadian and native of that great metropolis of the north, Sault Ste. Marie, accomplished something that has never before been accomplished. Philip Esposito of the Boston Bruins became the first man in history to accumulate 100 points in the National Hockey League in one season.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Murphy: May I say that he is capable of going on to achieve new records. Yesterday the senate of the state of Massachusetts saw fit to congratulate Phil. I am sure that you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members of the house will agree that a man of this stature, although not a prophet, should not go unhonoured in his country, the birthplace of the game in which he has become so proficient. I therefore hope that the Parliament of Canada will see fit to pass a motion congratulating Philip Esposito for having become the first player in history to accumulate 100 points in the National Hockey League.

I would therefore move that—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Already the hon. member has fractured about a hundred rules. I suggest he table the motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING ASSISTANCE PLAN, REJECTING CAUSEWAY AND EXPANDING FERRY SERVICE

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development announced to the house last week that an agreement is to be signed on March 7 with the province of Prince Edward Island to provide for the joint implementation of a development plan for that province. I should like today to say a few words about that agreement.

The plan itself is a major undertaking and will be recognized as such, I am sure, by the house. The first phase will require some seven years to complete and will involve federal expenditures of $125 million. The second phase will extend through the balance of a 15 year period and is expected to involve federal expenditures of $100 million. The economic and social improvements which will follow from a development program of this magnitude are of the greatest significance to Prince Edward Island and deserve the very highest priority in any scale of assistance projects.

The government should have liked to be able to assist at the same time in the construction of a causeway linking the island to the mainland, because of the obvious benefits which would accrue to the province from such a structure. As hon. members recognize, however, and as I am sure the citizens of Prince Edward Island will appreciate, there is a limitation to the resources of Canada and a decision therefore had to be made fixing the priorities of expenditure. Following consultation with the government of Prince Edward Island, a decision was taken by the federal government to support the development plan as being the likeliest method of offering appreciable and lasting benefit to the economy of Prince Edward Island in the foreseeable future.

I wish to add that there is a recognition by the federal government that the existing mainland links—the ferry services—are not of an acceptable standard. I am pleased to be able to say, therefore, that these services will be extensively upgraded and developed. The vessel capacity of the ferry service will this summer be twice that of last year. Modern terminal facilities offering a range of services and conveniences to the public will be in operation as well. The new standard of service will be maintained by planned additions to the ferry fleet and to the terminal facilities as traffic demands.

We have every expectation, Mr. Speaker, that this massive form of assistance will give to those Canadians living in Prince Edward Island a full opportunity to improve their economic and social conditions to a standard in keeping with that enjoyed by Canadians elsewhere. Programs of this sort are one example of what federalism is all about; I am sure that persons from all parts of the country are proud to be able to join in offering a helping hand to fellow Canadians who have over the years made such an important contribution to confederation.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to make a few comments Mr. Speaker, regarding the Prime Minister's statement. I do so with the benefit of very little solid information either with respect to the project being cancelled or with regard to the project being announced. It is clear however this is not on the scale recommended by the FRED group, which submitted a development plan. There is no way of judging from the Prime Minister's statement what the plan will be. It is clear it is not in the same order as that recommended by the study group. That should be made very clear, Mr. Speaker. We certainly want a full statement at an early date as to what this plan is. On the basis of this general statement, I must question what impact this plan, whatever it may be, will have upon the economy of Prince Edward Island. It appears to be a different plan from that recommended by the study group.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, what confidence can anyone in Prince Edward Island have that this plan will in fact be carried through, since it is being announced at the very time that the government is breaking a solemn undertaking with regard to the causeway? As far as today's announcement is concerned, Mr. Speaker, all we have is another promise. We have to know what the government's commitments are in terms of a firm agreement before making any comment on this aspect. We will be interested in knowing precisely what this agreement is.

This statement must be read carefully, because if anybody reads it quickly they may think the government of Prince Edward Island has agreed to this change. It should be carefully noted that the decision has been taken by the government of Canada following consultations of some sort with the government of the province. I would like to know whether the government of Prince Edward Island has agreed to this plan, Mr. Speaker, to abandon the causeway construction, and voluntarily accepted this alternative.

We have no indication, but I presume we will learn in due course what contribution the people of Prince Edward Island are expected to make to this program. What is Prince Edward Island's share? This clearly represents another abandonment of a commitment made by a former Prime Minister of this country. I would not want to hold the government of Canada to an undertaking regardless of circumstances, but certainly this house and the country have been given no solid information at all as to the cost of discharging this firm undertaking to build the causeway, an undertaking given to the people of Prince Edward Island. We have only been given the simple statement that it is being abandoned. No information has been placed before us which would justify the government's not fulfilling a solemn commitment given to the people of the island province.

As I say, Mr. Speaker, it is difficult to discuss this on the basis of any information we have, because we have been given none—although a lot of information of some sort has been leaked out from time to time, no doubt calculated to give some kind of impression. I want to say that there can be no doubt about the importance of a reliable year-round service to Prince Edward Island if the economy is to develop, and I would question very much whether any plan of the magnitude announced here will have a very substantial effect in improving the economy of Prince Edward Island, without a permanent crossing being built as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: Everything I say, Mr. Speaker, is subject to any solid information that the government may eventually produce to justify the decision it has taken. It has not given that information today. It is very doubtful if the economy of Prince Edward Island can develop substantially on the basis of the plan as announced, without satisfactory transportation system.

The tourist industry cannot develop to anything like its full potential on the basis of what is announced in this statement. The Atlantic Development Board, in a study, indicated that the development of the agricultural industry on Prince Edward Island is severely handicapped by the lack of a permanent crossing. I would venture to guess, Mr. Speaker, based on experience in the province of Nova Scotia, that what is now going to happen is that the government will spend very large sums of money trying to improve the ferry service, and involve itself in increasing deficits of an operating nature. In the end it will spend as much money on the ferries as it would have spent on the causeway, and in the meantime will have continued to give a very inadequate service.

On the basis of any information that we have now, I think that the people of Prince Edward Island are being short-changed. I think it is time the government gave the house and the country some solid information which it believes can justify this kind of short-changing of the people of the island.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that members in all parts of the house will be prepared to support any development project that would assist the province of Prince Edward Island, and help it to rehabilitate its economy. But before the members of the house can assess whether or not the project announced by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be of any value whatever, we need a great deal more information than has been given to us in the Prime Minister's very brief statement today.

It is a rather sad commentary on parliament that we have to look to the press in order to get some of the particulars with respect to this project. It is unfortunate one has to look to Time magazine to find out what this project is all about; and if the information in Time magazine is inaccurate, then of course the Prime Minister and the government must accept the responsibility for not telling the house what the actual facts are.

Assuming the report in Time magazine is reasonably accurate, this looks like a one horse, one rabbit deal. The contribution which the federal government proposes to make is $125 million in the first phase covering a period of seven years, and a contribution of $100 million in the second phase covering a period of 15 years. However the report in the press indicates that the province of Prince Edward Island will be required to put up $139 million in the first seven years, and in the second phase, in the last eight years, will be required to put up $380 million. This means that the provincial government will be contributing $519 million and the federal government $225 million.

But that is not all the story. Of the federal government's $125 million contribution in the first seven years, $41.6 million represents an interest bearing loan which the province must repay. Consequently the outright payment by the federal government will be $183.4 million, a little better than an average of $8 million a year over the 22 years that this project will be in effect. Now, $183.4 million or a little better than $8 million a year is very poor compensation indeed for the causeway that was promised to the people of Prince Edward Island.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would be interested in knowing whether the staff of the federal government which is studying federal-provincial affairs believes the province of Prince Edward Island can, over the life of this agreement, manage to meet its responsibility and also the loan which it must repay; this amounts in all to $560.6 million. That is a tremendous undertaking for a small province of a little over 100,000 people to assume, particularly when the federal government's contribution is to be a mere $183.4 million.

I think the government has a responsibility to provide an opportunity in the house, so that we can have all the information concerning what the respective commitments are, first with regard to the federal government and secondly with regard to the government of Prince Edward Island. I believe we have a right to know what guarantees and provisions are being made for the farmers who will be dispossessed under this program, for the lobster canneries that will be closed, for the industries that will be rationalized and for the number of ports that will be reduced. These are facts which we ought to have before us. I suggest to the Prime Minister that a bare statement such as we have today does not provide this house with the kind of information it requires upon which to make a proper judgment.

I urge that at an early opportunity the responsible minister, or the Prime Minister, should give the house the full details so that the matter can be debated. On the basis of the information we have at the present time I would say that the people of Prince Edward Island are getting the short end of the deal.

Questions

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FRENCH LANGUAGE EDITION, "AUDIT OFFICE GUIDE"

Question No. 978—Mr. Fortin:

Is the publication "Audit Office Guide" (Cat. FA 3-258) available in the French language and, if not, (a) for what reason (b) when is it expected that it will be published in French?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The Auditor General has reported as follows: No. (a) No French edition of the Audit Office Guide was printed, presumably because there was no demand for it; (b) As the present edition of the Guide, which was released in January 1958, is now out of print, and as the text must be revised before a further edition can be printed, there are no plans for publishing the present edition in French. Important changes have been and are continuing to be made in the financial management of departments of government. When these changes are substantially complete, the intention is that the Audit Office Guide will be revised and a new edition released. The next edition will be made available in both official languages.

CITIZENSHIP APPLICATIONS REFUSED

Question No. 1,077—Mr. Deakon:

How many residents of Canada, who have applied for Canadian Citizenship during the years 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966 and 1967 were refused such citizenship?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1963, 337; 1964, 323; 1965, 287; 1966, 135; 1967, 146.

DEVELOPMENT OF CL-215 AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Broadbent:

1. Did Canadair Ltd. originally seek federal government support for its research and development project, CL-215 aircraft, under the Defence Development Sharing Program?

2. Was the project supported under the Department Program, "Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology"?

3. If so, what amounts were funded by the Departmental PAIT Program in support of this project?

4. Was the project successful and, if so, what are the repayment provisions?

5. Under the new changes in the Defence Development Sharing Program, would the Canadair project CL-215 be eligible for government support under this program?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. No.

2. Yes.

3. The Department of Industry has committed $5,250,000 under the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology to support the project, of which $4,535,300 had been spent as of December 31, 1968.

4. The project has not yet been completed. If the project is successful and the aircraft is put into commercial production, the Company is obligated to repay the Crown contribution wih interest on a royalty basis extending over the first 126 aircraft sold.

5. This a hypothetical question. If an application was submitted the decision would be taken by the Inter-Departmental Committee, Defence Export Development which advises Treasury Board on such matters.

FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION ACTIVITIES

Question No. 1,188—Mr. Fairweather:

1. (a) In how many individual feature films has the Canadian Film Development Corporation invested (b) what are the names of these films?

2. (a) How many loans has the Canadian Film Development Corporation made to film producers (b) what was the amount of each loan and to whom was it paid?

3. (a) How many awards for outstanding accomplishment in the production of Canadian feature films has the CFDC made since its establishment (b) what are the names of the recipients?

4. (a) How many grants have been made by the CFDC to film makers and film technicians resident in Canada to assist them in improving their craft (b) what are the names of the recipients and the amount awarded?

5. What are the names of the firms and individuals who have been assisted by the CFDC in the distribution of their films?

6. What are the names of the firms and individuals who have been assisted by the CFDC in the administrative functions of feature film production?

7. How many feature films in the category "co-production" has the CFDC encouraged, made a partial investment in, been the primary investor?

8. What country, individuals or firms has CFDC made agreements with, including the names or firms involved as Canadian co-producers?

9. How many people are employed by CFDC?

10. What amount of money is paid to the chief executive officer annually and, what amount of money is paid to the Acting Secretary, or Secretary of the Corporation as the case may be?

11. What amount has been paid into the Canadian Film Development Advance Account from consolidated revenue?

12. What amount has been paid out of the Canadian Film Development Advance Account for (a) staff salaries (b) remuneration and expenses of the CFDC, for investment in all categories of feature film production?

13. How much has the CFDC received as proceeds from or on account of production of projects in which the Corporation has invested?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I have been informed by the Canadian Film Development Corporation as follows: 1. (a) One feature film production; 14 additional projects have been accepted for initial investment. (b) The proposed title of the feature film production is "The Act of The Heart". Because of the confidential nature of negotiations between the Corporation and film producers, the Corporation, therefore, does not disclose details of projects in the pre-production stage.

2. (a) and (b) The Corporation is presently negotiating a contract for a loan with an applicant for the production of a feature film. The Corporation does not disclose the names of applicants during negotiation stages.

3. (a) and (b) None up to this time but the Corporation has allocated $100,000 for awards to be made before March 31, 1969.

4. (a) None; (b) Not applicable.

5. and 6. Frequent inquiries are made of the Corporation and discussions have been held with several companies and individuals concerning film distribution and the administrative functions of film productions.

7. None.

8. The Canadian Film Development Corporation is not empowered to make co-production agreements on behalf of Canada with other countries.

9. Five.

10. Executive Director $23,000 per annum.

11. As at December 31, 1968, $108,225.13.

12. As at December 31, 1968, (a) $25,641.57; (b) $82,583.56.

13. Nil. No films in which the Corporation has invested have been completed and gone into commercial distribution.

THEFT OF MAIL BAGS

Question No. 1,193—Mr. Caouette:

1. For each year since 1965, how many mail bags have been stolen in (a) Canada (b) the Province of Quebec?

2. What was total amount of money stolen in this manner in each of the provinces?

3. What was the total value of parcels stolen in each of the provinces?

4. What was the total number of letters stolen in each province?

5. What steps is the government taking to stop these thefts?

6. Is a study on this subject presently underway?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned:

1.	(a) Canada	(b) Quebec
1965	177	108
1966	111	84
1967	255	246
1968	727	538

2.	1965	1966	1967	1968
New Brunswick	–	–	12,225.00	–
Quebec	51,664.00	3,920.26	21,960.60	331,571.22
Ontario	675.00	523.68	175.00	–
Saskatchewan	–	–	705.00	–
Alberta	549.00	1,352.70	–	12,457.00
British Columbia	–	–	296.68	–

3 and 4. The Post Office Department does not maintain a record of the value of parcels stolen or of the number of letters stolen.

5. The primary responsibility for investigation of any crime rests with the police. The Post Office Department has its own Investigation staff, which maintains close cooperation with local police and other law enforcement agencies. The facts of each offence are studied for the information they may provide that will help in preventing future attempts. Departmental security procedures are under continuing review with the aim of ensuring that the best security precautions are in effect in the light of changing conditions.

6. Yes.

Questions

LOSS OF MAN-HOURS

Question No. 1,196—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the number of man-hours lost in Canada in 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968 as a result of (a) strikes (b) accidents (c) illness?

2. What was the number of man-hours lost in the Public Service of Canada in 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968 as a result of (a) strikes (b) accidents (c) illness?

Mr. Jim McNulty (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): 1. (a) Federal Jurisdiction (including Public Service of Canada): 1965, 244,410 man-days*; 1966, 1,440,450 man-days*; 1967, 173,840 man-days*; 1968 (Prel.), 498,840 man-days*; Provincial Jurisdiction: 1965, 2,105,460 man-days*; 1966, 3,737,720 man-days; 1967, 3,800,920 man-days*; 1968 (Prel.), 4,676,830 man-days*. All Jurisdictions (including Public Service of Canada): 1965, 2,349,870 man-days*; 1966, 5,178,170 man-days*; 1967, 3,974,760 man-days*; 1968 (Prel.), 5,175,670 man-days*; (b) and (c) Not available.

2. (a) 1965, 89,380 man-days*; 1966, Nil; 1967, 1,360 man-days*; 1968, 360,060 man-days*. (b) Man-days lost due to work injuries based on claims settled during fiscal years: 1964-65, 156,951; 1965-66, 190,002; 1966-67, 180,400; 1967-68, 200,857. UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE REGIONAL OFFICES

Question No. 1,272—Mr. Fortin:

1. How many regional offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission were in operation during each of the past five years, in each province?

2. What criteria are used to open or close a regional office?

3. How many people were employed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission during each of the past five years and in each province?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): The Unemployment Insurance Commission advises: 1. During the past five years, the Unemployment Insurance Commission operated five regional offices: Moncton, N.B., this office serves New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland; Montreal, Que., Toronto, Ont., Winnipeg, Man., this office serves Manitoba, part of Western Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta; Vancouver, B.C.

Note: The Vancouver regional office serves Yukon and the Winnipeg regional office serves the Northwest Territories.

2. According to section 11(2) of the Unemployment Insurance Act, the Commission may establish such regional divisions as it considers desirable, and may establish a regional office within a regional division. The choice of the place where a regional office is to be opened depends on several reasons which amount to practical administrative, geographical and economic considerations.

3. The number of persons employed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission in each province is not available, but the following table shows the number of UIC employees in each regional division during each of the past five years:

	Head Office	Atlantic Region	Quebec Region	Ontario Region	Prairies Region	Pacific Region	Total
April 30, 1965	319	608	1,542	1,499	649	546	5,163
April 30, 1966	323	618	1,555	1,522	666	555	5,239
April 30, 1967	346	597	1,501	1,467	658	528	5,097
April 30, 1968	386	581	1,407	1,408	655	503	4,940
January 31, 1969	367	544	1,312	1,249	614	471	4,557

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT PROJECTS

Question No. 1,288—Mr. Coates:

1. How many projects were placed before the Atlantic Development Board from its inception to the present date?

2. Of the total number of projects before the Board (a) how many were approved by both the Board and the federal government (b) how many were approved by the Board and later rejected by the federal government (c) how many were rejected by the Board?

[Mr. Kierans.]

3. What has been the total value of the projects approved to date and what is the estimated value of projects presently before the Board that have not as yet received a final decision of approval or rejection?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. 244.

2. (a) 125; (b) 8; (c) 80 (31 projects cannot be classed as approved or rejected, as some were turned over to other federal government departments to carry out, and others as a result of discussions following initial Board consideration were carried out by other means or otherwise dropped as proposals for Board assistance.)

3. $189,295,000; $20,000,000.

EXTENSION OF SERVICE ON FISHERIES VESSELS

Question No. 1,297—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. What is the procedure followed in receiving, considering and ruling upon applications for extension of service from officers and crew members of vessels under control of the Department of Fisheries in the Atlantic region?

2. How many such applications have been received in the past year, what was (a) the position (b) name and home address of each applicant (c) what was the decision in each case?

3. What are the principal grounds upon which applications for extension of service are either approved or rejected?

4. Are all such applications subject to final disposal by a senior departmental official at headquarters in Ottawa or can final disposal be made by departmental officials in provincial or local offices of the Department?

5. Is any provision made for appeal by an applicant and, if so, what procedure is prescribed?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): 1. The employee may submit a written request to his superior officer in the region to be considered for an extension of service. This request is reviewed by senior officers of the region and a recommendation forwarded to departmental headquarters.

2. Two. (a), (b), (c): Engineer: Narcisse A. Daigle, P.O. Box 55, Richibucto, Kent Co., N.B., extension approved. Deceased while on extension. Quartermaster: A. W. Bagnall, R.R. 1, Gabarus, N.S., extension approved. (Difficulty in obtaining a replacement).

3. The needs of the department are the principal grounds in deciding on extensions of service, rather than the personal desires of the employee.

4. Recommendations from Regional Directors are reviewed by the Deputy Minister and a final decision is made by him.

5. There is no provision for appeal.

RENOVATION OF SENATORIAL OFFICES

Question No. 1,334—Mr. Coates:

Has the Department of Public Works renovated the offices of any Senators since June 25, 1968 and, if so (a) was such work done at the request of Senators (b) which Senators made such requests (c) what was the cost to the federal government in each specific instance?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Yes, (a), (b), and (c). Listed below.

Renovations	Project	Requested by	Cost
	Room 271-S Installation of air conditioning unit and painting	Senators J. Connolly and J. W. deB. Farris	850.19
	Room 185-S Construction of radiator covers	Senator J. B. Aird	398.00

	Room 479-S	Senator C. McElman	238.00
	Room 659-S	Senator R. Eudes	83.55
	Room 279-S	See reply to Question No. 310

Questions

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—"PROLOGUE"

Question No. 1,335—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. What was the total cost of publishing each of the first three Bulletins, known as Prologue, of the National Arts Centre?

2. How many copies were printed of each bulletin?

3. How many pages were there in each bulletin?

4. What was the cost of the art work on the cover of each bulletin?

5. What was the cost of mailing each bulletin?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I am informed by the National Arts Centre as follows: 1. Prologue 1, $6,752.63; Prologue 2, $6,227.78; Prologue 3, $4,250.35.

2. Prologue 1, 20,000; Prologue 2, 20,000; Prologue 3, 25,000.

3. Prologue 1, 11 pages; Prologue 2, 15 pages; Prologue 3, 15 pages.

4. Prologue 1, $2,462.45; Prologue 2, $2,899.04; Prologue 3, $250.00.

5. Prologue 1, $600.00; Prologue 2, $600.00; Prologue 3, $1,300.00.

C.B.C.—APPEARANCE OF SIR OSWALD MOSLEY

Question No. 1,364—Mr. Haidasz:

1. Did the CBC provide TV exposure for the views of Sir Oswald Mosley and Ron Gostick at public expense and, if so, what is the corporation's policy in this regard?

2. Were Sir Oswald Mosley and Ron Gostick paid a fee by the CBC for their appearances on the CBC public programs and, if so, what was the amount of such fees and expenses?

3. Have any complaints been received by the management of the CBC protesting the appearance of Sir Oswald Mosley and Ron Gostick on CBC programs?

4. What was the reaction of CBC management to these protests?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. Sir Oswald Mosley was on "Front Page Challenge" and received the normal fee for his appearance. Ron Gostick was interviewed on "The Day It Is", without payment. In each case the procedure followed was in accordance with C.B.C. policy and practice. Mosley's appearance on the commercially-sponsored "Front Page Challenge" was in the capacity of guest challenger whereas Gostick was interviewed on "The Day It Is" as a newsworthy figure and was questioned about hate literature directed against Mr. Trudeau during the 1968 election campaign and about anti-Semitism.

[Mr. Laing (Vancouver South).]

2. See above. It has not been customary to require the C.B.C. to disclose payments made to individuals.

3. Yes.

4. Upon review, the C.B.C. concluded that "Front Page Challenge" was not a suitable forum for Mosley, while upholding C.B.C. policy of examining all viewpoints on matters of public interest. The C.B.C. felt that the Gostick interview was a legitimate item for a public affairs interview program such as "The Day It Is".

RECRUITMENT, CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,387—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys):

1. What is the number of recruits who joined the Armed Forces of Canada in the month of January 1969?

2. What was the number of enlistments in the Armed Forces of Canada in Cape Breton in the month of January 1969?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. 813.

2. 12.

EXTENSION OF FARM TRAINING PROGRAM

Question No. 1,392—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Is the External Aid Office going to expand their Farm Training Programme and, if so (a) in what way (b) for how many people and in what countries?

2. Is the Secretary of State for External Affairs going to accept the offer made by the National Farmers Union in their Annual Brief, dated April 1968, as to the (a) recruiting and organizing of a contingent of practical farmers to assist with the mechanization of agriculture in developing nations (b) has there been an Agricultural Division of the External Aid Office organized to date (c) if not, are there any plans for the establishment of such a Division under External Aid contemplated?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. The External Aid Office, now known as the Canadian International Development Agency, is prepared to assist any of the eligible recipient countries with farm training programs if the program offers real prospect of contributing to the economic development of the country concerned. Canadian development assistance is, however, provided after a priority requirement has been identified and a request for assistance has been received from a developing country. In the circumstances, it is not possible to forecast the numbers of Canadian personnel that may be required in this field during the coming year or in what countries they would be requested to serve.

2. The Canadian International Development Agency welcomes the assistance of outside organizations in the implementation of its programs and should a requirement develop for practical farmers to assist with the mechanization of agriculture in the developing nations, would be pleased to discuss the matter further with the National Farmers' Union. Although CIDA does not have an Agricultural Division it has a Senior Agricultural Adviser on its staff and works in close cooperation with the Department of Agriculture when agricultural projects are selected for financing under Canadian development assistance programs.

NEW GLASGOW, N.S., FEDERAL BUILDING

Question No. 1,395—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names, addresses and amounts of the various tenders for relighting postal accommodation in the Federal Building at New Glasgow, Nova Scotia?

2. To whom will this contract be awarded?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. Edwin A. Smith, R. R. No. 1, Aspen, Guysboro County, N.S., $5,741.64; Ferguson Industries Limited, Pictou, N.S., $6,414.00; Hudry Electric Ltd., Stellarton, N.S., $7,100.00; C. E. MacCarthy, Box 156, New Glasgow, N.S., $7,259.62.

2. Edwin A. Smith.

TEMISCAMINGUE, QUE.—SMALL BUSINESSES LOANS

Question No. 1,405—Mr. Caouette:

1. During the years 1965 to 1968 inclusive, how many loans were granted under the Small Businesses Loans Act (a) in Canada (b) in the Province of Quebec (c) in the federal constituency of Temiscamingue?

2. What was the average amount of such loans?

3. What was the total amount of such loans?

4. In which municipalities of the federal constituency of Temiscamingue were these loans granted and what was the amount of each?

5. What criteria determine the approval or rejection of applications for such loans?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. 2 and 3, (a) and (b): See attached table; (c): These statistics are not broken down by constituencies, so the information is not available.

4. This information is not available.

5. The requirements to be met to obtain a loan under this program are set out in the Act and Regulations (P.C. 1960-1764 as as amended by P.C. 1967-2119 and P.C. 1968-2097). To qualify for the guarantee under the Act, the loan must be made in accordance with the terms of the Act and Regulations, and a responsible officer of the bank is required to certify that he has exercised the same care in making a Small Business Loan that is required of him by the bank in the conduct of its ordinary business.

TEMISCAMINGUE, QUE.—SPORTS GRANTS

Question No. 1,406—Mr. Caouette:

1. Which sports associations in the federal constituency of Temiscamingue received grants under the Amateur Sports Act during the past three years?

2. What was the amount received by each province under this Act during the past three years?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. None. The Province of Quebec does not participate in the federal-provincial cost sharing program under the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act.

CANADIAN SKI ASSOCIATION SUBSIDY

Question No. 1,418—Mr. Matte:

1. What is the amount of the federal subsidy granted to the Canadian Ski Association?

2. What proportion does the Province of Quebec receive?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. $198,217.

2. The federal grant is made to the sports governing body for projects that are conducted on a national basis.

GUARANTEED ANNUAL INCOME STUDY

Question No. 1,425—Mr. Fortin:

Has the government made any study relating to the possibility of establishing a guaranteed annual income and, if so, will the report following such study be laid before the House and, if not, for what reason?

[Translation]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The government has authorized a review of all our social welfare programs, and in that context the concept of the guaranteed annual income is under study.

DISCONTINUANCE OF FISHING BOUNTY

Question No. 1,463—Mr. Crouse:

For what reason has the Statutory Fishing Bounty, as listed under Fisheries Vote 15, been discontinued for 1969-70, and what alternative use will be made of these funds?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): It is proposed, subject to approval of Parliament, to eliminate this item. The total annual outlay has been $160,000 for many years; the per capita payment for fishermen in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island has been less than $10, and the administrative costs are high. Savings resulting from change will be used for the expansion of the fishery resource.

C.B.C.—PAYMENTS TO ADOLPH VON THADDEN

Question No. 1,475—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What were the respective amounts paid by the CBC to Adolph Von Thadden and to Sir Oswald Mosley?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: It has not been customary to require the C.B.C. to disclose payments made to individuals.

REGISTRATION OF PURE BRED DOGS

Question No. 1,478—Mr. Anderson:

Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to approve the Canadian Kennel Club's proposed withdrawal from Canadian National Livestock Records and, if so, will it be possible for British Columbia members of the Canadian Kennel Club to continue the registration of pure bred dogs with Canadian National Livestock Records?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The Canadian Kennel Club have been advised that there would be no objection to their proposed withdrawal from the Canadian National Livestock Records, as long as they continue to operate under the Livestock Pedigree Act.

Section 4 of the Livestock Pedigree Act precludes the possibility of British Columbia members of the Canadian Kennel Club from continuing the registration of pure bred dogs with the Canadian National Livestock Records should their association withdraw.

BUTTER AND TRACTOR PRICES—WAGES

Question No. 1,481—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. What was the retail price of butter in the years 1940 and 1949?

2. What was the average hourly wage in the years 1940 and 1949 for (a) carpenters (b) electricians (c) plumbers?

3. What was the average price of a farm tractor, 35 H.P., in the years 1940 and 1949?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics and the Department of Labour as follows:

1. Average retail price of creamery butter in Canada, one pound print: Year 1940, 29.6 cents; Year 1949, 63.2 cents.

2. The attached table provides the average hourly rate for carpenters, electricians and plumbers for 1940 and 1949 in selected cities. An overall national average wage rate for each of these three occupations is not available.

3. Information requested is not available.

CHANGES IN FORCES RECRUITMENT POLICY

Question No. 1,492—Mr. Anderson:

1. Have there been any policy changes regarding recruitment for the Canadian Armed Forces since 1966?

2. How many new recruits have been accepted by the Canadian Armed Forces per month during 1967 and 1968?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Attention is directed to Hansard dated 5 December 1967, pages 5197-99 and Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 14 of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence dated 21 November, 1968, page 578.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING CONFIDENTIAL REPORTS

Question No. 1,497—Mr. Harkness:

1. Under present regulations, are Warrant Officers and N.C.O.'s no longer allowed to read their confidential reports?

2. If so, for what reason?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. Warrant and non-commissioned officers no longer see their confidential reports.

2. Previously, in the R.C.N. and Canadian army, men saw and signed their confidential reports. In the R.C.A.F., confidential reports were shown to men only when unfavorable comments were made and the report was considered to be adverse. With the new Performance Evaluation System, the key is the Performance Evaluation Report and the thoroughness with which it is prepared at three levels of reporting. With regard to disclosure of contents, the great value of personal discussion of performance is recognized. It is the duty of the superior to encourage and advise his men, and men have every right to know whether or not their performance is satisfactory. It is considered, however, that the validity of the Performance Evaluation Report is improved when it is kept confidential, therefore, under normal circumstances, the completed form is not shown to the individual. Discussions with supervisors concerning good or bad performance are encouraged and are taking place continually, as well as at the time of evaluations. In this way no shortcomings should be contained in a report unless the man is aware of such and the Reviewing Officer is required to certify that the individual has been counselled during the reporting period on overall performance including the noted shortcomings.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES STRENGTH

Question No. 1,498—Mr. Harkness:

1. What was the strength of the Armed Forces as at January 31, 1969?

2. Of the total number, how many were on terminal leave?

3. In the case of Parts (1) and (2) above, how many were women?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): 1. 97,798.

2. 1960

3. (a) 1,621; (b) 10.

RECRUITMENT, CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,499—Mr. Harkness:

1. What was the number of recruits to the Armed Forces for each of the months from August, 1968 to January, 1969 inclusive?

2. For each of the above months, what was the number of discharges?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence):

1.	Month	Total
	August 68	1,299
	September 68	865
	October 68	913
	November 68	742
	December 68	608
	January 69	813
2.	August 68	1,350

OLYMPIC GAMES BUDGET

Question No. 1,502—Mr. Osler:

What was the total budget of the Canadian Olympic Association for the Olympic Games, including the amount granted by the federal government to it for this event?

[Mr. Groos.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare):

1968	Winter Olympics, Grenoble	$ 80,000
1968	Summer Olympics, Mexico	155,000
		$235,000

FORT MCMURRAY, ALTA.—TELEVISION FACILITIES

Question No. 1,515—Mr. Yewchuk:

What are the tentative dates for establishment of television transmission facilities for (a) the Town of Fort McMurray (i) frontier package (ii) live rebroadcasting station (b) for the area of High Level, Fort Vermilion and LaCrete (i) frontier package (ii) live rebroadcasting station?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: (a) (i) A C.B.C. application of a TV frontier coverage package was filed with the Canadian Radio-Television Commission on February 25. If approved by the CRTC, the station is expected to be established and in operation within a year of receipt of approval; (ii) The present outlook for establishment of live CBC-TV service to the area is not encouraging due to high cost of such a project, although live service remains a possibility for the future.

(b) (i) A frontier coverage package is not planned; (ii) The C.B.C. has tentative plans to file an application with the CRTC in late 1970 to establish the rebroadcasting stations necessary to serve the area. However it is not possible to suggest any firm target date at this juncture.

C.B.C. ADVERTISING REVENUE

Question No. 1,523—Mr. Diefenbaker:

What has been the total advertising revenue of the CBC year by year, since 1956?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows:

Fiscal Years
1955-6	$19,472,000
1956-7	23,913,000
1957-8	28,410,000
1958-9	32,270,000
1959-60	38,162,000

1963-4	32,392,000
1964-5	33,208,000
1965-6	33,563,000
1966-7	35,153,000
1967-8	38,734,000

SALARY OF GENERAL ALLARD

Question No. 1,532—Mr. Coates:

What is the present salary of General Jean Allard, Chief of Staff of the Armed Services, and on what date was the present salary determined?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): $28,750 effective 1 January, 1967.

SALARY OF C.B.C. PRESIDENT

Question No. 1,533—Mr. Coates:

What is the present salary of the President of the C.B.C. and on what date was the present salary determined?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: The salary of the President of the C.B.C. is $45,000. per annum, effective February 1, 1968, as approved by Order in Council P.C. 1968-119 dated January 18, 1968.

CANADIAN PATENT OFFICE RECORD

Question No. 1,539—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many copies of the Canadian Patent Office Record are printed each week?

2. What is the weekly printing cost of the publication?

3. To whom is the publication sent?

4. Is this publication bilingual in its entirety or is it printed in English with a bilingual cover?

5. If this publication is not bilingual in its entirety, what are the reasons for this and will the government make it fully bilingual?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. One thousand copies of the Canadian Patent Office Record are printed each week.

2. The weekly printing cost on an average for the last 48 weeks has been $5,726.75.

3. The publication is distributed as follows: Paid subscriptions to patent agents and manufacturing firms all over the world, 585; Public Printing and Stationery free lists to government departments, members of parliament, public libraries, etc., 238; Patent Office free exchange list in exchange for other countries' official journals, etc., and also for scientific periodicals and trade journals for office use, 40; Patent Office, internal use, 12; Stock for sale by Public Printing and Stationery, 125.

4. The cover page, notices of a general nature and the heading of each page are bilingual. For each patent issued one drawing and two claims are published, taken from and in the language of the specification, which must be in either English or French. Any patent application received in the French language is printed in the French language. Any patent application received in the English language is printed in the English language. Any Erratum, Certificate of Correction, etc., pertaining to a patent is published in the language of the issued patent.

5. An applicant for a patent may have the issued patent published in the language of his choice, either French or English, by filing his application in the language in which he wishes it published. As the claims published in the Record are taken from the specification they are published in the same language as the specification.

CURVENTON, N.B.—FISH COUNTING STATION

Question No. 1,550—Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi):

How many (a) grilse (b) adult salmon have passed upstream annually through the fish counting station at Curventon, Northumberland County, New Brunswick since its installation on the Northwest Miramichi River?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries):

ATLANTIC SALMON IN CONVENTION AREA

Question No. 1,551—Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi):

Have any representations been made or consultations held with the International Commission for the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries to prohibit the fishing, on the high seas, for Atlantic Salmon in the Convention area and, if so, what were the results of such action?

Questions

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries): Yes, in 1967. The proposal was not accepted because of requirement for further scientific assessment of the effect of high seas fishing on Atlantic salmon stocks.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE RECIPIENTS

Question No. 699—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many male persons and how many female persons received unemployment insurance benefits in each of the provinces for each month during the years 1960, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67?

2. How much money was paid in unemployment insurance benefits to male persons and female persons in each of the provinces and in each month during the years 1960-67 inclusive?

3. How many families (a) with husband working received unemployment insurance for the wife, and (b) with the wife working received unemployment insurance for the husband, in each month during the years 1960-67 inclusive?

4. How many male/female persons received unemployment insurance benefits in Toronto/Montreal in each month in each of the years 1960-67 inclusive?

5. How much money was paid to male/female persons in Toronto/Montreal in each month in each of the years 1960-67 inclusive?

6. How many male/female persons received unemployment insurance benefits?

Return tabled.

IMMIGRATION TO CANADA

Question No. 1,259—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. Since 1960, how many people have immigrated to Canada?

2. What were their countries of origin and what were their mother tongues?

3. What was their occupation in their country of origin?

4. What are the criteria used by the Department of Manpower and Immigration in refusing entry to prospective residents of Canada?

Return tabled.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, regarding written questions. I have reference to question No. 1608 of February 28. I submitted this question as a starred question but it does not appear as such on the order paper. I would hope that perhaps this error might be corrected.

[Mr. Smith (Northumberland-Miramichi).]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EDUCATION

DENIAL OF OPPORTUNITY TO LEARN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Ralph Stewart (Cochrane): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave, seconded by Mr. Paproski, under Standing Order 26, to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the denial of the basic right of our young citizens to be given an education in the language of their choice, in that English speaking children entering kindergarten, even here in the national capital, are being refused entry into French language classes.

Although education, as such, is a provincial responsibility, the rights of citizens are being affected and national unity is being threatened by this action. Federal jurisdiction involves citizenship as well as national unity and present policies are introducing discrimination into the Canadian society in a flagrant disregard for the principles outlined in the languages bill now before the house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Cochrane has filed with the Chair the notice required under subsection (2) of Standing Order 26. Subsection (5) of the standing order states that:

> In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration, Mr. Speaker shall have regard to the extent to which it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the government—

In my view the grievance raised by the hon. member for Cochrane does not satisfy this particular requirement. The subject matter of the proposed motion does not appear to concern the administrative responsibility of the government, nor could it come within the scope of ministerial action.

[Translation]

I agree with the hon. member for Cochrane that this matter is important and urgent. However, in view of the provisions of the standing orders of the house, and more particularly those of Standing Order 26, it is not possible, I think, to adjourn the business of the house in order to discuss that question.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr.

Speaker, notice of motion No. 79 is acceptable to the government, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the government authorities concerned.

CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING PROCESSING OF DAMP GRAIN

Motion No. 79—Mr. Burton:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House copies of all correspondence between the Government of Saskatchewan and the Government of Canada with respect to the processing of damp and tough grain in Saskatchewan and the transportation of grain during the period of October 1, 1968 and January 31, 1969 inclusive.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations or conditions expressed by the hon. parliamentary secretary, is it the pleasure of the house that Notice of Motion No. 79 be deemed to have been adopted?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notices of motions Nos. 63 and 67?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

P.F.R.A.—TRANSFER OF COST

Motion No. 63—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of all documents and correspondence exchanged between the Government of Canada and the Government of Manitoba with respect to transferring part of the cost of Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act projects from Ottawa to the provincial governments.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the department is presently engaged in discussions with the prairie provinces respecting a new arrangement regarding certain water projects constructed by P.F.R.A. These discussions are still going on and until they are completed, the confidentiality of the relevant documents and correspondence must be preserved in accordance with well-established practice regarding negotiations between governments.

The minister is fully prepared, however, to agree to table these documents at the end of the negotiations, subject to the usual reservations concerning privileged papers and authorization of the provincial authorities concerned. In view of this, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to withdraw the motion.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that this deals with a controversial area of intergovernmental relations may I ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate, pursuant to Standing Order No. 48.

COMMENTS ON "POLICIES FOR PRICE STABILITY"

Motion No. 67—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters, communications, reports, memoranda, or other data received by the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs commenting on his White Paper "Policies for Price Stability".

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions with the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) in regard to this motion, and I believe agreement has been reached that only part of the motion is acceptable to the government. The documents referred to in the motion comprise internal memoranda and reports which are privileged, and will therefore not be tabled. Concerning correspondence mentioned in the motion, the hon. member appreciates, I believe, that I solicited many letters from individuals who would not have expected nor wished their answers to be made public. If the hon. member is agreeable, I am prepared to table shortly those letters which were not solicited by me and not marked as confidential.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): That is acceptable, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservations and conditions expressed by the minister, is it the pleasure of the house that notice of motion No. 67 be adopted?

Motion agreed to.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—REQUEST FOR PLAN DETAILS—REJECTION OF CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the Prime Minister relative to the announcement he made on motions. I ask when he will be prepared to table and make available to all members of parliament the details of the development plan. In the meantime, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the figure of $125 million over seven years, which he quoted, is over and above financial transfers between the federal government and the government of Prince Edward Island, which transfers are in force at the present time; or does this figure include part or all of the transfers which have become the normal practice in the last few years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development will be signing on Friday of this week an agreement with the government of Prince Edward Island. I am sure he will be pleased to table that agreement in the house any time after that, and will be pleased to answer any specific questions arising from the agreement.

Mr. MacLean: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development say now what this figure of $125 million actually means?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, the agreement is not signed, it can still be modified. I think it would be improper for me to cite any figure at this moment.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have just had an announcement by the Prime Minister with regard to specific figures. We have had previous announcements by the minister of regional and economic expansion with respect to the agreement to be signed on Friday. Now the minister refuses to give information to the house on the basis that the agreement has not yet been reached. Surely we are being given sophist answers which are not in any way attempting to deal with questions raised by hon. members of this house.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, we could have signed the agreement on Friday and not made any prior announcement in the house. Surely the fact that we made an announcement of an agreement, which is not yet a public document, which is not yet binding on both governments—

Mr. Woolliams: Why did you make a statement?

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Benson: Because you wanted some information.

Mr. Trudeau: Because the members of the opposition have been asking us questions about when this agreement would be signed. The hon. member for Egmont last week asked for information on when it would be signed. The opposition cannot on the one hand ask for information, and when they get it complain that they have received it.

Mr. MacLean: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has stated his point of order. I would think we might now go back to the hon. member for Malpeque, who I understand has a further supplementary question.

Mr. MacLean: I would like to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. It is on a somewhat different subject but also relates to the statement made by the Prime Minister. Does the statement made by the Prime Minister with regard to the causeway mean that it is only postponed for a period of time, perhaps for the 15 years, or is it definitely cancelled?

Mr. Trudeau: I cannot, of course, say what will be done by federal governments in future years. I cannot bind them. But I will make a deal. If all the opposition agree that we should increase, for instance, the social security tax by 1 per cent, we would raise enough money to build the causeway. If there was a proposition from the opposition to this effect we could consider it.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development with respect to the figures the Prime Minister gave in his statement. In view of the fact that the agreement has not yet been signed and could be modified, it seems all the more important that the opposition know all the facts, so we can make representations to the government. Does the $125 million which is to be paid in the first seven years of the agreement include $41.6 million of an interest-bearing loan, and is the rest of the contribution to be an outright grant to the province of Prince Edward Island?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as soon as the text of the agreement is tabled in the house, it will be easy, I believe, to clarify the points raised by the hon. member.

[English]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I ask the Minister of Public Works whether he will give the house information regarding the cost of the causeway, as proposed, and the reasons for cancelling this project; or is he going to treat this house with the contempt with which the government has treated the people of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with the language of the hon. member. I do not think it is realistic language. I have not treated the other side with contempt, and I do not think anyone on this side of the house has done so.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Now answer the question.

Mr. Laing: I think there is a motion for the production of papers which was addressed to my department in the first instance, but which I think is now assumed by the Department of Transport. I think the information that was sought is going to be placed on the table.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think that, with regard to a topic like this, in regard to which a public commitment has been made, this house and the people concerned deserve an explanation at the time the announcement is made cancelling the project?

Mr. Laing: Yes, I would agree with that statement. I think an explanation has been given. I think the Prime Minister gave an explanation today, namely that there is a certain volume of resources and they have to be used to the best advantage.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, related to the remarks of the Prime Minister a moment ago concerning the cost of this causeway, and the confusion that has arisen with the Minister of Public Works with regard to the notice of motion for the production of papers. Would the Minister of Transport inform the house when the document that was promised many weeks ago, the Stanford Research Institute study, that would make available some of the answers to questions raised, will be tabled in this house?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I understood it was being tabled as part of an order for additional papers. To the best of my knowledge, I expected it had been tabled already. I would be glad to refer this matter to some appropriate person and see what the situation is.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know that the hon. member is rising to ask a question on a very important matter, but I wonder whether we could not go on to another subject. The hon. member for Egmont has a supplementary question, and I believe the hon. member for Hillsborough also has a supplementary question.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): In asking this supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can assist the members of the house to satisfy much of the concern over this problem. I ask the Prime Minister whether he will give consideration to referring the Stanford Research Institute documents, as well as witnesses from the Northumberland consultants, particularly Colonel Edward Churchill who was assigned by the government to help clear up any difficulties with the project, to the Committee on Public works, where we could hear the evidence of these people and study these documents in order that a complete disclosure and discussion can be had on this important subject.

Mr. Trudeau: We would welcome a full and total exposure on this important subject. Of course the committee can choose the persons it wants to hear on this. We have no objection to producing the facts on which our decision was made. It would have been nice to have both the FRED program and the causeway too, but the amount of money involved is such that the Canadian taxpayer could not be asked to contemplate it at this time. The choice between the causeway and a ferry service was made on the basis of cost accounting, and we would be very happy to have the opposition know the facts behind this.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe that, perhaps without meaning to, the Prime Minister implied something that is not in accordance with the fact, that has been made available to many people now, that the present ferry operation will cost the federal government $1 billion in the next 60 years.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): May I ask the Prime Minister whether he is considering setting up a task force to find some alternative use for the $15 million worth of roads and railways already built in this long promised and now callously abandoned project?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for York South.

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Oxford appears to be disappointed that I do not allow him to ask a supplementary question. I do not want to disappoint him so I will allow the question.

Mr. Nesbitt: Your Honour assumes that, despite the noise, I could make you hear the question, and I will be very pleased to present it. If I seemed a bit disappointed it is perhaps because I have not been able to catch your eye for the last day or so.

My supplementary question is as follows—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am afraid I am having difficulty in making Your Honour hear my question. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Would the minister consider delaying the signing of this agreement with the government of Prince Edward Island until perhaps the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications has had the opportunity of presenting its report, in view of the fact that the committee has just returned from the Atlantic provinces and heard briefings on this important subject, and was hoping to make appropriate recommendations to the government.

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, if the government of Prince Edward Island asks us to delay the signing of the agreement, we shall certainly do so, but not on our own initiative.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST GERMANY—POSSIBLE CONFRONTATION ARISING FROM ELECTION OF PRESIDENT—NATO CONSULTATION

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the right hon. Prime Minister whether, in view of the serious situation in Berlin and the developing difficulties, the members of NATO were consulted before the decision was made to hold the elections of the West German president in west Berlin, and the Prime Minister said he would refer the question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Perhaps we might have an answer.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were informed some months ago of the intention of the federal government to hold the presidential election in west Berlin on March 5 this year, in accordance with the practice followed since 1954. The subject has been fully discussed in NATO, as I informed the house on February 10. Canada and the other NATO allies have supported the course taken by the federal government of Germany in carrying out this established democratic practice in an unprovocative manner, despite the obstruction to which it has been subject.

The three allied powers with special responsibilities in Berlin have naturally been in the closest consultation with the Federal Republic of Germany on practical measures to be taken, but NATO has been kept fully informed throughout.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is strange that the Prime Minister did not know anything about this yesterday.

Mr. Lewis: Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs inform the house of the situation as it is now, and what steps are being taken to ensure—if it is possible to ensure—that the situation does not reach a more dangerous point. I can fully understand the desire of West Germany to have this meeting in west Berlin, but what steps are being taken to avoid a dangerous escalation?

Mr. Sharp: The most recent reports indicate that the election is taking place and that, as we foresaw, communist harassment has not approached the levels reached on several previous occasions, for instance in 1965.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INCLUSION OF OPTOMETRIC AND CHIROPRACTIC SERVICES

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In those provinces that have an established medicare plan meeting the criteria laid down by the federal medicare program, and that includes paramedical services such as those offered by chiropractors and optometrists, will federal medicare include those services?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): As I have indicated earlier, such services in the paramedical field to which the hon. member referred would not be included at this time under the federal scheme because there is no consensus among the provinces, which would be required in such a case.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister mind defining, in Canadian terms, the word "consensus"?

Mr. Rynard: I have a supplementary question. Has the federal government any further plans that will include paramedical services to relieve the extreme pressure on the medical profession?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the supplementary question is too general in nature. Perhaps it is the kind of information that ought to be given on motions.

MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION BY ONTARIO IN NATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare when he will meet with the Ontario Minister of Health to discuss Ontario's entry into the national medical program, and whether the federal minister will allow the Ontario government to charge deterrent fees for insured medical services subsidized by federal moneys?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): To answer the last part of the question first, deterrent fees I hope are not a course that Ontario would take,—in any event I rather doubt it, should Ontario come in. So far as meeting with the provincial health minister is concerned, I think I will be meeting him in the next few days.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON ACREAGE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture and ask him whether he intends to make a statement on motions at an early date regarding wheat acreage for the next year. I ask this question particularly because of the difficult situation of the wheat farmers this year, and the comments made by the task force which considered this subject.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): The comments made by the task force with respect to the wheat and oil seeds economy in their fourth paper must be taken for what these papers are, that is, position papers that have been prepared for use by the delegates at the National Agriculture Congress, which will be held starting on March 24. They are not government policy and they were not prepared by the Department of Agriculture, but I think they will be very useful as a basis for discussion, in two ways: First of all to analyse problems—

Mr. Stanfield: May I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have no right to insist on the Minister of Agriculture answering my question, but I do not think he should be permitted to answer a question I did not ask. I asked the minister whether on motions, at a suitable occasion in the near future, he would make a statement with regard to wheat acreage in the coming year.

Mr. Olson: This is something that we are considering all the time, but whether or not the Department of Agriculture can accurately predict what the market for grain will be after this harvest is a question that I do not think I am sufficiently courageous to undertake to answer now.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Minister of Agriculture not consider it is his job to provide leadership and guidance with regard to wheat problems, in view of the difficult wheat marketing problems that the farmers are confronted with these days?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Later:]

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): May I ask a supplementary question of the Minister of Agriculture. Does the minister agree with the contention that Canadian wheat sales cannot be expanded and that therefore we must accept a reduction of wheat acreage?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

FINANCE

CONSULTATIONS RESPECTING PROPOSED SECURITIES COMMISSION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and it regards the creation of a Canadian securities commission. Will the minister advise the house of the fundamental difference of opinion between himself and the provincial authorities over the structural organization of such a body, and whether it shall be a federal organism located in Ottawa or a joint body in which all the provinces and the federal government shall participate?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the fundamental differences to which the hon. member is referring in his question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—PROTESTS AGAINST SALE OF ARMS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister said in the house yesterday that he has made verbal representations to the British government asking them not to ship arms to Nigeria, is the Canadian government now ready to follow up these verbal representations with an official and public communiqué asking the British government not to ship arms to Nigeria?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I know of nothing more public or more formal than statements by the Prime Minister of Canada in this house.

Mr. Nystrom: A supplementary question. Is the minister able to make public the contents of these verbal representations that have been made by the Prime Minister to the British government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I made these statements, which are in Hansard, and I made them as explicitly as I could. If hon. members did their homework they would find that on November 12 I repeated the government's position on the supply of arms to either side in this conflict. On January 20 I reported to the house what I had told the British Prime Minister and the Foreign and Commonwealth secretaries when I was in London a few days earlier.

BIAFRA—BOMBING OF CIVILIANS AND RED CROSS OUTPOSTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My colleague the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville addressed another question to the Prime Minister relating to the situation in Biafra and inquiring whether Canada would join the British government in protesting or inquiring into the bombing of civilian targets within Biafra. The Prime Minister replied that he had discussed this matter with the minister and that he was sure he would be in a position the next day to say whether any action had been taken.

May I now ask the minister whether any action has been taken or will be taken in this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last week we expressed to the authorities at the senior level in Lagos our concern at the continuing reports of bombings involving non-military targets in the rebel area. I have been assured that General Gowon has had our views brought to his attention.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

"FESTIVAL"—ALLEGED DEGRADING PERFORMANCES, "NEIGHBORS" AND "THE BASEMENT"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Some weeks ago I asked the Minister of Justice whether or not he would take up with the law officers of the Crown the question whether certain plays that were shown on the C.B.C. came within the provisions of the law respecting obscenity. Has he discussed the matter with the Secretary of State since the latter's return from one of his peripatetic pilgrimages and, if so, would he let the house know what is going to be done?

Furthermore is the minister now in a position to advise whether, if a private member introduces amendments to the obscenity sections of the Code so as to put teeth in the law, such a bill would be presented to the committee that is now sitting in connection with the criminal law?

Mr. Nielsen: That is an omnibus question.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the right hon. gentleman that he stays up late watching television and I do not follow all the programs, as he does. However, as a result of his question I did ask the officers of the department to review the present state of the law on obscenity, which I suggested to him at that stage was somewhat confused. As for the responsibility of the Secretary of State, when I get some clarification from the law officers I will take the matter up with him.

As for the present omnibus bill, I do not contemplate adding to it before the committee; but to use the right hon. gentleman's own terms, if there is need for clarification of the law on obscenity I will consider subsequent legislation at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. Over 200 Canadians have written complaining, regarding programs on the C.B.C., and no doubt the minister too has received complaints. Does it take more than two months to get information from the law officers on a simple question such as this, namely whether two specific plays contravened the obscenity section in the opinion of the law officers?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the right hon. gentleman that the definition of obscenity is a fairly subjective one and he and I might not agree on that subject.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking for the opinion of the law officers of the Crown.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am asking a supplementary question. I was not asking for the minister's opinion or giving mine; I was asking for the law officers' opinion. Has the minister consulted them?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You haven't. That is all I wanted to know.

Inquiries of the Ministry

OBSCENE MATERIAL

NUDE MALE AND FEMALE PHOTOGRAPHS ON RECORDING JACKET

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that foreign made pornographic material in the form of a cover for an "Apple" record shows two full length nudes and is being sold in Canada, specifically in Ottawa; and is such distribution—

Some hon. Members: Where?

Mr. Crouse: —is such distribution in keeping with the Prime Minister's view of a just society, or is it to become a completely permissive society?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, since the Minister of Justice does not wish to answer, I direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Will the Minister of National Revenue himself or in co-operation with the Postmaster General take immediate steps to ban the distribution of "Apple" records in Canada which display this particular pornographic cover?

An hon. Member: What are they, Northern Spies?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, hon. gentlemen opposite find this subject very amusing. I should like—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to state his point of order in the first instance, and then I shall try to rule on it.

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Speaker, the pictures alone are not only obscene and objectionable, but the wording on this particular piece of pornographic literature reads: "When two great saints meet it is a humbling experience". I suggest it is also anti-Christian. Hon. members of the government are applauding this type of material.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member has an argument here, but I would not think that he has a proper point of order.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR EARLY SHIPMENTS TO AVOID POSSIBLE FLOODING

Mr. Joseph-Philippe Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the flooding predictions in Manitoba, is any action being considered to help farmers in the Red River valley with early movements of grain, unharvested crops and stored grain?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we have been advised that there is a very high potential risk of flooding in Manitoba when spring arrives and the heavy snowfall there begins to melt. I can assure the hon. member that we will do whatever we can to be helpful if that situation does in fact arise.

VIOLENT DISTURBANCES

MEASURES LIKELY TO CONTROL REVOLUTIONARY ACTIVITIES

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Justice a question.

Does he know about the statement made yesterday by the Montreal police director who said that when a man was arrested in connection with bombing incidents, papers and revolutionary Communist pamphlets were found, notably the pocket books of quotations from Mao Tse-Tung, Che Guevara and others?

Does he intend to investigate in order to find out the extent of Communist infiltration in Canada and what measures does he consider to control and eliminate revolutionary activities here?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): In the first place, Mr. Speaker, I must obtain more specific information from the director of the Montreal police, then, I will discuss the matter with my colleague, the Solicitor General.

Mr. Valade: Can the minister answer the second part of the question?

[English]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Justice will check with the library and the Prime Minister at the same time?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

I would like to ask the minister if he is ready to answer the second part of the question, to wit, whether he intends to launch an inquiry, in order to determine the extent of Communist infiltration in Canada?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer without having previously obtained further information.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—ALLEGED LOSS LEADER BASIS OFFERED BY PRIVATE COMPANIES

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In negotiations the federal government may have with the government of Ontario concerning the entry of that province into medicare, will the federal government stand by the criteria in the act and, in particular, will it oppose the right of private insurance companies to carry medical care insurance on a loss leader basis?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, there is no question about maintaining the criteria under the act. It is the law of the land and we will maintain that law. On the subject of Ontario and the question of private insurance companies, as the hon. member is aware insurance companies are participating in providing coverage, subject to public audit and all other requirements, on a non-profit basis in British Columbia. They have been permitted to do this because such action falls within the purview of the act. Conceivably, Ontario could adopt the same legal position.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. So far as the insurance companies are concerned, will the minister make sure that handling medicare is not just a loss leader proposition?

SARDIS, B.C.—OPERATION OF COQUALEETZA HOSPITAL AS TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM

Mr. Jerry Pringle (Fraser Valley East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that the employees of the Coqualeetza Hospital in Sardis, British Columbia, have been notified the hospital will cease to be operated as a tuberculosis sanatorium, will the minister please inform the house as to the future of this fine institution?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question might well be discussed at the time of adjournment.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF VISIT TO CANADA OF PRESIDENT NIXON—OIL DISCUSSIONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of certain difficulties arising between Canada and the United States in the petroleum industry and other industries, will he consider inviting President Nixon to come to Canada in order to negotiate with him on some of these problems and possibly to have the President address a joint assembly of the House of Commons and the Senate?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I expect we will be discussing the problems of oil in my forthcoming meeting with the President of the United States. If the need for an invitation such as that proposed by the hon. member appears necessary, I will certainly extend it.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of courtesy and good public relations between our two countries, is the Prime Minister prepared to extend an invitation to Mr. Nixon to come to Canada?

An hon. Member: Common courtesy demands it.

MAINLAND CHINA—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.S.R. ABOUT RECOGNITION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is he now prepared to answer the question to which the Prime Minister said the other day he would ask him to reply? My question was whether Canada had discussed the recognizing of Red China with the Soviet Union, among other countries. That matter has now become extremely urgent because of the tense relations between China and Russia. Has Canada discussed this question with the Soviet Union, among other countries? If it has, what was the reaction?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Soviet Union was informed, as many other countries were, of our intention to have discussions with the Peking regime. But there was no reaction other than to thank us for the information.

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF LETTERS EXCHANGED BETWEEN QUEBEC AND FRANCE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister table copies of the letters exchanged between Jean-Guy Cardinal of Quebec and M. Debré, the foreign minister of France, as these letters have now been released by the government of Quebec?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I informed the house previously, I did not think it was appropriate for us to table letters that had been signed by the province of Quebec and the government of France. But now that they have been made public I will obtain copies and have them tabled here.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement contained in one of the letters that the two letters would constitute an agreement between the two governments, is it still the position of the government of Canada, as stated by the minister on January 31, that this exchange of letters does not, in fact, constitute an agreement? Or is this a semantic battle?

Mr. Sharp: No; I entirely agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. I repeat the statement I made before. In order for such exchanges to take on international status engaging both Canada and France, the approval of the French and Canadian governments would be required. Such approval could be given either under the accord cadre, the umbrella cultural agreement of 1965, or in virtue of a separate exchange of notes between France and Canada. Since in this case there was no consultation whatsoever between the French and Canadian governments, neither of these conditions was met.

AGRICULTURE

REPRESENTATIVE FROM PRAIRIES ON DAIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of recent public statements by the Manitoba dairy council that present dairy policy is militating against the dairy industry on the prairies, will the minister consider the request that at least one permanent member of the Canadian Dairy Commission should be a representative of the prairie provinces?

Mr. Horner: Hear, hear.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the hon. member's contention that the policies and activities of the Canadian Dairy Commission militate against the interests of the dairy industry. Therefore the other part of the question does not apply.

Mr. Schreyer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Even if one accepts the minister's contention and ignores the preamble to his remarks, I still wish to know whether the government will consider appointing someone from the prairie region to the Canadian Dairy Commission.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that may be one consideration. An even more important consideration is the competence of those appointed to do a good job for the dairy industry all across Canada.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS, MAN.—ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a two-part question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. His parliamentary secretary took it as notice. Is the minister now prepared to answer my question?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have been in touch personally with the person the hon. member referred to and I think in a day or two a decision may be rendered with respect to the matter he is concerned about.

TRANSPORT

HALIFAX, N.S.—DANGER FROM PREPARATION OF CONTAINER FACILITIES

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will residents, industrial concerns and members of the fishing community on the eastern side of Halifax harbour be in any danger from dredging or filling operations carried out in connection with completing container facilities in Halifax?

[Mr. Sharp.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to make the necessary inquiries.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF MR. SPENCER AS DIRECTOR GENERAL

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of recent criticisms of the Cinematographers Association of Canada with respect to the inadequacies of the Canadian Film Development Corporation, was that organization consulted before the recent promotion of Mr. Spencer, the acting secretary, to the permanent position of director general of the C.F.D.C.?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think at least one question might be placed on the order paper, and perhaps this is the question.

SCIENCE SERVICES

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In view of the speech made by the chairman of the Science Council, Dr. Solandt, over the week end in which a statement was made to the effect that the government ought to appoint a minister who would be responsible for science policy, may I ask whether the government has considered making such an appointment?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, many months ago I told members of parliament in the house that there is a minister responsible for science policy. He is the President of the Treasury Board. I indicated that there will be certain changes in the area of science policy. Some were announced in the government reorganization bill. We have created the Science Council and the secretariat, and there will be more changes in the future.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister consider making a full statement on science matters when we discuss the Science Council under the government reorganization bill?

FINANCE

APPLICATION OF TAX TO "TIME" MAGAZINE

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Thank you for your recognition, Mr. Speaker. I would like to direct this question to the Minister of Finance. In its search for funds, is the government at present considering the removal of the exemption from the magazine tax now enjoyed by an extension of the state department of the United States, Time magazine?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for a policy statement. I suggest the question cannot be answered at this time. If the hon. member thinks there is urgency he might like to have it discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Cannot the minister take action to eliminate this Canadian subsidy for United States propaganda?

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1969

The house resumed from Tuesday March 4, consideration in committee of Bill C-177, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969—Mr. Drury—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose on Tuesday, March 4, clause 2 of the bill was under discussion.

On clause 2—$222,254,283 granted for 1968-69.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Chairman, last night at ten o'clock I was mentioning some of the problems facing the Canadian government in trying to solve the vast housing problem. I suggested that lack of purchasing power in the hands of the average Canadian citizen was probably the prime cause of the lack of housing starts. That, of course, is an oversimplification of the whole problem. I hope the efforts of all three levels of government will be directed to improving that particular phase of Canadian housing.

When the National Housing Act was instituted as an emergency measure it was a good measure, but I think it is long overdue for an overhaul. It has been abused. To a certain extent the National Housing Act has been responsible for the escalating costs of housing, the rush for land and the vastly increased price of city lots. A great deal of the money available for housing has been channelled into high-rise apartments. Approximately 150,000 accommodation units are being produced. In my opinion this is not housing at its best, but it is better than none. It is not the best answer to the housing problem facing the Canadian people.

It will be a sad day for Canada if we have to live like bees in a hive of 20 or 30 storeys all jammed together without sunlight and proper playgrounds for our children, provided children have not been eliminated by that time. This is the beehive attitude to life. If everyone lives in the cities there will be no place for children. Even to have children will be almost anti-social. It would be almost cruel to raise children in a square concrete tub with an area of a few hundred feet.

Most Canadians agree that the healthiest and happiest place to raise a family is in a home with easy access to plenty of fresh air and surrounded by a lawn and a garden where pets and friends can be enjoyed. Urban development can be carried too far. I am among those who would like to turn back the pages of time to when nature was fully appreciated and people did not live in concrete tanks and get their amusement from television stations. Governments are wrong to allow vast sums of money to be made available to hasten such urbanization.

One or two sensible steps could be taken to reverse this trend to the betterment of people's health, both physical and mental. The Canadian economy cannot be supported indefinitely with all the people living in cities. I believe we have to plan for the future of Canada with a solid economy based in part on agriculture and on the preservation of our forests and on such far-sighted and forward-looking programs as ARDA. We must not only look after the forests we now have but we must have a very large, national reforestation, conservation and beautification program.

I suggest that the government make an early start on a national transportation and land use plan to decentralize not only our industries but our whole way of life. I suggest that in building homes for the elderly, for example, high-rise apartments are not the answer. Such homes should be built in small towns or in satellite towns around large cities. People will not be able to afford accommodation in high-rise apartments even with reasonable retirement plans. Unless I am mistaken, if the trend to the cities continues the average family will not be able to afford the rents in high-rise apartments. As soon as decent rental accommodation is no longer available on the ground level they will be at the mercy of people who own high-rise complexes, and perhaps a good third, if not half of a person's take-home pay will be required for rent.

The idea of providing large sums of money under the National Housing Act to corporations for business investments in housing is questionable. It is channelling money into large corporations when what we should be trying to do is stabilize the economy of each and every home. Perhaps the whole idea behind the National Housing Act should be completely changed. We may need departments of housing at both the federal and provincial levels. The job is such a big one that this will be necessary. The Minister of Transport knows that his responsibility for housing has diverted his attention from his transport duties, and even he would be the first to admit that he has not had the time to devote to housing that he would wish.

There is a serious backlog in housing requirements for our native peoples and for our low income groups. Even those earning up to $10,000 a year are having difficulty finding adequate housing accommodation. We need a government department and a full-time, capable minister to give attention to this matter. We need full co-operation between the two senior levels of government. We had such co-operation when we built the trans-Canada highway. The result was a wonderful road system. We can have the same result with housing. We must be ready to scrap old ideas and take advantage of the groundwork which has already been done.

A certain amount of talk in this debate has been negative. I hope I am not striking a negative note when I say that everything that should have been done has not been done. I do not think this was because of lack of interest on the part of those involved. Rather, it is a question of timing. We are late in our timing. This effort is 20 years overdue. The problem is here to stay and I venture to say we will not solve it in a matter of months or years—

[Mr. Bigg.]

The Chairman: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless there is agreement of the committee for him to continue.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Bigg: I would like to see this bill pass. I would like to see the task force continue its work at an increased pace with full co-operation among all three levels of government. I would like to see everybody consulted. The people who have been consulted the least are those who should be consulted the most. I am not talking about the people in the building trade who may be in it for profit, or of the people at the two levels of government in charge of administration. I would like to hear from the people who have to pay the mortgages. I would like to hear from young married couples. Let us get groups of 15 or more together and let them tell us the kind of housing they want and the kind of financing which they think they can afford. I would hope that in turn we could tell them they will not have to bear a burden of debt at 10 per cent, 12 per cent or 14 per cent interest for 40 years. I hope we can tell them that they will be able to pass their homes on to their children without the kind of burden that many of us would have to pass on if we were to hand over our homes now.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, when the task force on housing was appointed there was a great deal of hope throughout the country that it would be able to unearth new material and come up with some kind of co-ordinated policy which would meet the worst housing problems. That was the general public reaction. On the other hand, a number of people felt strongly that the subject of housing had been researched at length and that, with a big conference to be attended by 500 delegates from all across Canada due to take place about a month after the establishment of the task force, the task force itself would not unearth any new material and would scatter its shots across the country without arriving at a coherent result. However, I think we were all prepared to give the task force a chance.

I believe I am stating the opinion of housing people from one end of Canada to the other, and of large sections of the public, when I say that the task force's report has been a deep and bitter disappointment. I do not mean that there are no good things in it. There are many good suggestions, but they do not add up to a housing policy which can meet the needs confronting us today. I do not think one is doing a service by saying that the housing report is full of excellent ideas if at the same time one does not point out that it contains no vital policy. It is like a magpie that has piled up a lot of beautiful glass pebles and other bright shiny things but does not know how to make a nest out of them.

No more devastating commentary on the housing report has been issued than the one that came to hand this morning from Professor Michael Wheeler of the Canadian Welfare Council, the body in charge of carrying on the follow-up of the Canadian conference on housing held last fall. As one of the 500 delegates who attended that conference it was with particular interest that I received today the correspondence sent out by the Welfare Council. It starts by pointing out that the task force report has the merit of having opened up questions of housing policy for nationwide debate. The council says that the task force has had the courage to raise such fundamental issues as public ownership, development of land, the need for regional forms of government, allocation of adequate revenue to local government, and the possibility of supplementing incomes as an alternative to subsidizing dwellings. From there on, having given the task force that commendation, the rest of this memorandum is a damning indictment of the task force report.

I should like to point out the grounds for their indictment because if we do not find wherein the task force has fallen short or why it is going in the wrong direction, we will not be able to deal intelligently with legislation to put housing on the right track in Canada. First of all, in its objectives for housing the Canadian conference on housing clearly stated what it believes to be the first concern of a public housing policy. I heard these words spoken in Toronto with great vehemence by a number of people: So long as government allocations for housing are insufficient, priority within its budgets should go to helping those with the greatest need. This is exactly the opposite of what the task force report recommends. The effect of the report is to let things muddle along the way they have done so that every factor in housing is loaded to help those people who can best help themselves, the people at the upper end of the income scale.

In order for parliament to meet the requirements of the people with the greatest need we would have to have 20,000 or 30,000 low income dwellings per year which would require an investment of $300 million of public funds, or about two or three times as much money as the best we have been able to achieve in any one year so far. I am not blaming the minister because I thought and I said from the first that we have no business saddling a minister with the two portfolios of transport and housing. He cannot do adequate justice to housing and I would be extremely surprised if he were to do an adequate job in respect of transport either. From the comments heard this afternoon this would appear to be the opinion of at least some hon. members. As an example of how far out the minister is in his knowledge of what is required I should like to mention that in December, 1967, the minister who was then responsible for housing declared:

> Not only the proportion but the level of commitments in these areas of greatest public need, public housing and projects of that kind, will increase... they will probably exceed $500 million for the year 1968.

The amount actually invested by the federal government in public housing in 1968 was about $116 million compared with the rosy forecast of $500 million which was made at the end of 1967. We must go much beyond this. The minister said that we would have to have $20 billion to meet the minimum target of one million dwellings over the next five years, but nowhere in the task force report is there any mention of a policy for raising that amount of money. The minister has said that so much could come from hither, so much could come from yonder and so much could come from some place else, but no place in the report is there a clear unequivocal policy which says that the minister responsible for housing proposes that pension funds, trust companies, banks and other lending institutions will be directed to invest a certain percentage of their lending portfolio in housing loans. That is the way we understand a policy. A mere suggestion is of no value whatever.

The minister is not always this vague. Last August when the minister was thinking about the work that should be done at Toronto and Montreal airports to get ready for the jumbo jets he was pretty clear. He said that between $200 million and $300 million would be required at both Montreal and Toronto airports for the necessary work to get ready for the jumbo jets. The difference between that situation and the situation in respect of the $20 billion required for housing is that we know from past experience in this house that when money is required for such things as jumbo jets it will be acquired, without question, in the name of progress, science and advancement. We do know that unless there is some proposal far beyond what is contained in the task force report there will not be any sizeable fraction of that $20 billion provided. So far there is no indication that legislation will be forthcoming to provide ways and means for that $20 billion to become a reality.

In addition to failing on these scores the task force has failed absolutely to measure up to the problem in respect of public housing. Although obviously disturbed about the socially sterile environment of some projects, the task force saw fit not to recommend federal assistance to support social and recreational facilities. It is all very well to attack public housing for having fallen short and to say that it is built in such a way as to stigmatize and cut off people, but it is another thing to fail to recommend that better public housing should be built. What does the task force do? It runs away from the whole problem of building decent public housing which the low income group must have. It says it is going to put public housing in the deep freeze until more studies have been carried out in order to find ways and means of not stigmatizing people.

The reason people are being stigmatized in respect of public housing is not hard to see. The minister's predecessor, Mr. Nicholson, when he was here said that the stigma ought to be removed from public housing, but he did not suggest that the way to remove the stigma was to stop building public housing. He said the way to remove the stigma from public housing was to build public housing for more kinds of people so that it could be pieced into the structure and fabric of the surrounding community and so that people would not be earmarked and stigmatized because they lived in a public housing project but would be a part of the whole community. More and more housing people recognize this. The minister was told this when he was travelling around.

It has been suggested that a look should be taken at whole districts in order to see what existing private homes are already there which could be repaired and brought up to date. If there were proper government financing so that people could afford to bring existing private houses up to date, I believe public housing projects of a smaller and more suitable kind could be introduced without the residents being stigmatized. The hon. Mr. Nicholson, who is now Lieutenant Governor of the province of British Columbia, is living in public housing right now. As the Lieutenant Governor of the province he lives in a publicly-owned mansion in Victoria. I have not heard anyone complain that he is being stigmatized by living in public housing accommodation. As a matter of fact, if that is a stigma there are a great many people who would like to share it with him.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

Let me tell the minister that the task force is letting the city of Vancouver down badly. We have two urban renewal projects now which are ready to go if only they can get the consent of senior governments. The government at Victoria will not give its consent until the government here in Ottawa does. The city of Vancouver had this to say in a brief presented to the task force:

> The city of Vancouver is extremely concerned at any suggestion that the federal government withdraw or in any way limit its involvement in urban renewal schemes. On the contrary, it is the city's view that such involvement must be increased.

I wish you would listen today, Mr. Minister, because the city of Vancouver has been trying to catch your ear for a long time. Perhaps I can help them if you will turn your ear this way instead of the other way. The brief went on to state:

> —the city feels very strongly that public housing, as presently contemplated, is one way of accommodating those people who are economically unable to provide for their housing needs.

Let me tell the minister that public housing of the best kind we can make available is the only way we can meet the needs of the one-third of our population in the lowest income bracket. This can be done by co-operative or non-profit social housing projects. Developing public housing co-operatives and non-profit housing developments is the only way to meet the needs of this low income third of our population. The minister said he went into this matter, as did the commission, without a preconceived notion. The whole task force went into this matter with one very big preconceived notion. I refer to the notion that everyone in Canada would love to own a home and that we can offer home ownership to everyone in Canada. The minister shakes his head but the fact is there, implicit in the report.

Mr. Hellyer: Most certainly not.

Mrs. MacInnis: A lot of sole support women with families are desperately waiting for accommodation. I know of a single woman with two girls who lives in two rooms behind a bakery on Victoria Drive in my riding. She is desperately waiting to get decent public housing in which this family will have more than just enough room to exist. There is nothing for her in this report.

It is all well and good to tell women who exist on social assistance that we believe everyone in Canada has a right to own a home, but that is just as cruel as telling them to look up at the rosy sunset because there they will find a castle in Spain. There is little use in saying that everybody should have a castle in Spain. What we have to do is come down to the place people live and meet them on the ground.

On December 18 Vancouver delegates who had been at the conference on housing, people representing all political parties, social workers, people from the city hall, organizations in the provincial government and the local governments, got together and this is what they said:

Provision of public housing with rent geared to income is one important means of meeting the housing needs of those in lower income brackets. The present stigma attached to public housing is created by several factors—all remedial.

They also said:

1. There is so little public housing that it is suspect, as anything new and strange is suspect.

What does the minister do in face of that situation? He simply clamps down on any further public housing by putting it into the deep freeze, actually accentuating the present shortage. He refuses to go ahead with more public housing. The brief then states:

2. Because there are so few units, only those of very low income can be housed—the result is economic segregation.

That is what Mr. Nicholson complained of. He suggested that if other people as well as those on poverty incomes were given an opportunity to obtain public housing you would improve the position of the lowest income people and therefore get rid of the stigma. This is what our British Columbia delegates are pleading for in this brief which goes on to state:

3. Housing projects are too large and not integrated into the community.

I met a woman in Vancouver just the other day who commented that the Raymur high-rise apartment was a terrible place in which to raise children. She suggested that it might be fine for elderly or single people with its high-rise elevators. She told me that she had been sitting in a private house not far from the Raymur watching two little children playing on the balcony on the tenth floor. She said she finally reached the stage of being so nervous for fear they might fall that she could not watch them any longer. By this example I do not suggest that we should not have more public housing projects of this larger type, but for families we need a more scattered type. Three storeys are a lot lower than 12 or 15.

Another tenant living in public housing told me that the tenants were offered the chance to purchase the apartments in which they lived. She said that very few of the people in the high-rise Raymur project wanted to do so. She was living in Little Mountain. She said that if the people there were given the opportunity to purchase their row housing units a great many would be interested. In such areas they have green grass and yards for children to play in with safety.

The fourth statement in this brief in reference to public housing is:

4. They are often located in undesirable residential areas.

The Skeena Terrace project is a good example. On three sides it is surrounded by arterial highways and there is no place for children to play and there are no shopping facilities within reasonable distance. People have to take a bus to go shopping or for any other purpose, even to go to church. We have made mistakes in the past, but that is all the more reason to get busy on public housing now and remedy the mistakes we have made. The brief to which I have referred goes on to suggest:

5. Necessary facilities, such as recreation areas, are not provided.

Let me read one letter I received from a tenant who lives in Orchard Park in my riding. This tenant is one of the officials of the tenants' or residents' association. He said:

Orchard Park is a low rent housing project.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but her time has expired.

Mrs. MacInnis: Could I have two minutes?

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have unanimous consent of the committee?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. MacInnis: This individual says he has been trying very hard to get recreational facilities for that project. He says that in the absence of these facilities, "our children can swing from the rafters, our elderly can sit on the floor and play cards and the teenagers can go up on the roof and play tag, all in this affluent society." He comments:

I guess we are just a bunch of monkeys anyway. Do you wonder why people become bitter, discouraged and demoralized?

In closing I want to say to the minister that he should commence his housing policy with the realistic approach laid down by the Canadian conference on housing. We must base our housing policy in Canada on the cornerstone of greatest need, the need of those people in the low income brackets. We must eliminate the gaps in housing. We must begin housing projects to rehabilitate existing units. We must develop the fabric of the community. I believe that if we do these things we can develop a housing policy which will bring credit to Canada.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to spend more time replying to the questions raised by hon. members, but unfortunately I must leave in a few minutes to catch a plane for Toronto. But in the next four or five minutes I would like to answer first the question raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants and then say a word or two about public housing. The hon. member asked, in respect of each of the votes, where we now stood with regard to the amounts outstanding under the law, and what we anticipated would happen during the course of the months ahead.

I do not have the vote numbers here but I shall deal with these matters seriatim. In respect of the first one, section 22(1) of the National Housing Act, 1954, the statutory authorization is $4,600 million; commitments approved March, 1954, to December, 1967, $3,873.2 million; estimated commitments for the calendar year 1968, $495.8 million; estimated requirements for the calendar year 1969, $585 million; estimated requirements January 1 to March 31, 1970, $246 million; additional commitment authority required, $600 million.

Second, section 36C(2) of the National Housing Act, 1954: Statutory authorization, $350 million; commitments approved 1961 to December 1967, $234.3 million; estimated commitments calendar year 1968, $89.7 million; estimated requirements calendar year 1969, $100 million; estimated requirements January 1 to March 31, 1970, $51 million; total, $475 million. Additional commitment authority sought to section 36C(2) of the National Housing Act, 1954, $125 million.

[The Chairman.]

Third, section 13 of the National Housing Act, 1954: Statutory authorization $9,500 million; actual insurable loan commitments whether or not an insurance policy has been issued, for the period ending December 31, 1967, $8,330 million; estimated commitments for the calendar year 1968, $1,100 million; estimated commitments for the calendar year 1969, $1,100 million; estimated commitments January 1 to March 31, 1970, $470 million; additional authority requested, $1,500 million.

Fourth, section 26 of the National Housing Act, 1954: statutory authorization, $500 million; actual loan commitments for the period ending December 31, 1967, $455 million; estimated commitments for the calendar year 1968, $35 million; estimated commitments for the calendar year 1969, $45 million; estimated commitments for the period January 1 to March 31, 1967, $15 million; additional authority requested to section 26 of the National Housing Act, 1954, $50 million.

On Monday night when concluding my remarks I indicated that it was not just the task force that was concerned about public housing, and in particular the project aspect of public housing, but that it was a concern of, I would say, all thoughtful people, all people who have really studied the question in depth, or at least those who have recently become aware of the magnitude of the problem we are facing. As I listened to the end of the hon. lady's remarks I thought she was not too far from our thinking. Perhaps if she re-read the task force report she would find we are almost at one.

However, there is certainly a problem in respect of large projects. This problem will not be overcome by just building more big projects which would have the same psychological disadvantages. It has to be overcome by other means. I do not think that any amount of public housing we are likely to build in this country in the foreseeable future would be sufficient to change substantially the disadvantages which occur psychologically and sociologically in regard to what in many instances have become ghettos of the poor and places which are easily identified as being set apart in some way from the community at large. This fact was recognized in the booklet recently released by the Canadian Welfare Council. In their little booklet entitled "Social Policies for Canada, Part I" recommendation 31 reads as follows:

Programs which avoid the stigma and invidious distinctions associated with traditional public housing projects should be an important feature of housing policy. In developing public policies for housing, consideration should be given to a number of possibilities including:

1. A general housing allowance, scaled to income, available to both owner-occupiers and tenants.

2. Increased assistance and technical consultative services to non-profit organizations, limited dividend corporations and co-operative housing schemes.

3. The extent to which the tax system might be used to assist housing.

Mrs. MacInnis: They criticized the report.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, but they were completely inconsistent in criticizing the task force report, which in effect said exactly the same thing. They recognize this in their own booklet, and I suspect this is being done by others as well. I would again refer to the recent commission in the United States and quote just one or two more passages from their findings. They say:

Moreover, the larger the project, the greater are the problems of social behaviour. In these huge projects, it is difficult for the occupants to feel any real concern for the group as a whole or any fundamental loyalty to it. This in itself breeds a lack of responsibility and a yielding to anti-social impulses which may range all the way from a lack of care in maintaining a property to outright vandalism.

Later in the report they say:

In the future, local and state housing authorities with the encouragement and help of HUD should seek out more and more scattered sites where smaller public housing developments may be built.

Then later:

As suggested above, in these smaller units greater loyalty and sense of resopnsibility can be developed among the occupants and delinquent behaviour can be better controlled. Walk-ups will cost less per square foot—

Included in any such program should also be the purchase and rehabilitation of large numbers of single family homes and row houses, which are being abandoned by their owners in such places as Philadelphia, the Brownsville section of Brooklyn and the west side of Chicago.

This is not a conclusion which is in any sense unique to the members of the task force, who did not, as I indicated before, have preconceived notions about their task. Many of the members of the task force do not subscribe to the idea that every family should own its own single family dwelling. This is a misconception that has grown up. We were all concerned about some of the side effects of project housing. We said so. We feel this is correct. Looking at other evidence on this subject we find that many people in other parts of the world, and in Canada, have come to the same conclusion. As a consequence—

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Chairman, before the minister leaves that point, could I ask him a question?

Mr. Hellyer: Certainly.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I take it the minister is saying that some of these large projects have psychological and sociological disadvantages, and he favours smaller projects. I ask two questions in this connection. Does the minister intend to proceed with smaller public housing projects? Do the projects which have been frozen in Ontario fall into the first category of being too large?

Mr. Hellyer: I think I can answer both questions in this way, Mr. Chairman. In the task force report we indicated that there were a number of alternatives. We said that the big projects should be frozen during the period of the review. We did not say this in respect of smaller projects. We said that no large public housing projects should go forward until such time as we had a chance to find out what we were doing. We did not say this with respect to the smaller projects.

We did not leave the matter in a vacuum. We made alternative suggestions so far as income supplements are concerned, the purchase of single housing, rehabilitation, greater emphasis on limited dividend housing and co-operative housing. There are a number of things that can be done in the meantime to meet the same need for most of the same people, but in a much more satisfactory manner. These alternatives should be explored.

In respect of the second question, I can tell the committee that we have reviewed all the outstanding submissions. We are right up to date in reviewing all the proposals which had been temporarily left for review following the task force report, and we have approved or submitted for approval all of the ones that would fit into these categories. In other words, the ones that would provide what I consider to be good family accommodation have been sent forward. Smaller projects, particularly those with individual street addresses, preferably where some private space is available and where there is proper access to community facilities, will prove to be satisfactory.

In respect of public housing for senior citizens, of course slightly different criteria are used because high-rise buildings are not objected to and we did not find the same problem in respect of senior housing that we found in respect of family housing in larger buildings. So there is a sharp distinction there. Some of the problems are related to families living in high-rise apartments in any event, but these problems are aggravated in public housing high-rise apartments. So when we came to review senior citizens' public housing, the criteria that we looked for were slightly different.

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister a question? I presume that the two Vancouver schemes have been refused for the time being. What has been done? Has it been suggested that revisions be made or were they just refused? Has any study been given to the problem and have alternatives been suggested?

Mr. Hellyer: Without going into the details of each individual submission at this time, which I really cannot do but will be prepared to do on another occasion, I can say that where they do not qualify there are other alternatives for us to explore in the same community, different sites or limited dividend, or some other alternative. So, as I indicated the other day, no less housing will be built. We will ensure that just as many units are built, but they may be under a different program if we are satisfied that a different program will be more advantageous.

In conclusion I should like to say that we have reviewed all of the outstanding submissions in this area and we have sent forward all of the ones which we feel are good family accommodation. There are three or four that in the normal course have been sent back for changes which would make them more acceptable, such as changes in the layout or better street patterns where access was not satisfactory and you would have to carry a child several hundred yards from the nearest road in a storm. But for the most part they have gone forward, and in cases where the projects were too big or did not meet the criteria we will be looking for alternative methods.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What percentage of those chosen have gone forward? Is it half or three-quarters?

Mr. Hellyer: In so far as the number of projects is concerned, almost all of them have gone forward because most of them qualify. In so far as the number of units is concerned, I cannot say how many have gone forward without checking, but I am sure my hon. friend will be pleased when he sees the detailed analysis of what we have done because I think it would meet the criteria which he approves in general or which in any event he would find difficult to criticize and which will permit the kind of housing we want to be built to go forward and, at the same time, will indicate to the various people involved what we should now do to make sure that there is an adequate flow in alternative programs to keep housing at a satisfactory level during the year.

Mr. McCleave: May I ask the minister a question before he leaves for Toronto? Most of the recommendations of the task force will have no relevance unless the minister can present legislation to us. I believe that in outlining the business of the house up to the end of the session the President of the Privy Council indicated an amendment to the National Housing Act. I hope he was in singular error and that he meant amendments, and I hope the minister will be bringing in a fairly comprehensive set of amendments some time before June. Perhaps the minister would like to comment on that.

Mr. Hellyer: It will be quite a package of amendments. There are a large number of technical and substantive amendments which will have to be made to the act to implement even the more urgent recommendations. That is all I can say about it now, but I would like to thank the members of the committee for their discussion and the contribution they have made. I am convinced we all have the same ends, that we only differ on the means, and that the more we study the matter the more we will find we are not as far apart as may have been indicated once or twice.

Mr. McCleave: Will the minister beat the June bride traffic with his amendments?

Mr. Hellyer: I hope I will before that.

Mr. Skoreyko: Mr. Chairman, I rise to participate in the debate today on a somewhat different matter having to do with the estimates of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. First of all I would like to find out from the minister before the debate is over, if possible, why the government has overspent by $6 million. I realize that there will be plenty of excuses. I realize also that the Czech refugees have cost the government some money. We also have the winter works program which has to be fully paid for. I suppose all these reasons will be given in the minister's arguments.

But there are odd situations that exist in my area, as I am sure they do in many parts of the country, particularly with regard to leases and rentals in regard to manpower offices. For example, in Edmonton the Department of Manpower has a rather expensive office facility in the Centennial building which was occupied on August 18, 1967. Only four blocks away, at 10213 107th street in the same city, there is another rather elaborate manpower office. My argument is that the office in which the manpower department was situated before the move in 1967 could have very easily been enlarged at much less cost than was involved in taking over space at the new address. If the minister wishes, he can argue that the staff has increased proportionately and so the move was required. I do not think that was the reason at all. I think the reason was that the Department of Manpower wanted to upgrade its facilities. As an example let me say that the hon. member for Edmonton Centre raised a question on the order paper on October 9 in which he asked the minister:

> For what reasons were the offices of the manpower centre removed from a public building built specifically as an employment centre which is housing, as well, the related offices of the Unemployment Insurance Commission?

The reply to that question was:

> Insufficient space available for both Unemployment Insurance Commission and Manpower in the Unemployment Insurance Commission building.

Yet when we ask the minister how many more people are now working in the manpower office than were there in 1967, the answer is two; there were 128 at that time and there are 130 now. I simply point out that the building which the government owns on 107th Street could have been enlarged and in this way the government would have saved considerable money.

I do not see the justification for two manpower offices within four blocks of each other. I made representations to two previous ministers of labour or manpower in regard to the department establishing an office in the northeastern section of the city where I am sure it would serve a much greater need than it does at its present site on 107th street. I asked the minister to consider locating an office in what was formerly the satellite town of Beverly for a number of reasons. The first was the general economics of the area. The second was its accessibility to Edmonton for a large segment of the population that is primarily concerned in getting to work. A third, though probably less important, factor is that rental costs in that area would not be one-third what is now being paid in the Wentworth building where I believe the department has a five-year lease. What possible advantage there is in moving the manpower office from 107th Street to the mezzanine floor of the Centennial building is beyond my comprehension.

I also suggest to the minister that it was a bad mistake to split the Department of Manpower office and the Unemployment Insurance office. I say that because those seeking benefits from the Unemployment Insurance office and those who are looking for work are in effect facing the same problem. If the minister had placed these two offices side by side or within a block of each other I would have no criticism, but at the moment the Unemployment Insurance office is situated about one mile from both manpower offices in the downtown area.

I should like to deal for a few moments with the operations of the Department of Immigration. I would remind the minister that not too long ago many grievances were aired in the committee on manpower and immigration. I am beginning to think that the Department of Immigration is a two-headed monster of some kind. Both heads are speaking at the same time and neither head knows what the other is saying.

I say this for a number of reasons. If I remember correctly, several members of the committee interrogated the officials of the department about the establishment of offices to serve some of the Iron Curtain countries. In particular they were questioned about establishing offices in Belgrade and in Warsaw. Some negotiations, it was suggested, were under way either through the manpower and immigration department or through the Department of External Affairs. I have taken considerable interest in the discussions in this committee for many years, but I have heard nothing further regarding the negotiations that were supposed to be taking place. Certainly I have not heard that they have advanced to any extent.

I have also been informed, not only by visitors but by people who have actually been processed for immigration through the Geneva office, that the Geneva staffs are doing an excellent job but are overworked. The establishment of a facility in the two aforementioned cities would do a great deal to alleviate the problem in Geneva. I am not saying this situation is the minister's fault, but in view of some of the recent appointments that have been made this government does not seem concerned about security when it comes to establishing offices in certain centres. I brought this problem to the attention of the previous minister of citizenship and immigration some two years or more ago, and at that time he stated that some action would be taken.

Notwithstanding the assurances that were given at a recent committee meeting that the personnel in the Hong Kong office was adequate in number, was competent and had sufficient facilities available to process applications as they came in, I am now further advised that problems are being encountered.

I recommend to the minister at this point that some time during the next 12 months or during the next session the immigration committee members visit some of the immigration offices in Europe and elsewhere. I realize that we are trying to save money and to avoid deficit budgeting, and I realize I have been criticizing the department for overspending. Nevertheless, I feel that the members of the committee could perform a valuable service by assessing for themselves the services that are available so that they can decide whether or not to recommend to the minister either a reduction or an increase in certain staffs and facilities.

I receive letters almost weekly from people who have communicated with their relatives in Hong Kong and who are anxious that some action be taken by the department to alleviate the pressure on that office. I am not mis-stating the truth when I tell the minister, on the basis of word that I have received, that some applications in Hong Kong have taken as long as nine months to process. If this is the case, I suggest that a serious look at the facilities in Hong Kong is required.

I want to raise one other matter that I thought I had dealt with rather adequately in the committee. I have received numerous complaints from certain places in Canada, and to a lesser extent from the city of Edmonton in regard to the conduct of departmental officials toward new Canadians and immigrants who visit the offices of the department. For example, when a recent immigrant to Canada, say an Italian, calls at one of the department's offices to inquire about an extension of a visitor's visa for a relative or a friend of his, some of the staff seem to treat such a person with contempt, as if he were breaking the law because he had dared ask one of the officials for some information. I have raised this question before and I am still receiving this kind of complaint. In some cases these people are either brushed aside or asked to bring with them someone who can speak English. In many cases information regarding matters of sponsorship and admissibility of applicants is hard to obtain. I hope the minister plans to make available to the department sufficient staff in order that certain members of our population may communicate adequately with the department. In an area like Edmonton which has seen in recent years an influx of many Italian immigrants, surely the department could employ an official who speaks Italian to deal with problems which may arise.

Another complaint which should be raised is that people who present themselves at the wicket, so to speak, must wait many hours before being attended to, even though they have appointments. Officials of the department sometimes do not seem to be held up by previous interviews, yet they keep these people waiting. It is important for the department to maintain good relations with the public, and I think the minister ought to examine some of these complaints.

I now wish to talk about the admission of students to Canada. We ought to examine their backgrounds, their purposes for coming here and their origins. Does the department check the backgrounds of students seeking entry? Do any criteria govern the admissibility of students? Is their political background checked, and their motive for entering the country? Are family backgrounds checked with a view to seeing whether students can assume financial responsibility for their stay in this country? If not, they ought to be. Often students, from African countries in particular, find themselves in financial difficulties in Canada. It seems that their families are unable to provide financial assistance, the result being that these students seek employment.

I need not remind the minister that a student without landed immigrant status who seeks employment faces the penalty of deportation. I wonder whether it would not be wise for the department to determine if students seeking entry are suitable prospective immigrants. If they find themselves in financial difficulties, landed immigrant status could be extended to them and they could find employment here. They would not have to go back to their own countries and apply again for admission to this country with a view to becoming Canadian citizens ultimately. If the suitability of students in this regard were determined before entry, many of our problems in this field would be eliminated.

I wish to ask the minister what certain $1 items in the supplementary estimates represent. I wish to point out that the total sum at the bottom of page 13 of Supplementary Estimates (B) ought not to be $6,200,000 but $6,200,003. Three $1 items have not been included in the total, and I wonder exactly what those $1 items represent. What area of the department is involved in these expenditures and how much money in actual fact is involved in these three $1 items?

I have made what I consider a reasonable argument in favour of changes that the entire committee has advocated for a number of years. I hope the minister will give these matters his serious consideration.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, we in this party are glad that the supplementary estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration are being considered. We have become deeply disturbed about recent developments, particularly in the field of immigration. I do not propose to discuss the manpower side of the minister's responsibilities; instead, I wish to discuss the immigration policy of this country.

We have become very much disturbed because of answers the minister has given to questions asked in the house. Particularly, I refer to the treatment of deserters and draft dodgers. The reason for our being disturbed has nothing to do with the desirability or otherwise of admitting deserters and draft dodgers from the United States or elsewhere, although I shall have a word or two to say on that matter. That is not the question disturbing us—and I am glad to see the minister is listening. We wonder whether the immigration law of the land is to be administered according to the law laid down by parliament in the Immigration Act and by the government in orders in council, or according to unpublished directives sent to officers which are not in accordance with the law laid down by parliament or orders in council. In other words, is the law in the field of immigration to be governed by the law-making bodies of this country, or by whim, discretion, abitrary judgment or prejudice? The issue that has arisen at the present time is connected with the question of deserters and draft dodgers.

According to a statement the minister made in the House of Commons in answer to a question, a directive was issued in July to immigration officials suggesting that when they deal with applicants seeking to cross the borders of our country some regard should be paid to what are called obligations, which may be either contractual or to the armed services of a country. I say to the minister that if the subject matter of such directives is to be the law of this land, it should be laid down in the proper way by parliament in an amendment to the Immigration Act. We should include within prohibited classes those who fall within the categories mentioned in the directive. In any event, the government has power to deal with the matter by order in council. For example, if it is the policy of the government not to admit draft dodgers or deserters from the U.S. army or any other army, persons coming into that category should be included in the prohibited classes and the government ought to spell that out by way of order in council so that the law may be known.

I point out to the minister that, basically, there are two different theories which operate in the field of immigration. One theory is that those who do not come within the prohibited classes have the right to enter Canada if they comply otherwise with requisite laws and regulations. I believe it is the scheme of the Immigration Act to admit all who are not prohibited. That is how the courts have interpreted the legislation. If that is so, how can such persons lawfully be excluded purely on grounds of arbitrary considerations which operate only in the minds of officials and which therefore cannot be known to others? The other theory is that immigration should be regulated entirely by administrative discretion.

In my view admission to this country should be by a proper judicial process after a determination of whether the person falls into a prohibited class. This is of fundamental importance. We in this country should seek to maintain a truly liberal immigration policy. I use the word "liberal" advisedly, with a small "l". We recognize the tremendous value of people who have skills and capital coming to Canada to assist in developing this country. If we want people to come to this country we must treat them in a fair and reasonable manner. I challenge the minister to produce any order in council or statute which would justify the exclusion of people on vaguely contractual grounds. The minister mentioned default in family obligations, but where is that to be found in the regulations or orders in council? The minister suggested perhaps deserters should be excluded. I understand this policy is under review.

Many deserters have been excluded in the last few days and weeks, not because of any law of this country but on the basis of either some secret directive not published or made available to the would-be immigrant or on the basis of the feelings of prejudice about certain people of individual immigration officers. This is something which must be clarified and changed. It is ridiculous to maintain immigration appeal boards if the grounds of exclusion are of this arbitrary nature. If the government has not decided to exclude deserters and draft, it should not be issuing indirect instructions to its officers to use wrongly the power of assessment on the basis of personality in order to keep out certain immigrants. If these people are to be excluded, the government should clearly state the basis of exclusion. The policy proposed to be enforced must be by order in council so that it can be discussed in this house.

In my opinion it would be a grave mistake to refuse to admit deserters from the United States and from other countries in the world. Frequently people leave their own countries on matters of principle. Many people feel that the United States, by its involvement in Viet Nam, is pursuing a course fraught with great danger to itself and the world. Many people who apply to come to Canada are conscientious objectors to the policy of their own countries. It is, therefore, for political reasons that these people are excluded. I am sure the minister will agree it is against the tradition of this and other civilized countries to refuse admission to people on what are basically political grounds.

We have adequate powers of exclusion on the grounds that people have committed criminal offences or are members of subversive organizations. These people fall within the prohibited classes. If a person has committed an offence solely against the military laws of a country, this should not be sufficient reason to exclude them from entry. I know this has not been done in the past and it should not be done in the future.

[Mr. Brewin.]

I was interested in the admission of an army officer who deserted the Portuguese army because he felt the colonial wars they were fighting were against the interest of his country and humanity and in fact had been condemned by the United Nations.

There are many other matters connected with immigration which I would like to discuss with the minister but obviously this cannot be done in the 20 minutes available to me. I ask the minister to review certain features of great importance in the administration of this act.

Out of a total of 50 points required, 15 points are allowed on a subjective test given by the immigration officer. These 15 points are supposedly for personality. I have had a lot of experience in these matters and I find that even if a person has the greatest qualities in the world he never receives more than seven or eight points out of a possible 15. If an immigration officer does not like the looks of a person, he could give that person only three points, thereby preventing him from entering this country. These tests are often conducted by administrative officers with little training, background and experience in this field. This is unfair and should be reviewed.

I ask the minister to have his department check into cases where promising people from Italy, Greece and the West Indies have only received two or three points out of a maximum of 15. I suggest to the minister that the Immigration Appeal Board Act should be amended to give the board the right to exercise a discretion in cases of immigrants having the ability to establish themselves in this country. I am sure the minister is familiar with the regulation which gives an immigration officer the right to admit a person into the country who does not obtain the required 50 points if that person is considered capable of establishing himself in this country. The Immigration Appeal Board should be given this same power.

Often desirable people are not admitted to this country because they do not meet some technical standard set out in the act. This is the opposite of what the immigration policy should be. The policy should be to facilitate the admission of qualified people to this country and not to find reasons why they should not be admitted. The hon. member for Parkdale, who has a lot of experience in this field, agrees that the present system is not functioning as it should.

I remind the minister that the white paper on Canadian immigration policy issued in 1966 listed a series of suggested changes and amendments to the Immigration Act and the regulations. Only a handful of these suggestions have been put into effect. It is necessary to have new regulations and new legislation to carry out the good intentions expressed by the government in that white paper in 1966. Furthermore, I ask the minister to do what he can to see that the committee of the house on immigration is active because there are lots of things in relation to the working out of these regulations that ought to be reviewed by hon. members. One is that the father of a child cannot bring that child into this country if the child was born out of wedlock. He may have recognized the child and supported it throughout life, yet he is not allowed to exercise the rights of a father. We know full well that in many countries of the world, and in countries fairly close to Canada, the institution of matrimony does not enjoy quite the same status as it does here. I personally know of three or four cases of fathers who assumed the full obligation of parenthood being refused the opportunity to bring in so-called illegitimate children. That is the sort of thing that ought to be changed.

I imagine my 20 minutes are just about coming to a close, Mr. Chairman, and I wish to conclude by dealing with the same matter raised by the hon. member for Edmonton East a few moments ago when speaking for his party, and that is the question of the admission of students and visitors into this country. I plead with the minister not to yield to any hysteria that there may be on this subject but to maintain a genuinely liberal policy in regard to it. I have reason to believe that the minister is a man of liberal tendencies and attitudes in regard to this question, and a man of humanitarian views. Let us not be too strict about these matters, about all the inquiries we are going to make into the background of students and other visitors. An open country will contribute more in the long run to the well-being of the community than any narrow picayune—I was going to say conservative but I do not mean Conservative in a political sense—restrictive attitude, trying to find reasons why people cannot come to Canada, because such an approach will do damage to this country.

May I summarize what I have been trying to say. First of all, let us have a law laid down in orders in council and the acts of this parliament and not a law laid down by directives. Second, let us remember that many of the so-called deserters and draft dodgers, of whom some people speak with contempt, are very fine people with skills that can contribute to this country. Let us recognize that there is a vast unfulfilled agenda for the immigration department in its own white paper. Let us get rid of the principle of 15 points for a purely subjective test of skill. Let us maintain a liberal policy with regard to students and visitors.

There is one other problem, if I have the time to raise it, the question of the points allotted under the present system of the basis of occupational demand. I have found, and I call this to the attention of the minister, that often would-be immigrants are allotted zero points for occupational demand and they are not told what the basis for this is. It is supposed to be based on figures in the minister's own department. Officials give would-be immigrants zero points without any explanation at all and without any opportunity of seeing, even if the would-be immigrants demand it, the documents on which this assessment is made. There should be no secret documents in this field. If the department has documents to show that we have need of dentists and doctors, that we have need of welders but do not need farm labourers or hairdressers, is there any reason in the world why that information should not be available to would-be immigrants?

There is one other feature with respect to this whole administration that I must raise. I mentioned it to the minister in the standing committee, but nothing has been done about it. It is the farcical type of procedure which is still carried on in relation to medical certificates where a person is summarily deported from this country on the ground that he does not have a medical certificate from a medical officer, and he can only get such a certificate from a medical officer or doctor appointed by the department. If an immigrant goes into the departmental offices and asks for an appointment with a doctor, officials tell him he cannot have an appointment, that he cannot see any of the doctors. His health may be perfect but he is deported for not having a medical certificate, and yet he is not allowed to see the only man or men who can give it to him. Usually there are other reasons for the deportation; nevertheless it is a farcical, nonsensical thing for people to be deported for not having a piece of paper which they are denied the opportunity of getting by a decision of the department.

I say to the minister that we have high hopes his term of administration will be a liberal one, one that will carry out the promise that is contained in the white paper, one that will make our immigration policy what it ought to be, a free, generous and fair policy.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay unduly the work of the house, but the legislation before us provides for a credit increase, and this will increase expenditures further. I think we should probe our conscience on the way all departments are spending money.

I could not help but call the attention of all hon. members, and specially those on the government side, to the lack of planning in regard to expenditures. In fact, such planning should be done every six months, as the estimates are not introduced every year but every six months, and this is the cause of increased financial needs.

I think that planning is not done with enough anticipation, and that the ministers fail to respect the maximum stated in their department estimates. I shall not speak of $2 or $4 items, for that is the business of accountants, yet I would like to draw the attention of the house to a concrete case.

It happened in 1966, within the Department of Public Works. Perhaps I shall be told that this is irrelevant since it goes back to 1966, however such incidents arise almost every day. That is why I want to criticize the government, however mildly I do it. In my opinion, complete control cannot be exerted over the way public funds are spent, or over the conduct of officials.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I wish to remind the hon. member that we are now considering the supplementary estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration, and that he should confine his remarks to those estimates.

Mr. Beaudoin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; I was just coming to them.

I was about to speak of manpower or of the people working in the Department of Public Works to illustrate my point.

The people working in the Department of Public Works or any other department are, in my opinion, manpower. Is that what we are now considering, Mr. Chairman? If so, I will deal with that.

The Deputy Chairman: It has been agreed that we would first deal with the housing problem and then with the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

However, if the hon. member can connect the question of manpower employed by the Public Works Department to the supplementary estimates now before us, his remarks might be more relevant.

Mr. Beaudoin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

My remarks have to do with the way federal officials are spending unduly public money. It seems to me that when one hires somebody, one has a responsibility towards him. I shall give you an example of what I mean.

At some point, it was decided in Sherbrooke to make a historical monument out of a certain building. I am referring to the old residence of Sir Alexander Galt who, in 1867, had been the principal instrument in drawing up the British North America Act. It was decided to move the house some 150 feet from its actual site. According to experts, it weighed around 600 tons.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member has deviated somewhat from the matter before us, the supplementary estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. I would suggest that he deal with the question which presently concerns him at the next centennial.

Mr. Beaudoin: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Therefore, I will limit my remarks to the credits for housing. I think that certain departments should pay more attention to planning, in order to give new life to the industry and to reduce the interest rates, both in the public and the private sectors.

[English]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Chairman, the minister has had an urgent call outside the house. I had hoped that the previous speaker would retain the floor for a few minutes in order to give the minister an opportunity to be here. The minister should be here in a few moments.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, having been a member of the Standing Committee on Immigration and having had the privilege of serving as parliamentary secretary to two ministers of citizenship and immigration, naturally I am interested in the important and absorbing subject of manpower and immigration.

For years I have given attention to problems and questions concerning the admission to Canada of prospective immigrants.

In the 11-year period during which I have had the honour to represent the constituency of Fort William, I have consistently maintained that Canada's immigration policies were out of date. In 1962 barely 72,000 immigrants were admitted and we lost nearly as many persons to the United States. That was approximately the situation when in April, 1963, the present government took office. At that time a start was immediately made to give substance to the statement in the Speech from the Throne which promised that the government would give attention to the need to encourage immigration.

Subsequently, under the energetic direction of dedicated ministers, the fog which obscured the operations of the immigration services in the past began to clear away. We have made great progress in the admission in immigrants since the Pearson government took office in April, 1963. But there is still a lot of room in Canada. It is still an empty country with less than 21 million people living in 3,500,000 square miles of land, richer and more productive than most western nations. The only sphere in which we are poorer is in population.

I said that we have made progress, but I honestly think we should do even better. The economics of immigration must not be denied as an important factor. With this in mind, we know the countries of Europe are in a position to supply qualified immigrants. One should also consider the population density in the various continents. Europe has the highest with 111 persons per square mile, Asia 98, North America 30, Africa 21 and South America 19. By country, Holland has 878 persons to the square mile, Belgium 769, England 566, Germany 546, Italy 540, Russia 27, Brazil 20, and Canada only 5.

In 1963 and again in 1966 I had the privilege of travelling across the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. This vast empty land, rich in mineral resources beyond the dream of early explorers, awaits the day when its 1,400,000 square miles will have a population worthy of its size and wealth despite the harsh weather of winter, although modern facilities and machinery have made life easier to bear in the territories. I think we have been a little slow in promoting a drive for settlers in those regions.

After my first experience in the north I made a report to the then minister concerned suggesting that a policy of northern immigration be established whereby assistance would be given to any immigrant willing to settle in those northern regions for a period of at least five years. After seeing the results in respect of those who migrated there, I am confident that most of them would remain permanently.

The present Minister of Public Works, when he was Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in a speech to the fourth national northern development conference held in Edmonton on November 2, 1967 had this to say:

> There should be good epigrams about the north, for few areas have had so many half-truths hung about them. There is the half-truth that the Arctic is uninhabitable at any time of year for normal people. There is the half-truth that if government would will it, the north would be a hive of mineral production and industry overnight—
> What we seek at these conferences is the whole truth. Just as it is truth that sets men free, it is truth that sets a region growing, prospering and yielding up its riches.

In 1937 Andre Siegfried wrote:

> The northland is peculiarly Canadian... The effect of the north on Canadian individuality is noteworthy... Many countries, and they are to be envied, possess in one direction or another a window which opens on to the infinite, on to the potential future. The open sky thus becomes part of their frontier, and to them it acquires a symbolic, almost spiritual significance... In Canada the frontier which abounds in poetry and latent hope is less the west, as in the United States, than in the northwest, or simply the north. Yet the north is always there like a presence; it is the background of the picture without which Canada would not be Canada.

I am very happy to have the opportunity of sitting next to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. He is doing a great job to help the development of the north. I am sure that many would-be immigrants from Scandinavian countries would welcome the opportunity to settle in the north.

I should also like to say a word in favour of establishing some ways and means of enabling immigrants from the Ukraine and Poland to join their relatives and friends in Canada. I realize it is not the government's fault we are not getting many immigrants from eastern Europe. Nevertheless I believe that an approach should be made to Poland and the U.S.S.R. for a review of their attitude toward a humane immigration policy which would go a long way toward establishing greater and more effective friendly relations between our countries.

In any event, the object is to attract as many qualified people as possible to help build Canada. In the process we will need the professional, the artisan, the tradesman, the ordinary worker, skilled and unskilled. In other words, we should make it easier for the skilled and the unskilled labourer to come to Canada because we need numbers in both categories and will need them for years to come.

I am confident that the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration, in following the dynamic concept of easing the admission of immigrants from many lands as set by his immediate predecessor, will continue to pursue a humane policy in respect of the admission of applicants for landed immigrant status. I would make a special appeal to the minister to place no obstacles in the way of members of families already here, regardless of whether they can fulfil established qualifications. Any applicant who wishes to join his brothers and sisters already here is unlikely to become a charge on the state.

I want to thank the committee for giving me this opportunity to speak and I sincerely hope the minister will take to heart the need for immigrants in Canada which will exist for many years.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity of making a few remarks on the estimates of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. First, I regret very much that the special committee on immigration, which studied the white paper on immigration policy published during the 27th parliament of Canada, did not have the opportunity of tabling its last report.

During the course of this debate the hon. member for Greenwood stated in very clear terms many valid arguments and criticisms in respect of the present administration and the law on immigration in Canada. I have received complaints from all parts of Canada. They come from many people who are disturbed by the way prospective immigrants are treated by officials of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

At this point I should like to say that in particular those people who want to bring their close relatives from Poland feel it is high time that this department established a special office in order that these applications could be processed in Poland just as they are processed in other countries. They feel they are being discriminated against in this respect.

[Mr. Badanai.]

Many people have complained about the restrictive clauses of the Immigration Appeal Board Act. The complaints are that the act should be extended in order that any Canadian citizen could appeal to the board in respect of any class of relative he wants to bring to Canada rather than have this restricted as it is at the present time. These people have suggested that the act should be amended to allow the board to hear cases and decide them not only on compassionate and humanitarian grounds but also on merit.

Last weekend I received a delegation of Spanish-speaking Canadians. These people came to my office and stated they had been treated rather miserably by the officials in Toronto. They informed me that one applicant had been told that his deportation order was postponed and that he could go and take a job. He wrote to his wife in South America telling her to sell everything and come here. In the meantime he has received a letter from the Immigration Appeal Board to the effect that his application has been reviewed and he must return. What are this poor man and his wife in South America supposed to do now?

I have received many complaints along these lines and I hope the minister will take them to heart. I do not want to prolong this debate but I should say I endorse many of the points raised by the hon. member for Greenwood. I hope the minister will not only give these his attention but, if necessary, use the broom to bring about order in this department.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, there have been a number of points raised during the discussion which I should like to deal with at this time. There is not an opportunity in the time available to members or to me to make a full scale examination of the Department of Manpower and Immigration. Members of the committee will be aware that the estimates of this department are to be studied by the standing committee. They will have an opportunity at that time to discuss in detail all the problems which have been properly raised before this committee.

It is apparent that of all the departments of government, at least at the federal level, no department touches the people more closely than the Department of Manpower and Immigration. In Canada we have more than 300 manpower centres operating in all the provinces. The counsellors and personnel of these manpower offices are dealing with problems in respect of training and employment of individual citizens.

We are attempting to establish high standards of efficiency and courtesy, and I am satisfied that in the great proportion of cases that standard of courtesy and efficiency is maintained. Officers are always alerted about complaints of discourtesy or inefficiency, and we continually remind personnel of their obligations in this respect.

The same is true of immigration. There is no problem more sensitive to human reaction than problems in respect of relatives in other countries who want to come to Canada to join their friends or kinsmen. I am quite aware that in the administration of especially the immigration side of the department there are bound to be frustrations and disappointments. The hon. member for Edmonton East mentioned the situation in Hong Kong. It is true that there is a backlog in the sense that there is not an instantaneous processing of applications and there are delays. The fact is that—

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am told there is confusion.

Mr. MacEachen: —over a period of time the facilities have been increased, the personnel situation has been improved, and as soon as financial resources make it possible we will increase and improve them further. The objective of universality, which is the bedrock of the immigration policy, can only be achieved if facilities are available in countries in the world to receive interested applications. Until that is completely possible, the ideal of universality cannot be fully realized.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You have had since October, 1967, to do that.

Mr. MacEachen: We have had, since the new regulations came in, a period of time that has been used to improve the facilities. As resources become available we intend to improve them further. The hon. member for Greenwood raised a question that has been very much in my mind. It has to do with the matter of so-called draft dodgers and deserters. The hon. member is aware that from the very beginning, so to speak, there has been no impediment on that ground alone to the admission to Canada of so-called draft dodgers or draft resisters.

If immigration officers are requested not to seek information with respect to the draft status of any person, and if such a person volunteers information with respect to his draft status, he is told that this information is irrelevant to his admission to Canada. In other words, if a person qualifies under the normal assessment process, draft status does not enter into the question of his admissibility. It does not enter into the picture at all. This is the policy that has been maintained.

A great deal of confusion has been created as between the question of draft dodgers and military deserters or persons who are members of the armed forces of any country. In television programs and briefs there has been a distinct tendency to draw upon statements that apply only to draft dodgers and attempt to apply them to members of the armed services. I have already stated that this question is under review.

I would like to state, for the benefit of my hon. friend from Greenwood, the historical situation with respect to members of the armed forces. It can be simply stated. Until July, 1968, an immigration officer examining an applicant at either a port of entry or overseas would not admit such a person if he were a member of the armed forces, unless proof of discharge were presented.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question? Does he know of any basis within the law to justify this? There may be good reasons for it, but is there anything in the regulations promulgated by the government of Canada that justifies exclusion on that ground? I know there are rights of exclusion on the ground of criminality and subversive activity. Is there anything that enables a person to be excluded on the ground of a breach of the military law of another country?

Mr. MacEachen: A rule does not exist in that form at the present time. It was superseded last July by the directive to which my hon. friend referred. But up to that point, with respect to persons who were members of the armed forces applying at a port of entry or overseas, proof of discharge was necessary. This was the practice up until that point. With respect to persons applying in Canada, until January of 1968 proof of discharge was also requested. The implication that changes in the regulations have been in the direction of toughening the practice is quite wrong, as the facts that I have mentioned demonstrate.

My hon. friend asks what is the basis in the law for the situation that prevails at ports of entry or overseas, that is, the situation which gives an immigration officer discretionary latitude, if you want to put it that way. My hon. friend will agree that the Immigration Act does provide the capacity to make regulations, including regulations with respect to admission. There is a regulation which entitles an immigration officer, aside from the scoring of the 50 points and whether a man has above or below the 50 points, depending upon the assessment of the officer, to use his own discretion.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister a question? Is that discretion not related solely to whether he thinks he can establish himself successfully in Canada, and not to some matter like military status or something of that sort?

Mr. MacEachen: The officer is entitled to assess, aside from the actual scoring, whether the person is likely to settle satisfactorily or successfully in Canada. Among the considerations involved are substantial moral, legal or contractual obligations in the country of origin. My hon. friend may dispute whether an immigration officer ought to have this discretionary authority. That is one point. But we are satisfied that under the regulations and under the law it is a lawful exercise of his discretion.

I do not intend to go beyond this point in a discussion of this whole question, except to say that some months ago I instructed my officers in the department to examine the whole question of draft dodgers, members of the armed forces, and their admission at the border or in Canada. At present we are nearing the completion of our review. I hope that very shortly we will be able to make a very clearcut statement on this issue so there will be no doubt in anybody's mind as to the actual situation with respect to these categories of persons.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the minister one last question, and I shall not interrupt him again? How soon does he propose to make that statement? Also, is the discretion of an immigration officer limited exclusively to the question of the applicant's chances of establishing himself successfully in Canada? Do the reasons for so deciding have to be submitted in writing and approved by an officer of the department? Those are the qualifications that exist and they have nothing whatever to do with the draft status or the military status of the person applying for entry into Canada.

Mr. MacEachen: I disagree with my hon. friend. I think there is at least a body of opinion which suggests that a person who is reluctant to assume legal responsibilities in the country of origin may not be too anxious to accept legal responsibilities in his new country. So it does seem to me that this is a relevant consideration in assessing the capacity of an individual to settle satisfactorily in Canada. It seems to me that, for example, a person who is married in the United States and has a number of children and who comes to the border on his own and qualifies on other grounds might not be considered a candidate for successful settlement in Canada and that it might be questioned whether this would be an impediment to his successful settlement here. This is another consideration that enters into the overall assessment.

My hon. friend may disagree with the application but certainly I do not think he can argue successfully that it is not a relevant consideration. It is true that if an immigration officer does reach a decision on this ground, he has to refer it to a superior officer for consideration, so that not only one person but at least a second person must agree with this particular judgment. In a nutshell, the situation is that we do not draw any conclusions from a person's draft status. At ports of entry or overseas an immigration officer at present is entitled to use his discretion in the manner I have described either to admit or refuse to admit a member of the armed forces to Canada. In the case of an applicant who comes to Canada from the United States as a visitor and applies for admission as a landed immigrant, membership in the armed services is not considered a relevant factor.

The purpose of my review is to establish whether in fact there is a justification to draw a distinction between draft dodgers and members of the armed services, whether there is a justification for one treatment at ports of entry and overseas and another in Canada, and finally whether there should be a clear admission of all members of the armed services from any country in the world—and that would be the effect of the policy advocated by my hon. friend—or whether indeed it would be our decision as a matter of policy not to admit a person who is a member of the forces of another country until he has discharged his obligations to those forces. These are some of the issues that are under review at the present time.

My hon. friend spoke about the admission of persons to Canada for short term visits. Recently we had a case of a person who inadvertently was permitted to enter Canada and who made speeches here. In these cases we have tried to draw a balance between the requirements of freedom of speech and public safety and security and public order. I think that normally persons who might otherwise be prohibited are admitted to Canada for short term visits to make speeches if they are sponsored by a reputable organization. A person holding subversive views, for example, might be admitted to Canada for a short term visit to make a speech on the understanding that this is a free and open society and that Canadians should be entitled to the widest possible expression of opinion. On the other hand, if such a person came to Canada and it were determined that his presence might lead to public disorder, riots, or the breaking of the law, then it seems to me there is a valid case for refusing that person admission.

Mr. Valade: How does the minister prejudge that?

Mr. MacEachen: It is very difficult indeed to prejudge any such case, and I admit this quite readily. For example, in the case of Mr. Rubin who was in Canada last year, he advocated the violent overthrow of the Canadian government. Perhaps my hon. friends opposite would not think that such a bad idea.

Mr. Aiken: No, a peaceful overthrow.

Mr. MacEachen: And, I understand, he led the mob to take possession of a faculty lounge in that university and he suggested that it should be occupied and reoccupied by the students. It seems to me that this was a consideration which should affect his admission to Canada at some future time. Certainly, under our policy the giving of speeches on a short visit under a reputable organization has never been a basis for prohibiting persons mentioned by the hon. member for Greenwood. It is a very difficult policy to administer, as one can determine from the stated views in the house itself. There is one group advocating, "let the man in", and there is another group saying, "keep him out". Both groups are giving expression to a certain point of view. My purpose is to try to draw a reasonable balance between the two views which at times can become extreme.

Mr. Brewin: You have to err on the side of freedom.

Mr. Valade: I would like to ask the minister a question for clarification. How would he define a reputable organization to justify the admission of a person? The minister used the words "reputable organization". Is this term defined in the immigration laws and if not how would he define it?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not have a list of organizations with one column entitled "disreputable" and the other entitled "reputable".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the minister table it?

Mr. MacEachen: Certainly there would be no difficulty with such organizations as there might be with, for example, the Progressive Conservative Association. But many of these persons come to universities. It seems to me that a university club on a university campus must be regarded as a reputable organization when the person is speaking under the sponsorship of a student organization that is recognized on the university campus.

Mr. Valade: My question is whether there is a definition in the law which would allow the minister to define what is reputable and what is not reputable.

Mr. MacEachen: I do not think we can find any laws which would be of any help in this regard. Until a few years ago there was a class of prohibited persons normally not admitted to Canada. The policy was changed to admit persons, who might be regarded as prohibited, for short term visits to make speeches under a sponsorship if it could reasonably be believed that such a person would not consort with criminals, engage in criminal activities or engage in acts or utterances that would lead to public disorder or serious riots. It is really a question of policy and has to be administered, it seems to me, with the best judgment that the department can exercise. We are always getting opinions from the house and elsewhere about what is regarded as reasonable administration of this kind of policy.

Mr. Gilbert: May I ask the minister whether he believes that immigration officers should have sole discretion to determine the admissibility of a prospective immigrant, in view of some of the criteria he mentioned. I have in mind the failure of an applicant to meet contractual obligations or some other type of obligation, thereby giving the immigration officer the discretion to refuse his admission. Does the minister not think that the Immigration Appeal Board members should have a similar discretion in regard to this decision?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I am not sure I understand the question clearly or the implications of it.

Mr. Gilbert: I will try to clarify my point for the minister. The minister has just said that the immigration officer possesses an overriding discretion in regard to refusing an applicant admission on the ground of his failure to meet, for example, contractual obligations in his own country, or for some other reason. The minister has just said that. Should the members of the Immigration Appeal Board not have a similar discretion in the making of such decisions?

Mr. MacEachen: We are talking about the judgment of an immigration officer as to the likelihood of an applicant establishing himself successfully in Canada. The officer's opinion under the regulations may be based on factors other than the nine areas covered in the selection system. That is in the regulations. The hon. member is asking me for an interpretation of the present immigration law. I think that the board has exercised its authority to land people who have scored, for example, less than 50 points.

Mr. Brewin: No.

Mr. MacEachen: I think it has. It is subject to confirmation and is a question of fact, but my recollection is that the board has landed people who have scored less than the 50 points required under our selection system.

Mr. Howard (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Chairman, I started to speak the other day on the bill before the committee but I was interrupted part way through my remarks. I should like to continue with the remarks I was making at that time.

I was talking about regional disparity and improvements in this regard. I represent a riding that has profited a great deal from the area incentive program. I mentioned the other day that we have succeeded in adding to the work force in our area 2,000 to 3,000 people as a result of the incentive program. Investment in excess of $100 million has also come along as a result of the program. I should like to see the program continued but I am a little alarmed by the growth centre concept that has been suggested by the minister. We in our area have found that the growth centre concept is not valid, that we have done a much better job of promoting industrial development by diversifying industry throughout the communities in the area.

I suggest there are many people in Canada who are very experienced in this field, people working with CUSO and other organizations who have found the same kind of thing in their travels and work abroad. I suggest their experience would be valuable. I have talked to them and they have told me that the growth centre concept that is being suggested is not successful in developing industries.

In addition to regional disparity I want to talk about the language disparity problem facing Canada. I merely mention this in passing and wish to say that people in western Canada have a good deal of difficulty understanding some of the problems involved in language disparity in Canada. They also sometimes have a little difficulty understanding the kind of programs announced by the government, such as the $225 million that is to be spent in Prince Edward Island during the next few years. With a population of 110,000 people this expenditure works out at something like $2,000 for every man, woman and child on the island.

People in western Canada find programs such as this difficult to understand, and they also realize that they will have to put up the money. Although I think they agree with them in principle, the people of western Canada are far removed from government, from being able to see these problems at close range. There is in western Canada at times a problem of administrative unconcern which is just as serious as language disparity. The other day I said I thought we should postulate a new law to be called the law of administrative concern, and I suggest that administrative concern varies inversely with the distance of the administrator from any given problem.

Recently the premier of British Columbia responded to this sense of alienation in western Canada by suggesting that British Columbia take over a great chunk of the Northwest Territories and the Yukon and administer it because he thought that British Columbia could do a better job. I agree with Mr. Bennett's concern about the administration of some of these territories and the problem of being a long way from Ottawa, but I do not know whether he has the right answer. I think he has the right question but the wrong answer. I think his solution is somewhat like that adopted by the great barons of England who did their best to seize more and more territory in the course of history and eventually tried to become stronger than the king. Mr. Bennett would end up controlling an area 1,500 miles long by 600 miles wide, an area possessed of tremendous wealth and resources. What incentive would British Columbia have to stay in Canada? It would be a nation by itself. Mr. Bennett may say that this is his last territorial ambition, but I do not believe him.

However, if Mr. Bennett is right about this problem and is wrong about the solution, then what other solution do we have to offer? I believe we must make a better effort in Ottawa at the federal level to understand the problems of western Canada, such as wheat sales about which we talk a great deal, the problem created by oil that is with us so much today, and a problem in British Columbia that receives much discussion, that of the 12-mile limit, a matter of great concern to us.

I think that what is needed is a cabinet that will go out to British Columbia and western Canada from time to time to meet the people, a cabinet that the people in western Canada can see. I think something further is also needed. If we are going to solve the problem we will have to build a federal government centre in western Canada, which we could perhaps call the summer capital. I am talking about something that is more than a building; I am talking about a western regional headquarters of government, a place where the cabinet could meet occasionally and where westerners could meet the government. I also have a couple of locations that I could suggest for consideration.

I am glad to see the Minister of Public Works in the house because, as a westerner, I am sure he will be interested in this project. He may be responsible for implementing it. I suggest that two very good locations which could be considered are those great national parks, Banff and Jasper. Either will do. Both are federal territory and westerners recognize them as such. The parks hold a special place in the esteem of westerners and I think that if the project were undertaken in either one of those parks western Canadians would feel more closely bound to the rest of Canada.

Another consideration which ought to enter into our thinking is that we live in dangerous times. This is the atomic age. Should that catastrophic day we hardly dare think of ever arrive, what better place could there be for assembling the government of Canada than in an auxiliary centre maintained in western Canada? Western Canadians would be happy with that prospect. They feel it is just as necessary for the government to attend to western Canada as it is for the government to spend money in the maritimes and Quebec. After all, western Canadians have some part in shaping Canada's destiny.

It is no secret that at present some western Canadians feel alienated from the rest of Canada. The government should consider not only the problems of eastern Canada. Building an auxiliary centre of government in western Canada would do much to help the aspirations of our westerners and would tend to unite the country.

I now wish to deal with that clause of the bill having to do with the Public Service. I am a great supporter of the Public Service which costs us a great deal of money. Public servants are being paid large salaries these days, and that is good. When the Glassco Commission brought down its report on government organization in 1962, we had about 246,000 public servants. Now we have about 369,400 and pay them over $2 billion in wages and salaries.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but, pursuant to an order of the house made on February 24 last, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and put every question necessary with respect to the bill now being considered.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the schedule carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On division.

Schedule agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Bill reported.

Mr. Drury moved the third reading of the bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

The Acting Speaker: (Mr. Béchard): Is it the wish of the house to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Second report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in French and English—Mr. Hales.

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

VANCOUVER—THREAT OF DISMISSAL FOR ADHERING TO CONTRACT PROVISION—DELAY IN DELIVERY

Hon. Robert Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Postmaster General. Will the minister say if postal workers in Vancouver are being threatened with dismissal if they adhere to the article in their labour contract respecting wash-up time?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Postal workers across the country are expected to adhere to the instructions laid down in accordance with the contract, and they are expected to obey instructions of the government. A decision has been made in the department which will eliminate an additional sorting between one o'clock and two o'clock p.m., because we did not consider this was justified. If workers wish to appeal this, they can institute a grievance procedure. We will proceed as quickly as possible to adjudication as we are quite anxious for a third party to pronounce on who is actually running the Post Office.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to convene a meeting of his senior management staff and the negotiators of the postal unions as recommended to him today as the best means of avoiding an explosion with regard to the postal service in Vancouver?

Mr. Kierans: I have been meeting, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): In connection with the Post Office Department, Mr. Speaker, is there anything in the nature of a slowdown taking place in the transhipment or sending of mail? I ask that because I sent a letter marked first class mail to Mr. George Cloakey, 720 Earl Grey Crescent S.W., Calgary, Alberta, which left Ottawa on February 20 and was received in Calgary February 26. What is the reason for mail being held up like this? Will the minister look into this, because it is another flagrant—

Mr. Kierans: I am sure the letter is very important, Mr. Speaker, and I will be glad to look into the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that observation—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Is the right hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes I am. That observation was totally uncalled for. All mail is important, even that which comes from members of parliament.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General regarding the wire he has received from the postal workers in Vancouver. Has the Postmaster General been advised by the postal workers that the management has threatened suspension and dismissal of members who are merely insisting that the terms of the contract under which they operate shall be carried out? Will the minister assure the house that there will be no dismissals until the interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement has been thoroughly explored?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has just brought up exactly the same question. As I have replied, the best way to resolve this problem is to proceed by way of grievance and to go to adjudication. We would certainly waive the preliminary steps and ask for a third party decision as quickly as possible.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I think the Postmaster General did not get the import of my question. I am asking the Postmaster General if during the time that discussions are being held regarding the interpretation of the collective bargaining agreement he can assure the house that there will be no suspensions or dismissals as have been threatened by management?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, when the two sides decide to go to adjudication on these issues I imagine that neither side will want to test its strength, or at least should not want to, and meanwhile all people working for the Post Office are expected to obey the legitimate directives of the administration of the Post Office.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): As one of the main bones of contention between the postal union and the minister and his department, as to the provision for wash-up facilities and the right to use those facilities when needed, does not the minister consider it would be cheaper and far more preferable to allow the postal workers to return to their stations at noon instead of providing these portable wash-up facilities to follow them around their routes?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think the hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES IN NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary or related question to the Postmaster General. Having in mind the continued volume of protests coming from the non-profit publications of Canada would he not take a second look at that situation and give further consideration to those mailing rates.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, my definition of a non-profit publication is a publication that does not make a profit; but the majority of non-profit publications seem to think the definition is that they should make considerable losses and that these should be chargeable to one government department or another. In my opinion a non-profit organization is an organization that makes neither losses nor profits. If a non-profit organization is suffering and needs subsidies from the government to continue with its own purposes and objectives, I think that it should apply openly to the government department from which it needs assistance and that such assistance should not be hidden in the mail rates that are paid by the taxes of the Canadian people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Perhaps we could go on to the next subject. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mine was a supplementary to the original question, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MONOPOLISTIC CONTROL OF SERVICE STATIONS

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. He will no doubt recall that on February 19 last I asked him whether he had seen the report of a three year study in Alberta which pointed out the monopolistic control large oil companies have over service stations. The report is alleged to state that this situation arises in all parts of Canada. I asked him whether he had seen the report and what steps he intended to take with regard to the revelations in its. At that time he said he had only had reports about it. Perhaps now he has studied it and could answer my question.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs: Mr. Speaker, copies of the report have now been received from Alberta, and have been referred to the research division of the Combines Investigation Branch. The report, consisting of some 700 pages, is receiving very close analysis by that division. As the report contains some 700 pages the analysis will take some time but the study is continuing. I have also referred copies of the report to the Economic Council of Canada, in that the Alberta report appears to deal with many of the same aspects of that particular industry that were dealt with by the Restrictive Trade Practices T.B.A. report. The report was also referred specifically by the government to the Economic Council, because it was felt that there would be value in the Economic Council having the Alberta report.

Mr. Lewis: I am very glad to hear about the steps that have been taken. I should like to ask the minister, in view of the possibility that the present act will not permit action against the companies in certain respects, whether the revelations in the Alberta report make changes in the present act even more necessary, and whether his department is giving careful consideration to this.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, as I have said we are giving very careful consideration to the report itself. In so far as the report may indicate that the present Combines Investigation Act should be amended, we will consider that situation. I have made it clear however in the past, as did my predecessor, that we do not anticipate amendments to the Combines Investigation Act until such time as the Economic Council reports on competition policy, at which time I would hope to be able to bring in a complete revision of the act.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Would the minister say whether it will be the intention of his department to consider seriously some of the specific recommendations of the inquiry, such as a bill of rights for operators, more favourable lease arrangements and the right of operators to determine their own hours of business.

