Mr. Chairman, once again, I ask parliament to appoint a committee to enquire into all aspects of our insurance companies, so as to be in a position to intervene should there be anything there that is not according to Hoyle. It is now six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the Government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair.

At 6 p.m. the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I had taken some time prior to five o'clock in an attempt to bring to the attention of the congenial minister the concern I have over the method of allocating service and purchase contracts. I understand that tenders do not have to be called for construction contracts if an emergency exists and the cost is less than $15,000. If I am incorrect about that, I am sure the minister will correct me. Although I agree emergencies may arise in certain circumstances, I believe that all too often, as is apparent from previous cases we have witnessed throughout the country, they are a figment of the imagination. Departments decide that an emergency does exist and they allocate a contract without public tendering.

I should like to impress upon the minister the importance of doing away with preferred or representative lists and using instead the widely accepted procedure of tendering by public advertisement. In this way the new Department of Supply and Services, the other departments of the government as well as the elected representatives will not be subjected to the type of criticism we hear so often today, namely, patronage. I would expect the minister to make sure that the regulations are clearly defined so there will be no likelihood that the type of "pork barrel" situations that have arisen in the past will become commonplace.

One matter that does bother me considerably with regard to these preferred lists is how the persons or firms who are on these lists qualify. Perhaps the minister would clarify this at the end of the debate. Surely, qualification should not depend on the particular government that is in power at the time. I am sure that the group to be established to review the situation continually will take this question into consideration.

As I mentioned before five o'clock, the proposal to establish a group to review the approach taken by the various departments to obtain information, with a view to improving the quality of such information, is a step in the right direction and one that we can support. However, I think the minister must set guidelines which really mean something; and if he is able to do that he ought to be commended. On the other hand, if this is another government department only, and if it cannot bring about closer liaison between other departments of government, there is no purpose in establishing it.

There is no sense in having a freeze in public service hirings if the government, as seems evident from increased allocations in this year's budget, is to seek the services of outside consulting firms. I believe that under this minister we ought to develop expertise within the department and make possible the provision of specialized services for every department of government, thus, bringing about closer relationships between government departments than has been experienced in the past.

I hope the minister's philosophy in this new department will be not only business oriented, and I use that term loosely knowing that hon. members will know what I mean, but oriented to the needs of every part of our nation. Without this type of expertise in all social sciences this country and this new department will be the losers. I say to the minister that the clients he has to please are every man, woman and child of this country, and especially those of low or fixed income who are unable to fend for themselves in this highly technical world.

Naturally, officials of the various departments, as well as employees of departments, would like to set their own guidelines. If the minister is sincere in establishing guidelines for the new department that will really do the job we think ought to be done, we will support him, as will all those in this country who benefit.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I think we have had a most interesting and valuable discussion on this very important bill and I think that it reflects, by and large, agreement with the proposals on which this bill is based. I do not know how hon. members would like me to deal with the various matters which have been raised. As I understood the discussion, a thread seemed to run through the minds of hon. members, and perhaps I could deal with specific topics that have been raised. The two matters which seem to have been raised most often by hon. members were the fact that in the new department there would be two deputy ministers and that the functions of the Receiver General were to be transferred to this department. Hon. members wanted to know the rationale behind that. I would like to deal with these two matters first, before touching on other specific matters raised by individual hon. members.

In so far as the two deputy ministers are concerned, Mr. Chairman, this does not mean an increase in the actual personnel of the department. It is simply a redesignation, if I can call it that, of the former Comptroller of the Treasury. Hon. members will note from early clauses of the bill dealing with this department that one of the responsibilities I have from the outset is to designate clearly and unmistakably what the duties of the two deputy ministers will be. This I intend to do. It is clearly evident, I think, that there will not be what may be described as a crossover of responsibilities. The Deputy Minister of Supply will be the gentleman who already has that post and performed his duties admirably for many years. The Deputy Minister of Services will be the former Comptroller of the Treasury. So, there will not be the confusion that some hon. members understandably might anticipate, and I apologize for not making that clear in my opening statement. I am satisfied that this is the appropriate arrangement. It is not, of course, unique in the public service of this government or of many other governments. At the federal level there are quite a few departments with two deputy ministers.

On the question of the function of the Receiver General and the appropriateness of having this function as part of the responsibilities of the Minister of Supply and Services, I think there are real advantages to be gained in identifying with a single minister the closely related functions of the receipt, custody, disbursement and accounting of public funds. I want to emphasize that this is essentially the Receiver General's function, which is essentially a service function. There is no suggestion in the bill, nor is there any intention in the over-all plan, that the Receiver General shall have any responsibility in terms of what I might describe as policy decisions with regard to financial matters. His is the purely technical function of the retention or control, in custodial terms, of public funds. On the other side, there is the disbursement of all public funds. We are satisfied with this; a great deal of thought and work went into this matter, and we think that the present relationship in this field is an appropriate one.

There is a straight line through, as I said before, connecting the receipt of moneys, the custody of those moneys, the ultimate paying out of those moneys and the preparation of accounts relating to those public funds. I would be pleased to go on at greater length on this matter but it is not necessary. I will only say that identifying all the functions I have mentioned, which are closely related, with a single minister, responsibility and accountability are properly identified. The function can be most efficiently and economically handled on an integrated basis and there will be considerable convenience to departments, agencies of government, contractors and suppliers, as well as members of the general public, if a single office is identified as the control point for receipts, payments and inquiries related to either. As I said a moment ago, this is the rationale behind our thinking and I am satisfied that this will work satisfactorily.

In any event, may I also point out to hon. members that the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury ceases to exist under this new arrangement and this is the mechanism we have devised which we think will take its place most effectively.

The hon. member for Wellington asked a number of questions, and I shall deal with those in a moment. Also, there was a reference by an hon. member opposite to the length of time since the Glassco report was brought down for some of its recommendations to be implemented, as they are now being. This is not strictly correct. Since 1964, a number of Glassco Commission recommendations have been implemented on a progressive basis and this is merely the logical conclusion of something which has been under way for a considerable time.

With regard to the dangers of overstocking and the surplus problem in warehouses under the present arrangement, I suggest that the effect of what we are doing will be the exact opposite. By consolidating all government supplies in six very large warehouses across the country, we shall no longer have to deal with 600 centres in which supplies for government departments are stored. Also, I should say we have developed a quite sophisticated and efficient method of data processing which will enable us, when the full scheme is in effect, to determine through a set of coded numbers and the like if goods or supplies needed in Victoria or Ottawa are in Halifax or somewhere else. I do not think it is necessary to be concerned about this so called excess or surplus to which the hon. member for Wellington referred.

On the question of the Queen's Printer, I wish to make it perfectly clear in this house, and I make this a commitment at this time, that it is our intention to appoint a Queen's Printer. While the wording of the act says "may" rather than "shall"—this is a semantic rather than legal argument—I assure the house that a Queen's Printer will be appointed when the necessary authority is granted to us under this legislation.

As for moving the Mint and why that should appropriately come under the over-all framework of the Department of Supply and Service, here again the rationale behind the move is that the Mint performs essentially a service function. We have within the department perhaps more experience than other departments in terms of running small and large plants. For example, there is Canadian Arsenals. The responsibility of the Department of Supply and Service for this organization has built up among its officials great expertise. Our officials have great knowledge of all these matters. I think that, as with the Receiver General of Canada, this move is in line with recommendations of the Glassco Commission which suggested that common services could better be provided by a single agency. In this way the officials of specific departments and, indeed, ministers of specific departments will be relieved of the so called bookkeeping and housekeeping chores which can best be carried out under the new arrangement we are now proposing.

Some question was raised as to the future scope of the former comptroller of the treasury. I want to emphasize that while there is a pronounced change in some of the responsibility which this office will assume under its new title of the services section of the department, there will not be an immediate or overnight transition.

The Glassco commission recommended, and it is our judgment they were correct in so recommending, that the pre-audit function ought to be the responsibility of individual departments rather than the comptroller of the treasury, as at present. Hon. members will recognize this is not something which can be done equally in all departments. We anticipate it will be some time before all departments are able to carry out this work on their own. There will not be a major and immediate disruption with regard to the staff of the comptroller of the treasury because of this transfer of duties. It will be gradual.

As has happened steadily throughout the public service, there will be a certain amount of attrition. A task force has been set up to look at the whole question of a new approach to coping with the possibility of employees being displaced under the new arrangement. We are reasonably satisfied there will not be a major disruption. I can assure hon. members we are taking this into account in the phasing in plan. As the hon. member for Burnaby Seymour asked this afternoon—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands.

Mr. Jamieson: He keeps moving his riding. In any event, it is going to be a phasing in and we are satisfied, with the task force being set up, we will be able to deal with this problem. It is our intention and objective to do the work with less people. This is one of the savings we have in mind. I repeat this will not be done overnight. I am sure it will work out satisfactorily for all concerned.

I agree with the hon. member for Wellington with regard to charges for our services. It is the intention of the department, when providing services for a client department, to make a reasonable charge. It is a matter of time to determine the proper rate of charge. Hon. members will agree if it is going to cost more to charge and assign a particular department, it will not make sense to impose a charge. The department is working out a system to determine the actual cost for services to be provided. The hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre asked why we were so long—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Regina East.

Mr. Jamieson: I am not doing too well on constituency titles. The hon. member for Regina East made a comment with regard to time. I believe I answered that by saying we have been implementing portions of this since 1964. I agree this should be done quickly. I also answered the question he raised with regard to the two deputy ministers. Let me re-emphasize it is not additional persons, but merely a re-designation of the former comptroller of the treasury.

One of the main reasons the department has been established is to bring about co-ordination which will eliminate one department having a surplus of materials while another department is purchasing the same because of a lack of rapport between them. The new data processing methods will be very beneficial. May I say to interested hon. members that we would be happy to arrange a tour of the pilot project in Ottawa. The hon. member and I are in complete agreement, Mr. Chairman, that the real test will be the effectiveness of the system. I am sure this will be successful. There is no point building a better mousetrap unless it works.

We must continue to assess our methods and carry out consistent checks. I personally feel very strongly that we need an advisory committee so that other departments can inform us how well we are serving them.

With regard to the matter of delays, I refer to my opening statement that we are a business oriented department and we must ensure that our client departments are given good service. On this pilot project delivery times are less than normal for commercial enterprise. If there was time this evening, I would give details of the bureau of standards. It has been proven that we can standardize and we are attempting to ensure there is uniformity throughout the supply sector. An item of general use can be supplied to all departments. We have not found many variables in terms of one department requiring a particular item and another department requiring the same item with a different colour. It is a very complex subject and problem, but progress is being made toward resolving this problem.

It would not be appropriate for me to comment this evening on matters now before the public accounts committee, such as the Bonaventure and hydrofoil. It is my information several meetings are planned and a number of witnesses will be called. The appropriate position would be to wait until the report is received from the committee. On the matters raised by the hon. member for Regina East and the hon. member for South Shore, it would be better to wait until the report is received. However, I would say in a general way we are looking forward to this report and recommendations of the committee. Although improvements can be made, I do not accept the general criticisms which have been levelled. There are answers and these may be in the committee report.

The hon. member for Regina East commented on moving and storage. This is a very sizeable activity of this department and the government generally. As hon. members know, there is a good deal of mobility in the public service and the armed services in particular. The situation is not as my hon. friend describes it. I was a little surprised that representatives of my friend's party went to bat for the moving business because, as hon. members are aware, there have been suggestions that an investigation should be conducted into this industry with regard to combines practices. However, I will not go into that. Until recently the position has been that companies charge the same rates.

Therefore under that arrangement it was a matter of allowing a certain amount of leeway and choice to the persons or group being moved to decide amongst themselves. But the fact of the matter is that there is another company and this company has in fact met our requirements and standards and has given a rate which is considerably lower. I wish to emphasize that this is an all year round rate, and it is a national rate. In other words, it applies all across the country and it applies 12 months of the year.

The hon. member is probably right when he says that in the face of this new competition some of the other lines have agreed to come down and meet the rate now being offered by this national company to which I have referred, but they have not agreed to do it either on a year round or on a national basis. So, therefore, I am satisfied—and I may say I have gone into this very thoroughly since the hon. member and others brought it to my attention—that in the long run we are getting a substantial savings to the public treasury by operating under the scheme which we have at the moment.

I may say too that this company is not capable of doing anything like all the work that is necessary, and that other companies get a substantial volume of the work, perhaps as much as 70 per cent or 80 per cent. But I am not happy with that situation and it is my objective as well as that of my officials to get competitive tendering all the way through. If these companies are anxious to get into the business let us have a thorough airing of it, and let us have real competition throughout rather than have the single rate policy with which we were faced all along until this new development came about. This is essentially the background of the story, and if necessary I shall be glad to fill in any of the details.

I believe I have touched on most of the matters raised by the hon. member for South Shore, Mr. Chairman, but unfortunately he was not in the chamber at the time. I hope he will not ask me to repeat all of them. On the question of the auditing services, I believe that perhaps there may be some misunderstanding between the hon. member and me on what is meant.

The pre-auditing function is being assigned to the individual departments in line with the Glassco Commission recommendations, and whether or not the Auditor General will need additional staff to deal with the new arrangement is something I am not capable of judging at the present time, but it is not an issue related to this particular bill. In other words, all we are doing is moving the pre-auditing function back into the hands of the individual departments as recommended, so that the responsibility is centred in the departments and they have to take the full responsibility for what they are doing. It may very well be that the Auditor General will require additional people because he himself may now have to do some of the things that were done previously by the Comptroller of the Treasury, but the two are separate questions. I am sure an appropriate occasion will arise when we can deal with the matter of whether or not the Auditor General needs additional personnel.

The hon. member for Moose Jaw—I think I have got a second one right, I am really batting close to 1,000 tonight—raised another matter and I am not at all sure I understand fully which corporation he is speaking of when he talks about consultant services. If he is talking about Management Consultant Services, we have had conversations with this group—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired, unless he has unanimous consent of the committee to continue.

Mr. Jamieson: It will only take me a moment to wind up.

The Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jamieson: I was about to explain to the hon. member for Moose Jaw that we have had discussions with the representative association of management consultants and it is not an easy matter to resolve.

On the one hand, I believe it is important that we have a strong management consultant capacity in this country. It is not our intention to undercut them, or to assure that all the business goes in any one direction, or anything of this nature. The difficulty with open tendering is that the association itself is not sure whether this is the appropriate way of going at it.

If we use open tender for all business, the argument is that if all of these people are preparing a tender they will spend a very sizeable amount of money on the preparation of their tenders, and the total spent by all of them in this way may exceed the value of the job itself. So, we have been holding discussions with them in the hope of finding another and more appropriate way in which to do this, but I can assure the hon. member that we are aware of the situation.

In this connection, so far as I am aware our department does not have a preferred list. There is nothing of that nature within the department. Any company that wishes to be listed as interested in any form of business—and this I will relate as well to the hon.

member's later reference to the business of what I believe he called invitational tendering—can be listed and will be advised when there is business available or when there is a tender to be called.

The difficulty with advertising, that is in the normal sense of making it known through public advertisement, is that there are literally tens of thousands of different items which we are asking for at one point or another, and the ability to advertise these nationally on a continuing basis would be an extremely expensive one and not very practical.

I believe that if the hon. member checks with most companies that do business with the Government of Canada he will find that there is quite general agreement that the present policy and the present system are the most appropriate. If he has specific evidence to the contrary, or knows of some company that does not feel this arrangement is appropriate, I will be delighted to look into the matter for him; but to try to advertise all the needs, all the things needed all across the country would be an impossible task.

I believe I have covered all of the points, Mr. Chairman, and I can only say in closing that I have as great hopes for the department as hon. members seem to have. I think we can do an effective job. I am sure, too, that the savings will be evident in the first report of the department a year from now after it is established.

I do not want to take my seat without talking about the matter raised by the hon. member for Lotbiniere. I am very conscious of the matter that the hon. gentleman raised. I can assure him in the first instance that the Comptroller of the Treasury portion, which will now become the services side of this department, has a very large bilingual capacity. A great many of the employees of that department are bilingual, though not as many perhaps as we would like. Certainly, on the supply side, we are doing precisely what the hon. member has suggested, and that is that we have now in the department, and will have in the new department a language or bilingual adviser. We are working towards the objectives he has outlined.

Of course the Queen's Printer, the Printing Bureau, has a very large percentage of its work force which is bilingual. So, as with all government departments, it is my intention to advance with all reasonable haste the objectives which the hon. member outlined and which I share fully. I believe I have covered all the points, Mr. Chairman, and I am very grateful to hon. members for the kind words they spoke during the discussion today.

Mr. Burton: Before he resumes his seat, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes.

Mr. Burton: Would the minister care to indicate if the government is studying or has any intention of using the Canadian Commercial Corporation, or some other means or mechanism, to fulfil the functions suggested in the Watkins report with respect to a state trading agency?

Mr. Jamieson: I can only say in answer to the hon. member that we are studying this. It is part of the examination of the whole pattern. Whether the Canadian Commercial Corporation is the proper or appropriate instrument I could not say in any dogmatic way at the moment, but it has possibilities and we are looking into it.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 42 to 45 inclusive, agreed to.

On clause 46—Other duties.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have just one little question for the minister on this clause. I notice that under this clause the Department of Supply and Services is to provide certain services which I now gather are being provided by the Central Pay Office and also certain services in relation to employees' benefit plans and superannuation or pension plans. I should like to know whether this means that the Superannuation Branch will be transferred to the minister. You know, he seems so humane I hope it is true.

• (8:40 p.m.)

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I regret to advise the hon. member that unfortunately, the great generous person that I am, I am not going to have the opportunity to do what he suggests. This department will perform certain administrative duties in respect of keeping accounts with regard to superannuation, pay and the like, such as issuing cheques which may not be as big cheques as my hon. friend would like. However, he will have to argue with somebody else about how big they should be.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Perhaps the minister would exercise his humanity in the cabinet on this issue.

Clause agreed to.

Government Organization

On clause 47—Other services

Mr. Crouse: In respect of clause 47, I wonder whether the minister could give us a little better explanation of what this clause means. It states that nothing in this part precludes the minister from providing, with the prior approval of the Governor in Council, any services that are within the ambit of the duties, powers and functions of the minister under this part. Could the minister amplify the responsibility this clause defines?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, this clause enables the minister, subject to a request from a customer department or agency and approval of the Governor in Council, to provide any services dealt with in the act on behalf of Crown corporations and other government organizations. The services in respect of purchasing and supply at the federal level can be further increased, if these services are requested, to provincial or municipal governments in Canada so long as the cost would be recoverable from the agency concerned. If it should become evident that in respect of some bulk purchase we could be of assistance to a provincial government or some other agency we are not prohibited from doing that, provided the cost is recovered.

In so far as Crown corporations are concerned, the act stipulates that there are certain classes of Crown corporations which are automatically included in the procurement responsibilities of the department. Some are outside such as, for example, the C.N.R. and the C.B.C. This, however, is an enabling clause in the sense that if these agencies wish to take advantage of our purchasing capability they have the ability to do so and we have the ability to respond.

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 47 carry?

Mr. Fortin: I would like to ask a very short question, Mr. Chairman.

Could the Minister of Supply and Services tell us if the appointment of auditors for the various Crown corporations will come under his jurisdiction now that his department and the office of the Treasury Board have merged?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I would have to take this question as notice. In terms of all the departments, my inclination would be, I would think, that in some instances the answer may be yes and in others no. I am not sure about the uniform nature of this, and whether we do it for every one. I would suspect with regard to certain Crown corporations, such as Canadian Arsenals, that the auditing would be done by government auditors. It may be also that the Polymer Corporation might have its own auditors as well as the government audit. I shall be glad to look into the matter and give my hon. friend a detailed reply.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 48—Queen's Printer

[Translation]

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 48 carry?

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Chairman, a moment ago, in the course of my remarks, I asked the minister what had happened in respect of the Queen's Printer.

According to some statements made by the Prime Minister, the Queen's Printer was transferred or dismissed sometime in December. Could the minister tell us to which department the Queen's Printer was transferred and whether this was done against his will or not so that we may send him a letter to congratulate him.

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, there has been no change in the status of the Queen's Printer. Until such time as this bill is enacted, the Queen's Printer and the gentleman who holds that title are as they have always been. As for the future of the gentleman in question, once the bill is enacted I undoubtedly will be holding discussions with him. I think my friend can be reasonably sure we will reach an amicable decision as to his future.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Does the minister mean that Mr. Duhamel is still employed by the federal government as the Queen's Printer?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Duhamel is still in the government service and still the Queen's Printer. He is official Queen's Printer until such time as this act goes through. At that time an official of the department will be designated as Queen's Printer but Mr. Duhamel, as of now, is the Queen's Printer.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: I have a last question, Mr. Speaker. Would not the minister think it advisable to replace the designation Queen's Printer, by a more Canadian one, one that is less archaic and that smacks less of colonialism?

[English]

Mr. Jamieson: No, Mr. Chairman; I do not feel that way. As you well know, sir, there are many members in this house who do not share the views of my friend. The fact of the matter is that in many other Commonwealth countries the expression "Queen's Printer" is used. It is used I believe by all the provinces of Canada. There is a separate act at the moment which designates and establishes the office of the Queen's Printer and it is not our intention to change that.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 49, 50 and 51 agreed to.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I believe this afternoon there was agreement that we might proceed at this time to section 71 in respect of the Royal Canadian Mint because of the combined nature of the responsibility.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, there was no understanding on our part.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: As for us, Mr. Chairman, we do not object at this time to proceeding with clause 71 dealing with the Mint.

[English]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As a courtesy to the minister and in view of the fact that the Mint is also within his responsibility and since I do not believe there would be very much contention about the provision with regard to the Mint, might we call these particular clauses now? I certainly discussed this with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I understood him to be agreeable to the proposal.

The Deputy Chairman: Is this agreed?

Mrs. MacInnis: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I misunderstood.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Part X, Royal Canadian Mint.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 71 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, does the minister intend to indicate the reason for this change in respect of the Mint?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I did this afternoon in my opening statement. Briefly, however, I might say that the main reasons are the greater flexibility it provides for the Mint, the ability to move quickly to meet situations respecting shortage of coins, and that kind of thing, as well as the ability to move in fact in respect of international sales of coins and various things of that nature. We think it is a more reasonable and rational way of approaching this matter. It appears at least to have had the general support of anyone to whom it has been mooted or proposed.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am not directly interested in the Mint except in so far as what has happened in the past, and that is probably a poor way of looking at it. We have been concerned with the fact that the Canadian Mint has not developed to the extent of being able to meet current needs. We are buying coinage at the present time from the United States; they are minting our coins. We have also had considerable difficulty meeting requirements in the past. Now the—

Mr. Jamieson: Don't try to pronounce it. I can't either.

Mr. Peters: At any rate, I refer to the coin collectors, the numismatic people. As I have always told the minister of finance, this is a great business. You sell $1.91 worth of coins for $4, which seems to me the kind of business in which the government should be engaged. Yet we have failed on many occasions to meet the needs of this kind of export. The Mint itself has been a reasonable operation, it has been a satisfactory operation. It is surprising that when students from my area come to Ottawa, this is one of the few things they want to see, that is, how we make our money. The Mint has been a rather cluttered operation. Its machine shop could stand a great deal of improvement; the equipment is out of date and the quarters are insufficient for the operation. I think this is one field in which members of parliament would agree there should be some expansion. The expansion would probably pay off and would be self-liquidating, because of the interest in this field.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I thank my hon. friend for making the introductory statement for me, because it is precisely for these reasons that we are moving in this direction, including plans for the building of a new Mint which will give us a greater capacity. Then, instead of having to buy from the United States I hope we will be able to sell, if not to the United States, to other foreign countries.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, does the minister believe that the new Mint will keep up with government expenditures?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Jamieson: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I cannot answer that question.

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Béchard): Shall clause 71 carry?

Mr. Peters: I have another question on this clause, Mr. Chairman. How far have we progressed, in the commercial sense, in the adaptability of the new coinage? I understand that some companies are still importing from the United States silver coinage because of the inability of their equipment to handle the new coins. Can the minister give us a report as to how close we are to meeting the change to nickel coinage from silver coinage, and how this has affected the various commercial operations dependent upon the use of these coins?

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I cannot give my hon. friend an immediate answer off-the-cuff. I understand, however, that we are closing the gap in terms of our purchases from outside. I am told that the demands are being met except for some 25-cent pieces. We are still importing some of these. Our aim, of course, as I said earlier, is to reach the point where we can not only cope with our own needs but have a surplus of coins which we can sell elsewhere. That is perhaps the only surplus we will get out of the Mint. However, I will be glad to obtain a full report for my hon. friend and pass it along to him.

Mr. Peters: I thank the minister for this information, Mr. Chairman, and would like to make a suggestion that I hope he will consider. I suggest that the operation of the Mint, in co-operation with the Minister of Finance of the day, should further develop coinage. I am very appreciative of the fact that the former minister of finance allowed for centennial year the printing of a commemorative gold coin. I know that a number of provinces are now approaching the Mint with plans for coins for centennials and other types of celebrations. It seems to me this is a field in which we can make considerable money on our coinage. We should not be too reluctant, therefore, to make the necessary arrangements that will allow commemorative coins, even of gold, to be minted .

Coming from a gold-mining area, I am personally very pleased that the gold coin was a success. The knowledge I have and the information I have received, at least from my bank, leads me to believe that none of this product is used as coinage and it is not likely, because of the coin dealers' price, that any of it will be. Therefore, it has become truly a commemorative coin and not a matter of currency. I think the experience we gained should be repeated, because the government obtained a great deal more than the $35 an ounce for the gold which it put into this project.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I have just one other piece of information to give hon. members. We are not now buying coinage from outside the country. The contract for the $85 million worth, I believe it was, of 10-cent pieces is now finished and the only contract outstanding is with respect to a comparatively small number of 25-cent pieces.

Mr. Skoberg: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister could tell us if there is any indication that we are going to get rid of this cotton-picking quarter. Its size is unrealistic. We should have a quarter the size of which is more realistic and which does not look like a nickel.

Mr. Jamieson: I have received many representations in this regard, Mr. Chairman, and am inclined to agree with them. We will take a look at it. It is easy enough to get rid of them, incidentally.

Clause 71 agreed to.

Clauses 72 to 94 inclusive agreed to.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might have just a moment to thank hon. members for their courtesy and consideration. I am very appreciative of the manner in which they have assisted me in passing these clauses. I thank them very much.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You might have passed around a few samples.

Mr. Jamieson: We will strike some more.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed to part VI, which is to be found on page 19 of the bill. This part relates to consumer and corporate affairs.

On Clause 52—

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I hope the minister would be prepared to make a brief statement. Certainly, it is our hope to pass this section very expeditiously because we studied this matter in the health committee when it was dealing with the estimates. A number of matters affecting the department have been referred to the committee, but I think there are also a number of matters on which the minister should comment. Perhaps he will take this opportunity to make a brief statement to the committee.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, because the reorganization of my department was discussed in the Health and Welfare Committee when my estimates were before it, I did not feel it necessary to make a statement. But I would be happy to say a few words off the cuff on the reorganization. As hon. members know, when the announcement of government reorganization was made last July, it was stated that the whole of the standards branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce would be transferred to my department. It was announced that certain functions under the Food and Drug Act under the Department of National Health and Welfare relating to fraud and the economic aspects of the sale of food would be transferred and that the retail inspection function of the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Fisheries would be transferred to the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Previous to this reorganization, the department had been doing research in matters of consumer interest, playing a representation role within the government on behalf of consumers, and co-ordinating existing or planned consumer programs within the government, as well as running a consumer complaint and information service. With the reorganization that this bill will bring about, the department can establish a field staff by reason of transfers from other departments and give it an enforcement function.

Clause 52 (1) makes amendments necessary to transfer to the department the functions previously performed by the standards branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and amendments necessary to transfer to my department the Weights and Measures Act, the Precious Metals Marking Act, and the National Trade Mark and True Labelling Act. Subclause (2) of clause 52 allows us to establish an inspection service within the department from transfers of people from the Food and Drug Directorate, from the Department of Agricultre and from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and also gives us a field staff of inspectors for which provision must be made under subclause (2).

As a result of these transfers that are authorized by this act it has been possible to completely reorganize the consumer affairs branch of the department. As I explained to the committee, we now have within the department a new standards branch which is made up of units of the former standards branch of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the policy unit of the Department of National Health and Welfare concerned with fraud and the economic aspects of the sale of food. We are establishing within that standards branch new units in the fields of textile and chemical products. This new branch will be dealing with weights and measures and with labelling regulations. We also have a consumer research branch, a new operations branch—

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister a question with regard to weights and measures standards? Is it intended under the new legislation to instigate a continuing study with regard to the transfer to the metric system?

Mr. Basford: Not within this reorganization legislation. Conversion is the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. However, there is within the government an inter-departmental committee in which a number of my officials are extremely involved.

I mentioned the reorganization that was made possible in the consumer affairs branch of the department. I also mentioned that we have a consumer research branch and a new operations branch to direct the work of field units acquired from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Fisheries. As a result of this reorganization, we will be opening regional offices of the department in Vancouver, Winnipeg, Toronto, Montreal and Halifax.

I think that the creation within the department of a field staff and the provision of field inspectors, field liaison officers and field advisors will make the whole operation of consumer protection more meaningful to the public of Canada because they will have an office of the department in their region to which they can go to learn about our programs. This is where our officials will be able to deal with the work of the department at the grass root level and to deal with the complaints that are received by the department.

We have also been able to establish a consumer service and information branch as well as a new legal branch which will deal with the enforcement of our existing consumer protection legislation and will assist in the development of new legislation and new programs.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few brief comments. As the minister indicated, the subject of the reorganization of the department has already been dealt with in the committee, but there are a number of outstanding matters to which I had hoped the minister would take this opportunity to make some reference tonight, such as, for example, the Batten report. The minister referred to it today in reply to a question that I put to him during the oral question period. This is a report on the retail cost of food in the prairie provinces. The minister indicated that he has yet to meet with the three responsible ministers from the prairie provinces to discuss this very serious matter.

The other thing to which the minister did not make reference, and again this matter has been raised in the house on several occasions, is the report of the Alberta royal commission on gasoline marketing. This is a voluminous report of over 700 pages. The minister indicated that it is being scrutinized and studied by the combines investigation branch of his department because this report has national implications. We hope he will make some reference to it because I understand that the report has been under study by the combines investigation branch for over a week. Surely, the house is entitled to hear a statement from the minister regarding the national implications raised in the report of this royal commission because the subject matter of the report affects people in every province of Canada and raises some serious implications.

One of the things that concerns me about the new Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs is the conflict of jurisdiction. There are a number of areas in which the minister finds himself in conflict with the provinces. For example, I can refer to that part of the department's responsibilities which deal with corporations and corporate securities. The minister has made several brief references in this house to the business of the federal securities commission, just enough to cause some concern among provincial securities commissions and among other people who are concerned about how the government proposes to cope with this conflict in jurisdictions.

These are some of the things to which we hope the minister will make reference before the committee gives consent to passing this section of the bill which concerns the reorganization of the minister's department. We hope that in time the department's responsibilities will become a little more clearly defined than they are at present.

There are a number of areas in respect of which the minister and the appropriate officials of the department are receiving complaints from consumers across the country. The stock reply to those complaints and representations is that these matters fall under provincial jurisdiction, so there is not a great deal the department can do about them. I hope the area of the hon. gentleman's responsibilities will become more clearly defined in order that he may be less subject to the accusation that his department's activities amount only to window dressing, that he does not have the power to do what he is supposed to be doing in the exercise of his functions under the act.

The hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings referred last night to the fact that the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce was split up some five years ago to provide a portfolio for a new minister. Now, five years later, we find that the original arrangement is to be restored under the very legislation we have before us. That particular piece of reorganization cost the taxpayers in excess of $50 million. We hope this experience will not be repeated in the case of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, because there is a genuine desire on the part of hon. members to do something effective to protect the consumer of this country.

I know the minister is genuine in this desire. He was co-chairman of the committee whose studies preceded the setting up of the department, and he did a most effective job in that capacity. We trust this is not another example of window dressing. We trust the functions which the minister has taken over from other departments will put teeth into the minister's efforts to protect the consumers of Canada. Finally, I again express the hope that the minister's functions will be more clearly defined so as to avoid the likelihood of a conflict of jurisdictions.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, we can have little quarrel with the amendments proposed in this bill. They relate to the transfer of functions from the standards branch and from the Food and Drug Directorate to the department, and to the provision of inspection services. We favour these changes. We also welcome the minister's announcement that he intends to open regional offices. This would be a move toward decentralizing the administration. Nevertheless, it seems to me the minister has not made much of an attempt to outline the functions of his department in general.

I am not entirely satisfied that there was a thorough examination of this subject in committee. There were aspects of the subject that we had no chance to question at the time. Thus, while we are discussing the reorganization of government departments, I think we should take advantage of the opportunity to say some of the things which are on our minds. I want to talk for a while about the purpose of this department. As now constituted, the department has three branches—one might call them the three faces of Eve: consumer affairs, corporate affairs and combines investigation. Corporate affairs, the swinging, capitalist personality, is responsible for all matters involving corporations and corporate securities including such matters as bankruptcy, patents, copy rights and trademarks. In general, to use the words of the minister, this part of the department is concerned with administering many of the federal laws which regulate the businesses which supply goods and services. In this connection, the minister sees the role of the department as "increasing investor and shareholder confidence and enhancing the opportunities for raising capital." In addition he sees the department as an instrument for "ensuring probity in the marketplace." I prefer to take the minister's words rather than those of anybody else when they are available.

The combines investigation branch seems to me a most insecure and secretive personality. It is supposed to ensure a vigorous economy through a sound competition policy basic to a prosperous and vigorous economy. Again, I use the minister's words.

Finally, the consumer affairs branch is supposed to protect consumers from the abuses inherent in this same vigorous, competitive economy. I emphasize the word "inherent". It is supposed to protect them against fraud and deception by manufacturers through substandard packaging, inadequate labelling, misleading advertizing, games, gimicks and questionable credit practices.

In addition to concern about the safety and quality of products, the department is also supposed to be concerned with their price. After all, the department was set up after an investigation into the prices of consumer goods with particular reference to the price of food and the price of housing. I do not think we should lose sight of these circumstances. At the time, a great deal of credit was given to the boycotts by women consumers around this country as being instrumental in bringing that investigation about and giving final weight to the request for a department of consumer affairs.

The department was supposed to operate not only in terms of obscure and personal price indexes and figures relating to the performance of the economy but also in connection with the specific problems of people, including people living on low incomes, people living on fixed incomes and people without enough information to be "rational" consumers—people without proper protection.

The minister referred to the first aspect of these functions when he spoke during the budget debate on November 8, 1968. He said:

> I rise to speak today because of my particular interest in the performance of the Canadian economy from the point of view of the consumer whom it is my statutory obligation to represent.

Despite these fine sentiments and some real effort on the part of the minister, the department has failed to deal with the most urgent problems faced by people. I think it is doomed to continue this failure unless at least two important changes are made. First, the department has to overcome its schizophrenic personality. Second it must relate directly to people, and learn to work with them directly.

As far as the schizophrenic personality of the department is concerned, the minister says it is his statutory obligation to represent the consumer. But because of the way in which the department is now constituted it is also his statutory obligation to represent businessmen, the producers. He himself recognized the contradiction inherent in this position when he spoke on December 9 and told us it was no secret that consumer interests and producer interests were often in conflict. Nevertheless, he continues to try to make these conflicting interests work in double harness. I do not think it can be done well within the same department. He said he was striving to obtain for all citizens just and fair economic treatment whether they were concerned with the supply side or on the consumer side of the market, whether they be consumers, investors or businessmen.

The truth is that when they are talking to their business friends, the minister and his officials keep explaining away their responsibilities to consumers. I see the minister smiling but just let him wait. Let me again quote Gordon Osbaldeston, the deputy minister of consumer affairs, who by the way has had a long career in the public service looking after not the interests of consumers but the interests of the Canadian business community in the Department of Trade and Commerce. In my view this is not an ideal apprenticeship for looking after the interests of consumers. From a recent speech in which he said that free enterprise was the goal of the department, I quote:

> We want businessmen to know what we are all about. That's why we start from the premise of free enterprise, and work from there.

This leads me to inquire: What is the purpose of the department? Is it to satisfy businessmen and the free enterprise system? Is it to protect the consumer? Or is it to give each one the idea that the department is on its side at one and the same time? Mr. Osbaldeston's view makes it clear that, in his opinion at least, the interests of business come first. And Mr. Osbaldeston is deputy minister of the consumer affairs branch, the official who is supposed to speak for the interests of consumers.

From the beginning the minister has insisted that, and again I use his own words:

> A knowledgable customer is no threat to the honest businessman and certainly no threat to the market place.

Surely, it is not the qualities of customers that threaten the marketplace; rather it is the inherent qualities of uncontrolled free enterprise. The minister is keen on consumer education to deal with this, but education is a two-way process. It is not just a question of informing the consumers how to be more careful shoppers; it is also a question of giving the consumers the chance to let the department know what they want and where they need protection.

The department has so far set up two new pieces of machinery that are supposed to carry out the function of protecting consumers. These are Box 99, the complaints department, and the consumer advisory council. But characteristically, the approach of both is impersonal.

As far as Box 99 is concerned, people can write to it if they know about it. Here, I give the department credit for taking steps to make it known. Possibly some time later on a letter will be received from the company that caused the particular problem, but what chance does one get personnally and publicly to discuss one's problem? Who knows about it? Does the department publicize the names of the companies that are taking unfair advantage of consumers? What measures are taken to protect other consumers from the same abuses by the same companies?

These are questions that I have had asked me by many correspondents who, as consumers, have had difficulties. The truth is, I believe, that the department of consumer affairs is not prepared to name names or even to provide an agency that will do so. It is simply too much interested in its heartfelt responsibilities to the business community to become effective in carrying out its over-riding responsibilities to consumers.

The second piece of machinery is the consumers advisory council, which according to its chairman ought not to look after short-term, specific problems. Dr. Leighton has said:

> It seems much less productive to me for the council to tackle highly topical questions, such as popsicles, than to study long-term problems.

Who, then, will study these tough, short-term problems? Such specific problems—including popsicles—are the very problems that the consumer has to face day after day.

The consumers advisory council would, in my opinion, be well advised to hold its meetings not always in Ottawa but at various points across Canada, including at each meeting at least one session that is open to the public and at which consumers can make themselves heard. This would put real meaning into the term "participatory democracy". Failure to do this is to substitute verbiage for the real thing.

Another piece of machinery that the minister envisions is a prices and incomes commission. We, in this party, have recommended and shall continue to recommend a prices and incomes review board which would be exposed to the full light of publicity. As the minister presently explains the function of the commission, this body too will undoubtedly engage in long-term, impersonal studies that will have little to do with the immediate problems of people. It, too, will be non-participatory as far as the consumer is concerned.

The proliferation of bureaucratic institutions which stand like a fence between the minister and consumers, coupled with the department's failure to give the public the chance to be heard, dooms the consumer branch to ineffectiveness. And this despite regional offices, which are all to the good and which I hope will knock down a few of the palings in the fence so that at least we can get the odd look at the minister and his department.

This fear of public exposure and review carries itself to the House of Commons. Why is there no standing committee of the house to review the estimates of the department? I address this question to the government house leader as well as to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. With all the other important departments having their standing committees, if the consumers of this country are also important why is there no standing committee of this house to review, in particular the estimates of the minister's department and to undertake special inquiries into consumer problems as they arise? I think this matter is very important and such a committee would at least permit some airing of these problems.

I realize the minister proposes that reports from the prices and incomes commission should be sent to a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons. Why not send them to a committee that is directly responsible to the elected House of Commons?

In my opinion, business interests are already more than adequately represented in the other place. Let us not load such a committee with people who are not responsible in any way to the consumers. I think the House of Commons should have its own committee, instead of squeezing consumer affairs problems in with the already heavily taxed committee that considers the estimates of the department of health and welfare.

May I make one final point. The Combines Investigation Act needs to be overhauled so that it can become effective in protecting consumers. The hon. member for St. John's East has already referred to the Batten report and the role that should be played by the combines investigation department. Last fall we had the Batten commission appealing to the combines branch to investigate directly grocery prices on the prairies. To date, we have been unable to get any information that indicates that the combines branch is doing anything to deal with this matter.

The hon. member for St. John's East mentioned the period of a few weeks, but it has been five months since the Batten report was tabled. This royal commission appointed by the prairie provinces appealed to this department for help in protecting consumers.

Questions I asked during the minister's estimates last fall elicited that the minister had, at least at that time, no intention of bringing down the kind of amendments that would enable the combines branch to carry on such an investigation. He said—

Mr. McGrath: Would the hon. lady permit a question in order that I can correct the record?

Mrs. MacInnis: I will if I can have a few seconds added on.

Mr. McGrath: I did not refer to the Batten report. I was referring to the Alberta royal commission report on gasoline marketing.

Mrs. MacInnis: I thought the hon. member was referring to grocery prices on the prairies as well.

Mr. McGrath: I did refer to those but not in the context of a few weeks; that was the Alberta report.

• (9:30 p.m.)

Mrs. MacInnis: I am glad to be corrected. Until we can get these amendments the Combines Investigation Act is of little use to the housewife who is held up for ransom every time she goes to the grocery store. That has been proven to the satisfaction of almost everyone on the prairies, although it may not have been proven to the satisfaction of the combines director. The situation is, I submit, that the combines director is not satisfied with the evidence. I say that he should be given teeth by our putting teeth into the Combines Investigation Act; that way he could make the necessary further investigations that will satisfy even him that grocery prices on the prairies are away up because of combinations in restraint of trade. Until such time as we can get a Department of Consumer Affairs divorced from the claims of big business—and I urge the establishment of a Department of Consumer Affairs, period—I urge the minister to bend over backwards to strengthen his consumer branch. I urge him to reflect on the profound words of truth which he himself uttered in the budget debate of November 8, 1968, when he said:

> In any event, the effects are no mystery to the victims of inflationary forces. These victims are the Canadians who are old, who are poor, who have no means of adapting their circumstances to the rapid change. They are not organized to insist that their incomes reflect rising price levels. They have no power to insist on a fair share. Citizens who enjoy no bargaining power cannot bargain for a better deal. A fixed income should not mean a fixed injustice.

Until the minister is willing to take the measures necessary to protect the consumer, to bargain for those who have no bargaining power, the fixed injustice will remain. I beg the minister to take additional measures, some of which I have tried to outline constructively tonight and which are essential if the consumer is to be protected.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): In accordance with section 5 of standing order 6, Mr. Chairman, may I ask, with the approval of the committee, to interrupt temporarily the work of the committee so that the house may be in a position to deal with a motion which I propose to move to extend this day's sitting?

The Deputy Chairman: The proceedings of the committee will be temporarily interrupted for the purpose of proposing a motion under section 5(a) of standing order 6.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to section 5(a) of standing order 6 I move, seconded by Mr. Andras:

> That the committee do continue until 12 o'clock p.m. this day for the purpose of continuing consideration in committee of the whole of Bill C-173.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Peters: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mrs. MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The motion is not debatable. Accordingly, since less than ten hon. members have arisen—

Mr. Peters: Would you please put the question, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Question.

[Translation]

Mr. Latullippe: Mr. Speaker, we would be ready to sit until 11 p.m.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

And less than ten members having risen:

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): And less than ten hon. members having risen, the motion is agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Peters: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I do not think you enunciated the rule under which you are proceeding. If an hon. member opposes the motion should not an additional motion be put?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): According to the rules, if after the motion is put less than ten hon. members rise, the motion is deemed to be adopted.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If somebody objects to the motion Your Honour is supposed to ask those opposed to it to stand. I think my hon. friend for Timiskaming meant that Your Honour had not asked hon. members to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. Will those hon. members opposed please rise?

And less than ten hon. members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Fewer than ten hon. members having risen, the motion is deemed to have carried. The house will now resume in committee of the whole.

Mr. McGrath: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the government house leader whether there will be debate at the normal time of adjournment. I have a very important matter I wish to put on record, and wish to avail myself of existing grievance procedures.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would be quite prepared to interrupt proceedings, provided there is unanimous consent and also provided that immediately after the debate the house would revert to consideration of the bill presently before it. Of course, in the strict sense it is not open to me to extend unanimous consent. Perhaps on the understanding that present business would be resumed there might be debate at the normal time of adjournment.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I have a real grievance and I should appreciate the opportunity to put my remarks on the record. I would, therefore, ask leave of the house to make my remarks at ten o'clock.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The government would consent, if it is understood that we return to committee of the whole and continue consideration of the bill, in accordance with the order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Perhaps at ten o'clock the committee might rise and report progress, with the understanding that after the brief interruption present business will be resumed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

On clause 52—

Mr. Mather: Mr. Chairman, since we are again discussing that part of the bill dealing with the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, may I draw the attention of hon. members to clause 52, and in particular the wording of subparagraph (f) on page 19 which reads:

—standards of identity and performance in relation to consumer goods;

Since I am the sponsor of a bill dealing with corporate and consumer affairs, I welcome the chance this evening of saying a few words on the subject. May I say to the minister that if he is given the added authority the amendment seeks to give him, he ought to use that authority with despatch. May I refer to Bill C-169 which is in my name and entitled "An Act to amend the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs Act".

This bill would require, and I hope the minister adopts the idea, that manufacturers should specify at the sales level the design life of products such as appliances. There should be a clear indication of how many months or years service a person can expect when buying it such as electric toasters or refrigerators. The manufacturer and marketer know the design life of the product and this information should be available to the consumer. I urge the minister, in line with this amendment, to follow up this proposal.

I would refer to Bill C-19, "An act to amend the Criminal Code (fine print clauses)" which provides protection to the consumer in the matter of fine print clauses for the purchase of goods or services, and protection against the exclusion clauses which, so often in fine print in the contract, absolve the seller from providing what the buyer thinks he is getting.

Last year, before the minister had taken over this department, he expressed some sympathy with this bill when it was brought before the house. He proposed that instead of larger type as proposed in my bill, that exclusion clauses be put in red type. I personally do not care how the minister or his department do it, but I urge that they enact legislation for the protection of the consumer in this particular and important area. In some contracts, the exclusion clause often changes the meaning of what the consumer thinks he is getting. There is one large area of great and growing concern to millions of consumers, possibly the very largest area. It is one in which standards, performance and services may cost us our money and, in too many cases, our lives. I refer to the field of automobile, trucks, tires, car insurance and repairs. I know Mr. Chairman that car safety standards, specifications of parts standards and tire standards come under the wing of the Minister of Transport.

If I may say so, this is an area where the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs can hardly avoid having an interest. It might be that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and the Department of Transport should have a liaison group to enable both to know what is or is not being done. There is certainly need for action in this field to protect the consumers of Canada.

Last week in reply to a question I asked, the government said that there existed no mandatory standard for tire quality at the federal or national level. There is one thing Canadians use and are paying for, regardless of which province they live in or which official language they speak, and that is cars and car services. With regard to a consumer problem which is clearly the responsibility of his department, that is the standard of car repairs, I urge the minister to follow the lead of the United States legislators who are investigating the high price and low quality of car repairs. On orders of the day I have more than once asked the minister in this house what he was doing in connection with car repairs and an investigation thereof. He has replied more than once that his department is following with interest the proceedings south of the border. I urge the minister, with his new powers, to not just follow with interest but to give leadership in a matter which affects Canadians in every part of this country.

I intend to quote briefly, Mr. Chairman, from a recent article on this point in the March 8 issue of Canadian magazine, which is a weekend supplement of many Canadian newspapers. This is a long and informative article but it will suffice now for me to quote one paragraph:

> Canadians spend a staggering $2 billion to $2½ billion annually on car maintenance. About 6 million cars on our roads each need an average of $330 a year spent on them to keep them running. But many a driver has left a grease shop wondering if he's got his money's worth. A few months ago in Washington, the U.S. government launched hearings on the high cost of car repair. Though it is doubtful if the horror stories related there have the same relevance in Canada there's also some doubt that the industry is as fair and reasonable as most of their spokesmen would have us believe.

This is exactly the point I have been attempting to make this evening, Mr. Chairman. I urge the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to prove its usefulness this year by initiating a similar probe into that important consumer service, car repairs, to the one which is now going forward in the U.S. congressional committee.

[Mr. Mather.]

Mr. Basford: I intend to make just a few remarks. First, I want to thank the hon. member for St. John's East for his helpful contribution to this debate. As I explained to him this afternoon, I will be going to Winnipeg on Monday to meet with the Attorney General of the province of Saskatchewan, along with his counterparts from Manitoba and Alberta, in connection with the Batten report. This is a report of a royal commission appointed by and reporting to these three western provinces. Each provincial prairie premier directed one of his ministers to study recommendations of the Batten report and their possible implementation in their respective provinces.

The chairman of that committee is the Attorney General for Saskatchewan, Mr. Heald. I will be meeting with these provincial ministers to discuss the federal-provincial implications of the Batten report. When the Batten report was made public, it was immediately brought to the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, now the Minister of Justice, who acted very quickly in having it referred to the combines investigation branch. At that time Judge Batten remarked on how very gratified she was by the fast action and speedy reaction she had received from the federal government.

Many of the recommendations in the Batten report have been made by other committees and commissions, including the one that Senator Croll and I headed. Within my department we are looking at a great many programs for the protection of the consumer, and in the course of time we will be dealing with many of the things with which the Batten report deals. Some have been dealt with already and we will be dealing with more which are general consumer programs. I should have more to say on this subject when I return from Winnipeg on Monday night.

With regard to the Alberts Royal Commission on Gasoline Marketing, I should say that this is still being researched by the combines investigations branch. It was received by that branch only a short while ago, but I did say in the house that it was not my intention to amend the Combines Investigation Act until such time as the Economic Council reports on the government's reference to it on competition policy.

I also pointed out that the Alberta royal commission appears to deal with many of the same subjects with which the 1962 Restrictive

Trade Practices Commission report on tires, batteries and Accessories dealt. That T.B.A. report made recommendations on many of the things upon which the Alberta royal commission appears to have made recommendations. For this reason when the Economic Council was asked to consider combines and competition policy the T.B.A. report was referred specifically to it, and for this reason also I have sent a copy of the Alberta study to the Economic Council. I repeat it is not our intention to act on the Combines Act by way of revision until such time as I have the Economic Council's report, and I thought the Economic Council should have before it these various provincial reports.

I concur with the remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's East that we must avoid conflict with the provinces. This is essential, particularly in a new area such as consumer protection in which at both the federal level and the provincial level new departments are being formed and new programs being developed.

I think it is fair to say that in this area of consumer affairs and consumer protection, there is probably a higher level of goodwill and co-operation existing between the federal government and the provincial governments than in many other areas. We had a most successful, most useful and most co-operative conference of officials, federal and provincial, concerned with consumer affairs, last fall. At that time, it was agreed that there would be a federal-provincial conference of ministers concerned with consumer affairs, and the work leading towards that conference is going along well and apace. Therefore I, like the hon. member, am conscious of the necessity for federal-provincial co-operation. I think at the moment we have it. It is my determination to ensure we keep it.

With regard to the remarks of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway, I had difficulty following some of them although she was kind enough to quote me. Apparently some of my remarks she quoted with approval, and others with some disapproval. I thank her at least for those of which she approved.

It has always been a bone of contention with the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway that this department is called the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. At the time the department was set up I could not agree with the hon. member, and I cannot agree with her now. It seems to me that by having some of the corporate statutes that are within my department we are able to do a far better job for the consumer than we would otherwise be able to do. I refer, for example, to the Combines Investigation Act. Ineffective as the hon. member appears to believe it is, it seems to me it is far better contained within a consumer oriented department than within some other department.

The hon. member also mentioned the subject of credit granting. It seems to me that as an instrument to affect the credit granting industry and the practices within that industry, one of the most effective instruments is the Bankruptcy Act, which is in the course of revision, with an input into that revision by the consumer people in my department.

I go back again to the committee that Senator Croll and I chaired, and of which the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway was a very active and valuable member. One of the recommendations we made in that committee was that there should be much better and fuller corporate disclosure than there is at the present time. I ask, who can bring in the best corporate law revisions from the point of view of the consumer but the minister oriented to consumer problems and consumer considerations? That legislation is being readied within my department—

Mr. Orlikow: Where is it?

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Winnipeg North knows. He reads Hansard and he knows my answer on that subject. It seems to me that these corporate instruments within my department and my responsibility provide much of the legal framework within which business operates. Thus, I can do a more effective job for the consumer than if those statutes were not within my department.

I have one other comment to make with regard to the hon. member's remarks about the Batten report. I have explained my position with regard to that to the hon. member for St. John's East. The fact of the matter is that that report was referred to the combines investigation branch. The officials of that branch studied the report and the evidence within it, and met with officials and research staff of the Batten Commission. With the assistance of that staff, the combines branch saw information that has not yet been made public. They saw all of the working papers of the royal commission, and it is the view and the advice of my officials, who have to act within the law, that the royal commission does not show evidence of an offence under the Combines Investigation Act. I have tried to explain to the hon. member that the royal commission report shows many other things but it does not, according to the advice of my officials, indicate an infringement of the law under the Combines Investigation Act.

I revealed at the time, Mr. Chairman and it is very unusual to do so in the course of an investigation simply because that is the best way for the evidence to disappear, that my officials were carrying on an investigation into the pricing activities of a major marketing organization on the prairies. I agree with the hon. member that the Combines Investigation Act needs revision. I had hoped that she would have quoted my previous remarks on that subject, where I stated that I and my officials are determined to revise the act as soon as we have the Economic Council's report.

Mr. Orlikow: When?

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Winnipeg North keeps asking when. Surely, he would not want me to revise it without waiting for the Economic Council's report—

Mr. Orlikow: Why not?

Mr. Basford: —and the advice of the Canadian Labour Congress, which I am sure has a great deal to say about combines policy and a good deal to put into the report of the Economic Council.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway says that I and my officials are wrong because we have not done certain things under the Combines Act as recommended by the Batten report, and seems to indicate that in this respect the Batten Commission is absolutely 100 per cent correct. Yet for some years the hon. member has urged that we have a prices review board, something which the Batten report specifically recommends against establishing. Now, is the Batten report right or is the hon. member wrong in urging a prices review board?

I have to judge the recommendations of that Commission. I have to look at the evidence and their recommendations—

Mrs. MacInnis: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. Basford: Certainly.

Mrs. MacInnis: I would like to ask the minister whether in view of the representations of the Consumers' Association of Canada he does not believe that there should be an investigation forthwith into grocery prices on the prairies, and the Combines Investigation Act ought to be amended, without waiting for the Economic Council report, in order to make that possible?

Mr. Basford: No, I don't think the Combines Act should be amended until the Economic Council reports. I, and two of my predecessors, have made that very clear. If I might just say—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Ten o'clock.

• (10:00 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: Order. It is my understanding that I shall rise, report progress, and that the committee shall be granted leave to sit again later this day.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40, and pursuant to special order made this date, is deemed to have been moved.

INCOME TAX—DEDUCTION FOR BABY SITTING SERVICE

Mrs. Grace MacInnis (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, two days ago I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare this question:

> In view of the news today that businessmen can now take their wives on trips and deduct the expense from income tax, will the minister now consider allowing mothers who work outside their homes to deduct the expense of paying babysitters?

For years some of us have been trying to get income tax deductions for several groups of Canadians. One group is workers who require tools and special equipment. These are people like mechanics, plumbers, carpenters and electricians. These people have no means of deducting these necessary expenses for income tax purposes. It is not permitted under the regulations. Another group is mothers who work outside the home and who, in order to protect their families while they are gone, must have babysitters to look after the family. These mothers, and there are thousands of them across the country, are not permitted to deduct these expenses for income tax purposes. This is a tremendously serious problem. I receive many many letters from constituents and others across Canada. I should like to read one which I have from a constituent:

> For the past 10 years I have been a member of the countless number of women in Canada's labour force who wholly support a family by working every day. During these 10 years I have provided an equally important source of employment to the individual who makes it possible for me to be employed by tending to the needs of my family while I'm not there.
> Now I pay this individual a good enough wage so that she is self-sufficient, even though unskilled, and has not become a burden to society.
> However, when the end of the year rolls around and it's time to "square up" with the government I find that I'm not only liable for my own exorbitant income taxes but must also pay the tax on the wages I've provided for my babysitter.
> This does not seem fair to me, nor does it seem fair to numerous women with whom I am in contact daily faced with the same situation.

As I say, this is one letter out of many letters I have received since I came here from desperate women across this country. In the face of the situation in respect of ordinary workmen and their tools and in respect of ordinary mothers working outside the home who are faced with the expense involved in having to have babysitters, we find a notice in the latest issue of the Canada Gazette to the effect that an employee will not have to pay income tax on money paid for his wife's travelling expenses provided she travels with him at the employer's request and that the main purpose of her going is to assist in attaining the business objectives of the trip.

A government official said the notice, which is not a new law but a new interpretation of an existing law, reflects a more liberal view of expenses advanced to travelling wives. Believe it or not that word "liberal" is not capitalized. It certainly is liberal, and I would hope that the party across from me does not accept it as a rule, because if ever there was anything that was an unfair interpretation and a discriminatory one, it is that. Last year the vice-president and general manager of the Toronto-Dominion Bank lost an appeal of the re-assessment of his 1963 taxes of $15,985. The Tax Appeal Board ruled that $241 which the bank paid toward the expenses incurred by his wife when she accompanied him on a trip to a bank meeting in Saskatchewan was taxable income. This is the case from which arose this new liberal interpretation of the Income Tax Act. The point I want to make is that in order to pay income tax in the amount of $15,985 this man must have been receiving an income of between $30,000 and $40,000. He appealed in respect of $241.

As a result of this appeal this broader interpretation was given. This poor mother to whom I referred, who had been out working in a self-respecting way and paying the wages of a babysitter, in all likelihood receives the average wage for women in industry. That average wage is around $2,500 a year. We have the government reviewing the income tax regulations which affect this man and others like him who receive incomes in the neighbourhood of $30,000 and $40,000. By implication, the government is saying it cannot possibly afford to allow the woman with an income of $2,500 a year an income tax deduction in respect of the money she spends on a babysitter in order to protect her home. I want to suggest that this is discrimination of the most rank and unjust kind. It is an open invitation on the part of this government to businessmen to live high on the swindle sheet. The Carter Commission, when it reported on these matters, indicated that deductions made in respect of income tax at the time the report was made ought to be carefully hedged around and should not be allowed to get out of bounds. These deductions should be kept very carefully within limits at their existing level.

Now, the income tax regulations are being broadened to permit business executives to take their wives with them on business trips and to deduct their expenses for income tax purposes. There does not appear to be any hedging here. Who is to decide in respect of the purpose of the wife going along? Is there to be any affidavit to the effect that she is on a business trip? Indeed, is there to be any affidavit that it is his wife who is going? There have been cases where it was not. Is this regulation to apply to people all the way down the scale? Is it to apply to workers who are not presently allowed income tax deductions in respect of their tools? Is it to apply to their wives when they take them on business trips? This is an inequitable, unfair, unjust tax, and I wish to say so in no uncertain terms.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the hon. lady has made clear that her suggestion in her original question and I shall use her words—that businessmen can now take their wives on trips and deduct the expenses from income tax—was not correct. She has now quoted a report saying a deduction of this type would be acceptable to the income tax authorities only if the travel was at the employer's request for purposes clearly connected with the business activities set forth by the employer for the trip. Also I think the hon. lady is not correct when she suggests the income tax regulations were changed to do this. It is my understanding the memorandum issued by the Income Tax Department was one of an explanatory nature only and which may well have arisen not from the case she mentioned involving the Toronto-Dominion Bank but from another court ruling involving some circumstances connected with a life insurance company executive where the wife apparently was very closely connected with the business purposes of the convention in question.

I would also like to point out to the hon. lady that the suggestion she made in her question, which is one that people on all sides of the house have brought to the attention of the government, namely, that mothers who work outside their home be allowed to deduct the expense of babysitters to care for their children, would require, if it were to be put into effect, not a simple change in the interpretation of the regulations but an actual amendment of the act. Representations to this effect are receiving study during the examination of the recommendations of the Carter commission and other proposals regarding tax reform from other sources. This study is under way at the present time by the government.

As the house knows, the government has said it intends to table a white paper in June setting forth its proposals for tax reform. I am sure the hon. lady knows it is not customary for the government to announce recommendations for changes in the Income Tax Act except in the course of a budget presentation, unless there are special circumstances in which it puts forward a series of proposals as part of a white paper. The representations in the area the hon. lady has mentioned are similar to those which have been put forward, as I have said, by hon. members on all sides of the house, and they are receiving consideration at this time.

FISHERIES—SEALS—REPORT ALLEGING FRAUDULENT FILM PRESENTATION OF KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, my grievance refers to the question that I directed to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Davis) yesterday and the day before regarding a film which is once again being circulated around the western world and is doing great harm to Canada's international reputation. I asked the minister if he would agree to having a memorandum, which very thoroughly goes into this subject, tabled in the house so that hon. members can read for themselves the real facts. Only today there was a demonstration at our consulate in New York City over the showing of this film on New York television a few days ago, and there have been demonstrations in Germany and other countries in western Europe. I am particularly concerned because I understand the film in question, produced by Artek Films Ltd., was commissioned by the French network of the C.B.C., Radio Canada. Reference was made to this in the Maclean's magazine edition of March 5, 1966. I would like to refer briefly to the memo, which reads as follows:

This has reference to your request for the facts we know concerning the first film made on sealing in the Gulf of St. Lawrence. The information we possess is given below:

1. The film was made by Artek Films Ltd. of Montreal in March of 1964.
2. The chief cameraman was Mr. André Fleury, assisted by Mr. Uwe Konemann.
3. Mr. Serge Deyglun wrote the script and voiced it for the film. Mr. Henri Stadt arranged the background music.
4. The filming commenced two days before the opening of the sealing season.
5. Before the film crew went to the ice, they allegedly asked for permission to do so from Fishery Officer Beauchesne. Mr. Beauchesne does not recall having given such permission to Fleury or Deyglun, but even if he had been asked he would not have been able to prevent them from going to the ice for the purpose of shooting film. The fact that seals were killed before the opening of the season, however, constituted an illegal act.
6. Three, and possibly four Magdalen Islanders were employed and we have written statement from Mr. Gustav Poirier in which he states that he was asked by the people making the film to torment a seal with a knife.
7. The film was shown on the Magdalen Islands on the evening of March 7th, 1966, at which time positive identification was made of three of the Magdalen Island hunters who appeared in the film.
8. Following the showing of the film Messrs. Mark Ronayne and A. Arsenault and Fishery Officers Dudka and Beauchesne had a discussion with Messrs. Konemann and Stadt who were also present for the showing.
9. Under questioning Konemann admitted that he had attempted to skin the live seal but that this had made him ill and one of the hunters shown in the film partly finished the job. He was asked for a written statement but said that he could not provide this since he was afraid of being boycotted in the film industry. He indicated, however, that if a formal inquiry was initiated, he would answer questions put to him.
10. The hunter shown in the film using a rifle with a scope to shoot adult seals both on the ice and in the water was identified as Serge Deyglun. The killing of these seals was done out of season.
11. One portion of the film had a scene with a Magdalen Islander poking at an adult seal with what appeared to be a knife.

12. Messrs. Konemann and Stadt both stated that they did not have any control over the final version of the film; also that they did not lie the way the film had been done and regretted the impact it had on the sealing industry.

That memorandum to the Minister of Fisheries is dated Ottawa, February 29, 1968. Yesterday in a daily trade publication published in New York City, reference was made to the questions raised in the house by myself a few days ago. I will quote from that publication, which is called Women's Wear Daily, the retailer's daily newspaper. It refers to a New York official of the S.P.C.A. and reads in part as follows:

Thursday morning, he added—

He is talking about today.

—there will be pickets outside the Canadian Consulate and Tourist Office here. Placards with photos and statements will protest the Canadian seal hunt.

This film has been circulated every year since it was first produced under commission by Radio Canada in 1964. It has been shown extensively in West Germany and other western European countries, and in the United States. It has resulted in demonstrations at Canadian consulate offices and embassies in these countries. I suggest it has done great harm to Canada's good reputation abroad and is doing very serious damage to the sealing industry in this country, which is so important as a supplementary source of income to the islanders of the Magdalen Islands, the fishermen of Newfoundland and the fishermen of Gaspé.

I submit that the very serious allegations and charges made in this memorandum which was submitted to the minister last year, referring to the film which is once again being circulated, are serious enough to warrant a parliamentary investigation. My purpose in bringing this matter to the attention of the house and the minister is to ask for such an investigation. I request that this matter be referred to either the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry or the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for a thorough investigation. I ask for this investigation because the film has done more to hurt Canada's image abroad than anything else in the last 20 years. It has done serious damage to the Canadian sealing industry, and is doing so every day.

I know that the minister and the government are genuinely just as anxious as I and other hon. members to have this matter cleared up once and for all. I submit that the only way this can be done is for the government to agree to having the matter referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry or the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for a full parliamentary investigation, so that Canada's good reputation can be protected.

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) does not expect me to comment on the various sources which he quoted, the magazine, newspaper articles, and so on. I am sure, also, that he does not really expect me to comment on the material which he sent over to me and which I described as part of an internal memorandum which was prepared by the Department of Fisheries just over a year ago for the use of the then minister of fisheries.

I can say to him that I am endeavouring to check some of these alleged facts. I have been making an inquiry, particularly with the C.B.C., which did contract for the original film back in 1964. I am determined to find out what happened in respect of the production of copies of the film. I understand the original of the film is still the property of the C.B.C., and is in the possession of the C.B.C.

We are concerned about copies which are being shown in other parts of the world. I am concerned also, to the extent of working with the Department of External Affairs, to find out who is showing this film and under what circumstances. I do not think that at this time I can promise the hon. member that I would ask to have this matter referred to one of our parliamentary committees. First I would like to know more of the facts myself. It is a serous matter and, as the hon. member says, it is creating a good deal of disturbance in other countries. A great deal of misinformation is being broadcast around the world as a result of the copies of that original film.

I am sure he is also aware of the fact that other visits have been made to the hunt in recent years and that films taken of the hunt itself, particularly in colour, are also bound to cause some distress in some parts of the world. It is a serious subject and I will do my best to produce some of the facts for which the hon. member has asked.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Pursuant to a special order made this day, the proceedings on the motion to adjourn are now terminated. The house will now resume the business which was interrupted at ten o'clock.

Government Organization

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Béchard in the chair.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The house is again in committee of the whole on bill C-173. The committee will now proceed to clause 52.

On clause 52.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I will just be a minute longer to remark on some comments of the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway relative to the box 99 program which she said was impersonal and unrelated to people. I want to deny that charge, and I do so rather vehemently. I think it is a rather unique program and the government should be commended for setting up a special branch called the Canadian Consumer, Box 99, Ottawa, and for spending money and effort to go out and urge people who have complaints and suggestions to write to box 99.

This is a rather unique experiment which is working very well, and I say this on behalf of the officials in my department. We have a problem to make people aware of the fact that box 99 exists. My officials and I spend a great deal of time and effort trying to get the concept of box 99 across to people. Everywhere I go I speak on hot line programs. We send out mail, communiques and notices. My officials go on speaking tours and talk about box 99 all the time. We want to involve the people of Canada in that program, and this is the exact opposite of being impersonal or unrelated to people. This is one of the most people-related programs of the government of Canada. As the hon. member said, we do not go about naming people who have made complaints to box 99 and in this way getting headlines because the average citizen who writes to us with a complaint does not want his or her name in the newspaper. My officials are concerned with solving that complaint and not with getting headlines. If the complaint shows us that some criminal or other offence has been committed under the Weights and Measures Act or under an agricultural products act, then we report the evidence to the appropriate authorities, either federal or provincial.

So, I do not agree with the criticism of that program made by the hon. member. I think it is one of the most people oriented programs of this government.

I will conclude by referring to the remarks made by the hon. member for Surrey and will mention only one of the three points he made, namely the one regarding automobile safety. This matter is the responsibility of the Minister of Transport, but there is an interdepartmental committee on consumer affairs and my officials are on it and take an interest in the subject.

Mr. Orlikow: I was interested in the remarks made by the minister about the proposed anti-combines legislation. This is my seventh year in the house and it is the seventh year that I have heard ministers explain why this month or this session is not the time to bring in legislation to do something about the spreading of the iniquitous combines which exist. We have had anti-combines legislation in this country for almost 50 years, legislation introduced by a Liberal government under the leadership of the long-time Liberal prime minister of this country, Mr. Mackenzie King. For many years, until the public realized the futility of that legislation, the Liberal party and Mr. King used to make out that this was one of the jewels in the kind of good, progressive government which they were giving this country. We have not heard much about that subject in recent years because there is not a person in Canada who does not realize that our anti-combines legislation is, to a large extent, futile, and where it is not futile, is a hoax.

The department has some very good people carrying out investigations into these combines when they have complaints. I can think of many such investigations, such as the one into the possible combine in the price of prescription drugs, investigations about paper, about paper boxes, and about glass. There have been dozens of investigations which were very carefully and capably conducted, as a result of which many combines have been found to exist and the cases were taken to court. Over the past 50 years we have had, I suppose, hundreds of companies investigated which I could take the time to name but which I will not because I am sure the minister knows the subject better than I do.

These companies were prosecuted and convicted not just once but, speaking from memory, as many as four times. The companies were fined and, until very recently, the maximum fine imposed on them was $10,000. Recently, the fine has gone up to $25,000. As the Leader of the Opposition said on other occasions, what is a fine like that? It is a darn cheap licence to steal from the public.

The minister said we had to wait for the report of the Economic Council of Canada before drafting amendments to the anti-combines legislation. I do not know whether or not the minister or the government gave the Economic Council a deadline by which they should report, but why do we have to wait for the report of the Economic Council? Is there any question that we have combines operating flagrantly and openly in this country? Surely, there is none if we study the number of successful prosecutions that we have had. Is there any question that the present legislation and the penalties prescribed by the law as well as the attitude of the judges have failed completely to stop combines and to stop companies from getting together in combines to set exorbitant prices? Almost from the first year I came here I have had on the order paper a private members bill, which has been discussed two or three times, in which I propose a simple amendment to the legislation, that an officer of a company convicted for the second time of being party to an illegal combine which milks the public should be subject to a mandatory jail sentence.

I am not one noted for feeling we ought to be tough on those who break the law, but I know that when I try to discuss this question I can hardly get hon. members opposite to listen. They think it is terrible I should make this suggestion. But I do not see why a person who robs a grocery store or a bank should go to prison while a corporation director, who may be a member of the Rideau Club across the street, should be considered to belong to one of the top drawers of society. I think he should be penalized in the same way. The government, of course, thinks this is nonsense. Canadians often tend to look down their noses at the way things are done in the United States. We tend to think Americans are not like ourselves, and in many ways they are not. Their legislation is not perfect but the other day they set us a good example, using legislation which is much better than our own. In the near future, the minister is to bring before us again a bill which hopefully will do something about reducing drug prices. I suppose we shall support that bill while pressing for certain amendments. But the minister knows, as I do, that this measure will do very little to improve the situation.

By contrast, look at what happened in the United States within the last month. Five or six of the biggest United States drug companies, all of which have Canadian subsidiaries, were charged in a United States court with having combined to keep the price of one particular drug, tetracyclin, at a price much higher than it ought to have been. Under United States law, after a company has been convicted of having been a party to an illegal combine, a consumer has the right to sue for damages. I am speaking from memory, but I believe I am correct when I say a consumer has the right to sue for triple damages. When the companies realized they were going to be convicted and that various state, municipal and other institutions such as hospitals, the veterans' administration and so on, intended to sue them in respect of the over charges they had made in the pricing of this one drug, they agreed to settlements out of court under which they would pay the sum of $120 million.

We beg, borrow and steal enough ideas from the United States. Why cannot the minister bring in legislation of this type? Why must we wait another six months or another year or another two years for the Economic Council to bring in a report? I have obviously more confidence in the minister's officials who have been working in the field of anti-combines legislation for many years, than the minister has himself. I do not think there is any need to wait for a report from the Economic Council. The Economic Council is a good group of economists, probably the best we have in Canada, but they can tell us only what we already know. They can document probably in more detail than is so far available the fact that in every important facet of Canadian life there are combines. I would point out that the Economic Council does not to my knowledge have lawyers on its staff, the kind of people who can tell us exactly what should be in the law if we really intend to do something about combines. These men are employed by the minister's department. The minister ought not to tell us tonight that he has to wait for the Economic Council to study this question.

There have been so many examples of conduct of the kind we ought to be suppressing.

Not more than a year ago, because of the war in Viet Nam and because of the strike of copper workers in the United States, one major Canadian company which only a month or so earlier had announced the largest profit it had ever made in one year—I am speaking of Noranda—increased the price of its copper by eight cents a pound. I am speaking from memory. Why was this action taken? The answer is: because the market was there. And immediately, International Nickel, Cominco and all the other companies followed suit. I suggest to the minister that a combine was operating in this case. These companies got together and agreed they could get seven or eight cents a pound more.

The former minister of trade and commerce told us he would look into this situation. He did so, and then suggested we were very lucky, because in Britain the price had been raised by twice as much. But, Mr. Chairman, there was no need for this increase in the price of copper, an increase which led immediately to higher prices for all consumer goods in which copper was used. What did the government do about the increase? Nothing.

It is no service to the Canadian people for the minister to tell us tonight that he can do nothing about amending the anti-combines laws, laws which I think not even the hon. gentleman would defend as being adequate, until he has received a report from the Economic Council. After he gets such a report he will, I suppose, hopefully, tell his law officials to go ahead. That will take a year or two, by which time there may be another election and a new administration which will not even agree with what the present government might propose. I suggest the minister should tell us tonight that he intends to move forward in this field, and act not later, but now.

Mr. Mahoney: I hope the minister will not get the impression that this is my day to have a vendetta with him. I can well appreciate his reasons for not amending the Combines Investigation Act piecemeal. However, we are faced with an anomalous situation.