Mr. Basford: All of those aspects of the report are being examined by the research division which I mentioned earlier.

[Translation]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

RECOGNITION OF SHERBROOKE AS DESIGNATED AREA

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the future Minister of Economic Regional Development.

Could he tell the house whether his program intended to abolish regional disparities will be amended in such a way that the Sherbrooke area and some neighbouring areas will be considered as special areas?

Mr. Speaker: Is not the hon. member aware that the scope of his question is somewhat too broad and is calling for a statement of principle from the minister? Therefore it cannot be accepted at the moment, but should the hon. member deem it urgent, he could give me notice of it and we could discuss it on the adjournment motion.

[English]

P.E.I.—DESIRABILITY OF COMMITTEE REPORT BEFORE CAUSEWAY REJECTION STATEMENT

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he now practise in this house the principle of dialogue and discussion which he so glowingly referred to last night when addressing a group which I shall refer to as a group decorated for having skirmished successfully with the war on poverty. Would the right hon. gentleman agree there is a benefit to be derived from securing the opinions of standing committees before irrevocable decisions are made such as that contained in the announcement he made yesterday with regard to Prince Edward Island, without having sought the views of the Standing Committee on Transport which visited the Island and was in the process of completing a report which undoubtedly would have dealt with this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member's question is not acceptable. It is a question asking the Prime Minister to express his opinion about the value of decisions made before reports are given by a committee. The question is academic, philosophical and rhetorical.

Mr. Baldwin: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker. In the light of what happened, does not the Prime Minister consider it would have been advisable to have waited?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary question is argumentative.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INTERVENTION OF R.C.M.P. FOLLOWING THREAT OF PLAN OPPONENT

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Did the minister send the Royal Canadian Mounted Police to interview a person who called his office this week to object to the federal medical assistance plan.

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I was informed that there was a gentleman who came to my office to make certain threats against my person. As a result, an initiative was taken by my office to report the matter to the R.C.M.P.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): You are going to be busy.

SPORTS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CANADIAN MEDALLISTS IN MEXICO OLYMPIC GAMES

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, with the permission of the house I wonder whether I might acknowledge the presence in the gallery of seven of the eight persons who won medals for Canada in the Mexico Olympic games.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hees: Where are the horses?

Mr. Munro: The horses are outside.

Mr. Hees: Are they on the payroll?

Mr. Munro: If I might make a few comments: The Prime Minister, as the house knows, immediately following the games expressed the thanks of Canada to these fine athletes for their performance at Mexico. However, since that time the government has not taken the opportunity to show some expression of gratitude for the magnificent efforts of these athletes. I am pleased to say that we will be rectifying this situation tonight, when I will have the privilege of hosting a banquet in their honour on behalf of the Canadian government. They have contributed a great deal to national unity and provided tremendous incentive to sports throughout the country. I am sure all members of the house join with us in honouring them today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INTERVENTION OF R.C.M.P. FOLLOWING THREAT OF PLAN OPPONENT

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): A supplementary question. In rising might I take the opportunity of joining with the minister in his greetings to these very eminent sportsmen from Canada. The minister was rather fortunate to have a pleasant announcement to make in answer to a question I put to him which was rather unpleasant. Therefore, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Will the minister undertake to the house to give a report as soon as possible on the circumstances surrounding the investigation of the person who made a complaint to his office in connection with the federal medicare plan, and will the minister explain why the same day the mounted police were sent to interview this person?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am not sure this is a matter of urgency. I do not want to cut off the inquiries being directed to the minister by the hon. member but I doubt whether this is the type of matter about which a question can be asked at this time. However, the first question having been allowed, I should allow the minister to answer the supplementary question.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is simply referring to a person who has indicated in the past—

Mr. MacInnis: Order. You have been ruled out on that.

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member will allow me, I indicated that the first question having been allowed, perhaps the minister might be permitted to reply to the supplementary.

Mr. Munro: There is a long history concerning this person's unhappiness with the federal medicare plan.

An hon. Member: He is not the only one.

Mr. Munro: He expressed his dissatisfaction, and in the course of so doing made some threats against me that he said he was going to carry out. This is what was reported to me. My executive assistant felt it incumbent upon him to report this matter to the R.C.M.P., which he did. They called and questioned the man, and as far as I am concerned that is the end of the matter.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question. What did this man say he was going to do?

Mr. Munro: Oh, he said he was going to kill me—or something.

Mr. Hees: That is not enough!

Mr. Speaker: Order. Does the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka feel that the matter should be carried further? I really have some doubts as to the propriety of pursuing this question further.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question to another minister, Mr. Speaker. I had intended to ask the Solicitor General this question but, although he is supposed to be here, he is not. I therefore ask the Minister of Justice whether he has been asked to investigate the particular matter I have just raised.

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): I have not, Mr. Speaker, but I am always willing to protect the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka resume his seat. With great deference to the hon. member, I have serious doubts as to whether this is the kind of question that can be asked at this time. Only very few minutes are allowed hon. members in which to direct questions to the ministry. The hon. member has asked three questions on the subject. If he feels this matter should be pursued further, I wonder whether he might not put it down for discussion at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Aiken: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: In connection with the answer of the Minister of Justice, do I understand the minister to say that he has at this moment no knowledge of this matter?

Mr. Turner (Ottawa-Carleton): That is correct, Mr. Speaker. The R.C.M.P. report to my colleague the Solicitor General, and he has not mentioned it to me.

INQUIRY AS TO STATUS OF DISPUTE WITH ARTEC

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the contents of the conciliation board report, which in effect asks the C.B.C. not to hide behind so-called federal government guide lines and virtually invites the ARTEC union to take a strike vote, would the minister advise the house what steps he has taken to bring the two parties together, and has he made any representations to the C.B.C. or his deskmate?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, it is not the intention of the Minister of Labour to interfere with the free collective bargaining process. The conciliation board report was tabled in my department, and released. Both parties are free to have recourse to the law; that is, the unions are free to go on strike on March 12. The Minister of Labour has at this moment no intention of interfering, whether the union stays on strike for three or four months or whether the C.B.C. decides to lock out the unions for three or four months. This is the purpose of the act.

Mr. Benjamin: A supplementary question to the minister, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be willing to use his good offices to prevent a strike occurring in our national broadcasting network?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, I do not think such action is necessary. Both sides have complied with the law. They have gone through the conciliation board stage. They have had long and extensive hearings before the conciliation board, chaired by a very competent chairman who made a very impressive and far-reaching report. It is now up to both sides to resume bargaining directly with each other.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—DISPUTE BETWEEN SHIPPING FEDERATION AND LONGSHOREMEN

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question concerning negotiations that have been going on for a few days about the situation in the port of Montreal.

Could the minister tell us where the negotiations stand in the dispute between ship owners and the dockers of the port of Montréal?

[English]

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the negotiating team of the Shipping Federation and the longshoremen will be resuming negotiations tomorrow before the conciliation board, chaired by Judge Gold.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, has the minister held conversations within the last few days with the two parties involved in this dispute?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mackasey: I have had many conversations in the last few days with individuals connected with the shipping industry, directly or indirectly.

Mr. MacEwan: The Montreal Gazette does not say that.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

OTTAWA—BREAKING OF SOUND BARRIER BY MILITARY AIRCRAFT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence, I direct it to the Prime Minister.

Last night at about 2 a.m., people in the township of Nepean were awakened by aircraft noise, and as the Nepean police reported after an investigation that it was caused by jet aircraft from the Bagotville Air Force Base making supersonic flights over the Ottawa area, I ask the Prime Minister if, in the absence of the Minister of National Defence, he would investigate and see that this does not happen again?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has made his representation and should consider that the responsible minister has taken it as notice.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—REJECTION OF CAUSEWAY—REQUEST FOR STUDY BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I would like to pose a question to the President of the Privy Council. Since the Prime Minister indicated yesterday that he would have no objection to a full disclosure of the facts regarding the Prince Edward Island causeway studies, and the facts upon which the cancellation of this project was based, can the minister indicate by what means and when this subject will be referred to the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I am prepared to discuss this with my colleagues. As the hon. member probably knows, after today four opposition days will remain until the 26th day of this month. If the hon. member and others would like to discuss this, it may well be that we could use one of the opposition days for this purpose.

P.E.I.—EFFECT OF CAUSEWAY REJECTION ON DEVELOPMENT PLAN

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I wish to ask him whether the government assessed the effects which the abandonment of the causeway project would have on the successful implementation of the comprehensive development plan.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): As I said yesterday, the government had a very difficult decision to make. We do not have sufficient funds to proceed at the same time with the causeway and with the FRED program, and in assessing both projects we decided that funds were more urgently needed for the FRED program than for the causeway.

I might add while I am on my feet that I understand there has been some misunderstanding as to whether the decision was taken in conjunction with the government of Prince Edward Island. I thought I had made it quite clear in my statement when I said we had consulted the government of the province, as we are always exhorted to do by all sides of this house, but that the decision was ours. We are the ones who decided not to proceed with the causeway. In this connection I am sure there will be an opportunity at some time or other, as suggested by the house leader, to look into the facts and figures.

In making this decision we assessed the future over the next 60 years or more and we considered whether the causeway was feasible or whether it could be paid for in any terms comparable to the cost of a ferry service. We reached the conclusion that the ferry service was considerably cheaper than building a causeway. That was the basis of our decision.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: The "oh" I hear from over there will perhaps be changed to "ah" when the hon. members have an opportunity to look at the figures.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since he and his government have abandoned the causeway and consigned the people of Prince Edward Island to 60 years of ferry service, will he assure the house that the Canadian National Railways current proposal for a 50 per cent increase on those ferry rates will also be abandoned?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member obviously misunderstood or misinterpreted what I said. When we speak of 60 years we speak about the possible length of time during which a causeway would be serviceable, and we used a costing process over a period of 60 years to compare the capital investments required for one type of crossing as opposed to the other. It is this comparison which led us to base our calculations on a period of 60 years. We assume that any causeway which would be built would last approximately 60 years.

Does the hon. member have a problem?

Mr. Horner: You are opposed on both sides of the house.

P.E.I.—COMMUNICATION FROM PREMIER ASKING REVIEW OF CROSSING PROJECT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the importance of this project which was acknowledged earlier by two previous governments to the people of Prince Edward Island, has the Prime Minister received today an urgent communication from the premier of Prince Edward Island asking for an immediate personal review of the decision to scrap the crossing project? If he has received this communication, could he indicate the nature of his reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know of no such communication, but if I had received one—and this is hypothetical—I can tell the house what my reply would have been. I think no one in this house or in Prince Edward Island thinks that we prefer not to build the causeway and that we prefer to make the people cross by ferry. The decision is based on the matter of cost. There is no hidden preference on our side for seafaring vessels as opposed to wheeled vehicles. We chose the cheaper method of crossing, because this is what the country can afford at this time. This is how I would answer any such hypothetical communication.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a further supplementary question. In view of what seems to be some disagreement on facts between the government of Canada and the government of Prince Edward Island, and the importance of having a full discussion and disclosure, as the Prime Minister agreed yesterday, of all the facts of the situation, would the Prime Minister not agree that the place for such a review would not be in Committee of the Whole or in the house where there could only be a very limited debate, but rather in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works? Would the Prime Minister indicate when this matter might be placed before the committee so that a complete and satisfactory discussion could take place.

Mr. Trudeau: I will let the house leader discuss with the leaders of the other parties what place would be the most appropriate to present this information and to allow for a full dialogue.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): I have a supplementary question for the minister of regional economic expansion. Will the government announce a development program for eastern Quebec, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in the near future and will such agreements be made despite the fact that these provinces do not have trading stamps in the form of causeways?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, some arrangements have already been signed with Quebec and New Brunswick, and we do not intend to sign any other.

[English]

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Prime Minister on behalf of the people of Vancouver Island who have been consigned to a permanent situation of being dependent on the ferry service and who will be required to pay in part for the FRED program, and will do so willingly I am sure, if he will assure hon. members opposite that ferry services can be quite adequate.

An hon. Member: You will get your medal for that.

Another hon. Member: You turned state evidence.

P.E.I.—REJECTION OF CAUSEWAY—AVAILABILITY OF REPORT OF MARITIME HEARINGS OF COMMITTEE

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. When the matter of the causeway is discussed either in this house or before some committee would he ask the house leader to make sure that the evidence taken before the Transport and Communications Committee on its recent trip to Prince Edward Island for this purpose is available?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am sure that that would be quite easy to arrange and I think there would be no difficulty in giving such an undertaking. However, I think that if we want to have full information on this matter by way of comparative costs we might ask the opposition to come forth with the figures they have in mind when they suggest we build a tunnel between Newfoundland and Labrador.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Conservative opposition has never—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: The Prime Minister made a deliberate misrepresentation here today. He has made similar misrepresentations in the past and I challenge him to produce the slightest evidence that this party ever made a commitment to build a causeway between Newfoundland and the mainland.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the Leader of the Opposition wishes to rise on a further point of order but I wonder whether he should go on with the subject much longer. I see a number of hon. members who want to ask supplementary questions on this point. If hon. members think that the rest of the question period should be devoted to this question, I have no objection but I have some doubts that this is the will of all members of the house.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Trudeau: I wish to speak on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have been accused of deliberate misrepresentation and I would like to tell the house that I am sorry, I thought they spoke about a tunnel, but I understand now that they meant a causeway.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I suggest this is a serious matter, because this is the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

An hon. Member: You wouldn't think so.

[Mr. Nesbitt.]

Mr. Stanfield: I say again that this party has never made any such commitment to build a tunnel, a causeway or any other form of such crossing and that this assertion by the Prime Minister is a deliberate misrepresentation.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest to hon. members that the debate on points of order and associated questions is perhaps getting somewhat out of hand, and we are beginning to use rather strong language. I do not think there is really any purpose in pursuing the matter much further, because we have reached a point where the situation is possibly getting a bit out of control. I think we might drop the issue for the moment.

Mr. Baldwin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I agree with Your Honour precisely, and for that reason I want to make this remark. Your Honour quite properly refuses to allow questions which are out of order when members of opposition parties ask them. Equally, Your Honour should direct spokesmen on the government benches and the Prime Minister to be responsive to questions which are asked.

Mr. Trudeau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered the question which was put to me.

An hon. Member: Withdraw your remarks.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps I should tell the house that when I suggested that the opposition come foreword with figures as to the cost of either a tunnel or a causeway, as the Leader of the Opposition now says, I was being facetious. I do not really insist that the opposition come forward with those figures.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The answer given by the Prime Minister seems to confirm my view that we are not achieving very much by pursuing points of order, the question of privilege, or the discussion which was raised originally by the hon. member for Malpeque. Perhaps hon. members will agree that I should call upon the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

The hon. member for Gander-Twillingate says he has a sensible supplementary.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask his sensible supplementary question briefly; hon. members at the other end of the chamber have been anxious to put questions and I think I should be allowed to call them.

Mrs. MacInnis: I have neither a sensible supplementary nor an explosive question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McGrath: I wish to rise on a point of order to set the record straight and to tell the government and the Prime Minister that their friend the Premier of Newfoundland has undertaken such a study as to the feasibility of a tunnel across the strait to Bell Isle. I suggest the right hon. gentleman should consult with his friend in Newfoundland as to the feasibility of the project.

Mr. Speaker: I have to rule that that is not a point of order but a matter of debate. We may shortly have to call on the Olympic team to come into the house and see that order is maintained.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Later:]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, this is the sensible supplementary I was promising. It is directed to the Prime Minister. Would he give the house an undertaking to hold discussions with Premier Joseph R. Smallwood in connection with this causeway to check the feasibility of the project, possibly using his own skin-diving techniques to investigate it at first hand before the seal hunt finishes?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot agree with the hon. member's appreciation of his question.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

HEARING AIDS—INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF REPORT

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): This question is not an explosive one, Mr. Speaker, but it is of interest to more people in this country than even the causeway. It is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Some time ago I learned from the department that a study was to be made on the subject of hearing aids.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mrs. MacInnis: It is a good thing this is funny to a lot of members in this house, because it is not funny to many people across this country. I understood the report would be available early in 1969. I should like to ask the minister today when the report will be available and whether the public will be able to have access to the facts contained in that report.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I have not heard recently from my officials with regard to this report.

An hon. Member: Louder, please.

Mr. Basford: I know they are working very hard on this examination of the manufacture and distribution of hearing aids, and I hope to have a report very soon. I share the hon. member's concern about this problem and agree as to its importance. When I receive the report I shall have to examine it, as I told the hon. member previously, to determine what portions of it may be made public. I would hope to make as much of it public as possible.

Mrs. MacInnis: May we hear about it soon.

COMMUNICATIONS

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FRANCE AND QUEBEC RESPECTING SATELLITES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Speaker. I refer to a statement made by the minister yesterday and to previous statements made by him concerning an exchange of letters between Quebec and France on the subject of co-operation in the field of satellite communication. Since the position of the Government of Canada is that no agreement of this question can exist between Quebec and France which has international status, will the minister say whether the federal government intends to take action to prevent the implementation of this aspect of the letters and, if so, what action does the government plan?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think it is sufficient to say that this is not an international agreement in that sense, and everything flows from that statement.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DIPLOMATIC EXCHANGE WITH THE VATICAN

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question arises out of the participation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a kind of trialogue on Ten Million Questions.

An hon. Member: Twenty million.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Twenty million?

An hon. Member: What's ten million?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I halved the number. The minister was in great difficulty during the course of the discussion. Among other things he said it was the intention of the government to bring about an exchange of diplomatic representatives with the Vatican. Then he went on to point out that he was greatly surprised by the large volume of objection to such a proposal. I now ask the hon. gentleman, in view of the statement made by the Prime Minister when the subject came up originally—I asked him about it and suggested that four prime ministers had contributed to dividing the country—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman would come to the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have been led astray today by the Prime Minister—by the manner in which he wandered so far afield. May I ask the minister now whether, in view of this very large volume of objection which comes from all the provinces and all religious faiths, the government has decided not to go ahead with the exchange of diplomatic representatives with the Vatican.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Perhaps I may remind the right hon. gentleman of something else I said on that program, when I referred to the large volume of adverse mail in connection with the proposal to approve a new Canadian flag. It might have pleased him at that time, but the rest of us were inclined to believe that the mail then did not really represent the views of the people of Canada. And today we have a new Canadian flag of which we are very proud.

To answer the specific question, no final decision has yet been made as to whether we will proceed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I can read from the record what the minister said. I ask him now, is the government giving consideration to departing from its original plan to bring about an exchange of diplomatic representatives?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman will no doubt remember, the Prime Minister, when he announced he had discussed this matter with His Holiness the Pope, said he hoped there would be some discussion of the matter and that the government would then take a decision. That decision has not yet been finally taken.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of hon. members that, unfortunately, the question period expired some minutes ago. I regret very much that some hon. members who wished to ask questions did not have the opportunity to do so. I have a mental note of them and will give them priority on future occasions.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Speaker: Is the President of the Privy Council rising on a point of order?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): No, Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be helpful if I could make my weekly announcement of the business for the coming week.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

Mr. Trudeau: Somebody is being facetious over there. One should not be facetious in the House of Commons.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe it has become a custom and almost a rule of the house that on Thursdays the opposition house leader rises to ask a member of the government to make an announcement of the business to be considered during the ensuing week, after which an announcement of forthcoming business is made.

Mr. Trudeau: But today there is no agreement.

Mr. Speaker: That has been my understanding of the rules. But if there is objection to the minister's announcement I doubt whether the Chair can override that objection. I hoped hon. members would agree to having the announcement made, because I suggest it is to the advantage of all hon. members to hear forthcoming business announced.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as announced a week ago today, the business for tomorrow will be item 25 on the order paper, Bill C-138, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. That is to be followed by item 43, Bill C-157. Then we shall take item 7, Bill C-112.

On Monday and Tuesday of next week we will call again the government reorganization bill, to completion. On Wednesday and Thursday of next week we will call the drug prices bill, that is, the amendments to the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, to completion. On Friday next we will call first the bill with respect to the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act for second reading, notice of which is being given today, to be followed by Bill S-15, for second reading.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the minister whether the bill to amend the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act will be introduced and given first reading early in the week, so that we may see the contents of the bill and be prepared to debate it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, that bill will come forward for first reading on Monday next, unless hon. members wish to abridge the rules so that it can be given first reading tomorrow. Normally, first reading would take place on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (11)—ALLEGED DENIAL OF FUNDAMENTAL RIGHTS TO NATIVE INDIAN PEOPLE

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved:

That in the opinion of this House the government, in spite of successive admissions of its failure to deal adequately with the various social and economic problems confronting our native Indian people, is following a course which threatens to perpetuate the denial of fundamental human rights and freedoms, to continue the destructive effects of paternalism, and to maintain discrimination based upon a cultural inheritance together with a general negation of human dignity and respect for our native people.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today's debate on Indian affairs is being promoted mainly because it has been a number of years since parliament has had a reasonably full opportunity to express its views about the entire matter of Indian affairs and government activity in that field. Because of general elections and manoeuvring that has taken place from time to time between various levels of government and the committee of the house interested in Indian affairs, a number of obstacles prevented our committee from examining in full various aspects of Indian affairs which ought to have been examined. Although members of that committee wished to visit Indian communities and see for themselves how Indian people lived, they were frustrated in their hopes and the expected visits did not materialize. Members of that committee wish to examine matters affecting our Indian peoples in detail. Many of them feel that various levels of government have interfered with the operation of the committee and we therefore welcome the opportunity for the present debate. We hope to have on record a clear announcement of government policy with respect to many areas of activity involving our Indian peoples, and the views of hon. members of this house on this extremely important subject.

It may be well to take a brief look at the history of the treatment we have accorded our native Indians. From the time of Confederation, the British North America Act decreed that land preserved for our Indians would be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. That provision was a mistake. It drew a political line between our Indian population and the rest of Canada. In so many words it recognized that in this country there were two classes of people, the native Indians, to whom one standard of law applied, and the rest of the population, to whom another standard applied. Our native Indians were relegated to the status of second class citizens, and the basis for the discrimination which has persisted over the years was established.

I am sure that those who are aware of our history in this regard are ashamed. I know that deep in his heart the minister is ashamed of our history, although I hasten to say that in no way is he nor any hon. member here, personally responsible for what has happened. That does not alter the fact that Canadian society as a whole has discriminated against our Indians on an ethnic and cultural basis.

I hope the minister will realize that what I am about to say is not meant unkindly. I am sure he would be among the first to rebel if the situation that applied to our Indians were to apply to our French speaking peoples. He would object to a "French Act" setting the French speaking peoples of our country apart from the rest. Not only the minister but all others of his cultural and linguistic group would have rebelled a long time ago against the provisions of any such "French Act", particularly if, for argument's sake, to take the situation in reverse, it were administered by Indians. Instead we have an Indian Act administered by non-Indians.

The Indian Act gave birth in 1867 to a system of paternalism which has been like a fungus growth that unfortunately is still with us today and still growing. We need more than the pious declarations and fine speeches which have been made in recent times about the necessity of cutting out this and eliminating that. As the minister knows, words come easy. I have listened to statements by the minister and have read statements by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras). I have listened to the late Guy Favreau, to Senator Tremblay when he was the minister and to Mr. Nicholson, the Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia, when he was minister. They have all said the same thing, but what we need is action.

As long as we have an Indian Act, a special law relating to people with a different cultural inheritance from everybody else, and as long as we have a separate department, we will have discrimination and denials of fundamental human rights. We will have interference with the mutual esteem and self-respect which people need to have for one another. Our society must have as its foundation respect for the quality of life and the dignity of the Indian. Every Indian must be able to have self-respect and to feel proud of himself and his culture. Is this not what our social order and society are all about? If so, what is this government doing to attain this objective?

We in this party have suggested for a long time that the objective of the government and the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development must be self-destruction of the department and the minister's position. The minister must seek to work himself out of a job and become unemployed as a minister in charge of a department which provides support and special status to a group of people. This is what the minister and the government must do. I hope the minister accomplishes this objective. Predecessors of the minister stated they had this objective, but in recent years a number of them by the inflation of their own competence have become senators, a Lieutenant Governor and even Minister of Public Works. None of them accomplished in the slightest way even a minor step toward the major objective of equity of position and rights for all people in Canada.

Quite frankly I do not know whether the objective will be attained during the present minister's time in charge of the department. All indications so far are that he will not suceed. I and many other people read with interest the minister's speeches as they are ground out by his department, but so far I have not read any announcement of government policy regarding this objective. There have been platitudes and concern expressed with a feeling of emotion in these speeches but no declaration of policy or intention. I am sure the minister and the government have had ample time to come to a conclusion on this fundamental matter.

I am sure the minister knows personally of empire builders within his department. He would not be worth his salt as a human being if he did not know they exist. There is a Parkinson's law concept in the department in the perpetuation of an administrative structure for no other purpose than that the administrators can maintain their comfortable positions and pretend to be doing a great deal while accomplishing nothing in a meaningful sense so far as native Canadian Indians are concerned.

The growth of the Indian affairs branch in recent years has been almost phenomenal. The minister provided me with information for April of 1962. At that time, just six years ago, the staff of the branch numbered 2,325. Today it is 3,175, an increase of more than 800 people. In the fiscal year 1962-63 the department had an expenditure of approximately $51 million. In 1967-68, the last full year for which I have figures, the amount was $122 million, more than double. What does this mean in terms of per capita expenditure by the department in relation to the native Indian people who have status under the Indian Act? I am not relating it to the total number of native people because that is a much higher number. In 1962 the government expended $250 per native Indian per year. In 1967 that figure had risen to $530 per year per man, woman and child. In a family of six, father, mother and four children, the expenditure made by the department per year on that basis would be $3,180.

This growth in expenditure has been lauded by the government. We remember how the previous minister, now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), used to gloat about how much money was being spent, as though that was the most commendable thing that had ever happened. He never said anything about what was accomplished. He never talked in terms of value received by the native people, and I have not heard the present minister deal much in those terms either.

There is no virtue in building a bigger bureaucracy. There is no virtue in being one of the last of the big-time spenders in terms of public funds. If the Indian people do not care what you spend they are concerned about what you accomplish. This is what society is concerned about too, and it is what this parliament is concerned about. When I talk about what is being accomplished I am thinking in terms of accomplishment not as the department has considered it, doing things for the Indian people, but rather accomplishment in getting out of the business of doing things for these people, getting out of the business of interfering with them because you have done too much already and most of it has been bad.

Again we have only a few statistics to which we can refer. These are official statistics from the Indian Affairs Branch. There may be later ones but if there are I do not think the situation has changed very much in the interim. Here is what has been accomplished. I am trying to explain how the native people themselves view the situation, how they live, what they feel, what they go through, what they know from their very existence to be the case although they probably cannot put it in statistical form but rather know it because they have lived through and have died under this system.

In the field of health, for instance, not too many years ago, in 1963, the average age of death of native Indian men was 33 years. For non-Indian men it was 60½ years, almost double the life expectancy of Indians. For native Indian women the average life expectancy in 1963 was 34 years and for non-Indian women it was 64 years. Again the ratio is almost double. Most of the deaths of native Indian people arose from causes which were preventable such as colds, pneumonia, bronchial afflictions and accidents. Their deaths were caused by their environment, by much poorer housing conditions, much poorer sanitation conditions, much poorer health measures, and fewer of the amenities of life that the rest of us have.

Their income is a pretty sad picture too, as the minister will admit. Again these are 1963 statistics. There may be later ones but I do not think they will show a much different situation in terms of the total picture. In 1963, 50 per cent of the native Indian families in this nation earned less than $1,000 a year and 75 per cent earned less than $2,000 a year. Of a total of 31,300 families the average income was $1,600 a year. Yet the government spends almost twice that much per family in expenditures by the Indian Affairs Branch.

The government could very easily wipe out the Indian Affairs Branch. Of course it would throw all those people out of work, but I am sure some other government department might be able to absorb them. Some of them might even have to go to work, which I realize might be a traumatic experience for them. Nevertheless, we could wipe out the Indian Affairs Branch today and give every native person $530 a year, every man, woman and child, which would mean that Indian families would receive almost twice the amount they receive today. I only use this as an example of what might be done.

Quite frankly, I say again, Mr. Minister, that the sooner you get out of this business the better. I do not mean out of the government because you may have a great capabilities in some other department—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member should address his remarks to the Chair. I assume the remarks he has just made were not addressed to the Chair.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I got so carried away that I bypassed the Chair for the moment. My remarks are always through you, sir, to others. The sooner that the minister gets out of this business, the better off our native Indian people will be.

The services that exist in Indian communities are terribly shocking. The Indians suffer from a tremendous lack of electricity, water, sewage facilities, plumbing, streets, roads, street lights and all the other facilities and social services that exist in the rest of Canada. By and large, to a tremendous extent these are denied our native Indian people. This is a national disgrace, as I am sure the minister will agree. It is a shocking thing to have to listen to and to read about. It is even more shocking to visit Indian people in their own homes and see the terribly depressing and horrible conditions under which they live in this day and age, at a time when the government is squandering almost $3,000 per native Indian family per year. The native people know this and they wonder what is happening. They wonder why the money being spent by the department does not trickle down and show up in the quality of their daily lives. Surely we should be concerned and incensed about this.

The other night the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) addressed a meeting in one of the public buildings in Ottawa. Regretfully, I was not able to attend as I had another commitment, but I read in the newspapers what he said. Generally speaking, he pointed out that there are a couple of obstacles to the betterment of life for Indians. One is that the provincial governments have not involved themselves in this field as much as they should. I am in complete agreement with the hon. member on that point. He said the other obstacle was the indecisiveness of the native people themselves. To say the least that was a slighting comment, because it tends to blame the Indian people for their own environment, and the hon. member knows that this is not so.

I would be surprised if the minister does not say, as he has already said, that everything is going to change now, that things are going to be different, that soon a new day will dawn. I hope he means this and that he will be able to accomplish it. The native people will then be able to go through that door which has been closed to them for so long. It will open up and they will be admitted into the just society, or whatever other phrase the departmental propagandists think is catchy at the time. But you cannot do by propaganda what you cannot accomplish by action. From recent articles in some newspapers I believe that the newspapers have been taken in by the propagandists in the minister's department. I do not know what structure the minister has for the distribution of information, in terms of the department's expenditures and the like, but it is fairly massive. It grinds out public relations and press information in somewhat the same way a factory would grind out fertilizer. That is about as imaginative a simile as I can think of for this situation.

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Alexander: And it is appropriate.

[Mr. Howard (Skeena).]

Mr. Howard (Skeena): It is appropriate because much of it is simply fertilizer and I mean in the old-fashioned natural form. Probably the greatest single thing that has been done—and in a sense this is commendable—is the introduction of the so-called consultation process in which the government is involved. Of course, this was not something conceived by the minister. His predecessor developed it and started it off more than a year ago. This is something we have advocated for many years. In fact, it is something that many of us have personally put into effect. We have engaged in consultation and meetings with the native people in an attempt to obtain a fuller understanding of their feelings and needs.

Regrettably, even though in essence the consultation program is good, as a general program I do not think it has met the expectations of or been accepted by the native Indian people because it reflects again the bureaucracy of the department to a large extent. The questions were prepared here in Ottawa by someone somewhere in the department. The questions contained in the publication, "Choosing a Path", and the methods followed primarily revolve around the concept of keeping the Indian Act and the department in existence. The suggested questions and discussion contained within that booklet all revolve around the principle of changing the act, making amendments to it, altering it and adjusting it, but retaining it even though the name may be changed. In other words, the intention is to keep an apartheid type law on our statute books.

If that is still the objective of the minister it is one that is fraught with danger for the native Indian people because they can only look forward to further interference in their daily lives by people in the department who really do not have too much concern about human needs and human values. If it is to be the policy of government to maintain a separate law and separate act, this will interfere with the dignity of the individual. The native Indian people for 100 years have been trying to get out from under the thumb of a government or department set up particularly on a special cultural base.

The booklet, "Choosing a Path", which is the foundation of the discussion at the consultation conferences, regrettably seems to lean in the direction of the perpetuation of the system. Fortunately, as the minister is aware, at many of the conferences the native Indian delegates had a little more concern than the department had about their own affairs and in some cases brushed aside the booklet and took the position that they would deal with it later if there should be time but that at that moment they would deal with other problems and choose the subjects. If the departmental officials or the minister had been able to go to these consultation conferences with the attitude that they had nothing to suggest and had asked the Indians to tell them, I suggest we would have been much better off.

Many native Indian people were insulted by the booklet, "Choosing a Path." Many of them were also amused. But the native Indian people were too polite to exhibit their amusement at what was presented to them. They would not express their amusement by laughing because they are seriously concerned about coping with serious problems. They did not mind giving the department and the government another chance, even though they had been saying these things for many years and even though they had been asking questions for years. Even though the Indians were sure in their own minds that no one had been listening to them over the years, they answered the questions again. Surely the questions about the liquor sections of the act have been answered so many times that it is almost laughable to think that they should even be asked them again. Surely the questions about the sale of farm produce on the prairies or the operation of farms by the minister have been answered so many times by the native Indian people that to present those same questions to them again in a booklet was virtually an insult to these people who have been declaring themselves about these matters for many years. Surely the question about classifying a child as a juvenile delinquent if he does not attend school regularly is undignified and an interference with free people. But other matters such as the Indian Claims Commission and education either were not mentioned or were glossed over in that document.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must interrupt the hon. member to remind him that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Speaker: Apparently the hon. member has agreement of the house to continue beyond his allotted time.

Mr. Alexander: Tell it the way it is.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to transgress upon the generosity of the house.

Mr. Alexander: You have my time.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I shall curtail as much as I can what I think needs to be said. Many of the things I am saying are the same things the Indian people are saying. I am only trying to reflect in this forum the views the native people have about their own involvement in their own affairs. In the matter of education, to give an indication of how many native people have looked upon the consultation conferences and upon the government, many of them think this government is being deceitful in this regard. At the same time the consultation process was taking place and at the same time the minister and the departmental officials were sitting down asking for the views of the native Indian people about these things, the very important matter of education was being negotiated secretly with the provincial governments.

I do not know exactly when but some time last fall this house passed nine motions I introduced asking for the production of correspondence between the federal government and the provincial governments about educational matters. We have seen neither hide nor hair of it since. The native people continually ask me where the correspondence is that I was going to get. I have to reply that I do not know where it is. Then they say they would certainly like to know before the whole consultation process is over so that they will be in a position to express their views about something as fundamental as education. This situation has existed for some time. This information has been denied to them at the same time the consultation processes were being carried on.

The departmental reorganization program which the minister inherited from his predecessor was put into effect at the very same time a continuing consultation conference was being carried on with the Indian people. It is not possible to have two standards. The government is not credible when this is done. On the one hand they say they want to consult about something and on the other hand say they are not going to consult about it.

As the minister knows, the native Indian people have raised objection to the new construction within the department. They see in it a reversal of the trend toward decentralization. Surely this is something which should have been discussed with the native Indian people while the consultations were going on instead of being imposed upon them. They ask questions about the double standard approach in respect of the involvement of the government in native Indian affairs. The situation is so silly that there is even a directive within the department to Indian superintendents and Indian agents in the field to the effect that they are forbidden to communicate with Members of Parliament and M.L.A.'s.

The minister shakes his head. Let us suppose that a native Indian person writes to me about a problem at home. I am here, 3,000 miles away. In many cases I write to the Indian agent on the spot and ask him to do something about the problem or to tell me what it is all about. Do I get an answer from the Indian agent? No, I do not. I get an answer from Commissioner Boys, who used to be the commissioner at Vancouver, and he is about 1,000 miles away from the complainant and does not know what it is all about.

I ask the minister to look at this sort of situation. What happens is that Mr. Boys does not write the letter that I receive; the Indian agent writes it. The Indian agent leaves the signature blank, puts the letter in an envelope, mails it to Vancouver, Mr. Boys appends his signature and then sends it to me. This sort of thing is a pretty picayune and miserable reflection on the attitude of the department which refuses to treat people like adults and human beings. I do not care that the Indian agent does not write to me because I can talk to him on the telephone, but surely the native Indian who has a problem with Indian Affairs is entitled to something better than a runaround through the mails. Whether this problem exists in other provinces, I do not know, but it certainly does in British Columbia and the situation is resented by the native Indian people.

I have to explain to individuals with problems that Mr. Boys in Vancouver has told me this and told me that, and they reply in language I cannot repeat here. Well, I could, but I expect Hansard would dress it up so that it would not be recognizable. The complainant asks me what Mr. Boys knows about the particular problem; he tells me Mr. Boys does not know anything about it. Mr. Boys would admit this because he is ensconced in an office 500 miles or more distant from the particular situation in question. There have been innumerable examples of this sort of thing but I have mentioned that one to indicate that a narrow view is taken by the department in such cases.

Our native Indian people are also concerned about economic activities and the lack of job opportunities which prevent their earning a decent living. They do not want welfare programs. They appreciate that it is destructive of human dignity to be asked to exist on the dole. Yet nothing else is offered. The department has not involved itself in any real way to provide opportunities for our native Indian people.

For example, in Prince Rupert this summer 1,000 to 1,500 workers in fish canneries will be put out of work because the canneries are closing down. Most of these workers are Indians. The minister heard about this when he was in Terrace for the wind-up of the consultation conference, and this was the first time the matter was brought to public light. So far we have not had a meeting of officials from Indian Affairs, the Department of Fisheries and the department of Manpower to try to do something for the individuals who will be put out of work this summer. These people are concerned about this situation, as they should be.

So far there has been almost absolute silence in regard to economic development programs. Many people have expressed the thought that, although action is taken in regard to cultural questions and individual problems, unless individuals and families are given the opportunity to earn a decent wage and do something meaningful in terms of work so they can earn a decent living their dignity will be destroyed. This is what we have been doing as far as the Indians are concerned for the last 100 years.

What has been taking place is nothing more than an invasion of the fundamental human rights of individuals. This has simply got to stop and it is the minister who must stop it. The native Indian people are not interested any longer in listening to fine speeches; they want something done now.

The native Indian people were very upset by what the minister did not long ago in regard to the summit conference, that was supposed to be held in Ottawa some time in January following the consultation conferences. Then it was to be some time in February. Then the date was set for today, March 6.

Mr. Orlikow: Next year.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): No, today, and then that was cancelled. Why? The minister said that some of the people objected to it being held at this time, that they wanted it held over so they could examine what had been presented, and so on.

The native Indian people are also concerned about the Indian Claims Commission bill, and I should like to tie that into my remarks at this point. They consider that there is an element of deceit and falsehood on the part of the government. Last October the government put on the order paper a notice indicating it was going to introduce the Indian Claims Commission bill; I forget the exact date of the notice. Having been questioned about the Indian Claims Commission bill, the minister rose in the house and said he had taken the bill back. It had been hidden to start with. It was not given to the people at the consultation conferences. In any event, the bill was taken back for revision as a result of some of the views expressed and representations made at the consultation conferences.

Withdrawing the bill is fine, but it was accidental. Nobody at the consultation conferences had seen the Indian Claims Commission bill. They did not know what was in the government's mind but they accidentally hit upon some of the weaknesses in it. I should like to know how many more weaknesses are in the bill. Today the consultation conference in Ottawa was supposed to meet and we have not seen the bill yet. The minister shakes his head. Did the minister delay the conference because the bill was faulty? The minister indicates no. When is the bill going to be ready? The minister says soon.

My mother had a saying about "soon" which was related to a cat that we had. She called the cat a "sooner". It would sooner stay inside and perform the natural functions than go outside on a cold day. Soon does not mean anything, and I am sure the minister would not want to be classified as a sooner. The native Indian people want to know where the blazes this bill is. Is the minister having trouble getting it through cabinet, or with his associate minister? Does the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) not agree with what has been presented in the bill? These are serious questions to which our native people want an answer.

I have talked with some of the people who were delegates to the conference that was supposed to have been held today. Two of them told me they may not even bother to come when it is held because they are so fed up with all the delay and procrastination. They have seen what has gone on at the consultation conferences and want no further involvement.

I was going to make some mention of housing which is a pretty serious problem for our native Indian people. One of the communities in my constituency has 30 families on a priority list waiting for houses. If you go to practically any Indian village in Canada you will find two or three families living in the same house. In fact, the word "house" is a euphemism. You see six or seven little kiddies sleeping in the same bed, and the same thing in another bedroom. People have to sleep on couches in the living room. Students are unable to do any meaningful homework in that sort of environment because conditions are overcrowded and youngsters are wandering around, as well as grandparents and parents. Too many people are living in the same house. Where is the quality of life here?

All these people are living in the same home for two reasons. The first is that the average income a few years ago was $1,600 per family. The second is that the government, through its departmental administrative structure, spends twice that much money per family which does not filter down to the people. Another problem is that these people do not have the opportunity to become meaningfully employed, to do some work and earn an income, because the government has failed miserably in its attempts to develop anything worth while in terms of job opportunities and economics.

The government says it is helping with its housing program and building homes for these people. Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what kind of homes are being built for elderly citizens, some of whom have to live by themselves in two-room shacks? These elderly people have difficulty getting around at the best of times, but the houses for them are built without inside toilets or running water. These people have to take a bucket and walk outside to the seashore because they do not have a sewer system or the amenities of life that we believe standard in our society. This is disgraceful.

The propaganda machine in the department grinds out propaganda about the houses being built and the money being spent on this program, etc., etc. But this money does not reach the individual human beings who live in this sort of environment. It is no wonder that

Alleged Denial of Rights of Native Indians

Ross Thatcher, the Premier of Saskatchewan, is reported to have said yesterday that a time bomb is ticking. That time bomb has been ticking for the last four or five years and its tick is getting stronger and stronger. So far neither I nor many native Indian people have seen any indication on the part of the government that it intends to do anything meaningful or worth while to cope with particular problems such as this.

The younger people are simply not content to go through the same sort of degrading and denigrating situation that their parents went through. They are no longer content to live in these places called reserves but which are nothing more than isolated economic concentration camps where there is no opportunity to realize the full benefits of our society. They are fed up with being treated and looked upon as a group apart from the rest of society. The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) will tell the government this, as he undoubtedly has. Ask any person of native Indian origin, and he will tell you the same thing. He is not interested in having his problems dealt with from the point of view of his cultural background. There is within the concept of our social order and within the concept of the department too much looking upon this situation as an "Indian problem". I put the words "Indian problem" in quotation marks. It is not an Indian problem; it is a social problem that confronts native Indian people to a far stronger degree than it does anybody else.

Native Indian people are underprivileged Canadians, far more so than any other single ethnic group in this nation. Their problems have to be coped with on that basis, as problems confronting people, problems confronting human beings. We have to develop within the department, within the government structure, something more than has been developed before. The government has to head in the direction of getting out of the business of interfering in other people's lives. It must provide them with the opportunity to realize those values of human dignity and quality of life that promote self-respect and enable the individual to have a feeling of pride and respect for himself as a human being. The native Indian has not had this opportunity up to now.

The government must embark upon a program which will provide people with opportunities to develop human freedoms, economic freedom, economic opportunity, work and not welfare. Only in this way can the native Indian have the advantage of the amenities of life and the services of our society. Only in this way can they appreciate these things and be on an equal basis with other Canadians.

The government has to deal with the human, fundamental rights of people on the basis that they are Canadians first and that the native Indian is confronted with social problems more serious than those of other people. There have been 100 years of repression and suppression of the rights and freedoms of the native Indian people. This fact must be counterbalanced in the shortest possible period of time. A century of wrongdoing will take a little while to undo. It has to be done by deliberate and conscious effort. It cannot be done by pious hopes or propaganda; it has to be done by accomplishment. The accomplishment has to be related to a period of time when there will no longer be a person at the head of a department that is set up to deal with the problems of people on an ethnic or cultural basis. That is discriminatory, wrong, and terribly shocking for people to have to accept. The minister should know this better than anybody.

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the speech of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard). I thank him for the reasonable tone in which he made the speech. The hon. member raised many of the fundamental questions that I, as Minister of Indian Affairs, have in mind. I thank him very sincerely for taking this approach to the problem.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that we inherited years ago the problem facing us today with regard to the Indian people in Canada. The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) claims that during the last century we built, within our own society, a separate group which is known as the Indians of Canada. Because of their ethnic origin and the colour of their skin, they are governed by a group of institutions other than those set up for the other Canadians citizens. This is a serious problem which the government is now looking into carefully.

In the last few months, we have had a series of consultations with the Indians of Canada. We have held 18 meetings across Canada and I am pleased to report to the house that we attended these consultations primarily to listen to the Indians.

It is true that we had given them in recent months a booklet entitled Choosing a Path outlining certain points to guide their discussion.

But when my colleague, the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Ondras) and myself participated in those consultations, we discussed all the matters the Indians brought up. We listened to them and never did we try to impose our views upon them.

[English]

It is very clear at this moment that at these consultations the message of the Indians was loud and clear. They do not need any lawyers; they do not need anyone to speak for them. They have shown the people of Canada that they can speak for themselves. They spoke about their problems. It is very clear that they want to be full citizens of Canada; they want to share both the advantages and responsibilities of being Canadians.

I think we have understood them. They have spoken about their treaty rights and aboriginal rights. We have listened to them and will respond to them. They want more autonomy. They want to make decisions, at the band level, for themselves and by themselves. We have understood them, and when we come up with our new Indian policy they will see that we have understood that message.

I think we made a lot of progress over the last seven months in our consultations and our dealings with the Indians. For the first time we have provided them with a genuine opportunity to talk to the people of Canada. It is being said that there are too many civil servants around, but you cannot operate a government department without having civil servants to do the job. One of the factors to be considered is that the way in which we have organized these consultations has provided the Indians with the occasion to speak not only amongst themselves but to the people of Canada.

The hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) blamed us for having spent some money on public relations. It is true that we did so at these consultations but it was done with the purpose of providing the Indians with the opportunity to speak to the people of Canada. At these consultations we made sure that the press and television cameras were there. I will not apologize to anyone for having provided the Indians with that opportunity, and I think that these consultations have been profitable.

It is true that I have postponed the meeting we were supposed to have today. The reason is that the consultation was to terminate at the end of December but at the request of the hon. member for Skeena and of his constituents we held another meeting at the end of January in the riding of Skeena to listen once more to the Indians in that riding. I was there and so was the hon. member. I said almost nothing and the hon. member said nothing at all; all we did was to listen to the Indians. Their message was loud and clear.

We have put every word the Indians said on tape and it has been transcribed. All this takes time. We have not yet sent the report to all the delegates, and it would have been unfair to the people of Skeena to call them to Ottawa today when their views were not yet made known to the other Indians of Canada. I postponed the meeting because some of the Indians who want to come here and have a meaningful discussion with the authorities want to have more time to study the views of Indians from other parts of Canada.

The hon. member has accused us of not being ready with the Indian Claims Commission bill. There are many reasons for that. I gave a reason in December—because further representations were made at the consultations. I said that perhaps I will have to take another look at the bill. The hon. member for Skeena disappoints me because for months and years he has been speaking about the situation of Indians in Canada. I realize today that he is beginning to be out of touch with the people in his own riding.

The president of the Nishga tribal council, who is a member of the New Democratic Party and an Indian, Mr. Frank Calder called me to urge me not to proceed right away with the Indian Claims Commission bill because their case is before the court in British Columbia and they do not want it to be prejudiced. He is an M.L.A. out there and he asked the hon. member for Skeena to ask me to postpone the bill because they do not want me to jeopardize their case before the B.C. court. That is one of the reasons why we have not proceeded with it.

I am not too shy to respond to a reasonable request by the very Indians who perhaps in part vote for the hon. member for Skeena. Right now we are engaged in reviewing these consultations. We are studying them because we want to come up some time in the future—the hon. member for Skeena does not want me to use the word "soon"—with a positive policy which the hon. member will look at favourably because we think we will change many of the rules.

I have said many times in the house that it is true that the present Indian Act is too paternalistic. Out of the 135 clauses in the act there are 111 where it is said that the minister has to do this or that or should do this or that. I have spent hours in my office signing documents which permit Indians to borrow $3,000 or $4,000 from the C.M.H.C. I am ashamed at my age to appear to be the white father of the Indian population. I think we have to change many things but we cannot do this before completing the first round of consultations. The hon. member blames us for doing things without consulting the Indians and yet although we have not completed the consultations he rises in the house today to blame me for not proceeding with the claims commission bill. I hope that next month, although I cannot give a specific date today, I will be able to listen to the views of the representatives who have been chosen by the Indians. Following this I will come to the House of Commons and tell the members what the government plans to do to solve the problems of the Indian people of Canada.

I made speeches in which I said that one of the problems in Canada is that the provincial governments do not consider Indians to be citizens of the province. I say that Indians should be citizens of the province equal to any one of us because they are human beings like any one of us. The government is ready to try to find a solution to this difference in views.

As the hon. member said, we cannot solve all these problems overnight but there are some fundamental questions to which we must reply. I can assure the house that as soon as the consultations with the Indians are over the government will make up its mind on the new Indian policy to be adopted and will inform the house of it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign we spoke repeatedly of the Indian problem. And the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) himself mentions it in all his speeches, on the rights of the citizens.

This government is extremely concerned with it, and that is why we have given it a priority it did not have before.

I could speak of what we have done in the past. We are accused of having spent too much money on the Indians, of having increased the budget too rapidly in the last few years. It is true that we have spent a lot of money; still, one must be objective. We have more than tripled our expenditures for Indian affairs in the last few years, that is from 1962 to 1969, and we have produced some results. We may not have built enough houses, but we did build approximately 10,000 units since 1963. We have given better schooling to the Indians. Ten years ago, only 15 per cent of Indian children stayed in school after the 5th grade. Today, 95 per cent of the school age children in the Indian population of Canada have gone beyond the fifth grade.

We said that we wanted to give the Indians more autonomy. We have taken the necessary steps towards that end. For instance, Mr. Speaker, we have had discussions with the Manitoba Indians for this very purpose. As they are organized and as they have expressed the wish to administer their own affairs, we are ready to negotiate with them and with the provincial authorities towards an agreement giving them the opportunity to assume a greater share of the responsibilities.

After having criticized us freely, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) will perhaps allow me to read the comments of the person who surely knows quite a bit about the problems of the Manitoba Indians, and I refer to Mr. David Courchene.

• (4:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. David Courchene said:

—the meeting is possibly the biggest step forward in Indian-white relationships.

He attributed the new approach to Indian affairs to the valid demands of the Indians and a new federal minister of Indian Affairs who understands the problems the native people face.

We have really created a meaningful partnership with the government.

As I said previously, I do not feel very much at ease with a situation in which we have to decide every step of the lives of the Indians. They have now found spokesmen among themselves and on most occasions they express their views very well. And we have been listening to them. We have to give more authority to the Indians at the band level in order that they may decide their own priorities. We have to permit Indians to gain access to the same institutions as do other Canadians. Recently a measure was passed in this house, though little has been said about it, giving Indian farmers the opportunity to borrow money from the same institutions as do white farmers. Because of the very nature of life on a reserve the Indian population often has no access to the same institutions as do their competitors.

We must develop new policies and new programs to permit Indians to enjoy these facilities. I cannot be specific today, for the reason that we have not yet completed our consultations with Indians. But we have understood what they have to say and we shall follow through with the necessary measures once we have completed these talks. I think we shall make them full citizens of Canada, because they want to be full citizens. We will give them more autonomy because they want more autonomy. In many instances they are able to conduct their own affairs. However, we ought to be objective about this question at all times. We should not be too partisan in the face of one of the most difficult social problems of our time. I am glad this debate is taking place today because it will focus the attention of the House of Commons on this question. I do not want to speak for too long because I know I shall be coming right back here with new policies on Indian Affairs after the consultation process has been completed.

The hon. member for Skeena would like me to drive myself out of a job. I would not mind that very much. I can probably do something other than Indian Affairs; at least I can look after the other part of my department. As I say, we should not be partisan about this. I think the hon. member for Skeena is to be complimented for keeping the level of the discussion so high.

We know there are many problems to be solved in the fields of housing and employment for Indians. We should not be helping these people because they are Indians but rather because they are poor or because they lack sufficient education. It is a kind of discrimination when one recognizes, within a society, a group because of its colour. I think we should deal with this issue because it is a social problem, because these people need more education, better housing accommodation, better economic opportunities, and so on.

We have really done a great deal in this direction during the past seven months. We have helped the Indians of Canada to form their own Indian association. They have held meetings in Ottawa. We have invited them here, we have paid their expenses, we have provided them with opportunities to talk with me, with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and with the officials of the department. They were in Ottawa for a week during December during which we helped them form the association. Since then we have made sure that the National Indian Brotherhood was represented whenever we held consultations. I think we have achieved a lot in the way of co-operation with the Indian Brotherhood.

Unfortunately, I cannot tell the house today what the new Indian program is to be. We have been obliged to postpone some of the things I was very anxious to do because I felt it was my duty to listen to the requests of the Indians themselves. We should not rush forward when they are not ready. The consultations we were to have held today have been postponed at the request of the Indians themselves and because we have extended the first round of consultations following special representations by the Indians of Ontario and of the Skeena riding.

I do not wish to take up much time today. I merely want to say it is somewhat unfair to suggest we have made no progress in relations with our Indian population. The emergence of the Indians will come about from within themselves. There are some within this community who can show that we have made a lot of progress in many fields. Our role is not to be paternalistic toward them, though we could be paternalistic in many ways. Sometimes we can be more paternalistic in agitation than we can be in administration. We must be very careful not to make this a political balloon. We ought to make sure that the Indians have the opportunity to express themselves and solve their own problems. In the new policy formed pursuant to the present consultations we shall show we have decided to agree that they should be full citizens of Canada and give them access to the same institutions as are available to other Canadians.

I am sure many hon. members would like to express their own views on this subject today. I welcome positive suggestions and I should like hon. members to put forward their ideas as to possible new programs and approaches so as to help us bring in the policy we shall soon be announcing, making the Indians of Canada equal to any other citizens in our country.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the debate which the house is conducting today is certainly most timely. In fact, it is long overdue. As the hon. member for Skeena

(Mr. Howard) said, it is a considerable time since the house has had an opportunity to discuss this important subject, and I do not doubt that all hon. members will realize that it is, indeed, an important subject. I say this because should we, as legislators or as Canadians, fail to attack this problem in a meaningful way and do our best to enable our Indian people to become equal partners in society, it will be increasingly hard for future generations to do so.

The hon. member for Skeena spoke of those subjects which concern our Indian peoples today. He spoke of the necessity of maintaining human dignity, cultural identity, and the desire of the Indians to take their full part in Canadian society. I was pleased to hear the minister say the government was anxious to attack these problems as quickly as possible. I notice he said that the government had inherited its problems. That is quite right. Similar problems have faced other governments. It is gratifying to find that Canadians now think present difficulties in this field should be cured quickly.

I was pleased to hear the minister say that there had been consultations where representatives of the government met representatives of our Indian peoples. It will be agreed, I think, that members of all parties have insisted on such consultation over the years. When one speaks of consultation one must ask, to what extent is it being carried on? One must remember that when governments plan new legislation affecting our Indian peoples much time is spent by so-called experts and legal advisers in preparing and planning it. Such planning can go on for many months. After all that work the minister and some of his officials may go to the Indian people, outline the proposed program in one or two brief meetings and expect the Indians to digest the program and say which parts are acceptable and which are not. We speak of consultation, and we must remember that our Indian people need time and all the assistance we can give them if they are to examine plans that the government proposes in an adequate manner.

The present attitude of the government which has led to consultations being held with the Indian people is a far cry from the attitude that prevailed not too many mears ago. Hon. members will no doubt recall that the actions of Liberal ministers were severely criticized when health services to our native peoples were to be cut back. Without prior notice being given to the heads of our Indian communities, regional directors of health services were informed that health services to Indian peoples would be curtailed. Hon. members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and members of other opposition parties took great exception at that time to what was happening. It is therefore gratifying to see that the government has now adopted a different attitude and is willing to consult our Indian peoples before presenting legislation to the house.

The hon. member for Skeena said that the minister should be working toward the abolition of his department and portfolio. I am sure the minister realizes the hon. member was not being critical but was expressing a hope. He was trying to say that not only the minister but all officials of the department ought to try to eliminate the problems confronting our Indian peoples, thereby doing away with the necessity for the department. I support that suggestion.

I have good friends in the department, and I learned something which those outside the department may not know but which is common knowledge within the department. It is epitomized in a reported conversation between two older members of the department. One said to the other, "Do you not find it strange that junior members of the department have not come forward with suggestions to alleviate some of the problems facing our Indians?" The reply was, "These juniors are acting as we acted 20 years ago when we were younger. They are afraid that if they bring forward too many suggestions and solve problems they may find themselves without jobs before retirement age." This story is not to be taken in a jocular manner because it exemplifies the feeling of some officials in the department. I do not criticize civil servants in general. In the Department of Indian Affairs we have some diligent, hard-working men, and excellent field men.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Simpson: I could mention names but I will not. Yet it can be said, as the minister himself suggested, that many in the department adopt a paternalistic attitude to our Indian peoples. I think the hon. member for Skeena had all these matters in mind when he suggested that the minister ought to work toward abolishing his own ministry.

I was also pleased to hear the minister say that as a result of meetings he has attended with Indian peoples he has concluded they are capable of speaking for themselves. That fact was proven conclusively during a meeting not long ago in Ottawa of the Indian Affairs Committee. It will be remembered that representatives of the Indian Brotherhood came to Ottawa for the sole purpose of forming a national Indian brotherhood, and they attended our committee meeting. I do not know whether the minister was there. The deputy minister, I believe, was there on that occasion, and with him were eight, nine or ten experts from the department. Those representatives questioned the deputy minister, and Members of Parliament on the committee directed questions at all the experts for about two hours.

Before the meeting concluded the chairman asked the representatives of the Indian Brotherhood if they would like to say a few words. I recall the words of Isaac Beaulieu who was representing the Manitoba Indian Brotherhood on that occasion. He stated he had heard a number of questions directed to the officials of the Indian Affairs Branch and heard a number of answers to the effect the department had been considering these problems but had been unable to arrive at an adequate solution.

Mr. Beaulieu was curious about the fact that the people in the Indian Affairs Branch had not been able to arrive at solutions and had not consulted with the officials of the Indian Brotherhood who represent the Indian people of Canada. Mr. Beaulieu's remarks were very timely and very much in line with what is taking place today. In many cases Indian problems are not being dealt with in the proper manner and not as quickly as they should be.

As the hon. member who initiated this debate rightfully said, we in the opposition parties have been asking the government for some time to set up the Indian Claims Commission. The minister is aware by this attendance at some of the consultation meetings in regard to changes in the Indian Act that the Indian people, including those representing Indian bands in Manitoba, have requested direct Indian representation on that claims commission. I do not know whether the minister has given the matter the consideration it deserves and has been able to convince his colleagues in the cabinet that Indian representation is desirable on the claims commission when it is set up.

I want to go on record as saying that it is not only desirable but imperative that there be equal or majority representation of our native people on the Indian Claims Commission. The minister has stated today that the Indian people can speak for themselves. I assure the minister that we in the official opposition are not attacking the motives of the government, but we maintain that the government is not attacking the problems of the Indian people in a manner acceptable to the vast majority of Canadians or the Indian people concerned. I assume that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) are sincere.

During the last election campaign I told the Indian people I would not criticize the previous government except for the course it took in relation to health services. I told them I would not criticize the sincerity of the government in regard to wanting to help the Indian people. As the minister mentioned, there is no doubt that those who speak today will give him some very frank ideas as to what should and can be done. We in the official opposition believe there is a genuine desire on the part of the government to improve the position of the Indian people of Canada, although I hasten to add that the government is not adopting the proper course. I accept that this is a most difficult problem. It is not our purpose to make it more difficult but to force the government to act as progressively as they have been talking. We expect the government to practise what they preach.

The minister stated that some delay has occurred in the continuation of the consultation meetings with respect to changes or amendments of the Indian Act and the setting up of the Indian Claims Commission. He stated that these delays were at the request of the Indian people. I accept that because I feel that the Indian people must be given an adequate length of time to digest thoroughly the plans of the government. In view of the fact the government and its predecessors for several years have said that an Indian Claims Commission would be set up, we feel this should be done as quickly as possible. The government is not being effective in Indian policy. There is disturbing evidence the government is not giving this matter priority. It should be near the top of the list of priorities. I will not get into a discussion at this time regarding the two constitutional conferences held during the last two years.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed that the hon. member for Churchill may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Simpson: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I will attempt to be brief.

• (4:30 p.m.)

It is amazing to me that we can have discussions from one end of Canada to the other on subjects such as bilingualism and biculturalism, which I know are tremendously important, but how much importance has this house placed on the questions we have raised from time to time about the abrogation of Indian treaty rights? On occasion we have raised the abrogation of rights granted to our native Indian people by treaties entered into with them by the government of Canada. When we mention such matters we do not get much response from the government, and we do not get much attention from the news media. But just mention bilingualism or biculturalism and everyone plays it up. On the one hand, we are violating treaties; on the other hand, some people are trying to institute bilingualism across Canada. Without criticizing them I say we pay more attention to the desirability of bringing in something new than we do to the fact that the government has actually welshed on its agreements with the Indians. Let no one again use the phrase "just society" in Canada until the government gets around to correcting the situation that stems from the abrogation of Indian rights.

One of the principal examples is the abrogation of Indian hunting rights. The fact that certain conservationists feel that the Indian people should not have special privileges has nothing to do with the case. The Indians have treaty rights. Two Indians from my constituency had their cases taken right up to the Supreme Court of Canada, and on a five to four decision of the nine judges the Migratory Birds Convention Act was ruled to take precedence over Indian treaty rights. Regardless of which way the decision went, there were four judges who felt that the government was wrong in what it had done in relation to these treaty rights.

When the minister points out that the government is endeavouring to straighten out this very difficult problem I reply that these things can be straightened out provided he meets with the other authorities concerned. For the past four years I have been requesting that ministers sit down with their counterparts in the United States and renegotiate the Migratory Birds Convention so that Canada may be able to live up to its commitments to its Indian people. Many people will say that repeated mention of this problem takes up a lot of parliament's time, but I am sure Canada's reputation in the world at large would not be too good if we abrogated treaties with other countries. Let us show we have the desire to solve the problems of our native people by beginning immediately to solve this problem.

A little while ago the minister announced postponement of a major consultation conference scheduled for Ottawa, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Skeena. We hope it is a postponement and not a cancellation. The reason given for cancelling the meeting was that more time was needed to consider the material that had been presented. But many people believe this is not a valid reason. Some Indian people were highly critical of the representation they were granted at the conference, and indeed some spokesmen for the Indians of Alberta were so disturbed that they threatened to boycott the conference. Some meetings have already been held at various points across Canada, and we can only hope that after the final meeting the government will decide what changes it will propose in the Indian Act.

The Manitoba Indian Brotherhood has stated that one fact emerges most clearly from the meetings that have been held, namely, that the Indian people need and demand legislation that will change their present status from so-called protected wards of the government to equal citizenship with all other Canadians. Therefore they say that the Indian Act in its present form must be abolished because it is merely a catalogue of restrictions, and whatever the new legislation is called it must be more than a mere revision of the old act. The Indian people demand the destruction of all the old barriers and the provision of enlightened government action to provide opportunities whereby Indians, controlling their own destiny, can take their proper place in the Canadian mosaic. We in the official opposition will be anxiously awaiting an announcement from the minister that the government is prepared to take the proper action.

I am sorry that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) is not able to be in the house at this time. I know he is busy having meetings with regard to a subject which I brought to his attention within the last few days.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants to make some remarks on health services my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), told me he will be back in the house soon. He is having a meeting in his own office with Indians from Manitoba.

Mr. Simpson: I thank the minister. I am sure he realizes I was not criticizing the Minister of National Health and Welfare for not being here. In fact I assumed he was having a meeting with Chief Gordon Lathlin of The Pas Indian Band, who is in Ottawa today. I hope that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will make a statement in the house later today with respect to two requests which the members of The Pas Indian band have made to him.

This matter is another instance of lack of consultation. It does not come under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development but under the Minister of National Health and Welfare. For the past four or five days the Indians of The Pas band have found it necessary in their own good judgment to set up a picket line in front of the Indian health clinic at The Pas. They have demanded that they have full control over the community health worker program. This would include wages, transportation costs and the administrative expenses for the program. Second, they have asked that a federal employee whom I shall not name at this time be removed from the Indian health clinic at The Pas. I have discussed this matter over the telephone with the chief. These people have very diligently laid out their reasons for these two requests. They have laid out quite plainly for the minister several reasons why they wish the removal of this employee.

The minister and members of his staff no doubt will have ample opportunity to discuss this matter with the chief at the meeting today. The minister advised me in the house that he thought he would have the answer in one or two days. So when he comes into the house later this afternoon I hope he will be able to make a statement and advise the house whether the two requests made by the Indian people at The Pas can be granted or whether, to use his words, the Indian people will have to go on picketing until doomsday. I am not being critical. I really hate to put this on the record when the minister is not in the house. If he were here I would say the same thing, because one of the complaints of the people is that they were told they could picket until doomsday but that the minister would give them his answer when he was ready. I am taking this information from a press release put out under the authority of the chief of the Indian band at The Pas. As I say, I regret very much that the minister is not in the house at this time. I am sure he received a copy of this press release. I hope he will be able to clear up the situation to the satisfaction of the Indian people.

In conclusion I should like to remind the minister that we were very pleased to hear he feels that the Indian people have many problems. We were also very pleased to hear that he feels they are capable of speaking for themselves. We were equally pleased to hear that the government will at all times have full consultation with the Indian people before adopting new policies. This is what the Indian people want and this is what they are entitled to. Again I remind the minister that the evidence we will have to go by will be the results in respect of certain things such as whether or not the Indian people have proper representation on the Indian Claims Commission when it is set up and whether the Indian people are given full opportunity to examine the many changes which are to be made to the Indian Act. I further request that every effort be made by the departmental officials and the government to hasten the day when the Indian Act will become a thing of the past so that the Indian people will be able to take their rightful place in Canadian society.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, it is about a year since we have had the opportunity to debate in the House of Commons the situation in respect of our native peoples. I believe it is only fair to say that the debate which has been going on so far today has been on the same non-partisan level which we have enjoyed in the past. I think we should also welcome the new minister to the list of ministers of this department. The Department of Indian Affairs has had more casualties than any other, I believe largely because of the inherent impossibility of the task the minister is given to perform.

I should like to speak briefly about one area in which I believe the Department of Indian Affairs should be moving. I have some statistics concerning the progress made in the field of education in terms of the number of students now taking courses at the various educational levels. For example, in 1957-58 there were 124 post-secondary students. For 1967-68 that number has gone up to 225. The number of children in high schools in the same period has increased from 1,900 to 5,900. The number attending at the elementary school level is 48,000 now compared with 31,-000 in 1957-58. I think this indicates a very laudable improvement.

There is, however, one aspect of the problem which bothers me considerably. Once the students leave school the Department of Indian Affairs seems to have very few support programs to assist them in taking their rightful place in society. Once an Indian has received an education he cannot go back to the sterile existence that he would have on the reserve. He must go into a world very different from that which he knew while at school or on the reserve. When he does, the Department of Indian Affairs has practically no program of assistance. The only program it has is a rather minor one involving Indian friendship centres.

In the whole of Canada there are only 21 of these centres, all of which are in provinces west of the Ontario-Quebec border. There are none in Quebec or the maritimes. The information I have from the Indian Affairs office indicates that in Ontario there are four which are located at London, Toronto, Parry Sound and Port Arthur. I know there is a friendship centre in Kenora, Ontario. Perhaps the statistics of the Department of Indian Affairs are not always up to date. The centre in Kenora has been unable to obtain any meaningful assistance. Their facilities are overcrowded and yet there is no program for a capital grant.

The type of program the federal government has to assist Indian friendship centres is ridiculous, to say the least. In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta there are federal provincial agreements providing grants in amounts varying from $20,000 to $30,000 annually to each of these three provinces. In order to receive these grants the province must pay 50 per cent of the costs under a cost-sharing plan. These grants are designed to pay only the administration costs of the friendship centres. They do not cover capital costs, hostel costs or even court worker costs.

In Ontario and British Columbia the friendship centres make their own approaches to the citizenship branch in Ottawa which makes matching grants equal to the provincial grants. However, the provincial and federal matching grants meet only two-thirds of the annual administrative costs. Therefore one-third of the annual administrative costs must be raised locally by each individual friendship centre. It seems to me this is a totally inadequate way to deal with a very serious problem. The bureaucratic system is probably the best way we have found to deal with problems through government action, but when we get into a situation where bureaucracy works against bureaucracy changes must be made quickly.

Indians who leave their reserves to seek work need help. Just as immigrants who have come to Canada have adopted the church hall type of program to assist them in becoming integrated into Canadian life, so too the Indian people need help. The Indian people are on a different basis from immigrants and it seems to me they need special help. When one is organizing Indian friendship centres it is difficult to get assistance at all from the federal government. There are individuals in the Indian Affairs and Citizenship Branches who do give some assistance but their efforts are often stopped by the department itself.

I want to give a specific example of the problem I am speaking about. In one town in my constituency, Red Lake, there is employment for Indians. Consequently Indians have come from all over North Western Ontario, from the northern areas of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and, I am told, even from Alberta, because there are jobs in the gold mines at Red Lake. There are not as many as before but there are some. A new iron mine in the area has made an effort to hire Indian labour.

The problem is that there is no housing and no organization to assist the Indians. There is nowhere they can go to receive help in integrating themselves into the new culture even though they are willing to do so. However, there is an organization there now called the Red Lake Indian Association which is trying to establish a friendship centre in the town of Red Lake where there is almost no serviced land. The township of Red Lake offered to provide serviced land to this organization at a cost of $1. A heating system has been offered by one of the local gold mines. Yet, there is no way in which either the federal government or the provincial government to this date can move and provide these people with the assistance they require.

In the new policy, which I hope the government will be announcing, I trust the tools that are required to enable the Indians to take their place in Canadian society will be provided. At the present time it seems to me that the educational program is adequate but the follow-up is simply lousy. A lot of work remains to be done and much imagination needs to be shown.

I should like to deal with some of the larger issues in what we term the Indian problem. My way of looking at it is to consider it not as an Indian problem but as a problem facing 230,000 people who have lived outside the mainstream of Canadian life and who are now trying to establish their place within the Canadian mainstream. It seems to me one of the primary things the federal government should do is to involve the provincial governments more deeply in Indian affairs. There are two reasons for this. First of all, there should be no distinction made between citizens of Canada. There should not be any necessity to provide separate services for Indians in, for example, the fields of education and medical services. However, the provinces will not be particularly willing to move into these areas, and one reason for this, I suggest, is the plight of the Métis.

If you begin to extend provincial services to the Métis it means that people, part Indian, part white, who for years have received no services from either the provincial government or the federal government, will receive provincial services. Therefore the cost to the provinces of these additional services for Indian people is not measured just by what the federal government pays in providing services to the Indian people, but also by the cost of extending such services to all these other people who have been ignored over a period of time. That, too, is part of the problem. It may well be that the federal government should look very carefully at this problem and integrate the Métis into programs that are designed for the Indian people. If the government does enter into negotiations with the provinces with a view to turning over these services and paying its share of the costs, it should also insist that the Métis be given their rightful share of fundamental rights that everybody in Canada enjoys and for which, incidentally, these people of Métis descent are paying federal and provincial taxes.

I also favour the decentralization of Indian affairs because I do not believe that the federal government is the source of wisdom in all things, particularly Indian affairs. I think there is much more conventional wisdom, if I may use that phrase, among the people living in communities which contain both whites and Indians. Often a far better relationship exists between them than exists between the Indians and the department.

When we talk about new policies for the Indian people I think we have to realize that much of what has been said in this house today does not apply to the Indian people who reside in the Northwest Territories, the Yukon, or in the constituency of Kenora-Rainy River. The people in my riding are not necessarily able to take advantage of all the programs available to them simply because they do not know how to cope with the white man's society. For example, it is only within the last ten years that roads have been built to some of the Indian communities that are close to white communities in my constituency. Only now are these people adjusting to the services that the Department of Indian Affairs and the provinces can now provide. Therefore it is absurd to assume that all Indian people are equally advanced and able to take advantage of all the opportunities we hope to provide to them. It seems to me that we require a far more flexible system that will offer a series of options and permit the Indians to opt in or opt out as they see fit. Perhaps it may be necessary for the government to set time limits, to establish quotas, to establish a timetable, so that when Indians at one level are prepared in order to move up to another level they can, but not to the disadvantage of others who many not be as advanced as they are.

Another aspect of the problem is that in my opinion there is a great deal of arrogance toward Indians in the House of Commons, and perhaps I am as guilty in this regard as anybody else. We seem to assume that we can formulate policies for our Indian people which they are going to follow. Although we pass the Indian Act it is the Indians themselves who should be deeply involved in the framing of its terms, even in its administration. It is the Indians who are affected by its provisions, not us. I detect a certain amount of arrogance in speeches that have been made on this subject that do not fit the facts, and I think we are all guilty of it.

I should like to give the house an illustration of the difficulties that we are going to have to face. In many areas there are going to be tremendous conflicts between the young people and the older generation. They will have to learn to govern themselves and resolve their own internal difficulties. The Indian Affairs Branch has been a very convenient scapegoat for many Indians. Because of the Indian Affairs Branch we have been unable to progress, say the Indians. Because of the Indian Affairs Branch, they say, we have not been able to govern ourselves.

If a new Indian Act is passed, as we hope it will be, this is going to mean that the Indians themselves will have to accept a great deal more responsibility for their own activities. Such a procedure will, I suggest, be difficult and slow. I do not think we can come up with any policy that is going to solve all the problems of the Indians in 100 years. I think that any government or legislative body that announces that it has a program to settle all Indian problems in 100 years flat is clearly not in touch with what is going on in the country and with what the Indian people are thinking. I sense this type of attitude among the members of the cabinet, though not so much on the part of the two ministers directly responsible. However, I get the feeling that the cabinet has decided that it is not going to do anything about solving the problems of the Indians until it is able to come up with a program that will solve the problems of the Indians in 100 years guaranteed. I think that is unrealistic.

I should like to see the Indian Act done away with because I believe it is an anachronism. Nevertheless, I understand that because of historic treaty rights and for other reasons we will have to have some form of Indian Act. We have to recognize that the original intention of the Indian Act was to provide protection for Indians. We have to continue to provide them with certain services. But the goal toward which we should work is that which the hon. member for Skeena suggested; the minister should work himself out of a job. But I think we have to face up to the realities of the situation.

I believe, that what the Department of Indian Affairs should be doing is helping the Indians to develop among themselves their own agencies that will work toward their own benefit. In the riding of Kenora-Rainy River there are a number of organizations, Indian corporations, that operate under an advisory body called the Amik Association. The Amik Association has been receiving a grant of $15,000 from the provincial government, a sum shared jointly by the federal government. Because of the organization's success the grant has been upped to $24,000, again shared equally by the two governments.

The organization has prepared a very extensive and I think well thought-out brief for the Ford Foundation because it was not getting anywhere with the federal and provincial governments. It could get a little money to help meet administration costs but could not get the "seed" money it really required in order to go ahead with some of the projects it has in mind. So it submitted a brief to the Ford Foundation of America, which was accepted enthusiastically. The Ford Foundation wrote back and said: "We will put up $50,000 for a revolving loan fund for your area provided the federal and provincial governments will each put up $50,000." The money is to be used for "seed" projects.

It seems to me that here is an example of a great initiative by a group of local people, some white, some Indian, working sometimes in concert with and at other times in opposition to the Department of Indian Affairs and the other do-gooder organizations that involve themselves in Indian affairs. They came up with a proposal which they submitted to the federal and provincial governments. I think the two governments are on trial. I do not think they have any choice but to go ahead and provide the money to this organization which has proven itself to be effective. It is completely independently controlled; it is autonomous; it is on its own. I think the minister should look into this matter as soon as possible with a view to approving the program.

I would like to say a word or two about the consultative process. Quite frankly, I have not been happy with the way it has been carried out, particularly with the way it has affected the Indian people of my area. The concept of the consultation process has been that the Indian, like the white man, is used to the operations of the white man's institutions. I think this is a false assumption. Basically, it has been my experience that there is no concept of representation, as we know it, on the Indian reserves. When I have consultations with the Indians, in the northern areas particularly, the chief will be telling me something and as he is speaking somebody, not a member of the band council necessarily, may interrupt him and make a correction or put across another point of view. The chief will go back, reverse his stand, take that person's point of view into consideration, and go ahead. There is a sort of direct relationship here.

The consultation was imposed from the top down. The Indians were told to elect representatives and send them to the Lakehead or Toronto. They were taken out of their native areas and natural environment and put in a white man's situation. In this situation we expected them to provide us with proper information with regard to the Indians.

I admit that perhaps this is a little overdrawn, but I think the general idea is true. Far more work should have been carried out at the band level. There would have been far more understanding of the questions involved if this process had been carried out at the band level because the Indians would have known what matters were being raised. This is particularly true of Indians in rural and other areas where they are not in direct communication one with another. This was not done. To a large extent I think this was responsible for the first series of consultations not being as successful as we hoped they would be.

At this time I should single out the former minister of Indian Affairs, now the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing), for his initiative in setting up this program and for the work he did. If anybody could be said to be the father of consultations, it would be the present Minister of Public Works. Mind you, it was not a very pleasant form of consultation at times; sometimes it resembled a shouting match. Nevertheless, he believed in consultation and dialogue and went ahead and set it up.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the situation was not the same in the district of the hon. member, but I would like to inform the House of Commons that in many provinces we provided money to the Indian associations so they could go into every reserve and discuss with the Indians there the forthcoming consultations. This happened in Quebec, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, and I think British Columbia. Perhaps that process did not occur in Ontario or in the northern part of that province. But we welcomed this initiative of the Indians and provided them with money in order to permit Indians who were aware of the situation to go to the reserves and discuss, ahead of time, with the local Indians the consultations that were forthcoming.

Mr. Reid: I accept that, Mr. Speaker. All I say is that I was told by various band councils that they were not consulted and did not really know what was going to happen. There was a consultative process, which was the proper thing to do, but it brought out many surprises. For example, one of the chiefs told me that this was the first time he had ever known there was a basis behind the actions of the Department of Indian Affairs. He did not realize that there was an Indian Act. He always thought the department had acted in an arbitrary fashion and without any sense at all. I hope that when it comes to the second round of consultations the minister will take this into consideration.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree to give more time to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Reid: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I have just one brief point to make concerning the Indian Claims Commission. I understand there has been some talk among the government that before we proceed with the Indian Claims Commission the Indians must be fully consulted and made fully aware of all the implications involved. I further understand that the government has tied the Indian Claims Commission bill to general policy for Indians which the minister, we hope, will be introducing shortly.

If this be true—I have no way of knowing whether it is true; it happens to be rumour—I disagree completely with this view. I think it would be extremely foolish if the government were to tie the Indian Claims Commission bill to a general Indian policy. My reason for saying this is that there are many grievances which the Indian people have outstanding; they have taken, I think, the proper position and have insisted that their grievances be satisfied before they go on to other things. They, like us, are the victims of their own history. They have really no reason to trust the white man. I think we have an obligation to make proper restitution if restitution is necessary. All these grievances must be looked into and we must come up with a just settlement; otherwise how can they believe us?

In my opinion the Indian Claims Commission has absolutely no relationship to a future Indian policy. It has a great deal to do with the abuses which the Indians have suffered over a period of time and it is very important that the government move quickly in this regard. I hope that when the minister meets with the National Indian Association next month he will be able to seriously discuss with them the terms of the bill, and that shortly after that meeting, should they concur, the bill will be presented to the house. I would oppose any attempt to hold back the bill on the ground of it not being integrated with an Indian policy for 100 years hence. This would be a travesty of justice and a misreading of the situation. I think the government has an obligation to press forward with this matter as soon as possible.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the debate thus far today has been conducted on a very high level indeed. As hon. members know, I am not one who usually becomes partisan in matters of this nature, and I do not intend to break that habit. To indicate the sincerity of that remark I will now do something that is usual and quite normal for me, that is, compliment a member of the treasury benches. I refer, of course, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) who, in one aspect of his portfolio, namely, Indian Affairs, is making a very sincere effort to overcome an almost insurmountable problem, the tragedy of our Indian population. From time to time, of course, I will be critical of the other aspect of his portfolio, Northern Development, which is also my responsibility. In the meantime I believe he is making a commendable effort in regard to Indian Affairs and I hope that he continues along the present course.

I agree in large measure with what the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) said. He knows, as I do and as perhaps few hon. members who have not been in the northern area of our country do, the extent of the deplorable conditions which exist among our Indian people in that region of Canada. The minister has seen something of them and so have some of his officials, but not often enough.

One of the things on which I agree very positively with the hon. member for Skeena is his criticism of the department, more than of the minister, with respect to the administrative procedures now in force in connection with the representations made from time to time by Members of Parliament. I happen to know of the procedure of which the hon. member for Skeena spoke according to which the problems are now handled by the Vancouver office instead of, as in my case, the Yukon agency or whatever agency handles the Skeena area. The problems mentioned in our correspondence are referred to Vancouver of all places. This procedure was invoked during the administration of the minister's predecessor and my belief is that it was done only for political purposes. There is no other logical explanation for it. This is very wrong. If the literally hundreds of representations which are made by Members of Parliament, in areas such as mine at any rate, on behalf of the Indian people require routing to Vancouver, then there is not much purpose in maintaining a Yukon agency.

As a matter of coincidence, before I even knew what was coming up in the house today I wrote to the minister's senior official in Vancouver and I sent the minister and the superintendent of the Yukon agency a copy of my letter in which I objected very strenuously to being obliged to go through this routine. The minister will receive that letter in due course. I wrote on behalf of an elderly Indian in my riding who was in need of assistance. My letter was dated February 4 and the reply from Vancouver was dated February 20. When there are people in need of assistance in weather 40, 50 or 60 degrees below zero and when the very matter of their survival is at stake, they cannot wait from February 4 to February 20 until these requests are funnelled through the usual channels before relief is obtained. So I urge the minister to consider the fact that no useful purpose is being served and, in fact, every evil purpose, by a continuation of that kind of nonsensical procedure. There is no reason in the world why the same procedure should not be followed that was in force for the ten and a half years prior to the imposition of the innovation of the minister's predecessor. There is no reason why the superintendent of the Yukon agency and his staff cannot handle these problems with which they can deal much more quickly than can Vancouver. I am sure the Vancouver office would be the first to agree.

This brings me to something else I want to say which I have not had the opportunity to do for some years now. It relates to the personnel of the department. I believe that the department has too few of the kind of dedicated personnel necessary to give any effect to the purpose of the department. In the almost 20 years that I have been in the Yukon a consistently high calibre of field workers and personnel has been staffing the Yukon agency and dealing with the problems of the Indian people. It is too bad that I cannot say that giant steps in terms of progress have been made over the same period because despite the dedication of the personnel, despite their intention and their sincerity, they have been prohibited from achieving their desires and in some instances prosecuted for doing what was right. I am sure that if the minister consults his files and goes back in history he will know the people to whom I refer in making this comment.

It is very interesting to look at the proceedings of the Joint Committee of the House of Commons and the Senate on Indian Affairs in 1960 and 1961, starting at page 605 of the bound volume, and the recommendations that were set forth in the committee report of that day. They are almost precisely what we have been hearing on an annual basis ever since. It is little wonder that the actions or the lack of action of those responsible for improvement in the area of Indian Affairs can be described as they were by a northern Indian chief when he said: "Their words are like the snows. We learn to live with them but they always go away like their promises." I do not want to be critical of the minister and I hope he takes my remarks as being critical only of what is not being done.

I am in favour of the motion that has been put forward criticizing the government for its failure to deal adequately with Canada's native population. I believe that this motion must have the conscientious support of every member of the house because when the evidence is in one must conclude that the indictment is proven on all counts. The policies of the past several years and previous policies under all governments have simply not been adequate. I am reminded of the large amount of verbiage that has cluttered the pages of Hansard with respect to the Indian Claims Commission bill. I remember that the draft of that bill was first heard of in 1961 and I believe that in 1962 the bill was ready for parliament. However, along came an election that year. We have been hearing about the bill to establish the Indian Claims Commission every year since, but we do not have it yet.

The minister has asked for constructive criticism and I intend to relate my constructive criticism with respect to the department to my own riding, but I am sure that it applies equally to a good many others in Canada including the riding represented by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid). He said in his remarks that the Indian people of his riding are below the national average—I believe that was his description—and that it is only now that roads are being built into some of the areas where the Indian people live. In many communities in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories there are no roads at all and contact with the white people is infrequent, to say the least.

When one speaks of the Indian people one must think in the same breath, if I may coin a phrase, about the Eskimo population, and when I think of the Eskimo population I cannot but recall the words of Mary Carpenter, an Eskimo girl from Sachs Harbour, Victoria Island, Northwest Territories, 300 or 400 miles off the Mackenzie Delta, who is attending a university in western Canada where she is majoring in history and journalism. In a speech to delegates attending the national meeting of the Indian-Eskimo Association in Toronto last fall she criticized government bureaucrats for regarding the Eskimo as—and I am using her words now—a kind of new nigger in a parka, and for supporting the Panarctic oil scheme which exploits native lands. She told the delegates:

> I don't wish to alarm you, but the fact is that the federal government is doing to my people what the whites have done to the negroes of the United States. They are making us into a service class people, or slaves; take your pick.

It is all very well to talk about the number of Indian children who are attending schools. It is all very well to talk in terms of statistics which are in themselves misleading. I made a note of the figures referred to by the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River. They look impressive, but what do they mean? What proportion of the increase of some 17,000 children of Indian lineage now attending elementary schools is the result of a natural increase in population? The statistics have to be related to that factor to mean anything at all. Again, it is all very fine to lay on educational programs for the Indian people, to produce more heavy duty equipment mechanics, more automotive mechanics, plumbers, electricians and so on. But training of this kind is of little use unless we can find ways of putting the newly trained tradesmen to work.

The minister has asked us for constructive criticism. I suggest it is of little use talking about new policies, giving band councils more autonomy, sending more children to school and building more houses, if the department itself continues to create ghettos for Indian people as a consequence of the very things it is doing. This is precisely the situation in Whitehorse where what is literally a ghetto has been created. All the new houses for Indians built in the area are being constructed on land set aside for the Indian people—not on a reserve, because there are no reserves in the Yukon. Indians are not permitted to integrate with the other elements of our society in Whitehorse. Technically, I suppose, integration would be permitted, but it would cost money. Remember, it costs $4,000 or $5,000 to build a house on land set aside for Indians in the Whitehorse village. And I suppose it would cost between $12,000 and $15,000 to build any kind of home which would not reduce land and property values in the other residential areas of that community.

Look at the rest of the communities in the Yukon. Take Upper Liard, for instance. The chairman of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, who is in his place today, knows that when the committee visited the Yukon recently the separation of the Indian community was immediately apparent to everyone. All these communities—Upper Liard, Teslin, Whitehorse, Carcross, Haines Junction, Mayo, Burwash, Beaver Creek—are places where the Indian people are segregated. Homes are built for them somewhere out of town until, of course, the encroachment of progress demands more commercial land for industry or development and then the Indians are moved out again. Once this was done without consultation even.

The department would be well advised to get away from the idea that amenities for Indians have to be grouped in segregated pockets. If there is to be integration, instead of following a housing program in a ghetto let us build homes integrated with the rest of the community. If this costs more money, so be it; the end product will be much more useful to society than it is at the moment, and the present policy is not working anyway. In fact, it is a waste of money.

A few moments ago I mentioned the encroachment of progress. As things are at present, the right hand of the department does not know what the left is doing in the field of development. I think of the situation at Old Crow where there is an Indian population unique in all Canada, I suggest. We find there a community of ambitious, intelligent, bright people who make their living primarily from trapping muskrat in a vast area known as Crow flats. Among us who live in the Yukon there is a great fear that the basis of their economy will be swept from beneath their feet as a result of the tremendous increase in investment interests in the oil and gas potential of this area as a result of the Prudhoe Bay discoveries. Great Plains Exploration has over 800,000 acres leased in this area. The side of the department concerned with development has informed the local press in response to inquiries that there are no oil and gas lands under lease within 200 miles of Old Crow. If extensive exploration is to be permitted in an unrestricted way in this area it will be the beginning of the end for these people because the economy of the whole region would be destroyed. The result would be another 250 people on welfare. I do not suggest to the minister that he place a tight cap on the development of our oil and gas resources anywhere in Canada, but I say there should be a very keen awareness of the possible effects of such development upon communities like Old Crow.

As my second constructive suggestion to the minister I want to say a word about the sad parade of humanity which one sees day after day, every day except Saturdays and Sundays, before the police magistrate or the justice of the peace primarily in the Northwest Territories. Anyone who attends these courts will hear charges being read to people who do not understand what is being said. Judicial personnel ask whether they understand the charges, and a nod of the head comes back in reply. "Do you plead guilty or not guilty?" they ask, and again a nod of the head is given, because if there is one thing an Indian person wants to do it is to please. Before he knows what has happened, let alone understands what has been read to him, he is convicted and fined $15 or $20. Because he has no money, he finds himself in jail for two or three weeks.

This government set up a commission in the Northwest Territories under Mr. Justice Morrow to study the situation. I suggest to the minister that the commission's recommendations apply to the Yukon territory as much as to territory lying on the other side of the Richardson Mountains. One recommendation was that Indian people ought to have a representative in court. It does not matter whether he comes from the Department of Indian Affairs or the Department of Justice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Finish what you were saying.

Mr. Nielsen: Could I finish the sentence, Mr. Speaker? If the government does not wish to vote funds to provide counsel, at least it should instigate a policy under which someone will be present in court to advise Indian people what the proceedings are all about, before anyone is sent to jail.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I begin by saying that the minister had some good things to say today, especially when he announced that in future less paternalism would be displayed towards our Indian population since Indians are now able to speak for themselves. Frankly, some of us would take the minister's statements more seriously if we had not heard similar statements so often in the past. If my memory serves me correctly, the present minister is the fifth minister to hold the Indian Affairs portfolio since 1963. Former ministers were, I think, Mr. Favreau, Mr. Nicholson, the present Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) and the minister responsible for regional development (Mr. Marchand). I may not be entirely accurate about the ministers who held the portfolio; yet, I think all this minister's predecessors made a speech almost exactly the same as the one he made today. The Indians of Canada will believe in the government's good intentions when they see actions taking the place of words.

I did not think I would ever agree with anything the premier of Saskatchewan said, but I must confess I agree with his assertion made in the provincial legislature in Regina yesterday that, with respect to our Indians, we are sitting on a time bomb. The St. Regis Indians have blockaded the bridge crossing their reservation. There is trouble at the Pas where the Indians have been picketing a health centre because they believe the person running it is displaying discriminatory attitudes. Then, we have the disgrace of Akaitcho Hall, Yellowknife, where the students are living under conditions that would not be tolerated by any other student group in this country. There, students 19, 20 and 21 years of age, are being treated as second class citizens. They are not allowed out in the evening without a written pass. They cannot go from the hospital to the gymnasium in the school without obtaining a written pass and giving it back to their superiors when they return. They cannot smoke or drink, even where the law permits them to do so. In addition, they need a special permit to visit the old part of Yellowknife. Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Other Indians live in the old part of town, and the students need special permission before going there. The minister has had sufficient time to investigate what is going on in Akaitcho Hall. The difficulties there continue because many in this country believe that Indians are not as good as the rest of us. When the minister allows the current situation there to continue, he helps to foster the kind of thinking prevalent among some sections of our community. No wonder our Indians are concerned about what is happening.

I am ashamed that a magistrate of my city who sees Indians in court every day, and deals with their alleged infractions of the law, saw fit to appear on the national television program the "Public Eye" and make the statement reported in a letter that Chief Courchene sent. According to the letter, Magistrate Rice said:

> I have never come across a married Indian Couple ... There is something in their blood, I don't know what it is but an Indian and alcohol just don't mix ... An Indian woman told me—I guess she was an Indian, I can't tell the difference between an Indian and a Metis—if abortions were allowed she would have to have an abortion every morning.

In view of statements like these, is it any wonder our Indians are becoming restless, that they are beginning to demonstrate and that we face the possibility of violence? I suggest that the time for talk is over and the time for action has arrived.

The fifth annual review of the Economic Council shows that the life expectancy of the average Indian woman in Canada is 25 years, compared with 64 years for the rest of our population. Most Indians in Canada enjoy incomes of less than $3,000 a year and half our Indians enjoy incomes below $2,000 a year. Many Indians in this country live in poverty, and not much help is being extended to them. All these facts are well known.

Although it is important for us to know of the activities of the Indian Claims Commission, it is more important for us to know whether the government will act to help our Indians. Will it eliminate or reduce the bureaucracy which has directed every facet of Indian life here for more than 100 years? Will it allow Indians to decide what is good for them and what programs ought to be introduced for their benefit?

The minister has been making all the right speeches. Although he insists that the reorganization of the department was only an internal, administration reorganization—I see he shakes his head in agreement—the Indians did not see it in that light. I have travelled extensively in this country and am aware of many Indian problems. I know Indian leaders in Manitoba, Alberta and in northwestern Ontario. Almost universally, they consider the reorganization of the department to be an attempt on the part of the bureaucracy within the department to grab more power.

In the opinion of Indians with whom I have talked, the minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) is the pawn of the bureaucracy. They believe that the person who urged an extension of democracy for Indians and urged a policy whereby Indians would be given more and more say in deciding their destiny, was the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras). They believe that in the struggle for power which took place the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) opted for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and for a further extension of this bureaucracy. Since those charges were made last October, the minister has repeatedly said they were not true. It really does not matter what the minister or I say, Mr. Speaker, because the time for talking is rapidly disappearing. In the next month or two the minister must cut down on the bureaucracy and give the Indians more say with regard to their educational problems, welfare and economic development matters. Unless the minister does this, Indians and other people in Canada will know that bureaucracy has won again, as it has for more than one hundred years.

There is no use in just talking, the minister must act. This is not the first attempt to permit Indians to have more say in their own affairs. It is only a matter of three or four years since the cabinet, on the recommendation of a minister who I think was the best that department ever had—

An hon. Member: Which one?

Mr. Orlikow: —the late Hon. Guy Favreau —approved a bold new program. I could read statements made by Mr. Favreau and other representatives of the government at that time regarding the program of community development whereby people trained in social work, anthropology and social science would be employed by the department to live with the Indians and determine their needs. We were told this would be the salvation of the Indian people of Canada. Where is that community development program? It is gone. It is dead. There are still a few community development officers, but the program is dead because once these officers put into words the desires and demands of the Indian people the bureaucracy in Ottawa said, these officers are trouble-makers and must go. The minister can say that is not true, but they went.

To demonstrate the truth of what I am saying, I want to quote from a letter written to the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson on January 4, 1968 by the then President of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada. I will quote a few paragraphs of that letter to prove the points I have been making. I read from this letter:

> For more than a year, the concern of the Indian-Eskimo Association of Canada over the low attainment and apparent decline of the government's community development program in Indian reserve communities has continued to mount.

It goes on to say:

> Our own assessment of the gross under-achievement of this program has been reinforced by repeated appeals from Indian persons and community development personnel in the field, both federal and provincial, urging the I.E.A. to seek a thoroughgoing appraisal of the program and its revitalization.

The letter goes on to say:

> We take this course believing that the present program of community development is subsiding towards failure. While there may be many contributing causes, such as the costly failure to co-ordinate the scattered federal resources now being expended on community development, the program's real problems seem rooted in inappropriate administrative and management structures and methods and inadequate resources.

It later states:

> Piecemeal measures or the pouring of additional funds into existing structures and programs will not, in our opinion, reverse or significantly change present trends. These trends lead to increasing dependence on welfare, high incidence of conflict with the law, low levels of economic capability and serious family and social breakdown.

It later goes on to say:

> To bring the energy and intelligence of the Indian people into the struggle for standards of life equal to that of most other citizens will require a substantially new approach.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there are some recommendations in the letter:

> In summary, we recommend:
> That the principal developmental functions now housed in the Indian Affairs Branch be invested in an Indian Development Corporation as described in the attached report.

When the President of the Indian-Eskimo Association wrote that letter he suggested that the program of economic development should be a separate program. I continue reading from the letter:

> This Indian Development Corporation would serve as an intermediary device through which services of federal and provincial agencies would be made available in a co-ordinated way to native communities in response to community initiatives stimulated by community development activity.

The letter further states:

> That a task force be appointed and charged with conducting throughout Canada an immediate examination of the present community development program. The task force should hold intensive discussions with Indian communities and organizations, provincial authorities, community development personnel and others—

> In addition to the appointment of a task force for Indian Affairs with particular reference to community development, we respectfully recommend an on-going series of discussions between federal and provincial ministers, including talks between the Prime Minister and provincial premiers, aimed at co-ordinating and adapting federal and provincial services and programs to fit the needs of Indian and Metis communities and persons.

Who wrote that letter? It was none other than the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell), who was not then a member of parliament but president of the Indian Eskimo Association. I submit everything in that letter written by him was true when it was written, and that basically nothing has changed. I submit that nothing the minister has said today, or any other day, has indicated that the department has any other intention but to continue to tell the Indians what they need to do if they are to get the help which they must have.

I want to suggest to the minister that if he wants to get a basic understanding of the problems of Indians he should look at the decision the United States Supreme Court made more than ten years ago. At that time the Court was asked to deal with the constitutionality of the laws in the American southern states which provided for what were called equal but separate schools. In other words, it was legal in the American south to have two school systems, one for the white young people and another for the black young people, so long as both provided the same kind and quality of education.

The United States Supreme Court brought down an historic decision. It said that even if the educational facilities provided for the Negro people of the southern states were equal in quality to those provided for the white people, and even if the same amount of money were spent for their education as for the education of the white people—that was not true, but even if it were true—their education would not be equal because they were segregated.

I think the minister would like to do the right thing. I suggest to him that until he and the government make up their minds that they have to ignore the recommendations of the top officials of the department, who will for the next 100 years, if we permit it, find reasons—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired unless by unanimous consent he may continue.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Orlikow: I conclude by saying that the bureaucrats of the department will find reasons and excuses why the time will never be ripe to permit the Indians to become full fledged citizens able to manage their own affairs, able to make their own decisions, able not just to make the right decisions but, like the rest of us, to make the wrong decisions and to learn from them.

Until the minister realizes that, until he becomes the real director of the department, until he stops taking the day to day advice of his officials who have been wrong for 100 years and will be wrong for the next 100 years if we allow them, the problems of the Indian people—it is even wrong to talk about it in this way—the problems of a group of Canadians will never be solved.

I began by saying that the minister said some very good things, and I close by saying that we members of parliament, and more so the Indian people of Canada, have had enough of the fine speeches. What we want is some action.

Mr. Len Marchand: (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, it is almost six o'clock. I wish to make a few remarks on this subject and I would like to have some continuity to them. Therefore, may I call it six o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Science Services—Ministerial responsibility for policy; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Regional Disparities; the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather)—Mail Rate—Non-profit publications.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Howard):

That in the opinion of this House the government, in spite of successive admissions of its failure to deal adequately with the various social and economic problems confronting our native Indian people, is following a course which threatens to perpetuate the denial of fundamental human rights and freedoms, to continue the destructive effects of paternalism, and to maintain discrimination based upon a cultural inheritance together with a general negation of human dignity and respect for our native people.

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to make a few remarks in this debate about the native peoples. I should also like to commend the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) for introducing this motion. It is a good indication of the concern that all members of parliament have about the plight of the Indian peoples. I should say too that Canadians in all walks of life have never been more concerned about them. This is a good thing because, as has been generally known, the native peoples face some very great difficulties. The standard of living of too many of the Indian people in respect of income, health, housing, and other factors is much lower than is acceptable to the Canadian people. It would be useless, however, to dwell at great length on all things that are wrong. I think many of the wrongs have been pointed out pretty adequately today by hon. members on both sides of the house.

The Minister of Indian Affairs, and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) gave an excellent address today. I think he presented a balanced picture of what the situation is today and what the government is trying to do to alleviate the conditions under which many of the Indian people are living. There are many, many good things the Indians are doing in addition to the many things that are wrong. I think the minister pointed this out as well in his remarks.

I should like to deal with a few of the remarks that were made today by some hon. members. The hon. member for Skeena referred to the problem as a fungus growth that is still growing and getting worse all the time, indicating that no progress has been made. I reject his suggestion that the Indian people are a fungus growth.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Then, why did you not listen to what I said?

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I did. I know the hon. member did not mean that some of us are fungi, but nevertheless the inference is there.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): That is not true.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): It is a ridiculous statement and I reject it. The department is dealing with Indians. I think the hon. member should perhaps consider his choice of words. Under any circumstances, I reject the statement.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I rise on a matter of order, Mr. Speaker. I know the hon. gentleman wants to be truthful and correct. He is not being so in this instance. I do not want to become involved in a dialogue with him about it. What I said was that when, in 1867, the Fathers of Confederation decided that Indians on the land reserved for Indians should be under the exclusive jurisdiction of the federal parliament they started a program of paternalism. It is that paternalism that is the fungus growth which is still growing. I reject any implication on the part of the hon. member that I said otherwise.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): I also reject the suggestion that we are not making any progress. Indians today are on the move as they have never been before. They are participating more and more in Canadian life than they have ever done before. This is a good thing. We must participate as people in all aspects of Canadian life, economic, social and political. I should like to point out some examples of the progress the Indian people are making. These are not propaganda items from the Department of Indian affairs, as has been suggested by some hon. members. These are things the Indians are doing themselves. I have a clipping from the Financial Post dated August 10, 1968. The headline reads "Squamish Indians' enterprise transforms wasteland into profitable trailer park". The article goes on to say:

While some Indians across Canada are campaigning without much success for aboriginal land rights or seeking special concessions and compensation, Dan Baker, member of the council of the Squamish Indian tribe, has found that self-help and free enterprise can be far more satisfying—and profitable.

Dan, whose brother Simon is chief of the tribe, was inspired two years ago with what seemed at the time to be an almost impossible idea. The Squamish band for many years has held a strip of waterfront land facing Burrard Inlet, opposite Vancouver, some of which is now under lease to the municipalities of West Vancouver and North Vancouver.

At a point where the Capilano River, which rises in the North Shore mountains, meets tidewater near the Lions Gate bridge, there was a strip of timbered flat land undeveloped and apparently unwanted.

To Dan Baker the situation spelled opportunity. Wouldn't this be a wonderful location for a trailer park? The more he thought about it, the more he was impressed with the possibilities.

The land lies just across the Capilano River from the prestigious Park Royal area with its complex of high-rise apartments, shopping centres, specialty shops, theatres.

When Baker, with some encouragement from the federal Indian Affairs Department, made a modest start in clearing a part of the land for his trailer park, discriminating residents of West Vancouver, including members of the municipal council, were slightly aghast.

All that was several months ago. Today, it is obvious that Dan Baker's Capilano Mobile Park is an asset instead of any eyesore. Baker himself, his fellow tribe members and North Shore municipal officials are happy.

Because of the exacting standards set for intending residents—individual trailers cost from $8,000 to more than $20,000—the community has appealed only to people of means, many of them retired or semi-retired, who like the idea of living beside the river, in a dwelling free from the discomforts of apartment life and the inconvenience and high cost of maintaining conventional homes.

The land is leased by Baker and his partner, Roger Battryn, from the Capilano band on a three-year renewable permit, and the band receives 10 per cent of the gross revenue from the project, which represents a total investment of about $100,000.

Occupants of the trailers, which are surrounded by carefully maintained lawns and park-like environment, pay $65 a month for parking. About 40 such homes occupy the ground now, with room for about 35 more.

In so far as education is concerned, more Indians are being educated than ever before, and more and more of them want to be educated. They want to be educated along with other Canadians, and this is being done.

I remember that when I went to university there were only three or four of us attending the University of British Columbia. That was in 1955. Today, Mr. Speaker, there are some sixty members of various Indian bands in British Columbia attending the University of British Columbia. I think this is progress. The hon. member for Skeena says that nothing is being done, that no progress is being made. I repeat, Mr. Speaker, the Indian people are on the move today as they have never been before.

I am not going to sing the praises of the government for its treatment of the Indian peoples. Successive governments have failed to do the job that was required of them. But I do not want always to dwell on the things that have been wrong in the past. We must address ourselves resolutely to the future.

I paid tribute in my maiden speech, Mr. Speaker, to the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) for giving the Indians the vote. This was one of the great decisions that the right hon. gentleman made during his time as Prime Minister. I also said, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to repeat, that more was done for the Indian people by the government of the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson than was done at any other time in our history. I would like to just list a few of those things to refresh the memories of hon. members on the other side.

Mr. Pearson's government announced a $112 million housing program. Loans from C.M.H.C. were made available for Indians to build houses on the reserves. An off-reserve housing program was introduced. I spoke to many, many Indians about this in various parts of the country, especially in British Columbia where this program was welcomed and has helped them a great deal to find a new life in the cities where other Canadians are living.

Federal spending in the years 1962-63 on Indian affairs was about $51 million. Federal spending in the years 1968-69 is almost $140 million. I think this is progress. I think it indicates the government's concern about the native peoples and its desire to do something to help them to help themselves. I agree with many hon. members who have said that the objective of all members must be to work for the minister of Indian affairs in order to see that he works himself out of a job. It is basically wrong that there should be a department of government devoted to a particular race of people.

I would welcome the abolition of the department of Indian affairs and the Indian Act. There should not be special status in Canada for any group of people. There should not have to be special laws saying that I am an Indian. We are all Canadians.

But, Mr. Speaker, I think it is unrealistic that we should expect the Indian Act to be abolished right now. This is not the wish of the Indian people. The impression that I get from them is that they would like to see progressive options made available in the Indian Act until they can get on their feet, do many things for themselves and function as communities on the same basis as many other communities.

The hon. member for Skeena talked about consultations and meeting the wishes of the Indian people. At another point he said that the government should abolish the department of Indian affairs. I am not sure what he means, Mr. Speaker, I do not understand this type of language. The minister of Indian Affairs made it pretty clear that we are consulting the Indian people as widely as possible on the changes that they want in the Indian Act. This is a good thing and I welcome it. Never before in history have such wide consultations been held to amend a portion of the Indian Act or the Indian Act in total. The Indian people have been very concerned that everything was coming from the top, being fed down to them and handed to them as a fait accompli. I am glad to say that this is no longer the case. I am confident that when the new policy on Indian Affairs is announced, the new act is introduced and the claims bill is introduced, the wishes of the Indian people will be reflected therein.

The hon. member for Skeena also quoted several figures in regard to average age at death, and in the same breath was talking about life expectancy. If the figures that the hon. member was using are true, I should be almost dead. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I think I still have a few years left.

Mr. Lewis: If not, the average would be still lower.

[Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo).]

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): To clarify the record, average age at death reflects the age at which a certain number of persons die. Life expectancy reflects the average number of years of life for those who are still living. For example, if one person of 80 and a one year old baby die, the average age at death is about 40. If an 80 year old person and two one year old twins die, the average age at death is roughly 27. To clarify the record further, Mr. Speaker, the life expectancy of Indian men is 59.61 years at birth; life expectancy of non-Indian men at birth is 63.35 years. Life expectancy of Indian women at birth is 63.23 years; life expectancy of non-Indian women at birth is 74.17.

Mr. Lewis: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but I should like to ask him a question if he would not object.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): When I am finished. Statistics can often be misleading, and I am sorry to say that misleading statistics have often been used against the department of Indian affairs when it has been convenient for hon. members to suggest how bad things are. When the report on Indians and the law came out there was a story in one newspaper to the effect that 100 per cent of the women in the Kamloops jail were Indians. I was very alarmed at this statistic and I phoned Mr. Gus Godfriedson, an old friend in Kamloops, to ask what was going on and whether this was a true figure. He said, "Not that I am aware of. I know of one woman who has been in jail in Kamloops from time to time. If you call that 100 per cent, I guess the figure is correct."

With the best intentions in the world, members wound the Indian people when they use such figures. We are a proud people and there are many things that work against us. But most of them are not intentional, and we would hate to feel that they are.

As I have said before, the Indians have many accomplishments of which they can justly be proud. Most of us know that from time to time the department is a help. On the other hand, from time to time the department is not as helpful as we would like it to be. In our emotional moments many of us may blame the department for many things. But if we are to debate the future of the Indian people on an adequate basis, we will have to recognize that many things are being done by the Indian people. Many things are being done by various agencies of government, including the Indian Affairs branch. Still more things remain to be done. But most Indian people today know that things are very different from what they were. Those who read the record of this debate will surely feel that members on all sides of the house want to do a better job for them.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the statement of the hon. member who spoke before me, but nevertheless we much understand that within his party the hon. member may feel a little too bound to defend party policy. Certainly he is right to rejoice over the fact that we now appear willing to give a final solution to the Indian problem.

But if we consider the present situation that was permitted to develop for many years, not to say centuries, we should wonder what will be the results of the new government policy. Why? Because the situation has become so serious that one wonders if it might not be too late for a solution.

I would now like to make a comparison between the fate of as important a minority as the French Canadians and that of the Canadian Indians. We French Canadians have been fighting since 1760 against complete assimilation, against the loss of our rights and prerogatives. We are in a position to understand the problems of a race doomed to extinction, judging by the views which have been prevailing for a long time in this government.

So I can well understand the Indian problem. The principle according to which everyone should be allowed to remain himself is so true and enriching in a country like Canada that every effort should have been made in the past to make sure that the Indians, the first and most important inhabitants of our country, remain themselves.

The government is now trying to correct the situation and if the Indians themselves believe that this will be successful, I am the first to be delighted about it.

I doubt it, but this day may have helped in finding a real and definite solution to the problem.

I would also like to speak about the problems of the Eskimos, especially those living in northern Quebec. Even if it is now possible to give them the means to be independent, we should not prevent them from leading a fuller and richer life. I know that, in Northern Quebec, the Eskimo Association carries out the contracts granted by the government in that region. So, if the Eskimos are ready to look after their own affairs, to invest their profits to their advantage in their own region, that could be a partial solution to the problem.

Consequently, foreign companies, and more particularly American companies, should not be allowed to take over the implementation of those contracts, to make profits and invest them in the States or in a country other than Canada, above all when Eskimos can run their business by themselves to their own profit. Apart from being an incentive for employment in those areas, the implementation of those contracts would enable the Eskimos to make money, as the Americans have always done. That would make them more independent, freer, for they would no longer have to make do with the welfare allowances that they get at the present time.

All those problems should therefore be considered in a very open way and we should not give with one hand what we take with the other. If we really want the Indians or the Eskimos to enrich our national heritage, we should let them have their own way and facilitate their self-determination, by all possible means.

[English]

Mr. Paul St-Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to read a portion of the motion of the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard):

> That in the opinion of this house the government—

Then, I omit some words,

> —is following a course which threatens to perpetuate the denial of fundamental human rights and freedoms, to continue the destructive effects of paternalism, and to maintain discrimination based upon a cultural inheritance together with a general negation of human dignity and respect for our native people.

When I read the motion of the hon. member, it seemed to me that he was being unnecessarily pessimistic, negative and totally uninspiring. It did not sound like him. The hon. gentleman is from a riding neighbouring mine. I know that his interest in the Indian people is genuine, deep, and of every long standing. Listening to him tonight, I did not find that his language matched the slightly intemperate tone of the motion itself. I found him generally non-partisan, very fair for the most part and, again, speaking out of a considerable body of knowledge on a subject that has interested him for a long time.

He is one of the people in this house who took an interest in what has come to be called the Indian problem while numerous other Canadians, who at times now take a somewhat noisy interest in the matter, were quite silent and indifferent. If I start on a slightly critical note in reviewing what the hon. member for Skeena said, it is because I am leading up to a point. I should like to refer to one section of his remarks in which he was criticizing the booklet "Choosing a Path" which was distributed to the consultative groups as they met across Canada. The hon. member referred to the section which asked the Indians what they thought of the Indian liquor legislation. He went on to ask: Isn't this ridiculous? How many times have they been asked this question? Could they be blamed if they looked upon it as an insult to their intelligence?

Can we really say this, Mr. Speaker? It is true that they have been asked this question many times. It is true also that they have given many different answers. This does not apply only to Indians. The white people of Canada have, for many generations, asked this question about liquor control. They have given many different answers. They are continuing to give different answers.

In my own province of British Columbia, the provincial government has recently set up another royal commission to investigate the problem of drinking in the province. So, I do not really think that it is an insult to the intelligence of Indians to ask them the question once again, or if it is, it is at least no more insulting than referring the question to yet another royal commission on behalf of the white community. I am not bringing this up to niggle on a small point but to lead to a point which I think is important, and it is this: There is disagreement among the white community in this nation on many issues, and there is disagreement among the Indian community on many issues. It is a good thing that there is. Occasionally, during the course of this debate I have heard mention of this figure called "the Indian" as though every Indian in Canada were somehow merged into a single recognizable entity. This mythical figure we call "the Indian" expresses the unanimous collective thoughts of all the Indians in Canada. This is a false premise and as long as we persist in it in our handling of the important matters of Indian administration, administration by Indians themselves or by the Indian department, we cannot be right. There is no such man as "the Indian" in Canada. Indians are people of immense variety, and there is no reason why they should not disagree. It is true that, for instance, in most of the provinces of Canada there is a single Indian organization. Speaking in terms of fairly large organizations, there are at least four different Indian organizations in British Columbia which have slightly different views on what the course of their people should be. Occasionally these organizations are viewed somewhat critically by the white community. They say: "Why don't you people combine? Why can't you speak for British Columbian Indians with a single voice?"

Some of the people who ask this question sit in this house where there happen to be four political parties, not one of which is in total agreement with any other party. If it is right for us, then it is also right for the Indian, and this leads us a little further. It leads to the question of consultation with the Indians. Let us, and let the minister, recognize the fact that we cannot consult with the Indians of Canada and get one, single, cohesive answer as to what they want. In fact, it is almost an insult to suggest that we can go to the Indians from one side of this nation to the other asking: "Tell us what you want" and assuming that they are all going to tell us the same thing, therefore, it is merely a matter of meeting their requests in greater or lesser degree. This is not to happen. There are great variations even within a single area in my own riding of Coast-Chilcotin. I made a rough calculation a short time ago and I found that there were over 30 reserves in my riding. Many of the people cannot converse with one another except through the medium of the English language because their own languages are of such a vastly different nature.

In the course of the consultation meetings, how many points of view have been put forward on how the Indians feel as to their role as citizens of Canada, citizens of the province, citizens of North America and citizens of what might be called a pan-Indian society? In each case there are at least four distinct views held by the Indians. I should like to quote one from a publication called the "Indian Magazine" which I am sure many hon. members who are interested in this subject receive. Let us see what Chief Max Gros-Louis of Huron Village near Quebec city had to say:

> I can't see the Indians belonging to the provinces, because there's going to be another separation among Indians. We are already separated by the United States. Now if we start separating by provinces, that's going to be the end of the Indian.

That is one man's view. The consultative group has heard from Indians who positively want to be citizens of the province in which they reside. They feel that this is of prime importance to them. They feel that in many provinces of Canada they are being deprived, in greater or lesser degree, of basic rights as provincial citizens. There is a third view among Indians which is that the international border is an artificial line; that it is one which should not apply to them and that the Indian society is not of the nation of Canada nor of the nation of the United States but is a loosely connected society of a single group based on a single culture whose home is North America. There is yet a fourth view held that within Canada the Indian people are not Canadians but are allies of the British Crown; that they are a nation separate within Canada and that their true connection is to the Royal House of Britain.

I am not going to suggest which of these views predominates amongst Indians. I have some ideas, but I do not know whether it is up to me to suggest them at this time. However, I would point out that every one of these views has some legitimacy and every one of them has some followers in Canada. Therefore, whenever I hear that any man, particularly a white man but also an Indian, claims that he knows what all the Indian people of Canada really want, my faith in his knowledge and judgment is diminished. I bring this point forward in connection with the delays in bringing forth the new Indian act and the legislation for an Indian claims commission.

There is one difference between the present administration of the Indian department and those which preceded it. I think it is that we are attempting consultation with the Indian. As the hon. member for Skeena said, we have always claimed we were consulting them, but did we really do it? I can quote a good friend of mine in this regard, Chief Dan George of the Burrard No. 3 reserve. I recall him saying once: "Oh yes, the white man is always coming around and he says to us 'what do you want' but he never waits for us to answer".

I hope that perhaps one time we will wait for the Indian to answer, and we will receive a multitude of replies. Those replies are going to come slowly but surely if we are committed to asking questions and waiting for answers. Then, we cannot arbitrarily say: "Sorry, you are too long in giving your answer. We do not have the time to wait. Here is the new Indian act, take it or leave it". Such a course would be a denial of the fundamental principle, as I understand the minister's remarks, underlying the policy that this department wishes to follow. There are a great many features in it, and I must pass over most of them. It would be ludicrous for me to attempt to review the situation of the Indian in Canada, either historically or at present.

I would not pretend to criticize the record of Canadian white governments in their handling of Indian affairs but at the same time, though speaking from less experience because the period of my close association as a member of parliament has been briefer, I would not attempt to defend all the actions of the present Indian Affairs branch. Like the hon. member for Skeena I have the feeling that it is shot through with a very strong degree of paternalism, and this cannot be good; it must go. I certainly agree that the earlier the Indian Affairs branch can bring about conditions in which it is no longer required, the better it will be for the Indians. There is, however, a point on which I am not clear, though I listened carefully to the hon. member for Skeena in this respect. He was speaking of the Indian Act and it was not clear to me whether or not he was recommending that the Act be abolished. I would be delighted if he would interrupt me and tell me whether or not he advocates the abolition of the Indian Act.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Yes.

Mr. St-Pierre: I wish I could understand his position; I am sure he will answer me on some occasion. I cannot understand it, now. I, too, would like to see the Indian Act abolished but we must realize that we have certain obligations to the Indians of this country by treaty. Some of these treaties we have bent, and others we have broken. Then, as hon. members are aware, there are Indians in British Columbia with whom we have never signed treaties of any kind. Nevertheless, since we have signed treaties and assumed responsibilities to these people, how are these responsibilities to be discharged except through an Indian Act—call it by another name, if you wish. I think the Indian people must themselves surrender these special rights voluntarily. We have no right unilaterally to push aside these agreements and wipe this legislation off the books. It seems to me that whether we call it an Indian Act or something else, we must keep legislation respecting the special rights of the Indian people on the law books of this country until and unless they themselves choose to ask that it be removed.

Mr. Howard (Skeena): Right again. Yes.

Mr. St. Pierre: Am I to understand that the hon. member would be satisfied with a change in the name of the act?

Mr. Howard (Skeena): I would say, "no" to that one.

Mr. St-Pierre: There is one other point I should like to raise, and I feel it involves a moral responsibility on the part of the white majority in this country. There are many Indians who wish to leave the reserves, move into white society and integrate completely, losing their Indian identity. This should be their right. Since in most cases they are disadvantaged people, I believe we have a duty to give them special help in this regard. But what of the Indians who wish to remain Indians, who wish to live on their reserves and lead the traditional lives of their people? Is this not also their right? Do they not have the right, if they choose, to continue to exist as a separate, non-integrated group in Canadian society? It seems to me that both by treaty and in terms of ordinary justice the Indians who choose to remain Indians have the right to do so. Does this necessarily place them in the position of being second class citizens? I believe that throughout most of our history this has been the effect. By choosing to live on the reserves, by choosing to retain the old ways, they have tended to become second class citizens. Surely, the Canadian nation can find some way of guaranteeing that these people can live different lives without obliging them to be poor for the most part, as they are, or poorly educated, or discriminated against in any real way because they are Indians.

Surely, out of our present examination of the Indian Act the most important thing we can bring forward is a recognition on the part of the government, on the part of civil servants and on the part of the ordinary people of Canada that when we meet an Indian we are meeting a person, one individual. And there is every bit as much variety among people of Indian ancestry as there is among people of any other race.

Before I close, I should like to comment on one point made by the hon. member for Skeena. I should like to give my fullest support to his plea for the early setting up of an Indian claims commission. Let us not fool ourselves. The government of this country has neglected to sign treaties such as the Jay Treaty and Treaties 8 and 11 in the north. We have made treaties and broken them. We have failed to make treaties in British Columbia west of the rockies, and in other parts of the north with the Eskimos. This record of doubtful faith, and in some cases of bad and broken faith, is a festering sore in this country. Let us not delay any longer than is necessary before forming an Indian claims commission to review these old disagreements, to patch up old difference and to start us in the 1970s with some of the old hatred and bitterness wiped away. I thank the house for its attention.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): In the past several years, Mr. Speaker, certain changes have taken place in the attitude of Canadians toward the Indian population of this country. Public opinion has been aroused. It has been noticed, perhaps as a result of some publicity, that the Indian people are living in conditions which are not comparable with those experienced by non-Indian Canadians. There is an obvious disparity in their means of living in all aspects—a disparity in housing, in economic status, in opportunities for education, and in opportunities to seek the better things which this country has to offer.

As a result of this change in public opinion under the pressure which has been building during the past couple of years, the Indian affairs branch has decided to take a closer look at the Indian Act in its various aspects and to establish whether some of the difficulties which the Indian people experience today may not be correlated with certain aspects of this legislation. I think it is fair to say that public opinion has become aroused because our Indian population in general is becoming more educated. The more educated Indians have become outspoken and have brought their problems to the attention of the Canadian public.

It might be said of the consultations that were begun last fall and completed in January that that was the first occasion on which Indians had the opportunity to meet a minister of the government and express their views to him directly, instead of letting him know their views through the medium of letters sent by mail. Those consultations led many Indians to believe that there is now hope for them to achieve a status enjoyed by the rest of the population. I had the pleasure of attending a couple of those consultations, one in Nanaimo and one in Edmonton, and was impressed by the fact that the complaints of Indians of different areas were very similar. They also expressed a common fear that the results of those consultations would not live up to their expectations. In other words they felt that, as too often in the past, they might be disappointed.

Speaking to the House of Commons Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development said on November 19, 1968, that Indians—> —must have the same degree of self-governing local institutions as other Canadians. They must have access to the same institutions and programs of government as other Canadians. They must have the opportunities to achieve for themselves their own aspirations.

That statement, at least, holds out hope to our Indians that their lives will improve. I hope the fear Indians have expressed that the consultations will come to nothing are unfounded.

It may be well to examine the most serious problems confronting our Indian peoples. The Indian Act, now being reassessed, generally speaking is too paternalistic and restrictive to allow our Indians to develop properly in our society. As other speakers have said, most Indians are poor, only 25 per cent of employed Indians making more than $2,000 a year. Average per capita income for Indians is $500 a year, compared with $2,500 for other Canadians.

What are the reasons for this disparity? First, because many of our Indians live in isolated communities, they have inadequate opportunities to become educated. Psychologically and sociologically, their education is often inadequate. Also, they do not attain skills necessary to earn a good living. This afternoon the minister said that hon. members should not criticize the government for past inactivity without making constructive suggestions for future programs. I have one or two suggestions for the employment of Indians. My suggestions do not apply to all Indians of this country, but mainly to those of northern Alberta. I am glad the Minister without Portfolio is here to listen to my remarks in this regard.

In the northwestern section of Alberta a new town to be known as Grande Cache will be built within the next couple of years, for the purpose of mining coal. It would seem logical that Indians living in the area should be trained and prepared for employment in the building of this town. They could then be employed in coal mining, once the town has been built up. Possibly such training and retraining may entail co-operation between the Departments of Indian Affairs, Manpower and Regional Development.

As I said a moment ago, lack of education has constituted a serious problem for Indians. The minister has said that Indians must have access to the same sorts of institutions that other Canadians have. May I point out that the community of Fort Chipewyan in the northern part of Alberta, with a population of about 1,500 people, has no high school. The population is largely Indian. How then can the minister say that those Indians should have access to institutions similar to those enjoyed by other Canadians when there is not even a high school for them to attend?

Because many Indians live in isolated areas lack of health services has become a problem. In the north, we have many fairly small settlements, few of which could support a physician. Most of them are serviced by public health nurses or by what are known as nursing stations. A couple of years ago a group of Australians had a song on the Hit Parade. They sang about some sort of flying doctor who was knocked out of the sky by a boomerang. The flying doctor idea is very good, I think. We ought to set up some sort of mobile medical air service to provide improved medical services for Indians in isolated areas. Although the nursing stations can handle many problems, a physicians' help is often invaluable. During my election campaign I visited some of these northern areas with my campaign manager, who introduced me as a physician. It did not take long for me to be surrounded by people complaining of all sorts of illnesses. Eventually I told my manager not to introduce me as a doctor, because I could not look after the medical problems of these people anyway. I did not take my medical bag with me. The point is that by no stretch of the imagination does our Indian community have adequate health services.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) spoke about the problem of Indians and the law. He seemed rather upset by a statement of a previous speaker that all the inmates of one institution in Kamloops consisted of Indians, and refuted that statement. In my hand I hold the booklet entitled, "Indians and The Law" prepared by the Canadian Corrections Association, in August, 1967. Table VII on page 45 indicates that during April, 1966, of 11 females admitted to the Kamloops female section of the western provincial correctional institution, 11 were Indians and Metis. At that time, in that particular institution, 100 per cent of the inmates were Indian or Metis. I do not say this to criticize the hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) for trying to minimize the problem Indians are having with the law. It is certainly a major problem.

I think it is fair to say that in most western correctional institutions more than 50 per cent of the inmates are of Indian extraction. This would indicate there is something wrong with our laws which deal with Indians and their particular crimes. A recommendation in this report indicates that the people who prepared it are very concerned about the problem of Indians and the law. The recommendation, in part, reads as follows:

> Provision of special services in magistrates and justices of the peace courts to ensure that Indian and Eskimo people understand and exercise their rights. At present, most do not understand the nature of the charge against them, the type of implication of plea they may enter, court procedures and terminology, the right to speak on their own behalf or to request legal counsel.

This is one area in which we as a society have failed miserably. We have not taken time to examine the problem sufficiently. Something must be done to prevent Indian and Metis people being sent to jail or prison simply because they do not understand their rights, the courts and how they can defend themselves. This situation must be corrected as soon as possible. Translation services, legal counsel and all facilities required to ensure that justice is properly carried out must be offered to Indian people when they appear in court to face charges of various types.

Indians in the province of Alberta feel they are being unjustly treated with regard to mineral rights. I want to put this on record, Mr. Speaker, because it is important to Indians with whom I am familiar. Many Indian reserves are being explored for oil. Licences are being issued to exploration companies by the government without any consultation with the Indian people. Indians should be entitled to the same royalties as a white farmer. The farmer is able to negotiate an agreement by which he can profit from oil being removed from under his land. The same right does not apply to Indians or Metis living in Metis colonies. This matter must be investigated, and whatever injustice may exist must be corrected.

The problem of poverty is not easy to solve. It is fair to say that poverty has been with man since history was first recorded. Only time can tell if poverty will ever be completely eradicated. Possibly the largest contributing factor to poverty conditions among Indian and Metis people is the fact that they have extremely large families. As I mentioned a few moments ago, the average earning per capita of Indian and Metis people in Canada is approximately $500 a year. I do not have the exact figures from the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, but I think that it is fair to say the average Indian or Metis family consists of five to ten children.

Trying to support five to ten children, send them to school, feed, clothe and provide them with shelter is almost an impossible task. A task of this magnitude would lead the head of a family to despair and discouragement. With the limited skill most of them have, even by working 24 hours a day he could not earn enough to support a family of that size.

In consultations with the Indians, I would suggest it might be appropriate to ask them if they would like to have family planning information distributed to their people. If they are interested, a vigorous program should be instituted. If not, I would suggest the matter be dropped.

I am anxiously awaiting the report of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) which he hopes to discuss at the next consultation meeting to be held in Ottawa. I hope that the Indian people will not be disappointed and that their expectations will be satisfied, at least in part. I hope also after these consultations these people will be made to feel they are part of our country, enjoy the same status as the rest of our citizens and can look forward to a great future.

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): I would be remiss in commencing this speech, Mr. Speaker, if I did not congratulate the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) not only for the contribution which he has made to this debate, but the contribution so happily made to his family unit about a week ago.

One misconception regarding mineral rights on Indian reserves should be clarified. The hon. member suggested that Indians do not benefit from their mineral rights to the same extent as farmers. Mineral rights under reservations are the property of the band who own or occupy the reservation. They are approximately in the same position as farmers who own their mineral rights. This is a considerably better position than the bulk of the farmers who have surface rights only.

In participating in this debate, I do not present myself as any sort of an expert, although it has been my experience to have employed a large number of Indians on construction projects in both the Yukon and Northwest Territories, to have participated with the Musqueam band of Vancouver in the development of their property, and to have enjoyed a more casual relationship with numerous prairie Indians.

The most significant lesson I have learned is that in speaking of Indians we are not considering a homogeneous group, identically motivated and moving as one at the same pace toward universally shared objectives. It should not be surprising that they are as diverse in their capacities, their orientations and their objectives as any other similar sized sampling of people.

The present statute enacted in 1951 contains some very strange provisions. I will refer to one of them. It is section 119:

• (9:10 p.m.)

> An Indian child who
> (a) is expelled or suspended from school, or > (b) refuses or fails to attend school regularly, > shall be deemed to be a juvenile delinquent within the meaning of the Juvenile Delinquents Act.

There we have it; no indictment, no trial, no judge, no jury, just a criminal record. However, in keeping with the non-partisan character of this debate I wish to report in fairness that when that section was enacted in 1951 no spokesman from any party—and all parties today represented in the house were represented then—objected to that section. Today it is a great commentary on the advance in our thinking that obviously no representative of any party in the house would permit a provision such as that to go forward without very serious challenge indeed.

It seems to me that in this approach to Indians as a unit, the fallacy in our entire policy of the past lies. The fatal flaw of our Indian legislation since its inception has been this idea of considering Indians as a unit, rather than people the same as the rest of us. We are fundamentally wrong when we try, in a particular piece of legislation, to deal with all Indians as though they were a homogenous group, because we attempt to identify an average Indian to whom we can relate the legislation when there is really no such thing.

Having done that, we compound the felony, motivated I am sure, by compassion rather than colonialism, by reducing that average Indian to some sort of lowest common denominator to be sure that we do not treat any unjustly in a material sense, and in the process we treat almost all Indians unjustly in the spiritual sense.

The philosophical dilemma is far from new. I will refer here to the House of Commons debates in 1880, volume 2 at page 1990 and 1991. On the one side of the debate Mr. White of East Hastings said in part:

> We are making them believe that the country will support them, and putting them in a position in which they have no credit or standing in the community. We should no longer treat the Indians as children. Something should be done to put them in a position to make them know and feel that they were responsible to themselves and to the country.

On the other side of the debate, Sir John A. Macdonald said:

> You cannot make an agriculturalist of the Indian. All we can hope for is to wean them, by slow degrees, from their nomadic habits, which have almost become an instinct, and by slow degrees absorb them or settle them on the land. Meantime they must be fairly protected.

That was in 1880. Today, almost 90 years later, the same points of view exist.

The fact remains that Indians are now what is fashionably called, "a visible minority". Policies carried on by governments since the first Indian Act was enacted by the United Provinces of Canada in 1865 have made them basically welfare cases. Because they are a visible minority they are visible welfare cases. There is a stigma to that status, and whether or not we are or should still be obsessed by the guilt that was expressed in the debates of 1880, it seems we must now redirect the legislation and the policy behind it. We must abandon paternalism no matter how strong the humanitarian impulse is to retain it. We must instead embrace social and economic integration as our objective, recognizing that a transition period of at least two generations will probably be needed to effect the policy in a substantial way.

Above all, we must orient our policy and the administration of it to individuals, to people, not to norms or averages, because when you deal with human beings there are really no norms or averages. The typical or average Indian is a fiction, a creation of administrative convenience. Continuation of the concept will invalidate any policy, however well conceived in its other dimensions.

I am heartened that even with the handicaps of the existing legislation the present minister and his department appear to have taken a human and a personal view towards the Indians, towards their responsibility. I have every confidence that in the new legislation coming before us as a result of the consultations that are going on today our policy for the Indians will be based on compassion and not paternalism, consultation not direction, and participation not dictation.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I want to compliment the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) on the manner and the strength with which he brought this motion before the house. I also wish to compliment the minister on the energy he has displayed in his job and his approach to his responsibilities.

I have listened to the whole of today's debate. I was particularly interested when reference was made to outstanding Canadian athletes and I would like to call the attention of the house to the fact that we have many outstanding native athletes. I prefer not to refer to the Indian, the Metis or the Eskimo, but to the native people of Canada.

Perhaps I did not understand the hon. member for Skeena correctly but I thought he said we should no longer pay attention to culture and language. I see the hon. member shaking his head, but I understood him to say that. Anyway, it emphasizes the point I wish to make that the minister, this house and the Canadian people should bend every effort to help maintain the language and the culture of the native people of this country. I think the minister appreciates this.

On three particular occasions I have visited what I call native people. The first time I was discouraged. The second was a rather mediocre visit, but the last was a very encouraging visit. Reference has been made to the tide of rising energy among the native people, and to the meetings being held by the minister with them. The last meeting, I understand, was a very good meeting. It was chaired by the minister's associate, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras). At that time there were six persons from Alberta appointed to attend the meeting, but I believe the number now has been reduced to four. I ask particularly why the number should not be six. They would not necessarily all have to be delegates; some could be observers. This would make it possible to have all languages represented. There are two languages which one might say have been left out. I ask the minister very sincerely whether he would consider having six. Two of them could be observers who would pay their own expenses if you like; that would be a matter for the department to decide.

I have experienced great pleasure in visiting the far away—I call them far away, because they are far away from here—native people. I have not been here very long, but I recall a time when the native people had a vote. This gave them not only a vote but also hope. I think the interest that is now being taken here in this house and across the country every day is a very good thing. I have an Indian name of which I am very proud. I cannot pronounce it in the language, but in my language they call me "Weasel Horse." Weasel Horse was a very famous chief who had a good deal to do with enacting Treaty No. 7.

I should like to urge that the minister not only arrange the meeting that was mentioned earlier, but also bring forward the claims commission, or whatever it might be called. I am quite sure that much would be accomplished if this meeting were held quickly. I see no reason for the delay. If necessary it could be a preliminary meeting with perhaps others to follow. I am advised that the native people do not believe the white man because the white man says one thing and something else happens. The first meeting was supposed to have been in January and the second meeting was supposed to have been in March. Now, they have been put off.

What attitude should the native people take under the circumstances? I, myself, would have some question in my mind. I am very sincere in backing up everything that has been said here today. I urge the minister, however, to call this meeting. When I complimented the minister I meant it quite sincerely; but if this situation continues much longer I will have to take a different view of things. As I mentioned, I was very happy to see the conditions when I visited the far North on my last trip. I found that the native population was increasing and that the school population was increasing. I believe there were some 230 persons in a nice new school which was well heated and well lighted. The children there were happy. I believe the grades carried on through grade 6 and possibly grade 7. When speaking to the people I learned that they objected very strenuously to having to send their children one thousand miles away for ten months of the year in order to continue their education after grade 6 or grade 7. The only answer in this regard that I have had from the department is that it is necessary to educate these people where the employment opportunities are. Quite frankly, I disagree with this. I agree with the native parents who want to have their children at home for a few more years.

I believe the department should consider this very carefully. Home ties are no different when we are speaking about the native people than they are for anyone else. The mothers, fathers and children are no different than I, my family and my children. The minister has gone forward with great strength with, shall I say, the foundation laid by previous governments. I must mention this because everyone in Canada knows the roads to resources and northern development programs came about under a previous government. I say again by way of emphasis that I appreciate the way the present minister is carrying out his duty. I should like to remind him, however, of one or two things to which I take exception. I am not in a position to advise a minister, but if I might use the word "advise" I would say that if children are to be educated where the opportunities are he will find difficulty in bringing people from the Arctic Ocean 1,000 miles away. When a native person is 1,000 miles away he is not at home.

Perhaps there should be further development, particularly in respect of transportation, to open up these communities. That is all that is needed. Perhaps we might call it an "icebreaker" to open the Arctic. Others have used submarines, but I would add a word of caution there. I think that with the energy of the present minister this development to which I have referred will not be long in coming, and I say this in spite of the fact that I sometimes wonder about certain policies of the government. Frankly, I see no point in transporting 200 or 300 children a distance of 1,000 miles when they can stay in a comfortable, warm, well lighted school for 9 months in the year. I sincerely trust this development will take place in the north before these children graduate.

There are many other things I wanted to talk about, but by agreement I am cutting my remarks short. May I compliment the mover of the motion in the same way as I complimented the minister in my opening remarks. I trust that my few points will be noted because they are sincere and heartfelt. With that, Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks.

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, may I start by apologizing to any members on the other side whom I may have displaced in rising. May I also join many previous speakers in expressing appreciation at the high tone of the debate that has taken place today. This has been one of the more constructive debates it has been my pleasure to hear in this house. There have been 12 or 13 speakers in the debate this afternoon and this evening, every one of whom I believe has added something constructive to the review and to the considerations we must give in formulating a new policy. I do not think I can cover all of the highlights of the speech of each hon. member, but I will attempt to reply in general and to answer quickly one or two questions.

The immediately preceding speaker, known as "Weasel Horse", the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Gundlock), expressed concern at the delay in the national consultation meeting. In the interests of saving time, may I simply refer him to the remarks of my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) earlier today, and also assure the hon. member that we are giving consideration to the question of the number of representatives from Alberta. Some difficult problems are posed but we are going to be very open minded and do all we can to satisfy all concerned. I am sure that, with good will on all sides, a reasonable solution will be found.

The hon. member for Calgary South (Mr. Mahoney), pointed out one rather agonizing section of the Indian Act which by itself, if for no other reason, indicates the great need for change. The hon. member referred to the Indian child who misses school occasionally and is automatically labelled a juvenile delinquent without due process of law.

The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) had some worthwhile comments to make, though too many for me to refer to them all. He referred to the need for family planning. I was impressed by the way he put it, that we should ask the Indian people what they wanted, rather than in any sense imposing something upon them. He also referred to flying doctors. I think it is fairly well known that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has been negotiating with the Canadian Medical Association and with regional and provincial medical associations to see whether a voluntary roster system could be instituted that would bring better service to Indian communities in more remote areas.

The hon. member for Coast Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) made reference to the various differences of opinion existing among Indian people from coast to coast. I hope to refer to his rather interesting comments later.

The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand) made a very pertinent observation when he talked of the need for all of us to recognize the great progress that is being made by many Indian people. So often in watching television I am concerned that, while undeniably poverty among the Indian people is shown, and while unfortunately there is a high rate of alcoholism and a rising rate of crime among the Indian people, a balanced picture is not presented. The other side of the coin, is not shown indicating the great progress that has been made by more and more of our Indian people. I think it is important that we give a balanced picture, and certainly that was one of the many contributions the hon. member made in his remarks.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) made several constructive suggestions with which I cannot deal in detail. One of them was the thought—a thought that we are considering—that there should be established Indian development corporations; that there is a general need for decentralization and for economic development as a whole. I also join with the hon. member in expressing my distaste of what I saw on the television program "The Public Eye" to which he referred, when a rather prominent citizen made such a bigoted comment about Indians, their blood content, and their difficulties with alcohol. I think this program made all of us who are at all sensitive to the situation cringe.

The hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and others referred to the need for a higher priority to be given by the government in meeting the problems of our native Indian people.

Hon. members will probably be surprised to hear me say that the motion that began this debate is a good one. I think the wording is appropriate and set the tone of the debate, which has stayed on a fairly high plane.

The corollary to this motion is for the government, I hope helped by the opposition, to not pursue a course, whether innocently, mistakenly or deliberately, that will meet the objectives and cause the results that are inherent in the words contained in the motion. We must, of course, remove and eliminate the destructive effects of paternalism by removing paternalism. We must eliminate discrimination, and discrimination there is in this country. In our course of action, we must restore human dignity, respect, pride and self-confidence to a group of people who have been alienated by many factors, not the least of which have been the policies of the past.

In his elaboration the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) went back—and this is what has impressed me most of all in this debate—to examine the basic assumptions upon which our policy should be founded. He questioned those basic assumptions in the comments or partial solutions that he offered.

Specifically the criticism that is inherent in the motion before us today is contained in an expression of cynicism as to whether the government is going to take action. All I would say about that is that personally I am absolutely convinced that it will not be very long before action is taken and that there will be a constructive change in policy. I appreciate the fact—and many people have made this point today—that it is no longer a time for sweet words and speeches; it is a time for action.

The other inherent criticism in the motion, referred to by the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Simpson) and others, was the delay in announcing policy. I, and I know my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and other colleagues in the cabinet, are also impatient to take the necessary action and to move on this whole situation. When my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) discussed with me the assignment to work with them in identifying the problems and to recommend to them and the cabinet possible avenues for change, I felt it was necessary to charge out because, in the first place, one of the more specific matters to accomplish was the immediate revision of the Indian Act.

The first meeting which I attended, in Yellowknife last July, taught me very quickly that perhaps speed was required but haste was not a good idea. There were many aspects of this whole situation that had to be examined in depth after consultation with and listening to the views of Indian people. I think the real point is that we must move on a timetable that is acceptable to the Indian people. We must not try to meet some artificial deadline that might be suggested, and in the process fail to apply the wisdom that the situation needs after 300 years of neglect and incorrect policies.

I think it would be presumptuous of us as a government if, after seven months of consultation with Indian people across this country and an exchange of views such as we had in the consultations ending only four or five weeks ago, we had presented immediately to this house, the Indian people and the nation a package policy. If we had done that, I think it would have indicated to all concerned that we had made up our minds long ahead of time and were not really listening to the recommendations and points of view expressed during the 17 consultation meetings just ended. We had to have time and we must continue to take the time, to digest all the views and opinions expressed in the last eight months. I cannot see the wisdom or value to anybody in proceeding with a new policy without the input that is necessary from all these consultation meetings.

There has been criticism of the consultation meetings. I think the degree of criticism is in many ways far from justified. These meetings were far from perfect, but we should not go to the other side of the spectrum and say they were hopeless, useless or, as some have said, a facade. They were open meetings. It may have been specifically said that the purpose of the consultation meetings was simply to examine the proposed revisions of the Indian Act. But from the very first meeting, and in every subsequent meeting, there was no attempt on anybody's part, whether he was a minister or not, to suppress any point of view expressed about any matter bothering the Indian delegates who attended.

These meetings covered the whole range of local problems, regional problems, national problems, the Indian's suspicion of government, their cynicism, treaty rights and aboriginal rights; in fact, the whole gamut and range of frustrations and grievances that has built up over the centuries in respect of the non-Indian, Indian relationship. So, there was no suppression. Although these meetings may not have reached all the objectives we might have had in mind, I think it was a very valuable exercise and within a short time there will be in the policies that will be announced some indication of the value that came from those meetings.

As most hon. members know, there were 17 meetings. I believe all but one of them was attended by a minister, either my colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development or myself. Of the 17 meetings I know my colleague was at eight, and I was at ten. There was only one, in Prince George, which we regret we did not attend. This was due to circumstances which arose very suddenly and could not be avoided.

There are in this country 558 Indian bands, and in those 17 consultation meetings 530 were represented. I think that is a pretty good representation. This brings to mind one of the problems we face and with which we must deal. We must have understanding in this respect, and perhaps some adjustment from the Indian people themselves. The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) referred to the fact that Indian people do not view representation, the delegation of authority and the appointment of spokesmen, in the same manner as non-Indians. I have learned during the last few months that there is a tendency in the Indian community to seek consensus and unanimity. Often no one person is designated as the spokesman for a group of people. Often at these consultation meetings an Indian delegate would rise right at the beginning, to make it clear, and say: I speak for myself. In their gentle, effusive and humble way they would indicate that they were not taking unto themselves the authority to speak on behalf of other people.

There were many things wrong with the consultation meetings. There was insufficient opportunity for the Indians to consult amongst themselves beforehand. I think we have learned a great deal from that. At the same time, I think it was an exercise in consultation the like of which has never before been conducted by any government with any group of people in this country.

We are embarking upon new policies. New policies will succeed, obviously, only if we insist in seeking the right answers with clarity and consistency in both the definition of the objectives we are seeking and the selection of the means of realizing them. In this process we must all ask ourselves certain basic, fundamental questions. Then, we have to try and answer those questions. Hopefully, from the questions and the answers will come enlightened policy. Some of these questions are: In what way are Indians excluded from our society? In what ways have they been disadvantaged? How did they come to be that way? What obstacles stand in the way of their achieving equal citizenship and full participation? Then the obvious question is: What actions and measures can be expected to overcome these obstacles?

I think in answering these questions it is important to examine the jurisdictional, legal, administrative, social and economic factors which shape the present status of Indian people and native peoples in our society. We must look at the special legal status of these people. We must recognize and consider the poverty aspects involved, their alienation, cynicism, mistrust of government and obvious isolation from the larger society.

The hon. member for Skeena referred this afternoon to the supposed basis for federal government acceptance of responsibility in this field. He referred to section 91, paragraph 24, of the British North America Act, which assigns the making of laws, of legislation respecting "Indians and lands reserved for the Indians" to the jurisdiction of the federal government. I do not know that this, to the exclusion of change, means that it has to be totally, utterly and exclusively the responsibility of the federal government and under its jurisdiction.

Anyway, on that assumption many years ago, and as a consequence, the Indian Act was passed, an administrative structure was created and special policies were developed for this particular ethnic group. Further, the federal government became involved in the provision of a complex set of services for Indians which other Canadians receive from provincial and local governments.

The basic source for defining the policy of the federal government has been the Indian Act. As hon. members know, it is a comprehensive act which defines who shall be considered an Indian and how one can give up Indian status. In so doing, it establishes a special legal category defining certain rights and imposing certain restrictions. It contains provisions dealing with the reserve system, a system of local government, and special sections relating to taxation, liquor, inheritance and education. Although the federal administrative structure, the department of Indian affairs, stems from the Indian Act, a growing number of important departmental programs are marginal or peripheral to the Indian Act: welfare, health, community development, economic development, manpower programs etc.

This has been referred to before as well today, and I will bring it up again. The fact is that the treaties signed with Indians add another dimension to Indian-government relations. Almost all Indians express strong resentment at the failure of the government to honour and fulfill treaty and other obligations and promises. The most important of these pertain to hunting, fishing and trapping, and to the provision of land.

Hon. members have made reference today to the fact that most social and economic indicators show that the majority of Indians live in sub-marginal conditions and that relative to the rest of the population the gap in income levels, health care, educational achievements and occupational skills, while improving, is actually growing wider between the Indians and the non-Indian society. There is a significant factor explaining poverty among native peoples in Indian communities, and that is their geographical dispersion and, in many cases, the remoteness of native communities. In addition, their limited mobility has contributed to making employment and participation in the economy difficult. As a consequence, Indians have been isolated and excluded from the larger society, and the exercise of their basic human rights is seriously restricted.

We have to recognize also that cultural barriers and the insensitivity of the non-Indian society to the heritage and values of Indian life have played and continue to play a major role in excluding native peoples from the mainstream of Canadian life.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I regret to have to interrupt the minister but his time has expired, unless there is unanimous agreement to let the minister continue.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we would like to give the minister additional time. Perhaps before it is ten o'clock I might also indicate we believe there is general agreement to allow the house to sit an extra hour tonight so that two or three more members might take part in this important debate. I mention it now so that in case there is not unanimous consent we could do it by way of a motion. However, perhaps there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Speaker: Is there agreement for the house to sit until eleven o'clock this evening?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It is so ordered. I believe the order should include a reference to the adjournment proceedings.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They can be deferred.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, through you I would like to thank the hon. members for their courtesy in letting me go over my time. I was wound up, and I had no idea the clock was moving that quickly.

I was commenting on the fact that I think we also have to take into consideration, in the evolution of the new policy, the fact that there is an insensitivity of the non-Indian society to the values of Indian life and that this has been a factor in excluding Indians from the mainstream. These barriers are most easily observed at two crucial points. If they could be overcome we could go a long way to correcting the situation.

These two points are where Indians come into contact with our industrial society, in educational institutions and in the labour market. Many native students enter the school system with obviously different cultural orientations and often limited or no knowledge of English or French. The educational process, one of the major instruments of socialization in any society, proves to be for the majority of Indians a maladaptive experience. In terms of getting a job, in many ways the traditional Indian way of life has not prepared the individual for occupational roles in the Canadian labour market. The new demands that they have to face—and so often they face them with a lack of understanding on the part of the people with whom they are mixing—are hard to adapt to and frequently force the Indian person into accepting sporadic, low skill employment instead of a career oriented occupational role.

I believe, and I know my colleague joins me, that in the past Indians have not been adequately consulted nor has their point of view been sufficiently considered in the formulation of policy and the application of programs affecting their lives. Regardless of the type of program, such paternalism and non-involvement only encourages apathy and reduces the effectiveness of any measure because there is a resulting lack of acceptance.

This is a brief exposé of the tangled web of jurisdictions, constitutional problems and contradictory objectives. That web must be untangled. I doubt there is any one single group of actions that will provide instant solutions to the deep social problem that we face with regard to our native people. However, one fact is clear. There must be change, and change there will be. Again I congratulate the hon. member for Skeena and I agree with him that in order to provide meaningful change we must go back to the basic assumptions.

The alternatives—and I just throw these out without commitment because, as hon. members know, we are not in a position to delineate or define our policy—will obviously range from a tremendous increase in the existing structure with more budget applied to it and more people to do more of those kind of things on the one hand, to an alternative similar to the one implied by the hon. member for Skeena, or perhaps some alternatives in between these two. But whatever decision is made as to the basic objective, we must be very careful in analysing, and seeing with all the wisdom that we possess, the consequences that will flow once we have identified the objective we want to pursue. Whatever that solution will be, it must take into account the fact of the poverty among the Indian people. It must given consideration to treaties and rights and the views and attitudes of Indians toward treaties and rights. It must take into consideration and counteract the deeply rooted alienation that exists among the Indian people.

The other point which we must take into account and which has been mentioned by many hon. members is that because of the diversity of opinions and diversity of problems—which incidentally are similar to those found in almost any comparable sized group in Canada, whatever their origin or their racial background—we must be very flexible in our solutions. I do not think we can have one single approach to this.

In conclusion, let me say with all the conviction I can that whatever the solution may be it cannot be unilaterally imposed upon the Indian people. We must take every precaution to ensure that there is consultation and joint effort of the Indian people and the governmental people, whatever level of government is involved. There must be consultation every step of the way. We are fortunate now, as perhaps we would never have been five, ten or fifteen years ago, to recognize that there is great Indian leadership emerging in the Indian community. It is coming from the youth, but all the Indian people are awakening, and through consultation, through their own efforts, through conversations, they are becoming aware of the disparities between their lives and those of the rest of Canadian society. And they want to do something about them. We do have time to make meaningful changes and move along with them. I am encouraged by this debate to feel that this approach will be a non-partisan approach and I think, this, plus all the actions which have been taken by government, will yield solutions which will at least start us along the right path.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I think the step taken by the house a few minutes ago in extending this debate is a measure of the concern which is felt about this subject by members in all parts of the house. I am pleased that the debate was extended in order to provide further opportunity for discussion of this important matter.

I wish to say also that I listened with great interest to the Minister without Portfolio, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Andras). I think he demonstrated an understanding in depth of the problems with which we are grappling in this area. I express the hope tonight that the understanding he demonstrated will be translated into legislative action and government programs and also that these will be followed by adequate implementation. Certainly, such measures will have the full support of members in this quarter of the house.

I think there is no denying that in the past there has been a significant shortfall as between plans and programs with respect to Indians and the achievements which have resulted from them. The same applies to programs and plans with respect to our Eskimo population. I could go into a lengthy analysis of this aspect, but whatever the reasons I think this failure must also be taken into account when we are considering future programs and policies. It is a sad thing for Canadians that this house should find itself today in a position where the social and economic situation of a group of people identified by their race has deteriorated to the point at which some hon. members have found it necessary to draw special attention to it by way of the motion now before us. It is a fact that the situation of the Indian people in Canada today is a national disgrace. The problems faced by Indians were underlined forcibly by the Economic Council in its most recent annual report. As set out on page 121 the Council stated:

> No discussion of poverty in Canada can avoid making special reference to the Indian, Eskimo and Métis members of our society. A few simple statistics tell a brutal story. One is that the average life expectancy of an Indian woman in Canada is 25 years. Another is that the infant mortality rate among Eskimos is about 293 deaths per thousand live births, more than ten times the infant death rate for the population as a whole.

These are not my figures; these are the figures of the Economic Council of Canada which is certainly a reputable organization with the necessary technical skills to produce accurate figures.

I might also draw attention to what is contained in a brief prepared for submission to the national Indian advisory board some three years ago. This is a statement by the Indian affairs branch submitted to the federal-provincial conference on poverty. It dealt with the health of the Indian people and we find that the average age at death of Indian males in 1963 was 33.31 years, and of Indian females, 34.71 years. The document goes on to tell us that the national average ages at death in 1963 were 60.5 for males and 64.1 for females. I might also draw attention to the summary of conclusions reached by the Economic Council, because I think these words are worth putting on record. The council recognized it did not have full capability to cover this field completely through its own operations but, it drew on the experience of many organizations which have given much study to this question.

On this basis, the council came to some conclusions to be drawn in connection with the problems we have been discussing tonight. The Economic Council's report reads, on page 123:

> (1) Indians and Eskimos are treated too much as a special group in ways which exclude them from many of the ordinary provisions of public policy—

(2) Particular efforts will be required to help those Indians, Eskimos, and Métis who are striving to integrate themselves into the larger society—

(3) A third major area of consensus is the need for a "community development" approach to the problems of education, individual development, adaptation to the larger environment, and community organization—

(4) It is clear that however much can be done to develop economic activity on reservations and in other places where significant groups of native peoples live, a continuing substantial migration to urban areas must be expected, notably in Western Canada—

(5) It would also appear useful to initiate an immediate study of federal and provincial legislation and administration practices affecting native peoples.

As has been noted, the standard of debate has been high. We must compliment the hon. member for Skeena for his part in it. He is a recognized authority on matters we have been discussing tonight. I think, nevertheless, it is clear that a common dialogue is developing on this matter. We have had fine speeches this afternoon and this evening but, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) said, we need action, not words. We must be careful to define what we mean by action. It is not just a case of spending money or of invoking special programs for this group. It is not just doing things for our Indian, Eskimo and Metis peoples. Our actions involve an intricate, subtle and highly complex process of interaction and development. The federal government is the agency on the spot, holding the ball. In developing its policies it must take into account the history of the conflict of white and Indian peoples, the history of the established branch of government dealing with Indians; its traditions, patterns of operation and so on, as well as the fact that there is segregation in many parts of Canada. The Government must also consider the many economic and social changes taking place in our society.

We cannot blame the federal government as such for our past history in this regard. It is a millstone which must be borne by all in Canada. The federal government has a basic constitutional responsibility to deal with these problems and, in reality, the provinces must also enter the picture.

Why did the hon. member for Skeena introduce the motion before the house, Mr. Speaker? The purpose is not to go over past history. We need to figure out where we are going. We must formulate policies that will lead to advances in this field. We need to avoid the fallacy of just measuring advances on their own merits. It is not a question of whether more people are receiving specified levels of education. The question is whether these advances are keeping pace with the change in times. The problem does not involve money alone. A great deal of money is being spent, and is bringing about great improvements in certain aspects of our population. The question we must ask ourselves is, are we doing an adequate job. Are we serving the short run and long run aspirations of our Indian peoples?

Obviously, many members of the department concerned are competent, dedicated, and are trying to do a good job. But they operate within an institutional framework which stifles any efforts towards fundamental change. The motion has been brought before the house because many of us feel disturbed about what has been happening during the past year. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and other members of his party raised the expectation of our Indians when they said the Indian Act would be reviewed and that consultations might take place. Preparations for these consultations were undertaken and a booklet containing 34 questions was prepared. Incidentally, I believe all these questions were prepared for the department by the Indian Advisory Board. As I understand the situation, this is true. All the questions which were placed before the consultation meetings did originate with the particular body, but I would like to know if all the questions requested by the Indian advisory group were included. My information is that they were not, and that some of the exclusions made a significant difference. The approach to these questions was disturbing because it involved a detailed examination. The approach involved simply making revisions and slight changes to the status quo. Consultations were held with varying degrees of success. I want to commend the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) for his effective and very hard work in this regard. He assured the Indian people no changes would be made in matters affecting them without adequate consultations. I fully believe the minister said this in good faith.

Late last fall the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) announced an administrative reorganization. It became obvious there had been no consultation. Protests were made by representatives of Indian organizations. The Minister without Portfolio was put on the spot. He made some rather strong public statements regarding the government and what had happened. I will not at this point say whether he used the best possible judgment with regard to the specific words he used, but nevertheless the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development replied once more that these were only administrative changes. It became obvious from sources such as the press that the minister was called on the carpet. Eventually, there was an announcement that the lines of authority were clear, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was in charge and would be the one to decide what changes would be made to the Indian Act.

I suggest this was more than an administrative change announced by the minister. It involved community development programs. There was a reshuffling of the administrative structure. As pointed out by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) previous to that the Indian-Eskimo Association had requested that community development programs be turned over to Indian people and Indian organizations. This is a policy matter and would be a fundamental break with the past. There are responsible Indian organizations in Canada today, with capable leaders, who have a rapidly developing capacity. I suggest the first step which should be taken should be to give these organizations the opportunity to manage programs of this sort and to make decisions on these programs. The fundamental principle involved is that of self-determination. With respect to the Indian Act, there is a possible question of semantics involved.

There is no suggestion that treaty, legal and moral obligations made by Canada in the past must be honoured. This must be provided in the legislative framework, under whatever name the particular legislative measure might assume. A fundamental change in approach is needed and the paternalism evident in the past must be dropped. There appears to be more support for this view in all corners of this house. We need to make sure that self-determination is made possible for people of Indian ancestry. This could lead to various patterns in programs and activity. It does not mean that all Indian people will lead the same sort of lives. Involved with this principle of self-determination is the fact that people can live the type of lives they want. This is a fundamental principle to recognize. Furthermore, we need to remove the legal disabilities under which Indian people have to live at the present time.

The fundamental points we have to keep in mind are, first, it must be recognized that Indian people have the right of self-determination. The implications of this principle are that not only does it give Indian people the full right of integration into the community and society as we know it, but also that it gives them the right to live as they wish to live. The right to make their own decision must be recognized.

Second, we must recognize commitments made by Canada as a nation to Indian people. This involves full recognition of commitments regarding land, health and other services. These rights need to be honoured as long as the Indian people collectively or individually wish to retain them.

Third, we need to get away from the centralized control of administration which has for too long featured our Indian affairs programs. Many hon. members will be aware of some of the incredible stories involved in the centralized control and bureaucracy which Indian people encounter at every turn and in almost every day of their lives.

Fourth, we need to ensure that there is integration with the community at large. For too long and under too many jurisdictions, the basic approach has been one of having special programs designed for Indian and Eskimo people. In some instances this cannot be changed overnight, but certainly we do need to adopt a fundamentally new approach.

In my own province of Saskatchewan, there are some 40,000 people of Indian ancestry who are regarded as treaty Indians. There are nearly 40,000 others of mixed ancestry, some of them referred to as Indian people and some as Metis people. There are eight Indian reserves in my own constituency, and a large number of Indians living in the city of Regina. In the past, they lived largely on

In some parts of the province there are still treaty obligations which have not been honoured. In southern Saskatchwan the reserves are largely on agricultural land. The people have lived in a basically rural atmosphere which provided a fairly stable form of existence for some years. The economic instability of the 1930's and the 1940's the political instability and in fact some of the social upheavals of this period, produced great changes. From that time on it became increasingly difficult for people of Indian ancestry to cope with the problems they encountered.

On our reserves we have agricultural land that has not been developed. I can cite many instances and examples where this could be considered to be solely due to the smothering paternalism that has been a feature of public policy in the past. Much of this land is rented out to people off the reserves who have made arrangements with the Indian affairs branch, and with very little consultation with the Indian people themselves. They are the ones who are now using this land.

It is true that some development projects have been carried out. There are a couple of projects in my own constituency at the present time involving community pastures on the Muskowekwan and Gordon Indian reserves. I have some details which I obtained from the government on this matter and I find that Indian people do not have the necessary resources to make full use of this pasture at the present time. Indians will be given first claim to the use of this pasture, but the answer to my question also stated that Indians do not now have sufficient cattle to fully stock the pastures and so the remaining capacity will be made available to people of non-Indian ancestry. What will happen to Indian people when they do wish and are able to make use of these community pastures? These facilities will then be used under contractual arrangements made with people outside the Indian reserve. It is also clear that these pastures will be managed by other than Indian people. They will be managed by government departments and agencies. Again, I say this is the type of thing that is still going on for which there is no need. This is another reason we felt we had to bring this motion before the house.

• (10:20 p.m.)

In conclusion, therefore, I suggest that we do need fundamental changes in our approach to the Indian Act. A meaningful program involving a new approach of self-determination for the Indian people should be started now. Tonight we are not dealing with personalities, but we are dealing with the welfare of people.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am afraid the hon. member's time has expired.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Speaker, could I have leave to conclude my remarks?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there general agreement?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: If the achievement in the future falls short of the objective, I believe the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) must examine all aspects of the situation fully. I have been very closely involved in Indian matters and matters of concern to the Indian people. I sincerely hope effective action will be taken to deal with these problems in the very near future.

Mr. Martin P. O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in the debate this evening. I should like to express my appreciation to the members of the house for extending the sitting. I am sure members will excuse me if I do not make any preliminary remarks because I should like to raise one particular issue. I know there are other speakers who wish to follow. Before I get into that issue, however, I should like to say I believe what the Indian people are saying to us today is that in their view the basic policy objective must be full and equal citizenship. There are many obstacles in the path to that objective. The one to which I should like to draw the attention of the members this evening has already been mentioned. It is the role of the provinces in assisting Indians to lead contemporary lives as Canadian citizens.

I think one of the most serious obstacles of all to a contemporary life for Indians is our misconception of the role of the province; that is, it is commonly thought Indians are the sole responsibility of the federal government. This misconception of the direct role and responsibility of the province is shown by governments themselves, by most Indian people and by the general public. It results in a special intense relationship of the Indian people with the federal government and a severely attenuated relationship with the provinces. This I think is an indefensible and discriminatory arrangement which denies equality, is a bar to integration and, I believe, is without foundation in the constitution. It results from historical reasons and is reinforced by current political pressures on the federal government to do more. The more Ottawa does—and I am one of those who thinks it should do a great deal more—the more it tends to lock Indian citizens into an unequal and separate existence.

My argument is that this unacceptable division of federal-provincial functions is neither required nor justified by the constitution or by Indian treaties. It should neither be tolerated by Indians nor by the general public. A more complete statement of the legal basis of the argument than I can give can be found in the Hawthorn-Tremblay report of 1960 and particularly the writings of Dr. Kenneth Lysyk of the Faculty of Law of the University of British Columbia. When one looks at the constitution one finds there is no doubt at all that under the British North America Act, section 91 paragraph 24, it is the federal parliament that has the exclusive authority to legislate for Indians and lands reserved for Indians. It should be noted that this section does not read "Indians on lands reserved for Indians" but by its wording indicates that parliament may legislate for Indians whether reserve based or not, as well as for lands reserved for Indians.

I want to discuss in the short time available Indians only, since Indian lands are in a different and special category, being singled out in a way that health, education and other matters are not singled out. It has been forcefully argued, and I think correctly, that whereas the provinces cannot legislate specifically for Indians as such, there is nothing in the constitution that says that provincial laws of general application—for example, in the field of health which is normally a provincial responsibility—should not apply to Indian persons as to all other provincial residents. It is only that kind of legislation that is clearly for Indians that is reserved to Ottawa. When the federal parliament legislates specifically for Indians, it can and does intrude on fields normally reserved for the provinces, though at the expense of perpetuating a specialized monopoly of services to a separated class of Canadians identified on ethnic and cultural grounds.

Even in this latter case, when the federal government does legislate it is not mandatory for it to do so; it is simply permissive for it to legislate in order to implement federal policies in Indian affairs. The Indian Act and its regulations is such a piece of federal legislation which only the federal government can pass under the constitution, since it is directed specifically and only to Indians as defined under the act. A province could not pass an Indian Act, but the general laws of a province and its programs and policies can none the less apply to Indians in the province within limits.

Therefore, I think it is important to question where those limits lie and how flexible and responsive they can be to Indian needs. It is important to an Indian future for Indians to determine to what extent it would be in their interest to alter the federal-provincial balance or to mix it. This federal-provincial balance may be altered, for example, more in the direction of the province, as is happening in several provinces under Indian pressure, such as Saskatchewan and Manitoba.

Some significant flexibility does appear available so far as the constitution is concerned, except in respect of Indian lands. This is an exclusive federal responsibility. Firm limitations on provincial legislative competence do exist, however, in two sources other than in the constitution. These are found in the treaties and the Indian Act. An example of the conflict of provincial law with treaty provisions is found in the fact that the provincial game laws do not apply. Nor are provincial laws applicable if they conflict with the Indian Act or its regulations; that is, whenever the federal parliament has already occupied a given field with Indian legislation.

These limitations on provincial competence are thus significant, but they relate largely to the extent to which the federal government has already occupied a field which might already be under provincial jurisdiction by devising its own Indian policy in that field. Therefore, in many cases, except with respect to treaty provisions, the removal of some of the limitations on provincial legislative competence rests with the federal government by way of change in the Indian Act. Perhaps, therefore, new options will become available to Indians and governments as a result of current consultations with the Indians with respect to amendments to the Indian Act.

When a consensus is reached on changes in the act, it may well be—and I suspect this will be the case—that substantially greater automomy will devolve upon Indian band governments. They may then choose, under the less confining provisions of a revised Indian Act, to relate themselves more directly to provincial laws and services. They may gradually relinquish or modify the special services provided exclusively by the federal government.

Indians will properly ask whether a shift in federal-provincial patterns of responsibility can take place to their advantage without adversely affecting rights that they regard as theirs. I believe the answer is yes. They will ask whether the federal constitutional responsibility would thereby be reduced. I believe the answer is no; there would be no change.

At this point I would like to say two things, Mr. Speaker. I think, first, the federal government can be faulted for a failing to clarify the true constitutional position to the public and to conduct intensive discussions of the problems and options with Indians and the provinces. In the absence of consultation, Indian communities are left vaguely uneasy about changes they find it difficult to discern. If I had had time earlier, Mr. Speaker, I would have stressed the very important role of a task force in developing a new consensus and a new policy orientation.

I would refer again to the need, as the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) or the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) reminded us this afternoon, of high level federal-provincial conferences to activate, with Indian consent, the unfulfilled responsibilities of the provinces. In addition, I think it was never more important than now to clarify Indian rights under treaties, and aboriginal rights where there are no treaties, for example with respect to hunting and fishing rights and with respect to claims to title or interest in lands. It is essential to restore rights that have been abridged, and to meet obligations that have been unfulfilled.

The time is overdue for settling outstanding claims, whether aboriginal or treaty, through either direct negotiation, which has much to commend it, through development of agreements or a claims commission, with compensation where appropriate. It seems to me, moreover, that if the consultative process is to be comprehensive, flexible and genuine, the question of how to settle past grievances and claims, including the technique of the proposed claims commission, should be part of that consultation process, since only by consultation on these methods can the claims and needs of the future be related to the claims of the past. Only in this way, I think, can a developmental momentum be generated and maintained.

Consultation concerning treaty rights should be part of the discussions concerning the role of the provinces, and both should be part of the consultations concerning development programs for a new future. I am stressing that the consultation process must be comprehensive if all of the options open to Indians and government are to be usefully examined.

I think it is fair to conclude that the federal government, with Indian consent, has considerable freedom to determine the kind and scope of responsibilities it will assume under the grant of constitutional power in section 91 of the British North America Act and under the resulting Indian Act. It is evident, I think, that only if the provinces, under Indian and public pressures, change their attitude and expand their legitimate functions will it be possible to talk of successful participation by Indian citizens in contemporary Canadian life at all levels.

Reserve communities should not remain federal islands within provincial boundaries, frustrating a people in search of equality through development. If and when a province extends its general programs and services to Indian residents, whether on or off reserves, it does not assume a responsibility that constitutionally belongs to another government and consequently should not be paid for doing so. It is simply fulfilling its own responsibilities. No doubt a case can be made for cost-sharing on historical grounds or grounds other than constitutional.

It seems possible to resolve the question of a more federal-provincial mix of functions and services on utilitarian grounds, because treaty and constitutional barriers are slight. The particular mix in any given case at any given time is a matter of policy and agreement, not a matter of the constitution. The choice in altering the governmental balance lies largely with the Indian people.

Mr. R. J. Orange (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank hon. members here for agreeing to extend this sitting tonight so that those of us who wanted to say something about the Indian people of Canada would have the opportunity of doing so.

At the outset, I would like to say something about the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chretien) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras). I think that as a result of the approach of both these ministers to Indian affairs, to consultation with the Indian people of Canada and to the relationship between the Indian people and the government of Canada, we have entered a new era in this field. I believe that both these ministers have taken upon themselves a heavy responsibility, as we realized today when we listened to members on all sides of this house, each with his own idea, his own theories and his own approach to this very perplexing matter and to how it should be resolved within our confederation. I think both these ministers have shown a great deal of courage, a number of new ideas and a lot of strength.

Having followed the discussions in this chamber today, as a member of parliament I have the feeling that those of us who sit in the House of Commons as Canadians, many of us representing the Indian people, are, like many other Canadians, concerned about our first citizens. But I think that with a little fear and trepidation, many of us ask ourselves whether or not we are able to offer much that is constructive. I listened with bewilderment to some of the suggested solutions to our problems with respect to the Indians. We can look back to our history and see that all has not been well and that many of the policies adopted have been based on a concept that is not acceptable in today's society. I could not help but feel again today that we who represent many people offer solutions which are not really solutions which the Indian people themselves want. I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Coast-Chilcotin (Mr. St. Pierre) who said that there is not just one solution, there are many. I listened to others who suggested that in their own areas there were particular problems which were not necessarily part of a national problem. May I suggest for a moment that one of the things that we have to do as legislators in Canada is to recognize that we cannot offer the solutions, that we must look to the Indian people themselves to come up with their own ideas and thoughts, and that it is not an easy thing for us to be able to do this. I think that if we suggest for one minute that the Indian Act is not something that we can amend, we will look like people who know not what they say. For example, I think of the problems of treaties No. 8 and 11 in the north on which the Indian people have many ideas. I think also of the concern that people have about the treaties which were signed by their forefathers only 45 or 47 years ago, and whether they have had any real effect on their lives.

The fact that the federal authority has not implemented certain aspects of these treaties has I believe destroyed some of the faith which the Indian people have in the great white father. In this process of communicating with the Indian people and establishing good faith I believe it is incumbent on us as politicians to identify these problems positively. But in the name of Heaven let us not use them for the sake of political advantage. I cannot but be concerned when I listen to continued attacks on a particular administration. I am thinking in terms of the Akaitcho Hall affair which the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis) has raised in this house on several occasions. I respect the hon. member for having brought this up in the first instance but I am not persuaded he should continue to play on it when those of us who are acquainted with this situation know there are forces at work within the community to change it. Let us take this kind of situation out of the public domain. Let us not play on the feelings of the Indian people or of the Eskimo people or of the Métis people or of any other group.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: How would you change things, then?

Mr. Orange: I have lived in Yellowknife, the location of this institution. Maybe all is not well. As I said, I respect the hon. member for having brought this matter to the attention of the house, but I believe the administration of the hostel felt they could handle the situation once it had been brought out into the open.

In line with what I was saying a minute ago, I do not wish to pursue this subject. There are other areas going beyond the Indian Act and an Indian claims commission where a dialogue could be established with the Indian people. We could help achieve this by doing things, by building homes, educating the young people and developing the economic potential of the reserves, something which is extremely important. I believe the minister is aware of this. I believe he wants to do these things. I suggest to him, to the department and to this house that with the continuing goodwill shown by this assembly toward the Indian people of Canada we can accomplish something realistic, beyond partisan considerations, beyond the politics with which many of us are so familiar.

There are many other things which I am sure all of us would like to say. One area which is most important in terms of the goodwill which must be established between the Indian people and the other people of Canada involves enforcement of the Migratory Birds Convention. The Indian people, in accordance with their treaties, believed in their hearts and minds that they had the right to hunt and shoot the animals and birds of the land and the sky. They felt they had this right for as long as the sun rises in the east and sets in the west—they thought of it in such terms. I know there are many who would say that the Migratory Birds Convention should not be amended because to do so would not be in the interests of conservation. I suggest to the minister that shooting the few additional birds which otherwise might not be shot will have little effect on the bird population of this country. I also believe that if the Indian people of this country are given responsibility in this field and authority to shoot those birds they feel it is necessary to shoot, they will prove fully responsible and will behave as we expect them to.

It has been suggested that we should abolish the department of Indian affairs, take the money now spent on the department and use it to improve the living standards of Indian families. I suggest instead that we should examine how much it costs to educate our young Indian people. As Canadians we all want our Indian people to take their full part in our Canadian way of life.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I understand there is a gentleman's agreement for two hon. members to share the last ten minutes available. On that basis, I think it would be fair to all hon. members if I were to recognize at this time the hon. member for York South.

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I shall leave most of the remaining time to the other hon. member who wishes to speak. I wish to make three brief statements. I make no apology for having continued to pursue the Akaitcho Hall incident. I would not have done so if the minister, on the first occasion I raised the question, had said, "I know about it; it is wrong and I intend to correct it." He did not say that but spoke of other matters with which I will not deal. In such situations, the only way to bring about change is by having the courage of one's convictions and by continuing to insist that the change ought to take place. That is the only way we shall bring about changes to this act.

Secondly, we introduced this general subject because, in the view of our party and many members of the house, the sort of discussion that has take nplace today was long overdue. It was necessary to obtain from the minister the kinds of statements we have heard from him. Having introduced the motion, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) set a high level of debate. He introduced debate at that high level precisely because we wanted an earnest discussion of the issues involved. We did not want, as the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Orange) has suggested in connection with the question of Akaitcho Hall, to make this merely a political debate. It was nothing of the sort.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I say on behalf of my colleagues that I do not blame the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Andras) for not being very specific about policies they are not yet ready to enunciate. I say to them on behalf of my colleagues and, I am sure, on behalf of all members of the house, that we heard with interest and anticipation their statements that they intend to end the era of paternalism; that they intend to recognize the basic human rights involved in this issue; and that they intend to listen to our Indians and pursue policies that will embody the wishes of those people. This is what they said and we shall hold them to their statements.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lewis: I hope the legislation they will bring down in a few weeks, not in a few years, will fulfil in toto those promises to the Indian people of this country. I hope it will recognize their right and really enable them to integrate themselves into our society as Canadians. On behalf of my colleagues I say to the minister and the government, we will accept nothing less when the legislation comes.

• (10:50 p.m.)

Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie): The trip to the Northwest Territories and Yukon taken by members of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development at the end of January this year allowed us to visit five Indian and one Eskimo communities. The trip was taken at the end of January so that members could experience northern living conditions during the Arctic winter season.

Among the objectives was a look at northern housing and employment conditons, particularly as they affected Indian and Eskimo peoples. We were exposed to a representative cross-section of the problems which affect our Indian people across Canada by visiting those two communities.

Some of the housing conditions we encountered at Copper-mine on the shores of the Bering Sea were much better than I expected. Almost all the residents of this village live in homes built during the past three or four years. On the other hand, some of the worst housing I have seen anywhere was on the outskirts of Whitehorse in a slum area inhabited by whites and Indians. This slum section, referred to locally as Sleepy Hollow, is much worse than the local Indian village.

The physical progress in the north in the form of new housing and new school facilities is encouraging. I travelled across the north in 1966 as a member of the House of Commons Standing Committee on Northern Affairs. This physical progress was undeniably obvious. There was a hopeful sign in the attitude of people in the local communities toward the problems of their fellow citizens of Indian origin. In 1966, it appeared to me that the white communities were interested only in their own problems. In 1969, there were signs of genuine interest on the part of the average white northerner in helping native people to full participation within the modern economy which is developing so rapidly in these northern communities.

I have spoken so far of progress and hope, but that is far from the whole story in the north. Last autumn the standing committee studied the employment situation of our native Indian and Eskimo people and found it to be generally deplorable. The unemployment rate for employable adult Indian males is in the 40 per cent to 50 per cent range. For a portion of the year at least that percentage of adult Indian males is unemployed. This was confirmed by our visit to the north. Coppermine appears to be a prosperous community, yet almost the entire male population was unemployed at the time of our visit.

Even though mining exploration was in progress last summer in the Coppermine River area, only 40 or 50 miles away, very few of the local residents were employed on those projects. Something is radically wrong with a system when southern labour must be brought from thousands of miles away to work in an area that has a native labour surplus. We had public meetings at each place which we visited. At our public meeting in Coppermine we asked the young men present how many of them would be interested in working on mine drilling rigs and we got a substantial response. We found out that within the last six months to a year the department instituted a number of new programs which will quickly lead to a great many more of our young Indian and Eskimo people being trained for positions in northern based industry.

In 1965 I wrote a letter to the then minister of northern affairs in which I suggested that one method to absorb more of our native northern people into the labour force would be to convene a conference of representatives of northern based industry, northern based labour unions and other parties, including representatives of provincial departments of labour, the federal department of indian affairs and, of course, representatives of the Indian people themselves.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I don't think we have a quorum in the house at the present time on this important question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member calling for a count?

Mr. Mather: Yes, sir, I am.

And the count being made, more that 20 members were declared to be present.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather) is in error. There is a quorum.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take another minute to complete my remarks. I urge the minister to consider again convening a conference of people with experience in this field to attack this labour problem. I also give notice, as chairman of the committee, that we intend to call before the committee representatives of northern based industry that is not employing sufficient numbers of native people, and representatives of northern based labour unions that are not contributing sufficiently to the employment of native personnel in the north.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: As it is now past ten o'clock, I must inform the house that pursuant to standing order 58 (11) this debate is deemed to be closed.

Accordingly, the house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow morning.

GREENHOUSE VEGETABLES—TARIFF BOARD REPORT

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tabled copies in English and French of a report by the Tariff Board on Reference No. 140, greenhouse vegetables, together with a transcript of the evidence presented at the public hearings held by the board.

This report contains recommendations relating to fresh tomatoes and cucumbers. I assure hon. members that these recommendations will be carefully considered by the government. May I urge any interested parties who wish to comment on this report to do so promptly.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO BE TAKEN IN LIGHT OF NIGERIA-BIAFRA CONFLICT—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), in accordance with Standing Order 26, to move the adjournment of the house under the said Standing Order for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely steps to be taken by the government of Canada in the light of the continuation of the war in Nigeria-Biafra and the continued threats of mass starvation and the indiscriminate bombing of civilian targets such as hospitals and market places.

This matter was considered by the house on November 26 last. Since that date the situation has changed, first, by reason of well authenticated reports of frequent instances of bombing of civilians in market places and hospitals far removed from military targets, causing immense loss of life; second, the new initiatives taken by the President of the United States in the appointment of a special co-ordinator on relief to Nigerian and Biafran war victims and the action of the American government in making stratosphere transport planes available to both the International Red Cross and the church operations; third, the offer of Colonel Ojukwu to construct, with needed outside assistance, an airstrip within Biafran occupied territory to be used exclusively for daylight mercy flights; fourth, the continued Biafran resistance and the prospect of prolongation of the war in the absence of international action, with an increasing toll of lives from starvation.

In view of these facts urgent consideration by the house is required in order that the government may be directed by parliament to deal effectively with this tragic and urgent humanitarian challenge, which affects the conscience of Canada and the world.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) has given the Chair the notice required by virtue of Standing Order 26. After serious consideration I have come to the conclusion that the motion proposed by the hon. member for Greenwood cannot be put to the house at this time. While the subject proposed to be discussed is obviously one of considerable importance and urgency it would appear to be of a continuing nature. I cannot recognize the element of sudden emergency without which it is difficult to justify setting aside the business of the house under the terms of Standing Order 26. It may not be unreasonable to expect there will be other opportunities for the house to consider and debate this very serious situation.

Failure to Build P. E. Island N.B. Crossing

TRANSPORT

FAILURE TO BUILD SOLID CROSSING BETWEEN P.E.I. AND NEW BRUNSWICK—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 26 I beg leave, seconded by the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the repudiation by the government of Canada of its commitment to build a solid crossing between Prince Edward Island and the province of New Brunswick.

In any federal state it is essential that undertakings given by one government to another be honoured and respected. The repudiation and disavowal of the commitment by the government of Canada to the people and province of Prince Edward Island in reference to interprovincial transportation, a matter falling within the responsibility of the government of Canada, constitutes a serious diminution of the faith and confidence which is the sine qua non of a viable federal state. It is urgent therefore that a matter of such significance be debated in this chamber forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: Again I have studied very carefully the hon. member's statement, particularly in view of the fact that the situation to which he refers is one of such serious concern to the hon. member who has proposed the motion and to other hon. members of the house. The subject he proposes for the consideration of the house under Standing Order 26 is what he terms "a serious diminution of the faith and confidence" essential to a federal state. In this way it seems to me that the hon. member's motion is so general in nature that it can hardly qualify under the terms of the standing order. There are other methods by which executive decisions may be called into question or criticized. The suggested motion is essentially a want of confidence motion which should normally be proposed to the house under the provisions of Standing Order 58.

In the circumstances I must rule that the business announced for today cannot be set aside for the purpose indicated in the proposed motion.

[Mr. Speaker.]

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR EFFICIENT AND UNINTERRUPTED SERVICE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Postmaster General from the house today I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he has asked the Postmaster General for a report on the chaotic conditions in the postal department. I ask the question in view of the walkout this morning by over 400 postal workers, in view of a similar incident a few weeks ago and especially in view of the Postmaster General's repeated assurances to this house that morale in the department is consistently high. Therefore I ask the Prime Minister whether he will give his personal attention to the necessity of restoring the post office to something approaching normal conditions and ensure that the country can depend on reasonably efficient and uninterrupted service in this essential department.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given personal attention to this and would inform the house that the department is now in the process of negotiating with the strikers alluded to, I believe, by the Leader of the Opposition. The negotiations are going on at this moment.

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would perhaps discourage the Postmaster General from taking such an interest in the responsibilities of other departments and try to prevent anarchy from taking hold in essential services in his own department.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence, asking him when he will take the opportunity under the ground rules of the present regime to give the house and the country the benefits of his views as to how the postal department should be run?

TAXATION

CONFERENCE OF MINISTERS TO CO-ORDINATE TAXING STRUCTURES AND BASES

Mr. David Lewis (York South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of the budget recently presented in the legislature of the province of Ontario, during which the provincial treasurer of that province forecast the introduction at a later date of provincial income tax and provincial capital gains tax. I should like to ask the minister whether he will call a conference of federal and provincial finance ministers for the purpose of considering methods of co-ordinating such taxes across the country so that Canadian taxpayers will not be taxed on different bases and structures of taxation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would hope that this will be the case. I found the views of the treasurer of Ontario interesting. He was putting forward his case very well, I thought. As I previously stated, as soon as the white paper on taxation is presented to this house it is my intention to ask for meetings with the provincial finance ministers in order to discuss the matter.

Mr. Lewis: In view of the fact that these steps by provincial finance ministers were in fact invited by the federal government when the provinces were asked to impose their own taxes, is there any reason to wait for this white paper, and should not steps be taken immediately to see to it that taxes are not imposed in an unco-ordinated way so as to create a tax jungle in Canada?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, first of all I should like to make it clear that the provinces presently do impose their own corporate and personal income taxes, which we collect for them. In the province of Quebec the base is not quite the same as in the other provinces, and they collect their own taxes.

The proposal, as I understand it, as put forward by the treasurer of Ontario had reference to a two year period. He said within a matter of two years he would do this or that. I think there will be ample time to discuss the matter and to consider the views of the provinces as well as the views of the federal government, when the white paper is presented to the house and referred to a committee.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. minister not think it advisable and better to have these conferences with all the provinces before the government issues its white paper, since there is a quasi committal to the provinces by the inssuance of a white paper? This would be merely following the advice the minister has received from this side of the house.

Mr. Benson: There have been a good many meetings of the tax structure committee and the Ministers of Finance at which the views of the provinces in respect of tax reform generally have been put forward. I think it would be terribly unfair to this house if I met with the provincial ministers of finance and discussed in detail what might be in the white paper, before it is presented to this house. We certainly welcome ideas from the provinces, and have indeed received their views on many matters.

AGRICULTURE

PARTICIPATION OF COMMITTEE MEMBERS IN CONGRESS PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

Following the invitation sent to the members by the president of the organization committee of the Canadian Congress of Agriculture, would the minister tell the house whether the members of the permanent committee on agriculture will be invited as observers only or as members of the said committee? In other words, will the members of the committee have a part to play or will they attend in their individual capacity?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I understand this matter was discussed during the proceedings of the Standing Committee on Agriculture, where it was determined that it would be most useful to the members of that committee if they were invited as observers, so they would have freedom to attend any or all of the workshops at their own discretion, while the agricultural congress was on.

STRAIT OF BELLE ISLE TUNNEL— CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE OF FEASIBILITY REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the government house leader. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks yesterday in the house concerning the tunnel across the Strait of Belle Isle connecting Newfoundland and Labrador, would the government house leader refer the report of a feasibility study carried out by a subsidiary of Northumberland Consultants Ltd., which I am prepared to table, to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member must know that the estimates of all the departments have been referred to the standing committees. I am sure that if he wanted to participate in the work of the relevant standing committee, the information which he says he has could be very useful to all members.

Mr. Baldwin: He wants you to unmuzzle your committee members.

Mr. Marshall: Mr. Speaker, would the government house leader then be prepared to allow my Bill C-125, an act to establish a Newfoundland Tunnel Authority, to come before the house for second reading?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I suppose every member of the house could insist that he should have priority for his bill, and on that basis we would be back in the same place.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the house leader accept the study in order that he and the Prime Minister may familiarize themselves with the original idea and possibly support an idea which Premier Smallwood put before the former prime minister, Mr. Pearson, on a number of occasions and about which the premier has indicated he intends to speak to the present Prime Minister?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I did not quite follow the question, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest also to the hon. member that it might be a useful topic for discussion in the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, in order to clarify this matter for the house leader, would he accept this feasibility study in order to familiarize himself and the Prime Minister with the origin of the idea, and possibly make it easier to follow, instead of going off on tangents all the time?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING SOVEREIGNTY

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It has to do with ownership of and sovereignty over the Arctic archipelago. I asked the question a week ago. It is a matter that falls particularly within the purview of the Prime Minister. Is he in a position to say whether representations have been made to the Department of State of the United States in connection with certain areas in the north that today are in the position of being uncertain, by reason of maps issued which indicate that it is doubtful whether or not Canadian sovereignty prevails there. All of these areas were over the years regarded as Canadian. Now that they have become very valuable, and the suggestion is made that the Americans really have a prior interest in them, would the Prime Minister be prepared to make a statement in this regard and assure Canada that Canadians as a whole support wholeheartedly the areas of the north being—

[Mr. Marshall.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The statement should be made by the Prime Minister, not by the right hon. gentleman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find that very interesting, Mr. Speaker, because I asked this question a week ago and there was no answer. It is a matter of such importance that I am sure the Prime Minister would want to assure Canadians that the Canadian government will stand firm.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is a very important question, Mr. Speaker, and I have asked the several departments concerned to review the Canadian position on this matter. A position has developed over the years—

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Another review?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister next week have a statement made on motions, so that Canadians may not be pushed aside on a matter so important to this country? I am sure he is just as anxious as anyone in the house and the country to know where we stand and where the Americans stand on this question.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I know that perhaps on some aspects of this matter the Secretary of State for External Affairs may be able to report next week. But I would find it preferable to have all aspects of this question examined before reporting to the house. I do not think it will be a very long procedure.

It is a very complicated situation, which some members of the Conservative party do not seem to realize. There is a difference between internal waters and territorial seas. The question of innocent passage differs according to whether it is one or another.

I recognize that over the years the intentions and the policy of the Canadian government under various administrations have been clear, but this particular aspect of it has never been established. Because of the international implications which would result from a claim made by us regarding territorial rights, it is important that all the departments report on this matter before a statement is made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There should be an early statement.

TRADE

RAPESEED—ACTION TO REMOVE AUSTRALIAN TARIFF INCREASE

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): I wish to address my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the rapeseed association meeting in Saskatoon last week reported that a $35 per ton increase in duty on refined rapeseed oil exported to Australia was imposed by that country last December and that at the same time no tariff changes were put into effect in the Australian market affecting entry of soybean or other edible oils, will the minister approach the appropriate Australian authorities to have this increased tariff reduced or abolished?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I will certainly look into this matter and report to the hon. member as soon as I review the situation.

Mr. Gleave: I have a supplementary question. Would the minister also have his staff investigate if this is a violation of the GATT agreements?

FINANCE

MATURITY TERMS OF BOND ISSUE

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Will the minister please advise the house whether the over $400 million bond issue to be put on the market in April will consist of medium term or long term maturities?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): The date, amount, and terms of the issue have not yet been announced. They will be announced in due course.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In contemplation of this bond marketing, has the minister considered the extensive erosion of the bond market by inflation, and the fact that there is every indication of further rises in long term interest rates as well as rises in interest rates for short term money? In what way is he going to handle the issue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. For a number of reasons the supplementary question cannot be accepted.

OIL

INVITATION TO PLACE OBSERVER IN VESSEL "MANHATTAN"

Mr. Paul St. Pierre (Coast Chilcotin): I wonder if the minister in charge of northern affairs could respond to a supplementary question which I asked last week in this regard, that is whether Panarctic had been invited to join in the American attempt to force the northwest passage over ice of the ship Manhattan.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the Panarctic Oils Limited was invited by the group of businessmen who started the Manhattan program, and I do not know what its answer was. Its board of directors met this week and as soon as I have received a report, I will be glad to advise the house.

[English]

Mr. St. Pierre: In view of the fact that the French government's subsidiary in the north has been invited and has accepted, would the minister consider recommending to Panarctic Oil that the Canadian position be ensured by our participation in this venture.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is now making a proposition, a suggestion or a recommendation to the minister, which he must assume will be considered.

DISCUSSION OF CONTINENTAL POLICY IN NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, on March 3 I asked a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and he said it would be answered by the appropriate minister when he was in the house. Now I direct my question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce because it deals with exports. Has the Alberta government made the suggestion to the appropriate minister in the Canadian government that a continental oil policy should be at the heart of negotiations with the United States when the Canadian Prime Minister meets with the President of the United States to discuss the matter of petroleum?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not hear the beginning of the question asked by the hon. member but I have some doubts about the question. However, it would be much easier to allow the minister to reply to it since he seems ready to do so.

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Alberta government would address these representations to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Woolliams: I addressed it to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce since it was a matter of exports. May I then direct my question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and ask him whether the Alberta government suggested to the Canadian government that so far as the demand for petroleum is concerned a continental oil policy should be at the heart of the negotiations.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Terms like "the continental oil policy" are a little too easy and flexible to mean very much in discussions between two governments, so I would have to answer no to the question in terms of actual representations in those words. But with that qualification I may say that I expect in a number of days to have conversations with the minister of resources of Alberta.

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be prepared to table the brief presented to his department by the former premier of Alberta, Mr. Manning, with reference to submissions made by the Alberta government respecting their representations on this industry?

Mr. Lang: I will be glad to give consideration to that.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF TASK FORCE TO STUDY POLICY

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): I would like to ask the acting minister whether the government will consider the appointment of a task force to study oil policy, in the light of recent developments and suggestions that political concessions may be involved in the continuance of present policies?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Burton: On a point of order, Mr Speaker, I believe the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources was about to answer my question.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I was willing to make a comment in regard to the representation. Certainly the government is very actively concerned with the question of oil policy now and in the future. This whole question is being given active attention.

TELEGRAM PROTESTING FEDERAL SUBSIDY TO EASTERN REFINERIES

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received a telegram from the premier of the province protesting against federal subsidy for the construction of eastern refineries to reduce offshore crude?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I have received a telegram to that effect, Mr. Speaker. A reply is being prepared.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): My question is supplementary to the question asked earlier by the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert to the Prime Minister in regard to oil policy. From the earlier reply of the Prime Minister, are we to understand there is some question of a practical political problem as to whether we have sovereignty of the lands of the north regardless of the academic legalistic problems which might be involved? Is there any problem of sovereignty?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not think it is possible to separate the practical problem from the legalistic problem.

Of course we claim we have sovereignty to all the lands in the north. This claim will have to be established in law, and internationally. I do not think there will be any great difficulty about the land itself, but the problem has arisen about the ice and the water and whether the water is inland or territorial water. That is a rather difficult question.

Mr. Nowlan: Has there been any question about sovereignty? If so, what practical steps is Canada taking to assert its sovereignty to these lands?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for a general statement, as the right hon. member for Prince Albert asked. Perhaps all these questions might be answered at the same time.

Mr. Nowlan: With due deference, I asked two particular supplementary questions. First, has there been any question from any other country about our sovereignty? If so, what practical specific steps are being taken to assert our sovereignty? These are two specific questions on a very important subject.

Mr. Trudeau: I do not see how any doubt has arisen in the mind of the hon. member, unless he wants to claim the ice up there is ours also. This is not only a question of fact, but of law. The question was asked if there has been any doubt cast on this, and I know of no recent occasion of doubt having been raised on this. There was the question of maps purportedly issued by another country, and the Secretary of State is investigating this. As far as I know, there is no assurance on that yet.

As to the practical steps which have been taken, they have been taken over many years. The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert initiated a number of those steps—effective occupation of the islands and deployment of the R.C.M.P. They have been going on for quite a while and I believe were intensified under the right hon. gentleman's leadership. We have continued in this direction. There have been no new steps taken in the last few weeks, if that is the question.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Has there been any question raised by the United States Department of State respecting ownership of these northern areas? That question did not take place under my administration as we made perfectly clear from the time of Captain Bernier and V. Stefansson that the northern areas belonged to Canada. Is there any question of that now, in view of those maps?

Mr. Trudeau: When the hon. gentleman speaks of northern areas, does he mean the land or the sea? If it is the land, there is no question about it. If he means the sea, there is a question whether it is a territorial or inland sea. If it is an inland sea, of course there is no question of passage by any vessel in those waters whether it be military or otherwise. The doctrine of innocent passage would not apply. This is the essence of the question. I do not believe the government under the leadership of the right hon. gentleman ever answered—

Mr. Diefenbaker: We never had to. If we had had to answer, we would not have pussyfooted.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: You should have had foresight.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure hon. members will agree that the questions and answers have now reached a point of debate. Perhaps the answer to the situation would be the suggestion made by some hon. members, that a statement should be made.

Mr. Woolliams: This is in regard to answers we have been getting in connection with the north. I want to clear up a question with the minister of mines. As I understood your answer—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should direct his question to the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: As I understand, Mr. Speaker, the minister stated last week that there is a study group now in relation to a task force. When can we expect a report covering all these matters with reference to petroleum from that group?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, when the reports presently being prepared within the government are ready and form governmental policy, that policy will be announced in his house.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WINNIPEG—CANADIAN AVIATION ELECTRONICS LAY-OFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production? In view of the fact that Canadian Aviation Electronics in Winnipeg has given lay-off notices to 150 employees, reportedly because of a transfer of government contracts to a firm in Ontario, will the minister look into this matter, will he make a statement, and will he do his best to keep this work in Winnipeg?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Yes, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to look into this matter for the hon. member.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC—ESTABLISHMENT OF PARK

Mr. Leonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

Is he now in a position to tell us what are the results of the federal-provincial negotiations with respect to the establishment of the first federal park in Quebec; if not, when will he be able to do so?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): As I have said before, Mr. Speaker, I have made propositions to the provincial authorities, in September or October, and I have not yet received a final answer.

TRADE

BARLEY—DECREASE IN SHIPMENTS OVERSEAS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Is the minister concerned about the fact that less than six million bushels of barley have been shipped overseas to date this year, compared with over 17 million during the same period last year? Has the minister been in touch with the Wheat Board concerning the non-existence of any forward sales of barley and the question of some 200 million bushels of barley in storage? Does the minister or the Wheat Board have in mind any new policies or changes in existing policies to meet this problem?

Hon. Jean Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes I am concerned, Mr. Speaker. I do not know what the exact statistics are but I do know there is a difficult situation there. I have been in touch with the Wheat Board and we are doing what we can to boost sales.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Stanfield: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. From the findings of the task force, apparently the price factor is very important in export sales of feed grain. Is the Wheat Board considering a change in policy in light of the large quantities of barley still in storage and the fact that apparently France and Australia have been underselling Canada, consequently capturing markets from us in this area?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, pricing is the main factor in this matter. We are doing our very best, because it is in our best interests, to keep pricing under the I.G.A. system as it is now. We are defending it as strongly as we can and would not like to be accused by anybody of having damaged the system. As I said, it is in our best interests, and we believe in the interests of all countries, not to damage it.

AIR TRANSPORT

AMALGAMATION OF REGIONAL CARRIERS

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to answer the question that I put to him a few days ago in the house as to whether or not the Canadian Transport Commission is giving permission for Eastern Provincial Airways and Nordair to amalgamate, which would constitute virtually a third main line carrier in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to look into this question and the answer is that approval has not been given. However an application from Nordair was received on March 3, 1969 by the Air Transport Committee of the Canadian Transport Commission to acquire all outstanding common shares in Eastern Provincial Airways. This application will be dealt with in the course of normal procedures.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

NATIONAL ARTS CENTRE—MLLE. MADELEINE GOBEIL

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister with respect to the answer to question 1189 concerning the appointment by order in council of the trustees of the National Arts Centre, and in particular the appointment of Mlle. Madeleine Gobeil. Will the Prime Minister say whether his repertoire in his little black book is sufficient to provide similar representation on all government boards and agencies?

DECLINE OF DAIRY PRODUCTION IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. According to data published in the Canadian Dairy Review and the Manitoba Dairy Association publication, dairy production in the prairie region of Canada has declined by 15 per cent compared with the base period of ten years. In light of that information, would the minister care to revise his answer to me Wednesday when he said that present dairy policy was not militating against the dairy producers in western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as asked is academic.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—CHOICE OF PROJECT FOR ECONOMIC PROGRESS

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Since the government decided apparently some little time ago that it could not afford both the construction of the Northumberland causeway and the comprehensive development plan for Prince Edward Island, did the government inform the government of Prince Edward Island of this fact and seek their counsel as to which of the two projects was more essential to the economic progress of Prince Edward Island?

[Later:]

Mr. MacLean: A further supplementary question that I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Did the government of Prince Edward Island agree that the comprehensive development plan should take priority over the construction of the causeway if both projects could not be proceeded with at once?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lisgar.

Mr. Hees: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the two questions posed by the hon. member for Malpeque are perfectly proper and it seems ridiculous for the Prime Minister, who welcomes dialogue both in the house and in the country, to refuse to answer.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY SERVICE IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has there been any discussion, recently or in the past, between the British Columbia government and the Alberta government as to the desirability of declaring that the P.G.E. railroad of British Columbia or the A.R.R. in Alberta work for the general good of Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I could not say offhand; certainly not that I am aware of. However, I shall be glad to inquire and if there is any information I will report it to my hon. friend.

P.E.I.—SUGGESTED ABANDONMENT OF PROJECTED CAR FERRY RATE INCREASE—REQUEST FOR DOCUMENTS

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. Yesterday the hon. member for Hillsborough asked the Prime Minister about the continuing difficulties that have now been created with the cancellation of the causeway program. I wonder whether the minister would assure us that the proposed 50 per cent increase in car ferry rates will not now be implemented?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to give that assurance. If I recall correctly, there are some adjustments proposed, but I think more important from the standpoint of my hon. friend is the tremendous increase in services which would also be put into effect and which I think will help relieve some of the congestion that has occurred the last couple of years.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A further supplementary question. Since members of the house have been promised for some days copies of the documents relating to the cancellation of the causeway project, can the minister tell the house when these documents will be tabled, as agreed to some weeks ago, as a result of my notice of motion for the production of papers?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries and find out the state of this matter.

P.E.I.—REQUEST FOR IMPROVED CARIBOU-WOOD ISLAND SERVICE

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): A further supplementary question to the Minister of Transport. In view of what has happened during the last two days, would the minister give full consideration to the bettering of the ferry facilities between Caribou, Nova Scotia and Wood Island, P.E.I., and also provide another ferry for that service? In this regard the minister has something in writing, so I would ask him to give it full consideration immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member has made a representation to the minister.

WATER RESOURCES

DEVELOPMENT OF PEMBINA RIVER BASIN

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has he had a request to meet a delegation from Manitoba to discuss the development of the Pembina River basin, and has any arrangement been made to meet this delegation?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that the question might be considered at the time of adjournment.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of the dissatisfaction that is being expressed in his own party, despite the fact that all members who attended the function on Wednesday evening received medals for listening to his speech?

FINANCE

REPORTING OF INTEREST AND DIVIDENDS BY BANKS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of National Revenue. Before asking it however I should like to say how happy we are to see the minister looking so well, and in the house these days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hales: My question arises from the many inquiries that I have had, and I am sure that many others in this house have had, in regard to why the banks and trust companies have been asked or are obliged to report all interest and dividends over the amount of $10, when this amount was formerly $100. I would ask the minister by what authority he advised the banks to make public this information.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have some doubt as to the question the hon. member is asking, which is what authority the minister has to take executive action. In this form the question cannot be accepted.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

MONTREAL—PROGRESS REPORT OF COURT PROCEEDING TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It relates to hearings now in progress in Montreal concerning students involved in the recent destruction at Sir George Williams University, where yesterday a document and letter was seized by the court which asked that a statement of position, including progress reports of the hearing, be forwarded to the embassies of Cuba, U.S.S.R. and certain African countries. In view of the fact that it is well established that any action in communist countries such as this can only be directly related to the government of the country concerned—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Thompson: —is the government taking any steps to protest this interference in Canadian affairs?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WOODS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I understand that the Woods report is now available in French and English. In view of the requests we are getting from the trade union movement could the Prime Minister announce when this report will be tabled?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not the exact date, Mr. Speaker, but the hon. member is right when he says that the translation is finished. It is being printed now and I believe it is at the proof reading stage. I can give the assurance that as soon as it is ready it will be tabled.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS, MAN.—ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare but in his absence possibly his parliamentary secretary could answer it. In relation to the meetings held yesterday by the minister and representatives of The Pas Indian band can the parliamentary secretary advise the house if whether at that time any agreements were arrived at?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the hon. member is asking a question which normally would be answered by way of a statement.

GRAIN

WHEAT—MEASURES TO COMPENSATE FOR REDUCTION IN ACREAGE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the conclusion of the task force on agriculture that wheat acreage should be reduced in favour of feed grain, which would result in further income reductions at present quota levels, will the government be making recommendations prior to seeding time as to what steps farmers might take to maintain if not to increase farm income despite increasing costs?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I have said a number of times in this house, the reports that are being made by the task force for the congress will be discussed there, and that will be later this month. I would also like to advise the hon. member that the Department of Agriculture as well as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will make as much information as possible available to farmers with respect to grain sales and prospects, but it is not possible to predict accurately what the markets will be a year from now. I think the hon. member knows this.

DRUGS

MACE—STEPS TO PROHIBIT USE BY R.C.M.P.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the statement a few days ago by the Attorney General of Ontario that the use of Mace is likely to result in permanent injury to the eyes, is it the intention of the government to prohibit its use by the R.C.M.P.?

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that this question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Gilbert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, this matter is of very urgent importance and I am sure that the Solicitor General would like to speak on it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is suggesting that the Solicitor General would like to speak on it. If a statement is contemplated, perhaps a better time to make it would be at the time of adjournment.

FISHERIES

COMPENSATION FOR CATCH AFFECTED BY PESTICIDE

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Because of increasing condemnations of fish products for pesticide residue, would the minister consider introducing legislation similar to Bill C-155 which is to compensate farmers for loss of farm products condemned for pesticide residue, and provide similar compensation for fishermen?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not quite catch the question.

Mr. McKinley: I will ask it again, Mr. Speaker. Because of increasing condemnation of fish products for pesticide residue would the minister consider introducing legislation similar to Bill C-155, which is to compensate farmers for loss of farm products condemned for pesticide residue, and provide similar compensation for fishermen?

Mr. Davis: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. McKinley: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I was taken a little off guard by the minister's quick and short answers. I would like to ask him how soon this legislation will be introduced.

Mr. Davis: Possibly in the next session, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ALLEGED UNFAIR PRACTICES IN QUESTIONING RECIPIENTS

Mr. Jack Cullen (Sarnia): Mr. Speaker, I got up at five o'clock this morning to catch a plane so that I could ask this question.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Cullen: My question is directed to the Minister of Labour and in his absence I would ask his parliamentary secretary to take notice of it. In view of announcements by the minister's department that it is seeking out people who are improperly collecting from the Unemployment Insurance Fund, would the minister advise his investigators that cross-examination and the asking of loaded questions of retired people drawing this insurance is inviting serious protests? As a supplementary question, in regard to the refusal to permit a union representative to be present while questioning is taking place, would the minister consider that this procedure should be changed?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISING OF HOUSE AND COMMITTEE PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is the government now thinking seriously of bringing parliament to the people by allowing television coverage of this chamber and, if so, when can a decision be expected?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member realizes that this is a question which has been asked from time to time. I wonder whether it is in order to ask it again today.

Mr. Paproski: Then, Mr. Speaker, may I just ask whether the Prime Minister will give serious consideration to placing before this honourable chamber an appropriate motion embodying the considerations outlined in my first question?

THE SENATE

FILLING OF VACANCIES

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary on the question of participatory politics, which is related to television. While television may bring the general public into this chamber, when is the Prime Minister going to bring the people of British Columbia into the parliament of Canada and make the four appointments to the Senate that have long gone unannounced in that chamber?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rising on a point of order?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may. Yesterday the President of the Privy Council said that if the house agreed, the government would be willing today to ask for first reading of the bill to amend the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act. Since notice of this has appeared on the notice paper I wonder if the President of the Privy Council would ask the house for consent to give it first reading so that we can see what is in it? I hope there will be something in it worth seeing.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Would the house give unanimous consent to waiving the 48 hour notice requirement so that this bill could be given first reading today?

Mr. Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPERANNUATION) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CANADIAN FORCES, DEFENCE SERVICES, R.C.M.P. AND PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION PROVISIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-178 to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

FINANCE

PROPOSED AMENDMENTS RESPECTING INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND EXCHANGE FUND ACCOUNT

The house resumed from Monday, February 24, consideration of the motion of Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance) that Bill No.

C-138, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreement Act and the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act be read the third time and passed.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few remarks on this bill at this stage. It is concerned with the matter of increasing drawing rights. As previously explained in the house, it is concerned with the matter of providing working capital to countries in connection with expanding world trade. By virtue of the extent of the drawing rights created it may be of some assistance, and no doubt will be of some assistance in providing more time to avert crises and to correct situations where disequilibrium exists; but primarily it is a matter of providing the world with the means of handling expanding world trade.

• (12 noon)

There has been some discussion in the house concerning whether more measures are required, whether this bill, for example, together with other provisions being made, is adequate to avert the kind of recurring crises we have had in terms of international currencies. I believe I am correct in saying the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has stated that the government of Canada is giving no consideration to reverting to a floating exchange rate. We recently had a speech by the Governor of the Bank of Canada in which he emphasized the importance of countries pursuing appropriate domestic policies. The Governor has given his view that no possible reforms in international currency arrangements would be able to offset weak or misdirected domestic policies. I wish to state, Mr. Speaker that I discuss any statement made by the Governor of the Bank of Canada with great respect to him. I admire very much the contribution he is making in his office.

I think it is perfectly correct to say, as the Governor of the Bank of Canada said, that no reform of international currency arrangements can possibly be devised which would offset weak or misdirected domestic policies. I believe this is true, but I believe also that it is only part of the story today. This is what I want to emphasize. It is true we could not possibly devise any system of international currency arrangements which would offset or neutralize misdirected domestic policies. Nevertheless, where there is a seriously undervalued or seriously overvalued currency this substantial undervaluation or overvaluation does constitute a continuing source of trouble and danger to other countries.

For example, if it is true, as has been suggested, that the German mark is substantially undervalued, this does provide a competitive advantage to West Germany. It also constitutes a constant threat of crisis as a result of continuing speculation that sooner or later there will be some change made in the value of the German mark, that is, that it will be valued upwards or that other currencies will be devalued downwards. As long as this kind of situation exists it constitutes a potential source of crisis. On the other hand, when a situation exists in which a currency is substantially overvalued, as apparently was the case in Britain before the pound was devalued and is now sometimes asserted to be the case with regard to the French franc, this again constitutes a potential source of crisis.

We can never know when a loss of confidence will suddenly develop with regard to the continuation of affairs as they now exist. Once such a loss of confidence sets in a crisis develops, and it is very difficult to know what countries may be caught up in the crisis. We in Canada ought to be very much aware of this after our experience last winter which in turn, of course, followed the devaluation of the pound and the resulting feeling of uncertainty that arose from the devaluation of the pound. No country should have a better understanding than Canada of the rapidity with which crises can develop and the significance that crises can have for our country. Therefore I think we must recognize that where there is in fact either a substantial overvaluation or undervaluation of an important currency this constitutes a source of danger to us.

With all respect to the views expressed by the Governor of the Bank of Canada, I submit it is necessary to provide better machinery than we now have for correcting these situations and for revaluing currencies when they are substantially out of line with reality. Certainly we need arrangements for policing; we need arrangements for encouraging countries to follow appropriate domestic policies. Certainly I agree, as I said before, that no arrangements we make could possibly offset the detrimental effect of misdirected domestic policies. Where a serious disequilibrium develops, however, I suggest we must regard that as a potential source of crisis and danger to other countries including ourselves. We must be interested in developing more satisfactory arrangements for correcting these overvaluations or undervaluations, as the case may be.

I realize that a good deal of progress has been made with regard to international currency arrangements. We have this bill now before us which represents a very substantial step forward. I would not question that at all. I believe that recently agreements have been reached between the governors of the important central banks in the world with regard to control over the movement of hot or speculative money. These are important steps forward, but I submit in all seriousness that the machinery we have now still remains inadequate and that our own monetary stability can be threatened any time by developments abroad in virtually any part of the developing world. There is a need for an orderly readjustment where necessary rather than just a policy of letting nature take its course because finally we would be confronted by very disorderly readjustments postponed to the point where they are virtual explosions when they take place.

This very day when we are discussing this matter fears exist with regard to uncertainties relating to currencies, which again remind us of how these crises can blow up quickly, of the experience we had last winter, and that it is not good enough, I suggest, simply to put the emphasis upon the importance of countries following appropriate domestic arrangements. Certainly we must emphasize that, but it is in the interests of Canada to seek improved international arrangements for removing serious disequilibriums where they exist.

I say with all respect and I hope all humility that undervaluations and overvaluations can exist which domestic policies will perhaps not correct because they have gone beyond the point where domestic policies can effect the necessary corrections. We must recognize that efforts to correct overvaluations or undervaluations of currencies may result in the development of very severe restrictions on and interference with the flow of international trade. So we need machinery to improve the methods of readjustment. As Canadians we cannot feel easy with matters as they are now. We cannot feel that arrangements today are adequate because we cannot know when we in Canada or indeed the people in virtually any country may suddenly be confronted with a crisis that has developed as a result of a lack of machinery for orderly readjustment.

No country has a greater interest in this matter than has Canada.

This is one reason I was very concerned by the attitude of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) when he returned from Europe at the time of the crisis involving the franc and the mark and suggested to the Canadian people that this was really a European problem which did not relate to the Canadian dollar. It is very true that the Canadian dollar was not under attack at that time but it is most unfortunate when the Minister of Finance suggests to the people of Canada, either intentionally or otherwise, that we ought not to be seriously concerned about developments which profoundly affect another country. Anyone who knows what we went through last winter must be very conscious of the danger which may result to Canada from these crises wherever they may develop in the world.

I realize that the influence of Canada is necessarily limited. We are only one country and not the largest in the world in terms of population and influence. I realize that achieving better arrangements represents a very complicated and protracted task. I know something about the time it took to achieve international agreement between the major countries on the matter we now have under consideration, the creation of increased drawing rights. The complexity, the difficulty and the length of time involved in reaching such agreements are however, all the more reason for Canada to be pushing as hard as it can and giving whatever leadership we can in emphasizing the inadequacy of the present arrangements and working for the necessary improvements. The length of time required, plus the obvious dangers with which we are confronted, makes it imperative that we view our situation realistically, that we realize that we and other countries, perhaps Canada in particular, are in a very exposed position. I am not speaking as an alarmist, but I am speaking as one who tries to see the realities as they exist. So I urge the Minister of Finance, the Parliamentary Secretary and the government not to feel for a moment that the measure now before us makes adequate provision to meet the dangers which exist. I urge them to recognize that we do need improved arrangements and that we never know when a crisis will occur. And when it does strike it may hit us a blow which we would find difficult to fend off.

For these reasons, since the Minister of Finance is not in the house, I urge the Parliamentary Secretary to bring to the minister's attention the representations I am making today. I urge him and his colleagues to do their best to rally the interest of other countries in this subject and to push forward toward achieving the necessary reforms in international currency arrangements so as to provide us, not with security, because we cannot have security unless we handle our own affairs properly, but at least with a feeling that we shall not constantly be menaced by crises which develop abroad over which we have no control and which we cannot affect through the conduct of our own affairs.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to the remarks of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) and I share his concern, as I am sure do all members of the house, about the danger of recurrent crises on the international front. I share his concern that there should be so much over which we have no control, and I suppose most Canadians wish they could somehow insulate themselves from these events.

The truth of the matter is that we are part of a system which does not lend itself well to control or to prearranged ways of preventing the recurrence of the kind of crisis which has occurred. The Leader of the Opposition said we need new machinery. Again I agree it would be desirable if we could find some way of dealing with these situations. But I ask him what sort of machinery he would propose. Does he propose a new international institution which would deal with international monetary matters in a way in which the International Monetary Fund does not now deal with them? We have the Group of Ten. We have the general agreement to borrow. Would he propose yet another organization to discuss the settlement of international debts? Would he propose a floating exchange rate?

I do not think it is enough to say we need new machinery. I think we must consider this subject in two ways. First, we must prepare ourselves to meet the fact that these crises will recur. If we understand their nature a little better we shall be able to react without panic and to some extent we shall be able to anticipate them and prepare ourselves against eventualities which I believe may well become part of the international system under which we live.

A week ago the Bank of Canada raised the bank rate to 7 per cent. This is not a crisis level by any means but it does indicate there is an important movement afoot internationally. The last time we had a 7 per cent bank rate was about a year ago. That was because the presidential guidelines had been introduced and because there was concern about the effect of those guidelines on Canada's balance of payments position. Let us go back a year and view this move by the Bank of Canada in context.

Last December the United States federal reserve system raised its prime rate from 5 per cent to 5½ per cent. This action was followed almost immediately by Canada which raised its rate from 6 per cent to 6½ per cent. On February 27, a week ago last Thursday, the United Kingdom raised its rate from 7 per cent to 8 per cent. It was followed a day later by the Bank of Canada. The Governor stated when this change was announced "that the recent increase in short-term interest rates abroad had been reflected in rising short-term interest rates in Canada and that the higher rate would enable the Bank of Canada to retain an adequate degree of flexibility in its operations." The Bank of Canada was reacting in a defensive way, the way in which all central banks react when they increase their interest rates in reaction to the international situation and to the basic disequilibrium which exists.

This action follows on the fact that the countries concerned have not yet resolved the problems that exist in respect of the franc and the mark. We are in danger, as the Leader of the Opposition indicated, of returning to a beggar thy neighbour policy. It is against this background that I should like to make a few comments in respect of special drawing rights relative to Canadian policy-making and to Canadian understanding of the world in which we trade.

I think the scheme is a good one and I am delighted that all the speakers for all parties who have spoken so far support the bill before us. The scheme is good but—I will deal with the "but" in a few minutes. It will not really correct the main problem in respect of the massive movement of short-term funds. At the same time we should also realize that the system is stronger than some would suggest. The United States dollar is strong, it is not weak. During the past year there have been many suggestions that the United States had a major balance of payments problem and that they might have to devalue the dollar in some form. I hope to show in a few minutes that the United States dollar is the strongest currency by far in the world at large. I also want to draw attention to the fact that too often if we think of the international monetary system purely in terms of foreign exchange we may be overlooking one of the most important things as far as Canada is concerned. I refer to the net debt position of Canada in holdings of foreign assets.

Part of the problem of dealing with the sophisticated area of international finance is a problem of language. This can also be associated with ideas of mystery, gnomes of Zurich, stealthy, shadowy characters and speculators, particularly when one refers to gold standards, gold exchange standards, which followed the gold standard, and convertibility, hot money and cool bankers, floating rates and sinking funds, runs on the pound and crawling pegs, billions and bullion. To most of the public these are terms which do not inform or illuminate.

Let us examine in a few minutes, if we may, some of the fundamental transactions which occur in the international foreign exchange system. It seems to me we are concerned primarily with three types of transaction. We are concerned with transactions which relate to financing of foreign trade. We are concerned with those things which I referred to earlier, the financing and handling of short-term capital flows, and we are equally concerned with the financing of long-term capital flows.

The financing of foreign trade is of particular importance to Canada. Last year Canadian exports rose to a record level. They increased by 19 per cent over the previous year. Canadian exports reached the unprecedented figure of $13,576 million. This put exports on a per capita basis somewhere around $650 per person in Canada. In other words, the exports Canada makes are equivalent to $650 for every person in the country. This shows enormous improvement in foreign trade by our country. This is important to a far greater extent relatively to Canada than to the United States where their exports are roughly 4 per cent of the gross national product compared with the Canadian figure which is close to 20 per cent.

What are the foreign exchange reserves which are used to finance this movement of capital in respect of the trading account, short term or long term? Essentially, up to now they have been two, gold reserves and what are called reserve currencies. The reason for the S.D.R.'s is that international liquidity as reflected by these two units, that is gold and reserve currencies—primarily United States dollars—has not been expanding very quickly. Gold, for instance, has hardly expanded at all. The gold supply in international affairs for handling international transactions is of the order of about $40 billion. This has increased since 1950 by about $6 billion and has since tapered off. Reserve currencies, primarily United States dollars, have risen. That is to say, the holdings by other countries of United States obligations increased from $5.4 billion in 1950 to $18.3 billion in 1967. This is an increase of some $13 billion. The major part of the increase in world liquidity for the last 15 to 20 years has been provided by an increase in the gold supply of $6 billion and an increase in United States obligations of $13.5 billion. This is roughly $20 billion out of a total increase of close to $24 billion.

The United States has made it clear it is not prepared to increase its obligations abroad at the rate it has in the past. As I indicated already, the gold supply has not been increasing relatively in recent years. If we are going to finance more world trade on trading account we are going to require a new unit. This is what the special drawing right is designed to do.

Let us look then at the question of the intermediate, that is to say, the short-term massive flows which have been destabilizing the system, and which I think will continue to act as destabilizers. There is no question but that this will continue and I see no way of preventing it. We have to recognize that the frequency of short-term massive flows will grow because the relative positions of some countries will diminish through lack of productivity, lack of will, mismanagement or inflation. Their foreign exchange positions are likely to degenerate into deficits in their balance of payments. Those who are interested will start to speculate against the exchange value of that currency.

Similarly, in recent years, particularly within the last year, one can see the effect of unexpected disaster and I refer particularly to the situation in France—the student riots which stimulated or generated the situation we see in France today and about which the rest of the world is jumpy. One of the prime reasons for the current nervousness in the international monetary system, which we have noted within the last two days, is the apparent unwillingness of labour unions to accept the suggestion put to them by their leaders. In other words, there is an increasing lack of confidence in the ability of France to manage its economy and retain the value of its exchange rate. At the same time the economies of other countries may grow stronger. This will happen because countries like Germany will grow faster for some of the reverse reasons I have already mentioned—better management, better technology and perhaps fortuitous circumstances. We are going to see a change between the relative positions of countries throughout the world. This will always result in speculation by those who are looking ahead in respect of the effect on the exchange value of the currency.

As we have seen, there has been an unwillingness throughout history, certainly post-war history, on the part of various countries of the world to adjust their exchange rates, as the original I.M.F. provisions anticipated, on a more gradual basis. The original figure was 10 per cent. Very few countries took advantage of this and in many cases went beyond the 10 per cent in the first bite. This has had a destabilizing effect.

Listening to the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman), I was curious about his views on the floating exchange rate and how it might serve to solve some of these problems. It was a rather curious, tentative flirtation, it seemed to me. Each time he came close to his subject, each time he was just about to embrace her, he backed off and said that what we really need to do is talk about it some more.

I have referred to the short-term swings, the fact that there will almost inevitably be speculation against the rate because there will be changes occurring as between countries, the unexpected disaster aspect, possibly war, and the temporary measures that may be introduced by governments such as those introduced a little over a year ago by the United States government.

I refer now to the guidelines and to the effects of direct investment. There has been an enormous increase in foreign holdings throughout the world, that is to say, holdings by countries in the fixed assets of other countries. This has been associated with the growth of the multi-national firm. With this growth one can see that there is likely to be greater opportunity for short-term swings as far as capital flows are concerned, because the multi-national firm itself, the international firm itself, will become an agent of moving funds to protect its interests.

As I said earlier, we have seen the defensive actions taken by governments trying to prop up their balance of payments positions by increasing interest rates. This undoubtedly will continue, and undoubtedly we will see more interest arbitrage in years to come. I am trying to emphasize that I think this is the kind of world to which we must adjust ourselves. I do not think we will find easy or quick solutions. I believe we will have to continue to rely on bilateral arrangements, on massive standby credits, and in particular on the enormous strength of the United States foreign assets position. I would like to refer to that for a moment.

In 1950 the United States net external assets were $14 billion, that is to say, United States residents owned abroad $14 billion of assets more than others owned of assets within the United States. By 1966 this figure had risen to $52 billion. I am not including their gold position in this figure. This was a net increase of $38 billion in the foreign holdings of the United States. They financed this in part by a decrease in their gold supply, that is, they sold off approximately $10 billion, and by increasing their obligations in U.S. dollars. With this kind of net position abroad they are in a position at any time, through their corporations, to raise foreign exchange in very much the same way as when a company is short of liquid capital, working capital, it can raise a mortgage against its assets.

Too often we are reminded that the United States is in a deficit position in regard to its current account. It is. The United States, because it has sold off a large part of its gold holdings, because it has increased its foreign obligations, is in deficit by $3.5 billion. In the United Kingdom the figure is a little higher. But both these nations have substantial foreign holdings in fixed form. I suggest that their position is not nearly as serious as it might first appear, if we recognize this strength in behind. For instance, if the United States, as it has been doing, sells its gold, a non-revenue producing asset, to invest in new technology in Europe, surely the United States and the United States dollar are more secure, not less.

I would now like to turn to the position of Canada in the same context. We have foreign exchange reserves of the order of $2.6 billion. They have varied between $2.5 billion and $2.8 billion and may go higher as a result of certain understandings arrived at between Canada and the United States not long ago. I am concerned about the fact that we are likely to become so concerned about the level of our foreign exchange reserves that we will overlook one of the most important figures to Canada and Canadians. I am referring to the Canadian external assets and liabilities account and the increase in our net deficit position from $4 billion to $24 billion.

In 1949 Canadians owned foreign assets, assets abroad, of $5.3 billion, and foreigners owned in Canada $9.3 billion; in other words, others owned $4 billion more of us than we owned of them collectively. By 1967, according to the latest estimates I have, we increased our assets position by $10 billion; in other words, Canadian holdings abroad increased from slightly over $5 billion to $15 billion. At the same time, our liabilities, that is to say, what others owned of Canada, increased from $9.3 billion to $39 billion, an increase of the order of about $30 billion.

This is the mathematical reflection of the foreign ownership argument, the foreign investment argument, about which we have heard a great deal. I am sure we will hear still more about it. In my view, the fact that others own $24 billion more of us than we own of others collectively, and the fact that this has been increasing year by year, is of major concern to Canada and Canadians.

The classical economic argument was that the young country would be a debtor country but as it developed its own, infant industries, as it developed its own technology, it would break out of the debtor position and become a creditor nation. This was associated, and I think still is associated in many minds today, with Canada contributing to the under developed countries. But we are $24 billion in deficit on our foreign assets account. If we are to make major investments in the underdeveloped world we will have to find ways that we have not yet found of increasing our own wealth.

In closing I would like to emphasize that the special drawing rights are not a solution to the major problem that we have, that is, the control and understanding of short-term capital flows, but they do indicate an interest and an awareness on the part of the international community in dealing with this problem. They represent a very useful enterprise in co-operation on the economic front. To that extent, and to the extent that they impose disciplines on surplus nations and disciplines on deficit nations which use the S.D.R.'s they are a significant contribution to the stability of the international monetary system. We have to recognize that there will be recurring crises. I think we should be encouraged by the fact that the United States dollar, which is the keystone of the system, is very much stronger than it appears to be, and on the other hand Canadians have to face up to the question that their deficit is increasing. We have not arrested it; it is still continuing, and each time we make ourselves more vulnerable because if at any time those who have invested in Canada decide they want to repatriate their money, to that extent they put the Canadian dollar under pressure.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this bill may I say first of all that I support it. I would like to make a few brief comments on the international money system and a few suggestions as to avenues that we might explore as a nation to help in the recurring monetary crises. I am sure all of us know that it has been a bad year for the international payments system. First we had sterling devaluation, then the gold crisis and the introduction of a two-tier price for gold, and then massive speculation stemming from the belief that the mark would be revalued and the franc devalued. I have not included the so-called Canadian dollar crisis last winter because it was not in reality a crisis at all. At that time the United States spending guidelines for American corporations which were extended to subsidiaries operating in Canada caused an air of panic in the Canadian government which was both unseemly and unnecessary. A repetition of those events must be avoided at all costs.

The most recent crisis, however, has been exceptional in its sudden onset, in the degree of international disagreement it has revealed, and in its likely political and economic consequences. The immediate starting point was the political difficulties in France last spring where stability was restored by another inflationary push to the economy. France has pursued a policy of economic expansion reinforced by substantial drawings from the International Monetary Fund. Confidence in the monetary system was not forthcoming.

Germany played a crucial role in these events. It is unfortunate that our government was in hiding as our strong balance of payments position could have enabled us to participate fully in a restructured international monetary system. The franc crisis accelerated the trend toward tax increases and trade restrictions. It might be added that our intervention, if indeed there was any, was singularly unproductive. The policies that were announced were greeted with consternation in many quarters.

The immediate question is: Will the measures be sufficient to preserve the system? Only time will tell, but few observers believe that the conference proposals have much chance of success. If this view is correct, will the revisions of the Bretton Woods Agreements Act as outlined in Bill C-138 solve our problems? Some particular tensions could be healed, but the important fact is that an imaginative approach is lacking. Political leadership appears to be lacking here. This will have important consequences, such as speeding up the attempt to enter the European Common Market with further harm to our export potentials.

It is clear, however, that major reforms can no longer be delayed in the international payments position. The United States played a less dominant role than usual recently because of the interregnum following the American election. This should have presented Canada with a greater opportunity to submit some bright new ideas.

Bill C-138 provides for special drawing rights. These apparently are allocated according to the size of each country's international monetary subscription without any further outlining of objectives. These special drawing rights provide additional lending power. The lending power that is created in this way should be used creatively, possibly in conjunction with World Bank loans or the International Development Association, or perhaps as part of a price stabilization program for primary products. This could be a big help to Canada where various products are subject to international price competition, and therefore this is something that we should push.

Some change in the American approach to the price of gold cannot be ruled out. More radical are other ideas, such as to allow greater exchange rates flexibility by using perhaps the so-called "crawling peg".

The proposed legislation could be improved in other ways too. There must be a better way to combat currency speculation.

The interrelationship of trade and aid is well known, and the dependence of our economy on exports makes it logical that we should try to think ahead, to be more pragmatic and to exert our influence in a constructive fashion. One of our problems will be to restore confidence to the international trading community.

The present policies do not have much chance of success over the long run. If this view is correct, it would be appropriate for Canada to be in the forefront of change and to suggest those policies which would be in our interest as long as they are consonant with the interests of the major powers. It might be added that there is little evidence that we have anyone standing up for Canada in these discussions.

May I close by saying that I feel this bill is a step in the right direction but that much more needs to be done.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I believe that Bill C-138 lacks certain features. Today as never before we need new leadership in this field. After all, it is more than a generation since we instituted major reforms in our monetary system. The opposition is often erroneously scorned for its lack of constructive proposals, but I think it is a well known human failing that one blames others for one's own faults. In general I believe this bill should be approved. However, I would like to re-emphasize the words of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) that international monetary systems, no matter how well they function, will not take the place of well directed domestic and trade policies within the country itself.

Most people who have thought about and studied the international monetary system agree that there is need to enlarge the world's monetary reserves, and there is no easy or simple solution to our problems in this field. For example, merely increasing the price of gold would not really solve anything. At this time we must find new solutions to new problems when the leadership and system that have been wanting must be replaced by a new point of view.

For example, the special drawing rights created by this agreement can best function if they are allied with all the reserve assets of the various participating nations. Each country could earmark part of its reserves to this new fund but would retain title to them. If Canada put in $800 million in gold, $1 billion in dollars and $500 million in special drawing rights, it would have a total credit of $2.3 billion. It could use this reserve to settle its account and would use its reserve assets in the proportion earmarked.

Again, it seems that this reserve fund could be used productively. The mere existence of an important reserve balance would enable us to put a larger percentage of our foreign exchange reserves into, for example, an aid program to the Colombo group. Our foreign exchange fund of $2.5 billion was inadequate a year ago, but it was supplemented by I.M.F. credits. If reserve assets were placed in a new organization, a greater proportion of those assets could be put to work in some constructive enterprise.

It has been suggested that there should be a better way of dealing with sudden capital movements in various markets such as brought about the quick flight of capital from Canada a year ago. There should be new methods to offset destabilizing but reversible short-term capital movements. Last year we had to appeal to Washington to amend its guidelines with regard to United States corporations operating in Canada. It would have been a lot less demeaning had there been some international assistance on which to call. The International Monetary Fund eventually provided us with credits, but we had to make urgent pleas to the United States first. Reserves had to be borrowed in Europe and in the United States, and subsequently our bank rate was raised to 7½ per cent and the money supply was tightened. These moves, of course, hurt business activity.

Perhaps we could assist in establishing regional arrangements under the umbrella of an over-all I.M.F. system. Caribbean countries would welcome something along this line. The more these nations are helped to establish their credit, the greater the trading opportunities for us. The developing Commonwealth countries would buy more if they could obtain credits and if their currencies were more solidly established. The great resources of the free world are not in doubt. All that is needed is their effective utilization, and we must now think about taking a few steps in that direction.

Most economists now call for greater flexibility in determining exchange rates. Fixed exchange rates are not fixed forever, of course. All that happens is that the changes, when they occur, are bigger than they would be if there were a 1 per cent or 2 per cent annual adjustment. This kind of compromise would allow for gradual changes to take place. None would be so drastic that they could not be offset by changes in interest rates, which would prevent the flow of funds out of one country. If exchange rates varied, say, one twelfth of one per cent per month or 1 per cent per year, speculators would probably decide that currency raids were not worth the trouble. It would cost exporters and importers a little more to protect forward commitments if currencies were allowed to fluctuate by wider margins, but many major balance of payments disturbances could be avoided by permitting wider spreads in currency values. If speculative incentives were removed, Canada would not be so compelled to change its interest levels, regardless of the effect upon its domestic policies, in order to meet situations created by the demands of foreign creditors.

United strength has kept the free world strong and productive. The important question now is whether we can make some necessary changes. If we fail to rise to the challenge we shall only ensure that our problems will grow, and it will become more difficult later to find a way forward. I see little evidence in the bill before us of the new look necessary to ensure progress and stability.

Mr. Gray: Mr. Speaker, I see it is only a minute or so before one o'clock. I wonder whether I might call it one o'clock?

Mr. Speaker: I am advised that the Parliamentary Secretary has already spoken in this debate and unless there is unanimous consent he cannot speak a second time.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, I believe Your Honour ruled that the previous intervention by the Parliamentary Secretary was on a point of order and was not a speech.

Mr. Speaker: As I mentioned a moment ago, I am speaking on the basis of information received. Of course, I do not have before me what was said earlier. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) reminds me of an occasion some days ago when the Parliamentary Secretary was speaking on a point of order and I had to make it clear he was not really participating in the debate. If that was the same debate, the ruling I made at that time stands, of course, and the Parliamentary Secretary will be entitled to speak after two o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Compton wish to take part in the debate?

Mr. Latulippe: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: There is a further complicating factor. I understand that the hon. member for Compton wishes to contribute to the debate, and there may be other hon. members who also wish to do so.

Mr. Gray: I gladly yield to them, Mr. Speaker.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the discussion on Bill C-138 providing for amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements and other legislation.

Many things could be said on this subject. We had even contemplated introducing amendments but due to the international nature of this legislation which has been prepared in advance by experts in international finance, it is rather difficult for any one in a government such as ours to propose amendments. However, we should be benefitting from these agreements as we are participating in them. However, the main features have been established by the world's higher financial authorities and it is rather difficult to propose an amendment intended to reconcile the requirements of human beings and those of industry.

Therefore, such being the case, we will have to be satisfied in commenting on the general aspects of the bill and analyzing its impact on Canadians. What are the advantages to be gained by these improvements, by changes brought about by the large financial institutions?

Mr. Speaker, it is our opinion that the suggested improvements are nothing but haphazard solutions. This legislation will not cure the ills. It could delay their aggravation or diminish their effects temporarily, but the consequences are nevertheless unavoidable, until some day the situation becomes worse than ever.

In respect of debt repudiation, we have not seen the last of that. The results of these economic ills will be delayed by this sugar-coated pill prepared for us by high international finance, which we will have to swallow in spite of all our objections. Canada could surely get out of these agreements if its economy and financial status were sound. In fact, some countries do not need them to finance their operations, and they live just the same and even trade with other countries. We are a member of that organization, and should any difficulties arise in this country, we could get a sugar-coated pill to delay the progress of the disease. That will not remove the effects of the disease. Indeed, we shall have to put up with them later and it is just a question of time.

Mr. Speaker, the world is always on the move, going through the failures and successes of the great international wars which are, as it were, serious surgical operations that are none the less the strong evidence of a surprising vitality and even of a better recovery.

In 1944, at the end of the war, when one could expect that it would wind up successfully for the allied powers, financial experts from all parts of the world met in Bretton Woods, in New Hampshire and laid the groundwork for postwar international operations. After long discussions, it was decided to establish the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development and the International Monetary Fund. This was considered as an economic and not a political system. Russia sent non-participating observers, because she did not want to be considered a capitalist country. She wished to retain her Communist or socialist philosophy, which of course differs from capitalism or economic liberalism.

Mr. Speaker, we are in 1969, 25 years after the Breton Woods Agreements. A quarter of a century has elapsed since those famous meetings where the great bankers of the capitalist countries laid the foundations of an international monetary system. We must reflect on the happy or unhappy results of the structures of those organizations, on their qualities which must be preserved and their weaknesses must be eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, in short, those institutions were useful and even necessary. The experience of 25 years can be very instructive and reassuring for all countries. I think the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund are necessary and must be maintained. We must study closely their mechanism with a view to improving it and making it more effective as well as more accessible to the countries which cannot benefit from it, even though they are members.

Whatever the differences, Mr. Speaker, which seem to exist between the various currencies, as well as between various methods of administration and various economic philosophies, political economy is based upon the same needs, the same requirements and the same imperatives.

Everywhere, Mr. Speaker, the production of goods and services is made by adults, for the whole population. That production has two purposes: consumption of those goods and services by the whole population, and capitalization of surpluses to ensure future production as well as the development of production, producing instruments and constant productivity for a progressive national and international population.

Everywhere, Mr. Speaker, we find that production equals consumption and capitalization. Whether in a capitalist, socialist or Communist country, everywhere the production of goods and services is made for consumption and capitalization by adults and by the whole population.

Thus, a distinction should be made between monetary, economic and political systems. This new distinction, at least for persons who are not aware of the great international principles, can be very useful to understand what appears to be so complicated when money is mentioned in our economic and political discussions.

Everyone knows that production is achieved through capital and labour, and that capital deserves a wage, an interest, if it is reasonable. The resulting buying power is then used to purchase a share of the output. All that is part and parcel of an economic system, of an international banking system or of the Bretton Woods Agreements, if you want. That is one aspect of the present economy. A distinction has to be made between the monetary system and economics.

In July 1942, the end of the war was felt to be near. The larger countries had an eye on the post-war period and were planning whatever orientation might be given to the international economy, by means of super-national agencies. In Bretton Woods, in 1944, the question was not to create the United Nations Organization but to organize the financial affairs of the capitalist nations. The point was not international policies but international finance. The two subjects are always treated separately even though financiers and statesmen of national or international standing are often the same people.

It must be understood and recognized that all those organizations are a far cry from the small enterprise and oblivious to the needs of the individuals and their families. Financial delegates or members of this great institution are only concerned with big problems.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

At such a high level, that of the large undertakings, only capital and capital gains are protected and promoted. The individual, the family, the farm and the small industry are completely disregarded at the meetings of that institution. At that stage, only the millionnaires in countries belonging to international institutions take part in the discussions.

• (2:20 p.m.)

One has to realize that the delegates to such great exhibitions of international financial know-how get quickly into the habit of talking in millions of dollars and easily forget the problems of cents, dollars, work, family budget, purchasing power, unemployment, social or family allowances.

Even if Mr. Deutsch resumed his post from 1963 to 1968 as president of the Economic Council of Canada, he is already used to great financial ways, to financial and international theories and principles. Even if Mr. Rasminsky became later Governor of the Bank of Canada he is already more concerned with millions and billions rather than with the needs of small institutions, families and small industries in Canada, because large businesses seem able to draw his attention. Those big shots are managing the economy of the country with a mind opened to the consideration of large projects rather than the needs of the individuals and the family. This is why I say that Mr. Rasminsky has no qualms about increasing the rates of the Bank of Canada when it suits him or the great powers, even if it is prejudicial to the nation. As Governor of the Bank of Canada, he has the power to do it and no economist or official of the present government can intervene, not even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

We must understand them and leave them to their elaborate explanations, but we must develop another argumentation from the bottom, to get to the needs of families, small family businesses, farms, stores, still the most important part of the population, without which there would be no country to sign the Bretton Woods Agreements.

If the large institutions handle millions and billions of dollars accumulated through profits, and reserve capital, it must be borne in mind that their importance is due precisely to the great many small employees, the millions of salaried workers who administer family budgets.

Among the great Canadians present at Bretton Woods were the right hon. Louis St-Laurent, then Minister of Justice and later Prime Minister of Canada, the hon. Lionel Chevrier, Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Munitions and Supply and later Chairman of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority, Mr. G. F. Towers, then Governor of the Bank of Canada, who remained in that office until 1955, Mr. J. J. Deutsch, Assistant to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who was to become later the Chairman of the Economic Council of Canada in 1963, Mr. Louis Rasminsky, deputy chairman of the Central Council of the Foreign Exchange Board, who became governor of the Bank of Canada. It will be noted that all these great Canadians, like all the great financiers and politicians of other countries who were present when the Bretton Woods Agreements were signed, stood aloof from individual and family problems and were deeply interested in matters of millions and billions of dollars with which important national and international institutions are able to deal.

When they founded the International Bank and the International Monetary Fund at Bretton Woods in 1944, the least of their concerns was the protection of the individual and of the family within which the individual can grow.

It must therefore be understood, Mr. Speaker, that on that solemn occasion when the Bretton Woods Agreements were negotiated, the participants were thinking big, they were thinking in terms of millions and billions and not in terms of the cents and dollars of the citizens of Canada and other countries.

In 1944, when soldiers fell every day by the thousands on the battlefields, the importance of the individual was certainly the least worry of politicians and bankers, whether national or international.

Capital and its relevant institutions claimed all the efforts of the learned men assembled at Bretton Woods.

The idea was to place international organizations above even the most powerful and prosperous national organizations belonging to the 44 countries represented there.

Such was the spirit pervading the minds of politicians and financial leaders of the greatest countries in the world. So they set up an International Monetary Fund, and an International Bank which, in fact, are hardly anything else but extensions of national, financial and banking organizations. Such are the broad lines; details are irrelevant.

There is no use asking those huge organizations to save the individual human being, who is born and raised only too often unfortunately in slums.

You will notice that politicians, businessmen and bankers of high national and international standing are all university graduates so they cannot help doing what they were taught to do at the university. When they realize that their great distinction leaves behind them and their mighty organizations such dismal failures as unbalanced economies or wide gaps between the rich who go on growing richer and the poor who sink ever deeper in poverty and destitution, here is their excuse: We have to act according to what we learned at the university.

From the political, financial, economic and banking points of view, the basic training is dispensed by the same central universities, English, European or American; they teach the same political philosophy, the same techniques and the same doctrines.

The universities of Oxford, Paris, Louvain, Rome, Harvard, M.I.T., which our Canadian, European and American economists attended, teach, discuss and dialogue in the same way on all financial and economic matters.

Mr. Speaker, it is almost unbelievable. In the smallest parish, where there is a credit union, or the branch office of a bank, you will find, even if it is on a small scale, the monetary, economic and political mechanisms found on an international scale in Bretton Woods, the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank.

Whether we study the infinitely small or the infinitely large, our world is so well made, so well adjusted that we find the same phenomena, the same problems, the same solutions, the same difficulties, the same research and the same conclusions.

Everywhere money is a means of exchange controlled by the financial and economic powers that be, the great world bankers. They control the economic blood of the nation.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Latulippe: Please do.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, the speech of the hon. member is most interesting.

Would he not admit that the international capitalistic system cannot exist without agreements such as those of Bretton Woods?

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Speaker, if I understood correctly, I am asked whether an international capitalistic system can exist without the Bretton Woods agreements?

I shall say yes. We could denounce those agreements. All we would have to do then is to restore the balance in our national economy.

• (2:30 p.m.)

But we participate in them, because it is some kind of assurance taken for fear of future events. Since we are afraid to find ourselves in a bad position, we are participants in the Bretton Woods Agreements. We realize this is not a proper solution, but it is our belief that we can thus be assured of some protection and that we will be in a position to assist other countries which are in a similar situation. Through co-operation, those countries which are better off economically and which have signed those agreements will be able to help other countries whose economy is less well balanced.

In my opinion, those are so many reasons which explain our participation in the Bretton Woods Agreements.

Mr. Speaker, everything is on the move, production, consumption and capitalization. However, some balance and harmony should also be found everywhere. It is no more difficult to achieve this balance both on the national and the international levels than on the personal, family, municipal, provincial or federal levels. Those three national, international or world levels really exist, in a quite different way, indeed, but always according to the same laws and principles. It is a matter of economic and political administration through money, capital and credit where there is trust among fellow-men. Man is the basic element of this problem. Man is always the origin of financial transactions involving millions and billions of dollars on the national, international or world levels.

In short, considering the world history and the history of money, I heartily rejoice in the present world situation of 1969.

Some twenty five years after the Bretton Woods Agreements and the end of World War II, we can see much progress in the world. I think it is proper to say again that even though we did not have at our disposal the economic tools capable of being most helpful for high financial institutions which were more or less accessible to the people, who could not derive full benefit from them, our capitalistic system is still the best in the world. It is up to us to maintain it because as compared to the socialist or communist systems, we see that our capitalism has a right to exist, providing we correct the abuses it allows sometimes.

When the United States succeed in sending three cosmonauts around the moon, and when Russia succeeds in coupling two Soyouz and cosmonauts in outer space, such accomplishments show the kind of progress, evolution and development achieved by the human race. And this is only the beginning of the fantastic developments expected before long. But let us come back to our monetary, economical and political problems. Man is the source of all activities, national as well as international. Instead of criticizing our monetary, economic, political and university systems, let us be happy about these marvelous accomplishments, and let us work with confidence towards the improvement of some simple details overlooked by higher authorities, overconcerned with the establishment of international organizations.

One should not blame the monetary, economic and political systems. They must be criticized if they do not operate with the greatest efficiency expected. However, all organizations are operating better and better and with more and more efficiency. Now, we must make them operate fully, with the utmost efficiency in the smallest detail as far as individual and family needs are concerned. There is abundance for all. The individual and the universal are one and the same thing. Millions and billions should not make us overlook cents and dollars. In my opinion, that is how we should first consider the Bretton Woods Agreements.

Even if, at the present time, we have not been able to improve that very complicated legislation already prepared by the great international financial organizations, yet we have something to say to influence our representatives and the leaders of the country. We must ask them to consider not only the great problems but also the lesser ones. There are minor urgent problems that must be settled. However, only great problems are dealt with, for the benefit of great institutions. Smaller institutions must also be helped. In my opinion, we are responsible for trying to influence our representatives who are negotiating the Bretton Woods Agreements.

Mr. Speaker, it is in that way that we will be able to achieve something. It is not by getting rid of everything good, because what is good should remain. It is not by destroying that we will build. We must build, but it is forbidden to destroy.

Established in 1944 through the Bretton Woods Agreements, the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank are now 25 years old. Both institutions have had significant effects. They did much more through their activities and the central leadership given to member States in the post-war period than if every country had been left on its own, without any guidelines.

The Monetary Fund and the International Bank have at least created a climate of confidence between small and great nations, between the war-torn countries which had to rebuild everything, and the countries which were spared massive destruction and we were able to co-operate, according to a definite plan, to the reconstruction and the development of devastated countries.

That those institutions have been beneficial to the most powerful of the member countries, and that others benefited less, that remains to be ascertained. Some improvements could be brought about if necessary but on the whole, the existence of those institutions has been greatly justified and much appreciated by all.

The unrest which persists in some countries can be corrected in the long run, and the weaknesses of those institutions may be remedied to ensure an even greater efficiency and benefit to all countries concerned, and even to the whole world.

The uneasiness at the heart of certain international financial organizations is similar in nature to the deficiencies which appear in the monetary, political or economic systems of countries, provinces, cities and villages. The powerful help the less fortunate, but demand to profit from it, which is normal and profitable for all concerned, large and small alike. Profit is necessary to all, but the essential thing is to bring about a certain balance between the participants. Proportion, balance, and harmony, all are needed. One must live and give to each according to his talents and his needs. We, who are strong, must help those who are not as yet. Let us help each other, for we are all friends and brothers, and we all have the same Father.

That is what we must strive to achieve, at the level of international institutions, as well as at the national, federal, provincial, regional, community, family, social, personal, and individual level.

All individuals and all nations are interdependent. The entire world is made up of human beings living on earth. Unrest between countries or citizens of the same country are always due to a lack of proportion, balance and harmony. All those qualities are within the scope of the human mind, according to the capacity of human beings managing different institutions.

Normally, it should not be more difficult for the Minister of Finance to balance his revenues, expenditures and profits in his national budget than for the president of the Royal Bank of Canada to balance the balance-sheet of his bank or the head of a family to balance the family budget, always according to the same sound formula: administration, revenues, expenditures and profits.

When there is abundance and over abundance for all, but some make excessive profits compelling others to show deficits prejudicial to good administration and understanding, the proportion, balance and harmony are destroyed. Whether at the individual, municipal, family or international level, those imbalances must be eliminated.

To maintain the balance of international economy the economic flow between those nations must be abundant and sufficient, because if the economic pressure exerted by institutions is too great, societies will be in a bad way and unbalanced.

On the other hand, if the economy of a country is too weak, new blood must be injected to bring about economic stability, in much the same way it is done to improve the circulation in a human body. The person who suffers from high blood pressure must get a treatment likely to lower the blood pressure. But in cases of low blood pressure, tonics must be prescribed in order to restore normal conditions, and enable the person to be active and enjoy life again.

Mr. Speaker, the same holds true in respect of national or international finance. Our economy lacks stability. In fact, some people get too much profit at the expense of others. Some people are poor because others make excessive profits. That is what is happening at both the international and national levels.

Mr. Speaker, we should try to get those things through to our distinguished university people who can improve and stabilize the world or our national economy. I have not enough connections to contact them but government members are powerful enough; they can bring forth the necessary arguments and they should think about the country. The national economy must be stabilized so that we can finally enjoy a perfect system which will develop to help the people and do away with the dissatisfaction and the disasters we experience today.

We must all assume our responsibilities in this respect. As far as I am concerned, I am prepared to assume my responsibility. If I were influential enough to wind my way among the participants in the negotiations on the Bretton Woods Agreements and try to make them understand my ideas, I would do it. However, I am only a member of the opposition, but common sense tells me that in spite of a lack of balance, the existing system is good. Therefore it must be retained. Capitalism is the best system in the world, it is its abuses which must be corrected. It is those abuses which are putting our economies out of balance and this explains why damage is done. We do not know the cause for the present financial uneasiness. To put an end to that uneasiness, we must remove the cause. There is always one. As long as we do not endeavour to remove the causes, we will not have settled the problem.

As to international drawing rights they are new credits which banks will be able to issue at will; the banks will issue international credits exactly as national banks are now issuing credits within their own countries. This was not done previously. It is somewhat an improvement inasmuch as it is better than nothing. However, then again, it will not solve the problem because if we are going to issue credit bearing interest, the latter will not be created at the same time. Reimbursement of credits which have been issued, plus reimbursement of interest which has not been issued will be required. This may lead, later, to a national unbalance. There still will be repudiation of debts, because we have not found the real solution to the problem.

If debt free credits had been issued, a solution to the problem would have been found, but since these new credits will run every country into debt, they will enable international bankers to take over the assets of a country. Then, one day, that country will be unable to make its payments because it will not be able to give back more than it has received, and its economy will lose its balance. From an international point of view, it is simply a time bomb given to the nations.

Again, these new credits do not constitute the real solution to the problem we should correct, but if one does not have any bread, one eats something else. This legislation is put to us all prepared in advance by these great institutions, and there is nothing we can say.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

We want to bring forward some changes, but we know that nothing will be changed. We have discussed that in committee where the bill was considered clause by clause. I asked some questions and big financiers answered that the unbalanced economic situaion that we know at this time, as well as the repudiations of debts we have already known, will not be eliminated. There will be more repudiations of debts. That was recognized in committee. We discussed and scrutinized this problem. I am convinced there is not much that can be changed. However, we should remain firm in our convictions.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Latulippe: Merci, M. le President.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be short and very much to the point. If hon. members have not realized it already, it is high time we came to the conclusion that just patching the crutches of present international monetary policy is not good enough. All Bill C-138 does is further extend the Bretton Woods Agreement as it applies to international financing. The needs of the international monetary situation in relation to both the developed and underdeveloped countries deserve something far more lasting and permanent than this.

It seems to me that we have no alternative at this time but to support Bill C-138. Again I say it is impossible to continue patching up the old system while at the same time thinking it is going to serve us very much longer. We can have no better example of this than the situation involving the French franc at this very moment. France is in difficulty in this regard and every nation in the free world is concerned, because no nation can stand alone on monetary policy in this time of freer trade when trade is so desperately important.

A few months ago Canada was in difficulties. At the present time our dollar is reasonably stable and our international credits are not in too bad a condition. But in view of what is happening on the world monetary scene, this condition is temporary. The American dollar is in difficulty; the British pound is in difficulty. As long as we countenance this situation we are hastening the day of reckoning. The situation will then be all the more difficult because a more realistic approach was not taken to this problem.

I think Canada should be doing something to improve the situation. We are in a very favourable position to take the lead in this matter. In the Committee of Ten, which is conducting a continuing study of international monetary policies, Canada should take the lead and bring forward forthright and realistic reforms that will cause the entire monetary picture to be effective so far as the needs of the world are concerned.

Not too long ago, when studying the economic problems of some of the developing nations, I realized that the chronic deficit in the balance of international payments situation of the underdeveloped countries is such that it is increasingly difficult for these countries to even repay their obligations to the World Bank. Therefore this problem affects the underdeveloped nations as well.

One of the great needs in the international monetary area is greater liquidity. Only if we have this liquidity can we effect the transfer of those things that enter into the over-all aspect of international trade and international settlements. There is today very little support for replacing the existing system and beginning a new arrangement; therefore we continue as we have in the past, trying to fill the gaps and plug the holes in the World Bank and in the arrangements that came out of the international agreement at Bretton Woods. Therefore, the problem is forever with us.

It seems to me that one of the great needs on the international scene today is for a bank of international settlements where the problem of gold, its value and repricing could be set aside, because even as the gold standard was inadequate for us 30 years ago the gold standard on the international scene is just as inadequate today. If a bank of international settlements were set up, there could be a much freer settlement of international accounts, which would encourage trade. This would not only make the situation easier for the developing countries but would ease the pressures on the main currencies on the international scene.

My comments are aimed at that single point, Mr. Speaker. While we lend our support to Bill C-138, this is done with full acknowledgement of the fact that all we are doing is further extending a system that has already proven to be inadequate. I hope the government will take advantage of this opportunity to give leadership in the committee of which we are a major member in order that a completely new approach may be taken to this whole problem.

The seriousness of the situation is emphasized to us in Canada by reason of the increasing cost of living and the fact that inflation is taking a death grip on our entire economic picture as it is related to other countries of the world with whom we must compete in international trade. The agricultural industry is basically concerned with this problem. Other primary industries are concerned with it. If it were not for the tremendous imbalance of trade that we have with our neighbours across the border, the United States, perhaps we would be forced into a position where we would understand that even Canada, in its favoured position, cannot continue as we are. These few words emphasize the point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker. I draw to the attention of the house the necessity of a completely new approach in this regard, and I urge the government to take some leadership in the matter.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to follow immediately the free-flowing expertise of the two previous speakers on the subject of international monetary arrangements. However, I should like to address a few words to the subject matter of Bill C-138. Some outspoken members this afternoon have referred to the Bretton Woods Agreement as being nothing but a negative force or institution in the world scene. I take this opportunity to express the conviction that it would be a sad day for the free world, the western world, if we were to lose whatever orderliness we have achieved in the post-war period through international monetary arrangements. I think the communist block would be more than happy to see some kind of departure from international monetary arrangements in the western world, because they hope that sufficient chaos would result to bring about that breakdown in the western capitalist and social democratic systems for which they have long waited. I agree that there are deficiencies in the present arrangements under the Bretton Woods Agreement. Nevertheless, the essence of the agreement is such that we must take the position that it must be reformed gradually and from time to time over the years.

In so far as the specific content of this bill is concerned, having to do with the establishment of special drawing rights, this is a welcome move. My colleague, the late hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, over the last three or four years that I recall consistently urged successive ministers of finance to urge on the international monetary negotiators on behalf of Canada just this kind of move, namely, the establishment of special drawing rights. I see the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gray) nodding his head in agreement. I am happy that this much is established. Therefore this move, in so far as it goes, is welcomed.

However, I express disappointment that more fundamental reforms have not been suggested. Perhaps I overestimate the importance of it, but it seems to me that in the course of the last three years we have witnessed enough disequilibrium, enough shake-ups in the currencies of various countries which are party to this agreement, that we can say a malaise exists in the international monetary system.

Something more ought to be done than what is involved in Bill C-138. The creation of special drawing rights is fine. It will add to international liquidity. As has been suggested by previous speakers, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) in particular, I think it is generally agreed that as world trade has increased in the past decade there has not been a proportionate increase in the means of settling the accounts involved in international trade. Therefore we welcome the move to increase liquidity by means of special drawing rights.

The question should be asked: Why was not this done sooner? I think the answer lies in the simple fact that there exists in some countries a certain basic, primitive kind of selfishness. Those countries which had a healthy balance of payments situation in previous years were often the ones that opposed any concrete move toward the establishment of special drawing rights. The same countries that opposed it when their balance of payments situation was healthy later supported the establishment of special drawing rights when their balance of payments situation turned negative.

When the situation became really bad they were the ones to become most active in advocating these special drawing rights. Perhaps it is not important to question motives, but both the United States and France created the most difficulties when special drawing rights were discussed. One of them has certainly come around full face in favour of them and, although I have not had time to check lately, I suspect that even France has now come around to a rather lukewarm support of S.D.R.

There is another point I wish to express. It seems obvious to me that if national governments are expected to surrender some of their sovereignty in financial and economic affairs for the sake of international orderliness, this is fine. But if national governments are expected to do that, then I suggest that citizens of these nations should likewise be expected to do so. It has always surprised me that some of the countries which are parties to the Bretton Woods Agreements, and to other international monetary arrangements, have never required as a matter of law that their nationals be prohibited from holding gold in private stock.

I believe that some of the bad effects of international monetary speculations have been due in large part to the speculation carried on by private persons with large funds and economic power at their disposal. These people have used their position and privilege to speculate to the detriment of their own country, and of the free world as a whole, because if one country in the free world falls into financial chaos, it follows logically there would be a chain reaction. I do not know why the international monetary authorities have not yet recommended or requested that member national governments take legislative action to prevent or prohibit the holding of gold stocks in private hands.

I was a member of the delegation visiting France last December, and at that time the President of the French Republic took the opportunity to make a lengthy speech on the subject of international monetary arrangements, and of the French currency situation in particular. He certainly did not spare anyone's feelings in condemning the action of private speculators and the detrimental effect they have on their country and on their fellow citizens.

Although I feel that in Bill C-138 we are finally taking the desirable action hoped for in the past five years or more, namely to increase international liquidity by setting up special drawing rights, there are still other even more fundamental things to move toward in international monetary arrangements.

Finally, I should like to refer to something which the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) mentioned, as reported at page 5896 of Hansard for February 24. He was joined by other hon. members, including my colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr.

Saltsman). He spoke about the extent to which a member country of the Bretton Woods Agreement can choose between various kinds of foreign exchange rates. I am not sufficiently expert in the field to be able to make a judgment as to whether free floating exchange rates are preferable as compared to fixed, but it seems to me that when an international monetary arrangement impinges so much on a country's financial affairs that it cannot choose between two different kinds of exchange rates, then perhaps that international agreement is too restrictive. For slightly more than five years, we in Canada have been so rigidly committed to a fixed exchange rate that at times it put us in a nonsensical position, and this has been allowed to continue for too long.

I believe the hon. member for Edmonton West may well have had a point when he suggested that between a rigidly fixed exchange rate on the one hand and, on the other hand, a free floating exchange rate there may well be a common sense, flexible arrangement, namely an exchange rate fluctuating between an upward and a lower limit. This may well be the most sensible course for Canada to adopt. I tend to agree with him and hope that the minister, his parliamentary secretary and those with whom they are associated in the parliamentary committee, will give this suggestion very close consideration.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, hon. members have made many interesting comments, and expecting this to be the case I rose at the opening of this debate on third reading on a point of order to indicate that it was my intention to speak after others had spoken so that I would be able to attempt to respond to at least some of these comments.

[Translation]

I think it would be proper to recall that the object of this bill is to ratify certain amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements. Those amendments resulted from negotiations during which the representatives of the Canadian people played a most active role. They provide for the creation of special drawing rights.

I must point out to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) that this bill is designed to allow Canada to take part in that program of special drawing rights.

[English]

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) made some interesting comments about the continuing need for conditional liquidity. I think it should be noted that even with the creation of these special drawing rights, which are a form of unconditional liquidity, there continues to be a place for conditional liquidity. The ability to have increases in this latter sort of liquidity continues to exist through the mechanisms in the International Monetary Fund agreement which makes possible increases in the existing quotas of the members of the I.M.F. In this way, the fund will be able to meet the needs of its members for both types of liquidity.

I was most interested to learn that the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Schreyer) seems to have a greater degree of sympathy for the workings of the Bretton Woods Agreement and the International Monetary Fund than does his colleague, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman). I think it was very useful for the hon. member for Selkirk to remind the house of the views of the late Colin Cameron, the former member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, who over the years spoke very strongly in favour of the creation of a form of managed currency in the international field which would be somewhat analogous to the managed currencies which have been created in modern countries of the west.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Certainly, I was concerned to hear what seemed to be an indication from the hon. member for Waterloo of less support for this concept than the late Colin Cameron exhibited. But I was pleased to note the support for it put forward by the hon. member for Selkirk. We should recall that Canada is particularly dependent on the existence of a smoothly operating system of international trade. The hon. member for Waterloo appeared to cast some doubt upon the wisdom of Canada's participation in such a system, but I suggest we cannot expect to enjoy its benefits if we are not prepared to take part in the processes of international negotiation and discussion for its improvement as we have been doing over the years, one result of which is the bill we are now considering. I sincerely hope the hon. member for Waterloo is not seeking a return to the conditions which persisted before the first world war, conditions of autarchy, with declining world trade and resultant depression and unemployment.

I would point out to the hon. member for Waterloo that contrary to what he appeared to suggest in his remarks, the rules of the fund do not provide for a veto to be held by any one country. Though the size of the quota of the United States gives it a certain weight in voting, the same could be said for the common market countries acting together as they would be able to do under one of the amendments to the fund agreement which we are considering. We should recall that the International Monetary Fund exists not in the interest of any one country but in the interests of its members as a whole.

I should also point out with respect to the ability of member countries to draw what is known as the first tranche that no special conditions have been laid down in advance for so doing, contrary to what was suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo.

The special drawing rights scheme provides a way of supplementing present stocks of international reserves including those which are held in the form of gold at their existing prices. Again, therefore, contrary to what appears to have been suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo, the scheme will not have the effect of doubling the price of gold.

The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) made some interesting comments about the possible uses of the new special drawing rights. It should be remembered that the purpose of creating these rights is to add to the supply of international reserves a form of unconditional liquidity. Once the scheme is in operation participating countries will be able to use these rights without accepting conditions of the type which could be imposed on them in connection with the use of the present rights, the only conditions being the repurchase obligation which I described at an earlier stage of this debate and a further obligation through which participants in the special drawing rights scheme are expected to use those rights basically for balance of payments purposes and not solely to change the condition of the reserves. I should also like to thank the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) for his useful and stimulating comments.

The participation of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) in this debate demonstrates how an understanding of the importance to Canada of a smoothly operating monetary system can cut across party lines. I can assure him I shall bring his remarks to the attention of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson). As he perhaps knows, I am here on behalf of the minister and on his behalf I have had carriage of this piece of legislation from the outset.

I wish to assure the hon. gentleman that the Minister of Finance and the government are following developments on the international monetary scene very closely. The active participation of Canadian representatives in negotiations leading up to the formulation of the special drawing rights scheme, and the present efforts of the government to obtain parliamentary approval for Canada's participation in it show, in my opinion at least, the importance which the government attaches to such matters.

As I pointed out during earlier stages of this bill, the special drawing rights scheme is an important step forward in the development of the international monetary system. As I have said before, and in this I agree with some of the remarks made by other hon. members, it should not be considered to be a panacea or a cure-all for the problems of the international monetary system; there will continue to be problems to be dealt with within the context of that system. Nevertheless, the existence of this scheme will help ensure that the future growth of world trade and payments will not be impeded by a lack of reserves in the system. This is very important to Canada, as the hon. member for Etobicoke pointed out, since we are a major trading nation. Our prosperity—the prosperity of our workers and farmers—depends on world trade to a degree equalled by only a very small number of other countries.

This is why I ask the house for approval of the amendments before us. They represent a package arising from negotiations in which Canadian representatives played a very active part. The passage of this bill will mean that Canada is giving formal agreement to the creation of this special drawing rights scheme as well as an indication that it will be taking part in it.

For the program to come into effect, the amendments to the International Monetary Fund agreement must be accepted by at least three-fifths of the membership of the International Monetary Fund holding at least 80 per cent of the total votes. As of December 31, 1968, 27 countries representing 42.2 per cent of the total votes had given their approval. As of February 13, 1969, 34 members representing 50.51 per cent of the total voting power had accepted the amendment. The minimum number of countries whose support is required for the agreement to come into effect is 67 and Canada's acceptance will add a further 3.2 per cent to the votes. This will not only bring the scheme nearer to adoption but it will, it is hoped, encourage other countries to approve of the scheme coming into existence.

Once the scheme has been accepted by the required majorities it will be possible for the first time for international monetary reserves to be created by deliberate and joint action of the nations belonging to the International Monetary Fund to meet the requirements of the whole international monetary system.

I think most hon. members who participated in the work of the Standing Committee on Finance will agree with me when I say that contrary to what was suggested by the hon. member for Waterloo this bill did receive detailed study there. Serious attention was given to it by members of the committee representing all parties in this house. At the time we seemed to be completing our work, no member of the committee thought it necessary to rise to propose that the study be continued, that witnesses be recalled or that further witnesses be heard. The committee held seven meetings on the bill, earh extending over several hours, and during those meetings it heard evidence from senior officials of the Department of Finance and the Bank of Canada, the men who have represented our country in the negotiations leading to the development of this special drawing rights scheme.

The committee heard the views of economists linked with banks and investment houses on the question of exchange rates and other related aspects of the international monetary system. Members were able to question the witnesses directly on the subject of the bill and related matters in a way which would not have been possible had the bill remained in the committee of the whole house under the old rules in force before the Christmas recess. Therefore, it is my feeling that the opportunities members of the committee had there certainly brought about a broadening of understanding on the part of all who participated in the hearings on the issues and problems connected with international monetary policy.

In conclusion, let me thank the hon. members who have participated in the discussion of this bill both in the house and in the finance committee. I again ask the house for its approval and support of this bill so that we can participate in this special drawing rights scheme which is a step forward in the development of a system of international payments and world trade, something very important for both the present and future prosperity of Canada.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

PEST CONTROL

REGULATION OF PRODUCTS USED IN CONTROL PROCEDURE

The house resumed, from Friday, February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-157, to regulate products used for the control of pests and the organic functions of plants and animals be read the third time and passed.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to be too long in debating this bill which was gone into at length in committee, but there are one or two matters that I believe should once again be raised, not for the advice of Your Honour, not necessarily for the knowledge of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson), but specifically for the information of the members of this chamber and the people of Canada in general. It has been stated both in the press and on the radio that there is a growing fear that a police state is developing in this country. The minister shakes his head indicating a negative answer.