When the legislation was first brought in, it dealt with commodities, or tangible goods. Subsequently, the fixing of insurance premiums was brought under the act. Insurance is the only service industry aspect with which the law presently deals, and in this day and age where service industries probably account for 35 per cent of our gross national product it escapes me why the act cannot at least be extended to cover service industries, even if the rest of it is left unchanged. We are well aware of price fixing arrangements in service industries which are completely escaping the purview of the act at present.

Mr. Peters: Because of the way in which responsibility is distributed within our caucus, I did not expect to have an opportunity to speak on this particular part of the bill. However, as a result of the arrangements made possible by the government, and I certainly wish to thank the people of the house in this connection, an opportunity has been afforded to me and I believe I should avail myself of it.

I have been interested in all aspects of Bill C-173 but particularly in the part which concerns the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Everyone in the house expects a great deal from this department, more, perhaps, than from any other department with the possible exception of the Department of National Health and Welfare from which we also expect a great deal. These two departments, I suggest, affect the lives of individuals in Canada more than any other section of government, with the one exception of the department headed by the Minister of National Revenue, at a time that is shortly approaching.

I am pleased that authority over the combines investigation branch is remaining with the minister. I am sure that if the minister is able to make any immediate change in any of his new responsibilities, it will be here. In my office—I think the same is true of other members—I have row after row of reports made under the Combines Investigation Act dealing with such things as gasoline, tires, fencing, automobile accessories and so on. It has always interested me to note that after an investigation is completed, and due process of law has taken place, a company that has made $5 million or $6 million from a particular combine is only required to pay a penalty of, say, $10,000. The company is not required to pay back the money it illegally collected from the public.

It seems to me that if I were a bank robber any bank I robbed would want its money back. They would not think it sufficient that I pay the penalty of a bank robber, eight or ten years in jail, and that I keep the money I stole. The other day I read in a paper that somebody had stolen $1.4 million, I think it was, and although the thief went to jail the court wanted the thief to pay the money back. Yet, we do not ask combines to refund their ill-gotten gains; payment of a penalty is sufficient. I am pleased the maximum penalty has been increased, but it is still not high enough to prevent the same firms committing the same offence again.

I can call to mind two combines as examples, flour and steel. In each case no refund was made to the consumers even though the companies concerned were found guilty of combining and illegal price setting. Although the court decides in most cases how much money has been made by a combine operation, it does not require repayment of that money to the people; although guilty of the offence, the combine keeps the money.

Why the distinction between such cases and bank robbers? If he pays his penalty to society, why cannot the bank robber keep his ill-gotten gain? I am sure that the Economic Council would not look at this question from the layman's point of view but from the economic point of view, how it has affected the industry concerned. If the industry is not particularly competitive then the penalty will be paid.

I am pleased to see corporate affairs retained in the department, because I feel it is here the minister will make the biggest impression. I think even the smallest effort will produce results in this field. Even though Canada is industrially developed it is not able to enforce the honesty of advertising as other countries do.

For example, a television advertisement shows a very attractive girl in a bathtub using a particular brand of soap. It is, of course, the best soap. The impression is created that if all women used that kind of soap, they would also be attractive. This is not true.

Mr. Aiken: How do you know?

Mr. Peters: Well, I do not think it is true, but I would willingly refer the matter to the Economic Council for further study. It might even be decided to hold an investigation, and I would be happy to serve on the committee. But it is safe to say that most advertising of this kind does not guarantee the results indicated.

When I was a miner people would knock on my door and claim that if I bought, say, a blender I would save so much money on baby food and on other items that have to be predigested. I was told that if I bought a freezer I would again save money by buying under a freezer plan.

It always reminded me of a neighbour of mine who had a particular make of car. As people are prone to do, he kept telling me it travelled so many miles to the gallon and was the best vehicle on the road. We all like to think that because we do not want to admit we have made a mistake. I always used to laugh because the young boys would tell me that, having told me how far his car would go on a gallon of gas, he often had to stop the car and pump gas out of his tank because he was getting more mileage than he thought.

Obviously there is something wrong with the claims of people who knock on doors and tell the housewives they will save so much money by buying certain products. This policy just does not seem to work. I suggest that it is with this sort of thing that the minister of consumer affairs will have to concern himself.

If I may give another example, I recently stopped at a grocery store to buy an aerosol can. It seems these products have very little labelling to indicate the contents of the can. In some cases the can weighs one pound, in other cases 12 ounces and in still other cases eight ounces, yet the cans are all the same size. Naturally, it is difficult for housewives to determine how much liquid is in the can.

The same is true with other products. In this regard, I think the minister will find himself running into problems with packaging. For example, I have talked to many women who tell me that they really want the tea towel contained in a box of soap powder more than the soap powder itself. If the box were full it would contain a great deal of soap. Since it probably contains a towel, the size of the box bears little relation to the amount of soap it contains. The housewife does not know how much soap she is getting; nothing on the package tells her that accurately. Consequently, she cannot compare the prices of brands A, B and so on, of soap.

Another problem we run across is connected with the labelling of poisonous or semi-poisonous substances. Many commodities, like aspirin, do not harm adults when taken internally in fairly large doses but can prove lethal to children. Many household cleaning substances are not marked "Poison" because it is not expected small children will use them. Many housewives of course keep these cleaning materials within reach of children and may not be aware of the danger to which they are exposing the children. The other day I read in the newspaper where a child swallowed an L.S.D. capsule, with disastrous results. An adult would have been affected differently. As for the child, its respiration stopped, heartbeat was reduced, and if medical attention had not been immediately available it would have died. Clearly, the child obtained a commodity which was not dangerous for adults but dangerous for children.

I also wish to raise the matter of grading clothes according to size. We seem to have no standards for grading the size of clothes. A woman may go to a store to buy a size 8 garment for a child, only to find it does not fit that child. Our clothing is made to fit average people; but since most children are either below or above their average in height or weight, clothes often do not fit. While sizing clothes this way may not be dishonest, it certainly is irksome to the housewife. These remarks also apply to shoes as well as to many types of wearing apparel for adults and children. The department ought to establish some standards with regard to sizing, so that we may know exactly the size of the clothes we buy.

Labels on clothes or curtains are often misleading. Materials that are said to be washable are found after washing to shrink. The same is true of dry cleaning. I have been to a local laundry and heard women complain that curtains which, according to the label, could be dry cleaned had shrunk after dry cleaning. Another complaint is that labels on some consumer goods are not specific enough to enable consumers to determine exactly what they are buying. Sometimes a consumer will not know if goods are being sold at bargain prices, mainly because labels describing those goods are not clear in their meaning.

Last year the agricultural committee visited western Canada. I had the opportunity of visiting several flour mills and was interested, on talking to grain commissioners, to find that flour shipped out of this country must be labelled accurately. We, in Canada, buy flour of two grades—general purpose flour and cake flour. Yet those countries buying our flour know whether they are buying No. 1 Northern, No. 3 Northern, No. 3 Milling and so on. Our flour is not graded in our grocery stores and it may be that the consumer is not buying those grades of flour to which he is entitled. The minister said that an investigation is being conducted into this matter, as well as into the matter of groceries in western Canada. Before introducing changes in this field, I know he must wait for that report.

Other investigations in other fields are being conducted in this country. In northern Ontario an investigation has been going on for a number of years into gasoline prices. No decision has yet been made and the price structure of gasoline in northern Ontario has not changed. The industry knows up there that it is being investigated, yet seems unconcerned. There would be no harm in making inquiries under the Combines Investigation Act public inquiries. People being investigated could make representations and we would know where they stood. A number of factors are involved in the matter of gasoline in northern Ontario. For one thing, there are too many gas stations for the area to support. That is the fault of the gas companies which have built more gas stations than are needed. Owners of these gas stations cannot make a decent living unless they charge exorbitant prices for gasoline, the result being that gasoline prices in Northern Ontario are considerably higher than in other parts of Canada. I point out that the blame does not lie with operators of the stations but with the big companies which have built too many stations, to the detriment of the community.

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. member's time has expired.

Mrs. MacInnis: Mr. Chairman, may I again address myself to the minister. I am distressed by his inability to understand one or two of the points I tried to make. I will make it a little easier for him to understand what I am driving at by asking him three specific questions. I would appreciate his answering those questions. I asked a question before in connection with "Box 99", and I want to raise the matter more specifically now. The idea of "Box 99" being the point to which people can address their grievances is good so far as it goes, but it breaks down because consumers have nowhere to go to hear the results of their inquiries. There is no advantage to consumers in having "Box 99". It seems that the consumer will ask a question or bring up a complaint, and that will be that.

I ask the minister, where legitimate grievances are found following investigation, will his department publish the result so that consumers may be spared buying faulty products from companies who are defrauding and shortchanging the public in various ways? Secondly, will the minister consider discussing with the consumer advisory council the desirability of this council holding meetings in different Canadian centres, and that such meetings include at least one's session at each centre for a public hearing?

Third, will the minister consider pressing for a House of Commons standing committee on consumer affairs strictly accountable to this house? I would appreciate answers to those three specific questions. If the minister finds it difficult to understand those questions, I will make them even simpler for him. I really want answers to those questions.

Mr. Basford: I regret the answer to all three questions is no. With regard to Box 99, my officials are and will deal with the individual complaint that has been made and make every possible effort to correct the situation. If there has been a breach of the law revealed by that complaint, we will take action to see that the person breaching the law is properly prosecuted. If the complaints demonstrate that people need education in a certain area, we will use our communique and other means to inform consumers of the possible dangers or hazards. If the complaints indicate that legislation should be passed, and we decide it should be passed, every possible effort will be made to pass it.

On the second point with regard to the consumer advisory council, this is an independent council and I am not in a position to decide whether they travel around. This council has a limited budget for the first year and for the moment that money could be better spent establishing themselves, hiring research assistants and getting some projects under way.

With regard to the third question, my concern at the moment is the establishment of the price and incomes committee and the parliamentary committee that goes along with that. That is my priority for the establishment of committees. As the hon. member knows, it is up to this house to establish committees. Last October and December, the committee on procedure studied the committees of the house and a consumer affairs committee was not established. The unanimous decision of an all party committee was that the committees of the house as listed in the order paper were to be the committees. They did not include one on consumer affairs.

Mr. Skoberg: I was somewhat surprised, Mr. Chairman, at the attitude the minister displayed toward my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway, and the offhand attitude he displayed in this house this evening. I agree that his department is probably well versed in problems affecting consumer prices, but I cannot understand why the consumer must go to the department to get action. It is completely idiotic to expect people who buy a package of cereal to write to Box 99 to the effect that in less than three weeks an item such as "Shreddies" has gone up five cents while the price of grain has remained the same or has decreased. It does not seem proper in this modern day for the minister to expect people to go to his department for action.

There is a lot of talk about a price and wage review board. Prices and wages have gone up, but the government has done nothing to see why profits have gone up. If there is to be a price and wage review board, then the government must look into the question of profits. I am amazed a department will be set up under this reorganization without any recommendation from the minister to include responsibility for prices, wages and profits. If the minister would be serious for one moment, he would realize this has to be initiated from the top. It cannot be done from the bottom.

Letters have been received from senior citizens and families now subjected to consumer costs beyond their means. It is completely wrong that a department should suggest to these people that they must come to the government to find out why prices have risen. Any member of the minister's department could go into a store for one, two or three weeks and he would find out where the profits are and why the prices are so high.

It is strange the research people the minister mentioned cannot do something to find out why these prices have gone up. Possibly, it might be wise to go back a few years to the time price controls were lifted and see what happened then. Price increases followed immediately without waiting for wage increases. The price of steel jumped 12 per cent, but the government did not ascertain the reason for this. Transactions such as this are often put into effect in the stillness of the night without any previous announcement. The government did not do anything to stop excessive profit making by Canadian corporations from that time to the present, and no doubt will not do anything in the future. It is true that certain Canadian corporations were prosecuted for price fixing, but at the same time as they were being prosecuted price fixing continued. The profits rose merrily without a word from the government or anyone else in a responsible position.

In 1966 the profits of Canadian corporations were $5.5 billion, all extracted from a population of 20 million people. I ask the minister whether this is fair. I would give the minister credit for initiating this program if there were somebody at the top who would take the initiative to do something about this problem.

In presiding over the trial of certain Canadian bakeries, Justice Boyd McBride stated:

> It was a system of misrepresentation and fraud, a system of plunder comparable to meeting a man on the street and forcibly robbing him of his money ... practices of this kind perpetuated by so-called reputable companies must be scathingly denounced by this court and I do denounce them.

The minister knows it is many years since this happened. Since that time there has been no effort on the part of any government to do anything about the matter, even though a Supreme Court justice made such statements.

The Vancouver Sun of April 20, 1961, carried the statement of the manager of an electrical firm in which he admitted that knowledge of price fixing went all the way to the top and that he had been ordered to attend illegal meetings with competitors to stabilize the market. Hon. members left in this chamber, and not too many of those who voted to stay are here, know what is going on today. All they have to do is look at the prices of products on store shelves. I think it is shameful that the consumer is subjected to this type of treatment.

E. P. Taylor, who controls all but one of Canada's major breweries, has been reported as saying:

> I am sure that we have the power to control prices and sales practices and while it may be necessary for us to start local price wars here and there to discipline a small competitor, I am sure the profits will prove most gratifying to the shareholders.

E. P. Taylor is recognized as a great Canadian, but I suggest that any Canadian who would make a statement such as that is not doing a service to the country or to those he is supposed to represent.

Adam Smith, a well known political economist, stated:

> People of the same trade seldom meet, even for merriment or diversion, but the conversation ends in a conspiracy against the public or in some contrivance to raise prices.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

Surely, the minister and the government must know that there is a conspiracy right now to raise prices. Prices are being raised, and the effect is greatest on those least able to afford them. We have now got to the stage where people have to write to a box number to tell the minister about increases, but this serves no useful purpose. I am sure the minister and his department look into situations that are referred to them, but after doing so do they really prosecute those responsible in the courts? Do they let the people of Canada know what they are dealing with? I do not think they do.

We must realize the defenders of the so-called tight money policy and of the profit system are those who are taking the actual dollars out of the individual's pockets. The government should be willing to tell these people that the country will stand so much and no more. A government big enough to stand up and do that would have the respect of the entire population. It would not be subject to the treatment that most politicians get, including the minister, when he goes out on to the hustings, finds large families in want and tells them to write to Box 99. I am sure he is not proud of having to do that in our present day society.

The greatest problem facing Canadian families today is the ever increasing cost of living. This is the first item mentioned by people in reply to questionnaires that I have sent out. Pensioners and others on low fixed income are going to lose their homes and everything else due to the rising cost of living. The results of a recent Gallup poll showed that 47 per cent of those questioned cited high living costs as the source of their biggest troubles. We can imagine the category in which the others are, when the cost of living does not bother them.

Since 1965 the cost of food has gone up 12 per cent, clothing 13 per cent, housing 11 per cent, transportation 10 per cent, health care 12 per cent and recreation 12 per cent. These figures are not up to date, but I am sure the minister has the most recent figures. In the same period, despite some unusually large wage gains in 1966-67, over-all wage increases have barely kept pace with price increases. Many hundreds of thousands of workers in low paid jobs have actually seen the purchasing power of their earnings diminish.

All members in this chamber, even with the great amount of money they are now receiving, know that the purchasing power of that money is steadily declining. We all should know what it must be like for those with incomes below $3,000 a year.

Those who are hardest hit by spiralling living costs are pensioners and others on fixed incomes. They are our senior citizens and our retired civil servants. With this so-called inflation, those who were previously self-supporting can no longer be self-supporting. I suppose this is the type of people the minister suggests should write to box 99.

When these people are completely down and out, and have to go into nursing homes for which they cannot pay, they must go on the welfare rolls. We all know that at one time $4,000 a year was considered the minimum at which a person could have any reasonable type of living. This figure has skyrocketed since then. We know that there are millions of underprivileged people in this country right now, and still we sit in this house and piously say we are going to set up a Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. If the minister is really concerned with the poor people, then please let him do something. Let him initiate action and not wait for action to be initiated from some other source.

Some governments and some members of parliament suggest that labour is the villain responsible for all our problems, but this suggestion does not stand up to examination. If labour is not the villain, then it should be obvious that prices are being raised arbitrarily to increase company profits. I am sure we do not have to look very far to find what is going on.

If profits are a sacred cow to the minister, his department and the government, then that explains why the government does not act. More than anything else, the word "profits" is the root of the entire economic ills of the country. Now, Mr. Chairman, I should point out that no one in this party has ever said that an investor is not entitled to a fair return. It has been suggested that we would like to go after corporations and cut out their profits completely. This is completely false. Anybody making that suggestion is putting out a red herring. If this department were to have responsibility for the three areas of prices, wages and profits, then I would have more respect for it.

Many cases come to mind of individuals who have written to us and told us about conditions. I imagine every member of this house has been in this same position. We have the situation in the maritimes; we have seen the situation out west and everywhere else. I am sure similar conditions exist in all these areas. If one looks, I am sure one will find them, but if one chooses to hide his head and tell the people to write to box 99, he will not find these conditions. If we are not prepared to do something about this, then we will have to continue with the profiteering racket we have in this country. We know that in a short period more than 200 Canadian corporations have been found guilty of price fixing, some of them two and three times. That is quite a record in respect of the corporations of this country. The average fine for price fixing in fact amounts to one tenth of one per cent of the firm's annual profit. Such fines are little more than a licence to steal. I am sure the minister is concerned about this, and therefore he will realize that if we are prepared to allow these robbers to steal the consumers blind we can sit here forever and a day discussing this bill.

I should like the minister to stand up and say he agrees there are three areas in so far as the consumers are concerned. I ask the minister to try to initiate some pricing examination in the supermarkets which we have today. If he or the officials of the department would do this, I am sure they would receive many more letters addressed to box 99. So long as the people themselves have to write individual letters, and do not know what happens in respect of convictions, we will accomplish very little.

In closing, may I say that I give the minister credit for trying to have a people-oriented program by means of box 99. I am sure it may be small consolation to him, after what I have said, that I mean what I say in this regard. If he himself will initiate an examination of this nature, I am sure the people will follow along. If the government is not prepared to lead the way in an examination of consumer prices, then the government can expect very little support from the people of this nation.

Mr. Thomson: Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether it is the minister's misfortune to be in charge of this department at a time when everything is going up or whether, as some people might suggest, that since he is in charge of consumer affairs he is responsible for things going up. I would like to take the kinder view and assume he is just unfortunate that this happens to be an awkward time. I think the responsibility in respect of this type of thing is more than just doing something wrong; I think it is in not doing the right thing to change the situation. I believe this is where we might be critical of the minister. Since the problem is here, and since he has this department, I think it only reasonable to assume that he should have some responsibility to see that prices are maintained at a reasonable level. It would seem that often his job as minister of consumer affairs has only involved explaining why prices have gone up. I am not prepared to accept this. I believe he should be prepared to take some action to restrain prices and help the people meet the increased cost of living. I think he should get in motion.

I should like to mention a couple of items which I think are responsible for part of the increase in the cost of living. Not too long ago in the province of Saskatchewan, the Liberal government of that province instituted a prices commission headed by Mrs. Batten. She suggested that the stores there were overbuilt and that they actually outran the needs of the people. I would think that the minister perhaps would look into a situation like this and consider the recommendations made by Mrs. Batten. This might be part of the reason prices have gone up.

At the present time the Alberta legislature is looking into the problems of service station operators in that province. These operators are being squeezed. In this case, while the service station operator puts his effort into tne running of the station, the public does not benefit too much. It is oil companies which benefit. I wonder whether perhaps the minister would look into the problem of improper pressure being put on small individuals by large companies.

I suggest that part of our service economy is overcapitalized. I wonder whether there could be some encouragement given or some restraint offered in respect of some sections of our industry so that the needs of the public will not be abused. I do not think this is an ureasonable request.

We educate our people to a great degree so that they can go out, earn money and become princes of industry. One area which I believe we have neglected, however, is the area in respect of budgeting for families. I should like to see some education offered to housewives or family people in the field of budgeting and buying efficiency so that they would be better able to meet the changing conditions. I think this is one area at which the minister might well take a serious look.

[Mr. Thomson.]

There is one last matter I should like to mention. I had a letter from the owner of a bake shop in my riding. This gentleman produces a very good local product. He suggested that the problem in his case was different. He stated that the large bread companies were offering bread in this area at a rate with which he could not compete. If in the long term this situation should continue I believe there might be a reasonable argument that this is a service to the people. But what has happened in some cases in this type of thing is that the price cuts in respect of bread are maintained only so long as the small business remains in operation. Once this business has been eliminated, prices return to a more normal level. I think this is another area in which the department might become interested. I believe in efficiency. I would like to see prices cut in order to help those who have a problem because of the cost of living. But let me suggest there are many situations in this regard which are not desirable. I have referred this particular case to the minister, and I hope he will look into it seriously.

I am not too sure just to what degree it is necessary to have proof with regard to these situations. These things are a bit on the vague side. Is it necessary to show that somebody deliberately cut prices, that there was an actual combine, or is this little business just to go out of operation because some large company wants to see it go? This is a problem for the minister. I am not sure I have the solution, but I hope that he will take a serious look at it. It is in effect a restraint in trade.

Mr. Harding: Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up too much time on this bill, but I have been waiting for this section to come along so that I might say a few words about it. Of all the departments in government, this is one of the most important.

I think this is one facet of government where something could and should be done to control the sharp increases in living costs which are bedevilling the Canadian people, particularly those on fixed incomes. For quite a long period of time we have heard a great deal about the sharp increases in the cost of living. We have heard various political parties and individuals talk about solutions to these problems. Yet as time goes on we find that the problem, instead of getting better is actually getting worse.

I would like to indicate to hon. members my feelings about consumer price trends. Other hon. members have spoken about a number of aspects of this department, and I think this is one of the most important. It is a continuing fact. As time goes on, people realize that sharp increases are taking place in living costs, but from month to month I believe individuals do not actually realize the loss in the value of the dollar as far as purchasing power is concerned. A year can quite easily slip by without people generally realizing just how hard they have been hit.

From December, 1967, to December, 1968, the consumer price index in Canada rose by 4.1 per cent. In the preceding five-year period it advanced 17.7 per cent in total. This represents a drop of about 15.1 cents in the purchasing power of the consumer dollar since 1964. To put it a little more simply, a dollar today is worth about 84.9 cents in terms of a dollar's purchasing power just five years ago. I believe this fact should concern the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

Another very upsetting aspect of the consumer price trend is the fact that the 4.1 per cent increase in 1968 was the largest rate of increase in any year since 1951. We find that in a span of 18 years, 1968 had the largest increase in the consumer price index of this country. This means but one thing, namely, that this government has been unable to check the rapidly rising cost of living by the methods it is currently using. This is a clear indication that other methods should be employed.

I would like to put on the record a few more facts about the percentage increase in the consumer price index. To realize the seriousness of the problem one has only to go back to one of the most recent publications dealing with the period to the end of 1968. When one considers these figures you have the up-to-date facts. In the last five-year period, we find that the average increase was 3.3 per cent. As I mentioned a few moments ago, the increase in 1968 was 4.1 per cent.

Back in 1964 it started out at 1.9 per cent, and every year since 1964 there has been an escalating rise in the cost of living index. In 1964, it was 1.9 per cent; in 1965 the increase was 2.9 per cent; in 1966 it went up to 3.6 per cent; in 1967, it was 4 per cent; and in 1968, it was 4.1 per cent.

Members of the house are aware of the components that make up the cost of living index. I do not have to go into them all. There are some very general categories. We have food, housing, clothing, transportation, health and personal care, recreation and reading, tobacco and alcohol, and so on. Every one of these, almost without exception, shows the same steady climb. Some are, I think, a little more disturbing than others. We find that we talk in this house about regional disparities. When we look at the eastern side of Canada one thing that strikes me in these statistics is the fact that last year the greatest percentage increase in regional cities consumer price indices was to be found in St. John's where the figure was 4.8 per cent. This is an area which is generally classed as one which needs assistance because of regional disparity. The city with the lowest increase is the city of Vancouver, where we find the increase last year amounted to some 3.1 per cent. This is an area where there are some substantial gains so far as labour unions and other groups are concerned. This is of interest. The areas that can least afford these sharp increases are the ones that seem to be hit the hardest.

Let us consider housing for a moment. We find that so far as housing is concerned, again the average for a three year period is 3.3 per cent, but in 1968 we find that it was 4.8 per cent, the biggest increase of any year over the past five years. We are desperately in need of housing units and yet we find that for those who wish to own their own homes the cost has risen by 8.1 per cent in 1968 alone and rents have risen by an average of 4.3 per cent. This is why members of the house are extremely concerned about these sharp increases. We ask the minister: What is he going to do about it? We are now at the start of a new year and when we look into the business sections of our newspapers we find that building costs have gone up and the cost of lumber has gone right out of sight. This will add to the over-all cost of construction.

Bill after bill regarding interest rates has gone through the house but the ceiling on interest rates has been taken off, and again they are rising. Every time a percentage point or a fraction of a percentage point is added to interest rates, up and up go housing costs. Unless some checks are put in effect by this house we shall find that 1969 is a worse year than 1968 has been as far as escalating costs are concerned. I do not need to say very much more; I have picked out two or three fields; they are all the same. But here is the question: who is caught in the squeeze? It is the Canadian people who are harmed most of all, especially that large group of people who live on pensions, including those who retired years ago on an income which in terms of purchasing power at that time was adequate. Today, they find themselves in trouble.

This is the field in which action must be taken by the government. Surely, we can sit down collectively in the House of Commons and contrive measures which could halt the slow but steady erosion of the purchasing power of the dollar. Some of the necessary decisions will be unpopular, and it is quite obvious they will be out of line with present government thinking.

We have talked for years about establishing a prices review board. What is wrong with setting up a prices review board? Everyone knows there are a number of factors in this over-all picture. One of my hon. friends has just spoken about spiralling profits. These are a fact. I am convinced that a prices review board would go a long way toward keeping prices down. Price increases should be justified. What is wrong with setting up a board and telling any corporation: You must justify your proposals for price increases. Until this government and the members of this house are prepared to take steps such as those needed to constitute a prices review board I am convinced we shall see a steady increase in the cost of living, and the purchasing power of the dollar crumbling away. This will give rise to a host of other problems. The need to increase basic old age pensions is evident to everyone who can read. It is heartbreaking to see old age pensioners obliged to reduce their standard of living month by month while a bunch of politicians sit here in Ottawa afraid to tackle the basic problems facing this country. This is what worries me as a newcomer to this house.

I believe the minister is trying to do a good job and already some measure of success has been apparent in the operation of certain branches of the department. But if he really wishes to succeed he will have to be a pioneer in his party, and to be a pioneer in the Liberal party one does not have to be very radical. A great deal of ground has to be covered. I suggest the hon. gentleman should look into some of the ways and means by which the spiralling cost of living can be checked. If the minister does this he will make a name for himself in the Department. At the same time, he will earn the gratitude of consumers throughout the nation and do a real service to those on fixed incomes, people completely at the mercy of an inflation that has apparently got out of hand and which to date has not been remedied by the government.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, we have heard about Box 99 tonight and I should like to know whether it has been used to any extent. I understand from my colleague from Vancouver-Kingsway that Box 99 has had some publicity. If we have done nothing else tonight, we have publicized Box 99 and it is likely that the minister will receive further letters.

In this regard, I recall questions I asked the minister during the daily question period, to which he replied that if members are not satisfied about some of the highly priced commodities they should use the procedure whereby five members make a complaint and an investigation is initiated. Members may find Box 99 a good place to make a complaint, because I presume that they will receive an answer of some kind in due course.

A number of suggestions have been made this evening, and we appreciate the government's making this time available to members. However, there are two or three fields the minister has not touched on and one of them is bankruptcy. I have been told by somebody who knows that the bankruptcy legislation is being abused more than any other legislation, and this abuse has had a great effect upon the cost of certain commodities.

I would also ask the minister to consider another matter about which he spoke some time ago, though I have not heard about it recently. I refer to the involvement of young hockey players in contract negotiations. If I remember rightly, when the minister was a private member he raised this important subject on several occasions, and I think it is a matter that bears investigation.

In northern Quebec and northern Ontario there are many local hockey clubs, particularly in relatively small communities, some of which are developing professional potential. But if these young players are put under contract at the age of 12, they may find themselves legally committed for the rest of their hockey career. I suggest this is wrong.

I am sure anybody interested in the development of hockey players will agree with what the minister said previously, namely that an investigation into this particular field would do much for the sport, particularly in areas like Noranda, Quebec, Kirkland Lake, Timmins and other communities in northern Ontario. The minister has heard of many problems tonight. In this connection, I think we ought to ask the Economic Council to study the matter of advertising. Sometimes consumers must pay unreasonable prices for products because companies selling those products use gimmicks in their selling techniques and other companies in the same field must follow suit. Grocery stores in my area advertise trips to Hawaii. One television program promised a trip to Las Vegas, with spending money for gambling. Gimmicks like this must increase the cost of goods and the minister ought to investigate them.

We all appreciate that the minister has listened attentively to us. We also wish to thank the government for having given us this opportunity to make these remarks.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 53—Council established

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I welcome the inclusion of this clause in the bill. I wish to make one or two comments on it and I hope the minister will reply. I notice that, in the main, this clause reconstitutes the National Council of Welfare. It makes a few changes that perhaps are not too important or significant but they should be noted. Instead of the council consisting of the Deputy Minister of Welfare here in Ottawa, the deputy ministers of welfare in the provinces and a number of other people, the council is to consist of 21 members, none of whom is identified in the legislation. I will be glad to hear the minister's comment on this. I notice also that there is provision for members of the council to be paid remuneration and reasonable travelling expenses, something that did not obtain previously. But a couple of things that obtained in the former arrangement still hold. The one that bothers me most is that it is still provided that the National Council of Welfare may consider only those matters referred to it by the minister. In the wording of the legislation there has been a change from "Governor in Council" to "minister", which is not too significant. But the other point still stands, namely, that the council can consider only those matters that are referred to it by the minister. It seems to me, if this National Council of Welfare is to do a real job, give good, solid advice to the minister and be the means of our making progress in this field, that the people appointed to it should have the opportunity to put items on the agenda that they think are important and give their advice to the minister on those items. In my view this council ought to have prestige equal to that of the Economic Council of Canada and I hope the minister will agree to make some changes that will give this council more authority and more prestige than it has at present. I wanted to raise one or two other matters, but I see the minister is anxious to answer the questions I have put to him and I will be glad if he does so.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, I would answer the hon. member as follows. The 20 council members would be from various labour groups and social organizations concerned about these problems, to many of which the hon. member has referred. The reason for providing for pay is that by this means we shall obtain the services of people working in the social welfare area who otherwise, because of insufficient income, could not afford to come to Ottawa and assist us in this kind of work. That is why we have provided for remuneration. I think we are being a little more democratic by providing for this payment.

The other question of more substance was this: The hon. member indicated that council members could only consider matters I referred to them. I have an amendment that would change clause 7c so that it would read "refer to the Council for its consideration or the Council considers appropriate." In other words, I refer matters to them for their consideration or they can consider other matters they would feel appropriate and render advice in that regard. I have the amendment ready and I could proceed wth the clause and get it to a vote tonight. I move:

That Bill C-173 be amended by striking out lines 16 and 17 on page 21 thereof and substituting the following: "refer to the Council for its consideration or the Council considers appropriate."

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Maybe we should sit this late at night more often, Mr. Chairman. It is not often that five minutes before quitting time one finds a suggestion met so readily. This makes a real improvement in the structure of the Council if, as I understand it, it makes it possible for the members of the council to put on their agenda matters they themselves think are appropriate. I welcome this amendment and I am going to agree to it quite readily.

I wonder however if something similar should not be done to subclause (2) of that clause which at the moment reads:

The national Council of Welfare shall meet at such times and places as the Minister may direct.

There is not much point to the council having authority to make up its own agenda unless it can meet when it wants. Limiting the meetings of the council to those times and places decided by the minister is a bit unnecessary. I feel it would be consistent with the amendment the minister moved to modify the other part of it at least to that extent.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Pursuant to special order of the house, shall I rise and report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If we could continue a few minutes, Mr. Chairman, there is the prospect of getting these two parts through.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment (Mr. Munro) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 53 as amended carry?

Clause 53 (as amended) agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 54 carry?

Mr. Peters: Twelve o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall I rise, report progress and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

• (12 midnight)

Progress reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being after ten o'clock this house stands adjourned until eleven o'clock.

Mr. Bell: Today.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Today.

At 12.03 a.m. the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—DISCUSSIONS TO STABILIZE PRICING AND MARKETING

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the International Grains Arrangement entered into force on July 1, 1968 at a time when international prices were under some pressure. It was recognized at the outset that it would take some time and a considerable measure of restraint to achieve effective operation of the price provisions of the arrangement. Progress was made in this direction, encouraged by frequent meetings both among exporters and within the International Wheat Council. Canada has consistently observed the minimum prices established for Canadian grades of wheat.

In recent weeks there has been a significant deterioration in prices for high quality wheats traded in European markets. In some instances and for certain grades and classes these prices have been substantially below established I.G.A. minimums, and a significant volume of business has been done by our competitors.

I went to Washington on March 11 and met with senior officials of the department of state and with the Secretary of Agriculture to see if a greater degree of co-operation in pricing matters could not be achieved. The results of these talks hold some promise for the future, but in the present competitive situation amongst exporters it is not likely that immediate restoration of price levels can be achieved. In view of this the Canadian Wheat Board has come to the conclusion that it must meet the competition in the marketplace.

A meeting of the Prices Review Committee of the International Wheat Council is taking place next week and an early meeting of exporters has been called to determine actions necessary to restore price stability in keeping with obligations assumed under the arrangement. Canada will exert every effort to improve the degree of international co-operation with respect to prices through the I.G.A. and in discussion with other exporters. It should be noted that the I.G.A. itself provides procedures for temporary adjustments of minimum prices, since relationships between type and qualities of wheat fluctuate with competitive circumstances.

International co-operation in wheat marketing remains a cardinal principle of Canadian policy and while remaining competitive every effort will be made by Canada in consultation with other exporting and with importing countries to improve and strengthen co-operation with respect to prices and the operation of the I.G.A.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): While we welcome the announcement that the Canadian Wheat Board intends to remain competitive with other world grain exporters and that efforts will be made to stabilize prices, I should like to point out that in present circumstances large amounts of Canadian wheat are being sold at prices greatly below those paid by the Wheat Board. We hope this situation will not be allowed to get worse as a result of refusal by the government to accept some reduction at certain times in international prices. This applies not only to wheat prices but also to prices of coarse grain. We have lost several sales because we allowed our competitors to undercut us in this latter market. I hope that in the future there will be some degree of elasticity in pricing so that we may sell our grain and meet the competition from other exporters in the world.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I fear that the minister's statement is the forerunner of some very bad news for the western wheat producers. I think this is the first step toward breaking the bad news that the price of wheat is going to be reduced.

The minister quite properly points out that for certain grades and classes of wheat the prices have been substantially below the I.G.A. minimum. He says that a significant volume of business has been done by our competitors. I would have hoped that the minister would have told the house who are the competitors who are breaking the agreement into which Canada, along with other exporting nations, entered.

It is a well known fact, of course, that the United States, during an interim period between the expiry of the International Wheat Agreement and the coming into effect of the International Grains Arrangement, was selling wheat some 18 cents a bushel below the minimum, despite the fact that we had the assurance of the former minister of trade and commerce that there was a verbal agreement that all parties concerned would adhere to the minimum set out in the proposed I.G.A. agreement.

I hope the minister will take an early opportunity to give the house some further information as to whether or not these competitors of ours who have been selling below the agreed minimum are members of the I.G.A. and, if so, who they are, or whether these sales have been made by exporting countries who are not members of the I.G.A. I cannot think of any outstanding exporters who are not members of the I.G.A.; therefore, I can only conclude that the I.G.A. agreement has been violated by members who have agreed to certain minima and who are now disregarding the agreement. I think this is a very sad affair and must cause the minister, and certainly the farmers of this country, a good deal of concern.

If the situation continues, I agree that the Canadian Wheat Board has no choice but to adjust its prices to meet world competition. But this will mean disaster for the wheat producing industry of Canada. It will mean hardship for a great many farmers in western Canada. I hope that the meeting the minister has announced will be able to restore some price stability.

I am a little worried about the clause in the minister's statement which indicates that the I.G.A. has provided procedures for making temporary adjustments to minimum prices. Unfortunately, these temporary adjustments tend to become permanent. If we are to have a permanent price decline for the balance of the term of this agreement, then this will work great hardship on our wheat producers, and of course on the Canadian economy generally.

I am sure that members of the house in all parts of the chamber will wish the minister well in the meeting that is proposed. I am taking it for granted that the minister will press for an adherence to the minima provided by the I.G.A. agreement, rather than for any temporary reduction in price, if this can possibly be avoided.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I well understand the disappointment of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) with regard to the international grains market, and especially the wheat market. However, I commend him for keeping the house informed on those problems, and for the efforts which have been made in conjunction with the United States authorities with a view to finding favourable solutions.

Nevertheless, I hope that western grain producers will not be too seriously affected financially by those market difficulties. That shows that even when our production capacities are large enough to help supply food to the whole world, there are problems due to competition between men.

I hope the minister will continue his efforts with the co-operation of the Canadian Wheat Board and all those interested in the matter so that happy solutions will be found and that the western wheat producers will not be affected too severely by the consequences of this competition on the international market.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

TABLING OF PART II OF HAWTHORN—TREMBLAY REPORT

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, it is now my pleasure to table the French and English versions of part II of the Hawthorn report. At the same time, I am tabling the French version of part I of this report, as the English version was tabled in the house on March 10, 1967.

For the information of the house, I wish to indicate that I have ordered that copies of this report be made available to all Indian band councils, all Indian associations, to all provincial premiers as well as to the commissioners for the Territories and to members of their office or council. Of course all hon. members will get a copy today.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PERMIT ARMED FORCES VOTE IN BY-ELECTIONS

Mr. Leonard Hopkins (Renfrew North) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-181, to amend the Canada Elections Act (Canadian forces voting).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to give members of Canada's armed forces a vote in federal by-elections. Military personnel declare their places of natural residence for purposes of general elections and should be permitted to vote in by-elections, when one occurs in the place they have declared as their place of natural residence. There is no provision in the Canada Elections Act giving the right of Canadian Armed Forces personnel to vote in such by-elections. This is a denial of a basic right in a free society and I recommend this bill to the house to correct this situation.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

WHEAT—DIPLOMATIC ACTIVITY TO PREVENT DETERIORATION IN INTERNATIONAL MARKET

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of his announcement, which struck me as a disaster of the first magnitude for this country in that there is a deterioration in our international wheat market, will he give us further information, which I think is owing to the house and country, as to why he believes there is no hope for an early correction in the situation. I ask the minister what countries are causing the difficulty? The implication to be taken from the statement is that possibly the United States is one of those countries. As a result of visiting there, has the minister formed that opinion? May I also ask what other countries which participated in any international wheat agreement are undercutting Canada? What countries are creating the difficulty?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I have reason to believe that all countries that are exporting members of the I.G.A., and some exporters not members of the I.G.A., are somehow violating the schedule of pricing of the International Grains Arrangement at this time. The Leader of the Opposition will recognize it might not be conducive to success in the next step, that is, in trying to get support of these countries in an effort to return to normalcy, to point fingers and to be acrimonious on the subject.

I said that we are aligning ourselves to the existing situation. We have already started a strong diplomatic move. One of the purposes for my visit to Washington was to convince the U.S.A. that this is not in the interests of exporters, that it is not in the long term interests of importers, to break the international arrangement and that we should return as rapidly as possible to the pricing schedule of the I.G.A. We are already moving in that direction. I have already referred in my statement to a meeting of the price review committee and to a meeting of the exporters. This will be an opportunity to make our case as strongly as possible.

Following my meeting in Washington, I feel the situation is understood in the United States in the same way as we understand it ourselves and that they will co-operate in a return to normalcy.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister has indicated a meeting is arranged for next week. Nevertheless the minister feels Canada must now reduce its prices below the minimum provided in the agreement. Does he not realize that the only prospect he is holding out for the Canadian people at the moment is one of continued deterioration? Can the minister indicate to the house why he feels it is necessary for Canada to take this step now, when a meeting has been arranged for next week, and why he believes there is early prospect of success? Does the minister have no real hope that this meeting next week will result in a correction of the present situation?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order. I make no apology—

Mr. Speaker: I was just going to suggest that in my view the hon. gentleman's supplementary question is perhaps argumentative. However, I realize the matter is one of importance. Perhaps the minister might be allowed to reply.

Mr. Pepin: I think the leader of the New Democratic party was correct when he said, we have no other choice. Unless we are willing to lose sales, we must be competitive. This is what the Wheat Board is now doing. By doing so, we hope to bring to the attention of other exporters of the I.G.A. that we too can be competitive. We hope this will help them to realize what could happen if everybody decided to break the international agreement. It was a very difficult decision to make and I hope the Leader of the Opposition will be understanding on this subject. On balance, we felt it was the right decision to make.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the minister. In order to restore some confidence in western Canada, would the minister consider making a statement to the effect that the price for wheat on the home market will not be lowered.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking a question in which he suggests his own answer. The question, asked in those terms, is not in order.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have to preface my supplementary question. I have some knowledge of this problem because we had it when we were in office, and we spoke up to the United States and they were willing to act on a similar problem.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The preface having been stated perhaps the right hon. member might go to the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to give the basis of experience and try to assist the government.

An hon. Member: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a voice without sense, wherever it came from.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister this: In view of the fact that it is a Republican administration in the United States and that the present President was vice-president during the days of the Eisenhower administration, in which we were able to bring about agreement—

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the right hon. gentleman that perhaps this is a statement which he might have made on motions; but he is not asking his question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with deference, that is one of the things one cannot do because there is only one speaker from each group when replying to statements made on motions.

I ask the minister, were any protests made to the United States regarding give-away programs or grossly reduced price programs and, if so, when was the first objection taken? Secondly, is it or is it not a fact that outside of the I.G.A. the U.S.S.R. is now dumping wheat? Is there basis for that suggestion? After all, what we want to do, if we can, is to save western Canada from what apparently is another great retreat on the part of the government.

Mr. Pepin: In reply to the first question, Mr. Speaker, my understanding of diplomacy may be a bit different from the right hon. member's interpretation of that art. It is easier to speak up to the United States when you sit over there, where the hon. member now is, than when you sit here.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We spoke and got results.

Mr. Pepin: I have always thought in diplomacy the result was the important thing, rather than the style.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pepin: Now may I answer the question, Mr. Speaker? We have spoken to the United States on this subject—

Mr. Diefenbaker: When?

Mr. Pepin: When I went to Washington on the 11th.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And not before that?

Mr. Pepin: And I indicated in my progress report what we are doing now. With respect to the U.S.S.R. I am also informed that they are breaking the price schedule of the I.G.A., but not being a member of the I.G.A. I presume they can do that and feel better than a member of the I.G.A. should.

This is a very interesting and deplorable situation. One starts breaking the line a bit, then another one breaks it a little bit more, and a third one breaks it still a little more in order to stay competitive with the second—

Mr. Diefenbaker: And the Canadian farmer goes broke.

Mr. Pepin: And this is what we are trying to avoid.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the minister a supplementary question in respect of his statement. In it he said that the Canadian Wheat Board must be competitive in the marketplace. Is it the intention of the Canadian Wheat Board, before this meeting next week, to reduce its prices below the minimum stipulated in the International Grains Arrangement, or are the Canadian Wheat Board and the minister merely serving notice that they will do so if some agreement is not reached at this meeting of the exporting countries?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I thought the statement was very, very clear. The Wheat Board will be competitive. So if somebody else who is in competition with us breaks the line the Wheat Board, with regrets, will have to do the same. We deplore this, but we think on balance it is the right decision to make at this time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a further supplementary—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind hon. members again that we are spending much time on this question. Perhaps we should not have too many supplementaries from individual members.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This matter is of vital importance to the entire Canadian economy, particularly the western economy. I wish to clear up one point. When there are competitors who apparently are breaking the International Grains Arrangement, is it the intention of the Wheat Board now to reduce prices, or is the minister merely serving a warning that we will do so if this meeting next week is not successful in getting all exporters to return to the terms of the I.G.A.?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Wheat Board will break the schedule of the agreement—not the agreement itself which remains valid—if it is necessary, in order to remain competitive.

Mr. A. B. Douglas (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask whether the government or the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce would consider re-introducing floor prices for wheat, which were prevalent a few months ago.

Mr. Woolliams: That was when they had a Saskatchewan election.

Mr. Pepin: My understanding is that there is now a floor price for wheat, which is the initial payment being paid western farmers.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not a floor price.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister what form of protest has been made over the months by his government to the United States and, if there has been such, would he be prepared to table this in the house? Secondly, would he now re-implement the subsidy policy Bob Winters guaranteed in this House of Commons to the farmers?

Mr. Pepin: At the time of the Canberra meeting of exporters we made our case, but always trying to obtain co-operation and to demonstrate that a break would not be in the best interest of exporters and of importers, in the long term. With regard to the effect of the restoration of the so-called Winters temporary arrangement, the government is as much aware of the possible consequences of present events for western producers, as are members of the opposition; but we still hope we can bring up the price and will act in due course, depending on how the situation develops.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the minister in his statement said that the condition may be a temporary one. In order to live up to the commitments to the western farmers that the price will be maintained, and in view of the apparent competition which is depressing prices, would the government immediately consider the implementation of a two-price system in respect of grain at this time?

Mr. Pepin: A debate on the two-price system would take a bit more time than we have now.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question. I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he has made any representations to the Canadian Wheat Board relative to the complaints from western Canada that the Wheat Board is enforcing the quota system in recent weeks in a way that is mean, nasty and petty, by prosecuting for overdeliveries of 20 or 30 bushels.

Mr. Pepin: The last part of the quotation is "brutish and short". The answer is that representations of this kind are brought to the attention of the Wheat Board regularly by my department. I will inquire further.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE TO FRENCH SPEAKING WORKERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Due to his absence, I will direct it to the Prime Minister.

In view of the subsidies now being paid to immigrant workers in Quebec and Montreal to learn English, can French Canadian workers expect to be granted the same advantages soon?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows, or should know, that the minister concerned is not scheduled to be here today for the question period. He will be in the house next Monday.

[English]

FISHERIES

SEALS—NEW YORK SHOWING OF FILM DEPICTING KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Did a demonstration take place outside our consulate office in New York City yesterday as a result of the televising in that city of the film produced by the C.B.C. showing the seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence? If so, would the minister tell the house what steps he is taking to have the film withdrawn from circulation, in view of the serious damage it is doing to Canada's reputation abroad?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the minister might wish to consider a question if one were asked of him on Monday. The department will be answering questions on Monday.

TRANSPORT

EXTENSION OF L.C.L. RATE FREEZE

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Lancaster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. With regard to the representations concerning transport made by the Atlantic premiers, and in particular the recommendation that the freeze be extended, may I ask the minister whether he can give an affirmative answer now that this freeze will be extended, and could he tell us how he plans to bring it before the house.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be in a position to make an announcement very shortly. In the meantime I should like to seek either directly or through the house leaders the co-operation of hon. gentlemen opposite in determining the best means of dealing with this matter in an expeditious manner.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I am sure we would be glad to co-operate. Is this definite word from the minister, so that the shippers will know an extension will be brought in and that the method will be determined later?

Mr. Hellyer: I can assure my hon. friend that we are quite cognizant of the desirability of having continuity in these matters and not having any undue disruption. We will want to make the necessary arrangement before the freeze expires on the 23rd; but I should like to reserve the definitive statement requested by the hon. member until perhaps some time next week. In the meantime there might be a discussion with the various house leaders concerning how this might be handled.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he is aware of a new inflationary trend in this country in which branches of the Royal Bank of Canada, the Imperial Bank of Commerce and the Toronto-Dominion Bank are issuing cards which enable the holder to drink on credit, without opening bank accounts.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have heard that terrible things like this go on in the National Press Club.

IMMIGRATION

RECIPROCAL ADMISSION ARRANGEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I had intended addressing this question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, but since it is so important today, in view of the statement that has been made, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that United States interests control much of our industry in Canada, and since United States citizens can come into Canada with ease under our immigration laws, and since Canadians are now on a quota, would the Prime Minister on behalf of his government protest to the United States so that Canadians might have the same courtesy extended to them in the United States by those same companies.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see why the question could not be asked of the minister on his day in the house.

Mr. Woolliams: The question I am putting to the Prime Minister is not in respect of the facts: We know the facts. As the head of the government would he protest to the United States authorities in this regard, as he is being asked to do by Canadians.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—CEASE-FIRE PROPOSAL AS PRELUDE TO NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, this question is for the Prime Minister. First I should like to point out I was surprised that the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If the hon. member has a question to ask he should ask it.

Mr. Broadbent: In view of Prime Minister Wilson's decision to go to Nigeria, and in view of the increasing number of bombing attacks upon civilian centres as reported in Tuesday's Toronto Telegram, would the Prime Minister now consider urging the federal government of Nigeria to accept Biafra's proposal for a cease-fire as a prelude to negotiations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, last week we asked our high commissioner in Lagos to return to Canada. He is consulting and meeting these days with officials, and with the Secretary of State for External Affairs, regarding this whole problem.

[Later:]

Mr. Broadbent: My question is for the Prime Minister and is supplementary to one I asked earlier. Would he or the Secretary of State for External Affairs consider reporting back to the house on Monday or Tuesday of next week on the discussions that are taking place now within the External Affairs Department on the Nigerian situation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will be glad to consider it.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POLLUTION

PLACING OF RESPONSIBILITY UNDER ONE MINISTRY

Mr. Keith Hymmen (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister this question. In view of the great deal of interest shown in the government reorganization bill now before the house, will he and his cabinet colleagues consider another important and perhaps overdue change by placing whatever federal constitutional responsibility there is in the field of water and air pollution under the control of one department and or one minister?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member must realize that the legislation to which he has referred is before the house at the present time. That is perhaps the time when these representations should be made.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR RESPECTING TENSION IN EASTERN EUROPE

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, in light of the growing tension in eastern Europe and the possible threat to peace in that region, and having in mind particularly the military manoeuvres planned by the Soviet Union and Warsaw pact nations, has the government expressed its concern and anxiety to the Soviet Union and, if not, will it do so; and did the Prime Minister discuss this with the Soviet ambassador with whom he had an interview last week?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the matters involved in my discussion with the ambassador are privileged. Apart from indicating that the subject in general was China I prefer not to elaborate further. As to the other part of the question, I am sure the minister would be delighted to provide an answer, if the hon. member is in the house to ask the question on Monday.

WATER RESOURCES

MACNAQUAC, N.B.—POLLUTION DAMAGE TO SALMON CULTURE STATION

Hon. Hugh John Flemming (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and I regret that I was unable to give him notice. Perhaps his parliamentary secretary will take note of my question since the minister is not here. Will the minister investigate the alleged damage to the $3½ million federal salmon culture station on the St. John river at Macnaquac which has been caused by excessive pollution of the river?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, the minister is already investigating this matter and we hope soon to have a satisfactory report.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—DISCUSSIONS WITH CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the Prime Minister to accept the request of the Canadian Medical Association first made on January 3 for a meeting between representatives of that body, the Prime Minister and senior members of his cabinet to discuss the question of medical insurance?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the C.M.A. has already had three meetings with ministers of this government to discuss this very issue. They asked to meet me on a date during which the federal-provincial conference was held, and naturally I could not see them then. I am now considering whether I can meet them on some other occasion.

Mr. Hees: Mr. Speaker, will the Prime Minister meet with this body, which is still anxious to meet with him and senior members of his cabinet, and will he see that the Minister of National Health and Welfare is present at the time, so that he can perhaps persuade these representatives that he is not irresponsible as was quoted yesterday by—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ARTEC—HIRING OF STRIKE BREAKERS

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the C.B.C. has indicated it may hire a goodly number of Office Overload personnel to perform the functions of ARTEC personnel if they withhold their services, will the Prime Minister use his office to intercede in the hiring of such strike breakers and scabs if the C.B.C. insists on using such tactics?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. Flemming.]

Mr. Skoberg: I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If I interpret the hon. member's question correctly, he has made representations.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MATAGAMI MINING COMPANY—DISAGREEMENT WITH EMPLOYEES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Has the federal government been asked to intervene in the dispute between the management of the mining company at Matagami and its main French Canadian employees?

[Later:]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will allow me to press the matter as I have received more than my share of silent answers since September.

Once more I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is aware of the conflict which exists at present between the mining company in Matagami and its French Canadian employees?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think this question can be accepted. The hon. member is asking the Prime Minister whether he is aware of a situation which, I think, is not his direct administrative responsibility and therefore the question is not in order.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member raising a point of order?

Mr. Matte: I believe it is embodied in the principle of the Confederation, where—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member allow me to suggest that his question as put is contrary to the rules. He is simply asking whether the minister is aware of certain circumstances or facts, so that, to my mind, the question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

PRESENTATION OF BRIEF BY FEDERATION

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister if he can advise the house as to whether he has yet been able to accede to a long standing request of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for an opportunity for that important body to meet, as has been its custom, with members of the cabinet to discuss important public issues?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I know that this question is being reviewed, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

BOTWOOD, NFLD.—SERVICE BY CLARKE STEAMSHIP LIMITED

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can give positive assurance that we will have government involvement in Clarke Steamship Limited continued in connection with the port of Botwood, Newfoundland so that the shipping service to that area will continue?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a result of representations by the Premier of Newfoundland this question is under review. As soon as I have some information in this respect I will be glad to give it to the house and the hon. gentleman.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Defence Production whether he also will discuss this matter with the appropriate minister, so as to have full representations, and in view of some public statements he has made?

SPORTS

HOCKEY—CRUSHING VICTORY BY HOUSE OF COMMONS "LASALLES"

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, in a much lighter vein I should like to ask the President of the Privy Council to report to the house on the last Olympic success of his hockey team, and also to report on the contribution made by the Progressive Conservatives to the hockey game?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have an opportunity to report to the house that the House of Commons LaSalles have continued their winning streak in defeating C.K.C.H. Two goals were scored by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle), one was scored by a former member for Hull, Mr. Pierre Caron, and one goal was scored by the Minister for Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Chrétien).

As chairman of the special committee selecting the three stars following these games I beg leave of the house to present to the house our first report. The first star goes to the hon. member for Joliette, after whom the team has been renamed. The second star is awarded to the goaltender, the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Roy), for his distinctive service in goal in spite of the weak defence he had in front of him. The third star is awarded to the Minister of Labour, (Mr. Mackasey), who demonstrated the same gentle and bruising style along the blue line that he shows at the negotiating table. Perhaps I may be allowed to indicate that a special word should be said for the elegant bon vivant and raconteur coach, the hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Pilon), who gave leadership to the team.

As a final announcement, I have been negotiating with the Ontario legislature at Queen's Park, as part of a continuing program of federal-provincial relations, for a contest which will probably take place this spring, since it looks as though Maple Leaf Gardens will not be in use during the N.H.L. playoffs.

Mr. Speaker: The three minute announcement by the minister will perhaps necessitate an overtime period after one o'clock.

AIR CANADA

PROTECTION OF WORKERS FOLLOWING SALE OF WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether the Air Canada maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg has been sold and, if so, can he say whether there has been an agreement to protect the jobs of the workers, and the conditions attached to those jobs.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): As of now, Mr. Speaker, no final decision has been taken. Negotiations are proceeding but there are a few matters yet to be settled. At the latest reporting, which I think was only yesterday, the matter was not yet finalized.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the government pursuing the matter of obtaining an appropriate agreement to protect the rights of the workers?

Mr. Hellyer: This was one of the conditions which were set at the time the government authorized Air Canada to negotiate the sale of the base. I am sure it will be taken into account in these negotiations.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

HEARINGS BEFORE PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BOARD

Mr. C. Terrence Murphy (Sault Ste. Marie): I would like to direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board. In view of the fact that all of the striking postal workers have now returned to work, is it the intention of the government to proceed with the hearings before the Public Service Staff Relations Board?

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board): No, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that all of the postal workers have now returned to work, that the grievances are being processed before an adjudicator through the regular grievance procedure channels and, in the words of the Postmaster General, a general air of serenity prevails, the applications are being withdrawn.

GRAIN

WHEAT—LOSS OF CONTRACTS THROUGH PRICE WAR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with regard to the announcement he made earlier. Would the minister inform the house what large contracts have been lost by Canada as the result of the international wheat price war?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, it has been the practice of every government not to discuss sales and prices in the House of Commons.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister inform the house as to whether or not he feels the meeting he is attending next week will do anything to restore the markets which we have lost?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to express an opinion. Therefore, the question is not in order.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is in regard to the statement he made this morning concerning the sale of wheat. I should like to ask him whether the announcement he made is an extension of the new grain policy of the government as enunciated by the Prime Minister in Winnipeg a short time ago, when he said: "Let the farmers sell their own wheat".

FINANCE

BRINCO—BENEFIT TO U.S. THROUGH GOVERNMENT INCENTIVES

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): I have a question for the Minister of Finance which arises out of recent information and reports from United States sources. Would the minister undertake an immediate investigation and report to the house regarding financial incentives that have been given to Brinco, in particular the question of a potential $65 million benefit to the United States government as a result of Canadian government financial incentives?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the question as notice.

YUKON QUARTZ MINING ACT

REQUEST FOR INTRODUCTION OF AMENDING BILL

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I direct a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Since the legislation has been ready for many months now, will the minister cause the Yukon mineral act to be introduced at the earliest possible moment so members can study it?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the bill is not entirely ready yet; some basic policies still have to be determined and as soon as the cabinet has made a decision, I shall be pleased to introduce the bill in the house.

[English]

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house that when that bill is introduced it will be referred to the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development for our consideration?

[Translation]

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, at the present time I see no objection to referring the bill to the committee for study.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEDICARE—ESTIMATED COST OF PROGRAM

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In view of the projected cost of medicare in Manitoba for the coming year of $55 million, or about $1,100 million if all Canadians were included, is this estimate in line with the estimates of his department?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that his question should be placed on the order paper.

AIRPORTS

WINNIPEG—POLICY RESPECTING LANDING RIGHTS

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. According to the minister's news release of yesterday, the government of Canada is anxious to open bilateral negotiations with foreign countries relative to landing rights at Toronto. Is the government of Canada at the present time conducting any bilateral negotiations with respect to landing rights at the Winnipeg international airport?

Mr. Speaker: The question is very general in nature. I suggest to the hon. member it should be placed on the order paper.

GRAIN

WHEAT BOARD POLICY IN MEETING COMPETITIVE PRICES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like a clarification from the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When he speaks about meeting the price of competitors in connection with the sale of wheat, does he mean that it would be the policy of the Canadian Wheat Board to meet the prices of all competitors, or simply the prices of the competitors who are members of the International Grains Arrangement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I would think that when we meet the prices of members of the International Grains Arrangement we would at the same time meet the price of non-members. I really do not understand the nuance in the hon. member's question. Perhaps he could explain to me what the nuance is.

Mr. Stanfield: There is no nuance in it, Mr. Speaker. I want to know whether it is the intention of the Wheat Board to meet all competition, even the competition of countries outside the International Grains Arrangement, or whether it is the intention of the Wheat Board simply to meet all competition from countries which are members of the International Grains Arrangement.

Mr. Pepin: The phrase I used was "to meet the competition wherever it comes". My understanding is that the non-members have said that they would accept lower prices if members of the I.G.A. were doing so. I do not know exactly how these things operate in the marketplace, but these countries have invoked the fact that exporting members of the I.G.A. were underselling in order to justify their own low prices. However we would have to talk about what is really important in these matters, and the hon. member and I might have a private chat on this after the question period.

WHEAT—POSSIBLE CHANGE IN U.S.S.R. CONTRACT PRICE

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether the recent price arrangements will have any effect on the price that the U.S.S.R. will have to pay for grain under its present contract with the Wheat Board?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): It might.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

LUMBER—INQUIRY AS TO TASK FORCE FINDING

Mr. P. M. Mahoney (Calgary South): I have a question for the Minister of Transport with respect to the increases in lumber prices in the past year. Would the minister indicate whether or not the task force study conducted under this chairmanship indicated that this was primarily a regional problem, or is it a national problem?

Mr. Speaker: The question should be placed on the order paper.

FISHERIES

SEALS—DISTRIBUTION OF FILM DEPICTING KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Would he undertake an investigation by his department into how the film produced for the C.B.C. on the seal hunt in the gulf received such wide distribution in the United States and in western Europe?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I will be glad to make inquiries about such a film. Of course I think hon. members always appreciate it when the C.B.C. can earn revenue by exporting films.

Mr. Bell: How about the film "Mr. Pearson"?

[Later:]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): My question is supplementary to the one asked by the hon. member for St. John's East, and I direct it to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State. Would he, when he brings this matter to the attention of the minister, discuss with him the possibility of referring the whole subject to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and the Arts so that witnesses may be called and examined?

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the departmental day in the house is Monday, and I am sure the minister or I will be here to deal with any such questions.

NATIONAL REVENUE

METEGHAN RIVER, N.S.—CLOSING OF CUSTOMS OFFICE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, but in his absence I shall put it to his Parliamentary Secretary.

In reply to a question I put on the order paper the minister replied last February 19 that an inquiry would be made regarding the closing of some Customs offices, especially the one in Meteghan River in Nova Scotia. Since many fishermen are concerned, I should like to ask the minister if he can inform us as to whether that office or others will have to be closed?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Right now, Mr. Speaker, I am replacing the Minister of National Revenue to whom I shall be glad to pass on the hon. member's representations.

[Mr. McGrath.]

WINNIPEG—DENIAL OF INCREASE IN SALARIES OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROL ASSISTANTS

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Is it the intention of the government of Canada to continue to deny any increase in salary and any cost of living adjustment to air traffic controllers' assistants employed at the Winnipeg international airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, an anomaly arises in this connection as a result of a decision by the bureau of classifications. This is a matter of real concern to me and to the department. We are in the process of negotiating to determine some method by which a proper adjustment can be made to redress the anomaly which has been created.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DISCUSSION WITH PREMIER BEFORE ESTABLISHING NEW PROVINCIAL DEPARTMENT

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): I wish to direct this question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. Did the government of Saskatchewan consult the hon. gentleman before setting up its own department of Indian and Métis affairs?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, there was no official communication between the government of the province of Saskatchewan and my department, but I had the opportunity, ten days ago, of discussing this project during a conversation with Premier Thatcher.

FLOODS

RED RIVER—MEASURES TO EXPEDITE GRAIN DELIVERY

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact the United States weather bureau has recently predicted that the expected flood crest on the Red River in Manitoba will equal the disastrous 1950 flood level, will the minister give immediate consideration to taking emergency measures to deal with the urgent problem of grain deliveries in the area?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will certainly consult with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources on that subject. To continue the private discussion we were having, the Leader of the Opposition and myself—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I suggest that the discussion might be continued in private.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

STATUTE LAW (SUPERANNUATION) AMENDMENT ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND CANADIAN FORCES, DEFENCE SERVICES, R.C.M.P. AND PUBLIC SERVICE SUPERANNUATION PROVISIONS

Hon. C. M. Drury (President of the Treasury Board) moved that Bill C-178, to amend the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Continuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Pension Continuation Act and the Public Service Superannuation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the opportunity hon. members have had to study this bill since it was given first reading a week ago, there is not a great deal which I feel I need say by way of general explanation at this time. Full opportunity will be provided for a more detailed explanation when the bill is being reviewed by the committee to which it is intended that it should be referred.

While this is a bill of 51 clauses, amending five acts, hon. members will have noted that the majority of them deal with administrative matters, the removal of anomalies or inconsistencies in the provisions of the acts, and amendments which are consequential upon other legislation which has been enacted since these statutes were last before the house. There are some changes in the benefits, coupled with provision for increases in certain contribution rates under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act. Advance notice of these increases was given three or four months ago when the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) announced the latest general pay increases for the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The contribution rates have remained fixed under these two pension plans since 1946 and 1949, respectively, despite the various benefit improvements which have been made from time to time. During the same period, the contribution rates for certain male civil servants were increased in 1954, and for all of them in 1960, when substantial improvements were made in the Public Service Superannuation Act. Since 1960, the 6 per cent contribution rate for male civil servants has been higher than that for male members of the Canadian Forces and of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, despite the fact that the latter two groups have the more expensive plan, largely because of the lower retirement age at which they can retire on an immediate full pension. Sixty is the lowest age at which a civil servant can retire on full, immediate pension for a reason other than disability.

The present contribution rates are: 6½ per cent for males and 5 per cent for females under the Public Service Superannuation Act, 6 per cent for both sexes under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, and 6 per cent for males and 5 per cent for females under the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act. In each case these contribution rates represent the combined total for those acts and the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan as a result of the integration of contributions brought about by the amendments co-ordinating these acts with the Canada Pension Plan in 1966.

Subsequent to those last amendments, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has tabled reports on the actuarial valuation of the superannuation accounts maintained under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act. Each of these reports showed the need for an increase in the current rate of contributions. This need arose in part from the amendments which were made in these acts in 1966, including the co-ordination of each of these acts with the Canada Pension Plan.

A combination of this reason, the improvements in benefits proposed in this bill and the lack of any justification for the use of a lower rate of contribution than that under the Public Service Superannuation Act, led the government to couple these proposed increases in the rate of contribution with the last general pay increases for both forces when they were approved. On the other hand, it is proposed to reduce the rate for female members of the Canadian Forces to the 5 per cent payable by female contributors under the other two acts. These contribution changes would take effect on April 1 next.

As far as benefits are concerned, the most significant changes are proposed under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act where a substantially new benefit approach is contained in the Bill before the house. Under this provision, a contributor with between 10 and 20 years of service would now have a vested right to a deferred full annuity as well as a discretionary one to an immediate partial annuity in the case of retirement to promote economy or efficiency. As the details of these changes are somewhat complicated, I would prefer to leave any explanation of them until the bill is before the committee.

Amendments are proposed in each of the three superannuation acts which would continue the payment of children's benefits until attainment of the age of 25 if the children are continuing their education on a basis similar to that provided under the Canada Pension Plan.

There are also minor amendments in all five acts to protect the pension position of a remarried widow of a former contributor when a subsequent marriage terminates in annulment or divorce. Formerly, payment of her pension, which was suspended on remarriage in the usual way, could only be resumed on the death of her next husband.

The last amendment which I should mention this morning has to do with the management of the three superannuation accounts which will remain the responsibility of the Minister of Finance in accordance with the government organization bill.

The present accounting provisions were introduced into these statutes in June of 1965 and slightly amended the following year to reflect the recommendations contained in the report of the Glassco commission. After examining the management of these accounts, the commission reported as follows:

> The amounts in these superannuation accounts are not held in cash or invested in securities. Nor should they be, considering that it is the government which is assuming the obligation to pay these pensions. The government utilizes all the moneys for general government purposes, crediting the accounts with interest quarterly for the use of the funds. Normally, the government's contributions, as set forth above, are recorded as budgetary expenditures, but certain deficits, arising out of actuarial valuations in recent years, have been recorded as a deferred charge to be applied against the budgetary revenues of future years.

[Mr. Drury.]

• (12:10 p.m.)

The related recommendation of the commission reads as follows:

> We therefore recommend that a program be authorized by statute to amortize systematically present and future valuation deficits of statutory pension plans by appropriate budgetary charges.

Parliament approved the government's proposals to adopt these recommendations in the statutory amendments of 1965 and 1966. As a result, the government is required to credit to the superannuation accounts in each fiscal year an amount equal to the deficiences which arise from pay increases authorized in that year or are reported in any actuarial valuation report which is laid before parliament in that year. These credits, which are initially made in the form of so-called deferred charges, have to be amortized by budgetary payments in five equal annual instalments commencing in the year in which the deferred charge is credited. These instalments are expected to cost the government in excess of $200 million in this fiscal year.

The government has always recognized that these deficiences, deferred charge credits and resulting budgetary amortization payments would have been substantially smaller if interest had been credited to the account at a higher rate than the 4 per cent which has been payable, at first monthly and more recently quarterly, since the oldest of these accounts came into existence in 1924. Over those years the yield on long-term government bonds has been above, below and now again above this long-term rate of 4 per cent. As answers to parliamentary questions have indicated, up until quite recently the net over-all effect would not have been greatly different had a rate which followed the long-term bond rate been used.

It is not so many years since the government was criticized for crediting interest at a rate which was far too high and thereby being too generous to its employees in comparison with others. Now, of course, the criticism is from the other direction. While it can be shown that the use of an interest rate based on that approved by parliament for the Canada Pension Plan, for example, would not have been sufficient to do away completely with the need for these special contributions, the government recognizes that the validity of the criticism of the 4 per cent rate is realistic at the present time.

The proposed amendments to the accounts sections of the three superannuation acts accordingly contemplate an increase in the interest rate but provide that these higher interest credits are to be applied against the deficiency payments. This is the procedure which would be followed in the operation of a private pension fund which was required to make good deficiencies over a limited period of years under the relevant federal or provincial legislation requiring the solvency of pension funds. While this would substantially reduce, it would not eliminate the special contributions under present conditions.

Here I should point out that these special contributions by the government are in excess of the regular matching contributions for current service which the government has made under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the corresponding regular current contributions under the other two acts. These regular current contributions under the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act have to be even higher than under the Public Service Superannuation Act because of the higher pension cost due to lower retirement ages under those acts. These regular contributions were 10 per cent of pay or one and two-thirds times those of the members of those forces for many years. Accordingly, hon. members will appreciate that, when faced with the need to increase these regular contributions because of benefit improvements over the years, the government felt that the increase required in the current rate of contributions should be shared by the members of those forces, as proposed earlier.

Thus an increase in the interest rate is not expected to create any surplus which would permit a reduction in current contributions or an improvement in benefits. The special contributions which otherwise would have been made will simply be reduced by the amount of the additional interest under present conditions. Nor will it produce a surplus from which an increase in pensions could be paid to those already retired. It will be contended that the government should dip into these funds, pay an increase in pensions nevertheless and leave to the future the question of repaying the new deficit that this would create. But if it did so the statute would require the government to make good this deficiency by budgetary charges, so that this provides no easy way out for the government under the present budgetary position.

Moreover, the government does not propose to abandon the statutory approach recommended by the Glassco commission and brought into force less than four years ago whereby the costs of pensions being earned each year are disclosed to the public and met by the government on a basis which does not leave huge hidden deficits for future taxpayers to meet. The federal and provincial statutes dealing with solvency of private pension funds require certain funding procedures which the government feels it should follow as well.

This brings me to a subject which, as some hon. members have noted, is not included in this bill, namely, amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act.

Shortly after assuming office, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated in response to inquiries that he had arranged for a thorough review of the costs and benefits involved in our social security system in order to have a basis for a reappraisal of the government's policy in this area to ensure that the best use is made of social security payments of all kinds, taking into account the needs of individuals and the economic costs and consequences to the country as a whole. He went on to say that this report would take into account the question of the difficulties now being experienced by those living on pension. The specific question of increasing the pensions of retired public servants was included in this general review to which the Prime Minister referred. The report on this aspect of the review has now been received and is being studied by the government relation to all the other aspects of this broad question. I regret to say that it has not been possible for the government to reach a decision at this time which would permit the inclusion of amendments to the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act in this bill. However, I can assure hon. members that this is continuing to receive active study by the government.

I commend this bill to the house for second reading and referral to committee.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my observations will not be long at this stage of the bill. Obviously, as the minister has said, the bill is one of some considerable complexity and lends itself to more careful and detailed study in the standing committee. I think it is fortunate for us in this house and for the country generally that over the last few years there have been a number of hon. members who, through the medium of committees and their attention to pensions issues of this kind in the public service, have developed a knowledge of the subject and its details that will be most useful when the committee deals with the bill. For that reason I for one am most anxious that the bill receive second reading as soon as possible so it can then be sent to the committee. While I think there may be one or two speakers from this party, our observations will in any event not be long and we will certainly not delay second reading of the bill.

As a preliminary observation may I say I am a little puzzled as to why this bill is being sent to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. It seems to me there are other committees more particularly suited to deal with this matter. I think the subject matter of the bill is more relevant to the consideration of other committees. In addition, the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs has a tremendous amount of work before it and it will have other responsibilities. This bill is long and complicated.

While it is true that under our present system we can exchange personnel to man committees with other people in addition to the regular members, I would have thought it much more advisable to send the bill to a different committee. I sometimes wonder what is the rationale here. What started out as a very excellent idea to break the work of the house down into committees is in fact itself breaking down, and our committee system is not working as it should. For this I must place a lot of the blame on the government.

I shall make one or two observations about the bill, mainly in the hope that the matters I bring up will be considered in the committee. The bill calls for an increase in the contributions of contributors to various pension and superannuation schemes. One thing we will be interested in knowing, and I do not think the minister covered it, is whether there are to be increases in payments from the various pension funds. These have been provided for in the past, and from all indications the funds very greatly exceed the day to day or year to year requirements.

In speaking of the provisions with respect to the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act it seems to me that here there is a breach of a very solemn undertaking. We become accustomed to breaches of undertaking by this government and to classifying them. A solemn undertaking was given by the former minister of national defence. He said that no serviceman would suffer by reason of voluntary withdrawal following unification. Yet we find that most restrictive interpretations have been imposed on voluntary withdrawals with a view to discouraging expressions of disapproval of unification by servicemen. Certainly servicemen in many cases have been made prisoners of their pension scheme. The committee could look into this matter and no doubt evidence will be available. What has happened, it seems to me, constitutes a breach of the very solemn undertaking previously given.

I ask the government whether it will not consider R.C.M.P. pensions with respect to those members of the force who retired prior to 1958. So far as I can see the bill brings in no change in this regard. There is a tremendous disparity in present pay scales and scales of superannuation pay between officers and men who have served their full careers in the force. Their pensions are based on pay scales far removed from those applicable today. Tied to the steadily increasing inflation and the effect that has on the limited pensions which these people are receiving, this can only be regarded by hon. members with apprehension and concern.

The same thing applies to public servants who retired prior to 1958. A completely unrealistic comparison has been made, notwithstanding the repeated representations made by hon. members over the years. I pay tribute to hon. members who have done so. Some of them are still here and can speak for themselves. I would not like this occasion to pass without paying tribute to the former member for Carleton, Hon. R. A. Bell, who no longer is a member of the house. Throughout his period in the house he continued making representations with respect to this matter. Other hon. members interested in the subject are still here and I am sure that to them the provisions of the bill constitute a real measure of inequity. No doubt they will deal with that both here and in committee.