Mr. Olson: Exactly the opposite.

Mr. Horner: The minister says from his seat "exactly the opposite". I am pleased to hear him make that comment, because this is the second piece of agricultural legislation that has granted huge powers to an individual of the minister's choosing. Under clause 6 of this bill, the minister may designate any qualified person to be an inspector under the act.

An inspector under this act is given license to open the door and enter any premises. An ordinary policeman must have a search warrant to enter a house to see whether or not drugs, for example, are on the premises; but an inspector under this act can walk into any premises without notice and carry out an inspection in any way he wishes.

Although the minister says that we are moving in the opposite direction, I have already told the house that this is the second piece of legislation connected with agriculture that grants huge powers to an individual of the minister's choosing. Other pieces of legislation similar to this are continually being brought before the house to grant wide powers to individuals who, in a policeman-like manner are permitted to control use of products, or the marketing or manufacture of such products.

Therefore, I must caution the country at this time, through you, Mr. Speaker, that unless we are prepared to honour these civil liberties that we often speak of in this chamber, some day we may find ourselves severely restrained and policed. This would mean that new ideas and products, or new uses of existing products, would be restricted.

That is the point I wanted to raise on third reading of this bill, particularly so far as clauses 6 and 7 are concerned. Clause 6 gives the minister the power to choose inspectors, and clause 7 outlines the duties of such inspectors. According to this bill, inspectors may enter any place or premises for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of the act.

As a result of this provision, wide powers are conferred. The acts deals with many situations and products, including pesticides which, in a sense, are lethal drugs. Inspectors are given the power to control the normal and beneficial use of drugs and insecticides. These inspectors are given more power than we give our own police to control the spread of drugs in society.

As I say, this is the second piece of agricultural legislation that has conferred such powers, and we have seen similar powers conferred in other legislation since this government has taken office. I, therefore, raise that warning and hope it will be heard, particularly by the backbenchers of the Liberal party. I trust that this trend, or what appears to be a trend, into which the country is drifting will be stopped.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I have a few observations to make with regard to this bill. We have dealt with other bills in similar form that control people's actions, shall we say, because we are living in this modern age of technology. When we take this step, I think the law should have some special application to this end. My main complaint against this particular bill is that it contains provisions to enable individuals who fall afoul of the regulations made pursuant to the act to be prosecuted.

I do not think we should adopt the standard criminal procedures and apply them to actions that are taken under regulations of this kind. I cannot see any need for a provision in this bill to enable an individual who has violated the terms of the act to be indicted and made liable to imprisonment for two years. I do not think this situation should be permitted. The emphasis and the provision should be civil, and if I misuse the term I am sorry, but the approach should be the imposition of a fine. If a retailer or someone who operates a factory persists in violating the act, some move could be made against his operation for a period of time. An individual who has violated this act should not be classed as a criminal. It is outdated for an inspector to go to a justice of the peace, who may or may not be knowledgeable in the law, in respect of someone who in his opinion has violated this act. The inspector should go to a proper magistrate. I would assume that if there were a miscarriage of justice in this initial stage and the individual were charged, there would be a right of appeal. However, this litigation will cost him time and money.

Legislation of this type should not put the individual to any more trouble or inconvenience than is necessary to control dangerous pesticides. These can be very dangerous if used in the wrong time and place by people not aware of the possible consequences. People who act in this manner are not necessarily criminals. This is what concerns me, Mr. Speaker. The individual must not bear any more burden than is absolutely necessary. These measures may not appear important to urban dwellers.

There are five counties in the province of Ontario which have regulations concerning the movement of farm material, and these affect many farmers. I do not expect the government will change this bill at the third reading stage, but I would urge them in future to tailor the provisions of the law so that they will specifically achieve the objective which is desired.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): This bill, Mr. Speaker, seeks to control quality and distribution of pest control products. It can be deemed an honourable objective to improve the quality and method of production of these products which, as a result of experience, have shown deleterious effects when improperly manufactured or applied. Beyond that this bill is the most bureaucratic nonsense I have yet come across.

I spoke on Bills C-154, C-156 and now C-157. The minister has come up with a scissors and paste job on various sections of acts completely wiping out the rights of the individual vis-à-vis the bureaucracy that would enforce this act. I know this is quite immaterial to the minister who likes to let the juggernaut of the big government employee or representative roll over the rights of the individual.

Regulations can be made under this act, none of which require to be published. When speaking recently on one of the other acts the minister protested and said they will be published, but there is no guarantee that any regulation must be published. There is still provision in the Regulations Act that the Governor in Council can deem it necessary or expedient that the regulations shall not be published.

Mr. Olson: But we will publish them, as I told you.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): As I said the other day, Mr. Speaker, the road to Hades is paved with good intentions. These are only pious intentions. The minister's statements are not worth one iota in determining legal rights in the interpretation of this act. When it comes to a court of law, if one is able to do so, the minister's words or those of anyone else are meaningless. I ask the minister to get advice from the judicial offices of the Crown as to what is binding upon a court. We are interested in the precise letter of the law, nothing more, nothing less, rather than the minister's interpretations. The court must reach its own conclusions.

I now turn to the question of detention of products. It is the inspector who determines the seizure and detention of products. He decides how long they are to be detained or if they are to be destroyed at the owner's expense. He ensures that the provisions of the act and the regulations have been complied with, "or at the expiration of six months from the day of seizure, or such longer period as may be prescribed with respect to any control product"—

There is no statutory guarantee as to the length of time products may be detained. My colleague, the hon. member for Crowfoot (Mr. Horner) mentioned the powers of an inspector under Clause 7. As I indicated when speaking on the other bills, any qualified person acting as an inspector for the purposes of this act can move into any premises at a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time? Is it any time between six in the morning and ten at night or even midnight? The inspector may examine any product, search the premises and may require the production of books and bills.

There is no appeal from this provision. The man is given a certificate indentifying him as an inspector of the Minister of Agriculture for the purposes of this statute. Then he has complete right to do what he sees fit within the ambit of the regulations set by the minister. As I pointed out, police officials in search of drugs or of stolen property must have search warrants, but there is no necessity for a search warrant under this legislation.

This is bureaucracy run rampant, yet members on the government side of the house sit silent. They are the ones who are making a great show about a just society and the protection of individual liberties. It is hypocrisy on their part for them to remain silent in this case.

It is not so much the agricultural aspect of this bill that bothers me as it is the question of legal rights. Hon. members opposite laugh. I hope some day they will laugh on the other side of their faces. I hope some of them will run into circumstances where one of their constituents is caught by this provision. Then, we will see them bleating to the minister that one of their constituents has been ill treated. If that happens it will be because they have allowed the minister to ride rough shod over the rights of the individual by allowing this provision to remain in the bill.

Let us look again at clause 9, dealing with seizure and detention, and with the regulations to be made under this clause. As I said we have taken scissors and paste, taken provisions from the acts and put them altogether in this statute embracing all these offences.

The other day in committee we were dealing with Bill S-4 concerning the marking of articles made of precious metals. I argued with respect to a clause dealing with offences that the word "knowingly" had to be inserted. The minister agreed to consult the law officers of the Crown and later the government itself brought forward an amendment to insert the word. Precisely the same clause is in this bill as originally was in bill S-4.

I shall read clause 10 which states:

> Every person who, or whose employee or agent, violates any provision of this act or the regulations is guilty of
> (a) an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years, or

In other words, a person does not even have to know he has violated the provisions of the act to be subject to a penalty of up to two years imprisonment for an indictable offence. The minister's colleague says that an offence must be committed knowingly, but the Department of Agriculture says a person is absolutely liable. Do we accept that? Is that the proper standard for justice?

Mr. Olson: May I ask the hon. member one question?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes.

Mr. Olson: The person is dealing with lethal products. Shouldn't he know what he is doing?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): But there are so many ways of violating any provision in this statute, and of violating regulations that are not even published.

Mr. Olson: They will be.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister says they will be. He is talking hot air, and he knows it, when he says they will necessarily be published. There is another point that the minister has failed to mention, that the burden of proof under this statute is placed upon the person himself. Clause 10(2) reads:

> In any prosecution for an offence under this act, it is sufficient proof of the offence to establish that it was committed by an employee or agent of the accused whether or not the employee or agent is identified or has been prosecuted for the offence, unless the accused establishes that the offence was committed without his knowledge or consent and that he exercised all due diligence to prevent its commission.

The burden of proof is on the accused to show that he did not know his employee was doing something in strict contravention of the act.

The minister says that these are dangerous products. I ask what about narcotics? Yet the minister arms his inspectors with far greater powers than the police have when dealing with narcotic cases.

I agree there has to be some control over pest control products, but do we need this type of control when the minister proposes to trample over the rights of individuals in every possible way merely to satisfy a bureaucratic desire to have simple administration? It can be the rights of an individual, of a manufacturer, of a large corporation or of a small corporation. It does not matter which because this legislation will ride rough shod over their rights.

The minister has the support of hon. members sitting behind him who say nothing. As I said previously, I hope to goodness that one of these days they will laugh on the other side of their faces when one of their constituents comes to them because of action taken by the minister's officials under this legislation. I dare say most of the hon. members opposite have not read clause 5 outlining the powers given to the Governor in Council to make regulations. As so aptly pointed out by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), they are prohibited from raising these points in committee.

An hon. member opposite laughs. I would just like to tell him that when we were dealing with Bill S-4 in the standing committee and I was arguing that the word "knowingly" had to be inserted in order for a person to commit an offence, Liberal members of the committee, lawyers included, started to argue that I was all wrong and that it was not necessary to insert the word. However, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Basford) had the good sense not to argue the case then, and simply said he would consult with the law officers of the Crown. It took him only 24 hours to let me know that he thought I was right on that point. Under the powers given to the Governor in Council by clause 5, regulations can be made that will tie up anyone and deliver him impotent for trial as the bureaucracy wishes. We are quite supine in this house when we give the cabinet all this power. We wash our hands of the thing like Pilate; that is what we think of the rights of individual citizens when we pass bills of this kind. I for one will vote against this bill not because I disagree with the fact of pest control but because I disagree with the method proposed by the government in doing this.

Mr. Cliff Downey (Battle River): I, too, Mr. Speaker, am very concerned about this legislation. Under clause 7 of this bill powers are granted to an inspector who is not the choice of a group of people and who has not been elected. The inspector is to be appointed by one man and is to be given far more power than are the police or any other official body in this nation. In all other fields of law, we are very concerned about civil rights. Even murderers, thieves and extortionists are given rights. Sometimes they are given rights that make conviction seem impossible. Yet, here we are putting into effect regulations which virtually make farmers the slaves of bureaucratic whim and which make private property rights in the agricultural segment virtually non-existent. Farmers have no guarantee of their rights in this regard. We all know that when laws are made they seldom are retracted. In the aggregate, we end up in a morass of regulations and controls which stifle personal initiative.

As my colleague the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has stated already the burden of proof in areas relating to ordinary crime is such that the individual is considered to be innocent until proven guilty. Are the farmers of this nation such terrible citizens that they must be guilty until they can prove themselves innocent? The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) has always seemed to me to be a reasonable man and therefore I ask him, for heaven's sake, and for the sake of the people in agriculture to please reconsider this clause.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATIVE ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC. —REPORT STAGE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Agriculture on Friday, February 21, 1969, be concurred in.

Motion (for concurrence) agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): When shall the said bill be read a third time? By leave now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Olson moved that the bill be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes at this stage because there is a major amendment of which the members of the committee are well aware but which might not be known to all members of the house who are here this afternoon.

It is an amendment to include in the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act, through passage of Bill C-112, provisions so that farmers who are Indians on reserves may have the same right and access to provisions of this act as those included in the amendment to the Farm Credit Corporation Act. In this way these farmers would have equal rights with any other citizens under the provisions of this act.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to say a few words on this particular piece of legislation. Before I speak specifically about it, I should like to draw the minister's attention to something which has to do with a piece of legislation that passed this house on October 15. I am referring to Bill C-111 in respect of the Farm Improvement Loans Act. The other day I was surprised to receive a report from a constituent to the effect that the regulations in respect of the part of that legislation having to do with the buying of land have not been approved. This is a rather serious matter for farmers who wish to buy additional land this year, because they find that the money they expected would be available through the medium of this act is not available. Therefore, I would ask the minister to see that these long overdue regulations in respect of loans to farmers are brought in immediately so that farmers who are planning their spring work may be able to buy the additional piece of land they wish to buy.

Now, I should like to speak about the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act. I notice from the Grey County Federation of Agriculture report that the practice of going to England to buy farm tractors is still going forward. This report is in the form of a bulletin issued at the time of a "Meet the members meeting" of last week. This bulletin states in part:

> The Federation of Agriculture and farm people in general are still waiting for the Barber Commission Report on Farm Machinery to be handed down. We are confident that this report will bear out the fact that Canadian farmers are being grossly overcharged for their machinery compared to their English counterparts.

Then, it goes on to say:

> We are presently bringing in several tractors for our farmers to further expose this price discrepancy and with the hope that machinery companies will lower their prices of main-line equipment.

It is rather interesting to note that quite recently the Federation of Agriculture became interested not only in bringing in tractors but also in bringing in a great many other items of farm machinery which they suggest can be purchased in England for a good deal less than in Canada. The result is the farmers feel there is a discrepancy and that they are not being treated fairly. No tractors are being manufactured in Canada. Tractors should be available to all the farmers in Canada at the reduced prices and not just to those who, because they have some money of their own, are able to go to England to arrange for these purchases.

On a previous occasion I asked the Minister of Agriculture whether he had referred this matter to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner). I feel there are some great savings being made through buying this equipment in England and that there must be something wrong in the farm machinery industry in Canada in respect of profits.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. It being four o'clock the house will now proceed to a consideration of private member's business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motion and public bills.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. With respect to private bills for today, I believe there is an understanding among those who are interested that the first bill on the list, Bill S-16, can be carried on second reading and sent to the appropriate standing committee. That will not take long and could perhaps be done in 15 or 20 minutes. I was wondering whether we could stay on government business for the next half hour or 40 minutes, proceeding a little further with the bill now before us, and then at 20 minutes or quarter to five go to private bills to deal with that bill in respect of which there is an understanding.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, we would be prepared to do this following what I understand will be an interesting intervention by one of the members on this side. We would be prepared to carry on with this bill in the hope that it could be completed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Howe.]

PRIVILEGE

MR. LUNDRIGAN—FAILURE TO BE INCLUDED IN TRIP TO SEALING AREA

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege, and I beg your indulgence in permitting me to elaborate in some detail. Everybody in the house is aware of the controversy which surrounds the Canadian seal fishing industry and also that earlier in the week the minister announced his intention to visit the Atlantic area and the Gulf of St. Lawrence to personally view this operation. I think most hon. members are aware that I was personally invited to go on this trip by our caucus chairman, the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse), as a member of the fisheries committee.

As a result, the radio, television and newspaper media, were notified that this visit was to be made. From the comments received it was apparent that many Canadians were happy there would be somebody present who understood something about the other side of the story.

This trip was scheduled for 2.30 p.m. today. Despite very stringent commitments on my part and on the part of other members of our party in respect of party work, we were ready and arrangements were made so that I could personally make the visit. I was informed this morning at 9.30 that the time of departure was advanced to one o'clock, or an hour and a half earlier, the excuse being that weather conditions would not be suitable for tomorrow's activities.

I accepted this fact and, after, a great deal of confusion amongst members, it was conveniently arranged that I make the trip at one o'clock or a few minutes after in order that I might be with the minister and other members of the committee on this visit to the Atlantic region. Having made a tremendous effort with, as I suggest, a great deal of confusion, I arrived at the airport a few minutes after one o'clock only to find that the plane had departed, even though the planners of the trip—the minister's people—had been informed over an hour earlier that I would be there, and after an announcement had been made at a quarter to one that I was on my way but would be a very few minutes late. The trip began without me.

I hope these remarks will not indicate any childishness on my part in not being able to attend, but I can only draw the conclusion that this was an attempt to prevent any representative of the people who had any knowledge of these fisheries problems from taking part in the visit.

My question of privilege is that when public facilities are being used for this purpose an opportunity should be given for representation of a cross-section of the Canadian public. Representatives of all the various views should be allowed to be present during such an investigation. This trip has started without any representation from this party and without, I would say, representation, of perhaps 95 per cent of the people who have a realistic outlook in respect of the problem in question.

We will now have a Davis tour of the region with no representation from our party or from those members from the Atlantic region who understand this problem. I consider this to be an unfair deal to members of the fisheries committee and the members of our party. Aside from my own personal disappointment about this trip, I feel there are a good number of people in the Atlantic region who will be disappointed that they will not be represented by anyone from the Atlantic region with an awareness of the significance of the problem and perhaps a little more realistic outlook.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to speak to the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate (Mr. Lundrigan). In doing so let me say it is a matter of great regret that the minister would undertake this trip to the ice fields on this opening day of the seal hunt, neglecting to invite those of us who are interested, and who have raised this matter on numerous occasions in the house. I am thinking of the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Carter), myself, and the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. We cannot all be members of the fisheries committee but, notwithstanding that, there are those of us who have a tremendous interest in this matter because of the existence of this industry in our constituencies and province. We are very concerned about the statement the minister made regarding the future of the sealing fishery and we are very much afraid the minister has only taken those people with him who share his views on the sealing industry. Regrettably none of those who are aware of the real situation and represent the people in this area will be in attendance during this visit.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed that the house now revert to the consideration of Bill C-112, in the hope that it may be disposed of in a half hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FARM MACHINERY SYNDICATES CREDIT ACT

AMENDMENTS TO BROADEN PURPOSES OF LOANS, ENABLE CO-OPERATION ASSOCIATIONS TO OBTAIN LOANS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration of the Motion of Mr. Olson that Bill C-112, to amend the Farm Machinery Sydicates Credit Act, be read the third time.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I was discussing this bill in respect of an argument I have made several times in this house to the effect that farmers can band together, go to England and buy farm tractors and save a great deal of money. The first instance of this was brought to my attention by the Secretary of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture who maintained that on seven tractors the group saved $20,000. That is a great saving on the purchase of seven tractors. If this saving is available to a few farmers, it should be available to all farmers in Canada. I sincerely hope that the minister has brought this matter to the attention of the commission, so that we will have a complete and thorough investigation of this profit factor in connection with farm machinery.

If what I have been led to believe is true, the farmers in Canada have not been treated fairly in respect of the price of farm machinery. I said a few minutes ago that this is a field in which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) should have some interest. He should make an examination of whether excessive profits are being made by farm machinery companies in this country to the detriment of the agricultural industry.

To sum up, I should like to once again draw the attention of the minister to the fact that the bill in respect of the Farm Improvement Loans Act, which was passed on October 15, 1968, many months ago, was debated in the house at some length and with some vigour by members of the opposition in an attempt to improve the legislation. As a result, we were accused of holding up loans to farmers. It is now March 7, several months later, and we find that one part of that particular bill is not yet operative because the regulations to be issued by the Department of Finance have not yet been published.

I should like to ask the minister to look into this matter and make sure that these regulations are brought into force. The farmers are in the process of planning their year's work and many of them want to buy extra land which has been made available to them through the provisions of this legislation. Because the regulations have not been approved, they cannot take advantage of this act. I sincerely hope the minister will look into this matter which I have brought to his attention.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill, another piece of legislation dealing with farm credit, which is a subject of concern to the whole agricultural industry today. I very much wonder whether this bill will meet the purposes that it was once designed to meet. I remember about three years ago the former minister of agriculture, who is now in the other place, outlined his hopes and aspirations for this piece of legislation. At that time he said this measure would cure all the ills with which farmers were confronted. He said it would allow them to buy machinery jointly, which would lower their costs of production and thereby reduce the cost-price squeeze. About that time, the minister paid a glowing tribute to the legislation at a meeting in Lethbridge with the farmers of Alberta. This was about three years ago.

The legislation was presented to parliament and debated at length in this House of Commons. I said at that time that the legislation would have to do more, it would have to go further, if it were to be applicable to farming conditions and in any way fulfil a small portion of the minister's hopes and aspirations.

It does me some good to see some of the suggestions for which I argued three years ago now included in the bill. At that time farm machinery was covered. I said this was not good enough; the bill should also cover the purchase of land on which buildings could be placed. I said at that time that a building could very well be a component part of a machine or could in a sense be the entire machine. At that time I gave a lengthy definition of what was an agricultural implement and what was an agricultural machine. I asked: Did it have to have moving parts, or not? In any case, Mr. Speaker, I could not at that time convince the minister, after lengthy debate. I am sure the minister recalls the debate.

I argued for the inclusion of buildings and land on which buildings could be placed, but they were not included in the bill. I also argued for two or three other things that should be included in the bill. I should like to bring to the attention of the house those things which I argued should be included in the bill about three years ago, because perhaps three years from now the same minister or a different one will recognize that the application of the act is not nearly as broad as he thought it might be and will look for ways in which it can have broader application.

I say this, Mr. Speaker, because this act has not had very broad application. It has in fact, been very restricted in its application. It has application to family corporations or groups of farmers, sons, daughters, cousins or uncles, who are farming and can conceivably use a machine if they join forces. They can then borrow money under the act. This is the purpose for which the act has primarily been used. I do not hesitate to say that something like 66 per cent of the loans made under the act to date have been made to what one might call family clans comprising of perhaps uncles, sons, daughters, and so on, farming separately. They have banded together to buy machinery under the act.

Mr. Olson: You mean family farmers.

Mr. Horner: I mean families farming entirely for themselves, but the relationship existing for a family farm. The minister is mumbling away to himself, but he does not deny the 66 per cent figure which I mentioned. I think this is very close to being the fact. But if you accept that figure, you must ask yourselves why the application of the act has been narrowed and confined to groups of farmers related by blood, brothers-in-law, uncles, sisters, or what have you.

The minister has done this for one reason. That reason can only be that loans under the act must be jointly and severally held. In other words, the act provides that a maximum amount of $100,000 may be borrowed if seven farmers participate. The act suggests that they do not all have to be farmers, but the majority of them have to be farmers. The old act suggested that they all had to be farmers.

However, Mr. Speaker, that is not the point I am now trying to make. The point is that each person can borrow $15,000, and that is all he can borrow. But seven or more farmers can borrow up to a maximum of $100,000. In this event, each person who joins the syndicate has to sign a promissory note making himself liable for $100,000. In other words, while his credit is good for only $15,000 as one-seventh of the syndicate, he has to sign a promissory note accepting liability for the total amount of $100,000. So instead of the government getting security for the $100,000, if there are seven people in the syndicate the government gets security for $700,000. Aren't they big, brave, bold lenders? I cannot accept that they are. What is the situation here? A member joining a syndicate, signing up for $100,000 and receiving the benefit of only $15,000 does so only on those occasions when he benefits the clan generally. I use the word "clan" quite generally.

When this bill was first introduced in the house about three years ago I said this was the wrong principle. I said that if the government wanted a wide application of the bill it should allow a person to sign a promissory note for that portion of the money which he was prepared to accept from the syndicate, whether it be one-fifth, one-seventh or one-hundredth. He should have to sign a promissory note for that portion only.

The minister, and the chairman of the Farm Credit Corporation, a man who I know is doing his best to have the act applied in a wide manner, have continually told me that all this is not really necessary, that the real security under the act is the machine itself for which the syndicate borrowed money. Although the machine might deteriorate, they can always pick it up. If there is a default in any way, the machine can always be picked up. Then, the government would have the machine, and I suppose in that case the syndicate would go broke or would in any event forfeit its use of the machine.

We were told that there was really nothing to worry about; farmers could just sign a promissory note for $100,000, and there would never be a foreclosure because the machine itself was part of the security. This is all the more reason for the government accepting the fact that a promissory note held jointly and severally under this act is not necessary. In fact, any wise, prudent financial operator would not sign a note for $100,000. It just is not good business sense to sign a note for $100,000 and receive the benefit of only $15,000. If the minister wants a wide application of this act, I urge him to consider this point.

When the bill was studied in committee it was pointed out that there was one syndicate that had 87 members. Under the bill the 87 members could borrow only $100,000, but each member signed a promissory note for $100,000 without batting an eye. When you have 87 members in a syndicate, you can bet your bottom dollar that even if five or six of them go broke and are unable to meet their liability in respect of the promissory notes, 81 or 82 members will still pick up the tab.

But if you have only seven in a syndicate, and three of them found all of a sudden they had to pay income tax on a lot of money, had to sell their holdings to do so and they did not have much security, you would be left with four people to pick up the $100,000. Then, the trouble would begin. Stringent measures may have to be taken in the years ahead in view of the present government's attitude toward collecting money. However, this is another subject with which I should like to deal at some other time. I do not believe the provisions under this act will be of great use to farmers if the government repeatedly insists that loans must be jointly and severally held. There is no reason for it. If the government really believes that the agricultural industry needs financial assistance and that loans should be made for farm machinery, it is the government's duty to make that money available to everybody, whether or not they are members of a large clan and can make use of it because of the security of the clan.

The minister must be well aware of the fact, because I have repeated it in the house several times, that the Economic Council of Canada stated in its report last fall that the agricultural industry in this country was in severe need of financing and that it was 20 years behind the agricultural industry in the United States. Surely after having read this pointed recommendation on the one way in which our industry can catch up and compete with the United States industry, the minister should make every effort to have this act apply in the widest possible way. He should make it available on an equal basis to every farmer in Canada, not just a few members of a clan or family who are farming close together and who can avail themselves of the security of the family to obtain money advanced under this act.

I would like the minister to study the question seriously. If 66 per cent of the loans under this act are in fact made to family clans, then there is a reason for it. The minister should consider this fact seriously. If these are the facts, how can this legislation be changed to rectify the situation?

The second point I want to make concerns the Farm Machinery Syndicates Credit Act and farm implements. In the act we see that additional land and buildings have been added. I ask the minister: Why not cattle? Surely, in this highly technological age we have reached a sufficient degree of refinement of definitions in the field of agriculture to realize that cattle are machines which change crude proteins to refined and digestible proteins. This is, in effect, what they do. We have heard that the former minister of agriculture who is now a member of the other place came up with a new breed of cattle which he called the Hays' converter. Why does he call cattle that? Because he suggests in his advertisement that they will convert eight pounds of roughage to four pounds of beef. I would hate to eat the beef, but that has nothing to do with the point I am making. I do not believe his advertisement. It would have to be a highly developed converter to be able to convert eight pounds of roughage to four pounds of beef.

Mr. Baldwin: It would be pretty rough beef.

Mr. Horner: I agree with my colleague, the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), that it would be pretty rough beef, and I would hate to eat it.

I see the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is back in his seat and I should like to deal with his attitude to the problem. The Hays' converter is an example I gave to prove to the minister that he and his department should give serious consideration to adding to clause 3 paragraph (d) "to purchase feeder cattle". I am not referring to the purchase of grass cattle but rather to the final stage of the livestock industry. I am not saying we should get into the cow-calf operation and raise livestock. I am referring to the final stage of the industry which would consist of buying feeder cattle and converting them to digestible proteins and beef.

If the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce had ventured into western Canada lately and watched some of the cattle sales that took place last month and this month, he would realize that this converter factor is related to the fact the cattle are being fed grain. Let him try and buy some of these cattle. Who is buying them? Farmers with surplus grain and damp grain which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has not sold. Why are they paying such high prices for them? Because they want to convert the damp grain, wheat and feed grains from an unsaleable product, from a crude protein, to a digestible protein. They are using the cattle as machines or as converters, as the minister suggests. I say that in the past ten years it has never been proven, in the highly technological age to which we have advanced that cattle are in fact machines. I am sure that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) knows very well what I am speaking about when I refer to conversion. If he wants me to go further into the subject as to whether or not they are machines, let us look at what is ahead.

Animals are now being developed in test tubes in laboratories so that the whole gestation period in the animal's body may become unnecessary. Experiments of this kind are being carried out in scientific laboratories all over the world. Whether we like it or not, this may well happen in the future.

While I do not want to belabour the point, I hope the minister will seriously consider whether the farm machinery syndicates credit legislation can be made applicable on as wide a basis as possible. I know the minister can say there are other ways of providing money to the cattle and livestock industry, and that money can be borrowed under the farm improvement loans legislation. That is the weakest argument I have ever heard, because the Minister of Agriculture knows and the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce should know how many cattle it takes to move a thousand bushels of grain and what kind of machinery it takes to move that amount of grain. The initial, capital cost of that machine is not the cheapest thing in the world.

Under the farm improvement loans legislation around $15,000 can be borrowed for the purchase of feeder cattle. This is hardly enough. I believe that if this legislation made $100,000 available it would do some good. The minister says the opposition never offers constructive suggestions. Well, I have put forward two extremely important constructive suggestions as to ways in which this act could be improved and I should like him to give them serious consideration.

The third point I want to mention is of a different nature. I shall not belabour it. It has been discussed before in connection with the Farm Credit Act. I refer to the amendment dealing with loans to Indians. I should have liked to speak last night in the debate on the problems of our Indian population. However, the amendment in this bill says that the total of outstanding loans which may be made to any one band shall not exceed $100,000. That is what we find printed on the lefthand side of the page; these are words which in essence summarize the paragraph. They are not hard to understand. They are simple and clear. Any grade eight student could interpret them. But the minister tells us it does not mean that at all. He says this applies only if the band is considered to be one syndicate, or one entity. He says there may be several entities within one band.

It appears there may be several syndicates formed in a band, each of which could borrow up to $100,000. But why, then, does the bill refer to the total amount in this way?

Mr. Olson: That is a complete misinterpretation of the act.

Mr. Horner: The minister says it is complete misinterpretation, and I shall not belabour the point. I shall simply say he is not bringing forward very clear legislation. I am willing to bet that if he took that provision to any chief or administrator of an Indian band and asked for an interpretation he would invariably get a reply to the effect that the maximum loan to a band was to be $100,000.

Mr. Olson: That is wrong.

Mr. Horner: The minister is continuing the stubborn attitude he adopted when the Farm Credit Act was passed. He does not want to change this, because if he changed it now he would be admitting he was wrong in the first place. The result is that every time this act goes out to an Indian administrator or supervisor or Indian chief, we shall have to send out an interpretation of this particular clause as well.

There is another point I should like to make. The Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien) told the house last night that he felt ashamed every time he was called upon to give permission to an Indian to borrow something like $4,000 from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He had to sign before an Indian could borrow this money. I know the minister responsible for Indian affairs is doing his level best. He is concerned about this problem and my heart and hand go out to help him in every way I can.

What is the situation in this legislation? The same minister has to give approval before an Indian band can borrow under these provisions. It can only be done with the approval of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. So we have not really gone all that far; we could go a good deal further for the benefit of the Indians.

I am not particularly satisfied with what the minister has told us. I know the minister's explanation by heart. I could probably recite it as well as he could. But it will not be interpreted in the way the minister thinks it ought to be interpreted unless he is there to make his explanation.

Mr. Olson: The officers of the department will be there.

Mr. Horner: Well, that is a wise suggestion. For a few years, perhaps, the officials of the Department of Agriculture will be there, but in later years they may not be present and the intent of the hon. gentleman might not be carried out. Other things could happen. He might be elevated to a more senior post in this government and someone else might have a different interpretation of the amendment.

Mr. Baldwin: What about what is likely to happen at the next election?

Mr. Horner: I do not want to think of such awful possibilities. It is interesting to consider that those who told us last night they were trying to do their best to remove these discriminations were not able to do better in this particular respect.

May I say a word on the subject of farm machinery? Why bring in legislation dealing with farm machinery when we have not yet obtained the results of the Barber Commission inquiry? The reason for making this a one man study was to speed up the process of obtaining a report.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The time for consideration of government business has now expired and the house will revert to private members' business, namely, private bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

TRANSCOASTAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton) moved the second reading and reference to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs of Bill S-16, to incorporate Transcoastal Life Insurance Company.

Private Bills

He said: The purpose of this bill is to incorporate a Canadian life insurance company to take over the existing business in Canada of the Union Mutual Life Insurance Company of Portland, Maine. This company has carried on business in Canada since 1868. In recent years its Canadian business has grown very extensively and it is a corporate decision of the directors and officers of the company that, having regard to the growth of its business, Canadian residents who now hold its policies would be better served by a company domiciled in Canada and governed by a board of directors the majority of whom would be Canadian citizens.

This bill is in the form of a model bill prescribed in the insurance company legislation with one important addition. There is included in it a provision similar to that which was included in a bill enacted by this parliament in 1967 providing for the orderly transfer of ownership in this country from United States owners to Canadian citizens. This clause provides that in the first five years after incorporation at least 25 per cent of the shares of the stock of the company would be made available to Canadian residents and that in the succeeding five years another 24 per cent would be made available, and if the general legislation made it easy I am informed that the company would willingly provide for the transfer of majority control.

It has been the custom in this chamber to provide merely a general introduction to such legislation as this on second reading, it being well understood that when the bill is referred to committee the members of that committee will have an opportunity to examine the officers and promoters of the legislation in detail.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): The sponsor of the bill has indicated that this is an application by a United States corporation to incorporate a Canadian insurance company. As he pointed out, the principal shareholder will be the Union Mutual Company which has operated a branch office in Canada for the last hundred years.

• (4:40 p.m.)

The most significant breakthrough is clause 8 of the bill which, as the sponsor said, will give an opportunity for Canadians in the first five years of the incorporation to acquire a 25 per cent interest and within a ten year period a 49 per cent interest. He also indicated that it may be the desire of the company to have a majority Canadian interest in the future.

[Mr. Blair.]

This is a real breakthrough with regard to the problem of foreign ownership in Canada. As the house knows, many members of our party, particularly the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) and the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), have led a campaign in regard to insurance companies and loan and trust companies the purpose of which was to make sure that there is a Canadian content in such companies. Thus far they had succeeded only with one company. We now have a second company that incorporates in its bill the provision to provide for Canadian ownership.

We would like to congratulate the sponsor of the bill on the acceptance of this principle. Looking across and seeing the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) recalls to my mind the opinions he expressed on the problem of economic nationalism and continentalism. I think he summed them up during a debate on estimates in this way, continentalism if necessary but not necessarily continentalism.

Mr. Pepin: May I correct that. I said that I could be a continentalist if it were in the national interest.

Mr. Gilbert: I am prepared to accept the minister's interpretation. Since he is a most fair and generous minister I should not like to place an interpretation upon his statement that he would think unfair. This underlines the fact that the voice in the wilderness of the past in point of time becomes the accepted opinion of most Canadians. We in the New Democratic party are rather proud that we have advanced the proposition that where there is United States participation in the Canadian economy it should be on a partnership basis, and that Canadian shareholders should be given the opportunity to participate in the activities and ownership of such companies.

I am going to read portions of a letter that was sent to me and to other members of my party regarding the attitude of this particular company. The letter was sent by the vice-president and counsel for the applicant, a gentleman named Douglas Thornsjo, and reads:

> You may recall that our sincere feeling is that all of our Canadian business belongs in a Canadian company, with a Canadian board of directors, and within a reasonable time with widespread Canadian ownership. It is our further feeling that, not only is this the fair or equitable manner by which to do business in Canada, but that in the long run, we will do better with one half or even less of a Canadian company than we would be able to do as a United States company.

In return, what does the Canadian nation receive through this process? We believe the "bargain" clearly favours Canada because:

1) it establishes the precedent that U.S. citizens are willing to do business in Canada as partners with Canadians and not as financial owners of Canada;

2) it causes an existing U.S. company to withdraw from Canada because, at the end of the first calendar year of Transcoastal's licensed existence, Union Mutual by agreement will withdraw from doing any new business in Canada. In addition, all existing Union Mutual, Canadian business will be serviced (premiums paid through, questions answered by, beneficiary changes effected by, and claims paid by) the new Canadian company;

3) investment dollars now flowing to the United States will be retained in Canada. Indeed, if the Canadian company were entered into the United States, a current probability, U.S. dollars would flow into Canada;

4) Canadian payroll will be substantially increased;

5) the Transcoastal bill helps to establish a precedent of safeguards pertinent to any effort which the government might take to present a bill removing from parliament the burden of handling private member, business oriented bills. In other words, some sentiment exists to the effect that private member bills such as S-16 should not take the time of parliament. The government might well be sympathetic to such sentiment. But it should be made clear, in advance, that any generalized authority to charter companies outside of parliament must contain safeguards for the concept of Canadian ownership. No better technique exists than that of precedent; the precedent of failure of private bills without provision for Canadian ownership and the corelevant precedent of success for at least an occasional bill that does provide for Canadian ownership.

The vice-president set forth our views regarding this very serious problem. We are proud to permit the bill to pass and to be sent to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs for further study.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Five o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock p.m. this house stands adjourned until Monday next at 2 p.m.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

FISHERIES

STATEMENT BY MINISTER FOLLOWING OBSERVATION OF SEAL HUNT

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement on the seal hunt, for two reasons: One is to announce that the hunt itself is to be postponed for the remainder of this week because of exceptional conditions on the ice; and the other is to allay certain fears which have been expressed as to the manner in which in recent days the hunt has been carried out in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

Having spent some time on the ice over the week end and having talked to a number of veterinarians from western Europe, the United States and Canada, I am of the opinion that the seal hunt is being supervised in an effective manner. The Fisheries Department's regulations are being enforced and the suffering of the young seals is being kept to a minimum.

For most of us who were out on the ice over the weekend, the hunt itself was a gruesome sight. The killing process was undoubtedly effective. It was effective because it was carried out with dispatch and by men who had killed young seals before. But I could not help asking myself whether the hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence was really necessary in the first place.

Some 6,000 Canadians depend, for at least part of their livelihood, on the seal hunt. However, they are not always the same people since the seals follow the ice and the ice may be west of Les Iles de la Madeleine one year and north of Prince Edward Island the next.

One thing is predictable, however: It is the impressive sight of the great seal herd itself. If we could convert this unique happening into an annual tourist attraction it could also contribute materially to the economy of the Atlantic region. I think we must therefore explore the possibility of the Gulf of St. Lawrence being declared a sanctuary for seals, with the hunt itself being limited to international waters in the north Atlantic off Labrador and Newfoundland.

Ice conditions this year are exceptional. The ice itself is poor in quality and limited in area. Also the use of helicopters has tended to prevent the mother seals from pupping on the ice. There is a danger of many young seals being lost under these conditions, and I have therefore declared a moratorium on the hunt beginning at 6 p.m. tonight and continuing through until 6 a.m. Friday morning.

The situation south of Prince Edward Island, where the main seal herds are located, is of course being kept under review and other protective measures will be announced as required.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I know all members on this side of the house listened with interest to the statement made today by the Minister of Fisheries

(Mr. Davis) with regard to the seal hunt. I am sure all of us welcome his announcement that his personal investigation of this hunt showed there was no cruelty involved. I find it rather difficult however to picture a seal hunt as a tourist attraction, in view of the difficulties involved in getting to the area concerned. I doubt that this could ever become a possibility.

The minister has announced that the seal hunt is to be postponed for the remainder of this week because of exceptional conditions on the ice. I hope the number of days on which the hunt is restricted will be made available to the hunters by an extension of the hunting season. I also note the minister's comments regarding the hunt and the fact that he found it gruesome. Quite frankly, killing, whether it be in a vast outdoor abattoir like the sealhunt or whether it is conducted in a regular abattoir, is not a very pleasant sight. However the method used by the sealers is humane. As the minister stated, he found this to be the case. It is humane in that it stuns the seal.

Since this industry makes an important contribution to the livelihood of some 6,000 people in the Atlantic provinces we on this side of the house hope that the industry will be maintained. The minister has suggested exploring the possibility of declaring the Gulf of St. Lawrence a sanctuary for seals, with the hunt being limited to international waters in the North Atlantic off Labrador and Newfoundland. This may have some merit from a conservation angle. I believe any move along this line should be thoroughly discussed with other countries concerned, in order that we do not find ourselves taking unilateral action to conserve our seal herds while other nations take an unlimited kill.

I welcome some of the minister's statements and I hope he will take my suggestions seriously and discuss them at the next international conference on the law of the sea, which he has indicated from time to time may soon be held.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I attended the hunt on Friday and Saturday last with the minister and I found there were almost more newspaper reporters and inspectors than there were fishermen. I too felt that the extra aircraft activity and the people attending disturbed the seals somewhat.

[Mr. Crouse.]

As far as cruelty is concerned in respect of these animals, I do not believe there was any cruelty or inhumane treatment, if you consider the method in this case. I think it was done as mercifully as could be done and I would be critical of those who have reported otherwise.

I think this industry is important as a means of increasing income for the people in this area, and certainly they are people who could use an increase in income.

Finally I would suggest that any effort to conserve seal herds should be done by agreement with other countries. I do not think it is right, proper or fitting that Canada should attempt to look after an international resource as a result of which our people would suffer reductions to income, if other nations are not willing to go along in this respect.

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, once again, we learn that the laws of nature delay the seal hunt. We have even been told that over the weekend more than 2,000 young seals drowned since they cannot swim until they are 10 days old. Let us hope that next season the seal hunt will not enable only some American millionaires to make money, but on the contrary will enable some Canadians to earn a living for that period in that area of Canada.

BROADCASTING

AGENCY TO FACILITATE AND EXTEND EDUCATIONAL BROADCASTING

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State) asks for leave to introduce Bill C-179 entitled "An Act to establish the Canadian Educational Broadcasting Agency and to make certain consequential amendments to the Broadcasting Act".

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH GABON

Question No. 788—Mr. Matte:

1. Has the government resumed diplomatic relations with Gabon?

2. Is it government policy that a country cannot issue direct invitations to the Government of Quebec?

[Translation]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Following the events associated with the meeting of the Conference of Ministers of Education of Francophone states held in Libreville in 1968, the government of Canada decided to defer the presentation of credentials by its ambassador-designate to Gabon. It should thus be noted that the government of Canada did not break diplomatic relations with Gabon and that, in these circumstances, the question of resumption of diplomatic relations does not arise. The matter of their normalization remains under review.

2. In conformity with universally recognized principles of international law and practice, any foreign state wishing to have dealings with a constituent part of a federation has a formal obligation to consult the government of the federation. These considerations apply fully to invitations addressed by foreign governments or intergovernmental bodies to the governments of Canadian provinces in respect of intergovernmental conferences, meetings or visits, unless there had been prior agreement between the Canadian government and the host country. The policy of the government in this regard was set out in the White Papers entitled "Federalism and International Relations" and "Federalism and International Conferences on Education".

SENTENCES UNDER HABITUAL CRIMINALS PROVISION

Question No. 1,057—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many persons have been sentenced under the habitual criminal sections of the Criminal Code and sentenced to preventive detention in each province in each of the years 1960 to 1968?

2. How many of these people are still in prison after (a) ten years (b) five years?

3. How many of these people have (a) been paroled (b) violated their parole (c) returned to prison (d) received paroles in each of the years 1960 to 1968?

4. Do the inmates serve their original sentence and then serve x-number of years before parole is considered?

5. What special programs are made available to these inmates and in what prisons are these programs made available in British Columbia?

6. How much time must be spent on these programs before parole is considered for these prisoners?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. 139 have been sentenced since the habitual Criminal Sections of the Criminal Code were passed in 1947, 84 of whom have been sentenced in years 1960-1968 as under:

Prov.	1960	1961	1962	1963	1964	1965	1966	1967	1968	Total

Questions

AGES OF PENITENTIARIES INMATES

Question No. 1,059—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. How many prisoners in Canadian penitentiaries were (a) under 12 years of age (b) between the ages of 13 and 20 inclusive in each of the past five years?

2. What steps have been taken by the Department of Justice to reduce the number of minors confined to penitentiaries?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. (a) None; (b).

	Age at Time Shown
	13	14	15	16	17	18	19	20	TOTAL
December 1968	0	0	2	16	37	145	236	297	733
December 1967	0	0	4	15	62	127	241	339	788

Note: It is regretted that the statistical compilation system in force previous to 1967 did not provide the information as requested.

2. The sentencing of minors to penitentiaries is the prerogative of the courts. Where inmates under 16 years of age are admitted to penitentiary, the Warden, in accordance with Section 21 of the Penitentiary Act, endeavours to obtain the co-operation of provincial authorities to transfer the inmate to a suitable provincial institution as soon as possible after his admission. Four medium security institutions have been constructed across Canada where young offenders are offered special training programmes which should assist in their rehabilitation as law-abiding citizens and thus reduce the number confined in the penitentiaries.

ACADIANS IN LOUISIANA

Question No. 1,112—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is the federal government contemplating any support to the 800,000 Acadians in the State of Louisiana who are endeavouring to revive the French language and French heritage in that State and, if not, what is the federal government's policy toward the promotion of French language and French culture in countries outside Canada with a significant French speaking population?

2. Has the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana asked the federal government for support in its project and, if so, what support is contemplated by the federal government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. and 2. In response to an invitation from the Governor of Louisiana, the Hon. John J. McKeithen, Senator Hédard J. Robichaud and Mr. Jules Léger, Under Secretary of State, represented the Prime Minister at the International Acadian Festival held in Louisiana in December 1968. Although no request for assistance has been received by the Government of Canada from the Council for the Development of French in Louisiana, Canada's position in this regard has already been outlined by Senator Robichaud. Speaking in Baton Rouge on December 3, 1968, of the endeavours being made to preserve and develop the French language and culture in Louisiana he said, in part: "the task that you have embarked upon—and I must stress the point—is your affair and the techniques you adopt will be those which in your best judgment will be the most appropriate and effective . . . I feel sure Canadians will be ready to share their experience with you in such worthy efforts . . . We wish you well in your endeavours, which we will watch with interest and understanding". If a request for assistance were received it would be given sympathetic study by the government. In such matters Canada would of course insure that normal diplomatic practice was observed.

CHEMICAL FERTILIZER PRICES

Question No. 1,168—Mr. Beaudoin:

What were the prices of various categories of chemical fertilizers in each of the provinces in 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968, respectively?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The fertilizer industry in Canada produces a very wide range of chemical fertilizers and mixtures and the Departments of Industry and of Trade and Commerce are not aware of any attempt to publish fertilizer prices in Canada on a national or provincial basis. This information, therefore, is not readily available.

Pricing of fertilizers in some detail is complicated to the extent that prices are not always province-wide and can vary by region, locality and season. Prices also will depend upon formulae, quantity ordered, credit terms and whether sales are in packaged or in bulk form as well as upon a variety of other factors.

PICTURES IN "INDIAN NEWS"

Question No. 1,225—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

With respect to the persons shown in the pictures on pages six and seven of Volume Eleven, Number Three, of the Indian News dated October 1968, how many were employed by the Indian Affairs Branch in (a) permanent positions (b) casual or part time positions (c) under contract at (i) the time the pictures were taken (ii) the time of publication of the said issue of the Indian News, and (d) at the present time?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development):

	When picture was taken	At time of Publication	As of Feb. 3, 1969
(a) Permanent	9	8	8
(b) Casual or Part time	2	2	2
(c) Contract	4	4	3

Included in this issue of the Indian News were 10 Indian persons who were receiving in-service training in Ottawa when the picture was taken. At the time of publication 5 were still receiving training. None are receiving in-service training at the present time.

ST. PIERRE AND MIQUELON—ZONE NEGOTIATIONS

Question No. 1,233—Mr. Fortin:

1. What is the current stage of negotiations between France and Canada concerning the 12 mile zone with respect to St. Pierre and Miquelon Islands?

2. What are the particulars of dispute between the two countries?

3. What are the respective positions of the two countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. It is understood that this question refers to the negotiations between Canada and France concerning their respective areas of jurisdiction over the mineral resources of the continental shelf south of Newfoundland in the region of the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon. These negotiations have not yet been concluded.

2. The particulars of the negotiations relate to the demarcation of their respective areas of jurisdiction over the continental shelf.

3. Since the negotiations are confidential it would not be appropriate at this time to comment on the respective positions of the two countries.

RAW SEWAGE INTO BOW RIVER

Question No. 1,333—Mr. Mahoney:

1. Is raw sewage being permitted to escape into the Bow River from the Banff Municipal sewage system?

2. If so, does the government have any plans to rectify the situation?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. Yes. A sewage treatment plant for the Townsite of Banff is planned for the near future.

ELIMINATION OF LEVEL CROSSINGS

Question No. 1,336—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the government program to eliminate level railway crossings in built up areas?

2. How many level crossings are there in Metropolitan Toronto on the government program and what is the proposed date for the removal of each of them?

3. What is the estimated cost for each of the level crossings presently on the government program that are to be removed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. The program for elimination of level railway crossings in built-up areas is subject to the number of applications received from municipal or provincial road authorities. During the past five years the Canadian Transport Commission and the former Board of Transport Commissioners approved the construction of an average of 32 grade separations per year, approximately $\frac{2}{3}$ of which were in built-up areas, which would eliminate existing level crossings. During the same period approval was given for the construction of an average of seven road diversions per year, approximately $\frac{1}{3}$ of which were in built-up areas.

2. Within the boundaries of that area coming within the jurisdiction of the Planning Board of the Metropolitan of Toronto, the

Questions

Railway Transport Committee of the Commission had under consideration nine applications for construction of grade separations; five were approved during 1968 and one has subsequently been approved in 1969; the remaining three are under active investigation.

The time of completion of these projects depends on the fiscal planning of the road authority and on the time it takes the authority to complete the design and call for tenders, and the contractor to complete the construction.

3. The estimated cost of the approved grade separations in the Metropolitan area is as follows: Keele Street, $784,800; Sheppard Ave. W., $595,214; West Mall Extension, $1,095,000; Midland Avenue, $1,250,000; Cummer Avenue, $701,721; Keele Street, $573,950.

SUBSIDY TO WESTERN GRAIN PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,359—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Does the government pay any subsidy to grain producers in Western provinces and, if so (a) on what basis is this subsidy calculated (b) what amounts were paid for the years 1966 and 1967?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes. (a) Subsidies are paid as follows: (i) Under the Temporary Wheat Reserves Act the government pays the storage and interest costs on Canadian Wheat Board stocks of wheat in commercial storage in excess of 178 million bushels basic stocks at the commencement of the crop year; (ii) Under the Prairie Grain Advance Payments Act, the government pays the interest on advances made to producers on threshed wheat, oats and barley stored on the farm, within the area of the Canadian Wheat Board's jurisdiction; (iii) Under the Interim Price Guarantee policy, the government undertook to pay the difference between the Canadian Wheat Board's selling price and the International Grains Arrangement minimums for the various grades of Canadian wheat on all sales made below the minimums in the eleven month period from August 1, 1967 when the pricing provisions of the International Wheat Agreement expired and the implementation of the International Grains Arrangement on July 1, 1968.

(c) Lease Number 1, July 7, 1965; Lease Number 2, August 1, 1965; Lease Number 3, September 10, 1965; Lease Number 4, December 13, 1965.

DIVERSION OF AIRCRAFT TO CUBA

Question No. 1,393—Mr. Rodrigue:

Were any Canadian aircraft, owned by Air Canada or Canadian Pacific Air Lines, diverted to Cuba in 1967 or 1968 and, if so (a) how many and on what dates (b) are special measures being taken with regard to this problem?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): No Air Canada or Canadian Pacific Air Lines aircraft diverted to Cuba in 1967 or 1968. (a) Nil; (b) All reasonable precaution is exercised.

PROGRAM "SI JEUNESSE POUVAIT"

Question No. 1,397—Mr. Rodrigue:

What did it cost to produce the program "SI JEUNESSE POUVAIT", broadcast on C.B.C. T.V. February 8 and 15, 1969?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. that the total cost of each of these two programs was approximately $4,000.

CANADIAN STANDARDS COUNCIL

Question No. 1,401—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does the government intend to establish a Canadian Standards Council and, if so (a) on what date (b) what will be its functions?

2. What part does Canada play in the International Organization for Standardization?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Trade and Commerce): 1. Yes. (a) Following the completion of consultations with standards organizations, industry, trade and consumer associations, legislation will be presented to parliament for approval; (b) See answer to question 635 on the Standards Council of Canada of November 1, 1968, tabled on January 15, 1969.

2. Of the 127 technical committees established by the International Organization for Standardization, Canada participates in 71, and maintains observer status in 26.

TÉMISCAMINGUE, QUE., MINES SUBSIDIES

Question No. 1,407—Mr. Caouette:

1. What amount of money has been paid out in subsidies of all kinds to mines operating in the federal constituency of Témiscamingue in the last five years?

2. What amount did each of these mines receive during this period?

3. On what grounds were these subsidies granted?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. $1,956,408.

2. Peel Elder Limited, $320,832; Wasamac Mines Limited, $1,635,576.

3. Financial assistance to gold mines has been provided under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act to extend the operating life of the mines and thus permit the dependent communities to adjust gradually to diminishing economic support.

USE OF BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES ON LABELS

Question No. 1,424—Mr. Fortin:

1. With what commercial associations were consultations held concerning the use of both official languages on labels?

2. What is the state of those consultations?

3. Will the regulations be amended so as to require labels to be bilingual, and, if so, when?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Informal consultations have been held with the Grocery Products Manufacturers of Canada, the Canadian Food Processors Association, the Canadian Paint Manufacturers Association and the Canadian Manufacturers of Chemical Specialties Association.

2. These consultations are continuing.

3. No decision has been reached on the issuance of regulations to require bilingual labels.

Questions

FRONTENAC, QUE., OIL DRILLING

Question No. 1,441—Mr. Dumont:

1. Was a permit granted to O-Katta Ltd. (Company) for oil drilling in Inverness Township, constituency of Frontenac?

2. If so, on what date was the permit granted?

3. Has the company published a report of its findings?

4. Do other companies hold permits for drilling in the constituency of Frontenac?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. No federal permits have ever been issued for oil drilling in the constituency of Frontenac, Ontario.

REPAYMENT OF GUARANTEED LOAN TO EXPO 67

Question No. 1,442—Mr. Hales:

1. Was the 35 million dollar loan owed by the Expo 67 Corporation to five chartered banks and guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada and the Province of Quebec, pursuant to the provision of Section 12 of the Canadian Corporation for the 1967 World Exhibition Act, repaid in equal parts by the two governments?

2. If so, on what date did the federal government pay its share?

3. On what date did the Quebec Government pay its share?

4. Was the loan paid in cash?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): 1. Yes.

2 and 3. July 3, 1968.

4. Yes.

R.C.M.P. CHAUFFEURS

Question No. 1,453—Mr. Robinson:

1. How many R.C.M.P. personnel are employed as chauffeurs, who do they chauffeur, where is each located and how many automobiles are used for this service?

2. Do R.C.M.P. chauffeurs have any other specific duties and, if so, what are they and what are the requirements of R.C.M.P. personnel to provide this service?

3. How many R.C.M.P. personnel are engaged in purely ceremonial matters in their training and employment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. The R.C.M. Police do not employ personnel exclusively as chauffeurs. There are 47 persons designated as civilian member chauffeurs who are employed on a variety of duties at the locations shown. LAMB IMPORTS

Question No. 1,458—Mr. McQuaid:

1. For the period January 1, 1968 to December 31, 1968, how many pounds of lamb were imported into Canada from (a) New Zealand, and (b) Australia?

2. What was the average price per pound of lamb to the Canadian importer?

3. How many pounds of this imported lamb were shipped into the Province of Prince Edward Island during the above period?

4. What was the average price paid to the Canadian farmer during the above period for (a) live lamb (b) dressed lamb?

5. What were the average prices paid to the farmers of Prince Edward Island?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pépin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The Dominion Bureau of Statistics reports that: 1. Number of pounds of lamb imported into Canada for the period January 1, 1968 to December 31, 1968 from: (a) New Zealand, 24,920,300 lbs.; (b) Australia, 8,444,600 lbs.

2. The average price per pound of lamb imported during 1968, f.o.b. point of consignment in the foreign country of export, exclusive of freight, insurance and other charges was: New Zealand, $0.24; Australia, $0.31.

3. Statistics indicate that no imports of lamb were cleared through customs ports in Prince Edward Island during the year 1968.

4 and 5. A monthly DBS mail questionnaire survey of farmers across Canada indicated that the weighted average price of live lambs for the country as a whole amounted to $22.45 per cwt. for 1968. This estimate is based on an average monthly return of about 380 reports. For Prince Edward Island, the average for live lambs was about $20.70 per cwt. in 1968. This price was based on an average of about 5 reports per month. No information is available regarding farmers' average dressed prices.

YARMOUTH, N.S.—LANDING STAGE FOR YACHTS

Question No. 1,460—Mr. Comeau:

1. In any improvements that may be contemplated to the waterfront or harbour facilities at Yarmouth, N.S., has provision been made for a landing stage for use by yachts and other small craft and, if not, for what reason?

2. If such provision has been made, has consideration been given to installing such facilities along the seawall adjacent to Water Street or some other equally convenient location?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. No consideration is being given to providing a landing stage for yachts and small craft at Yarmouth, N.S. at the present time, owing to the congestion in the harbour caused by the ferries and fishing fleet.

2. Not applicable.

TROIS-RIVIERES—AIR CANADA SERVICE

Question No. 1,482—Mr. Fortin:

1. Does Air Canada intend to discontinue its service to the airport at Trois-Rivières?

2. If so (a) for what reasons (b) has a study been made of the subject (c) will the results of the study be made known to the general public or interested parties (d) will the service presently being provided to Trois-Rivières be continued by other companies?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1. and 2. Traffic levels and service requirements at all points on the Air Canada system are kept under constant review so that appropriate changes in the nature and type of service may be made as required, old services discontinued and new services initiated. Initiation or abandonment of service requires application to and authorization from the Canadian Transport Commission which has the discretion to decide what procedures are followed with applications and what the requirements are for public service. It is not the practice of Air Canada to announce in advance plans for or the nature of applications to the Commission involving changes in licensing and services under the Aeronautics Act.

*ASTHMA—USE OF AEROSOL INHALERS

Question No. 1,487—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Are aerosol inhalers for the treatment of asthma on sale over the counter in drug stores in Canada?

2. Are these inhalers considered dangerous by the Food and Drug Directorate when improperly used?

3. Have any sudden deaths among asthmatic patients been recorded which might be attributable to the misuse of aerosol inhalers?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. There are a number of drug products in aerosol containers for the treatment of asthma that are for sale over-the-counter in Canada.

2. These pharmaceutical products are potentially dangerous as are most drugs if used more frequently and in greater quantities than specified in directions for use on the label.

3. The Poison Control Unit, Food and Drug Directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, has no record of sudden deaths among asthmatic patients in Canada attributable to the misuse of aerosol inhalers.

INDIAN AFFAIRS PUBLIC RELATIONS CONTRACTS

Question No. 1,491—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development contracted with four public relations firms, named as follows, to do work for the Department (a) Williams and Wilson Limited in Vancouver, B.C. (b) Crockett Writers Company, Winnipeg, Manitoba (c) Berger, Tisdale, Lesly, Toronto, Ontario (d) Jacques Gay Incorporated, Quebec, P.Q.?

2. If so, what work will these public relations firms be performing for the Department?

3. What annual payments will be made to each of these companies?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

2. These public relations firms have been contracted to carry out publicity and information projects as required in their respective area of operation. They are to report on radio and television broadcasts relating to the Indian people and the Department, to initiate reports from Indian communities having a bearing on programs operated by Band Councils or the Department, to encourage reporters to provide coverage on matters affecting the Indian community, to organize new information programs as required, to assist field staff in the day to day needs of the Department as it relates to information services and to liaise with editors and all news media on matters affecting the Department.

3. (a) Williams and Wilson Limited has an annual contract for $25,000; (b) Crockett Writers Company is currently under a four-month contract for $1,600 with out-of-pocket expenses not to exceed $700; (c) Berger, Tisdale, Clark and Lesley Ltd. is currently under a four-month contract for $4,000 with out-of-pocket expenses not to exceed $990; (d) Jacques Guay and Associates is currently under a six-month contract for $2,700 with out-of-pocket expenses not to exceed $1,800.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES—FRENCH LANGUAGE INSTRUCTORS

Question No. 1,494—Mr. Crouse:

1. How many French language instructors have been engaged in France by Canada's Chief of the Defence Staff?

2. What is the amount of salary paid to these individual instructors by the Canadian government?

3. What are the names of the Canadian Armed Forces bases to which these instructors are allocated?

4. Are the Canadian Forces being taught from French military handbooks or Canadian military handbooks?

5. What security check is made on all instructors prior to their employment on Canadian bases?

Mr. D. W. Groos (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Defence): 1. None.

2 and 3. Not applicable.

4. Where training in the Canadian Forces relates to practices and procedures unique to the Canadian Forces, handbooks for such training are of strictly Canadian origin, and no foreign military handbooks, French or otherwise, are utilized for this purpose. However, when equipment in service with the Canadian Forces is of French make, such as the Falcon passenger aircraft currently operated by Air Transport Command, then the manufacturer's handbooks, relating to the operation and maintenance of this equipment, are utilized for that specific training purpose.

5. Not applicable.

OIL LOADING AT IRVING DOCK

Question No. 1,505—Mr. Dumont:

Has the National Harbours Board taken appropriate measures to prevent a major accident during the unloading or loading of oil at the Irving dock at Sillery?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: The Irving dock at Sillery is not under the administration of the National Harbours Board, but all vessels in the Harbour of Quebec are subject to NHB By-law A-1 which in part regulates the handling of goods to or from a vessel in the harbour in so far as the handling of goods that are of a nature which may present a hazard to navigation.

MOBILE COMMAND RESERVE

Question No. 1,553—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the role of the mobile command reserve?

2. What is the state of operational readiness of the mobile reserve?

3. What are the names of the units, their strengths and estimated operational efficiency of the mobile command reserve?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1, 2 and 3. Attention is directed to Hansard dated 13 November 1968, page 2683, and the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 3, dated 12 March 1968, of the Standing Committee on National Defence dealing with the Reserve components of the Canadian Forces.

Questions

PILOTS IN CANADIAN FORCES

Question No. 1,554—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is it the government's intention to continue to pay pilots on the cessation of hostilities in Vietnam?

2. Is it government policy to give extra pay to pilots who are not on flying duty?

3. How many pilots have been released from the Canadian Forces during each of the years 1960-68 inclusive, and, how many of them have joined United States airlines?

4. Is the government contemplating any policy whereby pilots will contract with the Canadian Forces for a period of time and/or be available for pilot duties with Canadian airlines?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. Hostilities in Viet Nam have nothing to do with the pay of pilots in the Canadian Forces.

2. All pilots up to, and including, the rank of Colonel are entitled to pilots' pay because they are considered to be under continuous liability to fly. Pilots who are permanently grounded for medical or other reasons, and who remain in the Canadian Forces, do not receive pilots' pay but are paid the same salary as general service officers of similar rank.

3. Release information on pilots in the sea element is not available prior to 1965 and no release information is available on land element pilots as their releases are identified by their Corps affiliation. 1960, 182; 1961, 193; 1962, 136; 1963, 196; 1964, 546; 1965, 304; 1966, 336; 1967, 231; 1968, 171. No information is held on the number of these pilots who have joined United States, or any other airlines.

4. No.

PROTECTION OF MIGRATORY GAME BIRDS

Question No. 1,556—Mr. Ritchie:

1. Has the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development received any reports that are widespread in Western Canada that migratory game birds are not being protected in their winter feeding grounds such as Mexico resulting in depletion of our game birds?

2. What action does the Minister propose to take if these reports are substantiated?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. The Minister has not received any official reports of widespread or indiscriminate shooting of migratory game birds in Mexico. The Department is aware of the current rumour in Western Canada. Our information is that most reports of excessive shooting can be attributed to a limited number of non-Mexican "Sportsmen". Increased liaison between Mexican authorities and the Government of the United States has resulted in the apprehension of these "Sportsmen" when they have returned to the United States.

2. There is at present no treaty between Canada and Mexico relating to the protection of migratory birds. We have therefore informed appropriate officials in the United States government of the rumours, because of their treaty with Mexico.

FAR EASTERN FOREIGN SERVICE OFFICERS

ARMED FORCES CHAPLAINS, WESTERN PROVINCES

Question No. 1,537—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. How many Chaplains are there in the Armed Forces in the three Western Provinces?

2. What are the names of such Chaplains with their respective addresses?

[English]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of the fact that two starred questions of mine have been on the list for so long that there can be no justification for their not having been answered. Starred questions are supposed to be answered within three days. The following is starred question No. 1501 which I asked on February 19:

Will the Minister of Transport bring to the attention of the Canadian National Railways the suggestion that in the interest of safety for users of the highways which cross railway tracks that diesel locomotives shall have thereon flashing red lights similar to those now used on ambulances, police vehicles and the like?

There should be no difficulty whatsoever in answering that question. The second one might be more embarrassing for the government to answer, but none the less has to be answered. It is starred question No. 1538 which reads as follows:

1. Are stars being used to designate the rank of officers of the Armed Forces?

2. How are ranks designated by stars?

3. Under what authority has this star system come into effect?

I point out that apparently starred questions receive less attention than those unstarred, if this be an example.

[Mr. Coates.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I too rise on a question of privilege. It relates to question No. 1008 in the name of the hon. member for York South (Mr. Lewis), which has been on the order paper since December 10. Both the hon. member and I have asked for an answer several times and we have been assured it would be forthcoming. Meantime we have been reading articles by newspaper reporters such as Carman Cumming and Anthony Westell, which seem to suggest that the information sought by this question is given outside the house, but we do not get it here. Today when I came down to the house I found on my desk the usual list of the questions that would be answered today. Question No. 1008 was included on the list but the parliamentary secretary did not read out the number.

I think it is an affront to parliament to delay answers to these questions concerning regional desks attached to the Prime Minister's office, particularly when information on the subject seems to be available to reporters outside the house.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED FAILURE TO PREVENT DISRUPTION OF SERVICE—MOTION FOR ADJOURNMENT UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. McCutcheon) I ask leave under the provisions of Standing Order 26 to move the adjournment of the house for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the disruption of mail service resulting from the explosive situation in the Post Office Department arising directly out of the government's failure to appoint an outside arbitrator, and the Postmaster General's ill considered threats of prosecution of striking employees, contributing to an emergency situation of great gravity affecting the delivery of mail from coast to coast.

The situation is one of great gravity and a genuine emergency—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I wonder whether the hon. member can proceed further. He knows that according to the Standing Order he has to give notice, and I assume this is the notice to which he just referred. He can argue the case only after a decision has been made by the Chair whether or not the motion is acceptable. There is a difficulty in this instance because the hon. gentleman filed two papers with the Speaker, as required by the Standing Order, one of which was the proposed motion and the other one which appeared to be an argument.

I certainly do not want to be difficult about the matter. I might say in a general way, however, that my interpretation of Standing Order 26 is that the only document which can be filed with the Chair is a statement of the question, not an argument. In this case, since the notice filed by the hon. member is not all that long, perhaps he might be allowed to make his statement.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Perhaps I might be permitted to comment briefly on what has just been said, because of the effect Your Honour's statement might have on our procedure. While it is true the hon. member did file with you a motion to be put to the house, if leave were given pursuant to the standing order, the document he is supposed to file is a written statement, and it is the written statement which my hon. friend proposes to read. The filing of the motion is possibly superfluous—it is in the nature of an act of courtesy, indicating to the Chair the kind of motion which would be made.

I agree with Your Honour that there are limits to the extent to which a statement of the kind referred to in the Standing Order should go. However with all due deference, if Your Honour insists on requiring only a statement, limited as that may be unless it is further supplemented, an obstacle might be placed in the path of the Chair when considering whether the motion should be allowed.

I agree entirely with Your Honour that the statement should not contain anything by way of argument. I am glad to have had an opportunity to make this submission in the house, in order that it may be before us, in the record.

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you, Your Honour. I wanted to make the extra mile, and thought that in doing so I would not be out of order.

The situation is one of great gravity and genuine emergency because some 1100 workers have already walked out in a series of wildcat strikes from Hamilton to Saskatoon, and there are threats of further walk outs, which will have the effect of further impairing mail deliveries across Canada. It is extremely urgent that the matter be dealt with in this house before there is any further deterioration in a situation described in this morning's press as explosive, and involving postal workers from coast to coast.

It is precisely the kind of matter which this provision was set up to deal with because it involves, first of all, a matter of urgency—

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You have already indicated—and the hon. member for Peace River has agreed—that what is to be submitted in connection with the rule is a written statement of the matter to be discussed. I would refer specifically to Standing Order 26(3):

> When requesting leave to propose such a motion, a member should rise in his place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of this order.

I submit that the hon. member for Hillsborough is now getting into an argument in connection with this issue; he is arguing the question of urgency, and this specifically the kind of argument which those drafting the Standing Order sought to avoid.

Mr. Baldwin: May I make a comment at this point? When Your Honour receives a copy of the motion to be made, it is up to the hon. member making the motion to bring himself squarely within the four corners of the rule, and to do this he must submit a written statement. He cannot argue the merits or go into the substance of the issue, but surely in making his statement he must convince Your Honour that the motion he is proposing is one which falls precisely within the rule—that it is urgent and, in short, within the description used in the phraseology.

Unless this is done, not in an argumentative way but purely in the form of a statement, how is Your Honour to judge whether or not the motion ought to be placed before the house? I submit that what my hon. friend has done so far is not out of order. Although he has come close to the edge, he has not yet gone over it.

• (2:30 p.m.)

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would draw Your Honour's attention to the fact that we have had three or four examples of the use of Standing Order 26 since the new rule was drawn. I submit that in each case the mover of the proposed motion has included in his statement the reasons for his belief that the matter should be allowed for debate. We had two on Friday, neither of which was just one sentence, each one being of some length and setting out the reasons. I submit that that is what the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is doing now.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) suggests that the member should stay within the provisions of Standing Order 26 (3). Standing Order 26 (3) says that the member shall rise in his place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of that order. The statement referred to in section (2) of the order is the statement that the member submitted to Your Honour at least an hour in advance of this sitting. I submit that, unless Your Honour advised the hon. member before he came into the house that he had submitted something to you that was improper, then the statement that he has submitted to you is one that he is allowed to read to the house at this time.

Mr. Speaker: I thank hon. members for their advice and I am in agreement with all of them. However, I have the feeling that, as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) indicated, the statement filed by the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) was a little close to the line. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has referred to the fact that a number of similar statements or motions have been filed during the last few days, but I also notice that they are getting progressively longer and more argumentative, and this is what the Chair is worried about. I would not want to reach the point where the Chair in lieu of notice would allow statements that might take 15 or 20 minutes for an hon. member to read. I am sure that this is not what the rule contemplated; the correct procedure is somewhere between the two extremes.

The suggestion made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was that in cases of doubt the Speaker should consult the hon. member. This has been done in other instances. In view of the very special circumstances existing today it would have been difficult to get in touch with the hon. member for Hillsborough. That is why I felt, taking into account all of the circumstances, that I should allow the hon. member to proceed and to put to the house the statement which, as I have said, is not too long. I understand that he is just about nearing the end of his statement in any event.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Macquarrie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker; I am indeed nearing the end of the statement.

Fourthly, a matter arising directly out of a failure in government policy, namely the refusal of the Postmaster General to appoint an outside arbitrator to deal with allegations of breach of contract raised by the employees; and instead has threatened prosecution of those making the allegations.

It is a situation which has now reached a climax of emergency proportions demanding debate by this chamber before we experience another widespread disruption of mail services.

Mr. Speaker: As I indicated a moment ago, I did receive the notice that is required by Standing Order 26. As hon. members know, subsection (5) of the relevant Standing Order refers to the factors that the Chair should take into account in determining whether such a motion should be allowed and put to the house. In particular, the subsection provides:

> Mr. Speaker shall have regard to the extent to which it concerns the administrative responsibilities of the government or could come within the scope of ministerial action and he also shall have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the house within reasonable time by other means.

My understanding is that the first item of business called for today is the government reorganization bill, which by special order is being considered in committee of the whole. When debate adjourned on this item of business on February 28, clause 7 of the bill was under consideration. In my view, the subject matter proposed for discussion by the hon. member for Hillsborough is quite relevant to clause 7 of the bill. Indeed, the hon. member himself has already initiated such a discussion in the course of his own intervention on clause 7, as reported at page 6087 of Hansard for February 28.

Since there is the probability that this legislation will be considered later today, it would seem illogical under standing order 26 to set aside the business of the house for the purpose of discussing the very same matter. In these circumstances, I do not think that the standing order allows the Chair to put the motion at this time. I should say however that this does not in any way preclude the possible submission of a similar motion at a later date.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF MEASURES TO MEET GRIEVANCES OF WORKERS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In light of the emergency situation and the chaos and disruption that is threatening his department, would the Postmaster General consider asking the house to revert to motions so that he could make a statement to the house on what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the dissatisfaction existing among the workers of his department ends, and that mail service disruptions in important centres of this country come to a stop?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): As you have already outlined, Mr. Speaker, there will be an opportunity later today for all members of the house to participate in the debate on that part of the bill that deals with the new department of communications.

In direct reply to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to say that today we have finally completed arrangements with union leaders to reject the grievances that have been presented at the first stage and pass them immediately through to the fourth stage, so that the issues will be adjudicated upon by a third party, which is what we have been looking for, for months. These issues include the wash-up time, return for punching in at noon, and so on.

I would be very pleased indeed to have a third party judge these issues, and finally and once and for all to come to the conclusion that it is not the Postmaster General who is preventing the letter carrier from going home for lunch or from going to a restaurant for lunch or is insisting that he must return to the post office, but that it is in fact the union leaders who are doing all this.

Mr. Speaker: Order. My understanding of the question was whether the minister would make a statement on motions.

Mr. Kierans: Well, I think that will do for a start, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanfield: I should like to ask the Postmaster General a supplementary question. It continues to be quite easy to get answers to questions that you do not ask the minister, but very difficult to get answers to questions you do ask.

From what the minister has just said I take it he is prepared to resort to third party procedure in order to settle these disputes. Knowing how difficult it is to get answers from ministers even during the committee stages of bills. I should like to ask the minister whether he proposes to continue with his rather inflammatory and unacceptable threat to dismiss workers, or is he sticking to his original suggestion of using the regular grievance procedures to resolve outstanding points? Does the minister propose to continue with his threats of prosecution of workers who have gone out?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, for weeks we have been trying to process agreements to the point where a third party can judge the issues that are involved. This is not something that is new today; we have been forced into this and have been looking for it.

With respect to statements that I made on Friday night, we are today applying to the Public Service Staff Relations Board for a declaration that this strike is in fact illegal, and secondly for consent to prosecute those involved in the strike. I may say that this government is very proud of the contract that it signed with the letter carriers—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. Since the government has said that it goes along with the recommendation of the Freedman report which calls for negotiating changes in methods of work before those changes are put into effect, will the government suspend its walkthroughs and have the matter negotiated before it tries to bring about a tremendous change in the work patterns of the letter carriers?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, it is not a tremendous change in the work patterns of the letter carriers. As a matter of fact, the majority of them find that there is an improvement in their work patterns. The point is, did the Freedman report deal with the right of management, in public or private enterprise, to make managerial and administrative decisions? I do not think the report refuses the right to management to take those steps which, in this case, were deemed to be in the interests of the Canadian taxpayer by ensuring greater productivity and reduced costs.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the dispute is over whether this is a minor or major change, and since the matter is serious to the entire country, I ask again: Will the government suspend the offensive practices it has been indulging in, until the third party has adjudicated with respect to this matter?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the present practices are not offensive, and I refuse to accept that description of them. We have agreed that a third party will adjudicate, and we have been trying to have this done for at least three weeks.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): In view of the generous suggestion the Postmaster General made to the Minister of National Defence regarding alternative policies the latter minister could implement for the carrying out of his duties, has the Minister of National Defence assured the Postmaster General that he will lend him sufficient personnel to enable him to carry out his present duties.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of National Defence and I are not at cross purposes.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Postmaster General applied to prosecute postal workers under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act? If so, when was the application made, or when is it to be made?

Mr. Kierans: It is being made today, Mr. Speaker. To the best of my knowledge, it is going forward today.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I did not hear the first part of the minister's reply. Is the application being made under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act?

Mr. Kierans: I am not sure. I think it is being made under the Public Service Staff Relations Act, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

Is it not the opinion of the Postmaster General that instead of prosecuting the Post Office employees involved in litigation at the present time, it would be better to arrange meetings across Canada so as to explain the new post office legislation and try to find a solution to this serious problem?

[English]

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Labour. Will that minister not agree that the Postmaster General has misinterpreted the Freedman report with reference to the prerogatives of management?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That question is argumentative.

EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES ON SECOND CLASS MATERIAL

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): A supplementary question to the Postmaster General, Mr. Speaker. While he is considering any agreements to be entered into with the postal unions, will he also consider the protests of the publishers of many Canadian farm journals and periodicals who face extinction because of the increased cost of second class mail?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I met with a group of publishers on Friday afternoon.

PUBLIC SERVICE

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER—INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This morning I tried to get in touch with the Queen's Printer and was informed that that position has been abolished. Is this attempt, in removing the Queen's name, another attempt by this government to downgrade the monarchy in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. The Queen's Printer is being merged with the department of supply and services; but the title of Queen's Printer remains. It has not been abolished.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, my office was advised this morning that the title of Queen's Printer was no more and from now on we must communicate—I want to get the name correct, because it is a high sounding title—with the Director General of Printing and Publications. Will the Prime Minister restore the title of Queen's Printer?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be pleased to advise the right hon. gentleman's office that the Queen's Printer has not been abolished and that it is included in the statute.

Mr. Baldwin: Do not send the information through the post office; it will take too long.

[Later:]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet perhaps I might reassure the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert who asked a question about the Queen's Printer. If he will refer to article 48 of the Government Reorganization bill now before the house, he will see the minister may appoint an officer of the department to be the Queen's Printer of Canada.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Just to make it perfectly clear, apparently this has not been done. I say it is a very serious matter that when you phone the Queen's Printer the answer is there is no such person; so the Prime Minister apparently has not done that which he was authorized to do.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

O.A.S.—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Was the Secretary of State for External Affairs stating government policy on the weekend when he said that stronger relationships with Latin America could be achieved only within the framework of institutions, notably the Organization of American States?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Secretary of State for External Affairs said no such thing.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Before a decision is taken on the question of membership in the Organization of American States, which a distinguished parliamentarian in the other place has referred to as Canada's manifest destiny, will parliament have an opportunity to discuss the military and defence implications of any such arrangements?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We know what his destiny was.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I expect this subject will be before the External Affairs Committee. We are looking forward to hearing the views of hon. members of the opposition on this matter.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATO—REQUEST FOR DEBATE BEFORE WASHINGTON TRIP

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Does the government intend to initiate a debate in the house on the subject of Canada's participation in NATO before the Prime Minister makes his trip to Washington, so that he may receive the benefit of the views of the representatives of the people from all parts of the country before he conducts these very important discussions with the United States president?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. gentleman has not had the occasion to express his views on this matter before now. It has been before the External Affairs Committee for many months. They will report, I believe, within a few weeks.

Mr. Hees: My question was, Mr. Speaker, will there be a debate in this house. As a supplementary question, may I ask if the Prime Minister intends to bypass members of parliament, the members of this house, and continue to receive information on important matters through regional desks, as seems to be the case at present?

ARCTIC ARCHIPELAGO—REPRESENTATIONS TO U.S. RESPECTING SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question arising from the question having to do with the Prime Minister's trip to Washington. When meeting the President of the United States will the Prime Minister discuss, without any equivocation, the matter of our islands in the Arctic and point out that we have complete sovereignty over them?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware that the subject will be raised. I repeat what I said in the house last week. We have complete sovereignty over the islands in the Arctic and there is no equivocation about that.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the Prime Minister, then, initiate such discussions so that there is no doubt or ambiguity about our sovereignty over these Arctic islands?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not see why I should raise the question in order to cast some doubt on it. Our position on it is quite clear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As I understood it, the other day the Prime Minister said that this was not a question of sovereignty over the Arctic islands but that there was difficulty over the question of the inland seas. I ask, is it not a fact that Canada's stand throughout has been in favour of the sector principle and that view was expressed by Canada at the Geneva Conference in 1958 and was not disputed by the United States or the U.S.S.R.? Does the Prime Minister accept the sector principle, and if he does, and if that is still the policy of the government of Canada, then waterways are in the same position as islands and other lands?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not have the same understanding of this as the right hon. gentleman. I believe the sector theory applies to the seabed and the shelf. It does not apply to the waters. The continental shelf is of course under Canadian sovereignty—this is the seabed, but not the waters over the shelf.

Mr. McGrath: de Gaulle doesn't believe that.

Mr. Trudeau: What's your query?

Mr. McGrath: de Gaulle doesn't believe that.

Mr. Trudeau: Then, talk to General de Gaulle.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to remind hon. members that we will soon be running out of time and there are many hon. members who are anxious to ask questions. I realize this is an important matter, but we should not allow it to become a debate at this time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, I wasn't trying to make it a debate; I was trying to get information.

Mr. Trudeau: Ask your own members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When the Prime Minister is in Washington seeing the President of the United States, will he give support to the sector principle, and will he make it very clear to the President that Canada claims the Arctic archipelago?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I keep repeating the same thing: The archipelago is under Canadian sovereignty; it is Canadian territory. My assertion of the sector theory would apply to the seabed, not to the waters or ice—

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is where the minerals are.

Mr. Trudeau: The question of whether the waterways and the frozen ice are in the international high seas, in territorial waters or in inland waters is the question that is in dispute.

Mr. Speaker: Again I am wondering whether the debate on this point might not be resumed tomorrow, but I note that other hon. members have supplementary questions.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister raised some doubt about the inland seas aspect on Friday, I would like to ask him whether the government would at an early date issue a white paper outlining in detail the position of the government of Canada and its claim to sovereignty in respect to islands, to the archipelago, to the inland seas and to the related natural resources, so that people of this country and other nations will know the position of Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I told the house last week that I was consulting the various departments involved—National Defence, Northern Affairs, External Affairs, and so on—with a view to establishing our policy on this matter which, over the years, has not been clarified by any government, so far as the status of these waters is concerned. I am of course anxious to ensure that we do clear up this matter. As soon as I am in a position to make a statement or publish a white paper I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): As a supplementary question I would ask whether the Prime Minister proposes to defend this sovereignty by reverting to the Pearson gunboat philosophy, which failed in the case of the 12 mile limit?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Surrey.

FISHERIES

CONSIDERATION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF LICENCE LIMITATION

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Having in mind the renewed representations by the fishermen of British Columbia for a hearing before the House of Commons Fisheries Committee on the important issue of fisheries licence limitation, would the minister agree to such a hearing being held on this issue?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly agree to this. I hope such an opportunity does arise, but the proceedings of the committee are a matter for the committee itself to decide.

SEALS—DISCUSSION BY STANDING COMMITTEE OF HUNTING PROCEDURES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, would the minister also give consideration to referring the subject of the seal hunt to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry before any decision is taken to abandon the hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, as expressed in the statement issued today?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): That sounds like a very good idea, Mr. Speaker.

SEALS—USE OF HELICOPTERS IN HUNT

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has investigated reports that the helicopters being used by the Humane Society people are responsible for seals taking to the water prematurely resulting in a large number of them being drowned?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): There is some evidence that that is a fact.

Mr. McGrath: As a further supplementary question, would the minister explain to the house why he left the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate behind on Friday?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lundrigan: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister what action he plans to take on the matter I just raised, and whether he will make facilities available through his department whereby hon. members who were advertently or inadvertently left behind last week could make a similar trip at their convenience?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member knows that the matter of recruitment of interested members was discussed with members of all parties on several occasions. I am sorry the hon. member was not able to make it at one o'clock as scheduled on Friday, but I hope he can be with us next time, because we welcome his advice.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I am not going to get into a debate on the fact that I was left behind, and I won't accuse the minister of being a liar. I will just say his watch must have been a bit fast. I am more interested in the sealers than in what happened to the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate. But I repeat my question: At their convenience, later in the week will the minister make facilities available to interested members such as the hon. member for St. John's East and the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe to make a visit similar to the one he made?

Mr. Davis: First priority will always be given to members of the house over anyone else, including the press.

TELEVISION

KAMLOOPS, B.C.—REQUEST FOR ALTERNATE SERVICE

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Secretary of State concerning Kamloops, which may also have national implications. Could the minister please advise the house, on behalf of the Canadian Radio Television Commission, whether they might hear applications to provide alternate television service for Kamloops and other areas which fit into the same category?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would think this is the type of question which should be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

HONEY—MEASURES TO PROMOTE SALE AND UTILIZATION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which has to do with a very sweet subject. In view of the fact that the month of March is National Honey Month, and since the minister just recently had the extraordinary honour of crowning the National Honey Queen, who happens to be a very sweet girl because she comes from the riding of Vegreville—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mazankowski: —would the minister undertake to use his good offices to promote the sale and the utilization of honey and honey products both at home and abroad, particularly in view of the fact that the utilization of honey has been steadily declining in the past few years?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Department of Agriculture has been party to a promotion campaign undertaken by the Honey Council of Canada to promote the sale of this product in Canada and outside it.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF HONEY QUEEN, MISS DEVRA DRYSDALE

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, may I also be permitted to draw to the attention of hon. members the presence in your gallery of Miss Devra Drysdale, who was crowned the Honey Queen of Canada last Friday evening.

Sone hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: The procedure may be somewhat irregular. The only thing I can say is Honi soit qui mal y pense.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege I think it should be noted that the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister was also born in Vegreville.

Sone hon. Members: Hear, hear.

TELEVISION

ELECTRONICS MEDIA—GUIDELINES ON MONOPOLY CONTROL

Hon. G. W. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. When will the minister be announcing guidelines dealing with trends toward concentration of ownership and monopoly control of the electronic media in Canada, as he indicated he would be doing some time before Christmas?

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): As far as the ownership of the mass media, is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we hope to be able within the next two weeks to send out instructions to the C.R.T.C.

[Mr. Mazankowski.]

With regard to the matter of information monopolies, it will remain under consideration for a little longer.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I presume the minister will be making an announcement to the house. In the meantime could he say what the guidelines are for the C.R.T.C. in respect of cablevision applications?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking the minister to make a statement which normally should be made on motions.

Mr. Dinsdale: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. With deference to Your Honour, I should like to say that at the moment the C.R.T.C. is engaged in deliberations requiring such guidelines. I ask the minister whether he will make a statement in that regard in sufficient time so that the C.R.T.C. will have adequate guidelines with which to deal with cablevision applications?

[Translation]

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch today with the C.R.T.C. authorities and I questioned them about their plans in that respect. There is, in fact, a matter of urgency and they would even like to receive some instructions within a fortnight which we shall attempt to do.

However, for the time being we are in the process of reviewing the case. They are not considering new applications, however they are reviewing cases of community antennas already existing in the light of the Broadcasting Act.

[English]

INCOME TAX

DEDUCTION FOR BABY SITTING SERVICE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the news today that businessmen can now take their wives on trips and deduct the expense from income tax, will the minister now consider allowing mothers who work outside their homes to deduct the expense of paying babysitters?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question which might be debated at the time of adjournment.

[Translation]

EXCHEQUER COURT OF CANADA

PUBLICATION IN FRENCH OF RULES OF PROCEDURE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell us when the rules and general orders of the Exchequer Court will be published in French?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the last time the hon. member asked that question, I tried to convince the Chief Justice of the Exchequer Court of the urgency of the matter. But, in any case, I guess we shall have to wait another few weeks.

[English]

TRANSPORT

SAINT JOHN, N.B.—HANDLING OF ABNORMALLY LARGE SHIPMENTS

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Transport, notice of which I gave him early this morning. Has the minister any information on the very serious bottleneck at the port of Saint John and can he tell us what the government, the railways and the Harbours Board are doing to fulfil their responsibility in this matter?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for his usual courtesy. The general cargo handlings at Saint John are abnormally high at the moment due to strikes on the eastern U.S. seaboard. All berths in the harbour are being fully utilized in the loading and unloading of general cargo ships. The problem is to find berths with sufficient grain handling facilities for the grain ships.

The focal point of the problem appears to be the labour supply which at the moment is insufficient to meet an abnormal situation such as the present one. The 42 to 45 gangs available are doing an excellent job by working 12 hours a day Monday to Friday and eight hours each on Saturday and Sunday, but they are unable to meet the abnormally high peak period.

Mr. Bell: I should like to thank the minister for giving full information. Does he know that there would be agreement in this party if he would take over the ministry of transport so that we could have full information every day?

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can give any information as to when he hopes to table a report about which we have been seeking information for several months. I refer to the report of the royal commission relating to security. We have asked this question several times. Can the Prime Minister give the house any information concerning when we will receive the report or what the reason is for the delay?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): There is no firm day, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Prime Minister not give the question of the report his attention since this matter has been dragging on for several months? I for one find it difficult to understand the reason for the delay and why a report of this importance cannot be tabled in the house. This kind of delay, if I may say so, may very well lead to suspicion concerning the reasons for which the government is withholding the tabling of the report.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because it is a royal commission on security the subject matter is a very delicate one. As I explained very early in the session, we were involved in the very delicate process of trying to render public certain sections of the report without making public other sections, the release of which would be harmful to the security of the country. It is this assessment in respect of which we are having difficulty reaching a conclusion. This is the reason for the delay.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, regarding this report may I ask the Prime Minister whether it will be or has been made available to the heads of previous administrations, any of the three former prime ministers who as Privy Councillors would have the right to see it, or to anyone outside the present cabinet?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, as to whom the report will be made available, if we table it in the house in the abridged version it will be made public; there is no problem there. In respect of the question concerning to whom it has been made available: It has been made available to the cabinet ministers and certain civil servants who are concerned with security matters.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS, MAN.—ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could the minister say whether a decision has been reached in relation to the two matters brought forward to him by the chief of the Indian band at The Pas, Manitoba?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes. We indicated that the woman in question who was involved in the complaint was being actively considered for transfer. So far as the other matter, with regard to the community health service being responsible to the Indian band is concerned, we are quite agreeable to that.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—INTERVENTION OF R.C.M.P. FOLLOWING THREAT OF PLAN OPPONENT

Mr. G. H. Aikin (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Solicitor General. It relates to an interview by the R.C.M.P. with an Ottawa man who visited the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare a week ago today. Have any charges been laid against this man or are any contemplated?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, no charges have been laid in this case, and so far as I know none are contemplated.

Mr. Aiken: Is the investigation considered to be at an end so far as the R.C.M.P. are concerned?

Mr. McIlraith: So far as this particular incident is concerned, I believe so.

[Later:]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Solicitor General. In the answer to the last question I asked him he used the words "so far as this particular incident is concerned." I hope the minister is not leaving an inference that there are other incidents being investigated involving this particular person. Would the Solicitor General advise whether that is what he meant?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): No; I do not accept the hon. member's interpretation of my answer. I do suggest, however, there have been other incidents and an indication that there may be several other incidents. This is the nature of the information we have obtained.

COMBINES

TAKE-OVER OF COMPUTER CORPORATION BY CANADIAN NATIONAL TELECOMMUNICATIONS

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, notice of which I have given him. Is his department investigating the recent take-over of the Computer Corporation of Canada by Canadian National Telecommunications in order to see whether there has been a contravention of trade practices?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been referred to the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act.

Mr. Schreyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the new minister of communications whether his department is considering a review of this recent take-over to see whether it is in line with government policy?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we are assessing the implications of the take-over.

GEOGRAPHICAL BOUNDARIES

DEMARCATION BETWEEN QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I would like to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Since he is having studies made on the marine boundaries to be set in the North, could he tell the house if a marine border is to be established between Quebec and Ottawa by using the water branching median line formula?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I am afraid I did not get the question, Mr. Speaker. Which dividing line does the hon. member refer to?

Mr. Dumont: To the watershed line, Mr. Speaker. Will the border be set according to line?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member asks the right hon. Prime Minister to consider his proposal. He will probably take it for granted that he will do so.

Mr. Dumont: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REMOVAL OF ADMINISTRATION OFFICES FROM TORONTO TO BELLEVILLE— LAY-OFF AT WINNIPEG

Mr. Robert P. Kaplan (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of a recent decision he made to move the Unemployment Insurance Commission from 25 St. Clair Avenue East, Toronto, to Belleville. This will result in a number of public servants losing their present jobs in Toronto. In view of the fact that none of these employees are covered by unemployment insurance, I should like to ask what measures the government will take to ensure that those who cannot move will not be laid off?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether this question involves a matter of urgency. Perhaps the hon. member might consider the possibility of having the matter discussed at the time of adjournment. I have some doubt whether the question qualifies for consideration at this time.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. The minister's decision was announced very recently and a large number of public servants in Toronto are affected.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labor): Mr. Speaker, this was not a decision by the Minister of Labour; it was a decision on the part of the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There are 180 employees affected, of whom 117 have accepted transfer to Belleville; 23 others have accepted work in the Toronto area office and work will be found for the remaining 40, or severance pay will be granted for a period up to six months notice depending on service.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has yet found a way to avoid the lay-off of some 20 or 30 employees of the Unemployment Insurance Commission at Winnipeg?

Mr. Mackasey: As I have pointed out on many occasions in the house, the original number was 800. The fact that we have cut it down to 20 or 30 indicates the foresight of the commission. We anticipate we will be able to look after the remainder. In any event, no one in the Unemployment Insurance Commission will be dismissed with less than six months' notice.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact the Prime Minister stated in reply to a question I asked last October that the Minister of Justice is considering the possibility of appointing an ombudsman, can he inform the house what steps he has taken toward establishing such an officer of parliament to serve the Canadian public and parliament?

Mr. Speaker: The question raised by the hon. member is one of a very general nature. I appreciate that it is also of importance but I wonder whether the hon. member would not agree that this question should be answered by a statement on motions.

Mr. Thompson: I think he has the answer ready.

AGRICULTURE

PRESENTATION OF BRIEF BY FEDERATION

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, because of the urgent nature of this matter I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Can he indicate whether there are intentional exclusions from his participatory society, or is there some other major reason for the delay of months in granting the request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture to present its brief to the Prime Minister and members of the cabinet in accordance with the courtesy extended annually for many years?

Mr. Speaker: While the matter is being checked, perhaps the hon. member for Mackenzie could be allowed to ask his question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SOYBEANS—DECISION FOLLOWING REPRESENTATIONS BY MARKETING ORGANIZATION

Mr. Mac T. McCutcheon (Lambton-Kent): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Before the hon. member does so I should bring to the attention of hon. members that we have gone beyond the time allocated by a few minutes. I know that he and other hon. members would like to ask questions. If the hon. member's question relates to a matter which might wait until tomorrow I will undertake to make a special effort to allow his questions to be asked at an early moment. If the hon. member has a point of order I will hear him.

Mr. McCutcheon: My point of order is merely that the question I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture is strictly urgent.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might have leave, and unanimous agreement of the house, to ask this last question.

Mr. McCutcheon: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. My question to the Minister of Agriculture is: Can he report to the house whether a decision has been arrived at by the government regarding a request recently presented to the minister by the Ontario Soybean Marketing Board and, if not, when can we expect a decision? I ask this question at this time because of the urgency of making this information available, since growers meetings are scheduled all over Ontario next week.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we had a very useful meeting with representatives of the Ontario Soybean Marketing Board on Friday morning. We agreed however that some of the statistics and information respecting the price paid to producers in Canada, which are also related to the cost of imported soybeans, warranted further investigation. That investigation is going forward now.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

POSSIBILITY OF MORATORIUM ON PAYMENTS

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, because of the financial difficulties now facing many farmers which are resulting in the repossession of machinery, has the government given any consideration to imposing a moratorium or payments due under the Farm Improvement Loans Act or, in view of the extended time permissible on new loans under the amended act, to permitting renewals particularly in respect of those farmers who have had successive crop failures?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member well knows, the administration and in fact the credit used under the Farm Improvement Loans Act are matters for the bank. As I have said on a number of occasions in the house, where an individual application is made to the Farm Credit Corporation, for example, and it is substantiated by the fact that it is difficult or impossible to make payments, all these factors will be taken into account. There have been some postponements. I do not think a general moratorium would be good practice in this respect because it would also include a lot of people who can and should in fact make their payments on time.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

SIR GEORGE WILLIAMS UNIVERSITY—DEPARTMENTAL OFFICER AT PRELIMINARY HEARING

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there is some difficulty about the black foreign students in Montreal in relation to the Sir George Williams incident and in view of the request made on Friday I am wondering whether the government will send a federal representative to Montreal to be present during the court proceedings in order to deal particularly with matters concerning external affairs and immigration?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had anticipated that this question would be asked concerning the Department of External Affairs. Perhaps I might be permitted to answer.

It is not the usual function of the federal government to observe the machinery or the administration of Canadian justice. However, as the hon. member knows, the Department of External Affairs has had an officer from its legal division attending in Montreal during the course of the preliminary inquiry now under way. This officer has acted in a liaison capacity between the diplomatic representatives of the relevant Commonwealth Caribbean countries, the police and the judicial authorities of Montreal involved in the cases.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed, from Friday, February 28, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Friday, February 28, clause 7 of the bill was under consideration.

• (3:20 p.m.)

On clause 7—Department established.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, when we left the subject of the bill on February 28 we were dealing with the changes that are to take place in the Post Office Department and other departments of government in order to form the new Department of Communications. I realize there are some hon. members who want to speak on a matter of considerable urgency with which we dealt during the course of the question period, but I want this afternoon to deal with two or three points not related particularly to postal services but which came to my mind and are important so far as communications are concerned.

The first point I want to deal with particularly is the title of the new department. It is to be known as the Department of Communications, although in the bill it is stated that the minister is also to be known as the Postmaster General. I presume that he is to be known as the Postmaster General rather in the way that the Minister of Finance is also known as the Receiver General, a title which is used officially or for purposes of departmental administration, and is in the act but is not really used publicly in the minister's title.

I wish to refer to a debate which took place in the house during the last parliament in connection with the establishment of the title of Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Hon. members will remember that at that time it was first thought that the minister's title should be Minister of Manpower and that the word "Immigration" should be dropped. I think hon. members opposite raised the point that the word "Immigration" is so firmly fixed in the public mind, so well understood, indeed, that it should be associated with the title of the minister. This was agreed, an amendment was made in the house and the title of the minister was finally decided upon as being Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

The suggestion I make this afternoon is simply that we should not abolish the words "postal services" and the title "Postmaster General" but should make an attempt to retain a title so well known throughout Canada and the world in mail or postal services. My suggestion is that the title should not be abridged to that of Minister of Communications, or Department of Communications but that the department should be known as the Department of Communications and Postal Services.

When someone in the country wants to complain about the mail service the department he requires should be listed clearly in the telephone directory. He should not be put off his stride by hunting through the telephone book and not finding old and familiar words. Therefore I plead for the retention in the title of the words "Postal Services", and for the department to be called the Department of Communications and Postal Services.

Mr. Woolliams: Procrastination.

Mr. Deachman: I will let the hon. member make his own speech.

Mr. Aiken: He will, too.

Mr. Deachman: In his speech of February 28 the minister said:

> The Post Office payroll is 48,000, easily the largest of all civilian departments. In a sense it is the most "national" of all departments: There is a post office in every sizeable community in the country, more than 8,000 in all which is more, I might point out, than all the branches of our nine chartered banks combined.

The minister then described the rest of his department and said:

> The Communications Research Centre . . . is being formed from the existing defence research telecommunications establishment, a branch of the Defence Research Board. Its staff currently numbers 520 and is composed of five principal laboratories—

He continued:

> —some 630 . . . have moved over from what was formerly the Telecommunications Policy and Administration Bureau of the Department of Transport. They will continue to administer the Radio Act, that is the technical regulation of radio frequencies and the licensing of users, whether these be for taxi radios, microwave relays, telephone systems or television broadcasting transmitters.

So there it is. He has 48,000 employees and 8,000 branches in the Post Office Department, and he wants to eliminate the words "Postal Services" or "Post Office" from the title of the department.

I want to deal more specifically this afternoon with a different topic. I refer to the subject of communications in its new role as the minister explained it and apart from the Post Office. In his speech the minister said:

> Combined and rationalized under a single minister are all of the government's activities in the field of communications, that is both communications in its modern, electronic sense, and communications in its traditional sense of the Post Office.

A little later he said:

> —the object of this legislation is to make a single minister responsible for all government activities in the field of communications.

Then he said:

> —the Minister of Communications is responsible for two departments, each headed by a deputy minister, and also for a number of government agencies. The departments are, of course, the Department of Communications itself and the Post Office. The agencies which will now report to parliament through the Minister of Communications are the C.O.T.C., the Canadian Overseas Telecommunications Corporation; the Canadian Transport Commission, but specifically only that segment of the C.T.C. concerned with the regulation of telecommunication rates, and, once it is established by legislation, the domestic satellite corporation.

These are functions now carried on by the air services division of the Department of Transport and by its telecommunications and electronics branch. I want to refer you, Mr. Chairman, to a part of the description of that branch as set out in "Organization of the Government of Canada", the official volume describing the functions of departments and branches of the government. It says:

> The functions of the telecommunications and electronics branch include: the . . . use of radio for safety of life in the air and on the seas; construction, maintenance and operation of aeronautical, marine and meteorological radio-communication stations and of radio and electronic aids to navigation associated with airports and domestic and international airways, and with marine navigation along the sea coasts of Canada and on the Great Lakes—

The reason I have given these quotations and this background in some detail is in order to ask some questions to which clear answers should be given before we give final approval to the bill. Does the bill mean that the communication functions of airports and air and marine navigation are now to come under the new ministry? Are there to be two ministers in the airport tower? Have the functions of air navigation, air safety and air control now been split between two departments as a result of the bill which we are about to pass? Is the team on which we rely every time we take off or land at an airport to be directed in future by two bosses? If this is not so, we should be told, for the bill as it now stands is ambiguous on these points.

• (3:30 p.m.)

If we look at schedule B of the bill we see that it amends the Radio Act to bring it under the new minister. This is a very important act controlling the licensing of every kind of radio transmitter in Canada, stationary or mobile, and every operator of a set. Here is the way in which the Radio Act will be amended according to schedule B of the new bill. Hon. members will find this at page 63 of the bill which they have before them. The operative words in the amendments are the following:

> —no person shall
> (a) establish a radio station, or > (b) instal, operate or have in his possession a radio apparatus > at any place in Canada or on board any—> (d) aircraft registered in Canada, or—> except under and in accordance with a licence and, to the extent that it is a broadcasting undertaking, except under and in accordance with a technical construction and operating certificate, issued by the Minister under this Act.

To me this simply means that the Postmaster General as we know him today is not only to be in the D.O.T. tower at the airport but that he has climbed aboard every aircraft in the land and also every ship. I am not prepared at this time to condemn this arrangement, but I want to know if this is so. If it is so, why is it better, safer, simpler and cheaper than it was under the air services division and the former ministry?

The Department of Transport was put together in 1936 by the late C. D. Howe when he amalgamated the old department of railways and canals, the department of marine, and the civil aviation branch of the Department of National Defence. It became such a large empire that every prime minister and minister since that time has thought of splitting it up. On September 17, 1964, Mr. Balcer, a former minister of transport, said the following in the House of Commons:

> —I believe that it would make sense to take the management of the civil aviation division away from the Department of Transport.

That is found at page 8120 of Hansard of September 17, 1964. Mr. Glassco suggested the idea in volume 5 of his report when he said at page 44:

> —would the public interest be better served by the creation of a separate ministry to give more single-minded attention to the problems of civil aviation, or by maintaining the present organization as a more suitable context within which to attack the broader problems of transportation policy?

Of all the suggestions for carving up the Department of Transport, the one that consistently has made the most sense to us over the years has been the establishment of a ministry for air. Canada has a long and outstanding history in air transportation. Most modern nations have long since established separate air ministries. Communication is such an integral part of the operation of air services that one would have thought it more logical to establish an air ministry and let it be the agency for communication services which are now to be lumped with the Post Office.

Let me turn again to Mr. Glassco for an opinion. In volume 2 of his report, page 251, he says this in discussing telecommunications:

> —there is no case for unified management of government telecommunications. But there is need for central policy and authority to ensure that a cohesive and economic pattern will evolve.
> Telecommunications must be recognized to be, first and foremost, a supporting service essential to the conduct of operations. Consequently, the individual departments and agencies, as the active operating organizations of government, must bear the primary responsibility for determining what telecommunications are necessary to the success of their programs, and for ensuring the effectiveness of those services. In these respects, the management of telecommunications differs in no way from that of other supporting services.

The question then arises: To what extent is the new department to be simply a policy-making department, and to what extent is it to take over operating functions?

In summary, my main questions to the minister as he takes up his new duties are these: First, are we emasculating the air services division in such a way that it can no longer hope to be an effective single component capable of one day becoming a ministry for air? I think that is a very important problem for members to consider today in this chamber as we discuss this bill. Second, are we centralizing the operation of communications, taking it away from departments as a supporting service, and moving in the opposite direction to the one recommended by Mr. Glassco? If so, what have we found in the interval since the Glassco report that has brought about the decision to head off in a direction counter to that taken by him in his recommendations? Are we putting two ministers in charge of air control where now there is one minister and one team?

This is a matter that deserves thoughtful consideration by the house for it has to do with air navigation, sea navigation and the safety of people travelling by air and on sea. Have we made the right decision in giving telecommunications to a department which has heretofore been unassociated with it, or should it have been left with air services where there are operators as well as inspectors and licensers with many years of experience in the Department of Transport, the principal user of communications in the country?

I think these are pertinent questions. I am not a technician in the field, I am not highly skilled in it, and I am not competent to answer these questions. But they are certainly questions which come to my mind when I read the bill and ones to which I think the minister should address himself when he tells us how the decisions were reached in regard to the organization of the new Department of Communications. I will listen to him with great interest when the opportunity comes for him to explain these points.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege to speak today in the Committee of the Whole. Under the new rules we do not get this opportunity very often because this part of our procedure has largely been abolished.

I would like, first, to put this debate in proper perspective by quoting a statement made by the minister at the start of the debate on February 28. This may be a breach of the rules but I would like to quote him now. He said:

> One possible change under study is that of the desirability and feasibility of recreating the Post Office as a Crown corporation. In the meantime, no matter what may or may not happen in the future, the mail must still be delivered.

I think that is a powerful sentence, particularly today. If I had remained silent in this debate I might have appeared to the minister to be consenting to the birth of another taxpayers' monster, which is what will happen when we have a Crown corporation to do the work of the Post Office. We have heard much talk about communications, about how communications are being developed in outer space and what this will mean. However, mail delivery in this nation has now reached the point, not because of strikes—the difficulty developed long before that—where it would be quicker to deliver the mail by stage coach than by the methods used today. It took two weeks for a book to be returned from my home in Calgary to the library here in Ottawa. I mailed a postcard on a Thursday and it took a week to get here. That is the kind of service we are getting.

Now it is proposed to establish another monster over which parliament will have no control. I think of a number of these Crown corporations which are costing the taxpayers many millions of dollars each year and over which parliament has no effective control whatsoever. I do not want to see the minister lose control of the Post Office. I think that over the years Canada can be proud of its postal services; some fine personnel have served in the department. Surely the minister could get together three or four men from the postal service and have them cross the nation to find out why the public is not better served. He told us the mail must be delivered. Well, the mail is not being delivered. This may be due in part to the ending of Saturday deliveries, but I do not know why it should take from Wednesday to the following Tuesday for a letter posted in Toronto to be delivered in Ottawa. I believe the minister should take a team from the Post Office and have a thorough investigation made. I do not wish to appear, by being silent, to endorse what is going on.

My hon. friend from Hillsborough complimented the Postmaster General on some of his new ideas. But the minister has aggravated the present situation by threatening postal workers with prosecution if they do not behave. I, personally, do not believe that the old innstrument of strikes ought to be used by people in the public service of Canada. I do not think it works out very well. This is my own view; I have not discussed it with my party. Surely in this modern age, given the capabilities and the knowledge of management and labour, these problems could be worked out without disrupting essential services such as the railroads and the mail. Remember, though, it was a Liberal government which gave those engaged in the public service the right to strike. It was they who brought in the necessary act of parliament to this effect, and responsibility for so doing rests on their shoulders.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Again, instead of acting in a logical way by appointing someone to arbitrate the issue now in dispute, the Postmaster General says he intends to prosecute those concerned. Mr. Chairman, he cannot make anyone in Canada believe he intends to prosecute all the mailmen, because there are not enough jails to hold them all.

We on this side of the house opposed certain moves to increase postal rates. We said the increase would kill off the weekly newspapers, the farm papers and the periodicals. As we predicted, they are gradually going broke. Even Maclean's has been reduced in size: it is now a little magazine. Farm papers have gone broke. Weekly newspapers have gone broke. At the same time this government, for some reason, still subsidizes Time magazine and Reader's Digest to the extent of about $1,500,000 each year. Canadian papers do not enjoy this advantage. I do not know whether the government has such a monopoly on good news in Time that they hate to destroy it. Perhaps they ought to take the news across the nations using Time magazine, but it seems to me they are discriminating against Canadian periodicals.

I intend now to make a serious charge against the Post Office Department, and I am not imputing any blame to the minister in this regard. While he is making a check on the working of the Post Office I think he should look into it. Arrangements exist under which, on payment of so much per pound, mail is delivered to householders throughout a city. During election campaigns candidates of all parties use this method of getting their literature into homes of constituents. It is also widely used by business houses. In Calgary North there are 26,436 houses, 2,874 apartments and 1,191 businesses. I believe it costs from $400 to $600 to have mail delivered to householders in Calgary. What happened? Bundles of advertising put out by various department stores in Calgary as well as election pamphlets of mine were found out in a ditch two or three miles north of Calgary in a place called Airdrie. The Post Office was contacted immediately. Investigators went there and took photographs. They found the undelivered mail there in bundles. Since then I have written frequently to the department asking for an explanation. Apart from anything else, I feel that if mail is not delivered the least the department can do is to refund the money which has been paid. But nothing has been done in this regard. I am reading from a letter dated November 14, 1968—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe that is why the hon. member was elected.

Mr. Woolliams: It could be. I might have been fortunate. And perhaps it is why sales have been going up in the department stores. Anyway, I was advised finally that one or two postmen had resigned. I say that if citizens and corporations of this nation place mail in the hands of the Post Office they are entitled to expect it to be delivered, and that in cases where it is not delivered and is found in conditions such as I have described there ought to be an investigation by the R.C.M.P. I have asked the Post Office to take action along these lines but it has never been done. I say, too, that if the department knows who is responsible—and in this case the walk numbers were still on the parcels so it was easy to find out—the people concerned should have been prosecuted. After all, in the Post Office as a whole we have been served by the finest kind of public servants any nation could ask for, and one or two bad apples could turn the whole box bad by giving the entire department a bad name.

I ask the minister to look into this incident. The same thing is going on in other cities as well. Rates today for delivery to householders are expensive enough; yet the material is being dumped in garbage cans, I am told. I believe we are entitled to an explanation.

The minister talks about reorganization. He should make arrangements to investigate the causes of poor mail service. At present, it is a disgrace. I feel sorry for the hon. gentleman. No doubt he inherited part of the problem, but it appears to be getting worse. Has he failed to arouse any initiative among the officials with whom he comes into contact? A question was asked by my right hon. friend from Prince Albert with reference to the time taken for a letter to be delivered from Calgary. What did the minister say in his reply? He told the house arrogantly that it must have been a tremendously important letter. Mr. Chairman, it does not matter how important the letter was. It is the quality of the service that should concern him. Why did he not begin an inquiry immediately to see whether he could not get some service back into the Post Office, especially at a time of increased rates?

This afternoon parliament is being asked to give birth to another monster. Once a Crown corporation has been created, I know what the minister will say in reply to questions and complaints. He will say: I have no jurisdiction over a Crown corporation in such matters it is an independent body. What is the purpose behind all this? Behind the allegory which is being used, the word "Royal" will be removed from its connection with the mail and with the Post Office. That is the purpose of the change which is proposed. I have never used this argument before. Surely it is not intended to destroy the whole apparatus of the Post Office to satisfy the desire of this government to do away with the tradition to which I have referred. Yet, as I see it, this is the motive behind the present proposal. Behind the allegory of a new corporation and concern with satellite communications, this is what they have in mind.

I want to raise a sincere objection to the formation of any Crown corporation which will cost the taxpayer a lot of money without parliament having control over the way in which that money is spent. I cannot believe that the minister is really serious in this regard and I should like to hear him further on this point. I should like to hear him assure the committee that he will hold an investigation and get the mail going again, that he will take a look at all the periodicals, farm papers and weekly papers that are now going bankrupt, as we said they would, under the new rates that have been established while United States periodicals enjoy a bonus from the taxpayer of $1.5 million.

I had always thought that the minister was a pretty able man, but he is not showing that kind of initiative in the Post Office Department at the present time. I am not going to take any more time. I have set out my position so far as the Post Office is concerned. I would have been negligent in my duty and responsibility as a member of parliament if I had not brought to the attention of the minister and the committee the fact that everybody in Canada is crying about the terrible service of the Post Office. What has happened?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word of sympathy for the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra respecting the point he raised to the effect that the words "Post Office Department" should not disappear from telephone directories and other such places. However, I submit, having read the various clauses in the bill, that this is not likely to happen. The department over which the present minister will preside will be known mainly as the Department of Communications and the minister will be addressed as the Minister of Communications. However, according to my reading of clause 12 of the bill there is to be continued a department in the government of Canada which will be called the Post Office Department and the presiding minister is to be the Postmaster General.

Clause 12 also makes it clear that the Minister of Communications will be the Postmaster General. In other words, whoever heads up this phase of governmental activity will wear two hats. I suspect that as far as the general public is concerned the main interest for a long time will be in the Post Office Department, and the Post Office Department will certainly be listed in the telephone directory and be there for people to consult and deal with.

I rise this afternoon mainly to make an earnest plea to the minister to establish proper employer-employee relations in the Post Office Department, and to get at this with speed.

We have had a good deal to say during the course of this session about changes with respect to the Post Office Department that we do not like. We do not like the higher charges and the reduced service. We do not like the five-day delivery schedule. We do not like all of the things that have been complained about under these various headings. I think that the minister is being callous in his failure to be concerned about non-profit publications and so on. But I submit that the element that can do the most damage to the service of the Post Office Department is the development of a tradition of bad employer-employee relations.

I know that the minister has been running around to the various post offices in Canada, visiting the workers, eating lunches in their cafeterias and so on, and that he prides himself on being a person who is interested in good employer-employee relations. But, with respect, I would submit to him that on the issue that is causing trouble in many cities in Canada today he is completely off base.

In his reply to a question or two on orders of the day this afternoon, the minister said that he saw no relationship between this matter and the Freedman report. I submit that there is a very close relationship between the recommendations of the Freedman report and what some of us are asking in connection with the present situation. As a matter of fact, I submit that there is close proximity between the problem that initiated the Freedman inquiry and the problem here.

The Freedman report came about because of run-throughs that were established by the Canadian National Railways which the employees of that company felt were unfair. The mess the Post Office is in today is the result of the walk-throughs that the Post Office Department has implemented and that it requires its workers to carry out. The minister might quarrel with that expression, but I am referring to the new arrangement under which there is only one sortation of mail per day by the letter carriers, following which they go out on their walks and are not permitted to return to their post offices at noon. So I submit that in effect it is a walk-through that has been instituted.

The Postmaster General was quite correct in his statement on orders of the day this afternoon that the Freedman report recognizes that management has certain rights and that there are certain things that management can change. But the Freedman report also says that where there are essential or extensive changes in work patterns, changes that are made after a collective agreement has been signed with the employees should be subject to negotiation before they are put into effect. I readily recognize that there can be an argument over whether a certain change is minor or extensive, but surely the annoyance that has been felt by letter carriers across Canada over the change that has been put into effect is because, at least in their minds, they feel this is not a minor change but is in fact extensive change in their work pattern.

I submit that if the government has any respect at all for the Freedman report, this is a matter that ought to have been negotiated before the change was put into effect. But what have the Postmaster General and the Post Office Department done about the matter? The change has been put into effect without negotiation. A set of rules has been laid down that the workers must carry out. When the workers start to resist because they think these rules are grossly unfair and are really a violation of their contract, the Postmaster General takes the case to the Public Service Staff Relations Board to apply for permission to prosecute. It is now reported to us that these men may individually be subject to fines of $100 each for each day they are out, and that the unions themselves may be subject to fines of $500 a day. When the situation gets even worse and the response to these threats is for even more men to walk out and refuse to deliver mail under duress, under these conditions, the minister says that it has now been agreed to skip two or three stages of the grievance procedure and have the issue adjudicated by a third party.

I suggest to the Postmaster General that this is precisely the wrong way to go about this matter. In the first place, you should not impose a change by arbitrary fiat, hand out threats, and then while insisting that the rules still be carried out have a so-called third party adjudication. I submit that if this matter is to be dealt with satisfactorily in terms of achieving good employer-employee relations, the Post Office Department ought right away to suspend these walk-throughs until there has been a chance for the employer and the employees to negotiate them, determine whether they are an acceptable pattern of work, whether they fit in with the machinery of the Post Office and whether they form lines of work that are reasonable for the men to carry out.

There is a good deal to be said for the challenge postal workers have held out to the Postmaster General in which they asked him to report for work at some specified place and go through the kind of day that has been proposed for them. Arbitrary rules are imposed on our workers. The department says that its actions will save the country $3 million and therefore the workers ought to like it. The net result is a worsening in employer-employee relations. Nothing can do more damage to our postal service than this kind of situation.

Even if the Postmaster General alleges that progress has been made in straightening out some situations in the postal service since he took over the department, he must admit that the present situation is not good and that the machinery within the department is moving slowly. Even though the department may be moving slowly, it is not moving in the right direction. The five-day delivery schedule is proving to be a failure, and service to the public is becoming worse. Various factors, such as higher costs and other changes the Postmaster General and his officials have tried to make, have contributed to that situation. But the basic, crucial factor we ought to consider is the matter of employer-employee relations.

In my view, the Postmaster General is going about his business in this area in the wrong way. Only this afternoon could he tell us about the third party adjudication which might take place. We do not know the terms and conditions under which this adjudication will be put into effect. I submit that for the government to keep to its walk-through rules while the matter is being adjudicated is not conducive to producing a good rapport between employer and employees in this important and vital service. Before the situation gets worse, I ask the Postmaster General to apply common sense to the matter of achieving good employer-employee relations in his department. The time to do this is now.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, in speaking on the bill to reorganize the government and among other things, set up a new communications department I must say that while we are providing for a great deal of new communication from the sky we are seriously neglecting the communications that may be delivered through small, rural post offices in the many small communities scattered across the country. The Post Office Department has set about with a vengeance to close many small, rural post offices and, in effect, to reduce service to rural people. I do not say that all rural post offices ought to be left open indefinitely. From time to time many of them will have to be closed. As a result of reorganization within the department many rural post offices will close. On the other hand, the closing of some of these post offices will bring little saving to the department. In such cases there will be reduced service to the patrons of the post office and, consequently, a reduction in service to the community as a whole.

I do not feel that the method of closing our rural post offices is fair. A decision to close a post office is taken only after there has been an investigation of the amount of stamps and money orders sold by that post office. The fact is that the stamps sold are used on only a small portion of the mail that passes through the post office. After all, the patrons of small post offices receive much more mail than they send and it seems only fair that the revenue from a portion of the mail received should be credited to that post office. Indeed, if the small rural post office is fortunate enough to be patronized by a business it has justification for remaining open notwithstanding the fact that the business in question could well use the post office of a larger centre.

Many patrons are being provided with a rural route service which costs between $18 and $20 for each patron. As labour costs rise, so will the cost of this service. Generally, once a post office has been established in an area, patrons prefer its services to those supplied under the rural route system. The Postmaster General ought to take a second look at revenue considerations under which the department decides whether a post office shall be closed. Also, rural post offices should be closed more gradually. A definite formula for their closing ought to be established and the postmasters and people of the communities concerned ought to be given ample warning that this vital service is to be closed down.

So far officials of the department do not seem to have visited local post offices serving reduced numbers of patrons. There has been no suggestion to postmasters concerned that they should carry on in a lower category, so to speak, so that the remuneration received by the post office will be more in line with the service it provides.

Having made these comments, I suggest that drastic and sudden reorganizations at the local level have caused serious unrest. Many rural people feel the post office has written them off because they use it too little. After all, it is little use having the Post Office Department make substantial savings at the cost of not giving our people service. It also seems that the Post Office is making it difficult for rural people to receive magazines and farm periodicals. The increases in postage rates for these publications will cause severe hardships. Increases ranging between seven cents and twenty cents are the order of the day and, if continued, will dislocate the dissemination of the written word throughout these communities. True, increased postage rates for publications were overdue. Nevertheless, the department's sudden attempt to wipe out its deficit in this field can result only in serious dislocation to the detriment of the farming community.

Fewer periodicals will be published. The reduced volume of mail may increase the department's deficit beyond what has been projected. Mailing rates which have been severely and extensively increased will bring about drastic and sudden readjustments in all our industries. The government has relied on farm newspapers to disseminate much information to the farming community. Although it may be said that the government departments concerned should pay to have information disseminated to the farming community, such a step will take time. The net result of the postage increases may be a catastrophic decrease in the circulation of the printed word. We may lose more than we gain.

[Mr. Ritchie.]

The attitude of the Post Office to its workers leaves much to be desired. The Postmaster General's attitude, that he will prosecute the workers and unions, seems severe and inflexible. The working conditions of letter carriers have been drastically altered and more time is needed to iron out the problems of the five-day week.

Often the Post Office Department forgets that people are human, with personal needs that must be met. It seems that the department ought to adopt a more rational approach to the question of straight-through delivery. The department appears to be belligerent toward the workers and has not been willing to accept suggestions from the workers as to how these problems ought to be worked out. Straight-through delivery is a great change from what the carrier has been used to, and it will take the carrier time to become adjusted to this change. In many cases where washrooms facilities are not readily available the change may be impossible to effect. The unions' position is that straight-through delivery is a change in the terms of the labour contract. I think this is a reasonable attitude and one that calls for adjudication by third parties. I ask the minister to accept third-party adjudication as the best solution to the problem.

The minister's attitude seems to be very stiffnecked and uncompromising. It is the same attitude that he has displayed with reference to rural post offices and periodicals. Complete reorganization of the Post Office Department will take time. The minister should know that Rome was not built in a day. A more conciliatory and sympathetic attitude to the problems of the workers would stand the minister in good stead. I urge him to re-examine his whole approach to the problems of the Post Office Department.

The people of Canada would not fault the minister in any way if he took more time to make his changes in the postal services, many of which are good and necessary, but I point out that severe changes can cause dislocation even when they are right and proper. I would ask the minister to proceed more slowly. I believe the result would be much better. The people of Canada will not thank the minister for suddenly making the Post Office pay if the service they get is poor and inadequate. Both goals can be achieved gradually if the minister is reasonable in his approach to the problem.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity to make use of the suggestion Mr. Speaker made to us earlier today, when we asked for adjournment of the house to debate the important issue of the threatened postal strike, that we would have an opportunity when this bill came before us. We are facing a very serious situation. We might be in for another postal strike. I sincerely hope the minister is dealing with the matter in the serious way that it requires.

I am surprised the Postmaster General did not realize what lay before him in the reorganization of the Post Office Department. I and many other members of the house do not understand why he did not sit down with the postal officials and say: Gentlemen, we are going to change the sorting arrangements. The postmen will sort all their mail in the morning and then deliver the whole day's mail. They will no longer return to the post office after lunch as they did previously and sort the afternoon mail. He should have asked his legal authorities this question: Is this in violation of the existing contract? Had he done so we would not be in the serious situation of being threatened with another postal strike.

The department's public relations have been poor. If the Postmaster General had given his full attention to these proposed changes rather than going about the country talking about NATO, about satellites and about new communications systems it would have been better, at least until his reorganization was working smoothly.

The people of Canada have been asked to pay higher postage rates. For this they expect better service. But instead they are getting worse service. Canada is the first country I know of that has endeavoured to deliver a week's mail in five days. The minister has tried to bulldoze this change through without the proper public relations and without the proper prior thought and study. Many warnings were given to the minister, but instead of allowing the issue to cool off he heats up the situation by making public threats to the staff. I hope he realizes how serious the situation is.

I am receiving many complaints about poor postal service, particularly from persons in the retail trade and more particularly from storekeepers in areas where stores are closed on Mondays. If a storekeeper gets a letter on Friday morning he cannot reply to it until the following Tuesday.

As an example I cite a jeweller who sends watches away to be repaired. If he does not get a watch back by mail on Friday he will have to wait until the following Tuesday. I maintain that the retail sections of our communities are entitled to six-day service. In many cases their very livelihood depends on the mail. Now they are told to rent postal boxes in the local post offices in order to get six-day service. If this continues many post offices will not be large enough to hold all the rented boxes. I beg the minister to give consideration to the retail outlets and business offices and provide them with better service.

I have also received many complaints about counter service in post offices. By counter service I mean the service given at the main counter on the main floor of a post office where there is the stamp wicket, the registration wicket, the C.O.D. parcels wicket, and all the rest down the line. What happens at this counter now on Saturdays? There are two workers in our post office on Saturday mornings and they have been given instructions not to do any business. They are there to hand out registered letters and parcels on receipt of cards left by the local postman on his rounds. But they cannot sell a stamp, they cannot weigh a letter or do other business of any kind. I say to the Postmaster General, either do business on the main floor with complete counter service, or close the place up. Let there be no half measure about it. If a post office is open let it do business at all wickets and not just one or two.

There is no reason in the world that we should not be getting next day delivery across the country. We get next day delivery from Europe and many other countries. But it takes two days, three days and sometimes four days for letters posted in Toronto to reach their destinations at London, Guelph and other places no more than 80 miles away. As I said previously when speaking on the estimates of the Post Office Department, we had better mail delivery in the days of the stage coach than we have today. There is something radically wrong, and I take this opportunity of bringing it to the minister's attention once again.

I shall not take any more of the time of the house. I regret that the Postmaster General did not sit down with these men and with the heads of his department to see whether there was any possibility that the existing contract may have been violated. If this had been done thoroughly I do not think the Post Office would be involved in the mumbo-jumbo it seems to be involved in today. With these few words I shall sit down in the hope that the Postmaster General will be successful in smoothing out the problems with his staff so that better public relations will exist in the future. Then we'll have better service.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, in 1912 Sir Richard Cartwright said that no man and no party can be safely entrusted with uncontrolled power. I would hope that this is is not the reason we have received the answers we have received in the last while whenever a question has been asked concerning postal service. Some of the questions which were asked today were very sincere and sincere answers should have been given. Unfortunately one cannot help but be disappointed that the Postmaster General would use threatening language when dealing with a labour dispute and tell civil servants how they must bargain. Surely the federal government should lead the way in respect of collective bargaining in this country. I believe the Freedman report set the stage for this. I am very disappointed that the minister would stand up and suggest he is not prepared to allow freedom of collective bargaining to these people as it is recognized by the public service.

I am completely in favour of the bill passed by this house which allowed public servants to strike. I believe this is a human right of every individual and I believe they should be given this prerogative. With regard to changes in the working conditions of any employee, I do not agree that the federal government or management generally should take unto themselves the right to implement changes without first negotiating them. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to the remarks which have been made in this debate. I say that every individual has the right to free collective bargaining and that no new rule changes should be enforced until the persons concerned have had an opportunity to sit down at the bargaining table and take a look at the proposed changes.

I read in a newspaper that a private mail delivery service is to start in British Columbia and will move east. An editorial in the Globe and Mail for Tuesday, March 4, 1969, states:

> I believe that in four or five years it will be inevitable that private enterprise will take over the business of the post.

[Mr. Hales.]

I should like to ask the minister whether or not it is the intention of the government to turn over our postal service to private enterprise. I think there is every indication that a predominantly United States owned company which has been handling third class mail is moving into British Columbia and also moving east to provide the service which apparently we cannot provide. It is very unfortunate, after having built up the kind of postal service we have across this country, that we should be confronted now with a situation where we must consider a private mail delivery service. Considering the service we have had in the past I know that the public would not like to see this happen. I am sure also that the minister would not like to see it happen. Therefore I believe we should have an explanation in this regard.

I was also bothered by a report I read in a newspaper concerning the committee that dealt with the rate increases. The minister, who was present before the committee, is reported to have said that if publications are valued by their subscribers they will be able to raise their subscription rates. Then he said that though he was sorry to put it so ruthlessly he was prepared to see them cease publication. We are now dealing with the new Department of Communications. I suggest that what the minister said about the increase in postal rates being borne by the people who wish to have the publications is not in keeping with what is sought to be accomplished under this bill.

Dealing directly with the Department of Communications I should like first of all to congratulate the minister on the appointment of those who are to be responsible for planning, operation, regulation and research and development in the new department. I am sure, as he indicated in his speech of February 28, that these people are worthy of our support. I am sure also that every Canadian can be proud that we have people in this country who will devote their time and energy to ensuring that we will have something of which we can be proud in respect of satellite communications. There are a number of questions which come to mind which no doubt the minister will answer when he has an opportunity.

When he introduced his new department the minister indicated that it will be a small one which will reflect the growing importance of communications and the government's increasing involvement in this area. I am sure all of us can appreciate the fact that the respective areas of the department can work very closely, but the prime objective of the department is to establish a national communications policy and program that will tie together all the disparate parts of Canada. I am sure everyone in Canada would agree that all parts of Canada should be tied together as closely as possible. Of course, if we use the analogy of the postal department we realize what was accomplished there is now being downgraded to the extent that one may wonder whether there is any sincerity in setting up another department and in the same breath suggesting that the disparate parts of Canada are going to be tied very closely together.

Part of the program of the new department will be a review of current telecommunications legislation. The Postmaster General has publicly admitted that our current telecommunications legislation is completely out of date and inadequate to meet changing needs. He stated in the house that not sufficient information is available to the public and especially to his new department from companies such as the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. One of my colleagues will have something to say about the Bell Telephone Company of Canada very shortly.

When we look at the various clauses of this part of the bill we see that the objective of the department is a good one. The idea of a Department of Communications is a good one. However, additional government reorganization is certainly necessary to make the new department really responsible for the growing importance of communications in the country. The present role is a very limited one. For example, most of the responsibility for present communications systems in Canada comes under regulatory agencies such as the Canadian Transport Commission and the Canadian Radio-Television Commission.

Under the satellite program the government commissioned Dr. P. M. McIntosh, general manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia, to submit a report advising the government concerning a plan for the corporate, financial and senior management structure of the domestic satellite communications corporation. Dr. McIntosh has handed down his report, but I understand it has not yet been released. I think it should be recognized that Dr. McIntosh has a background in private industry. I believe his recommendations regarding the new satellite corporation will permit extensive private industrial participation without sufficient public control. When I looked at the white paper issued some time ago it was my belief that there must be sufficient public control. It is up to the minister to ensure that the people of Canada really know what is going to happen in this field.

If we look at the pros and cons of the establishment of a satellite communication system in Canada we will see they are still quite complex and that there are many conflicting statements by government spokesmen in this regard. It may be useful to have a satellite communication system in Canada, but I personally consider that it is our obligation to see that Canada has control of this system. I am not prepared to agree with the proposal that we make use of the satellite projects of other countries and rent space. I believe we have the wherewithal and the technical knowledge to put a satellite in orbit for use by the entire nation.

We have to ask the minister certain questions and we will have to receive specific answers. We must have a direct comparison of the costs of a satellite system and a terrestrial microwave relay system. This is something we should know about. I realize that the minister said to my colleague, the hon. member for Selkirk, that such a comparison was increasingly difficult to make at this time, but in general the cost of a terrestrial microwave system is proportional to distance whereas satellite system costs are independent of the distance between earth stations. In any event the difference in price is something the minister should be prepared to estimate and inform us about at this time.

Let me return to the social aspect of our communications systems under the new Department of Communications. We realize that the minister indicated before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that the satellite system would be devoted to Canadian aims and objectives and would be programmed in a way acceptable to the Canadian people, their cultural requirements and needs. I suggest that with the present postal situation this social aspect may be a little hard to sell. Over the weekend I was in an area of central Saskatchewan where the post offices are to be closed on Saturday afternoons. I have drawn this matter to the attention of the Postmaster General, but it seems to me that somewhere along the line we have lost our understanding of the fact that in rural areas the people do get together on Saturday afternoons. In central Canada Saturday afternoons perhaps do not mean too much. If you live in the west in some of these small areas you will realize that the people do mix socially on Saturday.

It is true that communication, in addition to that provided by the Post Office, helps to maintain communities such as we have in rural areas of western Canada, and we must have these communities if we are to retain this nation as we know it. I ask the minister to give serious consideration to the need to keep post office wickets open on Saturday afternoons in rural areas. This may seem to be a trivial matter but I assure the minister it is not trivial so far as the rural people are concerned.

It has been stated that a satellite television system would be able to blanket the rural and northern areas of Canada and thus attain greater unification of the country. Let me add to what I have said about communication in this country that it will remain united if the minister will give further consideration to the subject I mentioned previously. I realize that the trend now is for some of the people in rural areas to move to urban centres. Out in the west at this time the trend now is to move back to the rural areas. This was not evident ten years ago. You can travel throughout some rural areas at this time and see new homes, buildings and the like. I believe the social consequences have to be taken into consideration if we are concerned in this House of Commons about communication.

Another point which I think has been rightly referred to in the white paper concerns the limited space we have available in so far as the location of a satellite is concerned. This matter has to be dealt with on an international basis rather than in a hodge-podge way with each country going out as it likes into outer space. I hope the minister is successful in his efforts in this regard. I am sure he will agree that this should be an international arena in which every country would co-operate in respect of space and the location of satellites.

It has been said that with the construction of a satellite system there would be some spin-off benefits to the country involving the development of future markets. We must look very closely at what we are considering in this particular area. It is worthy to note that both of the firms which submitted design programs for the contractors included in their bids participation by foreign firms.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

For example, the bid by Northern Electric, which is a Canadian subsidiary of Bell Telephone, further complicates the question of responsibility and control and includes substantial assistance for Canadair Limited, an American subsidiary of Hughes Aircraft Company of California. The bid by R.C.A. Victor, an American subsidiary, includes additional assistance from Spar Arrow Space Products Limited of Toronto, a systems group of T.R.W. and Company of California. Northern Electric has stated that its proposal will achieve a 64.5 per cent Canadian content under the program. R.C.A. Victor has declared that its proposal will promote the participation of Canadian companies to the maximum degree feasible. In view of these statements I think we should pay particular attention to ensuring maximum participation of Canadian companies in the development of our satellite. The proposals are inadequate for two main reasons, one relating to foreign ownership and the other relating to private development and participation.

Considerable time and money have been spent in this country to determine what foreign ownership is really all about. We have had in Canada too many experiences in developing private industry expertise. It is only fair to state what I am referring to in this regard. We have had the experience of developing private industry expertise in the Canadian atomic reactor program under Canadian General Electric while at the same time Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, a public corporation, was involved in similar development.

A recent decision by the United States parent of Canadian General Electric has forced the cancellation of the atomic reactor program. Of course, the implications with regard to R.C.A. Victor and its development of a Canadian satellite system are especially important. It is worthy of note that all patents developed in Canada by Canadian R.C.A. are taken out only by the United States parent. I am sure the minister realizes the situation but I want to draw it to his attention. We should really look at the situation to see whether there is specific justification for government departments and agencies, such as the research and development branch of the minister's department and Crown agencies such as the National Research Council, Atomic Energy of Canada, and the Defence Research Board, to be involved in the construction of a Canadian satellite.

I am a great believer in the idea that we should use the facilities and the people we do have for development in this particular area, particularly for the Canadian satellite. I urge the minister to ensure that these various boards, committees and research councils will be used to their utmost in complete correlation on various programs. I ask the minister to pay particular attention to this.

Some of the research programs we have had in the past have actually been cancelled. This is why I believe there should be some question raised here as to what real development there has been and what exploratory talks have been carried out in respect of a communications satellite. Why have some of our other programs been cancelled in the past? Why was the intense neutron generator program cancelled last fall? Why has the government expended its oceanographic research program under the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources? Why was the Queen Elizabeth telescope project in British Columbia cancelled after millions of dollars had been spent? It was completely wiped out by the stroke of a pen. I think the minister should explain these moves very thoroughly when he answers the questions put to him.

Which department is responsible for industrial research and development programs? Once again we are getting into a situation where we have to ensure that there is complete responsibility in a particular department. We have seen too many varied programs being carried out without parliament knowing whether a department has complete authority in a specific area. I suggest that the minister give us some answer in respect of this particular phase. It is in this area that government scientific research is quite literally chaotic. I say this with all sincerity because, as the secretary of the Treasury Board said some time ago, the national science policy is determined by accident. I am sure that no one in the house would like to see a new department set up that would determine policy by accident.

• (4:40 p.m.)

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I again urge the minister to realize that in the communications field the Post Office and the satellite communications system about which we are talking will have to work together to be of the utmost benefit to the people of this country. It is fine to say that we are going to cover the north to the south and the east to the west with a satellite communications system, it is fine to say that we will have tracking stations and the wherewithal with which to provide television coverage and all the other types of coverage necessary for an effective communications system, but we must not allow our main method of communications to deteriorate.

I refer, of course, to the postal service. In his speech of February 28 the minister referred to bulletin boards in post offices and said that while communication unites people it can also isolate them. I agree completely. The minister then said:

> It was in this context that I recently threw out the idea of using our nation-wide complex of post offices as locations for communication centres, perhaps by bulletin boards, perhaps by a system of hot-line telephones by which individual members of the public could communicate directly with their government.

I hope that the few post offices left in the rural communities will not have bulletin boards installed where an attempt will be made to post bulletins from hot-line telephones and our new communications satellite. The people in the country using post offices now want to see the written word and are not prepared to see inaugurated a system which would mean they could communicate only by picking up a hot-line telephone. I am sure we are many years away from such a system. I am also certain we are still in the era where we must have an efficient postal service. I subscribe to the new department; I subscribe to the new communications system and commend the minister for the appointments he has made in this field. I wish him well in this area. But unless he changes his tune in so far as the Post Office Department is concerned, I am sure he will not have the support of the house for the new department.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, part II of this bill affords hon. members an opportunity to discuss what some of us consider to be a matter of urgent public importance. My colleague, the hon. member for Hillsborough, very clearly and succinctly outlined in his remarks today on his motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 26 why it is a matter of urgent public importance. It is one of urgent public importance because what is happening poses a serious threat to a vital public service in this country, that of the delivery of the mails.

In my view this threat stems from the minister's intransigence and stubbornness in handling this matter. Because of the minister's attitude and the stand he has taken the Post Office Department, which has afforded good service in this country for the last 100 years, is in turmoil. It is in turmoil because we have a Postmaster General who does not seem to understand the fundamentals of good labour relations. The minister cannot say that he was not warned about this situation. The hon. member for Hillsborough, hon. members of the N.D.P. and other members of the opposition have raised this matter day after day in the house. Indeed, on February 28 the Council of Postal Unions issued a press release which was circulated to all members of the house, again warning the minister. I will read briefly from that press release which is over the signatures of the co-chairmen of the Letter Carriers Union of Canada:

> The Postmaster General has made public statements that morale is high in the Post Office. He insinuates that there is good dialogue between the union and management. He states at times we are in agreement. However, on the most important issue regarding the new system of delivery he fails to inform the public that the situation is explosive.

That warning from the postal unions came on February 28. It might be worth while if I continued quoting from this release:

> Mail service in the meantime is deteriorating. Inefficiency is fast becoming the new guide to operation.

I quote another part of the press release:

> We have no objection to a five-day delivery week. Our dispute is with management's interpretation of the collective agreement. The action we have directed our members to take is in our opinion, and in the opinion of our legal counsel, in accordance with the contract.

It is obvious that a crisis situation has developed in this very important and essential public service. We have already experienced the drastic consequences of one strike in the Post Office and we know the suffering it imposed on the Canadian people. We are now perhaps on the threshold of another strike because of the minister's stubbornness in dealing with this matter, because of his refusal, I submit, to consult his colleague the Minister of Labour who has had such success in these matters. I can only assume that he has not consulted the Minister of Labour because I cannot for the life of me believe that the Minister of Labour would have consented to the provocative and threatening statements made by the Postmaster General, which are causing a threat to the mail service of our country and have already caused a most serious crisis in this very essential service.

Instead of trying to cool the situation, in stead of trying to talk calmly to the people involved, the minister takes to the public press and threatens the unions. I ask the Minister of Labour, how successful would he be if he adopted this attitude? How successful would he have been in settling some of the very serious threats to public services which he has successfully handled if he had resorted to threats of prosecution in the public press? The Minister of Labour knows that this is not the way to settle labour disputes. He knows this is not the way to bring the parties together in order to reach agreement.

If there is a curtailment in this essential service, if the service does cease, we can blame only the Postmaster General for the attitude he has taken throughout; the consequences will rest on his shoulders. I am sure the minister realizes the consequences of a disruption in the mail service. The old age pensioner suffers, the disabled suffer and our veterans suffer because they do not receive their pension cheques. The average working man and woman of this country suffer because they lose a service which is essential to the running of the country, a service which I submit has been carried out effectively and efficiently for the past 100 years.

Perhaps the reason for the difficulties in the Post Office today stems from the fact that we have a Postmaster General who has his head in the clouds. He seems to be more concerned with satellites than with mail delivery.

Mr. Baldwin: And with NATO.

Mr. McGrath: And, as my colleague interjected, with NATO and trying to do the job which the Minister of National Defence is being paid by the Canadian people to do. I suggest to the Postmaster General that he leave NATO to the Minister of National Defence and that he pay more attention to the essential postal services before he gets too far in the clouds with satellites and communications. As I say, the consequences of a disruption in the postal services are serious because they inflict a hardship on the Canadian people, on old age pensioners, on our war veterans, on those receiving disability pensions, and on the working men and women of this country.

• (4:50 p.m.)

There are problems in the Post Office which would not provoke the type of statement that the Letter Carriers Union was obliged to make on February 28. There are areas in this country where the postal service has not been improved in the past 50 years. In my own city of St. John's which has more than doubled in population in the last 20 years, we still have the same postal services to serve a population of 100,000 that we had to serve 50,000. These are some of the serious problems with which the minister could come to grips instead of issuing threats to the unions. He should be consulting with his colleague, the Minister of Labour, and he should in fact be sitting down at the negotiating table and taking some tips from his colleague to try to smooth out the situation because this is the only way it can be done.

The minister referred to calling on a third party to deal with the dispute. I hope he will elaborate on this point and let us know exactly who the third party will be who will participate in this regard.

This matter is so serious that we feel obliged to bring it to the attention of the house. We believe that the postal services are essential to the people of Canada, and if there is a disruption in the services I submit it will be because of the intransigence and the provocation of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I have great respect for the Postmaster General who was my predecessor as president of the Montreal Stock Exchange and did an excellent job there.

Mr. Baldwin: He should have stayed there.

Mr. Hees: He has many admirable abilities, one of which, however, is not the ability to handle labour relations. This is no fault of his because, like the previous minister of labour, Mr. Nicholson, the Postmaster General has had no training in the ranks of labour. Rather he has been trained in the classroom and the boardroom, and if one is brought up with that type of thinking one is not in a position to understand the needs and aspirations of labour, the way labouring men think and the things to which they aspire. A man who has not been brought up in the labour movement does not know how to do the most important thing in labour negotiations, that is, to sit down with the workers concerned on an equal and friendly basis and be considered by them as a friend and not as somebody who comes from another stratum of society. He should be able to be trusted by the working man because he has always been on the same side of the fence. I say to the minister that in my view he is not in a position through no fault of his own to handle the present labour negotiations.

In the past few years we have had good ministers of labour such as my former colleague, the Hon. Michael Starr, and the present labour minister. Why have they been good labour ministers? Because they came up through the labour ranks, they understand labour's point of view, they know how to talk to working men, and they are trusted by them. In the early days they were in the rank and file of labour. That is why Michael Starr was a successful labour minister, and the same is true of the present Minister of Labour who is doing a good job. I am glad to be able to say this about him.

I say that in order to work out differences like the present one in the Post Office we must have somebody who has the confidence of postal workers, who can sit down and talk to them as an equal and talk to them in their own language. I believe that if the Postmaster General continues to conduct these negotiations in the present manner because of his lack of knowledge of any other approach through no fault of his own, which I can only describe as a bull in a china shop approach, we are going to have a very serious and lengthy strike of the postal workers of this country.

I urge the minister to take action in the interests of bringing to a close what I believe is a serious labour dispute that will have grave effects on the country for a long time in the future if it is not brought to a sensible conclusion as soon as possible. I urge him to hand over these difficult negotiations with the postal workers to the Minister of Labour who, I believe, has the ability to bring this matter to a quick and sensible solution which will be fair, equitable and satisfactory to both the government and the postal workers. In this way our postal communications can continue in a regular, satisfactory and uninterrupted manner.

The Chairman: So that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr.

Cadieu)—Power—Uranium City—Electrical service supplied by utility company; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow)—Science Services—Ministerial responsibility for policy the hon. member for Surrey (Mr. Mather—Post Office Department—effect of rate changes on non-profit publications.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills.

NOTICES OF MOTIONS

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED INTERNSHIP PROGRAM FOR POLITICAL SCIENTISTS AND OTHERS

On the order:

Mr. Hales—That in the opinion of this House, the government should give consideration to the advisability of establishing a form of internship program in the House of Commons; the purpose of said program being to better equip outstanding young political scientists, journalists and law school faculty members, with a better understanding of the national legislative process; the participants to be brought to Ottawa for six to nine months of full-time work as assistants to members of the House of Commons and to be paid a minimum stipend financed by the government and an established grant, competition for the fellowship to be made each year, announced to coincide with the opening of a session.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I rise at this time to ask for the unanimous consent of the house so that my resolution concerning internships, appearing on the order paper today as No. 40, may be referred to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization without debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Forest: I believe there is unanimous consent to the following motion and I would like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin):

That the said proposed motion be deemed to have been withdrawn and that the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization of the House be empowered to consider and report upon the provisions thereof.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, it is a delight to find a government motion to which I can give my name as seconder.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is unanimous.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I take it the motion is agreed to.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Forest: I believe there would be unanimous consent to stand in their places notices of motions Nos. 28, 29 and 30 and to proceed today with notice of motion No. 31.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

NORTHWESTERN SASKATCHEWAN—SUGGESTED ROAD, RAIL AND BROADCASTING EXTENSIONS

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should give urgent consideration to all means of developing areas of great potential value to the national economy, in particular northwestern Saskatchewan, and that, in this regard, special attention be directed to provision of an all-weather road link between the La Loche area and the area of Lake Athabasca; provision of an east-west railway link, north of the North Saskatchewan River, between Frenchman Butte, Saskatchewan, and Heinburg, Alberta, and provision of an adequate television broadcasting service to the Buffalo Narrows, La Loche, Ile a la Crosse and Pinehouse Lake areas.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope the wording of this motion will convey clearly that the proposals it contains are not concerned simply with a constituency problem or even with a regional problem but that in a very real sense they concern the economy of the nation. The motion before us is of vital importance to northwestern Saskatchewan and to those who live there. It is of the greatest interest to the people and to the area of northeastern Alberta. But above all it has urgent meaning for Canada and for Canadians as a whole.

I wish to stress that in pressing for developments which concern my own province of Saskatchewan I am not being selfish or representing narrow regional interests alone. These proposals should not create any sense of rivalry. I look upon the suggestions contained in this motion as matters of basic mutual interest. It just happens that the greatest and most pressing development needs arise largely in northern Saskatchewan. By bridging this development gap we shall be integrating development already completed or under way in northern Alberta, and by bringing the forgotten land of northern Saskatchewan fully into the life of the nation we shall be building a stronger Canada.

I believe it is fair to say that the people in the region between Meadow Lake and Lake Athabasca have, up to now, been cut off from the mainstream of provincial and national life. They have been deprived of social amenities and of economic benefits. They have, in fact, been allowed to languish as second-class Canadians. The fact that many of them happen to be either Indians or Métis has given added emphasis to the recent complaints of this group of Canadians that they have received a shoddy deal from government. They want work, steady wages and a share of our increasingly affluent society. They do not choose to present a problem; they simply seek equal opportunity of equal treatment. Circumstances beyond their control have turned them into a problem. In my view, the only way their urgent needs can be met is through sound development which will bring them into the life of the larger community of their province and their country.

There are three main means of preparing the ground for this necessary and valuable work. First, certain strategic railway links must be constructed. Second, at least one vital road connection must be built. Third, adequate information and entertainment must be provided for the people of the area by means of both television and radio programming.

Northwestern Saskatchewan suffers today from two great transportation gaps—the absence of an east-west railway link north of the North Saskatchewan river, and the absence of a highway connection between the economically developed southern and mid-section of the province and the northern development areas around Lake Athabasca and beyond. In both these fields of transportation the adjoining province of Alberta is fairly well advanced. Saskatchewan has not kept pace. If this rail and road development were carried out in Saskatchewan and tied in with existing transportation facilities adjoining, the benefits would be immense and truly national. The area I am talking about is one of fabulous mineral wealth and holds a tremendous potential not yet tapped. It has rich agricultural and forest resources lying idle just awaiting development. The tourist potential is almost limitless. But realization of all this development rests on the provision of adequate road and rail transportation.

In northwestern Saskatchewan, our roads go no farther north than La Loche and Turner Lake. Our rail links with Alberta north of the Saskatchewan River come to a dead end at three points and are little more than useless appendages to the main lines. Both these systems could be made main routes and productive routes with a minimal expenditure of effort and money.

On the Alberta side of the provincial border, railway lines extend now to Fort McMurray and away north to the rich mineral areas on the south shore of Great Slave Lake at Pine Point. Alberta highways extend even farther north. The Mackenzie highway goes to Hay River and thence to Fort Providence and Yellowknife on the north shore of Great Slave Lake, and south and east to Fort Smith at the western end of Lake Athabasca. A road is projected from Rae, near Yellowknife, northward to Port Radium on Great Bear Lake, almost to the Arctic coastline. Also planned is extension of the Mackenzie highway down the length of that river to the Arctic Ocean. This is a tremendous transportation network. Unfortunately it misses its full potential because there has been no matching and integrated development east of the border in Saskatchewan.

Aside from the need for roads and railways to assist in the industrial development of this vast northern region, highways, particularly, are a necessity if the tremendous promise of the tourist trade is to be realized. Wood Buffalo Park already exists south of Great Slave Lake down to the western end of Lake Athabasca. It is approachable now by roads developed in Alberta. Now plans have been announced to open another national park at the northeastern end of Great Slave Lake to be known as Great Slave Lake National Park. Because of its special nature this park is expected to be one of the outstanding parks on the North American continent and a sure-fire tourist attraction. But both parks will continue to be served only by a one-way road unless steps are taken to complete a great circle road route by matching highway construction on the Saskatchewan side. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I have stressed the co-operative, mutual benefit aspect of the developments I suggest in this motion.

I shall not dwell too long on the need for a railway link between the Prince Albert-Meadow Lake region and the Fort McMurray and Edmonton areas of Alberta, north of the Saskatchewan River. The smallest gap, and the one most easily bridged, lies between Frenchman Butte in Saskatchewan and Heinsburg in Alberta. Construction of 38 miles of line here would effectively link up two railway networks presently providing less than half their potential through lack of such integration. I have spoken of this need at length before. My remarks may be found at page 11761 of Hansard for January 13, 1967, and at page 6096 of Hansard for January 29, 1968.

I have spoken more than once, too, of the urgent need for a modern, all-weather road connection between the natural service triangle of Prince Albert-Saskatoon-Meadow Lake and Lake Athabasca. This could easily be provided by extending the existing roads from either La Loche or Turner Lake up to Fond-du-Lac and thence to Eldorado and Uranium City. As things now stand, these roads are dead ends, and the people and untapped resources along them are at a dead end. These roads are a vital necessity both for bringing tens of thousands of deprived Canadians into the life of the nation and for opening up this treasurehouse for the benefit of all Canadians. It will never be done by allowing rail lines and highways to remain mere fingers extending into the wilderness, grasping nothing and leading nowhere.

The rail line I mentioned earlier, for instance, could open up the Paradise Hill and Frenchman Butte country, an area with a tremendous agricultural potential. This would benefit not only the economy but would assist the native Indian people of the Seekaskootch reserve to solve some of their urgent social problems.

The road north to Lake Athabasca would go a long way to solving many of the difficulties now facing the Indian and Métis people of that area. Many people are experiencing growing concern about life in centres such as Buffalo Narrows, for instance. Many of the problems present in such centres would be greatly relieved, if not solved entirely, if adequate highway facilities helped to open up the area and provide the opportunity for steady work and steady wages.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the absolute necessity of providing for the thousands of people in this forgotten area adequate television and radio service. Steps have been taken to alleviate this condition by the provision of television service for the people of Uranium City. This was a welcome and progressive step. But unfortunately it did not go far enough. Between Uranium City and the Meadow Lake area there are thousands of Canadians without even the basic radio and television service. While most Canadians enjoy coloured television and a wide choice of programs in both colour and black and white, my people have nothing but an inadequate radio broadcasting service. An adequate service is something they are entitled to under provisions of the federal statute and have a right to demand as Canadian citizens.

Until the sort of development I have briefly outlined today is undertaken in the forgotten region of northwestern Saskatchewan, a large number of solid, responsible, taxpaying citizens will remain branded as second class Canadians. Until such development is seriously pushed by the federal government in cooperation with the province, thousands of Canadians will be denied work and forced to eke out a frustrating and soul-killing existence on public relief measures. Until such development is undertaken, Canada's national economy will continue to struggle along without the vast riches in exports and tax dollars that lie waiting in the north to be put to use. I believe such a development effort as is suggested in this motion is a heavy obligation on the government of Canada on social and economic grounds, and also in the interest of equity and justice.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity of speaking on the motion proposed by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu). Commenting briefly first about the suggestion that a highway or road should be built from La Loche to the Lake Athabasca area, I would like to confirm the statement that this route has been pioneered on a winter basis by businessmen of the Meadow Lake area. They have proven that the route is feasible. My understanding is that this pioneering began during the time of the previous Conservative government, which for some reason chose to develop the much more expensive and roundabout route that has been partly constructed some distance east of the route proposed by the hon. member. It is perhaps not too late to correct the mistake made some years ago. In fact, I have been told that the Saskatchewan government is seriously considering making a start on this road north of Meadow Lake. I would hope that the federal government would agree to share in the planning and costs of this project.

I also believe that the proposition that a rail line be built to connect Frenchman Butte, Saskatchewan, with Heinsburg, Alberta, is worthy of serious consideration. The hon. member for Meadow Lake is also pleading for adequate T.V. service to the remote communities of this district. The Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) is planning a communications satellite which I am confident will make it practical to extend T.V. service to all areas of Canada. In fact, this is one of the main purposes and benefits of this imaginative project.

Some derogatory comments were made in the house this afternoon with regard to the Postmaster General's concern about the satellite program. I am sure the people of these areas who cannot share in some of the amenities enjoyed in the more populous areas of this country are very interested in the early operation of the communications satellite so they may feel that they are equal partners in this Canadian nation.

In further commenting on the motion of the hon. member for Meadow Lake I would like to emphasize that the present government recognizes the urgent need to take a comprehensive look at the problems and potential of various regions of Canada and, in close cooperation with the provincial governments, to assist the people in these regions to develop their resources and raise their incomes to levels comparable with those of other Canadians. It is for this reason that the government is forming a new Department of Regional Economic Expansion to be responsible for regional development. This new department will provide the organization at the federal level necessary to the mounting of a coordinated effort to solve the problems of the underdeveloped regions and areas of Canada.

In the case of northwestern Saskatchewan it has been recognized for some time that the economic returns to people in this area have generally been poor. There has been some agricultural development as far north as Green Lake but this has been characterized as a marginal production area because of a combination of low fertility and poorly constructed soils, adverse climatic conditions, high development costs and limited credit. The lumbering and fishing industries, although significant to a few people, have generally been ineffective in providing substantial levels of income to the majority of the people.

Many different types of programs have already been undertaken to assist in the social and economic development of the area. While much remains to be done, I think it might be useful to comment briefly on some of the activities now under way. For the purposes of my comments I will be referring to the Meadow Lake district, local improvement districts 974, 980, 983, 986 and 989, and the area along the line from Green Lake to La Loche. These districts are in the southern portion of the general area described in the hon. member's motion.

The soil resources of this area are rated poor to good from an agricultural production point of view. Early settlement in the area tended to locate in lighter soil areas which more recently have proved unsuitable for cereal production. There is now, therefore, some removal to uses such as pasture and forestry. Crop records show a return of approximately 18 bushels per acre, but this yield should show a gradual improvement as lower quality land is removed from cereal production and better quality land is brought into production.

In an effort to utilize such better quality land, the province of Saskatchewan, with federal assistance under the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, implemented a few years ago an incentive program which made grants of $3.50 per acre available for land clearing. From 1966 to the present time, 216 farmers have cleared a total of 7,023 acres of land for agricultural production in local improvement districts 980, 983 and 989.

Some good quality soil is located in low lying wet areas and some effort is being made in small areas to help farmers protect their lands from periodic flooding. One example of this is in the Rollo Park area where works have been constructed with ARDA support to assist some 60 farmers and to protect 9,700 acres of land. This land is primarily used for fodder production which, along with blueberry pasture, forms a substantial base for livestock production in the area.

• (5:20 p.m.)

As I mentioned earlier, some low productivity land is being removed from cereal production and is primarily being used for forage production. Under the ARDA program some 9,600 acres of farm land has been combined with 31,400 acres of Crown land for pasture development. Seven pastures have been organized or expanded and 20,860 acres have been seeded to grass, with a potential carrying capacity for 10,450 head of cattle. In addition to these pastures, two hay production projects have been established utilizing 1,440 acres of farm land and 3,380 acres of Crown land on which some 6,400 tons of hay can be produced annually.

The area which I have been discussing, however, is only a small part of a large problem area. To illustrate the magnitude of the problem I might use the example of the alternative land use program, also supported by ARDA, in the area south of Meadow Lake stretching to the North Saskatchewan River and, in the east, to the Prince Albert National Park. Twenty pastures have been developed in the area utilizing 81,942 acres of Crown land and 36,980 acres of farm land purchased because it had low cereal production capability. The pastures have been fenced; 51,769 acres have been developed and seeded to grass and it is expected that some 22,690 head of cattle can be grazed each year.

I might also mention that the farm people are attempting to make their lives somewhat more pleasant in the Meadow Lake area. Some 117 farm homes have been provided with water under the Saskatchewan family farm improvement branch program which provides technical service, materials at cost and incentive grants under the farmstead water and sewage program. This has also been an ARDA supported program.

As I have indicated, however, the use of land for agriculture is limited; the full dimension will be more clearly identified when the Canada land inventory maps of soil capability for agriculture are completed and published. The same can be said for forestry, recreation and wildlife development in the area, although it is recognized that there is a tremendous potential for these enterprises because of the vast forests and numerous rivers and lakes in the area. Until the capacity is clearly identified, it is difficult to discuss or to plan the type of communication system most suitable, particularly the road system. However, new roads are being developed and resources development is progressing, particularly in the field of recreation. This development is taking place in accessible areas and in areas where the demand for facilities is increasing for the tourist and hunter.

ARDA has participated in the cost of developing facilities for camp grounds and picnic sites in such places as Meadow Lake Provincial Park, Kimball Lake, Pierce Lake, Greig Lake, Jumbo Lake, Makwa Lake, Chitek Lake, Loon Lake, Green Lake, Canoe Lake, Brightsand, Doré Lake, Little Birch, Ile-a-la-Crosse, La Plonge, Little Amyot Lake, McKay Point, La Loche and Little Peter Pond.

To attempt to plan a program of development for the social and economic betterment of the people in the area of Green Lake and north is a complex undertaking. The potential for development in the traditional use of the natural and renewable resources is somewhat limited and knowledge of these resources is inadequate. The Canada land inventory will be of some help but further specific study is required.

It is known, however, that the capability of the people of the area to take on new activities is in need of development. They have limited experience in work other than hunting, fishing and some lumbering, and the educational level is, generally speaking, quite low among the adult population. An attempt is being made to stimulate and assist people to acquire academic skill and vocational training. Some of the agencies involved in this effort are the Saskatchewan Department of Education, Saskatchewan Department of Natural Resources, Saskatchewan Department of Agriculture, Canada Department of Manpower and Immigration, and the Department of Forestry and Rural Development, the name of which is to be changed.

During the winter of 1968-69 four courses under the occupational training for adults program have been scheduled for Meadow Lake, with a capacity of a total of 144 students. The Saskatchewan department of education is sponsoring six courses of educational upgrading for Canoe Narrows, Meadow Lake, Loon Lake and Big River, with a capacity of 100 students. Under the vocational rehabilitation of disabled persons program, nine courses with a capacity of 135 students have been scheduled for Green Lake, Beauval, Buffalo Narrows, Ile-a-la-Crosse, La Loche, Pinehouse and Uranium City.

One particular project under way in the area which is of particular interest is a study of the feasibility of growing wild rice, which could provide a new economic opportunity for people of Indian ancestry in the north. In 1962 a project was designed to do research into the characteristics and growth habits of wild rice in northern Saskatchewan. Interest had been stimulated by the fact that wild rice was growing at Limestone Lake, Potato Lake and Nemeiben Lake, presumably from 1935 plantings, that there was a good demand for the product, that the product was returning significant economic returns to people in Manitoba, Wisconsin and Minnesota, and that wild rice was a muskrat and duck feed and indirectly could affect incomes by stimulating increased muskrat and waterfowl populations. The research or study included an investigation of areas where wild rice is growing, a survey of the area between the southern boundary of the forest and the Churchill River to identify areas which have characteristics similar to areas growing wild rice, a study of the methods of propagation, and a study of a marketing system.

The implementation of this project has been a co-operative effort between the Saskatchewan department of agriculture and the Saskatchewan department of natural resources with, since 1964, cost sharing assistance from ARDA. Since the program started, seedings have been made in a great number of locations such as La Loche, Buffalo Narrows, Pinehouse, Nemeiben Lake, Stanley Mission, Limestone Lake, Cumberland House, Deschambault and La Ronge. It is too early to tell the extent of the success, but production records show a steady annual increase.

To date Indian people have been hired for seeding and harvesting, and for the harvesting they receive from 30 cents to 50 cents per pound. The next four to five years should provide useful information as to the future possibility of this crop and its significance as a source of income for the people.

I have been describing some of the programs and projects that are under way at present in northwestern Saskatchewan. These projects are contributing to the social and economic development of the people and resources in the region. Moreover, it will now be possible under the program of the new department to take a much more comprehensive and co-ordinated approach to the development of this and other regions so that all of the people can realize their full potential and take an active part in the full development of the resources of the region.

May I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by saying I am fully in agreement with the principle involved in this motion, which is to press on with the development of the tremendous resources of our great northern areas.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): Mr. Speaker, since there is a bill before the house dealing with reorganization of government departments I think the subject matter of the motion in question is most timely. It deals with regional development and regional economic expansion. The hon. member who has just resumed his seat drew the attention of the house to his own constituency, pointing out that that was an area to which regional development and economic expansion programs might be applied. The examples cited by the hon. member show that there are many areas in this country where our people could benefit from an application of the principle of regional development. The existence of many of these areas fully illustrates the folly of those who think only in terms of the development of areas containing large centres of population.

Briefly, I would like to examine some of the ingredients necessary to an adequate development program, particularly a program applying to this particular area of Saskatchewan with which I have some acquaintance. As the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) pointed out, much of the economy of this part of the province is agricultural. Some areas have a good agricultural potential. Parts are developed, but further development remains to take place. Other areas are submarginal in terms of their agricultural capacity and development potential.

Parts of this constituency have been settled by people who in years gone by were driven north by the dry spells in southern Saskatchewan. These people settled on small tracts of land, and many of them have been trapped there. Of course some succeeded in getting out through employment in war industries during the war years, while others have joined the urban migration that has taken place since that time. However, many still live there under submarginal conditions, and up to the present governments have made limited progress in providing them with an adequate opportunity to earn a decent standard of living.

In 1964 the then provincial government passed an act, the Agricultural Development and Adjustment Act, designed to help these people take full advantage of the federal ARDA legislation, by having the provincial government work closely with federal authorities in carrying out a full scale development and rehabilitation program. But the subsequent change of government in Saskatchewan resulted in little use being made of the provincial act. One rural development program had been initiated by the people in the area and it was making progress. However, it never really developed to its full potential because of the inertia of the provincial government since 1964.

As the hon. member for Meadow Lake also pointed out, there is a large population of Indian and Métis ancestry in the constituency. Some progress has been made in providing better public facilities for these people, and some of them are making good progress in terms of economic and social standards. At the same time, we need to measure whether such programs are adequate. We must also guard against certain types of inflammatory statements that are made on occasion, but certainly not by the hon. member for Meadow Lake today, statements that can lead only to misunderstanding of the true nature of the situation that exists.

Attention must also be paid to the development of adequate local government facilities. in Saskatchewan, the form of rural local government is antiquated, with one notable exception. I am thinking of a local government established under unique circumstances, but developed in a very rational and adequate manner to meet the needs of the community. I refer to the local government established in Uranium City, a new mining community developed as a result of uranium discoveries during the 1950's. The provincial government of that time assisted in establishing a fully integrated form of local government to meet the needs of the people of that area.

Reference has been made to transportation problems. The hon. member mentioned road problems, and of course there is a need for further roads leading into the north. When the roads to resources program was initiated it was suggested that the main road to northern Saskatchewam should be routed through some of the area referred to by the hon. member. However, as a result of the consensus of all government authorities of the day, it was agreed that in consideration of the geographic and economic situation of northern Saskatchewan, the main road to the north should follow a route further to the east. This poses problems for the area in which the hon. member is interested.

Road facilities have been established as far as the community of La Loche, providing valuable service to the local people. Reference was made also to the need for a railway into the north. I must express considerable sympathy with this suggestion, but I caution against referring specifically to locations along the proposed railway route. However, it is necessary to stress that economic development requires railway development.

It is essential for the future economic welfare of Saskatchewan and its north that a railway be constructed into the north to enable Saskatchewan to gain full advantage of mining developments that will undoubtedly come in the future.

The hon. member for Meadow Lake also mentioned local grievances with respect to railways. People in this part of the province have suffered as a result of things done in past years. Railways were started, partly constructed, and then construction stopped. Rail spurs have been left almost in the middle of nowhere rather than being extended to areas where people have been living under poor conditions far removed from transportation facilities. This is an example of people being made the victims of unplanned development. This and other areas of the country illustrate the need for adequate planning in our development policies, and adequate preparation to put programs into implementation.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to lend my approval to this motion moved by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) who, over the years, has been a consistent and hard working advocate for the proposals contained in his motion. I am quite confident when, through the modified 1969 pony express now being operated by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans), word of this motion gets back to his constituents he will have the support and approval he truly deserves. I believe I am entitled to say something in this regard as a member of parliament from the adjoining province, Alberta, and as one who has lived in the north and has experienced similar conditions. I assure hon. members that I will finish before six o'clock so that the support which I know the hon. member's advocacy has generated in this house will lead to the adoption of the motion. Then the next steps will have to be taken by the government.

I also lived in Vegreville, and the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), a member of this party, has been a proponent of these proposals. He has spoken very vigorously in committee of the desirability of achieving what the hon. member is asking. I know a good deal about this in principle, because it is the sort of thing that brought me to this house. In 1956, at a convention of this party which selected the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) as leader of this party, I remember that we discussed very extensively the question of northern development and the road to resources program. At that time I was successful in moving from the floor an amendment. Our party is one which allows a degree of change at its conventions. Our platform is not dictated from the top, and we even encourage members to suggest changes in policy.

In respect of the road to resources program, since I came from a district which had for 35 years been promised the type of rail expansion which is referred to in the proposal of the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu), I moved an amendment which was adopted and ultimately became the subject of discussion in this house. One of the first suggestions made in 1958 dealt with the question of the extension of services into the northern part of Alberta and the territories. I am glad to see the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Laing) here. I give him full marks. During his tenure of office as a minister of the Crown with a responsibility in respect of the north, he was very interested and went up there on many occasions. I believe he should be paid a tribute. Consequently, when I see an hon. member such as the hon. member for Meadow Lake pleading his case before the house I cannot help but concur with him. There is a problem in this country. The hon. member for Meadow Lake and other hon. members have touched on it.

We are now seeing a movement in the central part of this country at an unprecedented scale. We have always had this movement before, but it has been aggravated by the growth of the large metropolitan areas. We had a debate the other day in respect of housing. Housing, sanitation, water and air pollution are all matters which affect the large metropolitan districts. This trend towards urbanization is creating great difficulty for us. I am not suggesting that we should reverse the trend and empty the large cities by sending people up into the northern areas; but I do think we should look at the problem from a long range viewpoint. Across the Pacific from our west coast lie the people of China, Indonesia, Korea, Viet Nam and Japan who inside of 35 years will number four billion. We cannot long continue to hold our northern areas as trustees—and that is all we are; we are trustees primarily for the people of Canada but ultimately for the people of the world—unless we settle them.

When we speak of settling and occupying these areas, we must think of such things as transportation and so on which have been spoken of by the hon. member for Meadow Lake. The north does not just begin at the 60th parallel of north latitude. It commences at various points in different provinces. In the province of Saskatchewan, as in the province of Alberta, one might say that it commences about the 53rd or 54th parallel. The boundaries of our country between the Northwest Territories and the remainder of Canada were laid down by man when he moved about the north. They are neither natural nor economic boundaries. Consequently, it is essential that the federal government participate in programs of this kind.

I shall not recount the various steps in respect of the triumph with regard to the Pine Point railway. It might mention that, because of the calibre of the government and its program of northern development, despite the objection of the then members of the opposition who talked scathingly about building roads from igloo to igloo, I put forward an amendment and the program at Pine Point became a reality. As a result, hundreds of millions of dollars of new wealth have been created and the gross national product has been increased. The people in northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories have been able to participate in a shining, new development. This is precisely what my good friend the hon. member for Meadow Lake is suggesting. He is suggesting that the present government should consider programs of fiscal and financial incentives; the provision of credit; the construction of railways; the construction of highways and the provision of television and other facilities so that the people would really feel a part of the society in which they live.

Through these means, we could obtain for areas such as northern Saskatchewan, northern Alberta and the Northwest Territories, the population which we must have if we are to hold these areas against the demands of the people in other parts of the world. We dare not delay until a time when the world might need the resources which can be developed in these regions of northern Canada. I suggest to members of the house that measures such as this must be considered not only in the light of the parochial interest of which the hon. member for Meadow Lake has spoken, but on a greater regional and national basis. I think that is the way we should look at this situation if we are to discharge our responsibilities as members of this house.

I know the Minister of Public Works will agree with me when I say it was a pleasure to be on hand when the Great Slave Lake railway came across the boundary of Alberta into the Northwest Territories. At that time we were looking forward to what we thought would happen, and it has in fact happened. Lumber development in that area ran at a rate of about 10 million board feet per year. With this railroad service out of that part of northern Canada this has now reached a maximum of some 60 million to 70 million board feet per year. The fisheries of Great Slave Lake have also benefited as has mineral production from the Pine Point mine.

In addition to all this, the establishment of the system has permitted people to occupy part of this land where there is an opportunity for them to carve out careers and take an interest in participating in the development of the north. This is their part of their country, and their part of Canada.

May I suggest, therefore, that we who are here considering this motion by the hon. member for Meadow Lake, should look at it in the broader sense of what it will accomplish for the country rather than what it will do for the particular area in question. Certainly, the people there are entitled to that which the hon. member is proposing. I suggest we could build upon that, stage by stage, that measure of development in the north which this country has so greatly lacked in the past.

Although the topography and geography is a little different in Russia—we have the benefit of several large rivers where natural development is taking place—Russia has cities of 500,000 or a million people lying far north of the 60th parallel. Their development is now progressing. The Russians have instituted a scheme of settlement in the North under which incentives are made available to young people. If this can be done in a communist country, there is little we can say to them unless we are prepared to provide incentives for people to go into the northern part of Canada, such as transportation facilities and the other amenities of life.

For these reasons, and for many others about which I could speak at great length if I had the opportunity, I must support the motion of the hon. member in the hope that the house will see fit to approve it at this time.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, as several of the speakers who preceded me have indicated, this motion by the hon. member for Meadow Lake (Mr. Cadieu) is a timely one, particularly in view of the legislation that is under consideration by the house at this time. This legislation will establish, among other things, when passed by parliament, the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

At this time I think it would be appropriate for me to take a few minutes to deal with some of the broader aspects of regional economic expansion. Speakers who have preceded me dealt quite appropriately with the great importance of local situations, although the hon. member's motion is not confined to that because the opening part deals with giving consideration to all means of developing areas of great potential value to the national economy.

The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), and this certainly was not necessary, felt that he should qualify himself as a speaker on this motion by reference to the fact that he represents a riding in the adjoining province of Alberta. I thought I might say I wanted to speak because of the obvious relationship to the department for which I have some responsibility, and also because the motion deals with my native province where I was born and spent the first part of my life, an area with which I am not unfamiliar.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) made a very valuable contribution to the debate when he dealt very capably with various projects in this area that have been sponsored by the provinces and the ARDA administration jointly. I will not review those but the fact that these various programs have taken place in the area point up the fact that it is necessary to do some planning and preliminary work. This is the purpose, of course, of the new department.

The hon. member for Regina East (Mr. Burton) mentioned the development of railways, the inference being that they have not been adequately planned as part of an overall and comprehensive project because spur lines were started and stopped in the middle of nowhere. With the establishment of the new department, and with the stated intention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the minister who will be responsible for the new department, the Hon. Jean Marchand, we will have in this country an energetic, reasonable and intelligent approach to the problems of regional economic disparity. This is the sort of thing and the sort of area in respect of which programs under the new department can be of benefit. The fact that we have been proceeding under the authority of ARDA and federal-provincial programs would indicate the necessity of comprehensive planning in order to move ahead, not only in this area but in other areas of Canada where there are regional economic disparities.

I have a considerable amount of sympathy and support for the objectives of the motion as set out by the hon. member for Meadow Lake. Let me close on this note. It is hoped that with the establishment of the new department this and other areas of Canada may receive the type of action which will correct some of the problems in respect of which the hon. member who sponsored the motion very properly directed our attention.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. The house will now resume in committee of the whole.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the Chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, part II of Bill C-173 deals with the new Department of Communications. The New Democratic party member for Moose Jaw has dealt with the bill in general. This evening I want to deal with the bill in particular as it applies to the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. Subsequent to the application by Bell Telephone Company of Canada, I asked the minister whether the federal government would take a position opposing the application for an increase in the level of its earnings and for a 10 per cent increase in telephone rates. His answer in general was this: he expressed concern with regard to this particular company, indicated that he is reviewing telecommunications legislation and that much of our existing legislation is out of date or inadequate to meet changing needs. In addition, the minister indicated that not sufficient information is available to the public, especially in his new department, from communications companies such as Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Bell Telephone Company has made application to the Canadian Transport Commission to raise its permissible level of earnings from 6.6 per cent to 8 per cent and for authority to increase basic telephone rates by approximately 10 per cent. It is rather significant that not since 1926, under the Ontario Conservative government of Howard Ferguson, has any government intervened on behalf of telephone users against Bell's periodic applications for rate increases. As a result, Bell's increases have either been granted or, at best, temporarily postponed.

In the absence of any competition, public utility monopolies have traditionally been subject to the regulation of the Board of Transport Commissioners, now reconstituted as the Canadian Transport Commission. It is the function of this body to protect telephone users against exorbitant profits which might be extracted because of Bell's monopoly position. But unlike comparable American regulatory bodies, which vigorously dig out the facts regarding the financial position of public utilities, the Canadian body has played a passive role of merely assessing the information which is submitted to it in its hearings. The result has been a most uneven contest, with organizations like the Canadian Association of Mayors and Reeves passing the hat to collect a few tens of thousands of dollars from their already strapped budgets to try to counter the hundreds of thousands of dollars which Bell is ready and able to spend in presenting its case.

It is very much like trying to kill an elephant with a fly-swatter. In short, the Canadian regulatory body has been little more than a sleeping watch-dog. Unless and until some powerful and influential agency such as the federal government is willing to act on behalf of the people in the hearings before the Canadian Transport Commission, protection of the consumers' interests will go by default. It should be acknowledged that following the reconstitution of the old Board of Transport Commissioners into the new Canadian Transport Commission, the Canadian Transport Commission was empowered to dig out the facts in the manner traditionally followed by American regulatory bodies. But so far the Canadian Transport Commission has given no convincing proof that it is going to operate in an active, rather than the traditionally passive, role. All the more reason, therefore, why the government of Canada must play a part to make certain that the interests of users of telephones are protected. This is why I look to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to protect the interests of telephone users and to present briefs to the C.T.C. for the protection of consumers in this field.

In assessing the validity of Bell's request for a rate increase, the public should bear in mind certain features of this corporation's operations over the past decade. Bell stresses that it has not had an increase in its basic rates over the past ten years. It should be noted, however, that in 1958 its permissible level of earnings was fixed at $2.43 per share, or the equivalent of 5.9 per cent on over-all capital earnings. In every year following that board ruling, Bell exceeded the permissible level of earnings, and the federal regulatory body did nothing about it. Throughout the period of 1958 to the mid-1960's, Bell's excess profits, extracted illegally in violation of the board's ruling, amounted to some $37 million. Since this amount remained after paying approximately 50 per cent corporation tax, it simply means that Bell illegally extracted some $75 million from telephone users during that period. In 1964, the situation was reviewed by the federal board. But strange as it may seem, hearings were not focussed on Bell's excess profits over the years but rather on Bell's request to have its permissible level of profits raised so as to legalize its excess earnings.

Even stranger, when the board finally ruled in 1966, it raised Bell's permissible level of earnings to a maximum of 6.6 per cent which, by coincidence, simply legalized the profit levels current at that time. But Bell's defiance of the regulatory authority of the C.T.C. persisted. In its first full year of earnings after the 1966 ruling, its profit levels were in the range of 6.7 per cent or 6.8 per cent. At that point the C.T.C. stirred itself and asked Bell what proposals for rate decreases it had, in view of its excess earnings. In 1968 the return on capital of Bell Telephone's operations amounted to 6.9 per cent. Bell argued that because of the sharp rise in interest rates and construction costs, their excess profits were justified. Patsy-like, the C.T.C. accepted this explanation and agreed to tolerate profit levels in excess of the maximum which they had fixed a year earlier. With that encouragement, Bell is now back asking for a new permissive level of earnings at 8 per cent and rate increases to bring profits up to that level. When Bell argues that for the past ten years it has absorbed rising costs within the same basic rate structure and therefore is now entitled to increased rates, there is an important fact which should be noted. Bell is now reaping unprecedented profits from its expansion over the past years combined with technological progress. The over-all result in the company's financial position was revealed during the hearings of 1964-65.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Postmaster General wishes to speak on a point of order.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, we are now considering that part of the government reorganization bill that deals with the Department of Communications. The hon. member is devoting himself entirely to such advantages or privileges as are granted to a corporation by a private bill. He is using terms that are emotional but are not exact. Profits may, from his point of view, be excessive at all times, but this has nothing to do with the bill that is now before us.

The Deputy Chairman: I thank the minister for his remarks, and I may point out that I myself, had some doubts about the relevancy of the hon. member's remarks. I will ask him to confine his comments to the bill before the committee.

Mr. Gilbert: The bill before us is Bill C-173 and we are dealing with the part which would set up the new Department of Communications of which, in all probability, the minister will be in charge. The Bell Telephone Company of Canada will be within his jurisdiction. That company has now made an application for increased rates, and I think that my remarks are in order.

The Deputy Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member could assist the Chair by telling us under which clause the new department will be responsible for the Bell Telephone Company.

Mr. Gilbert: I will be happy to assist the Chair. This responsibility comes under part II of the bill headed, "Communications". Clause 7 (1) reads:

> There shall be a department of the Government of Canada called the Department of Communications over which the Minister of Communications appointed by commission under the Great Seal of Canada shall preside.

The following clauses in part II set out some of the duties of the minister. Clause 9 reads:

> The duties, powers and functions of the Minister of Communications extend to and include all matters over which the Parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, not by law assigned to any other department, branch or agency of the Government of Canada, relating to
> (a) telecommunications; and
> (b) the development and utilization generally of communication undertakings, facilities, systems and services for Canada.

I think that in the circumstances my remarks are in order.

Mr. Kierans: Speaking to the point you raised, Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out that so far as the rate-making capacity of the Bell Telephone Company is concerned, which is the entire theme of the member's address tonight, that comes under an agency of the Government of Canada which is the C.T.C.

Mr. Gilbert: I am surprised at the minister's suggestion that the burden of my remarks is with regard to the rates. In fact, it is with regard to the attitude of the Government of Canada concerning this field and it is an attempt to persuade the Postmaster General and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to take a very active part in the representations made by a particular company before the Canadian Transport Commission.

So, when the Bell company argues that for the past ten years it has absorbed rising costs within the same basic rate structure and therefore is now entitled to increase the rates, there is an important fact that should be noted.

Bell is now reaping unprecedented profits from its expansion over the past years, combined with technological progress. The overall result in Bell company's financial position was revealed during the hearings of 1964-65 preceding the 1966 ruling. Operating revenues per telephone rose from $116.63 in 1959, to $129.46 in 1964. Operating expenses per telephone during the same period rose relatively little, from $79.35 to $81.90. Thus, the net operating revenue per telephone rose from $37.28 in 1959 to $47.56 in 1964, an increase of $10 per telephone.

When Bell points out, as it did in its brief to the C.T.C., that it has installed 2,309,151 telephones in the period from 1958-68, it fails to reveal that because of technological progress its net operating revenue from every telephone, old as well as new, has increased by $10 or more.

Therefore, when the company argues that it has absorbed all cost increases without rate increases for ten years, it simply means that it has passed on to the telephone users only a portion of the savings accruing from technological progress—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member so often, but what he is saying is not relevant to the debate on part II of Bill C-173. A while ago the minister told the committee that the Bell Telephone Company does not come under his jurisdiction. I know that that company is a great means of communications, but it does not fall under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General.

Mr. Gilbert: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Having set forth the profits of this company, it falls upon me to ask the minister to take full control of this particular department and to ensure that the department takes an active rather than a passive role in this important field. We in the New Democratic Party feel that telephone communications should be under public ownership.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the committee agrees that this subject is of great importance to the hon. member and to his party, but I must point out again that his remarks are not relevant to the subject under discussion at present. I therefore, ask the hon. member for the fourth time to confine his remarks to the bill before us.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Chairman, I must object to your ruling because the subject matter under discussion at present is telecommunications, which falls squarely under the jurisdiction of the minister. I ask the minister to take an active role in administering this regulatory body, rather than the passive role the government has played in the past.

I also ask the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to play a very active role.

Mr. Basford: Obey the rules.

Mr. Gilbert: The minister just shouted that it is too late.

Mr. Basford: No, I said "obey the rules".

Mr. Gilbert: I am sorry, I misheard him. However, I would like to persuade him to take an active role and to do some of the digging that the United States regulatory body does with regard to this important field. It is time that Canadians considered putting telecommunications under public ownership. However, without the help of the Postmaster General and the Minister for Consumer and Corporate Affairs, it is very difficult to protect telephone users across Canada when one company considers profits to be its foremost objective, with the resulting abuses which I tried to set forth.

• (8:20 p.m.)

Having dealt with that subject rather lightly, and when the subject comes up again I will deal with it in greater detail, I should like to pass on to the second area which is cable television. I think the minister has been apprised of the problems with regard to cable television in the Toronto area. The Toronto Daily Star indicated in an article dated February 7 that small cable television firms tried vainly to get a share of the lucrative Metro market while the Bell Telephone Company of Canada made deals involving over $5 million with five big operators. The suggestion is that these big companies intend to operate in collusion with each other.

When one considers the actions of some of the large companies and the problems experienced in connection with monopolistic practices in a single field such as communications; when one realizes the problems raised by foreign ownership—because some of these companies are foreign owned—I am sure you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that we do well to ask the minister to look into the practices of the Bell Telephone Company and some of the other major companies in the field of television. I hope he will do so, again with the aid and assistance of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I recall that the minister of consumer affairs became a little touchy when I called him the shadow boxing champion of Canada. I accused him of shadow boxing in connection with prices paid by consumers, of shadow boxing with regard to monopolistic control of hockey, and so on. I say to him in all sincerity that I hope he will stop shadow boxing in connection with cable television and the exhorbitant profits the Bell Telephone Company has made in connection with television.

I would ask that he get the research men, economists and lawyers in his department, to make a full study of the feasibility of public ownership in this important field, and report to the government on his activities. Then, and only then, can we say he is not a shadow boxing champion, because he would not only be dealing with the problem of monopolistic control of the television field, but he would have assisted the new minister of telecommunications.

I am sure that after these persuasive remarks the minister of consumer affairs, along with the minister responsible for telecommunications, will protect the rights of all Canadians, not merely the rights of the relatively few shareholders in Bell Telephone.

Mr. Dinsdale: I wish to seize the opportunity provided by this debate on Bill C-173 to discuss certain problems with respect to the current operations of the Post Office Department. I began this particular discussion last fall when the Postmaster General's reorganization bill was before the house. At that time, I made a point that what was happening to the Post Office Department represented the reversal of a policy which had been recognized in Canada for the past one hundred years. We have since had an opportunity to discuss this subject in a parliamentary committee but we have made no impact whatever on the minister. I notice that the reorganization bill, in the clause dealing with communications, merely endorses some of the features to which we have been calling attention, inasmuch as clause 12 repeals the Post Office Act, and clause 3 states there shall be a department of the Government of Canada called the Post Office Department over which the Postmaster General shall preside. Clause 3(2) says the minister responsible for communications is to be the Postmaster General, so I would think the remarks I intend to make tonight are quite in order.

I say that the government and the Postmaster General have reversed a policy which is as old as Canada itself. It has always been fundamental and vital to the development of a sense of nationhood in Canada for the government to support communications media of all kinds. There is no need for me to go into a lengthy recital of the manner in which this policy has been carried out over the years. Instead, I shall refer to each of the areas in which support has been given by the government, generously in many instances, for the sake of Canadian nationhood and also for the sake of assisting in the achievement of that very elusive quality in Canada, national unity.

It has become a cliché to say it is almost a miracle that Canada was ever brought together from sea to sea. I do not think it was so much by a miracle as by good, practical common sense on the part of the Fathers of Confederation and those who have since followed in their footsteps. These people recognized that communications is the cement of national unity in this country.

The Government of Canada supported the construction of transcontinental railways. The trans-Canada highway system has been heavily subsidized, as has the national broadcasting system, first radio and then television, in the interest of national unity. By way of an aside, Mr. Chairman, I think there is good reason to question how valuable the huge subsidies to broadcasting have been in achieving national unity. The current subsidy is about $160 million and it would be possible to argue that at the present stage of the development and utilization of the mass media we have not yet struck a formula which contributes to a sense of nationhood and national unity in this country.

The Postmaster General, as minister responsible for communications, talks in exultant and enthusiastic terms about the huge sums of money which will be invested in the next few years in the development of a satellite communication system. This is all very necessary in achieving national unity, but in the face of all the evidence we have heard, in the face of all the statements which have been made in this house, the minister, with all the stubbornness of his Irish nature, refuses to accept the viewpoints and the arguments presented by many members on this side of the house.

In his administration of the post office, as we are endeavouring to point out, he is turning back the clock one hundred years because he is insisting that this basic means of communication by the printed word and the written word has to be placed on a foundation of financial solvency. This, I suggest, represents the reversal of a long established policy not only in Canada but in all democratic countries, and constitutes rank discrimination against one type of communication important in rural areas of Canada and favours, particularly sections of Canada where urban areas predominate. For example, one could refer to the Golden Triangle along the St. Lawrence, including Toronto, Hamilton and Montreal. I do not have to repeat these arguments because they have been placed before the minister on the occasions to which I have already referred.

The minister's argument goes that it has been necessary to increase postal rates and diminish service. The result is that Canada is the one country that does not provide six days a week delivery service. All the other advanced nations provide six days a week delivery service because of the vital importance of mail distribution.

Coming back to the argument that increases in postal rates were necessary because none had been made for a long period of time, this is quite true. The complaint is that the increases have been exorbitant. In the case of certain periodicals, there has been a sudden increase of up to 2,000 per cent. That in itself is bad enough, but these increases are going to be applied on April 1 without giving the publications and periodicals affected any opportunity to adjust gradually to the exorbitant, drastic and abrupt increase in financial expenditure involved in their distribution. I am sure that this situation has resulted because the minister did not even extend the courtesy of referring his reorganization bill to a parliamentary committee after second reading: this has now become part of our procedure.

Actually, when I spoke on the reorganization bill last October, the one point that I made was that if we were going to bring about a reorganization in the Post Office Department that made sense in terms of the special needs of various parts of this country, we should refer the bill to a parliamentary committee where we could hear representations from the people who would be affected. It was obvious that the minister did not have a clue as to what the special circumstances of the Canadian body politic beyond the Golden Triangle were in the field of communications. Now, the minister is saying that he is receiving these representations, but it is rather like locking the barn after the horse is stolen. These people and briefs should have been heard when the bill was actually going through the house. This is the way we handle the matter now, and the way we suggested it should have been handled as recently as last October.

Now, what is the result? I am not going to refer to the letter rate increases because these are reasonable and non-exorbitant, but what has been the result of some of the more unreasonable aspects of the postal rate increases as they apply to newspapers and periodicals. Already, Canadian publications are finding it necessary to cease operation. Farm publications in particular are feeling the effects. This, we told the minister, would be the case. Farm journals operate on a very slim financial margin and meet a highly specialized need in Canada.

I am glad to see the Minister of Agriculture here tonight and I hope he will lend his voice to this petition because he knows what will happen if these very important farm publications that serve people in the rural communities of Canada and provide information about new farm techniques and so forth, all free and at no expense to the government, are forced to go out of business. Already the Country Guide and the Farmers Advocate have gone out of business as the result of exorbitant increases in the distribution cost of periodicals and publications of this nature.

This is going to mean that our farmers will have to depend upon the subsidized government propaganda journals which do not pay any postal rates at all. The farmers are going to be at the mercy of the Minister of Agriculture and the government and deprived of that broad range of information that has been provided by these outstanding farm journals.

I am not exaggerating, because this is precisely what has been happening. It is further discrimination against the west and the extremities of Canada, and as I say I hope the Minister of Agriculture will lend his voice to the protests that are arising from all parts of Canada.

Mr. Olson: I hope the hon. member realizes that, as usual, he is completely misrepresenting the case.

Mr. Dinsdale: I did not hear what the minister said; he mumbled something.

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member like me to repeat it?

Mr. Dinsdale: He did not speak in those terms when he was on this side of the house. It is really amazing what a change in geographic location in this house can do to one's perspective.

If hon. members think that I am exaggerating I would ask them to read the current issue of the Legion magazine. It carries an editorial to the effect that that journal is faced with the prospect of going out of business because mailing costs have increased to the tune of $19,000 per month, which is greater than the actual printing cost of the magazine.

Surely, the government is not going to discriminate against the veterans of this country. In order to meet the crisis the Legion magazine has reduced its size in terms of weight by one half in order to enable it to come in under the weight category. This reduction would make it possible for the magazine to avoid this pernicious two cents per copy rate which has been arbitrarily applied by the minister, who would not listen to the advice of the members who represent various parts of the country or allow the bill to go to a parliamentary committee.

Even greater discrimination against a group that can ill afford this sort of discrimination is the impact of these increased rates upon the ethnic press. Again, if the minister had listened to representations he would have found this out before the damage was done.

The ethnic press serves a numerically small constituency. Each of the major ethnic groups which make up the Canadian mosaic—and again western Canada is particularly affected in this regard—publishes a journal in its own language as a source of information to assist newcomers to adjust to the Canadian way of life as well as to provide some cultural and linguistic inspiration to its members. A brief that has been sent to me contains an agonizing appeal from members of the ethnic press to the minister to reconsider this discriminatory action and to allow this important medium of communication to continue publication.

Here is a citizenship service that conceivably could cost the Government of Canada substantial sums of money but does not because it is undertaken as a voluntary service by the various ethnic groups themselves. Many of the newspapers are distributed free of charge. Had I time tonight I would read extensively from the brief presented to the minister. These people point out that costs of distributing some of these papers have increased by up to 2,000 per cent. One newspaper which formerly cost 5 cents a copy to distribute now costs $1.04 per copy. Many of those writing for these journals do so without remuneration. They work on a voluntary basis, because they realize that they are fulfilling a real need in their segment of the Canadian body politic. The government's policy constitutes crass discrimination. A government which professes to promote the just society is practising linguistic and cultural discrimination at a time when it is emphasizing the linguistic rights of our French Canadian group and expending substantial sums of money to ensure that this minority group will have its rights and privileges respected.

I ask, why in the name of common sense discriminate against ethnic groups by removing a small subsidy that does not amount to peanuts? The loss of our ethnic citizens, if the ethnic press has to be discontinued as a result of government policy, will be much larger than any saving in terms of dollars or cents that might accrue to the government. Let us be fair, just and reasonable. It is fine to have your eyes on the stars and satellites, but let us deal with the practical realities of everyday politics and public services. In reaching for the stars, let us not bring about a state of inequity and inequality for some of our people.

I have made the point that the government's policy is urban oriented. Why do I say that, Mr. Chairman? I say it because country folk have had the cost of their post boxes doubled. And why does the post office do this? It says that this is a special service to the people of the small towns and rural communities. Yet our city folk have their mail distributed to their door at no extra cost. Why, then, discriminate against the rural people of Canada? The reasons for this discrimination are beyond my understanding. Under this reorganization, although city people will continue to receive their mail door to door free, the cost of postboxes is increased.

Farm journals are the cheapest form of post for the government to distribute. They are delivered to post offices in bulk and most of the customers, the farmers and residents of small communities, pick them up at the post office. There is no door to door street delivery here. The journals are merely processed in the local post office. Yet, they have to bear these exorbitant rate increases. The minister also said he is saving the taxpayers of Canada enormous sums of money by closing rural post offices. In committee the other day we discovered that by closing 499 rural post offices—the minister had his eye on many more but could not close them because of protest—the government will save the magnificent sum of $292,000. That will really balance Canada's budget, I am sure. By closing 499 rural post offices we are to save $292,000 at a time when the C.B.C. is being subsidized to the tune of many millions and when the Centre for the Performing Arts—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I shall be finished in a couple of minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

An hon. Member: No.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you for the courtesy.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Surrey.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I should be glad to extend consent to the hon. member and have him complete his remarks.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I point out to hon. members that when Your Honour asked for unanimous consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks, the Postmaster General himself denied him that privilege.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Kierans: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. What we have heard this evening from the hon. member is a repetition of what we heard last week in committee. I would not like to waste the time of the house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Dinsdale: The minister refuses to listen.

Mr. Perrault: Others are being given a chance to be heard.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you for the courtesy.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Surrey has the floor.

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, the question of communications is very broad, embracing almost every element of which we have knowledge. It is said, for instance, that while two countries of our earth can almost communicate with other planets, 40 per cent of our world's population cannot communicate with each other, being illiterate. The rest of us who are literate also have trouble in communicating. We have a good deal of trouble in making ourselves understood. For example, examine what goes on in this house, Mr. Chairman.

My intervention in this discussion will be confined—because the question is most immediately urgent—to the old tried and, until recently, true method of communication, the postal service. I speak as a member of this house, and as a member of the N.D.P. who is proud of the record of the post office of Canada as a public enterprise. It has handled billions of pieces of mail a year almost without error and, until a short time ago, with speed and efficiency. I also speak as a former employee of the post office. I was a mail carrier and learned something about the business of mail delivery.

During the last eight or nine years, six or seven different men have occupied the position of Postmaster General. In fact, I have lost count of how many ministers in that portfolio we have had. Last fall the minister announced a program of postal reform for Canada. In some respects my party thought it a commendable program which was long overdue. In other respects we felt that suggestions would not be amiss. I put forward some suggestions when I spoke in the house on October 21, 1968, as reported at page 1614 of Hansard for that date. I said, in part:

> —we wish the proposed post office legislation referred to a standing committee of this house for detailed study and report.

• (8:50 p.m.)

I also said:

> —we welcome the move to increase the second class rates on publications published for a profit as being generally in the right direction, but here again we wish a committee study to be made to ensure that the proposed rate increases are sufficient and are borne by those by whom they should be and do not fall upon publications which are not published for commercial profit but rather for the service of some particular educational, health or co-operative association or union.

Generally speaking, Mr. Chairman, I still believe that was a wise course for us to advance, and it might have been a wiser course for the government to accept.

We in the New Democratic party, and the C.C.F. before us, urged for years and years that the business mail, that the ordinary first class consumer mail pay its own way, but even with the increased rates the business mail of Canada is not paying its own way. Very briefly, I would like to put the following points forward: In relation to today's lamentable situation involving strikes and rumours of strikes in the postal service of Canada, which I feel has come about partly as a result of the lack of communication between the minister and the Post Office operation, the minister at this late hour has come forward with the announcement that the disputed work condition issue is being referred to a third party for a second look. If, as is now said by the minister, the issue is of such substance as to warrant it being looked at impartially by a third party, surely there should be no implementation of the disputed points which have now been referred to others for judgment until the second look has been taken. To do otherwise is to suggest that the second look is automatically going to be in favour of one of the parties involved, in this case the government. To that extent, it will prejudge the issue in the minds of a good many of the postal workers. I think I am right in suggesting to the minister that this will create a further lack of faith on the part of postal employees, just at a time when a greater degree of communication and confidence is very much to be desired.

I am sure there are members on both sides of the house who would like to see the minister doing what others have also suggested, namely, let us have an all-party pause in the attacks on the postal system and on the minister while the third party, of whom, he has spoken, takes this second look at the immediate question of working conditions in the post office. Until this third party reports, let us also have a pause in the implementation of the disputed conditions.

It seems to me that in the last few months the government has attempted a very strange thing. The government, and in particular this minister, have sought to perform, after many years of delay on the part of both the old parties, what amounts to three simultaneous surgical operations, a risky effort for all concerned.

The postal service of Canada, once one of the finest in the world in one of the most affluent countries in the world, has been diluted, reduced, impaired and cut from a six-day a week to a five-day a week delivery, and I think unnecessarily so. At the same time the price to the ordinary consumer, the first class letter writer and bill payer has had to shoulder a 20 per cent increase in letter rate. Certainly, the business people such as the hydro, the oil companies, the phone companies and so on will pass on their part of the new impost to the consumer.

Now, beyond this, the government finds itself involved with the postal service employees in another dispute, employees whose efficiency and service over many years of substandard working and wage conditions have been a subject of comment in Canada. Here, I think I speak fairly and honestly as a former member of that group. I have already suggested a way of dealing with this particular situation involving the postal employees.

If I may add one more expression of concern at the conduct of the minister and the government in this area it is that hundreds of newspapers, co-operative papers, farm papers, union papers, church papers, association papers and scientific papers, certainly none of them profit making publications, are being faced with such an immense increase in postal rates as to make a number of them cease publication. Perhaps more will have to stop publication in the future. In some cases these rate increases amount to 2,000 per cent.

Replying to a question of mine on this same point three or four days ago, the minister suggested that those non-profit publications that were being so hard hit might apply to the departments of government concerned with their area of publication or interest for a subsidy. Surely, this is a curious suggestion, particularly coming from the Postmaster General who, until recently at least, I had always thought was a man of a great deal of common sense. I found it a curious idea that he would suggest that the various Canadian publications that are going out of business because of increased postal rates might ask a department of government for a handout.

I wonder should the farmers of Canada, through their associations such as the Farmers' Union and the Federation of Agriculture, which from time to time are critical of the Department of Agriculture, and of the Minister of Agriculture, and rightly so, ask for a subsidy from the Department of Agriculture? Should a publication like Canadian Geographic, an excellent magazine that will probably never make a profit, ask the Minister of Public Works for a subsidy or handout, when it may not always want to publish material exactly coinciding with what the government thinks is right and proper? Should the trade unions apply to the Minister of Labour to see if they can get the same kind of relief from the heavy imposts of the Postmaster General? Canadians labour papers, I think very correctly, are not exactly in tune at all times with the Minister of Labour and the government. If I understood the minister correctly, then his was a very strange suggestion to make in this day an age in Canada. I hope I misunderstood him.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, just as the issue with regard to the postal workers is going to be referred to a third party for a second look, I think that the matter of the fantastically heavy mail rate increases for non-profit publications should also be referred to some impartial agency, as we suggested some months ago, for further consideration.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, in rising to say something in this debate, I should like to begin by saying to the minister that if he wants to get this bill through he should not display the kind of arrogance he used when he refused unanimous consent to the hon. member for Brandon-Souris to complete his remarks. The minister ought to know, although he and the Prime Minister may wish it, that we do not have the system they have in France where President de Gaulle speaks and everybody toes the line. The minister may think members on this side are wasting time, but the members on this side of the house were elected by their voters in the same way the minister was. If the hon. member for Brandon-Souris wants to speak tonight, tomorrow or the next day about something that has been discussed before, simply because the minister does not agree does not mean he cannot do it. I wish to tell the minister that if he wants to get the legislation through he should not act the way he did, because if he is going to talk that way the members on this side will show him that it can take longer to get the bill through.

Mr. Perrault: You are wasting time. Get on with it.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister's handling of the Post Office Department is such that he should resign right now. I have been looking through the records of Hansard and I notice that almost every day members on this side of the house have been asking questions of the minister. They have asked about what was happening in respect of the negotiations with the employees. They have inquired whether there will be another strike or stoppage such as we have had. Questions have been asked in respect of whether the Canadian people will have to face the same inconvenience they have faced on two or more occasions. On each occasion, the minister has been very clear. He has stated that there is not the slightest possibility there will be a work stoppage. He has said that negotiations are proceeding very well, that there is no trouble at all and that he has been having discussions with the officials of the union. It is obvious now that the kind of discussions in which the Postmaster General believes are the same kind in which the Prime Minister seems to believe. In other words, he does the talking and the other people must listen, or be pushed around in some way.

Let us look at the record. I shall not quote it all today because it would take not 20 minutes but probably 20 times 20 minutes to go through the minister's sad, sad misconceptions about the postal employees; what they are thinking and what the situation is in respect of their morale. Here it is March 10. Just six days ago, on March 4, the Leader of the Official Opposition asked the minister how the discussions were progressing and what the possibility was of a stoppage. The minister said, "Oh, we are doing fine". The Leader of the Opposition then asked about outside adjudication. Let me quote exactly what the minister said as recorded at page 6173 of Hansard:

> In direct reply to the question asked by the Leader of the Opposition, I would like to say there is no necessity for third party adjudication when explosive situations do not exist.

Well, Mr. Chairman, although explosive situations did not exist and there was not a chance of a strike, today we have a strike in many of the cities of Canada. I have information which the minister could obtain if he wanted to listen to any people other than those around him who have messed up all the labour relations between the employees and the department. My information is that the only reason there is not a strike in Toronto and Montreal is that the system of delivery without going back to the post office has not been completely implemented. I am informed that if it had been there would be a strike in those places.

On January 14 the minister made a statement about the changes he intended to make and said that nobody would be affected. I was asked by our party to speak in respect of the minister's statement. I do not remember ever having done this before, but I wish to point out to members of the committee and the minister what I said on that occasion on the basis of the information which I and which any other member of the committee could have had if he had taken the trouble to ask questions of the employees. I said the following as recorded at page 4244 of Hansard for January 14:

> We have a new Postmaster General but we have the same old gang in the top positions in the department. Unless the minister comes up with a new plan, the workers are not going to accept the idea that a substantial number of them will have to eat their lunches outdoors in very cold and wet weather simply because there are no provisions for transportation and thus no opportunity for them to have their lunch break. I say to the minister, and this is not a threat, that I think I know how the postal workers in many cities feel, and unless the department meets these legitimate complaints there will be another stoppage very shortly.

That was on January 14, almost two months ago. Of course, the minister did not take me very seriously, nor has he taken anybody else very seriously. This minister, who came to this house with such a reputation for being a brilliant and intelligent man attuned to the feelings of the ordinary citizen, has displayed a lamentable lack of interest. That is all I can say. He has displayed a lamentable lack of interest in the problems of the employees of the department of which he is the minister. He is laughing. I suppose everything I say is a joke. It will be a joke until the employees stay out long enough for this minister to pay attention to them.

The minister has refused to listen to the members of this house. He has ignored the clear reports which have been carried in the newspapers in every part of Canada. If the minister has the time to read, I should like to refer him to reports which appeared in the Globe and Mail back in January. There was a news report on January 13 which read as follows:

> Representatives of Canada's letter carriers have threatened to work to rule or even strike if the post office carries through plans to cancel Saturday deliveries and implement a straight-through mail delivery system.
> The Letter Carriers Union of Canada claims the planned changes will violate its contract with the Treasury Board and said in a statement yesterday: "If the contract is continuously broken ... We reserve the right to take industrial action."

A few days later, on January 19, the Globe and Mail reported as follows:

> A switch in mail deliveries will mean a longer working day for postmen, already angry over delays in implementing the new pay scale they won in the 22-day strike last summer.

Later, the same report states:

> Under straight-through delivery, the postmen would sort the whole day's deliveries in the morning, then spend the rest of the day on their routes.
> They would have half an hour off for lunch and the Post Office would pay for transportation from their routes to wherever they eat, and back again. Time spent travelling would not count as part of the half hour, but they would not be paid for any of it.

The postal employees felt this was a violation of their contract. As a matter of fact, they exercised the right which the minister keeps on saying they have. They took a case to adjudication. This was a case having to do with wash-up time. The adjudicator said that under the contract the employees had the right to five minute wash-up time before and after lunch. This minister says, of course, you can have the time. Perhaps that is not what he said, but that is what his action means. You can have the time off out in no man's land, or on the prairies or wherever you happen to be at lunch time. This does not mean you have the traditional right to come back to the post office at lunch time. If you do, you will do so on your own time. The postmen did not have to do this before. What the minister is doing is cutting down the pay of every postal employee by one hour every day because he is forcing them to go back to the post office on their own time.

The minister was asked repeatedly during question period by members from all parties on this side of the house to sit down with the employees and negotiate because an agreement could not be reached. An agreement will not be reached if the minister acts as God in deciding this is what the contract says because he says so, and that he does not have to discuss this with anyone. Surely, collective bargaining means negotiation, and if you do not reach an agreement you get somebody outside to arbitrate. The minister refused to do that until today when he was faced with the disastrous effects of his policy and the fact that all the promises and statements he has made meant nothing. He said that morale was good, that the differences would be settled and there would not be a stoppage. Now that the minister is faced with a stoppage that is getting bigger rather than smaller, he is back tracking. The minister has been wrong in every step. This is the minister who has precipitated the third work stoppage, but he now agrees to outside adjudication. This is typical of this government.

We have a Minister of Labour who receives fulsome praise. Perhaps it is on the basis of the speeches he makes on behalf of the trade unions. He has spoken out in favour of the Freedman Commission report to the effect that there should be conciliation and discussion. He has spoken about the fact that no employer should make important changes in the working conditions of their employees without discussion and negotiation. I think the minister made that speech when the estimates of his department were before the house or during the Throne Speech debate. Here we have a minister who has ignored the Freedman Commission report, and I refer to the Postmaster General. Of course the Minister of Labour can go out and lecture employers about the fact that they ought to live up to the spirit of the Freedman Commission report while the Postmaster General ignores that report completely.

For the record and for the information of the Postmaster General in the event he has not looked at this report until now, and I commend the idea to him that he should do so, let me read from the official press release put out by the Department of Labour summarizing the findings of Mr. Justice Freedman in the dispute between the C.N.R. and its employees. I suggest to the minister that what Mr. Justice Freedman said to the C.N.R. applies even more to the government of Canada. Let me read a couple of sentences from this official press release:

> The present situation which permits management to make unilateral changes in working conditions during the contract period is a manifest inequity which clamours for attention and correction.

Was there ever a greater change in working conditions by any employer than those the Postmaster General and his lackeys in the department tried to push down the throats of a group of employees? Mr. Justice Freedman also said:

> Since run-throughs are not all equal in their effects, the commission recommends—

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. When the hon. member cites Mr. Justice Freedman I would like him to cite the page number. I have the report here.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish the minister would listen. I said I was quoting from the official press release issued by the Department of Labour summarizing Mr. Justice Freedman's report.

Mr. Kierans: All I am asking for is the source of the citation, as it appears in the report itself.

Mr. Orlikow: If I cannot take the official summary of the report by Mr. Justice Freedman as issued by the Department of Labour as being correct—the Minister of Labour at the time was Mr. Allan J. MacEachen—I do not know what else the minister would like.

Mr. Kierans: I am quite prepared to admit that the summary is official and correct. On the other hand I think I am showing a disposition to go much closer to the source of the quotation than is the hon. member who has cited it. If he wants to cite Freedman why doesn't he cite Freedman?

Mr. Orlikow: The minister has already complained in what I thought was a very capricious and arbitrary way about the fact that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris was wasting time, or taking up too much time. I am trying to save the time of the committee and not bore the minister with matters which he considers are unimportant by quoting from the official summary. I think it is accurate enough. If the minister does not think it is accurate I suggest he argue that matter with the former Minister of Labour and those officials of the department who prepared the report. I am prepared to accept the word of the former Minister of Labour that he has given an honest summary of the Freedman report. If the Postmaster General does not want to take it as being an honest summary, that is his business.

Mr. Kierans: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do accept it as being an honest summary. I am simply raising the point that while I have read the Freedman report, I am not sure the hon. member has.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: We now hear those trained seals banging their desks over there. At the rate we are going, we obviously will not finish this discussion tonight. Since the minister has not had time to read the Freedman report and will not listen to the former Minister of Labour—obviously he has not listened to the present one either—I promise the Postmaster General that tomorrow afternoon I will give him the exact quotation from the official text of the Freedman report. I wonder if I can continue now without the interruptions of the jumping-jack Postmaster General.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That was Pickersgill.

Mr. Orlikow: This is the new Pickersgill.

On page 2 of this summary, Mr. Justice Freedman states:

> Since run-throughs are not all equal in their effects, the commission recommends that either party should have the right to refer to an arbitrator the question whether a proposed run-through would or would not have the effect of causing a material change in working conditions.

For weeks the postal workers unions have been asking for precisely this, but what has the minister and his experts in the department—those great labour negotiators who have led us into three work stoppages in a couple of years—done to alleviate the situation? All they have said has been that we cannot have outside arbitration. They have suggested to the postal employees that they file not one grievance but 20 grievances or 50 grievances. The employees are going to be required to hire some high priced lawyers and this will drain the union treasury. I am sure that would suit the Postmaster General because obviously the unions would then not be able to continue the battle for what they consider to be justice. The Postmaster General does not believe in this because his great Pooh-bahs have decided they have treated the employees fairly.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

• (9:20 p.m.)

The official summary, at page 3 reads:

> Assuming voluntary agreement between the parties is not possible for the purpose of giving effect to the Commission's recommendation, legislation would be required. Either the Railway Act or the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act could be employed. If the latter were used it would be possible to provide, by an appropriate amendment, that any technological innovation, development, or change proposed by the employer which would materially and adversely affect the working conditions of the employees should either be deferred for negotiation at the next open period or be dealt with in the same way as if it were a provision falling within the scope of subsection (2) of section 22 of the act.

The former minister of labour, the Hon. Jack Nicholson, used to argue, he thought pretty persuasively, that he did not need to implement Mr. Justice Freedman's recommendation. He felt we did not need legislation because, after all, all good employees should be willing to do this voluntarily. You can see how wrong he was. We are not even talking about private employers; here is the government of Canada, here is the Postmaster General ignoring the basic concept of the Freedman report.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Orlikow: Could I ask a question, Mr. Chairman? In calculating my time, did you take account of the rude interruptions of the minister?

The Chairman: Order, please. Is it the wish of the committee that the hon. member continue? There has to be unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Perrault: He doesn't deserve it.

Mr. Orlikow: We get the same comment, Mr. Chairman, from the hon. member. Like the Prime Minister, I cannot remember his constituency. Page 3 of the summary of Mr. Justice Freedman's report reads:

> Amendment through the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigaion Act would have the advantage of closing a gap in the statute which technological advance has revealed.

We have a stoppage. It is the third stoppage the public has had to suffer. As of last week the minister denied that there was any possibility the stoppage would take place. It is a stoppage caused by the failure of the minister to bring into the department people who have the slightest concept of what collective bargaining means, to bring into the department the kind of people who realize that the feudal system which has existed for almost 100 years in the postal department has now ended. Under that system the minister, the deputy minister and a couple of other key people could decide, and everybody else had to go along with their decision. That type of thing has vanished and we are now in a period when—I cannot say this as eloquently as the Minister of Labour, I am sure employers have to sit down in good faith, negotiate and try to settle matters in dispute with their employees.

The minister has failed for the second time to do this. We had a strike a little while ago when the minister headed the post office. We have a stoppage today. I suggest in all seriousness that this minister, having failed so miserably to understand the most elementary facts about labour-management relationships, in a department which is of such vital concern to the people of Canada and their everyday living, ought to resign. He ought to make way for a minister who will put people first and let matters which are important be settled by negotiation and conciliation, rather than by work stoppages.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I think most of us regret that the department which is closest to Canadians in their day-to-day life should also be the subject of most controversy in Canada today. The difficulties in the Post Office far outweigh those in any other department of government; and believe you me, with this government that takes some doing. Yet this is precisely the state in the Post Office Department at the present time.

I ask the minister this question: Did he have any warning that his difficulties were going to be compounded at this time or did they come like a bolt from the blue? I suggest that the Postmaster General had ample warning. I suggest that the difficulties of the previous postmaster general gave him a warning. But in addition there has been the Montpetit report, that fat volume put out by the commission outlining the grievances found by that judge of the Quebec Superior Court. He felt those grievances should be remedied. Some of them have been remedied.

In addition, there was the new, collective bargaining legislation which we in this house passed in good faith a few years ago. Combining the factors of Montpetit and collective bargaining, the result was that people who had been content to put up with certain conditions over a long period of time were suddenly faced with the fact that they had a responsibility to themselves to do something to better their conditions. I think everybody in the house will agree with that philosophy. I know I preached it myself when I addressed dinners of postal unions at that time. I said: If you have these working conditions of which you complain, do not sit around and take them any more; get out and take them up with your management. Deal at arm's length with each other, and do your best to remedy them.

That spirit is now abroad in the Post Office of Canada. The Postmaster General takes time out with amateurish dabblings in another minister's department, telling us how NATO should or should not operate. Then, he turns to the Post Office and delivers his offhand pronunciamento. No wonder half the country has postal difficulties. I say those warnings were there before the Postmaster General was elected and, subsequently last fall, became a member of the ministry. He has nobody to blame but himself for what is happening in Canada at the present time.

The minister should have had warning from the events of last year when the increases were brought about which have caused consternation. The difficulties, which still have not been fully assessed in the newspaper field, are very much with us in the magazine field. For example, the March, 1969, issue of the Legion contains an article headed "We Face a Crisis". It was written by the dominion president, Mr. Robert Kohaly, who is also chairman of the national magazine executive committee. The Legion publication had enjoyed its second class mailing rates for more than 40 years. It was aware that increases were coming. This editorial says:

> The Legion had prepared for the increase in second-class rates, roughly from half-a-cent a copy to two cents a copy, and had adjusted its 1969 budget to meet a monthly increase in mailing costs of from $1,300 to $5,000.

Then came the mighty hand of the Postmaster General, and this is the result:

> —the cost of mailing (the Legion magazine) after April 1 will be seven cents a copy or a monthly mailing expenditure of more than $19,000 or $228,000 a year!

This is a group that expected its postal bills would increase from, say, $15,000 to $60,000 Their postal bills went all the way up to $228,000 a year. Says the Legion editorial:

• (9:30 p.m.)

These new rates will put many fraternal and trade publications out of business.

If this is good management of a government department by a minister, then I would hate to see an example of poor management. This policy, which must have been studied by someone in the department, is wreaking havoc in an important part of our communications life.

In addition to these outrageous increases, there is the problem of slow mail delivery. In a November issue, the Register put it as well as anybody could. The Register is published in Kingston but it has offices in Toronto. This editorial reads:

The Toronto papers reach that city by 2 a.m. Thursday morning. Yet in some cases, those papers do not reach Toronto parishes before the following Wednesday.

By that time the news in them is about as up to date as the Old Testament. The editorial goes on to say:

Occasionally, papers addressed to the Register's Toronto office, which is within walking distance of the main Toronto post office, will not be delivered until the following Monday.

Again, I say that the duty of the Postmaster General was not to dabble and meddle in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization but rather to concern himself with the proper functioning of the Canadian mailing system. I say that in this he has failed Canadians and this parliament abysmally. It is strange that a man who is supposed to communicate has employed a method of communication that has been less than satisfactory and has become embroiled in labour difficulties that have been noted in the debate today.

Finally, I should like to draw to the attention of the committee a curious provision. The section which we are now considering, dealing with the establishment of a Department of Communications, deletes the requirement of the former legislation that the headquarters of the Post Office be established in Ottawa. I notice that this requirement has gone by the board with the establishment of the Department of Communications. I hope to have an explanation of this change before this part of the bill is passed.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, earlier this evening the Postmaster General refused me the courtesy of allowing me to conclude my remarks. I did not intend to resume the debate at this time but after thinking about the matter I should like to say that it is the first time in my 18 years in the House of Commons that a minister of the Crown has not extended that courtesy when requested. It is that situation that prompts me to re-enter the debate at this time. Other hon. members have expressed concern at the Postmaster General's refusal to listen to reasonable suggestions that are made from this side of the house. The Postmaster General is not now in the Montreal stock exchange; he is in the high court of parliament where members of parliament who represent their constituencies in the various and diverse regions of Canada have a duty and an obligation to speak on behalf of their constituents. That is precisely what I was doing when I spoke in the debate earlier tonight. The Postmaster General referred to that as wasting time, and as the debate proceeds I have come to the conclusion that perhaps he is right in this regard. No matter what anybody said on this side or on the government side of the house I am sure it would make not the slightest impact on the Postmaster General. He is like the fellow who said: "Do not confuse me with facts, my mind is already made up".

The issue that I brought before the house was a fundamental one and I am not the only one to have raised the point. I will continue to raise it as long as there is an opportunity to do so because it is of the greatest importance to western Canada, the area which I represent. The Winnipeg Free Press, which is the organ of the Liberal Party in my province, Manitoba, has belaboured the point in and out of season. One of its outstanding columnists, Mr. John Robertson, in commenting recently on the Postmaster General's refusal to listen to advice and to reasonable suggestions said that the Postmaster General has been urging Canada to withdraw and resign from NATO but perhaps it would be much better for the Government of Canada and the people of Canada if he resigned his portfolio. This seems to be the situation that is developing in dealing with what my colleague said just a moment ago concerns the day to day life of people all across Canada, our postal services.

The point that I was making—and which I would have concluded within two minutes had the Postmaster General extended me the courtesy for which I asked—was to try to point out to him that in closing down rural post offices he might be making infinitesimally small savings which, as has been indicated, will amount to $292,000. At the same time he is playing havoc with a fundamental social organization in the rural parts of western Canada, as well as in other parts of the country. I am sure the same problem applies to the maritimes as well as to the rural parts of Ontario and to the province of Quebec. Most of these post offices are located in the general store. In many cases, as I have gathered from personal contact with the situation and from representations that I have received in letters, it will mean the difference between whether the store remains in business or whether it goes out of business. This is one of our great sociological problems at the moment, namely the depopulation of the rural areas and the increasing trend toward urbanization.

This means that we are faced with the chronic social problems of urbanization that will be a lot more expensive to cope with than the servicing of the rural communities of Canada through the small rural post offices. This is the point I want to make, and I want to encourage the minister to give it earnest reconsideration. If he wants to save money in the millions and not only $292,000, there are all sorts of examples of waste and extravagance in the Auditor General's report. If rural mail service is downgraded the government will save money and at the same time a fundamental communication service that has been the responsibility of the Canadian government ever since confederation 100 years ago will be destroyed.

At the beginning of this great debate last fall a committee of 35 backbenchers on the government side was formed to protest against what the Postmaster General was doing with regard to the reorganization of his department. I understand that his committee of 35 made such a strong impact on the Postmaster General that he partially altered his decision. I would urge that in some way this committee should be reconstituted, possibly on Wednesday morning when members opposite are in caucus. In the privacy of caucus they can inform the Postmaster General in no uncertain terms that he is completely out of touch with the basic needs of this country, as I have already indicated through the comments of such illustrious journalists as Mr. Robertson. I could have quoted Mr. Bruce Hutchison who comes from the same province as does the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, B.S. for short. I understand that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour was a member of this committee of 35, and perhaps he will take responsibility for reorganizing the committee. If the Postmaster General will not listen to members of the opposition, surely the backbenchers on the government side will be able to get through to him.

Although the hon. member for York East, who is not in his place tonight, has indicated that the government has ordered that there should be no disagreement, no change in what the cabinet dictates, surely there are members opposite besides the hon. member for York East who have the courage of their convictions and are prepared to speak up on behalf of their constituencies.

Mr. Perrault: I had not intended to take part in this debate but since reference has been made in the house to the position I am supposed to have taken I think I should stand up and make my position clear. I was not a member of this rumoured group of 35 but I do know, as I believe most members of this house know, just how difficult a task is facing the minister responsible for the post office.

There was a ludicrous situation—we discovered this in meetings of the committee—which saw no change in postal rates for publications since 1957. And before that there was another 20-year period in which the rates were left unaltered. As far as the Canadian taxpayer is concerned, the situation would assume disastrous proportions unless a minister had the courage to initiate the kind of program my hon. friend is attempting to pilot through the House of Commons.

Members who have spoken in this debate have been careful not to refer at any time to the economic impact on Canadian taxpayers of continuing deficits in the Post Office Department, deficits which would have reached enormous proportions in a few years had not major surgery been undertaken by the present minister. Not one statistic has been produced to buttress the arguments which have been advanced, mainly for political purposes, in this debate. No mention has been made of the $134 million deficit which would have arisen in the forthcoming fiscal year had not decisive action been taken.

I have listened in vain tonight for the views of opposition parties with respect to this new department of communications, this vital area which involves other media as well as the postal services. Scarcely a word has been spoken about the communication satellite. Scarcely a word has been said about the future of educational television, even in its technical aspects. Not a word has been said about the fact that in the bill before us there is the possibility of the emergence of one of the greatest government departments in our history.

There has been no discussion of methods by which we can improve communications to the northland beyond the use of the postal services. Opposition members have been content to rake over the cold embers of political acrimony. One really suspects they would like to append a footnote to each of their speeches: Local papers, please copy. Their speeches have been designed for maximum publicity on the home front, not really as a constructive contribution to the dialogue.

Mr. MacInnis: A point of order, Mr. Chairman, arises from the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour which, beyond any question or doubt impute motives to others who have participated in the debate.

Mr. Basford: Don't be so sensitive.

Mr. Perrault: These are comments from an hon. member who has never shown any sensitivity for the feelings of others in this house.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, when a member of this house raises a point of order it follows that the Chair should rule whether or not the point of order raised is a legitimate one.

I shall be satisfied with the judgment of the Chair, if I am told that my point of order is not a legitimate one. And I will be further satisfied if the minister would have the intestinal fortitude to get up and take part in the debate—

The Deputy Chairman: I do not think there is any point of order.

Mr. MacInnis: I rise once again on a point of order. It arises, now, from the ruling the Chair has just made. I shall raise the matter tomorrow, when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, as a question of privilege.

Mr. Perrault: I do not wish to continue much longer because I want to give others in this chamber an opportunity to take part in the debate. So many of those who have risen today to say that their freedom of speech is being restricted have taken 12 minutes of a 20 minute speech in which to make their point. Once again, one wonders how interested members of the opposition really are in speaking constructively about this new government department.

I want to say that it takes courage to advance legislation of this kind. It is always unpopular to do the difficult things in government but we have a minister here at last who has the courage to look closely at the operations of the post office, something which was not done with courage by some of the previous administrations in this country, including the administration formed by the party to my left. The minister saw this was an intolerable situation and one which could not continue. He said: It will be necessary to make tough decisions and certain jobs will be affected, but we will try to be fair about it. I say to members on the opposition side: Let them be fair in the comments they make on the subject before us.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the hon. member tell this committee whether he thinks it is fair that the people of Canada who, he says, cannot afford to subsidize the various Canadian newspapers and magazines, should continue to subsidize Time and Readers' Digest under the new rates to the tune of $1,500,000 a year?

Mr. Perrault: If the hon. member had done any research on the subject of postal rates, and obviously he has not, he would know that even with the change contemplated an enormous deficit will still have to be borne by the Canadian taxpayer in connection with the operations of the post office. There is no chance whatever that in the forthcoming fiscal year or two there will be a breakthrough. This is a holding operation. Costs were getting out of line and I would think that a party which is so interested in programs for spending the taxpayers' money would at least show a degree of responsibility in helping to hold the line.

Mr. Orlikow: The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour does not want to answer my question and, of course, he is not bound to do so. I asked him a simple question. The figures will show—

The Deputy Chairman: I would ask the committee to come back to the bill.

Mr. Orlikow: Surely, Mr. Chairman, we are discussing the bill—the question of communications. The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour has criticized us—

Mr. Perrault: I will answer your question. The suggestion is, I believe, that there should be no subsidy whatever. I then suggested that there would be a continuing subsidy, something like $40 million in the next fiscal year. That answered the hon. member's question, and he should have been listening. Of course, I support the measure—

• (9:50 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Perrault: —but not unlimited deficits,—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Perrault: —for the taxpayers of Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. We are discussing the establishment of a new department, not policy of the department or the cost of handling mail.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, with all due deference to you, I know the minister has flights of imagination in connection with satellites and so on, but whether the minister likes it or not this department of communications will have to administer that old warhorse, the post office.

The Post Office Department has set rates for various types of mail that it delivers. We have listened to a lecture from the No. 1 defender of this government, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, who believes in constructive criticism. However, since he has been in this chamber I have never heard, and I venture to guess that I never will hear in the few years that he will be here, any criticism voiced by any member of the opposition that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour considered to be constructive.

Mr. Perrault: You are absent from the house too much and do not hear these things.

Mr. Orlikow: As far as absence from the house is concerned, I will stake my record against yours.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member should be given the opportunity to make his remarks. I ask the hon. member to come back to the part of the bill we are discussing, namely clause 7, the establishment of the new department. If the hon. member can relate his remarks to clause 7, I should be very pleased to hear him do so.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, first of all, clause 12 of the bill, on page 4, deals with the Post Office Department.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I would bring to the attention of the hon. member that the committee is discussing clause 7, on page 2 of the bill.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it was agreed when we started debating this bill that on each of the several parts of the bill we would on the first clause again have a general discussion of the whole part. I submit that we are now on the part dealing with the communications department, which does include the Post Office Department.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I understand the hon. member and I thank him for his advice. Clause 12, to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North referred, reads as follows:

> Section 3 of the Post Office Act is repealed and the following substituted therefor:
> "3. (1) There shall be a department of the Government of Canada called the Post Office Department over which the Postmaster General shall preside.
> (2) The Minister of Communications is the Postmaster General and has the management and direction of the Post Office Department."

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what we are discussing. I am not asking for any special consideration. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris made two speeches on this clause dealing with the effects on Canadian publications of increases in the postal rates, and you permitted him to speak. Then, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour started to berate the hon. member for Brandon-Souris and other members for not being constructive. "Of course there have to be increases in postal rates", says the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour. Then I asked the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, if there did have to be increases in postal rates, whether the government would continue to subsidize farm publications that are going out of business, the ethnic press which is going out of business and labour union publications, such as the C.N.T.U. magazine of which the minister of economic expansion was president for so long, and which has suspended publication.

If the government cannot then does the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour think it fair that the Canadian taxpayer should subsidize Time and Reader's Digest to the tune of $1.5 million a year? The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would ask the hon. member to kindly confine his remarks to the bill, not to the remarks made by the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour.

Mr. Orlikow: I am just finishing. I think the record will indicate to anybody who wants to read it that the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour refuses to answer that very simple question. Of course he will always defend interests such as Time and Readers Digest. Why not, they are Liberal organs?

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I have answered the hon. member three times. There is now an attempt to gain political mileage on the part of the hon. member from Winnipeg North, and I do not think this is worthy of him as a member of the House of Commons.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to take part in this part of the debate, and I would not think of letting the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour take me off on that particular track. The part of the bill that interests me concerns the post office. I am one of those who has had some experience over the years watching the operations of the post office, and I have always felt that the Postmaster General of Canada did not have much to do. However, looking back over those years, I can say now that the post office was run very well.

In my area, and I think the same is true in others, people are writing me daily telling me that the postal service has gone back 40 years. We do not live far from Toronto, which is our major business centre. Previously we were able to put mail on the train at night that would be in business offices in Toronto the following morning. Letters mailed from business offices in Toronto were distributed to every community in my area the next morning, usually by ten or eleven o'clock. If this mail missed the five o'clock collection out of Toronto it was delivered in the afternoon. This includes deliveries to the rural routes. Today, a letter may take five days to come from Toronto I have documented evidence that certain classes of mail—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

POWER—URANIUM CITY—ELECTRICAL SERVICE SUPPLIED BY UTILITY COMPANY

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I was prompted to raise a question the other day by requests I received from Uranium City and Eldorado, mostly from Uranium City. The question was:

• (10:00 p.m.)

—in view of the widespread dissatisfaction with the high cost and poor quality of the service offered residents of Uranium City by the private utility company presently supplying electricity to the area, can the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources say whether Eldorado Nuclear Limited, the Crown corporation primarily concerned with the development of the community, has considered taking over this service directly, itself, or alternatively, using its considerable local influence to get the service improved?

I have raised this matter, Mr. Speaker, because I received a petition signed by 386 persons in Uranium City, together with a copy of Northland News in which the situation is set out. The petition reads:

We, the people of Uranium City, strongly protest the high cost of our electrical power.

We do not understand why Northland Utilities has not revised and lowered power costs long ago.

We are very much aware of electrical appliance damage and lamp burnouts caused by the utility's wide voltage swings.

We are also apprehensive over the fact that the utility does not provide some form of stand-by plant as protection against line failure, such a failure in 40 below temperatures could result in catastrophe for our families, apart from damage to our homes and property.

Our opinion is that Northland Utilities power rates are ridiculously high,—

I was under the impression that the power lines were installed by a Crown corporation some time ago. Eldorado Nuclear Limited is the Crown corporation in question. How a privately owned company known as Northland Utility can be allowed to make a mark up of almost 100 per cent at the expense of people living in the area, escapes me. We know that those people are living far from large centres in a mining area. All the same, they cannot see why their electric power rates should be so high. Northland News of January 23, 1969, had this to say, in part, about the matter:

> Northland Utilities came under fire Monday night when Town Council questioned power officials about low voltage complaints, customer servicing, the inability to contact company officials based here, and the high cost of power to the consumers.

As I say, this is a mining town, and its people cannot see the need for the very high power rates. I think my remarks have pretty well covered the case. I have a copy of the petition, and I could give it to the minister, together with any pertinent material I have in my possession.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, Eldorado Nuclear Limited has not considered taking over the services directly, itself. So far as the rates are concerned, these have been under consideration for some time and representations have been made by Eldorado Nuclear Limited. It is hoped that there will be a reduction of rates. Since there have been no direct representations to Eldorado Nuclear Limited about the quality of service, Eldorado Nuclear Limited has not considered using its influence with a view to having the service improved.

SCIENCE SERVICES—MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR POLICY

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, some days ago at a winter conference sponsored by the Canadian Institute on Public Affairs and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation the chairman of the Science Council, Dr. Solandt, made a speech in which he repeated statements which he had made on other occasions to the effect that improvements are needed in the federal government's science policy machinery, and advising the appointment of a minister for science policy.

On March 5, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) if the government was considering making such an appointment and I was told by the Prime Minister that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) was in fact that minister. On another occasion when asked a similar question by my colleague, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent), the Prime Minister pointed to the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Lang), the hon. member from Saskatoon-Humboldt, as being that minister. On a third occasion when asked the same question he referred to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) as the minister responsible for science policy.

This is an extremely important matter, Mr. Speaker. The Secretary of the Treasury Board, Mr. Reiseman, testifying before the Senate committee which is investigating science policy said that the decisions of the government with regard to science policy were largely accidental. When one recognizes the fact that in the last several years government commitments to proceed with three very important scientific research programs have been scuttled, so far as one can see without very serious discussions with the scientific community, one realizes the importance of having a government minister responsible for making decisions in this field.

The Queen Elizabeth Observatory, which was to be built in British Columbia, has been cancelled. The HARP project being conducted by the physics department at McGill University has been scuttled and is now operating out of the United States with scientists in charge who were formerly on the staff of McGill University. Tne ING project which was being pushed very hard by the physicists of Canada has also been scuttled.

I am not an expert on science policy, and I suppose no member of this house is an expert on it. I hold no particular brief for these projects. I am not an expert on them any more than I am expert about the money we spend on medical research, or on agricultural research, or on defence research,—most of which seems to have been a failure—but I would like to think that with respect to the hundreds of millions of dollars that we spend the people and the government of Canada are getting some solid advice from the people who know best. Yet, Mr. Speaker, that does not seem to be the case.

An article which appeared in Science Forum in November 1968, written by Dr. Martin W. Johns, a physicist at McMaster University, said in part:

> What science policy there may be seems to be directed by persons who neither understand the legitimate goals of science nor have direct communication with scientists—within or without the government service.

Similarly, Dr. L. E. Howlett, writing in Science Forum in the October 1968 issue said:

> Too often the argument in favour of a costly project with heavy continuing commitments is that it is good science and excites the imagination. Too rarely is there a good case to support its direct relevance to Canada's future needs and a realistic appraisal of its probable value to the country as compared with the same money spent on other projects.

Dr. Howlett is a former National Research Council scientist. I could go on. Professor

Proceedings on adjournment Motion

N. H. Lithwick, writing in the Journal of Canadian Studies in August of 1968, in an article entitled "Science policy in Canada" says the following about our so-called science policy:

• (10:10 p.m.)

After an examination of the conduct and financing of such activity by government in Canada, it is safe to conclude that there is no science policy, except perhaps the conviction that science is a good thing. This in turn stems from an absence of social policy as a whole, so that scientists have been free to develop their art as it pleases them.

Later, he says:

Indeed, the government has clearly chosen to leave future decisions on science policy in the hands of the scientists.

He concludes his article by saying:

How these priorities will be allocated by a body made up largely of scientists in the absence of a set of articulated public objectives raises our most fundamental fears—fears not at all alleviated by reassurances of the chairman that the Council will co-operate wih social and behavioural scientists.

The point I am trying to make simply is that in my opinion it is the duty and responsibility of the government of Canada to establish a system of priorities so that the money which the government decides Canada can afford to spend in the field of scientific research shall be spent to the best advantage of the people of Canada as a whole. That, in my opinion, requires a minister responsible for science policy who can make reasonably sound decisions in respect of what this country needs after consultation with the scientific community in the government, in the science council, in the universities and in industry, on the one hand and the members of the cabinet on the other hand who know the total needs and commitments of the Canadian people. I submit that despite our science secretariat or council the government does not have such a policy.

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) I should like to say that I answered part of a question on this subject on February 20 this year as recorded at page 6790 of Hansard when I replied to a similar question asked by the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent). The only other thing that might be added at this time is that if there is any statement to be made by the Prime Minister on this subject it would be made on motions, which is the time when government policies are announced.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—EFFECT OF RATE CHANGES IN NON-PROFIT PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, like a number of other members of the house I have tried at one time or another on orders of the day and at other times to raise a question concerning the inordinate increase in postal rates on what I term non-profit publications in Canada. I do so again tonight, particularly following what I thought was a rather curious reply made to me by the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) last week when I asked a question of that nature. If I understood him correctly he said at that time that instead of the non-profit publications seeking to have redress through a lower rate of postage, their associations might consider applying to a department of government for some type of subsidy. Therefore, I take this opportunity to raise the question again tonight.

If I understood the minister correctly, his suggestion was that there might be a subsidy for non-profit publications such as scientific reviews, church papers, trade union papers and so on which in some cases have been put out of business or curtailed in respect of their publication because of the new heavy increases in rates. I think what I should like to do, in backing up my question, is to quote from the position my party expressed last October, as recorded at page 1614 of Hansard:

—we wish a committee study to be made to ensure that the proposed rate increases are sufficient and are borne by those by whom they should be and do not fall upon publications which are not published for commercial profit but rather for the service of some particular educational, health or co-operative association or union.

Had something like that been done at the time, we would not be in the situation many of us feel we are in today in respect of the curtailment of these publications which are not able, from other financial resources, to meet their costs of publication. I refer to those publications I have mentioned before relating to unions, churches, scientific associations and other such small publications. In my view what the government is doing is actually curtailing communications in these fields.

I am one of those who favour proper and heavy increases in the rates on business publications, and business mail generally. They have been subsidized for many years by the ordinary consumers in Canada who have paid the first class rate. However, this is a very different situation to that which we find described in the Ottawa Citizen which made a review of non-profit publications six or seven weeks ago. On January 29, the Ottawa Citizen in an article had this to say:

> Among the hardest hit are the independent Canadian union papers which have lost second class mailing privileges and have been assured by a Post Office official that they have no chance of regaining them. Here are some samples of the postal cost increases these papers face, as of April 1:
> From $1,057 per annum to $29,696 per annum—
> From $9,024 to $84,756—
> From $18,000 to $72,000—

This list goes on. I feel that this situation was outlined by another one of these non-profit publications put out by the Association of Canadian Welfare Councils. I urge the minister to take a second look at the situation. The Canadian Welfare Council says:

> If Canada were to suddenly be without such regular periodicals as Canadian Geographic, Community Planning Review, Canadian Consumer, The Canadian Author and Bookman, The Observer, The Canadian Nurse, and a host of other journals published by professional, ethnic or cultural groups across the country, it would be as though half the lights in a house had suddenly been put out.

As one who has long urged and complimented the minister on his energy and common sense in increasing rates in respect of private mail, I urge him again to take another look at what is happening. Perhaps he will then reconsider the application of such legislation to non-profit papers in Canada. This was perhaps less than well thought out legislation. I hope he will take a second look, just as he has announced today he is doing in respect of the postal workers' conditions. He should have an impartial second look at this situation.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have dealt with this question extensively during the debate on postal rates and the postal bill itself. We have attempted to answer the questions as fairly and as objectively as possible during various question periods in the last four or five months. I feel I am almost repeating myself when I attempt to answer the submissions put forward by the hon. member.

We are faced with a situation in which we are handling 17 newspaper or journal publications for 1½ cents. There is no possible way in which the government could recover other than the smallest fraction of its costs in this regard. When a non-profit organization sets itself up in business, it expects to pay the people who work for it. It expects to pay for its paper, ink, printing, legal fees, auditing fees and all the other costs that go into the operations. Why should it not expect to pay the postage rate? Why should it expect to get stamps free or at a cut rate? The exaggeration that has gone on in this area is virtually impossible to believe. For example, a great deal of to-do has been made about the fantastic increases faced by the Queen's Quarterly, a journal that many of us agree is a definite asset to the quality of Canadian life. It is said that publication cannot bear the increases. Subscribers to the Queen's Quarterly will have to pay exactly four cents more a year.

I have dealt with the non-profit publications and editors of the unions and have been able to point out that in most cases, for example, the United Automobile Workers, the increase in postal rates would mean an increased charge to their members of 35 cents a year. A farm and country newspaper, which is indicative and a real example of all the farm newspapers, which has a nominal subscription rate of $1.50 but which in effect charges 98 per cent of its subscribers only 25 cents a year, will now have to charge 35 cents a year.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.24 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday March 11, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, March 11, 1969

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Right Hon. J. R. Cartwright, P.C., M.C., Chief Justice of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 11th March, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
Louis-Frémont Trudeau
Brigadier General
Assistant Secretary, to the Governor General.

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT

YUKON—CERTIFICATE OF JUDGMENT IN MATTER OF ELECTION

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received from the Hon. Mr. Justice A. Bruce Robertson, a judge of the Court of Appeal of British Columbia and the Hon. Mr. Justice Victor L. Dryer, a judge of the Supreme Court of British Columbia, the two judges appointed for the trial of a petition pursuant to the Dominion Controverted Elections Act, a certificate of judgment in the matter of an election in the electoral district of Yukon.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

ALLEGED DETERIORATION IN EMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE RELATIONS—MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26, for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent public consideration, namely the serious deterioration in employer-employee relations in the Post Office Department, and the need for the immediate appointment of a new Postmaster General—

• (2:10 p.m.)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Orlikow: —who will establish good relations with the employees of the Post Office and restore the service of the department to levels commensurate with the needs of the Canadian people.

Mr. Speaker: As hon. members know, the rules of the house require that a notice of motion proposed under Standing Order 26 should be filed at least two hours prior to the opening of a sitting. I regret to say that the hon. member has not complied with this requirement. I suggest to hon. members that there is no discretion, under the rules, which would allow the Speaker to overlook this very specific requirement. In any event—and this may be some consolation to the hon. member—I think that the considerations outlined by the Chair yesterday in connection with the proposed motion of the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) would apply also today in connection with this proposed motion.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REQUEST FOR THIRD PARTY MEDIATION TO AVERT WALKOUTS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Postmaster General. I ask him whether, in the light of the possibility of a further walkout in Winnipeg and the probability of a walkout in Montreal on Thursday, he will take the initiative to have a third party mediate the root causes of the dissatisfaction in his department with regard to these disputes, rather than depending upon the time-consuming settlement of individual grievances, as is now his policy.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to inform the house that whereas there were more than 1,500 letter carriers off duty yesterday, there are less than 700—in fact, 649—who have not reported for work today.

To reply directly to the question of the Leader of the Opposition, I should like to say that the Post Office has waived all preliminary steps in the grievance procedure. The relevant documents are now in the hands of the union for approval, and as soon as this approval is given we can immediately proceed to name an adjudicator to rule on the outstanding grievances. This is something we have wanted for some considerable time. I am delighted that the discussions have finally reached this stage. I would hope that the people who are striking today will return to work tomorrow, so that the adjudication procedure can proceed in an atmosphere of serenity.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We are all, of course, interested in seeing things returned to normality. I assume from what the minister said that the procedure adopted relates to individual grievances. The question I asked was whether the minister would not moderate his policy so as to refer the root causes of dissatisfaction to third party mediation, rather than resort to the time-consuming procedure he is now following, which may settle individual grivances but may not actually restore peace to the operations of his department.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, the individual grievances we have selected are those that bear on the root causes or the root differences between the unions and ourselves. Therefore when the adjudicator pronounces on one of these representative cases he will undoubtedly be giving a decision that will be binding in the more general case on both sides.

Mr. Stanfield: I have one further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether it is his intention to proceed with prosecutions, as he has indicated, or whether he is going to seek a settlement.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons why I am extremely hopeful that the strikers will return to work tomorrow is that the continuance of illegal strikes would obviously make prosecution inevitable. It would not be inevitable, given the decision of the national executive of the letter carriers union on Sunday night ordering all their workers back to work, which is what Mr. Décarie did. Under those circumstances I think that my colleagues and I will review the situation.

In the meantime, what I said on Friday stands, that is, first that we were applying to the staff relations board for a ruling that this strike is illegal and is against the people and the government of Canada, and second that if they did declare the strike to be illegal we could have the consent of the board to prosecute. That was the position on Friday night.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that the Postmaster General has stated that he has been trying for three weeks to get the postal workers to submit this dispute to a third party for adjudication, may I ask him whom he advised of his willingness to take this step, whether it was done orally or in writing, and when it was done. If it was by means of correspondence, would the minister be prepared to table the correspondence in the house?

Mr. Kierans: I advised a number of local unions during my trip out west that if they did not agree with the idea of eliminating the additional sorting period at one o'clock in the afternoon they should adopt the legal procedure of filing a grievance. I also repeated it before a joint meeting of the two national executives held at the Beacon Arms Hotel about a month ago—I cannot give the exact date—at the time when we discussed the implementation of the new system, and I told both national executives in the presence of both presidents that the proper way of attempting to upset this was not in a test of force, one side attempting to blackmail the other, but to proceed through the legal means that this government gave them when they gave them the right to strike.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the fact that initial proceedings have been taken toward taking action against certain postal employee representatives, with a view to prosecution and in view of the harmful effect this will have upon employer-employee relations between the Postal Department and its employees, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he would intervene to ensure that these prosecutions or any initial steps leading toward prosecution will not be proceeded with?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): To what prosecution is the hon. member alluding?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I understand that already the Staff Relations Board has notified certain representatives of the postal workers that they are to appear on March 17 with a view to preliminary discussions before prosecution.

Mr. Trudeau: These are not prosecutions; they are subpoenas in order to permit the board to establish whether or not the strike is illegal. They have nothing to do with prosecutions.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Prime Minister a further question? Are these discussions which are to be held with the Staff Relations Board taking place with a view to deciding whether or not prosecutions should be proceeded with, and would the Prime Minister withhold these discussions?

Mr. Trudeau: The hon. member is really distorting the role of this board, Mr. Speaker. The purpose of the hearing is to establish whether the strike is illegal or not, and in order to do this the board will subpoena witnesses to get the facts. That is all the witnesses are being subpoenaed for.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In order to blackmail them—

Mr. Trudeau: Do you want the board to have the truth or not?

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Has the Postmaster General yet been able to consider the suggestion that he hand over the conduct of this dispute to the Minister of Labour, who could substitute some knowledge of industrial relations for the minister's bull-in-the-china-shop methods?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): A supplementary question to the Postmaster General. Is the minister in a position to advise the house whether a decision has been reached in relation to representations made to the Deputy Postmaster General in mid-February on behalf of the postmasters of Canada?

Mr. Kierans: I will look into that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Postmaster General how he squares his statement now, to the effect that the government has been trying for three weeks to arrange for third party adjudication, with his statement in the house on March 4 that there was no necessity for third party adjudication.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is argumentative in nature.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then may I ask a different supplementary question? May I ask the Postmaster General whether, in view of his desire to conduct these discussions in an atmosphere of serenity, he will hold in abeyance the cause of offence, namely the single sortation schedule.

Mr. Kierans: We believe that it is an improvement, Mr. Speaker and that it will increase the productivity of the people who work for the Post Office. As long ago as October 2 the Deputy Minister, then Assistant Deputy Minister, advised both unions verbally, and by letter on October 3, that the department was considering introducing a single mail processing system, together with the five-day week. Since that time and during all that time we have been discussing it with them. We have given ample notice of our intention. We have not in any way disturbed the security of the people involved; their jobs have been guaranteed, although we have pointed out that this could require some reworking of existing methods.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there are very few institutions in Canada the employees of which are doing exactly the same kind of work as their grandfathers did.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether the minister is not now making a statement.

Mr. Hees: Six days work for five days pay.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I might allow one more supplementary.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My supplementary question relates to the single sortation system. Since this does seem to be the bone of contention would it not make sense to suspend it while the discussions are under way?

Mr. Kierans: I do not believe so, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General.

Would he and the government consider the possibility of submitting workers in the public sector to compulsory arbitration since union members reject and break agreements?

Mr. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I did not understand the question. Is the hon. member referring to Rod Service Limited?

Mr. Latulippe: No, Mr. Speaker. I would like to know whether Post Office Department or the government is considering the possibility of establishing compulsory arbitration in the public sector?

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, that question could be directed to the Minister of Labour.

PUBLIC SERVICE

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER—INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF OFFICE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question arises out of the question I asked yesterday in regard to the Queen's Printer. Is the Prime Minister aware that the government, or a department of government, put a sign on the billboard of the printing office in Hull in December, 1968 advising that the position of Queen's Printer was being abolished, following which Mr. Duhamel found himself in general circulation? Since it appears that the Queen's Printer is going to be a speculative possibility, may I ask the Prime Minister whether he intends to appoint a Queen's Printer, so designated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the reorganization act the position now held by the Queen's Printer will be put under another department, that of supply and services, with specific provision in the bill for the post of Queen's Printer. There will be an official, or an office so designated.

The gentleman who until December held the title and post of Queen's Printer has been assigned to other duties within the government. This means that there is no one at this point in time exercising that function. This is because the bill itself has not been adopted by this house. Under the new reorganization act we have to have authority to appoint this gentleman under another department, rather than the department where he is now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, so that there is no mistake, is the Prime Minister's answer this: that as soon as the power is received from parliament there will be a Queen's Printer designated?

Mr. Trudeau: That is the intention of the government. Had the intention been otherwise we would certainly not have brought in a bill with the post of the Queen's Printer specified therein.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TO REDUCE POVERTY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As inflation has increased considerably in each of the six months since the Prime Minister said in this house that the government's main thrust against the growth of poverty would be control of inflation, is the government planning to initiate new moves to stop poverty from increasing at its present steady rate in this country?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is obviously asking the Prime Minister, or a minister, to make a very general statement. It seems to me that it is the kind of statement that ought to be made on motions.

Mr. Hees: Then may I rephrase the question and simply ask the Prime Minister whether he is planning to initiate any new policies in the future—yes or no—to stop poverty from increasing rapidly in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if the opposition wanted to refrain a little bit from asking for new expenditures every time it has the chance, perhaps inflation would not be rising so fast.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not consider that perhaps this negative type of response is responsible for the fact that the majority of the Canadian people now consider the government is doing an unsatisfactory job—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Hees: —as expressed by the latest Gallup poll?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

WATER RESOURCES

SURVEY OF REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the recent study released by the United States interior department regarding the possible importation of water from Canada, I would ask the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources whether the federal government has undertaken a survey of our water resources and our water needs and, if so, when will a report to the house on these studies be made?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, both the department and the government are continually looking at the state and nature of our water resources. I am not sure that we have a study that specifically meets the suggestion included in the report to which the hon. member refers, but I will look at that question.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the minister, if he does not know the circumstances at the moment, whether he would also inquire if two engineering firms have actually been engaged by the government to undertake such a survey?

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—PROGRAM FOR ASSISTANCE OF GROWERS

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture.

[English]

In view of the extremely poor marketing conditions this year, especially in the maritime provinces, will the Minister of Agriculture announce to this house soon a program or programs to come to the aid of potato shippers and growers and the potato industry in general.

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the question of possible actions that might be taken to stabilize the returns to potato producers in the maritime provinces has been referred to the Agricultural Stabilization Board for consideration and recommendation. Discussions are also going on now between my department, producer groups and provincial representatives in those provinces.

TAXATION

WHITE PAPER FOR CONSIDERATION OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Does the government intend to publish a white paper on taxation early in June so that finance committee members may study it before the summer adjournment?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I hope to publish it some time in June but I cannot say exactly when.

FISHERIES

SEALS—REPORT ALLEGING FRAUDULENT FILM PRESENTATION OF KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister seen a report by a senior official of his department, submitted to his predecessor last February, concerning the film made by Artek Film Limited. It shows conclusively that the film fraudulently misrepresents seal killing methods in Canada. The film in question has been circulated in Europe, causing great damage to Canada's reputation and to Canada's seal hunt.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I have heard reference to this film. I will look into the matter further and answer the hon. member in due course.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. My question was about the report made by a senior official of the minister's department to the minister's predecessor last February. Has the minister read the document? Because there is great interest in this matter and because the film affects Canada's reputation abroad, will he be good enough to table the document?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I have not read the document. I will read it first and then consider whether it ought to be tabled.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I will let the minister have a copy of the document, if he would like to read it. Perhaps then he will agree to having it tabled.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At an appropriate time would the minister make a statement on motions in the house on this matter, to clarify the entire question and restore the reputation of our Atlantic sealers. Canada's reputation abroad has suffered because of fraudulent misrepresentation of our sealing methods.

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I will consider the hon. member's representation.

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When can we expect to see implementation of Canada's Territorial Sea and Fishing Zones legislation, enacted in 1964, in order to give us legal control over all fishing operations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, as well as over those who film the seal hunt in the area and distribute the film?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, that question ought to have been addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the matter of the seal hunt is most important, will the minister not agree to make a statement on motions tomorrow, or as soon as possible, and accept my suggestion to table the document I have referred to?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I prefer first to read the document.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INCREASES IN PLYWOOD AND LUMBER PRICES

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry. Have the representations of the woodworkers of British Columbia been considered? They have asked the federal government to intervene in the question of alleged inordinate price increases with respect to plywood and lumber used in British Columbia in the construction of houses.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am discussing this matter with my seatmate, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs.

PILOTAGE

IMPLEMENTATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question.

[Mr. Lundrigan.]

Is he in a position to tell us whether a committee will be established to consider the possibility of implementing the numerous recommendations contained in the report of the Royal Commission on Pilotage? If the answer is negative, in what precise way will the government or the Department of Transport apply the measures proposed by this Commission?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows, interim legislation was presented to the house to cover the immediate situation. It is proposed that more permanent legislation will follow that and be presented to parliament either in a year or two, or as soon as possible, to cover all matters reported on by the Royal Commission on Pilotage.

SHIPPING

CURTAILMENT OF SERVICES FOLLOWING WITHDRAWAL OF ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question relating to the curtailment of shipping services resulting from the withdrawal of government assistance.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that is not a proper supplementary question.

Mr. Lundrigan: May I rephrase the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member will look around he will see other hon. members waiting to ask questions. However if he has a legitimate supplementary question to ask I will allow it.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, before terminating the government's involvement in shipping firms will the minister consult with the minister responsible for regional and economic development in order that he may take an over-all view of the situation?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): If the hon. member will write to me and give the specifics of the aid he is referring to I will undertake to discuss it with the minister responsible for regional development.

An hon. Member: You will never get the letter.

[Later:]

Mr. Lundrigan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The supplementary question Your Honour previously did not allow had to do with a withdrawal of assistance which resulted in 90 families of a certain area being without employment.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

TRANSPORT

EXTENSION OF FREEZE UNDER MARITIME FREIGHT RATES ACT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport, of which I gave him notice. Can he report on the status of the suggestion that the present freeze under the Maritime Freight Rates Act should be extended beyond March 23. I should add that this is to be an interim measure until the transport committee has had a chance to make recommendations.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be possible to make an announcement on this matter well in advance of March 23.

NEWFOUNDLAND—IMPLEMENTATION OF ORDER TO REDUCE PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Would the minister also consider delaying implementation of the Canadian Transport Commission proposal to curtail passenger service in Newfoundland on April 15 until the transport committee has had a chance to report to this house and make recommendations?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have power to do that, unless appeal procedures are followed. So far as I am aware, there has been no appeal. There may be one to the Governor in Council, but I have not seen any. In the event that an appeal is forthcoming, the Governor in Council will look at it quickly.

Mr. McGrath: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister must be aware that the Newfoundland legislature passed an unanimous resolution on the matter. Surely that can be considered an appeal.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

SUGGESTED REPLACEMENT OF POSTMASTER GENERAL

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I had intended asking a question supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have changed my mind and will now direct it to the Prime Minister. Now that the Postmaster General has denied he has been using Gestapo methods—

Some hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. MacInnis: A bunch of idiots.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I ask the hon. member to put his question.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, surely a member of the opposition ought to be allowed to quote the minister who made the original statement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: Since the Postmaster General has denied using Gestapo methods and since a member of his own party last evening called him to task, will the Prime Minister consider replacing him as soon as possible?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much whether that question is in order.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, that was a fair question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: May we have order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As a matter of order and ethics, since a member of his own party called the Postmaster General to task, the Prime Minister ought to consider the matter serious enough to warrant looking into, with a view possibly to replacing the Postmaster General.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a representation which he must assume will be taken into consideration.

STUDENT UNREST

ROYAL COMMISSION TO STUDY DISSENSION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a question for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker, and it is not a provocative one. It is one in which I am sure he has a personal and a long time professional interest, namely the difficulties and dissension taking place in various universities across Canada. It is so widespread it cannot be met by provincial action. Would the Prime Minister consider setting up a royal commission to study student dissension, to the end that, as a result of hearing the views of the students and staffs, a new sense of understanding will be established—something which apparently is getting more and more remote with the passing days?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I doubt very much, Mr. Speaker, whether we would be justified in setting up a royal commission to inquire into an area of provincial administration. Of course if the provinces were to indicate to us that the area got out of hand, was no longer a problem of education and asked us to intervene in that field, I would consider it; but not otherwise.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I suggest to the Prime Minister that this is a matter of national importance? The government pays many, many millions of dollars to the universities and this expenditure is increasing each year. It is for that reason, not the question of provincial jurisdiction, that I make the suggestion. It is a national challenge.

Mr. Trudeau: I realize, Mr. Speaker, that many questions of national importance are under provincial jurisdiction, by virtue of our constitution. It is not because we use the spending power that we are entitled to investigate, legislate or inquire into an area which is not under our jurisdiction.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT OF STUDENTS—ENTRY OF EUROPEANS

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the very bleak and serious outlook for students wishing to secure jobs this summer, is it the intention of the minister and his department to continue the airlift of European students to Canada this summer?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I would like to have more detail on this, Mr. Speaker, before making a definitive answer. There is an exchange of students between Canada and other countries. The Canadian students also benefit from this exchange.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I did not have in mind the exchange. It was a straight direct airlift to Canada. Would the minister ensure every opportunity is given to Canadian students before such airlifts take place?

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The question has been raised regarding summer employment for students. Would the minister be willing to make a statement on motions within the next few days with regard to what he is doing to eliminate the possible unemployment situation for students in the summertime?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sure the hon. member will have noticed in the past period that we have been undertaking a very extensive publicity campaign to acquaint employers with the needs which will occur this summer, and to encourage them to employ students where possible. We have increased our expenditures on this program. I wish to assure my hon. friend that if there are any other steps which can be taken, I will announce them to the house as soon as possible.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I would ask the minister whether his department has investigated the problem, or whether he has informed himself of its dimensions and as to the number of students who will be seeking employment and who, in view of the situation experienced last summer, will likely have difficulty in finding employment. Has the minister informed himself as to the size of the problem which exists, and can he inform the house as to the gaps that seem to exist between the number of students who will be seeking summer employment and the number who would hope to find employment under the conditions he anticipates?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I can assure my hon. friend the whole question of student employment has been under consideration and study, not only within the department but interdepartmentally. It is a serious problem for various reasons well known to my friend. The exact size of the problem is not absolutely clear, except we do know it is a major one. We are exploring every possible method to supply jobs. It will depend to a great extent upon the willingness of employers and others to consider this as a serious problem, and to assist students this summer in finding employment.

TRADE

TEMPORARY CURTAILMENT OF LOG SHIPMENTS TO JAPAN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him if he has received a telegram from the British Columbia section of the International Woodworkers claiming that plants and sawmills are being closed down for the lack of logs at the same time that an increasingly large number of logs are being exported to Japan? Have they asked the government to restrict the export of logs until such time as domestic requirements have been met? If the minister has received this request, could I ask him what reply he has given, and what steps he intends to take to deal with the matter?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I have received a telegram, Mr. Speaker, of the nature described by the hon. member, and I had discussions with the Minister of Lands, Forests and Water Resources for the province of British Columbia. Together we have received an undertaking from the principal log exporting companies that they will not export logs until the supply improves, or until September 1 of this year.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Unless the supplementary question is urgent, I am rather anxious to give an opportunity to other members.

FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS ACT

ACTION TO INCREASE AVAILABILITY OF LOANS

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In light of recent reports that farmers are unable to receive loans under provisions of the recently amended Farm Improvement Loans Act, due to tardiness in establishing appropriate regulations, can the minister say what action if any is being taken to relieve this serious situation?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I believe this is under the jurisdiction of my department, Mr. Speaker. I will look into the question immediately.

Mr. W. M. Howe (Wellington-Grey): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact this legislation was passed October 15, and the farmers are in the process of arranging their spring programs, will the minister see this is looked into immediately?

Mr. Benson: I already said that.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EMPLOYMENT OF ROD SERVICE PERSONNEL

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General.

He recently announced the cancellation of contracts with Rod Service Limited. In those circumstances, could he indicate how many employees of Rod Service Limited have since been hired by his department?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for statistical information and I do not think his question is in order.

[English]

AIR CANADA

SALARIES OF EXECUTIVE OFFICERS

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. In view of the answer provided me yesterday to written question No. 1526 that Air Canada is unwilling to provide information as to the salaries of the Chairman of the Board and the President of Air Canada, will the minister look into this matter and give consideration to making this information public?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The criteria applied in this regard has been that salaries set by order in council were public and those not set by order in council were not divulged. This has been the dividing line. This is a precedent which has been in effect for many years in the House of Commons. Whether it was a correct one, I would not wish to debate at the moment. We are just following a precedent of long standing.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question. In view of the fact that the salary of the President of Canadian National Railways is made available to the public, although they are in competition with Canadian Pacific Railway, and in view of the fact the salary of the President of the C.B.C. is available to the public, although they are in competition—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's supplementary question is argumentative.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL PARKS

BONNE BAY, NFLD.—REQUEST FOR REVIVAL OF SURVEY

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, on March 4 as recorded at page 6175 of Hansard I asked the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development a question with regard to the restart survey work on the proposed national park at Bonne Bay, Newfoundland, as requested by the Newfoundland government. The minister replied that they are considering the matter. I wonder whether he can advise me if a decision has been made.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We reached an agreement last week with the Premier of Newfoundland and we shall go ahead with the establishment of a park at Bonne Bay. Provincial authorities have given us a piece of land for the one they took over for the development of a mine, and they have committed themselves to build a road which will contribute to enhance the beauties of the national park.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

WOODS REPORT—PRESENTATION OF BRIEFS TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Will the various veterans organizations be given an opportunity to present briefs to the Committee on Veterans Affairs before the government or the minister declare what action if any is to be taken on the recommendations contained in the Woods report?

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is up to the members of the committee to decide what witnesses they will hear and what briefs they will receive. I hope and trust they will hear all associations which are interested in presenting briefs to the committee.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, possibly the minister did not hear the last part of my question. Will you give an opportunity to these government agents to present their briefs to the committee before you make your decision on what action will be taken on the recommendations.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member should direct the question to the Chair.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the minister, through you.

Mr. Dube: Mr. Speaker, no decision will be made until the committee has reported. Before that time the committee will have heard all interested associations.

INDUSTRY

TASK FORCE REVIEW OF DEVELOPMENT

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the very slow rates of growth in industrial research and development expenditures over the last few years as reported yesterday by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics will the minister undertake now to tell the house when the task force review of government programs in respect of industrial research and development will be completed?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I would hope the review would be completed in the not too distant future. The particular programs to which the hon. gentleman has referred are now being looked at intensely by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, would the minister indicate to the house whether or not he will table the report.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there will be a report made to the house on behalf of the government.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Are both hon. members rising on a point of order?

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence and with the indulgence of the house, I wonder whether I could put my supplementary question which is very urgent.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I bring to the attention of the hon. member that we have already gone a few minutes beyond the allotted time. There does not seem to be agreement that the hon. member should be allowed to pursue the matter further. The question has been stated by the hon. member and if there is urgency perhaps it might be discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Lundrigan: The only reason I mention it is that we do not get these ministers in the house very often.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FISHERIES

SEALS—REPORT ALLEGING FRAUDULENT FILM PRESENTATION OF KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order because of the urgency and seriousness of the matter I raised today. The Minister of Fisheries has now seen a copy of the report to which I referred. I have a signed copy in my hand. I wonder whether the house would agree to give unanimous consent to having this report tabled. It might clear up some of the misinformation that has been given abroad about the killing of seals in Canadian waters.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The request would have to be made by the minister. If the minister requested the concurrence of the house there would be no objection.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I do have a photostat copy of the report which was sent to me by the hon. member. Perhaps it is a document which was prepared internally in the Department of Fisheries. I notice the date is February 29, 1968. I should like to be sure of the general nature of the document and the circumstances under which it was prepared and submitted to my predecessor before I authorize its tabling.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, now that the minister has referred to the document in the house, under the rules—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I cannot agree with the hon. member's interpretation of the rules.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Monday, March 10, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose yesterday clause 7 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 7—Department established.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, for two or three days the majority of the questions in the house have concerned the Post Office Department. I have listened very carefully and have been very interested in the development that is taking place there. Frankly I am very shocked by the minister's attitude in this regard. When the changes of automation and technical development in new areas took place we were all well aware there would be considerable difficulty experienced, and that this probably would be most apparent in the private sector of our economy.

Developments over a period of several years have indicated that this was not necessarily so. In the private sector in my opinion the technical change has been handled in a much better manner than it has been handled by the federal government. As we are well aware, the circumstances which surrounded the difficulty between the Canadian National Railways employees and their employer resulted in the Freedman report, which simply stated that where a technical change affecting the industry and a number of employees was to be undertaken, the employees would have an opportunity to discuss with representatives of the company their specific difficulties in respect of the technical change before such change was undertaken, and that they would be given an opportunity to participate with management in arriving at the most equitable solution to a particular problem.

Most members of the government agreed that the Freedman recommendation, as it affected technical change and the need for co-operation between employer and employee, was a good thing. Ministers, particularly the Minister of Labour of the day, decided this did not need to be written into legislation, because there was no disagreement in respect of the particular proposition.

Going back to the family history of the Postmaster General, I know that particular family has been quite eloquent in developing new philosophies and new ideas. I am thinking of the Grand Canal project, which involves the diversion of the water system of a whole continent. These things have been thought out and developed almost entirely by one person.

I am surprised to see the Postmaster General doing exactly the same thing so far as the Post Office is concerned. He has sat down in his ivory tower with his background as an economist of some repute and has come up with a number of solutions to postal problems which have probably had a great degree of success. Certainly he is an economist in the academic sense, but his solutions would indicate a total detachment from the realities of practical politics and technology.

I suggest that the minister must consider the application of these solutions and changes in relation to the needs of people. It is very easy to develop a machine that will run eight hours a day because it only requires to be oiled once every eight hours. The human refueling cycle usually requires a break for dinner. The Postmaster General said that the employees could have a break at dinnertime but they could not go back to the Post Office and if they wanted to go back they had to do so on their own time.

This matter has been referred to the Public Service Staff Relations Board in order to arrive at a decision. In arriving at a decision consideration should be given to the people involved in the discussion. I have in mind the Postmaster General, his senior staff and the unions involved. The minister has not allowed this. He has arbitrarily decided that these changes shall be made come hell or high water.