I hope the committee will look into the effect of the inauguration of immediate annuities versus deferred annuities as applied previously. This matter is referred to in clause 5 of the proposed bill. We approve the incorporation of active service into regular service in connection with these proposals. This has long been a sore point and we heartily approve of the change. We also approve of clause 35 which gives retired R.C.M.P. personnel the right to treatment allowances similar to those given to disabled veterans.

I thought of dealing with a number of other matters but will not since the bill is to be dealt with in committee. We propose to approve it now on the understanding that we are not approving all aspects of the bill. We are sending it to committee and when it comes back it will be dealt with further.

I end by saying that I regret very much the remarks of the minister to the effect that although the government has possession of the report on increasing the pensions of retired public servants it has not been able to incorporate any proposals or recommendations arising out of it in this bill. The tragedy of inadequate pensions has been with some of our retired civil servants for a great number of years. No target date has been established for implementing the recommendations of the report. This session is to last only two and a half months longer after Easter and, according to the legislative diet the house leader has indicated the government wishes to process, the house will be too busy to deal with the proposals of the report. I am beginning to despair that despite all our good intentions—and we know what the road to hell is paved with—this session will end without anything having been done in this field. No particular legislative proposals will have been brought forward, and it is a matter of great regret to me and other hon. members that this is the case.

That is all I have to say. I hope the bill will pass rapidly through the present stage so that it may receive in committee the attention it deserves and come back to be considered further here.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for the most part the provisions of this bill are good and we welcome them. They will have our support. I think most hon. members who are here could guess my next sentence. The disappointing part about this bill—

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Is what is not in it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): —is what is not in it. You guessed it.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): I quoted you before you said it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suppose I should be consoled by the fact that the President of the Treasury Board has had this matter on his conscience.

Mr. Baldwin: What!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): He took a moment or two to admit that there is legislation such as the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act. He admitted that the bill amends five statutes but not that one. He also admitted that the matter of increasing the pensions of civil servants already retired is under serious, active and, I think, intensive consideration.

An hon. Member: For how long has that been going on?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): To my knowledge it has been under consideration for over 20 years, nearly 25. I hope we can persuade the government this afternoon to make a break-through, get over the hump and deal with this matter.

Fridays have the advantage that attendance in the house is something less than 100 per cent. Proceedings quieten down and become serene. Although some of our beloved colleagues may not be here, I notice with interest the presence of the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis), the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair) and the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). The hon. member for Ottawa East (Mr. Richard) told me he had a luncheon engagement but would be here this afternoon. I suspect others may join us.

I think I can speak for all the Liberals I have referred to as well as for my Conservative friends interested in this matter and my colleagues to our left when I say that one thing we will not do this afternoon is fight with each other. We are here with a common purpose and interest and we want to get action on this important matter. I believe other speeches will be forthcoming and I hope the result will be a break-through statement from the President of the Treasury Board. I hope he will get to the point of telling his cabinet colleagues that the time to act on this matter is now.

Mr. Drury: I am bleeding already.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The President of the Treasury Board says he is bleeding already. Well, we are making progress.

As I said, a number of provisions in the bill are good and we welcome them. Perhaps I might make it clear that I did not use those words just to say something nice. I like the provision that will make it possible for a widow of a retired civil servant who has married again and had her pension suspended to have that pension reinstated if her second husband runs out on her. As the law now stands, the pension of a widow of a retired civil servant is suspended when she marries a second time. If the husband dies she gets it back. If her second husband does not die but there is a divorce, annulment or departure on the part of the husband, she is left without any pension. It is good that we are to have something done about widows caught in that situation. There are not many like that, I believe, but it is good that we are doing something for those who are so caught.

But what about thousands of widows who do not marry again? Widows of retired civil servants receive pensions which are only 50 per cent of what their husbands' pensions were. Widows of members of parliament get 60 per cent. This is an element of discrimination which I do not think should persist. As a matter of fact, the percentage should be even higher. Something should certainly be done for a widow in the first year after her husband's death when she is trying to maintain the kind of life which they had. At any rate, an improvement is being made and we welcome it.

I notice that the bill provides for the right of a widow on remarriage to commute any value that she is entitled to into a lump sum payment. I think that is good.

I like the provision in the bill that will extend to children of deceased civil servants a pension benefit if those children continue in school or university up to the age of 25. That also is good. This is, of course, another charge on the fund. We are told time and time again the fund cannot afford these extra charges that we propose, but the government does find a few additional charges which it can make on the fund and still carry on. I know there is a difference of degree as well as of kind, but I am looking for some kindness. The minister realizes there are some things which need to be dealt with. I think there are a lot more and I shall come to them in a few minutes.

It is also good that the bill seeks to clarify some ambiguities that existed in relating pensions under these acts to the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan. For the most part, these are technicalities that the bill clears up. There has also been a distinction made between pensions drawn under the Canada Pension Plan or the Quebec Pension Plan on the basis of retirement and pensions on the basis of a disability. These amendments are all good and we welcome them.

The proposal to have pensions render the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act on the same basis as pensions under the Public Service Superannuation Act is a desirable step.

There is one rather major change that is being made by the bill. I have no objection to it, but I think it keeps alive the mythology about pensions that some day we shall have to explode. I refer to the playing around with the fund and the accounting methods. This is not a very professional term to describe what the minister outlined this morning, namely, that provision is being made for a possible increase in the rate of interest to be applied to these funds. The minister did not leave any chance for people to think that this money might be used to pay increased benefits. The minister said precisely that it would not be used for that purpose. He said that in making provision for a higher rate of interest the government is taking the right to cut down the amount of the special contributions that are added from time to time to keep the fund actuarially in balance.

This is understandable, Mr. Speaker, to anyone who studies this whole subject, but I am sure the minister will not be surprised if some retired civil servants get the notion and even make the charge that the government has done this as a sort of trick, that the government is making provision for the rate of interest to be increased just to show retired civil servants that this is not a way to get increased pension benefits for them. The minister looks at me with a "you know better" expression, but he will have a hard job explaining this to many people. Many people feel that if the government would add one percentage point to the rate of interest, this would provide a sum of money out of which increased benefits could be paid.

A mythology has developed about these pension funds that is highly fictional. We seem to have developed the notion that if money is put into a fund, somehow, with the interest that is added and so on, there will be money there to pay pensions at a later date which will not cost any one any money. People also have the notion they have a certain right to a pension that they have paid for themselves. The plain fact of the matter is that when people draw pensions they receive a portion of the goods and services being produced today. No matter how many complicated funds are developed, pensions are a pay as you go proposition. People who are retired today are not receiving money which is coming out of a fund. They are not living on goods and services that have been stored. They are receiving money which represents a portion of the goods and services being produced today. In other words, people working today are providing the major part of today's pensions. What is the quid pro quo for the people who are working today? It is that life, society and the government go on and when today's workers retire, the workers of that time will contribute a portion of what they produce to provide a pension for those who are then retired. I am sure the minister agrees with this philosophical part of my remarks as to how pensions operate.

We are trying to kid the troops by having people put money into funds such as the public service superannuation fund and the old age security fund. We try to make people feel they are receiving pensions because they put the money in there, or we try to develop a scheme under which the government can say to people: You cannot get any more because there is not enough money in the fund. I am prepared to admit the logical sequence to this bit of philosophy in which I have been indulging, and it is this: If better pensions are to be paid to people on old age security, people retired from private industry or the civil service, there must be a deliberate decision by the people producing the wealth today that this is to be done.

When I ask the federal government to do something for retired civil servants I am asking for a deliberate decision by a society as affluent as ours. In our society we produce as much as we can and we are able to do this because of the people who preceded us, built up our society and are today retired. The people who are now retired do not receive a decent pension or have a decent standard of living. Retired people in their sixties or seventies should not have only enough to keep up with the cost of living but should be able to enjoy their retirement.

Because I hold these views about pension funds, I am not as excited about the clauses in this bill that dress up the accounting procedure. I know it will be neater as an accounting proposition to make sure that the fund is actuarially sound, that there is enough there to pay the pensions that have been built up, and so on. It will be nice to be able to say in accounting terms that we are not having to make as heavy charges against current revenues as we would if we were not paying this higher rate of interest, but it all adds up really to just a fine piece of bookkeeping that is far removed from the reality of the situation.

The reality of the situation is that there are retired people today who worked hard to build the country to what it is, whether they were in private industry or in government service. We are now thinking of those who were in government service, who worked hard to build the public service to what it is, to provide the support for the kind of things we try to do in government. Today they are retired and I am sure all those hon. members whose names I have mentioned, in fact all of us in this house, agree that these people ought to have a decent break in terms of pensions today that are not just tied to a fund, not just related to what they were earning 10, 20 or 30 years ago, but are related to what society is able to produce today.

I said initially that I thought there were a number of things in this bill that were good, and I have tried to back up that statement by pointing out those things that I do welcome wholeheartedly. I have spent a moment or two on the question of revamping the fund, not that I think there is anything wrong with it in accounting or bookkeeping terms but rather because I think it is misleading. It keeps alive the mythology that somehow or other these pensions are paid out of the fund.

I remember that some years ago—I think it was 1950—we were discussing in the old age security committee various ways of getting rid of the means test and improving old age pensions. At that time we had an interesting member from Saskatchewan by the name of Ferrie. He was a Liberal. He has passed on and so perhaps I can quote him. We were talking about ways and means of paying a good-sized old age security pension, which in those days meant $40 a month. Dr. George Davidson was the Deputy Minister of Welfare and was the chief witness before our committee. At one point when we got to a question period Mr. Ferrie had a bright idea. He asked, "Could we, by following the funding principle, get to the point where we have put enough money in and do not have to pay any more money in because the interest on the fund will pay the pensions for everyone?" Hon. members know Dr. Davidson. He answered in a very nice, academic way. I mention this incident because it is an illustration of the extreme notions that some people have about pension funds. Pensions are not paid out of anything that is stored up; they are paid out of current production.

The present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), when he was minister of finance, at one point when we were discussing funds said he agreed with me that we should get on to a pay as you go basis. This is, in fact, what we do. We talk about the public service superannuation fund. Fund? Is that money somewhere? Is it in the Bank of Montreal, in the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, with some trust company, in the Bank of Canada, or anywhere else? No. That fund simply represents figures on the books of the government of Canada. Theoretically the money is there in the consolidated revenue fund, but it is there only in figures on the books.

When the 5 per cent or 6½ per cent is deducted from a civil servant's pay, does that mean that so many dollars are actually kept back from his or her pay and put into a fund somewhere? No. It simply means that he gets 93½ per cent of his pay and she gets 95 per cent of her pay and the rest is added to the books in so many figures. I do not quarrel with this procedure but I spell it out to make the point that pensions are a pay as you go proposition and that they represent deliberate choice, and I dare to believe that the other hon. members I have mentioned who will be taking part in this debate agree with me. We are not trying to inveigle the government to do something that is tricky, to play around with the fund. We are straightforwardly and honestly saying that in a society as affluent as ours is in 1969 we have a moral obligation to these people, who helped bring our society to where it is, to give them pension benefits that will enable them to live decent and dignified lives at the present time.

May I now make a point which I have tried to make a good many times, that in this campaign we are fighting a battle for everyone. Sometimes people will say, and in fact I have received letters asking, "What is all this concern about retired civil servants? What about the rest of the Canadian people?" I point out that we are fighting a battle for everyone. We are trying to get a principle established, to get it started. Perhaps I should not say that because others have done it. There are a number of governments that have brought in pension increase provisions, and there are a number of pension plans in private industry where, usually because of negotiations, there are escalator clauses for the pensions to go up. The auto workers have accomplished a number of these agreements. There is at least one life insurance company which has a pension plan for its employees that includes an escalator clauses. So it is not a brand new idea. But it is still in its infancy and it is terribly important that we get it started.

Let me talk about this thing in terms of three groups of people. I think we are concerned first of all and rightly so, and in human terms it is important that this is so, for the people who are now retired and who are having a tough time getting by. This applies certainly to those many people who are on lower pension benefits. The figures are on Hansard. I ask for them every year. I have asked for them so often now that I suppose a computer just turns them out, and if the computer is set up to turn them out next year I will ask the same questions again next year.

We are concerned about them, but it is becoming increasingly true that people in the middle and even in the upper brackets, up to the assistant deputy minister and deputy minister levels, who thought when they went out on pensions that the picture was not bad, are also affected. In the meantime, not only have living costs gone up but living standards have changed, and people who had certain professional connections and lived in a certain social milieu find it is not for them any more because the value of their pensions has decreased and they cannot live on their fixed incomes and keep up with the rising standards of living. What is wrong with the desire to do that? We do not expect workers to go 20 years without any increase in wages or salaries. Yet we say to retired civil servants who went out 20 years ago that, but for the small adjustment that some of them got in 1958, this is it; it is a contractual relationship and you are bound by it for life.

In my plea to the minister I am almost prepared to say that we cannot charge the government with breaking any contract so far as the pensions of its retired civil servants are concerned. Yes, the legalities have been maintained. But the government has broken faith. To me there is a difference and the latter is more important than the former. I think we have broken faith in that we have let these people who have retired get into a position where they have to try to get by on inadequate pensions.

I said I wanted to talk about this thing in terms of three groups of people. I am concerned first of all, and I think hon. members generally will join with me in this, about those who are now retired and, by the gods of war, Mr. Speaker, we should not let this session go by without taking action for these people. We failed them in 1967 when a unanimous committee report was brought in by the hon. member for Ottawa East who was chairman of the special joint committee on pensions. In 1968 the story was the same. Now we are in 1969.

On January 8, 1969, the President of the Treasury Board met with the executive body of the Federal Superannuates National Association on this matter. He assured them there would be a study and he hoped there would be a report in three or four weeks, but two or three months have gone by since then and nothing has come of it. We should not let this question go by without dealing with the case of these people. I am making a plea not only for those who are now retired but also for those who are working in the public service today. These people may be able to compute what their pensions will be on the basis of 70 per cent of their best six years if they have the prospect of obtaining 35 years' service, and it will sound not bad. The day will come when these people will retire and at the point of retirement things may be all right for them. These people may retire at age 60 after 20 or 25 years' service. Because of longevity and other things they may live until age 85 or 90, but so far as the present arrangements are concerned there will be no increase in their pensions. I contend that we must build into the Public Service Superannuation Act and other pension plans a provision for automatic escalation.

I have pleaded and pleaded that we understand this problem. I did not get it into the head of the Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lang) the other night that we are not concerned only about escalation to meet the rising cost of living but also rising standards. I have a resolution on the order paper which is an attempt to cope with this matter. It provides that public service pensions should be recalculated every year so as to keep them in line with increases in wages and salaries and that, in fact, there should be a relationship between a retired civil servant's pension and the salary attached to the job he had at the time of retirement. This is difficult, new and revolutionary, but unless we do this kind of thing our whole pension program can fall apart and be meaningless, and people will have to fall back on welfare payments of one kind or another.

I have been talking about retired civil servants. I am now talking about those who are working and for whom I think there should be the protection of an escalation clause in the various acts. I am also concerned, however, about the broad sector of the Canadian people. One of the reasons I want the government to act is that I believe it is the government's job to give the lead. We must do the same thing in respect of the old age security pension; we must have an escalation clause tied in with salaries and wages. It is necessary that we give the lead to companies like Canadian National Railways, the Canadian Pacific Railway and other private companies in this country. As the minister knows, because I called it to his attention the other day, many people and bodies now realize that pensions must be on this kind of a basis. Publications like the Financial Post are concerned about this matter. It devoted a whole issue to the problem of keeping pensions in line not just with rising living costs but also with rising living standards.

Those of us who are taking part in this debate today are in effect pleading the case not just of those who are retired civil servants, not just those who are working in the public service and should have something better to look forward to when they retire, but the case of all the retired people of Canada and particularly the case of those who will become retired people. We all get there unless death intervenes. I make the point as strongly as I can that I believe the most important aspect of our pension problem is that we must bring this kind of escalation provision into effect. I appreciate the attention the President of the Treasury Board and his colleague the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) are paying to my remarks. I think they agree with me. In fact I am sure they agree with me. I believe that even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), hardhearted though he may be, agrees with me.

The problem is to get started. I am aware that private industry does not want to have to do this. I realize that private industry will be scandalized if the government makes a move like this. Its leaders will say that the government is putting them on the spot. But it is the government's job to give leadership in this field, and I urge as strongly as I can that this be done.

I recall my starting time and I believe I could take five minutes after the luncheon adjournment, but I think I can conclude my remarks now and give the next speaker an opportunity to get ready to begin at two o'clock. I should like, however, to take a moment or two to make a few comments which might seem a bit more critical than those I have made up to this point. I have been both pleading and philosophical and have caused the minister's heart to bleed. But I must also say to the government that really the government's record in this matter is disgraceful. All these years—and I have been at it myself for 20 or 25 years—we have been told, as the minister said this morning, that the matter is under active consideration. These pensioners and their widows are dying off at the rate of 150 to 200 a month. I do not know how many have died hearing the last words of the government that an increase in their pensions is under active consideration. This is not good enough.

The whole matter came to a bit of a pitch back in 1966 and 1967 when we pleaded that it be referred to a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate which met at that time under the chairmanship of the hon. member for Ottawa East. There is no doubt in my mind that when the government agreed to have the matter go before the committee it was with the understanding that if the committee came back with a recommendation there would be action on it. We came back with a recommendation. The present Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith), who was house leader at that time, was most helpful on May 18, 1967, and arranged that we have a meeting of the committee that morning so that we could get our report in before prorogation and before the committee would die so that this matter could be dealt with. The report was brought in. I put most of it on the record in speech I made on November 18, 1968, and it is also contained in Votes and Proceedings for May 8, 1967.

Every member of that committee, especially the hon. member for Ottawa East, was of the belief that the step the government had taken carried with it the implication that action would be taken on the report. I am sure the hon. member for Ottawa East would confirm that. I am sure of it myself. In May and June, 1967, I think we were almost there. The then prime minister, Mr. Pearson, assured me several times, as did the present Minister of Finance, that it would be done before the end of June that year, 1967.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I might have permission to continue I can finish in two minutes.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): At that point action was just about achieved, and then somehow the government backed away. I do not know who was responsible. We had to go out of here on July 7, 1967, without it being acted on. We were told then that it would be done in the fall. It was not done then, it was not done in 1968, and here we are in 1969 and it is not being done now. I am sure the present minister is ashamed of this record.

I say, for heaven's sake let us have action on this matter at this session. I am sure my friend the hon. member for Windsor West, my friend the hon. member for Ottawa East, my friend the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra, my friend the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, my friend the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle), my friend the hon. member for Halifax, my friend the hon. member for Peace River, my friend the hon. member for Saint John-Lancaster, and my own colleagues are behind this, as well as my friends from Brandon-Souris, South Western Nova and Pembina. Every member present seems to be on my side. Who isn't?

An hon. Member: Only the minister.

Mr. Clermont: Gatineau.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There you are, Mr. Speaker; there is not a member in this house who does not agree with the plea I have made this morning I hope the minister will act on it this session without fail.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair to resume at two o'clock this afternoon.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. D. Gordon Blair (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with what I regard as an important proposal in this bill. I do not intend to comment on it in detail. It proposes improvements in various aspects of the superannuation schemes affecting public servants, members of the armed forces and members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Were I to speak on it in detail at this time I could add nothing really to the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who I am glad to note feels as I do, that this bill represents a significant improvement in all these pension and superannuation plans.

At the risk of perhaps putting myself out of order I should like to comment on the same matter of policy which has been dealt with by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I have in mind the fact that this bill makes no reference to the adjustment of existing pensions of superannuated civil servants and members of the armed forces. I cannot conceal my extreme disappointment that this is the case because this matter is one of long standing. For all practical purposes the starting point in our consideration of this matter should be the recommendations of the special joint committee of the Senate and the House which reported in May of 1967. The text of that committee's report is available to all hon. members and has been referred to in earlier debates in this session by myself and by other hon. members, so I do not think it is necessary to repeat any part of that report in detail or to read it in its verbatim form.

The problem that faces retired civil servants can be summed up best in two ways, I think. First of all, there is the basic problem of equity. People who worked a long time for the government of Canada and did so in the belief that upon their retirement they would be able to maintain a certain standard of life have been disappointed. The reasons for this disappointment include many factors, the chief of which is inflation. The value of the pensions which they thought they would be paid upon their retirement has progressively declined because of the devaluation of our currency by persistent and continuing inflation. I am not an economic expert but it seems to me that we must live with the prospect that there will not be a stabilization of the currency and that there will continue to be some degree of inflation in the future. So the first consideration with regard to the position of pensioners is for pensioners in general and the concern which we in parliament should have as the former employers of retired civil servants to ensure that they are fairly treated. Our concern should apply not only during their active years of service but in their years of retirement.

There is a second and, to my mind, even more important consideration which should govern the thinking of hon. members on this subject. There are a number of cases of real hardship among superannuated civil servants. I suppose it is impossible for any government or any parliament to so order its affairs that hardship will not exist in some cases. But we must look at broad categories and at the substantial numbers of people who now suffer hardship. I am sure that all hon. members know very well that in recent years there has been a substantial escalation in the salaries paid to civil servants. Hon. members will also know that pensions are computed on the basis of the salaries which civil servants earned at the time of their retirement. People who may have retired 15 or 20 years ago find that their pensions, which were scaled to the then existing salaries, are very much lower than the pensions of those holding comparable positions in the government who are retiring today. It is in this group that we find the greatest degree of hardship. Many of those people are quite elderly and are forced to subsist on what by any standards must be considered to be a disappointing, and, unhappily in some instances, an abysmally low pension.

Perhaps I have some advantage in speaking in this debate because I am a new member of a new parliament and a supporter of a new government. I do not believe that it is any part of my responsibility to defend actions which may have taken place in the past in parliament. Therefore I propose to make some comments about things which have happened in the past.

It seems to me quite clear that at present we are in a situation which has been brought about by the extravagance of governmental programs, both provincial and federal, and these programs are not only the results of the decisions of whatever governments may have been in power when they were instituted but the results of collective representations and expressions of views of politicians and members of this house in every party. I say quite categorically that everybody bears a major share of responsibility for the problems which are not the problems of the government alone but are in fact the problems of the people of Canada. It is my opinion that at every stage in this parliament we are faced with situations where hard choices have to be made. This is because we have gone almost beyond the outer limits of expenditure in relation to our revenues. Because of the collective result of these decisions of the past, this government and this parliament have very little margin in which to manoeuvre and in which to deal with problems such as that of the retired civil servants.

To me the most heartening part of the address of the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) was his statement that the government was now considering this important matter in relation to all the other commitments which the government and this parliament have made to various classes of people in our society, be they old age pensioners or a recipient of any kind of pension, welfare payment and the like. One of the things which attracted me to the support of this government is my belief that it is capable of undertaking the necessary review of the commitments which this parliament and successive governments have made, and as a result of that review establishing policies and priorities for further expenditure which will have some relevance to the future and which will, I hope, contribute materially to the assistance of people who are in the position of retired civil servants.

It is also obvious to all hon. members, and I need hardly mention it, that a statement that this matter is receiving careful consideration is not really of any immediate assistance to the persons now receiving pensions and to people who are now enduring the hardships that I have described. Many of them at their age unhappily have not much longer to live. Apart from that, the people who are struggling and who may be ill find no solace in the suggestion that at some future date relief may be brought to them. Tremendous urgency attaches to the review which must precede the development of policy on this matter.

Notwithstanding all the claims which are made upon the public treasury, and many of them have great merit, special priority and significance should be attached to the position of the retired civil servants. This is because they have been our employees. Whatever may have been the position in the past I believe we in this country have arrived at the view that the obligation of employers to their employees does not cease completely when they retire. There are examples of large firms in industry which recognize a continuing obligation to increase periodically superannuation payments made to their former employees. This principle was recognized in the statute of 1959 and it was firmly endorsed by the report of the joint parliamentary committee in 1967. To my mind it is now beyond the realm of doubt and of dispute that an obligation of a special kind rests upon the government of Canada as a former employer of these superannuated pensioners to undertake periodic upward adjustment of their pensions in order to provide them with a decent and comfortable standard of life in their retirement.

There are many other things which might be said on this subject. The President of the Treasury Board re-emphasized that there is no magic way in which pensions paid to retired public servants can be increased without a charge on the treasury and ultimately on the taxpayers of Canada. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in the course of his interesting analysis of the way in which pensions are really paid—I am not saying whether I completely agree with his analysis—made it abundantly clear that ultimately the charge for the payment of pensions falls upon the producing elements of the nation. In the case of pensions paid to retired public servants, for example, this means that unhappily it falls upon the taxpayers. I think it is well for this point to be emphasized because we all live in a situation in which it is generally assumed that taxation has approached something like its ultimate limit, and we must recognize that when we say pensions of retired civil servants should be increased we are not only talking about payment of pensions but we are also talking about the imposition of taxes.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has indicated quite properly the great issues of policy which must be decided when this question of the pensions of retired civil servants is considered. He made it abundantly clear that this matter could not be considered in isolation. One group which he noted in this connection were those in receipt of old age pensions. This indicates to hon. members the magnitude of the collective decision which the government and this parliament utlimately may have to make in relation to any scheme or schemes for the upward adjustment of pensions and payments of this type.

I recognize fully the difficulty encountered by the government in reaching a decision on this very important matter. I applaud my hon. friends on the treasury benches for approaching it in a sensible, constructive and comprehensive way. Frankly, I do not think we could support an ad hoc approach to these and similar problems. Having said all this, I urge the government to accelerate the study which is now in progress and to take into special consideration the position of its former employees, particularly those whom I regard as suffering a degree of hardship which is not consistent with our view of the way in which people in this society should live.

Mr. Mongrain: Would my hon. friend be in favour of some kind of escalator clause in pension legislation so that pensions would automatically follow the cost of living?

Mr. Blair: There is such a provision in the present old age scheme, Mr. Speaker. I am not an expert in this field, but I think such a provision might be the ultimate solution to the difficulty in which superannuated employees of the government of Canada find themselves.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Would the hon. member permit a supplementary question? Does he not think it might be better still to have an escalator clause relating pensions to the rising wages and salaries of our people?

Mr. J.-T. Richard (Ottawa East): I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I am very disappointed to have to speak at this stage on a bill of the type before us. I would have hoped the government might give us a better opportunity to discuss the question of the pensions of superannuated civil servants. I am sure we are almost out of order in talking about it now, though no one would dare say so because I believe the majority of hon. members are of one mind as to the treatment which should be accorded to retired public servants.

I must say I have encountered a further disappointment inasmuch as though I have been here for about 24 years and though this subject has come up almost every year since 1947, I always seem to begin my speeches on this subject by saying, "I have listened with great interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre." I made my position clear in 1947 and in 1948 I said roughly the same thing. As reported at page 1397 of Hansard for that year I said:

> I should not like to let this occasion pass without some reference to superannuated civil servants. No doubt hon. members will recall that last year I was one of those who urged the Minister of Finance (Mr. Abbott) to make some provision for a cost of living bonus or an increase for superannuated civil servants. I have heard of late that this matter is not at present receiving favourable consideration. However, I do not think the arguments advanced against giving this increase are valid because, as I see it, the government is putting itself in the position of a private concern.

I had already stated at that time that the government should be the best kind of employer, that it should follow the example set by private business. But it seems that we are going backwards in this new, just society. In 1949 I was still at it. I was still following the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. As reported at page 2283 of Hansard for that session I said:

> I have had so many representations in the past four years that I believe sincerely that something must be done. Consideration must be given to working out some supplement for at least some of the superannuated civil servants. The government must be a model employer—

That is where the expression arose.

> —and I do not think we can base any argument on the fact that industry or the life insurance companies do not do it the way we wish this to be done. I am glad the Minister of Finance is willing to reconsider the matter—

The government has been considering the matter ever since. In 1953 I was still at it. As reported at page 3731 of Hansard I said:

> I do not wish to go into greater detail but I would like to repeat what I have said through the years, although I do not know that I will be successful, that a number of superannuated civil servants should have been considered for increases in their pensions. Their pensions are very low and they were unfortunate in being retired at an early date and before the recent increases in salaries. I have said before that other countries such as England and the United States have seen fit to give a cost of living bonus to some of their superannuated civil servants in cases where the pensions were too low.

Again, in 1956, as reported at page 5585 of Hansard, I said:

> I should like to say a few words on the Public Service Superannuation Act. As you know, Mr. Chairman, we in Canada have the most loyal and efficient public servants of any country in this world. We have been blessed by the fact that throughout the years, whatever government has been in power, we have had a wonderful staff of civil servants throughout the country. That places us in the position of having to deal with them fairly, equitably and most generously. I have always said that in any country the best employer should be the government—

Some of our ministers are getting a great deal of benefit from the civil service, just as a previous minister of national defence received a great deal of benefit from having such an excellent civil servant to advise him as the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury).

Mr. Aiken: But he has not retired.

Mr. Richard: Then in 1957 it was the same thing again. As reported at page 1859 of Hansard I said:

> As I have said before, the civil service of Canada is the best in the world, and because our civil servants are the best they are entitled to the best treatment. I have also said before, and I am not afraid to repeat it, that the government should be the best employer. Although the superannuation act is very good and has been amended often to make it better still, I do not agree that we should base payments of pensions to civil servants entirely upon the contract.

I made another speech in 1958 to the same effect. Then something new happened. Three years ago the old civil service act, what is today the Public Service Superannuation Act, was revised, and toward the end of our work there was a great deal of pressure brought to bear upon the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and myself. Eventually I was asked whether I would stay on as chairman to deal with the superannuated civil servants.

Hon. members can observe my seat in this chamber and see that, I am a sort of lone wolf here. I have some opinions and some judgments and I am not a swinger—in the proper sense, not in the younger sense, of the term. I say what I think and I always think about the same thing. I agreed to become chairman of that committee on one condition, that we would come to a decision which would be seriously acted upon. And I meant seriously; otherwise I would not have been chairman and nobody could have made me chairman had I not wanted to be.

On May 8, 1967, that very excellent committee brought in a report to which reference was made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Blair). We had the support of the hon. member for Hull, who had always been very active in the same way as the former hon. member for Ottawa West who is now a minister and has his hands a little more tied than before. Nevertheless, the group of members who formed that committee represented some of the best minds in this house. I was proud of the membership of the committee. It was not at all partisan. As a matter of fact, all of the bills submitted to the committee were amended from top to bottom to suit not one party but the civil service and government relationships therewith generally.

We did not come to the decision that was presented to the house on May 8, 1967, haphazardly. It had involved a great deal of study, it was unanimous, and we thought we had great support from the government. The proposition we made was not an expensive one. I believed at that time that the immediate purpose was to look after retired public servants who were in the low paid categories or who had retired some time before 1963 or 1964.

Although our proposal included the escalation of the pensions of all civil servants from time to time, had a start been made then to escalate the pensions of retired civil servants in the low paid categories or the pensions of those who had retired, say, before 1963, I understand that the total cost in any one year would have been less than $10 million. That figure is not mine, though my mathematics are sometimes much better than those of Treasury Board, whose figure it is. Certainly the cost was nothing like $50 million, and I defy anybody to tell me that it would have cost $50 million to do the job the committee had in mind at that time. The committee realized that it could not do everything immediately but it did want to look after those in receipt of small pensions for a long time as well as those who had retired before 1963.

The number of pensioners who are affected diminishes from year to year. I do not know whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has given the figures, but the number declines every year. The cost also declines from year to year so far as those who retired on low pensions or earlier than 1963 are concerned.

So, Mr. Speaker, once again I hate to have to repeat the words I uttered the year before last. At that time I said I was absolutely convinced that the government was more or less of the same opinion as the committee. However, it appears that somewhere there are powerful interests that can disrupt the work of a committee that was honestly put to work. I sincerely hope that the present minister will be of the same mind as a former head of the Treasury Board and that he will find sufficient moneys to give immediate relief to at least that group of retired public servants I have referred to, with, I hope, the promise that he will find a way to escalate all pensions in the near future.

We must show good will. It is not enough for a few members of the house to take the brunt of this responsibility. We are beginning to look a little false. People do not appreciate that we are sincere, that we have done our best and that we can do little until the government realizes that the $10 million or $15 million it would spend in this field would bring our people greater benefits than a similar amount spent on hydrofoils or other experiments conducted by the Department of National Defence.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, hon. members may wonder why I am speaking on pensions in as much as I am a long way from being pensioned off.

An hon. Member: You might get there.

Mr. Comeau: Yes, I may get there. Since I do not wish to repeat what other hon. members have said on the subject I shall limit my remarks to about five minutes.

Bill C-178 certainly has some good points. It revises many sections of the acts and, in the case of the Public Service Superannuation Act, provides a better deal for the children of retired civil servants attending school or university. It also gives a better deal to widows of retired civil servants. Many other clauses of the bill are extremely worth while.

I listened with interest to the comments of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Before lunch I told him I agreed with him. I agree with the remarks he made about the superannuation fund. I understand that civil servants contribute to their pensions and that the government borrows all the money they put into the fund and spends it, with no intention of reimbursing the fund. The government borrows this money from this supposed fund at an interest rate of 4 per cent, I believe. All other interest rates have gone up in the past few years; in this parliament we have seen many instances of interest rates going up. However, the rate at which the government borrows from this supposed fund still remains at 4 per cent. I also understand that the interest on the money the government has borrowed from this supposed fund to which civil servants contribute is double the cost of paying pensions.

I repeat that our civil servants are contributing to the fund and the government is borrowing all the money and spending it, with no intention of reimbursing the fund. I know that a number of hon. members have alluded to this fact and I do not wish to be repetitious, but I wish to say that I do not think the government is being fair. It is not fair for the government to take this money out of the fund and not give civil servants their share of it. I am not in favour of subsidies but I am in favour of having the government contribute its share to this fund, just as any ordinary business would. It should operate the fund as any ordinary business operates a fund contributed to by its employees.

Before concluding may I quote one paragraph of a letter I received from a constituent of mine:

> Ever since this government came into office in 1963 they have refused to listen to all arguments to have civil servants' pensions raised to meet the present day cost of living. The public service pension fund, with the civil servants' contributions with interest along with the government's worthless bookkeeping entries or I.O.U.'s, amounts to some 3¼ billion dollars. Half that amount belongs to the civil servants and retired civil servants of Canada. The civil servants' contributions have paid all pensions. The government has never paid a dime into the pension fund.

In conclusion, I hope that when the bill is reported back from the committee it will incorporate some of the recommendations which have been made.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, I just want to say a few words, so I ask my hon. friend, the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) to be patient. I shall take a few minutes only to talk about the pension of public servants.

I am in favour of an increase in the pension of those who have worked in the public service of Canada for many years. I share the opinion of those who spoke before me on that subject. Being from the Hull region, we know there are thousands of retired civil servants. The matter has been under consideration in committees for years. A number of hon. members have made representations and the Public Service Alliance of Canada has made claims.

A few years ago, the right hon. Mr. Pearson even informed the vice-president of the Retired Civil Servants Association that some action would be taken in the near future, but nothing has been done yet. In my opinion, these loyal civil servants have served the government and the people of Canada for many years and they certainly deserve to have their pensions increased. Over the past ten years or so, the cost of living has increased by 44 per cent and nothing has been done to increase pensions for these faithful employees.

I would think that these people were not perhaps in a position to serve their country as members of the armed forces during the last war. However, Mr. Speaker, as soldiers were needed on the battlefields, there had to be some people to assist the soldiers on the home front so that victory might be won as soon as possible and this is what they did. Like the war veterans, they deserve a pension that will permit them to have a standard of living like all other Canadians, in 1969.

These retired civil servants are no doubt entitled to the gratitude of the country for their services. I will always insist that if we must fight for the rights of these pensioners, we will do so because they have been, so to say, the backbone of the country during the last war, serving their country at home while our soldiers were fighting for Canada. I repeat that I will never insist too strongly on this point. I do feel they are entitled to this consideration for the remainder of their life.

I think that it is the responsibility of this house to endorse this policy, to bring the government to an understanding of this problem and to get it to take the necessary measures for an adjustment of the only income received by those retired civil servants for whom I have a great deal of admiration and sympathy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. J.-A. Mongrain (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I should like—

• (2:50 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member must be at his seat before he can put his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Mongrain: Would my friend, the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) permit a question?

Mr. Isabelle: Certainly.

Mr. Mongrain: I will ask him, in a slightly different form, the question I put earlier to the hon. member who spoke before me. In view of the fact that we are now talking about adjustment and readjustment, and that, due to cyclical changes in international financial affairs, the same problem occurs every four years, would the hon. member for Hull not be favourable also to the incorporation in the pension act, of a provision which would grant automatically either an increase or a decrease in pensions, geared to the rise or fall of the cost of living for future decades so as to avoid a similar discussion every five years?

Mr. Isabelle: Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Trois-Rivières and in reply I will tell him that I would be favourable to any provision which would promote an increase in pensions for retired civil servants.

[English]

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): I listened with a good deal of interest, Mr. Speaker, to the speech of the minister when he introduced this bill. It represents a measure of updating pension legislation, in some cases increasing benefits and in other cases making economic changes which are long overdue. As has been observed by other hon. members, there is little in the bill to which we can take exception. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that what was not in the bill gave us more concern than what was in it.

The last paragraph of the minister's remarks was a disappointment to me and other hon. members from the national capital region in particular and from other parts of Canada because the government was not able to see its way clear to adjust the pensions of those who have retired. The minister's remarks with regard to the interest rate paid on pension funds were particularly illuminating and I listened with interest to what he said in this regard.

One hon. member used the expression "mythology of pensions". Certainly with regard to the funding provisions and the adjusting of interest rates there is a great deal of confusion. I know there is no confusion in the minds of the minister, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the other hon. members who have spoken, but many remarks made in this house have led to confusion and a great deal of misunderstanding in other quarters.

The fundamental difference between a publicly operated pension plan and a privately operated pension plan is something academics can discuss at great length. A privately operated plan must be actuarially sound. The Department of Insurance and other supervisory authorities insist on full funding provisions, for which several reasons are given. The same requirements are not always necessary when dealing with public funds because the investment of the sums accumulated involves other questions of public policy. This was discovered during the debate on the Canada Pension Plan.

I do not agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he dealt at some length with the question of funding. In effect he said that funding does not matter, the fund does not matter, and all this business about interest rates does not matter. It is true that the adjustment of interest rates to current levels will not produce half of the annual payments of a deficiency nature for arrears of contribution, deferred amortization charges and other items quoted each year in this house. As the minister pointed out, $200 million has been appropriated this year to make up these deficiencies. In my opinion the adjustment of interest rates should have been done some time ago. We have entered into an age of higher interest rates which will continue for at least a generation. This has been forecast by the Economic Council of Canada and there is every reason to believe this forecast. The 4 per cent interest rate level is now seriously out of line. It is the intention of the government to reduce the deficiency payment.

The case of those arguing for an increase in pensions is not aided one bit by talking about the pension fund. No one can look at the income and outgo of a pension fund and talk about whether it is solvent and meeting all actuarial criteria without having an analysis of the fund. That is where actuaries enter into the picture.

I listened to the remarks of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) for whom I have a high regard. He hoped the committee would study the question of contributions to the fund exceeding the annual outgo. With the greatest of respect to the hon. member, I hope the committee does not waste time doing this. It would be a complete waste of time for the committee to argue with actuaries who have a great deal of technical expertise. The actuaries certainly have the last word over laymen on these matters.

I agree with hon. members on both sides of the house that the case for an adjustment of pensions is basically moral. It is a question of adjusting the standards of living for those who have been affected by inflation over which they have no control. It is a difficult question of public policy, but I believe something will be done about it by the government.

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the misinterpretation of information in this debate. I know hon. members have a clear understanding of what they are saying and I give full marks to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, although he spent more time than I would have on that aspect of his presentation. People listening to this debate, pensioners writing in and those making statements on behalf of the pensioners have given a bad name to a good cause. I have received a substantial number of letters suggesting that I ask the Auditor General to look at the theft that has gone on in the superannuation account. There is no theft, Mr. Speaker. There is no stealing, there is nothing irregular. No contractual obligations have been broken. The law has not been broken in any technical way whatsoever. The excessive preoccupation with the fund has led to the type of arguments which have given a bad name to those arguing on behalf of pensioners. Every time they talk about the fund they act as though they are actuaries, but they are not. They make statements about the fund which are not true. When they make statements in this way, the proper authorities of government treat them with the seriousness they deserve, even though the cause is a good one.

The case for an adjustment of pensions is a moral one. It is not a narrow, legal case. It is not a case which can be argued on the basis of a lack of performance, a breach of performance or something of that nature. It is not a case of money that has been stolen, of money that has been misappropriated, of money that has been misapplied. But I receive no end of letters from people in receipt of pensions who have been listening to all this argument about public pension funds and who have come to the conclusion that there is some gross irregularity involved. As a result, they say things that do not help their own cause.

Recently I received a copy of a letter from a man, resident in Florida, that he sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and which was grossly insulting to the Prime Minister. The letter contained statements based on his interpretation of what had been done to the fund, and which were a total misconception of what was happening. This kind of argument, this kind of preoccupation with funding, serves no particular purpose.

I hope that at the earliest possible date the government will give consideration to the unanimous recommendations of the committee. I hope it will be able to give consideration to these recommendations at a time when there is a balanced budget, when the kind of fiscal policy which I know the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) is doing his courageous best to establish will have contributed to some degree to the fiscal stability of the country, and stopped inflation.

It is essential that inflation be stopped. If we do not stop inflation, we cannot win by accelerating pensions all down the line. We must bring a halt to inflation through responsible fiscal policy. Then, we must take some measures to help restore the standard of living and the equity of those who, through no fault of their own, have placed their savings program in the form of pensions and retirement benefits which have been grossly eroded by inflation.

I repeat that the case is a moral case, but it is no less strong for being moral. Those who speak on behalf of the superannuates in my opinion would be well advised to place their emphasis on the moral side rather than try to set themselves up as actuaries, which they are not.

Mr. Mongrain: Would my hon. friend accept a question from me?

Mr. Francis: Delighted.

Mr. Mongrain: I apologize if it has already been asked and I missed the answer. In general terms, how much would it cost the government to bring these superannuates up to date?

Mr. Francis: Mr. Speaker, the immediate adjustment which I personally had hoped the government would make, and which I hope it will make at the earliest possible date, would be of the order of $10 million to $15 million annually. That is just the start. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) properly said, it is not just this group that is involved. There are others also. But if you start from here, then the bill is going to go higher. The absolute minimum immediate adjustment, to be consistent with the principles of the committee which reported some years ago, in my opinion would be of that order of magnitude.

Mr. E. B. Osler (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think almost enough has been said on this subject by a lot of people who know an awful lot more about it than I do. Although I was not able to listen to the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I gather that no one is out of tune with the intent to do well by our old people.

I could not agree more with anybody than I do with the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) when he said that this was a moral question. This is not a life insurance pension plan type of thing, which is just as well because I would understand it even less if that were the case. However, to me it is a very simple proposition.

No country is an island to itself at any particular moment in history. We come from somewhere, we are going somewhere. In Canada we have just finished 100 years of work of which I think we can be proud. These people we are talking about have been little people, big people, medium sized people who in a way have handed this country on to us. While we were growing up, while we were learning a few things and getting our minds straight, they were carrying the torch. They have now handed that torch on to us honourably, and by and large it is a pretty good torch. I do not think it is the intention of anyone deliberately to harm these people, but whether that is the intention or not the result is the same.

I find it disgraceful when I go around my constituency and meet an honest, older man, who spent his whole life in the R.C.M.P. Probably because the police force did not encourage marriage, he did not marry until he was relatively old. Now, with all the pensions that he gets he has the munificent sum of $257 a month to provide for his wife and 12 year old child. It is hard for him to sell his 12 year old son on the honesty and integrity of a policeman's job when he sees the way he has been treated by the state at the end of the road. As another example, I mention a man who worked for the Department of Agriculture for years, and who received the munificent retirement pension of $124 a month. Now, he is old enough to get an old age pension in addition to that.

If we are honest with each other and with ourselves, I do not think we can do anything but say that this is a disgraceful situation. We have a very high standard of living. We have a fine country. We have been handed the opportunity to make it even finer. If we have $10 million, $15 million or $20 million we can clean up this situation. There must be ways to find $10 million or $15 million to do that. Surely, that amount of money is being spent on less important undertakings.

There is a question of priority and morality involved. Most people admire the retired civil servants, the retired policemen and the retired armed forces people who have handed on the torch of public service to this generation. We should change our order of priorities so that we can look after these people, so that we can enter our second century with a clearer conscience than we have now. I would ask the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) to think long and hard on ways and means of changing priorities so that these people can get a better shake.

Motion agreed to and bill referred to the Standing Committee of Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

PATENT ACT—TRADE MARKS ACT

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITY TO GRANT LICENCES—REPORT STAGE

The house proceeded to the consideration of Bill No. C-102, to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Health, Welfare and Social Affairs.

• (3:10 p.m.)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker, because I sense there is a tendency to wait for the minister. We would like to have him here, but of course this is the report stage and we have got along without ministers before.

Mr. Baldwin: It is like the corpse at the funeral.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I suggest we might proceed with whatever amendment the sponsor of which is present.

Mr. Stanfield: Is he busy in his office working for the people of Canada?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order which was so eloquently dealt with by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), may I say that in the name of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) we have five amendments. Because of certain problems some members are unable to be here. We understood that the government members would probably filibuster the last bill for some time. However, we are prepared to go ahead with the last two amendments which appear in the name of the hon. member for Perth. There is the amendment to clause 5 of the bill and the amendment of clause 6.

If there are no other hon. members here who are prepared to deal with the amendments which are indicated in the appendix to Routine Proceedings and Orders of the Day for today's date, we are prepared to proceed with those two amendments.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I believe, and I think my belief is confirmed by what has been done in respect of the order paper, that the general practice is to take amendments in the order of sequence of the clauses. However, in view of the absence of the sponsors of certain amendments, both in the Progressive Conservative party and my own party, I wonder whether there might be unanimous consent to adopting the suggestion made by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), namely, that we proceed with the amendment to clause 5 which is on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Perth.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would suggest that this is a bad practice, principally because we would be dealing first with amendments to a later stage of the bill. To ignore at this stage earlier amendments which may have a consequential effect on the bill would raise difficulties. I believe this is being taken into consideration by hon. members. Therefore, if it is the disposition of the house to proceed in this manner, and if there is unanimous consent, I am prepared to do so with that observation about the practice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Without establishing a precedent.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baldwin: Then, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. member for Perth I am prepared to move the first amendment in the name of the hon. member for Perth. If Your Honour would be good enough to turn to page iii of the appendix there is an amendment to clause 5 which commences with the words, "and any such regulations may provide that any drug...".

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It is the second last one, the penultimate one.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (for Mr. Monteith) moved:

> That Bill C-102, An Act to amend the Patent Act, the Trade Marks Act and the Food and Drugs Act, be amended by adding in Clause 5 after the word "drugs", on line 44 on page 8 the following:
> "and any such regulations may provide that any drug not manufactured in Canada shall not be imported, distributed or sold until the Minister of National Health and Welfare has first certified the safety and quality of the said drug."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this particular motion would have the effect of amending clause 5 of the bill. As a matter of fact, it might save the time of the house if it were possible for the minister to accept the amendment. While he is considering that, I shall proceed. If at any time he should like to interrupt me to say he is prepared to accept the amendment, I shall be glad to sit down.

During the course of the proceedings held several years ago before a committee of this house known as the Harley committee, a very extensive examination was held into the whole question of drug prices and the related question of the safety of drugs. I recall this because some six or seven years ago I served on a similar committee immediately following what has been known throughout the world as the series of thalidomide tragedies. At that time, the members of the committee were quite concerned about the effect this particular situation might have on the manufacture and sale of drugs. Therefore certain proposals were considered during the hearings of that committee. Subsequently, the government changed. Then Dr. Harley, at that time a member of this house, quite successfully and with a great deal of diligence acted as chairman of a committee which made a further examination.

Members from all sides of the house agreed with most of the recommendations made by the committee. Included in those recommendations were a number which dealt with the question of drug safety. In other words, the members of the committee said, yes, price is of the essence and the necessity that the price of drugs be reduced to a scale which is acceptable in this country is a tremendously important question. I think, so far as our party is concerned, the members who represented this party on the committee took that position but tied to it this question of safety. I do not think there is any doubt about that. I have mentioned only the thalidomide situation but there were others which indicated that we must not evade our responsibility here by taking the politically palatable course of saying that prices only would be considered and nothing else; that is, say that we do not consider the question of drug safety to be part of our responsibility here. This amendment was brought forward for that reason.

I say through you, Mr. Speaker, to every member of this house that an examination of this amendment would indicate that it would not impose any onerous burden upon the government. Clause 5, as it now stands, states that section 24 of the Food and Drugs Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after subsection (1) thereof, the following subsection. I will not read it but it does give the governor in council the right to make regulations governing, regulating or prohibiting the importation into Canada of any drug or class of drugs manufactured outside Canada, or the distribution or sale in Canada, or the offering, exposing or having in possession for sale in Canada, of any drug or class of drugs manufactured outside Canada.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

We in this party have consistently, during the course of this session, been very reluctant to entrust to this government the regulatory powers it has sought so often; that is, the power to pass orders in council, regulations and decrees. We think it is very dangerous to invest in this government or in any government, so many powers it can exercise without seeking the approval of the House of Commons.

If ever there were a case where this right could be granted to a limited extent, this is the case. All we are doing by this amendment is authorizing the governor in council, by the terms of the motion in the name of the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), to make a specific regulation. We do not make it mandatory because we realize there must be a discretion left with the government and the minister. The amendment suggests that any such regulations may provide that any drug not manufactured in Canada shall not be imported, distributed or sold until the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) has first certified the safety and quality of the said drug.

If the government is going to take upon itself the powers given it under this proposed measure, which we hope will lead to cheaper drug prices although we have some doubt about that, then certainly there is no reason why it should not make the essential investigations through its officers which would permit the minister to make such a certification. This is not an extremely complex matter. The department has the officials, and I assume it will have the opportunity, to make investigations outside the country. Therefore, I suggest we give the government the power to authorize the Minister of National Health and Welfare to certify the safety and quality of drugs. If the government wants to accept one responsibility it cannot shirk another. We, therefore, commend the passage of this particular motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in the debate on the proposed amendment since it deals with the safety and quality of imported drugs.

In my opinion, this amendment could prove useless since the government has already provided for the compulsory inspection, by officials from the Food and Drug Directorate, of the basic ingredients that enter into the composition of some drugs.

One could go on for a long time about the safety and the quality of drugs. The matter has been raised by all those who have spoken against Bill C-102 for many years.

I think we should know that the government, through the Food and Drug Directorate, will surely not allow the importation into Canada of products that are detrimental to health.

I know for a fact that this bill has been studied many times and we know how many recommendations have been made in the last 10 years. But I have never seen as many amendments brought to a bill as in respect of Bill C-102. When it was introduced, a few days ago, there were only five amendments. It seems that the further we get, the more amendments there are. This matter was the subject of three studies over the last decade and the motion was always kept pending. I am even wondering whether the hidden powers of pharmaceutical trusts, owing to lobbying, are not themselves responsible for those numerous amendments which after all are only a scheme to prevent rapid adoption of bill C-102.

When we think that pharmaceutical companies which have been lobbying for the last ten years, have treated just about everybody to meals in restaurants, that they have even sent interns on golf tours in Miami, that they make profits up to 50 per cent, that 50 per cent of their expenses are devoted to promotion and that they tell us that they spend $12 million on research, when they actually are only spending $3 million—

[English]

Mr. Baldwin: I rise on a point of order. I am delighted to hear the hon. member make these excursions into fantasy, but I think he might be directed by Your Honour that under the rules which have been laid down, when motions of this kind are placed before the house all speeches should be strictly relevant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must say that my thought processes were working along the same lines as those of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). I would request the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) to deal more directly with the matter before the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Isabelle: Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall continue my remarks on the safety and the quality of drugs.

I think that the companies that actually import drugs are responsible ones, because almost all imported products, whether they are the finished products or the ingredients that enter into the manufacturing of these drugs, have been inspected on the spot, and if not, they have been inspected in Europe or somewhere else, even in Montreal, at the unloading wharf.

Now it is obvious that all products cannot be inspected upon their entry into Canada. However, I know that the Food and Drug Directorate has an excellent team that sees to it that safety and quality standards for drugs are adhered to. This is so true that I am always happy to recall a statement by Professor Blanc, a great Geneva pharmacologist, to the effect that Canada's Food and Drugs Directorate is the best body of its kind in the world because it devotes particular attention to ensuring the safety and quality of drugs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Isabelle: I would like it to be very clear that the quality and safety of drugs will always be maintained, and I think useless to insert such an amendment in the bill, since it contains provisions to that effect already.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (3:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I notice that the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) also attempted to get the floor. I appreciate speaking ahead of him because then if there are answers to my questions he may be able to provide them.

Like the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), all of us are concerned about the safety and quality of drugs that are made available in this country, but I wonder if the addition of the words in the proposed amendment is necessary. Indeed, the question I would like to put to the next speaker who supports the amendment is precisely this: Why do these words need to be added? There are already provisions in the Food and Drugs Act regarding the safety and quality of drugs generally, and I may add that the amendment to section 24 of the act which is being brought into effect by clause 5 of Bill C-102 uses the very same words. The new clause will make it appropriate for the Governor in Council to pass regulations regarding the importation into Canada of any class of drugs. The following are the governing words:

—as the Governor in Council deems necessary for the protection of the public in relation to the safety and quality of any such drug or class of drugs.

Surely, the provision which is already there is adequate. I come back to my question: Why add the words of the proposed amendment that is before us which will say:

—and any such regulations may provide that any drug not manufactured in Canada shall not be imported, distributed or sold until the Minister of National Health and Welfare has first certified the safety and quality of the said drug.

It seems to me that if that is a desirable practice it could be done under the regulations that are provided in the new clause 1(a). Therefore, I say, why add these words?

However, I question the amendment not just because it strikes me as being redundant but also because it seems to me that we might establish two practices so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned. We might say that with respect to drugs manufactured outside Canada there must be a certain kind of certificate that is not required for drugs manufactured in Canada. But are we not running the risk of getting different treatment so far as the safety and quality of drugs manufactured here or elsewhere is concerned? Questions about such matters as this one bother me. As I said, it seems to me to be not just a case of redundancy but a case of something that provides special loopholes for drugs manufactured in Canada that do not exist with regard to drugs manufactured outside Canada. In other words, if the sponsors of this amendment cannot show both its real necessity and also that it will not create a potential difficulty, I believe it would be better to leave clause 5 of Bill C-102 as it is.

[Translation]

Mr. C.-A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like at this time to express the policy of the Ralliement Créditiste on the amendment introduced by the Progressive Conservative party. I agree, to some extent, with the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I think that if this amendment were adopted there would then be a double inspection, one of which would take place when the drugs enter Canada.

As the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Isabelle) was saying a while ago, the experts responsible for the inspection of drugs entering the country are highly qualified. They are as qualified, I would say, as the departmental inspectors. On the other hand, I notice that this group of inspectors is responsible to the department and I am wondering why the Progressive Conservatives are proposing this amendment which is merely a repetition of the terms of the present legislation.

If the present legislation provides for an order to the Customs agents to inspect all drugs and pharmaceutical products entering Canada, I cannot understand the purpose of this amendment, unless its sponsor can provide us with more details on it.

I remember that, a few weeks ago and for another reason, the minister was blamed for accepting full responsibility. This took place during consideration of the bill on the use of pesticides or on the establishment of the interest rates. In fact, the minister was accused of trying to take over the government's authority and to take decisions by himself. We are now apparently delegating to this group more authority than is provided for in the law and I do not believe all hon. members are aware of that.

We ourselves suggested that full powers should not be not given to the minister, but that they should be well defined in the law and that the people who will be responsible should be clearly determined by the law, which, I believe, will not be agreeable at all to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), for he also has his responsibilities.

So that the department will not be overburdened, certain issues should be settled by task forces and, things being as they are, we really cannot support this amendment.

[English]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make, and then I will answer the questions raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We provided you with a speech.

Mr. Aiken: Discussions on this bill have ranged far and wide in the house, in the industry, as well as among the general members of the public for a considerable period of time. The general feeling is that while the bill is well intentioned and well spelled out as to what it proposes to do, it will not be effective, at least for more than a short period of time, in reducing the prices of drugs to the public.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member will allow me to interrupt him to remind him that we are now on the report stage and there should be no general discussion of the bill. Eventually, there will be a third reading stage during which general considerations regarding the bill might be expressed. I suggest to the hon. member that the only subject under discussion at the present time is the amendment moved by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith).

Mr. Aiken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I did not intend to make general remarks. I was attempting to show the background reason for moving this amendment. The fact is that the price reduction may or may not be an effective part of the bill, but we wanted to be absolutely sure that regardless of the other effects the bill may have the quality of drugs which may come into Canada under this bill will not be reduced and that the health of Canadians will not be endangered.

At the outset the members of our party, particularly the medical men who have taken part in the committee work, have been most concerned about the possibility of substandard drugs finding easier access to Canada than in the past. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) asked two questions. The first was why this amendment should be necessary at all, since the government can, under this legislation, pass regulations to cover the situation we are intending to include. The answer is that the inclusion of the amendment we have proposed would place an onus upon the government, and serve as an indication of parliament's intention, to make certain that no drug was imported and sold until its quality had been certified.

It may be that if the bill were examined more places could be found in which this provision might be inserted. But we say this effort should not be necessary. If it is the intention of parliament to make sure that the safety and quality of drugs is certified by the minister, then it should be stated directly in the legislation. It is for this reason I contend the amendment we propose ought to be included.

The second point raised by the hon. member was that drugs manufactured outside Canada and drugs manufactured inside Canada might be treated in two different ways. Obviously, this is the case. The manufacture of drugs within this country comes within the legislative competence and control of the parliament of Canada and the process is open to immediate inspection by officials of the food and drug directorate. They have the power to inspect and examine not only the drugs themselves in the laboratories, but the conditions under which they are manufactured. Our officials can examine the ingredients which go into these drugs, the conditions under which they are manufactured and put together, and other factors which influence the production of the drug in its final stage. This is important because it has been admitted many times that the Food and Drug Directorate is unable to cope with the task of inspecting all these drugs. In fact, it has been said the directorate can only conduct spot checks, and that in many cases they are unable to certify quality control.

This has been one of the problems in connection with importing large quantities of drugs. On the other hand, the directorate does have the ability to go to a place of manufacture and inspect not just the end product but the actual facilities used to produce that product. Great concern has been expressed as to the quality of drugs manufactured outside Canada. There have been stories, many of them exaggerated, naturally, of poor quality drugs, drugs of inconsistent quality and drugs manufactured under unsuitable conditions, becoming available to the Canadian market as soon as this bill is passed. The food and drug directorate is not able to inspect the conditions under which they were produced. It can only inspect the end product, and then in a limited way by means of spot checks. For these reasons, there is a good deal of difference between drugs manufactured inside Canada and drugs manufactured outside the country and the only way of ensuring we are protected is, surely, to authorize and provide for the specially careful treatment of drugs manufactured outside Canada.

This subject is of special concern to me, personally. A few months ago I suffered an illness and was placed on a delicate drug in connection with which quality control must be absolute. I know, as a result of my illness, that there is a difference in the quality as between drugs manufactured by one company and another. It is extremely important that there be consistency in the manufacture of many of these drugs so that when a certain amount is prescribed the patient may be absolutely sure of receiving it regardless of the manufacturer of the drug concerned. Thus, I have no hesitation in seconding this amendment and no apology to make for doing so. I am aware there is a general theory that one should not deal with one class of persons in a way which discriminates against another in the same field. But here is a situation in which we must do so if the genuine concern of many Canadians and of many members of this house, namely, that there should be rigid quality control over drugs brought into this country, over whose manufacture we have no power of supervision, is to be met.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I share the concern of spokesmen for the Official Opposition in approaching this question of drug safety. However, this subject was carefully and thoroughly considered during the hearings of the Committee on Health and Welfare in connection with the bill before us.

I may say at the outset that my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), and I have been careful to separate our different functions and responsibilities under this legislation. Primary authority over the Food and Drug Directorate rests with my colleague, not with myself.

The evidence given before the committee, particularly by Dr. Chapman of the Food and Drug Directorate, showed, I believe, that the directorate does have the authority it requires to deal adequately with the question of the safety of imported drugs. I have in mind clause five which was put into the bill to deal specifically with the question of drug safety by amending the Food and Drugs Act and giving the Food and Drug Directorate the authority to pass regulations dealing with the importation into Canada of any drug or class of drugs manufactured outside Canada. I believe the evidence given before the committee shows the amendment before us to be unnecessary inasmuch as provision for protection has already been made in the bill.

Other hon. members have pointed out that this amendment also involves another concept, one that I do not think the government or the house should undertake lightly. At the present time responsibility for the safety of drugs rests primarily with the manufacturers of drugs. Through the Food and Drug Directorate, regulations are made pursuant to the Food and Drugs Act, and regulations can be passed pursuant to clause 5. Through its directorate, the government carries out inspections of domestic or imported drugs as the directorate deems necessary in order to ensure that the regulations are complied with.

I think the primary responsibility for the safety of drugs must remain with the manufacturer. To change that onus would, I think, be a very serious step. Therefore, for those two reasons I think the amendment should be opposed.

I might refer also to the evidence given before the health and welfare committee, and I do so in order to state my disagreement with some of the comments of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). Evidence was given concerning the increase in the budget of the Food and Drug Directorate, the number of staff positions authorized by Treasury Board for the directorate for their operations in Ottawa and, as their intention is, for service in the United States and Europe.

I disagree with the hon. member that under the act we should look only, as he described it, at the end product. That is not the case, and it is not the intention of the Food and Drug Directorate so to do. The directorate will be able to inspect foreign facilities and the source of manufacturing of imported drugs. If a foreign manufacturer does not cooperate with our inspectors and allow them to inspect the facilities, we will simply not allow importation of that manufacturer's drugs—unless, of course, we are satisfied that the production facilities and techniques are safe.

Therefore, I think that under clause 5 as now worded we have complete authority to deal with importations. We are increasing the staff of the directorate to handle the increased imports. Thirdly, I think that to accept the amendment would create a quite undesirable situation vis-à-vis the manufacturers, who no longer would be primarily responsible for the safety of their products.

Mr. Aiken: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Basford: Certainly.

Mr. Aiken: Can the minister assure the house, in view of what he has just said, that when the bill is passed the government will be able to make regulations, and intend so to do, that are just as effective as would have been the case had the amendment been passed? In other words, the acceptance of this amendment would not in any way strengthen the hand of the government in this particular matter. If the minister can assure us of that, I think we will be very happy.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I do not know I can quite give the hon. member that assurance. As I understand the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith), the Minister of National Health and Welfare must first certify the safety and quality of the drug. That is not in accordance with the procedures of the Food and Drug Directorate. They have very carefully drawn regulations regarding inspection, examination and safety standards which manufacturers must meet, whether they be domestic manufacturers or foreign manufacturers who are exporting drugs to this country. There is no requirement under the existing regulations to first certify the drugs.

The evidence of Dr. Chapman before the health and welfare committee is that this would be a very bad practice, not a practice that has been followed. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said, it would result in our having a huge bureaucracy looking at every sample that came along before issuing a certificate.

As I say, the Food and Drug Directorate has its own regulations and carries out periodic inspections to ensure that the regulations are being met. They do not require that before any drugs can be sold the Food and Drug Directorate must issue a certificate. Certain regulations as to safety have to be met. But we do not have a system, and do not intend to have a system, as I understand the evidence given on behalf of the Food and Drug Directorate, of pre-certification of every drug.

Mr. Bigg: Mr. Speaker, might I just ask the minister a question. Is any protection given to Canadian industry in the matter of patents and unfair competition? What I am getting at is this. Not only industry but the whole country has a vested interest in university graduates in this country, those young people who want to earn a living by developing new drugs. I call to mind such people as Dr. Banting, who discovered insulin, and Dr. Best. Is any protection given to such people as Dr. Banting or Dr. Best, or their heirs, in regard to unfair competition from the oral insulins that have been developed by other countries?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Was the hon. member rising for the purpose of asking a question?

Mr. Bigg: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I realize it was an involved question but I wanted to make sure the minister understood the purport of the question. Is any protection given our vested interest in research, including the large sums of money spent on research into drugs by Canadian industry?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, having regard to Your Honour's previous remarks about sticking to the particular amendment on the report stage, I do not think this is a proper question on clause 5 of the bill, though I am not trying to evade it. There are amendments to the first clause, and I think it is a proper question at that stage when we turn our attention to patents.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion made by the minister is, I think, in order. I might tell the hon. member that the question was involved, as he himself agreed, and it is difficult for the Chair to determine to which clause it specifically referred. Can the Chair assume that discussion on the amendment before the house has now concluded?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the intention of the house to postpone the taking of a division on this particular amendment?

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I think we could call the yeas and nays at this time but proceed no further. This does not seem the time to cast pearls of legislative wisdom to the minister.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that we shall call the yeas and nays?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the said amendment will please say, yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say, nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

Mr. Baldwin: On division.

Amendment (Mr. Monteith) negatived.

Mr. Speaker: It being four o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, public bills, notices of motions.

Private Bills

PRIVATE BILLS

THE BONAVENTURE AND GASPÉ TELEPHONE COMPANY, LIMITED

The house resumed, from Friday, January 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc (Rimouski) that Bill S-12, respecting The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited, be read the second time and referred to the standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

• (4:00 p.m.)

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last before the house some weeks ago I was speaking and had not exhausted all the time allotted to me. This afternoon we are discussing Bill S-12, respecting Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, Limited. Quite a number of hon. members have spoken on the various aspects of the bill. As hon. members know, an attempt is being made under private bills similar to this one to transfer part of our Canadian economy to foreign ownership. Because of the considerable time interval between the various appearances of a bill in its various stages before the house, hon. members lose the thread of debate and may forget points which have been raised with respect to a bill. May I again briefly acquaint hon. members with the over-all picture, as it relates to this particular company. The explanatory note to the bill says that the purpose of it is to resolve doubts as to whether the company may dispose of its undertaking to a company incorporated under or subject to the laws of any province of Canada. But in this explanation too little information is given, not only to hon. members of the house but to Canadian people generally. Also, our citizens know too little generally about what happens in this house with respect to private bills such as this. I shall therefore, speak briefly on the background of this bill.

Oddly, any Canadian looking at the title of the bill would imagine that there we have a small Canadian telephone company. He would not delve too deeply into the widespread ramifications of foreign ownership which flow from the bill. Examining the matter further, we find that the bill deals with a company totally owned by Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company, which in turn is owned by the General Telephone Company. That makes the company in question here a subsidiary of one of the largest telephone companies in the world. In fact, the ultimate parent is one of the largest corporations in the world, with telephone communications systems in Australia, the West Indies, across the United States and, no doubt, in other countries. It is interesting to note that the Anglo-Canadian Company is the counterpart of a number of subsidiary companies under the control of General Telephone and Electronics Corporation. Hon. members will find that to be so if they consult Moody's Public Utility Manual. The latter company really is a holding company with subsidiaries in many countries.

Hon. members should know a little more of the background of this bill if they are to discuss it adequately. In July, 1966, General Telephone purchased Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company and made it a wholly owned subsidiary. They also acquired the controlling interest in Quebec Telephone Company which, at the end of 1967, had about 119,000 telephone subscribers. We find that in 1967 General Telephone, together with a wholly owned subsidiary, Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company, owned over 50 per cent of the British Columbia Telephone Company. It also owned, just over 53 per cent of the Quebec Telephone Company. In 1967, there were 835,000 telephone subscribers in British Columbia.

These facts indicate how the tentacles of the ultimate parent corporation have reached into every section of this nation. What disturbs me most is that in this bill we are dealing with a public utility controlled by someone who does not live in our country. Where do we stop in giving away the ownership of our assets to foreigners?

I believe that many utilities, such as the telephone service, ought rightfully to be monopolies. It will be extremely costly for the community to have rival telephone companies operating in the same territory. Since by its vary nature a telephone operation lends itself to monopoly control, such operation ought to be controlled by the people it serves, who in this case happen to be the people of Canada. Any government, individual or party fostering, advocating and assisting in removing from our national control such public utilities is, to be perfectly frank, doing a great disservice to our nation. It is therefore amazing to see members of the government party in this house sponsoring bills of this type. If it is government policy for them to do so, let that government policy be announced. Let government supporters go to the Canadian people at election time and say, "Here, we will sell you out, lock, stock and barrel." I am disappointed to see through the medium of private bills similar to this one that come before this house little chunks of Canada's economy going on the auction block week after week. I sometimes wonder what private members the government benches think of this. They should be able to see what is happening and take a stand in their ridings, party and caucus. There should be a clearcut program and policy on liquidation, as in this particular instance, of public utilities in this country. I have raised this point before and will continue to raise it. There have been warnings galore. I do not know how many hon. members have read and studied in detail the report of the task force on the structure of Canadian industry. This report is entitled "Foreign Ownership and the Structure of Canadian Industry". The short title is, The Watkins Report.

This report sets out in detail what is happening to Canada and Canadian industry. This report, ocmmissioned by this government to give direction to it warns that the control of our Canadian economy is going by the board. At the start of the first session of the news parliament in 1968 the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) stated there would be a new deal for Canadians. What has happened? Private member after private member on the government side introduced private bills which placed another chunk of Canada's economy on the auction block. People from one end of the country to another should know what individual members are trying to do to Canada's economy. Once they get away from their constituencies, they do not report to their constituents what they are trying to do. That is why we are raising this issue, Mr. Speaker, and will continue to raise it.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That Bill S-12 be not now read a second time, but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, if as was shown by the previous speaker, there is great doubt as to the legality of this bill, giving it the six months' hoist might not be a bad thing. The Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Compnay Limited cannot be in such a hurry to sell that it cannot wait another six months.

As far as private bills related to companies are concerned, one cannot always depend more than necessary upon the decisions of the Canadian Transport Commission, which in the last analysis must approve or disapprove of the sale of a company, as the case here. It follows from that that we already have proofs that monopolies were created to the knowledge of the commission.

I will give you an example, in the information and telecommunication field, of a company such as the Power Corporation, that has succeeded more or less in exercising an information monopoly through several newspapers in the province of Quebec as well as quite a number of radio and television stations. Such monopolies may present a real danger to democracy, which proves that one is never too cautious in that field.

The fact remains however that this bill seems to protect freedom well enough. One may be inclined to say at first blush that the company has indeed the right to do what it wants. But when one knows the extraordinary power of trusts, of certain financial sharks, one is forced to act as a watch-dog and to sound the alarm. That is the reason why I support the motion to defer consideration of this bill for six months from today.

Mr. Guy LeBlanc (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I want to give my impressions and comment on some of the remarks made on the motion that has just been presented.

Unless I am mistaken, a while ago the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Hardin) insisted on the fact that the owners of the company concerned in this bill are foreigners. If such is the case, I cannot but share his opinion, in theory as well as in practice.

I also heard our hon. friend, the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) point out the harmful effects of some monopolies and trusts; if such is the case, he is right.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to put forward a few details which I hope will help to refute the assertion that foreigners control the Quebec Telephone Company. First of all, according to my information which I believe is as credible as that of my hon. friends of the opposition, all the shares of the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited are owned by the Quebec Telephone Company, with the exception of those which are known as directors' qualifying shares, and three or four others which are owned by an American estate. Furthermore, Quebec Telephone is the sole creditor and it alone finances the development of the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company because the financial situation of the latter is such that it is unable to obtain funds on the money market at a reasonable rate.

The Quebec Telephone Company, if my information is correct, has over 3,000 shareholders of whom a large number are Canadian citizens. However, I have been advised that the Sogibry, a Canadian company, had sold 51 per cent of its shares to the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company, which has held a Quebec charter since about 1934, which also owns 51 per cent of the shares of the British Columbia Telephone Company, that holds a federal charter.

Someone said that steps were to be taken to grant a Canadian charter to the American company, the General Telephone Company, which, in my opinion, is impossible.

There is one other point I should like to make, though I do not want to unduly extend the debate. Out of the 600 telecommunications companies in Canada, only three hold a federal charter: The Bell Telephone Company, The British Columbia Telephone Company, and the small company the present bill is dealing with, the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company Limited.

• (4:20 p.m.)

All three companies, moreover, are registered with the Canadian Stock Exchange in Montreal and Toronto. My hon. friends of the opposition have the right to go and buy the securities of these private companies and to have a share in their profits.

I just ask them to give us a chance of having this bill considered in committee. I am very much concerned by the fact that the Canadian citizens—most of whom, because of their daily activities, are not quite aware of what is going on in parliament—realize that we have been going on for months, nay, for years, repeating the same things on the same subject.

We will all be charged—not only the government members, but also the opposition members—with inefficiency and with misusing our parliamentary institutions.

It would be so easy—and so sensible—to have this bill deferred to the committee. If, later on, we felt we should oppose the bill, we would have plenty of opportunities to vote for or against it. We could at least do ourselves the justice of having acted as sensible people, giving the matter thorough consideration. And why?

Because—and this seems to be a platitude that we must often repeat in the house—the witnesses, the people concerned, the official representatives of these companies will have answered our questions.

Before I conclude my remarks, I would like to recall that a few years ago, the newspapers reported that the Sogibry Company was selling its stock to an American company. That was not the case since a great amount of the stock is still in the hands of Canadian citizens.

We know that the area serviced by this company is regarded, rightly or wrongly, as an underdeveloped area. It was chosen as a pilot area. And our citizens, rightly or wrongly, often feel neglected by the big cities like Montreal, which are located far from the Gaspé area and forget about its people. That could well be one of the reasons for their living in poverty.

We know that there is in Quebec a small group of young and not so young people that are called separatists. We find them mainly in the big cities that I have just named, and my compatriots of the Lower St. Lawrence and Gaspé areas keep on saying that we are neglected and that these separatists also forget about us. But, when it is a question of hurting us in one way or another, then they do not forget us.

I remember that one day, a few separatists from Montreal insisted very strongly in the newspapers and through other means to prevent this transaction which all the people of our area wanted. Why? Precisely because it meant progress for the people of our area. And we know what discussions had been going on at that time. It was a question of the sale of Quebec Telephone to another Canadian company of which we are proud. Besides, our citizens feared that the administration of this company would be transferred somewhere else, which was possible. Indeed, the Quebec Telephone has several hundreds of employees who contribute to the economic development of our area. The transaction was done and the personnel remained with us. Moreover, this enabled two very important factories to get established in one of the areas that were designated by the government.

If this bill were passed, this small company which serves a small population and has at the most 13,000 subscribers would save $100,000 a year. Furthermore, if my computation is correct, the government of Canada could recover in taxes about $52,000 a year. By leaving things as they are now the federal government loses $1,000 a week.

Earlier, I was referring to separatism. I ask some hon. members whose views I respect not to play the game of those separatists who tried to hurt our people, and to call the representatives of the company so as to make sure that this transaction will help the small people of Gaspé, especially the citizens of the Bonaventure and Gaspé ridings.

It is fine to state great principles and I am for that but before doing so, I think that it would be a good idea to consider their effects.

Mr. Speaker, before closing I ask my friends to behave in such a way as to give the Canadian people the impression that we are taking our job seriously and that our discussions are not just some sort of entertainment. At this stage I would ask the hon. members of the opposition to co-operate so this bill be referred to a committee, then if our friends who are objecting to it have serious reasons to do so—they will have an opportunity to make their point. When they object that these companies' interests are held by foreigners and that we might be building a great monopoly—as was mentionned by the hon. member for Champlain—I could reply that if the bill is referred to the committee, they will have every opportunity to get information.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of the Gaspé area I ask our friends who object to this bill to enable us to meet the representatives of the company so that we can look into this matter in great detail. Then, come what may, everyone will be free to vote according to his own views.

• (4:30 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker, before the member takes his seat, perhaps I might ask him a question. I was very interested in his presentation, particularly in the light of the fact that he represents the area in question. I have no disagreement with his contention that the Gaspé has been neglected. But is he not aware that with the passage of this bill this company, in effect, would pass from the control of the federal government and the Department of Transport which now sets the rates. The rate structure would then be left free to be established by Quebec Telephone rather than by the federal Department of Transport. This, obviously, would have some effect on the telephone service in his area.

[Translation]

Mr. LeBlanc: Mr. Speaker, I will first answer my hon. friend's question in a general way. The first object of the present bill is to authorize a sale. In the second place, it is intended precisely to improve services in accordance with technological changes and developments in the field of communications.

At the present time, this small company which exists in name only cannot improve its own situation, develop normally.

With regard to rates, I must honestly admit that I would not be in a position to give an exact answer. I think those who will appear before the committee will be in a position to answer those questions more accurately than I could do so myself.

As I said, one of the objectives of the present bill is to improve services.

[English]

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I was extremely interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc). Naturally, I am very interested in his side of this particular question. Since he is the member from this area, he has a particular interest in this company. I would not quarrel with that at all. I know that if this were a small telephone company in my riding I would be vitally interested in it and would be working very hard to see that service in that particular area was improved.

An hon. Member: We would not be against it.

Mr. Rose: Certainly, I would not assume that if I were for something in my riding the members of the government would be against me because I believe some members, at least those from New Brunswick, are very generous and would not necessarily be against something because I happen to be for it. I apologize to the hon. member for Rimouski because I am unable to reply to his representations in his own language. I feel that is my fault and I apologize for it.

The hon. member discussed the ownership of this particular company. When I first spoke on this bill on December 3, I too, since I was a rather new member, was perhaps a bit naïve about this situation. I did not see the connection between this little company in Gaspé and various other companies not only in this country but also in the United States. The Financial Post recently conducted a survey and issued a report. I should like to read from the speech of the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) of December 3, as recorded at page 3444 of Hansard. I shall read part of this into the record because I believe it is important:

> The report tells us that a subsidiary of Quebec Telephone is the Bonaventure and Gaspé Telephone Company, which is wholly owned and serves the south shore of the Gaspé Peninsula, Quebec. So this is the first link in the chain of ownership. We then set about further investigation and found that Quebec Telephone is itself a subsidiary of the Anglo-Canadian Telephone Company whose head office is situated at 715 Victoria Square, Montreal. This is a holding company whose subsidiaries own telephone systems in British Columbia, Quebec and the Dominican Republic, and supervise publication of telephone directories and installation of services for telephone companies in Canada. The company is itself a subsidiary of General Telephone and Electronics Corporation which acquired all of its class A shares in 1965 through an exchange offer of two and a half General Telephone shares for each class A share of Anglo-Canadian.

Then, this report lists the various directors and ultimately we have a mixture of Canadian and United States directors. The ownership eventually falls into the hands of United States interests. This is something about which members of our party have continuously been concerned. I know members on the other side of the house are becoming very dreary of our particular stand on this matter. We believe, however, that it is important to bring to public attention a situation which we in this party—I know this view is shared by a great number of Canadians—feel is constantly eroding Canadian ownership in vital utilities and financial institutions, and causing it to fall into foreign hands. I think this is something about which we must be very careful.

I, too, like the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding), am very concerned when this sort of thing happens under the guise of something else. We do not believe it really is to the credit of any government member to assist in this particular development. Only the other night Mr. Watkins, the author of the famous Watkins report which has to do with the structure and ownership of Canadian business, said in Toronto that it is almost too late to recoup a major portion of Canadian industry, natural resources and financial institutions which is in foreign hands. This almost makes this parliament irrelevant. We know the government has accepted the Watkins report. So far I have seen no move on the part of the government to implement any of its recommendations. This is a very important report because it not only implies a loss of our economic sovereignty but ultimately the loss of our political sovereignty. Many Canadians are concerned because decisions that relate to this country are being made by people outside our borders. This should not be the case so long as we have a country that maintains its sovereignty and a particular identity.

Let us think of the amount of money we devote each year to the various schemes and functions of the communications media, the C.B.C. and other operations in order to preserve our Canadian identity. This is the taxpayers' money that is being spent to preserve the Canadian identity on the one hand, yet on the other hand we give away control of our economy. If we continue to do this, we are going to lose this race.

Perhaps this loss of Canadian sovereignty is not so important. It seems to me if we are going to maintain a viable and clearly independent Canada a greater number of people must concern themselves with this situation. The people in this federal house are the ones who should be most interested in this. The members of this party will not be party to any such move. We will fight any move coming before the house during the private members hour or at any other time which assists, aids or abets this kind of thing.

Yesterday afternoon the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) got very upset. He delivered a highly emotional testimonial. He made a very good speech and I compliment him upon it. I think he showered more heat than light on the subject. Nevertheless, I compliment him for his oratorical ability. In any event, we are going to fight these moves and no one will dissuade us.

Let me also say to the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra that we are not the only people who use a great deal of time which might be considered unnecessary by hon. members in some quarters of the house in talking out the private members hour. I can think of many good bills, private and public, that have been presented to the house. I think I have agreement in this respect from all sides of the house. When this occurs the members on the government side talk-out these bills. I think members on this side of the house are equally guilty in this regard. I have expressed my opinion on more than one occasion about the futility of the private members hour.

We must be very concerned about problems in respect of big corporations or multi-national corporations. It is not necessarily so that what is good for General Motors is good for the country. I do not believe that. Virtually every country in the western world has taken steps which have advanced their economic sovereignty. If we are going to maintain any economic independence, we have to do something.

We have been amassing luxuries. This is the result of our being tied to continentalism. The matter does not stop there. The Gaspé company is not just a little company. It has links with a United States corporation. The British Columbia Telephone Company in my province is in exactly the same position. The existence of these multi-national corporations is a relatively new phenomenon which is not limited to Canada or the United States. Certainly, the concept of multi-national corporations is in existence in Europe, Asia and South America, although it is relatively new. We do not really know how to deal with these problems. Very few people have faced up to this issue or studied the effects of it. They have very little to recommend as to how to deal with it.

Certainly, a multi-national corporation has no political or ideological roots. You cannot say, on the one hand, that these corporations are the result of free enterprise when you realize that on the other hand they are much more powerful than governments. It seems to me also that we need business, investment and the kind of thing which will create jobs. If we are sincere in terms of maintaining our sovereignty and political freedom we had better be very careful about what is happening. I, personally, am sorry to see a member of the government supporting a bill such as this. Perhaps the kind of nationalism I am talking about is an outdated concept.

When I went to high school 20 or 30 years ago I was told that nationalism was responsible for all kinds of things; wars, economic disaster, political and social breakdown, and that perhaps the boundary lines separating nations should disappear. As yet we do not have any adequate substitute for nationalism, but whether we like it or not we should be looking for new political structures and administrative units. Perhaps the kind of thing that is happening now represents a step in the right direction, whether we like it or not.

In spite of the fact that all my high school teachers told me that nationalism was outdated, I am prepared to suggest that if they thought about it now they would come to the conclusion they were wrong. The ideology of this particular century, certainly from the 1950's, the 1960's and since World War II, has been nationalism. We see this happening in Africa and in Asia. These are small administrative units and small political units. The tragedy which is taking place in Nigeria is an example of this. We have even seen nationalism coming about in Britain in the concept of one rule for Scotland. We can see the spectre of separatism in Quebec. I would be very sorry if this type of thing occurred. I hope that when someone from French Canada comes out to British Columbia he will look around and say: This is my country. When I go across the river northward into Quebec, that is what I want to be able to say. If separatism reaches the stage where people are forced into any other position I will be very sorry.

We have not found solutions to problems of this kind. Many suggestions have been made on a national basis. The hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. LeBlanc) made the statement that separatism in relation to the kind of thing that the people in his riding were concerned about can be considered vis-à-vis the problems in Montreal. I am sure the people who are most critical would not feel very comfortable if they realized the true nature of the comparison between this little telephone company in Gaspé and perhaps the General Telephone and Telecommunications Company of the United States.

The diversified multi-national corporation concept is a situation we must deal with realistically. I do not think we are unique or the only country facing this kind of new technique. We had a private members hour yesterday and we heard testimony and evidence to suggest that our financial institutions were being increasingly dominated by foreign interests. This has caused particular difficulty for Canadians. We are experiencing a time of inflation, and we do not control our own financial institutions. How can we really be responsible for priorities, and how can we create those things we need in this country?

These institutions lend money to governments. The government of Canada must go to them for the funds which it needs. These companies invest in things that bring the highest return, so currently they are certainly not investing in municipal bonds which might assist in capital works. We all know that the bond market is in a bad state. These companies are not interested in it. We do not control them, so there is no money for bonds and consequently there is no money for capital works. There is also no money for housing because these companies invest only in mutual stocks and shares from which they can get a large return.

I think we should look into that problem very thoroughly because we will have to come up with legislation to overcome it. Encouragement to institutions such as mortgage loan companies by the Minister of Transport is not going to be enough. We will have to say to them: "So much of your money must go into mortgage money for homes".

Such multinational corporations as the Gaspé Company and General Telephone and Telecommunications are only two of many, but there will be fewer and fewer of them if they grow larger and larger. One of the men who has given a great deal of attention to this problem is the noted economist, John K. Galbraith. He discussed the problems of our future as they relate to bigness in his book called "The New Industrial State". In it, he outlined various features of our society which I will run through rapidly. An increasing amount of time is necessary for new products to be put on the market. There is a diminution of a micro-fraction of the tasks to be performed. Great increases of capital are necessary for anything to be produced, and once the plans are laid there is an inflexibility so far as change is concerned. We cannot make changes rapidly enough. Specialized manpower is needed, and so is a huge bureaucratic organization to put any new product on the market. A great deal of planning and arranging is needed, as well as market stimulation brought about by advertising. The stimulation of want is not what we need any more. We are told what we want through advertising.

We have been very successful in our kind of society, probably more successful than any other previous age or civilization but, as Galbraith states, what counts is not the quantity of goods but the quality of our life. We are constantly faced with the growing alienation of the young—we see this in universities, but not only there. We see this in the dropouts of our society, the hippies, the yippies and the lippies. They are alienated because they do not really have any part in this system which is above and beyond them.

I think it is the responsibility of members of parliament to bring this problem to the attention of everyone, but especially to those people who feel that nobody really cares. Parliament has become irrelevant to a great many people, as I found during the last electoral campaign when people said they were not going to vote. When I asked them why, they answered: "What difference does it make?"

The problem of these large industrial multinational corporations is receiving a great deal of attention. Today I received in the mail a notice from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. The members of my party will pardon me if I read from this document. In it they are announcing their 73rd annual meeting in Puerto Rico on March 14. I certainly hope that the wives of the members attending this business meeting will have the privilege of subtracting their expenses from their income tax. The topic of the meeting is "Productivity Trends and the Multinational Corporation". So other people are becoming concerned, especially the business world, and find it important to study this particular problem. I think we also should be concerned about this problem, especially as it relates to our country, our sovereignty, our political freedom and our identity.

I would like to conclude by saying that our telephone system in Canada has a virtual monopoly in our communications system and it is largely dominated by interests residing outside our national borders. In spite of this we spend millions of dollars every year on the C.B.C. We do all kinds of things to increase our Canadian identity, but we are content to give into hands other than our own this vital link in our communications network. I think this process must be stopped. We must take a determined stand to ensure that it does not happen. Let us consider what is happening with our radio stations. I have here a bulletin from the Broadcasting League which names some 21 stations owned by one man. If I had time I would name them all, but I will spare hon. members this. Our concern about this problem is important because of the opportunity which the communications media have for making propaganda and swaying public opinion to buy and sell certain things. We cannot adopt a laissez-faire attitude with regard to this.

I have tried to outline broadly some of the concerns shared by me, by my party, and also, I hope, by members on the other side of the house, about the trend that is taking place in the business world of our country with regard to the ownership of our country. I may not say it as emotionally as have some people, but that does not mean that I am any the less concerned. I certainly think that a committee should study this bill, but—

Private Bills

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members business has now expired. It being five o'clock this house stands adjourned until Monday, St. Patrick's Day, at 2 p.m. We wish our Irish friends a happy and pleasant week end.

At five o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, March 17, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

ERIN GO BRAGH

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Today, March 17, is known the world over as St. Patrick's Day, a day set aside in remembrance of St. Patrick, a British missionary who settled in Ireland more than 1,500 years ago.

Although historians credit him with ridding Ireland of snakes, St. Patrick was chiefly devoted to establishing Christian churches in Ireland, which also became centres of learning. At the seat of the kings of Munster on the rock of Cashel, St. Patrick explained his theory of the trinity, using a shamrock, which has been the emblem of Ireland ever since.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, all members of the house and Irishmen everywhere wish to join with me today in eulogizing Ireland's patron saint.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[Translation]

FINANCE, TRADE AND ECONOMIC AFFAIRS

Twelfth report of Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs in French and English—Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau).

[Editor's Note: Text of foregoing report appears in today's Votes and Proceedings.]

[English]

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GUN PERMITS

Question No. 1,268—Mr. Beaudoin:

1. By province, how many gun permits are presently in effect in Canada?

2. What is the number of gun permits in Canada in the possession of persons less than twenty-five years of age?

3. How many gun permits were there in 1960 and in each subsequent year?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Solicitor General): There are, at present, three basic gun control documents in use; namely, Firearm Registration Certificates, Permits for Minors, and Firearm Permits (Permits to Carry).

Firearm Registration Certificates are only issued by the R.C.M. Police pursuant to the Criminal Code of Canada. Firearm Permits and Permits for Minors are issued pursuant to provincial legislation by municipal or provincial police, or the R.C.M. Police in certain contracting provinces.

The complete statistics for Firearm Permits and Permits for Minors are not available; therefore, only the statistics relating to the Certificates issued by the R.C.M. Police are provided hereunder.

1. Firearm Registration Certificate: Approximately 248,000.

2. No record available.

3. Firearm Registration Certificate: 1960 approximately 192,000; 1961 approximately 199,000; 1962 approximately 206,000; 1963 approximately 213,000; 1964 approximately 220,000; 1965 approximately 227,000; 1966 approximately 234,000; 1967 approximately 241,000; 1968 approximately 248,000.

CONTAINER BERTHS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,284—Mr. Robinson:

1. Is it the government's intention to embark on a program to provide container berths and, if so, where will they be located and what is the anticipated cost of each?

2. What commodities is it anticipated will be shipped by containers?

3. Will containers be used in the Great Lakes Waterways?

4. Is it the government's intention to own and operate a fleet of containers and, if so, how many, where will they operate from and what cargo will be carried?

5. What countries will be given a franchise to use a fleet of containers to and from Canadian ports?

6. Will containers be used for transporting (a) grain (b) other solid products (c) oil (d) other liquid products?

Questions

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Through the National Harbours Board the Government has been involved in the provision of a container berth at Montreal and modern berths which will be capable of being used for containers are being constructed at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Berths capable of being adapted for containers are available at Saint John, New Brunswick and container facilities are also being provided on an existing pier at Vancouver. In addition a pier is to be adapted for container operation at the City of Quebec. Firm estimates of the cost of these facilities are not available at present.

2. It is expected that containers will initially be employed for general cargoes and that subsequent development will be subject to commercial factors.

3. Yes.

4. No.

5. The existing arrangements for commercial shipping will continue to apply.

6. See answer to (2) above.

RIDGETOWN, ONT., POST BOX RENTALS

Question No. 1,332—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. How many contracts for rental of post boxes at Ridgetown, Ontario, for all or part of the 12 months starting February 1, 1969 were entered into between (a) January 1, 1969 and January 21, 1969, and (b) January 21, 1969 and January 31, 1969?

2. How many of the contracts entered into in each of these two periods were at the rates prevailing before January 21, 1969?

3. How many of the contracts entered into in each of these two periods were at the rates announced on January 21, 1969?

4. Is it the policy of the post office to request additional rent from those who contracted to use post boxes at Ridgetown, Ontario after February 1, 1969, but who entered into these contracts before January 21, 1969?

5. How many communications have been received protesting requests for additional rent from those who contracted to use post boxes at Ridgetown, Ontario after February 1, 1969, but who entered into these contracts before January 21, 1969?

6. How many people who rented to February 1, 1971 post office boxes at Ridgetown, Ontario, paying rates prevailing as of December 31, 1968 had the expiry date of their contracts changed by the Post Office Department to read February 1, 1970?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. (a) 163; (b) 23.

2. (a) January 1 to January 20—132; (b) January 21 to January 31—Nil.

3. (a) January 1 to January 20—31; (b) January 21 to January 31—23.

[Mr. Robinson.]

4. Persons who paid in advance at the former rates for post office lock box rentals for the year beginning February 1, 1969 were requested to pay the difference between the former rates and the new rental rates which became effective February 1, 1969. Refunds are being made of the additional amounts collected.

5. Twenty five communications have been received.

6. Eight.

SUMMIT DEPOT, N.B., RESEARCH STATION

Question No. 1,347—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many students have been employed at the Department of Forestry summer research station at Summit Depot on the Green River in Madawaska-Victoria constituency, during the summers of 1965-66-67-68?

2. What is the normal duration of employment?

3. How many students were from (a) Madawaska-Victoria constituency (b) New Brunswick (c) other provinces?

4. How many requests for employment were received for each year mentioned above and how many were rejected?

5. What special qualifications are required?

6. What is the average pay?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries): 1. 1965, 23; 1966, 20; 1967, 28; 1968, 27.

2. 17 weeks, although a few may be hired for shorter periods to do a specific job.

3.	(a)	(b)	(c)

4. Students have been hired through the Public Service Commission up to and including 1968, hence the Department of Fisheries has no record of those who have applied. In 1969, hiring will be done through Manpower Centres of the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

5. Normally 90 per cent of those employed are required to be university students with a background in forestry and biology, and the remainder are from other university faculties or technical schools.

6. The pay rate ranges from about $300 to $640 monthly, depending on the student's qualifications and experience; the average in 1968 was approximately $360.

Questions

SMOKING PRIVILEGES ON CANADIAN NATIONAL TRAINS

Question No. 1,349—Mr. Corbin:

1. Has the Canadian National Railways abolished "no smoking permitted" sections in railway coaches and, if so, for what reason?

2. Has the CNR received any complaints about general smoking in coaches and, if so, how many?

3. Is any action contemplated to restrict smoking to certain sections only, of railway coaches and sleepers?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian Railways advises as follows: 1 and 3. As a result of improvements in air conditioning and ventilating systems, the restriction on cigarette smoking in passenger carrying equipment used in inter city service has not been enforced in many years. However, smoking is not permitted on commuter trains operating in certain areas where older type of equipment is in use.

2. Very few.

NORDAIR SERVICE TO HALLBEACH, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,388—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. Has the Canadian Transport Commission recently approved at 73% freight rate increase for services provided by Nordair to Hallbeach in the Northwest Territories?

2. Were any public hearings held with respect to this increase of freight rates?

3. Were the people of Hallbeach consulted by Nordair?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: 1. The Canadian Transport Commission does not approve rates: it accepts the filing of tariffs by carriers subject to complaint and investigation. The Commission accepted for filing from Nordair Ltd. a tariff publishing an increase of 73 per cent in the general commodity rate from Montreal to Hall Beach, effective January 16, 1969.

2. No.

3. Nordair Ltd. reported to the Commission that it had advised their northern customers, following a review of costs, traffic and revenue, that it intended to increase some rates.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANTI-MISSILE INSTALLATIONS—EFFECT ON CANADA OF U.S. INTERCEPTION SYSTEM

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, out of respect for St. Patrick I am not going to ask the Prime Minister a question about housing today, but I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether his government has studied the decision by the President of the United States to build an anti-missile defence system and if the government of Canada has considered the possible implications for Canada of the President's decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have begun to consider the consequences of that decision, which was announced only at the end of last week. I am not in a position today to indicate the considerations which might follow from it, except perhaps to say that we are of the view that the important factor to consider in all this is that we ought to avoid an escalation of nuclear weapons. That remains our position. We are not yet in a position to say where, in our view, the decision that has been taken will lead.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the installation of the new system will mean that interceptions will take place over Canada, is the Prime Minister free to tell the house whether the government of the United States consulted the government of Canada on this matter and whether Canada made any representations to the United States in this regard.

Mr. Trudeau: Well, Mr. Speaker, there has been consultation on this at various stages. But I am not prepared today to state that the considerations of Canadian safety which might follow from this position are more important than considerations of the safety and future of the world. In other words, I do not want to be put in the position where, in arguing the Canadian point of view from the standpoint of considerations of fallout in Canada, we should be precluded from saying that we do not want this kind of defence at all. I hope that is clear. I do not want to argue the Canadian case if it means a little more protection for us and therefore less protection for the peace and future of the world. Therefore I cannot answer the question.

Mr. Stanfield: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Considering that Mr. George Ignatieff, our chief disarmament negotiator, has stated that Canada is in the most dangerous position of any country, the danger stemming from the arms race between the United States and the U.S.S.R, and that advances in weapons technology, presumably including the A.B.M. system, require further studies and are not being studied as they ought to be, and considering that Canada is most vitally interested in this matter, is it the intention of the government to set up an interdepartmental task force or take other action to ensure that it is fully conversant at all times with the implications for Canada of these new weapons developments?

Mr. Trudeau: I repeat, Mr. Speaker, that this kind of consideration has been given by the Canadian government at previous stages, according to the knowledge we had then. With a new announcement we will continue the consideration. I repeat however that Canadian interest is not more important than the interest of humanity in this subject. I do not want to take a position which, by promoting Canadian interests, would mean we are approving any United States escalation of anti-ballistic missiles. I do not want, in other words, to negotiate with the United States for a little more protection for Canada, if I feel that that protection is such that it might entail more danger for the whole world.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the first two A.B.M. bases to be established will be at Grand Forks, North Dakota and Great Falls, Montana, both close to the Canadian border, may I ask the Prime Minister whether there was any consulation, or whether prior information was given to him or any department of the government before President Nixon made his announcement that the United States was considering establishing these A.B.M. bases.

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. We were notified of the decision, but there was no consultation in the sense that we might have been in a position to change the decision.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since any interception of Soviet missiles will in all probability take place over Canadian soil, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government intends to hold discussions with the United States government in order to safeguard the interests of the Canadian people?

Mr. Nielsen: They may be Chinese missiles.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the leader of the N.D.P. is asking me to repeat the answer I have just given to the leader of the opposition.

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I wonder if the Chair might allow the right hon. member for Prince Albert to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister is under the misapprehension that I am asking the question asked by the leader of the opposition. I am asking if there will be—not if there have been—discussions between the government of Canada and the government of the United States on this important matter.

Mr. Trudeau: I said that there had been consultation, Mr. Speaker, in the sense that the United States had kept us informed at various stages, and that we were going to discuss it. I repeat once again, I do not think the problem of Canadian interest, or even the constituency of the right hon. member who sits to the right of the leader of the New Democratic party, takes first place over the interest of peace and sanity in the world. I am not interested in protecting a few Canadian cities if this means we will be consenting to a kind of policy which we think is dangerous to the world.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Prime Minister if any facilities of NORAD, particularly the warning systems, will be integrated with these anti-ballistic missiles? If so, is Canada to be consulted with respect to the use of the NORAD facilities?

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Trudeau: Of course Canada would have to be consulted before this system is integrated, if it were to be integrated into NORAD. The present situation is that NORAD does not cover the anti-ballistic missiles, and it could not cover the anti-ballistic missiles system without our giving consent.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): The Prime Minister has said, Mr. Speaker, that proliferation of nuclear weapons is one thing to which he is strongly opposed. I am glad to note the change in attitude since 1963 in that regard on the part of the Liberal government. I would like to ask the Prime Minister if any consideration is being given to placing before the United States the suggestion that, instead of having these installations at Grand Forks, North Dakota and Maelstrom air force base in Great Falls, Montana, they be placed farther south. According to the President of the United States, they are to be placed in these locations. This will mean that incoming Russian missiles aimed at these two bases would actually bring about fallout in an area stretching from Penticton to Edmonton, then to Saskatoon, north to Prince Albert and also to Lake Winnipeg and Fort William.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Trudeau: The questions from the opposition, Mr. Speaker, all seem to lead to the same thing. They want to protect a particular city. I am more interested in seeking a situation wherein the policy followed by the United States is one that protects all of humanity, not the people of Prince Albert alone. The truth of the matter is that if these installations are used, the whole policy will have failed, as will have humanity. This kind of secondary question, whether one city is covered or not—

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I rise on a question of privilege? There was no such suggestion. The suggestion was that if these two bases were moved farther south into the United States, then the fallout would be over the United States instead of covering the area of western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I would suggest to the right hon. gentleman and the Prime Minister that this is argumentative. I wonder whether we might go on to the next subject?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

EFFECT OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES ON POSITION OF INSIDE WORKERS

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the statements made today by the inside postal workers of an explosive situation developing because of the preponderance of casual employees, has the Postmaster General any statement to make with regard to this matter?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have just arrived from Toronto and I have not seen the statement. As hon. members know, I dislike the use of the words "explosive situation". A situation may be difficult or critical but it becomes explosive only when one side or the other refuses to adjudicate or discuss, and decides it will go for illegal or irresponsible activity. I do not expect that in this case.

This afternoon the officers of the department will be discussing the letter with me, and they will also be discussing with the officers of the Ottawa Post Office Unions the reasons which caused them to send such a letter and the problem concerning the use of casuals.

We have been using casuals since the beginning of time, Mr. Speaker, since the bulk of the work in the Post Office comes at different periods, early in the morning and late at night, and it is difficult not to employ casuals to take care of peak periods. However, this is a problem that we are willing to discuss fully with the unions.

Mr. Peters: As a supplementary question will the minister investigate the reasoning behind the fact that there are more casual employees in the Post Office in Ottawa than there are regular employees, and give a justification for this situation?

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I was just going to ask the minister whether we could have a little less philosophy and a little more information?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West.

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): As a further supplementary, will the minister investigate how much Post Office inefficiency is due to the preponderance of casual employees inside the Post Office? Will he also investigate recent charges by the inside workers of nepotism—

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Compton.

REFERRAL OF OUTSTANDING ISSUES TO MEDIATION PROCEDURES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a non-explosive question for the Postmaster General. Arising from the undertaking given to the house by the minister on Thursday that he would call Mr. Decarie to discuss with him whether there are other issues that the unions would like to have submitted to grievance procedure, will the minister advise the house whether he has been in touch with Mr. Decarie and whether he is in fact determined that there are issues outstanding not covered by the grievance procedure?

Mr. Kierans: I am meeting with Mr. Decarie at five o'clock this afternoon.

Mr. Macquarrie: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a one sentence supplemental. In the light of the decision by the minister to withdraw the application to have the work stoppage declared illegal, and the application for consent to prosecute employees, and arising from the subsequent statement by the unions that "this on again off again procedure by the employer leaves the unions no choice but to hold Treasury Board responsible for all expenses incurred"—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

BANKRUPTCY

SHARING OF LOSS THROUGH INSURANCE PROCEDURES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Since the great increase in the number of commercial bankruptcies also leads to a good number of industrial bankruptcies involving average and small enterprises mostly, would he consider establishing a shared-cost insurance plan similar to crop insurance for farmers, to protect industry and the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could ask the minister who deals with bankruptcies to consider the problem. He is not here today; he has gone bankrupt.

GRAIN

WHEAT—PRICE RECOMMENDATION FROM NATIONAL COUNCIL

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the recent decision to lower the price for Canadian wheat, was a recommendation sought from the national Grains Council on this question before the decision was made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, no formal request was put before the Canada Grains Council.

Mr. Korchinski: As a supplementary question, now that the decision has been made will the Grains Council be asked to submit a recommendation on what course farmers should follow in this and subsequent years with respect to seeding and so forth?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of guidance that farmers all over Canada are seeking because of the market situation. However, I do not think that any one group, whether it be the Canada Grains Council or another, has all the wisdom to see into the future on these matters. We will be as helpful as we can in providing western Canadian farmers with as much information as is possible relevant to future marketing prospects.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the price of Canadian wheat is falling about ten cents a bushel or more, can the minister say whether he will try to resurrect the old speeches in which he spoke of a two-price system.

WHEAT—ATTENDANCE AT MEETING OF PRICES REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. In light of the statement made by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce on Friday to the effect that the I.G.A. is now inoperative for the time being can the minister say whether he or top officials from his department will be attending a meeting of the prices review committee of the International Wheat Council which is slated to take place this week?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I will not be attending that meeting, but senior officials from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and from the Department of Agriculture are there.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in view of the meeting of the prices review committee and the uncertainty in respect of the situation, can the Minister of Agriculture say whether the government is giving consideration to the re-establishment of a guaranteed minimum price for wheat to Canadian farmers?

Mr. Olson: The government is considering many things that will be helpful in this serious situation.

FINANCE

SEARCH IN EUROPE FOR CAPITAL

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister and ask him if it is a fact that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is now touring Europe in search of foreign capital for Canada?

Mr. Speaker: The question cannot be asked in those terms. An hon. member cannot ask the Prime Minister to deny or affirm a statement or suggestion.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is now touring Europe in search of foreign capital for Canada? I assume my question deserves an answer. It is a simple question.

Mr. Speaker: The question may deserve an answer but the hon. member knows what the rules are.

AGRICULTURE

POLICY OF DAIRY COMMISSION

Mr. Gaston Clermont (Gatineau): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture.

Is he in a position to advise the house when the Canadian Dairy Commission will announce its policy for the fiscal year 1969-70?

[English]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Not today, Mr. Speaker, but I hope we will in a very few days.

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, by this answer does the minister mean that he will be stating the policy before the last sitting day of the house before Easter?

Mr. Olson: Well, Mr. Speaker, the new dairy year begins April 1. I think it would be helpful and useful to the dairy farmers if they had the policy and regulations outlined to them prior to that date.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether his department has under consideration a new set of plans with which to deal with the problem of the decline in milk production and the declining number of milk processing plants on the prairies.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is asking for information of a very general nature. This is the type of information which certainly should be given by way of a statement on motions.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CULTURAL AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND FRANCE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the minister now in a position to reply to the questions I posed recently relating to the financial commitment entered into by Canada under the Canada-France agreements.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I have been in a position to answer this question for a long time but my answer is so long I would much prefer if the hon. member would put the question on the order paper so that it might be answered in writing.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): I would be pleased to do that.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INVITATION TO PRESIDENT DE GAULLE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): In connection with the Canada-France agreements and discussions thereon has the Canadian government invited General de Gaulle to visit Canada following his forthcoming visit to the United States?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): General de Gaulle was in Canada a couple of years ago and I think the onus lies on the other side to invite our Prime Minister to France.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Some exchange!

FISHERIES

SEALS—ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN SHIPS DURING CESSATION OF CANADIAN OPERATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the government aware that when the Minister of Fisheries was announcing on Saturday the cessation of sealing operations in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, foreign ships were killing seals within the three mile limit off Hamilton Inlet, Labrador?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the Department is aware that four Norwegian ships are in the area described by the hon. member. Officers of the department have been in contact with the ships' masters since last Saturday. Only one vessel took a small number of seals on Saturday, but stopped when warned by the officers. No seals have been taken by any vessel since then. The vessels are trying to get out of the area but ice conditions are preventing their movement.

The department has two aircraft observing the activities of the ships and the fisheries patrol vessel Cape Freels is standing offshore. I can assure the hon. member that the department is watching this situation closely.

SEALS—DISTRIBUTION OF FILM DEPICTING KILLING METHODS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State, which is similar to a question posed to his parliamentary assistant on Friday last. Can the minister tell the house how the film on the seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, produced for the C.B.C. by Artek Films Ltd. of Montreal, and which is doing so much harm to Canada's reputation, received such wide distribution in Europe and the United States?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in the past five years the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has acquired broadcast rights in two film productions dealing with seal hunting in the Gulf of St. Lawrence.

"Les grands phoques de la banquise" — Artek Film Productions Ltée. is a black and white film running 58 minutes, 20 seconds. In a contract dated May 11, 1964, Artek Film Productions undertook to produce the film and to grant C.B.C. exclusive Canadian television rights for a seven year period. In addition, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation acquired unlimited stock shot rights. All other rights were retained at that time by the company, including non-television rights in Canada and foreign rights. The film has been shown only twice on C.B.C.-TV. The film to which the hon. member has referred is I think another film which has nothing to do with the C.B.C. but has been shown by someone from the S.P.C.A. in New York.

As for the first film mentioned, I should note that an action for libel has been initiated by Mr. Serge Deyglun, the script writer and narrator of the film, against Mr. Louis Philippe Lacroix, M.L.A. for Isles de la Madeleine. The action is now before the Quebec Superior Court. The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is not involved in any way but has agreed, on court order, to deposit a print of the film as an exhibit. It is very clear that any showing of this film outside the country is not the responsibility of the C.B.C. because it did not buy the foreign rights at the time the film was originally produced.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, in view of the doubt raised by the minister in his reply, and in view of the importance of this matter, since it has already resulted in the cancellation of the seal hunt in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, would the Secretary of State agree to having this whole matter referred to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting Films and Assistance to the Arts, for proper parliamentary investigation.

Mr. Pelletier: Mr. Speaker, I have already taken the position that the committee itself can decide to hear anybody on any matter concerning the C.B.C.

[Later:]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I was going to rise on a point of order but perhaps it might be a question to be addressed to the Secretary of State. A few minutes ago, in reply to a question by the hon. member for St. John's East, I understood the Secretary of State to say that the parliamentary committee could consider any subject that it wished to consider. I thought perhaps I did not fully understand our Standing Orders, but I wonder whether the Secretary of State would consult with the house leader and consider rule 65 (8), and see whether in fact it is not necessary for the house to refer a matter to a standing committee before it can be considered.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The interpretation of a standing order is a subject of debate. Perhaps the discussion to which the hon. member has referred might take place outside the house.

FINANCE

PETROLEUM DISTILLATES—DEPARTMENTAL REPRESENTATIONS BEFORE TARIFF BOARD

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue about an important tariff hearing taking place at the moment in respect of petroleum distillates. I want to ask him whether in view of the importance of this hearing his department intends to make any representations before the Tariff Board?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): I have not quite understood the question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to take it as notice.

NATIONAL PARKS

QUEBEC—REFUSAL TO SIGN LEASE

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development.

Could he tell the house whether he was officially informed that the Quebec government had refused over the weekend to sign a long lease with the government of Canada for the establishment of a national park in the Gaspé peninsula, in accordance with the federal-provincial agreement?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the provincial government could not come to an agreement with the federal representative with regard to the duration of the lease.

Mr. Cyr: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Will the minister report to the house in the near future with regard to negotiations now taking place?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, as national parks are the responsibility of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, I believe he should be the one to report to the house.

[English]

DOMINION CONTROVERTED ELECTIONS ACT

REQUEST FOR REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the government house leader. In view of the results of the recent controverted elections in the riding of Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe, Comox-Alberni and the Yukon, and the costly result thereof, in more ways than one, and in view of the rather desperate need for revision of the statute, will he say whether the Controverted Elections Act will be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections at the earliest possible moment, so that consideration will be given immediately to these very desperately needed revisions?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I hope within a period of approximately two weeks to be able to make an announcement to the house setting out a suggested time table to deal with all electoral questions. I might say that the Controverted Elections Act would not be at the top of priorities, for reasons which I will be in a better position to tell the hon. member at that time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he will at the same time be referring the Barbeau report on election expenses to the Committee on Privileges and Elections?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I said I would be making a statement in respect of all electoral questions.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

MEETING OF PRIME MINISTERS IN 1970

Mr. R. Gordon Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from reports that Arnold Smith, Secretary General of the Commonwealth, is as it was put, shopping around for a country to act as host for the 1970 meeting of Commonwealth Prime Ministers. May we have the assurance of the Prime Minister that the government and the people of Canada would be glad if Canada were the host?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Secretary of State answered a similar question a few weeks ago.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ANTI-MISSILE INSTALLATIONS—EFFECT ON CANADA OF U.S. INTERCEPTION SYSTEM

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and it has to do with the establishment of the two A.B.M. installations in Montana and North Dakota. Did our partner in NORAD advise the government of Canada of its intention to establish these installations and, if so, will the minister say when he, as the responsible minister for foreign affairs, first received notification of the decision by the United States in this regard?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we were told of the decision immediately before it was announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does that mean before it was announced by President Nixon, and that until that date our partner in NORAD gave Canada no information?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the right hon. gentleman knows, there had been many discussions about the Sentinel system which involved, as I understand it, many days and weeks of discussion in the United States. The President, who had the responsibility, announced the other day the decision he made to change the nature of the plans which had been talked about at one time. We were informed just in advance of his public announcement.

Of course we shall be having some discussion with the United States. The Prime Minister will be talking to the President when he sees him next week. This will be one of a good many other matters discussed. I can only repeat what the Prime Minister has said, that the purpose of any of these defences is that they shall never be used. If they are used they will have failed. Therefore I think we all must look at this problem in its very widest context, namely to avoid a nuclear conflict.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question arising from his answers to my previous questions, upon which I have been reflecting. Did he mean to indicate that it is the view of his government that the A.B.M. system and the decision of the President of the United States do in fact escalate the chance of conflict, and are in fact a threat of some sort to world peace? Is that what the Prime Minister meant to indicate?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Were there any discussions between his department and the government of the United States as to whether or not NORAD facilities would in any way be involved; and can he assure the house that as a result of those discussions neither the warning system nor any part of the NORAD system is involved in this A.B.M. program?

Mr. Sharp: As the Prime Minister has said, Mr. Speaker, these are two separate matters, our NORAD agreement and the proposed system of A.B.M.'s around the cities or around the defence installations. As one of those who has joint responsibility for NORAD, we are not involved in the decisions of the United States on their A.B.M. system.

FISHERIES

SEALS—REQUEST FOR REASONS FOR SUSPENSION OF HUNT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. A few moments ago I attempted to engage Your Honour's eye on a matter supplementary and related to a question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East. Your Honour permitted a number of supplementaries related to other questions and did not allow me to put a supplementary question at that time. My supplementary is of great importance, particularly to the people of eastern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member may put the supplementary question now.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Fisheries, in view of the fact that the minister is not here today. Would the parliamentary secretary to the minister assure the house that later today the minister will make a statement and communicate it to hon. members, or will make a statement in the house tomorrow with respect to the cancellation of the seal hunt last Saturday before the quota had been substantially filled and indicate, since the hunt has been concluded, the reasons for suspending it before the quota was arrived at?

Mr. E. F. Whelan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I think I can say, after consultation with the minister, that the decision was taken by the minister only because of the conservation of the seal herd. The minister has made a statement in this respect. I hope that by now all members have a copy in their post office boxes, if the services of the Postmaster General are in good order, and everybody will know what the minister said in his statement.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Fisheries has shown contempt for the house in making this announcement outside the house on Saturday last.

OFFICIAL REPORT

PRINTING OF FRENCH VERSION ON POOR QUALITY PAPER

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

May I ask him whether he noticed that the French version of the House of Commons Debates is being printed on poor quality paper by the Printing Bureau? If so, and with a view to correcting such anomaly, could he tell us whether or not he intends to meet the directors of the Portneuf plants who manufacture excellent paper?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I must confess to the hon. member that this had escaped my attention and that, in any case, I would not have given much consideration to this matter, because neither the Printing Bureau nor the translation of the official report of the House of Commons Debates come under the purview of my department.

ARTEC—POSSIBLE CESSATION OF REGIONAL BROADCASTING

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, could the Secretary of State tell us whether national or regional broadcasting will be suspended due to the dispute going on between the C.B.C. and the Association of Radio and Television Employees of Canada?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I cannot give a definite answer about that, Mr. Speaker. As everyone, I am aware that a strike vote has been taken, and that final efforts are made to reach a settlement. I hope it will come about but staggered strikes which were announced by the unions will have consequences which I cannot foresee and which the corporation itself, I think, cannot foresee exactly.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

BIAFRA—CEASE FIRE PROPOSAL AS PRELUDE TO NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. On Friday last the Prime Minister indicated that he might be willing to report to the house the result of the discussions that have taken place between the high commissioner in Lagos and his department. More specifically, would he indicate to the house whether the high commissioner has been instructed to urge the government in Lagos to accept the peace proposals put forward by the authorities in Biafra?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in a couple of days of discussion I have had the advantage of spending some hours with our high commissioner from Lagos. We explored many matters, including the possibilities of working out a cease-fire and the termination of hostilities, which is even more important. Needless to say, many of these matters I could not very well discuss with the house until our high commissioner has had an opportunity of carrying messages from this government to the government to which he is accredited, namely the Nigerian government. I do hope that some of the initiatives may prove useful, but that remains to be seen.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us what instructions the high commissioner has been given with regard to representations to be made to the Nigerian government? What instructions have we given him?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I think I tried to make clear that it would hardly be courteous to the government to which he is accredited to say in advance what he intends to tell them.

Mr. Nystrom: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In light of the recent developments, such as Prime Minister Wilson's decision to go to Nigeria, and Biafra's proposals for a ceasefire, is the Canadian government now ready to ask the United Nations to extend the terms of reference of the international observer team to enable it to go into Biafra and investigate the alleged atrocities there?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of issues which we asked the high commissioner to talk over with the government of Lagos. I think it would not be serving the cause that we are all trying to serve if I were to indicate here in the house, in advance, the matters I asked the high commissioner to discuss with the senior officials in the Lagos government.

Mr. Nystrom: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether the Canadian government is now willing to go to the United Nations and ask them to extend the terms of reference of the international observer team.

DISCUSSIONS WITH SOVIET AMBASSADOR RESPECTING TENSION IN EASTERN EUROPE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my colleague the hon. member for Peace River directed a question to the Prime Minister on Friday last to which the Prime Minister replied that the Secretary of State for External Affairs would be delighted to discuss it today. I think those are the words the Prime Minister used. The question related to the military manoeuvres planned by the Soviet Union and Warsaw pact nations in eastern Europe. The hon. member for Peace River asked whether the government of Canada had expressed its concern and anxiety to the Soviet Union and, if not, whether it would do so.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I had occasion to look at the question put by the hon. member for Peace River, and it is not clear to me what military manoeuvres are referred to. The Warsaw pact exercises in the Soviet zone of Germany early this month were of a minor nature and no large scale exercises are planned, to our knowledge, for the immediate future. Although the situation in eastern and central Europe does, as always, give grounds for concern over the longer term, there are no special reasons at present why the government should feel unusual anxiety about the direction of events.

OCCUPATION OF CZECHOSLOVAKIA BY SOVIET TROOPS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Prime Minister's discussions with the Soviet ambassador last week, which he said were on the subject of China, can he state whether while they were discussing China there was any reference to the presence of Soviet troops in Czechoslovakia, and whether during this discussion or any other recently the Canadian government has raised the issue of the continuing occupation of that country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I indicated that the details of the discussion are of a confidential nature.

[Later:]

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The Prime Minister said in his reply today, as he did on Friday, that the discussion with the Russian ambassador was privileged. My point of order is this: A mere statement by the right hon. gentleman does not make it so; it simply indicates his refusal to tell Canadians what took place, or to explain the purpose of these talks.

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a matter of debate; it is certainly not a point of order. If the hon. member would indicate the standing order or precedent to which he is referring I shall rule on the point raised. However, it seems to me he is arguing the validity of the Prime Minister's position in refusing to reply to his question. The hon. member knows that a minister is not obliged to reply to a question, even though the member asking it may think it should be answered, or answered in a certain way.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): To continue this point of order, Mr. Speaker. I fully agree I have not referred to the Standing Order—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Will you hear me out?

Mr. Speaker: I have ruled on the point raised by the hon. member and it seems to me there is little purpose in going into the matter further. The hon. member is not satisfied with the reply made to him by the Prime Minister. I do not see how that can constitute either a point of order or a question of privilege.

MAINLAND CHINA—EFFECT ON RECOGNITION OF BORDER CLASHES WITH U.S.S.R.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): On a point of order, dealing with the rights of parliament, Mr. Speaker. The other day I asked the Prime Minister again in this house whether there had been any suggestion of postponing recognition of communist China because of the aggression being practised between communist China and the U.S.S.R. The answer received from the Prime Minister and from the Secretary of State for External Affairs was that this could not be revealed.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys).]

Later that day it was stated in the press that according to information received the subject had been discussed between the Prime Minister and the Soviet ambassador. It is not proper that answers which were not given here in this chamber should be given outside the house by officials in order to offset any possible criticism of the failure to answer here.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the point of order, Mr. Speaker. The subject matter which was discussed between the Soviet ambassador and myself was China. When I was asked the question, the External Affairs Department had not yet received permission from the Soviet ambassador to release the subject matter of the discussion. The ambassador did agree later to our indicating that we had discussed the subject of China, but not that we should give the details of that conversation, and there is no obligation or intention on the part of the government to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I agree with the Prime Minister that there is no obligation to reveal what passed between him and a foreign ambassador. But there is no justification for the action of civil servants in endeavouring to help the government out after the Prime Minister has given an answer in the house to the effect that information will not be furnished.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

P.E.I.—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister of regional and economic expansion. Some days ago it was indicated to the house by the Prime Minister that the development plan agreement was to be signed with the government of Prince Edward Island. That agreement has now been signed and, I understand, tabled in the provincial legislature of Prince Edward Island. When may we expect a similar courtesy in the house in respect of this matter?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry that the document has not been tabled in the house yet. This delay is due to the fact that we are trying to get it translated into French, so as to table both versions at the same time. However, if the French version should be long in coming, we will immediately table the English version.

FISHERIES

SEALS—REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF ARTEK FILM BY STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to speak to the point of order raised by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member resume his seat? The Chair has already indicated that the point of order referred to was not one to be raised at the present time. If the hon. member has another point of order to raise, the Chair will hear him, of course.

Mr. McGrath: If I cannot speak to the point of order, would Your Honour permit me to ask a supplementary question?

Mr. Speaker: We have gone beyond the time allotted to oral questions but if hon. members agree unanimously, the hon. member may proceed.

An hon. Member: Go on.

Mr. Speaker: The suggestion has been made that it being St. Patrick's Day the hon. member should be allowed to ask the supplementary.

Mr. McGrath: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and all hon. members for showing such charity to this poor, humble Irishman. My supplementary question is directed to the leader of the house. As he is permitted to do under Standing Order 65, would he agree to refer to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts, the subject matter of my question to the Secretary of State regarding the film made by Artek Films Limited, on the seal hunt in the St. Lawrence?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): I understand that the Secretary of State in his answer drew attention to the fact that the estimates are now before all the standing committees and that it would be entirely within the power of the standing committee mentioned to make arrangements in its timetable to call before it the people necessary to a discussion of this question. I understood my hon. friend's reply to be within that context. It would of course be a different situation if this were a period of the year when the estimates were not before the standing committee.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (4) (a)—SUGGESTIONS TO CORRECT ALLEGED ANOMALIES IN PAYMENT OF PENSIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should give immediate consideration to the introduction of legislation to improve the position of our senior citizens, including those on old age security, the war veterans allowance and various other government pensions and allowances, by providing inter alia a substantial increase in the old age pension, the removal of the income test from the supplement thereto, income tax adjustments to correct existing anomalies, and the inclusion of an escalator clause to keep pensions in line with wage and salary increases, all of these proposals being steps toward the establishing of a genuine guaranteed annual income.

As will be clear from this motion, Mr. Speaker, we are asking the house today to give serious consideration to the needs, the plight and the rights of our senior citizens. We have in mind all our people who are covered by this broad term "senior citizens", but we are thinking particularly of those in receipt of old age security pensions, war veterans allowances, and various other pensions and allowances.

If time permits, various members of our party will speak with respect to the different groups of people referred to in the motion. We hope the house will welcome this day as providing an opportunity to give special consideration to the problems faced by the older people in our community.

May I say at the outset that this is not just another appeal for a few more dollars. More dollars are certainly needed by our senior citizens—and not just a few more. But the appeal today is for a new approach to the whole question of retirement pensions, and in a moment or two I shall indicate what we regard as the three main points which are essential to such a new approach. Before I do that may I deal immediately with a couple of the answers thay may be forthcoming from the government side unless, of course, the government decides that this is a good motion and is prepared to support it.

Having listened to many debates on this subject in this house, I suspect that one of the answers will be that it is more important to do something about inflation, that it is more important to try to stop inflation, which after all hits hardest those who are on fixed incomes, than it is forever to be raising old age and other pensions. In reply to that I want to say that no government yet has stopped inflation, except in times of depression. Some governments have managed to check it a bit here and there, but the course of history is the story of prices and wages going up and up. We are always aware of the extent to which this hurts people, but it is also a fact of history that with rising prices and rising wages people who are at work fare a little better as time goes on. Things may cost a lot more today than they did when wages were 50 cents an hour but, even at today's higher prices, today's higher wages are such that working people are better off.

What is wrong with our society is that we draw a line, a line of discrimination that is hard and fast. We say to those who are at work: "You have the power to struggle for increases; you have the opportunity to get those increases and to improve your standard of living". But we say to those who are on the other side of that line, those who are retired: "Your income must remain fixed from the point of retirement until your days on earth are done". We regard this as a matter of rank discrimination and we say it is not good enough just for the government to declare that it is going to try to check inflation.

The other night I raised this question under another heading having to do with retired civil servants. The Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Lang) seemed completely to miss my concern that our retired people have the opportunity to share in the rising standard of living. He said that it would be better if we stopped inflation and one of the ways, said he, to stop inflation was to stop asking for pension increases. We regard that stand not only as sheer nonsense but as most unfair and discriminatory against our senior citizens.

The fact of inflation, the fact of rising prices, the fact of rising wages—these facts are all present. What we want is recognition of a further fact, namely, that our senior citizens have just as much right to share in the rising standard of living as those who are still at work. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we reject the argument that the only thing the government should do is to carry on a futile battle against inflation. It is not carrying it on anyway. We say that a government that encourages and does its part in raising the standard of living for working people by raising salaries and wages should do the same for our senior citizens and raise their pensions. Not to do so is rank discrimination against those who are retired.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Another argument that will be probably used if the government makes the mistake of opposing this motion today will be that this matter is under review. As an answer, this is becoming a bit monotonous in this house. Everything that we are concerned about is under review. As far as pension matters are concerned, not only is it not fully satisfactory just to tell the house that these questions are under review, but I am also deeply disturbed about words that leak out here and there in connection with the nature of this review. We are told that maybe there has to be a change, a new approach. I have been asking for a new approach to the problem; the government has said that it will come out with a new approach. But it talks of selectivity. Those famous words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) still ring in our ears—"We have had enough of this free stuff." The whole concept of universal social security programs seems to be under attack in the review that the government is making. We submit that as an answer to the question we are raising today this is not good enough.

I said that we are asking for a new approach to the problem of pensions for those who are retired, and I should like to indicate three matters that I think are at the heart, three things that are the essence, of this new approach.

First of all, I believe we have to establish once and for all that retirement pensions, pensions that enable people to live decently after they have done their share of this country's work, are a matter of right, that there must not be any kind of charity or means test or needs test or stigma of any kind attached to them. I thought that we had reached that point back in the early 1950's when we got rid of the means test from the old age security pension, but we got it back again with respect to the guaranteed income supplement. The words that are leaking out about the review that is now taking place suggest that something further along that line is in the government's mind.

Words like "selectivity", "responsible payments", and so on are fine words, but the fact of the matter is that if you put older people on any kind of needs or means test, even if you have a system of negative income tax—and I will come to that a little later—you are putting them in the position of receiving something that still has the social welfare or relief concept attached to it. We want to get rid of that completely. We want pensions at the point of retirement and from then on to be completely a matter of right without any means, needs or income test attached to them.

A second point that we regard as essential to a new approach to the problem of pensions is that the amount of the old age security pension will have to be substantially increased so that it will be the kind of pension on which people can live decent and dignified lives. It has taken a long while to get to the point we have reached. The pension battle in Canada spreads back over many decades. As a matter of fact, it was in the very year in which I was born, 1908, that the first step was taken in the House of Commons in the field of pensions when the government annuities act was brought in. In fact it was debated in this home at second reading the very day I was born. That piece of legislation was a pretty meagre step. The debates of 1908 on this subject are interesting to read, but at least as a result of that debate it was recognized that the government had some responsibility to help people to help themselves in regard to their old age.

We moved ahead in the twenties when parliament brought into effect the first old age pensions act which provided a $20 pension at age 70 but with a means test and a whole host of restrictions. Then we took another further step forward in 1950 or 1951 when we abolished the means test for the old age pension of that day. At that time it was only $40 a month and we provided that everybody 70 years of age and over would receive it.

It has taken all this time for us to take these forward steps. It has taken too long, but at least we have moved from the idea of simple government involvement in pensions, to pensions because people needed them, and finally to pensions as a matter of right. We tried to go a step farther by providing for adequate pensions under the Canada Pension Plan, which was a good way to meet the problem or will be for those who eight or ten years from now will benefit to the full extent from the Canada Pension Plan and the old age security pension. But the mass of Canadian people still have not accepted the idea that old age pensions should be generous enough for people to live on.

I have a motion on the order paper, which was debated for an hour on a previous occasion, proposing that the old age security pension should be raised to $125 a month, that the needs test attached to the income supplement should be wiped out, and so on. The figure in my motion is a bare minimum. We ought to be talking now about old age security pensions of $150 a month. The day will come when even that amount will be considered small. In today's context a pension of that order would indicate that parliament no longer thought old age pensions a form of charity but had considered what was fair and reasonable. But the government still considers pensions a form of welfare and, utilizing a means or needs test, pays pensions so small that people can scarcely get by on them.

I suggested that there are three aspects of this problem that we consider to be important. First, as I have said, we need to give our people pensions as a matter of right, without any means or needs test. Second, we need to make the pensions substantial, even generous. We ought to pay as much as $150 a month right now. The third point I wish to make, and to me this is the most important step we must take in the pension field, is that there must be built into the old age pension scheme and into the pension schemes of retired civil servants, C.N.R. employees, veterans and people in other segments of our community, automatic escalator clauses that will provide for pensions to rise and keep up with the increases taking place in wages and salaries.

I have been arguing about this point for years, and I want to talk about it now. To judge from answers given from the government side, from interjections made from various corners of the house and so on, the notion still persists that pensions should be tied only to the cost of living. That is not good enough. For that matter we have not got that now. Most pensions have no escalator clause, but the old age security pension has one, although it limits the increase to 2 per cent per year, as does the Canada Pension Plan. So the escalator clauses in those instances are not really tied to increases in the cost of living. But even when you have such a clause you condemn retired people to being able to purchase for the rest of their years only the same basket of goods and services they could purchase at the point of retirement. We do not say that to the working sector of our population. We say that our working people have the right to keep earning higher wages and salaries and to participate in the increased standard of living, for the standard of living goes up as the years go on.

When we were dealing with these matters in the committee that dealt with the Canadian Pension Plan in 1964 and 1965 a great many statistics were placed before us. Although I do not have it in front of me, in issue No. 3 of the Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of that committee there is an interesting table about the rise over the years in the cost of living, wages, the gross national product and so on. I looked at it again today to refresh my memory, and these are the facts. In the 20 year period between 1940 and 1960 the cost of living doubled, but the wage index multiplied three times. So if you earned wages or a salary you had a chance to keep up with the rising standard of living, but if you were tied to some sort of cost of living index you fell behind.

I point out that not only did the cost of living double while the wage index tripled but, according to the same table, the per capita share of the gross national product of the country in the same 20-year period went up by a multiple of four and the gross national product went up by a multiple of five. So look at where we would leave our older people, even if we were to give them a full cost of living bonus. During a 20-year period of retirement, while the gross national product of the country multiplied five times, their standard of living would only double. While the per capita share of the gross national product multiplied four times and the wage index three times, the old people of our society would be left far behind. That is not good enough. It is not the way any family would operate. It is not a just society. It is not humane and it is not Canadian.

It is not right that we should say to our older people: "We must draw the line at the point of retirement. You cannot continue to share in the advantages that accrue from a dynamic society." We must remember that our present position is the result of the contribution our older people made when they were working. They worked perhaps with less efficient tools and methods, but they built us up to where we are today, just as we are building up our society for the generations to follow us. Would we like it if we were told on retirement that we would have to settle for the rest of our lives for the basket of goods and services that we were able to buy at the point of retirement, even though the gross national product might go up by a multiple of five during our period of retirement? Unless we have an adequate escalator clause our entire pension program will fall to the ground and prove useless. I suggest in all fairness that if we are to have a pension program worthy of its name we must include in it an automatic escalator clause. And, for heaven's sake, let us get the idea across that this escalator clause must be tied either to increases in the wage or salary index or to the gross national product. Let us have no more of this talk of its being tied merely to the cost of living index.

I must move on, Mr. Speaker, because there are other matters in the motion. It refers to veterans allowances, which will be discussed later, and to income tax anomalies which should be straightened out. To judge from the kinds of answers given to questions on orders of the day, something may be done about this this spring. I am sure that even this government did not intend that the guaranteed income supplement should put people into an income tax bracket. I am sure that this government did not mean, after saying that certain people must not have less than a minimum income and paying them a supplement to bring them up to it, to turn around and take away part of that minimum income in taxation. The reason for this anomaly is, of course, that income tax exemption levels have not been changed since 1949. As a matter of fact, they are lower today than they were before world war II.

I have gone into details on this point on other occasions, but I think one of the most wicked pieces of unfairness relates to war veterans allowances. Those who remember the debates on the guaranteed income supplement will remember that the minister piloting that legislation through the house made the point that in any income test for the supplement the war veterans allowance would not be counted. But he overlooked the means test in the War Veterans Allowance Act. Once the war veteran who receives an allowance is paid the guaranteed income supplement his war veterans allowance is cut and he ends up with precisely the same income he had already. Being a veteran, he does not like this. He would like to get all the advantages that flow from being a veteran. But he is now worse off because of the income tax situation. If a veteran receives the war veterans allowance, that is not taxable, but the guaranteed income supplement is taxable income. Veterans between the age of 65 and 70 do not get the extra $500 exemption, so they have to pay income tax because part of their income is in the form of a guaranteed income supplement rather than war veterans allowance. This is the kind of anomaly that needs to be straightened out.

• (3:20 p.m.)

If there is going to be a budget statement this spring by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), the government could cope with this problem at that time. I strongly urge that something be done. The dollars involved would not be great, but to people with small incomes it is difficult to pay $20 or $30 income tax. It is unfair, wicked and unkind and I hope these income tax anomalies will be corrected.

When speaking on this subject a year ago the then Minister of Finance, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), defended the practice. But the present Minister of Finance said that he would study my serious representations on this matter. The other night during the adjournment debate the answer was even more hopeful than that. I hope the government is becoming ashamed of its position. There was at least one debate initiated by an hon. member on the government side with regard to income tax paid by people between the age of 65 and 70. I believe many government members made representations to the government and I hope they will be dealt with during the course of this session.

I have said the steps proposed in my motion, such as raising the amount of old age security, cutting out the means or needs test and particularly putting in an escalation clause tied to wages and salaries or the gross national product rather than the cost of living, could be considered as steps toward the establishment of a genuine guaranteed annual income. There is no doubt in my mind that in a country such as Canada the day will come when we will have a genuine guaranteed annual income right across the broad range of our society. This will not happen overnight. It will not come into full bloom the first time, but a start must be made. I think the place to start is with our senior citizens.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that there be no confusion between a guaranteed annual income and a negative income tax. My fear is that when the government talks about a guaranteed annual income it is thinking of using the negative income tax as a means to accomplish this. Some people think that these are so similar they are synonymous, but they are not. The key to a negative income tax is to have a person report his amount of income and then pay him the difference between that amount and some established level. No matter how this is dressed up, what name it is given, it is still a means or needs test. It is no better for the older people than it is for any other.

In my view the guaranteed income supplement has not been successful. It is a form of negative income tax. It is not a genuine guaranteed annual income. Under a guaranteed annual income the pension is paid without question. There is provision for an income tax structure which takes back the major portion or perhaps all in cases of people who do not require this pension. But the difference between these two approaches is very real. One is a glorified means test. The other is a genuine pension or income payment.

The best social security plan this country ever had was the old age security program we passed in 1951, but it was messed up with the guaranteed income supplement. During those years there was pride and dignity attached to old age security. We had to battle to have the amount raised from $40 to $46, to $55, to $65 and then to $75 a month. We are having to battle now to have the amount raised to $125 or $150 a month. But the principle was right in the original plan, and when you revert to a means or needs test you are taking a step backwards.

I plead with the government not to play around in its review with programs based on selectivity, but to give weight to a program with a genuine guaranteed annual income. The government should have this objective and start with the people who deserve it most, namely, senior citizens, war veterans and all our retired persons. These people deserve recognition for what they have done for Canada. They have a human right to share in the developments that take place during the period of their retirement, whether it is 5, 10, 20 or 25 years. The prospect of greater longevity today causes this problem to be more serious than ever. The problem is intensified by the speed at which prices and wages are rising. It cannot wait for a decade of review but must be dealt with now.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out that the 50th anniversary of a great event in the political history of Canada, the 1919 convention of the Liberal Party, will be celebrated in August of this year. I say this without tongue in cheek.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Fifty years of frustration.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought that would bring applause from hon. members opposite but the ones sitting there—

An hon. Member: They are ashamed of it.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Either they are ashamed or they have forgotten about it. Some of them are so young they would not remember it. It was a great convention, Mr. Speaker. Some people at that convention had some very progressive ideas. Those in attendance included Mackenzie King, W. S. Fielding and Arthur Roebuck. We can have political kibitzing if we want, but that convention was the first at which any national political party in this country made basic proposals for a welfare state in Canada.

An important resolution of that convention with regard to setting up an insurance program against unemployment, sickness and old age became the basis for parliament over the years to build up a social security program for which we can express some gratitude. It is not all it should be but we have done a lot in those 50 years. I say "we"; I do not say the Liberal party because they took an awful lot of prodding. They know that if it had not been for the C.C.F. and the N.D.P. pushing them for the last 30 or 40 years we would not have achieved the things we have accomplished. I now plead with the government: Do not dismantle it all. Do not, in the name of selectivity or in the name of some different kind of expenditure of money, abandon this whole program. Do not be taken in by the silly notion that there has been enough of this free stuff. Those Liberals of 1919 had ideas that still have merit, and Liberals, Conservatives, New Democrats and others have through the years in parliament been both correct and responsible in trying to focus on the rights of our older people and the rights of people in our society generally.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are about to call my attention to the time. May I say that you can relax because I will finish in another 30 seconds.

I plead, therefore, that instead of turning back we go forward to a new approach to retirement based on an absolute recognition of the rights of our older people, based also on pensions of a sufficient amount to enable them to live as they should, and including also the automatic escalation of pensions in line with the increases that take place in wages and salaries and the gross national product, so that our older people will be able to enjoy their retirement years in the dignity which is their right.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome the opportunity to discuss the problems of our senior citizens. The motion proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is quite comprehensive. I do not intend to deal with all the elements in it as there will be other speakers from my party. However, in this debate today I wish to put myself and my party squarely on the side of our older citizens.

I feel that the record of the Conservative government between 1957 and 1963, and in fact of our party since that date, bears out my contention that we have always been concerned about the welfare of those no longer in a position to take care of themselves. I believe that what we need is a rational overhaul of our present welfare system.

The present program of social assistance in Canada has grown piecemeal over many years and has been put together by several different administrations. These administrations probably may have had somewhat different goals. It has now developed into a patchwork quilt and, while undoubtedly it has done much to alleviate suffering, too often it fails to cover those most in need. It just does not make sense to have a social assistance program which does not adequately serve those who need help. To my mind there is a case for revision of our welfare concept, and the initiative must come from the federal government. But what has happened, Mr. Speaker?

The government, though preaching the just society during the election campaign, has got itself into a terrible predicament chiefly because of its inability to control inflation and by its inept handling of the country's finances. I suggest that the government by its inability to conduct the financial affairs of Canada in such a way as to contain inflation has further caused great hardship, particularly to our older citizens.

I recall the time the amendment to the Old Age Security Act was passed, having to do with an escalation clause related to the increase in the cost of living. The then Liberal administration tried to imply that it would never allow the increase in the cost of living to be more than 2 per cent per year. What has been the record? We have had a succession of yearly increases of far more than 2 per cent. Who suffers? It is our older citizens, those on old age security and living on fixed incomes. Our older people have more at stake than any other class of citizen as a result of the continuing inability of the government to contain inflation.

We must recognize the principle that our older citizens should not have to bear the brunt of the deterioration of our dollar. Certainly I favour an escalator clause in the Old Age Security Act and related acts to keep pensions in line with the increase in the cost of living.

In general terms those Canadians who require government assistance can be divided into two broad groups. The first is made up of people who, for one reason or another, are not part of the active labour force. They are elderly or injured or handicapped in some other way. They share the characteristic of being unable to earn an income of their own. The second group is made up of people who would be able to earn for themselves if jobs or training or incentives were available. This second group needs help in terms of opportunity. Today we are discussing primarily the plight of the elderly, the injured and the handicapped. How long must these citizens of Canada wait to have the government recognize its responsibility and act on their behalf?

I feel that if all the terms of the motion before us were implemented we might only further complicate our social assistance system. Earlier in my remarks I said that in my opinion there is a case for revision of the welfare concept and that we need a rational overhaul of our present program. I suggest that there is a strong case for some form of consolidation of our present varied assistance programs.

Some advocates suggest a guaranteed annual income. Others suggest a negative income tax. No matter what it may be called, immediate steps should be taken to consider these possibilities, keeping in mind all the various advantages and disadvantages. There are many factors to be considered. We must not detract from incentives to work or fail to take advantage of opportunities to work.

The government has now been long enough in office to provide some concrete proof of its desire to implement the so-called just society. Let it act immediately to give relief to those Canadians on pensions who have suffered so much by reason of the inflation permitted by the government. It should provide at once for the escalation of pensions in proportion to the actual increase in the cost of living. The government should also undertake to present a white paper or a statement of some kind showing how our present varied social assistance programs might be integrated.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, every measure aimed at improving the situation of our senior citizens will certainly obtain our approval. We must not take exclusively into account the political benefits that could be derived from increasing the old age pension, but we must also, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) did, explain and understand the need to give our citizens who are 65 and over, the vital minimum amount based on the real cost of living and not upon considerations out of date in 1969.

Even if there has been some improvement, the old age security pension is still inadequate. We should consider, for instance, the numerous cases in our constituencies where many couples aged 70, 75 or 80, have been unable, in spite a whole life of hard work and because of the inadequacy of the economic system in which we live today, to put aside enough money to live comfortably during their old age. But of course with a pension of $109.20 each, they cannot afford any luxury or even some comfort, and this shows the need to correct this situation.

I want to illustrate what I have in mind by way of one example. Recently in my constituency, I met a 75 year-old man whose wife was 72. They both received the old age security pension, plus the maximum guaranteed income supplement, i.e. a total of $218.40 per month. However, as it sometimes happens, the wife dies. What happen to her husband? Now, since he is a widower, he is considered as a bachelor and since he can occasionally earn some money from his trade as a blacksmith, his pension is reduced suddenly from $218.40 to $78.20.

In my opinion, there is a certain anomaly there. Two people living together live better with $218.40 than one person living alone on $78.20. Furthermore, if a person has a dependent, a boy or a girl, living with him, the situation is even more complicated.

There should be a striking improvement there. Let us not be stingy. A single person is allowed an income of only $768, that is the maximum amount, that he is allowed to earn. He will therefore, receive $78.20 and no supplement. I suggest that this is perhaps a little stingy to reduce, by all means, this income supplement.

Other cases have been called to my attention since the month of January 1969. For instance, I have been told of people aged 80 or 85, on the last leg of their lives, who, with great difficulty and because they have the good fortune of living still with relatives, a daughter or a son, have saved a small capital of $1,000, $1,500 or $2,000 that they keep in the bank, very carefully, to cover their burial expenses. Now, under the pretence that they have accumulated a small sum of money in the bank, though almost insignificant, the government decreases or curtails their guaranteed income supplement.

There again, in my opinion, we find only stinginess. The government takes away from them something essential, in fact, barely a vital minimum. Such action shows only stinginess and is, I believe, shameful.

As members of parliament we are of course very often called upon the make decisions. Therefore we should remove from the Pension Act as well as from the Old Age Security Act any ambiguity and stinginess, in short anything liable to sadden, so to speak, the last years of our senior citizens.

On the contrary, the pensioners should then feel happy to have lived in a country which has succeeded in setting off their worth. So, we should not have citizens who at the end of their life are having difficulties with the government of their own country regarding the old age security pension. Then, let us not be mean and let us give them what falls to them by right. As for the ones who have worked all their life, no matter what they have accumulated, the services they have rendered are priceless and we must therefore be extremely grateful to them.

Since an escalator clause is to be found everywhere, it is obvious that it should also be included in the Old Age Security Act. There is a similar anomaly with respect to family allowances, for instance, which have remained fixed, but even this is not a fair word, because, following the increase in the cost-of-living index and the relative value of money today, these allowances are worth substantially less in terms of purchasing power.

Consequently, provision for an increase is quite normal and proper. All legislation of this kind should normally provide for an increase in pensions each year or at regular intervals in accordance with the increase in the cost of living. This is a very logical provision, even an elementary one, and, consequently, we give it our complete support.

Naturally, if the ideal to which members of the Ralliement Créditiste aspire could be reached, we would probably not have so many problems to face in the pension field, because money would then be truly at the service of the citizen. But we have to face up to the facts, and since this is part of the system we live in, we shall support this motion under the circumstances.

• (3:50 p.m.)

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased that the motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has given the house an opportunity to discuss the important issue of income support for our senior citizens and others. If I were to hazard any criticism of the definition set out by the hon. member in his motion it would be that, if anything, its focus is too narrow.

The government is giving serious and continuing consideration to the importance of income support measures, not only to those on social allowances and pensions but to all those receiving any form of income support at all. It is also considering whether the present structure of programs reaches all those in need of such support or if entirely new structures should be developed. I hope that the statements today from various parts of the house will be directed to this broad question rather than restricting themselves to the narrow definitions. There is in the world today a great dynamic to the debate about income support, not just in Canada but throughout the industrial world. I hope the discussion in the house this afternoon will make an important contribution to that debate in Canada.

I think it will be helpful to begin by setting out something of the background of our present situation in regard to income support programs. Measures designed for the benefit of our old people have been introduced or acted upon in each year since 1963. In 1963 the old age security pension was raised from $65 to $75 a month for all those 70 years of age or over. In 1964 the Canada Pension Plan was introduced and a joint committee of the Senate and House of Commons was set up to study this proposal in detail and make any necessary improvements. This plan provided retired contributors with pensions up to $104 a month in addition to their basic old age security pension.

In 1965 the Canada Pension Plan was adopted and at the same time the Old Age Security Act was amended to reduce the age at which benefits might be paid to 65, by one year in age at a time between 1966 and 1970. By 1970 this will have added to the old age security rolls an additional 645,000 persons—more than the 643,000 persons originally covered by the old age security program when it began in 1952. In terms of the expenditures thus committed, this measure was the equivalent of a whole new social security program for aged persons in Canada, covering an extra 645,000 people at an annual cost by 1970 of an extra $580 million, apart even from its escalation feature.

With regard to escalation, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and others mentioned today, it was in 1965 also that we introduced escalating benefits for aged persons automatically as the cost of living rose. Both old age security and Canada Pension Plan benefits were tied to the pension index to help them keep pace with increases in the cost of living. We felt, however, that these benefits should not be decreased in periods when there might be decreases in the cost of living.

Mr. Stanfield: What Utopia is that?

Mr. Munro: This is the Utopia we are building into our act.

As a consequence of this decision not to permit any downward adjustment in benefits, it was decided to phase the upward adjustments by providing for a maximum increase of 2 per cent in any one year. If in some years the price index increase were larger than 2 per cent the difference would be made up in a subsequent year when the benefits would escalate by more than the price index. In 1964 this seemed a very reasonable approach since in the previous ten year period price levels had increased by only 1½ per cent a year on the average. With the recent announcement that the price index had remained constant last month, we may have seen the end of the period of rapidly rising prices and may anticipate that the pension index will operate as it was originally intended to do. If, on the other hand, the price index begins to rise again at a rate of more than 2 per cent annually we may have to consider a revision of this provision. Also, in 1965 the joint committee on pensions recommended that measures be adopted to provide for people who were already aged and therefore unable to benefit substantially from the Canada Pension Plan.