It was very interesting to listen to the president of the Montreal postal employees on television. When he was asked whether a walkout would be legal or illegal he said there was no question but that it would be illegal. Such a walkout would be illegal in a technical sense. These employees have followed the only procedure open to them to arrive at a settlement of the dispute or a conclusion to the negotiations. They have followed their only course by referring the matter to the staff relations board. They have done so in respect of the wash-up question which was decided in favour of the employees. The department was instructed to undertake certain changes. What did the department do? It created another problem and neglected to implement the changes. What alternative is there left to the employees but to go on strike?

The minister made a number of increases in the cost of postage. This is a fundamental matter. It is interesting to note that there has been very little outcry about the increases in postal rates except from those who have been getting a bargain from the postal department. Whether the minister is right in his statement that if private non-profit organizations wish to put out a publication for the benefit of their members then the members should pay for it, I am not prepared to say. In order to do so I would have to know the total value of those publications to the national welfare, and I am not in a position to know this. But I am in a position to know that something is rotten in Denmark if we continue to make exceptions in respect of two United States publications at the expense of the Canadian public. I have had occasion to read both those publications and they contain United States propaganda first, last and always. They do have a small section for the Canadian reader but it is pretty limited so far as Canadian development is concerned.

What will defeat the government and the minister is not the increases in postal rates but the deterioration in the service being provided. There is something wrong with a system that now takes up to five days to move a letter from point A to point B when before the changes were made it took only 12 hours. I am not prepared to say this is the result of the stoppage of Saturday delivery, or because sorting should be done at two o'clock in the morning instead of at four o'clock. I know nothing about the Post Office operations, but I am inclined to think that the minister knows less.

I have had occasion to talk with experts in this field. The more they told me about what takes place in the Post Office the more confused I became. They tried in a few minutes to explain to me the sorting system and why an employee must pay for the cards he uses for sorting purposes. I find this a very complicated business which is not exactly the same in one place as it is in another.

It is my belief that the Postmaster General sat down with a number of people to draft ways of putting the postal operation in the black. The blueprint they devised is now being superimposed on every aspect of the Post Office operation. If people were sheep perhaps he would be successful, but they are not sheep. They have been trained in a certain way over a long period of time and now find it difficult to change, particularly when they realize that the change is not advantageous to the Post Office Department or to themselves. They are opposed to a general making decisions for soldiers in the field he has never seen. I suggest that the minister should concern himself with this type of criticism. The Prime Minister and other members of the cabinet should also be concerned with this problem.

When the postal rates were increased I was surprised there was not more complaint. When Ontario brought in a 5 per cent sales tax I thought it would mean the defeat of the provincial government but that was not the case. Money does not mean everything. The price of things has gone up so fast and so often in this country that no one seems to be concerned.

A viewpoint was presented on television last night in the form of a letter to the Postmaster General to the effect that this country could stand a 10 cent charge for first class mail. I certainly think we could raise the rate, but I suggest to the minister that he cannot do this while at the same time allowing the service to deteriorate. There is absolutely no excuse for having less efficient mail services in northern Ontario than were provided 40 years ago. Mail service has deteriorated tremendously in the last five years, and I think every member of the house has received complaints in this regard.

Let me give an example of the kind of complaint we receive. I had a conversation recently in an elevator. I asked the operator how the mail service was in Carp. He said he did not live in Carp but that he had recently experienced some difficulty with mail services. He informed me that he received rent in respect of a house he owned. About the third or fourth day of each month he would complain to the man paying the rent because he had not received the cheque. He said that the individual would then tell him he had sent the cheque on the 26th or 27th of the previous month. This mail would travel from Eastview to Cyrville. On one such occasion the letter was dated on the 27th of the preceding month and was delivered on the 9th of the month for which the rent was due. Had the individual given the letter to the carrier it probably would have been delivered the same afternoon. The most recent example he gave related to a cheque mailed on January 27 and delivered on March 9. The distance involved was no more than five miles. I am sure every member of the house is aware of the fact that the postal service has deteriorated at a time when we are paying more for the service.

We are entitled to know why postal employees are upset and why there should be strikes. The department is providing these employees with more money than ever before. We are not providing them with more money with the expectation that they should go on strike for some other reason. Surely these things can be settled.

The Post Office Department has always stunk to high heaven, and we have always hoped this would be corrected. The department used to be the source of the greatest patronage in the government. Political rather than competent people were appointed. Despite this, the movement of mail from point A to point B was carried out in the most economic and speedy way possible. That is not happening now. In my area the postmaster allows the transportation of air mail, yet only one municipality has air mail service. The air mail service is much slower than that provided by train or truck if it were handled in the proper manner. This used to be the situation. I am not suggesting that the minister should go backward in this respect. However, I think we made a very bad mistake when in many areas we took the sorting cars off the trains. In the case of some railways, the money paid for the sorting cars constituted the difference between making and not making a profit. The service provided in this fairly elementary way meant that a letter sent from point A to point B was delivered in the most economic and speedy manner. We have never been able to duplicate that service.

The people in my area say there is no point in sending by mail cheques for an operation if they have to establish in the area a sum of money that has to be related in a general way to their computer system or if they have to supply two cheques, one of which is issued from a local bank account and finally brought back, attached to another cheque and run through a computer system. They say they cannot send money from Toronto to northern Ontario fast enough for it to get into the hands of people on Thursday or Friday, although in the past they could do this if it was sent from Toronto on Tuesday. Therefore there is something wrong with the system. I have brought this problem to the attention of the department.

I am surprised also at the lack of initiative the Postmaster General is allowing to the district officers. They are not exercising the discretion they had before. I have never asked them to do anything in a political sense. I have always felt that they were qualified to make decisions in their jurisdictions. I now find they are not making decisions and have not attempted to do so because they do not know what the Postmaster General has decided. Anything they do may be thrown out. Obviously, morale is very low at this level of the department.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I shall make only some brief remarks on clause 7 concerning the future Department of Communications.

First I would like to say outright that the future Minister of Communications is able to defend himself. He gave strong evidence of it in the past, yet some situations appear so illogical that we should try and correct them. As other hon. members I often hear in this house that the government is spending a lot, that budgets are increasing tremendously and that taxes are going up. However, as soon as a responsible minister dares to introduce reforms to save money and to modernize some services, the very same ones who were blaming the government for being extravagant complain that taxes are increasing.

Yet it should be agreed that two and two are four. One cannot blame the government for spending too much and increasing taxes today and at the same time ask it to spend even more tomorrow. That does not make any sense, Mr. Chairman. As a matter of fact, almost every day those who are complaining about the fact that the government wants to cut expenditures are the first to suggest that it should invest millions of dollars in some cases. In my opinion, that sounds somewhat illogical.

It is obvious that everyone is affected by reforms and savings, Mr. Chairman, and no one thinks that they can be approved willingly. In my opinion such reforms should be possible in the difficult situation in which we now find ourselves, when all governments in the world are faced with austerity measures made necessary by the economic situation. Hon. members should help all Canadians to understand why they have to tighten their belts even if it hurts. In fact, it must be done to avoid a worsening situation due to more serious financial and economic problems and perhaps even devaluation of our dollar.

I think that the validity of this argument should be obvious to those who want to consider the situation objectively. It is so simple in fact that there should not be any need to stress the point.

I think that the future Minister of Communications must have some gumption to impose measures as drastic as these while facing the opposition's big guns.

He certainly does not do it because he invented all those reforms as the new Postmaster General. He is surely doing it, and we know it, because for years the experts in his department have been considering these reforms and trying to develop them. In fact the minister has finally decided, in view precisely of the circumstances I mentioned earlier, to introduce them to the Canadian people. However, this discussion shall probably not be wasted. Some aspects of the matter should perhaps be changed a little. The minister understands this, because he made some changes to the legislation he wanted to implement.

But, Mr. Chairman, this is not what I want most to point out. I heard yesterday or the day before on the radio a speech by an official of one of the Postal Unions—I understand his name is Décarie—who said that the postal workers would go on strike, whether it was legal or not. I hear hon. members approving those people and telling us that, even though it is illegal, it must be done.

Mr. Chairman, I think that it should not be done. If hon. members are willing to approve Canadians who challenge the government by taking illegal action, I feel that we are heading for anarchy.

That reminds me of an opinion I expressed when the house granted the employees of the civil service the right to strike, at which time I was sitting in the limbo of opposition. I voted against the passing of the legislation and warned the president of the Treasury Board at that time that he would be faced with certain problems before the year was over. The minister answered then: No, I have enough confidence in the public employees' sense of duty to know that they will not abuse the right to strike which we are going to grant them. Today we have the proof that they are abusing it, even when they recognize that they are doing so illegally, and there are hon. members who stand behind them.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that is intolerable. It opens the door to chaos and anarchy, and it is high time we put an end to that.

I would even say that union members are beginning to be fed up with strikes called for any or no reason. The Canadian public in general, the taxpayers who are always asked to foot the bill for the settlement of these problems, are fed up also and they protext strongly. In fact, a certain number of union members have had their fill of being involved in costly strikes which, in many cases, are called for trivial reasons.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that when union leaders loudly proclaim on radio, on television or in public, that a strike, illegal or not, will take place, not only should they be taken to task but they should also be punished, if order is to be maintained in this country.

Mr. Chairman, the time is nearing when the majority of Canadians will fustigate these trade-unions, which were once justified, which have rendered and are still in a position to render services to the working class which constitutes a useful pressure group. Because of some irresponsible leaders and agitators, trade-unions are acting in such a way that the disorder, the chaos and the anarchy which are prevailing in our Canadian society will go against the workers, the wage-earners, who are always the most seriously affected.

I wish to protest against such an attitude. It should be enough, I think, to encourage the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) to stand firm against such blackmail as that to which he is being subjected in some circles.

• (3:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Howe: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity presented by this government reorganization bill, particularly that part of the bill having to do with communications, to bring to the attention of the minister some of the things about which other hon. members have been speaking in the house and about which a great many of us have received voluminous correspondence. I do not know whether the cause was the increase in letter postal rates or the increase in the cost of postage for periodicals, but I have never had as much correspondence on any subject during my period in the House of Commons as I have had lately in connection with Post Office matters. The reason may be that the new minister is seeking to sweep everything clean and make many changes as well as cause disruption among many people.

At any rate, I want to add my voice to all the people who have complained about the fact that so many post offices are being closed. This is going to happen or has happened to a great many post offices in my area, and it has caused a great deal of disruption to people who have depended on their local post offices not only for their mail but for sending postal money orders and doing a great deal of their postal business. The elimination of these local post offices will make a difference in their way of life, and in the case of some older people it will create real hardships. Therefore I think there are quite a few cases which the minister should look into.

Let us consider what happens when a small railway station is going to be closed. In such cases the people in the area are notified and if they want to present their case, which they used to do to the board of transport commissioners, they have an opportunity to voice their opposition to the action that is going to be taken. Sometimes I think this might be a good idea in connection with local post offices. I suggest to the Postmaster General that in some of these cases a hearing in the area might be informative to the people and might stop some of the complaints that are made to members of parliament, although it is only through the medium of correspondence of this kind that we can really find out everything that is going on in our ridings.

I have also had a great deal of correspondence, as have other members, in regard to increased postage on periodicals such as farm papers and church publications. As we know, many of these periodicals are non-profit publications and are issued by organizations which make a study in a specialized field. Whether the periodical deals with agriculture or business, this specialized information is of great value to the people who receive these papers. For instance, in the field of agriculture so much change is taking place these days that it is only through reading such periodicals and farm papers that our farmers can keep up to date. So I think that another look at the increases in postal rates might be worthwhile, and I am sure it would be of great value to the publishers of these periodicals. Many of them may have to fold up their businesses because they will not have the financial means to continue in operation.

I am not sure that the money supposed to be saved by the Post Office Department through increases in the rates will be of the great value that the Postmaster General and some members of the government think it will because I feel that the pressure on our economy has increased as a result. Much of the legislation that has been brought into the house by the government has had a similar effect. It is rather interesting to note also that in spite of the increase in postage I have never had so many complaints about the type of service being given by the Post Office Department. In fact, I have heard complaints that it takes three or four days for a letter to travel a distance of 10 or 12 miles. Such a situation is intolerable. One of the greatest problems is that the weekly newspapers are having great difficulty in getting their papers to their patrons who do not live in the area.

The main reason that I rose to speak this afternoon has to do with a situation that has developed in my own riding. It concerns a community where the government has decided a new post office should be built and the people in that community are complaining bitterly that they do not want it. I am referring to the village of Elora. Perhaps not everybody understands that the people in some villages are very happy living with their traditions and with certain buildings in their community. To bear this out I would like to read an editorial that was sent to me by one of my constituents. It has to do with the closing of the post office in Elora and appeared in the Elora Express shortly after Christmas. It is headed "Quite Unnecessary", and reads:

> Rumours persist that Elora is to have a new post office. There are a number of things that Elora needs but a new post office is the least of its needs. We have a post office which is suitable to one of the oldest villages in the district and is a good solid structure. All we can get is one of the modern shoe boxes which are dotting the land, and, by the time we get a new bank—if we ever do—one more landmark will be gone. A few more and Elora will be as sterile of atmosphere as Guelph.
> We feel that there should be some protest before we find that the present office is demolished. It undoubtedly needs more space but there is plenty of land available for an addition without ruining the character of the main street. Moreover, if the present minister responsible for post offices is so all-fired anxious to effect economies he might take this into consideration. It will take a lot of penny postage to knock a building down and build a new one.

[Mr. Howe.]

The next paragraph indicates that a protest to their member of parliament might be considered and that some thought should be given to the matter. I have certainly had protests from a number of individuals who have written me in connection with the action that is being taken in this case. The editorial continues:

> As near as we can find out nobody wants a new post office. One is not necessary and it is downright wasteful to eliminate good buildings when so much thought is being given to their preservation.

This editorial is one of the reasons I am speaking in the debate this afternoon. I made a protest to the Minister of Public Works. May I say by way of interpolation that I sometimes wonder whether the regional desks are not already working in some parts of Canada because, in the case of Elora, the member of parliament representing that area was not consulted or even told that a new post office was going to be built in that village. It was not until somebody stumbled upon it when they saw people looking for a new site for the post office that the people in the community were made aware of the plans, and immediately they were up in arms. I do not blame them. This community has a population of between 1,200 and 1,500 of whom over 400 people signed a petition saying they do not want a new post office.

Another editorial appeared in the Elora Express following a meeting, which should have been held in the first place of officials of the Department of Public Works and the planning board of this community. It reads in part:

> Members of the planning board present were J. Andrews, P. Buchanan, R. Marston and H. Waind.
> Mr. Blackwell opened the discussion by stating that the department's only function was to find the most economical method of providing the facilities that the post office requires. From their investigations it would be more costly to renovate the old building with an addition, than to build a new post office.

• (3:30 p.m.)

As to that, Mr. Chairman, I do not know. Many of us live in old houses, but I imagine we could put them up against the houses being built today any time. After 80 or 90 years our houses will still be standing when many of the new buildings put up today will no longer exist.

Mr. John Andrews, an architect in that area, asked whether it was not important to consider Elora's special needs as a village whose main industry is tourism. He said:

> Elora's history is manifested by its buildings, and the present post office is the most significant in the city square, as well as being a symbol of the village.

He suggested a parallel to Toronto's old City Hall. I should point out that this little community has always been greatly appreciated by visitors and vacationists. People from all over the province go to see the well-known Elora rocks on the Grand River. Since a conservation program was undertaken by the Grand River Conservation Commission a beautiful park and terrace have been laid out along the river and in the summer thousands of tourists and campers take advantage of the facilities provided. In discussing this matter I think all these things should be taken into consideration.

Perhaps I should summarize the reply by Mr. Webb, a member of the staff of the Department of Public Works who appeared at that meeting. He said that from the political point of view it might be best to renovate but his department, representing the federal government, was only interested in the dollars and cents aspect. I ask the committee to note the emphasis placed on dollars and cents. Mr. Webb explained that union contracts with the Post Office demanded direct lighting, air conditioning, lunch rooms and, in a village the size of Elora, 14,000 square feet of working space. He told the meeting that in his opinion it would economically be impossible to renovate the present building though on some further questioning—and this is the point—he agreed a detailed study had not been undertaken. In other words, the decision was made to build a new post office although the department had not even gone into the question how much it would cost to renovate the old one.

In these circumstances I believe I have a perfect grievance to bring before the minister. Before any action is taken a thorough examination of the situation ought to be made so that, if at all possible, the old building can be retained, with the facilities which the Post Office says it requires being provided in a renovated structure. This, in my view, would be far better than destroying the old building completely. As the writer of the editorial on this subject observed, we all know how beautiful the new post office would be. Most of these new buildings are like shoeboxes. They may be functional but they certainly do not commend themselves architecturally to those who travel round our country.

I maintain that the post office now in use in Elora should be preserved. Buildings of this type add to the attractiveness of the community. Before any definite action is taken by the department I feel that the people of Elora should be consulted. Better public relations would certainly exist if this course of action were followed.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure for me to say a few words on the bill before us and on the present situation which is not very hopeful and which needs to be corrected.

I heard earlier the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) say that someone had to take his responsibilities. In my opinion, it is up to the government and the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) to assume them.

As the hon. member for Trois-Rivières pointed out earlier, some trade-unionists are ambitious and unscrupulous when it comes to abiding by the rules and the law.

Then, if honesty is a thing of the past, if it is no longer possible to control anything, let the State take its responsibilities. Earlier, I asked a question to the Postmaster General who told me that it was not his responsibility but that of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey). I think the Minister of Labour and the Postmaster General should co-operate; and it is high time they did.

Mr. Chairman, it is the government's responsibility to establish compulsory arbitration within the public sector, because with our inaction and our casualness we are paralysing the whole economy and admitting that those who are wrong are in the right.

As to us, of the Ralliement Créditiste, we are prepared to assume our responsibilities. If compulsory arbitration is necessary, it should be imposed. The government should take its responsibilities, because it is more than ever time that it did, and we shall see if it is capable of doing it. If nothing else can be done, the government must act. I think that the majority of the Canadian people would be satisfied if such a step were taken. I think there is a limit to everything. When ambitious people go too far, it is imperative to promulgate regulations, in order to curb their ambitions. However we must also set stopping points as well as landmarks.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the Postmaster General and the officials of his department have the responsibility to make decisions. The Postmaster General has taken a few decisions already, and he should not be afraid of taking this one. In fact, as far as the increase in postal rates is concerned, he was not afraid to assume his responsibilities, even though he knew it would increase the cost of living, decrease the buying power of the citizens and deteriorate the economic situation for everyone in Canada.

At that time, he believed it was a good step to take and he was not afraid to take it. Therefore he should not be afraid to impose compulsory arbitration now, as the great moral law which would start the economic system running and would maintain it in a state of balance. Then, the government must at all costs take its responsibilities.

I have not looked fully into the situation, but it seems to me it is time to establish rules which will ensure a certain degree of balance in the economy. As long as there are soulless, ambitious men, prepared to do wilful damage and to break everything, we will have to enact laws to bring them back to reason. Instead of destroying, we should build. Therefore, let us stop those who destroy Mr. Chairman.

I should like to speak briefly about my riding. I never had the opportunity to tell the minister what is going on in my riding and what is needed there.

Some things have been done in the past, but the minister did not hesitate to make cutbacks. In my hometown, for instance, we had been promised home delivery service three years go, and the municipality was made to spend money under the pretext that the government would start the service. But this Postmaster General applied the axe to the project, and told us that it was no longer time to think about letter carrier service. He told us the plan had been postponed. Now, municipal authorities are asking for a home delivery service, since they have spent several thousand dollars to install street signs and to number houses and buildings.

In addition, three years ago, the government said that the Department of Public Works would build five post offices in the Compton riding. Two have been built and the construction of the other three was postponed by the Postmaster General under the pretext of saving. Since the situation has changed and winter works have been cancelled, he finds it impossible to build those small post offices.

The government bought some lots on which it intended to build post offices; however, it decided later on not to proceed with the construction. Needless to say that the citizens living in the parishes where the post offices were to be built are quite disappointed.

Since the government had promised to have the buildings erected three years ago and the project, involving three small post offices only, has been postponed for three years, I feel that the government should at least make an effort to fulfil some of the minor promises it made in my area. I receive lots of correspondence from these municipal authorities; they keep asking me why construction is being delayed, why I do not urge the government to introduce legislation that would benefit my constituency. Since I am criticized for allegedly doing nothing to correct the situation, I wish to call the minister's attention to it. If the minister can correct it—I do not ask him the impossible—we would appreciate it, for in our constituency we pay taxes as in all the others, and the federal government has never done much for us. In fact, we have asked for all kinds of assistance, in order to improve the tourist trade; but nothing was done and all those projects fell through.

I would therefore ask the minister to consider the situation and, if possible, to build those two small post offices which would render a great service to the population.

Mr. Chairman, I would have lots of things to say in connection with that bill, but I do not wish to extend the debate. Once again, before concluding, I would ask the government and the opposition to assume their responsibilities, and to put some order in our mail service, since it is the most important of all. Once there was no better organized department than the Post Office Department but now it is far from operating satisfactorily.

In my opinion, that unbalance should not exist and the only way to settle the situation would be to resort to compulsory arbitration. We are here to represent the people of Canada and to take our responsibilities. As the hon. member for Trois-Rivières said earlier, if there is someone who should take responsibiilties and do something to cope with this situation, it is the government.

A while ago, the hon. member for Trois-Rivières stated that the economic situation is critical not only in Canada but throughout the world, that all the countries are faced with the same insuperable economic conditions, that we are facing a terrible economic crisis and that we must absolutely tighten our belt.

I would say however to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that while it is well and good to tighten our belt, but we must not allow others not to wear any. Many have none at all. They benefit nevertheless from the whole economy, from the increase in interest rates and capital of all kinds, with the more or less tacit consent of the present government.

So these people or institutions must assume their responsibilities. If they fail to do so, the government will have to do its duty and intervene.

Mr. Rose: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak in this debate today I should like to bring to the attention of the minister a few matters that affect the people of my constituency of Fraser Valley West. I should also like to examine briefly the philosophy behind some of the recent moves that have been made in the Post Office Department. Like the hon. member for Timiskaming who spoke earlier, I am not an expert in Post Office procedure and do not pretend to be. However, I am the perfect recipient, the punching bag, if you like, for some of the complaints that have been made by people in my riding, and as the member for the constituency it is my duty to bring them to the attention of the minister.

I believe that the Postmaster General is attempting to run the Post Office Department like a stock exchange. I think he would agree with me that people are not stock, not even livestock. They are people and they resent any kind of fiat or orders from on high on matters that affect them especially when they are not given a proper opportunity to make their representations or adequate time in which to do so. This sort of thing is resented by the people generally, no matter what department or government agency is concerned, and by me also.

I am sorry to say this because the minister made a profound impression upon me during the height of the recent Liberal leadership campaign. I felt that he would have been the best man for the future of Canada to lead the government party. I do not feel this way any longer, however, because he has departed from the role of an articulate visionary of Canada's future to one of petulant arrogance. All of his defence mechanisms are working overtime, as one who is insecure in the decisions he has reached. He adopts a kind of rigidity or inflexibility that indicates to me a contempt for the people with whom he deals.

In my constituency two historic post offices have been marked for the axe. The one at Port Hammond has been given a partial reprieve but only at the expense of denying the people there a postal walk service in the area. The people have been told, in essence, that they can have a postal walk service or a post office but they cannot have both, and as the matter stands now they can take it or leave it. I ask the minister, why not a postal walk service originating in Haney that is also co-ordinated with the post office in Hammond? The post office in Hammond is particularly useful to the business community there. Surely anybody who is able to grapple with the problems of communications and the various technical problems connected with satellites ought to be able to solve a simple problem like this. Therefore I bring it to the minister's attention and I hope he can see his way clear to do something about it.

The other post office that is slated for extinction is in Langley in the community of Walnut Grove. I have received a huge petition from the people in that area which indicates, to me at least, that the residents there need the post office. This post office is right on the edge or fringe of suburbia, and the whole area will certainly be one of rapid growth during the next few years.

But what I protest most vehemently is the manner in which I have learned about these problems. I learned about these premeditated moves affecting postal services in my constituency not from the minister's office but from people who live there. They have written to me about them, but I do not think that is good enough. As the member who represents these people in this house, surely I should not be the last to know. Surely the minister's sense of public relations and common courtesy ought to indicate that the member representing the constituency should be the first to be advised if such moves are contemplated.

I am certain other hon. members have received this kind of information. I have not. Such information may go to the various regional desks, and I suppose my people could learn there what is going on. But I was kept completely in the dark, and I think that is a poor way to operate. I am certain that members supporting the government have always been given the chance to break to their constituents news of pork barrel measures, which sometimes include post offices. Similar courtesy ought to be extended to other hon. members, who should be given information even when the news to be conveyed is bad. When a member does not receive the kind of information I have been speaking of he should raise hell. That is exactly what I am trying to do.

There is an alarming trend in this parliament toward emasculating the backbencher. May I remind the minister that I was elected exactly as he was elected. Rules or no rules, I will bring forward whatever concerns my constituency. I was sent here to do that. I hope to represent my constituents as well as anyone can, or even better.

I do not intend to dwell on the labour troubles within the Post Office. Major and wildcat strikes have occurred since the minister put his hand on the helm, demonstrating that everything is not well in the Post Office. Since other speakers have discussed Post Office troubles at great length I will not be repetitious. I simply say to tne minister that on the third strike he will probably be out because he has hit many foul balls already this session.

The hon. member for Trois-Rivières referred to certain union officials and their responsibility to the public. I suggest to the hon. member that certainly there are irresponsible union officials, but there are also irresponsible members of parliament and cabinet ministers.

Mr. Orlikow: Union officials do not change sides.

Mr. Rose: No, they do not. I remind hon. members that neither cabinet ministers nor union members like to be pushed around. If union officials feel they must act in a certain way to receive the kind of justice they consider they deserve, they at least take those steps they feel are necessary whether or not there is legislative support for them. We have seen that sort of thing happen throughout history. Such activities are carried on not only by unions but by all groups with aggrieved members.

In justifying his new satellite program the minister said to members of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on December 9, 1968, as reported at page 163 of Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence No. 9:

> Mr. Kierans: Our purpose in going into this satellite is social objectives; they may be political too, but let us say, social objectives as the way of unifying the country, that that one satellite as far as we are concerned just blankets the whole of Canada—
> That satellite would be devoted to Canadian aims and objectives and will be programmed, I would imagine, in a way that is acceptable by the Canadian people and their cultural requirements or needs.

I do not object to that kind of outlook. I think the minister will agree that Canada has a long history of undertaking costly programs for social objectives. Some examples are protective tariffs for central Canadian manufacturers, the Canadian National Railways, equalization grants, the seaway, the maritime freight rates legislation and, finally, the C.B.C. Expenditures in these areas were undertaken for social objectives. Why, then, must the minister feel that Post Office operations must function on a ruthless balance sheet? Surely there are good social reasons for considering the Post Office as primarily a service to meet the social and cultural aspirations of the Canadian people and not just as a business. Do non-profit cultural, religious, union and scholarly papers and journals not rate higher in bringing about Canadian unity and identity than Time and Life magazines? To that argument advanced by other hon. members the minister replied in the typically flippant way we have come to expect, and I paraphrase his remarks: "Certain publications want to continue and have the public of Canada pay the shot." What is so unusual about this? How can we have discourse on a political, cultural, religious or social level in this country if non-profit publications in these fields cannot be supported for the public's good or for social reasons? Why does the government pick on the Post Office particularly when attempting to balance its books?

I must protest against the way in which the Post Office has treated box holders, especially those living in rural areas. This year they face double the charges they paid last year. When postal rates went up we knew that rates for Post Office boxes would also rise. But increasing those rates by 100 per cent is far beyond the increase contemplated by many. After all, those who buy stamps have not had to pay double for their stamps. Box holders also buy stamsps, but they do not have the privilege of rural route services, nor do they have a householder service. These large rate increases discriminate against those who do not have any alternative postal service available to them.

Finally, I submit that the minister is moving too rapidly and is not consulting sufficiently those who will be affected by government policies in this field. He does not seem to know what will be the long-term ramifications of his proposals. The public good cannot be measured in terms of balance sheets. In short, the greatest failure of the minister responsible for communications lies in the fact that he has failed to communicate.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to miss this opportunity to voice the remarks I have heard in my constituency about the postal service offered in various municipalities. My sole purpose is to help the minister and to advise him of the present conditions arising from his instructions since he took over this department. I would like to be as objective as possible, and I would like him to pay attention to my brief remarks.

Many merchants, industrialists, stock brokers and insurance brokers have complained to me about the slowness of the mail service recently. I agree with them that they now pay more for less service. I do not want to blame the staff of the local post office in Saint-Hyacinthe, nor the rural carriers in my riding, but I want to point out that they have to do in five days the work they did before in six. This does not apply to rural carriers.

In his first speech in the house, the Prime Minister said at least four times that he was most eager to establish a just society across the country. It is amazing to see that the establishment of a just society requires the minister to have recourse to injustice. Surely, it is not just to ask employees to do in five days what previously took them six days, nor is it just to charge Canadian publishers more than foreign publishers for the postal service.

In my opinion, the minister means well but he has not considered long enough the consequences of his actions; however, perhaps it is not too late to remedy a situation which is truly unfair to every Canadian, since we are now discussing the reorganization of the various departments.

I should also like to draw the minister's attention to one point that could be improved in the householders' list. At the present time, users at the various post offices or on the various rural routes are identified by one initial only. It often happens that on the same rural route, two, three or even four Christian names have the same initial. The same thing also occurs on other rural routes of the same locality, and the people who deliver the mail are puzzled. They make mistakes, and although they do their best, they give poor service to the users of the postal service. As this work is done by independent companies, I think the minister should insist, when those lists are drawn up, that the first names appear in full thereon. It would then be much easier, when the addressee's name is, for instance, Mr. Armand So and So, to speed up delivery by writing down the addressee's Christian names rather than his initials only. A letter intended for Mr. Armand So and So could as well end up at Mr. Alfred So and So's place. I believe the minister will want to correct such an anomaly.

Now, as far as my constituency is concerned, I have noted that in several areas neither the number of users nor their names appear in the householders' list. To obtain such information, one must, first of all, pay $2 for this publication; then one must pay an additional sum if one wishes to obtain a list that is not included and one must get in touch with the companies that have compiled those lists.

I believe the minister would help his employees, as well as those who need such information, if he made the required corrections.

Those are the comments I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman.

[English]

Mr. Bigg: There are several matters, Mr. Chairman, I would like to discuss in this debate. I hope that by having a new minister something will be done about an old complaint of mine concerning the Post Office. I was laughed at when I mentioned it before in the house, but apparently it is only members of parliament belonging to the party in power who are consulted regarding local problems. This is a cynical attitude. If the minister requires information concerning the district of Pembina in northern Alberta, he does not have to go to defeated candidates, would-be candidates or would-be senators. I will give him up to date and detailed information on anything connected with my district. I have lived there for 15 years and am acquainted with these people. I have their interests at heart more than my own best interests. I hope that the 11 years I have been in this house have proved that. I hope a new minister is appointed to this department. Some of the troubles are no doubt passing troubles. With a new minister we should be able to look forward to the formation of new policies by the department.

Members of parliament were not consulted about the redistribution of ridings. One need only look at a map of Canada and the redistribution of seats to see what a cynical waste of local talent it was not to consult the members of the House of Commons. The people of Canada have respect for us or we would not be here. Many of our constituents feel we are overpaid. I do not happen to think so. I think a good member of parliament is underpaid. A member of parliament who is not conscientious should not be paid at all. If we are going to be respected in our ridings, we must adopt this attitude and give the people service. If all members of parliament and members of the provincial legislatures in this country would do their work there would be very little need for an ombudsman. In my opinion there would be no need whatever for regional desks, more bureaucracy and more expense for the already overburdened taxpayer. There is no need for us to do our homework and keep in touch with our constituents if the government of the day cynically disregards the well-intentioned and detailed information which we are willing and able to give them.

I intend to write the Postmaster General in connection with the proposal to build a new post office in a village where the population is shrinking by the day. There are quite adequate postal facilities in that village. I personally canvassed at least half of the people of the village and most of those with whom I spoke were of the opinion that no local improvement whatsoever was required. A first class, up to date post office will probably be built even though it is not required.

Many post offices are being closed down. The over-all reason is economy. I plead with the Postmaster General that before any more post offices are closed a careful survey be made to ensure that veterans do not lose their means of earning a living. I know they do not make a very good living from these post offices but in a great many cases they also own little stores. Without the post office attached to it the store alone might be a very small drawing card. The revenue from the post office may be quite small and may represent only 20 per cent of the total revenue. Nevertheless the post office is a drawing card and sometimes the additional revenue keeps the person from going broke and having to move to a city only to become yet another statistic on the relief rolls of our ever-burgeoning cities.

These are examples of the just society about which the people on the hustings think. This is not an election year and I do not suppose next year will be either. But these people do not forget; they are looking for the just society not only from members of the Liberal party but from all politicians at all levels. I say, for goodness sake let us not be cynical about this. The Liberal party is a great party, but if its members reach the point where they think they are the only people who have an interest in the future of Canada the nation will suffer and we will all go down the drain together. There are a great many people who, although they do not happen to be associated with the Liberal party, have the welfare of Canada at heart. It would be a great mistake for anyone to think that any party in Canada has a monopoly on these sentiments.

I should not have to say this but I believe it is necessary because of the way I am treated. I have not had even one letter in six years in which my opinion regarding the Post Office has been requested. I represent a big district with 58,000 people. During the 15 years I have been there I have visited almost every home in the area. Because of this I have detailed information which is at the disposal of every minister of the Crown. If they do not use it, it is they who are delinquent, not I nor the people whom I represent. If that has been the standard in the past and is the standard now, then new trails should be blazed; we cannot start too soon.

Far too much cynicism is contained in press reports and in other media. It is pouring in over the borders from other countries. Democracy has strong enemies at home and abroad. Unless we stick together and close our ranks I think they will get us one at a time. In the world today those people with really democratic ideas are hopelessly outnumbered. We will have to work very hard during the next 25 years if there is to be any democracy at all in the 21st century.

If the regional desks which are being set up are to work and not be negative they should contain research facilities which would be available to hon. members as well. I do not pretend to know all the answers in respect of my district. If there is to be a federal government agency in Alberta to keep the Prime Minister's office properly informed in respect of information which I do not have and which I perhaps cannot obtain, such as specialized information in respect of soils or social conditions, there might be occasions when I would be very happy to use these facilities. I do not think these regional desks should deteriorate into a means by which the government could oversee through the back door those people whom the electors of Canada have already chosen to be their representatives here, as poorly educated or poorly informed as we may be. There should be team work. I know that the present Postmaster General, who is an academician as well as a parliamentarian, can see the practicality involved in putting these things together. There is a need to close ranks and fight this thing together.

The present situation in which the Postmaster General finds himself with regard to strikes is probably due, I believe, to the fact that he has not held his portfolio very long. When the rates of pay are increased in one section of the Post Office this does not necessarily mean that everything is fixed up somewhere else. One can be lulled into a false feeling of security. I believe the minister has probably learned by now that one should never use force to counteract force, and a strike is a form of force, unless one is prepared to carry it through. I found that out from my police work. I never attempted to arrest a man unless I had a warrant in my pocket and the right under the law to do it.

These people are experienced in their line. They have done their homework in respect of labour law. They know how far public opinion is prepared to go; they know how far they have gone before and they know how loath governments are to risk their future. We are all expendable. The minister is as expendable as I am as a private member. It may be a sad experience to find out just how lonesome one can be in a situation like this. One should not bluff. There are a great many of us who understand the responsibility the minister has. When one puts forth his best efforts to provide services there is every excuse for a little haste, but the people are unforgiving; they do not understand. All they know is that the mail is late and sometimes they even become angry when they think it might be late. They do not know the time that has been spent by the minister and others in an effort to thresh out these things.

We too are worried because the unrest appears to be just another outbreak of the unrest that is everywhere. I believe the press and other news media should be tolerant. The seriousness of a situation like this should never be exaggerated. We should all be ready to give positive help if we can and try to consider what we would do if we were in the same situation. I am very aware that the position of the minister is a most unenviable one. By and large the postal system in Canada is one of which we can be proud. I only hope that there will be a satisfactory solution to this matter. I hope that when the minister is thinking of the problems that lie ahead he will make use of the good will there is in this house. If it is necessary to cut new ground, then let us cut new ground even at a time when things do not look too good in the minister's department. This may be one of those times when the darkest hour comes before the dawn.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks particularly in respect of the Crown corporation which is being mooted for the Post Office Department. Before we get into a kettle of fish such as the Crown corporation that the Postmaster General is thinking of setting up, I believe it would be worth while to know first of all what the cost of this creation will be. When we look into the cost to the Canadian people we find that already it has cost over $250,000 for a preliminary report. I see the minister is not in his seat so I cannot direct my question to him. Perhaps the reason he is having trouble with Post Office employees can be related to the matter of communication. I think the people are entitled to know what control they will have over this corporation. If it turns out to be a monster, what will happen?

I have heard over and over again ministers suggest in this house under questioning that crown corporations are independent bodies, that we have nothing to do with them and that we must not interfere in their operation. This is the answer we expect to get even though the cost may go up and up. We will have the same control we now have over the C.B.C., whose expenditures have skyrocketed year by year. The representatives of the people will have no control. As someone suggested the other day, perhaps this move is a foxy way of getting rid of the word "royal". I suppose this word will disappear from use in respect of Post Office services. This is just another calculated reorganizational move similar to that which took place in regard to the Queen's Printer, who has now become temporarily in absentia. Instead of making what some people might interpret as sinister moves the Postmaster General should be looking after the periodicals and farm papers which will be going broke and out of business on account of high postal rates. At the same time, United States publications are being subsidized to the tune of $1.5 million.

Let me put on record something that has happened to professional magazines. I refer to one in my own profession, but I understand the same situation applies to other professions across the country. I should like to read from an article by Dr. A. D. Kelly, publisher of the Canadian Medical Association Journal, which appeared in the March 8, 1969, issue. In part he says:

We had recently achieved the all-time high of 23,000 per week for the C.M.A.J.

He was referring there to the circulation of the journal. He goes on to state:

For 58 years the C.M.A.J. has enjoyed statutory second class mailing privileges and our postal rates were low. We are not alone in this because I understand that 5,200 other Canadian publications are similarly classified. I have been aware that the Post Office was losing money and I expected that an increase in rates for all classifications would be initiated. I really can't say that I feel it essential that our postal services make money or indeed break even, particularly when I am aware of the very substantial subsidies provided for radio and T.V., industry, agriculture, education and social services.

All right, this is 1969, inflation has caught up with us and the penny post does not operate any more. The lessons of history may have no relevance, but I can't escape the impression that getting the message from A to B is a public service which in a civilized society is worth supporting with public funds.

I knew that postal rates, particularly second class rates, were going up, but I did not appreciate the full extent of the capacity until I read Bill 116.

The article then goes on to state:

Next in this tale was a reply to the president under date of November 8, 1968 in which the Honourable Mr. Kierans delivered himself of these words:

"During the debates, I have also questioned whether subsidies to welfare and other worthwhile organizations should be intermingled with postal rates. If there is cause or merit in providing financial assistance to your or other organizations, as a matter of national policy, then I believe that such subventions should be identified and provided directly through appropriate agencies rather than hidden through the medium of preferential postage rates—"

Farther on in the same article we find the following statement by Dr. Kelly:

There was not much comfort there, and I recalled reading in Hansard the Postmaster General's estimate of the additional costs: "The medical journal may have to increase its costs by something in the order of $1.00 per year per member as a result of the rate increase, and I am sure the doctors can well afford the difference."

One dollar a year from 20,000 members would provide an amount more than double our current postal costs but that had been what I anticipated. However, it was necessary to prepare a budget for 1969 and I thought it wise to endeavour to get a more accurate forecast. I called the director of the division of postal rates and classification and he very courteously and sympathetically told me that effective April 1, 1969, C.M.A.J. and C.J.S. would lose statutory second class mailing privileges; our publications will be classified as third class mail; the rate will be four cents for the first two ounces and three cents for each subsequent two ounces or part thereof. This ruling may not convey much to you but I am still suffering from shock. Our postal bill for mailing the October 19, 1968 issue of C.M.A.J. in Canada and abroad was $346.71. Disregarding the variation in rates to destinations abroad, 23,016 copies each weighing seven ounces cost us 1.5 cents per copy. At the new rate our cost would be 13 cents per copy.

That is a real shocker. If the Postmaster General could be that far out in the statement he made in the house, I am wondering how competent he is to run this department or to set up a Crown corporation to provide postal services. I say this quite honestly and frankly because I think I asked the original question. The article suggests that at the new rates the cost will be 13 cents per copy. It goes on to state:

I dislike the word escalation and my mathematics are weak, but I figure that our postal costs will increase ninefold on April 1, 1969. Instead of the Postmaster General's estimate of "something in the order of $1.00 per year per member" the increase would be in the order of $5.25 per member. One does not need to be a John Maynard Keynes to discern a certain divergence in these estimated amounts. Instead of an annual postal bill of $18,500 the amount will be in excess of $140,000, a rise which the C.M.A.J. could not sustain without reappraisal, adjustment, change and dislocation.

It is all very well to infer that the wealthy doctors would be able to support increased postage costs, not of $1.00 but of over $5.00 per member. Lacking the taxing powers of Ottawa I apprehend certain difficulties in raising our fees to compensate for what I regard as an incredible increase. Its effect on the journals of other professional associations and learned societies may well be suspension of publication.

Let me tell the Postmaster General exactly what is going to happen, and I wonder whether this will not happen throughout the country. Effective July 1, with the end of the current volume of the Canadian Medical Association Journal the frequency of publication will be reduced to twice a month or 26 issues per year. All aspects of the publishing operations will remain in Toronto for an unspecified time pending the determination that they may be carried on as effectively in Ottawa.

I want the minister to know what he is doing so far as this publication is concerned. This publication serves all the people in that it serves doctors. At this time there is a bill before the house in respect of drug prices which will necessitate another publication. This will be in the form of a booklet on drugs issued every month at a tremendous cost to the taxpayer. And mailed to whom? Why, the doctors. One need only look back over the records to see the thousands of dollars it costs to publish such a booklet. The minister is penalizing one publication to the same people on the one hand and subsidizing another on the other hand. The people will have to pay the cost of publishing these drug booklets to be sent out once a month by the Department of National Health and Welfare. This is a great way to run a country.

I want to dwell for a minute on the question of mail that has been slowed up across the country. I have mentioned medical publications because they are a striking example of what has happened in other fields. If these people cut down and down on their publications, in the long run it will defeat the purpose of the minister of obtaining more revenue. We would like to know how this mistake could have been made. Was there any fiscal investigation of what would happen in this area that would justify the minister being mistaken to the extent of the difference between $1 and $5?

Businesses in my area have been adversely affected by the new postal policy. I have received complaint after complaint and letter after letter, even from the city of Toronto, saying that businesses have had to use telephones and telephone attachments, thereby adding more and more to their costs. In the long run this takes revenue from the Post Office and in itself defeats the objective of the department.

Saturday's mail comes in on Monday and office staffs have two days' mail with which to cope. It is not all dealt with on Monday, Tuesday or even Wednesday and is finally distributed on Thursday or Friday. Then the vicious circle starts all over again. This policy of a slow mail service means that because only so much can be done on any given day, businesses suffer. They must add to their staffs in order to cope with this problem, thereby adding to the cost of doing business. I repeat that this is a defeating movement. It results in a backlog in the post offices. The backlog commences with Saturday's mail, which has to be delivered with Monday's mail; then Tuesday's mail is heavy and there is a backlog. The point is, how does the minister intend to cope with this situation? This is the reason mail delivery is being delayed across the country. This is why business is being slowed down. This must be the result if businesses do not employ extra staff. This all adds to the expense of doing business.

No wonder the Postmaster General has a rebellion on his hands. I sympathize with him. I have a great deal of appreciation for the postal workers because on the whole they are a pretty dedicated group of people. I believe that the minister's superiority complex has got him into trouble. A more conciliatory attitude to the public and to the workers in general, and a little fairer treatment of the postal workers, might have avoided this situation. But the minister is smart, and he probably knows it. As far as I know, Canada is the only country in the world where a week's mail is delivered in five days.

I have received letter after letter from men who have to work on Saturday to keep their businesses going, and in many cities across Canada they cannot even buy a postage stamp on Saturday. Many of these people are on the road during the week and come home on Saturday to clear up a great deal of their work; then they start out again on Monday.

I ask the minister to consider the harm he is doing to the publishing companies and small newspapers with large rural circulation because of this policy. I have here a letter, part of which I should like to read to the committee. This is a typical case. The letter was written to the minister on February 6 and reads in part as follows:

> Mr. Atkinson wrote to us on February 3 noting that he had not received any papers since January 23, at which time he received a copy dated January 16. This means that 14 consecutive copies of the newspaper, all of which were definitely wrapped and dispatched from our mailing room and posted from the Orillia post office, have not been delivered. Mr. Atkinson was told at his Florida post office that none of these papers had arrived there. I do not understand why the arrangements that have served Mr. Atkinson and so many others for so long in the past should suddenly founder so completely.
> What can be happening to all these papers, and where are they going? I can assure you that Post Office regulations as to the addressing, wrapping and dispatching of newspapers are being strictly adhered to now, as in the past.
> I would be most grateful for your comments or suggestions.

I do not know whether the Postmaster General has answered that letter. I tried to check with the writer of the letter but was unable to do so. He belongs to a big publishing company and newspaper and was not available. Perhaps the Postmaster General should make a fresh start. Like many of us who have made mistakes, perhaps he should have a second chance, the opportunity to make a fresh start. Let him start all over again and correct his mistakes, provided he recognizes that he has made mistakes. I hope the minister is humble enough to recognize that he has.

Perhaps then the people who have to pay an additional 20 per cent in postal rates will forgive the minister. Perhaps the farmer who depends so much on agricultural papers for advice, education and tips will forgive him. The minister should be a little more humble in his discussions with the workers and should try to get out of the mess into which he got himself. I say with all sincerity that I hope the Postmaster General will be able to overcome these difficulties. He will have to be tough on himself and not regard himself as No. 1 in all knowledge. He will have to bring forward something far more appropriate than he has been able to do so far.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief. I have only a few questions to direct to the minister with regard to the closing down of some post offices.

In my district, some post offices have already been closed. They were small post offices which, according to the minister, were uneconomic. Some were in that category but not all of them. The minister should probably have ordered a more serious inquiry into the matter. He has decided otherwise; the government of which he is a member will bear the responsibility.

I want to ask him if he has ordered that those post offices be closed because there was a decrease in population in a parish or along a country road. I believe that is what happens in most cases. In fact, those post offices used to serve from 80 to 100 families, and in the villages there are now barely 13, 14 or 15 families. In such cases, I ask the minister if, instead of installing outside mail boxes such as can be found in a few localities in my district, he intends to have the mail delivered daily by the employee who covers the country roads, the one who has the contract. I do not see why this same person could not deliver the mail daily to the 12, 13 or 15 families of those small villages.

I have a feeling that the minister is going to order—as was the case in St. Félicien, in the village of Bellevue—that metal boxes be installed outside. This is disastrous in our regions and I have said so in the house before. As a matter of fact, these boxes are put up on the side of the road and every time the snowplow comes along it piles up snowbanks which are 10, 15 or 20 feet high where the people have to look for their mail boxes.

In those villages where it has been decided to close up post offices, it would be much cheaper and much easier to have the small quantity of mail delivered to families living there by means of a few changes in the contract held by the present mail carrier. Since the present mail contractors are now passing through those villages that would not create any problem for them. It might take them a little more time, but with a little extra money they could deliver the mail instead of leaving it in outside mail boxes in all kinds of weather conditions. I would suggest that the minister compel the present mail contractors to have the village residents provided with this service.

In my opinion, this is the best way to provide mail delivery service to those who are deprived of it at the present time, for the good reason that they used to have this service. In fact, I agree with the minister that these post offices were not showing a profit. However, with a little extra money, a small pay increase to those responsible for the rural mail delivery the minister could satisfy most of the residents of those small villages who are criticising the closing of their post offices. For instance, I think that if the local merchants were permitted to sell postage stamps, the daily mail delivery would be improved to the extent of satisfying everybody.

As I was saying to the minister, I am afraid these unpopular metal boxes are going to be installed outside.

That is the only thing I had to suggest to the minister with whom I exchanged correspondence several times with regard to the four post offices in my riding which were due to close on April 1st. I think that if he really wants to provide an adequte service the rural mail should be delivered at the door.

[English]

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few short remarks in response to some of the questions that have been raised.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I can tell the hon. member for Roberval that in this field our policy is quite flexible. In fact, we have decided to keep open about a third of the 800 post offices involved. We are considering each case in great detail before taking a decision.

[English]

I might also make reference to the point made by an hon. member that during the debate on postal rates I had said that the rate for the Canadian Medical Association Journal would involve an increase of approximately $1. This is quite right; I did say that. I was under the impression at the time—I corrected that figure later outside the house—that this journal was a monthly, in which case the increase would have been approximately $1. In fact the increase is slightly over $5 for the doctors who are the subscribers.

With reference to the Department of Communications, as I said in reply to another question put to me in the committee, I do not expect that we will be able to table the McIntosh report. I have discussed this with Dr. McIntosh and with some of my colleagues. When the doctor made his studies and consulted a great many people eminent in the field of communications and corporate activities he obtained a great deal of information on a confidential basis. His report was made on the supposition that all these confidences would be respected and that the report would be made to the President of the Treasury Board for his use and for the use of the government.

I do not wish to defend myself in any way but will simply state that the institution of the Post Office has changed very little in the last 100 years. As I have said repeatedly to hon. members, the Post Office is undergoing a process of rapid change. However, on many occasions we have consulted the unions. For example, we discussed the possibility of introducing single mail processing as early as last October 2, and we confirmed this decision in writing to the presidents of both unions on October 3. Since January 1 there have been almost daily discussions with them.

I do not want to go into all the comments that have been made on the difficulties faced by farm magazines and periodicals put out by non-profit organizations. We dealt with that matter quite thoroughly last week in the committee, although I realize there were only a few members of the house present. However, they can read the proceedings of the committee when they are printed.

The hon. member for Selkirk raised the question of the ownership of the communications system. This has not yet been decided. A bill will be coming before the house within the next few weeks to set up that corporation. At that time all members of the house will have a full opportunity to express their views on what type of ownership the corporation should have, whether it should be fully owned by private investors, by public investors or by the government, or whether it should be some mixture in between

Our present intention in the field of the development of satellites is that the research and development of the satellite system should be done as much as possible here in Canada. I say this in response to a question put to me by the hon. member for Selkirk. We have not set aside any options, including buying off the shelf. However, as will be made clear when the bill comes down and following further discussions that we will have, our policy will be to develop the system entirely in Canada.

Again in response to the hon. member's question, I will say that the first satellite that will be going up will be beaming directly to the present common carriers and to the C.B.C. There is no possibility for some seven to ten years of satellites beaming directly to homes. Technically this may be possible well before that time but economically it will not be possible. I can simply suggest the reason why it will not be possible by saying that the strength of the signals emitted by present satellites and by our first satellite will not be strong enough to be picked up by a simple home antenna. As a matter of fact, it would require an earth station or an earth antenna which would cost in the order of $100,000.

A great deal has been said about the current situation in the Post Office. I deplore one word that was used during the debate when an hon. member said he considered the system to be offensive. I do not think it is offensive. Is it offensive that Post Office workers can now operate, for example, in walks near their own homes? This is a new change. Until now, in accordance with a decision made by the Post Office, a letter carrier could not operate either near or on the route where his home was located. I do not think it is offensive to eliminate archaic customs of this kind. Is it offensive that the Post Office should now have a five-day week for which the unions themselves have been asking for years? Is it offensive that letter carriers should now have a choice where to eat at noon? We are not telling them that they must come back to the post office. They can eat at home if they want to do so, they can eat at a restaurant on their route, or they can come back to the post office if that is what they prefer. Is it offensive that they should be required to punch a time clock only once a day, in the morning, instead of four times a day as some of their leaders have suggested?

The hon. member for Calgary North brought up the question of a Crown corporation. I should like to say that no decision has been taken on this matter. Obviously there would have to be a full-scale debate on such a question if it were to come before the house. I feel that the Post Office could perhaps operate more economically under that kind of structure, but that is for parliament to decide. In the meantime, we are using such a structure as a model and we are comparing ancient ways of doing things in the Post Office with the more modern ways which that structure would suggest.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra put forward a suggestion that the title of the department should be Communications and Postal Services. I appreciate the reasons he had in mind, but we consider the Post Office to be part of the over-all Department of Communications. The terms "Postmaster General" and "Post Office" will be retained and will of course continue to be used in telephone books and in international dealings with foreign post offices.

We have no intention of taking over the operation of airports, marine navigation and so on any more than we have of operating the telecommunication services of the Department of National Defence or of the R.C.M.P. We are not an operating department in this sense. We are a functional department.

The department will devote itself largely to research and development in the whole field of telecommunications in order that Canada may remain in the forefront. As an operating department, for example, we shall have only such specialized areas as our own research laboratories. But even our satellites will not be operated by the department; they will be operated, after we have promoted and developed them, by the new communications satellite authority, whatever it may be called.

There is little more I can say. Allusion has been made to the philosophy of the Freedman Report and the need to implement this philosophy. The Minister of Labour has my support when he brings forth recommendations based on those observations and on the report of the Woods task force. But in no case have the changes being made in the Post Office given rise to the kind of problems which faced Mr. Justice Freedman when he examined the situation on the railways in connection with dieselization and run-throughs. In the case of the postal employees, no technological changes are being introduced; there is no automation leading to fewer jobs or making certain jobs redundant. In all the organizational changes we are putting through, the object in mind is to improve service. We are not placing the job of a single person in jeopardy.

We have some 2,084 surplus employees. Their working conditions will be improved because already they have the opportunity to complete their daily task more quickly. Not one of them will risk losing his job. There has been a change in the working patterns of postal employees and some of them have taken exception to this change, but under the Public Service Staff Relations Act a method has been provided by which disagreements of this sort may be resolved. The workers and their unions are free to use this method and I was delighted to be able to say in the house today that we are now well on this road. We in the Post Office will, of course, abide by whatever decisions are taken.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting to hear the minister say that he approves the principles of the Freedman commission report. Of course he does. He did so yesterday. He approves of them as long as they do not affect his own department. Obviously the basic principle of that report was that where substantial changes are made in the working conditions of employees the employees have a right to be consulted.

The minister can scoff, but the fact is that until now, rightly or wrongly, letter carriers were permitted to take a lunch break, to return from their postal walk to the post office to eat lunch and to go back. I know that in many cases this meant spending an hour on a public transport system but that time was paid for by the Post Office Department.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. In order that the house may proceed with the consideration of private members' business I do now leave the chair.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-177, an act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1969.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Public Service—Committee studying increases in pensions of retired civil servants; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): —Pensions—Consideration of universal principle of escalation; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe)—Economic Regional Development—Request for Sherbrooke area to be considered as a special area.

It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, notices of motions.

PUBLIC BILLS

AIR POLLUTION

MEASURE TO ASSIST IN ABATEMENT

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parkdale) moved that Bill C-22, to control air pollution, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the affluent society of this half of the 20th century is increasingly becoming an effluent society. Technological changes and advances in our industrial age have been achieved at the cost of the deterioration of our environment resulting in the pollution of air and water, the congestion of our environment and the destruction of wild nature. Increased population and unchecked exploitation of our natural resources have threatened the quality of life on this planet earth. Life on earth exists in a thin layer of soil, water and atmosphere near the surface of the planet. This layer and the life it contains form the biosphere, which is the sphere of life upon earth.

Man and his environment form an ecological system in which tolerance, adaptation and interdependence are factors which are responsible for the success of this system. However, many scientists and people concerned with life on this planet are now worried that a deterioration in the quality of the air that man breathes will have a grave effect on man's ability to adapt in a polluted environment. Most of the contaminants in our non-biological system are air pollutants. Air pollution has been caused to a great degree by man's own activity. Our skills and technology have resulted in new waste products with which man must interrelate successfully in order to survive.

Today man has noticed that he is discharging more into the environment than can be handled by nature or tolerated by his own ecology. Air pollution is today one of the most urgent problems confronting industrialized society. In Canada, air pollution is also a vital and urgent national problem. Pollutants in the air are causing injury to people, animals, vegetation and property.

The progressive complexity of air pollution brought about by increasing urbanization, industrialization and by fuel-driven vehicles calls for intensified national leadership and effective means to ensure clean air, a most precious natural resource.

In the past few years scientists, engineers and medical specialists have repeatedly and clearly brought to our attention the incidence of air pollution and the resultant health hazards. Last year at a public meeting in Toronto organized by a group of citizens called "Group Action To Stop Air Pollution", Dr. Alfred Bernhart, associate professor of civil engineering at the University of Toronto, described how much air pollution there is in the city of Toronto and the extent of damage that it produces. He estimated that in one year Torontonians, by burning 8.8 million tons of coal, oil, heating gas, garbage and also three million tons of gasoline and diesel oil, emit 5.2 trillion cubic feet of polluted exhaust gases into our air. In addition, 65,300 tons of dust are blown into Toronto every year. He also stated that 47 per cent of the pollution of the air is caused by automobiles, buses, and trucks, 20 per cent by power plants, 20 per cent by heating appliances, 10 per cent by manufacturing plants, and 3 per cent by garbage incinerators. This pollution, he said, causes material and health damage amounting to approximately $120 million annually in Toronto alone.

In Toronto Alderman Anthony O'Donohue, one of our air pollution experts, has stated that every day the average human being inhales approximately 14,000 quarts of air. One cubic foot of air in our cities, he stated, contains approximately three million dust particles. An urban dweller inhales with each breath 40,000 to 70,000 of these dust particles. It has been estimated that a person living in a large industrial centre inhales about one pound and seven ounces of dust per year.

Other scientists have also stated that since 1890 the carbon dioxide level of the atmosphere has risen from 290 parts per million to 315 parts per million, an increase of approximately 8½ per cent. Each year we are told that six million tons of carbon dioxide are added to the 23 billion tons already in the atmosphere. We produce carbon dioxide through the combustion of fossil fuels and many other activities that promote oxidation. Therefore, we should ask ourselves how soon are we going to reach the danger point in the oxygen-carbon dioxide balance of the atmosphere? At what point does the accumulation of atmospheric carbon dioxide bring about potentially disastrous changes in the earth's climate?

Carbon monoxide is another air pollutant which fluctuates at various levels in our urban communities. This gas exerts its biological effect through the inactivation of hemoglobin and by raising the visual threshold. At a concentration of 100 parts per million, carbon monoxide will produce about 15 per cent inactivation of hemoglobin to carboxy-hemoglobin. While this level does not appear to be associated with severe symptoms, an air pollution specialist, Mr. Schulte, has reported that judgment and skills can be impaired at this level.

It has been reported that concentrations below 50 parts per million are the amounts that are inhaled when subjects drive along, for example, the Los Angeles freeways. Toronto, with a few exceptions, is a city like any other in North America troubled with air pollution. It has one of the fastest rates of growth on this continent. It also has an automobile population of approximately 800,000, the third largest density per square mile following Washington and Philadelphia. There are more than twice as many cars in Toronto as in Los Angeles.

There are figures available which state that the metropolitan area of Toronto has the following annual output of air pollutants: 925,000 tons of carbon monoxide, 420,000 tons of hydro-carbons, 198,000 tons of organic pollutants such as aldehydes and others, 130,000 tons of sulphur dioxide, 65,000 tons of oxides of nitrogen, 40,000 tons of solid particles and 23,000 tons of inorganic pollutants such as fluorides, chlorides, sulphur trioxide, and hydrogen sulphides. Comparing metropolitan Toronto to a rural area, we would probably have 20 times more carbon monoxide, ten times more carbon dioxide, ten times more dust particles, and five times more sulphur dioxide. When you drive to work that car in front of you, Mr. Speaker, is pouring out approximately 375 parts per million of carbon monoxide. If you are driving that car in a city like Toronto and you smoke cigarettes at the same time, it has been estimated that between 3 per cent and 7.9 per cent of the hemoglobin in your blood will be ineffective.

• (5:10 p.m.)

As I have stated previously, the first of the five main causes of man-made air pollution by far is the motor vehicle. It has been estimated that motor vehicles contribute from 47 to 51 per cent of the air pollution in our great Canadian cities. Motor vehicle exhausts not only emit large quantities of carbon monoxide but are also the source of benzopyrene, a hydro-carbon that, as has been found in laboratories, is one of the most potent cancer-producing agents. In the United States it has been estimated that on an average day approximately 260,000 tons of carbon monoxide, 27,000 tons of hydro-carbons and 9,000 tons of oxides of nitrogen are spewed into the atmosphere by 85 million exhaust pipes burning more than 77 million gallons of fuel. That is why in the United States of America governments have taken action to make mandatory special exhaust controls on new models of automobiles. At present automobiles in the United States must not discharge or exhaust more than 1½ per cent of carbon monoxide and 275 parts per million of hydro-carbons. In 1970 United States law will require motor vehicles to emit from their exhausts one-third less of pollutants than present standards permit.

Many other factors contribute to air pollution, Mr. Speaker, but during my study of this problem I have learned that the main pollutants come in two major forms, namely, a reducing form which consists largely of soot and sulphur dioxide and an oxidizing form which consists of carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons, and the photo chemical decomposition products such as oxides of nitrogen, ozone, and many others. Air pollution is also influenced by the topography of the area and by weather conditions such as humidity, brilliant sunshine, air stagnation, and atmospheric inversion.

Many reports have also appeared stating that asthmatic attack rates triple on days of significant air pollution and quadruple in periods of high barometric pressure. Also, some medical researchers have reported asbestos in lungs of city dwellers. Apparently asbestos from such things as automobile brake linings, air filters, and floor tile has lodged in the lungs of between one-third and one-half of all city-dwelling adults in the United States. This effect of asbestos-containing products was reported by a Canadian-born scientist, Dr. W. A. D. Anderson. He also stated that asbestos, mined heavily in Quebec, is known to be a cancer-causing agent if present in a large quantity over long periods. Asbestos workers and miners traditionally have a much higher incidence of lung cancer than the general population.

We have also read a lot recently about the $95,729 compensation that Ontario farmers in the Port Maitland area received for cattle which had to be destroyed because of an air pollutant called fluoride. Compounds of fluoride of varying levels of solubility have affected vegetation in the vicinity of metallurgical plants and artificial fertilizer plants. Some air pollution experts have stated that aircraft, especially commercial jets, are a source of significant air pollution in our cities. Apparently a commercial jet airliner under full load emits pollutants, especially hydrocarbons and carbon monoxide, at a rate equivalent to about 10,000 passenger vehicles. This, therefore, can be a major problem to the people living in the vicinities of airports.

On January 24, 1967, Ontario Hydro Electric Power Commission researchers stated that air pollution, which is already a contributory factor in respiratory ailments, can also contribute to radio and television interference. An engineer from the electrical research department of the Ontario Hydro research laboratories stated that during rainy or foggy weather a phenomenon known as corona discharge sometimes occurs across insulators that house high voltage hydro wires. He says that the more grime and dust settle on the insulators the worse is the interference across a wide band of radio and television frequencies.

Air pollution is also a hazard contributing to greater vehicular accidents. Any reduction in visibility can represent a serious hazard to land, water and air transportation. It has been reported in several studies that during severe urban pollution mortality from airplane, automobile, and train crashes is increased significantly. Unfortunately, such catastrophies constitute a definite effect of air pollution. Dr. Donald O. Anderson of Vancouver stated in one of his papers that one estimation from civil aeronautics board statistics for 1962 attributed between 15 and 20 airplane crashes that year to obstructions of vision by smoke, haze, sand and dust. He has also stated that the effect of air pollution may be augmented by the simple act of cigarette smoking or inhaling carbon monoxide in congested traffic. Also, radio-isotopes from atomic explosions in the Pacific and in Asia can appear in alarming concentrations in caribou of Alaska and our northern territories.

Both as a physician in a dense urban and highly industrialized centre and as member of parliament for Parkdale, an area with many manufacturing plants, I am very concerned about the hazards and ill effects of air pollution. It has been reported that there is an increase in the number of cases of emphysema, bronchitis, and lung cancer occurring in our urban centres. Health authorities have stated that the intensity of urbanization and industrialization producing air pollution may have a residual influence on lung cancer mortality as well as on the morbidity and mortality of people with a chronic lung disease. Some medical specialists are of the opinion that lung cancer deaths among cigarette smokers are more frequent in large industrialized cities than in rural areas.

All of the air pollution facts available today are alarming. They have made known to us the increasing hazards of air pollution to humans, animals, vegetation, and physical property. These facts also illustrate the inadequate research as well as the ineffective measures that have been taken to date to control air pollution in Canada. There is a lack of ambient air quality standards, effective regulations and adequate enforcement agencies. To date I know of no authority in Canada which deals with interprovincial air pollution problems. That is why there is a wide variation in air pollution legislation and enforcement across this country. To date, Ontario has the most comprehensive air pollution program, as contained in the air pollution control act of 1967. The other provinces are said by experts to have inadequate air pollution control measures and legislation. The United States has a federal clean air act.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I am sorry to interrupt the honourable member but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't talk it out.

Mr. Haidasz: I thank hon. members for permission to continue. Other countries, such as West Germany, Poland and the U.S.S.R. are far advanced in the task of setting ambient air quality standards, control regulations and means of enforcement.

• (5:20 p.m.)

In the spring of 1967 the United States public health service took the initiative of publishing a document entitled "Air Quality Criteria For Sulphur Dioxides", giving the levels at which its scientists believe sulphur compounds begin to harm health and pollute the environment. Unfortunately we in Canada do not have adequate financial support and sufficient scientific personnel to study thoroughly national ambient air quality standards. However, for general guidance in this matter, the World Health Organization has issued an expert report on atmospheric pollutants. This report has been available since 1964. Mr. W. B. Drowley, Chairman of the Canadian Standards Association Committee on Air Pollution and director of the air pollution control program in Ontario, stated in an address at a conference in Montreal in 1966 that the government of Canada should place a co-ordinating policy in the hands of one agency or department to avoid duplication and fragmentation of effort.

[Mr. Haidasz.]

In Bill C-22 I am proposing that parliament grant the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), as soon as possible, powers to deal effectively with certain aspects of air pollution that are under the jurisdiction of the federal government. The bill states that air pollution means the detectable presence in the outdoor atmosphere of any air contaminant or contaminants in amounts that may cause damage or discomfort to the health of persons, that may cause damage to animal life, produce injury to vegetation, damage physical property, interfere with visibility or the normal conduct of transportation, occupation or business.

In its efforts to control air pollution in Canada, the federal government should also consider the establishment of a special department under a minister. This department could be called the department of urban and environmental affairs or even housing and environmental affairs. Such a decision may be required in the near future if it is found necessary to concentrate in one department all the problems of urban development and urban transportation, as well as the pollution of air, water and soil. Furthermore, I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to grant liberal tax incentives to private citizens and industry who would install anti-air pollution devices and use clean fuels.

It is most urgent to attack vigorously the problem of air pollution in Canada before it is too late. I believe this bill will assist in abating air pollution in our country and help to ensure better health and a higher quality of life for all our citizens. The order paper of the House of Commons today reads that this bill, if given second reading, will be referred to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs. I have noted that on the order paper there are also bills standing in the name of other hon. members which have reference to other aspects of air pollution. It may be the wish of hon. members to refer the subject matter of my bill as well as the bills of the other hon. members to the appropriate standing committee of the House of Commons.

Air pollution is not only a vital matter, Mr. Speaker, but also an urgent problem in Canada today. It is often stated that an ounce of prevention is better than a pound of cure. I hope that we in this House of Commons will follow this wise and prudent admonition.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): I will not take any more time, Mr. Speaker, than it will take the clock to reach half past five. We in this party would be quite prepared to give consent at the appropriate time to a motion to refer this bill and the others alluded to by the hon. member for consideration by the standing committee. If such a motion is moved, we will support it.

I am not in any sense taking credit away from the hon. member for raising this matter, and I do give him due allowance, but I would hope that when matters of equal importance are raised by members of this or the other opposition parties there will be equal willingness on the part of the government to refer them to the appropriate standing committees for consideration. I recognize that this cannot be done with all public bills, but I believe it is a practice to be desired. I hope the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Macdonald) and his colleagues will read my words so that at the appropriate time when bills are introduced from this side of the house this practice will be followed.

I wish to comment on the constitutional difficulty which prevails in connection with the very serious problem of air and water pollution. They are both in the same category. We are approaching the time when they will be the most serious environmental problems we will have to face. While the provinces obviously have jurisdiction to deal with this problem under the heading of property and civil rights, because there is an interprovincial and international aspect and because finances are involved it is not possible for the provinces to do so.

Bearing in mind what happened at the recent constitutional conference, I cannot see the provincial or the federal governments abandoning their particular jurisdiction and handing it over to the other government. This is a situation where there will have to be co-operation. Constitutionally, a corporation could be established to which each of the two government levels could delegate authority. One government cannot delegate authority to another government. The province of Ontario could not delegate authority to the federal government on a matter over which it has complete jurisdiction, and vice-versa, but authority could be delegated to a Crown corporation.

We in this party have pointed out the necessity of establishing a parliamentary committee to deal with problems of this nature. A parliamentary committee is a forum where the wishes of the people, through the liaison of members of parliament, could be brought forward and pressure exerted not only on the federal government but on the provincial governments. Responsibility for the serious problem of air and water pollution could be allocated to one agency which would not only punish infractions of law but would regulate. The problem is that the federal government simply cannot regulate. It can only provide financial incentives and make proposals.

Clause 3 of Bill C-22 reads in part:

> It shall be the duty of the minister to consider the expediency of:
> (a) promoting co-operative activities of municipal, provincial, interprovincial, federal, and international governments—

That is not good enough. When we look at federal-provincial conferences and see how little progress is made, it becomes essential that some other forum must be established. The wishes of the people must be expressed forcibly to the members of that forum, in this case a parliamentary committee in order to demand that they be enforced. The hon. member's bill will give the committee an opportunity to study its merits and to look for ways and means to accomplish what he proposes.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) for his foresight and imagination in presenting this bill. I extend the same congratulations to other members of the house who have placed notice of similar bills on the order paper. I hope the house will agree to refer the subject matter of all these bills at the end of this hour to the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

I may say to the hon. member for Parkdale that I wish him good luck in his effort. I speak as one who has had the experience of having to introduce bills eight, ten or 12 times before the principle of them has been finally accepted. There is an urgency about this matter which makes me hope the hon. member will not have to wait so long. I am sorry, as a matter of fact, to note the dilatory way in which the government is dealing with this matter. Despite the fact that many references have been made to the need for legislation respecting clean air, clean water and clean cities, we have not had anything yet from the federal government on this subject except the promise that a clean water bill or Canada water bill will be exposed at this session. In other words, this bill will receive first reading but it is not intended that we go any further during this session.

I think the hon. member for Parkdale deserves special commendation for the facts and figures he gave us to underline the urgency of this situation. It is easy to assume that the air is here for us to breathe and is here for all time; but mankind can spoil his future by not doing something to protect the purity of the air. I should like to say that if I have any criticism of the hon. member's bill it is that it seems to say in the words of a sage and historic document "Thou shalt not pollute the air". I agree, and I agree with all the other commandments too; but sometimes it is necessary to go a little further than just laying down the law that such and such shall not be done.

If we are to solve this problem, is it not a fact that we must cope with the causes of it? The hon. member made it quite clear that most of our pollution comes from gasoline and other fuel-driven vehicles. I know it would take a tremendous revolution, a lot of thinking and a tremendous economic upheaval for us to talk about replacing the gasoline-driven motor vehicle with something else, but it may well be that if we are to maintain life on this planet this is precisely what we will have to do. Obviously, I am not against automobiles, but we may well have to develop and manufacture a different kind from those we have today.

I should like to see the hon. member and others in this house who are concerned about the problem of pollution put pressure on the government, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), the minister responsible for the National Research Council and others so that if necessary money in large quantities might be made available for the discovery and development of other ways to provide transportation. When I was a child there were electric automobiles around. They went out of style because they were not fast enough. Surely, however, with all the inventive capacity of mankind today we could produce a storage battery of some kind that would provide the necessary speed and power so that we could have transportation without the pollution of air which comes from gasoline-driven vehicles. Perhaps with a little imagination or encouragement our scientists could produce some sort of a central broadcasting station which would send out power which vehicles could get by tuning in; in other words, they could get their power by remote control.

When one thinks of what is going on up in the heavens or out in the heavens, wherever the Appollo IX astronauts are today, in terms of space travel which is controlled hundreds of miles away from Houston and other places on this continent, surely it is not a wild dream or just science fiction to think of a day when the vehicles that we get around in will be driven in some such way as this. There may be still other ways. Someone may have more imagination than I; but surely one of these two courses is open to us, either the development of some kind of storage battery that will provide the power we need or the development of remote control power that would be available to vehicles. There probably are other ways to deal with this. The Minister of Transport said that when he has solved the housing problems of the country, he will be concerned about our urban and transportation problems.

These problems are very real and very urgent. I hope that not only will the committee study them but that the government itself will realize that this is an area which calls for leadership, research and responsibility. Again, I congratulate the hon. member for bringing in this bill and for trying to impress upon the house the urgency of the situation. It is terribly urgent. We do not have a great deal of time in which to deal with it. I hope we will realize it is not good enough just to say "thou shalt not pollute the air" but that we must develop other means of transportation than we rely on today if we are to obey that commandment.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I shall be brief because I do not want to be accused of talking out the bill. In fact, I am sorry that similar legislative proposals are often talked out.

I congratulate the hon. member who introduced this measure for which we have long been waiting. I feel sure that the Canadian people want this bill to be considered. And, in order to make our work more efficient, I suggest that we unanimously recommend that the bill be referred to the committee on health, welfare and social affairs, so that we may one day be adequately protected against air pollution.

The sponsor of this bill said enough earlier to convince us of the necessity of such a measure and it is useless for me to add anything else. Besides, I am under the impression that another hon. member has something to say and I would not want to prevent him from doing so. I should simply like to say how glad we are that this bill has been introduced, and we strongly hope, as the hon.

member who moved it, that it will be referred as soon as possible to the committee on health, welfare and social affairs.

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Chairman, I should like first to congratulate my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz) who introduced this bill. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said he has tried himself on a few occasions to have some of these bills passed, and I wish to tell him that the hon. member for Parkdale did too last year, when I had an opportunity of saying a few words in this connection.

This bill is extremely important, and to me, the funds that should be appropriated to research on air pollution would certainly amount to several billion dollars.

In any event, the problem is extremely serious. As the member for Parkdale has mentioned, it causes lung diseases, particularly lung cancer. In some large cities, specially the more densely populated, autopsies have revealed that after smoking, air pollution was one of the main causes of lung cancer.

• (5:40 p.m.)

Today, on account of the increasing number of motorcars, the air is getting more and more polluted. It is even said that in a city like Montreal, the concentration of polluted air varies between 45 and 545 tons of dust per square mile. Therefore, we should recognize the importance of the bill before us.

Last year, a test was made in Montreal with a view to showing the damage caused by pollution. The test was conducted by Mr. Jean Marier, director of the Air Pollution Division of the Montreal Health Department, who stated the following:

One of their inspectors spent several days cruising around the downtown section of Montreal as a passenger in a car.

The ventilation system of the car was working perfectly and the windows were down. Here are the results of these tests:

The tests have shown a proportion of 12 per cent of carbon monoxide, originating from the exhaust system of various vehicles, in the blood stream of the inspector. This means that 12 per cent of the red corpuscles could not function and absorb the oxygen.

When there is more than 10 per cent carbon monoxide, there are slight poisoning symptoms, nausea, general discomfort.

—torpor.

Between 15 and 20 per cent, there is dizziness and the judgment and faculties become unbalanced. Between 50 and 60 per cent, death strikes rapidly.

I would now like to quote remarks I once made about a similar bill.

The world has already witnessed similar tragedies and no one can deny that a large city, where such conditions prevail, suffers similar consequences.

In the last few years, we have noticed a considerable decrease in the sunlight and a progressive increase in the fog in industrial areas. The reputation of the notorious "smog" (smoke and fog together), which affects London is universally recognized.

Among the cities which have suffered the most from air pollution, one can single out the city of London, England, where it caused a great number of deaths and disabilities—

—during the famous winter of 1952 when England was, for some time, isolated from the rest of the world.

As a result of that epidemic—if one can call it that—

—4,000 persons died and hospitals were filled with the victims of that scourge.

It will also be recalled that as the smog—a combination of smoke and fog—increased, hospitals and other medical centres had to admit only the more severely affected patients.

However, humans were not the only ones to be affected.

—some animals, taking part in a show at that time, died or had to be destroyed, due to acute respiratory trouble. All animals were affected, and those who survived required intensive care.

This is the worst disaster of its kind, although London has registered losses from this scourge before and since 1952. The death registers show that already in 1874 there was a number of deaths due to air pollution. The same happened in other parts of the world.

I would not want to delay this debate any further, but I want to say that closer to us, in the state of Pennsylvania, in 1958, 20 people died of diseases probably due to air pollution. More recently, in New York, the fatal effects of pollution have been recorded.

I said also in 1968:

In London, for instance, the day fog appeared, visibility was good in the morning but at a certain time, when the velocity of the wind came to nearly nothing, pollution started to cover the city. The next day, smog became so dense that some transportation companies had to stop all activities. Traffic practically stopped.

—if you know London—

—and many drivers left their cars in the streets.

In fact, the city of London was practically paralyzed for four days. Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I strongly support this bill to which special consideration should be given since something will have to be done to curb pollution.

[English]

Mr. Mark Smerchanski (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleague on his excellent presentation on pollution, and I support his bill. However, I should like to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that we must not leave the impression nothing has been done in respect of industrial pollution in this country.

In the last five years every provincial government has taken some very definite forward steps in controlling the pollution of the air, by sulphur dioxide nitrites and hydrogen sulphides. You will notice that many of our refineries located in the larger cities in Canada are today recovering elemental sulphur from the pollutent gases that were originally allowed to escape into the atmosphere. I make this statement because I feel we have to support industrial development, and to leave the house today with the impression that nothing is being done in connection with air and water pollution under the industrial development program undertaken in Canada would not be accurate. It is not accurate to say that nothing is being done in this regard or in respect of proper sewage disposal.

Every province is making great efforts to control pollution. Millions of dollars are being spent in the Dominion of Canada today in this regard. It might be interesting to note that in the United States in 1968 over $450 million was spent on research in respect of control of air pollution, particularly with reference to solutions—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker, with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

• (6:00 p.m.)

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1969.

Mr. Speaker: The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

[Mr. Smerchanski.]

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the Chair.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At 6.07 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The Committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, in the short time during which I spoke before the committee rose at five o'clock I recalled the statement by the Postmaster General that he agreed with his colleague the Minister of Labour in accepting the basic principles expounded by Mr. Justice Freedman. I said the Postmaster General probably agrees with every word of what was said in the Freedman Report as long as it is not applied to the Post Office.

If the Freedman Commission made any recommendation, it was that no employer should make major changes in working conditions affecting employees in the absence of consultation and agreement. I submit that the new proposals put forward by the Post Office, headed by this great minister, amount to such a major change. For a long time postal workers were able to return from their postal walks to the post office for their lunch and then go back to their walks. The time they spent travelling was counted as part of their work day. In many cases I suggested the time thus spent amounted to as much as an hour each day. In deciding that this practice should cease the department is making a major change in working conditions.

When the Post Office Department decides that letter carriers who have had this right to eat their lunch each day in the post office, in a section of the building set aside for that purpose, should have to eat their lunch somewhere outside, in a restaurant or somewhere else—

Mr. Kierans: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. This is misinformation. I have never said they do not have the right to eat in the post office. They do have the right to eat in the post office. But they now have the option of doing something else. They can eat in a restaurant or anywhere else they choose. But they may still go back to the post office if they wish. Nothing has been taken away from them.

Mr. Orlikow: Of course, they can eat at the post office. The only difficulty is that if they work the eight hours for which they are paid, and still eat at the post office, they will finish an hour later every day. It is true they can go back to the post office on their own time and eat there. That is the way the letter carriers interpret this change, and I am sure they are correct. I would be glad to hear the Postmaster General demonstrate to me that what I have said is not true. Much more important, let him demonstrate to the letter carriers that it is not true.

I agree with the minister that the letter carriers still have the right to go back to the post office to eat their lunch, which would take an hour of their own time. And I realize that they will have the right to eat in a restaurant and pay commercial rates for their lunch, or else eat cold sandwiches. I invite the minister to join the letter carriers in Winnipeg in January or February of any year, in doing so.

The minister told us during the question period today that he expected the walk-outs which have taken place in the last couple of days would taper off, and I hope he is right. I wish to say this to the minister, however: if he persists in the hearings which his department has initiated before the public service staff relations board, if he persists in trying to get that board to give him permission to prosecute those employees who walked off the job in the last couple of days, or if he proceeds to initiate prosecutions, he will find a work stoppage on his hands which will make past work stoppages look like tea parties. I have fairly good connections with the employees and I believe I know what they are thinking.

I hope the minister will pay attention to this suggestion of mine and not proceed with what I consider to be a most retrograde step, a step such as no private industry has taken to my knowledge.

• (8:10 p.m.)

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. The hon. member said that if the government did not do something we would have a strike on our hands the like of which we had never seen before. Is he threatening the government? On what authority does he put it in those terms?

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I am not a letter carrier or a member of that union and I have no say in the decisions that they make any more than the hon. member for Ottawa West, who asked the question at the suggestion of the minister. What I am saying is obvious, that if the government goes ahead with its provocation, as my colleague from Winnipeg North Centre called it, and declares its intention of prosecuting, it will bedevil the issue of good relations between the employees and the employer, in this case the government.

I suggest to the minister that he take a look at a recent labour case in his own province, the strike at Domtar by members of the C.N.T.U. The settlement of that strike was held up for several weeks because the company insisted on proceeding with prosecutions that had been initiated during the strike. It was not until the company withdrew from its tough position that the employees agreed to go back to work. This is all I am suggesting here. If the hon. member for Ottawa West takes that as a threat, then he is even more stupid and foolish than I thought he was before today.

I want to turn for a few moments to what I consider to be a very important matter in connection with which the minister made a mistake in policy that he insists on perpetuating. It is a subject that I know the minister resents our talking about and considers we are wasting time; nevertheless, it is a matter that has been universally condemned. I am referring to the very sharp, indeed astronomical increase in postal rates that the minister and his department have imposed on publications, newspapers and weekly and monthly periodicals.

I am not holding any brief today for the commercial press and for magazines, but this country has always had to contend with pressures from our large neighbour to the south. Every day we are inundated with television and radio programs emanating from the United States, as well as newspapers and magazines. I do not have to go into this subject.

Every commission that has studied the question—and I need only refer members to the O'Leary commission of a few years ago—has talked about the importance, if this country is to survive as a viable entity, of maintaining a press and magazine industry of its own. In spite of this, what the minister has done has led to the situation where during the next few years we will see the disappearance of publications in every sphere of life in this country.

I want very briefly to put on the record some of the appeals and complaints that have been made to the minister. I am not speaking of political complaints; certainly, they cannot be called, by any stretch of the imagination, partisan. According to a report that appeared in the Ottawa Citizen of January 30, 1969 the Canadian church press, which is an association of church periodicals, submitted a plea to the Postmaster General in September in view of the new rates that are applicable to their publications.

According to the report, the distribution costs of the United Church Observer, which is the publication of the United Church of Canada, have gone up by 500 per cent under the new rates. Their mailing costs have gone from $30,000 to $145,000 per year. Two Anglican diocesan papers have been discontinued. I am sure the same is true in connection with publications of Roman Catholic, Baptist and other religious groups.

Professional journals are also having an extremely difficult time. The minister spoke today in a not very complimentary fashion about the Canadian Medical Association's journal. I am not regarded as a defender of the Canadian Medical Association, but their journal does play a very important role in keeping the medical profession informed on professional and technical subjects. The mailing costs of the journal of the Canadian Medical Association have gone up by 900 per cent. Some of the specialty journals, such as the journal of the Canadian Psychiatric Association and the Canadian Nurse, whose mailing costs have gone up by 1,500 per cent, are likely to go out of business.

I suppose that no group has been more persistent in its representations to the minister than the group concerned with periodicals emanating from the co-ops and credit unions, journals and magazines that in the main are directed at the agricultural communities of this country. Rural people are passing through a period of revolutionary change, and they need all the technical assistance they can get. They have been accustomed to getting it from agricultural periodicals.

In the past 20 years there has been an alarming decimation of these periodicals. The Canadian Countryman, Farmers Magazine, Farmers Advocate, Farm and Ranch Review, Saskatchewan Farmer and Family Herald have all gone out of business in recent years. It is true that they ceased publication before the minister increased the rates, but the effect of the minister's action can be seen if one looks at the position of publications that are still in business.

The mailing costs of Country Guide have gone up by 260 per cent. The costs of the Canadian Cattleman have gone up by 300 per cent. These costs are related to postage and mailing. The Manitoba Co-operator costs have gone up by 250 per cent. The Western Producer costs have gone up by 250 per cent. These, in the main, are publications that are not sold entirely by way of individual subscriptions but are distributed to members of co-ops, the Manitoba Pool Elevator Company and other such organizations. It is not easy for these organizations to increase their rates, and as a result I suggest to the members of this committee many of these publications will have to go out of business. This will very seriously affect the farmers of this country.

What is the position of the ethnic press? I want to speak briefly about the ethnic press because many such newspapers are printed and published in the city of Winnipeg. Members of the ethnic press, the Canadian Ethnic Press Federation, submitted a brief to the Postmaster General, and I should like to put on record a few of the facts that they brought forward for his attention.

Mr. Haidasz: Hear, hear.

Mr. Orlikow: I see that I have some support from the hon. member for Parkdale. It is nice to know, Mr. Chairman, that somebody on the other side takes an interest in these matters. I should like to refer to pages 10 and 11 of their submission. The publication Nove Domov—meaning "New Homeland"—a Czechoslovak weekly, has 16 copies to the pound. The present per pound rate is 1.5 cents, but the new rate will be 16 x 2 cents per copy or 32 cents per pound. This represents an approximate increase of 2,000 per cent. Logberg-Heimskringla, an Icelandic weekly, has 12 copies to the pound. The present rate per pound is 1.5 cents. The increase is from 1.5 cent per pound to 12 x 2 cents per copy which is 24 cents per pound, an increase of approximately 1,400 per cent. Progress, a Ukrainian weekly, has 10 copies per pound. The present rate is 1.5 cents per pound. The increase from 1.5 cents per pound to 10 x 2 cents per copy or 20 cents per pound, represents an increase of 1,200 per cent.

Anyone familiar with the ethnic press knows that it is dying. As children of immigrants grow up, attend Canadian schools and become fully Canadian in all ways, they read ethnic newspapers less and less and other papers more. Consequently, the ethnic press is facing great difficulties, no matter what group it serves. I doubt whether it can survive more than a generation or two. Instead of concentrating on the well being of one or two leading ethnic groups in this country, I think the government ought to show concern for all ethnic groups and for the survival of the ethnic press. The minister's action means that soon the ethnic press will be no more. I think we will all regret its passing and miss the contribution it has made over the years to the Canadian mosaic.

May I now deal with how postal increases will affect the labour press. I wish to refer to a paper and an organization with which I have had little personal contact. I know hon. members opposite think I am partisan, and I suppose I am. Be that as it may, in my opinion one of the best labour publications in this country is Labour, put out by the C.N.T.U., an almost exclusively Quebec based organization led for many years in a fine manner by our present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Being faced with increased postal costs of about $70,000 a year, the leaders of that publication did something that I hope will not be permanent; they suspended publishing that monthly magazine. If any one person is responsible for the demise of that publication, that person is the Postmaster General. In the last election our party garnered a very small percentage of votes in Quebec, so I do not think anyone can accuse us of partisan political motives in bringing this matter to the attention of members of this committee and the Postmaster General.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I had almost finished, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. Postage costs for the machinists magazine put out by the International Association of Machinists have risen from $154 per week to $921 per week. Costs of mailing Canadian Labour have risen by more than 300 per cent. The same thing may be said about publications put out by steel workers and auto workers. Labour unions faced with such increased costs can do one or two things. After all, they cannot increase dues without going before a convention and persuading union members of the need for increases. They can suspend publication, as the C.N.T.U. have with their magazine; they can cut back on their publication, as many Canadian unions will; or they can do what I suggest steel, auto and railway workers unions will do, namely, arrange to have their publications printed exclusively in the United States and mailed from the United States. The Canadian Post Office will deliver all those publications, will bear the entire cost of handling them and will not receive a penny for doing the job. The blame for this will rest on the minister. To say the least, the minister has done a great disservice to our hopes of fostering Canadian unity and nationalism.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make a few remarks on Bill C-173 respecting the organization of the Government of Canada, and I shall refer specifically to part II which establishes a Department of Communications. I feel compelled to make a few general remarks about a matter which is of importance to the city of Toronto and to my constituency, Parkdale. The people of Toronto are anxiously awaiting the decision of the Postmaster General with regard to the main Post Office in downtown Toronto, an urgent matter because the metropolitan planning board wishes to redevelop the downtown core and that section especially fronting on Lake Ontario. It would help us greatly if the Postmaster General and his officials would say whether we are to have a post office terminal downtown and other subterminals in the surrounding burroughs.

I sympathize with my fellow citizens who have experienced a delay connected with the mailing of their letters and periodicals. Now, it takes approximately four or five days to receive a letter in Ottawa mailed in Toronto. I hope the Postmaster General will give this matter his urgent attention, since I know that many hon. members of the house have made similar complaints.

Mr. Hees: Eric, aren't you glad you have so many little helpers?

Mr. Haidasz: I hope the minister will help us. The third point I wish to raise, Mr. Chairman, is that in my constituency of Parkdale the population has increased greatly in the last couple of years. Instead of being given more sub-post offices we have been deprived of three or four existing ones. I have received many complaints from my constituents, especially from those in the southern portion of my riding. They want additional sub-post offices.

Another point I wish to raise was that brought to the attention of the house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North and has to do with the submission the Canada Ethnic Press Federation made to the minister in January of this year. I point out to the minister that a delegation from the Canada Ethnic Press Federation arrived in Ottawa this afternoon and is seeking an appointment with him. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North said, the federation is worried about the economic implications of increased postage rates on second class mail.

In the brief it is said that after April 1 the Czechoslovak weekly, Nove Domov, or New Homeland will face rate increases of up to 2,000 per cent. The brief shows how much other ethnic weeklies will incur increased costs. In Canada 75 publications are put out in languages other than in English and French, something pointed out by the Canada Ethnic Press Federation. The brief deals with the service the ethnic press has rendered to Canada in the past 60 years. I feel, Mr. Chairman, that the federal government should reconsider its postal rate increase policy and take into account the effect that this will have on certain publications of the Canada Ethnic Press Federation. I hope the minister if not tonight, then tomorrow when he meets the Ethnic Press editors, will be able to inform them what hope there is that they may continue to publish their very worth while publications.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Mr. Harding: I would like to say a few words, Mr. Chairman, about the particular clause of Bill C-173 headed "Communications". I have drawn a number of problems to the attention of the Postmaster General. Of all the ministers in the cabinet, I receive better and faster replies from the Postmaster General than from any other minister. I think this is something—

An hon. Member: That's because they are delivered by hand.

Mr. Harding: They might be delivered by hand, but this is something we in the opposition appreciate.

There are several questions I would like to raise in connection with the reorganization which took place in the Post Office Department a couple of months ago. There was a sharp increase in postal rates, Mr. Chairman, and along with it a drastic reduction in the service which the Canadian people receive. There is no use telling Canadians generally that the over-all service has been improved, because it has not. I can frankly tell the minister and the members of this house that it takes a longer period of time for letters to reach their destination. In the case of second and third class mail, newspapers and other printed matter, the period of time which it takes for delivery of them is nothing short of scandalous.

I think the Canadian people would gladly go along with an increase in some categories. Certainly, some increases were warranted and I would be the last to say that they were not. However, when you have a sharp increase in mailing costs and a sharp reduction in service, then people have every right to complain. If this is the type of reorganization that this Liberal government believes will give a better deal to the Canadian people, then the sooner we scrap this government the better it is going to be.

I want to say a few words about the effect this reorganization is having on small post offices. The majority of members in this house come from the larger centres. They have not the foggiest notion of the trouble which people in small communities have in every field of communications, whether it is mail, radio or television. The larger cities have the pick. They get coloured television before many of the rural areas can get even a black and white signal. Some of the small centres in my area have had a communication from regional directors of the Post Office Department to the effect that a number of small post offices will be closed because they are not paying their way. This is going to affect thousands of small communities. I want to make very clear that these little communities have pioneered in Canada for generations. These are the people who have gone into the wilderness and have established small industries. They have worked mining and logging camps and have started farms in remote areas. This Liberal government in its reorganization program wants to deny them the right of mail service. I say very clearly and loudly if this government can subsidize Time Magazine and Reader's Digest, two United States magazines, to the extent of $1.5 million in this current year for mailing privileges in this country, then we in the small communities are entitled to some subsidies. I have no hesitation in bringing this to the attention of the government. We are not going to sit idly by and let another service to many of these small communities be discontinued.

It is amazing the government should insist on a certain revenue standard. They are thinking of closing many of the small post offices. If this is the Liberal theory of a just society, the government had better start thinking again because we do not agree with it.

I want to bring another matter to the attention of the minister. I mention again the question of mail delivery. I am opposed to a charge being made to people in small communities for a post office box. People living in Ottawa get their mail delivered to their homes free of charge. Why shouldn't people in the small communities have their mail delivered to a post office box in a central location free of charge? They still have to drive to the post office which is time consuming and costly. Do the people living in the larger centres have a special spot and privilege in Canadian society? I don't think so. I know the purpose is to raise revenue for the Post Office. The department has been losing too much money.

People in small communities who formerly paid $2 for a post office box are now paying $4. In some of the larger centres the former rate of $2 has now been raised to $8. This is absolutely incredible! People who must drive three or four miles into a city to pick up their mail have now had this sharp increase in mail box rentals. I do not blame them a bit for being angry with a government that has such an unjust method of levying another tax on the people living in smaller centres.

There is just one more thing I am going to say and it concerns the labour problem currently facing the Post Office Department. I, too, am going to plead with the Postmaster General. What could the government expect? There has been a major change and overhaul in the delivery system. In a country as vast as Canada, the government must expect to have some labour unrest when these changes are taking place. Again I plead with this government not to continue the practice of threatening the men working for the Post Office Department with court action. Some of the members in the back benches do not have the foggiest notion of good labour relations. They would have this country in a complete turmoil. I urge the Postmaster General to move slowly and carefully in respect of this problem. It can and will be sorted out, but let us realize that in an adjustment period when there are major upsets it is wise for the person in authority not to barge ahead like a bull in a china shop because this can only result in difficulty. I suggest that the Postmaster General might talk to the Minister of Labour, who at least I believe understands the problems of labour. Possibly he would be in a position to give the Postmaster General some guidance in respect of how he should proceed. There is no one in this house or in Canada who wants to see trouble, particularly so far as the mails are concerned. Again, I urge the government to move very, very cautiously.

The Chairman: Shall clause 7 carry?

Mr. Peters: Before it does, Mr. Chairman, I should like to add a few words to some of the comments which have been made by the rural members. I have been sitting here thinking that there are a number of federal representatives in the Liberal party from the northern part of Ontario and other rural areas. I am wondering why they have not raised some of the problems which I know are current in their areas. For instance, there is the hon. member for Timmins. I do not know why he has not mentioned some of the post offices in his area which are closing, and the disruption that is taking place because of this. I am sure the hon. member for Cochrane is in the same position, as is the hon. member for Algoma and as are other members from northwestern Ontario. In each of these areas, the population has been dropping.

All the rural areas are experiencing difficulty in maintaining any kind of identity because their identity in many instances has boiled down mainly just to a post office address. When that address is gone, there is really nothing left in those communities on which to build. Many of these communities have been in existence for 50 or 60 years. They have resources other than the rural economy to support them and therefore, in most cases these communities will have a future; but for the sake of economy many of their addresses have been cut out. Today, I received a notice in respect of the closing of the post office in the village of Charlton. This town was incorporated in the very early days of northern Ontario. It is true there are only 2,000 patrons of the post office. The present suggestion, however, is to get rid of the post office and the postmaster because the expense involved is $2,600. I do not know why he was paid $2,600.

An hon. Member: He was a Liberal.

Mr. Peters: Of course he was a Liberal or he would not have had the job. Now, I understand the post office will be located in another store where there will be boxes. This will mean that the people there will have to pay $4 for a box. They not only will lose the service they had but in addition they will not have the privilege of buying money orders. This would seem to be very unfair. I believe the minister should consider the aspect of rural community life that has centred around the post office and what a postal address in effect means to the people in a community.

A similar situation occurred in the past in respect of the railway. When rail lines were abandoned the centres no longer had a station. Many people would like to maintain the communities which are in existence. It is my opinion that many of them will have a future in any event. I do not believe the minister intends to do anything about this. He has already made the decision, and therefore no appeal that any member makes in the back room, in the caucus or any place else, in my opinion, will make any difference.

I think, however, I would be remiss if I did not lament the passing of many of these post offices, especially when the expense involved is not sufficient to warrant the curtailment of the community activity which would be the result of the removal of the post office. I think the elimination of these post offices is another step toward the end of rural communities.

I do not know whether this has been mentioned by the minister, but I should like to refer to the matter of educational television. I believe this is an immense field and one which we should not enter lightly. I am very surprised that in recent months and recent years the federal government has been very anxious to refer to the limiting influence the constitution has in respect of the federal government becoming involved in any type of education. In view of some of the things which have been said in recent months in the province of Quebec, for instance, which has entered this field, and also the interest of the province of Ontario in educational television, as well as the great emphasis that has been placed upon the educational system for the beatification of a provincial government, it would seem to me there is a great deal of merit in the federal government playing an important role in this field. Through educational television, there would be an opportunity for the retraining and scholastic advancement of people who have dropped out of school. People would be in a position to take advantage of the educational programs to upgrade their education. Therefore, I believe it would be in the interest of the Canadian public to have this programming controlled by the federal government. I realize there are the arguments about the holy cow aspect of the provincial jurisdiction in respect of education.

An hon. Member: Sacred cow.

Mr. Peters: Whether it is a sacred cow or a holy cow, I fail to see the difference. Whichever it may be, I believe the provision of a standard across the nation is a good deal more important than the satisfaction of certain provincial educational systems which are not providing a national standard. Eventually, we will be involved in types of technical educational training by which tradesmen and technicians will be able to take advanced courses by means of television. In my opinion, it would be very foolish for us to allow the provincial governments to control this type of education when by this means it would be very easy to provide a standardization in technical and trade education across Canada. I hope the minister will consider this. I know he has great capacity in this field. I know also that once he has made up his mind there is no point in saying anything about it because he is not likely to change his mind.

• (8:50 p.m.)

If he has not already done so he should consider some of the statements which have emanated from the general conference in Montreal this week, as well as some of those made by leaders in the province of Quebec, educational people in the province of Ontario and other provinces, in respect of what they intend to do with educational television.

This is a powerful media which will probably prove to be more powerful than the classroom, and could be put to great use in the educational field. In this way, we may be able to overcome some of the limitations that exist in the educational field in various provinces, particularly in respect of scholastic advancement in adult education.

When the minister is setting up this department of communications, I hope he will move to accomplish great things in the educational field of adult training. Perhaps he can maintain one or two channels in this field for government use. In this way, he may be able to remedy a difficulty existing in certain provinces in respect of educational communication.

When the minister is considering this matter, I hope he will take into account some recent statements and expressions of the aspirations of provincial educational people. Surely he will agree that there is a beautiful opportunity for the federal government to provide equality in educational television to all national viewers.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak very briefly about something I observed and thought very interesting. A few moments ago the hon. member for Parkdale rose and made an eloquent speech outlining a number of things about which he wanted information from the Postmaster General for the benefit of his constituents. Obviously, these are things he has wanted to know about for a long time. They related to the Post Office and other things under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General. Obviously, he has not been able to get this information.

The hon. member was trying to obtain this information from an individual who sits beside him in this house. At any time he was speaking he could have reached out and touched that minister. I draw this matter to the attention of the house because during the last election we heard a great deal from the Prime Minister about the need for better communication within this country and how he intended to bring about this better communication. He said this was going to be a government of dialogue, that there would be dialogue between the people and the government so, the government and the people would be much closer together because they would understand each other. For the first time, there was to be a tremendous amount of communication.

Ladies and gentlemen, or Mr. Chairman, I should say—

An hon. Member: What a play to the gallery.

Mr. Hees: If you had looked at the gallery, as I have, and seen the attractive people there you would understand why I spoke that way.

Let me say that what has happened indicates just how valid the election promises of the Prime Minister were. We have two members of the same government, one a minister and the other a parliamentary secretary, who sit side by side in this house but are unable to talk to each other. As the hon. member for Parkdale has said, he has not been able to get any of the information he has asked for regarding this important matter from the Post Office Department.

It seems to me that this is the beginning of a revelation which has occurred recently in respect of the gap in credibility. This credibility gap has plagued government leaders all over the world including Mr. Wilson, Mr. Johnson and General de Gaulle. It now seems to have come home to our Prime Minister. Perhaps this is the reason we read last Saturday with great interest the latest reports of the Gallop poll which showed that the majority of the people in this country have become dissatisfied with the operations of this government. This situation results from the fact that the Prime Minister's election promises have simply not come true.

Clause 7 agreed to.

Clauses 8 to 12 inclusive agreed to.

The Chairman: We shall now proceed to Part III, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

On clause 13—Department established.

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, on introducing the present bill a few days ago, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) explained its rather simple objective: the improvement of the government's administrative organization in order to deal more efficiently with those unavoidable, permanent and new problems which the country must face now and in the future. The same concern had led to reforms to parliamentary procedure and cabinet administration.

Any self-respecting institution updates its methods, from time to time, in a word, modernizes its framework.

If, in politics as elsewhere, the subject matter is the most important, the structure is equally important as it shapes, molds and channels action and therefore improves the results. It would be quite wrong to ignore the structure.

The amalgamation of the Departments of Trade and Commerce and of Industry plays a very important role in the present reorganization of the federal government, the third since 1963, if one considers that the Department of Industry was then established. This amalgamation will result in the establishment of policies which will be more worthwhile yet and it will create a wider range of services for businessmen and for Canadians, generally.

[English]

I feel honoured and challenged by the mandate given me to bring together the qualities and capabilities of the present Departments of Industry and Trade and Commerce and to forge for the future a strong, forward-looking ministry.

Our capacity to develop in Canada our social programs, provincial or federal, to upgrade our educational, medical, welfare and cultural standards, to afford the investment required to narrow our regional disparities, this capacity, I say, depends in essence on our economic strength as a whole and on our efficient industrial and commercial growth. It is to these essential elements that the efforts of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce will be directed.

I was observing in Montreal recently, rather prosaically, that the just society is easier to achieve in prosperity than in economic mediocrity. I am quite sure that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings will agree with at least that part of my speech.

The department's objectives are spelled out in detail in the bill and I hope they will command the general support of the house.

In summary, the role is to help to further the growth, productivity, employment opportunities and general prosperity of the Canadian economy through the efficient development of Canada's manufacturing and processing industries and the expansion of our trade and tourism.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[Translation]

How will the department be structured to reach those objectives? The basic principle consists in incorporating into the structure of the new department the essential relation that exists between the industrial development and the progress of exports.

My hon. friends have surely noticed, as I have, two essential things in modern economy.

The first is that international trade is increasing more rapidly than the world production of commodities; in other words, men export to other countries more and more of their products. Since 1960, the world production has been increasing, in real terms, at an annual average of 5.4 per cent, while the average annual increase in world trade has reached 7 per cent. As for Canada, comparative figures show that the annual increase in national production has reached 5.2 per cent, while exports have increased at an average rate of 10 per cent during that period. Therefore, foreign trade increases faster than the production of goods.

Secondly, trade in manufactured products increases more rapidly than in basic food products and raw materials. During the last decade, world trade in manufactured products increased by about 140 per cent while world trade in basic food products and raw materials rose by 55 per cent during the same period. Canadian exports of manufactured goods increased by 190 per cent and exports of basic food products and raw materials by 80 per cent. Therefore we can see that our export increase is much greater in the sector of manufactured products.

Again in Canada, manufacturing and processing industries produce now nearly three quarters of all our exports, that is 35 per cent in wholly manufactured products and 38 per cent in partly manufactured products. However, there are still people who believe that our basic products make up the bulk of Canadian exports. The figures I have just quoted indicate that about 75 per cent of our exports are made up of manufactured and processed goods. It is therefore in this sector that we must especially look for substantial economic gains and new job opportunities, for instance, without overlooking basic products.

The connection between industrial development and trade expansion comes out even more clearly if we consider the following propositions which I think are quite simple but essential:

(a) to retain our Canadian domestic markets and our existing foreign markets and to gain new ones, we must produce at competitive prices goods which are in demand:

(b) to produce such goods competitively, we must win as many domestic and foreign markets as possible, so as to make economies of scales and of specialization.

In other words, to sell mining, logging, school and medical equipment on the Canadian market, we must also be able to sell it on the foreign market, so as to achieve competitive prices.

The integration in one department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is a way of recognizing administratively, if I may be allowed to use the expression, the vital relationship between industrial development and trade expansion. The rest of the reorganization will be in accordance with this basic principle.

Each of the assistant deputy ministers shall have both domestic and external responsibilities. Thus, the first assistant deputy minister, Mr. Kniewasser, whom many hon. members know well, will be responsible for management and coordination, both in Canada and abroad, in the field of industrial and business development. The assistant deputy minister responsible for operations, Mr. Head, will be in charge of administration and coordination of the nine operation "branches" of the department which, incidentally, include clothing and textile products. I imagine that this brings back memories to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings (Mr. Hees). The nine branches are the following:

Clothing and Textiles; Chemical Products; Electricity and Electronics; Machinery and Materials; Agriculture, Fish and Food Products; Wood Products; Space, Marine and Rail Industries; and, finally, Motor Transport. They will be responsible mainly for promotion and consultation services with manufacturers, whether or not they are exporters. They will have to draw up and implement assistance programs for the area to which they have been assigned, in the light of studies they will make about the problems and possibilities of selling the products in question, in Canada as well as abroad.

The assistant deputy minister for external services, Mr. Mundy—who will also report to the first assistant deputy minister—will be responsible for the trade commissioners' service and also for the international defence programs branch. The experience of Mr. Mundy's group, in matters of marketing abroad, will be made available to the industrial development pattern service in this country.

The assistant deputy minister of the commercial and industrial policy branch, Mr. Schwarzmann, will also have a domestic and external jurisdiction. He will be directly responsible to Mr. Warren, the well-known deputy minister, for the commercial policy especially for the negotiation of international agreements. But the direction of the advisory council on industrial policy will on the whole be under his jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, I could go on enumerating the domestic and external, industrial and commercial responsibilities of every senior official, but I will refrain from it.

[English]

These examples serve to illustrate the integrated approach, as I have just illustrated, which the new department intends to adopt in implementing the expanded mandate now being sought from parliament.

I should like to say a few words on tourism, for which the new department will also be responsible and which earns $1 billion a year for our balance of payments. The intended departmental approach to the development of our tourist industries and the expansion of Canadian income from tourism also reflects an integrated approach, although these activities are to be identified as a separate program within the new department.

The Office of Tourism will comprise, first, the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, the promotional arm with particular responsibilities for attracting visitors to Canada. It has 24 offices abroad. The Office of Tourism will also comprise a branch devoted to the study of our domestic travel industry and its needs for growth and development to meet the requirements of the highly competitive international travel market; all this, of course, in the closest possible co-operation with the industry, the provinces and other federal departments whose activities are relevant to the development of the tourist attractions and facilities of Canada. Here again, the international and the domestic will be closely matched, closely linked. The supply will meet the demand.

May I now comment briefly on the need for industrial innovation and how the department is and will be helping it. A key responsibility of the new department will be to assist manufacturing and processing industries to adapt to changes in technology and to changing conditions in domestic and export markets, to help them rationalize and restructure their facilities and cope with exceptional problems of adjustment.

Already the Department of Industry has responsibility for a variety of programs to this end; for example, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, known as IRDIA, the Program for the Advancement of Industrial Technology, known as PAIT, Defence Industry Productivity, known as DIP, the General Adjustment Assistance Program, known as GAAP, the Automotive Assistance Program, and so on.

• (9:10 p.m.)

When my estimates go before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs we will have a chance to review the implementation of these programs. These programs will be developed and modified as needs and priorities dictate. Our assistance programs and services will be oriented to product and process development, to the greater use of industrial research, and the application of advanced technology and modern management techniques. Actually we have studies leading to the improvement of some of these programs and to the possibility of establishing new ones. We shall continue to encourage and promote the utilization of improved industrial design and the application of sound industrial standards, design and standards being another responsibility of the department.

Through these various means, such as research, development, modernization, industrial design and industrial standards, it is hoped to stimulate greater productivity and a major expansion of innovative activity in Canadian industry and thereby to enhance our productive capacity and our ability to compete in domestic and in foreign markets.

It will not be enough simply to stimulate research and development. The process, if it is to yield results, must be carried through to the point where the benefit is gained in terms of profitable marketing of new products, and all that that means for employment and growth. Here again, the international services of the department will advise the domestic services.

I would have liked to say more about exports and something about wheat and the relationship between the department and the Wheat Board, but time will not permit me to do so. Up to now, I have emphasized the fundamental and compelling economic rationale for a combined approach to the related problems of industrial development and trade at this juncture of Canada's growth and evolution toward a balanced and mature economic society.

The case for the now merged department would stand on that ground alone, but there are other advantages to a single department that may be mentioned.

First, the business community will be able to reduce the number of points of contact it must maintain with government and so increase the efficiency of its liaison. This central point of contact will also facilitate a more complete and rounded appreciation of business problems and business needs within government. Already an advisory council has been established, has met once, and will be concerned with both industrial development and trade.

Integration of the two departments will also contribute to the avoidance of possible duplication of activities and will permit financial and personnel savings to result from the reduction in common services and overheads. I might mention at this point that there will be a saving of 184 positions.

Integration will also bring improvements in the interflow of information as between the elements which made up the predecessor departments and between users in Ottawa and in the field, both as regards marketing and industrial development and commercial and industrial intelligence generally.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, if this is all true, the question will surely be raised pretty soon: why a single department in 1969 and two in 1963? I imagine that question will likely be put to me.

At the outset of my comments, I mentioned that industry, trade and tourism must keep face with, and even foresee, the evolution of the economic environment and of technology.

This line of reasoning is as good for the government as for private entreprise.

A formula can prove expedient at one time and inadequate later, when circumstances have evolved.

That is naturally a theme which the Prime Minister often brings up when urging us to review the situation. Some seem to wonder at the number of reviews in which we are involved at this time, but I, for one, often say that the process of reviewing policies is quite normal, and when one is completed, it would be only logical and reasonable to start another one on the same topic the day after because things are changing very quickly.

It was with this in mind that the Department of Industry was set up apart from the Department of Trade and Commerce in 1963, and it will be for the same reason that the two departments will be merged soon into a single Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Therefore, there is no contradiction.

In 1963, on the eve of the Kennedy Round, it was generally acknowledged that industrial expansion should be more aggressive in Canada, more able to withstand world competition, capable of promoting the development of manufacturing industries and of increasing the number of jobs available to our labour force. It was thought, in some well-informed circles, that the federal government should help the industry to meet these new conditions. In view of the circumstances prevailing then, a new start had to be made, new fields had to be explored, new priorities had to be established, etc. Those were the factors which brought about, in 1963, the establishment of the Department of Industry, and those objectives have been attained.

May I also point out the particular circumstances? In 1963, the Minister of Industry was at the same time Minister of Defence Production, therefore, a very busy man with two departments to head. Today, the expanded Department of Defence Production, now the Department of Supply and Services, has its own head.

We must also recall that in 1963 the Department of Industry looked after regional development. This sector has become the responsibility of a separate department.

Therefore, before accusing us of sometimes being illogical, consideration must be given—that is what I am trying to prove—to particular circumstances which prevailed in 1963, and to changes which happened since then, in the conjunction of circumstances inherent to every situation.

Anyway, the transmission of the new function to a new and separate organization, in 1963, helped it—I am referring to the Department of Industry, of course—to gain influence, prestige and the necessary instruments to work in re-orienting our economy. All those things remain in the new structure.

I have already mentioned a certain number of important programs operated by the Department of Industry. But there are several others which I would like to mention, especially that famous automotive agreement entered into by Canada and the United States, which has proved very successful, as well as the agreement on machinery which enables us to import industrial equipment duty-free.

Through that Department of Industry, there is now a better co-operation between the business world and the government.

We are therefore facing a new combination of circumstances which compels us to amalgamate those two departments and once again it seems to me that there is nothing inconsistent in that.

Anyhow, the opposition said in 1963 that the Department of Trade and Commerce should also be a Department of Industry. The least we can expect from members of the opposition tonight is that they approve the merging of the two departments. Personally, I hope that the debate will be shorter than the one on the establishment of the Department of Communications.

• (9:20 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Hees: Mr. Chairman, I think we have all listened with a great deal of interest to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. I must congratulate him on his presentation because in it he proved that he has the primary quality of a Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, namely that of a salesman because he came very close to selling parliament the idea that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is something new. In fact, what he said tonight was proof that industry, trade and commerce should never have been split up by the government six years ago. As I listened to the minister speak tonight I said to myself, as one often does on hearing something familiar, "I recognize some of my own speeches, there." If hon. members would look back through the Hansard of those days they would find the minister was saying exactly what I said in the House of Commons about the function of the then Department of Trade and Commerce. I want to congratulate the minister on taking an old product, a successful product, one which was made successful by others than himself, and introducing it to the world as something brand new, something exciting, something which will bring results which were never achieved before. I congratulate him. He is undoubtedly a salesman. If I had not been here in the house I am sure many hon. members would have believed this was a brand new department and that the hon. gentleman was leading a brand new crusade.

However, as all who have had some connection with this department know, until 1963 the Department of Industry was in fact the industry section of the Department of Trade and Commerce. As any businessman in Canada will tell you, this industry section did an excellent job by helping industry to lower costs and improve design and quality. It helped industry greatly to make sales not only in Canada but in the export market. As we know very well, and as the minister stated tonight, the sections of industry in Canada which produce for the export market and those which produce for the domestic market are substantially the same. Industry produces primarily for sales in Canada. Then, it discovers there are possibilities for selling a product abroad, and it sells in the export market as well.

Prior to 1963 when the government saw fit to create a new department and split industry apart from trade and commerce, businessmen who came to Ottawa seeking assistance in developing production methods or in selling their products abroad went only to the one department. This was very convenient, and the department was laid out in such a way that they could find their way round easily and get the answers to their questions in a very short space of time.

Then, Mr. Chairman, as you and I know very well, the Liberal government was elected in 1963. It had been out of office for six years and it had a great many political debts to pay. It was looking for some way in which to provide good jobs at high salaries for people who had been helpful in the past. So, the Liberal government of that day decided to obey Parkinson's law by creating two departments to take the place of one department which had up to that moment been doing an excellent job. Ask any producer in Canada about the kind of job the Department of Trade and Commerce had been doing for producers and sellers, and the unanimous opinion, I am sure, would be that it had been doing first class work.

Let us try to figure out what this bold venture dreamed up, I believe, by Walter Gordon and acceded to by his colleagues has cost this country in the meantime. In 1963—and I am familiar with these costs because I submitted them to the Treasury Board myself in that year—the outlay for the industrial section of the Department of Trade and Commerce was $1,500,000. It is difficult with the figures presented by the government in the meantime to sort out exactly how this total increased, but it is obvious that even taking into account expanded operations, and the fact that salaries do increase year by year in this and every other country, the cost of doing the same job today by the Department of Industry in the same fields as those previously covered by the industrial section of the Department of Trade and Commerce has risen astronomically year by year.

I have gone over the figures and I am confident that this experiment by the Liberal government in 1963 in splitting two departments which should obviously have remained together has cost the Canadian taxpayer at least $50 million which should never have been spent. Indeed, the cost could easily be a lot closer to $100 million. The increase in staff was fantastic, and any businessman in Canada would tell you that this increase only served to make his communications with the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry from then on about the most complicated process that a human being could imagine.

After the separation of these two departments which, as the minister eloquently pointed out tonight, belong together and always will, businessmen spent hours and days going from one department to the other trying to find out from various civil servants who looked after what. I have been told that going into these two departments was far worse than entering any maze. This is why the government has finally decided to correct the colossal error it made six years ago by bringing industry, trade and commerce back together once more. It is taking this action because the producers of this country have demanded that the government cease this nonsense they have had to put up with for the past six years, and straighten out the maze through which they have been trying to find their way. They have demanded that the government bring industry, trade and commerce under one roof again, working together under one minister, not at cross purposes, not spread out all over Hell's half-acre, but constituting again one comprehensive department. The minister knows this very well, as does every businessman in Canada.

The operation I have described is typical of the kind of foolishness which has cost the taxpayers of this country millions and millions of wasted dollars during the life of the Liberal government. It is a process exemplified by the figures produced recently in connection with the Bonaventure, the hydrofoil project and other things of that kind. People have been wondering for some time why this government has not been able to balance its budget, despite the fact that the Minister of Finance has told us many times that this is his intention. It is because the government is overspending; it is because things of this kind have been getting out of control. I rise simply to call attention to a few of these facts; I do not intend to take up any more of the committee's time.

I end by urging the government to get on with the job it was elected to do, the job of running this country efficiently. I am glad to see that the government has seen the error of its ways in 1963 when it split industry, trade and commerce. This the government should never have done, and it has cost a great deal in the form of wasted taxes and wasted time and energy on the part of the business community of Canada. I urge the government to cease any further effort it might have in mind with regard to similar empire building and to stop wasting taxpayers' money, as was done in this case. The government should start paying attention to the needs of the country and manage the economy of the country in a sane, economic and practical manner.

The minister has my very best wishes. He has the best department in government. Now that these departments are together again, the merged department can do a great job for this country. Certainly, it did a great job in the past. The department was largely made what it was by the late C. D. Howe, a great Canadian. It has great personnel of great ability. I am glad to see both industry and trade and commerce together again. They should never have been parted. Let the department now go ahead full steam. I think the minister can do a good job—I hope he can—and he has not only my best wishes but I feel sure the best wishes of the members of this house.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, we have been gathered together tonight to join together or, rather, to effect a reconciliation between industry and trade and commerce. I feel somewhat like the unwelcome guest when the minister says "Whosoever has reason". I have reason. I think it is a mistake to put industry and trade and commerce together. While the new minister is making like the father of the bride, I should like to bring some matters to his attention.

To begin with, I assure the minister of my most sincere hopes that some of the fears I have about the new union will not materialize. However, real problems are involved in putting the two departments together. In order to understand those problems I think we have to go back to 1963 and try to understand why the government established a new Department of Industry.

It may be easy enough to dismiss the creation of a new department as a repository for people to whom some political obligations were owed. However, I should like to feel there were sounder reasons for the establishment of this department. The Prime Minister of that day expressed it in these words:

> —we have to accept the fact that manufacturing industry, secondary industry, is the source from which the new wealth and the new employment must largely come.

Further on, in introducing the new department, he said:

> Our aim today cannot be simply to build up industry, any kind of industry in a general way, by general action. Canada's need is for industries that will thrive in the modern world, industries that will fit into the new patterns of international trade which are now emerging and to which we will have to adapt ourselves.

There was a recognition at that time that the future of Canada lay in the development of its secondary industry. Perhaps people sensed there was a conflict between secondary industry, primary industry and the Department of Trade and Commerce. Traditionally, the Department of Trade and Commerce had a fish or fowl attitude. In other words, "Let us export raw materials as rapidly as we can". The very fact that only $1.5 million were allocated in the department to the service of secondary industry is an indication of the downgrading of manufacturing in this country within the department.

It is very difficult to serve two masters, and I suggest that exporters of raw materials and manufacturers of finished goods have somewhat different terms of reference and different outlooks when it comes to what should be done to develop their industries. For example, let us take a look at our tax system. It is obvious that our tax system was designed for the exporters of raw material in this country. Secondary industry has largely been ignored. As the Carter commission pointed out, almost all of the incentives have been given to those people who produce in the raw form—oil, mining companies and such like. In such a tax system there is no tax avoidance, as Mr. Carter pointed out in one of his speeches. What is tax avoidance for some becomes a tax penalty for others.

The gains that were accorded primary industry, the mining and oil industries in particular, were the costs that were imposed upon secondary industry in this country. This may not have been absolutely understood at the time this separation took place, but I think the feeling developed that if manufacturing were to come into its own in this country it needed its own minister, its own impetus. I like to think that this was the reason the department was created.

Our manufacturing industry in Canada has been sick for a long time, and I say that with very great regret. As long ago as 1957 it was pointed out in a report called "Canadian Secondary Manufacturing Industry, Royal Commission on Canada's Economic Prospects", not only that manufacturing industry was sick, but also the symptoms of the sickness. Some suggestions for its correction were also indicated.

I should like to read a short paragraph from page 160 of that report which was put out by D. H. Fullerton and H. A. Hampson;

> —the problem of unspecialized production in Canadian secondary industry is due to many causes, including the excessive fragmentation of the Canadian market stemming from our importation of the American structure of industry. It is in part also due to the reluctance of domestic producers to specialize to the same extent as in the United States, and in some instances, to the less competitive nature of certain Canadian industries.

This report, as I say, was published in 1957. When the Third Annual Review of the Economic Council was published, the Canadian Trade Committee commented on the report. They said that the striking thing was that the increase of income per capita in Canada was the lowest of all the industrialized countries, and that the Economic Council did not expect this rank for Canada to alter in the period that is to come. Then, the Committee went on to say that Canada has a per capita income markedly lower than the United States, and also has benefited from a relatively greater shift of population from agriculture to other sections of the economy than the United States during the past ten years. Yet her experience, they point out, does not match what the simple inverse relationship between income and growth of income per capita, mentioned above, would seem to promise.

There have been all sorts of reports published pointing out that we have the highest level of capital investment per worker in the world; higher even than that of the United States. It is almost 30 per cent greater per worker in Canada than in the United States. Yet our productivity is some 20 to 30 per cent lower than that of the United States, an incredibly bad performance. This is not the result of the inability of Canadian workers or the reluctance of Canadian workers to work. In industries where rationalization has taken place we have not only matched the productivity of the United States but have exceeded that productivity. The combination governing the factors through which resources are brought together in this country is playing havoc with our ability to develop our manufacturing industries. The Fourth Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada took up this matter on page 165 to the following effect:

• (9:40 p.m.)

> There is accumulating evidence from various sources, including the special survey undertaken in this field on behalf of the Economic Council, that short production runs and a relatively large degree of product diversification is an important and pervasive phenomenon in Canadian manufacturing plants. The importance of this phenomenon stems from the fact that it tends to keep prices and costs relatively high and to hold down productivity.

The Watkins report pointed this out again. I read from page 404 of the report, where the following appears:

> Without an appropriate set of industrial policies which create an efficient structure of industry in Canada, the benefits of foreign direct investment tend to be emasculated.

We have imported vast quantities of capital which has been virtually wasted because it has not been used properly. This factor must have influenced the government in 1963 in setting up the Department of Industry. They wanted to bring about greater productivity in our industry and greater rationalization in the Canadian economy. One instance of rationalization which is bad is the Canada-United States Automboile Agreement, a rationalization of the wrong kind because it tied us completely in with the United States market. Avenues of rationalization other than those leading to the surrender of our sovereignty are open to us. It is true that as the result of the Canada-United States Automobile Agreement, productivity in certain of our factories has increased and parity pay for our workers had been made possible. Those are the benefits. The disadvantages lie in the fact that by losing the power to make decisions on an economic level we may lose our political freedom. All decisions affecting the automobile industry are made in the United States and not in Canada. There is a growing danger that activities needing skill in the manufacture of automobiles, such as designing and so on, will take place in the United States. We may not become hewers of wood and drawers of water, but we may become fender fitters and people who tighten nuts and bolts.

Despite what some hon. members opposite think, I am greatly impressed with the people in the Department of Industry. Several times I have called on that department for assistance for some of my constituents. I think that in no other department will be found civil servants as knowledgeable and capable as in this department. The problem has not been with the people of the department; it has been with how the department has been directed. It was a good idea to set up a department dealing with secondary manufacturing industries in Canada, and it was worth spending $1.5 million on it. The department has failed us, not because of any intrinsic defect in its organization, but because there was lack of direction from the top, because the government lacked vision and because the people in the department had no terms of reference to guide them. They were frustrated no matter where they turned. Instead of trying to correct faults in its previous policy the government has thrown up its hands in despair saying, "Let us go back to our old ways.". They have even trotted out the old speech writer to write the same old speech. This is an abdication of responsibility and I cannot see that any useful purpose will be served by combining the two departments.

I watched carefully as the minister announced rather shyly that he was lopping off 184 people from departmental strength. He was not looking to our corner of the house when he said that but at the Conservative benches, because he knew he would find approval there. I submit we are being penny wise and pound foolish. Obviously, if reducing the personnel of a department mattered that much more people would have been lopped off its strength. We must consider the relation between benefits to be gained and the number of people employed. What good will it do to lop off 184 people from departmental strength? It might be worth our while adding another 184 people to the department if secondary manufacturers of this country could thereby be assisted in being more productive. It is more important to determine the relationship between costs and achievements. We should not go around with an abacus counting the members of the department.

I began by saying there is conflict within the department on the question of capital use. In any society capital is a scarce commodity. How are we to allocate capital? Is it to go to secondary industry or will the old and inefficient inducements in the field of mining and oil be continued? A spokesman for secondary industry was needed in the cabinet. We recognize that the various regions and industries of this country need representation in the cabinet. A minister speaking for a particular region or industry in cabinet persuades his colleagues to his point of view, and the cabinet as a whole makes the decision. In this way, conflicts are resolved. Yet the spokesman vital for secondary industry did nothing and said nothing because he was immobilized. I do not know whether the blame for that lies with the government. Did it not allow the minister to exercise his responsibilities? This party recognizes that consumers of this country need representation in cabinet and the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is their spokesman. Surely, it is a mistake to have the muted voice representing industry in cabinet combined with the voice speaking for trade and commerce. I submit the two voices ought to be completely separate.

Recognizing clearly the problems facing this country in the field of secondary industry, the Deputy Minister of Industry, S. S. Reisman, made the following comments in a speech, as reported in the Toronto Star of February 2, 1968:

> The proliferation of firms and products, combined with the relatively small size of the Canadian market, has tended to make us less efficient than we otherwise might be, particularly in comparison with the U.S.—

I wish to comment on that statement. It is not the size of the Canadian market that inhibits our developing efficient industry. The Canadian market is probably the second most affluent market in the world. A population of 21 millions is not inconsiderable. The difficulty stems from the fact we have inherited the United States pattern of marketing and production, and we have forgotten that Canada is not the United States. What might make sense in the United States, a country with a population 10 or 11 times the size of ours, does not make sense in this country. I am not one who sees a bogeyman in United States investment. I do not believe that United States investment cannot be controlled or directed to the best purposes of this nation, if we want it that way. The danger is not so much from the investment or the fact that they are Americans, Germans or anyone else, but from the fact that they bring with them their pattern of doing business which is inappropriate to our society. It just does not make sense. We have one of two choices. Either we break through this pattern and find some way of developing different methods of production in this country, or we succumb to that great continental market.

• (9:50 p.m.)

Continental integration of our economy would be a disaster of the greatest magnitude for us. Continental integration does not give you a political say. However, I do not want to discuss that aspect of the political problem. I would rather go on with the technical details. I would like the opportunity of going further into this matter with the minister. I want to conclude my remarks because it is getting rather late in the evening. I would like to make a few more remarks at this time and perhaps avail myself of the opportunity of making some additional comments later on.

The Chairman: Order, please. I might point out to the hon. member that his time has expired. Perhaps the committee would be disposed to grant him leave to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate the courtesy of the house and you, Mr. Chairman.

The minister has undertaken very heavy responsibilities. He enumerated all the various responsibilities which he inherited, such as tourism and wheat. With regard to wheat, some people question whether the minister has been able to handle that adequately. He also has the responsibility for resources and manufacturing.

How much attention can the minister be expected to devote to this great problem of rationalization? I am not saying the minister will not try. I am sure he will. I know he is a man who works hard and wants to do a good job. It is not on lack of intent or intelligence that my fears for this department are founded. It is just that he cannot do it. A man is being asked to do the impossible, Mr. Chairman, when he has this many obligations. Surely, this is an impossible task for anyone who wishes to innovate and make departures from the ordinary, as he must do.

The minister will have no alternative but to take the easy way out, call in the businessmen and say, "How would this suit you fellows? How would you like this organized?" The minister may not want it that way but he will have no choice except to behave in this way. It may not be the minister who will run the department, but the department and the international corporations that will run the minister.

I will conclude, Mr. Chairman, in deference to the courtesy extended to me. I am quite worried about this marriage. I want to point out the little flaws of the bride, and the groom may not be all he is supposed to be. I do not like sounding this sour note, but it is a policy. It is an amalgamation that is rooted in a failure, not the failure of an idea but a policy. If that policy failed before, what assurance have we now that it will not fail when the minister has so many other responsibilities in addition to the new one being added?

The Chairman: It being ten o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to set again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I would just like to confirm, Mr. Speaker, that tomorrow we will continue with the government reorganization bill. As agreed, when we make progress on this item we will not deal with the next part of the bill in successive order, Part IV, with regard to the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Rather we will go on to Part V and the subsequent parts and return to Part IV for completion after we have dealt with the rest of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 40, a motion to adjourn the house is deemed to have been made and seconded at this time. Therefore, the question is that this house do now adjourn.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

PUBLIC SERVICE—COMMITTEE STUDYING INCREASES IN PENSIONS OF RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday, February 11, as recorded in Hansard at page 5372, I asked the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) this question:

> In view of the assurance the minister gave on January 8 to representatives of retired civil servants that the question of increasing their pensions would be studied by a committee with the hope that a report would be forthcoming in three or four weeks, can the hon. gentleman say whether such a report is yet ready?

The reply of the President of the Treasury Board was:

> Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

In the next brief exchange I was of course given the usual assurance that the matter is still under serious study. Another month has gone by and apparently the report of that committee is not yet available. The story of disappointments on the part of retired civil servants is a long one. Time and time again their hopes have been raised by announcements or statements of this kind. It is too bad that we have yet another one.

I have been informed by a good many retired civil servants, particularly by a number of those who met with the President of the Treasury Board, that it was their clear understanding on January 8 that something would be reported to them within three or four weeks. Two months have now gone by and nothing has been indicated.

We have now had it made known to us that there will be debate on Friday of this week on second reading of Bill C-178 which proposes to amend the Public Service Superannuation Act and three or four other corresponding acts. We, of course, have copies of that bill, first reading having been given to it Friday, March 7. But any hope that it might have contained pension increases is of course destroyed by the fact that they are not in that bill. This is very disappointing.

On another occasion, February 4 to be exact, I drew the attention of the President of the Treasury Board to the fact that recently in the United Kingdom, for the seventh time since the end of world war II, a pensions increase bill was brought in which increased the pensions of retired civil servants of that country. I have before me a schedule of those increases. This bill is to be effective on April 1, 1969. The schedule shows that when this new bill is in effect the increases in the pensions of retired civil servants will vary from 2 per cent of the total pension for those retired very recently up as high as 18 per cent for those retired back in 1955. I mention this just to make the point again that it can be done. It is not some pipe dream which some of us have; it is not some fanciful notion. It has been done in a good many other jurisdictions. Many of us in this house in all parties believe it can and ought to be done here.

I regret very much that after these two months there is still no forthright announcement as promised on January 8, but perhaps I should still live in hope and dare believe that on Friday of this week when the President of the Treasury Board moves the second reading of Bill C-178 he will make an announcement at that time concerning what will be done, and also when it will be done, to increase the pensions of these very deserving people, the retired federal civil servants of this country.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to compliment the hon. member upon his persistence in advocating this particular good cause. There is of course available to him a selection of many good causes, some more or less meritorious in comparison to this one. I should just like to assure him that this particular good cause remains under consideration.

PENSIONS—CONSIDERATION OF UNIVERSAL PRINCIPLE OF ESCALATION

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed the admission of the minister who answered my last question that there are many good causes for which one might work. He has not been here very long but he has discovered already that with a Liberal government in power there are many things for which we have to fight.

It is a bit of a coincidence that these two questions of mine should both be the subject of the late show this evening. This one arises out of a question I asked on Thursday, February 27, as recorded in Hansard at pages 6006 and 6007. My question was addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare

(Mr. Munro) and these were the key sentences:

> Can the minister say what progress is being made by the review committee which is studying our welfare and pensions programs? Can he say whether attention is being given to the possibility of increasing the old age security pension in proportion to the increases in wages and salaries?

The reply of the Minister of National Health and Welfare was in these words:

> As I indicated, Mr. Speaker, all of the income maintenance programs and social welfare programs are being reviewed in this study. No firm conclusions have been arrived at, so it is impossible to say whether any conclusions will relate to an increase in old age security or to some other solution that may be adopted.

Of course, as an answer that ought to get the minister into the Senate where a certain other former member of this place has gone. I said a moment ago that I find it an interesting coincidence that I am asking these two questions on the late show this evening because this gives me the opportunity to make this point: whether we are talking about the pensions of retired civil servants, whether we are talking about the pensions of retired employees of the railways of this country or the pensions of retired employees of private industries, or whether we are talking about the old age security pension, I feel the most important issue that faces us is to build into all these pension programs automatic provisions for the pensions to increase after the point of retirement.

We know of course, that we have in the old age security program, as well as in the Canada Pension Plan, a kind of provision for increases, but these are tied to the cost of living and there is a 2 per cent ceiling on each year's increase. The fact of the matter is that in our society we have not only increases in the cost of living but increases in the standard of living. That is one of the virtues of our society; things do get better.

The way things are now organized, however, things get better only for those people who are still at work. I do not think it is a just or decent society which says to those who have retired, you must live the rest of your years on fixed incomes and you must see the value of that income go down; you must settle for fewer and fewer opportunities to share in those new things brought about in a progressive and growing society.

So I contend, Mr. Speaker, that we have not done enough by just putting a limited cost of living factor into old age security and the Canada Pension Plan, but that we should be building into all of our pension programs an automatic increase tied to the increase in wages and salaries; tied to the increase in our productive capacity; tied to our growing affluence.

I have tried to put this in another way in a notice of motion of mine on the order paper in which I suggest that all pensions should be recalculated each year. We do not ask people on the job to work for ten, 15 or 20 years without any increase in their income. It is a fact of life that they will get their increases. I say it is completely unfair to ask people who are retired not to expect an increase, not just to meet higher costs, but an increase in their living standards.

The point of my question is a plea to the government to include this in its review of our social legislation, and to accept it as important and basic to our program that people who are retired have a right to share in the greater affluence of our society, have a right to have their pensions recalculated upward each year. They have the right to expect that their pensions will keep pace not only with the increase in the cost of living but with the rise in wages and salaries across the years.

I hope, therefore, that we will get the assurance tonight that the government realizes the importance of this issue of keeping pensions in line with the progress that takes place in our society.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I think it is certainly true that more pressure is put upon the unprotected segments of our society; the pension income people or the people who do not have the power to control their wages or income. That pressure is put upon them by other segments of our society which have that control and power.

I should like to recommend to the hon. member who has posed this question that he address a part of his plea and his remarks to those groups which so staunchly support his party; those groups which have the power to demand what they think those segments deserve, regardless of the interest of those people who are unprotected and on fixed incomes.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They speak for them, don't worry.

Mr. Lang: It is, of course, the objective of this government to combat inflation and in this fashion protect the pensioner and the fixed income person against this diminution.

An hon. Member: Keep the wages down.

Mr. Lang: I heard an hon. member say that we should keep the wages down. That, of course, is part of the complicated proposition. I commend to him that his friends in the labour movement might well direct more of their power, which is considerable, to the demand for decreased prices from their employers instead of increased wages. In that fashion, he and his friends could help to protect those who are on fixed incomes and otherwise unprotected.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You might as well go to the Senate too.

ECONOMIC REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT—REQUEST FOR SHERBROOKE AREA TO BE CONSIDERED AS A SPECIAL AREA

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, on March 6, I asked the future Minister of Economic Regional Development the following question:

Could he tell the house whether his program intended to abolish regional disparities will be amended in such a way that the Sherbrooke area and some neighbouring areas will be considered as special areas?

Mr. Speaker, I should like to describe, in the few moment at my disposal, the economic situation that prevails in the area where I live.

This region of the province of Quebec, situated in the Eastern Townships, was once rather prosperous. It did not need an economic council nor something else to live, because the inhabitants could manage by themselves.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak this evening about three pilot towns in the area, namely Scotstown, Coaticook and Lac Mégantic.

Scotstown, for example, Mr. Speaker had some 4,000 inhabitants about six years ago. Today, the population of the same municipality has dropped to 2,000. At the beginning, the population was provided with schools, municipal services; a church which cost about $400,000 was even constructed. Today, as a result of the exodus of its taxpayers, the municipality has a huge debt due to the construction of the church, schools and municipal services.

I would like to know what the new Department of Regional Economic Expansion can do to help such a parish or town.

Let us consider now the town of Coaticook with a population of 8,000 two years ago and which has now dropped to some 7,000. The municipal authorities of Coaticook have incurred heavy expenditures. In fact, they have established numerous services: schools, playgrounds, etc. It is now saddled with a huge debt and its taxpayers are getting fewer. Those who remain must bear alone the burden of debts for schools, municipal services and church.

The city of Lac Mégantic, where I live, had in the past a population of over 9,000; it has only 7,000 now. It is in the same predicament. That city provided the people with all kinds of services a few years ago. Today, the population is decreasing and the town still owes large amounts on its schools, its church and its municipal services, including playgrounds and arenas. The social organization is very good in all respects, but people are now leaving, nevertheless.

Around such municipalities, we have rural parishes that were flourishing some years ago. The number of farmers has decreased by more than 70 per cent during the last ten years. The surrounding population, which helped such towns prosper is also today in very disquieting circumstances.

The population is emigrating in great numbers to the United States because we are close to the United States border and Americans have a great many jobs to offer. People are much attracted to the other side of the border. Salaries are higher and therefore our people are emigrating to the United States. Those who do not go there are going to Sherbrooke, to Montreal, to Quebec or to other cities. Those areas remain deserted, underprivileged in every respect. What is worse are the huge debts that those municipalities have accumulated and which small taxpayers who remained there are practically unable to pay.

Therefore, I would like to know whether we intend to tackle the problems of this area, for instance those of the town of Coaticook, which has been annexed to the Sherbrooke area. The town of Scotstown is annexed to Sherbrooke which however is not considered as a city faced with problems of regional disparities but rather as a fairly prosperous city. In spite of the fact that there is a great deal of unemployment and poverty in Sherbrooke, this area is not considered as a have-not area. In fact, a large part of my constituency has been attached to that area. However, all our municipalities—I only named three main towns in this constituency—are poverty stricken, suffer from a lack of interest and tend to be abandoned.

There are a great many resources that could be developed, from a tourist point of view and all other points of view.

I would like to know what the new minister is going to do in this area. How does he intend to develop it or to help it, since it mainly lacks financial means. We have almost all the other means required. As for financial means, we do not have them any longer. Taxpayers who have remained there have been overtaxed and now nearly all houses are on sale.

In the town of Scotstown, for instance, even if properties worth about $20,000 are offered at $5,000, nobody wants to buy them. The same situation prevails in the three municipalities I just mentioned.

In Coaticook, for instance, an industry employing 250 people is closing down in June. That is not likely to boost the economy of that town.

Mr. Speaker, almost all the areas in the riding I represent are poverty-stricken. Those are abandoned areas, in urgent need of help. Assistance should not be given only to Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick or Newfoundland. Areas which once were prosperous are now in need of assistance. The situation is worse than in some areas of Newfoundland and other provinces which have become just about incapable of looking after themselves.

So, Mr. Speaker, I should like the minister to tell us if he can undertake immediately the research work necessary to analyse the causes of this decline and to provide the means of coping with it in the near future.

We have reached the point where the people have to move out of those towns and find jobs in the big cities of the United States. Houses are selling at ridiculous prices; business, industry and church revenues are getting lower and lower. From one year to the next, farmers who were successful in the past are getting deeply into debt, and their products must be sold at a loss. The businessman who operates a factory far from any large centre, such as in Lake Megantic for instance, must pay the same salaries as in Montréal, where industries pay high wages. Moreover, means of transportation are inadequate and very costly. Now it has become almost impossible for the industries of thoses regions to compete with the big industries in Montreal, Quebec or elsewhere.

Well then, Mr. Speaker, if we do not want those cities and those areas to disappear, the government should do something and find practical solutions in order to assist them. Every day the situation is deteriorating. Everywhere, at the level of the constituency, people are losing faith.

• (10:20 p.m.)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): One can have a great deal of understanding and sympathy for the case outlined by the hon. member who has just spoken. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, since I have only three minutes in which to reply, and in order that I can keep my remarks in perspective, I might refer to the question which the hon. member posed to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) on March 6—I am quoting, now, from the Hansard of that date.

> Could he tell the house whether his program intended to abolish regional disparities will be amended in such a way that the Sherbrooke area and some neighbouring areas will be considered as special areas?

The hon. member has dealt tonight with the situation in the Sherbrooke area and other areas. As he knows, there is legislation before the house at the present time which among other things will, if passed by parliament, establish a new department of Regional Economic Expansion. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has indicated to parliament and the country his concern that disparities in economic advantages in various regions of Canada should be reduced as far as reasonably possible in order that Canadians throughout the country might enjoy the advantages and amenities which are generally considered appropriate for Canadians in what might be described as the more affluent parts of the nation. When this legislation is passed, if indeed it is, we shall have set up a new department under a new minister, and parliament will have given it the opportunity to do the things which the Prime Minister and other members of the government have indicated should be done to equalize opportunities for Canadians wherever they may live.

To deal more specifically with the particular question raised by the hon. member, may I remind the house that the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development has indicated in this chamber and in other public statements that when the legislation now before the house has been passed, and the new department has been established, he will then propose further legislation—and he has indicated this would be in the present session of parliament—delineating those areas which would be described, I think, under the legislation now before us, as special areas or special incentive areas. The basic purpose of these changes would be to increase the effectiveness of the incentives used to attract new industries in disadvantaged areas and to stimulate the expansion and modernization of existing industries in these areas.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Honey: So, I can only ask the hon. member to wait until this legislation is approved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Motion agreed to, and the house adjourned at 10.27 p.m.

INDIAN AFFAIRS AND NORTHERN DEVELOPMENT

First report of the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, in French and in English—Mr. Ian Watson (Laprairie).

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

THE EXCHEQUER COURT ACT

AMENDMENT TO ABOLISH REFERENCE TO BRITISH ACTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce bill No. C-180, to amend the Exchequer Court Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to amend the present wording of the act which reads as follows:

The practice and procedure in suits, actions and matters in the Exchequer Court, shall, so far as they are applicable, and unless it is otherwise provided for by this Act, or by general rules made in pursuance of this Act, be regulated by the practice and procedure in similar suits, actions and matters in Her Majesty's High Court of Justice in England on the 1st day of January, 1928.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, the bill I am now introducing, and which I ask the house to pass, has for sole object to amend the act so that procedural rules followed in the Exchequer Court are enacted by Canadians and for Canadians, and any reference to British acts is removed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA—LINGUISTIC QUALIFICATIONS

Question No. 984—Mr. Fortin:

1. Among the 120 persons earning $17,000 per year or more at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, are there any whose mother tongue is French and, if not, what does the Company intend to do to adjust the situation?

2. What is the policy of the A.E.C.L. concerning (a) bilingualism (b) employment of French Canadians?

3. What is the total amount of the A.E.C.L.'s capital assets (a) in Ontario (b) in Quebec?

4. How many employees has the A.E.C.L. (a) in Ontario (b) in Quebec?

5. Does the A.E.C.L. propose to establish research laboratories in Quebec and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Atomic Energy of Canada Limited reports as follows: 1. None. The Company will continue to seek to employ first class Canadian scientists and engineers whose mother tongue is French.

2. (a) and (b)—The same as that of the federal government.

3. As at 30 November, 1968—(a) $274,117,-111; (b) $30,616,359.

4. (a) 4,038; (b) nine permanent; 50 provided under contract.

5. No. No prospect of availability of funds to establish any new research laboratory.

THE OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER—REGIONAL DESKS

Question No. 1,008—Mr. Lewis:

1. (a) How many regional desks attached to the Prime Minister's office have been established (b) what is the total number of regional desks the government plans to establish?

2. In which communities will each of the regional desks be located?

3. What is the geographical area of responsibility of each of the regional desks?

Questions

4. (a) How many personnel will each regional desk employ (b) what classifications and salary levels will be assigned to the personnel (c) what are the names, addresses and classifications of personnel now appointed?

5. What terms of reference have been assigned to the regional desks (i.e. what are their duties, responsibilities and to whom do they report)?

6. By what means are regional desk personnel selected (a) by the Public Service Commission (b) by the Prime Minister's Special Assistant (Regional Advisor) in charge of regional desks (c) other and please specify?

7. What access will individual Members of Parliament have to the facilities of the regional desks?

8. Will the problems of citizens which come to the attention of the regional desks be referred to (a) the Prime Minister (b) the department concerned (c) the Member of Parliament for the area (d) other and please specify?

9. Will the regional desks be located (a) in existing federal buildings (b) in rented accommodation (c) if (b), what is the estimated total annual cost for accommodation?

10 (a) How many volunteer advisers has the Prime Minister appointed and what are their names (b) what, if any, is their relationship to the regional desks (c) do the advisers report directly to the Prime Minister, or to a Committee or Committees of the Cabinet, or to a member or members of the Privy Council staff (d) how and from what source are the expenses of the advisers being or to be paid?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): 1. (a) Three. (b) No final decision has been reached, but the total number of regional desks established will probably not exceed four.

2. The regional desks are located in Ottawa.

3. Of the three regional desks now established, one is responsible for the geographic area represented by the four Atlantic provinces, another is responsible for the four western provinces, the other is responsible for the geographic area represented by Quebec.

4. (a) One regional desk officer with supporting clerical staff; (b) The classification and salary level assigned to each regional desk officer is a matter of negotiation upon appointment. The salary levels of the three regional desk officers already appointed are $15,000, $12,000 and $9,500 respectively; (c) Jean Haché, 1435 Morriset Street, Ottawa, Atlantic Desk Officer; David Thomson, 576 MacLaren Street, Ottawa, Western Desk Officer; Jean Prieur, 56 Les Erables, Laval-sur-le-Lac, Quebec, Quebec Desk Officer. Mr. Haché is classified as a Special Assistant; Mr. Thomson is classified as a Regional Officer; Mr. Prieur is classified as a Regional Officer.

5. The duties of the Regional Desk Officers are to improve the liaison between the Prime Minister and those voluntary organizations which concern themselves with issues and problems common to many Canadians; to act as an additional source of information and advice to the Prime Minister on matters upon which he has requested such information and advice; to be of assistance to Members of Parliament in their dealings with the Prime Minister and his office. These Desk Officers report to the Regional Adviser to the Prime Minister.

[Mr. Lewis.]

6. Recommendations for appointment of regional desk personnel are made to the Prime Minister by his Principal Secretary after consultation with the Regional Adviser.

7. See the answer to Part 5 above.

8. Problems of citizens which come to the attention of the regional desks will be referred to the Prime Minister, a Member of Parliament for the area, a Governmental Department, or other appropriate Government agency as seems most appropriate, having regard to the nature of the problem.

9. (a) Yes; (b) and (c) Not applicable.

10. (a) None. Many interested citizens do, however, write to the Prime Minister from time to time to suggest new policies or to comment on particular Government initiatives. The comments and suggestions of these persons are analyzed by the regional desk officers; (b), (c) and (d) Not applicable.

SEXUAL OFFENDERS IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,055—Mr. Orlikow:

1. What is the total number of persons in Canadian Penitentiaries that have been convicted and sentenced under the Dangerous Sexual Offenders Sections of the Criminal Code, and (a) how many of those so sentenced have received paroles (b) how many have violated their paroles (c) how many have been re-convicted while on parole and was the offence the same?

2. What is the average stay before parole is considered?

3. What programs are made available to these persons while they are incarcerated?

4. Has the medical profession been consulted as to treatment being given, and (a) how many have received such treatment (b) how many failed to make progress (c) have any persons been denied such treatment if such treatment was recommended?

5. Has the government taken any steps in this direction?

6. Have the inmates a choice in case they wish to seek out such treatment and, if so, what provisions have been made?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. 73 persons have been convicted and sentenced under the Dangerous Sexual Offenders section of the Criminal Code which was passed in 1953: (a) 20; (b) 10; (c) 1, Offence was not the same.

2. Cases are considered as soon as possible after admission, in any event within six months thereof, and the parole review date is fixed. Average stay before release to parole has been 8.3 years (the range being from three years eight months to 15 years nine months).

3. A diagnosis of each case is made and includes an evaluation of the inmate's potential for treatment and training. An individualized program to meet his social needs is determined by the Inmate Training Board following reports from members of the professional staff. The findings and recommendation of the Board are discussed with the inmate, who is free to express his views. This program may provide for individual and group therapy in addition to the regular training activities which includes, educational, vocational, religious, recreational, social and trades training.

4. Yes. (a) 73 have received the available treatment; (b) seven are parole violators: (c) No.

5. Every inmate is free to consult with the psychiatrist. The psychiatrist interviews any inmate who wants to see him or for whom treatment has been recommended. He will attempt to assess his personality, make a diagnosis and provide appropriate therapy and make other recommendations.

6. The treating psychiatrist decides upon the nature of the treatment which is felt best suited to meet the inmate's requirements, and if better facilities exist in neighboring outside psychiatric clinics or mental hospitals, the inmate is transferred to such institutions and will return to the Penitentiary when improved. If the Penitentiary Psychiatrist feels that he should have assistance in making important psychiatric decisions, he is free to call any psychiatric consultant he may wish to have.

For the past two years at the Penitentiary in New Westminster, research is being conducted by an Assistant Professor in Psychiatry at the University of British Columbia. The purpose of the research is also to recommend suggestions as to better ways and methods of treatment.

GOVERNMENT STANDARDS ON EXPORTS

Question No. 1,110—Mr. Beaudoin:

What government standards permit or prohibit the exporting by individuals of articles of their own manufacture?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as the Department of Agriculture is concerned: The provisions of the Canada Agricultural Products Standards Act, the Canada Meat Inspection Act, the Destructive Insect and Pest Act and the Canada Grain Act govern standards for agricultural products and processed agricultural products in interprovincial and export trade.

PROSECUTIONS OF FRAUDULENT INSURANCE CLAIMS

Question No. 1,160—Mr. Schreyer:

1. How many cases of fraudulent claims did the Unemployment Insurance Commission prosecute in 1967?

2. How many cases of fraudulent claims are claimed to exist each year, in Canada, in the radio campaign financed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission, and directed at curbing Unemployment Insurance abuse (a) in percentage of total claims (b) in gross figures?

3. How does the Unemployment Insurance Commission substantiate the figures presented in these broadcasts?

4. Is there a discrepancy between the number of cases of fraudulent claims prosecuted, and the number of cases of fraudulent claims said to exist, on the radio campaign?

5. If so, for what reason?

6. What avenues of appeal are open to a claimant unjustly accused of fraud in his Unemployment Insurance claim?

7. Has any department or agency of the Government of Canada initiated a similar radio or other form of publicity campaign to direct attention to fraudulent selling and advertising practices?

8. If so, how many such cases were prosecuted and with what result?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Unemployment Insurance Commission and several departments as follows: 1. Statistics of prosecutions entered in the criminal courts are maintained on a fiscal year basis. These were as follows for the 1967-1968 fiscal year:

Prosecutions
—pending 1 April, 1967	553
—commenced 1967/68	2642
	3015
Prosecutions
—dealt with 1967/68	2331
—pending 31 March, 1968	684

2. As stated in the radio campaign financed by the radio and TV stations of Canada as a public service at their expense, close to 20 per cent of claims, according to a consultants survey, have some element of suspected fraud which should be investigated. It would be impossible to establish the total number of outright cases of fraud unless every claim was investigated.

In this circumstance, no gross or percentage figures for the actual, rather than the projected, number of cases of outright fraud were given.

3. The figures related to possible abuse and overpayment of benefits are estimated based on a pilot study made by a firm of management consultants on behalf of the Commission.

4. The Unemployment Insurance Commission does not prosecute every case where it has been found that a claimant has made a fraudulent claim. For this reason there has been and always will be a discrepancy between the number of cases of fraudulent claims prosecuted and the number of cases of fraudulent claims that might exist or are uncovered. Those uncovered and not prosecuted in the criminal courts are disposed of by administrative sanction permitted by the Unemployment Insurance Act. The estimates in the radio campaign were based on a projection assuming the investigations of all claims.

5. See reply to Question 4 above.

6. A defendant, if prosecuted for unemployment insurance fraud, has the same rights to defend his case as any person who is tried in the criminal courts established under the Criminal Code. If a conviction is entered by the Court, the defendant has a right of appeal to the next higher Court within thirty days from the date the conviction or order of the Court was made, or the sentence imposed, as provided in the Criminal Code of Canada.

A claimant purported to have made false statements but not prosecuted, may at any time within thirty days from the day on which the decision of an insurance officer is communicated to him, or within such further time as the Commission may in any particular case for special reasons allow, appeal to the board of referees in the manner prescribed by Regulations of the Commission. In addition, an appeal lies to the Umpire in the manner prescribed by Regulations of the Commission from any decision of a board of referees at the instance of an association of workers of which the claimant is a member, in any case; or at the instance of the claimant, without leave in any case in which the decision of the board of references is not unanimous, and with the leave of the chairman of the board of referees in any other case.

7. No.

8. Not applicable.

[Mr. Forest.]

QUEBEC—WATER POLLUTION EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,257—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. What amount has been spent by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources to fight pollution in waters in the Province of Quebec?

2. Does the federal constituency of Richmond benefit by these expenditures?

3. If so, where were such monies spent and how much was spent in each location in the federal constituency of Richmond?

4. What are the future plans of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the federal constituency of Richmond?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. Water pollution abatement is primarily a provincial responsibility. The federal government is directly involved where pollution affects international waters, fisheries or wildlife; and it also undertakes essential research and coordination of efforts towards water pollution abatement. The Canada Centre for Inland Waters, established by the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, will be a focal point for water pollution abatement research; and it represents a major federal government investment largely for this purpose. The Department of Energy, Mines and Resources also operates a water quality sampling station on the St. Lawrence River at Levis, Quebec, at a cost of about $1,000 per year, including analytical work.

2. The federal constituency of Richmond would not appear to benefit directly from this expenditure.

3. Not applicable.

4. None.

PHASING OUT OF ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

Question No. 1,287—Mr. Coates:

1. Is it the intention of the federal government to phase out the operations of the Atlantic Development Board?

2. How many vacancies presently exist on this Board and if the government does not intend to phase out the operations, when will a new Chairman and other Board Members be appointed?

3. How many requests for assistance are presently before the Board on which final decisions by the Board have not as yet been reached?

4. Of the proposals presently before the Board on which final decisions have not been rendered, what future action will be taken?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. Legislation on this matter is before Parliament.

2. Four.

3. 15.

4. The Board will meet on March 17.

JET AIRCRAFT OPERATIONS AT INTERNATIONAL AIRPORTS

Question No. 1,330—Mr. Harding:

1. How many takeoffs and landings of jet aircraft were there at Toronto International Airport, Montreal International Airport and Vancouver International Airport in 1968?

2. When is the joint study being done on jet airplane pollution by the federal and Ontario departments of health at Toronto International Airport expected to be available?

3. Is the government considering introducing legislation controlling the amount of pollution an aircraft can legally emit?

4. Is the government considering legislation on the type of jet fuel that can be used in order to combat jet pollution?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the departments of Transport and of National Health and Welfare as follows: 1. Toronto International Airport, 65,225; Montreal International Airport, 58,722; Vancouver International Airport, 23,583.

2. The joint study is expected to be complete in the autumn of 1969.

3. Yes. Aircraft pollution is being included as part of overall clean air legislation at present under consideration by the Government. Controls, if introduced, may take the form of emission limits.

4. Yes. Fuel type restrictions may be used in conjunction with or as an alternative to emission limits.

STABILIZATION PAYMENTS TO POTATO PRODUCERS

Question No. 1,346—Mr. Corbin:

1. During the fiscal year 1967-1968, how many potato producers in (a) Canada (b) New Brunswick (c) Carleton, Victoria and Madawaska Counties, N.B. (d) Prince Edward Island, received payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act and under what provincial and federal programmes?

2. What was the amount of money paid in each of the above cases?

3. How many claims have been rejected and for what amounts?

4. How many claims have yet to be settled and for what amounts?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Not available since the potato assistance programs in the fiscal year 1967-68 on the 1966 potato crop were administered and controlled entirely by the provincial governments. The federal government provided inspection services and reimbursed the provinces for its share of the cost of the programs.

2. Federal contributions were as follows:

	Canada	N.B.	P.E.I.
Starch Diversion program	$ 412,063	$388,627	Nil
Live Stock Feeding program	$1,003,374	$114,055	$678,104
Provincial Disposal program	$1,050,714	$902,407	Nil

3. Eligibility for payment was established by provincial authorities and no information regarding claims or rejected claims was provided to the federal government.

4. See answer to No. 3.

IMPORTS OF CHAROLAIS CATTLE

Question No. 1,429—Mr. Roberts:

1. How many applications for the importation of Charolais cattle into Canada were received in 1968?

2. How many permits for the importation of Charolais cattle into Canada were granted in 1968?

3. How many applications for group importation of Charolais cattle were received during 1968?

4. What are the names and addresses of those receiving group import permits for Charolais cattle during 1968 and, in each case, what size group was the permit for?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Applications are not dealt with on basis of breed and import permits do not specify the breed of cattle to be imported. 316 applications were received in 1968 to import cattle from France and Switzerland.

2. 127 permits were issued.

3. 242 applications were for permits for more than one animal.

4. 37 of the 127 permits issued were for more than one animal. It is not the practice of the Department to divulge the names of livestock owners during the period the animals are being dealt with through quarantine or other controls under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act.

PSYCHIATRIC TREATMENT IN PENITENTIARIES

Question No. 1,435—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

Have any plans been developed and initiated for the purpose of providing sufficient professional personnel to meet the psychiatric treatment requirements of inmates in penitentiaries and, if so, what are the details of such plans?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): The Canadian Penitentiary Service is authorized to employ 13 psychiatrists and 84 psychiatric nurses on a full-time basis. There are on strength at present, five psychiatrists and 71 psychiatric nurses employed on a full-time basis. In order to compensate for a shortage of eight full-time psychiatrists, the Penitentiary Service has obtained the services of five psychiatrists on a part-time basis and 15 psychiatrists on a contract basis. Because of the extreme shortage of male psychiatric nurses, the Service has been unable to enlist these specialists in sufficient number to meet its requirements.

The present plan consists of recruiting the services of any well-qualified psychiatrist who is available and prepared to provide professional service in a penal environment. In addition, the Service provides within its institutions, to medical students in psychiatry, summer employment in this specialty in the hope of encouraging such students to specialize in the field.

The Service is also in the process of training six selected custodial officers to become psychiatric nurses.

The long range plan provides for the training of psychiatrists in Forensic Psychiatry in the Regional Medical Centres which are being developed.

DAY CARE PAYMENTS UNDER ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 1,470—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. What is the total amount of Canada Assistance Plan payments made to the individual provinces since the inception of the Plan?

2. What is the total amount of such payments made to each province in respect of claims for financing Day Care Centres throughout the provinces?

[Mr. Olson.]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. Payments as follows: total federal share of payments made to provinces under the Canada assistance plan since inception of the plan to January 31, 1969

(Figures to nearest $1,000)

Province	Amount
Newfoundland	32,765,000
Prince Edward Island	3,472,000
Nova Scotia	19,312,000
New Brunswick	13,608,000
Ontario	190,762,000
*Quebec	—
Manitoba	26,656,000
Saskatchewan	25,760,000
Alberta	48,388,000
British Columbia	58,992,000
TOTAL	419,715,000

*Note: Quebec receives its compensation in the form of tax abatements and adjustment payments under the Established Programs (Interim Arrangements) Act.

2. Ontario and Alberta are the only provinces currently providing direct subsidies for the operation of day care centres. Total payments amounted to: Ontario, $103,766; Alberta, $26,490.

The Province of British Columbia identified payments made to recipients of day care services amounting to $18,315. Other provinces received assistance payments for the purchase of day care services but these are not identified separately in claims.

R.C.M.P. SALARIES AND PENSIONS

Question No. 1,472—Mr. Robinson:

1. What is the basic salary paid an RCMP constable?

2. What increments are available and on what basis are they paid?

3. How many years service are required for RCMP to be pensionable?

4. What is the minimum pension payable and what is the maximum payable at the present time for RCMP constables?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): 1. $5,665 per annum.

2. Six annual increments to a maximum of $8,180 per annum depending upon satisfactory service.

3. R.C.M. Police Pension Continuation Act: Officers, minimum without penalty reduction, 35 years; Other ranks, minimum (Applies to only 404 members still under this Act as of February 17, 1969), 20 years. R.C.M. Police Superannuation Act: Minimum without penalty reduction, Officers, 35 years; Other ranks, 25 years.

WYNYARD, SASK., PROPOSED EXPENDITURE

Question No. 1,477—Mr. Burton:

1. What is the purpose of the proposed expenditure of $280,000 in Wynyard as shown on page 318 of the Estimates for 1969-70?

2. What departments will make use of the facilities to be provided through this expenditure?

3. What plans have been prepared for any construction contemplated by this expenditure?

4. Has property been purchased in Wynyard in connection with this proposed expenditure and, if so, what is the location of the property?

5. What amount of money has already been spent on this project and for what purpose was the money spent?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. To construct a new federal building.

2. Post Office, Farm Credit Corporation, Agriculture.

3. Preliminary plans have been completed.

4. Yes. Directly adjacent to existing federal building.

5. $10,436. to acquire the property.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 1,488—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of External Affairs issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes. 68.

2. (a) None; (b) None; (c) $860; (d) $290; (e) $1,319.20.

3. (a) Number 7 Bond; (b) 60,700 sheets; cost approximately $122.

4. 193 hours.

*CANADIAN NATIONAL—FLASHING RED LIGHTS ON DIESELS

Question No. 1,501—Mr. Diefenbaker:

Will the Minister of Transport bring to the attention of the Canadian National Railways the suggestion that in the interest of safety for users of the highways which cross railway tracks that diesel locomotives shall have thereon flashing red lights similar to those now used on ambulances, police vehicles and the like?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the answer to this question is yes, I would be glad to bring the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman to the attention of Canadian National Railways. However, the right hon. gentleman might be interested to know that the suggestion embodied in his question was acted upon some time ago, and at the request of the Canadian Transport Commission and Canadian National Railways, the National Research Council developed a rotating, flashing white light for test installation on diesel locomotives. Twelve of these units are installed on locomotives operating over trackage between Montreal, Toronto and Windsor. It is proposed to continue these tests for approximately one year to determine reliability and effectiveness.

FEED GRAIN IN STORAGE

Question No. 1,508—Mr. Dumont:

1. How many bushels of feed grain remained in storage at the end of the 1968 navigation season (a) at Montreal (b) at Trois-Rivières (c) at Quebec City?

2. What quantities at each of these locations were used during the winter months prior to the opening of the navigation season?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): 1. Stocks of feed grains in store as at December 31, 1968 were: (a) Montreal, 8,949,000 bushels; (b) Trois Rivières, 2,699,000 bushels; (c) Quebec City, 6,009,000 bushels. In addition to the above, 2,210,000 bushels of feed grains were stored in winter storage vessels at the St. Lawrence ports.

2. During the period November 30, 1968 to April 17, 1969, a total of 17,343,000 bushels of feed grains were delivered from the St. Lawrence ports. It is not in the public interest to advise the breakdown of deliveries by individual elevators.

STATUS OF GREAT SLAVE LAKE AREA

Question No. 1,518—Mr. Yewchuk:

Will the Great Slave Lake area, now or in the foreseeable future, qualify as a designated area?

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Not now. New legislation on the area development program is being prepared.

*ARMED FORCES—USE OF STARS TO DESIGNATE RANK

Question No. 1,538—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Are stars being used to designate the rank of officers of the Armed Forces?

2 How are ranks designated by stars?

3. Under what authority has this star system come into effect?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The answer to parts 1 and 3 is as follows:

Yes, from the time Canada established her own navy and her own army stars have been and are being worn by officers of the sea and land elements of the Canadian forces as rank designation. This was the direct result of adopting British dress.

The answer to part 2 is as follows:

Officers of the rank of rear admiral and above in the sea element and officer cadets to generals in the land element wear stars of various forms. Rear admirals and above wear an eight point star in silver bullion embroidery—three for an admiral, two for a vice admiral and one for a rear admiral below the crown and crossed sword and baton.

Mr. Baldwin: What does the Postmaster General get?

Mr. Hees: He has NATO stars.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I am trying to answer the questions.

Mr. Hees: We are trying to help you. You were not doing too well.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): The Star of the Order of the Bath is worn in most instances by officers of the land element as follows:

General: One star below the crown and above the crossed sword and baton.

[Mr. Olson.]

Major-General: One star above the crossed sword and baton.

Brigadier-General: Three stars below the crown.

Colonel: Two stars below the crown.

Lieutenant-Colonel: One star below the crown.

Captain: Three stars.

Lieutenant: Two stars.

Second-Lieutenant and Officer Cadet: One star.

Depending on regimental affiliation, stars may represent one of the other three senior orders of knighthood—i.e. the Garter, Thistle or St. Patrick. An example would be the Garter Star, which is worn by the British Coldstream, Grenadier and Welsh Guards and their Canadian counterparts, the Governor General's Foot Guards and Canadian Grenadier Guards.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What other constellations have you?

OTTAWA—SPACE IN CAMPEAU QUEEN-SPARKS BUILDING

Question No. 1,548—Mr. Schreyer:

1. Have any negotiations been entered into between the Department of Public Works and Campeau Construction for space in the building being erected between Queen and Sparks Street in Ottawa?

2. Have any other government departments or agencies approached the Department of Public Works with a view to obtaining space in the said building?

3. Is the government committed in any way to take space in this building and, if so, when was first contact made between Campeau Construction and the government and when was the commitment finalized?

4. If there is an arrangement, how many square feet of space will be occupied, at what rent and which departments will occupy it?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): 1. No.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Not applicable.

BRITISH COLUMBIA PROGRAMS UNDER ASSISTANCE PLAN

Question No. 1,557—Mrs. MacInnis:

1. For what programmes has the government of British Columbia applied under the Canada Assistance Plan since its inception?

2. What amounts of money have been paid to the British Columbia Government in respect of each of these programmes?

3. What were the financial claims submitted by the Government of British Columbia in respect of each of these programmes?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Federal share of payments made to and claims submitted by the province of British Columbia under the Canada Assistance Plan April 1, 1966 to February 28, 1969 (figures to nearest $1,000)

(1)	(2) Amount Paid	(3) Amount Claimed
Program	(000's)	(000's)
Social Allowances	$43,165	$43,209
Supplementary Social Allowances	2,985	2,985
Child Welfare	8,940	8,940
Health Care	6,552	7,183
Welfare Services	844	844
Total	$62,486	$63,161

CANADIAN FORCES PROMOTION RULES

Question No. 1,558—Mr. Robinson:

What are the procedures and/or rules and/or criteria for the promotion of officers in the Canadian Forces from the rank of Major to Lieutenant-Colonel and from Lieutenant-Colonel to Colonel and Colonel to Brigadier-General?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The promotion of an officer is governed by the following conditions: (1) that there is an appropriate vacancy in the establishment; (2) that he is recommended by the appropriate authority; and (3) that he meets promotion standards as prescribed by the Chief of Defence Staff.

Promotion to Lieutenant Colonel, Colonel and Brigadier General is by selection, based on recognition of those officers who are best qualified for service in higher rank. There are many candidates of high calibre competing for comparatively few positions and only those possessing a very high order of effectiveness are promoted. Promotion Boards are held annually to examine every relevant factor in an attempt to evaluate a candidate's fitness for promotion in comparison with all other candidates. Promotion Boards are composed of senior officers whose qualifications and experience provide a complete cross-section of appropriate background and specialist knowledge of the officers being considered. Board members are at least one rank higher than the rank for which selections are being considered, and the Chairman is two ranks higher.

"HMCS NADEN"—CIVILIAN TEACHERS

Question No. 1,559—Mr. Anderson:

Is it the intention of the Department of National Defence to continue employing civilian teachers at HMCS Naden for the year 1969-70 and, if any are to be released (a) what are their names and what are their teaching positions (b) what steps have been taken to find these people alternate employment within the Public Service?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): After reviewing the rationale behind the Junior Matriculation Course, which is of two years' duration, the Canadian Forces decided to phase out this program at the end of the 1968-69 academic year with only the first year graduates continuing in 1969-70 to complete the course. As a result five civilian teachers will continue to be employed in the Fleet School, Canadian Forces Base Esquimalt, until July 1969; four until July 1970 and one beyond July 1970. (a) Mr. Bernard S. Lake, Mathematics and Physics Instructor is being released in July 1969, (b) Not applicable, as the Department of Education, Province of British Columbia, is their legal employer.

PUBLICATION OF DILLON REPORT

Question No. 1,568—Mr. Anderson:

1. When will the Dillon Report, concerning retail outlets on Canadian Armed Forces Bases be made public?

2. Is this report classified at the present time and, if so, for what reasons?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. and 2. The Non-Public Fund Study Team (Dillon) Report was a study carried out by a group of serving officers of the Canadian Forces, with a view to recommending a common system of non-public fund operations in the Canadian Forces subsequent to unification. It is not intended to make this study public as it is considered to be an internal document which was prepared to assist the Minister of National Defence in arriving at a decision concerning non-public fund activities.

P.E.I.—DEVELOPMENT BOARD EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,578—Mr. MacLean:

1. What amount was spent by the federal Government, through the Atlantic Development Board, in the Province of Prince Edward Island for each of the fiscal years from 1964-65 to 1968-69 inclusive?

2. What is the amount, if any, to be spent by the federal Government through the Atlantic Development Board in the Province of Prince Edward Island in the fiscal year 1969-70?

Questions

Mr. Russell C. Honey (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): 1. 1964-65, $86,770; 1965-66, $1,399,700; 1966-67, $1,013,099; 1967-68, $2,437,821; 1968-69, $3,090,000 (estimated).

2. The estimates of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion include provision for expenditures of approximately $25 millions.

PRESIDENT OF ELDORADO NUCLEAR COMPANY

Question No. 1,582—Mr. Dumont:

1. Who is the President of the Eldorado Nuclear Company Limited?

2. What are the names of the directors?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Eldorado Nuclear Limited reports as follows: 1. W. M. Gilchrist.

2. Marcel Bélanger, W. J. Bennett, Dr. Roger A. Blais, W. M. Gilchrist, Dr. W. F. James, W. S. Kirkpatrick, Gordon Lawson.

*USE OF ARMOURIES BY LIONS TRACK CLUB OF REGINA

Question No. 1,607—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has the Lions Track Club of Regina, whose objectives are to assist in the development, improvement and promotion of track and field in the Province of Saskatchewan, had during the past the privilege of using the Regina Armouries for practice sessions four days a week during the winter season?

2. Was a request received prior to the beginning of the 1968-69 season for a 10′ × 10′ storage space for track equipment in the armouries?

3. Was this request granted and, if not, by whom and for what reasons was it refused?

4. Is there a large storage room in the north end of the building, normally containing chairs and tables, which, if the contents were re-arranged would be suitable for the Track Club purposes without interfering with the operations of the Armouries?

5. Will the Minister of National Defence give immediate sympathetic consideration to making available the space referred to in Part 4 to the Lions Track Club so that its estimable voluntary public service can be continued in an effective manner?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The answer to part 1 of the question is as follows: Both the Lions Track Club and the Canadian Legion Track Club were granted permission by the officer in charge of the Regina armoury to use the armoury from Monday to Thursday each week from 5 p.m. to 6.30 p.m. throughout the period from November 1, 1968 to April 30, 1969, subject to the armoury being free from other priority commitments.

The answer to part 2 is, yes.

The answer to part 3 is as follows: No, this request was refused initially by the officer in charge of the armoury because storage space could not be made available without prejudice to its use by militia units, cadet squadrons or regular force elements located in the armoury. Subsequently, this matter was reconsidered, and the senior staff officer of the Saskatchewan district personally visited the armoury to assess the situation. He confirmed the findings of the officer in charge and recommended that the request be refused. His recommendation was concurred in by prairie region headquarters and by Canadian forces headquarters.

The answer to the fourth part is, no. A storage room 21 feet by 23 feet, disrupted by structural support columns and double entrance doors which open inwards, does exist but it is filled with government stores and its contents cannot be rearranged without interfering with the operation of the armouries.

The answer to the fifth part is that this matter has had sympathetic consideration and it is regretted the decision to refuse storage space must stand.

SECURITY SERVICE FOR FOREIGN EMBASSIES

Question No. 1,613—Mr. Robinson:

What is the reason for the cost of providing police and/or security service for embassies and consulates of foreign countries in 1967 and 1968 when there was no cost whatsoever before that date?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): From 1960 through 1966 the protection of embassies and consulates was accomplished by the normal vigilance of local police forces. Only in 1967 were requests received for a form of protection more intensive than local police forces could provide.

*TESTS OF THERMAL RADAR BEAM

Question No. 1,619—Mr. McGrath:

Will the new thermal radar beam, developed by the National Research Council as a possible solution to the hazard of birds on airport runways which is to be tested at Uplands, Ontario this Spring also be tested by the Defence Research Board or other defence agencies as a potential weapon and, if so, has information about it been passed on to the United States authorities?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): The answer to this question is, no.

Mr. Nielsen: You are the star today.

PRICES AND INCOME BOARD

Question No. 1,668—Mr. Fortin:

1. Has a Prices and Income Board been established and, if so (a) when was it established (b) what are the terms of reference of the Board (c) who are the members of the Board (d) what are their salaries?

2. If such a Board has not yet been established, is it the government's intention to do so and, if so, on what date?

3. Does the government intend to refer the matter of price, income and employment stability to a Senate committee and, if so, when?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The Price and Incomes Commission, proposed in the White Paper on Policies for Price Stability which was tabled in Parliament on December 20, has not yet been established.

2. As indicated in the House of Commons on February 27, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis), it is hoped that the Commission can be established this month.

3. The White Paper proposed a Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons to receive the reports of the Commission and review them. The Government intends to move for the creation of the Parliamentary Committee once the Commission has been established and has begun its work.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

MARITIMES—ECONOMIC STUDIES BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT.

Question No. 709—Mr. Coates:

1. How many studies have been carried out by the federal government into economic conditions in the Maritime Provinces since Confederation?

2. How many studies have been carried out by the federal government in co-operation with one or all of the Maritime Provinces into economic conditions since Confederation?

3. In reply to parts 1 and 2, what were the names, dates and objectives of each of the studies?

Return tabled.

NUMBER OF BILINGUAL PENITENTIARY GUARDS

Question No. 1,199—Mr. Caouette:

1. What was the number of guards employed by the Department of Justice in 1963, 1964, 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968 in each of the penitentiaries in Canada?

2. Of this number and for each of the penitentiaries in Canada, how many (a) whose mother tongue is English (i) speak French (ii) speak English (iii) are bilingual (b) whose mother tongue is French (i) speak English (ii) speak French (iii) are bilingual?

Return tabled.

NUMBER OF TRADESMEN LEAVING ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,500—Mr. Harkness:

How many tradesmen, by trade groups, have left the Armed Forces in each of the months from August, 1968 to January, 1969 inclusive?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, notices of motions Nos. 55, 56 and 89 for production of papers are acceptable to the government.

[English]

LEASE WITH CAMPEAU CONSTRUCTION, OTTAWA

Motion No. 55—Mr. Coates:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the lease entered into by the federal government for the Department of Trade and Commerce with Campeau Construction Company, 2932 Base Line Road, Ottawa, on September 12, 1967.

Motion agreed to.

LEASE FOR SPACE IN CONGILL BUILDING, OTTAWA

Motion No. 56—Mr. Coates:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of the lease entered into by the federal government with Two Seven Five Realty Limited, 141 Laurier Avenue West, Ottawa, for the rental of approximately 187,264 sq. ft. of space located in the Congill Building, 275 Slater Street, Ottawa.

Motion agreed to.

POLYMER CORPORATION BARGAINING AGREEMENTS

Motion No. 89—Mr. Burton:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any collective bargaining agreement now in force between Polymer Corporation and any of its employees.

Motion agreed to.

[Translation]

Mr. Forest: Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notice of motion No. 69?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

EXCHANGE OF TELEGRAMS BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND PREMIERS

Motion No. 69—Mr. Coates:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of the telegrams received by the Prime Minister from the Premiers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, on February 3, 1969, and a copy of the replies forwarded to the Premiers by the Prime Minister.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I am informed that the documents requested in this notice of motion were tabled by the Prime Minister on February 7 as recorded at page 5263 of Hansard. Perhaps in the circumstances it might be agreed that the motion be withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is not in his seat at the moment. Is it agreed that the motion be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO INITIATIVE TAKEN BY GOVERNMENT TO RESOLVE GRIEVANCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Postmaster General, who I do not expect to be in the house today. In view of the fact that a strike vote is taking place among members of the Letter Carriers Union in Montreal today, with the possibility of paralysis of the mail service spreading tomorrow, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is taking any special measures, or placing itself in a position to explain what new initiatives might be considered, or are being considered, with a view to heading off a situation which may very well result in serious difficulty for the people of the area concerned?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I can only repeat what the Postmaster General said in the house yesterday, that both parties, that is, the Post Office and the union, have agreed to refer all outstanding issues to arbitration and that both sides have facilitated the waiver of delay, so that these questions can go to adjudication as soon as possible. The Public Service Staff Relations Board will appoint an adjudicator as soon as possible, and this is the only fair and legal way we see of solving these difficulties.

Mr. Stanfield: I apologize, Mr. Speaker, if my question is not exactly au fait; I was not able to be in the house for very long yesterday. Is it correct that all grievances are being referred to arbitration by agreement, or is it simply the issue of paid travelling time for washing up? There are other grievances which are potentially explosive, such as the difficulty of walk evaluation and the maximum number of hours over which the working day is spread. Is the Prime Minister assuring me that all these matters are now being referred to arbitration by agreement between the Postmaster General and the unions concerned?

Mr. Trudeau: The agreement was to refer the outstanding issues, including of course the special one about the lunch arrangements. But the term "outstanding issues" is not restricted, and it would, I suppose include all the issues which are raised by either side.

Mr. Stanfield: Can the Prime Minister assure the house that agreement has been reached with regard to referring all these issues, so that all the difficulties can be dealt with, and the people of Canada assured that everything is being done by agreement to avoid a stoppage in this essential service?

Mr. Trudeau: In the collective agreement there is contained a grievance procedure. We cannot, obviously, make grievances on behalf of the unions. But they have raised certain grievances and these are the issues to which the Postmaster General has referred as being outstanding issues. We are in this sense the passive party; we are the object of grievances, and we shall see what is referred by the unions. But of course I cannot make any guarantee on their behalf.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): In view of the fact that one of the major points of contention is the issue of the straight-through walks, and in view of the fact that the Postmaster General is taking the position that management has a right to implement this new arrangement, will the Prime Minister urge the Postmaster General to permit the submission of this question to arbitration, since it is one of the major causes of contention?

Mr. Trudeau: This is the particular aspect of the lunch break, and transportation between the walk and the post office. The new system is a system of single mail processing. Under this new system provision has been made for transportation, and provision made for lunch.

Again I repeat that we are in the hands of the unions as to what they want to make grievances about, but it is my understanding that the employees are all back at work today and there is no longer any cessation of work. Therefore these questions may be purely academic.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that Mr. Justice Montpetit at the time of the 1966 work stoppage recommended that the straight-through walk be eliminated, would the Prime Minister urge the Postmaster General to suspend the straight-through walk pending this arbitration?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the opposition are urging that we reopen the collective agreement. If they are, then I do not see that we could agree with them. There has been a collective agreement arrived at. We are sticking to it and abiding by it as we see it. That is the question and that is why we have agreed to appoint an adjudicator. Surely the hon. member is not urging me to ask the Postmaster General to reopen the agreement on some point that was covered by Mr. Justice Montpetit.

Mr. Orlikow: A further supplementary question. I am asking the Prime Minister to urge the Postmaster General to live up to the collective agreement, which did not provide for walk throughs, and to follow the procedures recommended by Judge Montpetit.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I will address to the Minister of Labour. Does the minister consider these tie-ups as wildcat strikes?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, one of the reasons the public service act was so designed was to make it unnecessary for the Minister of Labour to pass judgment on disputes between employees of the government and the government itself. In this way it ensured his neutrality as far as employer and employees were concerned, and I should like to respect that particular philosophy.

Mr. MacInnis: A further supplementary question. I would then ask the Minister of Labour—and certainly this falls within the category where I can receive a straight answer—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: Put your question.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, between the interjections to my right and the panic that seems to be striking the Prime Minister, it is very difficult to get anything across.

An hon. Member: Get on with it.

Mr. MacInnis: I will have to take to quoting the Prime Minister when he spoke the other day, if these bums and idiots—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member can state his question of privilege after I have reminded him that he should ask his question. There is no point in waiting unduly. I assure him that I can hear his question and I would urge him to ask it as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacInnis: "As soon as possible" means when I get the proper attention and do not have all these interjections from this group on my right. I might say here and now to the Prime Minister and others that I can include them in the bums because—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must bring to the attention of the hon. member that supplementary questions are the entire and exclusive responsibility of the Chair. Previous to the hon. member's rising I had recognized the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. As the postal workers are back at work, has the inquiry into the legality of the strike been abandoned? Have the government and the Postmaster General abandoned the intention to prosecute any of the workers?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, on the first question, to my knowledge the matter has not been abandoned. On the second question, the Postmaster General said this was an option open to him, and if the strike is declared illegal this course will be left open to him. That does not mean he will exercise his option; but the provisions of the law remain open to him.

Mr. Hees: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I remind hon. members that we should allow as many hon. members as possible to participate in the question period and we should not, as has been happening during this last week, spend too much time of our 40 minute period on one or two subjects. Dissatisfaction with this has been expressed by hon. members of all parties, who are anxious to ask questions they consider important. I think we might proceed to another subject. I will not forget that the hon. member wished to ask a supplementary question. Perhaps we shall have time later in which he may ask it.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ARTEC—GUIDELINES IN PUBLIC SERVICE DISPUTES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister about the dispute going on between the C.B.C. and the Association of Radio and Television Employees of Canada. As the report of the conciliation board stated that C.B.C. representatives were adamant in insisting they could not break the so called guidelines for public service employees, may I ask if guidelines have been established for public service employees. If so, will the Prime Minister be prepared to table the directives and correspondence sent to Crown agencies like the C.B.C.?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are no such guidelines compelling any public body to follow certain specific economic figures or percentages. Last summer we indicated that there was a danger of adding to inflationary pressure by excessive increases in any field, but except in that very general sense there are no guidelines.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Prime Minister is now saying there are no salary or wage guidelines with respect to any percentage increase which may be granted to public service employees, are we to take it that the representatives of the C.B.C. who appeared before the conciliation board were not making statements in accordance with the facts, and were hiding behind some assumed guidelines which do not really exist?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what the representatives said. We, of course, cannot dictate to the Crown corporation what its terms of settlement are to be. But when the Crown corporation comes to the government for money, it will be met with certain demands and certain exigencies on the part of the government to prevent inflationary increases. Perhaps in this sense the Crown corporations are guiding themselves on what they think is plausible and acceptable. But there is no specific recommendation here on our part.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question. With regard to the percentage of increases in the total wage bill this Crown corporation may have at its disposal, have no salary guidelines been set by the government, or Treasury Board on behalf of the government?

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been no specific guidelines as to specific salary increases. Of course the over-all budget of the Crown corporation is determined in government estimates; and in this sense I suppose there are very general guidelines. But there is no specific guideline attached to salary increases.

EXHIBITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUING "MAN AND HIS WORLD"

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Can the minister tell us whether the negotiations with the Quebec government on the financing of "Man and His World" are now over and, if so, what are the most recent concrete proposals of the federal government in the matter?

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): There have been discussions and they are continuing, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the winding up of Expo and the postponement of debt which was requested by the government of the province of Quebec. These are continuing and I hope they will be settled in the near future. It is not a matter of principle. It is a matter of detail that is involved and the detail has to be worked out. We are anxious to have the Expo Corporation wound up, and the added security for the government of Canada for the debt which is receivable from the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—POLICY RESPECTING LANDING RIGHTS

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Sainte-Marie wish to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order concerning the press release issued by the Minister of Transport and entitled: "New policy considered for landing rights in Toronto".

I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the government has now taken up the practice of announcing its new policies through the press rather than making a statement in the house, which would enable hon. members to discuss the matter and to ask the minister for details?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I do not think this is a justifiable point of order, Mr. Speaker. The information which was released is really not new, in the sense that it has been talked about for weeks or months and has been a matter of controversy in the city of Toronto even longer than that.

A number of airlines have indicated they would like to have landing rights in Toronto as well as in Montreal. They asked in effect if the government of Canada would be willing to open negotiations with other countries to that end. The government of Canada has decided that we would be glad to negotiate with them, talk to them and if they have anything to offer Canada which is of equal value to landing rights in Toronto, then the bilaterals could be changed accordingly.

I think this is a routine matter, Mr. Speaker, and I am glad my hon. friend shows interest in it. I think it is recognized that Toronto, too, is an important city and there should be more than ample air traffic in the years ahead to provide all the business that both Montreal and Toronto can cope with.

Mr. Valade: I would like to ask a supplementary question. I ask the minister if landing permits are actually being considered for foreign airlines using the airport at Toronto?

Mr. Hellyer: As the release indicated, Mr. Speaker, all that can happen now is for negotiations to take place between any country interested in landing rights and the government of Canada to see whether there is a quid pro quo which would be of equivalent value. This does not guarantee that anyone will have that kind of value to offer, and it is a policy of entering negotiations. I hope there will be some fruitful conclusions. I am optimistic there will be, but certainly nothing is guaranteed until negotiations have taken place.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising from the press release put out by the minister's department yesterday concerning extended rights for the Toronto airport as an international gateway. May I ask the minister whether the government will pursue with greater vigour its efforts to get Winnipeg to the initial stage of being recognized as an international gateway?

Mr. Hellyer: We are exercising greater vigour in this direction. In particular, the Minister without Portfolio who is from Winnipeg, has shown a keen interest, as have other western members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Can the Minister without Portfolio indicate what progress he is making?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister.

From now on, does he intend to allow ministers to make statements about their administrative decisions to the press rather than in the House? Is it a new policy or must we expect that statements of his—

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—PARTICIPATION BY ONTARIO IN NATIONAL PROGRAM

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the minister prepared to make a statement to the house on the outcome of his meeting last week with the Minister of Health of the province of Ontario? If he is not prepared today, would he make it on motions tomorrow?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I do not think a formal statement is required, Mr. Speaker. The meeting with the Minister of Health for Ontario dealt with certain administrative problems that Ontario would experience if indeed they did decide to enter the medicare plan. It was agreed that officials at the federal level would meet with officials at the provincial level to see what could be done about these problems.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Was the question of operating medical schools during the summer semester discussed at the meeting?

Mr. Munro: I noticed, Mr. Speaker, that the health minister for Ontario made this suggestion. I asked him what progress was being made, and he indicated it was still under consideration.

TRANSPORT

DIVISION OF BUSINESS AMONG COMPETITIVE TRUCKERS

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): My question is for the Minister of Defence Production in his capacity as minister designate for the department of supply and service. Has the government withdrawn its recently introduced policy of rotating government moving and storage business among those van lines which offer competitive rates and service?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): No, Mr. Speaker, it is not.

Mr. Burton: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister taking action on complaints received from Regina trucking firms protesting preferred treatment given to one van line?

Mr. Speaker: The supplementary can be placed on the order paper.

[Mr. Valade.]

FISHERIES

SEALS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF INTERIM CLOSURE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): My question, Mr. Speaker, is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the international approval of the humanitarian attitude already displayed by the Minister of Fisheries in connection with baby sealing, would he give consideration to continuing the interim closure of the seal killing season this year, and terminate it so that it will not be re-opened until a full and complete investigation has been made into the alleged cruelties which are being perpetrated? The kill is detrimental to Canada's international image.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): There are a number of reasons why the closure might be continued, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot assure the right hon. member at this time that it will be continued beyond Friday.

SEALS—REPORT ALLEGING FRAUDULENT FILM PRESENTATION OF KILLING METHODS

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Could the minister indicate whether the fraudulent film made by Artek Films Limited of Montreal in March of 1964 is still being circulated and shown in recent weeks in Europe and in the United States?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I have heard claims to this effect, Mr. Speaker, but I have not personally verified that they are true.

Mr. Crouse: Would the minister check on this matter, since it is detrimental to Canada's image in the United States and overseas? It would be helpful if the showing of this film were stopped.

Mr. Davis: I agree.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A further supplementary question to the minister regarding the document to which I referred yesterday. Would the minister now agree, in the interest of Canada's reputation, which has been badly maligned because of this fraudulent film, to tabling the document to which I referred yesterday, a copy of which he has already read?

Mr. Davis: The hon. member for St. John's East sent over a paper which he said was a copy of a memorandum originating in one of our government departments, and which dealt with seals and the hunt in 1964. The document in question was addressed to a cabinet minister, but not by name. There was no reference to a department and it was unsigned. In form it is similar to part of a memorandum on file in the Department of Fisheries.

Since the original document on file was prepared by an official of the Department of Fisheries for the information of the minister, it is by nature a confidential document and privileged. It would not therefore be proper for me to seek leave to table a memorandum of this kind, as sought by the hon. member for St. John's East.

I may add that my predecessor, Mr. Robichaud, made several statements on matters relating to the seal hunt and the film in question. For further information hon. members might wish to refer to page 2702 of Hansard for March 15, 1966, and page 10921 of Hansard for December 9, 1966.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the document has already been referred to by myself in the house and by the minister, and because of the importance of the subject, and because it affects Canada's reputation abroad, and because it affects a very important industry in Atlantic Canada, would the house agree to give me unanimous consent to table the document?

Mr. Benson: Did you steal it?

Mr. Speaker: There obviously would not be unanimous consent, since the minister said he was opposed to tabling it.

Mr. McGrath: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Finance has made an interjection to the effect, did I steal the document, and I would ask him to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to withdraw it, and I would simply ask the hon. member where he got it.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): On the same question of privilege, Mr. Speaker: There is no question of doubt—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacInnis: I am prepared to stake my seat on this, that the Minister of Finance said, "Did you steal the document"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. MacInnis: —and he has been asked to withdraw that statement.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure if the minister has used that word he will be the first one to withdraw it.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I did withdraw that statement, and I simply ask the hon. member where he got the confidential document?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the question period during which members ask questions of ministers and not ministers of members. I suggest we go on to another question. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway.

SEALS—ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR HUNTERS

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's remarks the other day in regard to the seal hunt, may I inquire if he has given consideration to alternative sources of employment and income for the seal hunters?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): The answer is definitely yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): As a further supplementary question, would that answer indicate that the minister has already taken a decision to abolish this industry, which is so important in supplementing the very meagre incomes of the Newfoundland and Magdalene Islands fishermen?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter which concerns a number of ministers as well as a large number of people in the fishing industry in the Atlantic provinces, so this is a decision which must be taken by the government and not by a single minister.

Mr. McGrath: I direct a further supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. Has he given any consideration to abolishing the slaughter of cattle in Canada, including beef animals?

WATER RESOURCES

POLLUTION—DISCHARGE OF HYDROCHLORIC ACID INTO LAKE ONTARIO

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister aware that the Steel Company of Canada dumped 150,000 gallons of hydrochloric acid into the waters of Lake Ontario over the week end of February 14 and, if so, what has he done about the matter, or what does he intend to do about it?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest that this is a question which could well be debated at the time of adjournment.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

SALE OF F-86 AIRCRAFT

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. It concerns the proposed sale of the 26 Sabre Jet planes known as F-86's. Have they been declared surplus, and does his department intend to sell the frames and the engines separately?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, subsequent to our previous exchange on this I have issued instructions to C.A.D.C. that these be withdrawn from sale until we have a policy decision on the matter. This is now under review, and because there is no policy at the moment they are being withdrawn from sale.

OIL

ROYAL COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO DECLINING MARKET

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is not in his seat I will direct this question to the Prime Minister. In view of the statement by Mr. Dickie, a member of the legislature of Alberta, that the government is considering setting up a royal commission to look into the deterioration of our oil markets in western Canada, may I ask whether the government has made such a decision in that regard?

Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: In view of the fact that the federal government is in partnership with certain corporations in the development of oil and petroleum resources in the northern islands, may I ask whether the Prime Minister would discuss with either the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce or the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources the possibility that western oil markets are suffering because of that conflict of interest?

Mr. Trudeau: I will be glad to ask the ministers to consider this aspect of it, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport.

Could he tell the house whether the matter of a new airport in Quebec involves economic, aeronautical or merely political considerations which prevent the government from taking the final decision?

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question as asked is much too general. The hon. member could put it on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ALLEGED CHANGE IN METHOD OF DEALING WITH UNIONS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to address to the Prime Minister. Can he advise the house of the reason for the government's abrupt switch from its original policy of dealing directly with a union engaged in a wildcat strike and awarding the members of that union a 30 per cent wage increase, as was the case in the Montreal dock strike, to its current threat to prosecute its own employees in the Post Office?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question is argumentative, and in those terms it is not in order.

Mr. Hees: May I rephrase it differently?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member can do that very easily.

Mr. Hees: Could the Prime Minister advise the house why there has been this abrupt change in the government's position in dealing with labour unions, as outlined in my former question?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: I would think the second effort is not much more meritorious than the first.

PENITENTIARIES

UPGRADING OF INCENTIVE ALLOWANCES FOR INMATES

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the Ontario government is introducing a new system of graded incentive allowances for inmates of Ontario reformatories, is it the intention of the government to introduce a similar program for inmates of federal penitentiaries?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is asking for a statement of policy. I would think the question should be put on the order paper or the hon. member should invite the minister to make a statement on motions.

Mr. Gilbert: As a supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might ask a different question.

Mr. Gilbert: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Solicitor General whether the government has considered the introduction of legislation to introduce or upgrade incentive allowances for inmates in federal penitentiaries?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, some consideration has been given to this. No decision has been taken by the government with respect to it.

TRADE

BARLEY—ACTION TO DISPOSE OF SURPLUS

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, but because of his absence for the last couple of days I would direct it to the Prime Minister. In light of the decline in barley sales of some 11 million bushels so far this year as compared with the same period last year, is the government giving consideration to sending a trade delegation to visit our traditional barley markets with a view to accelerating the disposal of some 200 million bushels in storage in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am advised by the minister that, after his talks yesterday, he intends to make a statement in the house tomorrow on the subject of grains.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISION INTERVIEWS IN AREA ADJACENT TO CHAMBER

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister concerning a subject which I think the house can no longer ignore, namely the extension immediately outside the precincts of the house of its proceedings, through the use of electronic media. Would the Prime Minister and his colleagues consider this issue, and possibly through the house leader indicate some way by which the house could itself debate the matter and possibly come to a decision on it?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure how much it is under the authority of the government or of Mr. Speaker, but I will look into the matter. I do not believe it is so much a question of reaching a decision—because the decision is that we have no television in the house—as it is whether we should change the present situation, and that is something we will consider in due course.

FINANCE

ALLEGED ATTEMPT BY FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS TO CONTROL CAPITAL MARKET

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has his attention been drawn to a statement made by an executive of the Bank of Nova Scotia to the effect that the financial institutions have deliberately attracted savings to themselves to keep the government from having access to Canadian savings? If so, does the minister intend to make an investigation into these attempts to control the Canadian capital market?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is a very general question and I would prefer to look at the particular article in question before commenting on it. I should say that the government of Canada has not had any general difficulty in borrowing funds. This has not been a great problem. The problem has related to the interest that all borrowers in this country and in the world must pay.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the government is going to have to go to the market in respect of a bond issue, will the minister look into the situation, in case this attempt goes against the government bond issue?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

In view of the statement he made recently in Toronto, to the effect that the government is facing great difficulties in keeping the public well informed about its activities, would he have any proposals to introduce in this house with a view to improving the situation and giving the population a better chance to participate in the formulation of such legislation?

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the hon. member that this is not the right time to make such a statement, and that he might put his question on the order paper.

[English]

INDUSTRY

ADVERSE EFFECT ON WORKERS THROUGH COMPANY LOCATION CHANGES

Mr. Walter Deakon (High Park) Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour. Is the government considering the provision of protection for workers against outright arbitrary decisions by companies, whereby a few dollars savings in costs is sufficient justification for transferring company locations, thereby wrecking the lives of workers who have rendered long and faithful service?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In a way the hon. member's question is very academic. I should think it might be debated at the time of adjournment.

Mr. Hees: I have a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will also have to ask his question at the time of adjournment.

CANADIAN CULTURE

WASTELANDS—ALLEGED STIGMA FROM STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, in a recent speech at Lethbridge, Alberta, the Secretary of State professed to have discovered in Canada various cultural wastelands. Will the minister now publicly pinpoint these areas of cultural backwardness and thus remove the stigma that rests unjustly on Canadians in all parts of the country as a result of the vagueness of his remarks?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member knows he cannot ask a question in this form, when it has reference to a speech made outside this house by a minister.

AGRICULTURE

STUDIES ON STABILITY OF FARMING OPERATIONS

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement by the Director General of the economic branch of the federal Department of Agriculture in Edmonton on March 11, that half the farmers in Canada will probably be out of business in ten years, I should like to know whether any studies have been undertaken by the government which support this statement and, if so, are there any programs contemplated to deal with this situation?

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The question is not in order. The rules do not allow an hon. member to ask a question related to a statement by an official outside the House of Commons.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALTERNATIVE TO COMPENSATE FOR CANCELLED WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the critical unemployment situation, and recent reports to the government by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. Has the government any alternatives to recommend in respect of the unilateral cancellation of winter works projects in order to assist municipalities in the area of water utility pollution control and housing projects?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a general question which can only be answered by a statement on motions.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

NEWFOUNDLAND—ANNOUNCEMENT AS TO CONTINUED SERVICE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he is aware that the Canadian National Railways last night announced it was going to continue the operation of the Bullet at the present time, and will he now accept our invitation to experience the thrill of a ride across Newfoundland in the Bullet? This is a ride of a lifetime, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I am not aware of any such announcement, Mr. Speaker, I still want to make an early visit with my hon. friend in order to be sure of a reservation.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WINNIPEG—CANADIAN AVIATION ELECTRONICS LAY-OFF

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Defence Production if he is now in a position to say anything further by way of an answer to my question of last Friday concerning lay-off notices given to 150 employees of Canadian Aviation Electronics at Winnipeg?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, two meetings have been held in respect of this problem, one with representatives of the province of Manitoba and the other with representatives of the company concerned. As a result of representations this matter is now being considered by the officials of my department and myself. I hope to be in a position to give a more complete answer by the end of this week.

RESEARCH

CONTRIBUTION TO NATIONAL ACCELERATOR LABORATORY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the President of the Treasury Board. Has the government considered or is it considering a Canadian contribution to the National Accelerator Laboratory which is a United States research project, as suggested by the Canadian Association of Physicists, which in turn is financed by the National Research Council?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question should be placed on the order paper.

[Translation]

AIRPORTS

QUEBEC—LOCATION OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Minister of Transport.

Could the minister tell the house whether a meeting with the representatives of the province of Quebec is to be held soon with respect to the international airport and when he will announce what site has been chosen for the new airport?

[English]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am still full of hope. The government is urgently attending to this matter and I expect to have further communication with the government of Quebec within a very few days. I hope an answer can be given very shortly thereafter.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Tuesday, March 11, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee rose on Tuesday, March 11 clause 13 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 13—Department established

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to take part in the debate on Bill C-173 which provides for the merger of two departments.

But first of all, I should like to express to the minister my feeling of admiration. I shall point out to him all that is worthwhile, from our point of view, in clause 13.

I shall tell him shortly that there are a lot of good things in his new department, but all is not well, nor in the best interest of the nation. There are some points to be considered and to be stressed in the field of industry, for instance.

I think that in his remarks the minister has dealt mostly with production, productivity in the industry and exports.

I should like to point out to him right now that there is no production problem, but there are many problems in respect of purchases, because price figures do not correspond to money figures. For a viable economy, there must be corresponding money figures and price figures, but the minister has failed to mention that in his statement. He said that all kinds of means should be found to increase productivity. Production is equivalent to consumption, but in order to ensure consumption he suggests to resort to exportation.

It is all very well to say that we can produce and export. However, Mr. Chairman, it is rather difficult to export when the cost of production is too high, when that cost is being increased by taxes and the extravagant interest rate the government is imposing. The minister did not say a single word in this respect and he did not open any new horizons in spite of the fact that a great many should be open in the field of industry which is after agriculture the very basis of the Canadian economy. If we manage to make a profitable industry out of agriculture we will find there the consumers we need. If we manage to finance consumption as well as production, we will find there a domestic market which would allow a great many of our industries to live. As I said earlier, if the minister were willing to deal with the taxes and the interest rates, we would have a prosperous industry.

At this stage, I would like to support the cause of the small industries. There are three kinds of industries in Canada: big, medium and small industries. The latter have the right to survive, just like the big ones, but I would like to point out to the minister that they do not have the same advantages as the big ones.

Actually big industries benefit from the advantage they get from their capital stock, which they do not have to pay back. They operate with millions and can get the capital necessary for their operations from the stock market or from various institutions which buy part of the capital stock of large companies.

But small industries are unable to venture into the stock market because conditions are too stiff and too precarious. Thus it is impossible for them to get capital from it. Small industries try to get capital through other means. They get incorporated as companies that float bonds on the market or attempt to sell stock to friends. They try to sell part of their capital stock but people are not willing to buy it.

One wants to see the small industries expand but no one will buy their stock because everyone is afraid to lose money. Moreover, since the government grabs all the unused capital including that of Crown corporations or government agencies, the thrifty buy bonds issued by different governments, municipalities or school boards, and there is no money left for the small industries. Thus, the small industries have a problem with regard to capital, because taxes are too high and two numerous.

Even if it is making profits, the small enterprise cannot survive because it does not have enough capital to get organized in such a way as to become a paying concern. Therefore, it must borrow money from the government, from the Industrial Development Bank whose present rate of interest is 10 per cent and perhaps more. Because of this high rate, the small enterprise has to make money in order to pay back some capital each year. It must also pay interest on capital and taxes on the capital paid back and the depreciation funds. It is therefore in an unbalanced position. As a matter of fact, the small enterprise cannot develop at the same rate as the economy and in accordance with present-day scientific standards, because it cannot correct all such deficiencies.

Also, all levels of government levy taxes. In the area of transportation, for example, the small enterprise, which is located far from the larger centres, is in need of transport and has to pay very high taxes on gas, on truck parts, on just about everything. It incurs a lot of expenses of which the large enterprise is free. As the small enterprise must pay taxes, reimburse capital and pay exceedingly high interest rates, would the minister tell us how he intends to help the small industry? By what means does his department propose to promote the growth of underdeveloped areas?

Small industries are to be found mostly in underdeveloped areas. Then, if we want to assist those areas, we must obviously help the small and medium-sized industries because the big ones, that run on millions and millions of dollars, are not established in those areas.

• (3:10 p.m.)

In case we want to reorganize or balance our economy again, so that the deprived areas may become normal ones, where production might be possible and more jobs available to the labour force, the minister will certainly have to suggest solutions other than the one contained in this bill.

In his bill the minister speaks about promoting tourism and creating external markets. Now, to create domestic industries able to compete on external markets, we must see to it not only that they pay taxes but also that they are in a position to expand to a greater extent.

Mr. Chairman, one of the main points in the minister's bill is industrial expansion, to help underdeveloped areas. In my opinion, the minister insisted mainly upon regional disparities as regards the areas he wishes to promote, and I believe that we cannot promote such areas by creating more jobs, because if we want to increase productivity, by all means we will have to draw on modern scientific and technical progress. Now, if we apply the new technical and scientific methods, instead of increasing the number of employees, we will have to reduce it, for industry cannot pay the workers wages high enough to ensure the consumption of its products.

The external market cannot by itself absorb the whole Canadian production, since while selling abroad, our country in turn has to import, and this hardly puts out of balance our national production.

The purpose of developing industry is to make more jobs available. This is at least what I understood from the minister's speech. However, we cannot certainly do so through industry, because, when a new industry employing fifty or so people is established, two or three others might have to close down, thus laying off hundreds of workers.

If, for instance, an average industry manufactures $20,000 worth of raw materials every week and if its payroll comes up to $1,500, I ask the minister whether the $1,500 paid in wages can possibly buy $20,000 worth of products. I think there lies the crux of the problem and the minister did not give this matter any consideration. He did not indicate any solution to that serious problem of modernization.

We are in favour of it, but people have a right to live. And because high salaries are paid and techniques are kept up to date, no industry can spend enough on salaries to provide jobs for all workers so they may be able to earn a decent living.

Even if we find new openings abroad, there will always be some unemployment in Canada, which is due precisely to science, progress and technology.

The minister and his department should intervene in that field and undertake concrete studies in order to find solutions to the problem. The minister will say that his job is to look after industry, manpower, the unemployed and that all the rest concerns other people. Yet it is his business as well as other people's. In fact, it concerns us all since we are here to govern humanely and to serve individuals. Canadians have fundamental rights on production, conservation and consumption.

Mr. Chairman, unless we take this problem in hand, we will never be able to operate industry and distribute all the money families need to live properly in a country like Canada where science is so advanced that industries hardly hire workers now.

In view of our economic conditions, industries must absolutely become automated, they must use more advanced methods because manpower, besides being costly, has all kinds of requirements that the machine does not have. In order to survive, industry must at all costs have recourse to scientific means and lay off people who on account of new technology will have no place there.

I think that the minister should take note of these suggestions and use his powerful brain in order to find solutions to the various economic, industrial and technical problems which we have to face.

After all, we must enable our citizens to live. Exports will not solve the Canadian problem, because it will enable other countries to become industrialized and as soon as they are, we will no longer have markets abroad. As soon as peace will be restored in the world, when, for example, the Americans will no longer be at war, our markets in the United States will practically be eliminated. We have a steady market there, because Americans are at war and thousands of men are destructive to enable others to build.

I will point out to the minister that we have no production problem and we were aware of that fact during the last World War. We allowed our machinery to become rusty and our labour force to be deprived of everything during 20 years and then suddenly, the problem is settled, because we have found some destructors and consumers.

The minister should realize there is an enormous surplus in all industrial sectors. In fact, some Canadian industries operate only five, six or seven months a year. They must close the rest of the year because they are unable to sell their products, or their warehouses are full. Those products are financed at 9 and 10 per cent interest rates. It is impossible to lower their price in order to sell them. Indeed, to sell the stored goods, prices must be increased. The unemployed and those who do not have sufficient revenue to buy those products have no purchasing power because of the general increase in the cost of living that our wonderful economic system has brought about.

The fault is not with the production. Let us do as we did during the war; let us arrange for consumption and production will look after itself. Industry will get organized; it will have no use for the great government experts and for all its agencies. Industry used to thrive and it still can. But when industry faces an economic problem like overproduction, new departments are established, two are combined in an effort to solve the problem. Some people say: Industrialists do not know what to produce. They have inadequate technical knowledge and they do not have the financial means. They will be granted loans at 10 per cent, which will increase the cost of production even more. Something should be done to enable them to sell their production on the domestic market, but nothing is done.

The hon. minister, through his department, should intervene to settle the problem.

Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order! I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member in the midst of his interesting remarks, but his time has expired. Unless he gets the unanimous consent of the committee, he will not be able to go on with his remarks.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Deputy Chairman: I see that unanimous consent has been withheld.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, I want to make two very serious criticisms of the government's research and development programs. The first is that they are contributing to the establishment in Canada of a permanent industry based on warfare or defence, something entirely new in Canadian history as a permanent establishment. Second, I want to suggest that the government's research and development programs for the civilian sector constitute an unco-ordinated mess and have not produced any significant results.

• (3:20 p.m.)

I first made the charge that the government was promoting a military-industrial élite in this country, inadvertently, perhaps, by means of its research and development programs, in my speech on the estimates of the Department of Industry on December 2. At that time I charged the government with being responsible for this development through the use of its research and development financial assistance programs. These programs, I asserted, provided greater financial assistance to military research than they did to research in the non-military sector. The minister replied that my contention was unfounded. He asserted that the benefits available to research and development for non-military purposes were equal to those available for military purposes. On December 4, I rose on a question of privilege, contending that the minister had misled the house. The minister had argued that a combination of assistance under the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act and PAIT, the program for the advance of industrial technology, would give an industrialist as much as he would get in connection with a defence project.

What the minister failed to tell us was that a defence industry might also receive funds from the IRDIA program. This fact is of decisive importance in the dispute. An appropriate comparison between the benefits available to military and non-military research and development can be made only by considering all the programs available—and available at the same time—to each of the sectors. Thus, the appropriate comparison is obtained by weighing the benefits provided to the civilian sector by IRDIA and PAIT against those provided to military research and development by IRDIA and the defence development sharing program, or DDSP. Such a comparison confirms, as I indicated, that the Canadian government now provides more money for research and development in the military area than it does for civilian work.

However, the minister still continued to deny what seems to me to be the truth of the matter. On December 6, 1968, he said the issue was a rather technical matter—some euphemism!—and that he stood by his original contention. I subsequently challenged the hon. gentleman to take part in a public debate on the question but, of course, he refused. Once again I challenge the minister to make a statement on this very serious matter. I ask him to deal specifically with the answers he provided to a series of questions which I placed on the order paper.

We, in Canada, should not be using public funds to finance research and development in connection with military matters, at least not on the present scale. When military equipment is needed, we should purchase it from others. We, in Canada, should concentrate our research money on civilian projects; we should not have committed ourselves to a policy of developing a military technology to be used to increase our armament exports. Yet, it is exactly this kind of policy which the government is pursuing.

It is important to note that the government itself has undermined its own program for research and development in the civilian sector by giving greater benefits for military research and development. At present the government will provide approximately 50 per cent of the capital costs of military research and development. But in the civilian sector all financial assistance, plus interest on the money advanced, must be repaid if projects prove commercially viable. Is it any wonder that there have been major advances in the military sector but almost none in the civilian sector? Is it any wonder that as N. H. Lithwick noted in a recent article in the Journal of Canadian Studies, over 50 per cent of federal funds going into research and development are used for military purposes? If profits from war industries are greater than those derived from production for peace, are industrialists likely to choose the latter?

In an answer to a question raised by me, the Minister of Defence Production stated that the value of sales of weapon components by Canada increased from $171 million in 1965 to $275 million in 1967, about 60 per cent. In an answer to another question, this time directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the following was revealed: In the fiscal year 1964-65 $474,000 was provided under the Industry Modernization for Defence Exports Program to cover 19 projects. By the fiscal year 1967-68, this had increased to $10.6 million covering 95 projects. A similar expansion in spending, though one not quite as great, can be found if one examines the expenditures in connection with the defence industrial research program of the Defence Research Board between the fiscal years 1962-63 and 1967-68.

Most alarming of all are the figures relating to the defence development sharing program. In the fiscal year 1961-62, the government was spending $4.4 million on 33 projects. By last year this had increased to $23 million and 53 projects.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the Canadian people knew of this expanding involvement in the armaments industry they would repudiate the Liberal government and demand that we cease providing this financial support to those who have properly been called merchants of death. The government is quite consciously trying to cash in on the increased market for armaments. They are deliberately making a growing portion of our population dependent for their livelihood on the perpetuation of international conflict.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Broadbent: Well, stand up and debate it.

This, in turn, creates more and more people with a vested interest in military-oriented industry. I am not referring now only to the military and to owners of factories. I am referring also to the ordinary men and women across Canada who obtain jobs in these industries. Understandably, they wish to preserve their source of work; they must provide for themselves and their families. Can they be blamed if at some future date they oppose the closing of an aircraft factory or of a chemical plant concerned with biological warfare? Is this the kind of Canada we should be creating? Of course not. And this government should be condemned from one coast to the other for promoting such a development through its research and development program.

Before I leave this point, I should like to draw attention to the fact that President Kennedy made a point of asking Secretary of State McNamara to devise a program which would, over an eight-year period, reverse precisely the kind of policy I have been describing, that is one which was directing so much of the research and development and, consequently, so much of the economy, into areas dependent on production connected with warfare. The question I raise this afternoon is whether, in the light of the experience in the United States, we in Canada should be embarking on the same kind of foolish developments.

It is clear that the Department of Industry has decided to promote defence industries on the ground that to do so is politically expedient. In its program review for 1969-70 the department concluded that independent Canadian production of all our defence needs would be uneconomic. It then proceeded to reject the logical conclusion that we should purchase our defence equipment abroad. It did so by arguing that to buy on the basis of the lowest rates in world markets would, and I quote, "deprive Canadian industry of a vital source of advancement, not to mention annual exports currently of the order of half a billion dollars."

It is impossible to escape the conclusion that the government has sacrificed the public interest to that of the defence industries. I am certain, Mr. Chairman, that if Canadians were fully aware of these facts they would insist that we stop subsidizing defence industries and shift all the money we have available for research and development to the civilian sector. We must encourage the development of sophisticated technology in the non-military sector. We must employ our scientists and technicians in projects intended for the full, peaceful utilization of our abundant supply of natural resources. This means that we must be selective in the allocation of public funds. We must assess both the international market and our available resources, and then decide in which areas we would most likely be successful in terms of developing and selling commercial, not military products.

• (3:30 p.m.)

In the civilian sector we must find out why Canadian industry has not been very responsive to the government's research and development financial assistance programs. PAIT, the program for the advancement of industrial technology, was established in 1965. The Department of Industry clearly expected to get better results than it has. For the past two fiscal years the department estimated that it would provide $23 million for research and development under PAIT. In fact, it spent less than 50 per cent of this amount. We must find out why this is so. I have already suggested one reason, namely that the financial benefits of research and development in the military sector are better.

However, there must be other reasons and I suggest it is up to the government to find out what these are. Has the government consulted private industry? Perhaps the PAIT program should be dropped completely, or perhaps its requirements simply need modification. In either case, it should not be undermined by programs designed to finance the defence industry.

The same point is equally applicable to IRDIA, the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act. There is no evidence which indicates that this program, established two years ago, has led to an increase in research and development in the civilian sector. In fact, what seems likely is that the government has merely subsidized private industry in doing what it would likely have done anyway without IRDIA. Again, if the government can produce evidence that suggests the contrary, I am sure most hon. members of this house would like to hear what it is. Once again the remedy would be to stop making research and development grants available to all applicants on the basis of broad general criteria, and concentrate instead on projects selected on the basis of their commercial viability in the international market.

We Canadians, Mr. Chairman, are living in an age in which research and development play a crucial role in the development and maintenance of an industrial economy. We Canadians have just recently begun to see the importance of this fact by at long last devoting public funds to this area. However, instead of launching a cohesive, vigorous program in the civilian sector, the federal government has started us down the military path. We must put an end to this immediately. We must shift our effort in the direction of civilian research. We have great resources. We have talented people. We must combine the two for humanitarian purposes.

Mr. Perrault: Mr. Chairman, the last two speakers in this particular debate were from the socialist party of Canada. I listened with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Waterloo—

Mr. Broadbent: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like to point out to the hon. member that only one of these speakers to whom he refers would be proud to call himself a socialist, I suspect.

Mr. Perrault: Don't tell me there is an ideological split in that party.

Mr. Broadbent: There are two parties down here.

Mr. Perrault: It interested me that yesterday the villain was the United States; today it is the military clique. We have not heard much constructive criticism about how to make the Canadian economy grow, how to provide jobs for our working men and to expand trade. It amuses me to hear this assault on United States investment capital. Hon. members may be interested to know that one difficulty confronting the present government of the province of Saskatchewan is that during those socialist years in Saskatchewan almost all of the borrowings on behalf of Saskatchewan were effected in the canyons of Wall Street.

In fact, the provincial secretary spent so much time in the United States borrowing United States money that he is now a permanent resident of the United States. He became so enamoured of the country to the south of us that he decided to settle there. Despite the warnings of the Liberal party when it was in opposition that we were putting too many borrowing eggs in one United States Wall Street basket, the Saskatchewan government continued the practice. Now, the debt has to be repaid with the 8 per cent differential, and this is causing a great deal of difficulty to the government.

I have heard no reference to the quality of United States investment in Canada that was made during those socialist years in the province of Saskatchewan. I have found no expression of opinion in this debate thus far on the substantial grant that the United Autoworkers made to the New Democratic party in the last election campaign. Apparently, there is a difference in the quality of the types of United States investment that are welcomed in Canada as far as our friends to the left are concerned.

It is not for me to review the past history of our friends to the left in this area of investment capital, but perhaps I could mention that one Texas entrepreneur who came to Saskatchewan to found a cement plant and a steel plant during the socialist government's heyday, the bonds of those companies being guaranteed by the honest taxpayers of Saskatchewan, became a millionaire overnight. Clarence Fines, in a notable quotation, stated: "We in the N.D.P./C.C.F. of Saskatchewan like to make millionaires of this kind".

I am greatly interested in the true philosophy of this party in the area of expanded job opportunities for Canadian workers. I speak for many people of all parties in western Canada when I express the hope that a reorganized department will usher in a new and unparalleled program for growth in this country, and that we will develop new markets for Canadian goods not only on this continent, including the United States, but also abroad. This will take a degree of integration. Nations of the world today that have a narrow, introverted outlook really have no future in the international trading community. Today, the world is much smaller than it was in terms of communication and we will require to have closer links with Europe and the Pacific rim nations as well as with the United States of America.

This is inevitable if we are to maintain any kind of standard of living in Canada. Surely, there is a growing realization on the part of members of all parties that a just society cannot be financed on the basis of continuing inflation, and it cannot be nurtured solely on vague feelings of brotherhood and humanitarianism. It is an obvious truism that the just society must be the product of greater efficiency and productivity here at home and better effort abroad in order to develop new markets for Canadian goods.

I am not suggesting that our trade figures are not impressive. We have done very well during recent months. I am very enthusiastic about the appointment of this minister to his new, key post. I think the outlook is promising and I suggest that we continue to be expansive both in our outlook and in our trade philosophy.

In order to enjoy increasing trade, it is obvious that we must consider the purchase of more goods from abroad. It has become a cliche to say that trade is a two-way street. Those of us in western Canada, the 1,526,000 Albertans, the nearly two million British Columbians and the large populations in our sister provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan, realize that trade is a two-way street. Some of these imports will affect Canadian industry. Some of our own industries may suffer adversely for a period of time as a result of the impact of imports from abroad. Yet, it is to be hoped that in the face of competition from abroad we are not going to retreat into the narrow doctrine of protectionism which is rearing its head in all parts of the world today.

The President of the Chase Manhatten Bank of New York, David Rockefeller, addressed the bank's annual forum in Toronto. He said, as reported in the Globe and Mail for November 21 last:

> —western countries have made a full turn-back toward restrictionism in trade matters. And the final outcome of this resurgence—if it is not beaten back—is likely to be a calamitous decline in world trade.
> He said the history of the 1930s provides a grim and unmistakable warning of what can happen when protectionist forces gain the ascendancy.

He said protectionist forces are gaining ascendancy. Protectionism is not restricted to the United States. Even within the common market, tariffs are still charged on a wide range of goods. Then, he goes on to point out how modern protectionism is rearing its head in the form of subsidies, barter deals and other ways. He concluded by saying:

> Despite the revival of protectionism in some quarters, the preponderant view in industrial nations favors continuing efforts to reduce both tariff and non-tariff barriers to trade in industrial products. One approach that has great merit, in my opinion, would be to develop a broad free trade area among nations that would agree to phase out industrial tariffs over a period of years.
> While such a free trade area might start with a small nucleus such as the United States, Britain and Canada, I would hope that it would be completely open-minded . . . In all of this, we must not shrink from the appearance of some loss of national sovereignty. Interdependence is a fact of life, and co-operation in the essence of progress.

It may be impractical at the moment to bring about a free trade area of this kind. There may be impediments of all kinds; but at least let us have an outgoing approach to free trade. Let us investigate the feasibility and possibility of lowering tariffs. I have been encouraged by the speeches our ministers have made on the subject. Speaking about the possibilities of free trade, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in New York on November 14, in part:

> One broad sector for which there is obvious scope for a greater international divison of labour is forest products—lumber, wood products, pulp and paper. But the great expansion of markets for these products will not be confined to North America. Much of it will be in Europe and Japan. A purely bilateral trade arrangement between Canada and the United States in this sector would be second best to a tariff arrangement involving all the industrial countries of the free world. Canada and the United States would both gain much more from a multilateral than from a bilateral arrangement.

We ought to move in the direction of freer trade and lower tariffs. If there is a danger that Canadian industry may suffer from competition arising from freer trade, let us extend our adjustment assistance programs to secondary industry to make sure we do not suffer economic losses in this country and that our workers keep their jobs and incomes. If Canadian industry suffers as a result of competition then, by all means, let us determine whether any particular industry is suffering unfairly or whether the blame can be attributed to lack of productivity, lack of technological innovation or lack of managerial skill or enterprise. In the long run, further protectionism will do little to defer the demise of an inefficient industry which is unwilling or unable to keep pace with change and competitive forces.

Yesterday, the hon. member for Waterloo read, I believe, from the Fourth Annual Review of the Economic Council of Canada. Significantly, he did not read from the Fifth Annual Review entitled, "The Challenge of Growth and Change", published in September, 1968. The Economic Council says, in part, at page 154 of its Fifth Annual Review:

> Of all the major instruments of national economic development, perhaps none has proved to be a more potent source of interregional tension than the system of protective tariffs and related commercial policy devices. It is a time-honoured and enduring ritual at federal-provincial conferences on fiscal and economic problems for Ontario to remind the country that it provides about 45 per cent of the total direct tax revenues flowing into the national treasury, and for the Atlantic and western provinces to rejoin that, among the various burdens they carry, the tariff provides Ontario with its sheltered market while most of their own producers must sell abroad at competitive world prices. Over the years regional unevenness of the cost of the protective tariff has been regularly used to support arguments for providing an elaborate structure of regional and national transportation subsidies, special assistance to primary producers in agriculture, fisheries and mining, tax concessions of particular regional interest, and revenue equalization payments to the lower-income provinces.
> As we have already indicated, the initial purpose and effect of the protective tariff, together with a national transportation system, was to establish an east-west trading relationship, involving a considerable degree of regional economic specialization. The manufacturing and industrial core of the country developed in Ontario and Quebec, with a strong primary resource orientation in the other regions. The expectations of the Atlantic Provinces that they would also perform an important national manufacturing and service function were frustrated both by changing technology and by the westward shift of North American population and activity—
> The broad structure of the tariff and the traditional view of its national and regional impact are generally familiar. One of the main effects of tariffs is that purchasers of goods pay higher prices for certain commodities than they would pay for the same goods at duty-free import prices. The amount involved is what has been called the "cash cost" of the tariff. Earlier studies suggested that this "cash cost" of the Canadian tariff is substantial. Not only do Canadian consumers pay substantially more for many finished products as a result of the tariff, but most Canadian producers pay more for a wide variety of materials, machinery and components as a result of the tariffs on these items; and these higher costs of production are reflected in the prices of goods produced in Canada. All Canadian consumers and producers share in the cash cost of the tariff to the extent that tariffs affect the price of the goods they buy. But the impediments that tariffs impose to access to some cheaper sources of supply in adjacent areas of the United States tend to result in a somewhat larger cash cost in the Atlantic Region and the western provinces than in Central Canada.

The hon. member for Waterloo talked about the productivity of Canadian workers, and the Economic Council had this to say about them:

> But a far more important effect of tariffs is that they tend to depress the levels of output per employed person in Canada.

In other words, the Canadian worker, one of the most efficient workers in the world, is hampered by having to work for too small a market. We should, therefore, try to increase his productivity by enlarging his market.

Mr. Saltsman: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. I know the hon. member does not wish to be unfair. I wish to make it clear that in my remarks last night I said I hoped to see Canadian workers become more productive. I spoke of the rationalization of industry and removal of tariffs. We recognize that what the Fifth Annual Report says is true. We ought to be moving towards free trade. Our party accepts that, but thinks that we can only have it when our industry is sufficiently competitive to exist in a free trade atmosphere.

Mr. Perrault: I must confess that is not the impression I obtained after reading the hon. member's remarks in Hansard, which seemed to be confusing. I did not think he said anything about reducing tariffs or free trade.

Mr. Saltsman: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Perrault: Could I answer in a few minutes. I wish to finish reading from the report of the Economic Council. I continue reading from page 156 of the report:

> Recent studies have concluded that this "production effect" of the tariff (both Canadian and U.S.) may be very substantial—indeed that the economic costs to Canada may be significantly higher than the "cash cost" of the Canadian tariff—and that these combined economic costs may constitute a very significant element in the large and persistent gap in productivity levels and in the average levels of real standards of living between Canada and the United States.

I apologize to the committee for quoting so extensively from the report. I have great respect for the Economic Council as other hon. members have.

Some are concerned about competition from the Pacific rim countries. I point out that Canada sold $605 million worth of goods to Japan in 1968. That was an improvement of between 5 per cent and 6 per cent over the 1967 figures. Of that amount, almost $300 million worth of goods came from my home province, British Columbia. The trade provided thousands of jobs, and incomes for our productive work force in British Columbia, and, in turn, millions of dollars for the federal treasury. I submit it is wrong to say that trade with Japan and other Pacific nations conferred some sort of special benefit upon British Columbia alone. Ontario sold Japan lumber, agricultural products, copper, scrap iron, minerals, chemicals, machinery and other products covering a wide range in 1968. No wonder an Ontario trade mission headquarters will be opened in Tokyo and no wonder the minister's department has been so dramatically improved and expanded over the past two or three years.

The province of Quebec sold over $65 million worth of goods to Japan in 1967. The figure was up in 1968. The Atlantic provinces sold farm products, lumber, copper and other minerals to name a few of their exports to the Pacific area. Our friends on the prairie sold millions of dollars worth of wheat and grain, almost $77 million worth of wheat and grain from Saskatchewan alone in 1967, oil seeds, chemical fertilizers, flax, rapeseed and propane gas.

Recently, we sent a trade mission to South America. My perspective may be different, Mr. Speaker, but it seems to me that our order of priorities should have placed a mission to the Pacific rim nations before the South American junket. As an illustration of the fantastic potential of the Pacific, the statistics show that through western ports Canada exported goods to the value of $505.9 million to Japan; almost $60 million to Australia; $750,000 to little Fiji; over $10 million to New Zealand and over $1½ million to other Pacific Islands including French Oceania, British Oceania and other destinations. Exports to other Asiatic Countries amounted to $160.5 million to Mainland China; $35 million to India; $9.4 million to Hong Kong; $8.5 million to South Korea; almost $10 million to the Philippines and almost $15.2 million to Taiwan.

I hope I may be forgiven for quoting from the weekly journal Truth, dated September 1, 1881, London, England:

> British Columbia is a barren, cold, mountain country, that is not worth keeping.

Through the ports of the province of British Columbia, whose potential was dismissed so airily in 1881, there were $2,249,343,296 worth of goods exported to the world in 1968. Of that total $821 million worth of goods was produced in British Columbia, a 10 per cent increase over 1967. I suggest to the minister and to this house that the potential of western Canada should not be underestimated and I refer to all the provinces, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. Western Canada holds the key to much of Canada's future prosperity. Through the ports of western Canada, Canadian trade can achieve potentials unheard of if we will but invest time, trouble and opportunity.

Let the minister in this parliament announce a trade mission to the Pacific. Let us seek co-operation with the four provincial premiers; let us not be working at cross purposes. Let the provinces be given the right and the power to appoint a number of representatives to this working trade mission. We should establish a two way dialogue between Canadians and our trading partners, as well as our potential partners. If we listen to their problems they may be inclined to listen to some of ours. This mission should be broadly representative of western Canada. One-half of the delegates should be appointed by the four western provinces and the other half appointed by the federal government. There should be a serious, working, fact-finding mission which would report back to the various governments in Canada their recommendations for future action.

As far as our continental situation is concerned, Mr. Chairman, our natural trade patterns are north and south. One fact was made clear to me as a member of the Transport Committee of the House of Commons. It is that the future of the great maritime section of Canada surely cannot lie merely in paying increasing subsidies to those provinces. There has to be basic economic assistance to the maritimes in order for them to share in the prosperity of this country. The natural markets for the maritime provinces are in the Atlantic states of the United States. It is ridiculous for them to be forced to sell their goods continuously in central Canada. If the future of the maritimes is going to hinge upon the benevolence of governments in Ottawa, Liberal or Conservative, to extend tariffs, I do not think the outlook for the maritime provinces—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member his time has expired.

Mr. Perrault: I could finish my speech in two minutes.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Perrault: I appeal to the minister and the government to be courageous and attempt to negotiate with the United States, industry by industry. There should be free trade to provide meaningful assistance, not only to the maritimes but also to western Canada. If the automotive agreement is good for central Canada, other agreements can be achieved which will equally benefit the maritimes as well as the provinces of western Canada.

One of the difficulties facing the people in western Canada is the fact that it costs immeasurably more for a company to manufacture a product in British Columbia and sell it in Toronto than it does for a company in Toronto to manufacture in that city and ship to the western part of Canada. Because of this cost British Columbia must look to the state of California, a state with 20 million people. We can boast of half a dozen profitable furniture manufacturing companies who sell most of their products in central Canada. Why can't there be greater access to the ready markets to the south of us? This could be done without endangering our national sovereignty one iota. It is time to get moving in this direction.

Mr. Gleave: I would like to make a few comments regarding this reorganization, Mr. Chairman, and mention some ways in which these departments have affected agriculture in particular, as well as some of the effects they will have as time goes on. I do not want the previous speaker to feel badly about what someone said with regard to British Columbia back in the year 1881. Some time he should read what Captain Palliser said about the prairies. I am sure it was just as bad.

We as Canadians are concerned with making the best we can from the very rich inheritance which we have, to bring the benefits of this productivity to Canadians and to expand that well being to the best of our ability. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce must be very concerned about how well this is being done, although I have misgivings in some areas. Let me cite one instance.

I asked the minister a question on January 24, with regard to a study of the dairy industry undertaken by the Department of Industry. You can see a reference to the study in the 1966 report where it is stated:

• (4:00 p.m.)

With the co-operation of the dairy industry, dairy plant operations in Canada have been studied in depth on a regional basis and by size and product mix. The study has indicated an urgent need for dairy plant modernization in Canada. A program designed to encourage the modernization of dairy processing and manufacturing plants is now being developed.

Apparently this information cannot be made public. At least I have looked in the same review for 1967, but found only a small reference to cheese. I did not see any further reference to this very important study of the industry. One wonders whether it was dropped or shelved. Were the facts that were deduced too horrible to bear the light of day? If they were revealed, and if they were put to work would they assist the dairy industry? Would they assist the farmer? Would they assist to cut down the $138 million subsidy to the dairy industry?

I have no doubt we have people in the department able to make these kinds of studies, but if we are going to make these investigations in depth we should know what they reveal. We should know what an investigation of the dairy industry reveals, because you do not divorce the processing industry from the farmer. It is part and parcel of the whole business.

I am concerned about what is proposed and what is going to happen on the grain side of the agricultural industry. From what is said from the other side of the house I understand that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce jointly with the Department of Agriculture has set up a Grains Council, not by act of Parliament but by letters patent. Will this Grains Council make all the results of its studies public? If it does research, if it investigates aspects of the marketing of grain, of the production of grain, of the transporting and the handling of grain will it report its findings? Will its reports be made public? Are we, as farmers, going to know what this council has to say about our welfare? As yet, no assurance has been given that this will be so. The Grains Council will report to the government. Will the government tell those whose livelihood is involved, whose well being is involved, what private discussions are being held behind doors, and what facts have been discovered?

The old Department of Trade and Commerce, now the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, traditionally played an important part in the welfare of the prairie farmers. It is necessary that those farmers have confidence in the department. I would say that, through the Canadian Wheat Board, farmers have displayed a fair amount of confidence in that department, in its honesty and in its fairness. Sometimes there have been some rather exaggerated wheat sale forecasts, but we take these with a grain of salt. We have lived a long time with them. But let me tell the minister that if the day comes when the farmer thinks he is being dealt with on a basis of less than complete frankness, much of that trust will disappear.

We have just come through a series of GATT negotiations, and I could not help but think that the Canadian farmer came out of them with very little. Recently, I read that a task force on agriculture is going to report at the end of this month, and that it is going to recommend that wheat acreage be cut 30 per cent. That simply reinforces my previous judgment. A wheat acreage reduction of 30 per cent is a staggering proposition for the farmers of western Canada to accept.

Dr. Parnell of the Department of Agriculture is reported as saying that half of the farmers of Canada will be out of business by 1980. This staggers the imagination. We are going to have to make this kind of adjustment because our export markets have shrunk. That is the reason for it.

Out of the GATT negotiations came a reduction of the tariff on soybean oil going to Japan. There was no reduction on rapeseed, and so we are at a disadvantage. Recently, I asked the minister why there was an increase in the tariff on refined oil going into the Australian market but no increase in the tariff on the soybean product. Why are we being discriminated against in this fashion? Are we less able to carry our part in the tough negotiations that take place?

Mr. Pepin: It takes two to tango.

Mr. Gleave: The minister says it takes two to tango. I agree, but why do we come out with this disadvantage? If we are going to operate with this disadvantage in the export markets of the world, the forecasts that have been made will become an unfortunate and desperate reality. The wiping out of capital investment on the prairies will have to be seen to be believed. There will be a drop in the standard of living of the people involved until such time as they can leave the prairies and relocate elsewhere.

If you want to see the Golden triangle area grow in Ontario, just continue with this trend. We helped it grow during the depression years, after sending our sons and daughters to the war. They stayed in this area as a result of the terrific wiping out of capital which occurred on the prairies from 1929 until the early forties. This is what we remember. I am sure that the real magnitude of this situation is understood and that is the only reason I rose to speak to members of this committee this afternoon.

We hear a lot of talk, and plenty of advice from the press, to the effect that the thing for us to do today is get into feed grain production. They refer rather glibly to 400 million bushels of feed grain to be exported some place overseas. If we were unable under GATT negotiations to extend our wheat market, and if our actual exports of barley as a feed grain have dropped,—it has and you can check the figures in the Wheat Board report—how in the name of common sense can these people suggest we are going to put 400 million bushels of feed grain into the export market?

Perhaps we should drop the price of our feed grain, and we have done this. Anyone can read the Richardson weekly report of March 8 and see that we dropped the price of barley to $1.02. What happened immediately afterward? France undersold us, that's what happened. If there is anyone left, and apparently there are still some in Canada though not many in western Canada, who thinks we can grab the markets of the world by introducing fire sale prices he had better disabuse himself of that idea before it is too late. If we intend to launch ourselves on a program of this kind we had better think twice.

The Wheat Board has quoted a price of $1.02 per bushel for feed barley. This is 15 per cent to 20 per cent lower than it was a short time ago. How can we expect to sell this grain at a lower price? If we intend to do so, then this government will have to do the same as other governments overseas have done. It will have to say to the farmer, go ahead and produce barley; we will put it on the market and sell it for whatever we can get but we will guarantee a price level. That is the only way it can be done.

There is a minimum price or cost at which the farmer can actually produce barley. There is no magic formula any more. I grew up during the time when you could use hay-wire to fix farm machinery, and when people used to have a number of horses. We used to get up in the morning and round up saddle horses to do the work. This did not take much money. We cannot round up saddle horses any more to do farm work. Now, we fire up the tractors. We pay 25 cents per gallon to put fuel in the tank and $2 per gallon of oil. Either you ride the tractor yourself or you pay $1.50 or $1.75 per hour to someone to ride it for you.

That story is not much different from the one which applies generally to industry today. I do not mind repeating myself. We cannot save the grain industry of western Canada by putting on fire sale prices, and people who think we can had better disabuse themselves of that idea. I do not think the minister is one of those individuals. I suggest this in all sincerity, and with the hope that the minister will not accept this argument advanced by those people who hold this point of view.

If anyone wants statistics about the grain situation, let me quote a few. I should like to quote from statistics contained in the 1966-67 annual report of the Canadian Wheat Board. During the five year period from 1947-48 to 1951-52 we sold up to 73,458,000 bushels of barley, and in one crop year, 1956-57, we managed to sell 122,077,000 bushels of barley. In the crop year 1956-57 we sold almost 82 million bushels of barley. During approximately a ten year period, we managed to maintain this range of volume. In the crop year 1961-62, we dropped to approximately 42 million bushels. During the period from 1962-63 to 1966-67 we did not recover. We dropped as low as 15 million bushels which is a mere fraction of the 80 million bushel figure we ended up with in 1956-57. In 1966-67, we sold approximately 58 million bushels of barley. Surely, this is some indication to those who suggest we should cut the price that they should have second thoughts. This is a concrete example of what has taken place.

Our approach to this whole matter should be determined at the bargaining table. As the minister has suggested, it takes two to tango. We should learn some new steps. We hear two different stories about the agricultural situation. When the GATT negotiations were completed, it was announced that we hoped to export $1.5 billion a year in manufactured goods.

The Chairman: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Is there general agreement that the hon. member carry on?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jamieson: Change to the rhumba.

Mr. Gleave: Mr. Chairman, I think I have said most of what I want to say to the members of this committee. I hope the new department will be seized of the importance of the task we must undertake. I hope it will not accept the unsubstantiated assumption that we must put one third of our wheat land out of active production. I hope the new department will not accept the assumption that half of the farmers in Canada are going to be out of business by 1980. If this new department or this government accepts this assumption, this country is headed for some real disasters, just as are the people in the constituency of Saskatoon-Biggar.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few remarks on the measure now before the house.

First of all, I wish to congratulate my colleague for Drummond (Mr. Pepin) to whom the destiny of the new department will be entrusted. He is undertaking a tremendous task and my best wishes go with him. This task will require his services, his devotion every day. It also requires talent, a lot of work, some boldness, firmness and also, alertness. And I know the minister has those qualities, the qualifications which will enable him to succeed and from which the Canadian industry will benefit.

Mr. Chairman, this leads me to say that the department the minister will head in the years to come is most important to the working people in my riding. The two fields in which the workers in my riding can expect improvement, provided the minister will turn his attention to them, are the footwear and the textile industries. This is not the first time I make it a point to discuss those two particular topics. But those two industries are so important to our people that I owe it to my electors to protect their interest every time the opportunity presents itself.

Not very long ago, specifically last February 18, I received a letter from the Quebec leader of the United Textile Workers of America, Mr. Bert Demers. When reading the letter, it is easy to see that the textile workers of my province are quite worried. I take a few minutes to discuss the matter again this afternoon to urge the minister to even greater haste. Here is an excerpt from the letter addressed to me by Mr. Bert Demers, and I quote:

• (4:20 p.m.)

> The closing down of factories in five so-called textile areas—due to a great extent to the abundance of textiles coming from countries where production costs are low—is certainly alarming to those who still have the good fortune of operating in this field.

In a brief accompanying the letter from Mr. Demers, one can read, for instance, that in 1954, imports under the heading "Textiles and ready-made clothing" amounted to 5 per cent of the consumption whereas in 1959, the imports had increased to 25 per cent, and in 1967 to 43 per cent. Needless to say, this hampers Canadian production and reduces employment.

In fact, this is what the brief says and I quote:

> In other words, from 6 million lbs. in 1954, the level of imports so-called "cheap" in view of their origin, skyrocketted to 46 million lbs. in 1959, 74 million lbs. in 1964 and 118 million lbs. in 1967.
> While this situation was developing here, elsewhere in Europe and in the United States, for instance, a rational policy was being implemented in order to restrict the ill-effects of such penetration of the world markets into their economies.
> If our Canadian parliament allows imports from developing countries increase little or no restrictions—our manpower requirements in the textile industry will decrease year after year.

This is a warning which the minister will certainly want to take into account. He will want also to ponder upon another part of the brief which reads as follows, and I quote:

> The problem is more than serious and it is time for concern. We cannot repeat it enough. Hundreds of workers in the textile industry, in Drummondville, Cowansville, Montmorency, Magog and several other regions, are being laid off. Some of them have been out of work for fifteen months. Some workers in Coaticook, Saint-Jean, St. Hyacinthe and Valleyfield are hit even more severely; what was their livelihood for many years, is disappearing.

The minister who has spent part of his life among working people and textile workers especially, knows fully well that when a worker has spent several years of his life in a textile mill, it is difficult for him to find work outside, in another factory. If these daring policies must be implemented, the workers, the present taxpayers deserve every attention.

I was talking during the last week-end with a worker who has been employed in a shirt factory in Saint-Hyacinthe for about 40 years. He is threatened to lose his job sooner or later if the present conditions persist. He provided me with data which he says are official and which give us an idea of imports from countries where the manufacturing cost is much inferior to ours. For example, during 1968 we have received from Taiwan 100,048 dozens of shirts, 58,720 from Malaysia, 18,000 from Singapore, 365,100 dozens from Japan, 57,000 dozens from Korea, and 217,000 from Hong Kong.

Mr. Chairman, those are the enormous quantities of shirts that enter the Canadian market. They create competition, which affects the Canadian workers.

I know that the minister must think a lot and work a lot. I know that the question of imports is giving him some trouble, but I know also that he means well. I am quite certain that he will do everything possible to keep for our Canadian textile workers that part of the market to which they are entitled.

As Mr. Demers states in his letter, the main factor with regard to foreign competition is that it is done with much lower paid workers in under-developed countries.

But, even if it is our duty to help the under-developed countries, I believe our first obligation is to Canadians, and if measures that might upset the countries who wish to conquer our market are needed, we should not hesitate to take such measures.

I said, at the start, that the minister should display boldness, firmness and alertness. Everyone knows that some foreign exporters are not always as mindful and as respectful of the law as they should be. In many instances, my attention has been drawn to the fact that the name of the country of origin which should appear in letters as high as those of other words on the label is sometimes hard to read.

In spite of their good intentions, the public servants who are required to watch for this type of thing, often let them escape their notice. The minister should, I believe, since we are talking about the reorganization of a department, entrust a particular person with the task of doing away with unfair competition. It is in fact a violation of the law and no effort should be spared to ensure that the law is fully respected.

Our Canadian financiers should also be encouraged to do their share for the Canadian people. I have here a photostat of an article published in the December 1967 issue of the magazine Men's Wear of Canada, which states that Canadians and Americans invest money in countries with small income levels in order to manufacture garments with which the Canadian market is subsequently glutted.

I suggest that if those Canadian interests really wish their country to expand as it should, they should give up some profits and manage so that the profits which they want to make come from Canadian industries rather than from foreign ones.

Finally, I would also like to remind the minister that the shoe industry has been going through a most difficult period for a number of years. It is known that since 1963, a great many shoe manufacturers have closed down again because of the competition from countries with low production costs. I would indeed like to see the minister give also consideration to that matter; he would thus render a service to his constituents, to the workers of the province of Quebec and of the whole country.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, as I rise to speak, I feel somewhat reluctant and I will tell you a story to explain that feeling.

During the last electoral campaign, I had the pleasure to speak in the riding of the hon. member who was to become the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and I recall that at one moment—he was to speak after me—he got up. I admit that I had spoken too long and that I did not have to talk so long to convince the audience to vote for the Minister, as they already had so decided. Then, he said to the audience: Ladies and Gentlemen, when the hon. member for Trois-Rivières gets on his feet in the Commons, he always, or most of the time indicates that he did not plan to take part in the debate, but will try to be brief; then he uses up all the time allocated to him, if not more.

Of course, I remembered when I prepared my comments. Besides, the minister at the end of his speech last night, said this:

> Personally, I hope that the debate will be shorter than the one on the establishment of the Department of Communications.

Naturally, such a remark is likely to intimidate someone as shy as I am. Mr. Chairman, I want to assure the minister that I shall be brief.

However, the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard), with his usual good nature and politeness, has challenged me in a way and I must reply, only for his information or that of his colleagues who may not know what is going on.

I wish to say to the member for Trois-Rivières—I beg your pardon, I meant the member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) to whom I would never give up my riding—that several months ago, government members formed a kind of task force which looked into the problems experienced by the shoe industry and particularly textiles. The group was made up mainly of members in whose ridings there are textile industries. At the beginning, the group was worked on provincial basis. Today it is national, there are representatives of every province with a textile industry. We wanted to study the problem in depth, not only to rise in the house and tell the minister: There are too many imports, and this must stop, because our textile industry is not doing too well. We tried to survey the industry to find out what is wrong and and to seek solutions.

In that regard, we have met experts of the departments concerned, and in particular the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in order to discuss all the aspects of the matter—because there are many of them—and we are continuing to consider them.

We have been particularly pleased to discover, while doing that work, that officials of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and of the Department of Finance have been carrying for several months an exhaustive, thorough and realistic study which will take into account every aspect of the problem.

I would like, for example, to ask the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) if among spinning factories and footwear manufactures which seems to be in jeopardy, there would not be a large number of them which are in a bad way due to weaknesses in their administration, because they have forgotten, for example, to follow the present business trend and make necessary investments to keep up-to-date.

I can quote, for example, a rather large textile plant of my area called the Wabasso Cotton which has some 2,200 or 2,300 regular employees in the Trois-Rivières area. It manufactures high-quality products, such as those sheets and pillow-cases which are so popular and are made in our district. It also manufactured material for dresses and several other purposes. This is an industry which had foreseen new business trends. For instance, synthetic products appeared on the market and consequently cotton was of course less and less in demand. That industry realized that exchanges are nevertheless necessary between Canada and other countries if we are to maintain our external trade. We must sacrifice a few things and avoid excessive protectionism. We must rather head toward freer trade if we truly want to encourage the development of our trade.

A few years ago, the Wabasso Cotton Company saw that this was in the offing. The directors of the company invested considerable amounts of money to renovate their plant and then started manufacturing new products. For instance, you can now find on the market an excellent synthetic product that really sells. Research has come up with no-iron sheets and pillow-cases, not to mention wash-and-wear shirts. Those people engage in all kinds of research.

Instead of experiencing the financial difficulties of others, that spinning mill now employs a great number of people and is blossoming forth. Of course, like everybody else, they could do without imported shirts from Hong Kong, Korea or elsewhere. It is obvious this may be an ideal situation in theory, but, from a practical standpoint, if you want to sell things to those countries, you have necessarily to buy things from them.

I was saying that a thorough study was carried on which the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and the Department of Finance, in an attempt to set up reasonable quotas, not through coercion, but as a result of agreements, negotiations and discussions with those countries. According to the information at hand, and I can pass it on to my hon. friend on the other side of the house, because he must know—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. member that up to now he has not tell me anything new.

Mr. Mongrain: I shall then go on in that connection—

Mr. Ricard: I know all that, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member does not have to repeat it.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member knows it, he does not seem to understand, since every time he rises, he blames the minister.

Mr. Ricard: I was not blaming him; I was asking him to co-operate.

Mr. Mongrain: It will then have to be repeated three times.

Moreover, these departments are attempting to find means to streamline only those undertakings which are unable by themselves to survive for all kinds of reasons. They have already found for some of them outlets not previously available. It is good to divulge such things so that the rest of Canada does not think that the government is not concerned with that problem and that it would be quite simple to say: Tomorrow morning we will put a stop to the importation of shirts and textile products, thus permitting our industries to flourish.

There is another problem which the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe could consider once in a while since, if I am right, he is himself a union leader. Maybe he could support the request I have been making for three years now to the labour unions of the country. I am asking for a truce or a kind of moratory which would enable the government to stabilize prices. The worker and the wage-earner would be the first to benefit. In fact, union members are now asking their leaders to do more, because some of them seem to have lost all sense of responsibility. This does not help solve problems such as the one under discussion.

• (4:40 p.m.)

I have summed up what is going for the benefit of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, because he told me he knew—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have not learned anything from the hon. member for Trois-Rivières that I did not know before.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, we shall have to tell him again probably for the fourth time, so that he will stop—

Mr. Ricard: May I ask a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Mongrain: I shall be pleased to hear the hon. member's question.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member for Trois-Rivières kindly explain to us why imports are ever increasing while our production keeps decreasing?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, as concerns the question of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce is getting ready to answer it. He will surely put forward many more arguments, statistics and facts than I could provide myself during the few remaining minutes at my disposal.

Mr. Ricard: That is exactly what I asked him to do.

Mr. Mongrain: The only difference between the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe is that the minister does not talk through his hat but waits until he has gathered all necessary information. He will have it presently. I am not enough in the government's confidence to set a date but I know that he will act soon. Then, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe will obtain more statistics, facts and arguments than he wants.

[Mr. Mongrain.]

Mr. Ricard: Would the hon. member question the figures I have just given and which were given to me by the Textile Workers Union of America? Is this what the hon. member wants?

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I find that my hon. friend has not understood anything. I have spoken during 20 minutes and he has not understood me. He wants me to question some figures when I told him that we know there are imports. We also know there are many other related problems and that the solution is not as simple as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe imagines.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I have not suggested any solution, I merely asked for the co-operation of the minister.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I feel I am losing my time trying to win the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe over to my cause. Then, I shall speak for those who want to understand, because there are none so deaf as those that will not hear.

I hasten to pass on to the second matter I want to deal with this afternoon: tourism. I was very happy to read the statement made last night by the Minister of Industry and Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), as reported in Hansard, on page 6493, and I quote:

> I should like to say a few words on tourism, for which the new department will also be responsible and which earns $1 billion a year for our balance of payments.

This is one of the most readily profitable industries that could be promoted in Canada. Like many others, I am most happy to see that the minister is concerned with this aspect of the Canadian industry.

I go on reading:

> The intended departmental approach to the development of our tourist industries and the expansion of Canadian income from tourism also reflects an integrated approach, although these activities are to be identified as a separate program within the new department.
> The Office of Tourism will comprise, first, the Canadian Government Travel Bureau, the promotional arm with particular responsibilities for attracting visitors to Canada. It has 24 offices abroad. The Office of Tourism will also comprise a branch devoted to the study of our domestic travel industry and its needs for growth and development to meet the requirements of the highly competitive international travel market; all this, of course, in the closest possible co-operation with the industry, the provinces and other federal departments whose activities are relevant to the development of the tourist attractions and facilities of Canada. Here again, the international and the domestic will be closely matched, closely linked.

As far as I am concerned, I am very happy to hear the minister explain to us those projects which are realistic and advantageous for the development of this segment of an industry which, incidentally, interests my constituency. As I have myself been involved for several years in touristic promotion, I would like to suggest to the minister that in his relations with the provinces, particularly with Quebec, he should try to establish a system which would enable regional touristic promotion organizations to increase the number of touristic centres. They exist in many areas, but they have not been developed as they should because municipalities do not have the necessary funds.

The minister will appreciate—because I am sure he has visited the sites—that there are in the area of Trois-Rivières remains of the first ironworks in Canada, the old smithery of St. Maurice, known also as St. Michel des Forges and which is now part of the city of Trois-Rivières.

This is a touristic, archeological and historical treasure which is undeveloped. We have the plans of that old forge, the foundations of which still exist. All sorts of historical objects are found there, but nothing is done about that, Mr. Chairman. I know that the federal government has already done something in that direction. I know also that the national parks branch especially is well-disposed about that, but it would probably need the co-operation of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. It seems that there is a misunderstanding on the constitutional aspects of the problem, because some Quebec ministers argue that the central government should not interfere in such matters.

The situation is disastrous and I am sure that men of goodwill could find a way to revalorize an industry which, after all, is unique and which would be an attraction for the great number of Americans and Europeans who are anxious to visit this reconstruction of the first ironworks in Canada. I am told that the iron-smelting industry of the United States has been approached and would be ready to contribute substantial amounts to the restoration of that old forge of St. Maurice. That did not materialize but I am sure that the minister, with all his lucidity and all his diplomacy, might be successful in convincing the Quebec authorities to co-operate with the federal and municipal governments in order to multiply the touristic centres, which would give to the organizations involved in promoting tourism in their region, the necessary means for efficient and effective action, so that the money and the work devoted by his department to promote the tourist industry will create a spirit of co-operation at every level of government.

I would like to end my remarks by congratulating the minister on his appointment as head of this important department. I would also like to tell him that we of the province of Quebec in particular, are proud to see him accede to this office and to see that he is doing his job so well. I wish him good luck in his new duties.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I should also like to say a few words on the third part of the bill before us, which deals with industry, which obviously comes under the new department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

However, before I begin, Mr. Chairman, I should like to draw the attention of the house on a rather unpleasant experience for our party this afternoon. The hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) was speaking, and when he asked for two extra minutes to conclude his speech, some government members refused. I thought it was ill-mannered of them and was inclined to give them tit for tat, but I controlled myself, and we willingly granted extra time to those who needed a minute or two to conclude their speech. I shall say no more, because I know you could call me to order on that point, and it would not be the first time it was done at the expense of our party, Mr. Chairman.

I want to congratulate the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), who will be recognized as the minister responsible for that Department, and I extend to him my best wishes for success at the head of that Department.

We say, that this is a new Department, but we do not have to go back very far to find reservations. In fact, the minister himself said, and I quote:

> The amalgamation of the Departments of Trade and Commerce and of Industry plays a very important role in the present reorganization of the federal government, the third since 1963—

I do not consider this department as something new, but rather as a step backward, because there already has been such a department.

I think it was the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson who divided this department, and no doubt it was realized that it was a mistake. I always wondered why this was done. Industry and Commerce are two complementary sectors which must necessarily be integrated to form a whole. This has been demonstrated many times, when for instance we had discussions with industrialists about marketing their production and we had to run from one department to another.

I think that this department will be a bonanza for all producers, and businessmen as well as for the whole population.

Even if we are in favour of establishing this department, there are some points I want to bring to the minister's attention.

The minister made this statement and I quote from Hansard, page 6492:

> I feel honoured and challenged by the mandate given me to bring together the qualities and capabilities of the present Departments of Industry and Trade and Commerce and to forge for the future the kind of strong, forward-looking ministry.

I second the minister in that institution but I wonder about the gifted and competent people he will have to bring together. I am trying to find out who will run to show in that department, and I see on page 6493 of Hansard that his first assistant deputy minister is Mr. Kniewasser, the second Mr. Head, the third Mr. Mundy, the fourth Mr. Schwarzmann, and the fifth Mr. Warren. The minister went on to say:

> Mr. Chairman, I could go on enumerating... responsibilities but I will refrain from it.

I should have liked him to tell us when there might be a French Canadian in a key position.

Mr. Pepin: It would have been the next name: Mr. Sénécal.

Mr. Gauthier: The next one? I am glad to hear it, because that had me a bit worried. I could not believe that the minister could make such a mistake.

In fact, we should not have forgiven him for it. We are always happy to see a French Canadian filling a ministerial post. The same thing applies when French Canadian people become top officials. It is so much pleasanter for us to be able to speak our own language in official dealings.

Unfortunately, there are still some offices where we find it very difficult to do so; sometimes a young secretary has to act as an interpreter. And they say that bilingualism is extolled in the civil service. It is a strange kind of bilingualism indeed, and I want to draw the minister's attention to that point. I know he is capable of keeping an eye on that aspect of things. I wish all ministers would do the same, so that the government might really become bilingual. First senior officials should become bilingual, to enable all members to contact them in their mother tongue.

English speaking people like to be able to express themselves in their own language in any department. That is all we want; we do not ask for special privileges; give us what they have and no more. We want to be able to speak French in every department. Although we get by in English French is our tongue and this is a fact which is recognized today by the government. The point is that it must not be forgotten in the books, we must not let this legislation gather dust and the French language and bilingualism ought to be promoted. I know that senior officials are qualified to hold such and such position. However another condition is required: they must also be bilingual. Let them learn French. We had to learn it. To come to Canada, people had to learn English. If they are in the public service, let them learn French because they will have to deal with French Canadian people who also like to preserve and to speak their own tongue.

I just wanted to call the minister's attention on that point.

I heard the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) put earlier a question to the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain. This is what he said: How come production is decreasing? Production decreases while imports increase in Canada. Why? The answer is simple. I still wonder why the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe asked that question and why the hon. member for Trois-Rivières was unable to give him an answer. It is because the industries do not get the assistance which they need; there is always—

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

As a rule, my hon. friend has regard for the facts. In this case, he says that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières was unable to answer. This is not correct. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières decided to mind his own business; he said that the minister was in the process of setting up a study and that the answer would come from him.

I could have given it, Mr. Chairman, but I would have committed an indiscretion.

Mr. Gauthier: I was just going to say it, Mr. Chairman. The hon. member always puts the blame on somebody else. What do we find today? We find that essential assistance—I am not referring to loans, but to financial assistance—goes to the big industry; everything is sacrified to it. It is exempted from billions of dollars in tax for so-called investments, that are not always adequately made in the small industry. The latter is being taxed, and prevented from surviving.

Small industries are in jeopardy nowadays. Many of them go bankrupt. Why? Because they do not get enough assistance. I wish to draw more especially the minister's attention to this. I know he is aware of this problem but I believe he does not know about the difficulties the small industry in our area must face every day.

I am not saying that in order to launch a war, but merely to draw the attention of the minister, because it is awful to see our small and average industries collapse when they could be viable. Why? Because they did not get the necessary assistance from the government. We can see the proof of that every day. I am not against big industry, no, I am very happy that it should get benefits, but let us give the same benefits to the small industry. Do the hon. members know the estimated value of the Alcan plant in Arvida? That firm just reinvested $14,400,000. I am very happy about that for the people in our area. That industry will get a fine gift of $1,500,000 because they are investing there. Why should we not make similar gifts to the small industries who are investing also? But no. They even have trouble getting loans.

Here is an example. A small industry with a $250,000 asset succeeded in getting a small loan from the Industrial Development Bank after having applied to all chartered banks. It needed a little money, since it had accumulated too much stock. The Industrial Development Bank lent him $25,000—10 per cent of his capitalization—at 9 per cent interest. Is this the way to help a man?

I shall not name all those who would have needed loans in underdeveloped areas since they did not get anything. Our area was a designated one. Our most common industry is lumber. I could mention some industrialists who have tried to get loans similar to those granted to the big industries in underdeveloped areas, but they did not succeed. I could mention one who managed by himself and with the help of his friends and by accumulating small amounts. But how long can that last? Perhaps within two, three or four years, he will have to give up everything because he does not get any help. We direct all our capital towards the big industries which really do not need it and are strong enough to be self-sufficient, while it is the small industries that really employ the most people. If we came to the assistance of these small industries, if we enabled them to live and to produce something, we would stop importing.

In my area, we do not get in 40 per cent of the garden products we need. Why? Because farmers get no assistance whatsoever. I am very glad that these two departments are being joined together, because whenever surpluses had to be disposed of we were always sent from the Department of Industry to the Department of Trade and vice versa. From now on, we will deal with the same minister. We will then be able to have him sit down and to tell him: Hold on, we are going to try and solve our problem.

In my area, for instance, we used to have to wait almost a year before the surpluses of milk powder were marketed, and the manufacturer had no more space to store his product, while the Minister of Trade and Commerce was travelling across the country in order to sell wheat. I am not against selling wheat. In fact, I used to say to the former minister (Mr. Winters): Just go on a ten-day trip, once a year, and try to sell dairy products. You go around 365 days a year trying to sell wheat. I do agree that selling wheat is a must but he should also have concerned himself with our surpluses. That is the point on which I want to draw the present minister's attention. It is all very well to produce but what about selling the product? If we do not manage that turnover, we cannot increase production. It is simply impossible. The minister should bear this in mind, from the very start.

If the minister could make up his mind today that he is going to give priority to the average-size industry, he may be sure that his department would work like a charm, in the province of Quebec and across Canada as well.

If we go on forgetting about the small industry, we shall have a smaller number of rich people and a greater number of poor ones. Whether you be a businessman, a worker, or a consumer, the best answer to unemployment is to boost the small industry, instead of driving our farmers away from the land, as inspectors are doing now with their farm loans. They say: Leave the farm, you will enjoy a better life in town. No sir! Today they are leaving for the city but within five or six years, willy nilly they will come back to the land as it happened in the 30's. Nobody seems to realize this. Apparently, the officials are taking it easy and never go and see for themselves in those areas.

May I suggest to the minister to do as they do in China and send his officials, in turn, on some farm for a while to learn the ropes. He will see how much that experience will teach them. Let him send some to our logging camps for a whole winter; let them work like the others. You will see that when they come back to the office they will pull up their sleeves and say: No more Pepsi; let's get to work.

Mr. Chairman, those are the main remarks I wanted to make for the benefit of the minister. I am sure that at long last we have a minister from the East heading the Department of Agriculture. We are no longer to be pitied. Indeed, it is 61 years since we have had a French Canadian from the East as Minister of Agriculture. Now, we have one and we will go to him for help and urge him on too. I am very happy because he is a good worker—no mental reservation here—and if we go up to him with plans, if he is given a job to do, he will apply himself to make a success of them. If the bureaucrats refuse to go along, I know he will take the whip to them, and get them back on the job.

[English]

Mr. Southam: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon we have been discussing item 57 on the order paper, committee of the whole on Bill C-173, an act respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto. I have been waiting for a considerable time to place my views on the record about the serious situation in western Canada today, the causes of it and how it affects the marketing of our wheat. Although land is urgently wanted everywhere, in western Canada we have plenty of land for farming. You might say we have "wanted land" in plenty. That is a strange paradox but nevertheless is true. I have done some research to try and find the cause of this situation in order to place the facts on record. At the risk of repeating, I would remind this house of the seriousness of the situation which exists.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Canadian wheat producers wonder if this government has any conception of how serious the situation is, or how to go about solving the problem of marketing Canada's huge stocks of grain. The facts of the matter, as I understand them, are that the tremendous upheaval in the international wheat market produced by events of the past two years has changed things to the point where only a radical change in Canada's whole approach to wheat pricing and marketing will be adequate to meet the new circumstances.

In the period between the death of the old international wheat agreement on July 31, 1967 and the coming into force of the new international grain arrangement on July 1 of last year there was, for the first time in years, a free world market in wheat. This free market not only opened the door to dumping, price-cutting and cut-throat competition, but it disrupted the established pattern of exporting and importing and spurred importing nations to take fresh stock of their position. The result was that when the new international agreement came into force last summer, the old trading pattern to which it was to apply had been drastically altered. In addition, thanks to circumstances with which I intend to deal shortly, the new international arrangement was an imperfect instrument even in the old context.

The new world wheat picture includes traditional Canadian markets that are either gone or greatly diminished and others that are open to stiff competition from newcomers. Technological advances and changes in national tastes have completely altered the buying pattern of many importing nations. They no longer seek the same quantitites or grades of wheat as they did two years ago.

Most importing nations have made great strides in developing their own agricultural industry to supply more of their grain needs. India has already stated she intends to be self-sufficient so far as wheat is concerned in three years. Many European countries have drastically altered their requirements. Some exporting nations have already adopted more flexible methods of marketing and pricing to meet the demands of the changed world market. Canada, so far, has stood firm on the basis of her high quality wheat and, as far as the importers are concerned, on the high minimums set under the new international arrangement. The result has been lost sales, exports reduced to a trickle and a bleak outlook for the immediate future.

To meet this crisis in Canadian agriculture, the best this government has been able to suggest has been a vague promise to study wheat marketing some time in the future and to set up a national grains council. That council has alread been set up. We, in western Canada, hope this council will find new approaches to this problem. I do not like to be pessimistic. I like to look at the positive side. We are looking forward to some action which may solve some problems which face us. Both ideas are sound enough but totally inadequate to meet the pressing situation. They are long term measures to meet an immediate crisis.

On September 23, the London Free Press carried a report of wheat and flour exports for the first 11 months of the crop year ending July 31. According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, these were down a staggering 40 per cent! This is 16 per cent below the Canadian 10 year average for wheat and flour exports of 346,100,000 bushels. The 1966-67 exports totalled 479,300,000 bushels. This year the figure is 291,800,000 bushels. That is a dramatic example of what one year of a free world market in wheat could do to Canada's wheat export trade.

The Canadian government naïvely believed the old scale of minimum prices set out under the defunct international wheat agreement of 1962 would be observed by exporting and importing nations. It was not written down. No one had signed anything. But it was "understood" according to the former Minister of Trade and Commerce, who is no longer a member of this house. He called it "a gentleman's agreement" but the trouble was some nations did not subscribe to the gentleman's code. We are now back under an international agreement and not doing much better.

The October issue of Union Farmer described the new agreement as "shaky". The Winnipeg Free Press stated "how effective it will be remains to be seen". The faltering operations were discussed several months ago by five of the leading exporting nations at Canberra. On October 7, the 16 nation price review committee, including both exporting and importing nations, met in London to try to patch up weaknesses in the agreement and restore some stability to the international wheat market.

Two of the chief failings of the new international grains arrangement are that, while it set higher minimum prices for some grades, it left other grades outside the price schedule and left the door open to price cutting through the use of freight rates and other shipping costs as concessions. It was a poor agreement and could not be put in the same category as the one it replaced.