In 1966 contributions to the Canada Pension Plan began and people aged 69 could start drawing old age security benefits. Also, the Senate Committee on Aging, after extensive hearings, recommended a guaranteed income for people in receipt of old age security. That year the guaranteed income supplement proposal was introduced and agreed to, following this recommendation, providing a 40 per cent increase for old age security recipients with no other source of income, and a partial supplement for those with small amounts of other income. Thus Canada's first guaranteed income program commenced, and we were able to concentrate the substantial additional expenditures involved on those members of the aged population who needed the help most.

In 1967 the first guaranteed income supplement benefits were paid, and about 57 per cent of old age security pensioners qualified for full or partial supplements. Also in 1967 the first Canada Pension Plan retirement pensions were paid, and 68-year olds became eligible to draw old age security, Canada Pension Plan and guaranteed income supplement benefits.

In 1968, 67-year olds began to draw old age security, guaranteed income supplement and Canada Pension Plan benefits for the first time and, for the first time as well, the amounts of these benefits were escalated by 2 per cent as a result of the increase in the pension index. The $105 a month combined old age security and guaranteed income supplement benefits rose to $107.10.

In 1969 there was a further 2 per cent escalation in the amount of benefits to $109.20 a month, and those aged 66 now draw old age security, guaranteed income supplement and Canada Pension Plan benefits. In 1970 there will be a further 2 per cent escalation in benefits, even if prices fall in the meantime, and 65-year olds will start to draw benefits from all three areas. It can hardly be said that we have not had our aged citizens very much in our minds over the past six years.

I must point out that we are all aware of the cost in terms of expenditures that all these programs have meant. In the period I have mentioned public expenditures on health and social welfare rose from $3.9 billion in 1962-63 to $6.5 billion in 1967-68. This is an increase of $2.6 billion in five years, or about 67 per cent. My hon. friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, talked about a percentage in respect of the gross national product but he was going back about 20 years. Here we have this type of increase in a four or five year period, which hardly indicates neglect of our senior citizens on the part of this government. The increase in one year alone, between 1966 and 1967, was over $1 billion.

These amounts represent an increase from 9.5 per cent of the Gross National Product in 1962-63 to 10.4 per cent in 1967-68, over that span of four or five years. If you prefer that I leave health expenditures out of the calculation and talk only of social welfare expenditures, you will see that there has still been a striking increase in those five years, from $2.6 billion to $4.1 billion. The five-year increase amounts to $1.5 billion, or 55 per cent.

By themselves, social welfare expenditures account for 6.5 per cent of the gross national product. Old age security expenditures were a major item in these figures. In 1962-63 there were 950,000 pensioners and they received $734 million. Five years later there were 1,366,000 pensioners and they received $1.388 billion or 89 per cent more. During the year just ended it is estimated that $1.58 billion was spent for old age security recipients, and $1.76 billion is budgeted for next year. So the innovations I have enumerated in the past few minutes have amounted to over $1 billion in improved provision for our aged.

When the 69-year olds were brought in we spent an extra $100 million. When the 68-year olds and the guaranteed income supplement were brought in we spent another $355 million. When the 67 year olds were brought in and pensions were escalated for the first time, the bill rose by another $193 million. Now, with the 66-year olds in and a further escalation of benefits, we forecast a cost increase of $180 million.

In these figures I have not included any of the costs of Canada Pension Plan retirement pensions since they will be financed from the Canadian Pension Plan fund. But we should recognize that this pension is also increasing each year. This year the maximum monthly benefit payable was $31.88 in January and will be $42.50 in December, which together with the $78 old age security pension will in December make a total benefit of $120.50 a month. By 1976 the Canada Pension Plan will be paying $125 a month if escalation continues at 2 per cent a year, and together with old age security will provide a monthly benefit of $215 for each pensioner.

It may be helpful to see Canada's record in perspective by considering the situation in other countries. While the minimum monthly pension payable to every aged person in Canada is $78, in the United States it is $55. If the Canadian aged person has no other income he can receive $109.20 monthly. In the United States there is no provision for him to receive more than the $55. In Britain the minimum monthly pension for a single householder is $56.

In comparison with the International Labour Organization standard of a pension for an aged couple equal to 45 per cent of average earnings of an ordinary worker, the situation in Canada is quite good. The old age security pension and guaranteed income supplement together provide a benefit of 50 per cent, and the Canada Pension Plan retirement pension together with old age security provide a benefit of 61 per cent of average annual earnings of $5,000.

In the United States an aged couple can receive a maximum pension of 45.8 per cent of the maximum earnings on which they could have contributed. In France the pension is 20 per cent of previous earnings if one retires at age 60, 40 per cent if one retires at age 65, or 60 per cent if one does not retire until age 70. The rate in West Germany is 45 per cent of previous earnings if one has contributed for 30 years. In Sweden the rate is 60 per cent of previous earnings after 30 years of contributions.

Much of the present debate regarding the future of income maintenance revolves around the concepts of universality and selectivity. We have heard comment on that this afternoon, particularly from the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Because these terms have had various connotations in the past, I think too much of today's debate seems to reflect historical stereotypes of these concepts which lead to inconsistencies when applied to the contemporary situation.

I regret that such an inconsistency appears to be present in the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that we are debating this afternoon. While proposing that the government move in the direction of a guaranteed annual income for all Canadians, the motion urges us to abandon the income test in relation to the guaranteed income supplement. Surely this is completely inconsistent.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Not at all; not at all.

Mr. Munro: Well, I think it is. A guaranteed annual income for all Canadians would be an income test program which covered all of the Canadian society.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is a negative income tax.

Mr. Munro: Even on my hon. friend's definition of the difference between a guaranteed annual income and a negative income tax, you still have an income test. The guaranteed income supplement is a guaranteed annual income program which covers only that part of the Canadian society over the age of 66. On January 1 of next year it will be extended to cover all those over the age of 65. Are we being urged to abandon this form of program or are we being urged to extend it?

One of the arguments long advanced in support of such a comprehensive program is that it would do away with the rigid definitions of eligibility for inclusion in the various categories involved in a network of categorical programs. But this motion urges us to build higher the walls of the present categories in order to move toward an elimination of categories. Again, I cannot see how the one will lead us to the other. Which is it that we are being urged to do?

I said that much of the earlier debate and the present one on the future of income support measures revolves around the concepts of universality and selectivity. Selectivity was the essence of welfare in its infancy. Selectivity meant that those who sought welfare came hat in hand as supplicants. Selectivity meant proving need, often at a price of degrading, personal humilation in order to qualify. I agree with the hon. member when he criticizes selectivity in that connotation.

Against this background the demands for universal programs which would apply equally to all and degrade none were developed. While universality in income support programs provided money to those who did not need it, it seemed the only way to get money to those who did need it without forcing them through a process of humiliation to get it. Clearly, I think the ideal form of program was one which concentrated its resources on those in need and did this without subjecting anyone to the humiliation of hat-in-hand supplication.

This issue was clearly confronted in 1966 and the result was a guaranteed income supplement. At that time many were urging an increase in the flat rate of old age security payments from $75 a month to $100 a month, The cost of this would have been $369 million and it would still have left several hundred thousand Canadian senior citizens with only $100 on which to live. A guaranteed income supplement, on the other hand, at a cost of only $235 million, was able to ensure that none of Canada's aged had less than $105 a month on which to support themselves. In other words, the universal approach at a cost 50 per cent greater would have gotten less to those whose need was greatest and whose need had been the very reason for the increase in the first place.

We were able to achieve this selective effect without the traditional form of needs or means test, because it was possible to employ a negative income tax approach. Applicants simply fill out forms similar to income tax forms, but instead of sending the government a sum of money calculated in relation to their income they receive from it a sum of money calculated in relation to their income.

This is the first negative income tax program in existence in North America and it is being closely watched in many parts of the world. To suggest that its income test feature be dropped is to argue for a 50 per cent increase in its cost without adding one cent to what is received by those who have no other source of income. Since I know the great concern of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre for those in our society who have least, I cannot imagine this to have been his intention.

I believe the figures show that in the past few years the government has greatly expanded its income support, not only to those on allowances but to many segments of our society. As the Canada Pension Plan continues to mature and the age of eligibility for the old age security and guaranteed income supplement continues to drop, this support will grow.

The motion suggests that there are anomalies in our tax structure, and clearly there are. As we all know, the question of revisions to our tax laws is one which has been receiving a great deal of attention from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) in recent months, and the ending of such anomalies is one of the concerns of his present review.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Hear, hear. I shall hold you to that.

Mr. Munro: We are continuing to assess the effectiveness of our present programs and to examine proposals for their supplementation and consolidation. The suggestions offered in the course of this afternoon's debate by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith) and the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) are helpful and will, I assure the house, be taken into consideration.

Mr. Randolph Harding (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to speak this afternoon on pensions and on the poverty which often arises as a consequence of inadequate pensions a quotation from Oliver Goldsmith's poem, "The Deserted Village", comes to mind:

> Ill fares the land to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

Those words are as true today as they were when they were written many years ago. I welcome this opportunity to speak on the subject of pensions and poverty as it affects many Canadians. It is one which should be of deep concern to everybody. All Canadians should be asking why there is so much poverty and hardship in a country as rich as ours. They should be asking why such a situation is allowed to continue. They should ask why governments have been so ineffective in dealing with the situation. They should ask whether the solutions so far proposed are adequate and, if the answer is yes, why these solutions have not been applied.

I ask these questions, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps we can obtain from the government today an explanation for the lengthy delay in dealing adequately with the state of affairs I have described. We have just heard from the minister. He has sketched briefly the activities of the government in this field; I felt he was defending the present Canadian pensions system. It is true he said consideration would be given to the ideas put forward by previous speakers—and I certainly hope this will be the case—but despite this assurance I remind hon. members that we still have with us in Canada today a major problem involving all those who are in receipt of pensions income. As my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned earlier, these people fall into a number of groups—old age pensioners, those in receipt of war veterans allowances, and so on.

I do not think there is a member of this house who does not have in his office a thick file of letters dealing with pension matters. I have one, and I am certain other members receive similar letters from constituents and from organizations asking that something be done to ease the situation of those who are obliged to live on fixed incomes. When I consider some of the hardships that these people face I find myself wondering how governments can remain in power as long as they do. Remember, this problem has been with us for a long time. It is still here, and in my opinion it will remain with us until a basic change is made in the concept of pensions and the manner in which they should be granted to citizens.

Mr. Alexander: Or until there is new leadership.

Mr. Harding: I shall refer now to a question which has concerned me a great deal since I came to the House of Commons—the fact that though provision is made for pensions to vary year by year if the cost of living rises, the amount of the increase is not related to anything which is logical or sensible. We have on the statute books at the present time a provision which states that 2 per cent a year is the maximum increase which an old age pensioner may receive, even if the increase in the cost of living amounts to double the 2 per cent figure or more. I raised this issue in the house some time ago and I intend to bring it up again. We, the politicians who are elected by the men and women across Canada who go to the polls, make the laws. We can also change the laws. If 2 per cent is inadequate—and I suggest it certainly is—all that is required is for a majority of the elected members of this house to make up their minds that a change will be made and that change will be written into the statute.

• (4:20 p.m.)

One party in this house has a clear majority, the Liberal party. If the 2 per cent is to be changed it is the Liberal party that must change it. The opposition groups are willing to go along with such a change; all we need is some assistance from the backbenchers of the Liberal party.

Mr. Alexander: What a hope!

Mr. Harding: That is what I say. I do not think they dare make such a move. However, their constituents know they are not willing to make this move. The power is in their hands, and they need not shove the responsibility off on to the executive and say that the executive has to do the job. If these members stand up and insist upon a change being made, a change will come about. I urge them to take that step this afternoon.

I should like to go back a couple of years to show the house what has been happening to the cheques received by old age pensioners. The 2 per cent increase given those in receipt of the old age pension amounted to $1.50 a month. In the government publication that I hold in my hand the statement is made that last year the average cost of living in this nation increased by 4.1 per cent. I do not know what that means to hon. members opposite, but let me tell them what it means to the old age pensioner. It means that his standard of living and his spending power has decreased by more than $1.50 every month. It has been cut by that amount.

The year before, 1967, saw an average increase in the cost of living over the length and breadth of this nation of 4 per cent. Again the old age pensioners had a reduction that year in their basic pension of $1.50. True, we have increased their pensions by 2 per cent each year, but over this two year period there has been an 8.1 increase in the over-all cost of living.

This is what we are asking the government to correct; indeed it is just one of the inequities that exist. Old age pension organizations all across the country are asking that the standard of living of these pensioners should at least not be eroded. We have the voting power in this house to correct the situation, and we plead with the government and with Liberal members to help us correct this injustice.

Members of parliament are pretty well paid by other standards, but do they know what it means to an old age pensioner to have the equivalent of $1.50 knocked off his pension cheque? It means disaster. In this regard I should like to refer to a letter I have received and which I am prepared to table, Mr. Speaker, if the house desires. It is the sort of letter that all members receive and is written by a chap in receipt of a pension. He receives a small pension in addition to the old age pension plus a small portion of the supplement. Every time his pension is increased $2 or $3 the supplement is reduced by a like amount, and he is no better off now than he was several years ago. In fact, he is worse off because the increase that has taken place in the cost of living has gradually eroded his standard of living.

What worries the pensioners are these small increases, certainly small by our standards. According to this pensioner's letter his milk bill has gone up 24 cents a month—I agree not very much. His bread bill has gone up 16 cents a month, his daily newspaper has gone up 40 cents a month and his rent has risen $10 a month. Yet he receives the same pension. Therefore, do hon. members wonder that these people have cause to come to members of parliament and demand that something be done?

We have also received correspondence from senior citizens groups. The other day I received some correspondence from the senior citizens group in Trail which is in my riding of Kootenay West. This group is asking that the 2 per cent figure be increased because of the factors I have just outlined. It is also asking for higher income tax exemptions. In all common sense, can anybody justify the taxation of people in dire need who have no or extremely low incomes? I suggest that this just does not make sense.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) were in the house I know he would say that we cannot afford to lose the taxes collected from those in the lower income brackets. But we in this party say that there are other sources of taxation, and Mr. Carter, in his proposals for a just taxation system for Canada, has shown the government where it can raise the money to increase pensions while at the same time raising the income tax exemptions. The income tax exemptions of $1,000 for a single man and $2,000 for a married man were instituted donkeys years ago and bear no relevance to the earning power of today. They should be revised, and it is this government that should revise them. This is another way of providing some relief to pensioners and others on extremely low incomes. Again I suggest that the government take a good look at the Carter commission report and ascertain how the incomes of those in the low salary or wages brackets can be supplemented without harm to anybody.

I see that time is drifting along and I have several other matters I should like to raise in connection with this very interesting problem. In Canada today there are over 1,500,000 men and women receiving old age security pensions. I do not have the exact figure but it is somewhere over the one and a half million mark. About 780,000 of these receive part or all of the guaranteed income supplement. Currently, the income supplement with the 2 per cent increase amounts to $31.20, if they receive it all, but a large number of pensioners are not in that fortunate category.

What is an adequate pension for people who have retired? Actually, I am not in a position to quote exact figures. Depending on where they live, they need varying amounts. Some need less to get by on while others need more. But to say that a single pension today plus a supplement is adequate is sheer and utter nonsense. That has been one of our problems in Canada. We have not made a concerted attack on the problem of retirement pensions. Some countries have. I have raised this point before and will be raising it again.

As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said, it is utter stupidity to condemn retired people to live on an income which will remained fixed for the rest of their lives. I feel, and other hon. members have spoken about this, that as the gross national product increases every individual ought to have the right to share in the over-all increase. Sweden has worked out a better pension system than almost any other country in the world. They share in that country and we in this country should also share.

We must remember that many of us are approaching retirement age. We ought to remember the pioneers who went before us and laid the foundations for the economy of this country. They are entitled to share in the increased efficiency and productivity of those coming after them. This is not asking too much. We can work out a formula to make certain that every pensioner in this country has a better standard of living as the years go on. To begin with, we ought to include cost of living increase clauses in our pension schemes to make sure that our senior citizens' pensions will not be eroded any further. Yet our main objective must be—and this must be the objective of the just society about which the Liberal party talks so glibly—to make certain that our pensioners enjoy an increasing standard of living as time goes on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Harding.]

Mr. Harding: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say a number of other things but I will confine my remarks to a minute or two. I thank the house for its courtesy. There is one thought I should like to leave with hon. members before sitting down. It has to do not only with pensions but with poverty in general. To follow my trend of thought all one has to do is examine the figures in the latest Economic Council of Canada report. They should be of concern to every thinking Canadian. We find that the report has separated our people into five economic groups, beginning with the lowest 20 per cent and going up to the 20 per cent segment of our population with the highest earning capacity. In the lowest income group, of course, come the pensioners and those who are in trouble in poverty areas. We find that the workers in the lowest 20 per cent segment receive only 6.7 per cent of our total income. That is almost unbelievable. Those in the next highest group of 20 per cent receive only 13.4 per cent of our total income. The next group of 20 per cent receives only 18 per cent of our gross national product. We find that the top 20 per cent of our population has an income greater than that of the lowest 60 per cent of our working population. This demonstrates the poverty picture in Canada, and this is where adjustments must be made. This shows where the problem must be tackled. I hope and trust that before the present session of parliament ends we shall have begun tackling some of the gross inequities I have just outlined. May I thank hon. members for permitting me to continue speaking a little longer.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is that the house discuss a matter of urgent national importance. Although the motion does not fall exactly with the confines of rule 26, we nevertheless welcome it.

I think it is very important at this time that we should discuss the question of underprivileged Canadians and a rational approach to solving the problem facing them. I believe that Canada is still in the midst of a welfare jungle. Many pension and welfare schemes exist and to find one's way through them requires a great deal of experience, time and knowledge of various pieces of welfare legislation on the statute books, rules and regulations and accepted standards of various kinds. The average person is completely lost in this maze of old age supplements, war veterans allowances, the Canada Pension Plan, disability pensions and other types of pension, many of which are related to other welfare programs.

Some pensions, like disability pensions for war veterans and war veterans allowances, are fixed. The maximum paid under them does not rise or fall in keeping with the cost of living. Usually they are set at the maximum. Others, like the old age pension which I will comment on in a moment, and the guaranteed income supplement, are permitted to keep pace with increases in the cost of living to the extent that they are increased by a maximum of 2 per cent each year. The Canada Pension Plan is tied to the cost of living to a degree. Although increases in these programs are tied to increases in the cost of living, they bear no relation to inflation.

Some pension programs are adjusted annually in accordance with the person's income and need. These pensions may not only be reduced but are subject to a retroactive reduction. I think some of the most tragic cases hon. members have come across have had to do with those whose allowance have been unwittingly overpaid. The cheques keep coming month after month and those receiving them think that if the government is sending them everything must be all right and therefore they spend the money. If at the end of the year when the social worker is conducting his interview he finds that the amount of income is greater than what was estimated at the first of the year and the person has been overpaid $200 or $300, the overpayment must be refunded. Not only is the current year's pension then reduced by $10 or $15 a month but the overpayment is recovered by monthly payments. It is very tragic when this happens. Unfortunately it seems to happen mostly to widows, mothers and others required to support someone. What I have just referred to, Mr. Speaker, is a welfare jungle with various schemes set up in different manners tied to different types of income needs or to the cost of living.

I see that the minister who was responsible for the Canada Assistance Plan is in the house today. At the time that plan was introduced a move was made with the co-operation of the provinces to cut back on these various welfare schemes and try to consolidate them. It was successful to some degree in that it consolidated three or four welfare programs into one. At the same time the old age pension supplement was introduced, which was a different type tied to the means of the person receiving it, and also the Canada Pension Plan which is a contributory plan. To that extent the whole system was not really improved.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) today promised a program to consider a rational and over-all approach to welfare. I presume there is a task force working on this problem. I must say that it is not something new. The people who are suffering most under the present delay in setting up some sort of rational approach are those on fixed pensions. They are the people most affected by inflation.

There must be a new concept in approaching welfare problems, first, to assist those who cannot help themselves and permit them to share in Canada's prosperity and second, to provide incentive for those in the labour force to support themselves. When the Canada Pension Plan and old age security were introduced on an escalating basis, the government set the figure of 2 per cent as the maximum by which a pension could increase in accordance with an increase in the cost of living. The situation as it now exists should have been foreseen at the time. We must realize that the 2 per cent figure is not really tied to the cost of living because the cost of living and wage index are many times higher than this figure.

We have today been given figures which show that the 2 per cent limit is unreal in the context of today's inflation. This limit must be removed in order to make old age pensions and the supplement more realistic. Why should the disadvantaged people of Canada be the ones to carry the burden of inflation which has not been kept under control? I suggest it would be fairly easy to amend the three separate provisions, the Old Age Security Act, the old age supplement, and the Canada Pension Plan.

The government has not been able to restrain the inflationary trends. I do not need to go any farther than what the minister himself pointed out today, namely, that the government grossly underestimated the increase in the cost of living. They have been absolutely unable to restrain it. The minister said that the 1966 figure of 2 per cent sounded fairly reasonable at that time because the increase in the cost of living before then had always been less than 2 per cent. We are well aware the increase in the cost of living has now almost doubled. This shows effectively that the minister and his colleagues have been unable to control inflation.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

There is another matter which I would like to discuss, Mr. Speaker, which relates to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I am glad he is in his seat at the moment. This motion gives me an opportunity to talk about the interplay of the public with government in the performance of its legislative duties. I want to mention a matter which I feel was grossly unfair to the person involved. I raise it because of the insistence of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) that his legislative items should be discussed with the people in order to have their views. He is of the opinion the government can act best when they know what the people want.

While legislation respecting welfare and pensions may be beneficial to some people, it is not to others. Those who feel that legislation and invasions into the private sector have harmed them should have the opportunity to raise the matter. Last week I asked a number of questions of the minister and of the Solicitor General (Mr. McIlraith) concerning an individual who went to the minister's office to raise some complaints about his livelihood in connection with his duties as life insurance underwriter. As the minister and the Solicitor General pointed out, this man had complained that some of the legislation that was being introduced, such as the Canada Pension Plan a couple of years ago and now federal medicare, were cutting into his livelihood as an underwriter, and he wanted to know from the minister what was going to be done to compensate him.

I do not want to go into the details if I can avoid it but I have statements from people involved. Very briefly, the fact is that this man went to the minister's office to raise a question about welfare legislation such as we are discussing today. He outlined his objections and shortly thereafter, in fact the same day, the R.C.M.P. were sent to interview him at his home. I do not want to reveal the man's name—not because the police will find out; they already know—but I do want to take this opportunity of protesting the haste with which the R.C.M.P. were sent to interview a person who had a dissent from the government. There have been other instances—

Mr. Munro: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I object to this type of blatant distortion regarding the way the government expresses its reaction to dissent. It is totally erroneous and totally contrary to the explanations given both to this house and to the public. We have had lots of dissent expressed with respect to our programs in the department. We expect it and many times we appreciate it. This man did dissent and did so many times. No one took exception. I would point out that the report was made as a result of a threat. Maybe the people in my office over-reacted to the threat which was made against me. The hon. member knows about this, and he should stop this type of thing.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I was listening very closely to the remarks of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka because I know of his interest and concern in this matter. I have some misgivings about this line of debate on this motion and I would invite him, with his knowledge of the rules, to try to confine his remarks to the particular motion before the house at the present time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I thought I had laid the groundwork for it. If I did not, then I failed. My contention is that this is strictly on the point we are now discussing, the question of welfare legislation. The public ought to have the right to dissent when legislation is being discussed, and I think that members of the public should not have to suffer the R.C.M.P. being sent to interview them when they have dissented. As I say, I have signed statements in my file. They may be different from what the minister has. The fact of the matter is that neither the minister nor I were in the office when this incident happened. I have one view of what the discussion was—

Mr. Munro: Why don't you table the documents then?

Mr. Aiken: —and the minister has another. I am merely saying that there was no justification for sending the police after this person. He did not make any threats against the minister at all, none at all—

Mr. Munro: How do you know?

Mr. Aiken: —and furthermore—

Mr. Munro: Were you there?

Mr. Aiken: —and furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Turner) had a one hour interview with this man last fall on the same subject. There was the same discussion in November. This man happens to be a constituent of the Minister of Justice. The Minister of Justice did not send the police after him.

Mr. Munro: Maybe he did not threaten the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Aiken: He did not threaten the Minister of National Health and Welfare either.

Mr. Munro: How do you know?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but, as I said before, I have grave doubts about this line of debate on this motion and I would invite the hon. member to revert to the subject matter before the house.

Mr. Aiken: All right, Mr. Speaker. I had merely hoped that the minister would make the gesture, and perhaps he will complete it, of stating that perhaps his office was a little hasty in this instance. That is all I want. Here you have a man who has suffered the indignity of a visit from the police, and his wife is very much concerned. I raised it only for this one point. The minister did say that perhaps his office over-reacted, and if he can accept that there was over-reaction then I will discontinue—

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order this time. Previously I raised a question of privilege, which apparently had no effect because the hon. member kept on with the same thing. But as a point of order, Mr. Speaker, what possible relevance has that man visiting my office got to the motion before us today? Does the hon. member have anything constructive to contribute toward how we can better present our programs in the old age pension field or not?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I think my position on this matter has been stated twice, and has been very clear. I invited the cooperation of the hon. member on this matter. I have expressed my grave misgivings about this line of debate on this motion. I know the hon. member is probably much more experienced in the rules than I am, and he knows the reasons that I have expressed this point of view. In any event, it is five o'clock and it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, there is no private members' hour today.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): This is the late show.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member's time has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Labour Conditions—alternative to compensate for cancelled winter works program; the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) Post Office Department—Referral of outstanding issues to mediation procedures; the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose)—Post Office Department—effect of casual employees on position of inside workers.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (4) (a)—SUGGESTIONS TO CORRECT ANOMALIES IN PAYMENT OF PENSIONS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, in this house we have had a number of motions quite similar to the one which is before us. As recently as Friday last a major debate took place on the Public Service Superannuation Act and a number of hon. members, myself included, expressed our views on what should be done to assist in the difficulties in which superannuated civil servants find themselves. The matter raised by the mover of this motion has frequently been debated on the late show and on other resolutions of his, and I must give him full credit for being absolutely persistent.

The business of the government of this country is not only to be concerned with aspects of social welfare and generally the distribution of the benefits of our affluent society, but also to be concerned with the broader problems of its responsibilities in other fields and priorities. This afternoon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) outlined what has been done. Hon. members on the other side, particularly in the party of the mover of the motion, referred to the 1919 resolution of the Liberal party. They usually do so with a little derision in their minds.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): No, no.

• (5:00 p.m.)

Mr. Francis: There is no question, however, that a long term program of social welfare benefits was unfolded with the vision of Mackenzie King, the prime mover of the motion. Over a period of years social welfare in Canada developed following this outline of priorities, although sometimes without as much haste as some of us would have liked to see. This has been a platform, however, which I think has been unique in terms of the length and breadth of its concept and implementation by the party which put it forward in its original form. Certainly at this stage when we are getting 10.4 per cent of the gross national product, the official estimate the minister placed on the record in 1967, in terms of welfare and security benefits we stand high among the states of the world in these priorities.

I am sure hon. members were quite impressed when the minister pointed out that in 1962-63 we were spending $3.9 billion in this field and within five years there had been a 57 per cent increase in total expenditures. In the five year period since the Liberal government came to office in 1963 we have seen the Canada Pension Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, the progressive reduction of age in respect of old age security from 70 to 66 this year and next year to 65, and we have seen the principle of escalation. We have seen a major program every year. There is no question but that we can confidently predict more to come.

Having said that, we come back to certain fundamental things which must be weighed. I listened to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Harding) who said the pension is not adequate and that a person cannot live on $109 a month even if this were the full supplement. We admit this is so. No one has ever defended the old age security program in terms of adequacy. What we are endeavouring to do, however, is to build certain features into the program which still leave room for other things that must be supplied. There is no question that what is adequate in some parts of Canada and for certain standards of living which have been developed is inadequate in other parts of the country. There is no question that there are regional disparities and that the approach on the basis of uniformity still leaves major problems in terms of selectivity. This was stated earlier in the debate.

[Mr. Francis.]

It is necessary that the priorities be considered in relation to other things. The standard of living of those who are retired in Canada will not depend purely and simply on how many dollars are channelled into their pockets via a pension program and cash benefit. It will also depend on things such as the housing program. The government has a major responsibility to look at housing in terms of its priorities. We have had the report of the task force and this is just the beginning of a national attack on the problem. We must also review our priorities in respect of medicare which is now coming into effect and which certainly will be a charge on the budget of this country as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury) are well aware.

In addition to these things we have our escalated commitments in aid to higher education. While we build priorities at one end of the scale we must always keep in mind that if we make a social investment in the labour force there will be more people contributing at the working levels. We must think also of the tremendous need for capital in respect of resource development and elimination of regional disparity in the depressed areas. Last but not least is the big question of a responsible fiscal policy.

I have had many differences before on this question with the hon. member who introduced this motion. I listened to him early in the session when he brought forward a motion during private members' hour to increase the pension payments to $125 a month and to have this paid immediately to everyone without regard to an income or needs test at the age of 65. I said then in arguing against his motion that this would be an inflationary move and that I could not accept his argument which he has put forward on many occasions to the effect that investment in this area somehow is generated in income and is not inflationary because there is an investment in the people of Canada.

Many times when I listened to the hon. member along this line I found it difficult to distinguish him from the people a little farther down on the other side of the house who seem to think that all that need happen is for the Bank of Canada to print a few more dollars. We cannot produce money effortlessly in the amounts required to meet the demands which are made upon the government. There is no magic formula by which the addition of another $400 million or $500 million to our welfare or pension bill would not have to be followed by a hard bite of taxes.

The government has a responsibility and the mover of the motion would, I think, wish us to pursue those fiscal and monetary policies which will halt the inflation. If we do not do that, there is no safe way by which we can build a policy of escalation into our pension program, do this or that, or spend more money in this or that direction. Responsible fiscal policy at this stage of the business cycle and resource development in Canada must have a high priority. This is the kind of thing the government must do.

This is not the kind of thing which easily wins elections but I hope we have got over this business of trying to outpromise each other at election time in respect of what we will do for our older people. A more cynical approach could hardly be built into a democratic society. We are saying now to our older people what we have said before, that is, that the record to a considerable extent speaks for itself. The record is that which the minister placed before us this afternoon. Every year not only in terms of concept, not only in terms of programs and not only in terms of proposals that go before this house, it is hard cash that is spent on pensions. The improvement has been there. The proportion of our national resources devoted to this sector has been consistently increasing over the period. The government has the over-all responsibility of balancing not only the claims of those who are retired, however just, however meritorious and however sympathetic we are to their claims—no one can say we are not—but also the priorities for the development of Canada and the policies that the treasury must pursue, however difficult they may be to apply, to restrain the inflation which has been so erosive and so destructive to those on fixed incomes.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I shall speak briefly. I think it would be unfair to utilize all the time available to me since this debate is of one day's duration I find myself applauding the initiative of the veteran, honourable, learned and compassionate member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). Other adjectives I shall leave to those who know him better. Since I have been here I have often found myself in general agreement with some of the policies of the New Democratic Party. However, many of their suggestions strike me as being utter or nearly utter nonsense. Quite often they come up with some very good ideas, although in the last few years they have struck me as becoming so conservative that a progressive like myself feels a little ill at ease in their intellectual company.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Does the hon. member realize that maybe because he is sitting so close to us he has absorbed more than he realizes?

Mr. Macquarrie: It is quite possible, Mr. Speaker, that the force of osmosis is stronger than the declining force of their philosophy. I just want to say that this is one of those subjects which should certainly transcend politics.

I am glad the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Francis) stayed only a short time with Mackenzie King. Many things could be said about Mackenzie King and his successors with regard to which we could find a lot of room for argument but which would do very little good for people on fixed incomes and with inadequate resources. I would only say to the hon. member for Ottawa West that inflation is very much in the minds of those who are supporting this suggestion. As I understand it, what the hon. member has in mind is that the chief victims of inflation are the people to whom we are turning our attention. It is not the case that in a moment of fiscal irresponsibility we are forgetting inflation, it is because there are sectors in our society which cannot forget inflation, those who are walled-in victims of inflation, those on fixed and inadequate incomes, that we are asking that something be done and done on a basis of priority.

The hon. member for Ottawa West referred to some of the plans; he mentioned the Canada Assistance Plan and other measures which have been introduced. He might also have mentioned the last report of the Economic Council of Canada which indicated the prevalence of poverty in this country. One would think sometimes from hearing public statements by public men that this is a country in which only affluence prevails. There are many people in this land with incomes below the poverty level. It is a terrible thing that people are walled and fenced in by incomes which were perhaps not even adequate in the days when they were set but have become painfully inadequate as the value of the dollar has deteriorated and the rate of inflation has progressed rapidly, almost beyond control. I think the eminently sensible suggestions which have been made in reference to the increase in pensions being tied absolutely to the cost of living rather than being fixed at a 2 per cent figure are so sound that they should not run into resistance intellectually, politically or of any other kind.

I should like to say also that I listened carefully to the thoughtful speech of the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), a man who came to this house as I did, in 1957. I should like it known that in my opinion he is one of the most conscientious, most thoughtful and most highly qualified members of this house, and it ill behooves anyone on the treasury benches or elsewhere to question his motives or the purpose of his interventions on behalf of the people whom he represents. If Cardinal Newman's definition of a gentleman, that he is never mean nor little in his disputes, can be applied to any man in this house, I would say it can be applied to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. I therefore listened with no great pleasure to the innuendo hurled across the floor by the minister, perhaps in a moment of self-defence. I trust that the minister, being a gentleman, will regret that he did so.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to speak on the notice of motion moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I shall not take too much of the time of the house but I have a few remarks to make which, I think, are very important if we want to keep in the eyes of the pensioners our reputation as a government which knows how to take its responsibilities.

I should like to refer in the first place to the people who receive the old age pensions, especially those who have helped build our country. If today we experience some success, it is due to a great degree to the role played by the Canadians who came before us and who made Canada a country where it is good to live.

We should recognize that these citizens have a strict right to the old age pension because they have had no reason to be satisfied with the way they have been treated in the last five or seven years when the cost of living skyrocketted. Everyone will agree that we cannot buy today with $1 what we could buy ten years ago with about 75 cents.

Pensioners too have to buy clothes, to provide for their accommodations and to buy medicine; in short, they too have a right to live.

[Mr. Macquarrie.]

I feel that we have somehow overlooked these people who cannot complain because they have no choice; indeed we never hear from them except for the odd letter they send now and then to their member.

If we want to be considered as a civilized people, we must recognize that we owe them a lot.

It is unfortunate that the government should have been unable in the last seven or eight years to control the cost of living index. If that situation cannot be controlled, why then can the government not pass a law, once and for all, to bring the income of our pensioners in line with the cost of living, so that the cheque they get every month will correspond automatically in value to what can be bought, that is to the cost of living index.

I noticed that the minister replied in a few words for which I congratulate him because he understands the problem. I know he will discuss it with his colleagues. This act should provide for an income that corresponds with the cost of living index, so that all Canadian citizens can live decently in this beautiful country we all love.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for South Western Nova.

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. You really caught me by surprise. I thought the hon. member would speak longer than he did. I wish to speak on this motion for the simple reason that it is of great interest to many of my constituents and many people across Canada. This debate centres around the subject we discussed last Friday.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and others have referred to many statistics to indicate the increased amounts paid to old age and other pensioners during the past five years. It is easy to refer to these figures. There is no doubt in anyone's mind that assistance has been increased in the past five years. It should also be remembered that even during the Tory years from 1957 to 1962 social assistance was increased. So hon. members can see that everybody is concerned about this question. I include the New Democratic Party since they have talked about it on many occasions. But the fact that we are concerned is no excuse for not increasing benefits further.

As I have said, it is easy to bring forward figures to show that an increase has taken place. This is true. It is also true that most pensions have in them an adjustment clause providing for a 2 per cent increase each year to cover the rise in the cost of living. But as has already been stated, the cost of living has risen over 4 per cent each year for the past two years, and there is no indication that this trend will not continue.

So what are we going to do about this problem? If we sit down for a minute, relax and think about it and what is happening to some people in this country, we must come to the conclusion that we should be doing something about it. For a number of years now it has been the same story; the poor are getting poorer and the rich are getting richer. I include the many pensioners in that statement. This fact applies not only to pensioners but to many honest, sincere and hard-working citizens. It includes many people in the low income groups who because of the rising cost of living are getting poorer every year. The cost of living rises faster than incomes.

I am not an economist and am not experienced in this field, but you do not need too much intelligence and experience to know that when your cheque is increased by $1 and it costs you $4 more to live there is a gap and you are being gypped somewhere. This is what is happening to our pensioners; this is what is happening to many of our good, sincere and hard-working citizens. We can stop it. Let us stop fooling ourselves in this regard. Let us stop this inflation. We can do it if we really want to, if enough people are concerned about it and want to do something to correct the situation.

We can all stand up and say that we want to do something about it, but it is not enough simply to stand up and tell those who elected us that we want to do something about it, if we do not do so. We can convince the government; there are enough members here to do that. So let us stop the rising cost of living, since it appears that we are unable to do anything about increasing the incomes of our low wage earners and pensioners. Let us stop this business of fooling people with their income cheques. Let us stop fooling the pensioners, the poor and low income groups.

Everybody talks about disparity. This word has been used many times in the past couple of years. Disparity was the main topic of the last election campaign. But I ask: Do we really mean it? Are we really sincere? Many people do not know what is going on. Why do those who govern this country not take a sabbatical leave and visit some parts of the country to see for themselves the difference in the standard of living. That there is disparity is a fact. We must do something about it. It is not good enough simply to talk about it. I am not talking only of the Atlantic area because there are some sections of northern Ontario, the northern parts of the prairie provinces and other parts of the country where disparity exists. So let us do something about it. Let us also do something to improve the situation of our pensioners because there is disparity in this field.

The fact is that disparity exists simply because the cost of living is relatively the same across the country. There is not too much difference across the country in the price of a can of beans or the price of meat or vegetables. But incomes are much lower in some parts of the country than others. We must do something at all levels of government to improve the situation. We must do something about our pensioners who, although they may receive increases in their pensions, find that the cost of living is rising much faster than their incomes.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a few comments in this debate regarding the pension program. I would like the house to consider that our pensioners are for the most part those older people who were the pioneers of this country. These are the people who in many cases have lived through two world wars, and some of them fought in both. These are the people who went through one of the greatest depressions this country has known. These are the people who have raised children, many of whom are now contributing a great deal to the economy and well-being of our country. Now, in the twilight years of their lives, in a period when they are no longer able to make any money, no longer able to keep up with the rising cost of living, no longer able to move into the affluent age, we as a society are either rejecting them or not giving them adequate consideration.

This country was built initially by the efforts of these people. It might be true to say that the contribution they made in the form of money was not as adequate as the contributions made in the machine age in which we live. But I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that these people supplied much of the capital base upon which you and I were able to build a better society and in which we are now able to obtain larger returns for ourselves.

In this connection I could refer to my own family but I do not think it would be correct to do so. However, I would like to refer to the agricultural industry of western Canada at the time when many of our pioneers moved into that part of the country. It was at that time raw land. Many of these people had no money when they went to the west. They broke the land by the sweat of their brow and the labour of their muscles and established small farms or businesses. But when they died or grew old they had not accumulated the large estates that people have in this day and age. They did not save too much money because of the small incomes earned in those days. But I know from my own experience and that of those around me that these people built something on which others could build further.

What reward are we giving them for their efforts? They endured hardships the like of which you and I never experienced. They suffered much and did without much so that they could put capital into the country. What reward do they get? A pension which is inadequate, which is grudgingly given. Today, in the twilight of their lives they are trying to get by under awkward conditions in many cases.

I should like to tell hon. members about something I saw one day this year in the City of Saskatoon. I remember an old lady living by herself in a small one-room apartment. She was not well. Her clothes were hung on the back of the door. All she had to live on was her pension. I ask hon. members: would you want to live like this? Would you want your own parents to live under such conditions? My own wish, and I am sure it is shared by others here, is that these people should receive pensions sufficient to enable them to live in dignity and decency for the rest of their lives. I suggest we have enough wealth in Canada today to enable us to look after these people properly.

I could become quite indignant about the situation in which some people find themselves in the absence of adequate incomes. I am thinking of people who for one reason or another are unable to make it, often people with no family to care about them, in a country which does not care enough. I believe we should do something in a constructive fashion to see that at least in a financial sense these people are adequately rewarded. We should recognize the effort they have put into the country in times past by doing our best to ensure that the pensions they receive are adequate to meet the cost of living.

Mr. Barney Danson (York-North): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention to speak in this debate but I was moved by the remarks of the two previous speakers, and perhaps with good reason. The hon. member for South Western Nova (Mr. Comeau) mentioned that those who run this country, the people from Upper Canada, should see the rest of the country. I was tempted to rise there and then on a question of privilege, but I did not.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you?

Mr. Danson: First, because so far I am not running the country. But I do think it is unfortunate to suggest that people who come from what was once called Upper Canada are not concerned. Indeed, I think it is unfortunate that people who come from central Canada should be referred to, today, as Upper Canadians, unless they went to a particular school.

I have lived in Newfoundland, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Quebec and British Columbia as well as Ontario.

An hon. Member: Why did you leave British Columbia?

Mr. Danson: I have asked myself that question. It is a most beautiful part of the country. I almost went back there after the war, but things did not pan out. I always enjoy visiting there. We should make it our business to travel. It is true disparities exist. They are not pleasant for anyone to face. But I must say I also have a letter here from the Chairman of the Corporation of Metropolitan Toronto who said we were not doing enough for our own area. Of course, he was not suggesting for a moment that we should not do things for other areas. We all benefit by this. If the people of Nova Scotia or of New Brunswick are not prosperous, then neither are we in Upper Canada. Not only are they our market but they are our people and our brothers. We, as Canadians, have a great interest in seeing that prosperity spreads across the country. I agree the answers are not easy. The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. Thomson) mentioned the contribution the older people have made to the development of this country. This concerns me, because as I go through an election campaign or, indeed, through my own riding, I hear people say: Our taxes are too high; what are you doing for us now? In my view, the maturity of a society can be judged to a large extent by the way in which it looks after its older people. In my sense of priorities in this job I put the older people, combined with those others who cannot look after themselves, at the top of the totem pole because of the contribution some of them have made to the development of this country.

I take this attitude having in mind all they have done for this country, as the hon. member who has just spoken so eloquently reminded us, and because we are not bound to do these things. There is nothing in it for us. I think we reflect honour upon ourselves and upon our country if we forget considerations of our own advantage and take measures to look after those who have contributed to the building up of this country but who can do so little for themselves. Only we can help them.

My second priority is youth. This, I suppose, amounts to selfishness because we always try to manifest our best aspirations through our children. We try to give them the best possible education and the best standard of living we can. As for those of us who have reached, so to speak, a menopausal state—

Some hon. Members: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Danson: —we have our problems in the shape of high taxes, the high cost of living, inflation. These are with us and they will not go away. However, from generation to generation difficulties of one kind or another have always existed. We solve some of them, but not all of them, and as some are disposed of, new ones arise.

The young generation criticizes us for making mistakes, and indeed we have made a great many. The new generation will make mistakes, too. But we can only roll with the times as we see them and do our best. If we are doing less than our best, we ought to be criticized. As far as improving the lot of senior citizens is concerned, people are always willing to do this as long as they are not called upon personally to meet increased taxation. The approach commonly taken is to say: Let us see greater efficiency in Ottawa; let us try to same money and cut down expenditures. I could not agree more. However, in my brief experience of examining estimates for visiting departments, I have found the degree of efficiency or inefficiency is comparable with that to be found in most large corporations. Some departments are more efficient than others. This is the case in large corporations, too. There is always room for improvement, but I suggest the main savings to be made, if they are to be made, lie in the field of government programs—things we are doing and which we ought not to be doing, or things we are failing to do but which we should be doing.

I wish it were possible to save enough money to meet all our urgent needs without recourse to further taxation. Then, as I go home at weekends and as I pass the liquor stores with their line-ups, I am absolutely amazed. It is as though it were Christmas. This is in an area where people are making good incomes and complaining about high taxes. Our problems are the problems of prosperity. We have too much going for us in this country to be "snowed" by talk of great inefficiences, that we cannot afford to do this or we cannot afford to do that. We should be ashamed if we cannot do those human things in a civilized society that should be done; and we must help those who cannot help themselves.

This is what we are talking about today. We must look seriously at the problems we face and the problems other people have. I have mentioned before decisions that are made, such as whether to get a colour television set or an extra one for the bedroom; whether to get an extra car or a Ski-doo, or whether to have a Ski-doo for him and a Ski-doo for her. Although these decisions do not confront everybody, they do confront those who pay taxes. It is very easy for me to speak in this way because I do not have a pat solution. But we must face this situation honestly, and not take it out of the hides of older people who cannot defend themselves.

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, I am happy indeed to associate myself with the motion and to state unequivocally that I am wholeheartedly behind it. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) is to be congratulated for introducing this motion before the house.

I did intend to speak in this debate though I thought I would make my appearance after the supper adjournment. However, I must say I am considerably surprised to note that so far in this debate, in addition to the minister himself, only two members on the government side of the house have seen fit to stand up and support this worth-while motion. The hon. member for York North (Mr. Danson), who has just resumed his seat, is also apparently, at least to a degree, in favour of the principle behind the motion. We on this side of the house hope he will go to his caucus and try to convince the members who sit on the government side of the house that they should do something about this very serious and pressing problem.

I refer, of course, to the problem facing many of our senior citizens today, many of whom are trying to exist on an old age security pension that is very much less than sufficient to allow them to maintain a reasonable standard of living. I agree with the members who have advocated that our old age pensions should not be tied to the cost of living, though this is not necessarily the criterion by which the pension should be judged. I take very serious exception to the fact that our old age pensioners who are in receipt, perhaps, of $108, $106 or $105 a month, with wives who receive the same, are classed for income tax purposes as single people.

For example, supposing these pensioners have no income other than their pension. In many cases they fall into a category that puts their income over $1,500, and consequently they have to file an income tax return as a single person. This is a real hardship because in many cases such people have very little income in excess of their pension. There may be a little interest coming in that brings their taxable earnings above the $1,500 ceiling, and this makes them liable for payment of tax.

I suggest that some relief should be given to such a couple. A regulation could be passed under which the old age pension received would not be counted as taxable income unless the over-all income exceeded a certain amount. I can assure the house, though I do not think the house needs any assurance, that in many cases this works a very definite hardship on our old age security recipients.

I am happy to say that the government in my province realized the $75 basic pension was not enough. As a result the Conservative government of Prince Edward Island, and let it be said to their credit, the Liberal government that followed them, passed an order in council which guaranteed old age pensioners above the age of 68 a basic old age pension of $100 a month. For example, if a pensioner's regular old age security pension plus the supplement amounted, say, to only $78, the province pays the additional $22. No person, therefore over the age of 68 resident in my province will receive a pension of less than $100 a month.

Even that is not sufficient. We all know how the cost of living has increased during the last few years. We know how much it has increased since the basic amount of $75 a month was fixed by the government. Surely, the government should take some notice of this and grant relief to people who, in many cases, are struggling very hard but are not able to make ends meet on the $107 or $108 a month they are now receiving.

I also suggest that, while we are on this subject of taxation, some consideration should be given by the government immediately to revising the archaic and outmoded exemptions allowed taxpayers. The amount of $1,000 exemption for a single man today is absolutely ridiculous, as is the exemption of $2,000 for a married couple. These were the exemptions in 1919. We all know how much the dollar is worth today compared with what it was worth in 1919. We all know how much more it costs to raise and educate a family today compared to 1919. As I say, these exemptions are outdated and outmoded. In all fairness to the people of Canada, the government should give some consideration to increasing them.

I realize it will probably mean a loss of revenue if these exemptions are raised, but I suggest to the government that this loss of revenue could very well be overcome by eliminating waste and extravagance in many departments of government. This is where a great deal of our taxpayers' money today is swallowed up. Government departments are not properly supervising the spending of money. On all sides you can see waste of government money.

I am happy to go along with the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that some consideration must be given to those in receipt of war veterans allowance. They are very definitely worthy of consideration. I think it is high time that something was done to correct the situation. Our pensioners are trying to get along with inadequate incomes. It is absolutely unfair to our war veterans, who have served their country well, that we confine them to receiving small pensions. Often our veterans have to fight with the authorities to receive even the pitiful war veterans allowances that are granted. I submit that something should be done at once to correct this situation. For many years our veterans have not been getting a square deal from the government, and any government correcting the present inequitable situation will do well. The people of Canada will approve its action. I, therefore, hope that the motion before the house will receive favourable consideration by the government.

Let us not make this day's debate another exercise in futility. Much in this motion is very worth while. I trust that the government will not consider that what has been said has been said as a matter of course, just because the New Democratic Party has been assigned an opposition day. I hope the government will listen to what the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had to say and to what others following him said. I know he is sincere in presenting his motion before the house. He has presented it in the hope that other hon. members will join him in convincing the government that something should be done to correct the injustices from which our pensioners and old people in this country suffer. I, therefore, implore government backbenchers to try to persuade those sitting on the treasury benches, who control our purse strings, to do something to correct the injustice being perpetrated against our senior citizens, war veterans, retired civil servants and other pensioners. It is very difficult for these people to live at the standard to which they are entitled. All Canadians are entitled to live at a high standard. Surely, a country as rich as Canada, with an abundance of natural resources can give its pensioners and old people a better break than they are now receiving. I earnestly recommend this motion to the government and hope that steps will be taken without further delay to correct the inequitable situation facing our pensioners and old people.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for bringing before the house this important issue affecting most people in Canada. For many years he has been the champion of our older people and has fought for increased pensions. Although I am young, I am concerned about many inequities I have seen across the country. Injustices have been perpetrated against our people regardless of race, religion or age.

It seems clear, if we examine our society, that as a group, older people have been discriminated against more than any other sector. Although we may talk about equality of opportunity for all, the dignity of life and the contributions of all people to our society, I feel terrible when I see what is happening to our older people. Not only are our older people discriminated against economically, but some suffer loss of social dignity and loss of pride. That is disgraceful. I could cite many examples where senior citizens in the constituency of Yorkton-Melville are barely keeping alive on $100 a month. They live in houses not fit for human habitation and try to pay medical and drug bills. Yet, these are the people who built Canada. I do not say we should pay them a whole series of extra benefits and extra rewards; I am merely saying that they should be treated as all the rest of us are treated. They should get the opportunities the rest of us receive in Canada. Many of our older people are not getting that kind of deal and, as Members of Parliament, it is up to us to make sure that our older people live on a decent standard.

In my riding of Yorkton-Melville, for example, a number of railway employees are talking about the raw deal the C.N.R. has given them in connection with pensions. Statistics show that nearly 400 retired C.N.R. employees are receiving pensions of less than $25 a month; 2,250 other employees are receiving pensions of $25 a month and over 8,000 C.N.R. employees are receiving pensions of less than $80 a month.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The time being six o'clock, this sitting stands adjourned, until eight o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

MISCELLANEOUS ESTIMATES

Mr. Fernand-E. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, would the house allow me to revert to motions, in order to present the fifth report of the standing committee on miscellaneous estimates?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree to revert to motions?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the fifth report of the standing committee on miscellaneous estimates both in French and English.

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (4) (a)—SUGGESTIONS TO CORRECT ALLEGED ANOMALIES IN PAYMENT OF PENSIONS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).

Mr. Nystrom: Before the supper hour, Mr. Speaker, I was able to begin my remarks on the motion by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). At that time I said there were one or two underlying principles that should be mentioned and this is why I rise to participate in this debate. As a young person, I said I was not only concerned with problems relating to my own generation, minorities and depressed peoples in various parts of the world. I am concerned with the problems of the powerless and under privileged minorities, as well as with problems of groups in our own society in Canada and indeed around the world.

I sincerely believe it is a right for our senior citizens to have a decent standard of living. It is a social responsibility and obligation of members of parliament to ensure that the elderly people of our country have a decent standard of living. They should not suffer from the financial barriers apparent in today's society. The treatment of many pensioners in Canada is degrading and at times inhuman. This should not happen in our affluent society.

Before the dinner hour I began to quote statistics relating to problems brought to my attention by my constituents, in particular employees of the C.N.R. in Melville. I stated nearly 400 people receive pensions of below $25 a month from the C.N.R. Just to reiterate, 2,250 receive a pension of $25 a month and over 8,000 receive pensions of less than $80 a month. I do not blame these people for being upset and not wanting to tolerate this injustice to former employees of the C.N.R. Why do members of this house who are responsible for the actions of the C.N.R. allow this situation to rest on their consciences? It is not only employees and ex-employees in the city of Melville who are unhappy about these pensions.

Every year the interest on the C.N.R. pension fund is greater than the total amount of money paid by way of pensions. This is ludicrous. It is no wonder C.N.R. employees are asking for more pension benefits. They deserve them. I agree with the retired railroad workers. It is typical of the society we live in that there are many contradictions. We all know that the railway companies have been subsidized for many years by the government to the tune of many millions of dollars. At the same time, many people who have worked in building these railways must live on incomes at the subsistence or poverty level. We keep them poor.

There are many more contradictions in our society. United States automobile manufacturers, mining companies and huge corporations are subsidized by the government of Canada. Yet 20 per cent of our population live on incomes of $3,000 a year, 40 per cent with $4,000 a year or less. Is this the kind of justice we want in our society? Basically, Mr. Speaker, this can be summed up as socialism for the rich and dog eat dog free enterprise for the poor. This is the situation of many railway workers in this country.

While travelling to speak at a conference in the city of Brandon, I read in a newspaper an article concerning a man who made several millions of dollars last year, tax free, because of the many loopholes in our tax system relating to capital gains and foreign investment. His chauffeur, who is paid a salary of $300 or $400 a month, had to pay income tax. This is one of the many contradictions in our modern society. Members of parliament must do something to change this system. Something must be done to stop the subsidizing of corporations and to help the people who work for these companies. The attitude of some people can be summed up by quoting the remarks of a Liberal M.L.A. in the legislature of Saskatchewan. When talking recently about tough and damp grain, he stated "Farmers who have considerable quantities of damp wheat are stupid". This is the attitude of too many parliamentarians across Canada.

It is ironic that we can send men to the moon to explore outer space but we cannot give our elderly people $125 or $150 to live on each and every month. It seems very odd that we can send men around the moon but cannot even sell wheat. It seems odd that we can reach out in outer space and cannot reach out to the feelings of other people with human dignity and pride. This is the kind of society in which we live. I maintain we must change this type of society entirely and the older people of this country are victims of one facet of that society. We must change the institutions of this society. Institutions are only man made and we, as members of parliament, must change them. There are very few of us who can do it by ourselves or who can change history ourselves. We have had, for example, a few people like Martin Luther, Karl Marx, Thomas Jefferson and even Christopher Columbus, when he discovered a new world, who have changed history. But this does not happen very often and will not happen to any people in this chamber. The history of our times will be written by what each and every one of us does as individuals in his or her own community.

I plead with you, Mr. Speaker, to make parliament more supreme as a law making body here in Canada. I think if we do not do this we will have nobody to blame but ourselves. If people become more and more restless and if people like the old age pensioners in this country do not get more money we will have nobody to blame but ourselves. If people start protesting we should not ask why. Let us start reflecting upon ourselves and this institution.

I think at this time, before going on, I should like to read a couple of quotations by some gentlemen who I think people here will consider speak the gospel. First, I should like to quote the Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, when speaking at Queen's University on January 31 this year. He said:

> Not dissenters, but those who would diminish or deny the right to dissent are really the dangerous revolutionaries. By damming the avenues of peaceful and evolutionary change, they make violent change inevitable.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleading that we make some basic changes today. The former president of the United States, John F. Kennedy, said:

> Those who make peaceful revolution impossible will make violent revolution inevitable.

So, therefore, I think it is our duty as members of parliament to ask that many things be changed and indeed make changes in a lot of the things in our society. This is why I stand up today in an effort to fight for the old age pensioners of Canada and the old age pensioners in the constituency of Yorkton-Melville. I think all of us know there is a minimum of at least one and a quarter million old age pensioners here in Canada. Many of these people are not living on a decent standard. Many of them are in poverty or are living at a mere subsistence level. I should like to quote a couple of paragraphs from The Elder Statesman of November, 1968. The article is entitled "Senior Citizens 'The Victims of Inflation'". It reads:

> Senior citizens have long been the victims of inflation.
> The post-war (World War II) price spiral has gone up and up, without let-up.
> As wages and prices expand pensioner incomes shrink. The small monthly cheques they receive buy less and less.
> Wages and prices shoot upward each year. Until now pensions have been fixed, with only slight increases granted at rare intervals. These pitifully small increases to pitifully small pensions, have tended to be "too little," and often, "too late."

Later, in the same article one reads:

> It is obvious that the gap between wage income and pension income will continue to widen. It is equally obvious that with a small increase in income, and a big increase in prices, and cost of living each year, pensioners are dropping to lower depths into the pit of poverty.

I think it is a crime in a country like ours that many of our pensioners are among the poorest in the poor wage brackets. I think it is a crime to give these people rewards of poverty and subsistence. Often the type of pensions we give these people are hand-outs, like welfare. To many of these people, this is very humiliating. This must be drastically changed. For example, many of the old age pensioners who receive $110 a month have many expenses. They have the expenses of housing, and all that goes with it. They have to pay for fuel, electricity and telephone as well as the maintenance of the house. They have to pay health costs. In Saskatchewan, old people are more fortunate because there is a comprehensive medical care plan in that province. But they still have to pay for their drugs and many of the old people have high expenses in respect of drugs. They have to pay for clothing, for food and for many of the other incidental expenses involved in everyday living. This is unjust.

I think in every city, small town and community in Canada, all of us know many examples of people living in poverty who are almost starving. I remember during the election campaign, when I was knocking on doors in a small community, while going down a street I saw an old shack which I thought was abandoned. I was about to walk by until I saw smoke coming from the chimney. I walked on, and there was an old man 80 years old standing in the doorway. He was dirty. It was a one room shack and the place was dark. He did not have electricity but used coal oil and gas lamps to light his house.

He used wood for fuel and told me the place was unbearably cold in the winter. He said he had hardly enough to eat. I believe all of us find similar examples in Canada. Often, we have these contradictions, but we try to justify a lot of corporate expenditures and enterprises in Canada which at times do not seem to have a social conscience. We do not seem to recognize the poverty which exists in our country today.

We have technology; we have the computer, and yet people are living in poverty. Our old age pensioners are not given dignity in this country. Life keeps moving on faster and faster and the old people keep getting further and further behind. We could change this if we would provide an entirely new system. We can increase the pride among members of society and can increase the quality of life. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), when speaking this afternoon, outlined in detail some new approaches that should be taken with regard to the older people of our country. He talked about the automatic escalation clause by which the old age pension would be adjusted frequently according to wages and income in this country. He suggested that it is not enough to adjust pensions according to the cost of living. Many of these things I think should be done. I think it is possible to have a cyclical pension review, for example, similar to what was done with the civil service salaries a few years ago. We should have automatic and regular adjustments and readjustments of pensions in Canada according to the cost of living, according to wages and according to the gross national product.

I think we should get rid of the means test because in many instances this is not only degrading but is humiliating for many people. We cannot always sacrifice human values for efficiency. For what is efficient is not always necessarily effective in promoting human comfort and human understanding. Thirdly, I believe the old age pension in this country should be raised at least to a minimum of $125 and hopefully $150. I think we are an affluent enough society that we should be able to provide this here and now. We should have done this years ago. This is a right; it is not a hand-out which we should be giving to the older people. I hope we start recognizing some of these human values in our society. I, as an individual, am grateful to the older people of our country. They have laid a good deal of the foundation for our society. I think we should expand and build upon that foundation. We should give them the courtesy of a decent standard of living. We can and must do at least that much.

In conclusion, I should like to say that if we do not do some of these things here and now, if parliament and the government do not do some of these things, to give these people a decent break, direct action will have to be taken not only by the senior citizens but also by the other groups which are interested in promoting their welfare. I should like to ask the trade unions, for example, to help mobilize public opinion in favour of the older people. I would like young people's organizations in general to join in this type of crusade. The senior citizens themselves should organize and exert pressure on the government to recognize their needs. The government, then, will not only have to listen to them but will have to act. They will have to be doers. If we can mobilize public opinion in this way, the government will become sensitive and will have to do something.

I will stand with them, Mr. Speaker, and I will fight with them under the circumstances which prevail. I will do my utmost to obtain for them a standard of living which everyone in this country should enjoy.

In conclusion, let me say once again that I appeal to the government to re-assess its whole philosophy and outlook in respect of these people in this country. Let us look at the whole society and the outlook of these people who are underprivileged, and I have in mind particularly the old people, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, it is most unfortunate I did not have the opportunity to listen to all the speeches made this afternoon. I feel that I should have had that opportunity, but it was my own fault I had to be in another place. I should have had the opportunity to listen to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I know he would have had a great deal to offer to a debate such as this. The only hon. member I heard was the hon. member who spoke last, and I want to say to that young man that I appreciate his ideas greatly. He is the same as the rest of us in this house, no matter to what party we belong. As a matter of fact, all of us hope that there could be a heaven on this earth. All of us hope that we might see, recognize and include not only all the old, the mothers, fathers, and grandparents but also the disabled, the blind, those, people who unfortunately are on mothers' allowances, old age assistance and those who live in the circumstances of poverty which the hon. member described.

I want to say, since I have heard from other hon. members of parliament, that regardless of what party they belong to I am sure they recognize the fact that all is not heaven in this Canada of ours. We would like to make it that way. We have been told in the Bible that heaven is in another place. All we can hope is to do our best to attempt to remove this poverty and give these older citizens of Canada, as well as those other people who have been neglected the better things of life in this country.

Let me say this. Everyone knows there are many of our elder citizens in Canada who deserve much more. Every member in this house knows that the reason you and I are here is that our fathers, mothers, grandfathers and grandmothers wanted us here; this is self-evident. We know perfectly well we want them to have the very best things in life.

The one thing I did not hear my hon. friend speak about a few minutes ago when he made his very fine speech was this. He did not say where the happy medium was. The only thing he said was, they are not at this moment getting enough. He did not say whether they should get $500 a month, and that is what I would like to know. I have a father and a mother, Mr. Speaker. Some of us have parents living and some of us have not. I have a father and a mother who are now receiving the old age pension. As a matter of fact, I have a mother-in-law and a father-in-law who are on the old pension as well. Anybody in a position such as this would want them to get all the money they possibly can to enjoy this better way of life; to enjoy some of the benefits of this just society that we hear about in Canada.

Som hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: I should like to know whether the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre suggests that $500 per month is enough. If the present government gave these people $500 per month would the hon. member stand up and say that is good enough or would he want $600? I know these people well enough. If you gave them $1,000 they would want $2,000. Where are we going to get the money? I did not have the opportunity to hear my learned friend this afternoon, but I would like to hear a man who has been in these halls for as long as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre tell us where we are going to get this money. I listened very attentively to the last hon. member speak, but he did not give us any indication of where this money would come from. What we have to remember is that there is great poverty, and in too many instances the citizens in Canada who receive the old age pension are living in poverty. There are many younger people who are paying taxes in order that these old age pensioners can receive their pensions.

There is a great amount of work being done in order that people may pay taxes to provide pensions for our grandmothers and grandfathers. I say to you, as small as it may be, we are providing a livelihood for these people in Canada. Where does this money come from? Where is the amount we pay these people equalled? I listened to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre very carefully, and I have done a lot of reading in my life about the socialistic island of England. I should like to know whether people are better off there than they are in this country. I suggest that country gives no more than about the equivalent of $10 per month to their elderly citizens.

An hon. Member: What about Sweden?

Mr. Whicher: I notice there is some mention about veterans' allowances. What is the comparison between what our veterans get and what veterans get under social security in England? We must remember that there is a sea of socialism in that area. I doubt whether the hon. member brought this to the attention of the house this afternoon, because those veterans in England receive very little in comparison to what our veterans here receive. I say on behalf of the Minister of Veterans' Affairs (Mr. Dubé) that hon. members of the house here tonight should be proud of the way we are treating our veterans here in Canada.

Of course we could do better, Mr. Speaker. Instead of taking 52 per cent from our corporations which we do today, perhaps we should take 75 per cent. Instead of taking 90 per cent from people who are making a lot of money in Canada, let's take 100 per cent. In this way, we could drive them away from Canada, just as we have done in the past. We have done so to a greater extent than any country in the world.

Some hon. members suggest that the country to the south of us is the greatest and the wealthiest country in the world. Let me say to my hon. friends, as members of this House of Commons that we want to help our senior citizens, people on war veterans' allowances, people on disability pensions and others. Let us compare what we are doing with what is being done in that wealthy society to the south of us.

What they have in the United States is similar to the Canada Pension Plan. They have not got an old age security plan. There are many of us on this side of the house who have a great deal of respect for the former Prime Minister of Canada who could criticize those people to the south a little bit. At the same time we have an obligation to initiate something on our own behalf and some years ago the Canada Pension Plan was started. This plan was adopted by corporations and small businesses which put certain sums of money into the government fund. This is what we call a social security tax. This remains unknown in the United States today.

Through the old age pension plan, we are trying to come up with a satisfactory social measure. This is a situation which has been considered ever since this plan was negotiated. This is a plan which the people in this House of Commons can appreciate, and one of which the members on this side are proud, as they have been ever since this government came into power. Hon. members in other parties may be dissatisfied. They are inclined to say that if old age pensioners can get $150 per month they should get $175; if they can get $110 they should get $125, and if they can get overall benefits to the extent of $500 they should get $1,000. These hon. members say this because they know they will never be called upon to find the money to pay these pensions.

I hope the hon. gentleman who initiated this resolution will live for another hundred years, because he will find that the government will never have the power to initiate the policies that he wishes inaugurated according to his resolution.

All of us wish to change this society of ours. All of us want to make it better. But where would we like to live? Would we like to live in Hungary, Cuba, Russia, Israel, Germany, or France; or would we prefer to live in Canada? Everyone in this country, regardless of the party to which he is affiliated, is proud of this country. Everyone is trying to improve the conditions under which we live, even those of us who sit on this side of the house.

[Mr. Whicher.]

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member a question. I listened last week for half an hour, and again today for 15 or 20 minutes, to the problems facing our Canadian nation. The hon. member has told us that in the whole area of social development we do not have any problems. I ask: Do we have any problems in Canada? The hon. member has said that we have no problems. I believe we have some problems, and I should like the hon. member to deal with them.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I did not have the opportunity of the hon. member for an education. I came from a very poor family. I have listened to a university professor with great intelligence, and I hope that my answer to his question will be more intelligent than the question which he asked. We have problems, and I, as one of the members of my party, agree that we have problems.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You are one of them.

Mr. Whicher: I imagine that I am one of them; I am one of the problems in my party. You are no problem to your party. We accept the fact that we have many problems in Canada. Of course, we have. However, since I was elected to this House of Commons last September I have been listening to questions about these problems and I believe that the answer—

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that I am getting a little confused in this regard. My question is this. A great many people in the forestry industry—and my question is specifically on the forestry industry—believe they have been discriminated against and have no rights in this respect. I have received letters in this regard. The hon. member has indicated that there are no problems in this area. I ask him whether in fact there is a problem in this area, or whether we do not have a problem at all. Is the hon. member saying that in Canada we do not have such a problem?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I would like to ask the hon. member how many questions he has which he would like answered.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the question is obvious. The constituents of the hon. member are asking questions of a learned man. If they were asked of me, I would be able to solve them.

Mr. Lundrigan: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.—

An hon. Member: You are just getting worse.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has alluded to the fact that the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate has not had an education. I cannot deal with the question of whether or not the hon. member for Bruce has an education; that is his problem.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) on a question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) be willing to answer a question at this time?

Mr. Whicher: I would, with pleasure.

Mr. Nystrom: The hon. member said we did not have any sources for obtaining revenue such as this. Would the hon. member be in favour of a capital gains tax to raise money to improve the plight of our old age pensioners?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, this is a very sensible question. I would be very much in favour of having a capital gains tax in Canada.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we could come down to earth for a moment. I rise to speak on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and do so with sincere regard for all senior citizens. But at this time, I wish to speak specifically with regard to war veterans allowances and pensions. The War Veterans Allowances Act was first introduced in 1930, and in the 39 years of its existence it is my opinion that not enough consideration has been directed to the veteran, especially that veteran who is of advanced years and has no means of coping with the progressive increase of costs with regard to his material needs.

The hon. member pointed out very forcibly the need for reconciling the progressively increasing cost of living in comparison with wages and other areas of productivity in the country, but for some reason or other we seem to forget the aged veteran who is partially disabled and, more important, those aged war veterans who are totally disabled.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

For the six months that I have been here in parliament I have read, repeated comments by the Prime Minister of the country (Mr. Trudeau) and members of the cabinet about their dedication to equal opportunity for all Canadians regardless of race, creed or colour; but I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that they should add the words "regardless of their condition and capability".

I refer again to the war veteran who, through devotion in war service, is partially or completely incapacitated and cannot earn any type of income. The War Veterans Allowance Act was amended in 1952, again in 1955, in 1957-58, and again in 1960 and 1961, but it has failed to protect the Veteran from the obvious runaway rate of increase in the cost of living.

I am sure that all members of both sides of the house are sympathetic toward the needs of the war veteran and agree that the government should give immediate consideration to the introduction of legislation to improve the position of all senior citizens. I am sure, too, that all hon. members who are war veterans themselves have every sympathy toward the plight of the particular veteran in advanced years. If anyone who does not attend the parliamentary committee on veterans affairs would care to visit that committee some time, he would find this is one group of parliamentarians who have one aim in mind, regardless of partisan politics, and that is to improve the plight of all war veterans. They take this attitude with regard to loans under the Veterans Land Act and all legislation having to do with those who served during Canada's involvement in past conflicts.

So I say with all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, what are we waiting for? The Woods' report of the committee to survey the work and organization of the Canada Pension Commission has been ready for months. The committee has received submissions, carefully prepared, from every veterans organization in Canada. The Royal Canadian Legion has prepared comprehensive comments on the report. The Hong Kong Veterans Association of Canada has presented a brief pertaining to the recommendations of the Woods' report. We have a joint statement by the National Veterans Organizations of Canada and a submission by the National Council of Veterans Associations of Canada. What are we waiting for?

What are we waiting for? Let us get the white paper completed and tabled so we can set to work for this important group of citizens of Canada who, because of age or infirmity, are no longer able to make their way in the employment field.

I feel I should pay a tribute to the members of the war veterans allowance board for their comprehensive report setting out the activities of the war veterans allowance program. It is interesting to note—and I mention this so that we may be made more aware of our responsibilities in this direction—that the average age of recipients of war veterans allowance who saw service in the first world war is now 75, and that the average age of those who served in the second world war is 59 years. Some hon. members may be surprised to learn that there are widows of veterans of the 1885 war still to care for, or that 182 veterans of the South African war and 415 widows of men who fought in that war are still receiving allowances. I thought these figures might impress those whose responsibility it is to care for these Canadians.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I compliment the board on its work over the years and trust they will continue their sympathetic consideration of the cases of all veterans who apply for allowances, and that generosity will be shown when deciding the amount which veterans in receipt of allowances are permitted to earn. I repeat my expression of concern about the need to improve the position of all senior citizens in our country and on behalf of all opposition members who have similarly expressed concern in the course of the day's debate, I plead for action on the part of ministers who have the power to deal with this situation. Let them do so without further delay

Mr. McIntosh: May I ask a question? My question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) through you, Mr. Speaker. I would ask Your Honour to consider that the minister has been sitting here all afternoon and this evening. In view of this, perhaps you would allow him sufficient time, before ten o'clock, in which to speak. I imagine he has a statement to make with regard to war veterans allowances, a statement which is long past due. Would Your Honour give him time to speak before ten o'clock?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) for having paved the way for my speech. In fact, I wanted to say only a few words when he asked me to participate in this debate.

I have been in the house since the discussion started on the notice of motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and I was waiting to speak until a member of the opposition dealt with the subject I am particularly concerned with, namely veterans affairs.

Mr. Speaker, on February 17 last, in the course of a debate started by a member of the New Democratic party, the hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) on the adjournment motion, I was saying that several war veterans are already in receipt of a guaranteed annual income, as is proposed by his colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. Of course this guarantee is a result of the application of the War Veterans' Allowance Act which, as all hon. members know, has been in force since 1930.

Of course, as I was saying, most war veterans, fortunately, are integrated in the Canadian labour force and they can look after themselves. We are happy and proud to see that a great number of war veterans are very successful and that some of them have achieved a very high status on their own initiative.

However, in this field as in others, not all war veterans have been fortunate and healthy enough to become successful. Therefore, it is the government's responsibility to help them obtain promotions, to succeed and to survive, in some instances.

In fact, since 1930, more than 300,000 war veterans have benefitted from this legislation. Mr. Speaker, I should now point out that this legislation does not apply to all war veterans. It provides only for those who need financial assistance, in the first place, as it would be quite useless for the government to assist those who are getting along very well already. Furthermore, the law applies only to those who fought on an actual theatre of war and to those already in receipt of a disability pension or who served during both world wars.

Other limitations concerning the age of applicants are included in the law. In fact, only those having reached the age of 60 are entitled to an allowance or those under 60 suffering from a physical disability. For those war veterans of the opposite sex—the fair sex, evidently—allowances can be paid to those aged 55.

At the present time, some war veterans are entitled to an allowance which, in addition to their income from other sources, guarantees a maximum annual income of $1,740 to those who are single and of $2,940 to those who are married. War veterans not in receipt of a personal income are entitled to an allowance of $105 monthly in the case of single persons and of $175 monthly for those who are married.

On the other hand, if he is able to prove he qualifies, he is entitled to receive from the Assistance Fund a supplement proportionate to his needs, but which does not bring his total income over the maximum amount I have just mentioned. Perhaps the hon. member will be interested in learning that two thirds of the veterans who receive allowances receive also the old age security pension, and in some cases the guaranteed income supplement, so that their income reaches the maximum allowed.

Moreover, the two increases brought to the guaranteed income supplement and to the old age security pension in 1968 and in 1969 are not taken into account for the calculation of the maximum amount allowed according to the War Veterans Allowance Act.

In the course of the afternoon, someone raised a question in this respect and my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) answered it.

It should also be pointed out that veterans who receive allowances and who work occasionally can, within the established limits require that this income be not taken into account in calculating the maximum set by the legislation. For instance, the maximum income of a married beneficiary is $4,140, whilst it is $2,540 for a bachelor. Those figures show that the situation of veterans is better, owing to the provisions of the War Veterans Allowances Act. As hon. members well know, there are other benefits in addition to those allowances, for instance free hospitalisation, and free medical care.

The provisions of the act have been constantly extended since it became effective. As a matter of fact, they have already been amended 14 times. The rates have been increased periodically taking into account cost of living increases. These provisions are under continuous review as we can be seen, for example, in the allowance to a single person which was $20 a month in 1930 and which amounts now, in the same circumstances, to $105 a month. The government intends to continue its review of this act and, periodically, to correct the rates if circumstances warrant it.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

In 1962, parliament approved a similar measure known as Part XI of the Civilian War Pensions and Allowances Act. This legislation provides for the extension to some civilian groups of the benefits provided for in the War Veterans Allowance Act, in the case of civilians who have rendered meritorious services to the nation in wartime although they were not in the armed forces. Included in such groups are, for instance, merchant seamen, volunteer firemen, members of the Newfoundland Overseas Forestry Unit. Therefore, those people enjoy a guaranteed annual income for the same reason as the recipients of veterans' allowances.

• (8:50 p.m.)

Moreover, a considerable number of veterans and dependents regularly receive allowances under the Pension Act. While speaking of the Pension Act, I am not of course referring to a welfare legislation as such, but rather to a compensation plan for disability or death due to military service or having occurred meanwhile.

At the end of the last calendar year, that is on December 31, 1968, 166,000 pensions had been paid under the Pension Act. This pension is payable as long as the eligible disability remains. Thus, it can be said that this legislation assures a guaranteed annual income. I should specify that the pensions paid under the legislation are by right an indemnity and cannot be considered as welfare benefits.

I should also, Mr. Speaker, make another point quite clear. I stated previously that whoever receives a disability pension under the Pension Act is thereby qualified for benefits under the War Veterans Allowance Act. Thus, a veteran who draws a small pension, due to a partial disability, can have his income raised to the maximum amount provided by the War Veterans Allowance Act, as long as he meets the other requirements. Therefore, those programs are very important and we have an idea of their scope if we consider that in the estimates for the next fiscal year, parliament is asked to vote $224 million under the Pension Act and $103 million under the War Veterans' Allowance Act and the Assistance Fund. Those are huge amounts and they are an evident and tangible sign of how concerned the Canadian government is and has always been with respect to veterans.

It will be recalled, Mr. Speaker, that in 1965, a special committee established by my predecessor and placed under the chairmanship of Justice Mervyn Woods was asked to study the Pension Act. The hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) who spoke before me was inquiring about the report of this committee.

As I have already pointed out briefly to the house, and I wish to take the opportunity to recall it again to the interested parties—this report is not forgotten. In fact, the officials of my department as well as of other departments have been asked to study thoroughly the scope of the recommendations and the cost of their application. Those who have taken the trouble to glance at this report have realized its complexity. It can easily be noted that it is lenfithy, containing nearly 1300 pages and 148 recommendations. These recommendations, their scope and their cost must be studied—

[English]

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek on a point of order.

Mr. McIntosh: I am sure that the house appreciates everything the minister has been saying, but I think he is a great distance away from the subject before the house tonight. What he is giving is a resumé of veterans legislation, including the pensions act, which has absolutely nothing to do with war veterans allowance. When I asked you in the first place, Mr. Speaker, if you would give the minister an opportunity to speak tonight, I was quite sure that he would unveil some new legislation with regard to war veterans allowance. I think that is what we want to hear, not a resumé of veterans legislation in general. We will have an opportunity later on for that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I imagine that the legislation will come later.

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, what the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) wishes to hear may not be exactly what his colleague wishes to hear. I am trying to answer the question posed by his own confrere with regard to the Woods committee report. If he does not wish to hear more about the report I will—

Mr. McIntosh: I wish to hear about the War Veterans Allowance Act, which is what we are talking about tonight. Tell us something about that.

[Mr. Dubé.]

Mr. Dubé: If only the hon. member would contain himself and listen to what I have to say, he would have heard plenty about the history of the War Veterans Allowance Act.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as I already said, the Woods report has certainly not fallen into oblivion. The government is preparing a White Paper to be submitted to the committee on veterans affairs simultaneously with the report, and when those studies have been carried through, parliament will then pass all necessary legislation. The hon. member who has just interrupted me as well as all other hon. members will be I hope quite happy about the results.

With respect more specifically to veterans benefits, if the hon. member who has just asked a question is expecting a statement tonight, he should know through his experience in this house that this would be most untimely. We simply wish, in reply to the notice of motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, supply hon. members with whatever information they need to make their minds up and to vote with full knowledge of the facts when the government introduces measures aimed at settling the problems which have just been raised.

Mr. Speaker, at the very beginning of the debate, I pointed out that most Canadian veterans, approximately one million, managed to settle down quite well within the Canadian community. As regards those who are members of special groups to which I referred earlier and which the government is trying to help by providing them with disability pensions when necessary, or allowances when they do not qualify, the cabinet acknowledges its responsibility and tries quite hard to safeguard the rights of veterans as a token of recognition for the great services they rendered the Canadian nation.

The present government, following in the footsteps of the ones that have preceded it, is doing its duty towards the veterans. We want to do more and, eventually, we shall do more. But, before ending my comments, I can say with pride that the Canadian government ranks with the most generous ones in its dealings with the veterans.

• (9:00 p.m.)

[English]

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): May I ask the minister a question, Mr. Speaker. He referred to Newfoundland forestry personnel who went overseas and took part in the war. I know the minister is aware of the matter I am raising, since he has received a great deal of correspondence about it. These forestry people claim they are being discriminated against under the present regulations in the sense they are not classified as bona fide veterans. In other words, although they fought, were injured and in some cases killed, they have not been classified as bona fide veterans of the second world war which they consider unfair. Has the government any plans to take action in line with the request that have been received from these people so that they may receive the accreditation and benefits that accrue to other bona fide veterans who fought during the second world war?

Mr. Dubé: Mr. Speaker, in many instances it is not up to my department to define who is and who is not a veteran. Often that decision is made by the Department of National Defence. I am unable to reply precisely to the question raised by my hon. friend. I will look into it and reply personally, if I may.

Mr. Lundrigan: Mr. Speaker, this question has been raised year after year and I know that members on veterans affairs and defence committees have received much correspondence on the matter. May I, therefore, ask the minister to make a statement on motions in the house so that we may understand whether the government has plans to update its thinking on this matter. We want to know where these people stand and if they are or are not to be treated as second class Canadian citizens.

Mr. Dubé: As soon as a decision is made on this matter, it will be made known in the best possible way.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question which relates to those on the war veterans allowance. May we assume that the minister is co-operating with his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro), in trying to persuade the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) to correct some of the income tax anomalies we have drawn to the government's attention from time to time. I refer in particular to the fact that veterans receiving war veterans allowances, who are persuaded to transfer in whole or in part to the guaranteed income supplement, end up with the same income but find that their income tax goes up. May we assume that the minister wishes to have this corrected?

Mr. Dubé: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That assumption is correct.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That makes two of you.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on this motion, may I say that I welcome the chance to speak on a subject which is undergoing intense examination at present and has occupied much of the energies of Canadians for the last 50 years. That is true, particularly, of the period since the end of the second world war. The fields of old age security and related matters have occupied much of the attention of the Canadian people. Our economists have been concerned about this matter. Although great strides have been made in taking care of our senior citizens and others needing assistance from the state, unfortunately, no sooner are programs of pension adjustment introduced than new needs seem to arise. Although pensions and benefits under various programs have risen fairly rapidly, the rapid rate of inflationary increase has meant that those who have no resources other than their government pension have been living at minimum levels of subsistence. Many people, therefore, have been living in circumstances that Canadian citizens would like to see improved.

In this era of affluence we hear, in this country that has great natural resources and an intelligent and reasonably well educated, mobile working force, that generates much of its capital and attracts much capital from the western world, especially from the United States, that we should do more for our citizens who live in poverty and in circumstances we all wish to see improved.

There is considerable discussion at the present time about our welfare programs. It has also been said that our welfare structure is a jungle, that it is inefficient and that it could easily be replaced by some sort of overall approach aiming at a guaranteed minimum income or negative income tax. This sounds very easy in practice but I wonder, if we introduced something like that, whether we should not wind up with as many inequities as we now have, or more.

I believe that in providing for certain income standards for some of our people who are supported by the public purse we, as Canadians, have tended to equate the mere granting of money with a certain standard of living. It has not been appreciated that the important thing is, what will the money our people are granted buy in the market place? It is not important really whether a man's income is $100 a month or any other sum.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

What is important to consider is, what will that money buy and what standard of living will it provide. Have we ever sat down to define what is the minimum standard of living that ought to be acceptable or desirable for all our citizens? For instance, how many square feet should a man have to live in; how much food should he have per day; what should he be allowed to spend on recreation, and so on? Quite obviously, a given number of pension dollars will buy different services in varying parts of the country. Nor has it been appreciated that when we increase pensions on a national scale we transfer goods and services out of one area into another. If this transfer of goods and services is too great, our country's productive capacity may be hampered and our economy and people will suffer, including those we intend to help. So, when we decide to increase various social services and transfer goods and services from one segment of our economy to another we must weigh carefully the effect of that on the whole economy. Unless the productive apparatus of our economy is healthy and producing the goods and services that we hoped to give to our senior citizens as well as the various other people who, by reason of disability or for any other cause, the state is assisting, there is not much to gain.

• (9:10 p.m.)

As one who, personally, over the years has had to rule on whether the disability of a particular individual entitled him to receive assistance in the form of some pension or benefit that the state had provided for him, I find it very difficult to establish a mean standard of care for every citizen by means of a flat sum. From personal experience, I have always found the needs of those who the state would help to be of such a wide variety that no single formula would seem to me to come anywhere close to solving the problem for these people. Indeed, a single all inclusive formula would, I am sure, create more injustices than it would cure.

I feel the old age pension must be set at some basic level which will attempt to give some reasonable livelihood to our senior citizens, but I feel this level has to be in line with the productive capacity of the economy at the time it is set. There has been enormous and rapid increase in inflation in Canada and in the whole of the western world. Canada is very sensitive to the economic health of our great neighbour to the south and that country has been involved in fighting a war of attrition. Even taking this into consideration, the United States has had some better success in controlling inflation than we who have reduced our military commitments to a very low point. I believe some of this inflation in Canada is due to our great welfare programs. When I say "welfare" I mean in the very broadest sense of welfare, including health, education and so on.

In the matter of old age security pensions, I would not favour the automatic escalation clause. I feel that the government of the day will have to take responsibility for whether the economy can stand the increase in pensions and the related attempt to give reasonable justice to those people for whom the pensions are designed. I believe automatic escalation of pensions would result in a rigid and inflexible economy. In the long run, it could well do more harm than good.

The lowering of the eligible age for old age pension, while desirable, has increased the financial liability of the nation and in the past 20 years has tended to reduce the productive capacity of our economy. A glance at the productivity of our country shows an increased efficiency in producing goods, but little increase in the service efficiency of our economy. On the other hand, the labour force is such that the percentage increase in the service end of our economy is greater than the goods producing end. This means that the real productivity of our nation is not growing as fast as it might. Anything that reduces the productivity of our country is detrimental to all our citizens. The government, in my opinion, must increase old age security pensions in line with the needs of these people and the ability of the economy to provide a real increase in goods and service. There is little point giving them more money in their pockets if their standard of living is to remain the same.

The guaranteed annual income is a great goal for which to strive. It was first proposed in a very realistic way. It was felt by having an individual pay for hospital, health, welfare, schools and many personal services now provided by the state, a guaranteed minimum income could be substituted. I believe that this objective is far in the future and depends on a much higher productive state, and perhaps much more rigid economy than we now have. The welfare programs of Canada were instituted in good faith by intelligent people. We should not lightly dismantle them for fear that we may be worse off than we were before. We, as a nation, have attempted to assist those in need. There have been many inequities, but we seem to have provided in a reasonable way for the bulk of the needs of our people. Let us not lightly dismantle the structure we have built up until we are sure that it could be replaced by a better one.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I will close. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this matter.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Fort William): Mr. Speaker, the proposal contained in the resolution is such that every member would like to support it but it does not seriously take into account the cost of such a program. As an example, the estimated expenditures of the Department of National Health and Welfare which this parliament approved for the year 1967-68, amounted to $2.8 billion, including payments from the statutory Old Age Security Fund. This year the amount is considerably more, as was pointed out this afternoon by the minister.

This expenditure amounts to 26 per cent of the total federal government expenditures forcast for the same year and reflects the continued concern with the health and welfare of the people of Canada. In the past six years, the department has been assigned responsibility for such major programs as the Canada Pension Plan, the Canada Assistance Plan, the guaranteed income supplement, youth allowances, the health resources fund and medicare. These plans have all been designed to ensure Canadians the highest standards of health and ensure when, through age, infirmity or some other limitation, they can no longer work, they will receive a true measure of protection.

This afternoon the minister quoted figures of anticipated expenditures for welfare programs for 1969-70 which run into more than $3 billion. The guaranteed income supplement, designed to assist elderly persons with little or no income other than old age security payments, was introduced in January, 1967. The guaranteed income supplement provided up to $30 monthly to eligible recipients, increasing to $30.60 effective January, 1968. As of October, 1967 guaranteed income supplement payments had been made to 711,277 old age security recipients. Approximately 57 per cent of persons covered by the old age security program is also receiving guaranteed income supplement payments. The supplement program cost approximately $225 million in the calendar year 1967.

Suggested Pension Payment Corrections

• (9:20 p.m.)

As of January, 1967, citizens age 68 years or over qualified for the old age security pension. This year persons age 66 and over will qualify and by January 1 of next year everyone who has reached age 65 will be eligible for old age security. Complementing our social insurance programs is the Canada Assistance Plan, under which agreements were signed with all the provinces in 1967. The significance of this plan lies in the fact that it provides for an integration into one over-all measure of the various assistance programs such as the old age assistance, blind persons allowances, disabled persons allowances and unemployment assistance. By extending for the first time federal sharing of costs in additional areas such as mothers allowances, child welfare and health and welfare services, the plan also gives emphasis to prevention and rehabilitation and thus to the reduction of assistance case loads.

A few moments ago the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) gave us a report concerning veterans pensions and other benefits payable to veterans. Therefore, I shall not repeat those facts which apply to the veterans. In 1967, the first guaranteed income supplement benefits were paid and about 57 per cent of old age security pensioners qualified for full or partial supplements. Also in 1967, the first Canada Pension Plan retirement pensions were paid and 68 year olds became eligible to draw old age security, Canada Pension Plan and guaranteed income supplement benefits.

It can hardly be said that we have not had our aged citizens very much in mind over the past six years. I must point out, however, that all these things cost money. In 1962-63 public expenditures on health and public welfare were made to the tune of some $3.9 billion. This amount increased to $6.5 billion in 1967-68. There was an increase in one year alone of over $1 billion. These are large figures. They represent an increase from 9.5 per cent of the gross national product in 1962-63 to 10.4 per cent in 1967-68.

Old age security expenditures were a major item in these figures. In 1962-63 there were 950,000 pensioners who received $734 million. Five years later, there were 1,366,000 pensioners who received a total benefit or $120.50 a month, including the old age security pension of $78. By 1976, the Canada Pension Plan will be paying $125 a month if escalation continues at 2 per cent a year and, together with old age security will provide a monthly benefit of $215 for each pensioner.

Canada's record in comparison with other western countries should make Canadians feel proud. While the minimum monthly pension payable to every aged person in Canada is $73, in the United States it is $55. If an aged person in Canada has no other income he can receive $109.20 monthly. In the United States, there is no provision for him to receive more than the $55. In Britain, the minimum monthly pension for a single householder is $56. In France, the pension is 20 per cent of previous earnings if one retires at age 60, 40 per cent if one retires at age 65 or 60 per cent if one does not retire until age 70. The rate in West Germany is 45 per cent of previous earnings if one has contributed for 30 years.

In Sweden the rate is 60 per cent of previous earnings after 30 years of contributions. This afternoon the minister pointed out the inconsistencies in the motion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). While proposing that the government move in the direction of a guaranteed annual income for all Canadians, the motion urges us to abandon the income test in relation to the guaranteed income supplement. A guaranteed income for all Canadians would be an income test program which covered all the Canadian society. The guaranteed income supplement is a guaranteed income program which covers only that part of the Canadian society which includes people over the age of 66. On January 1 of next year, it will be extended to cover all those over age 65. Are we being urged to abandon this form of program or to extend it?

The medicare program which started on July 1, 1968 has not received maximum acceptance by the provinces, but indications are that eventually the provinces will proceed with the necessary action to complement federal legislation, thereby making possible a nation wide system of prepaid medical care. We believe in medical care.

Mental retardation is regarded as a major national health, social and economic problem. It is considered to be one of the top ranking causes of disability among all age groups. It is responsible for immeasurable and prolonged frustration as well as loss to the retarded individuals' family and a great loss in economic output to society. The government has recognized that mental retardation is of national concern and warrants increased financial support for programs specifically designed to prevent and alleviate this disability.

The opposition would appear to be attempting to build up a case which, when looked at in the light of day, has no legs on which to stand. I wish to compliment the minister for his exhaustive and comprehensive outline of the state of Canada's welfare program which is second to none in the western world. It seems to me our country is fortunate in having a responsible government which recognizes fact and not fancy in dealing with those in need of assistance. I agree, however, that consideration should be given to an increase for the superannuated civil servants. They are being penalized because of the rising cost of living. For that reason, I support the recommendations of the committee which two years ago brought in an excellent report in support of an increase. I would urge the minister to consider taking action in respect of this group of people at an early date.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, first, I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) for having brought this motion before the house. For 27 years his voice has been heard in this House of Commons, I would suggest to the honour of those in this chamber, asking hon. members to consider the plight of those in our society who are worthy of the consideration of this nation. These are people who are entitled to the assistance which Canada can give them.

It is somewhat disturbing to me to hear the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai)—one of the nice guys—get up and give the appearance of veracity to what would otherwise be an unlikely story. When the hon. member quoted statistics comparing Canada to other countries, perhaps he should have considered telling the other side of the story. He should have said that Canada is much wealthier than those countries to which he referred, and that we have a disgraceful record in terms of the percentage of our gross national product set aside for welfare programs. Those countries that the hon. member mentioned spend a far greater percentage of their gross national product for social welfare programs than do we.

Mr. Munro: That is not true.

Mr. Saltsman: It is true, and I refer to Germany, France and Britain, all of which spend a greater percentage of their gross national product on welfare programs than does Canada. So also does Sweden and most Scandinavian countries. Perhaps the only country that does not spend more in relation to its gross national product than does Canada is the United States. That side of the story should also be told.

I, like other members of the house, have a very high regard for the hon. member for Fort William. No doubt he sincerely believes some of the things he has said tonight, but I would ask him not to use these cliches which I am sure the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has heard for the last 27 years, particularly those in respect of the fact that we must find the money in order to finance these programs. Members such as he often ask whether we can afford certain things. I would respectfully suggest that we can afford this.

I would like to ask the Postmaster General, (Mr. Kierans), and I am sorry to see he is not in the house tonight, about a statement he made a number of years ago. He said that the nation has two choices. If it is great it accepts its challenge; it goes out and does these things which must be done, or it can take the alternative course of saying the country cannot afford certain things. I suggest that kind of wisdom should apply to this government today. In counselling the government, I suggest he should convince them that Canada can afford these things and that Canada should take measures to get this society off the ground. He should give his party the benefit of his ideology which I suggest has been too long ignored in our society.

Let me raise some of the questions dealt with or encompassed by this statement that we cannot afford these things. Can we afford some of the things we are doing now, and what is the cost of some of these things? What does it cost to have unemployment in this country? Is it less costly or more costly than higher old age pensions? Let me refer to an indication of the cost of unemployment. It has been calculated that in 1957, and I refer to figures from the report of the Economic Council, we lost 5 per cent of our potential productivity representing something like $3 billion. In fairly round terms this would represent an increase of something like $1 billion in taxes. Can we afford that kind of a loss? This $1 billion amounts to almost twice as much as we are now contributing to veterans.

I have never heard the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) stand up in this house and ask whether we could afford unemployment in this country. I have only heard him ask whether we could afford an increase in old age or veterans' allowances. There should be no question as to whether we can afford this.

Let us consider 1968. This was an even worse year. It was estimated then that we would lose through unemployment 7½ per cent of our potential gross national product, amounting to over $5 billion. This would represent a loss of $1.5 billion in taxes. As a result, we have suffered from higher tax rates and a decrease in our gross national product. As long as we pursue this type of attitude we cannot afford to increase our allowances to the sick, to the veterans and to those who can no longer take care of themselves. As long as we have unemployment, the people in this country will not be able to help themselves or face up to their responsibilities. We cannot afford to ignore the challenge of unemployment and the consequent loss in productivity. Were we to do so, we would deliberately encourage waste in this nation.

Hon. members may well ask how we pay for these social measures. This is an area that should be explored. We are not talking about just a loss in respect of unemployment. Think of the costs incurred in respect of unemployment insurance and the costs incurred in respect of various welfare programs, not because of the disability of people who would like to work and find employment, but because of the administrative costs of providing support. Let me suggest that a society which regards things in that light, or a government which regards itself in that light, most assuredly needs self-examination.

We have heard a great deal of talk about productivity in our society, and the suggestion that if we had an increase in productivity we could afford certain things. Let us look at the industry in this country. Let us examine the question of productivity. We live in a nation that must surely be the wealthiest in the whole world. No country has been so blessed by resources, good fortune and population as ours. There can be no question about this. We have let almost anyone come into this country to exploit it as he sees fit. This is hardly a tribute to our government. We have permitted foreign investment in our secondary industry. We have permitted the importation of workers at the expense of our local people. These people have worked at a lower level, in similar capacities, for our great neighbour to the south. I cannot make the quantitative calculations necessary to translate this into dollars and cents. Unfortunately, we in this party do not have those facilities at our disposal, and the government refuses to make this kind of calculation.

It must be obvious that there is a fantastic loss taking place in our society. This loss does not result from a refusal on the part of our people to work hard, and it does not result from a loss of our resources. It results because we have a government that is complacent, that refuses to raise its eyes to the horizon, that refuses to even believe the dictum of some of its own past leaders that the 20th century can in many ways belong to Canada. We have allowed the invaders of our economy to do virtually what they please. This is an intolerable situation. A government and political party which permits this kind of thing to go on should not allow its members to stand up in this house and say that we cannot afford these measures. We cannot afford the kind of inefficiency that takes place in this kind of society. The government says we cannot afford increases in pensions. This is the kind of foot-dragging, closed-eye attitude of our government at this moment.

The failure to increase productivity, to make our industries as efficient as they are capable of being, has resulted from hiding behind a tariff structure that reduces everybody's standard of living. We in this party believe that the tariff structure should be removed. We believe this is necessary in order that our industry become efficient. As I say, we believe the tariff structure should be removed. The tariff structure works in two ways; it reduces wealth and increases the costs of the people in our society who need goods and services. For those who have a good deal of money perhaps this is not a great problem, but for those whose needs are not being met this combination is unfair.

I ask whether we can afford it, and what can we afford? Let us look at our taxes. Despite the fact that the Carter report has been sitting around for a couple of years, it has not been acted upon. Canada's tax system is the most unjust in the world. We have a tax system that penalizes the poor and enriches the rich. Almost nothing has been done by the government to adopt this report and improve our tax system. Can we afford to give $225 million away every year to people who do not need it, to people who are already rich, to industries which do not need any concessions? Can we afford to tax our middle income people higher than others in order to bonus the oil and mining industries and the speculators of our society? I do not wish to start playing around with the term "just society" because it has become too painful a term to use any more, in the light of the government's record. This government has failed to control inflation.

Mr. Munro: What about old age pensions?

Mr. Saltsman: What about old age pensions? If we had not lost $1.5 billion in taxes last year the government could have virtually doubled the old age pension. If the government had implemented the Carter commission recommendations and obtained the increase revenue as a result of this step, it could have increased veterans allowances and pensions by 50 per cent. But perhaps the mining companies are more deserving of our consideration than the old age pensioners and widows in our society! We had no hesitation at all in scrapping their bodies in war. They have lived and died for this country. We, in this society, should at least do our best to look after them now. Is it too much to expect that we should look after our veterans, some of whom have been willing to die for this country? I am not suggesting that our governments have been completely intolerant of the problems that face our veterans and those of the sick of this country. I think governments have responded in this respect. But the reason people in this house have risen time and again to deal with these problems is that the gap between the rich and the poor of this country has been so glaring that it could be solved only by action in parliament.

The question is: Are we doing as much as we can? We are saying by our motion today that the answer is emphatically no. We are not doing as much as we can in this regard. The government is hiding behind pat phrases, phrases used from time immemorial, such as we cannot afford it. The government says that we cannot afford a great many things, including an increase in old age pensions and veterans allowances. The N.D.P. says that we cannot afford the waste that occurs in our society; we cannot afford the tax system that we have; we cannot afford the unemployment in our society. It is not good enough for the government to say that this is the best of all possible worlds and theirs is the best of all political parties. Members still wish to speak on this subject. I rose tonight in response to the challenge put forward by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Badanai) and the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher). I regret that neither of them saw fit to remain in the house long enough to hear an attempt to answer the questions that they raised.

We in this party will continue to urge upon hon. members and the government that we should do justice to our people and should not, because of callousness or inefficiency, hide behind the phrase that we cannot afford it. We in Canada can afford anything that we wish to afford.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member said that his party believed that all tariffs should be removed. Would he include in that observation the shoe industry and the textile industry?

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, if somebody paid more attention to the problems of our industry—it is possible to move in a more intelligent direction with intelligent assistance to our industry—we could live in a society that did not have a single tariff.

An hon. Member: There is some jargon for you.

Mr. John L. Skoberg (Moose Jaw): Mr. Speaker, in the few moments left in this debate, I would like to congratulate my colleague for introducing this motion. I am sure that every member of this house should take off his hat to the hon. member for standing up and saying what he has said. It amazes me when I hear the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) stand up once again to defend the "haves" and say, in effect, to hell with the "have nots". If we look around this country we will find that five million Canadians in the low income or poverty group are living in what is virtually a hell trying to get along in a society from which they receive very little. In these circumstances, I am greatly surprised at the attitude of hon. members opposite who criticize the line taken by this group in seeking to help them. It is incorrect to say that this country cannot afford the measure of support to which these people are entitled. I am sure that when he comes to read tomorrow, in Hansard, what he said tonight, the hon. member for Bruce will wonder what the people back home will have to say about his remarks, particularly those living on old age pensions.

There is one other point I wish to raise. It is well known that senior citizens trying to live on an inadequate income regularly lose their homes because of their inability to pay property taxes. Surely, in this age of rapid communications and computers there is a method by which education costs can be deducted from property taxes. As it is, senior citizens are losing the shelter they have known, in some cases, for their entire lives. Even though this is a provincial responsibility, the senior government could surely lead the way to ensuring that education tax is removed from municipal property in cases such as I have mentioned. This would reduce taxation by at least 50 per cent.

The hon. member for Bruce suggested that hon. members of this group want a heaven on earth. Mr. Speaker, this very government could create a situation which would make our people proud to be Canadians. Unhappily, no real attempt is being made to improve the lot of the unfortunate in our society. Surely, every member of this house feels ashamed when he goes out into his riding and is brought into contact with the effects of poverty in this modern age.

I say the government should cease to sit on its hands. It should get out and do something of which everyone could be proud. I maintain that the minister could really do something about this if he were sufficiently determined. Enough research has been done to justify an increase in the pensions of our senior citizens. The hon. member for Waterloo (Mr. Saltsman) has ably shown that this country can afford increases in the pensions not only of our senior citizens but also in those of retired civil servants and of others who do not get a fair share of the wealth this country produces.

Not too long ago, Mr. Reuben Baetz, Executive Director of the Canadian Welfare Council, spelled out clearly what was needed when he stated:

> If the just society is ever to be anything more than a meaningless and flimsy abstraction, it must be based on certain fundamental rights, including social as well as civil and political rights.

We heard the hon. member for Bruce say a while ago that the Liberals were about to bring the just society into being. We have heard ministers say in answer to questions that an announcement can be expected soon. Well, if we are really to have a just society, the government ought to be doing as Mr. Baetz has proposed. He said that among social rights none was more important than that to an adequate income. To use his words—

> We should build this socio-economic goal into our value system now. The method of administering the guaranteed income can be worked out later. If necessary, it can be introduced in stages.

Mr. Speaker, there are methods today, well known to economists, which would enable every person in this country to receive the income which he could justifiably expect. I am sure even supporters of the government realize that there is a real necessity to move forward along these lines if we are not to fall back to a state in which there are more people on relief and on the dole than there are people working. We must face reality and consider other methods of financing our society than those in use today.

The proposition advanced by Mr. Baetz is that all Canadians have a right to an income sufficient for an adequate standard of physical and social wellbeing. I suggest no one in this house would disagree in principle with that statement but I am certain a great many would resent the bringing about of any great improvement in the standards of those on low incomes. They would prefer to be the champions of people in the high income brackets rather than lower themselves to the extent of taking part in an effort to end the poverty as we know it.

Mr. Baetz further stated:

> Every Canadian cannot provide for all his needs in our complicated society by his own efforts, or through private programs.

This is self-evident but nothing has been done about it effectively, though many plans have been brought in and many economists have drawn up programs. The government has not possessed the fortitude to take action of a meaningful kind to deal with poverty as we have known it for the past number of years.

The last extract I should like to quote is this: Mr. Baetz says the recommendation of the Canadian Welfare Council is based on the conviction that an assurance of adequate income can improve the productivity of people and assist in the development of our country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the house that pursuant to paragraph 11 of Standing Order 58 proceedings on the motion are considered to have expired.

[Mr. Skoberg.]

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved:

LABOUR CONDITIONS—ALTERNATIVE TO COMPENSATE FOR CANCELLED WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Because my question last week was ruled out of order, I am pleased to take advantage of this opportunity to elaborate on some of the ideas I tried to raise at that time.

I find the question period very useful and exciting. However, I sometimes suspect that between the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) and Mr. Speaker, there is some kind of collusion, by means of which the physical fitness of backbenchers is somehow to be improved by their having to bob up and down many times a day. I do not object to this, because it is about the only exercise I get since becoming a Member of Parliament.

While it is unusual for me to be recognized during the question period, it is not at all unusual for me to be ruled out of order. That is why I am here tonight to discuss two items. On March 12, as reported at page 6526 of Hansard I put a question as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, my question has to do with the critical unemployment situation and recent reports to the government by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities. Has the government any alternatives to recommend with respect to the unilateral cancellation of winter works projects in order to assist municipalities in the area of water utility, pollution control and housing projects.

The record continues:

> Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking a general question which can only be answered by a statement on motions.

• (10:00 p.m.)

Virtually all the nine municipalities I represent have protested to me about the cancellation of the winter works program. I agree with Mr. Speaker that this is a subject for a statement on motions. Last fall when the winter works question was highly current and we heard from the government some vague mutterings about manpower training schemes and regional development, what we needed then—and we need it even more now—was some forthright statement by the government as to what possible alternative it had to propose, having scrapped one program without warning. This Winter Works program was abandoned at a time when municipal governments, especially in the urbanized and rapidly urbanizing municipalities such as the one I come from, were all hard pressed to provide not only employment but much needed capital projects.

Consider for a moment the burgeoning civic welfare rolls. These are much larger than previous years because they reflect more, I think, than just seasonal unemployment; they reflect a critical unemployment situation which has been aided and abetted, at least in part, by the cancellation of the winter works incentive program.

I received some figures over the telephone from the municipality in which I live, the district of Coquitlam, and I should like to put on record the February welfare cost. In 1966, it was $44,000; in 1967 it was $55,000; in 1968 it was $74,000; and for the month of February, 1969, $116,000. These are rounded figures and have not been adjusted to population growth. I do not want to be accused of drawing misleading inferences because I do not believe that is necessary; the case is strong enough without that. The population has increased by approximately 6 per cent each year in this municipality, but these figures reflect a higher welfare cost than that.

Now, I should like to refer to some Dominion Bureau of Statistics figures released on March 13 concerning unemployment. We are told that 6.6 per cent of British Columbians are looking for work. In the Atlantic region, one out of every ten wage earners was unemployed.

In reply to my question I hope that the cabinet will not include in its response any nonsense about the work force being larger, in an attempt to clear the government of its responsibilities and its failure to solve the unemployment problem. Of course, there are more jobs, but there are more Canadians. We have to run faster to stay where we are. But the fact that more Canadians are working is of little comfort to a man who is unemployed and unable to find a job.

To get back to the winter works program, with all its faults, I may say that a brief submitted recently to the government by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Reeves, a responsible group of citizens I think we would all agree, criticized the government's unilateral cancellation of the program as inopportune. The federation proposed instead a replacement program which would assist capital projects in housing, sewage treatment, pollution control and water systems, and which would thereby brighten the bleak employment picture.

These proposals of the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Reeves are consistent with the report of the task force on housing, which at page 43 recommends:

> Municipalities or regional governments, as a matter of continuing policy, should acquire, service and sell all or a substantial portion of the land required for urban growth within their boundaries.
> The federal government should make direct loans to municipalities or regional governments to assist them in assembling and servicing land for urban growth.

This attitude, as expressed by the task force report, stands in stark contradiction to what happened when winter works got the axe. According to a recent survey by the federation, 50 per cent of 50 municipalities' planned projects included precisely such things as water systems, trunk sewers and storm sewers. It does not take any great genius to see the casual relationship between land serviced by water and sanitary sewers and housing; nor is it a great strain to recognize how pollution of the Fraser and Burrard Inlet is encouraged by the lack of adequate primary and secondary treatment plants. The relationship between initiating these capital projects and employment is also obvious.

In my municipality of Coquitlam, whose growth is roughly 1,200 new homes a year, much of the soil is now becoming contaminated because there is no expansion of the sewer system. This has been contemplated for at least the past three years. Yet, there is not even a primary treatment plant in existence, and all the while the sewers belch thousands of gallons of untreated effluent into the Fraser River. The urban renewal freeze constitutes an additional problem, but I have not time to discuss that tonight. In conclusion, I make a plea for a requisite member of the government to make a statement on motions on this subject in the near future. I think that would be a delightful idea, and I am glad the Speaker suggested it. The sooner that is done, the better.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Hillsborough.

Mr. Macquarrie: I thought there would be an answer from the treasury benches, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is an insult.

An hon. Member: The government is not interested in people.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—REFERRAL OF OUTSTANDING ISSUES TO MEDIATION PROCEDURES

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, for a long time I have been interested in the efficiency of the Post Office Department. I have noted the efforts made by the present Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) and the detrimental results of his ill conceived efforts in the direction of what he calls efficiency in the interests of going into the black. For a long, long time I have noted, watched and studied the relations between public servants and civil servants working for his department and the Government of Canada. In my 11 years in this house, never have I seen such evidence of discontent as is now manifest by the very people on whom the Postmaster General must depend for the efficacy of the operation of his department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Macquarrie: The Letter Carriers' Union of Canada, in a press release dated March 14 declares:

> This on-again, off-again procedure by the employer, leaves the union no choice but to hold Treasury Board responsible for all expenses incurred.
> Since the employer has withdrawn its applications, they have proven they were in the wrong and it logically follows that the union was in the right, and that the employees involved should suffer no loss of pay.

All I can say is that I note with great concern the statement made by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers under date of March 17. God help us, this St. Patrick's Day. The statement reads:

> Does the public know or realize that even with the increase of postage they are getting "short changed" as to prompt and efficient service and this will continue to decrease, especially with some of the plans proposed and even at present in effect.

We have told the Postmaster General repeatedly since last October that his ill considered and hastily prepared program of the five-day delivery week would reap all sorts of discomfort not only for patrons of the Post Office and Post Office workers, but for all citizens of Canada. He listened not to our protests. He hearkened not to our advice. He paid no attention to our solicitations. Now, he has steam-rollered forward and has found that in his department there is resentment which will injure not only the people of his department but all of Canada. I say that when the people of Canada suffer in this important matter of postal delivery, he has a great responsibility to bear. Even at this late date it would not hurt him to consider, to reconsider and ponder upon the efficacy of this system which he so proudly launched a few months ago as a great and forward movement. He knows, and the people of his department know, that it has not been a forward step, but a backward step.

I ask him even at this eleventh hour, will he not reconsider and think of the people of Canada instead of his own preconceived notions of efficiency.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, it must be a disappointment to the hon. member that his audience is so small this evening because the form and eloquence of his appeal certainly deserves a better audience, even if the substance did not merit the same attention.

The hon. member repeated the words of Mr. Decarie, that the Treasury Board should now consider paying the strikers who went on strike illegally last week. I wonder if this pronouncement is the position of the Conservative Party? If so, it would be a new departure for them. Since the hon. member is speaking of the Treasury Board, I suggest that he formally lay this proposition before my colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury).

The hon. member stated the basis of all the discontent is the five day week. Nothing could be more wrong, Mr. Speaker. The unions have pronounced themselves to be in favour of the five-day week. If, as the hon. member suggests, we were to revert to the six day week, I suggest we would then have a very critical situation on our hands. When the hon. member suggests that discontent is prevalent, I think he takes as evidence the obvious public relations programs We have them as well as the unions.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Kierans: The hon. member does not take note of facts such as the attempt in Montreal last week by union leaders to provoke a strike in that city which was overwhelmingly rejected by union members, so much so that someone has said there must be a real gap between union leadership and the feelings and sentiments of their members.

There has been nothing new in what the hon. member has said, Mr. Speaker. I do not think I should take any more time in replying to what is a repetition of many earlier statements.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—EFFECT OF CASUAL EMPLOYEES ON POSITION OF INSIDE WORKERS

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Although there is not a large group of members in the house, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Postmaster General (Mr. Kierans) is here.

The question I raised this afternoon was with regard to the Ottawa Post Office but possibly could apply to other major post offices in this country. Since today's Hansard has not yet been printed, I will refresh the memory of hon. members by stating that I asked a supplementary question to one asked by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). My question was: "Will the minister investigate to see how much of post office inefficiency is due to the preponderance of casual employees inside the Post Office? Will he also investigate recent charges by the inside workers of nepotism—?" That is where I got cut off. I intended to ask further, "—or a family compact operating between postal management and the casual help in Ottawa?"

In spite of the fact we were assured recently that morale was fine in the Post Office Department, a press statement issued today by the Union of Postal Workers here in Ottawa appears to contradict the minister with considerable force. Charges have been levied which include poor management, unsuitable working conditions, 24 hour sheet box pick-up service, poor short distance service and spying on workers. These items may have some relevance to post office morale and also prompt and efficient service, but it is not my intention to deal with these matters tonight. What I asked the Postmaster General to investigate was the preponderance of casual employees in the Ottawa post office and the number of relatives—sons, daughters, wives and sisters—of postal officers who are employed on a part time basis, thus depriving others from needed employment. I ask that he investigate this also because of the effect this alleged practice has on the morale and efficiency in the post office. First of all, I should like to mention a few statistics. In the Ottawa post office, on the city delivery floor, there are some 55 casuals or part-timers employed steadily compared to 154 full time postal clerks. This does not seem to be too sinister probably to some members, but in the forward letter department there is a different picture. Here we find 66 full time employees opposed to 62 full time part-timers and 49 part time part-timers or casuals. The ratio is almost two to one.

This is the type of practice that is being followed in the forward letter department in the evenings. This is the heart of the post office. This is where the sorting and forwarding takes place. Here, most of all, is where experience can be meaningful in terms of service. I know that some department stores and other firms deliberately reduce their full time staff by hiring casuals in the person of married women and high school kids. In this way, their total wage package can be reduced and they do not have to pay fringe benefits. In addition, this makes it possible to break a union. I know this happens in the private world of commerce, but I would sincerely regret it if this should be the policy of the post office. Surely, the government of Canada should have a reputation for leadership in respect of enlightened management practices. So, I hope that what I have just said is absolutely incorrect.

This afternoon I believe the minister assured the house that casuals are hired only in periods of excessive activity or mail volume, such as at Christmas time. I find it difficult to understand why, at this time of year which is not Christmas, the casuals should outnumber the regular postal clerks by 111 to 66 in the forward letter department in Ottawa. I have an excerpt from the postal personnel manual which states:

> Casual employees may be employed on a temporary basis to
> (1) assist the full-time staff in emergency situations,
> (2) replace regular staff on leave,
> (3) replace regular employees when there is no eligible list from which a continuous replacement may be assigned.

Further down on the same page in respect of duration of employment it reads:

> The original appointment cannot be for a period in excess of six months.

Some other things are dealt with, but I do not have the time to discuss them. I believe it is important that people know also that the Post Office employs three different types of casuals at three different pay scales. There are Christmas casuals who are paid $1.25 an hour; there are the postal helpers who are paid $1.75 an hour and the part time postal clerks who are paid $2.25 an hour. The Financial Administration Act outlines the terms and conditions of employment regulations. At page 293 of the 1962 Treasury Board publication we find that clauses 87 and 88 have this to say about casuals. Clause 87 reads as follows:

> Subect to these regulations and any other enactment of the Treasury Board, a casual employee who performs the full range of duties specified for the position held by him shall be paid on an hourly basis calculated at the minimum rate for the group and level of that position.

Clause 88 states:

Notwithstanding anything in these Regulations, where a casual employee holds a position for which there is a minimum and maximum rate of pay, he shall not be granted increases in pay.

We can see the attractiveness of hiring casuals. They are not better but they are certainly cheaper because they do not receive pay increases. They are cheaper, but perhaps only in the short run. Finally, I should like to draw the minister's attention to the fact that the dead letter office was eliminated. This office saved the public much distress and time. According to page 38 of the postal operations group manual a position in this office is a preferred position requiring extensive experience and knowledge of the Canadian postal service. It was only the title that was eliminated. There are people doing virtually the same work that had once been done by people who occupied preferred positions. I wonder what Mr. Justice Freedman would have to say about that.

I have tried to draw these matters to the minister's attention. I know he is bright and able. I hope that he is fully informed on these problems and will attempt to deal with them. I ask that he look into these matters to our mutual benefit.

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, on the proceedings on the adjournment motion the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Rose) seems to have been talking about the effects of changes in the number of casual employees on the positions of inside workers. Let me say that whether there are more or less casual workers in the post office at this time, there has been no effect at all on the position of inside workers. I can assure the hon. member that when we began to discuss the plans for changes in the post office a statement was made that those presently employed on a full time basis by the post office would continue to be employed. In other words, there was security of employment to those inside workers.

Following that, of course, at the beginning of the plan in October we began to use more casuals than we normally had, and the reason should be obvious to hon. members. We used casuals to fill temporarily those positions which were opened by retirement or for other reasons, including people who left the service. We kept these positions open so that when the new conditions went into effect between February 1 and April 1 these positions would be available to men who, because of the five day week, had been found to be in a surplus category. These very same employees would then be moved into the vacant positions.

In the meantime, these casuals have been employed. There will always be a need for casuals, and the positions they occupy sometimes become permanent. This has happened and we are diligently working out this sort of situation. You might ask why we need casuals. On the first of every month when the bills go out and there is exceptionally high activity, we require extra employees. At the middle of the month, and at the end of the month when family allowance cheques and old age pensions cheques are mailed, there is tremendous activity. There are very many fundamental and commercial reasons for this activity. This is not a question of jobs or of labour in any form.

Of course, it is true that for many reasons the use of casual employees is fully justified. Sometimes this employment is used to supplement those on low incomes or low family wage earners. Let me hasten to say that if there is any position in the post office in this casual area filled as a result of nepotism, we have every intention to rout that out.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): A motion to adjourn the house is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this house stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, March 18, 1969

The house met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROSE—FAILURE TO ANSWER REPRESENTATIONS IN ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon on a question of privilege. I shall be brief but wish to point out that my brevity bears no relation to the strength of my feelings in respect of the matter I am about to raise. Your Honour did not accept the question I asked on March 12 and as a result that question was set down to be debated on the late adjournment debate. Your Honour announced that the question would be debated last night and at the time of your announcement a fair number of hon. members were in the house. Yet last evening, after I had finished speaking for seven minutes, no minister or parliamentary secretary was present in the house to reply to my question. Several hon. members then present noticed this. The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie), who also wished to ask a question expected an answer from the treasury benches. Frankly, hon. members then present were amazed that there was no reply from the government side of the house.

I am aware, sir, that the rules of the house do not require government members to answer questions set for the late show. When they fail to do so however that is an insult to the house, and I hope this practice will not multiply. The rules were changed to permit adjournment debate in order that we may have greater parliamentary efficiency. I submit that when hon. members co-operate with Your Honour in agreeing to have questions debated on the late show, instead of challenging decisions of the Chair and holding up house procedures, those hon. members and their constituents should not be treated with the kind of arrogance that was displayed last night.

In conclusion, I hope that the President of the Privy Council will look into this matter and make certain that the situation is rectified and does not reoccur.

THE LATE HON. JOHN BRACKEN

TRIBUTES TO FORMER LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, there is a matter that I think should be brought to the attention of the house. I refer to the passing of the Hon. John Bracken, former Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in the house and a member of the Privy Council of Canada who, over many years, gave devoted service not only in the province of Manitoba where he was premier for almost 21 years, but here in the House of Commons as Leader of the Conservative party and as Leader of the Opposition.

His devotion to Canada, his sincerity and, above all, his desire to make certain that all sectors of our country should receive equal attention and that there should be no economic disparities caused him to devote himself throughout the years to the welfare of agriculture in particular.

I first met him 59 years ago when he was a professor in the agricultural college at the University of Saskatchewan. I have known him through the intervening years and feel sure that the house would wish to pay tribute to one who was an ornament of this chamber and a great Canadian. At the same time may we extend to his wife, who throughout the years has been devoted to him in a way no words can express, the condolences of this chamber and the people of Canada.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party I wish to associate myself with the feelings of the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert in expressing our admiration for a Canadian who gave himself to the public life of this country with such devotion and sincerity.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I on behalf of the hon. members of this party express our regret at the passing of the Hon. John Bracken. As a boy when I lived in Winnipeg I knew of him as the premier of that province. I came to know him personally over the years, and I think all who knew him were impressed by his quiet dignity and fine integrity. In his public life he was a good example of one who left the academic field in order to devote himself to the public service. He had the respect of all who knew him and worked with him. We in this party would like to express our admiration for the contribution he made to the public life of Canada, and express our deep sympathy to his wife and the members of his family.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, we of the Ralliement Créditiste are sorry to hear about the death of the Hon. John Bracken. My colleagues and myself wish to join with the other members of the house to extend our deepest sympathy to the bereaved family. I knew Mr. Bracken in 1946 at the time he was Leader of the Opposition. He was a hard worker and a worthy leader of the official opposition in the House of Commons. I must point out that, on the death of Mr. Bracken, Canada mourns the loss of a loyal and devoted Canadian.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

GRAIN

COMPENSATION FOR SHORTFALL FROM PRICES UNDER INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister say what reply the government has made to the communication of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture asking for an immediate announcement by the government that the government will make up to the producer any shortfall from the minimum prices under the International Grains Arrangement?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): I did not personally receive this request; I presume it went to the Prime Minister. As I indicated in my statement last Friday, it is our objective to work with the other exporters to ensure the restoration of the existing I.G.A. price range and bring back stability in wheat pricing. We have not given up that objective.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

DIPLOMATIC EFFORT TO PREVENT BREAKDOWN IN MARKETING

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. My question arises from the minister's answer and from the statement made by Mr. William Hamilton on behalf of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture in his letter to the Prime Minister. It is stated in the letter that a major diplomatic effort by the government is needed to prevent a breakdown of the international machinery for grains marketing. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that such an effort, and the effect referred to by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, is in fact being made? Will he also indicate specifically some of the concrete initiatives the government is taking in this respect?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. When I am in Washington next week I intend to raise this subject with the President of the United States and have our officials discuss various aspects of it. I intend also to do the same with the Prime Minister of Australia who will be here in the succeeding week. I intend to discuss any common approach we might have on a bilateral basis before going to any world council on this problem.

WHEAT—ATTENDANCE AT MEETING OF PRICES REVIEW COMMITTEE

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): One further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Will the minister confirm that a meeting of the International Grains Arrangement price review committee was held in London yesterday? Was Canada represented and if so by whom? Is the minister in a position to report on the meeting or can he say when and where the other meetings referred to by him on Friday last, when he unfortunately had to make this rather dismal announcement to the house, will be held?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister of Agriculture referred to that meeting of the prices review committee which began yesterday in London and is continuing today. However I do not yet have a report on it.

This meeting is a regular one. It was called a number of months ago. Canada is represented there by officials of my department and of the Department of Agriculture, and by a commissioner of the Wheat Board. It is an important one, but we are giving even more importance to the meeting of exporters, to which I have already referred, which will take place early in April. As the Prime Minister just said, he will also be speaking to the President of the United States and to the Prime Minister of Australia on the same subject. These are parts of the diplomatic move to which I referred in my statement last Friday.

Mr. A. P. Gleave (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Can he give the farmers of western Canada an assurance of such price support as may be necessary to maintain incomes in that very important area of Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture said yesterday that the government is considering many things that would be helpful in this serious situation.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether he will personally participate in the meeting to be held early in April, and whether Canada's position will be in any way based on the suggestion made by Mr. Runciman when he said that an entirely new grains agreement should be drawn up, perhaps scrapping years of work on the old one?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I hope Mr. Runciman's extreme solution will not have to be used. I hope that within the framework of the agreement as it now stands there is room for improvement. With respect to the meeting of exporters I do not yet know if I will personally participate, but if I find there is a possibility that this might be useful, I would certainly do so.

Mr. Korchinski: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that we now know this meeting will be held early in April, has the government given consideration to assuring the farmers that they can expect a subsidy from the government until such time as this meeting is held?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question by saying it is premature to look at it from that point of view, and that we are working for a restoration of the I.G.A. pricing schedule.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce whether my interpretation of his remarks today is correct. Do they indicate that he is optimistic that there is not going to be a cut in the price of Canadian wheat, and that the danger of international competition at fire sale prices is not as serious as he believed to be the case on Friday?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, I have not changed since Friday. What I said on Friday was that the Wheat Board would be competitive with the other exporters, and this is being done now.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ESCALATION OF NUCLEAR ARMS RACE FROM CONSTRUCTION OF A.B.M. SYSTEM— REMOVAL OF BOMARC MISSILES

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the statement by Canada's chief disarmament negotiator to the effect that a galloping arms race between the United States and the U.S.S.R. would be catastrophic for Canada may I ask the right hon. gentlemen whether he intends to make any representations to the President of the United States indicating the danger that the construction of an A.B.M. system may further escalate the nuclear arms race?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I stated yesterday I would be discussing this subject with the President but I doubted whether by next Monday we would have taken a finite position on the United States announcement. I did indicate, and I repeat now, that any danger of escalation is something which we would be very anxious to discuss, and if there is evidence of escalation then we would be ready to indicate our disapproval of such escalation.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that the Prime Minister's predecessor, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, indicated in 1965 that it was his government's intention to begin negotiations to remove United States Bomarc missiles from Canadian soil, is the present administration taking any steps to remove Bomarc missiles from Canada?

Mr. Trudeau: Without conceding that that was exactly what the former prime minister said, I would tell the house what I have said in previous months, which is that the matter of our defence policy in the world and in North America is under review and any announcement in this regard will be made in due course.

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government has received a request from the government of the United States for permission to establish anti-ballistic missile bases on Canadian soil?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker; no such request has been received.

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, since the Prime Minister a moment ago referred to the general policy review, and his own interest in the security of the world, may I ask him when we might expect some clear-cut statement on Canada's position with regard to the installation of an A.B.M. system either in the United States or elsewhere?

Mr. J. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary, but I do not know whether or not the Prime Minister intends to reply to the former question.

Mr. Trudeau: I replied to that question yesterday, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary for the Prime Minister is with reference to what he said a moment ago. Did I understand him to say that his government would have its own position clear by Monday next as to whether or not they would oppose the installation of an A.B.M. system either in Canada or in the United States?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker; I said the contrary. I said it was very doubtful that by Monday we would be able to look into all the complex implications of a statement made by the United States government only on Friday.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INQUIRY AS TO DANGER OF STRIKE

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Postmaster General.

Last Saturday, on the television program "Les couche-tard", the Minister of Labour said the Postmaster General was not dead but not strong. I would ask the minister whether the threat of a postal strike in Canada has been completely averted.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I think the threat of a national strike is now past. However, negotiations must take place with the unions and a solution is forthcoming. Grievances have been recognized. We have now reached the fourth level of proceedings and we are waiting for the appointment of an arbitrator.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a supplementary question.

Considering the present discussions, is the minister in a position to say whether the services and the ability of his colleague, the Minister of Labour, are being used?

Mr. Kierans: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

MONTREAL—USE OF ARMED GUARDS IN PARCEL DELIVERY

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. Since the position of outriders on the mail stage went out of use a hundred years ago in Canada and the United States, is the minister now resurrecting this position out of fear, in respect of the situation in Montreal, where armed guards have to accompany the parcel post?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Churchill.

REPRESENTATIONS OF POSTMASTERS

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Postmaster General. Can he say whether he has been able yet to find a solution in respect of the request of the postmasters?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The deputy minister met with a group of staff postmasters. They presented one or two requests to him, and they declared yesterday that they were perfectly satisfied with the responses. I am not quite clear exactly what the representations were. If they had to do with the group of staff postmasters and an announcement concerning salary increases, I would have to say that the Public Service Alliance of Canada is the bargaining agent for the program administration group. I do not know whether the hon. member is talking about the program administration group. However negotiations are under way between this group and the Alliance. I am as anxious as I imagine the management of the Post Office is for the negotiations to come to a successful conclusion.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Speaker, when I first posed the question to the Postmaster General I made a specific request in respect of salaries. I believe this was about mid-February.

Mr. Kierans: Mr. Speaker, there were a number of other matters included in the question asked, one of which was whether we would consider closing post offices where the postmasters themselves were nearing the retirement age. That was one question among others. At that time the deputy minister said we would certainly consider this if the postmaster was within eight or nine months of retirement. Obviously we would not close the post office prior to that retirement date.

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. Georges-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, in view of the many hundreds of letters of complaint I am receiving from my constituency regarding the closing of some 60 post offices, will the minister explain how I can mail my replies when there are almost no post offices left?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARIS—ALLOCATION OF TELEVISION TIME TO SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, in view of the very generous allotment of TV and radio time given Mr. Cardinal who was representing the government of Québec in Paris a short time ago, and the very cavalier treatment meted out to our Secretary of State, and the complete refusal of the government to permit the use of TV and radio time, has the government made any official protest?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I understand the facts are not those which have been recorded in some papers, but that the French a offert—did offer —some air time to the Secretary of State at a time when he had to be back here in Ottawa on another engagement.

Mr. Hees: In other words, on the late, late show.

ATOMIC ENERGY

POSSIBLE RE-OPENING OF URANIUM MINES THROUGH ADDITIONAL PURCHASES

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question, of which I have given notice, to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce in his capacity as the minister acting for the acting minister of energy, mines and resources. My question arises from a news release by the minister on Friday last concerning additional production of heavy water and prospective sales of heavy water nuclear generating stations abroad. Does the government contemplate additional purchases of uranium and may we shortly expect an announcement of the re-opening of uranium mines in Canada?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, there is no change in the government's policy on uranium; uranium is being purchased at this moment for the stockpile. In respect of the possibility of re-opening mines or opening new mines, the experts I could consult, between the time I received notice of this question and now, feel that this may have to wait another year until the big requirement for uranium occurs. Nobody can be sure, however, of what the plans of utility companies in Canada and abroad are in their long term planning for uranium supplies.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, does the bidding on overseas power plants include the supply of uranium oxide?

Mr. Pepin: It does generally, at least for the first fuel loading.

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, can the minister say whether there has been any change recently in the long standing policy that any country purchasing fissionable material from Canada must subject itself to certain conditions?

Mr. Speaker: I would think the hon. member is now asking for a statement of policy and I doubt that this can be done at this time.

FINANCE

PRESSURE ON BANK OF CANADA TO MAINTAIN INTEREST RATE

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in view of the success of the Minister of Finance in his moral suasion of banks in regard to the $400 million refinancing operation, can he say whether he is now prepared to use the same sort of moral suasion on the Bank of Canada to see that the prime rate is not increased?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say that the bond issue went very well, in spite of the fact that the interest rates were raised in the United States in the midst of our bond issue.

Mr. Saltsman: I am very pleased to receive the optimistic report from the minister, but I am wondering whether he will answer my question regarding the intent to increase the interest rate.

Mr. Benson: I suggest to my hon. friend that he read the Bank Act.

HOUSING

RENEWAL PROGRAM IN HULL

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Prime Minister.

We have just learned today that the federal government intends to invest more than $200 million in order to help substantially the urban renewal program in the city of Hull. Can the Prime Minister tell us if this report is true and official and if he is ready to make a statement on this subject today?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he may not ask a minister or the Prime Minister to confirm or deny a news report.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

SPENCES BRIDGE, B.C.—STAKING OF MINERAL CLAIMS

Mr. Len Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question on Indian Affairs for the Minister without Portfolio in connection with the dispute over the staking and recording of mineral claims between Bethlehem Copper Corporation and the Cooks Ferry Indian band of Spences Bridge, British Columbia. Can the minister assure the house that the Indian interest in this dispute is being safeguarded and that the Department of Indian Affairs and/or Justice will be represented in the dispute so that the responsibility of the federal government regarding the Indian people is carried out?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I can give the house that assurance. There have been consultations between the officials of the Department of Indian Affairs and those of the Department of Justice, and there will be a representative of the federal government present when the case opens tomorrow. In addition to that, the Cooks Ferry band have hired what I am told is very competent counsel. All steps will be taken from the point of view of the federal government to protect the interests of the Indian people involved.

Mr. Marchand (Kamloops-Cariboo): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister also advise the house if he or his department would take steps, or if steps are being taken, to amend the British Columbia Indian mineral resources act so that such disputes will not occur again, and maximum benefit from mineral resources on Indian reserves can be realized by the Indian people?

Mr. Andras: That course of action is being given deep consideration now, Mr. Speaker.

SEARCH IN EUROPE FOR CAPITAL

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Finance, and ask whether his colleague the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is presently touring Europe in search of funds for Canada.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Not funds for the government, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister elaborate on the purpose of the trip?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member would have to ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I did not ask him why he was going to Europe.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—CLOSING OF PORT AS STRIKE SOLUTION

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for giving me the opportunity to do my physical exercises during the question period.

I would like to direct to the Minister of Labour a question deriving from the statement he made over the weekend, but in his absence I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

The Minister of Labour said over the weekend that closing the harbour in Montreal would bring a solution to the present dispute. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the Minister of Labour was stating government policy when he suggested to close the harbour in Montreal for one year as a solution to the labour dispute there and whether it is the only means the government is proposing to bring about a settlement in this dispute?

Mr. Speaker: As far as a statement made outside the house is concerned, the hon. member can only ask the Prime Minister whether the minister's statement represents government policy and I think it is what he was suggesting in the first part of his question.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Labour sometimes takes devious ways to achieve generally happy results; perhaps he was compelling the hon. member to do not only physical exercises, but intellectual exercises as well.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether, with the help of his own intellectual exercises, he has a solution to offer to settle the dispute before the situation deteriorates further?

Mr. Trudeau: I think the hon. member might wish to direct his question to the Minister of Labour, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Hon George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the port is in the Prime Minister's constituency, may we take it that it will not be allowed to close?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE INVITATION TO PRESIDENT DE GAULLE

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Arising from the statement made yesterday by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, that the onus is on the government of France to issue an invitation to the Prime Minister to visit France, may I ask the Prime Minister whether as a result of the minister's statement there has been any communication from the French embassy in Ottawa. In other words, has France taken the hint?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since yesterday I have not had any rapport with my neighbours.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Trudeau: But I must say that it would have to be a pretty pressing invitation because I have just heard that "La Pérouse" has lost one star, and one of the incentives I had for going to Paris has now gone.

SEARCH IN EUROPE FOR CAPITAL

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Now that the Prime Minister has cleared up that mystery, could he clear up for us the purpose of the visit to Europe of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The minister has gone to Europe to interest various European governments and sectors of the population in the development of the Canadian north from various points of view, —capital investment, immigration, development of various kinds.

Mr. MacInnis: Resign, Benson.

Mr. Trudeau: I guess there is some problem over there, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I just finished asking the Minister of Finance a question and he advised the house that he did not know why the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was in Europe. The Prime Minister has now given us the answer to the question. I think the Minister of Finance owes us an apology for his answer.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not owe an apology, at all. I simply said that the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development was not in Europe borrowing money for the government. As a matter of fact, the exchange reserves of Canada are standing up very well, much to the—

Mr. Hees: Considering the way the government has been run.

Mr. Benson: —consternation of the opposition, and we have no reason for wanting to borrow funds to increase our exchange reserves.

Mr. Stanfield: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I agree that the Minister of Finance does not necessarily have to answer questions directed to him. On the other hand, I do not think he should trespass upon the good nature of the house, and yourself, sir, and make a statement that bears no relation at all to the question directed to him.

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF INTEREST RATES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put my question to the Minister of Finance.

Would he tell the house if he or the government intends to study thoroughly the problem of the present interest rates, since they are at their highest in this century and do not seem to encourage foreign investments?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question seems to be too comprehensive and should be put on the order paper.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

LONDON, ONT.—SHORTAGE OF REGISTERED NURSES AT WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. In view of the large number of letters that many of us are receiving from registered nurses at Westminster hospital in London, Ontario, may we assume that members of parliament from that area have made representations to the minister; and can he tell us what assurances he has given them that the subject matter of these letters will be dealt with, namely, the shortage of registered nurses at this hospital?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member that it is certainly not in order as a question at this time to ask whether hon. members have made representations to the minister.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Then, Mr. Speaker, may I simply ask the heart of the question. What steps is the minister taking to meet the problems created by the shortage of registered nurses at Westminster hospital?

Mr. Speaker: I would think the question could be considered at the time of adjournment.

FISHERIES

SEALS—ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN SHIPS DURING CESSATION OF CANADIAN OPERATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. It refers to a reply given by his parliamentary secretary yesterday to a question posed to him regarding foreign vessels that were killing seals inside the three mile limit at a time when the minister was making his statement outside the house on Saturday. My question is: Has the government taken any action against the four Norwegian vessels that were caught killing seals within the three mile limit, similar to the action taken against the Japanese vessel on the west coast?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the hunt for seals off Labrador is under the closest possible surveillance. The fisheries protection vessel, the Cape Freels, is there; we have aircraft there, and a Department of Transport icebreaker is on its way. We know now that there are five Norwegian vessels inside our territorial limits. They have been warned both by the Canadian authorities and by the Norwegian authorities not to take seals. If we find they are killing seals we will of course have no alternative but to take the same action as we took with respect to the Japanese vessel off the west coast.

Mr. McGrath: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I refer the minister to the reply given yesterday by his parliamentary secretary in which he left no doubt about the fact that they were taking seals. As a consequence, why have not these vessels been arrested?

Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this has yet to be established as a fact.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Davis: We have had one fisheries officer on board one of the vessels. We have no final evidence that they have taken seals within Canadian waters. But as I say, we have the situation under very close surveillance.

SEALS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF SEASON

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday I put a question to the minister's parliamentary secretary; today I wish to add the following question to it. Has the minister received from a number of fishermen in Prince Edward Island and from the minister of fisheries of that province a strong request to extend the seal hunt season until the allocation has reached 50,000 pounds?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): I have received a recommendation to that effect from the minister of fisheries of Prince Edward Island. We find however that less than one third the normal number of seals have entered the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Some 35,000 whitecoats have been taken; the quota is normally 50,000. A careful review of the situation after the submission was received from the minister of fisheries indicates that the number of seals immediately north of Prince Edward Island is much smaller than had originally been expected.

SEALS—REPRESENTATIONS URGING TERMINATION OF KILLING

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Speaking of representations, may I ask the Minister of Fisheries whether he has received innumerable and voluminous representations from all parts of Canada asking for an end to this seal killing, and will consideration be given by the government between now and a year from now in respect of this matter and something provided by way of substitution for those who otherwise would be deprived of their earnings?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Numerous representations have been made by Canadians and an even greater number of representations by people from other countries in this respect. I would like to assure the right hon. gentleman that we will give every consideration to whether or not the hunt should be continued next year.

Mr. McGrath: I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a representative of the fishermen and not of the seals I should like to put the following question to the minister: Would he give serious consideration to having this matter referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries?

Mr. Davis: It sounds like a very good idea, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

PREFERENCE TO SORTING OF FIRST CLASS MAIL

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have a question for the Postmaster General. Will the minister give consideration to giving preference to the sorting of first class mail over the weekend to ensure that it is given priority for Monday delivery?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): We already do so, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

REFERRAL OF OUTSTANDING ISSUES TO MEDIATION PROCEDURES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether, arising out of the apparent inconclusiveness of his talks with the president of the Letter Carriers Union, he is now prepared to agree to a mediator being invited to settle the outstanding issues which are a constant threat to a sure and speedy mail delivery—not just the grievance procedure he has announced, but a reference of the outstanding issues?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): There are only two sources for the conclusion that my meetings with Mr. Décarie yesterday were inconclusive, one of which is myself, and I did not give the Leader of the Opposition any information that would lead him to draw such a conclusion. The actual fact is that we had a very useful and pleasant discussion. So far as I know, the letter carriers are satisfied that the four main issues are proceeding to adjudication. They asked neither for arbitration nor for mediation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton-East Richmond): I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the question asked by the Leader of the New Democratic party in reference to Bomarc sites. The Prime Minister indicated that he was not sure of the stand taken by the former prime minister. Was it not the question of Bomarc sites that brought on the remarks by the Prime Minister that Mr. Pearson was the unfrocked priest of peace?

TRANSPORT

P.E.I.—REVIEW OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT CROSSING DECISION

Mr. Melvin McQuaid (Cardigan): I have a question for the Prime Minister. I should like to ask him whether he has received a request from the premier of Prince Edward Island asking the government to review its decision not to proceed with the Northumberland Straits crossing, and if that request has been made what answer has been given to the premier?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I did receive such a request and I answered the premier's telegram. I do not think there is any reason not to make it public but I would not want to do so without the premier's authorization.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF STANFORD STUDIES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Transport indicate to the house now when the documents having to do with Stanford Research Institute studies, which he assured me on three previous occasions would be tabled, will in fact be tabled in the house?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should respond to that question. The replies from most of the departments have been received. I understand that a request for their approval has been put to the appropriate provincial authorities and that at the moment this authority has not been received from all provincial governments. As soon as an affirmative reply has been received, we will table the documents.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): When this notice of motion for the production of papers was agreed to, had the government not already consulted the provincial authorities in order to give that consent?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

AGRICULTURE

SUGAR BEETS—PAYMENTS TO ONTARIO GROWERS

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Now that the necessary estimates have gone through the house, can the minister say when the phasing out payments to the sugar beet growers in southwestern Ontario will be made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): I am not sure that I can give the exact date without checking, but so far as I know, now that the authorization has been given all that is required is the mechanical process of issuing the cheques.

HOUSING

LEGISLATION BASED ON TASK FORCE RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): My question is directed to the Minister of Transport in charge of housing. When will the minister bring in legislation relating to the recommendations of the task force report on housing?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): I hope there will not be much delay. Satisfactory progress is being made. There is quite a large package of amendments that we are considering, and I hope I will be able to report to the house quite soon.

NEW DEPARTMENT—DISCUSSIONS ON URBAN RENEWAL

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. When will the government set up the new ministry of housing and urban development recommended in the report of the task force on housing?

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gilbert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I believe the Prime Minister was ready to answer my question.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hamilton West has a supplementary question. Perhaps the two questions can be answered at the same time.

Mr. Alexander: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. My question is directed to the Minister of Transport. I see him over there smiling at me and I know he knows what I am going to ask him. About a week and a half ago the minister assured me there would be meetings with several cities, particularly with the city of Hamilton, in order that discussions take place with respect to urban renewal. Has the minister had any such meetings, and if so with what cities?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): My hon. friend will be pleased to know that I have spent quite some time looking at that proposal in the last day or two and I hope I will be in a position to meet representatives of the city some time next week.

Mr. Alexander: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister's answer is optimistic but I did not get the name of the city to which he referred. Perhaps he would clear it up for me.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gilbert: My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. When will the government set up the new ministry of housing and urban development recommended in the report of the task force on housing?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know of any such plans, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Transport. I should like to ask him whether he would consider bringing the Prime Minister with him to the next meeting with the municipal authorities on housing, since the latter was so warmly received in Montreal during the weekend?

RENEWAL PROGRAM IN HULL

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether the federal government intends to give shortly some financial assistance to set up an urban renewal program for the city of Hull and its vicinity?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for quite a long time the tripartite board in which the federal government and those of Quebec and Ontario are represented has been discussing the future of the national capital. It has gone through certain stages and the federal government is rather anxious to go ahead.

But, as we have always thought that federal-provincial co-operation is necessary, especially in that field which comes mostly under provincial jurisdiction, we are now more or less waiting for an agreement which has not yet been finalized. It remains, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government is rather eager to proceed.

OAKVILLE, ONT.—BOARDING UP OF UNITS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport in his capacity as minister in charge of housing. Did Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation consider the needs for low income housing at Oakville, Ontario before boarding up some 70 housing units, and has the minister received requests that such housing be made available? If so, with what reaction?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that question, which is very similar to one asked previously, should be placed on the order paper or discussed at the time of adjournment.

Mr. McCleave: Ten o'clock.

AIRPORTS

GANDER, NFLD.—STATUS OF ADMINISTRATION

Mr. John Lundrigan (Gander-Twillingate): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received a copy of a brief from the Gander civil service association regarding elevation of the airport administration to regional status? If so, what action does the government plan to take?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question should be placed on the order paper.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

RIVERS, MAN.—POSSIBLE CLOSING OF CANADIAN FORCES BASE

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The minister received an official delegation from Manitoba yesterday in relation to the announced closing of the Canadian Forces base at Rivers. My question is: Will the minister agree to table in this house or otherwise make public the document showing the timetable for the phasing out of those bases that are slated for phasing out?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): With respect, Mr. Speaker, I think the assertion of the hon. member that an announcement had been made on the closing of Rivers is incorrect. As we have indicated on many previous occasions, this is a marginal base and we are considering its future. As a result of the discussions which took place yesterday this matter will be investigated further, and—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

OIL

PRUDHOE BAY—COMMON CANADA-U.S. MARKET

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for recognizing me again. I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and ask him whether the government task force on oil policy is currently studying the significance for Canada of the Prudhoe Bay discoveries, and has the government task force been asked to consider the possibility of a common market in oil between Canada and the United States?

Hon. Jean-Luc Pepin (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the task force has been working on all aspects of the oil situation, as recently modified by the Prudhoe Bay discoveries and also by possible findings on Canadian territory. The Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in Calgary today speaking to a group of oil men about these matters.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley.

Mr. Paproski: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have to bring to the attention of the hon. member that we are about reaching the end of the question period, and I thought that we should give an opportunity to the hon. member at the other end of the house.

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and is supplementary to the last one. Would the minister comment on and/or table in this house the feasibility study made by his department in connection with a possible oil line to Montreal from western Canada?

Mr. Pepin: Mr. Speaker, this is an internal document and represents a contribution of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce to the over-all study being made by the task force.

BILINGUALISM AND BICULTURALISM

PUBLICATION OF THIRD AND FOURTH REPORTS

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question.

Can he assure the house that the report of the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission on bilingualism in the public service will be published in the spring of 1969 at the latest, as was announced earlier?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me the hon. member is repeating a question exactly as it was asked a few days ago.

Mr. Fortin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Last week, I asked the question and the Prime Minister did not seem to know what commission was involved. Therefore, I want to tell him it is the Laurendeau-Dunton Commission and I request the same information he could not provide then.

[Mr. Pepin.]

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe the hon. member is referring to Volumes III and IV of this Commission's report. As far as I know, no date was given for the publication of those papers. True, some time ago newspapers mentioned that parts of the volumes had been given to the Queen's Printer. I checked and the information is unfounded. Perhaps it concerned working papers or other documents, because at the time I inquired, two weeks ago, Volumes III and IV were not at the Printing Bureau. Besides, the Commission did not say when the volumes would be published; of course, it makes its own decisions in that regard and there is nothing I can do.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (4) (a)—UTILIZATION OF BANK OF CANADA TO ALLEVIATE TAX BURDEN

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That, in the opinion of this house, the government should consider the advisability of making use of the powers and resources of the Bank of Canada for the purpose of alleviating the taxation burden which weighs upon Canadian, provincial and municipal taxpayers and for undertaking an efficient struggle against poverty in order to establish a just society.

Mr. Speaker, this is the first time the Ralliement Créditiste is accorded the privilege of introducing a non-confidence motion under the new Standing Orders. We are therefore happy of this opportunity, as an opposition party, to draw the people's attention to some points apparently neglected or overlooked by the government, and to the pressing problems the government has failed to tackle.

Mr. Speaker, this debate and the solutions we are going to propose will at least make the people look into the policies of the Ralliement Créditiste, even though the government, because of its arrogance, its apathy or its indifference for the Canadian taxpayers, turns a more or less deaf ear. Whether the government or its members realize it or not, or whether they even deny it, the situation prevailing now in Canada is of the most serious nature.