The main point I wish to discuss, Mr. Chairman, is the manner in which Canada got sucked in during negotiations of the new grain agreement as a part of the Kennedy round tariff agreements reached at Geneva. Briefly, I believe it was the failure of our negotiators to correctly assess the situation at Geneva, and Canada's relationship to other signatories to the international wheat agreement, that led us part way toward our present situation. Further, I believe it was the emphasis placed on international tariff concessions which would benefit the commercial and industrial sector of the Canadian economy that led to Canadian agriculture being victimized. It is now obvious the former Minister of Trade and Commerce went, or sent his spokesmen, to Geneva primarily in the interests of eastern industry. The Canadian wheat producer was regarded as expendable. Let us look at the background.

The old international wheat agreement, the fifth such agreement, was in effect from 1962 until July 31, 1967. Under that agreement exports were priced between $1.625 and $2.025, United States funds, and imports were allotted and subscribed to. In late 1966, a crusade headed by the former minister of trade and commerce was started in order to gain a higher minimum price under a new and revitalized international agreement. Meanwhile, however, the so-called Kennedy round of tariff negotiations got under way at Geneva.

Mr. Pepin: This is old, talk about today.

Mr. Southam: Canada was "conned" or manoeuvred into accepting the idea of a general cereals agreement under the umbrella of the Kennedy round instead of a separate international wheat agreement. I believe the minister went along with the aim of a cereals agreement, not to help the grain producer, but in the hope that he would get industrial tariff concessions if he were agreeable.

It has since become abundantly clear that some countries, including formerly close allies among the other exporting nations, wanted access for their feed grains to the European Common Market more than they wanted a higher and stable world price for wheat. Hence, they wanted the general cereals agreement instead of a new international wheat agreement. The result was that Canada voted with the bare majority within the International Wheat Council in April of 1967 that scrapped the old I.W.A. in favour of a new instrument to be agreed upon later.

• (5:20 p.m.)

Nations who were signatories to the old I.W.A. were morally bound to observe its old price structure until such time as a new international agreement came into force. This meant that Canada, among other exporting nations, was going to be floating around in the first free market in wheat for 20 years, until such an agreement was concluded. The signatories to the old agreement were protected only by the moral obligation to observe the old pricing system, but no legal protection was available. At Geneva agreement was not reached on a general cereals arrangement. The best that could be done was a grain agreement to come into force on July 1, 1968, under which a minimum price for wheat would be set at $1.75 per bushel, U.S. hard winter wheat at Gulf of Mexico ports. This was equivalent to $1.95 No. 1 Northern at the Lakehead. The maximum price was to be $2.38½ on the same basis. The finally agreed price just happened to be a full 11 cents below Canada's bargaining price at Geneva.

It was understood that the exporting and importing nations would meet to decide the details of the new agreement. Some 52 nations met at Rome on July 12, 1967, to discuss a draft agreement along the lines of the decisions taken at Geneva. They met in the belief that the prices set out under the old I.W.A. would prevail by "gentleman's agreement" in the interim. But on July 13, the day after the conference opened, United States exporters broke through the old floor price with sales abroad. This effectively killed the myth of a gentleman's agreement as protection for the Canadian wheat producer.

There can be little doubt that Canada's negotiators were willing to sacrifice the tried and true pattern of the old international wheat agreements for a new system, and to leave Canadian wheat producers exposed to the perils of a free world market for a year in order to try to get more highly prized benefits for industry in other areas of the Kennedy round negotiations. It was claimed that there was nothing to fear from a period of free market—the world market was a seller's market, the old prices would remain in force under a gentleman's agreement, and Canada would reap great benefits in other areas of the economy. In fact the gentleman's agreement was no protection and the supposed seller's market quickly transformed itself into a buyer's market, a condition in which it has remained ever since.

Whatever benefits were wrung from the Kennedy round negotiations for Canadian industry were dearly paid for by Canadian wheat producers. Before the new agreement was even formulated the law of the jungle had returned to the world wheat market. Within five months, Canadian wheat was being sold 22 cents below the old prevailing price, resulting in a subsidy having to be paid by the taxpayers of Canada.

Last year the United States Secretary of Agriculture announced a target for wheat exports of 750 million bushels. He has recently announced the same or a higher target for this year. Last year's United States sales were the result of substantial price reductions. If the same amount is to be sold abroad this year, a year of glut and surplus, some way will have to be found effectively to reduce costs to the importer.

We all know that the disastrous plunge into a free market cost the Canadian taxpayer millions of dollars in subsidies necessary to protect a minimum price that was already supposed to be protected by a gentleman's agreement. It was the minister's only way out at the time. Before he introduced the subsidy, made necessary by his own blundering in tariff negotiations, he went to Washington to plead the gentleman's agreement. The Globe and Mail of September 16, 1967, summed up the success of this mission in an editorial headed "No Gentlemen Present."

Back last January the International Wheat Council predicted that wheat exports would again decline and that Canada would be the hardest hit of all exporting nations, a statement borne out by the latest D.B.S. export figures. But from the first days of the free world market in wheat right up to the present day when storage facilities are bulging with unsold wheat, old markets have gone and the picture is at its blackest and most confused. This government, in effect the same one as was in office previously, has not done one, single constructive thing to relieve the situation. We have had a succession of ministers of agriculture and of trade and commerce, but no action. The present picture is one of lower prices, tougher competition, lost markets, reduced exports and general uncertainty.

How did Canada get into this spot? What was our failure? Where did we go wrong? To answer those questions I believe we have to look at Canada's attitude at Geneva, at London and at Rome in 1966 and 1967. It is my belief that Canada went wrong right from the start in London when, at meetings of the Wheat Council she agreed, indeed voted for abandoning the old 5th World Wheat Agreement. At that time Canada should have insisted on the old agreement remaining in force until a new one was signed and operative or, failing that, should have pressed for conclusion of a 6th World Wheat Agreement, separate and distinct from any part of the Kennedy round agreements.

One of the best and most revealing pieces of reporting on the whole affair was done by Andrew Knight of London's authoritative Economist writing in Executive magazine of July, 1967. He accused the Canadian delegation of playing at brinkmanship in the wrong way and at the wrong time. He quoted a British spokesman at Geneva as saying "The 'Cans' are away playing brinkmen" as an explanation of the absence of the Canadian team at an important meeting.

Summing up the Kennedy round, Knight wrote:

—it was an achievement founded on sacrificing some of the grandest aims originally envisaged in the early days of the Kennedy round. The largest of these was the loss of a comprehensive cereals agreement.

This comprehensive cereals agreement was the card upon which Canada's negotiators had staked everything. Mr. Knight continued:

Over its head, Canada therefore found its main single reason for being at Geneva at all, whisked away. The six European Common Market countries and Britain fell in with America, and the Canadians were left high and dry.

I do not expect the present government, or the old or new ministers, to agree with Mr. Knight's assessment. But he was there simply as an unbiased and objective reporter. Just listen to one more observation that he made:

The plain facts seem to show that the Canadian delegation at Geneva played its cards badly in an extremely expensive game of poker. In the eyes of the urbane negotiators of the major grain importing countries—the Six, Britain, Japan—Canadian brinkmanship simply was not relevant to the crowd of technical disagreements to be cleared up if a comprehensive world cereals agreement was to survive.

And later:

—this was one sector of the Kennedy Round not suitable to poker tactics.

Mr. Knight wrote of the "intransigence," "brinkmanship" and "unreal claims" of Australia and Canada that had an unhappy effect in Geneva and forced both to give way in the end. He referred to the "fatal split of opinion" between the United States on the one hand and Canada, Australia and Argentina on the other. The United States, he claimed, was more interested in feed grain sales to the Common Market and bulk sales than in higher prices. This fatal split was soon exploited by the importers, Britain, Japan and the Six. From all evidence it is still being exploited today to the importers' advantage and the detriment of Canada.

Mr. Knight's view is not an isolated one or simply that of a European. The Winnipeg Tribune of January 17, 1968, noted:

It is unfortunately becoming clear that Canadian negotiators at Geneva last year, who professed not to be disturbed by the termination of the International Wheat Agreement, were badly misled.

The newspaper also noted that "there is little use in bemoaning the facts of life." With this I am in entire agreement. We must face the facts of life as they are today, the facts of life as they are in the world wheat market of today, not as they were or might have been.

What are the facts? Let us look only at one or two recent reports on wheat as they appear each Saturday in the Winnipeg Free Press under the heading, "Grain in Review." On September 28 last, the opening paragraph of the report read:

New export sales of wheat this week were again non-existent and some of our major customers of the past simply think that our prices are too high.

On October 5 last, the opening paragraph read:

This has been another disappointing week as far as export sales of wheat are concerned as importers are showing little interest currently in entering into commitments.

What about supplies? What about the crop? Despite adverse weather conditions and other factors, the Dominion Bureau of Statistics on September 15 last estimated the 1968 crop would be 627,927,000 bushels, 6 per cent above the previous year and 16 per cent above the ten year average. Of course in the interval we have had the problems of wet grain and of the movement of grain. I am not going to mention them now because I am sure the minister has heard enough about them, but in the last several months these problems can be said to have had their effect on the general economy of the country.

The United States Department of Agriculture recently estimated that world supplies of wheat would be about double the probable sales. These figures give us some conception of the magnitude of our problem. We are long on wheat and short on customers. This situation cannot await long and cumbersome discussions relating to the setting up of yet another governmental body to be charged with solving the wheat problem. We are in no position, and the hard pressed Canadian wheat producer is in no position either, to await more long range studies, reports from task forces and all the other clap-trap of modern Liberal governments. We need action quickly. We need action now. Let's not talk about fiddling while Rome burns, let us look at this government.

• (5:30 p.m.)

Japan is a traditional Canadian market for wheat. Last year Japan replaced Great Britain as the biggest commercial importer of wheat in the world.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Southam: I have only a few more remarks.

The Deputy Chairman: Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Southam: Thank you, Mr. Chairman and members of the committee.

Last year Japan replaced Great Britain as the biggest commercial importer of wheat in the world. As of last March 31 Japan had bought abroad 4.2 million tons of wheat. Last year Canada enjoyed 30.4 per cent of that huge market. The United States had 55.8 per cent and Australia had 13.8 per cent. But today both France and Argentina have cut themselves a big slice of the Japanese market. There are now five sellers where there used to be three. They used to be frozen out, but now they are in strong. It is plain they did this by price cutting, but the fact remains that they did it. They made sales and we did not.

It looks as though the two newcomers are in the Japanese wheat market to stay. The Japanese want it that way. They have adopted a national policy of acquiring a diversity of overseas suppliers, not only in respect of wheat but in respect of other products such as minerals and other raw materials. The Japanese have learned in recent years that they can get the best wheat for the best price if they shop for it. Canada's old, steady and easy markets are gone forever. That is the single most important fact of today's world of wheat.

[Mr. Southam.]

We are living in a world that has changed from 1966. The market has changed; tastes abroad have changed and the demands of old customers have changed. Unless we get with this change we will be left at the post. My suggestion to the Prime Minister and to the Ministers of Agriculture and Industry, Trade and Commerce is to treat this as an emergency. They should convene a special meeting to consider appropriate measures, whether they be subsidies, price-cutting, more generous credit terms or a combination of all these possible expedients. The vital thing is fast and decisive action.

I have no doubt from the way the minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce spoke a few weeks ago that he hopes to dazzle the house one day soon with an announcement of foreign sales of wheat. The Canadian wheat producer is not interested in any flash in the pan sale but in an assurance that major hurdles to marketing have been overcome.

Reference has been made recently to the fact that the task force has suggested, as one alternative to the overproduction of grain, that we eliminate $33\frac{1}{3}$ per cent or about $\frac{1}{3}$ of our wheat acreage in western Canada. This would amount to something like 10 million acres. I do not have to ask many questions or make many remarks to precipitate in the minds of hon. members the question as to what will be the alternative income of farmers in western Canada if we eliminate 10 million acres of wheat producing land in western Canada. I hope this is not going to be the policy of the government.

The other alternative suggested is that farmers get into feed grain production. We have a surplus of feed grain at the present time. If everyone got into the production of feed grain I wonder what would happen to that market. The wheat producers want assurance of massive and continuing sales in order that they will have some measure of stability and prosperity. If there is not some evidence that Canada has modernized her wheat marketing techniques, the Canadian wheat producer will be driven from the field and a large and valuable part of the Canadian economy will have been irretrievably damaged. Let us have more action and fewer promises from the government.

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I shall speak for only a few minutes because I am told that the house would like to pass this evening that section of the bill that deals with the establishment of a Department of Supply and Services.

I shall therefore comment briefly on some of the remarks made by my hon. colleagues. First of all, the members from Prince Edward-Hastings and Waterloo (Messrs. Hees and Saltsman) seem to hold diametrically opposed stands. The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings claims that the Department of Industry should never have existed, that it represented a total loss of $50 million.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Waterloo tells us that the Department of Industry should continue to exist as an independent department, because as separate from the Department of Trade and Commerce it is in a better position to contribute to industrial development. Contrary to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings, he blames us for not having spent enough in that field.

The two members therefore give the impression of being diametrically opposed to each other, but they are not, for they both ignore the same things. They ignore what the Department of Industry did since 1963—and this applies particularly to the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings—and what it will continue to do. This applies also to the hon. member for Waterloo. It will do more, and better, because of the fact of its coexistence, of its amalgamation with the Department of Trade and Commerce.

Therefore, although seemingly opposed, in fact the two hon. members have a point in common in that they ignore the same things.

I wish I had more time to point out today once more what the Department of Agriculture has done since 1963, recall the programs it enacted, and their carrying into effect but obviously my time is running short. However, I want to point out two factors, two things that the Department of Industry has accomplished: First, that Department has acquired an excellent knowledge of the existing Canadian industry, and has compiled data on each industrial sector.

Studies were made—some were mentioned earlier—on the chemical industry, the dairy industry, and so forth, and these studies are now the extremely useful source of data for government policy making.

I would also like to say a few words about the importance of co-operation between federal departments and industry, and in this respect also the Department of Industry has done a great deal, as I said yesterday, to strengthen co-operation between the government and industrial sectors.

There are for example, in various fields such as textiles, footwear, chemicals, plastics, etc., advisory committees which meet regularly and analyse the different situations. Once again, they represent an excellent source of information for the government.

I took part in a certain number of these meetings. One could gain some fringe benefits from those meetings. Very often, representatives of the private sector who attended the meetings had the chance of meeting one another, an opportunity which apparently they seldom had.

And very often, at a meeting with representatives of the government, the industrialists themselves would profit from these meetings. I could also talk of the new advisory committee which met recently. I could talk of the export committees, about sixty in number, which exist today. My objective would be to show the contribution the Department of Industry in bringing closer together the government and industrial sectors, one of its greatest achievements.

• (5:40 p.m.)

[English]

The hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour gave us a few items of his good philosophy. He told us about the tremendous potentiality of the west. I am aware of that potentiality having been the minister responsible for things like oil, gas, coal and water in my previous capacity, and as the minister now responsible for wheat I am very much aware of the tremendous importance of the western economy in our national economy. He told us about the need for freer trade with the United States in particular. I would like the hon. member to read tomorrow the following quotation from my notes: "The United States agreed—this is under the Kennedy round—to significantly reduce tariffs on more than $2 billion of Canadian exports in 1966 terms. The bulk of Canadian exports of foodstuffs and industrial materials to the United States will face very low tariffs or free entry. When the final reductions are made, over 60 per cent of our total current sales to the United States will be duty free."

That will be of comfort to the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pepin: This tremendous B.C. aggressiveness and intelligence will have ample occasion to demonstrate itself on U.S. markets,

California included. The hon. member also made the suggestion that we should very soon send a mission to the Pacific rim. I am looking into that. But as a "cash advance payment" I might use this occasion to say that I will be going to some countries of the Pacific after the Japan-Canada ministerial meeting in April. I suppose that a two-man mission, my deputy minister is also coming, is not as good as the kind of mission the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour had in mind, but this should be an indication of our interest in the Pacific as a trading area.

I had some intelligent comment to make at this point on the fact that it is very difficult for the Canadian government, in answering the numerous requests that are made on it, to establish priorities in trade matters. The moment somebody says that Latin-America is very important and the government agrees that a mission be sent there, somebody else mentions the tremendous importance of the Pacific rim and we all agree that we could send a mission there too. Somebody the other day was telling me that Germany is so tremendously rich that obviously we should have a mission there. The West Indies are very important also for us, and we should not neglect Europe or the United Kingdom which is still a very important market. And eastern Europe is also very, very important. China, obviously, is extremely important, and Russia should not be neglected either. Consequently, where do we go first? I think the conclusion might now be drawn that Canada is one of those countries which has an interest all over the world and consequently should be present everywhere. This does not solve the question of establishing priorities.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Ricard) and the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) said most interesting things about the textile industry. I can confirm that the study referred to is going on at present. It is an attempt to identify the sectors of the textile industry that are profitable, quite so, in order to promote their further growth and make them even more profitable. The study is also designed, unfortunately, to identify a number of sectors that are less profitable, and then, this is the problem: what are we to do with those sectors?

As far as I am concerned, I find the industrial readjustment principle contained in the automobile agreement and contained as well in the Kennedy Round agreements extremely sensible and human. The purpose of that study is precisely to determine whether it is possible to think in those terms also with regard to the less profitable sectors of the textile industry.

I hesitate to deal with those matters, because there are so many things to be said. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières mentioned a number of them in reply to the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe who had assumed that I knew all about it. One of the things that should be said is that even though governments are quite willing to take a human attitude toward the problems of industries, it might be detrimental to them to maintain plants and industries unable to survive and to prosper. Very often, it is a bad service to render an unsound industry to give it millions of dollars in order to deteriorate further or more decently, when we know full well that any day, it will have to close down and that other factors than imports play a very important role in the plight of some industries. I took the member for Saint-Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), to task earlier, because he did not emphasize enough the fact that imports are not the only factor responsible for the plight of a number of plants but that in many cases, those plants have not been modernized, do not have the kind of management they should have, because if they were well managed, they would not be in such a predicament.

As I said earlier. I would need much more time to look into every aspect of those problems.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to mention to the minister that I have nothing against the word "Bagot", but my constituency is called Saint-Hyacinthe.

Mr. Pepin: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, there were changes everywhere, which only proves that progress is with us.

I would have a few words to say also to the member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) who spoke in defence of the small industry. While listening to him, I happened to think that the kind of help he wanted us to give industry was likely to turn it into big industry. And then, of course, he would be the first to think that we are helping too much that big industry. This type of remarks is due perhaps to my somewhat strange character.

My department makes all its services available to the small industry and I could give a list of several things we can do for it. But there is no doubt that it is largely the big industry which takes advantage of my department's services.

As the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe) said, small industries are often located in underdeveloped areas. There is no doubt that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion will apply itself more directly than mine to the problems of at least some of those small businesses.

I might even say that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is especially—I do not say exclusively—responsible for the big industry, so that the government can get, through taxation, the money necessary to deal with underdeveloped areas.

The hon. member also mentioned the dangers or the negative effects of modernization. What I said earlier about the need for industrial rehabilitation applies. As there is retraining for individuals, there should also be some kind of retraining for industries.

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) is very concerned about the bilingual character of my department. I can assure him that most people mentioned: Messrs. Warren, Kniewasser, Scharzmann, Sénécal and Mundy, are all bilingual. In fact, I am proud to have a department that can work, at least at the upper level in both languages. Therefore, I can reassure the hon. member and all other French-speaking members in the house that if they have to deal with those senior officials, they can start the conversation in French and carry on in French.

The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Gleave) has raised a question which I find most interesting, to wit the confidential nature of certain government papers. That is, I believe, a controversial matter in the sense that certain papers may readily be made public while the same is not true of others.

I have here a list of the studies done by the department. Some have been made known to the organizations with which they had been undertaken, while others, for obvious reasons, were not distributed. Some interests are involved and even if we are democratically minded, such interest must be protected when, for example, publication of a document may cause economic disturbances which would not be in the best interests of the country.

I suggest that we must be practical, that we must distinguish between the two kinds and that we must act accordingly.

The hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Southam) has given us the background of the wheat situation. I simply envy him for having been able to prepare a historical outline as complete as the one he has offered us this afternoon. I would have preferred him to tell me what to do tomorrow. In any event, there will certainly be an opportunity for me tomorrow to tell what I intend to do.

I would like to take perhaps three minutes to answer the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) who brought up a discussion which we had started a few months ago and which, so far as I am concerned, interests me, and even grips my heart.

[English]

We could argue the case on financial grounds. We can ask whether one company can get more from civilian programs than from the defence programs of the department. What I said a few months ago in the house, and I quote it, is that "the Canadian industrialists who avail themselves of our programs might get as much from a civilian project as from a defence project". I still maintain that this is possible, and we will have an opportunity, when we study my estimates in the committee, to get down to details and to show that this is true.

• (5:50 p.m.)

However, I do not think that this is the essential difference between the point of view of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and my own. The real difference is on general ideas. I sympathize with parts of his philosophy, as I have said before. I am in favour also of a shift from the defence aspect to the civilian aspect, inasmuch as this is possible and this is done, too. I am as peaceful as he is, and sometimes perhaps more peaceful than he, at least in my approach to political matters. However, the difference between us is really more basic than that and I wish I had time to go into it. The basic difference is probably in our approach to defence and to foreign affairs. The real debate would consist in asking what form and what degree of involvement Canada should have in world affairs. We would have to start with this basic question in order to come to some kind of conclusion. Then, I would have to say many things about the purpose of the defence programs in my department. May I mention a few, en passant. The first is that the defence program is designed to give the best value for the Canadian defence dollar. However, if my hon. friend does not want Canada to spend any money on defence, that brings about an altogether different debate, as I have said. I assume in my argumentation that there is a need for Canadian defence equipment and that we should not have to buy all our defence material outside of Canada, most probably in the United States, and in this way emphasize our dependence, if it can be called that, on the United States.

The moment you say that Canada must have a defence program, you are confronted with a choice: Will you buy all the military equipment from outside Canada, will you make it here or will you do some of both. If you are going to have a defence program it would be silly not to take advantage of our own industrial capacity. The hon. member can see how basic the debate between us would be if we had time to go into it.

Mr. Broadbent: May I assume the minister would permit me to ask him a question? I was not sure whether he was implying that I was suggesting we had no defence need and therefore should scrap all our military purchases. I did not say that. I assume we have a defence requirement. Would the minister also agree that a study was done by his department which reached the conclusion that strictly on economic terms it would be advantageous for us to purchase the major part of our military equipment abroad in the competitive market?

Mr. Pepin: The matter is still more basic than that. I am thinking of the industrial development and of the advantages of a defence industry program.

I would like to say one more word on this subject. What can be classed as offensive equipment which Canada sells abroad? My officials say that it can be brought down to 10 per cent. A plane can be used for civilian purposes as well as military purposes. Are you going to exclude everything that could have a military implication? If so, I say you are in trouble. Already we have 15,000 Canadians working in this industry, and if you want to be categorical about these things, you will be in great trouble. I am sure the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby would be the last one to say that we should not export materials, minerals, or anything else that would have a military application. There is no end to the potential list. We then come to the question of who is the aggressor and who is not the aggressor, how do you define aggression, what is a defensive instrument, and what is an offensive weapon. These are philosophical debates which were very popular in the middle ages but I was hoping we would not get involved in them here tonight.

However, I love a challenge, and if the hon. member would like to debate these matters, I am ready to accept his invitation. I am afraid I do not have the time to find a platform; I leave that to him.

Clause agreed to.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I was hoping we could get on to the Department of Supply and Services. There would be no objection to doing so on our side.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We are satisfied to pass the clauses that make up part III of the bill.

Clauses 14 to 18 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, just a moment please. I do not even know what we are passing. Let me take a look.

The Chairman: We are dealing with the clauses in part III of the bill dealing with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

Clause 19 agreed to.

The Chairman: Is there agreement that clauses 20 to 40 should stand and that the committee turn to page 14, part V, namely the Department of Supply and Services.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

On clause 41—"Minister".

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I think the appropriate thing to do would be to call it six o'clock.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Speaker: It being six o'clock, the house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

At 6.03 p.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

GRAIN

BARLEY AND OATS—STATEMENT RESPECTING FINAL PAYMENT

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement regarding the final payments on barley and oats.

Producers delivered 27,538,577 bushels of oats and 81,592,536 bushels of barley to the Canadian Wheat Board in the 1967-68 crop year. The pool periods for oats and barley were closed on January 31 and February 14 respectively. The amounts of the final payments to be distributed are $4,800,024 for oats and $3,490,962 for barley. These are not payments by the government of Canada, but represent the net returns of the Canadian Wheat Board in the marketing of western Canadian oats and barley for the 1967-68 crop year.

The board will begin mailing the final payment cheques for oats today, and immediately after the completion of the oats payment the final payment cheques for barley will be distributed.

The final payments are being made on a grade basis as prescribed in the Canadian Wheat Board Act. The average final payment is 17.4 cents per bushel for oats and 4.3 cents per bushel for barley. While the level of these final payments is lower than the previous crop year, it should be noted that the initial payments for these grains were increased by 5 cents per bushel for oats and 10 cents per bushel for barley at the beginning of the 1967-68 crop year.

Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to table the statement being issued today in Winnipeg by the Canadian Wheat Board regarding these final payments.

The 1967-68 wheat pool account was closed on February 28 and the necessary accounting is now being completed. I expect to be able to make an announcement in about two weeks as to the level of the final wheat payments, when the board will be in a position to commence mailing the final payment cheques for wheat.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on the statement made by the minister my first reaction is one of pleasure on seeing hard earned cash going out to the farmers in western Canada. I will point out immediately that this money is the farmers' money being paid to them from the final sales of 27 million bushels of oats and 81 million bushels of barley. It is regrettable that the grain which sold the largest number of bushels should be the one bringing in the lowest payment—4.3 cents a bushel for the barley. The 17.4 cents on oats is a better payment but the total amount involved is small.

The recent report of the task force suggests we should be growing and marketing more barley and feed grain. I would only point out that there are 200 million bushels of barley still in storage. How can we justify taking nine million acres out of wheat this year and seeding them to barley and feed grains, when we have such a backlog in storage? Moreover, low final payments such as these will not encourage farmers to do as requested of them in the recent task force report.

So while initially we react with pleasure to see hard-earned cash being paid out to the farmers of western Canada at a time of particular need, we see little hope of the suggestions of the task force being carried out, especially having regard to the low payment on barley.

Mr. John Burton (Regina East): The low level of return on the 1967-68 crop will be extremely disappointing to the farmers of western Canada, though I might say it will not be entirely a surprise to them as they saw the crisis which was looming on the farm front before the government did.

The returns being provided at the present time and the level of prices are not nearly adequate to meet the needs of the agricultural economy. I think it ought to be emphasized once again that western Canada and the agricultural economy of that region face a crisis and that this crisis is bound to effect the national economy. Farm prices have been falling over the last two years while farm costs continue to rise. During the past year the index of farm costs has risen by some 5 per cent.

We can also expect that the wheat payment will be low. This I feel is the result of the abdication of responsibility by the federal government particularly during the period between the expiration of the international wheat agreement and the commencement of the new international grains arrangement—it was during this period that the grain crisis developed to the full extent which we are witnessing today.

The downward trend of grain prices is continuing into this year. The level of Winnipeg cash prices for oats presently ranges around 86 cents a bushel compared with an average of 92 cents a year ago. Prices for No. 2 C.W.-6 row Barley are in the area of $1.07 compared with $1.25 a year ago. This indicates that the situation is getting worse, yet we have seen little or nothing in the way of government action to deal with these problems.

In addition to the price factor, the farmers of western Canada have this year been faced with extremely difficult problems involving damp and tough grain. On many occasions my colleagues and other members of this house have endeavoured to bring the full impact of this crisis to the realization of the government, but the government has been slow in taking action and in developing initiatives. The farmers of western Canada are extremely disappointed by the ineffectiveness of government action over the past several months.

[Mr. Horner.]

The full impact of the crisis with respect to damp and tough grain will become more clearly known in the course of the next few weeks and will be entirely in line with the predictions made by the western agricultural organizations and by the farmers on the scene. Thus I urge the government, before it is too late, to take measures to deal with this crisis which is affecting all of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste want to rejoice with the western farmers and congratulate the members of that wonderful organization, the Canadian Wheat Board, because, as was said by the minister, the money does not come from the country or the government but solely from the Canadian Wheat Board which has accumulated it to make a last payment to the farmers.

Those who like me have had the privilege to read about the very difficult start experienced by the board, can rejoice today over its achievements. In fact, we notice that the western farmers are wise to support at all costs their co-operative because I have always considered the Canadian Wheat Board to be just that, and we can see today how profitable the work of this board has been for the western farmers.

Mr. Speaker, several hon. members seem to wonder why the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) is the spokesman for the board in this house? I think that I have found the answer and I want to pass it on to the house because several new members seem a little intrigued. We know that government money is not involved but rather the efforts of the Canadian Wheat Board to assist the farmers. I do not think that I am mistaken and if my memory serves me well, the former Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Winters) used to be in the past co-chairman or honorary chairman of the Canadian Wheat Board. I think it is a title which the Canadian Wheat Board has bestowed upon the Minister of Trade and Commerce and I should like to know whether the present minister is an honorary chairman of that board. I trust he is, because when making such statements in the house he seems to talk on behalf of the Canadian Wheat Board and I have the impression that the western farmers are happy to have him as an honorary chairman in view of the significance of that position.

Mr. Speaker, we are not jealous of the Westerners, but we, also, would like to be represented by an eastern agricultural products commission of which the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would be the co-chairman or the honorary chairman.

I ask him and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) to help us so that one day we shall get the same results as the western farmers.

PRIVATE BILLS

PERTH MUTUAL FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY—MOTION TO REFER DELAYED PETITION

Mr. Gérard Duquet (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, seconded by Mr. Groos, I have the honour to move:

That the petition of The Perth Mutual Fire Insurance Company, filed after the time limit specified by Standing Order 90, be referred to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Private Bills and Standing Orders, with the eleventh report of the Clerk of Petitions tabled in the house on Wednesday, February 26, 1969, so that the Committee may make the recommendations it shall deem necessary.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGED FAILURE OF GOVERNMENT TO COPE WITH UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the house under standing order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the urgent situation revealed in the unemployment statistics released today, showing 10.5 per cent unemployment for the Atlantic area, 8.4 per cent for Quebec, 6.6 per cent for British Columbia—6 per cent being the overall figure for the entire country—and the failure of the government to provide policies to cope with this situation, particularly its failure to provide alternative seasonal employment programs to take the place of the winter works program cancelled unilaterally by the government.

• (2:20 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker: Having considered the hon. member's notice of motion I can do no better than to refer him to the ruling of the Chair when a similar motion was presented by the hon. member for York South on January 16 last. In particular I refer hon. members to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Michener, made on March 23, 1959. On that occasion he said:

I have felt that the question of unemployment, which is a continuing one, can scarcely be brought forward under rule 26. The circumstance alleged by the hon. member for Essex East, namely a joint release by the Department of Labour and the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, scarcely alters the situation, in my opinion, to a point where the house should be asked to interrupt its ordinary business.

Under the circumstances I do not think it would be in order to put the hon. member's proposed motion to the house.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have no wish to dispute Your Honour's decision and, under the rules of the house, cannot do so. With great deference however I would ask Your Honour, in interpreting the standing orders in future, to give some thought to distinguishing what might be termed continuing problems. If a problem continues to exist for a certain period of time surely there comes a point in time when it reaches critical proportions.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In raising his point of order the hon. member himself has said that he cannot question the ruling of the Chair. I know what the hon. member has in mind and I can assure him I appreciate the fact that in some circumstances a continuing situation may reach a point where perhaps the general rule should be discarded. The situation might then be considered a matter of sudden emergency, to the extent that the motion should be allowed. As I say, I appreciate the point made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands. I assure him that it will always be one of the considerations taken into account by the Chair when similar motions are presented to the house.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REFERRAL OF OUTSTANDING ISSUES TO MEDIATION PROCEDURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question which relates to an answer he gave me yesterday. He said that both parties in the Post Office dispute, namely the Post Office and the union, have agreed to refer all outstanding issues to arbitration and that both sides have facilitated the waiver of delay. He said also that the agreement was to refer the outstanding issues, including of course the special one about lunch arrangements, but that the term "outstanding issues" is not restricted and would, he supposed, include all the issues which are raised by either side.

In view of the denial by the national president of the Letter Carriers Union that this is the case, and in view of his statement that in meetings over the weekend the union requested management to refer all relevant issues to arbitration, may I ask, considering the importance of this matter, whether the Prime Minister was inadvertently mistaken in the information he gave me. In view of its importance will he clarify this matter?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the statement the Leader of the Opposition refers to. The position of the department is that we are quite willing to proceed to adjudication of any and all issues to which the union might take exception. In fact, we are clearing the way for speedy adjudication of issues by waiving the intermediate steps. I think we have suggested to the union that we should take representative cases, instead of filing tens or hundreds of grievances that revolve around the same issue. To my knowledge, that has been discussed. We are quite prepared, under our contract, to proceed to adjudication of any outstanding issues.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I directed my question to the Prime Minister in view of the statement he made yesterday. If I may, I will pursue it with the Postmaster General, since he is in the house today. Do I understand the Postmaster General to say that all matters in dispute are being referred for third party consideration? The national president of the Letter Carriers Union has issued a public statement that this is not so, that only those grievances dealing with wash-up and travelling time were presented to the Public Service Staff Relations Board for adjudication. These are the only grievances on which management asked the union to facilitate the waiver of delay. A request for the reference of all other matters in dispute was made to the management of the Post Office over the weekend. Management officials flatly rejected this proposal. In the light of this statement by the national president of the Letter Carriers Union of Canada, Mr. Speaker, is the Postmaster General insisting that all matters in dispute are being expedited and referred for third party adjudication?

Mr. Kierans: I would certainly insist that, Mr. Speaker, on issues which in any way were responsible for or caused people to go out on strike are being proceeded with immediately to the fourth and final stage. There may have been a number of other issues during the two day discussions on Saturday and Sunday which the unions wanted to proceed with immediately. I will have to check that and find out what they were. I was concerned of course with the issues at stake in this walkout.

Mr. Stanfield: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. I think it is clear that the Postmaster General has inadvertently given the wrong impression to the house and the country, as did the Prime Minister yesterday. I said inadvertently, Mr. Speaker. In the light of the importance of this matter and avoiding the escalation of disputes as well as having all matters settled peacefully, without disruption of the service, would the Postmaster General not reconsider his refusal to have a mediator selected, so that possible halts in mail delivery may not recur as a result of disputes in other areas in which the union is seeking immediate third party arbitration?

Mr. Kierans: Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, the union lawyer presented grievances to the Staff Relations Board. To the best of my knowledge both sides are now busily engaged in preparing their case for the hearing before the board. I will call Mr. Decarie and find out if there are other issues he wants to proceed with. I will talk this over with him.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Postmaster General to make sure he is fully informed as to the state—

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Postmaster General. He is devoting much attention to staff relations. Would he also devote some attention to public relations and the service of the post office to the public who pay the bills.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister? In view of the unemployment statistics which have been released today showing the very heavy incidence of unemployment in Canada—10.5 per cent in the Atlantic area, 8.4 per cent in Quebec, 6.6 per cent in British Columbia and 6 per cent over the entire country—I want to ask the Prime Minister if the government intends to announce a program to provide employment opportunities as asked for by the Association of Mayors and Municipalities. If so, when does the Prime Minister expect to be able to make such a statement?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has asked me to question, or at least I question, the statistics which the hon. gentleman has now placed before the house on two occasions. The opening statement in the D.B.S. report says, "Total employment increased slightly since the last report a month ago." I think these facts should also be put on the record, that the rate of unemployment in October was 5 per cent, in November 4.9 per cent, in December 4.8 per cent, on January 18 it was 4.3 per cent and on February 15 it was 4.3 per cent, which indicates a trend towards the better.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the work force of the country has increased by 20,000 people this month. We have been able to find jobs for these people. In addition to that, in an emergency debate not too long ago the Prime Minister indicated that with the establishment of the new department of regional expansion, and increased acceleration of the manpower program, we intend to tackle the problem of unemployment on a full-time permanent basis, rather than with ad hoc temporary measures.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the figures I quoted were issued today by the government, and in view of the fact that the minister was merely quoting seasonally adjusted figures, and that the number of persons added to the labour force is not much consolation to those who are unemployed, may I ask him, since 6 per cent seems to be the usual figure for this season of the year for three years in succession, whether the government has now accepted 6 per cent as its goal for unemployment in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour just indicated, we have plans in the new department to attack this problem on a logical and total basis. That is why we have a Government Organization Act, and we hope the opposition will co-operate with us in getting this act through the house.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SHIPBUILDING

REQUEST FOR REPORT OF COMMITTEE CONSIDERING SHIPYARD EMPLOYMENT

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can the minister report at this time as to the deliberations of the committee, composed of persons from the shipbuilding industry and various government departments, which was set up to look into shipbuilding matters, with a view to alleviating the very heavy unemployment in the shipyards of the country?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): The committee will report in due course, Mr. Speaker.

PROCEDURE

REVIEW BY COMMITTEE OF STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton who is chairman of the Committee on Procedure. In light of the remarks made by Mr. Speaker would the hon. member consider reviewing the provisions of Standing Order 26, having in mind that the condition of unemployment may well be chronic during the term of office of this government?

[Translation]

FINANCE

REVIEW OF HIGH INTEREST RATES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Would he tell the house if the government intends to study the matter of interest rates, considering they are at their highest level in this century and, consequently, cannot attract foreign investments?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, not only does the question seem very general to me, but it should be asked of the Minister of Finance.

[English]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Inquiries of the Ministry

In view of the statement made by the minister last night when speaking in Hamilton, that the present shortage of doctors is only a myth, is this the reason that the health resources fund has been cut back?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): He was talking nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

GRAIN

PAYMENT OF SUBSIDY ON DRYING OPERATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. While the payments from the barley and oats pool will naturally be acceptable to farmers I would point out that the amount is negligible when regard is had to the tremendous cost of drying operations for damp wheat on the prairies. In view of this will the minister now see to it that there will be made available to the western farmers who need the drying apparatus, either through purchase or through rental, a payment of ten cents a bushel, either to the farmers directly or to those who provide the necessary service?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the house, as I did previously, that the reason the final payments are lower is because the initial payments were increased. That has to be taken into consideration. I think it is a rather worth-while point to make again.

With respect to drying facilities, the Minister of Agriculture said that we will soon have a report on the situation. We have already made cash money available to help farmers dry more than they had been drying on their farms, and I think we will wait and see what the situation is at the end of the month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: By the end of the month the situation will be even worse than it is now. Is consideration being given to paying farmers ten cents a bushel as an incentive for drying the wheat, and also as payment for the work that has come to them as a result of the untoward climatic conditions? That is the simple question.

Mr. Pepin: No, Mr. Speaker; but I find it rather worth mentioning that when the opposition attacks us on the rate of unemployment, the only thing it can offer is the suggestion that subsidies should be paid all down the line.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the hon. member for Mackenzie has a supplementary.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): In view of the fact that many farmers who have taken advantage of the emergency cash advances find the amount of money inadequate to dry all the grain they have, I would like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether consideration is being given to removing the lid on the amount that can be borrowed under that scheme?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have seen the report of January's survey on the situation, and the number of people who invoked lack of funds as an explanation of why they had not been drying more was very low. As I recall, it was 125 out of more than 1,000.

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): In view of the statement of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on the export of barley—and I do not expect an answer to this question today—would he look into the situation in which farmers are moving their grain on the C.P.R. in preference to the C.N.R. because they cannot get box cars on the C.N.R. to move the barley off their farms?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board has been co-operating with the railways as much as possible, constantly bringing to their attention that situation.

EXTERNAL AID

PROVISION OF FOOD THROUGH TRANSFER OF ARMAMENT FUNDS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Is consideration being given to the suggestion of a national body, the Canadian Catholic Conference, that 10 per cent of Canada's armaments expenditures be spent instead on such peace efforts as the provision of food for underdeveloped countries?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that this question that he is bringing to the attention of the house is very wide in scope, and should normally be answered by way of a statement on motions.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

PROSECUTION OF LETTER CARRIERS PARTICIPATING IN STRIKE

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Has the Public Service Staff Relations Board been asked to give the government leave to prosecute 57 letter carriers in nine cities for participating in the alleged illegal strike?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): This is before the Staff Relations Board, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Orlikow: Since the minister has indicated that the prosecutions will not likely be proceeded with, how does he justify the expenditure of thousands of dollars for the board to travel to these cities to hear the cases?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is an argument, not a question.

DELAY IN MAIL DELIVERIES

Mr. Lee Grills (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Postmaster General. While it may seem to be a trivial matter, I think if it is a recurring one it is of national importance. I have in my hand a letter from a government department postmarked Toronto, February 14. I received this letter at noon today, March 13. Is this the new efficient service?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking for an expression of opinion from the minister.

The hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster.

Mr. Grills: I have a supplementary question in respect of the mail service, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member might be allowed a supplementary.

Mr. Grills: Mr. Speaker, I should like to address this question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. It is in respect of a letter dated December 30 which was received by me on February 12. This is a delay of approximately six weeks. This letter originated in the Department of National Health and Welfare. I do not like to bring this up, but there must be something wrong. Perhaps they are short staffed, or—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Inquiries of the Ministry

"TIME" AND "READER'S DIGEST"—ALLEGED SPECIAL CONCESSIONS TO U.S. PUBLICATIONS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. Since it is the desire of the department of communications to promote a Canadian identity in the broadcasting media, would the department now consider assisting the creation of a Canadian identity through the written press by the elimination of special postal rate concessions granted to certain American publications such as Time magazine?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, we have already spent several days on this subject. I said there is no discrimination in favour of or against Time magazine and Reader's Digest. They pay exactly the same percentage costs as do other magazines in the magazine field.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TELEVISION INTERVIEWS IN AREA ADJACENT TO CHAMBER

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister in respect of the matter of television for the house, which he said yesterday would be reconsidered. Will the Prime Minister take into account the charges made about the distorted replay on television outside the house of the debates in the house, such charges having been made by that well known author of parliamentary procedure, the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens).

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Bell: Will the Prime Minister take into account the charges made by backbenchers? Whether they are bums or idiots, they have a role to play in parliament.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

PUBLIC SERVICE

THE QUEEN'S PRINTER—INQUIRY AS TO ABOLITION OF OFFICE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Since he told the house yesterday that nobody is now holding the office of Queen's Printer, could he say now clearly whether the incumbent has been deprived of his office or whether he has agreed to be transferred to another department?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member will note from the official report of the house that this question has already been asked, and it seems that it was answered.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might rephrase my question, because after reading hansard last night many things were still unclear in my mind.

May I ask the Prime Minister why the house has not been informed of that most important change, since the Queen's Printer was one of the few French-speaking deputy ministers in the Department of Defence Production and since he was deprived of his office without the house being told about it?

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question deals with the same matter.

I wonder if the Prime Minister, who is responsible for appointing deputy ministers in the public service, can tell the house how it can be that a deputy minister, namely the Queen's Printer, learned from another deputy minister that his position had been abolished.

Mr. Speaker: This is argumentative.

[English]

COMBINES

SUGGESTED INVESTIGATION OF INCREASED LUMBER PRICES

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. In view of the steadily worsening situation in respect of lumber prices and supply, which has seen all prices increase drastically and some prices more than double between February 1968 and February 1969, which is having a disastrous inflationary effect on housing costs particularly, and the stability of the construction industry generally, will the minister consider recommending that the Combines Investigation Branch investigate the lumber industry?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Director of Investigation and Research under the Combines Investigation Act maintains a scrutiny of all significant price movements, and in the event significant price movements indicate an offence under the Combines Investigation Act the Director has an obligation to prosecute or investigate under that act. Also the task force on housing—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Basford: Hon. members opposite do not seem interested in an answer. The task force on housing also made reference to certain practices in the housing industry, to which they wanted to draw our attention. My officials are communicating directly with the officials of the task force. So far as the general subject is concerned, if anyone has any evidence that increasing lumber prices are in violation of the Combines Investigation Act I would be happy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

THE PAS, MAN.—ADMINISTRATION OF HEALTH SERVICES

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Arising out of the reply of the minister on Monday last to the question of the hon. member for Churchill concerning the incident with regard to the health facilities for Indians at The Pas, Manitoba, would the minister say whether the lady administrator of the Indian health services was immediately and peremptorily removed from her post? If so, has the department conducted any investigation to ascertain whether this action was correct and fair?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Indian community there indicated they did not have confidence in the particular person to whom the hon. member refers. I believe I interpreted the representation of the hon. member for Churchill to be that he requested action be taken in this regard, in order that the picketing outside the health facility there would stop.

The government and officials of my department looked into the situation and came to the conclusion that the person in question should not turn up for work, as she no longer enjoyed the confidence of the Indian community. We are endeavouring to make other arrangements for her to serve the department elsewhere.

Mr. Woolliams: Don't put her in the Post Office.

Mr. Ritchie: Are the employees and officials of the health services branch at The Pas now under the control of the Indian band in question?

Mr. Munro: They did not ask this in respect of all officials. They asked that the community health worker be responsible to the Indian band. We said we would look into it, that we had no objection to it and would try to work it out.

AIRPORTS

EFFECT ON DORVAL AIRPORT OF LANDING RIGHTS IN TORONTO

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Considering the new policy announced by the Minister of Transport to the effect that several airlines will be granted landing rights in Toronto, can the Prime Minister give us the assurance that this new policy will in no way reduce the importance of the Dorval airport?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not see in what way this can be called a new policy, Mr. Speaker, and the importance of the airport in Dorval will in no way be reduced. I suggest that what might have such an effect would be the new international airport that we intend to build in the province of Quebec. Discussions on that matter are presently going on with the provincial authorities and I think that we shall be able to announce our decision in one or two weeks, at the most. As a matter of fact, our decision depends on consultations. We have had a great many consultations with the provincial authorities and we are about to make a decision on the basis of the final representations which we will be receiving from them.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether he is aware that the north shore has marked advantages—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORT RESPECTING GROCERY PRICES ON PRAIRIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct this question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Has the minister held meetings yet with the three responsible ministers from the prairie provinces in respect of the Batten report?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. I met with the attorney-general of the province of Saskatchewan some time ago, and he indicated that he was most anxious to arrange a meeting with his two provincial colleagues from Manitoba and Alberta, and with myself. He has now arranged a meeting for this coming Monday in Winnipeg to discuss various aspects of the Batten report.

GASOLINE—REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION IN ALBERTA

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Combines Investigation Branch concluded its study of the Alberta royal commission report on gasoline marketing and, if so, because of the national implications of this report will the minister make a statement to the house on motions?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): We have not yet finished considering it, Mr. Speaker.

WATER RESOURCES

SURVEY OF REQUIREMENTS

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I directed a question to the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in connection with a report released by the United States interior department. Perhaps I should repeat the question: Has the federal government undertaken a survey of our water resources and our water needs and, if so, when will a report to the house on these studies be made? I ask the question in view of the statement made by the United States interior department regarding the possible importation of water from Canada.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, studies in the area of the subject referred to by the hon. member are going on in many different ways, and there are studies of many different types. I cannot tell the hon. member whether these studies will result in the kind of report which I would offer to have tabled in the house.

Mr. Harding: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask, again, whether a specific study of Canada's water resources, and the possible export thereof, has been set up.

Mr. Lang: I think I have really answered that question, Mr. Speaker. Studies of various types in that area are going on.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL DOCTORS

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As he has stated that the shortage of doctors in the country is due to the rising trend toward specialization, has he any plans for reversing this trend, and has he discussed these plans with the provincial ministers of health?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would remind hon. members, as I attempted to do when a similar question was asked earlier, that questions cannot be asked in this way, relating to statements made outside the house.

Mr. Rynard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare whether he believes there is a shortage of medical manpower in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that he is asking for an expression of opinion. I would not think that the question as asked is in order.

Mr. Rynard: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

TRADE

BARLEY—DECREASE IN SHIPMENTS OVERSEAS

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the trend toward lower barley sales recently, can the minister explain why barley sales have been declining?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that the question as asked is argumentative.

[Mr. Lang.]

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

REPRESENTATIONS OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday last I directed a question to the Postmaster General, and he said he would look into the matter. I would like to know whether he now has an answer for me. My question was in relation to whether a decision had been reached in respect of representations made to the Deputy Postmaster General in mid-February on behalf of the postmasters of Canada.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister and myself have been engaged in negotiations. I will remind him of that question this afternoon.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the future Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

In view of the fact that, following a meeting many Canadians have set up retraining courses in political science with the result that they discovered the problems of economic disparity, could the minister assure the house that he is going to subsidize the Estates General in order to encourage them to carry on those political education courses?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.S.R. ABOUT RECOGNITION

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can report to the house on the meeting he had earlier in the week with the ambassador of the U.S.S.R. In particular, can he tell us whether he discussed with the ambassador anything in relation to this country's proposed recognition of the Peking government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe it would be unusual for me unilaterally to discuss the content of such discussions or such representations made at the demand of another country upon us. But I understand that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has obtained the consent of the embassy of the U.S.S.R. to indicate that we did discuss the general problem of China, with no more detail than that.

MAINLAND CHINA—EFFECT ON RECOGNITION OF BORDER CLASHES WITH U.S.S.R.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Having regard to the animosity, if not bitterness, between the U.S.S.R. and communist China today, have the border incidents that have taken place had any effect as a deterrent on the desire of the Canadian government to recognize communist China?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question of the recognition of the Peking regime is, I think, quite independent of these developments. We are not proposing to have relations with the Peking government because we agree with their philosophy or their actions; it is only in order to promote the cause of peace.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The eight or ten-man band to my right is very vocal today—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —even though they do not have their leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Seymour, here today. The question I asked, Mr. Speaker, was whether what is happening in the continent of Asia has had any effect on the rush on the part of the Canadian government to bring about recognition of communist China.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it has taken us a long, long time—many, many years—to get around to this point, and I do not think we should be deterred at this moment.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs can now tell the house when we can expect a decision to be made on the diplomatic recognition of mainland China.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we have had the first contacts between the Peking regime and ourselves. I expect the negotiations will be very long. I assure the right hon. member for Prince Albert that we shall show just as much patience as the Chinese.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They did not creep on their hands and knees.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT

ADVISORY COUNCIL TO FACILITATE DEVELOPMENT OF FILM INDUSTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State. In view of the hostility existing between the Canadian Film Development Corporation and the members of the film-making industry, as indicated by recent representations, will the Secretary of State encourage the appointment of an advisory council from members of the industry to provide a continuing point of contact for discussions with the C.F.D.C., designed to facilitate the development of a feature film industry in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that this very interesting question should be placed on the order paper.

Mr. Dinsdale: Ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I ask whether the Minister without Portfolio from Winnipeg South has tendered his resignation to the Prime Minister.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question—

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked a question, and there did not appear to be a response.

Mr. MacInnis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is indicating to me that I should get up on my feet. Perhaps he did not understand the question. I will repeat it.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the Prime Minister heard the question. He can see it in Hansard, if he did not hear it.

CANADA LABOUR (SAFETY) CODE

PROMULGATION OF RAILWAY REGULATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour supplementary to questions I have asked earlier in the session regarding the Canada Labour (Safety) Code. In view of the last statement the minister made, which was to the effect that the regulations would be promulgated industry by industry, can he tell me whether the regulations for the railway industry have yet been drafted?

Hon. Bryce S. Mackesey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the representations of the hon. member I asked the department to speed up the finalization of all these regulations. I would like to take the hon. member's question as notice and report more fully on Monday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that this legislation was passed over two years ago, and in view of the fact that we now have an activist minister, cannot we get a little more speed than we have had?

PUBLIC SERVICE

PUBLICATION OF REPORT ON BILINGUALISM

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Could he assure us that the report of the inquiry into bilingualism in the public service will come out in the spring of 1969, at the latest, as announced some time ago?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not understand what report of inquiry the hon. member is talking about, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fortin: I mean the report that deals with bilingualism in the public service.

NEWFOUNDLAND

RECOMMENDATION RESPECTING APPOINTMENT OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the term of office of the Lieutenant Governor of Newfoundland is due to expire shortly, has the provincial government made a recommendation to him and will an appointment be made shortly?

Mr. Speaker: I am not sure whether the question is in order. I would have to consult the precedents in order to decide, but I have some doubts about it.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

YUKON TERRITORY

REQUEST FOR ANNOUNCEMENT RESPECTING FORM OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the promise of the Prime Minister that a statement would be made before the end of 1968 and in view of several statements of the minister to the same effect, is the minister now in a position to make any announcement concerning governmental reform in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we are not ready yet to make a statement on that matter.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question for the minister. Can he give the house an indication of when he intends to make such an announcement?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: As soon as possible, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

[English]

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. For the benefit of hon. members, could the government house leader indicate the business for the rest of this week and for next week?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): As I indicated in last week's announcement, Mr. Speaker, it will be the government's intention to call for second reading tomorrow Bill C-178 dealing with the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act. Perhaps I could indicate in that regard that, as hon. members will have noted, there is a time limit in the bill of April 1. It would obviously be of value if the legislation could be brought into effect at the beginning of the fiscal year, and on that basis we would hope the bill could receive second reading tomorrow, be dealt with by the finance committee in the early part of next week, and then dealt with in final form by the house a week from tomorrow. If we make progress with that bill tomorrow we would move on to the report stage of Bill C-102, with regard to drug prices.

Both Monday and Tuesday of next week will be devoted to allotted days for the opposition.

On Wednesday we hope to call the report stage and third reading of Bill C-172 with regard to the Financial Administration Act, assuming that it has been reported back to the house in time by the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates. This will be followed by further consideration of the report stage of Bill C-102 on drug prices which will be continued on Thursday if it has not been completed on Wednesday.

Next Friday, as I have already indicated, we intend to call the report stage and third reading of Bill C-178 with regard to the Statute Law (Superannuation) Amendment Act, to be followed by second reading of Bill S-15.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed from Wednesday, March 12, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Wednesday clauses 20 to 40 had been allowed to stand, and part IV of the bill, clause 41, had been called.

On clause 41—"Minister".

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, a number of explanations have been given at various times concerning the new Department of Supply and Services, most recently at the time of the submission of the estimates of this department, and I believe that hon. members have a fairly comprehensive idea of the components which will make up the new department. However it may be useful at the outset if I take a few moments to recapitulate some of the points so that hon. members may have a clear and immediate picture of just what is planned.

The new Department of Supply and Services is, in the first instance, a combination of the present Department of Defence Production as well as of the various functions now performed by the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury. One is the supply side of the department, the other is the service side. In addition, several other responsibilities have been added because it appears to us that they fall within the general objective that we have in mind, which is to establish what is essentially a common services agency for all government departments.

I think perhaps hon. members who are familiar with the Glassco report on government reorganization will know that what we are proposing here is on all fours with what the Glassco commission recommended. Indeed, some of the steps leading up to the formation of the department have been taken already and the results of these have been satisfactory and beneficial by and large.

Briefly, to give the committee the elements making up the supply side of the department there is, as I have said, the Department of Defence Production, the bureau of public printing and stationery, the Queen's Printer, and the shipbuilding branch from the Department of Transport. These are the main elements making up the supply side of the department. We have therefore been designated in this legislation as the procurement agency for all government departments. In other words, from the previous arrangement where the Department of Defence Production was primarily concerned with only the Department of National Defence we are now moving to the point where we will be the purchasing and procurement agency for civilian departments of government as well.

This phasing in, if I may call it that, is going to take some time to complete. We have already assumed this purchasing responsibility for perhaps 60 to 70 per cent of the total requirements of the government in the purchasing field, and as a result of this legislation and the continuity of the plan already under way in time we will take on the full 100 per cent.

May I note in passing that the legislation, as hon. members will note, provides as well for the ability on the part of the minister to transfer back to specific agencies certain purchasing functions if it is deemed wise and desirable that these be retained on an individual basis. Of course I suppose the most obvious example of this would be purchasing for the National Gallery. This is a highly specialized type of buying and would not be the kind of thing that we would do through this common service agency.

Purchase of materiel is not in itself the totality of the picture. The Glassco commission recognized this and made recommendations which we are also implementing and for which this legislation provides, including materiel management. In other words, instead of merely buying the various things needed by the government and turning them over to individual departments it is the intention—and again a portion of this activity is already under way—that we will store this materiel in central warehouses in various parts of the country. Without going into all the details as to how this function is going to be carried out, I am sure hon. members will recognize the wisdom of ensuring that all these supplies are held at central points and that we can then distribute them to departments and agencies as they are needed.

Hon. members may be interested to know that in the Ottawa region, where we have already begun this effort, there is very substantial evidence that savings of the order of perhaps 20 per cent can be made through various efficiencies, through the capacity to buy in large quantities, and through the benefit of central purchasing. We are proceeding from this test establishment here in Ottawa to the point at which we shall have five or six central management houses across the country.

I touched on the fact that we have assumed responsibility—in fact we have had responsibility for some time—for the Bureau of Public Printing and Stationery. I was in the house a few days ago when questions were asked about the status of the Queen's Printer and it might be appropriate for me to explain what is planned in this connection. There is provision in this legislation for the retention of the Queen's Printer, and this is our intention. The difference is that he will now be a part of the over-all department rather than an offshoot of the department. The general heading will be the Bureau of Public Printing and Stationery but there will be a Queen's Printer, and an official of the department will be so named when the legislation we are considering has been passed by the house.

The nucleus of the service side of the department is the former office of the Comptroller of the Treasury. Those who have a considerable amount of experience in the house and in public affairs will know that the Comptroller is the official who at one time was called, I believe, the bookkeeper for the government. That was many years ago. His is primarily an accounting function, a cheque-issuing function. One of his most important responsibilities is the preparation and presentation of the public accounts. This work will now be performed on the service side of the new department in the same way it was done previously except, of course, that the title is being changed. Incidentally, I have been most impressed by the manner in which the Comptroller of the Treasury side has functioned. It is faced with an enormous task, one which is extremely complicated, but it is performed by many responsible members of the public service in a manner to which I should like to pay tribute today because, generally speaking, these people are not often in the limelight. The whole process of issuing pay cheques, family allowance cheques, old age pensions and a variety of other payments which go out from the government is within the responsibility of the Comptroller of the Treasury.

In addition to these services, which might be described as statutory or obligatory, there are a number of other services which are to be brought into this department and made available on an optional basis. Those I have outlined are provided for by law and we must perform them on behalf of the various departments of government. But again, in line with the Glassco concept of reorganization, and very much in line with my own belief in the necessity for the maximum degree of efficiency in the public service, we shall bring beneath the umbrella of the service side the Central Data Processing Bureau. This is becoming an increasingly important tool in good management and by making this central facility available to all departments we have already demonstrated, I think, that substantial savings can be achieved, in addition to providing other departments with a vital tool.

We also intend to assume responsibility—and I should note again than many of these functions have in fact already been transferred—for the bureau of management consulting services. It is perhaps not generally known that there is within the government service, and has been for some time, a group of talented and able people who perform for government departments the same kind of consultative services with regard to management as are carried out for private industry by consulting firms. This group is functioning and will continue to function on the operational basis to which I have referred. It is not obligatory that a department should use the services of this agency but I am happy to say there is a growing tendency to do so. We have carried out some useful and valuable work in this connection. Hon. members may have noticed details of a study having to do with the ages of various senior officials in the public service and pointing out problems which may develop within a short time when a large number of experienced personnel reach retirement age at virtually the same time. This is the work of the bureau of management consulting service.

Hon. members may also have noted that the bill provides for the designation of the Minister of Supply and Services as the Receiver General of Canada. This, again, is in line with the whole concept of centralization, within one department and under one minister, of responsibility not only for the paying out side, the distribution of money, but also for the receipt of public moneys and the preparation of accounts. By designating the Minister of Supply and Services as the Receiver General we arrive at a straight line proposition from the receipt of the moneys to their ultimate payment and the preparation of the accounts relating to them.

In addition to the services I have already outlined in connection with cheque issuing, the service side will also assume from the Comptroller of the Treasury responsibility for administration and accounting in connection with superannuation, employee benefit programs and a variety of similar services.

It might be useful at this point to discuss briefly the philosophy behind this department. I think it is reflected in the Glassco assessment that an organization whose responsibilities are as broad and whose objectives are as wide as those of government ought to have a common service element. It is evident that apart from the financial advantages of reorganization along these lines it was wasteful of the time of individual departments to find themselves obliged to perform these support services for themselves. This is the whole rationale behind what we are now proposing. I am satisfied, from what I have noted to date and from what has already been accomplished, that this is a very wise proposal and one which will be of considerable benefit not only in terms of dollars and cents, though this is important, but also because it will enable us to develop within a single department a pool of talent and expertise which will be available to the whole of the public service. This will discourage the proliferation of service branches in individual departments, none of which might be large enough or sufficiently equipped in itself to do the job required. From now on they will be able to ask this new department to provide them with service on a reasonable basis.

My own personal approach is that these departments will be clients of ours. This work is not something we can do on a casual basis without being concerned about timeliness or efficiency. Ours, quite properly, is a business-oriented department and the more it can be business-oriented the better. I cannot sufficiently emphasize my determination to ensure that our clients are happy.

In some of these cases, as I have said, we have statutory responsibility. The departments have no choice but to accept these services from us; they are not able to pick and choose. For this reason it is my intention to establish an advisory committee within the government service, probably at deputy minister level, so that there may be a group which will have an opportunity to pass judgment on the manner in which we are performing and which can let us know, if necessary, where we are falling down on the job. This group would also be able to make suggestions as to ways in which we could improve our service.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask a question at this point? I agree wholeheartedly with the general philosophy the minister is advancing about the advantages to be obtained by providing a central service carried out by people with special talent and expertise. However, the system might break down if there were too many demands on it at any one time and staff was not available to meet all the demands. I assume that some orders of priority will have to be established. But who is to determine the order of priority? Will it be the responsibility of the hon. gentleman?

• (3:20 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, to some degree it is. The position is that we will consult—in fact, we have already started consultations—with the different departments regarding the timing of bringing them under, if you like, our over-all umbrella. We have a chart, which I would be delighted to show the hon. member, indicating the progression up to 1971 or 1972, before we embrace them all. It is for precisely the reason that the hon. member mentioned that we have done it in this way. We do not want to bite off more than we can chew.

This is why we have also established a pilot project in terms of material management in Ottawa so that it is close to departmental headquarters. Various problems will be worked out at this level when they arise. So I assure the hon. member that it is not our intention to rush in in any way until we are sure that we have the capability and the personnel to do the job.

The other side of this is that as opposed to the obligatory services to which I have referred there are those which are optional to the department, such as data processing, management consultant services and that sort of service, and we are proposing to look closely at the wisdom of making a charge for this sort of thing. In the case of data processing, that is now being done. This assumes, if the department has to pay for it, that it will not be irresponsible in its request, first of all, and look for more than it needs; second, it also has the beneficial effect, it seems to me, of keeping the services personnel on their toes, because in effect they must compete with private interests in many instances. So that these are the two areas where we have managed to put in the kind of control that the hon. member mentions.

I should now like to move on quickly through the remainder of my comments. The department will have two deputy ministers. There will be a Deputy Minister of Supply and a Deputy Minister of Services. Their functions will be roughly along the lines I have mentioned, though again we have perhaps a unique development, in terms of a department, in that we have a common service element within the department. On the administrative and personnel sides there is one official in each of these categories who is responsible jointly to the two deputy ministers. So there are, if you like, parallel structures on the administrative and personnel sides. There are common administrative and common personnel services, and the heads of these two services are responsible to both deputy ministers.

I think I have covered most of the points in which hon. members may be interested. Not only will I be interested to hear hon. members' comments, but I shall be pleased to do what I can to answer any questions they may have.

Perhaps I might have the indulgence of the committee to make one final point, though I do not think it flows in sequence from the bill. I should like to discuss the Mint very briefly, and I ask hon. members whether they would agree, having gone through the clauses of the bill dealing with the Department of Supply and Services, to discuss the Mint immediately thereafter, since it is part of the responsibilities of the Minister of Supply and Services.

Mr. Stanfield: Has the minister really got a licence to print money?

Mr. Jamieson: I only wish I had. However, I must report that I have already been advised that there are no free samples.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, that has been denied.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That was the business you were in before you came here.

Mr. Jamieson: According to Lord Thomson. I am sure all hon. members are familiar with the story with regard to the Mint so I do not have to go into it in detail. It is proposed to establish the Mint as a Crown corporation in order to eliminate, among other things, the problem that arises from the need to move quickly to make up a coin shortage. At the present time the Mint must function in accordance with the normal provision of moneys through this house. The details are set out in the legislation, and again if there are any further questions hon. members may have I shall be more than pleased to answer them.

In summary, then, this is a very wise concept. It is virtually on all fours with the recommendation of the Glassco commission and brings into play many of his most important suggestions. The experience that we have had even in the last few months confirms the wisdom of the Glassco assessment, and I hope that as time goes by we will be able to prove it even more.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we all appreciate the very fine introduction by the minister of this new department. We have been able to follow his presentation very well. I am glad to learn that the government is adopting more of the Glassco commission's recommendations, and I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity of reminding the committee that one of the finest actions of the former Conservative government was to appoint the Glassco commission in 1958 or 1959. The commission published its report in 1962 and one of the suggestions it then made we are dealing with today. I am at a loss to know why it has taken so long to set up this new department. It is almost seven years since Glassco made this particular recommendation and I think it should have been adopted before now.

The Department of Defence Production has always been a misnomer, at least since the war. It was given that name in wartime but immediately following the war I think we should have changed the name. It has always been the department that has bought supplies for the government and provided services. However, I am very happy to hear it will now be called the Department of Supply and Services. I might say that I am sure it will be in the hands of a good minister and we look forward to good results under his direction.

This minister spoke of area warehouses, but I should like to point out one danger that may exist with warehouses scattered across the country. Although in theory this proposal may be all right I think the department will have to be very careful to see that these warehouses are not overstocked, with surplus supplies here and there, hither and yon. Any public corporation will tell you that warehousing is a very expensive operation, and it is quite conceivable that the savings the department is trying to make could quite easily be eaten away by poor management, overstocking and surplus supplies.

With regard to printing services, I was pleased to hear the minister say that there will be a Queen's Printer for Canada. However, clause 48, on page 18 of the bill, reads in this way:

> The minister may, by order, appoint an officer of the Department of Supply and Services to be the Queen's Printer for Canada—

The word is "may". We on this side of the house would feel far better if the clause read: "The minister shall". We would then know for sure that there is going to be a Queen's Printer for Canada. Some observations have been made in the house that the name of this position is going to disappear, so we would prefer the word "shall" to the word "may".

I now come to that part of the bill that I find hard to understand. Glassco made many recommendations and suggestions, but he did not suggest that certain finances and the Receiver General of Canada should be within the jurisdiction of the Department of Supply and Services. For the life of me I cannot understand why matters of finance such as those we have been discussing today come within the Department of Supply and Services. To me it is like the chairman of the board of a corporation going to the treasurer and saying, "I am sorry, but we are doing away with your job; we are putting the purchasing agent in charge of finances." I cast no reflection on the minister's ability but, for the life of me, I cannot figure out who dreamed up the idea of making the Department of Supply and Services responsible for finance. It will be ridiculous for Canadians to have to write to the Receiver General of Canada in care of the Department of Supply and Services. All citizens expect the Receiver General of Canada to be either the Minister of Finance or the Treasury Board myself. I think this function should have been left with the Department of Finance or Treasury Board.

I understand that the Office of Comptroller of the Treasury is being abolished, as recommended by the Glassco commission. This work is now to be undertaken in various departments of government, each of which will conduct its own pre-audit. Deputy ministers will be responsible for that. They will be fully responsible for approving all payments that Treasury Board will have to make. I understand that 5,400 people work in the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury. What is to happen to them if that department is abolished? Where will they be moved and what will be the physical arrangements to take care of them? These are some questions we should like to have answered.

The idea that all departments will have to pay for the services they use is excellent. In so many words the minister said: "We have decided to charge departments for services we render, whether in data processing, consultation or any other field." In that way the maximum use will be made of existing facilities and we shall have a minimum of waste and inefficiency.

Until I arrived in the house I did not know I was to speak on this bill. May I say to the minister that I think the over-all recommendations contained in the bill are good but, as I said, for the life of me I cannot understand why the Department of Supply and Services is to carry out the functions of the Receiver General of Canada. The Mint is also to be transferred to this department. It really ought to be under the Department of Finance. What is happening to the Department of Finance? What will be its functions? Will it be shot to pieces, as seems to be the case? At one time it was next in importance to the Department of Justice but now it is being riddled with holes and its importance is being diminished.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Now they will have time to dream up more taxes.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Now we can have two or three budgets a year instead of one.

Mr. Hales: Yes. I disagree with the minister's assertion that the recommendation with regard to the Mint came from the Glassco report. I do not think it made any such suggestion, nor did it say that the Receiver General of Canada ought to be the purchasing agent of Canada. I am sure that Glassco would have preferred to see this activity left to what might be termed the secretary-treasurer of the corporation of Canada.

Having made these remarks I shall finish by saying that we look forward to hearing further comments from other hon. members. When we examine the specific clauses of the bill I am sure hon. members on this side of the house will have a great deal to say about the proposed changes.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, as has already been noted, the establishment of this new department is the result of some of the recommendations of the Glassco report. As the hon. member for Wellington noted, that report was submitted to the government of Canada on October 1, 1962. Now, six years and several months later, we are finally establishing this department. In delaying so long in the establishment of the department the government has not displayed the efficiency that the commission recommended it ought to display.

The bill also provides for the appointment of two deputy ministers. This move may be justified by the proposed structure of the department and especially by the structure of the lower levels. Yet at first blush it could be questioned. Clause 44(2) on page 16 of the bill says in part:

> The Minister shall
> (a) investigate and develop services for increasing the efficiency and economy of the public service of Canada;

Many will wonder whether these aims can be achieved by using the means proposed. I am sympathetic to the idea of having adequate management at any particular level of departmental structure; yet I think the proliferation of officials in various positions needs to be watched. I do not say we should decrease the number of officials in the department, but we should make sure that we do not have more people in any department than are necessary to carry forward the objectives and policies of the government with respect to that department.

As the minister noted, the new department will be concerned with purchasing supplies and other related activities. It will also rationalize services to be made available to other government departments. I think we ought to examine some of the implications of this move and determine how it may affect the operations of government and government policy. Because of many new developments in government structures this move ought to be looked at carefully, although not necessarily along the lines suggested by the hon. member for Wellington. Primarily, the new Department of Supply and Services will deal with the purchasing of supplies and with various aspects of management and technical assistance to other departments. I understand that Treasury Board exercises financial control over government operations.

Finally, there is the Department of Finance which, after all, has the primary responsibility for fiscal and monetary policy and for the over-all direction of our economic affairs. As has been noted, the Department of Finance is to be relieved of some of its responsibilities. I do not think we should criticize this move. It seems to me that the Department of Finance is becoming a department responsible for economic affairs. This development is to be welcomed since we need a department or government agency that will be able to cope with our economic problems in the future.

I think that we need better co-ordination of government programs all the way along the line. Empire building within government departments must cease. Although we all concede that civil servants serve the government well, we must also remember that at present the Public service is a fragmented structure and ought to be co-ordinated into a homogeneous whole. Very often what is said by a government department is not said on behalf of the government as a whole. Because of fragmentation within the public service it is quite possible for the voice speaking on behalf of one government department to be in conflict with voices speaking for other government departments.

When the Glassco report recommended centralized purchasing services, it was looked upon in some quarters as a great new idea. This is old hat to those of us who have lived in the province of Saskatchewan. I would like to recount for a minute the history of the purchasing agency in Saskatchewan. It was established in 1944 when the C.C.F. assumed the reins of office in that province. One of the first steps taken by the present leader of the New Democratic Party when he became premier of the province of Saskatchewan was to establish an agency to purchase all supplies for the government. It did away with the situation which now exists federally and which the government of Canada is attempting to abolish. The existence of the purchasing agency in Saskatchewan over the past 25 years has saved the people of that province many millions of dollars.

If this plan is introduced at the federal level we must consider the circumstances that apply. The desirable and worth-while objectives of centralization are not achieved automatically. This depends on the effectiveness of the implementation and execution of the program. The theory that a government as a whole may be able to purchase 50 million pencils at a lower unit cost than one department can purchase 2 million pencils does not necessarily apply to the size of operation of the government of Canada. Other factors must be examined as well. One must not only take into account the saving of pennies on a particular improvement but also the costs in terms of the effect on implementation of programs. By centralizing the purchase of supplies $10,000 or $20,000 may be saved, but delays and red tape may cost much more in terms of the reduced effectiveness of programs.

I subscribe to many recommendations of the Glassco commission report but not to all. The Glassco commission report started off on the wrong premise by stating in effect that government is a necessary evil. I do not view government in that context, although I do not feel that government is automatically the best vehicle for all phases of life in our society. By starting off with a rather poor premise, the Glassco commission report reduced the effectiveness of some recommendations and approaches in the various aspects of its report.

The report correctly noted that in the year 1960 the government of Canada spent more than $1 billion for materials, supplies, equipment and service. It noted large inventories across Canada, the cost of keeping these inventories and the duplication of various services. In dealing with one aspect the commission concluded that warehousing and materials handling operations were unduly dispersed and fragmented. In 1960-61 the government operated 248 principal warehouses and 348 sub-stores located in 79 centres in Canada and abroad. Most of these were operated by civilian agencies, but in terms of dollar value an overwhelming proportion of the total inventory was held in 37 warehouses of the Canadian army, navy and air force.

The Glassco commission report recommended a central purchasing agency to serve civilian and military departments and agencies but not Crown corporations. The report recommended that the Department of Defence Production be absorbed in this process. It also recommended that the new department be given responsibility to develop in conjunction with user departments and agencies standard specifications for all appropriate items and to assume the function of the specifications board, including representation on the directorate of interservice departments for the Department of National Defence. There were other recommendations in the area of purchasing which I am sure the department will consider carefully.

The second major area of activity of the new department about which I am concerned is the rationalization of some services provided to some departments. This involves elements of managerial leadership and technical services required by government departments in order to carry on their operations in the most efficient manner. Leadership in this field is essential if Canada is to have the best possible government and if the people of Canada are to have respect for government. A commitment by the government is required with regard to the principle of political, economic and managerial planning. If this is not done the results of management operations will be indifferent and varied. The desired objectives will not be achieved by tinkering with the nuts and bolts of government structure. What is required is a basic commitment to the principles I have enunciated. Efficiency in the field of operations and management can be achieved. It is difficult to measure the results of such efficiency. A cost-benefit analysis or even more refined approaches must be used in gauging public programs. Private operations measure their performance on the principle of profit and loss. This is an important principle to bear in mind when considering public programs, and it is one of the items the Glassco commission did not consider sufficiently.

There is a great deal of misconception in Canada about the nature of government. Government effectiveness cannot be measured in the same way as the operations of a private corporation. There is cause for concern about some aspects of the establishment of the new department. The new department will involve the absorption of the Department of Defence Production. That department has done much good work in the past, but if the new department simply changes some labels this will not do any good.

We should also note the implications of this change in terms of the past operations of the Department of Defence Production. The Department was, by definition, concerned entirely with questions of military procurement. It seems to me it will be recognized in the future, as it has been in the past, that a large part of the purchases made by the new Department of Supply and Services will be made for essentially military purposes. Therefore I think we need to bear in mind that some of the concepts and approaches followed in purchasing supplies for military operations and for other military inventory will be somewhat different from those applying to the requirements for the civilian aspects of government which, after all, are more important to the every-day lives of Canadians.

We need to avoid the possibility that some of the concepts involved in military procurement will be carried over automatically into the operations of the new department because it seems to me that the implications and the effects on the operations of government as a whole might in some cases be poor. We should bear in mind the failures in performance of the old Department of Defence Production, as revealed in information given by the Auditor General in his annual reports. I had occasion to look at the reports with respect to the repair and refit of H.M.C.S. Bonaventure. The initial estimate for this mid-life refit was $8 million, yet according to the latest information available the final cost will be in the order of $13 million. Some of this increase certainly can be justified but it seems to me that a great deal of the unanticipated cost increase was due to poor management and poor techniques in terms of estimating the cost requirements. This has implications when the government is making policy decisions. If the government does not have accurate figures on cost estimates this can have a very detrimental effect on its over-all operations.

[Mr. Burton.]

A similar situation applies with respect to the development of the new hydrofoil ship. Here we have a case where initial estimates supplied to the Treasury Board indicated a cost of $9.1 million on an initial funding basis. It was recognized at the time that there would be certain other costs, but according to the most recent figures the final cost of this new vessel will be in the order of $50 million. Again, some of this increase in cost can be justified for a number of reasons, but it seems to me that there has been some very sloppy and very poor estimating. In fact, it places the government in a very difficult position when it finds it has authorized an expenditure on the basis of an initial estimate which has turned out to be faulty and inaccurate in the long run. Government today cannot operate on this sort of ad hoc, sloppy basis.

Some of the poor management involved in the case of the hydrofoil was illustrated in the report submitted on the fire which occurred during its development. Here we had a case where the government gave a contract to a private company to develop a new ship. It gave it complete responsibility and complete authority in developing it. The company also had to develop its own inspection system and provide its own firefighting services. It was paid for all these services on a costing basis, but when the fire occurred it turned out that the government had to assume complete responsibility for the cost of that fire. It seems to me that this indicates gross negligence and very poor management practices within government services. This is part of what needs to be corrected if we are to have effective government in Canada in the future, and I hope this is not the kind of efficiency we are going to get from the new department.

As I mentioned previously, the mechanical transfer of some of the operations of the Department of Defence Production to the new department will not solve the problem by itself. It seems to me it involves a commitment to a new order and action to implement commitments to new principles of managerial operations.

I could comment on other aspects of the operations of the Department of Supply and Services, including contracts and the policies to be followed in that respect, the matter of consultants and so on, but there are one or two problems I would like to deal with briefly. One of them is the question of "make or buy". This is a matter that very often comes under public discussion.

A good deal of political ideology and assertion are found in some of the statements made with respect to what governments should do in this regard. Some assert that everything should be left to unfettered free enterprise or private enterprise. They say that everything should be left to the private sector and automatically this will produce the supplies should be obtained from the private sector and automatically this will produce the greatest benefit for the government. It seems to me that this is certainly not the case.

In this regard we must view with some reservation the simple assertion of the Glassco commission, based on some studies it made, that wherever possible the government should buy. While I believe that private business can often do a job within our economy and society very efficiently and well, I certainly recognize that this is not necessarily and not always the case. So far as I am concerned, I am prepared to judge various situations on the basis of their merits and make decisions that will be in the interests of the economy and the country as a whole. I might give an example here with regard to the Saskatchewan government. In spite of the fact that certain supplies and various services were obtained internally within the government, it was often decided, because of a number of reasons, to buy other items rather than to make them. It seems to me that we need to take a pragmatic approach to this question and at all times keep in mind the public interest. The public interest does not always consist in making sure that certain private firms get the greatest possible amount of business. I also recognize that the Glassco commission made a valid point when it noted that in carrying on secondary activities within a government department the attention of officials can sometimes be diverted from the basic programs and purposes of the department.

One reason I doubt some of the advice of the Glassco commission in this regard, or some of its assertions about make or buy, was illustrated a few years ago when, following the 1964 change of government in the province of Saskatchewan, a royal commission on government administration was appointed. I certainly had a great deal of doubt about its conclusions in regard to make or buy inasmuch as it also concluded that the government should buy in all possible cases. I question the manner in which it accepted evidence as to the facts.

Mr. Jamieson: What year was that?

Mr. Burton: The report was submitted in 1965. On this point the royal commission accepted evidence very selectively. For instance, in the field of highway costs it noted that on a number of occasions it had been shown that the private sector could do the job cheaper than government crews, but when evidence was presented showing that certain government crews were able to do the job at a lower cost it dismissed that evidence as being irrelevant and not coming within its orbit of consideration.

I urge the judgments be made on the basis of merit in the light of all the factors. For example, on the question of highway cost, while I recognize this is a provincial matter I point out that the construction of highways may be cheaper using one method or the other, but if you rely entirely on one method, either on contracting out or doing the construction yourself, you may hold up the program. If you depend entirely on private contracts you may have instances where you cannot obtain bids. This involves various implications since, if you are then going to do the job yourself, you may have to assemble your own equipment at a great deal of cost, and certainly you are not going to assemble that equipment for one particular project.

Another point that came to light is that there is variability over time in the relative costs of doing various jobs or carrying out various functions by either public agencies or private agencies. It has been shown in a number of quarters that sometimes the job possibly can be done cheaper by a private than by a public concern, but that on other occasions it can be done on a cheaper basis by the public concern. I submit that this factor cannot be judged unless there is some government activity. For one thing, it is easier to keep the private sector honest when there is a certain level of public activity.

Highway construction which is a provincial activity, illustrates the point that unless some highway or road construction is carried on by public crews there is no yardstick by which to measure whether value is received from the private contractors whenever such jobs are undertaken by them. I believe that more objective consideration should be given to this point.

I should like to note as well, since the Canadian Commercial Corporation will come under the jurisdiction of the minister, that the purpose of this government agency is to arrange and manage contracts for Canadian goods on behalf of other national governments or international agencies. It is largely devoted to the export of material but does engage in other activities. It would seem to be the perfect starting point for carrying out the recommendations of the Watkins report that a government agency be set up to deal with Iron Curtain countries so that Canadian subsidiaries of United States firms would not have an excuse for not attempting to obtain contracts with these countries. They would deal directly with the Canadian Commercial Corporation which in turn would deal with the state trading agencies in some of these other countries.

I might deal with one other specific matter which will come under the jurisdiction of the minister having to do with moving and storage. This is a fairly important item within government operation because of the movement of government personnel throughout the country and because of various other requirements of the government. The minister will be aware that there have been some complaints concerning recent government policy and practice.

As I understand the matter, the federal government first instituted a new system of purchasing moving services at the start of 1969. Prior to that time civil servants who were being moved would obtain estimates from three moving companies acceptable to the government and would then make a choice concerning which firm they wished to move them. With the new system the employees' choice was taken away and the decision is made by the Department of National Defence in the case of service personnel or the Department of Defence Production in the case of all federal government employees as to who will receive the business. I understand that the business was supposed to be rotated among those carriers which met the government standard of equipment and service, as published in the government of Canada list of acceptable carriers.

The Chairman: I must interrupt the hon. member to advise him that his time has expired.

Mr. Burton: Mr. Chairman, may I have leave to conclude my remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Burton: Since the introduction of this new policy the government has switched and is now giving its business entirely to one particular van line, Atlas Van Lines. This van line originally published a lower tariff than did the other carriers in Canada. I might note it is my understanding that while Atlas Van Lines does meet the minimum federal government standards, its standards in terms of warehousing and equipment are not of the same high quality that is found among most other acceptable carriers. Since this van line published a lower tariff the other carriers have met its rates, but the latest information I have is that the federal government is still awarding all its moving business to the one company that was the first to cut rates.

There would seem to be some element of discrimination here. Although I cannot support this I have heard that Atlas Van Lines has undertaken this policy and approach on other occasions in an attempt to obtain business with the idea that once it had a corner on the market it would be free to start raising its rates again. I certainly hope the minister will take steps to ensure there is an equitable policy that will apply to the various van lines which are interested in this type of business.

In conclusion I might note that while there is a potential for improvement in government operations and services by the establishment of the new department, particularly in the area of the technical services referred to by the minister, I think we should take note of the fact that the simple transfer of functions in the area of purchases and supplies from other government departments and branches to this new department will not automatically bring about an improvement in government services. In fact, there are a good many questions which could be asked in this regard. I believe there will have to be a basic change in government policies and governmental approach to some of these questions before there is a real improvement in this aspect of government operations.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, this debate on Part V of Bill C-173 concerning the creation of a Department of Supply and Services makes us wonder whether the present problem will be solved merely because the name of the department will have been changed, even if it should offer increased services.

Mr. Chairman, I would not want to prolong this debate unduly, as the hon. members who spoke before me have already raised some points on which I intended to speak. In fact, the spokesman for the New Democratic party has given us a brilliant summary of the general philosophy of the Department of Supply and Services.

First of all, I would like to offer my sincere congratulations to the new Minister of Supply and Services. If he brings to his job the same vigour and spirit with which he introduced the bill, we shall, I think, have to commend him on his work when he tables his first annual report.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to prolong the debate unduly. I do wish to make some contribution to it, following in the minister's footsteps, and it is for that reason that I wish very humbly to draw his attention to a point which we of the Ralliement Créditiste consider of the utmost importance.

I hope he will be able to foretell all the consequences likely to follow the creation of the new department, in connection with as fundamental and as important a subject as bilingualism.

Mr. Chairman, Bill C-173 is broken down into 15 parts and involves several departments. Whether they relate to the Department of Fisheries and Forestry, to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or to the Department of Supply and Services, amazing provisions are to be found therein, and I do not so much blame the ministers as those who conceived and drafted this bill.

I do not understand why the very people who are planning to renovate the organization of Canada, to streamline it, to modernize it, to adapt it to the modern concepts of management, based on the guidelines and findings of the Glassco Royal Commission on Government Organization, did not think of incorporating to the bill provisions relating to bilingualism. That is the point on which I wanted to draw the minister's attention, and I shall give him only one example to illustrate what I mean.

On December 3 last, I put on the order paper question No. 936 which reads as follows:

Among the employees earning $17,000 or more per year—

Why that figure of $17,000 per year? Because, according to the administrative criteria of the government, civil servants become senior officials when they reach approximately that salary.

Among the employees earning $17,000 or more per year in the Department of Defence Production, how many are (a) Canadians whose mother tongue is French (b) Canadians whose mother tongue is English (c) others

Chinese, Japanese, Ukrainian, etc.

Here is the answer I have been given, and I quote:

(a) Four;
(b) Seventy-one;
(c) One;

Now that a new department is proposed, the Department of Supply and Services, my first question is the following: As far as bilingualism is concerned, will the same discrimination, unfairness and injustice prevail as in the former Department of Defence Production?

Mr. Chairman, the matter has the utmost importance. I do not wish to flout the minister, because I know he can cope with the situation and give us, at the end of the debate, some explanations or, at least, the assurance that he will have several bilingual counsels at his service. In any event, when I conclude my brief remarks, I could make a few suggestions, after which he could express his opinion.

Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the establishment of those new departments will only amount to a change of names. The administration is improved, and perhaps made more efficient and up-to-date, but there is no solution to the fundamental problem of the federal administration which on the whole is Anglo-Saxon and in which there are no qualified French Canadians since the opportunities are not the same for French-speaking and the English-speaking public servants.

And I will quote another example, Mr. Chairman, to show the seriousness of that problem. On November 21 last, I put on the order paper a question related to the Polymer Corporation Ltd., which then was under the jurisdiction of the Department of Defence Production. My question was identical to that which I quoted a moment ago, except that it concerned the Polymer Corporation Ltd. Here it is:

Among the employees earning $17,000 per year or more...how many are (a) Canadians whose mother tongue is French (b) Canadians whose mother tongue is English (c) others (d) bilingual?

Here is the answer which I received, and I quote:

(a) The mother tongue of 2.5 per cent of the employees is French.
(b) The mother tongue of 95 per cent of the employees is English.
(c) The mother tongue of 2.5 per cent of the employees is neither French nor English.
(d) 25.6 per cent of the employees are bilingual.

Mr. Chairman, it is unbelievable that the Polymer Corporation should have among its employees as many senior officials with a salary of $17,000 or more and whose mother tongue is neither French nor English than officials whose mother tongue is French.

As far as I am concerned, Mr. Chairman, to go to the bottom of it, I asked another kind of question about the same company, and I am going to quote the answer given. That takes the cake, as the Quebecers of the Lotbinière constituency would say. I therefore asked: For each of the proprietary Crown corporations, how many employees speak French only, how many speak English only and how many are bilingual?

For the Polymer Corporation, the answer was a very short one. I was told that none of the 2,744 employees of the Corporation spoke French only. There is no need to go on, because this is most provoking and is a clear indication of discrimination. But as I do not want to delay any further this debate, I want to tell the minister that we set very high hopes on the new concept of administration brought up in this bill and we agree on that. We approve this new department and the new practice it advocates in management, but we are very much concerned over the much talked-about question of bilingualism.

I have many more statistics to quote, but I should like to tell the other ministers concerned that nearly every department is facing the same problem.

Mr. Chairman, I know that the honourable minister who is suggesting this new department is among those best able to correct the injustice done to bilingualism.

I noticed that at the very beginning of his speech, he did not talk about bilingualism advisers. Will there be any in his department? If so, how many? Will courses be organized to provide a greater bilingual service? Will the ratio for bilingual officials earning $17,000 and over a year be more balanced than the one I mentioned, namely 4 against 71?

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the debate any further, but I must insist on that question of the utmost importance. I trust that the minister will be able to give us satisfaction in that respect.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, there is another matter which puzzles me very much, that of the Queen's Printer. Section 48 and the next ones provide that one of the deputy ministers shall be an officer of the new Department of Supply and Services, replacing the Department of Defence Production and posted to the Printing Bureau with the title of Queen's Printer.

• (4:20 p.m.)

The first problem I see is the following: if Canada is truly a sovereign and independent country, named Canada and not Great Britain or whatever you like, it seems to me out of date to still use in our legal texts such archaic expressions as "The Queen's".

Mr. Chairman, notwithstanding any respect due the United Kingdom, we could exclude from our legislation expressions reminiscent of a kind of colonialism out of fashion in our midst.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I believe that it would be advisable to strike out such expressions in our legislation, and I am surprised that while aiming at modernizing and updating the organization of the government in the light of 1969 concepts, we should persist in threading the beaten paths of colonialism. Therefore, we should not wonder why so many people are questioning the value of our legislation and the modernization of our government. For every step forward that we take, we take one backward; we move like a crab, which means that we are motionless. That is what our governments think.

My last remark is about the office of Queen's Printer. In the answer he gave on Monday or Tuesday to the hon. member for Prince Albert, the Prime Minister suggested that the position of Queen's Printer has now been vacant since December. It is very difficult to get information, but I would like to be enlightened on that subject. Is the office of Queen's Printer vacant or not? Who suggested to the Queen's Printer to resign, or did he resign on his own? In what department is Mr. Duhamel now working? We would like to know, to congratulate him on his new appointment.

In my opinion, it is fundamental that we be informed since there is every reason to believe, and I refer to the very remarks of the Prime Minister, that the Queen's Printer, Mr. Duhamel, was doing a fine job. He was one of the few French-speaking deputy ministers in the Department of Defence Production. Mr. Chairman, we doubt that the government sincerely wants to establish bilingualism since it downgrades the sole survivor of the French Canadians in that department.

That is why we nourish the hope, Mr. Chairman, that bilingualism will be a living, effective and accepted reality, not only for the minister, but also for government officials.

As for the new Department of Supply and Services setting an example for the others, so that the federal government can be really bilingual, the true image of Canada, since all of us here seem to want a bilingual Canada, it is up to us and the various departments.

[English]

Mr. Thomson: I want to put a question to the last speaker, if I may, Mr. Chairman. First of all, I should like to apologize for not being able to ask it in French; I hope to correct this before too long. My question is with regard to bilingualism in this or any other department. I did not quite understand whether the hon. member for Lotbinière wished this to happen automatically at the top level. It might not be possible to get bilingual people immediately who could do all the types of work necessary. What was the intention of the hon. member in this regard?

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for his question. It gives me the opportunity to show how important it is to establish bilingualism at every level of the government machine and within the departments.

I believe that if bilingualism is possible, we must establish it at every level of the government structure. To give but one example, having examined the questions on the order paper and the annual reports of the various undertakings of the Canadian government, I have come to the conclusion that bilingualism is not getting a fair treatment. In fact, the answers the government gave me regarding the Bank of Canada, the Industrial Development Bank, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, Eldorado Mining, COTC, the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and Polymer Ltd. indicate that 14.7 per cent only of the board directors are French-speaking against 85.3 per cent English-speaking.

You have only to compare those figures to the respective ratios of French-speaking or English-speaking Canadians to see that the federal administration does not reflect the true image of Canada. This is why I tell myself that if the government must reflect the true image of Canada it must do it at all levels. Does this answer the question of the hon. member?

[English]

Mr. Crouse: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the Minister of Defence Production as he outlined the setting up of the new department which will be called the Department of Supply and Services. It is heartening to note the manner in which the minister has taken on his new duties and, in true maritime fashion, is endeavouring to get his department shipshape. We look for great things from the minister—I am not sure whether I should call him the Minister of Defence Production or the Minister of Supply and Services—and I hope he will not let us down.

The prime intent in the drafting of all legislation, is to bring greater efficiency to government services. The same is true in the case of this legislation, and according to the information which has been supplied to the Public Accounts committee by the Auditor General, it is high time that some attempt was made to procure and to purchase requirements in a more efficient manner.

In clause 46 (3) at page 17 of the bill it is stated:

> The minister shall provide, on the request of a department, any or all of the following services, namely:
> (a) management consulting services;
> (b) data processing services;
> (c) accounting services;
> (d) auditing services;
> (e) financial services; and
> (f) such other services of any kind as are within the duties, powers and functions of the Minister under this Part.

Like my colleague, the hon. member for Wellington, I cannot help but wonder about the power which will be vested in the minister of this new department. I personally believe that the office of the Receiver General, for example, should have been retained under the Minister of Finance, not that I have any doubts about the ability of the present Minister of Defence Production but because it seems to me that the duties of the Receiver General go well together with finance, somewhat like fish and chips. I believe that greater government efficiency could be achieved if these two departments were kept together.

The same rule of thumb applies to the auditing services which will now come under the Department of Supply and Services. Quite frankly, when the department came under the office of the Comptroller of the Treasury, a heavy responsibility was put on the Auditor General. But I believe that the change proposed in this legislation will lay even greater responsibilities on the Auditor General and his staff. As a result it will be necessary to provide more funds for the enlargement of the Auditor General's office and staff so that he will be in a position to carry out the new and heavier duties which will be imposed upon him.

I note with interest that the new department will have two deputies, the Deputy Minister of Supply and the Deputy Minister of Services. I do not know, of course, where this proposal came from but I wish to register my strong objection to this course and to this part of the legislation. In maritime terms, the minister is the captain of the ship and, normally, for good operational efficiency a ship has only one captain and only one mate. It has been my experience that whenever there is a division of authority there is always a danger that nothing will be done. If the captain could always be on watch the mate would do his bidding, but I know that the minister, coming from Newfoundland, will realize that no man can stay on watch for 24 hours. He has to turn in sometimes, and when he turns in he is not watching what is going on, so that just about anything can happen. After all, this new department is really only a revision of the old Department of Defence Production with some new duties added. From the information provided to us by the Auditor General it seems to me that we have already had too much division of authority in this department, and a study of the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee would indicate that a tightening up of the procedures that are followed is long overdue.

Mr. Baldwin: Maybe they have a pilot for the port side and a pilot for the starboard side.

• (4:30 p.m.)

Mr. Crouse: I do not know if that is correct but I believe that this aspect of the legislation should receive a second look from the minister. There is a tendency to say: Let George do it. One deputy minister may well look to another, thinking he will do the work, and as a result nothing may be done.

The refitting of the Bonaventure is an example of what can happen. Recently we examined this affair in the Public Accounts Committee where we learned that improper estimates, poor supervision, insufficient inspection, slipshod purchasing regulations and improperly drawn contracts had led to an escalation in the estimated cost of refitting from $5 million originally to somewhere in the vicinity of $12½ million.

The lax management practices revealed in connection with this project have been paralleled only by what took place in connection with the hydrofoil as disclosed in further evidence before the committee. Here was a highly sophisticated defence ship planned by the National Research Council for use by the navy at an estimated cost of $9 million. To the best of my knowledge, the National Research Council, the Department of Defence Production and the Department of National Defence all had a hand in the development of this ship. But in my opinion there was no single, real authority in control. The estimated cost, at the beginning, was $9 million. To date the hydrofoil has cost more than $53 million, and there are still grave doubts about the ability of this vessel to perform satisfactorily as an operational unit.

Further evidence of what happens when there is no one in real authority was placed before the Public Accounts Committee this morning, and I refer to this point because I believe it to be an important one. I do not want to see the minister start out on a voyage with two mates when I believe one will do. We were told that the contract for this ship was given to de Havilland; this company was to have full responsibility for the design, development, planning, inspection and delivery of the ship—full responsibility for the entire project. A fire broke out at a time when there were no officials from the Department of National Defence on board. They were not notified that tests were to be carried out. The fire cost somewhere in the neighbourhood of $6.5 million. We learned there were no government inspectors on this project, and we were told none were required, apparently because de Havilland had assumed full responsibility. Nevertheless, when it came to paying the bills it was not de Havilland that was required to pay the cost of its own incompetence in failing to provide proper inspection. By some strange alchemy which I cannot understand, the cost of this fire was placed on the backs of Canadian taxpayers. Mismanagement of this type calls for a tightening up in procedures, and this is why I question at least one aspect of the legislation before us. If we endorse it we may find ourselves going off on two different tangents.

After all, Mr. Chairman, what is supply? What are services? Who will be responsible for these services? These questions are not clearly answered in the legislation and I believe they require more searching study.

Certain clauses of this bill give the minister vast powers. I suggest he take advantage of them to call for a quarterly review of all national research projects to ensure that we are not undertaking in Canada work on scientific developments which has already been carried out and perfected in other countries. Today, improvements take place so rapidly that it is possible to spend money researching projects which are already obsolete as a result of technical advances in other areas. This seems to have been the case in connection with our defence ship, the hydrofoil Bras d'Or, named after the area in which the principle was perfected more than 60 years ago on the Bras d'Or lakes.

The Bras d'Or displaces 200 tons and is 100 feet long. But the Americans already have hydrofoils in service of far greater tonnage and dimensions, specifically one named the Plainview which is 212 feet long and displaces 300 tons. I submit that national research projects should be studied by the advisory council which the minister proposes to set up as part of the machinery of this new department. If this course is followed there will, hopefully, be better control exercised over future projects of this sort and, of equal importance, better control over expenditures made in connection with these developments.

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, earlier I listened with a great deal of attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Lotbinière on the bill under consideration. I admire his conjuring ability which made it possible for him to relate his remarks to the bill without being called to order by the chairman. I hope that for a few minutes, the chairman will show towards me the same leniency.

I fully agree with the hon. member for Lotbinière when he says that we, French Canadians, are not properly represented in the departments. However, I do not agree with his conclusions which, in my opinion, weaken his argument.

If we follow his thinking French Canadians who represent about 30 per cent of the Canadian people, should hold 30 per cent of the well-paid jobs in the public service. However, the hon. member for Lotbinière should not mention discrimination too often and too loud because I do not think that it is mainly a matter of discrimination under the circumstances.

I should like to tell the hon. member for Lotbinière very briefly and as kindly as possible because I know that he is trying, as we do, to get results and that deep down he would not like it—that we should not make a political bogey of bilingualism, which would of course take away the merits of his argument.

I admit that statistics are sometimes surprising in certain areas of the public service. This is a fact. However the hon. member for Lotbinière should tell the whole truth and recognize that if that was true 100, 50, 25 and even 15 years ago, it is no longer the case today. Let us admit at least that the government has taken steps to alleviate the situation and I shall point out to the hon. member for Lotbinière that we cannot reasonably expect a situation which has been so deplorable for a century, to disappear in two, three or even five years.

This is the work of a whole generation and if I wanted to be very mean I would say to the hon. member for Lotbinière "doctor heal thyself" because, among the hon. members of the Ralliement Créditiste who are calling out for bilingualism, to my knowledge at least ten of them are not bilingual. Still, they are members of parliament—

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Mongrain: —who should grant to the others what they would have the others grant them.

• (4:40 p.m.)

[English]

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to see that my remarks interested the hon. member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Mongrain) to that extent. Personally, I am also very pleased to hear his obliging remarks and I hope he will believe me when I say that no prejudice is intended to anyone.

However, I refuse to accept, Mr. Chairman—and this to my mind is a point of order—the fact that the hon. member for Trois-Rivières says that I do not act according to what I say in the sense that at least ten members of the Ralliement Créditiste are not bilingual; if he went around his own party he would see that the proportion there of unilingual members is perhaps even greater. Nor can I accept his assertion, Mr. Chairman, which I find more serious, that the situation has existed for a 100 years.

If, in a 100 years, people had not obtained justice, they would have risen and then bilingualism—

[English]

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member for Trois-Rivières.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Mr. Chairman, I notice that the hon. member for Lotbinière is thin-skinned today because I tried to tell him that in as friendly a fashion as possible, by teasing him. I should like to point out to him that it is possible that in this house some hon. members are not bilingual, but unlike those of whom I am now speaking, they are not clamouring for bilingualism, accusing those who are not bilingual of discrimination. That is the difference. Now, I continue my remarks.

Mr. Chairman, in the last 5, 6, 7, 8 or 10 years, the federal government has made a marked effort, especially in the last three or four years, to promote bilingualism. I feel that when bilingualism is being discussed and it is demanded that a clause be added to all the bills specifying that a certain percentage of bilingual employees is a must, that is where there is discrimination, and dishonesty, because of the circumstances.

The government has set up language schools.

It grants bonuses to bilingual public servants and has appointed superintendents whose responsibility it is to supervise the way this principle of bilingualism is followed in all departments.

I repeat that the implementation of that policy takes time. I assume the hon. member for Lotbinière would not call for the dismissal by the government of all non-bilingual employees, for it would certainly be inhuman. The change will probably take place over a certain number of years.

I could moreover tell the hon. member for Lotbinière why we do not find in the higher spheres of the public service the number of bilingual or French-speaking public servants we would like to have there.

He knows as well as I do—since he is a learned man—that for a 100 years, our institutions of secondary education trained their pupils for the priesthood, or to become notaries or lawyers and neglected to turn out economists, sociologists, engineers, in brief, experts, while during that same century, the Anglo-Saxons in this country, either through immigration or otherwise, increased in their midst the number of such experts who simply monopolized the positions. And all of a sudden, we realized that they made up the great majority.

Cursing them or accusing them of discrimination will not solve the problem but we should rather qualify ourselves properly and apply for such coveted employment. The hon. member for Lotbinière knows that Quebec needs specialized technicians and therefore wants to keep them at home.

Moreover, the Anglo-Saxons are perhaps not by nature too anxious to emigrate, but the fact remains that more and more of them are coming over every year as the hon. member for Lotbinière knows.

He knows, for instance, that the general manager of the C.B.C. is a French Canadian. He knows that Air Canada has a French-speaking president and that all the other employees are bilingual. He knows, also, that the Chief of Staff of the Canadian Forces as well as a number of deputy ministers are French-speaking.

The hon. member is concerned about the problem of the library at the Printing Bureau. Maybe bilingualism is not the only problem in this connection.

Since I am not permitted to elaborate any further on the subject, I shall let the minister do so in due time. However, to say this problem is merely a matter of bilingualism is tantamount to fanaticism, Mr. Chairman.

May I suggest to the hon. member for Lotbinière—since we both agree on the principle that there are not enough French-speaking Canadians in key positions and since we want to settle the matter—that we should put an end to idle talk and to charges of discrimination where others are concerned. Let us simply do as I am doing in my own riding.

When, for instance, there happens to be a top position vacant in the public service, I let my riding know, I advertise it by radio, I mention it in my lectures and I contact personally those in my riding or area who seem to me qualified and ask them to apply and sit for the examinations. Quite often, I can take pride in the fact that people answer, apply and succeed.

The next few years will see more improvement in this field then we have witnessed in the past 100 years. I must admit there is some kind of discrimination, today. We find it among a certain type of individuals. In my opinion, however, it is rather a cave of conflicting personalities. There is no such feeling at the government level which is responsible for these top positions. Of this, it has given signal proof for the past three or four years, to the point of getting blamed, in Anglo-Saxon circles, for opening too wide its doors to the French-Canadian side.

It was only fair for me, Mr. Chairman, to put the record straight in the house.

[English]

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I should like to congratulate the minister on his very brief outline of the bill. If the bill were as simple as his explanation of it I am sure there would be no questions on either side of the house in regard to the implementation of its provisions so far as the proposed Department of Supply and Services is concerned.

In the short time I have I should like to refer very briefly to supply and services as they pertain to consulting services and the types of contracts that are let which, as the minister suggested, will be under his supervision. I noted from the minister's remarks that these new services were optional. The minister assumes responsibility for management consulting services for individual departments.

Sometimes questions arise not only in the minds of members of parliament but also among the vast majority of the public in regard to the letting of contracts for government services, including both Crown corporations and individual departments. I should like to point out that I have six questions on the order paper dating back to December 3. I should like to refer to one in particular as I believe reference to it will outline the situation generally. I asked the government the following question:

> What are the government regulations with regards to the hiring of consultants, including advertising consultants, in order to assist government departments i.e., in the areas of planning, studies, feasibility reports, economic analysis, legal assistance, architectural advice, etc.?

The question then goes on to deal with other matters. If this question and the many others I have put on the order paper had been answered by now, many of the disappointments I have at the moment would have been removed. There appears to be some reason for not disclosing advice given by consultants generally, and I hope that when the minister replies he will relieve any fears I have about the hiring of such consultants.

Tenders for construction contracts are invited by public advertisement. Tenders are invited for purchase or service contracts by public advertisement, or a representative list or lists of suppliers is submitted. The intent of the pertinent regulations is not clear. It is bad practice for departments of government to choose consultants or other outside professional people who will be of service to that department from a preferred list. Also, there should be no preferred list of suppliers of any other services. I do not think that management consultant firms on the proposed list ought to be employed to the exclusion of other, similar firms. Many suppliers or firms of consultants will go to almost any lengths to be put on a preferred list. What bothers many in this house is that by employing firms on preferred lists the government may be indulging in political patronage, something we do not like to see. In fact, the preferred list could lead directly to political patronage.

Wherever possible I submit that Crown corporations should be included under this department as under the present regulations it is provided that these corporations may be included, but not necessarily. In advertising for tenders for any job the government should not be guided by any firms that may be on a preferred list. Suppliers of every service ought to be employed on their merits and not on the ground of political patronage. I hope the minister will clarify this matter later. Very often when a department retains a favoured consultant it is found that the consultant's report contains exactly what departmental officials wish to see. I suggest that in any democratic process this sort of thing is bad.

Some time ago the hon. member for Fundy-Royal asked in the house whether the government had considered implementing reforms similar to those applied in Sweden in this field. The recommendations and findings of consulting firms are not always made available to members of parliament, and this is bad. I agree that in special instances it is not in the public interest for such recommendations or findings to be divulged; yet I cannot help feeling that withholding such information is undemocratic. Speaking in the house on February 17 of this year the President of the Treasury Board said in part, as reported at page 5631 of Hansard:

> There are a number of instances in which investigations are sought, in which proposals are asked for or information is sought, which it would not be in the public interest to disclose.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

Many reports affecting government departments and operations are being brought down by consulting firms and not being made available to members of this house. We should see those reports if we are to do an intelligent job in making suggestions to the government. I submit it is not our democratic way of government to refuse hon. members access to such information.

In this year's budget the government has allocated about $397 million, compared with $329 million last year, for professional and special services, which no doubt would include consultants' services. Clearly, we are to spend more on consultants this year. We are well aware that the consulting field in this country is dominated by United States personnel and management techniques. The Glassco commission suggested that when the government employs consulting firms it ought to make sure that, wherever possible, Canadian consulting firms are employed. I was pleased to hear the minister say that an advisory committee would look into the use of the services bureau. That is a step in the right direction, and there will be little opposition to that from this corner of the house.

The Chairman: Order, please. The time being five o'clock shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again later this day?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Kamloops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand)—Television—Kamloops, British Columbia—Request for alternate service; the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. MacInnis)—Income Tax—Deduction for babysitting service; the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath)—Fisheries—Seals—Report alleging fraudulent film presentation of killing methods.

The time being five o'clock the house will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

PRIVATE BILLS

LONDON AND MIDLAND GENERAL INSURANCE COMPANY

The house resumed, from Thursday, January 16, consideration in committee of Bill C-101, respecting London and Midland General Insurance Company—Mr. Lind—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: When the committee rose on Thursday, January 16, clause 1 of the bill was under consideration.

On clause 1—Change of name.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, someone asked me the other day what the disposition of the bill concerning London and Midland General Insurance Company would be. I suggested there was an easy solution to the problem that has confronted that company in the past and may confront it in years to come, a solution that is within the purview of the sponsor of the bill. I wish to know whether he has conveyed certain information to the Avco Company or to Mr. H. P. Paterno, president of London and Midland General Insurance Company. A number of hon. members oppose the change of name, being of the opinion that the company will be United States owned and that Canadians will not have the opportunity of controlling it should they so desire.

• (5:00 p.m.)

We have gone into the reason advanced for the change before, and I disagree entirely. As I have indicated on previous occasions, I disagree with the contention of the sponsor of the bill that the company has lost money and wants to change its name because it is similar to that of a British insurance company. I indicated that the business of this company is increasing under the name of London and Midland General Insurance Company. I believe the reason is that the Avco Delta Corporation of the United States and Great Britain wishes to set up a company under their own name. This is a legitimate situation. If this is the reason, this company and other companies should give consideration to the national aspirations of Canadians who wish to own their own corporations and financial institutions.

The sponsor of this bill, if he has not already done so, should suggest to the president of the London and Midland General Insurance Company that this bill will have speedy passage if this company will agree to a clause other companies have agreed to. That clause would provide for Canadian investment in the company and, over a period of time, Canadian control.

The question has been asked on a number of occasions why it is necessary to have so many of these companies doing business in exactly the same categories in Canada. I have before me the report of the Superintendent of Insurance for Canada, volume 2, which relates to the annual statements of fire and casualty insurance companies in Canada—Canadian, British and foreign owned. There are probably 1,100 companies in the casualty field doing almost the same type of business, and I cannot see any advantage in increasing this number.

The Union Mutual Life Insurance Company of the United States has been doing business in Canada for some time. They decided that rather than have a branch operation they would start a new company in Canada under the auspices of the federal Superintendent of Insurance. They provided an opportunity for Canadians to purchase that company. They not only investigated the possibility of Canadians being able to own the company, but they wrote into the act of what is now known as the Transcoastal Insurance Company the provisions that within five years they would undertake to sell 25 per cent of their stock in Canada and at the end of ten years to sell 49 per cent of their stock. The aspirations of Canadian nationalism would be sufficient reason for Canadians to purchase stock in this company, increase the value and do business with the company. Privately the company indicated that they expected that in five years the value of the company would have increased to a level where they would be able to sell a half interest. They felt they would retain a very favourable business by being a shareholder along with Canadian shareholders. They were willing to bow to Canadian nationalism to that extent in order to have their company develop.

This is not new Mr. Chairman. Many countries are giving consideration to development of their own corporations and industries and have passed laws to make this mandatory. Japan in particular has been very interested in this field. I quote from a Canada-Japan Trade Council newsletter:

Figures compiled by the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development show the inflow of direct foreign investment for six member states:

Canada	(1962)	$14.5 billion
United States	(1964)	$ 8.4 billion
United Kingdom	(1962)	$ 4.2 billion
France	(1964)	$ 4.0 billion
Germany	(1964)	$ 2.8 billion
Japan	(1965)	$ 0.7 billion

Japan is interested in developing its own industry. Foreign capital can be invested only to a limited degree because they wish to own the businesses within that country. Japan is now doing business in Canada where we do not have such a limitation.

The Union Mutual Life Insurance Company, a very large company in the United States, was organized in 1848 and commenced business in Canada in 1868. They were asked the question, "Why should another new insurance company be chartered?" They replied:

To enable an existing insurance company, domiciled in the United States but doing business in Canada, to cease doing business in Canada; to return to or leave in Canada the servicing of the existing Canadian business of the United States insurer; to cause Canadian insurance business to be done by Canadians.

Servicing does not refer to the basic contractual relationship between an existing policyholder and the existing insurer. This contractual relationship will continue. However, since the U.S. insurer will be withdrawing from solicitation of new business in Canada, and hence would be forced to close its current offices, the answering of questions, payment of claims, changing of beneficiaries, and other services will be rendered by the personnel of the new company, in the offices of the new company. However, in most instances these personnel and offices will have been assumed by the new company from the old. Hence, existing policyholders will suffer no inconvenience and no change in contractual rights. On the other hand, the new company will have an immediate source of personnel, offices and service revenue with which to operate.

I suppose that in the insurance field in the United States Union Mutual is larger than Avco Delta. I believe it does more business in the United States than Avco Delta. It is a large and fairly progressive company. I was interested to learn it is large enough to have offered the American government to operate an American medicare plan covering all the states in the union on a fee for service basis.

If it can make this kind of concession to Canadians, why should the company we are now considering continue to come before us and ask for this type of consideration? The directors of the other company have indicated they were very surprised at the reaction to the agreement to make this kind of concession to Canadians. Although the Senate passed the bill, it was not passed without considerable debate and questions.

There is a simple proposition here, Mr. Chairman. You and I know that most senators are either directors of insurance companies or of banks or other financial institutions. Therefore it is almost questionable whether or not a senator should have the right to make a decision on these matters because of his involvement. However, it is interesting that all the questions were aimed at the 49 per cent ownership feature. They were not seeking to expand it but to take it out of the bill. In this we saw the fine hand of others in the insurance business who might not desire Canadian ownership of Canadian insurance companies, and hence the effort to delete this provision. But I am pleased to see that the bill as finally recommended by the Senate committee retained the provision for Canadian ownership. I would like the sponsor of the bill now before the house to indicate why he is not proposing an amendment to provide for such ownership.

I hope to have an opportunity of going before the committee that will be discussing Transcoastal because I am curious why they could not provide Canadians with 51 per cent ownership. I was very surprised to learn that the Superintendent of Insurance informed them that if they gave Canadians 51 per cent control of that company then they, with 49 per cent, would be able to vote only 10 per cent of their stock. This seems to be a very odd provision to put into the bill. I hope the hon. member who is sponsoring the bill will consider the question of the percentage of Canadian ownership.

If this company wants to do business in Canada it must be of the opinion that business in Canada is a good thing for it, that London and Midland Insurance Company will be able to do business economically in Canada, that it will be able to operate with some success as a subsidiary operation in Canada. However, the directors of this company must be poorly informed on the wishes and aspirations of the Canadian public if they are not aware of the fact that there are people in Canada who would like to see the opportunity provided for Canadians to buy into financial institutions doing business in Canada.

Union Mutual is not only going to provide an opportunity to Canadians to buy into it but it is going to make it lucrative enough for Canadians to do so. In fact, its directors have made it a condition of their charter that this will be accomplished in ten years or they will give up their right to their charter. They did not oppose penalties being included in the legislation whereby sizeable fines would be imposed upon directors and executive officers of the company if they did not accomplish the stipulated degree of Canadian control within the ten year period.

It is interesting to note that members of the other place did not pursue the matter of penalties. I was also interested to note that the Superintendent of Insurance said that that company had gone far beyond the requirements of the form bill that is provided for insurance companies being chartered in Canada and therefore there was no need to have this type of penalty in the bill. I entirely agree with the Superintendent of Insurance. I am sure that company is honest, I am sure it is straightforward, I am sure it is going to make that attempt, and I am also sure the Canadian public will buy into that company and make it possible for the directors to live up to their obligations to parliament. However, I am not the least bit sure that all other companies that would agree to such a clause would do so and would be so apt to fulfil their duty. Therefore I see no reason why the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs should not again put in the penalties for Transcoastal and other companies like it.

The London and Midland bill has been before us for some time. The company does not mind the penalty that is being paid by not having had its name changed to Avco Delta. It would like to be accomplished, but if one reads what Avco owns in other areas one finds there is not much in a name. Avco owns the Moffat Stove Company. They have not changed the name to the Avco Delta Stove Company. It owns a large number of other companies and has not changed their names. If you are interested in credit cards you will probably think of credit card companies. You will probably think of Carte Blanche, not the Avco Delta Corporation. It owns a large number of small loan companies and several life insurance companies. It is doing business with a number of companies in Canada whose names have not been changed, but it is interesting to note that when it went into farm machinery and bought the New Idea Farm Equipment Company it added the name Avco to that company. Among the many companies it owns is London and Midland General Insurance Company.

If the directors of this company want this legislation passed the answer is simple. We are quite willing to have them come into Canada and do business under their own company name, but they should be willing to make the concession to the Canadian people that they have a right to some control in this company if the market is right. For this reason I urge the sponsor of the bill to consider what has been done with respect to two other major companies in the insurance field in Canada, where clauses providing for Canadian ownership have been inserted in their charters.

• (5:20 p.m.)

The change in name from London and Midland General Insurance Company to Avco Insurance Company or L'Avco, Compagnie d'Assurance Générale might appear to be the crux of the subject, but I believe the change in name is really not the crux of the matter and is not the reason the bill is being opposed. I believe it is being opposed for the simple reason that we agree with many persons who believe one important aspect in respect of insurance companies and financial institutions is that they be Canadian controlled. For this reason we strongly urge the sponsor of the bill to consider this point before the bill comes before parliament again so that speedy action can be taken in respect of having the transfer arranged.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I am very disappointed that the sponsor of this bill did not rise to answer some of the questions asked by the previous speaker. When a minister or private member sponsors a bill in this house it seems to me they should be prepared to answer questions directed to them. Again we have an example of a private member of the Liberal party sponsoring a bill in this house. We are rather anxious to know whether it is his personal conviction that insurance companies, which are part of the financial picture of Canada, should come increasingly under the domination of outside interests. I believe the hon. gentleman should make it abundantly clear to hon. members and to the constituents he represents where he stands on the issue of foreign ownership. Is he in favour of handing over the financial institutions of Canada lock, stock and barrel to outside interests or does he intend to stand up in this house and take a firm stand?

Mr. Lind: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I cannot see how the hon. member's remarks have anything to do with the changing of the name of this company. First of all, it has been a reputable and well thought of insurance company which has offered services to the public across Canada. It is only asking for a change in name. No corporate change is being requested. It is purely a name change. I do not believe there is a desire on the part of this insurance company to be anything but a good corporate citizen and to do business in Canada in the way it has for a long time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Harding: I am delighted to hear the applause from the Liberal benches because it is good to know where they stand on these issues. The previous speaker asked whether the sponsor of this bill, the hon. member for Middlesex, went to the company and asked its officials if they would accept an amendment to this legislation. I should like to know the answer to that question. We have been asking such questions for a period of time.

Mr. Lind: I again rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I do not know how it can be amended in any way to make it any simpler. I fail to understand the thinking of the hon. member. I believe he is confusing the issue. I think he is reading something into the bill which is not in it.

Mr. Peters: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I ask whether the sponsor of the bill would agree that Avco Delta Corporation is a United States owned corporation? Would he not also agree that London and Midland is listed in the report of the Superintendent of Insurance as a Canadian company and that this change of name would not only change the name but would change the ownership of this company from a Canadian company? The hon. member for Ottawa Centre shakes his head. I suggest that the evidence provided to the committee of the other place indicates that this company is now totally foreign owned and should no longer be listed as a Canadian company. Is this not correct?

Mr. Lind: That is not correct. This company is not totally foreign owned. As a matter of fact, this company is controlled by Avco Delta Corporation, but there are common shares in the hands of Canadian shareholders.

Mr. Harding: One per cent or less. Now, Mr. Chairman, may I continue. Again I ask the sponsor of the bill where he stands. We have had other private bills in this house in respect of which substantial amendments have been offered which in effect gave Canadians the right to buy back the shares. I do not know what the members of the Liberal party generally think about the ownership of our financial institutions, but I should like to place on the record a few remarks from a very responsible and reliable source concerning what is happening in respect of the control of the financial institutions of this country. I should like to place this on the record because it is very important. In 1956, 12 years ago, the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects stated in its preliminary report:

> Foreign ownership of the stocks of the Canadian chartered banks and of life insurance companies, which are incorporated under Canadian law, is not particularly large at the present time. It is desirable that Canadian control of these institutions be maintained. The commission suggests, therefore, that appropriate action be taken to prevent any substantial measure of control of the chartered banks and of life insurance companies from coming into possession of non-residents. One way in which this might be accomplished would be to provide by statute that any shares in such institutions which are acquired by non-residents of Canada in the future would be ineligible to vote. This restriction should not be applied to existing non-resident holders of such shares.

I did not make that statement. That comes from a group of Canadian economists. They are warning the people.

Mr. Lind: Yes, but may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Harding: What is happening is—

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hon. member has the floor.

Mr. Harding: Did the hon. member wish to ask a question? I will gladly give way.

Mr. Lind: Does what the hon. member has just read have any connection with the change of the name of London and Midland General Insurance Company?

• (5:30 p.m.)

Mr. Harding: It certainly does. That was no question, Mr. Chairman.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I have been listening to this exchange and it is just a repetition of the same question and the same answer. I think the hon. member should proceed with his speech.

Mr. Harding: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. However, we intend to try and get information from the sponsor of this bill before the debate is concluded. I referred to 1956. I should now like to come to 1959. I shall read what the Superintendent of Insurance at that time, Mr. MacGregor, said in 1959.

> In my reports in recent years I have drawn attention to cases where control of a Canadian life assurance company passed from Canadian interests to interests outside Canada. In the three or four years preceding 1958 there was much activity in the shares of Canadian life assurance companies and control of a number of companies was acquired by external interests through purchase of a majority of shares from Canadian shareholders. This makes—

He is referring to 1959.

> —the sixth life insurance company where control has passed into external hands in recent years.

In 1960 we had another warning from the Superintendent of Insurance, the watchdog of all the insurance agencies in this nation. This is what he told us in 1960:

> The acquisition of control of established Canadian companies by British and foreign insurance companies means a permanent loss in the share of the life insurance business in Canada transacted by Canadian companies under Canadian control. The formation of a new life insurance company is a difficult undertaking and requires the investment of large amounts of money with no expectation of a return on the investment for many years in the future. Such companies are difficult to replace. The chance of repatriation of control is much less than if the shares were in the hands of individuals.

Again we had this warning from the head man in the insurance field. And what do we get in this house? We have private member after private member introducing private bills, some of them to hand over Canadian insurance companies to the very people the former Superintendent of Insurance has been warning us about. No wonder people are becoming apprehensive. During 1961, control of nine Canadian fire and casualty insurance companies passed to British or foreign hands. These transfers are largely responsible for the reduction in the proportion of fire and casualty premiums written in Canada by Canadian-controlled companies, from 26.5 per cent in 1960 to 22.4 per cent in 1961. So, on down the line have we gone until today.

I should now like to refer to the 1967 report, the latest one which I have. All hon. members have received this report of the Superintendent of Insurance. Let us consider the fire and casualty insurance figures for 1967. If people think this is unimportant, all they have to do is consider the portfolios of investment that these companies control in this nation of ours; they will then realize the tremendous power they wield. We should appreciate the necessity of keeping control of such companies within the confines of our own nation. Warnings have come from people who certainly do not belong to the party which I represent. They must be looked upon as extremely responsible people. They have warned this government, and the elected representatives of the government, to be careful or we will lose economic control of our own nation.

In 1967 the net premiums written amounted to $1,467 million. This is a tremendous sum of money. Canadian companies—we call them Canadian companies—controlled about 43.2 per cent of this business. However, a number of these Canadian companies were controlled by British or foreign companies. I shall not give the percentages because it would take too long to read them, but the bulk of the investment control does not lie with Canadian companies in the fire and casualty insurance field.

These statistics should alarm any thinking Canadian. It is amazing to me that anyone elected in a riding of Canada would come to the House of Commons and try to turn over another little chunk of the Canadian economy to outside interests. We in the New Democratic party, are asking members who sponsor private bills to talk to the companies that come to them. They should tell these companies that they are Canadians, interested in Canada. They should ask the companies to accept amendments to their bills which would mean that Canadians would have an opportunity to buy back over a period of time control of the companies. Such a suggestion was made by the previous speaker.

Two or three companies have already done this because they realized that Canadians from the east to the west in this nation were becoming concerned about the problem. We have asked that these questions be dealt with. The hon. member said he has not approached this company and there is no need to approach it. But he willingly accepted the job of coming to the House of Commons and trying to persuade his colleagues to accept this and other private bills which would allow a sell-out of another chunk of our economy.

Our party is saying it is time we called a halt to this practice and sat down as members of political parties—every one of us is interested in Canada—and arrived at a solution to the problem. If one is interested in Canada, he does not start selling this nation piecemeal, bit by bit. We are asking that the sponsor of the bill seriously consider the matters we have raised. It is not too late to do this, because I doubt whether the bill will pass this evening. I suggest that the hon. member go back to the company and place before it the proposition that other companies have incorporated in their bills. This bill can be amended; it is not too late to do it. There can be included in the bill the very provision for which we are asking, namely, that Canadians be given an opportunity to become part owners in this country and its economy. Such a provision must be written into the bill. We ask that such amendments be made to it. We suggest that the hon. member sponsoring the bill should rise in the house this afternoon and tell us that he will take this proposition back to those who asked him to present the bill to the House of Commons.

Mr. Deachman: Mr. Chairman, we have just been treated to the kind of speech which in the past few years we have heard in this house during private members' hour. We have listened to such speeches as N.D.P. members have fervently argued in order to retard the business and economic progress of Canada. No one can argue this case better than do the hon. members who, throughout their history in the House of Commons, have been confined to the far left hand corner of the house because of the theories which they hold with regard to business and economics in Canada. The case before us this afternoon hinges on the view of hon. gentlemen opposite of what is a Canadian company. A Canadian company might be a company which is wholly owned by Canadians. It might also be a company which is, in part or even to a considerable extent, controlled by people abroad who felt it was worth while to come to a country of business growth and of economic stability such as Canada and to invest money for the progress of their company and to the benefit of the Canadian people. But hon. members opposite, who have held up these bills, have constantly argued that foreign capital militates against the progress of the Canadian economy and industry. We do not believe that on this side of the house.

Mr. Peters: That is not true.

Mr. Deachman: They argue that it is un-Canadian unless a company is Canadian in the terms which they describe, that is to say that it finds the bulk of its capital in this country and that it does not find the bulk of its capital from outside of Canada for any investments which might add to the production and to the benefit of the Canadian economy.

I want to ask: What is a Canadian political party? That would be a good thing to discuss here apropos of what has been said of Canadian companies this afternoon. Is a Canadian party a party which is for the most part supported by U.S. unions, for example, and which in the eyes of virtually all Canadians who have watched them over the years is not much more than a Canadian subsidiary of U.S. unions which dominate Canadian unions?

Mr. Harding: You do not know your history.

Mr. Deachman: We know on this side of the house that the leader of their party, who has gradually beat a retreat across the west, has been finally pushed off the mainland onto an island, but still clutching firmly a piece of Canadian soil. We know he went down to Boston during the last election and there he was promised the support of the United States unions which own the N.D.P. Yet, they come into this house and call themselves a Canadian party.

We do not mind saying they are a Canadian party. We know they are good citizens, misguided though they may be. We know they are misguided in good faith, but we do not deny them the right to call themselves Canadians. There is nothing wrong with that.

All I want to say to these gentlemen is—

An hon. Member: We are better Canadians than you are.

Mr. Deachman: —that there are different ideas with regard to what constitutes a Canadian entity or organization than the example one sees when examining that very party.

So, I wonder whether or not we could look at this bill which is before the house in a more practical light, in the light of how we have developed this country by bringing people here from abroad, some of whom have become members of that party. Do we say they are not fit to be Canadians? No, sir. It is a privilege to come from abroad and to become Canadian. It is a privilege to come here with one's capital, to make it grow and to assist in the development of Canada. But hon. members opposite find something wrong with it. Let me say that we do not. I ask them this afternoon to reflect on what constitutes Canadians. They are people with faith in their country, sufficient faith to come here and settle, to take part in its political life and its development. They are people with enough faith to bring their capital here from abroad, to invest in the country and assist in making it grow. That is what has helped to make Canada great.

I want to say that certainly we must struggle to retain our own political freedom in this country and to maintain a growing investment in our own equity. This is part of being good Canadians economically, to take part in the economic development of the country and to invest our dollars in it. But we would be going against the history of the economic development of Canada if we were to follow the kind of theories which have been put forward by hon. gentlemen opposite as they defeated these bills one after the other, year after year, during the period in which I have been in the House of Commons. It is hokum of the highest kind and will continue to be hokum as long as they preach it.

[Translation]

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to have the opportunity to participate in this debate on Bill C-101. I understand that this insurance company wants to change its name, and take an English name and a French-Canadian name. So this insurance company will have two names.

Generally speaking, we have nothing against insurance companies. We believe that there are too many of them in this country. I think that their premiums are too high for the services they provide. On every street corner there are insurance salesmen trying to squeeze money out of Canadian taxpayers, on the pretence that their companies know where to invest, and that they can better manage that money than the individual.

Earlier, I heard the sponsor of this bill say that these companies come here to invest capital. I want him to know that they come here to seek Canadian funds to invest later on. Insurance companies have no need to invest capital, as they gather funds as soon as they start to operate. So, they raise funds to form the company and as soon as this is done, they do not need this capital any longer. It is put in a reserve. In the past many insurance companies were raising capital in Canada to invest abroad. Isn't that a shame, Mr. Chairman? There lies the evil. A company should be exclusively Canadian, and all the capital it extracts from the Canadian nation should be reinvested exclusively in Canada. Parliament should act to make compulsory for all insurance companies and all other companies that draw off Canadian capital in order to reinvest it elsewhere, to invest in Canada. In fact, we need capital, and above all foreign capital, because we do not have enough. If our capital is sent abroad, the situation will be even worse.

Mr. Chairman, several insurance companies claim to be exclusively Canadian, yet they are not at all. They come to seek Canadian capital and are contributing to the development of other countries. Then is the time to act. Those insurance companies should be exclusively Canadian, not only in name but also with regard to their operations.

It is asked to replace the present name for a Canadian name. That will only be a Canadian name and not Canadian capitals. The steps which will be taken by those companies should benefit Canadian citizens. Investments and all the money collected, all the profits of those companies, should be reinvested in Canada.

So far, few insurance companies have come to make investments in Canada, after earning money abroad. Almost all foreign companies transacting business in Canada have come here to extract Canadian capital and invest it where they pleased.

• (5:50 p.m.)

The investments of some of those companies are ill-distributed. As far as I am concerned, I live in a remote area of the Eastern Townships. Some insurance companies come and squeeze money out of the inhabitants of that area, but they never reinvest anything there. They do not reinvest to develop our area, under the pretence that it is not profitable. How do you explain that they come and take our money, but do not reinvest? Insurance companies are not working in the interest of society. They are not logical. They come and squeeze considerable amounts of money out of some areas of the country, but those very areas do not derive any benefit from this. In my area, it would seem that people are only good enough to pay insurance premiums since they do not receive in exchange anything which would promote development of the area. If we do not get anything, in my area it is because, it would not be profitable to invest, so they say. It is not profitable to reinvest but it is profitable to come and pocket thousands of dollars at one time from us.

We should put our foot down and ask again to insurance companies to reconsider what they are doing. If they are allowed to come and take Canadian funds they should be able to distribute their investments. Unfortunately, they are allowed to reinvest according to their own will and where they see fit. When it comes to increasing interest rates however, they make no bones about it. Mortgages are allowed in several areas of Canada, at a certain interest rate but a few years later, they can be increased. Thus those who have borrowed from those insurance companies instead of from other companies have to pay a higher cost, because there is some difference between interest rates.

Mr. Chairman, all kinds of things are going on in insurance companies. We should establish an agency whose task would be to see that these companies are consistent with themselves, in the best interests of the Canadian economy.

Canadian Parliament should be kept informed of those companies' activities. I cannot blame too much the members of the New Democratic Party who want to know what those insurance companies do with the capital that they squeeze out of Canadians. And we lead people to believe that insurance is a beautiful thing. It is always good after one's death, but there are a great many other means for Canadians to make more profitable investments than in insurance companies.

Mr. Chairman, there are certain things that should be cleared up and reformed in our insurance companies. I mention that particular one, but I might lump all the existing Canadian insurance companies together in that respect, for they do not appear to provide the benefits they should, if one takes into account the amount of money they get out of the public.

Moreover, there are insurance agents—I do not hold it against them, though—who earn more than manufacturing concerns having 75 or 80 employees. Is there not something surprising in the fact that one man, by himself, with his small brief-case, can earn as much? Something is going wrong inside the insurance companies, Mr. Chairman. I spoke about the small agents at the bottom of the scale, but what about all those who earn $50,000, $75,000, $100,000 or $125,000 a year, all that at the people's expense. Buying insurance policies is not always a wise investment, as we can see. They begin by paying themselves huge salaries and this explains why many insurance agents do not want to become members of parliament since they earn four times as much selling insurance in their region.

The insurance companies are exaggerating and there is extravagance somewhere. If we want a just society and a sound economy we must at all costs inquire into the insurance business as well as into many others. There is no need to kneel to the insurance companies and trusts which generally take advantage of the people, without saying a word. Nothing is said because many members of parliament are associated with them. Many are drawing large dividends from insurance companies which up to now have always succeeded in protecting themselves and have always found a way to outwit the Treasury. Yet, they should not be better treated than others; on the contrary, they should be dealt with in the same way as all other enterprises in the country.