Governments, and the federal government in particular, are in need of money. They are asking more and more of the Canadian taxpayer, as the President of the Treasury Board

(Mr. Drury) commented when the Main Estimates for 1969-70 were tabled in the house. For that period, the estimates totalled $11,858 million as compared to $10,826 million for 1968-69, an increase of $1,032 million. The minister added:

There may be a need, as in the past, for supplementary estimates in the course of the year to meet urgent and unforeseen requirements.

So, that means, Mr. Speaker, that, when money is scarce, the government will be compelled, for the 1969-70 period, to ask for $1,032 million more from the Canadian taxpayer.

For its part, the government of Quebec announced last week estimates of $3,176,323,000 for 1969-70, an increase of $384,708,000 over the previous year. The Minister of Finance of the province of Quebec (Mr. Dozois) has not yet made known the rates of the new taxes that he will be compelled to levy and of which the taxpayers of the province will hear soon enough.

In Ontario, the government announced, a few days ago, estimates of $2,998 million as well as new taxes on cigarettes, liquor, meals, hotel rooms and production equipment. It also made known its intention to invade the field of personal and corporate income tax.

Those are a few examples of the urgent needs of the higher levels of government. Municipalities, corporations and individuals are not safe from similar worries. Far from it.

In Montreal, for instance, the property tax recently went up by 24 per cent and the municipal authorities, shorter of money than ever, had to negotiate a $26 million loan on the money market in West Germany. It is not the first time that governments or corporations have to resort to foreign financing to make up for the lack of Canadian funds needed to ensure the social development of the country.

The Ontario and the Quebec governments had to get loans from Germany during the year. The city of Sherbrooke had to apply to German interests to obtain $1 million. Hydro-Quebec is regularly negotiating with West Germany, and its commitments with German bankers now exceed $100 million. Why? Because money is scarce and costly in Canada.

We can therefore assume, Mr. Speaker, that all these loans negotiated by the governments, these sales of government bonds, of savings bonds especially at high prices have as a result incited the holders of municipal bonds or of corporations' preferred shares to sell them and to buy federal government bonds. This puts the municipalities in a bad situation and compels them to apply to foreign financial enterprises.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) clearly recognized this on January 7 last when in a speech before the Canadian Club in Ottawa he expressed his worry about the slackness of the bond market. No wonder, therefore, that the Montreal newspaper The Gazette published on January 9 the following rebuke aimed at the Minister of Finance. I quote:

• (3:00 p.m.)

[English]

The state of the bond market, especially the market for bonds with longer terms, is exactly what one might expect as the result of the government's policies over many years. The government has never really controlled its spending. And when it has spent heavily in a period when inflation was general, it has only spread inflation on its way, almost with its blessing.

The most that the government has done in recent budgets is attempt to reduce the yearly rate of increase in its spending, never to cut back the spending from what it was the year before. But even this has not been successful. The government, in the spring, promised a balanced budget. But in the autumn it faced a fantastic deficit.

[Translation]

And the editorial writer concluded:

[English]

Without bonds and without long-term bonds neither governments nor businesses can function properly. But the credibility gap in the bond market will have to be closed. And it will not be closed until the government closes the credibility gap in its own policies. So long as present policies continue, no one can trust the money values of the future.

Mr. Benson does well to weep. But he weeps for the wrong reasons. And, surely, he must know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the situation is not any better for individuals and corporations. The minister does not seem to have acquainted himself with the unemployment statistics published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics last Thursday, and he does not seem to share the concern of the industrial and business sectors about the federal policy in connection with the recommendations of the Carter Commission.

From mid-January to mid-February 1969, the number of unemployed increased by 6,000, from 467,000 to 473,000. Even if the statisticians say that the unemployment rate decreased from 6 per cent to 5.9 per cent, that does not solve the problem of the 6,000 newly unemployed, nor that of the 473,000 Canadians now without work.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

The enterprises themselves are not secure either from scarce money or the greed of governments, including the federal government. In fact, speaking at the 25th annual meeting of the Mining Association of Canada, the president of that organization, Mr. J. D. Barrington dealt with the uncertainties that prevail because of the government's attitude regarding the Carter report recommandations and he asked from the government the assurance that in its tax reform policy it would positively recognize the essential requirements of the mining industry in Canada and that it would assess both the economic and political effects of every change considered.

If we turn now to housing or to the building industry in general, we can say that it is a mess at this time. How can we explain that in a country which will need a million new housing units during the next five years, or a minimum of 200,000 per year, more than 40 per cent of the employees of the building industry in Montreal, for instance, cannot find a job enabling them to get a decent annual salary even if the average hourly wage is about $5?

The point is that the housing industry is paralyzed by the trouble-making policy of the federal government. The taxes now levied by the federal government, the fact that money is in short supply as well as expensive, make any construction work practically impossible.

We have spoken on several occasions about the 11 per cent federal tax on building materials, which puts this whole industry at a standstill. What has the government done so far to comply with the rightful request to eliminate this obnoxious, inequitable and antisocial tax? Nothing whatsoever.

This 11 per cent tax is not the only barrier to a desirable progress in the field of housing construction.

On January 3 last, the past president of the association of housing contractors of Montreal suggested that all housing contractors should refuse to build houses as long as the new 9⅜ per cent interest rate set up by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation remains in force. He forecast that this exorbitant rate would result in a depression in the field of housing construction, an increase in unemployment in this and other related fields, as well as in rents, and this was confirmed this year in Montreal when increases ranging between 10 and 40 per cent were announced by landlords.

[Mr. Rondeau.]

We will hear about the Hellyer report and the resulting projects, but everything seems to indicate that the Hellyer proposals were not received very warmly in Canada. I have here a few comments picked at random from various Canadian sources, and made after the Hellyer report had been published:

On January 30, the Director of the Canadian Conference on Housing, Canadian Welfare Council, Mr. Michael Wheeler said this:

[English]

The federal task force on housing report offers nothing concrete for the housing needs of the more than one million Canadian families with incomes below $5,500.

[Translation]

And now, here is what the comptroller of the city of Toronto, Mr. Allan Lamport, had to say, as reported in the Globe and Mail on January 9:

[English]

"Transport Minister Paul Hellyer's study group on housing is the biggest 'whitewash' I've ever seen", Toronto controller said yesterday.

[Translation]

And the article goes on to say:

[English]

Mr. Lamport said the group inquiry into housing problems avoided doing the one thing he should have done—setting a ceiling on interest rates for mortgages on houses.

[Translation]

Last January 8, in an editorial presented on Quebec-Canada Television, Limited, on channels 4 and 5, which today serve 473,000 viewers, the following was heard:

What will result from the Hellyer report to improve the construction of single housing? It is certainly not by increasing its interest rate from 8½ to 9⅜ per cent, as the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has done, that the central government will encourage Canadians to build. Nor is it by maintaining the 11 per cent tax on building materials that the governments will encourage builders to erect housing complexes.

Now here is what the Confederation of National Trade Unions had to say in its annual memorandum to the Canadian government last February 18. I would very much like to know what the Minister of Forestry and Rural Development (Mr. Marchand) thinks of the statement of his successor at the head of the CNTU.

• (3:10 p.m.)

I quote:

One word describes it: deceiving. If your government were to implement those recommendations, it would, on the whole, further consolidate the foundations of this unjust society which is ours. Not one recommendation capable of solving the housing problem, the problem of the low income and even of the average income groups; encouragement to run oneself into debt for life, through the recommendation aimed at extending the terms of reimbursement, which is an apology of the efficiency of private enterprise in a field where the social needs are tremendous and where private enterprise has failed, the hoax and false pretences connected with the concept of property ownership by individuals who, over a period of 40 years, will pay three times over for their homes. It is readily realized that workers and wage earners want at least to be home owners in a society where tenants are systematically abused. At any rate, the task force is merely offering an illusion of property ownership to the people.

Abolition of the 11 per cent tax on building materials, if accepted, will clearly not be enough to reduce materially the cost of housing as a counter-measure to the present interest rate of 9.3 per cent.

The Hellyer report has failed to deal with the basic problem and to tackle the root of the evil which is eroding the society as a whole, that is, the present financial system.

Here is an excerpt from the report concerning the financing of housing:

To achieve this minimum target of one million new housing units by 1973, will require new housing capital of about 20 billion dollars. The task force believes that the vast majority of these funds can be provided by the private sector. Over the past 14 years lending institutions, primarily insurance companies have provided 6.6 billion dollars or some 50 per cent of their total assets.

In view of these findings and of this recognition by the Hellyer task force, we are surprised, as should all Canadians, that the government has decided to subject life insurance companies to the income tax act during the current, and almost inexhaustible, fiscal year and to dry up that source of available funds for the construction of new housing units.

What will be the result of that policy on life insurance companies? First of all, with this centralizing act we can expect to see several companies merge which otherwise, because of their weakness, could not continue to offer enough protection considering present needs.

And so, companies which previously made conservative investments, in mortgages, government bonds and low yield but safe debentures will be forced to improve the quality of their investments to cope with the cost of living index, and to look increasingly to co-ownership in the form of industrial, financial and commercial shares in order to increase their revenue and share it with the policy holders through reductions in premiums or higher profits.

The high premium on Canada savings bonds has attracted many investors who sold their low yield industrial and municipal bonds to purchase Canadian savings bonds.

However, it must be recognized that these high premium bonds impose a heavy burden on future generations which will have to pay the high interest on those bonds as well as redeem them at maturity.

Need I point out that those bonds also channel Canadian savings towards certain forms of security, to the detriment of the bonds and industrial shares market, thereby depriving industry in general from the funds it needs to expand.

As I also pointed out, by turning to private savings to finance its debt and to taxes on insurance companies the government deprives industry and construction of the money they need to develop.

• (3:20 p.m.)

It follows that the construction industry for instance will be unable to meet the present requirements due to a shortage of available capital and the inaction or apathy of the federal government.

Mention should be made of the credit deserved by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer), responsible for the report on housing and urban development, who in some way anticipated this shortage of available capital by including in his report the following recommendation:

Serious consideration should be given to the establishment of a Central Mortgage Bank to provide additional liquidity for existing lending operations and as a necessary prerequisite to the creation of new mortgage institutions.

But how can we reconcile this admission when the report immediately adds the following:

While lacking any panacean solution to the problem of high interest rates, the task force believes one concrete step can be taken which will have a positive effect on the level of mortgage rates in Canada. Last year the federal government dropped the previous practice of setting the maximum NHA rate at a fixed level and, instead, freed it at least in part to be adjusted automatically on a quarterly basis to a rate of 2.25 per cent maximum above that of long-term government of Canada bonds. This represented a major step forward from the fixed rate system under which housing suffered from a continual boom-bust cycle of financing depending on whether the rate so fixed was high or low in relation to interest rates generally.

This means that, on the one hand, the government regrets the high interest rates and, on the other hand, it authorizes the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to raise its own interest rate. This is incomprehensible. This is a makeshift policy. These are conflicting approaches.

For all these reasons, this government does not deserve the confidence of the people but should rather be put to the test of a non-confidence vote. This is why we are pleased to move the motion which was read at the opening of my remarks.

This is how we could implement the proposals intended to reduce the interest rates and to promote housing construction in Canada as well as economic development.

Section 18 of the Bank of Canada Act, chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1952, deals with the operations and powers of the Bank. According to paragraph (1) (c) it may:

(c) buy and sell or rediscount short term securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province—

—Those who always laughed at Creditiste proposals can see, on reading section 18 of chapter 13 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, that it would be very easy to put into practice the proposals of the Creditistes by applying the provisions of the present act.

According to paragraph (d) of the same sub-section, the Bank of Canada may:

(d) buy and sell securities issued or guaranteed by Canada or any province, having a maturity exceeding two years—

—namely long-term securities. On the other hand, according to the provisions of paragraph (j), the Bank of Canada may:

(j) make loans or advances for periods not exceeding six months to the Government of Canada or the government of any province on the pledge or hypothecation of readily marketable securities—

Under paragraph (k), the Bank of Canada may again:

(k) make loans to the Government of Canada or the government of any province—

Sub-section (1) of section 20 provides, and I quote:

(1) The bank shall act as fiscal agent of the Government of Canada without charge and, subject to the provisions of this Act, by agreement, may also act as banker or fiscal agent of the government of any province.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the role the Bank of Canada should have played toward the federal government and the provinces in order to enable them to liquidate their debts and honour their obligations, but the government has not used its sovereign power on matters of currency and credit to control credit and currency in the best interest of the economy of the nation, as it is stated in the preamble of the Bank of Canada Act.

If we refer to the debates that brought about the establishment of the Bank of Canada, the then Minister of Finance, Mr. Rhodes—a Progressive Conservative—said, and I quote from page 828 of the official report of the Debates of the House of Commons:

—the Bank should be available to the government specially in times of crisis and urgency.

He added, and I quote from page 828 of Hansard of the same year:

The dominion and provincial governments are also eligible for loans and advances—

Further on, he stated:

—The bank is to be required to act as fiscal agent of the Dominion of Canada without charge and may also by agreement act as banker or fiscal agent for the government of any province.

I am happy to see that the Minister of Finance is in the house, which should enable him to say once and for all what he thinks of the use of the Bank of Canada under the present law which authorizes the Bank to finance the federal government, the provincial governments and the public agencies.

However, when it was nationalized the following year by the King government, in practice the Bank of Canada became an organization of the federal Department of Finance and, for all practical purposes, it ceased being a bank for the use of Canadian governments. It therefore became an organization with centralization purposes, a federal control.

However, in spite of this, the Bank of Canada Act still allows that organization to favour the financing of provincial expenditures. I am quoting hereunder what Mr. François-Albert Angers, director of l'Ecole des Hautes Etudes commerciales, said in the brief he submitted to the Quebec royal commission on constitutional problems in 1956.

However, that last subversion was not a matter of course, even with the total nationalization of the Bank of Canada by the federal government, although it was greatly to be feared. In spite of its nationalization, the central bank should follow its own policy to follow, in agreement, of course, with the general policy, but not necessarily and immediately with all the views of the government. Even nationalized, the bank should be able, always in agreement with the general policy, to deal directly with banks and through them with the business world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has now expired. Does the house unanimously agree to allow the hon. member to carry on his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Not too long.

Mr. Rondeau: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, as well as my hon. friends for allowing me to pursue my remarks.

Mr. Angers stated further, and I quote:

It should buy a large number of provincial bonds according to the requirements of their fiscal policy in harmony with the country's general policy. After all, provincial governments are Her Majesty's sovereign governments, responsible to their own people. There is no more reason to put them under guardianship than to put under guardianship the central government itself or the businessmen, all of them being patrons of the banking system.

Technically, there is no objection to it at all and it is in no way detrimental to federal jurisdiction in monetary or banking matters.

● (3:30 p.m.)

The central government still retains control over the monetary and banking system. It determines the general direction of policy. However, such direction having been determined and involving, for instance, a fiscal policy that shows a deficit, one can hardly see why the Bank of Canada could not buy the province's bonds to help them finance their public works or their unemployment insurance, as it purchases those of the central government for identical purposes. In such a light, it would be comparatively easy to convince the provinces to try and avoid increasing taxes in periods of crisis. Electoral interests would contribute to make them accept both the idea and the financial facilities, because governments which tax heavily in difficult periods are never very popular.

Monetary expansion for public financing in emergencies is therefore allowed. But too many writers still consider it as using the printing press. Such an expression should certainly not be avoided. It is colourful. At least we should know that it can only be used now as a figure of speech.

In a system like the Canadian one, it is not the printing of money which constitutes monetary circulation. On the contrary, the latter calls for bills issued on request for withdrawal from banking deposits. Such deposits constitute today the real monetary circulation and permit us to settle most of our exchanges without using money. Money itself comes into it only for small current operations.

The solution arising out of these findings would enable each level of government, under the general direction of the central government as exercised in terms of its jurisdiction over banks and money, to resort to the policy of cyclical budgets and deficit financing. It would have multiple advantages, firstly with regard to the real independence of the provinces and then in connection with the realistic requirements resulting from the various conditions in Canada.

As Mr. Roland Parenteau has shown in the study already quoted, the economic conditions peculiar to each province vary extremely from one region to another in Canada. Some provinces, like British Columbia and Ontario, are really much more powerful and wealthy relatively speaking than the federal government; the latter partakes of their wealth but also of the poverty of some other provinces and sets the average.

Those two provinces are well able to finance all their needs without exception. Other provinces, such as the Western provinces, come next with regard to average income. Quebec follows, half-way between the two extremes, then come the Maritimes at the very bottom.

The case of each province can be studied later if this should prove necessary, at which time some national compensation can be provided if circumstances warrant it.

Nothing could be simpler than to transfer any provincial deficit to the national debt. Such questions, however, should be settled at interprovincial conferences, to start with, (possibly through a Council of provincial States that could be created along the same lines as the American Council of State Governments), and then at federal-provincial conferences.

Thus, interested parties would be made thoroughly aware of the problem facing the provinces in need of help and it would be possible to avoid a return to the senseless system, from the standpoint of autonomy, which consists in favouring (sic) all provinces, at the cost of their own financing and their freedom of action, on the plea that some of them are in a difficult situation.

Such are the solutions, Mr. Speaker, which the government should apply in order to solve the financial problem facing the government of Canada, the provincial governments and the municipalities that are looking for capital.

Such solutions would help private enterprise to reassert itself, to finance its own needs, and would allow private savings, once again, to look after the industrial needs of the country, instead of being used as a screen to hide the mistakes of the federal government.

For all those reasons, Mr. Speaker, we believe the government does not deserve the confidence of this house any longer.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, we should look fully into the proposition of the amendment now before us. In order to make it easier for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson), I shall speak in English. Incidentally, my notes are in English.

[English]

This motion asks that the government should consider the advisability of making use of the powers and resources of the Bank of Canada for the purpose of alleviating the taxation burden. The motion does not, of course, determine in what way. It merely expresses a pious hope. The Bank of Canada is a central bank which has an essential role as the reserve bank organism in Canada, and it also participates as a central bank in a world context which in this day and age is even as important as its role within Canada. In any event, the motion expresses the pious hope that, in an indeterminate way which the proposer of the motion has not indicated, the government of Canada should make the Bank of Canada some sort of supine instrument at the beck and call of the Minister of Finance.

The hon. member was not here in years past when the role of the governor of the Bank of Canada or the relationship between the Minister of Finance and the governor was finally and clearly established. It was shown that there must be independance in the relationship between the governor of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance. True enough, the Minister of Finance may give directions to the governor, but if the governor does not think they are proper he may insist upon receiving them in writing. The minister can give directions and give them in writing, but I suggest to the hon. member that the required degree of co-operation and, shall we say, degree of confidence and support as between the Minister of Finance and the governor of the Bank of Canada would then go right out the window.

In any event, the motion does not say in what way there shall be an alleviation of the burden of taxation. I suppose one might presume that the interest burden imposed upon the municipalities, the provinces and the federal government could be lowered—and I think this is the basis of the suggestion of hon. members to our left—by the Bank of Canada making loans apparently without limit to the various government organisms at an interest rate barely above zero, merely a nominal rate, and to that extent thereby perhaps reducing the expenses of the various governments.

Then we come to the words, "and for undertaking an efficient struggle against poverty in order to establish a just society." Now, what on earth does that mean? I must consider the motion in the sense of whether or not it is meaningful for me in order to be able to lend support to the hon. member. If it is meaningless to me, then I cannot lend my support.

I think back to my days in Alberta when social credit was coming in from 1935 to 1940. We saw the old cranking machine in the offing. This is all it was.

Mr. Rondeau: Be serious.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I am deadly serious. I was there. The administration of that time thought it could put it into effect but it was a complete and utter failure. The proof of the pudding is that that administration has completely abandoned any attempt at instituting social credit. In British Columbia, of course, the administration has never made any pretence in this regard. Its only allegiance is to a name because it had to find a name. On reflection I must say too that in what I was saying about finding a name not only do I say "an aim" but also "a name" for that administration.

I find it rather difficult to follow the thesis of the hon. member for determining that the Bank of Canada should be prepared at all times to purchase the securities or obligations of municipal governments, the provinces and the federal government apparently without restriction so that these bodies may carry out their works as they see fit.

Mr. Rondeau: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Then the hon. member should say so. He said that the Bank of Canada must purchase the obligations of the municipalities and provinces. Then the hon. member intervenes and says he did not say without limit.

• (3:40 p.m.)

Mr. Rondeau: I did not say that.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The hon. member must say so because he says the Bank of Canada must purchase the obligations of these municipalities and provinces. The hon. member says he did not say without limitation. Who would establish the limitation? The Minister of Finance in effect would do so since the Bank of Canada would be acting as his agent. If in fact the Minister of Finance, were to establish such a limitation we would immediately have reached the point where the Minister of Finance would be pressing with his fingers on the municipalities and provinces. Of course, that would be constitutional nonsense today.

Mr. Rondeau: We agree.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): What is the hon. member asking that I should do? He is asking me to support this motion, at the same time recognizing the provincial government's right, which it now has constitutionally, to spend freely the money which now falls under its own jurisdiction. Having said this, we are told that the federal government must now impose a direct or indirect control on the provinces by agreeing that it will buy from province "x" or municipality "y" so many millions of dollars in securities in each and every year. What is this but an immediate control on the pursestrings? The federal government would then be manipulating the policies of these governments—provincial and municipal.

I can tell the hon. member how this works. In the province of Alberta the municipalities, school boards and hospital districts have not had at all times to go on the market for their borrowings. They go to an organization called the Alberta Municipal Corporation which is a centralized financing agency supported by the government of the province of Alberta. That agency goes out on the market and borrows money at more favourable rates.

The province can then say it does not borrow any money but in fact it was the government of Alberta that guaranteed the loans. In actual fact it was the municipality, corporation or other agency borrowing the money which was guaranteed by the Alberta government. On the other hand, when the city of Edmonton and the city of Calgary wished to carry out programs for roads, utilities or educational works and sought financing, they submitted their programs to the Alberta Municipal Corporation. It was then that body which told them how much they could undertake. If that is not indirect control through the exercise of centralized borrowing power, what is it? That is what is envisaged by this motion. This is the only interpretation possible to be placed upon it. This is the interpretation put forward by the hon. member for Shefford in his motion.

I cannot see how else you could have control by the Bank of Canada in respect of borrowing programs in provinces and municipalities. Is the Bank of Canada merely to be a supine instrument reacting to individual actions and programs of municipalities and provincial governments? I hope this question will be considered seriously by hon. members. We will likely hear about these points. I want to know how deeply they are prepared to consider this matter. I suggest that as far as I am concerned their whole thesis completely disregards the role of the central bank. The Creditistes have completely forgotten the role of the Bank of Canada in relation to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. Of course, that is an attitude which—

Mr. Rondeau: National first, and then you starve.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They say national first and then we will starve. Why? Because we cannot then sell anything abroad. They can say that, but I want to come back to some of the things that affect the role of the Bank of Canada and the Minister of Finance. I have before me a copy of today's Montreal Gazette which has an article on the $410 million roll-over issue the Minister of Finance as accomplished.

This afternoon the minister loudly proclaimed the foreign exchange fund holdings of the government and said that the Bank of Canada was in the best possible position it could possibly be in. This is not as a result of the minister's action or action on the part of the government. I suggest to the minister that we can believe him as much now when he stands up and says certain things as we could believe him last year. He is as believable or credible now as he was in mid-May when he said there was going to be a balanced budget. His colleague, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Drury), said in September that the government had missed the boat by $400 million. Some five weeks later the Minister of Finance came into the house and said he was sorry that he had missed the boat by $725 million. How on earth could he miss the target by $725 million? How can we believe him now when he says that everything is equivalent to the best of the best possible worlds?

Let us look at what he has done in respect of the bond issue. The terms of this bond issue and the commentaries that have appeared amount to a clear indictment of government policy in respect of inflation. This is what we see in the papers. There is reference to $410 million in government of Canada bonds dated April 1, 1969 made up in one part of one year and one month or 13-month bonds at 7.09 per cent due May 1, 1970. The issue price was 99.90 per cent yielding about 7.09 per cent at maturity. The government is now borrowing at a 13-month rate of almost 7 1/10 per cent.

We know that on 182-day bills money is costing the government almost 7 per cent. We then find another sector of this bond issue on the basis of three years at 7¼ per cent due the first of April, 1972, issued at 99.9 per cent and yielding 7.29 per cent. We then find a third group, five-year bonds at 7¼ per cent due the first of April, 1974, issued at 100 per cent and yielding 7¼ per cent at maturity. This latter group of 5-year bonds is exchangeable by the holder into ten-year bonds at par on the basis of 7½ per cent. The yield is at the same rate over a period of ten years commencing on the first of April, 1974. This amounts to about 7.39 per cent for the full 15-year period commencing on the first of April, 1969. This is merely an exchange for bonds bearing much lower rates of interest.

If I recall accurately, back in 1958-59 the minister of finance of that day was told when he attempted to finance at 4¾ per cent or 5 per cent that he was selling the country down the river or harnessing the country in a financial strait-jacket. The present Minister of Finance says that we have not seen anything yet. He says he will show us what he can do. Yes, he is going to shackle the country with a bond issue for a period of 15 years at 7.4 per cent. Who is now fastening the country with shackles? What an increase!

• (3:50 p.m.)

Are we to believe this government when it says it is coping with inflation? We can go back to the arguments of the budget debate when the minister said he was going to increase expenditures this year by over $800 million. The principle seems to be to tax up to the expenditure level, not to spend within the revenue level of the country. If the minister made the exchange I think Canada would be in a far better position. But instead we spend and then tax up to those expenditures. This is a footnote to the act: "In addition the Bank of Canada has agreed to acquire from the government a further $50 million of the new 7¼ per cent bonds—that is the three year bonds—further $25 million of the new 7¼ per cent five-year bonds and $75 million of government of Canada 5¾ per cent bonds due October 1, 1969, which are placed by the Minister of Finance in the securities investment account." In other words, the public is being asked to take $410 million in a roll-over and the Bank of Canada likewise is going to do $75 million worth of roll-over. No new money in any of that!

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It is a good thing the minister is not going for new money because it is my information that the Canada savings bonds campaign of last fall, which was touted loudly by the minister as being such a resounding success—after all, the issue was paying over 7 per cent effectively—produced merely about $70 million of new money.

Mr. Benson: It was $700 million.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): It was not $700 million of new money, not at all. That is not what my friends in the bond business tell me. I ask, Mr. Speaker, how much of that money has remained and has not been reconverted? The Bank of Canada is also being used by the government to support these sagging bond issues. Every time the Bank of Canada intervenes and purchases bonds it places more money at the credit of the banks in their central reserves and expands the reserves on which they may lend. Because there is inflation, because the government cannot control it, because government bond prices are sagging, the bank is forced to act on behalf of the government. This results in a much greater flow of money.

The cash supply is today vastly in excess of what it was in April of 1963 when the Liberals took office. The net result, of course, is that since that time we have seen the cost of living index rise by about 25 per cent. It is now a little more difficult to see the true change. On January 1 we saw the new index which already, based on 1961, is up to 122 or 123. If 1961 is 100, it has already gone up well over 20 per cent. My time is limited on this type of motion, Mr. Speaker. All I can say is that the motion is far too vague, it certainly has not been spelled out, and I cannot support it.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) I cannot support this motion. I understand the spirit that motivates this attempt at changing the system under which the Bank of Canada operates, that is, changing its terms of reference. I have been in this house for a number of years and have had occasion to listen to many of my hon. friends to my left. I have become aware of the fact that there is a genuine sentiment there that speaks on behalf of the frustration of the little people in their part of Canada. But I cannot agree with some of their theories, as I am sure they do not agree with some of mine. I cannot appreciate the motivation that prompted this kind of motion because what my hon. friends are saying in effect is that in a country so rich and prosperous, in a country that has so many needs and in which people are not being looked after to the extent that our resources would seem to indicate they could be looked after, something is wrong and they turn to the Bank of Canada as a way out of this dilemma. I do not think that is the answer.

The hon. member for Edmonton West has said that the motion is little more than a pious hope. I have the feeling that since nothing else has had any effect on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) and the government, perhaps a little piety is not out of place. When I listen to the hon. member for Edmonton West I cannot help thinking that there but for 200 years goes Adam Smith. I say this with great respect to my hon. friend because Adam Smith, like himself, was a great man.

I sometimes wonder how the hon. member can launch such criticism at this time when looking back on his own government's record in office he is faced with such an example of failure. Those were the years of some of the highest unemployment in Canada and a financial anarchy that even this government has not been capable of developing. It is difficult to accept his arguments at this time and it is difficult to accept his criticism of the government. To put it perhaps in its tritest form, it is a case of the kettle calling the pot by a colour.

This government deserves to be criticized. I think it has mishandled and mismanaged the economy of the country. This has happened because it has much the same terms of reference as the Conservative party when it was in power. It has the "hands-off" attitude, the attitude of letting the interest rate determine the priorities of our society. In effect, whoever can pay for things gets them and those who cannot pay do not get them.

We know that in any society human and capital resources are limited. If the competition for those resources becomes great, as is the case today, obviously those resources are bid upwards. The question then becomes: What do we do in a situation like that? Do we simply stand back and let the market determine our future? Do we relax and say: There is nothing we can do about this situation? Do we wring our hands and say: It is none of our business, it will straighten out later, we really have no control over the situation? I got that sort of answer from the Minister of Finance this afternoon, who suggested that I read the Bank Act. I presume he meant that the Bank Act does not permit the government to intervene.

Surely the Minister of Finance is putting me on. He knows that the government intervenes in these matters, and the statement of the previous minister of finance should convince him if he does not know this himself. I am sorry I do not have the exact quotation of the words of the previous minister of finance, but if the minister is interested I can get it for him. He said in effect that it is the government of Canada through the Minister of Finance that determines the interest rate in this country, and this is on the record. I admit that this is done within the restraints of the existing conditions in the world.

I suggest that the government can go even farther than it has in the past in deciding on the allocation of our resources. This is central to what is going on in this country. There must be a deliberate decision on the part of the government as to how our resources shall be used and who shall have access to them. I cannot see that a society with the knowledge that is available to us at this time could choose to do otherwise than to say: "We are in control of our destiny and of our future and we intend to exercise the sovereignty that was given to us by the people on behalf of the people to give them the kind of life and the kind of society to which they aspire".

In the last election a leader of a political party travelled throughout the country and virtually set the imagination of its people on fire. They looked at him and agreed there should be a change; after their disillusionment with politics here was somebody who would really use the reins of government and create a just society. This is what the people of Canada wanted, and I suggest that this is what the people of Canada can have if the government wishes to live up to the promises it made on the hustings.

Let me put forth a number of examples to demonstrate the kind of problem that exists in our society, and let us ask some questions about these instances. First, let us take the question of building banks. The Royal Commission on Banking and Finance pointed out that Canada probably has twice as many branch banks per capita as the United States and some of the other countries of the world and that one of the effects of this overbuilding of banks is to increase the overhead costs. It pointed out that it was far costlier to bank in Canada than in almost any other country. Why do we need all these banks? Why do we have to continue this massive program of building bank structures? This is true not only of banks.

Let us take a look at small towns. The main streets are dominated by finance companies, trust companies and banks. Do they serve to reduce the rate of interest? What useful purpose does all this overbuilding really serve? Does it create competition? I doubt it. One has only to look at the rates that are offered. All the banks charge the same and virtually all trust companies charge the same for the same kind of risks. Finance companies are limited by legislation. What is the point of all this and what does it really get us except higher costs and an allocation of resources to a sector that is extremely wasteful and that deprives us of capital which could be used to better purpose elsewhere?

I could make the same argument with regard to service stations. I could ask: In which way is the gasoline at one service station different from the gasoline at another service station, and why does every corner in this country have to have a service station? Even the oil companies realize that this is wasteful, but their argument is that this is the way the system works and there is very little they can do about it even if they wished to do something about it. So even in the case where industries would like to do something about the situation they cannot because they have become victims of Adam Smith. Only the government can step into this situation and create order out of the financial chaos and the capital waste.

It is small wonder that we do not have money for houses when the money is being used in these directions. When we take a look at the way goods and services are brought into the market today, at all the waste, at disposable bottles, fancy packaging, cellophane wrapping and all that goes with it, as well as the advertising that accompanies this sort of thing, we have to ask: Is this the kind of thing on which to spend money when 20 per cent of our population lives in poverty? Is this the kind of thing on which to spend money when we cannot educate our people to their full ability, when we cannot provide them with the necessary medical services, when, in the course of spending money on these things, we pollute our environment at the expense of who knows what future detriment? Where is our sense of values? It is our tax system that encourages this kind of expenditure.

Does the government not realize that it can make a substantial change in its order of priorities simple by changing the tax system, and that this is not very difficult to do? We are not talking about setting up huge bureaucracies to do this sort of thing. Only one simple change has to be instituted. We have to say that selling costs are no longer deductible for income tax purposes and that we will change our distribution system. We will make these products carry the full economic cost instead of subsidizing them through the tax system. We virtually encourage this sort of thing at a time of a tremendous shortage of financial resources, and human needs are being neglected while frivolous spending is being subsidized.

I have no quarrel with some of the monstrous television commercials depicting people going around with their arms stretched upwards and other people smelling their armpits. We are told that this is their chief occupation on the north American continent, that if your armpits do not smell nice there is something wrong with you, and that everyone must be judged on this basis. If people want to buy this stuff, let them pay for it, but at the moment they are not paying for it. Every taxpayer in this society, whether or not he buys that product, whether or not he abhors that sense of values, is paying for it because that is the way our tax system is designed. In effect we say to these people: "For every dollar you spend on this kind of nonsense we will give you back 50 cents as a subsidy." Surely this is not the kind of tax system that should be encouraged or should be continued.

Sometimes I would like to know how much of the resources of our society go into this nonsense of selling. A number of years ago I saw an article that said that almost 50 per cent of the cost of goods in Canada is spent on distribution. We know that some distribution costs are necessary and desirable, but surely 50 per cent is too much. This is an enormous cost and an enormous wastage of our resources.

I could elaborate further on this disease of our society by pointing out that on the one hand we subsidize this waste and on the other we pay for cleaning it up. It may be that disposable bottles are more convenient for the people who use them, but who pays for cleaning up the disposable bottles afterwards? If people want disposable bottles I think their total cost should be added to the purchasing cost instead of being subsidized through the tax system. The problems that are being created cost money which has to be paid by the taxpayer whether or not he likes or uses disposable bottles. That is one example but there are many others.

I am suggesting that there is not sufficient capital to meet all requirements; neither are there sufficient resources. The motion before the house seeks to find a way of establishing priorities through the Bank of Canada. I do not think this is effective. I should like to argue this point more fully but I do not have the time at the moment. It is sufficient for the purpose of this debate to say that I do not think we can do things in this way.

However, the intent of the motion is very clear. What my friends to the left are saying is that we have to find some way of making the requirements of the public of this country available at lower cost. There are other ways of exploring this proposal. For example, not very long ago we wanted to stimulate housing construction in the winter and in order to do so a bonus of $500 was paid on each house so constructed. This worked very well and almost revolutionized the construction industry in terms of stretching out work. The seasonal attitude of the industry changed. That particular form of incentive proved most effective.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he consider this kind of incentive approach in order to stimulate housebuilding in this country, particularly houses that are within the reach of the low and medium income groups. This can be done, as I suggested earlier, by using the taxation system. If the minister were to announce that the tax on building supplies, would be refundable in the case of certain types of housing construction, this would have the desired effect of stimulating house construction. It would work in this way. In the construction of a service station, a bank or a luxury office building a whopping sales tax would be applied on the building materials required. In the case of the construction of a low or medium cost house the sales tax paid on the materials would be rebated. The same level of taxation would be maintained simply by shifting the taxation from one source to another. There is ample precedent for this. The minister attempted to do it with estate tax and it is done under our income tax system. A differential sales tax on building materials should be considered in order to stimulate the construction of certain kinds of houses.

The hon. member for Edmonton West—I am sorry he is not in the house at the moment to engage in debate on this particular aspect—might be horrified at my suggestion that the government make value judgments about our society, that the government should say that some things are more important than others. My hon. friend from Edmonton West might say that this is not the role of government, that the marketplace should make judgments of that kind, though when his party was in office obviously it did not completely believe this theory.

I think that the role of government is to make value judgments. That is why governments are elected. The issues of an election campaign are the kind of society we are going to live in and the kind of value judgments we are going to make. This is done by the government now through the taxation system. The government says that some things are more important than others, that some things should receive a bonus and others a penalty. It is incumbent upon any responsible political party to make value judgments according to the wishes of the people.

I think the wishes of the Canadian people at this moment are quite clear. At a time when three-quarters of the people of this country cannot find adequate housing they want the government to make a value judgment that will stimulate housing construction within the reach of the low and medium income earners of our society. This the government has failed to do. More than that, the government has gone or appears to be going in the other direction. The task force on housing suggested that even the limited intervention the government now makes in our money markets should be discontinued, that the entire financing of housing mortgages should be left in the hands of the financial institutions of this country. It said that the government should not appropriate any funds for housing nor make value judgments about their disposition; the entire matter should be one for the free market. I think such a proposal would be disastrous and should be resisted with all the power at our command.

I should like to recall to the house a statement that I made in 1966 when the Bank Act was being debated. At that time we were being told that we should take the ceiling off bank interest rates, that if we allowed the rate to find its own level everybody would benefit and there was the possibility that rates would come down. I should like to quote what I said in the house on July 7, 1966, as reported at page 7321 of Hansard:

> To remove the interest ceiling without proper safeguards is to raise the cost of every single thing in this country. We know the banks are lent out. All financial institutions are lent out. How will the minister get more mortgage money unless it is diverted from other sources? How will he get cheaper money in the circumstances he is developing for us? If the bank rate in this situation is freed from restriction or permitted to increase, I have no hesitation in saying that Canada will face the highest interest rates, the highest cost of money, in all history. It is to put the cost of money in Canada at a height it has never achieved previously, and one that no one at this point can calculate. Interest rates of 8 per cent and 9 per cent on commercial lending may be possible through this type of approach.

I remember very clearly that on that day the minister of finance of that time sat and hooted, as if to say: "Interest rates of 8 and 9 per cent? You have to be out of your mind! It will never happen in this country". But what are interest rates today? There are people in this country who would consider themselves fortunate to obtain money at 8 or 9 per cent. The effect of removing the interest rate ceiling has been to send interest rates skyrocketing. The effect of removing whatever protection there is now under the National Housing Act would be that the interest rate would go even higher than it is. The minister's contention is a myth that has been completely demolished by past experience.

The bond market in Canada is not in a very happy state at this moment. I think the minister was fortunate and somewhat astute in the timing of this latest issue. We may never know the full details about what went on behind closed doors before the issue was made. But we can speculate. Perhaps the minister went to the chartered banks of Canada and told them that if they were thinking of raising their prime rates they should refrain until the market had been approached. If the minister had in fact done that I am sure the banks would have responded. There is no independence among our chartered banks. Sometimes their heads make speeches to give some indication that they resist what the Minister of Finance is doing, but my feeling is that the banks really have no choice but to accept what the minister says. When the Minister of Finance wants certain things to happen in the banking system, they happen. His persuasion may go beyond mere moral persuasion. The minister may refer to the Bank Act and say he has limited powers, but I say that he has very real powers over the banks because he may introduce changes in the present framework within which banking is conducted. He has the ultimate power in that at any time the government may change the Bank Act.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I interrupt the hon. member to inform him that his time expired a short time ago.

Mr. Bell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, since the hon. member for Waterloo called the attention of the house to the fact that our financial critic, the hon. member for Edmonton West, is not in the house may I say by way of reply that he is not here because he is working very hard in a committee. I thought it wise, knowing how this house operates, to place this information on the record.

Mr. Saltsman: Mr. Speaker, I would not wish the record to give the wrong impression to anyone perusing it. We are all aware that the hon. member for Edmonton West works very hard and that his absence is unavoidable.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, if hon. members would consent I would have no objection to allowing the hon. member to continue his remarks.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, but as I took advantage of a similar opportunity last night I shall not do so at this time.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, although I do not usually answer partisan attacks I cannot resist answering the attacks of those who speak disparagingly of our banking legislation and the financial structure of Canada. While talking about changes that might be made in the financial structure of our country it might also be well to point out some of the so-called differences in the ideologies of certain parties in this house. In some circumstances it is difficult to distinguish between the Liberal party and the socialists. Much of the difficulty the present administration has got into stems from the fact that the Liberals have abandoned to a great extent the old concept of Liberalism and have tried to outsocialize the socialists. This is a path of no return. It cannot be done. I hope the socialists will never be responsible for the fiscal policy of this country. We can see what has happened where socialist governments have ruled. Poor old England has floundered under socialism since the end of the second world war. Her troubles stem not so much from the fact that she has fought two wars during my lifetime but that socialism has sapped her energy.

As a creed, socialism goes against human nature. It does not work in a modern world. After people have worked hard and stored up wealth a socialist government then comes along, takes it away from the people and spends it. Not until men have worked hard in modern factories storing up a nation's wealth can a socialist government take that wealth away. Socialism cannot work as a short term solution. It just does not work.

Unfortunately, socialism is being taught at Harvard. In North America socialism has been introduced by well meaning socialists who left the old country and came here with a great deal of education but little wisdom. This creed, being taught at a centre of learning in the heart of the United States, contains the seeds of the downfall of that country if it is allowed to flourish. If the United States declines as a world power, as our own Prime Minister has suggested it may, that decline will stem from the rot of socialism coming from within. That rot will set in when its people are no longer willing to work hard, as they must in any modern society. That is my opinion, and I am not alone in holding it. I therefore suggest that the government should take a good look at all its programs. It is never too late to mend.

The government should examine again the old Liberal policies involving hard work. It should not spread wealth among the lower ranks but encourage those with small incomes to work hard and better themselves. Instead of saying to small farmers, small businessmen and others, "we are here as big brother to help you," it should say to them, "we are not going to carry you but at the same time we are not going to burden you with taxation in an effort to be more socialistic than the socialists are." If the minister says that cannot be done, I say he will be replaced. It is necessary for our leaders to tell our people that they can have a better life only by working hard and adopting the principles of private enterprise.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bigg: In tired Europe they may need socialism in order to hand out rations of one kind or another. But we in Canada need no kind of rationing. We need the kind of leadership we had in the latter part of the 19th century and the early part of the 20th. I would say that period of leadership ended in 1962.

I say to the hon. member who preceded me that in suggesting that the last five years of the regime of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) were not good for this country he is mistaken. Our people have good memories. We assumed the burden of previous unemployment. And what did we do about that?

Mr. Rondeau: You increased it.

Mr. Bigg: We put the people of Canada back to work.

An hon. Member: You increased unemployment.

Mr. Bigg: And what did we do with the millions of bushels of unsold wheat then in this country?

An hon. Member: You gave them away.

Mr. Bigg: No. We sold wheat at record prices in markets that had previously not been open to us. Our idea was that hungry people had the right to be fed as long as they could produce cash for our wheat. When we took office many of our people were unemployed because they lacked training. The training program introduced under the Conservative government of that day under the leadership of the right hon. member for Prince Albert and hon. Michael Starr did much to correct the difficulties of those who had dropped out of high school and could not gain employment. That was the finest program of its kind and in my opinion had never before been equalled in the history of mankind. If hon. members call what we did backsliding, let us have more of that type of backsliding.

It was strange to hear the kind of criticism that came from those who purport to be the friends of the people and who coined the phrase "the just society" before the Liberals took it over. The just society is more than mere words; you can only have it when you put into operation certain principles that affect all our people. The just society means that the small businessman, small farmer and small entrepreneur will not be taxed out of business. Bigness alone in business is not a virtue.

I am surprised that those who purport to have taken over the mantle of Sir Wilfrid Laurier should try to outsocialize the socialists in introducing give-away programs. There is no such thing as a give-away program. You can only give away under such programs what does not belong to you, namely, the wealth that has been earned by others. You take wealth from those who have earned it and give it to those who have not earned it. It was the policy of the right hon. member for Prince Albert and Hon. Michael Starr that every worker in this country should carry his part of the burden. When that is done our budgets will balance. A biased press and other biased media of mass communication were influential in persuading the uninformed part of the public that we had made a colossal mess of running this country. That was nonsense. We inherited the mess. Anyone examining the facts will see that what I have said this afternoon is the gospel truth. Mr. Keynes, who is the keystone of socialistic economics may be—

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Etobicoke has a question.

Mr. Gillespie: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bigg: Yes, I would be delighted.

Mr. Gillespie: Would the hon. member tell the house in what years during the Diefenbaker regime the unemployment rate was lower than it is today and in what year the Diefenbaker government balanced the budget?

Mr. Bigg: The budget was balanced in 1963. A budget cannot be balanced immediately on takeover. I am talking about the general trend of economic development. I am generalizing on the theory of the government and the current trend. I suggest to the minister it is time we took a good look at the general plan. I would like to know whether the government is setting the fiscal policy of Canada through the minister or, as the socialistic critics say, is merely the tool of the banks. I do not believe that.

The government of Canada has the power to set fiscal policy. The Bank of Canada is nothing more than a rubber-stamp of parliament if we so want it to be. It is the creature of parliament and cannot operate without our authority. We have full power to do anything we like and, if necessary, we should do it. No piece of paper should come between this house and the welfare of the people of Canada. If the minister can show clearly that the Bank Act or the terms of reference of the Bank of Canada come between Canadians and their welfare, we are quite willing to amend the Bank Act. The removal of the ceiling on interest rates was effected in good faith, although I am not sure whether the result was good or bad. The cost of living was not lowered by this action.

I am not at all sure that by allowing money to be at an interest rate of 8 per cent or 9 per cent and making more money available we will eliminate those who charge 18 per cent or 30 per cent interest. At one time it was impossible to borrow money unless one went to the "skin market". I like to think some people make a good living from financing. People who charge excessive interest on mortgages, cars and many of the necessities of life could now lose their businesses with money available at 8 per cent or 9 per cent interest. If this is not so, we should study the financial structure of Canada.

The possibility of the government and the Bank of Canada lending unlimited sums of money to finance municipalities should be approached with caution. Municipalities and provinces can overspend their budgets. If the provinces were offered loans with a very low or incentive rate of interest, a colossal provincial debt could result. I do not agree with hon. members who suggest that unlimited credit should be extended to the provinces. Possibly the experts could ascertain that they are not being charged unnecessarily high rates of interest.

I believe it would be safe to lend the rich province of Alberta large sums of money for education, resource railroads or even medicare. If the people of Alberta want medicare and wish to enlarge their capital expenditures for hospitals and the training of nurses, the province may wish to borrow large sums of money. If money were lent to them at extremely low interest rates or without interest then necessary spending would be encouraged. To discourage necessary spending would be to close the gate on one side of the barn and open the gate on the other.

The government is responsible for fiscal policy and I hope this government will stop the trend toward socialism. There must be a reawakening by the government and by the Canadian people. It is not necessary for the government to be a big brother to everybody. People must be encouraged to stand on their own feet. I made notes of five specific points which would aid this trend without encouraging socialism.

We are not doing enough to seek world markets. The government sits at home hoping that something will happen so that we can sell our wheat or cut down our acreage. Wheat can still be sold and other products as well. I notice that Russia became friendly with Cuba by offering five cents a pound for sugar. We want $2 a bushel for our wheat and some prairie farmers would like to receive $3. If that is the case, surely the Cubans are entitled to five cents a pound for their sugar. If we insist on buying sugar from the Cubans at fire sale prices, the world has the right to demand wheat from Canada at fire sale prices. The people in charge of our export trade should suggest to the Cubans that our country will pay them a living price for their sugar if they will pay us a living price for our wheat. In this way world trade could be built up which would be helpful to Cuba, Red China and other countries suffering from food shortages.

There is not enough being done to develop our own resources. This is an area where tax incentives would be helpful. Why should capital gains be taxed? I feel the line should be drawn when it comes to the family farm that had little value at the time the land was cleared. At that time it was purchased for approximately $10 and now is worth 20,000 or $30,000. The value has increased by approximately $1,000 a year. Should part of that be taxed as a capital gain? This should be looked into. Should a man have to pay a large amount of tax on capital gains when he has gambled on the gold market by making available small amounts of money for prospectors to go north, tramp through the frozen wilderness and find gold? Surely this is a tremendous risk. There is a 10,000 to 1 chance of ever making any money. If he strikes it rich, should he be subject to a large capital gains tax to support a system which I think is basically wrong? There is no necessity for any man to live off the labours of another man if the former is capable of working but is unwilling to work.

A great deal more could be done to improve the unemployment situation by further training programs. The training program set up by the Diefenbaker régime does not go far enough. Many improvements could be made. For example, we are not doing enough for the young people who come from the overcrowded small farms and the fishing villages of Canada. Are they given adequate living allowances to attend technical training schools in the cities? Have they the same opportunities as those who are city based? I do not think so. Are we doing enough in research to keep our brilliant young people in Canada, those who could keep Canada out in front? Are we still working in Canada with second-rate tools? Remember, the United States lets us have its sophisticated equipment only when it is out of date in that country. What are we doing to make sure that Canadian technicians are equal to or even ahead of the Americans? This is something we ran into when discussing the question of drugs.

People are always looking for quick answers. We in parliament should do research into these things when preparing legislation in order to underpin and secure the right of Canadians to earn a good living in Canada, in their own factories, on their own farms and in their own schools and universities.

Reference has been made to tax incentives. How in the world can we do anything about mortgages as long as we have the iniquitous 11 per cent sales tax on every housing unit we build in Canada? When I built my house the interest rate on mortgages was 6 per cent. Now it is 9¼ per cent. Our young people are going to have to pay this.

An hon. Member: That is the just society.

Mr. Bigg: You know who invented the just society. And above all, now we are to be governed in Canada by committees. The House of Commons is old and out of date. I am a member of the Public Accounts Committee. The members of that committee are supposed to try to stop waste and extravagance. That is not partisan. Some of the waste and extravagance goes back for many years. What is being done about it? Very little is being done. Waste and extravagance have to be paid for by increasing interest rates. Money has to be borrowed to pay for the waste and extravagance.

Waste and extravagance should be stopped at all levels of government. We should start right here with the government of Canada and stop waste and extravagance in every department. We should stop teaching that Canada owes us a living, like Kennedy said in the United States—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Mr. Benson: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we on this side would be pleased to allow the hon. member to finish his remarks if he so wishes.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): There is no unanimous consent.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part in this debate and to second in an unqualified way the non-confidence motion introduced by the Social Credit Rally and which reads as follows:

"That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of making use of the powers and resources of the Bank of Canada for the purpose of alleviating the taxation burden which weighs upon Canadian, provincial and municipal taxpayers and for undertaking an efficient struggle against poverty in order to establish a just society."

Mr. Speaker, one of the most important, if not the essential step to take in order to come successfully to grips with poverty is to provide families with an income that may enable them to lead a free and happy life and to bring up their children decently to make first class citizens of them.

The Canadian Welfare Council which, last January 29th, published its report on the social policy in Canada, gave top priority to the increase in family allowances. Here is the text of that statement which in an admirable way sums up the stands of the Canadian Welfare Council, and I quote:

A sharp increase in family allowances and young people allowances from the federal government, with modified regulations regarding the income tax, is economically possible and socially advisable—

—as states Mr. Reuben C. Baetz, general director of the Canadian Welfare Council, on the occasion of the publication on Wednesday January 29th of the statement of the above said council which is entitled "Social policies for Canada".

In addition to many other advantages, a sharp increase in family allowances and young people allowances would mean a quick and fair means to fight poverty.

Such increase would be an immediate step, but probably only temporary if a guaranteed income plan, based on family size, must be instituted in the future.

Increased family and youth allowances are socially desirable for a number of good reasons. Among the 30 per cent of Canadian people living in poverty, according to the Economic Council of Canada, there are several thousand families with many children who, through their own volition and pride, succeeding in not depending on public assistance. It is perhaps an everyday irony for such families—

This fact should concern the nation. And this report goes on to state:

—that many of them have not even the minimum and very often have a family income lower than their neighbours who are living on welfare and get assistance, at least theoretically, according to their needs.

An increase in family allowances would be of great financial assistance to those low income families without putting them under a degrading justification of their needs, and without destroying their sense of dignity. Such increase would encourage them more to remain independent and without depending on welfare.

This would alleviate significantly the obligation for our welfare services according to needs by allowing them to give better service to those who have a good reason to benefit from them.

A more adequate family allowances plan should encourage families to keep their children in school. This is of special significance in the light of the growing need for better education.

• (4:50 p.m.)

An adequate family allowance system would help to reduce the marked regional differences in family incomes; it is quite an important point at a time when we are so much concerned with national unity.

An adequate family allowance system reduces the tendency to set up social insurance systems based on earnings by setting the benefits according to the size of the family rather than according to earnings only.

All citizens anxious for the establishment of a humanly just society will readily agree with those proposals of the Canadian Welfare Council.

If one refers, Mr. Speaker, to the debate held when the bill for the establishment of family allowances was introduced in 1944, it is interesting to note certain words of the mover of that bill in the house, the then prime minister, Mr. Mackenzie King.

This is what he said in the house on July 25, 1944, when he moved the second reading of that bill.

> The announcement in the speech from the throne was as follows:
> The family and the home are the foundations of the national life. To aid in ensuring a minimum of well-being to the children of the nation and to help gain for them equality of opportunity in the battle of life, you will be asked to approve a measure making provisions for family allowances.

I wish to point out, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Mackenzie King was then speaking of a minimum of well-being and an equality of opportunity.

Further on, he explained the purposes of that bill, according to his philosophy, and I quote:

> It has always been a part of the policy of the party to which I belong to do as much as possible to further equality of opportunity.

Mr. Mackenzie King gives statistics to show that large working class families did not have equal opportunities in society and that the legislation on family allowances by adding to their revenues would allow them to fight for life with as much, if not more chance than before.

Further on, Mr. Mackenzie King explained the measure was also promoting the interests of the entire community rather than those of a particular class. I quote:

> —no nation liveth to itself, that we are members one of another, and that, if any part of the community suffers because of subnormal conditions, sooner or later other parts of the same community will suffer likewise. You cannot have one section of the nation undernourished, ill-clothed and unequal to its daily tasks, and not have the rest of the nation sooner or later suffer as a consequence.

The plea of Mr. Mackenzie King pointed to the necessity of helping families, particularly through allowances.

The former prime minister stressed also the advantages of family allowances for the nutrition of Canadians.

Finally, he emphasized the fact that family allowances did not replace wages but supplemented them to allow families to live better.

Of the concept of family allowances and the philosophy behind them, one must remember that they were designed to increase the standard of living of children and their families.

Wages and other forms of revenue that do not as a rule vary with family obligations proved to be insufficient to meet basic needs of large families in which children are raised in conditions of poverty, and thus are frustrated in their physical and mental development.

It is therefore possible to perceive the presence of purely economic purpose behind most of the national family allowances plans: the concern to lift to an acceptable level the family's buying power, particularly that of low income families.

According to a 1947 issue of the International Labour Review, the law adopted in Canada implicitly recognizes this objective. Here is what we could read in four points, Mr. Speaker:

> 1. Public grants should be established, whether in kind or in money or in both, to allow children to be brought up in healthy conditions, to help take care of the children of large families and to complement the measures taken for the good of children under the family allowances plan.
> 2. When the objective is to help bringing up children in healthy conditions, the grants should take the form of benefits, such as free food or at less than cost price for children in infancy, school cafeterias and housing at below normal rent for families with several children.
> 3. When the objective is to help take care of large families or to complement measures for the good of children, whether carrying benefits in kind or established under the social security system, the grants should take the form of family allowances.

And finally—

> 4. These allowances should be paid, whatever the parents' income, according to a schedule that would represent a substantial contribution to the maintenance costs of the child and would take into account the expenses incidental to the maintenance of older children.

This is therefore an opinion put forward by the Canadian Welfare Council and it corresponds to that of the Economic Council of Canada.

Now what was the measure suggested by the Liberal government in 1944 in order to supplement the family income? Section 3 of the Family Allowances Act reads as follows and I quote:

> Subject as provided in this Act and in the regulations, there may be paid out of unappropriated moneys in the Consolidated Revenue Fund, in respect of each child resident in Canada maintained by a parent, the following monthly allowance:
> (a) in the case of a child less than six years of age, six dollars per month;
> (b) in the case of a child six or more years of age but less than ten years of age, six dollars per month;
> (c) in the case of a child ten or more years of age but less than thirteen years of age, eight dollars per month; and

(d) in the case of a child thirteen or more years of age but less than sixteen years of age, eight dollars per month.

This was in 1944-45.

In this regard, I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that this schedule established in 1944 is still in force and that it has not changed for 25 years or a quarter of a century.

Now the 1944 Act set the schedules to which I have just referred. There is no doubt that the law-makers at the time did not intend to fix the rates for a period of 25 years, for it is obvious that today such rates destroy the philosophy that was behind the legislation then enacted and that they no longer correspond to the ends sought when the Family Allowances Act was passed.

Since then, Mr. Speaker, the cost of living has increased considerably, mainly as concerns food. For instance, if we take as a basis the cost of living index of 1949, set at 100, we readily see that in 1949 a dollar could purchase $1.34 worth of consumer goods at 1944 prices, when this legislation was passed.

On the other hand, if we consider the cost of living index today or the consumer price index, we realize that a dollar is worth 64 cents only in 1968 as compared to what it was worth in 1949.

In 1949, the consumer price index was set at 100, whereas it stood at 74.6 in 1944. On the other hand, that same index has gone up to 157.5 in 1968. Therefore, it has more than doubled.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, if family allowances are to preserve the value they were attributed in 1944, such as encouraging the development of families and insuring them a minimum of well-being, the rates must now be doubled.

At a time when governments are being asked to control expenses and to decrease taxes, where will the money come from? Is decreasing taxes a solution? The Créditistes have a ready answer, even though the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), who was one of the first to speak on this subject, asked how it is possible to accept our theories. The answer might be that he should take some advice from his party caucus and ask the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) to give him supplementary information.

Nevertheless, the Créditistes have a quick answer: from the same sources as the banks whenever they lend money and create deposits out of nothing.

If it is taken for granted that the Canadian production of real credit is equivalent to twice our national consumption or more, it is possible to arrive at figures indicating the true benefits of real credit being realized by the Canadian people and to credit each Canadian citizen with his share of this surplus value.

The real national credit is defined as social credit, a common credit which belongs to all. On his appearing before the standing committee of the house on banking and credit, in 1934,—one year before I was born—the founder of Social Credit, Major Douglas explained the origin of a national dividend as follows:

> It is the surplus value through association. For instance, this is the case when ten people are pulling a load. If they pull separately, they might try for a week without moving the load. However, if the ten of them use a rope and combine their efforts, the task becomes easier. The ten men can do together what they could not do separately.
> We cannot say that the tremendous production increase made possible by the association is due to the efforts of one person only, it comes from the association. The result is the profits of this association that have become so important that we have reached a phase where a decreasing number of people, much lower than the available number, is able to produce the necessary wealth for the whole of the people.
> The surplus of wealth thus produced belongs to society because it comes from the automatic surplus value of the association.
> The real problem of our time consists in coining this surplus value and in distributing it. This is the base of the Social Credit philosophy.

It is for this reason, Mr. Speaker, that I shall support the motion moved by the hon. member for Shefford, in order to make use of the powers and resources of the Bank of Canada for coining the real credit of this country; coining the surplus value earned by the social work and the joint capital in order to distribute this surplus value in a social fashion.

History teaches us that over the years, there have been three kinds of currency: cash money, credit money and near money. History is nothing but day to day experiences, and these experiences teach us also that credit money is used today as a means of exchange for almost all kinds of goods in this twentieth century.

If since the last century, governments or sovereign powers have withdrawn to private banks the privilege to issue money or to print banknotes, before the end of the twentieth century, those same sovereign powers will have to take back the control of the issuing of money and of the credit supply, presently in the hands of private organizations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the house that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Canadian Film Development—Establishment of an advisory commission; the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles)—Veterans Affairs—Nurses of Westminster hospital, London (Ont.); the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave)—Boarding up of housing units, Oakville (Ont.).

Unless the house allows the hon. member to carry on his remarks, he will not be able to do so.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to my hon. colleagues.

By virtue of the regalian right it possesses, due to the social role credit is playing in transactions and to the social nature of true credit which belongs to society, the state will have to issue itself new credits necessary to finance public capital.

Here are the general principles on which this new kind of financing is based:

1. Every issuance of credit will have to correspond to a new public production; secondly, this credit issue will also have to include an issuance of cash money equivalent to the average rate it gets within the money in circulation.

Since any issue of cash money or credit money will become the exclusive privilege of the Bank of Canada, it will be the role of the latter to finance, by means of new credits, any new capital relating to such department.

The Bank will also have to require, on a scientific basis, the repayment of the loans made, according to the depreciation of the services rendered and financed with those loans, and in accordance with the fiscal ability of the country.

On the other hand, since the objective of the economic and social system is to provide all and everyone with an adequate income to ensure an honest living and a vital minimum, and that precisely because of the relationship of its members, the financing of social security must also be ensured.

The financing of social security, and therefore of family allowances, education and old age pensions, must be directly provided by the department concerned, which will issue the necessary cheques on its account at the Bank of Canada, to the extent that the country is physically and socially able to meet the needs of those particular classes of the population, through the production of the goods which they need.

The only thing to remember is that the issue of credit is an entry in the books of the state in the credit column of one department or another inasmuch as that new monetary credit actually refers to the creation of real credit or new wealth.

To the extent that the necessary physical resources exist or are possible, through the existence of the natural resources, the manpower, the machines and the equipment suitable to develop them, the issue of new credit can be made in advance by the Bank of Canada.

Thus, it is not necessary to resort to taxation in order to pay higher family allowances. The Bank of Canada can create new credit on the basis of the existence of actual resources, or on the ability of the country to produce them.

• (5:10 p.m.)

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I think that the democratic system is best suited for men, since it enables the representatives of the people to fulfill their role. Even parliamentary procedure has provided for special days, during the session, when the members of the opposition could further criticize the government on some particular points. Government members therefore will not be surprised when they hear members of the opposition attack certain government measures which do not seem to promote the development of the low income Canadian family. This provides also the opportunity for some suggestions which will help the government achieve the common objective of a just society. This is precisely the purpose of the motion now being debated.

What is most amazing in our Canadian tax structure is the fact that the family is always the first to foot the bill. The family, which is the basis of our society, does not get from the government all the attention which it deserves for its development in an atmosphere of financial security.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

Society is made up of small societies called "families" and, generally all well-informed people notice that our society is ill, that things are not quite right and that society is not just towards everyone. If society as a whole is ill, obviously, its component families are not in good health.

Let us take for example the personal income tax. Is it really reasonable for the government to grant only a $2,000 exemption to a married couple? With the present rise in the cost of living, the basic exemption should normally be raised to $5,000, to which would be added a $500 exemption per child. Thus many more families would be able to own a house.

Each man has a fundamental and natural right to own external possessions that are essential to his upkeep and normal development, such as a decent home for example.

Nature prescribes to the head of a family the sacred duty of providing his children with shelter and food, of looking after their future, of providing them with a heritage and with the education that will help them to protect themselves against the set-backs of life.

Man's right to own property was given him by his Creator at the moment of his birth and not by a human power of any kind. And to find the best proof of that, we need only look at a four or five month-old baby in his cradle. At the time I still had young children at home, I took pleasure in giving my child something which he would grasp as if saying: I own something. And whenever I tried to take away the thing I had given him, he clung to it in order to keep it; he would scream, cry and resist precisely because he felt dispossessed.

Mr. Speaker, this goes to prove that the state should endeavour to preserve such a right so as to allow for the greatest possible number of people to own something.

Yet, the mind of this child is still not much developed. Nevertheless, as I said, he is already endowed with an instinct of ownership. The family also is getting every day more dispossessed. Fewer and fewer heads of family are able to own their homes and to say at night when they return from work: there is no place like home. They can hear it on radio and television, but they cannot join in the chorus since a home is beyond their means due to a system which does not make ownership possible.

Families are less and less in a position to own anything that really belongs to them, which is the best insurance against communism. A property owner is much more willing to fight for his country in time of war. He feels genuinely proud and patriotic because he owns a small homeland which is part of the over all country and worth every sacrifice.

My own idea of a just society is that of a society that would operate like a normal family. Now, what is a normal family? And what does the family do for its members? Well, in a normal family where there are a number of children, the primary concern of the father and mother is to provide for the needs of the younger, the weaker of the family.

Let us have a look at the family table. The youngest, the weakest sits between his father and mother and they both see that he eats properly. They know that while the other children around the table eat more, they can manage and help themselves. If the little one had enough to eat, the others will have more, but they are not concerned as long as the baby can eat at its heart's content, they have done their duty.

The same applies in society. The state must show concern first of all for the weakest by guaranteeing the family, the human beings who compose it, their basic needs through a minimum income.

If we do not reach that decision, we will never stand up efficiently and maintain law and order, and peace in society against the onslaught of revolutionary forces.

Wordly goods are destined by Providence to guarantee individuals, families, what they need to develop normally through life, and to serve the commonwealth.

There are two ways in which the family head can obtain what is necessary to meet the needs of his family. First of all, through his own work which I favour personally as a man and as a responsible citizen. I use all my energy to stand up for the people because I consider that work is not a punishment but a blessing. One need only read the many letters received—I imagine the same goes for all hon. members—from people who are unemployed and who beg us to do something so that industries can develop in their area and they might have work and thus contribute through their work to the development of the country.

Now, if the first means is work, on the one hand this work should be remunerated fairly, and on the other hand the state should not levy such taxes that the individual is left without enough income to discharge his family obligations.

Present day personal income tax is much too high; the basic exemption should be changed to guarantee a married couple a minimum tax free income of $5,000.

To the current price of building materials are added a federal tax of 11 per cent and a provincial tax of 8 per cent. How is it possible, then, for the small wage earner to have a house of his own? Furthermore, the government has allowed interest rates to increase, alleging as a pretext that lending institutions would not lend money at more reasonable rates of interest.

I blame the government for giving in to banking institutions. But in order to realize that those in control of money and credit are the masters of our lives one only has to look at the 1969-70 budget. It can be noted that the item relating to the public debt shows an increase of over 150 million dollars for servicing the public debt, to such an extent that we are paying $1,604,200,000 in interest alone.

The ordinary factory worker has a five-day week and is paid for 40 hours of work. However, those who are in a position to control money and credit and to draw interests are being paid, not for 40 hours of work but for 365 days a year and 24 hours a day. Mr. Speaker, therein lies the difference between consideration given to capital and labour.

Whenever big financial interests submit requests to the government, it cannot say no. But when requests come from the little man, such as workers or farmers, the government does not hesitate to refuse. This has been evidenced when some bills were considered by the house during the present session.

Therefore, I urge the government to seriously consider, without delay, a better distribution of personal and corporation income tax in order to be more equitable in this field. It is time families were ensured of an adequate income to enable them to obtain food and clothing, to have the necessary medical care and to receive education without having to depend always on welfare associations which are very costly for the community.

I will be told there are a great many pieces of legislation for the benefit of families and one of these deals with housing. I agree with that, but how could a worker whose income over $2,000 is subjected to taxes, and considering the 9 and 10 per cent interest rates, build his own home?

National production of a country is not aimed solely at increasing more and more the wealth of a few citizens, but rather at ensuring the well-being of its population as a whole. Society cannot call itself Christian if its working class is condemned to unemployment during periods of artificial economic crises or to a considerable decrease in income in case of illness or accident.

Society must try to provide its members with a sufficient income to meet the requirements of a decent standard of living. And it is at this point that comes into the picture the second means for giving some assistance to the head of family who has used up every other means to attain a decent life. The state must then fill the gap by drawing from the joint capital this citizen's work has built up, because he has a right, like everybody else, to benefit from it. The state must then make up the difference by insuring a supplementary income, since it is in a position to do so. And the best proof of it is that our granaries, our stores and our warehouses are overflowing with products.

So, Mr. Speaker, why take an antisocial attitude and deprive a portion of the population of things which are essential in life, at a time when there is such a high rate of unemployment.

What would you think of a father who would tell his children at the family table: Eat your soup and just one potato, nothing more, because, even if the cellar is jam-packed, we are faced with a technological problem: there is no staircase leading to it.

Mr. Speaker, more generous family allowances should be added to the income of the family head and this is possible thanks to the progress of science.

I would like hon. members to consider, as I do, what the Minister of Finance said in his budget speech on October 22, 1968.

If you consider tables 1 and 2, you will see that personal income tax in the financial year 1967-68 amounted to $3,650 million and that corporation income tax amounted to $1,821 million, that is $1,829 million less for corporations than for individuals. However, in 1968-69 the difference will be even greater, as personal income tax will give the federal government the fair amount of $4,190 million against $2,210 million from corporation income tax, or a gap of $1,980 million. Whereas large corporations are less heavily taxed, the worker is treated less favourably as he is more taxed. That is, Mr. Speaker, what I wanted to point out to the government.

According to the Dominion Bureau of Statistics, in 1967, corporations would have benefited from a tax exemption on capital gains totalling $7 billions, under the heading "reinvestment and capitalization". I think it is unfair that a capitalization exemption should be granted to corporations and that a mechanic who is working in a garage, for instance, should not be able to benefit from a rebate on his equipment. Indeed, an individual who buys his own tools is never able to allow for his equipment in his expenses for that is not admitted by the legislation. He cannot capitalize, yet it would be an advantage for him to do so, the same as for corporations. If the individual were able to capitalize to get himself a home, that would be as logical and as profitable for the country, because if it is fair to give special treatment to corporations manufacturing material goods for people, it should be recognized that the family, on the other hand, provides the greatest resource of all, the human capital which makes the strength of the country. Indeed, if we take away our human capital, there is not much left. It is because of the vital role of our human capital, which comes from the family, that I urge that the sacred nature of the Canadian family be recognized and that the family be given the possibility to live a normal life.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time is over, and he cannot continue with his remarks unless he has unanimous consent. Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Your watch must be much faster than mine, presumably because you have time to check more closely on my speaking time, but I wish to thank all my colleagues anyway.

If I defend the case of the little man, it is because I myself belong to that class of people and I am here to speak on their behalf.

There is also the society of scholars, who are not very numerous but who get along very well. These are the specialists, the people with diplomas, the ministers, etc. ... They are not the least bit evil, however. They do not want the people to be unhappy and miserable, because they are not aware how much the people suffer and that the little man is not always treated fairly.

There is a wall in this parliament, and it does not exist because of differences between the parties, or in languages, but it stands between the learned men and the living men. There is a lack of communication between these two groups. We are not on the same wave length and cannot understand one another.

In this very rich country there is a large number of poor people, as the Economic Council of Canada report points out. I am not making up anything. In fact, those who say it are federal civil servants hired to study such problems.

Mr. Caouette: Scholars!

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Exactly, scholars, as the hon. member from Témiscamingue says. From 1946 to 1966, Mr. Speaker, it was figured that in greater Montreal, the number of poor people had gone up by 6 per cent. In fact, they represented 27 per cent of the population in 1946 while in 1966 the figure has gone up to 33 per cent or 736,830 people. In the city of Montreal, 105,800 families, or 55.6 per cent of the population, live in poverty, and 1,062,200 persons earn less than $5,000 a year in the metropolitan area, where salaries are supposed to be the highest.

Am I not right then to claim a basic exemption of at least $5,000, since we find the same type of situation in this area as the one I have just described.

Moreover, 72.5 per cent of the million of workers I have just mentioned depend for their livelihood on finance companies. Some families have even raised up to 5 loans at interest rates varying from 24 to 50 per cent.

Some will tell me, Mr. Speaker, that even with a better government and in a more just society, there will always be less talented people, unable to manage their own affairs. I agree on that of course. However, what I fail to understand is that the number of poor people exceeds 50 per cent.

• (5:30 p.m.)

It looks as if the task of ministers and of learned people is to protect the wealthy and the educated.

It is high time, I think, to stop boasting of the advantages of our economic system. It is a system effective in the field of production, but which has poor results in the field of distribution. It is unsatisfactory. Our economic system will be reformed by law-abiding people or else it will be destroyed by others.

We have witnessed bombings. Previously, when we read in the papers that such things happened elsewhere, in Mexico, in Spain, or in other countries who went through a revolution, our hair stood on end. However, the same thing is happening now in our own country, in our own province and people seem to accept it as a normal way of life.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that if we take the trouble to think things over a bit, to try and find solutions to these problems and to organize the economic life so as to allow people who still want to work in order to take care of themselves—and thank goodness, there are still a great many of them, even though if we like to say that those who receive social welfare benefits are not worth their salt—I still believe in this young society. And if we give this young society the opportunity to use its talents, it is still capable of putting it to work for the benefit of this country.

As a first phase, in drafting a solution, I would suggest we reduce the personal income tax and alter the corporation taxes to establish a better balance between taxes on revenue from labour and revenue from capital.

Secondly, in order to help the bread winners, whose dependents are 13 million Canadians without income,—that is the children, the sick, the disabled, the women who are not earning a wage but who stay home and are working nevertheless,—there is need to increase family allowances as the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) stated it and as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) was saying yesterday, to increase the old age pensions and those of other classes of citizens, without imposing any additional taxes.

That is the reason why we suggest that the government make use of the Bank of Canada to provide new credits based on the work and production of the Canadian people, on which there would be no need to pay interests, since they would be our own and would rest on a production effected by Canadians for Canadians.

Canada has a great deal of credit as an asset; the point is to socialize it in order to ensure every citizen his fair share of the national income. On this point, I call the attention of our hon. friends of the Progressive Conservative party, whose program, in 1958, aimed at establishing a just society that would ensure every person his fair share of the national income. The concept is still part of their program, although everyone's fair share of the national income is still a thing of the future.

However, we are giving them opportunities and means to achieve the goal through the establishment of a purchasing power equal to the needs of the community, and which should be readily avilable by way of a balanced discount and a national dividend, which was termed as communism in the past.

Today, people recognize that this is not communism. The system is logical. The dividend was advocated by major Douglas. The theory comes from England, but, nevertheless, it has its merits. Such ideas, no matter where they come from, provided they are worthwhile, should be implemented in such a way, Mr. Speaker, it will be easier to establish a just society.

[English]

Mr. Oza Tétrault (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief in making my few remarks. I think members on this side have touched on almost every aspect of Social Credit theory, but I should like to say a few words about the financial problems facing Canada at this moment.

We all know that our national debt is $23 billion and that the interest alone is $1,700 million annually. Let us stop for a moment and ask whether the taxpayers of this country can continue to go deeper in debt every year? I think our Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) are both intelligent people, and I suppose they understand perfectly well the functions of the Bank of Canada. However, perhaps they are paid not to understand. Money was never made to control the nation and its people; it was created as the best medium for the exchange of goods and services.

Today we would all admit that money is, in effect, only a paper and ink or ledger credit. Some 95 per cent of all business transactions are transacted by the use of cheques. Let me give the Minister of Finance an example of this. Suppose that I owe five different companies $200. I go to my bank to borrow $1,000 and the manager or accountant agrees to lend me this amount. I sign a note with the bank. Then, without actually touching one single dollar from anybody's savings account, the accountant will give me a small bank book to which $1,000 has been credited. As a result of this pen and ink credit entry, I am able to write five cheques for $200. The payees will deposit the cheques, then the bank will debit my account and credit the accounts of my creditors. It is very easy to understand our banking laws. Something is created which did not exist before by a simple stroke of the pen.

We all know that government money in Canada is short. If it is possible for the chartered banks to create this kind of "figure money", why does not the federal government use the Bank of Canada for governmental requirements, whether they be provincial, municipal or federal? The government of Canada should ascertain whether the Canadian people have sufficient products to maintain a high standard of living. If the government were to do this, I believe they would discover we have plenty of everything in Canada. The only thing we are short of is buying power.

We of the Social Credit really believe that the real wealth of the nation should be monetized in order to maintain a functional balance between actual production and consumption, to the direct benefit of all of the people of the nation. Some will ask how this can be done. It can be done by placing in the hands of consumers sufficient purchasing power to move that which is being produced into the hands of those who can and need to use it. This would not bring inflation. Inflation is the result of having more money in the hands of consumers than is necessary to purchase the total amount of goods produced. Likewise, a depression is the result of having more goods for sale than there is purchasing power among the consumers to purchase those goods.

It is obvious, Mr. Speaker, that Canadian citizens have a right to share in the wealth of Canada. If you receive a dividend from some company in which you have invested, no one will consider this a dole. Canada is one of the wealthiest of nations in natural resources. May I quote now from the official record of the Banking and Commerce Committee of parliament which sat in 1939. Mr. Graham Towers, governor of the Bank of Canada, was on the stand giving evidence. He was asked this question:

Would you admit that anything physically possible and desirable can be made financially possible?

Mr. Towers answered, as recorded at page 771 of the committee record for that year:

Certainly.

[Mr. Tétrault.]

A further important question was asked as recorded at page 394 of the committee record:

Will you tell me why a government with power to create money should give that power away to a private monopoly and then borrow that which Parliament can create itself back at interest to the point of national bankruptcy—

Mr. Towers answered in part as recorded at page 394 of the committee evidence:

Now, if Parliament wants to change the form of operating the banking system, then certainly that is within the power of Parliament.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I wish to add this. He who does not love his brother whom he has seen cannot love God whom he has not seen. We have this commandment. He who loves God should also love his brother. Let us look forward to a better Canada for our Canadian citizens. We will all be proud to live in this country once we have established a better system where each individual will not be deprived of his share of the wealth of our nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, in support of the notice of motion which the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) introduced in this house today I wish to draw the attention of the hon. members during the few minutes allotted to me on the housing problem which I consider, in agreement with the Hellyer's task force on housing and urban development as an urgent priority for the Canadian people.

I would qualify the present situation as disastrous and intolerable for the Canadian people with low or average annual income. I refer to those who earn $4,000, $5,000 or $6,000 per year. Indeed, during the past 30 years, the federal activity in the housing field has been steadily expanding, an expansion largely based on the needs of the moment, as the difficulties and pressures made it necessary. However, the work performed was negative and subjected to prohibitions, while the present situation does not require a partial, but a comprehensive, objective and imaginative plan, in order to really solve the problem. In short, it should not be a makeshift program which would only fill the gaps to make things look better and which would settle extreme cases to cope with stagnation; we need a program liable to improve as much as possible the standards set by the government, especially those of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In support of my statement, I refer to page 15 of the report published in January last by the task force on housing and urban development and I quote:

> Within the more limited context of the housing supply, itself the Task force found ample evidence of imperfection within the existing market mechanism.

It is undeniable that as the result of the present housing policy the citizen whose annual income is below $6,000 per year cannot hope to carry out his dream of becoming owner of his home. That dream which in fact satisfies a universal need will only be a chimerical idea for the three following main reasons: the costs of land, and construction, the rates of financing.

Indeed, if we consider the first impediment, that is the cost of the land, we realize that it is too high, because there are very few places, like in Saskatoon, where serviced lots can be found for less than $3,500, according to the report of the Hellyer's task force on housing and urban development.

In addition, a survey of 26 major municipalities by the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities disclosed that, in almost 50 per cent of them, the average cost of a serviced residential lot was in excess of $8,000.

I will now deal with the second factor. The price of materials is excessive and the federal tax of 11 per 100, as well as the Ontario tax of 5 per cent and the Quebec tax of 8 per cent make any construction almost impossible. Because of direct and indirect taxes, construction costs reach astronomical figures.

I shall finally talk about the factor I find the most important. I mean the incentive loan, because the cost of money in the last few years resulted in a sharp increase in the interest rate. The Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which comes under federal authority recently raised its interest rate to 9⅜ per cent, an all-time high, with the blessing of the government. Never have interest rates been so high in the field of residential construction. Early in January, when New York banks increased their interest rates to 7 per cent, everyone, Americans first of all, claimed it was robbery. Bankers were denounced as swindlers and profiters.

How could we today prevent finance, trust and insurance companies, and banks from establishing any interest rate on the first mortgage of a house, seeing that an organization responsible to government has raised its own.

As a result, thanks to the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, people must pay for five or six houses to get only one. That system is not consistent with progress, considering the present prosperity in our country.

Mr. Speaker, the Canadian citizen who longs to own his home is pursuing a dream that will never come true because of the system.

For example, 60 per cent of Quebec families live in extreme poverty, with an annual revenue of less than $5,000. Also, out of 6 million residents in Quebec, there are 160,000 unemployed, a record in developed countries.

In the Eastern Townships, 81 per cent of those employed earn less than $4,000 a year. Between 4 and 5 per cent of that population or more than 10,000 people live on welfare. There are also 2,000 families who must pay for health care, education, recreation, shelter, heating and other expenses out of weekly wages of $35 or $40. The unemployment rate is 8.4 per cent of the population, that is 6,000 or 7,000 Canadian citizens in the Eastern Townships are out of work. I do not speak for nothing today, if I can draw the attention of the government to the sad situation in the Eastern Townships which, in my opinion should be a designated area.

The alternative is plain: either people live in 500,000 houses officially termed "inadequate" and commonly called "slums", or they get at the top of a long waiting list to obtain "public housing", one of those 40,000 units or so in Canada built and financed by the government.

The task force on housing and urban development adds and I quote:

> With the possible exception of the "sweat equity" co-operative housing program in eastern Nova Scotia, the Task Force could find no effective or organized system in Canada whereby lower-income families could aspire to home-ownership.

This problem does not confront only the lowest income groups but also the "average" wage earners within the $4,000 and $8,000 a year range.

In fact, the general level of the cost of living and the price of single-family dwellings being what they are, the dream of many of these Canadians is just that—a dream. Their dwelling is costing them well beyond the 27 per cent of income the CMHC handbook says is acceptable for a family budget.

Mr. Speaker, the sharp rise of interest rates registered during these last 30 months represents the factor which has contributed the most to increasing the price of private property beyond the means of most Canadians.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

In view of the interest rate now in force, an $18,000 house, including the price of the house and land, costs its owner from $52,000 to $53,000. After 40 years, the same $18,000 loan granted by the CMHC at 9⅜ per cent, as recommended by the Hellyer task force, would cost about $75,000. Is not such a house paid for six times over? Moreover, according to the figures available to me, a $20,000 house, that is a five-room brick dwelling panelled in wood on a piece of land worth $2,500 would cost $58,000 after 25 years and $84,000 after 40 years. Is not that robbery, if you will pardon the expression?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. Beaudoin: The report of the task force on housing and urban development recommends that, and I quote:

The federal government should seek to encourage and co-ordinate the efforts of private lending institutions to meet the vast majority of Canada's residential mortgage requirements by setting annual targets, by canvassing these lenders twice annually—

Can you picture the white-collar gang on the construction sites?

—to ensure that their investment intentions are adequate to meet these goals, and by paying particular attention to the needs of the various regions of Canada a special effort should be made to enlist the increasing participation of Canada's rapidly growing pension funds in the field of residential mortgage financing.

Mr. Speaker, can you see people using the pension benefits they managed to pile up to support a system which I submit is crazy? Is it not a public scandal? Could we endorse such a recommendation and thus let the people that we represent be exploited, as has been the case in recent years, by private lending institutions, in particular insurance and trust companies? I suggest the government is shirking its responsibilities towards the people by tolerating such a situation and by forcing people to pay for their properties five or six times what they are worth when applications for loans are directed to those institutions.

Mr. Speaker, I maintain that the present system offers no solution and I repeat what we, of the Ralliement Créditiste, have always advocated, namely that the Central Housing and Mortgage Corporation could atone for its past by using the services of the Bank of Canada or other similar institutions to lend money at interest rates covering only administrative costs to those who want to build a home. To that end, it would be necessary to create new bank credits making up capital designed for the social welfare of the country which would not come from the private sector which forces the borrowers to repay two, three, four and even five times the amount of the loan.

To illustrate this procedure of the social credit system, one can look at the banks when they decide to put up a building. We could proceed like they do in the private sector to see what would happen.

Banks start by opening themselves credit in a current account; they thus give themselves some credit and they do not charge any interest on it. It is an entry costing only the ink used to make it. Then it is decided to build new premises. And the construction is started no matter the cost since only the capital is repaid. Once the construction of the building that will house the offices of the bank is completed, space is rented at a monthly or yearly rate. After 30 years, the credit has been paid back. It is surprising to see that the procedure works well for banks, but not for individuals. That is something that I find myself unable to fathom.

So Social Credit creates to destroy credit which, while it lasts, plays the part of real money, that is the part now played by the banks, according to the powers granted to them.

Thus, the bank would loan the funds required to purchase the land and to build, in accordance with accepted standards. After an examination of the reimbursement possibilities of the family or of the new owner who is to purchase the said building, the bank would set the monthly payment to be made. Such loans would bear interest at a very low rate, just enough to cover the risk of nonpayment and administrative costs. These monthly payments could be spread over a period of 20, 30 or 40 years, depending on the quality of the materials and on the reimbursement capacity and, as a general rule, this monthly rent could be set at 20 per cent of the owner's income.

This system would allow thousands of families who are now tenants to become homeowners and thus become a stabilizing factor in our society, while creating sources of income for the municipality where this house would be built—

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

[English]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Bell: Is the government house leader in a position to state the business for the remainder of this week and next week?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I can announce it for the next two days. It will be our proposal to return tomorrow to the government reorganization bill and deal with all those parts that have not been dealt with, with the exception of the part relating to regional economic expansion. It is assumed we might be able to finish with those other parts by tomorrow's adjournment. On Thursday, we hope to deal with the question of regional economic expansion and carry the bill through to conclusion.

Notice will be given this evening of a bill proposing to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act. We will seek the unanimous consent of the house to abridge the period of 48 hours so that the bill may be given first reading tomorrow. We hope it will be given quick passage on Thursday, in view of the general interest in having that bill being carried into law.

The business for Friday will be as announced last Thursday. We will start with the superannuation bill, which I understand will be returned tomorrow from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The second item of business will be Bill S-15 with respect to the Food and Drugs Act. The third item would be the bill to amend the Financial Administration Act. On Thursday, I will make an announcement for the coming week after we have had an opportunity for certain consultations.

Mr. Bell: May I just ask the minister if he can be certain the evidence on the superannuation bill will be ready for Friday?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): My understanding is that it will be, but of course the calling of the bill on Friday would be subject to the evidence being available. I think it will be available tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The committee proceedings on this bill were completed this morning, so it should be possible to have the evidence available.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair, to resume the same at eight o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 58 (4) (a)—UTILIZATION OF BANK OF CANADA TO ALLEVIATE TAX BURDEN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Rondeau.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, before six o'clock I was indicating how this government could implement a program if it wished and I was encouraging it to do so.

Many wonder where to get this money? It would come out not from personal taxes but from the secret reserves of public or private corporations.

It would all take place without any increase in prices, costs, on either personal or corporation incomes but simply by taking out of the reserves the amounts required not considered as taxable gains. Let these amounts come from companies, banks or any other kind of institutions, private or public.

In this way, these families will live in homes really belonging to them, and enjoy a healthy comfort and a freedom which would enable them to better provide for the maintenance and education of the children.

It should be noted that this system is not as farfetched as one is enclined to believe, because the task force on housing and urban development mentions it in one of its recommendations in his report of January 1969, as follows:

> In existing circumstances, it can provide a valuable source of liquidity for present lenders and for other investors seeking to acquire mortgage holdings.

These are not my words; they are recommandations of the Hellyer task force.

> Therefore, the task force recommends that serious consideration be given to the establishment of a Central Mortgage Bank to provide additional liquidity for existing lending operations and as a necessary prerequisite to the creation of new mortgage institutions.

Would that task force become creditist in order to really alleviate this situation as it says so well.

I continue:

The need to act while reasonable action is still possible. Many Canadians, whose needs are of yesterday's, want adequate housing today and not tomorrow.

However, my criticisms concerning the present policies are not confined only to the economic aspect of the issue but to the aspect which to me is most important, since it relates to the moral, psychological and sociological allied problems.

Mr. Speaker, instead of always thinking in terms of getting richer at the expenses of the small wage earners, why would the government not give them a chance to contribute to the development of the country and therefore to that of the family, that cornerstone of society?

Mr. Réal Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste were given the opportunity, through the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte), to introduce a motion blaming the government for its inefficiency, its failure to take a stand about the use of the Bank of Canada for the purpose of alleviating the taxation burden which weighs upon Canadian taxpayers at every level of public administration.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, some Liberal, Progressive Conservative or New Democratic party members do not accept our motion. But we don't know why.

The hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) explained the reason rather clearly this afternoon. We live in a world of living people while some live in a world of scholars. The latter believe they know but as a matter of fact they know nothing. They assume they know and understand everything, except the financial question.

Members from all sides of the house talk about improving the situation of farmers. We understand we must improve our production and take the necessary steps to increase it. Everybody understands that. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), the ministers, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) as well as the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) understand that. All members understand, even if they have never seen a carrot grow, that we must improve the agricultural system and help the farmers.

In the labour field, it is the same thing.

[Mr. Beaudoin.]

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) clamours that relations between employers and workers must be improved.

As concerns the health field and the field of justice, we must improve conditions and legislation.

As far as industry and commerce are concerned, especially as regards foreign trade, everybody understands that we must take the necessary steps to bring about needed improvements. Nevertheless as soon as we talk about the financial system everybody stands gaping. They have no more the right to understand or to speak, they merely have the right to look at themselves and play the fools. That is all that happens. Nobody has enough courage to speak against finance.

Today, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Hon. Mr. Lambert), another bright scholar, was telling us that using the Bank of Canada could lead to all kinds of misuse, that it could grant illimited and unconsiderate credit, which would be a threat to the health of our economy. What does the member for Edmonton West know about the subject? The reason why, he says, the government of Alberta did not apply for those loans was because the municipalities had done so. Does he really believe Alberta is the only place where such things happen?

Just have a look at the City of Montreal and see what is going on there. Officials there go, crawling on their knees, to France, to Belgium, and to the United States, begging for loans. We are able to make anything here in Canada but when it comes to money matters, we fall on our knees, in front of the United States. Have you ever seen the United States borrow from anybody? Not I. But everybody borrows from them: the Canadian government, the municipalities and the provinces.

We borrow on behalf of Hydro-Quebec, we borrow on behalf of Hydro Ontario, and to meet the needs of Canada. We beg for American patronage. We do not even have the stamina to start working in order to improve the financial conditions prevailing in our country however much we realize the importance of improving every field of administration or every federal department.

Mr. Speaker, people understand everything except finance. The Creditist motion is not seconded, save by my 13 colleagues.

The representative of the NDP said that he did not share our opinions. So did a Progressive Conservative member.

When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) takes the floor he will say that he does not share our opinions. We are aware of that fact. Some Liberals sometimes wonder where are the economists in the ranks of the Creditists? Well, we simply do not need them.

The Liberals, since they came into power, are like puppets in the hands of the economists. You can see the results across Canada. Unemployment is growing, nobody feels safe; everybody is afraid.

Our high school and university students wonder whether they will be able to find a job, once their studies are completed. They will not, in spite of the fact that we have capable economists and scientists to inform and advise the government.

Before this government took office, the Conservatives were in power. An hon. member said that under the Progressive-Conservatives things were running smoothly. Still, in 1961 and 1962, for the first time in the history of Canada, we had a million unemployed. What did they do from the financial point of view? No better than the Liberals.

On the other hand, what does the New Democratic party suggest? Take away from the rich to give to the poor, and therefore have more poor. You cannot take away from the rich to give to the poor. So, instead of improving living conditions, you will lower them in an attempt to fatten a certain group. This cannot be done.

Mr. Speaker, the problem in Canada is not a lack of programs; everyone creates programs for the government. It costs hundreds of millions of dollars a year to pay the program "makers", and the results are always the same.

• (8:10 p.m.)

The present Prime Minister wrote in 1963 that the Liberals were "idiots". He was right, Mr. Speaker.

An hon. Member: He certainly was.

Mr. Caouette: So the Prime Minister took over the leadership of the "idiots" in Canada, that is why today he no longer speaks of finance as he did in 1943, 1944 and 1945. Not only has the bottom been reached, but the bottom of idiocy.

Mr. Speaker, the Créditistes put the finger on the sore spot, on the source of unrest in Canada. We are not worried about wealth, about natural resources to develop; everyone knows they exist. The problem is a financial one, a matter of knowing how to finance the development of our natural resources. That is the question. It is a monetary one and the only one we cannot tackle. Why not? We are not the first to accuse those who control money and credit. Others have spoken about them before us.

I have here a document from which I shall quote. It has to do with the Rothschild Brothers of London who wrote, without any qualms whatever:

[English]

The few who can understand the system (check money and credits) will either be so interested in its profits, or so dependent on its figures, that there will be no opposition from that class, while on the other hand, the great body of the people mentally incapable of comprehending the tremendous advantage that capital derives from the system, will bear its burden without complaint, and perhaps without even suspecting that the system is inimical to their interests.

[Translation]

They knew what they were writing about when they said the system will be interesting to one group because of its profits and that the others will depend so much on this system that they will be unable to offer any opposition.

Mr. Speaker, electoral funds replenished by people such as the Rothschild brothers have governments of their own choice elected. These governments then become mere puppets in the hands of those people. I will quote what Meyer Arsene Rothschild said, in days gone by:

[English]

Permit me to issue and control the money of a nation, and I care not who makes its laws—

[Translation]

The Minister of Finance is laughing because he read about that. He understands the situation and that these people—

[English]

Mr. Benson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I was not laughing, I was just smiling because I enjoy hearing my friend speak in English so effectively.

Mr. Caouette: It is very kind of the hon. minister to say that I am talking well in English, and I hope that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) enjoyed this at the same time.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, such statements were not made by members of the Railliement Créditiste; those are financiers who are condemning themselves or who, at least are showing off their power and the control they exercise in the United States or in Canada. It is known that in Canada, slush funds depend on large corporations. After election time, governments naturally feel obligated. Ministers, prime minister and leaders of the opposition are not being transported from one ocean to the other free, gratis and for nothing, just to get a government elected. No sir! In fact, after the elections are over, lobbying begins. Whether the Administration is blue or red—the only kinds we have had since Confederation—it has to bow to pressure groups.

Mr. Speaker, others claim they are not Creditistes, as it were, but they condemn the financial system because, I shall say it again, it is the root of all evil.

I see that my hon. friend from Lévis (Mr. Guay) does not seem to agree. In his own riding, the problem is not to build ships in Lauzon, but rather to obtain money to build them, as it is a matter of funds shortage—

Mr. Guay (Lévis): What are we going to do with the ships?

Mr. Caouette: Put them in your own backyard with the backward people.

Mr. Speaker, what is to be done with the ships, they ask. There is a shortage of them right now on the Pacific coast for shipping wheat to the Chinese, to help the nice little Chinese. Mr. Speaker, at one time we used to buy the Chinese in Canada. Now we go and feed them in their own country. Things have changed. Here is what Abraham Lincoln said and I quote:

• (8:20 p.m.)

[English]

The money power preys upon the nation in times of peace and conspires against it in times of adversity. It is more despotic than monarchy, more insolvent than autocracy, more selfish than bureaucracy. It denounces, as public enemies, all who question its methods or throw light upon its crimes.

[Translation]

It is a fact. That is what happens when we speak of Social Credit. I know something about it, for I have been speaking of it for 30 years. Some of my colleagues have been doing so for the same length of time, yet as soon as someone speaks of Social Credit, reporters are heard to say it is a money printing machine or funny money. Why do they say that? Abraham Lincoln gives us the explanation. It is because that power conspires against the public, against the nation in times of adversity.

Mr. Speaker, we speak of Social Credit and monetary reform not in order to glut the world with money, but to put money at the service of the individual, rather than the individual at the service of money, in short, to make money available when we want to use it for the benefit of the people.

We have highways, hospitals, schools to build and all kinds of things to do. If those things are not done, it is due to a lack of money. There are numerous unemployed who ask only for work, but money is short. Then they are paid retraining courses and have to take courses in the 8th, 9th, 10th and 11th forms. They become educated unemployed. They are more educated; that is the only difference. The government does not suggest any solution. When we propose the monetary reform and the use of the Bank of Canada, the government laughs at us.

Mr. Speaker, a former American president, James A. Garfield, said the following:

[English]

Whoever controls the volume of money in any country is absolute master of all industry and commerce.

[Translation]

Let us do that right here.

The prime minister, who is a very intelligent man—and everybody agrees with that—comes and tells us that money does not grow on trees. An hon. member finds that very funny; it is his leader who talks like that. If his leader tells him that money does not grow on trees, he will repeat it. As if we did not know. Where does it grow then? Nobody tells us. Could the hon. minister of Finance, who will speak after a while, tell us where money grows, so that we will know? But we know and we speak up. It is a matter of technology, as my hon. friend from Bellechasse was saying; technology prevents us from knowing where money grows. However, we know that it grows when there is a war and that it "ungrows" when there is peace. That much we know. When there is a war, there is no monetary problem. Surely not. There is no question of shrinking the big ones to make the small ones bigger. Did you ever hear a minister of Finance say: "Our tanks are too big, let us make them smaller to make our rifles a little bigger". Never! They keep on making rifles and tanks as big as possible, and that is the end of it.

In Canada, in the economic field, they say: "We should make the big ones smaller so that the small ones will grow bigger". We tried that and the result was the present stagnation at all levels of government. Let us take a look at the premier of Ontario who, since he introduced his recent budget, is scratching his head, does not know where to go, and then comes to Ottawa, claiming that he should get a bigger slice of the tax basis. Quebec does the same thing, as well as the Maritimes, and the Prairies. Everybody says there is no money. The Minister of Finance of Canada, the Prime Minister and the government answer: "Money does not grow on trees."

Another individual, Henry Ford, who may not have been an economist or a reputed professional, but who nevertheless knew about these things from experience, said:

[English]

Money is only one part of our transportation system. It moves goods from man to man. A dollar bill is like a postage stamp: it is no good unless it will move commodities between persons. If a postage stamp will not carry a letter, or money will not move goods, it is just the same as an engine that will not run. Someone will have to get out and fix it.

So said Henry Ford.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, this is really too good to stop. We on this side will be very pleased to have the hon. member continue.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friends for their courtesy. I notice the Minister of Finance is particularly moved by the examples I am giving him now and by the statements made by people who held prominent positions in their lifetime.

Therefore I thank the Minister of Finance for his good words and I shall endeavour to inform him as best I can, so that he will be able to tell us tonight that he does intend to direct the Bank of Canada to serve the interests of the Canadian economy and to enable Canadians to benefit once for all from the tremendous wealth in our country.

A few minutes ago, I saw my friend, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Olson) and the Minister of Finance who were smiling. As to the Minister of Agriculture, he knows what I am talking about, because he has already made in this house statements which in every respect were similar to the one we are making today. I am convinced that behind the curtains, he is saying to the Minister of Finance: "Caouette is right, what he says is right." I am convinced of it.

Mr. Speaker, the member for Winnipeg-North-Center himself has just said that I am right. One would not expect that from a socialist member. The socialists themselves acknowledge that we are right.

Mr. Speaker, someone else who was not necessarily a Créditist, the ex-king of England, Edouard VIII said:

• (8:30 p.m.)

[English]

There is no scarcity of commodities. It is I think at the consuming and distribution end, that failure has occurred and it is useless to produce goods, that cannot be sold.

[Translation]

That is the situation. Let us go and visit seriously our Canadian industry, our wholesalers and retailers, let us go around any city, town, or village anywhere in Canada and we will realize how tremendous is the production of goods and services in Canada.

We received by mail, bulky catalogues from the T. Eaton Company, Simpsons-Sears Limited, Opera Diamond, from another wholesale company in Winnipeg. There are as many products as we may want; there is plenty of everything.

An hon. Member: The Hudson's Bay Company.

Mr. Caouette: The Hudson's Bay? The Hudson's Bay Company.

We have oodles of everything. There is no production problem here. When I hear a minister say that we have able planners, economists, sociologists, I wonder if the government needs such sociologists and economists instead of psychiatrists to find out what those people are really thinking about.

Mr. Speaker, production exists, and it can be multiplied almost indefinitely in Canada.

Farmers are complaining that their products are not being sold, and industries that their warehouses are overflowing. Therefore, they must lay off some people and let them go to work somewhere else after 15, 20, 25 years of faithful services. They are laid off under the pretext that we have overproduction. That is the situation. There is overproduction. Sales are made everywhere. Let us go to Ottawa, to Hull, at Freiman's or Simpsons-Sears, everywhere there are special sales. No sooner have we received a catalogue for one season than the next one advertising sales is delivered to our home.

Production exists, but unfortunately consumers do not have the purchasing power.

The government lacks the money to develop our natural resources and create new industries. Our country must constantly go and beg financial authority abroad to develop something that belongs to us, with our own materiel means. That is what we cannot accept.

That is why I told the Progressive Conservative government in 1962: A system that keeps financing production in Canada cannot be tolerated any longer, because there is no shortage of production. Instead of financing production, let us finance consumption, so that consumption can finance production. That would be logical.

In that respect, some have said that we are promising unattainable things. I told the government: Do make an experiment. Some joint experiments were made; nuclear tests, tests of weapons, aircraft, in short, in every possible field, except the financial one. They did not dare. I have suggested such a thing in the past, together with my colleagues of the Ralliement Créditiste. I shouted my suggestion all over, on television, on radio, at meetings: Do make some experiments. I do not believe that they should be started afresh every month, but let us try.

If the government and the Minister of Finance decided to distribute a $100 national dividend to every Canadian citizen tomorrow morning, it would be a $100 experiment. Not of $100 per month, but of $100 all at once, and they could check the consequences of the results. A family of ten would get $1,000, a family of five, $500, a family of two, $200, and an individual $100. That would amount to $2,100,000,000, hardly half a billion more than what is spent at the present time for national defence. This money would be in the consumer's hands. A poor family of 10 in Quebec would receive $1,000. A family of five in Montreal would get $500. This purchasing power, Mr. Speaker, would enable people to buy clothes, food and requisites. What would this create? It would create demand; stores would be emptied. They would get new stocks through orders placed with industries. Men would be re-employed. This would reduce unemployment. Canadians by the thousands would obtain employment and our economy, thanks to consumers, would undergo a new expansion. This is most logical. Let us try it and if it proves unsuccessful nothing prevents us from putting an end to it. Nothing prevents us from withdrawing from circulation the two billions if it encourages laziness or causes people to lose their soul. Nothing could prevent us from doing that. However, if the experience is successful I am already sure that it is the only solution which will bring about the recovery of Canadian economy. Instead of remunerating "programmers" as I stated earlier, let us give consumers a chance to purchase products made for them and Canadian producers will then be able to sell their goods.

Mr. Speaker, this national dividend of $100 would not create inflation. The interest required by the financial system is now creating inflation.

The hon. member for Bellechasse stated this afternoon that our workers are paid for 40 hours of work a week and that on the other side, the financial system, while being idle, is paid 365 days a year and 24 hours a day. It is true. However, nobody speaks about it. In all the government departments, all kinds of things are discussed, except the interest on the national debt. Everybody keeps quiet on that subject.

Mr. Speaker, I have here an article written by an American banker, Mr. Robert Hamphill, who said, and I quote:

[English]

Someone has to borrow every dollar we have in circulation, cash or credit. If the banks create ample synthetic credit, we are prosperous; if not, we starve. We are absolutely without a permanent money system. When one gets a complete grasp of the picture, the tragic absurdity of our hopeless position is almost incredible; but there it is. The banking problem is the most important problem intelligent persons can investigate and reflect upon. It is so important that our present civilization may collapse unless it is widely understood and the defects remedied very soon.

[Translation]

An American banker said that. Moreover, Mr. Woodrow Wilson, the former American president, stated and I quote:

[English]

A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. Our system of credit is concentrated. The growth of the nation and all our activities are in the hands of a few men. We have come to be one of the worst ruled, one of the most completely controlled and dominated Governments in the world—no longer a Government of free opinion, no longer a Government by conviction and vote of the majority, but a Government by the opinion and duress of small groups of dominant men.

• (8:40 p.m.)

[Translation]

Woodrow Wilson said that:

[English]

The great monopoly in this country is the monopoly of big credits. A great industrial nation is controlled by its system of credit. The growth of the nation, therefore, and all our activities are in the hands of a few men who chill and check and destroy genuine economic freedom.

We have been dreading all along the time when the combined power of high finance would be greater than the power of the government.

[Translation]

A president of the United States said that; he was in office and had no intention of going against the power of the few men who control money and credit.

Mr. Speaker, I have often quoted in the house His Holiness Pope Pius XI who said:

[English]

The quotation is from those "In the Know".

The power of concentrated economic domination becomes particularly irresistible when exercised by those, who, because they hold and control money, are able to govern credit and determine its allotment. For that reason, by supplying and controlling the lifeblood of the entire economic body, and grasping as if it were in their hands, they control the very soul of production so that no one dares breathe against their will.

Pope Pius XI

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, those are statements from people who are not known as Créditistes, but who know where the difficulties and the uneasiness lie and have the courage to throw light on them, as my colleagues of the Ralliement Créditiste and myself are doing, inside as well as outside the house.

I have often said outside the house that the businessmen, workers, farmers we meet listen to us because they want to understand, whereas here we are talking to people who are paid not to understand. It is different, but at least we succeed in reaching the people who are more and more aware of the importance of a monetary reform.

Mr. Speaker, I say we should seriously consider the financial crisis that confront us. The provinces are doing everything they can to solve it and the municipalities suffer greatly from it.

Mr. Speaker, if we gave serious consideration to our financial difficulties and if we took steps to solve them, Canada would be in a less confused state. We would not see any of those linguistic wrangles, of those petty quarrels where it is argued that the central government spends more money for eastern Canada than for western Canada or vice versa. We would not assist to any bombings as in Montreal or in other municipalities. We would not assist to that display of hatred which is increasing in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we would achieve a true national unity in Canada by making available to Canadians a logical monetary system which would enable every citizen to be himself. The system is to be blamed for all our disputes. Worry is what pushes people to look for any reason to stir up strife. This is all the more astonishing as there are in Canada French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians and that the provincial premiers and Canada's Prime Minister met in Ottawa recently on the occasion of a federal-provincial conference.

On the first day, everybody was talking about the linguistic matter and they did not quite succeed in understanding each other. The English provinces do not want to acknowledge the French fact. There are some people in the province of Quebec who refuse to acknowledge the English fact, and everybody is at sixes and sevens.

On the second day, Mr. Speaker, all the people were talking the same language, that of money, since nobody had any. Only one language was spoken at that time, because it was realized that the monetary system was not French, English, Ukrainian, Japanese, Chinese, or Russian. The monetary system is in the hands of a few people who do not give a damn either for the Liberal party or the Progressive Conservative party, but who dread the thought of the Créditistes gaining ground in Canada for example. They are scared to death of the monetary reform we favour which would deprive them of their control over the economy and the life of the Canadian people. While we in the house are striving to maintain national unity the system endeavours to destroy it. The financial system thrusts one against the other. Its principle is to interfere in order to reign. While we are fighting in English and French, the financial system takes from both the English and the French. That is what they find profitable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Caouette: The financial system, the monetary system has no party affiliation, but it has puppets in Parliament, people who will bring up, in the house, all sorts of problems, that are not really problems, but on which we waste our time for weeks and months. We discussed the Canadian flag for six months. What has that changed in the financial system? Nothing at all.

The financial system controls the provinces, the municipalities and the federal government. When we ask, for example, that the Bank of Canada be used for interest-free loans to the provinces and to the municipalities, that raises a hue and a cry. It is considered unorthodox to lend money, to vote the necessary funds for the development of the provinces. Because of this they are compelled to borrow at outrageous rates abroad.

Mr. Speaker, the provinces and the municipalities are compelled to beg from the financiers and yet, as can be seen from a statement made by the former Secretary of State for External Affairs, Mr. Paul Martin, that I have on hand, during a lecture he gave at Columbia University in New York on April 28, 1967, as part of the Jacob Blaustein Lectures. He said that the conditions of Canadian aid to developing countries have always been relatively favourable. At the beginning, most of our aid was in the form of gifts, and it still represents an important part of our expenditures.

When the level of aid was upped, and when it was decided to offer aid in the form of loans, conditions were set on the basis of those which would be offered by the association for international development, that is to say, no interest was charged. Moreover, ten years of grace are granted and the repayment will be spread over a period of 40 years.

Last year, even the service charges of ¾ per cent were abolished. However we realized that certain developing countries were in a position to obtain loans at conditions a little more burdensome, and to satisfy that particular need, we granted a loan at an interest rate of 3 per cent, with seven years of grace and falling due in 30 years.

Mr. Speaker, will anyone have me believe that here, in Canada, in Prince Edward Island, for instance, and in the Maritimes in general there is not distress almost as terrible as that in the underdeveloped countries or elsewhere? The same situation prevails here in Canada. We do not ask for miracles. We do not ask the government to stop giving aid to those countries in need of it. Not at all. But we ask the government to offer the same services at the same conditions to our provinces and our municipalities.

We ask the government to see to it that money is at the service of the human being, of the provinces, of the Canadians, instead of being the master as is the case nowadays.

The financial difficulties facing the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and the government could be overcome provided enough courage could be mustered to do so.

As far as the Ralilement Créditiste is concerned, we will continue to fight for monetary reform, not because we want to steal from anyone but because we want to have the greatest number of people to own something in Canada. We really want to insure for all security and freedom. This will be possible in as much as Canada has an adequate monetary system.

Since Liberal and Conservative governments found billions of dollars to win wars, there is no valid reason in the world why billions of dollars cannot also be found for peace, harmony and understanding in Canada.

The people are willing to get to work in order to build and develop the country. It is up to the government to take up the challenge and to put finance at the service of Canadians so that they can share in the wealth of their own country.

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, since I was first elected a member of this house, in the fall of 1965, I have been greatly impressed by the numerous publications which are made available to us by different government services.

Among those documents, there is one published every year which I consider the most valuable of all, and that is the Canada Year Book because that publication agrees with all the proponents of the monetary reform advocated by the Ralliement Créditiste. It agrees with them in this sense that it reveals the true wealth of our country, such as our exports.

Proportionately to our population, Canada is already the fourth largest exporting country in the world. In fact, on this same basis, our exports last year were twice as high as those of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, in this country to which nature has been very kind, we do our best to administer our own business. In the field of public administration we have chosen experienced people. In the provinces, the members are not appointed; they are legally elected. This situation prevails, at the municipal level, for the choice of our mayors and aldermen.

In our school board, the chairman and the members were chosen. They were all elected by the population because the latter recognized them as men of merit and sound judgment.

To-day, we realize that the majority of those directors, while they are serving their fellow-citizens, are anxiety-ridden. The soundest minds become dizzy. The school boards wonder how they can possibly pay their teachers.

The mayor of the city of Montreal, supposedly a man of experience, recently had to make a closed retreat to find out his true vocation.

On the other hand, the mayor of the city of Quebec is wondering whether he will be able to pay for the sidewalks that were built under his predecessor's administration.

And the confessions made in private by some representatives of the province of Quebec would surprise many people, were they made public. Now, those representatives face some problems at the present time not because the Union Nationale party is in office but for entirely different reasons.

In New Brunswick the prime minister, though a member of the Liberal party, also finds himself in an impasse, as stated in the newspaper L'Action on February 4, 1969, and I quote:

In his ninth year as premier, Louis Robichaud, now aged 43, is trying to find a way out of this financial impasse which forced his Liberal government to reduce its capital expenses, increase taxes and forget the federal-provincial medicare program for the time being.

—New Brunswick is not the only province to experience financial problems.

However, that is the way people comfort themselves, Mr. Chairman. Things go wrong, but the victims are not alone, for it is the same everywhere. So the same system goes on and on.

The Minister of Finance for New Brunswick stated last spring that the debt had doubled these last two years and was totalling $273,900,000.

I quote another extract of that article:

In a small province with a population of 624,000 souls, the debt amounts approximately to $441 per capita and it cramps the style of the Minister of Finance on the bond market—

Last March, Mr. Des Brisay presented a budget based on

The financial situation of the province and of the country—

He quoted the high cost of loans as well as the rise in debt—

Mr. Speaker, we remember the statement of Mr. Paul O. Trépanier, mayor of Granby, (P.Q.) a well known member of the conservative party. In a rhetorical outburst he stated that most of the municipalities were on the brink of bankruptcy.

In an article published recently in L'Action of March 1, 1969, here is what Mr. Clarence White wrote:

Our tax-payers have reached the extreme limit on what is feasible and there could be no question of adding to their tax burden, be it an election year or not. Thus spoke yesterday Mayor Gilles Lamontagne when the budget was presented to the City Council.

Quebec has four or five very difficult years ahead if the provincial government does not come to the rescue of its capital city. Quebec cannot get out of its deficit alone and without the help of the government.

Mr. Speaker, in the educational field, difficulties are just as serious. I quote from La Presse of January 29 an article signed by Mr. Roger Champoux.

—ages ago, the province of Quebec reached the limit in the matter of income and property taxes. In addition, the government is unable to draw from other items of the estimates the necessary amounts to comply with the demands of teachers. Education is essential, but there are also roads, health, industry and a thousand other urgent needs.

And Roger Champoux adds further on:

Every time the teachers have submitted reasonable representations, we supported them. When woman teachers were less paid than their colleagues, we denounced that stupid condition. When country people paid less than city people, we decided that a reform was essential. When there was some of talk of granting to the teacher the high prestige to which he is entitled, we went along with that claim related to the respect due to the human being.

But this time, it is impossible to ask the taxpayer what he is unable to give.

Property owners are hard pressed, tenants have created a league which will make a row, big trade and industry are constantly protesting against tax increases—all those taxes which knock them left and right—in short, there is no more room and nothing goes.

Mr. Speaker, we are living in a rich country and if we consider that in 1944, national production amounted only to $11,400 million and reached $68 billion in 1968, it means that national production has increased six-fold. Faced with so much wealth, our industrialist are not the only ones to be concerned, because all classes of society are also worried. People are realizing that they are missing something.

Farmers, who were long considered to be kings of the earth, wonder today how much longer they will be able to continue their payments to the Farm Credit Corporation.

Workers wonder how their employer will be able to keep them on the payroll, because to hire labour, one must have a business, an undertaking which is reasonably prosperous. At present businesses are not only in difficulty, but they are going bankrupt, and I quote an article published in Le Devoir of March 14, 1969:

More bankruptcies in January last... The number of bankruptcies sharply increased in January to 176 or more than in any preceding month since March 1968, report Dun and Bradstreet.

—not only did they increase in number in January, but the liabilities also rose to $12.6 million compared to $7.0 million in December.

Retail trade, construction and services were mostly affected by the greater number of bankruptcies between December and January and in comparison with a year earlier.

Total liabilities in the month of January increased.

The article goes on to say:

For retail trade and construction, it was a ten-month record, while the number for services tripled compared to December and reached a 15-month peak.

• (9:00 p.m.)

Mr. Speaker, in matters of bankruptcies, we are now using sport terminology. In Le Devoir of Friday, March 4, it is said that the record number of bankruptcies in January was a record.

Mr. Speaker, everybody knows that fewer employers mean more unemployed. In Quebec alone, compared with the last two years, the number of people on welfare has increased by 40 per cent, and as a result of unemployment, the housing problem is getting more serious. Not only a tenant cannot choose his apartment because his income is insufficient, but even the owner is forced to sell against his will. In this connection, I shall quote an article published in La Presse on March 6, 1969 under the signature of Mr. Félix Corriveau, of Montréal. He said:

Anyone going through the streets of Montreal looking for a family dwelling finds nothing but signs reading: House for Sale. Events speak for themselves. The true problem lies with the owner.

The owner is alone responsible for everything: he has to pay the municipal school tax, to put up the money, to pay his mortgage insurance, to look after his house, his lot—

If this costs a lot from the city hall's viewpoint, this is true also for the small owner.

As far as one-family dwelling owners are concerned, it is even worse; they are being penalized because they do not have any tenant; their property is assessed at its full value; they alone have to foot the bill. Most of them finally have to sell their houses for less than the assessed price or the cost of tearing it down. The law gives you no alternative: you must pay or quit. No need to be jealous of that man since he lives in a "taxed jail" even though he had a higher ideal.

Mr. Speaker, whether they are owners or tenants, fathers and mothers alike are worried about what will be left to their children.

The young people attending school are concerned because they wonder what society will be able to offer them this spring. Once again they will be leaving our schools and joining the ranks of the unemployed. We are retraining the workers by giving them allowances, but in those hard times we are experiencing now, what will become of the young people already well-trained? For how long yet will the young people be able to remain honest?

In order to appease the French Canadian people and keep them quiet, in Quebec some glib talkers have been hired to warn them that they are simply being robbed by the English people. All they have to do is to secede from the English.

In order to quiet down the English-speaking people from Quebec, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Mackasey) was saying on Wednesday, January 29, that the uncertainty that loomed over Quebec's economy, was really due to the Union nationale and the Quebec Liberals. Therefore, all that is needed is a change of party, a new group of responsible people and the English-speaking people will be patient. For them and for the other races scattered all over the country, will commission reports which will remain on the shelves always be enough? I doubt it. Without any discrimination based on race, religion or age, from birth to death, the presence of a thief in the home has always left us uncertain. And if today the Canadian people suffer from economic uncertainty, it is because on March 21, 1967, the Canadian government opened the door to thieves, when it passed Bill C-222 which removed the ceiling on interest rates charged by banks, allowing them to manipulate the interest rates on their loans. When we know that the banks have the power to multiply 14 times the deposits of the citizens, we should not be surprised at their achievements at the expense of society.

From 1944 to 1967, the assets of the eight chartered banks was multiplied by five and during that same period, the dividends paid by those same banks rose from 6 per cent to 30 per cent. But that was only peanuts, Mr. Chairman, compared to what is happening now. Therefore I wish to associate myself with the words of the parliamentary reporter for Le Soleil, Mr. Amédée Gaudrault. In one of his articles published in Le Soleil on December 11, 1968, he wrote:

> The banks' fiscal year ends on October 31 and since the last revision of the Bank Act came into force on May 1, 1967, it is only in 1968 that we could understand fully the effects of such a legislation on the Canadian economy. It is a remarkable and indisputable fact that the banks' business has made a tremendous leap. The assets of seven great Canadian chartered banks has shown a 16 per cent increase in recent years.

Mr. Amédée Gaudreault also wrote:

> As for profits, they have increased by an average of 37 per cent in the case of the 7 great banks of this country, the Royal Bank leading them all with a 48 per cent rise. Banks' revenues increased by 29.3 per cent—

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we find a 16 per cent increase in assets, a 37 per cent increase in profits and a 29 per cent increase in revenues. Those figures are taken from the report on banks and were prepared by a Liberal supporter. I hope he speaks the truth and did not add anything. Such profits, such increases do not make sense to me and here again this is just a start for we must remember that last year banks were still working by themselves and since the beginning of the new session, they can expect real profits as a great number of federal public servants are now on loan to assist them in the collection.

Let me remind you that during this session we passed Bill C-110, where we can find in section 1(a), and I quote:

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

> (1a) The Governor in Council may from time to time by regulation prescribe the rate or rates of interest to be paid in respect of any loan made under this Act.

A little later, Bill C-151; an Act to amend the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act was passed.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, I spare the house the details. The bill was intended to remove the 5 per cent ceiling. Then came bill C-152; "an Act to amend the Veterans' Land Act" The explanatory notes read as follows:

> The purpose of this bill is to remove the present 5 per cent fixed rate of interest set out in the Act that relates to sales, loans or advances made in respect to veterans in the Act. And to authorize the governor in council to establish the applicable rate or rates of interest—

The National Law on Housing, allows the government to set the rates of interest every three months. It is the same with the Farm Credit Corporation, the government sets it every three months, at the banks' will. Bill C-110 enabled the government to remove the ceiling and with Bills C-151 and C-152, the government managed to remove two more.

Mr. Speaker, each time this government, with its clean shaven leaders, has passed a bill which will blast a category of Canadian citizens, the bearded chaps in Montreal have managed to lure the public opinion by blasting a little bomb. I realize now it was team work well worth being noted.

In the past, businessmen were supposed to do their dealings in the dark. Today, they are exposed to a glaring light. The Farm Credit Corporation, and the SCHL have become collection agencies, searching the pockets of the workers, of the farmers, for the wee bit they need to make a living and sentencing them, by virtue of law, to a long, slow death.

To my mind, royal enquiries and retraining are and will remain useless surveys and expenditures as long as the Canadian government remains in the service of financiers. The people have already had to pay the piper, and the financiers relied for a long time on the complicity of the information media to make the people accept the idea that the monetary system works against them.

Fortunately, banking operations are being brought to light. It is not necessary to have worn out one's breeches in schools of high learning to understand that the system whereby we exist by going further into debt is as stupid as it is unjust. We do not need transfusions of borrowed blood; we need new, debt-free blood.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Canadian people have contributed enough, I think, to produce high financiers. It is high time the government assumed its responsibilities and offered the people who live in this young and growing country of Canada the advantages it offers to underdeveloped countries of the world which could teach us a lot from many points of view.

Niger for instance. I see here, in the Minutes and proceedings of the standing committee on external affairs and national defence for the sitting held on Wednesday, January 31, 1968, that we have helped Niger:

We know that Niger receives aid from our government.

Mr. Speaker, Niger can teach us first of all how to go about with ships; because Niger is a small and poor country which the rich country of Canada helps. Yet Niger has a merchant marine and its ships navigate in our Vancouver and St. Lawrence River waters. The come for the goods we have given them or they can buy with the credits we have offered them. Now, if new credits are allotted for the sale of wheat—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Richard): Order. The time allotted the hon. member has expired

[English]

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should interject briefly at this point. First of all, I would like to correct a statement I made in the house this afternoon when the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was speaking. He indicated that he believed the Canada Savings Bond issue had raised only $70 million in new money. I said, "Surely, you mean $700 million"? I now have the figures from the Bank of Canada. The net increase through the issue of the Canada Savings Bonds in November was $871 million, and the redemptions since that time have been $217 million, leaving a net cash position at this time of $654 million. That is net new cash out of the Canada Savings Bond issue of last November after taking account of all redemptions which are moving at a relatively normal level.

The main argument that the members of the Creditiste party have been putting forward is that in Canada the money supply is not great enough. First of all, I would like to indicate to the leader of the Creditiste party, and indeed to all hon. members of the house, that the Bank of Canada is at the service of the people of Canada. It is the duty of the Bank of Canada to look after the money supply in Canada, and the monetary policy. Indeed, it is the responsibility of the Governor of the Bank to look after this particular task. It is a very difficult and important task in Canada, and I would like to say that we are fortunate in Canada in having Mr. Rasminsky as head of the Bank of Canada, a man who is one of the ablest central bankers in the whole world.

Mr. Benson: The task of monetary policy, along with fiscal and other economic policies, is to seek to maintain a financial environment that facilitates the maximum sustainable growth of the economy. It is through the achievement of this objective that the greatest sustained flow of real resources becomes available to assist in the solution of specific economic and social problems, such as the problem of poverty.

In the course of providing an adequate monetary base for sustained economic growth, the Bank of Canada adds appreciably to its holdings of Government of Canada securities each year. As at March 12, 1969, the bank held a total of $3.8 billion of Government of Canada securities. Virtually all of the interest on these securities comes back to the government since the profits of the bank are, under the Bank of Canada Act, paid to the government. If the bank bought government securities on a greater scale than was necessary for sound monetary growth this would only add to inflationary pressures in the Canadian economy. Inflation worsens the position of the poor, particularly the older people on fixed incomes. The failure of monetary policy to resist inflation would jeopardize the sustained growth of the economy and would undermine the confidence of foreign investors in our capacity to manage our affairs. On both counts there would be a smaller volume of real resources available to Canadians and their governments to deal with our economic and social problems.

Here, I would like to agree with something that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) said in a speech a week or ten days ago—and it is very unusual for me to agree with him—that inflation is really one of the greatest problems we have in Canada. The reason we have high interest rates in Canada, indeed the reason interest rates throughout the world are very high, is the expectation of people that inflation will continue.

I should point out that the prime bank rate in the United States was raised to 7½ per cent this week, which is the highest it has been in history, and the Euro-dollar rate is 8½ per cent. Interest rates throughout the world are climbing and the reason is that people believe inflation is going to continue.

We in Canada, through the Governor and the Bank of Canada on the one hand, and through the government's fiscal and expenditure policies on the other, are trying to do what we can to control inflation in this country. I should point out that last year we were the third best in the world in this regard, after Germany and The Netherlands. But this is still not good enough. We in Canada, and indeed all western countries, must combat inflation and all of us as citizens, including members of the Creditiste party, must remember that we cannot take more out of the economy through increased benefits to ourselves than results from increased productivity in the country or else inflation is going to continue. This is what the Leader of the Opposition and I have been preaching in this regard.

The consequences of an unsound inflationary monetary policy would therefore be not only to thrust further burdens upon the poor and create even more severe problems of equity, but by undermining real economic growth it would reduce total and average incomes of all Canadians, and increase their tax burden.

Several other points were raised during the course of the debate and perhaps I should deal with a few of them. There was some mention with respect to contributions to the provinces. Indeed, the proposition in the motion was that the Bank of Canada buy up provincial and municipal debentures, presumably by printing more money because that is the only source of funds they have. I think a better solution to this is for the federal government to stay out of the financial markets as much as possible and thus make room for the available limited resources to move to the provinces and municipalities. Indeed that is what we are trying to do. In fact, that has been our aim for some time and continues to be our aim.

However, I should point out that the federal government has made and continues to make substantial contributions to the provinces in order to lighten the fiscal burden on their taxpayers and on municipal taxpayers. It is estimated that in 1968-69 the value of the federal contributions to the provinces, under conditional and unconditional transfer programs, will total some $2.8 billion. That is close to 30 per cent of provincial expenditures in Canada. Furthermore, over the years the federal government has vacated certain tax fields, principally the personal and corporate income tax fields and the estate tax fields, to permit the provinces to raise their taxes without, if they wish, imposing an extra burden on the taxpayers. It is estimated the provinces will raise an estimated $1.8 billion in 1968-69 through federal tax abatements to them.

Mr. Speaker, I have here, if hon. members wish to have them printed in Hansard, tables indicating the amounts of federal contributions by provinces and by program for the years 1967-68 and 1968-69.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The table referred to follows.]

(1) Based on Revised Estimates for 1968–69.

(2) Equalization attributable to post-secondary fiscal transfer is excluded.

(3) Old Age Assistance, Blind Persons' Allowances, Disabled Persons' Allowances, and Unemployment Assistance.

(4) Denotes programs where "contracting out" occurs in whole or in part. For purposes of comparison, the whole federal contribution is shown although it may take the form of a tax abatement, tax equalization, and an adjustment payment.

(5) Includes $305(000) for Yukon and Northwest Territories.

(6) Includes $1,500(000) for the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

(7) The total figure includes $75(000) for the Yukon and Northwest Territories as well as $2,888(000) to be allocated to the Atlantic Provinces together. This amount is not included in the provincial breakdown.

(8) Includes $4,993(000) not allocated to specific provinces, as well as $153(000) for the Yukon and Northwest Territories. Excludes an estimated amount of $933(000) required for commitments to fall due during the current fiscal year.

(9) Includes $256(000) for the Yukon and Northwest Territories as well as an amount of approximately $20,684(000) originally allocated to other Adult Occupational Training programs (Revised Estimates for 1968–69, votes 5 and 10) but later transferred to Capital Assistance programs. The provincial breakdown is also on this basis.

(10) Includes tax abatement, associated equalization, and cash adjustment payments. Both the total and estimates for individual provinces are based on Department of Finance estimates of the value of the tax transfer and associated equalization together with forecasts of cash adjustment payments made by the Secretary of State Department.

NOTE: All figures may not add up exactly to totals due to rounding off. Also, as noted above, totals may include figures for the Yukon and Northwest Territories and various amounts which cannot be broken down by province.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

Mr. Benson: I should like to speak briefly on the problem of equity in taxation and the ability to pay principal. The federal government does try to see that the total federal tax burden is distributed fairly in accordance with the principle of the ability of individuals and corporations in our country to pay.

Because of its basic tax exemptions, $1,000 for a single taxpayer, $2,000 for a married taxpayer, $300 for dependant children eligible for family allowances and $550 for other dependants, and its graduated rates, the personal income tax is one of the main tools used by the government to redistribute income and promote a more equitable allocation of the national wealth.

Indeed I am hopeful that by June we will be able to produce a white paper and table it in the house for the examination of the members of the house and the people of the country which will lead to an even more equitable tax system in our country but an equitable tax system that does not stop the growth which is essential to the economy of the country.

The report of the Royal Commission on Taxation, in analysing the incidence of the federal tax structure, stated that it was slightly regressive in the very low brackets of income and progressive beyond. It gave much credit for the over-all progressive slant of the system in the personal income tax which it describes as progressive throughout the entire income range. Here, I would refer to the report of the Royal Commission on Taxation, volume 2, page 245.

The present structure of the federal tax, even including the Social Development Tax, is progressive. I should like to refer to the table which I indicated in my October 22 budget speech shows the amount and the per cent of income paid in the current fiscal year in terms of federal basic tax, both before and after the inclusion of the Social Development Tax for various income classes. The illustration is for a married taxpayer with two dependant children eligible for family allowances. With the permission of the house I would also like to have this printed in Hansard.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's Note: The table referred to follows]

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

Married Taxpayer—two children eligible for Family Allowance

Income	Present Tax	Social Development Tax	%	Total	%
$ 3,500	$ 102	$ 16	0.5	$ 118	3.4
4,000	184	26	0.7	210	5.3
4,500	275	36	0.8	311	6.9
5,000	376	46	0.9	422	8.4
6,000	597	66	1.1	663	11.0
7,000	842	86	1.2	928	13.3
8,000	1,109	106	1.3	1,215	15.2
10,000	1,644	120	1.2	1,764	17.6
15,000	3,294	120	0.8	3,414	22.8

This taxpayer pays no income tax if his income does not exceed $2700. At $3000, his tax is equal to only 1.5% of his income. At $5000, his tax equals 8.4% of his income. At $7500, his tax grows to 14.2% of his income. At $10,000, it attains 17.6% of his income. Beyond $10,000 his tax rises sharply and at $25,000, it accounts for 31.6% of his income. This establishes quite clearly that the personal income is very progressive in this country and that it does play a significant role as an income redistributor.

Mr. Benson: I should now like to say a few words about government programs which assist the poor and uphold the elements of a just and humane society which we, as a government, believe in and in which I think everybody in this House of Commons believes. Anyone who analyses and understands the whole complex of federal programs will be struck by the range and diversity of expenditures which have as their prime objective easing the burden of the poor and establishing a more just and humane society in Canada. We, as a government, do not take credit for all of them but I should like to say a few words about them. Indeed, if one includes Old Age Security Pensions and the guaranteed income supplement it can be said that well over 50 per cent of total federal expenditures of some $13 billion goes for programs of human and social betterment in our country. Basically, these social development measures have a twofold purpose: First, to effect a redistribution of income as between regions and individuals, for example from the high income regions and individuals to the lower income regions and individuals; second, to attack poverty directly or via joint federal-provincial actions.

Let me enumerate some of these measures. First of all we have assistance to the aged. A great deal of effort has been made to improve the Canadian old age income maintenance system in recent years, such as through the introduction of the Canada Pension Plan and the Canada Assistance Plan. The basic old age security pension is now adjusted automatically in accordance with a pension index and the minimum eligible age has been lowered from age 70 in 1965 to age 65 by next January 1. Guaranteed income supplements give additional income support to low income recipients of the basic old age security benefits. By way of illustration of the funds involved, it can be noted that outlays under the old age security, including the Guaranteed Income Supplement Act, totalled $927 million in 1965-66 and are projected to total over $1.7 billion in 1969-70. This is one place the funds we are spending are going.

Through the Canada Assistance Plan, the federal government helps the provinces extend public assistance to all needy persons on the basis of their individual needs. These needs are determined by an evaluation of budgetary requirements as well as income and resources. The program permits the extension of federal sharing into a number of areas not previously covered under federal-provincial shared-cost arrangements, and provides for federal sharing of certain increased provincial costs caused by the extension of welfare services. It specifically allows for sharing of the costs of extending provincial welfare services to Indians on reserves.

Let us move from there to health measures. The two main programs here are hospital insurance and medical care insurance. The first program permits the federal government to assist the provinces in paying for public hospital insurance programs which extend coverage for specified hospital care and diagnostic services to some 99 per cent of the population of Canada. The federal government pays 50 per cent of the shareable cost for all Canada in such a way that low income provinces get more than 50 per cent of their cost from the federal government.

The medical care program permits the federal government to assist in the financing of provincially administered medical insurance plans which include all physicians services, provide universal coverage, and are portable between participating provinces. The federal contribution to each province is also calculated in a way that favours the lower income regions of our country.

Now, let us move on to education matters which really are a provincial responsibility. The post secondary education fiscal transfer program assists the provinces in meeting the costs of post secondary education, including university, other higher education and training and grade 13 in the province of Ontario, through a transfer of fiscal resources related to eligible post secondary operating expenditures in each province. In 1968-69, the estimated value of the total transfer of fiscal resources is $502 million, of which $224 million is in the form of cash payments to the provinces.

To assist Canadians in meeting the challenges of a rapidly changing and developing economy, and to increase the productivity and economic well-being of the labour force, the federal government, under the occupational training of adults program, assumes the full costs of training eligible adults and also pays training allowances to adult trainees. In 1968-69, $114 million has been provided for training allowances and $81 million for the purchase of courses from the provinces. The federal government provides grants to individuals to assist them in finding new employment if there is no prospect of employment in an individual's home community. Grants are also provided to help meet the costs of moving and resettlement. Six million dollars has been provided in the 1968-69 estimates for this program.

Perhaps I should say a word about regional development. The new Department of Regional Economic Expansion will be contributing a great deal toward the alleviation of poverty in those parts of the country in which the level and rate of economic development are below an acceptable standard. Already the federal government has made contributions in these areas through ARDA, the agricultural and Rural Development Act; ADA, the Area Development Agency; A.D.B., the Atlantic Development Board, and other similar programs and agencies.

For example, under the Fund for Rural Economic Development, a program to assist in the implementation of social and economic development programs in specially selected rural areas where low incomes are widespread and where there is potential for development, the federal government has entered into an agreement with the Province of Quebec covering the Gaspé peninsula and Magdalene Islands. The agreement provides for a five year program of rural re-adaptation and development which is expected to cost in excess of $250 million, with the federal share estimated at $212 million.

Our social and economic development programs for Indians and Eskimos have as their objective the improvement of the levels of living and the widening of opportunities for this particular group of citizens so that they will be more able to enter into the main streams of Canadian economic, social and cultural life. Our programs in this area, including provision for health, welfare, education and development services are growing rapidly and are estimated to cost over $225 million in 1969-70.

The federal government provides a wide range of subsidies which assist in the development of natural resources and facilitate the growth of primary industries.

In the field of fisheries there are subsidies for the construction of fishing vessels, assistance in constructing and equipping facilities for the storage of frozen fishery products, and many other programs, such as the recently announced program to assist the groundfish industry.

The Department of Agriculture has many programs of assistance, such as the agricultural prices support programs, the Crop Insurance Act, the Farm Improvement Loans Act, Prairie Farm Assistance Act, storage payments on wheat, and so forth. Transfer payments for 1968-69 under the Department of Agriculture are estimated at approximately $160 million.

In closing, I should like to again reiterate that the economy must continue to grow and prosper if we are to make real progress in any war on poverty and establish a better country for all Canadians, which I am sure is the aim of all of us. Income redistribution programs and direct attacks on poverty are important, but underlying them there must be high employment and economic growth and the broad levers of fiscal and monetary policy must first be engaged in steering our economy along the path of strong and stable growth, and you don't do this by simply printing money.

In their first review the Economic Council affirmed this basic position. They declared that:

> Social progress obviously required balanced development in a number of fields, including social security, education and worker training, health services and standards, housing, and cultural and recreational opportunities—
> We would therefore argue that the most important contribution which can be made to future improvement in social welfare will be successful attainment of our basic economic and social objectives, including the goals of high employment, rapid productivity growth and reasonable stability of prices.

This is one of the main problems we have in this country.

[Mr. Benson.]

This concept of a proper blend of social and economic measures, which is the mainspring of the government policies at present, was emphasized again by the Economic Council in their fifth annual review. The council recognized that Canada already had in operation an impressive inventory of social and anti-poverty legislation, but it enumerated some principles which should guide future federal action.

Let me quote again. At the top of the list, the council notes at page 131:

> The maintenance of high employment and strong and stable economic growth is crucial. No policies are more effective in helping to move families and individuals out of poverty than the combination of demand and supply policies required to sustain new job creation and the increasingly efficient use of manpower, capital and other productive resources. Without success on this front, other anti-poverty policies are unlikely to be of much avail.

I think this conclusion is absolutely valid, and bears repeating, even if it should be self-evident. Here, as elsewhere, the council makes clear the proper role of the sound and responsible fiscal and monetary policies which the government is pledged to follow, if the larger objectives of social progress are to be achieved.

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I did not intend to take part in this discussion, but I could not possibly sit idle and allow the things the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has said this evening to pass. I agree with him, of course, about the importance of the adequate rate of growth associated with a reasonable degree of price stability and employment. I agree also that there is no simple or easy way to achieve this.

On the other hand, I cannot agree with him when he suggests that the government has been carrying out a vigourous policy in this direction. I do not wish to take up the time of the house to go over the history of achievements of ministers of finance under this government during the past years. Let me simply remind the house that it took this government some eight or nine months to produce a white paper on the subject of inflation, which I am sure a group of officials could have put together in the course of a few days.

It has been conceded in this white paper that the tools employed by the government to provide inflationary controls and a reasonable degree of employment have been the wrong ones. There can be no question about this. It is stated also there has been, on the part of this government and its predecessor, a tendency to appoint a continuing royal commission plus a committee of the house to study this matter. This is hardly a proud achievement for a government which, with its predecessor, has been in office for some five or six years. It should have had this problem under greater control. It should also have taken concrete measures by this time to—

Mr. Benson: Do you have any suggestions?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes, I have suggestions. The difficulty is that the suggestions I have been making for the past year have not really been listened to by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson).

It really took the resolution by an hon. member of the Creditiste party to give me the opportunity to speak to the minister in the house. I do not want to use too much of the time of the house, but I cannot allow some of the things said by the minister to pass by without comment.

The record of the government in respect of growth and inflation during the past few years has been poor. Indeed, the former Prime Minister, Mr. Pearson, stated this quite clearly in the house. The white paper suggests that the policies of the government have been failures, and the government has not produced any appropriate answers.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Second, when the Minister of Finance speaks about fairness in taxation, assistance to the provinces, and so on, I would point out that the minister has refused rather bluntly to co-operate with the provinces in financial matters. He has refused, not once but several times. There can be no question about this; it is a matter of record.

Mr. Benson: It is opinion.

Mr. Stanfield: It is not a matter of opinion. When I hear "No" I recognize it as "No". When it is stated, as the Minister of Finance is in the habit of stating it in response to the requests of the provinces for consultation, I understand what he means, as they understand what he means. Surely, Mr. Speaker, this government has been raising taxes on the relatively poor in the country, not only by its 2 per cent social development tax but by the continuation of inflation. By permitting this situation to continue, the government has automatically increased the burden on the poor people of the country.

I raise these points because the attitude of the Minister of Finance seemed to be a little too pious in this regard. I recognize that he faces difficulties. However, we must recognize that continued inflation to the extent that we have experienced it automatically lowers the real value of tax exemptions, and therefore automatically increases the burden of taxation on the relatively poor people of this country.

When the Minister of Finance quoted from the fifth annual review of the Economic Council of Canada in relation to the war on poverty, and so on, he was very selective in his quotations. That report is really a very damning indictment of this government for the abandonment of its war on poverty. It issues a challenge to the government of Canada to get together with the provinces and really start to combat poverty in Canada in an effective way. I do not think the Minister of Finance should get away with referring to the parts of the report that suit him. As I say, this report is in fact a damning indictment of the abandonment by the government of its war on poverty.

The minister speaks about the new Department of Economic Expansion. I think it is proper to point out that it has taken the government eight months or so to even get this legislation before the house. If this is an indication of the sincerity and determination of the government with respect to the question of regional development, I do not think we should expect too much. It has taken eight months simply to get the bill before the house and create the new department. Lord knows how long it will take to get the new department in operation. Much of what the minister said with regard to transfer payments and health and welfare payments I had the pleasure of listening to yesterday. This is one advantage of being allowed in the house every day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I heard the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Munro) recite most of these figures about welfare payments, and so on, yesterday and they are now well drilled in my mind. But let me point out that when the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare talk about the annual adjustment in relation to the cost of living, as was pointed out by many members in the house yesterday—I say this only because the Minister of Finance was not in the house yesterday and perhaps no one has brought it to his attention—

Mr. Benson: I have read Hansard.

Use of Bank of Canada to Ease Tax Burden

Mr. Stanfield: —it is a very pitiful thing. I refer to the adjustment that is made each year in respect of the cost of living. It is a maximum of 2 per cent on the basic pension of $75 a month. I want to make sure that the Minister of Finance understands this. It is difficult for me to believe he does understand it, when he rises in the house and boasts about the kind of program the government has in operation.

Without taking more of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to emphasize that the government has failed in its program with regard to stability and growth. It has damned itself in its own white paper in this regard. Second, the government has been damned by the Economic Council of Canada for abandoning its war against poverty. Surely, without going any further—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Just leave it at that.

Mr. Stanfield: Perhaps I should be content to just leave it at that and say that it is a little discouraging, having been in the house even for the short time that I have been here, to see the continued short fall in economic growth in the country, the continued excessive inflation in the country, the continued lack of any effective war against poverty in the country. Yet, the Minister of Finance and other ministers of the government stand up day after day and pat themselves on the back. It is just a little discouraging, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. member would permit a question. He said very early in his speech that he was going to give me some suggestions as to how to control inflation, how to better look after the Canadian economy, how to get more money to transfer to the provinces, but he has not done this. I wonder if he would send me his suggestions.

Mr. Ricard: He told you that you never paid any attention to his suggestions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Stanfield: I would think that a man as interested as the Minister of Finance in mastering these problems would take the trouble to read my modest dissertations on this subject. I would be very happy to send him one of my latest and most comprehensive dissertations in this respect.

[Translation]

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with standing order 6(5) (a), I should like to move, seconded by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Latulippe), that the present debate on the motion of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) about the business of supply, be extended until 11 o'clock in order to enable as many members as possible to participate in the discussion as there are still seven members of our party who would like to speak and who are ready to do so.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Have hon. members any comments to make in connection with this motion? Those who object or are opposed to the motion will please rise.

And more than ten members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: More than ten members having risen, I declare the motion dropped.

Mr. Ricard: Closure.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has now participated in the debate. Unless the house agrees, I must now recognize another member. On the other hand, if the hon. members do not object, the hon. member could now proceed with his speech, but he must admit that he has already participated in the debate. At any rate, I think there is agreement among the hon. members to have the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) proceed.

Mr. Fortin: I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your kind consideration. I shall try to use it wisely and not abuse it.

I was very pleasantly informed in the course of this debate on the motion introduced by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) asking the government to consider the advisability of putting the powers and resources of the Bank of Canada at the disposal of the Canadian people with a view to eliminating poverty.

Mr. Speaker, I put question No. 636 on the orders paper. A few minutes ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) said that poverty is on the way out in Canada and that the war against poverty was proceeding normally, and that everything was going very well indeed. On the subject of taxation, Mr. Speaker, he was, so to speak, off the beam, as the matter under discussion does not involve taxation but money. There can be no question of taxation if there is no money to be distributed.

Therefore, I am surprised to see a so-called competent man stray from the subject and unable to answer to the reasonable contentions made by the Ralliement Creditiste.

Mr. Speaker, question No. 636 was as follows:

1. How many workers in Canada earn less than $3,000 per year?

2. How many workers in Canada earn between $3,000 and $4,000?

The Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin) answered me, and I quote:

1. 2,440,819.
Total percentage of employees: 47.9 per cent.

2. 1,034,909.
Total percentage of employees: 20.3 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, if we take into account all wage earners in Canada who earn less than $4,000 per year, it amounts altogether to 68 per cent.

That proves, Mr. Speaker, that the government makes empty promises and fails to take steps likely to check unemployment, to eliminate poverty, to give every Canadian, as the honorable member for Temiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) said, an adequate purchasing power, by means of a national dividend, that would enable him to meet his needs, to promote the well-being of his family, of his children and, in short, of the human person, since this is precisely the case in point.

Mr. Speaker, when I moved that the sitting of the house be extended until 11 o'clock, I was very surprised to see that government members opposed it, since only last Thursday, when we were considering Bill C-173 respecting the reorganization of the government, the house sat until midnight, and in addition to sitting at the government's request, we willingly took part in the debate. That is why I do not understand this change of attitude today.

Mr. Speaker, we have serious problems in Canada—and unfortunately I must make haste—nevertheless, I feel that the motion moved by the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) is most worthwhile. It suggests an approach to such serious problems as unemployment, the housing problem, the farming problem and deals with the advisability of enabling our young people to take their place in a just society.

As a young member, I should like to remind the house that there are in Canada 4,900,000 young people under 18 who, tomorrow, will enter the labour market or be unemployed. In fact, what will be the difference between the two categories? That will depend on the kind of legislation we will pass in order to allow these young people to really take part in the economy of our country.

A while ago, while commenting the very plausible assertions of the hon. member for the Ralliement Créditiste, the Minister of Finance said that when the Canadian economy has caused production to increase, it has achieved its aim.

I see the minister nodding approvingly. This shows how limited he is in his reflections. Indeed, any economy that does not achieve its aim has not served its purpose. And, in my view, it is a sick economy. If we work as hard as possible, if we produce, if we want to establish a family, we must also consume and our Canadian economy must achieve its aim, which is consumption.

I wish to say to the house, which thinks of itself as an august institution, but which, gives rather a poor performance when it comes to acting that the group of young people between the age of 18 and 24—and I consider I am in this category since I am only one year older—has increased by 13 per cent from 1951 to 1961. It is this group of young people who tomorrow will manage our economy. In other words, the population of Canada is getting younger and younger; unfortunately governments—whether they are blue or red—they are all alike—financed and controlled by the same high finance, are old-fashioned and do not try to incite young people to do anything constructive in the Canadian economy, to really participate to the building of our country.

Nowadays young people are enrolled in universities because there are not enough jobs for them. Mr. Speaker, I prophesy a serious crisis among students this summer all over Canada. We have not seen the end of bombings nor heard the last rumblings of the revolution. The young people of Canada are asking themselves more and more frequently whether it is really possible to live in Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As it is ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the house that, in accordance with standing order 58(11), the debate on the motion is deemed to be concluded.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

CANADIAN FILM DEVELOPMENT—ADVISORY COUNCIL TO FACILITATE DEVELOPMENT OF FILM INDUSTRY

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, the other day I asked a question of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) dealing with the subject of the progress or lack of progress in the work of the Canadian Film Development Corporation. This agency was approved by parliament over a year ago now and amidst a great deal of publicity, if not puffery, was supposed to be the answer to a problem that has existed in Canada over a period of at least 50 years. During this time producers and investors have suffered their way through optimism, disappointments, good intentions, hard work, chauvinism, and even occasional chicanery in trying to introduce into Canada a vital and a viable feature film industry.

Recently members of the house have been hearing a growing number of complaints from various associations connected with the production of films in Canada. Several briefs have come to hand. The Montreal branch of the Canadian cinematographers has been very active. This group and other groups concerned with film production in Canada have appeared before the committee on broadcasting, films and assistance to the arts, so we now have a better idea of the growing feeling of hostility between the agency that was supposed to overcome long standing problems—I refer to the Canadian Film Development Corporation—and the professional people in Canada who are charged with the responsibility of actually producing the feature films that will be made possible by financial assistance through the C.F.D.C.

The complaint is that there is no consultation between this new government agency and the actual producers of films. They have recently had assurance, as a result of growing complaints, that an advisory board will be set up to provide a vehicle for continuing consultation. Actually, I was most concerned with getting information from the minister as to when this advisory board would be established. Until it is established, the C.F.D.C. will certainly not be able to do the job parliament has charged it to do.

[Mr. Speaker.]

It has been discovered also that money will not solve the problem. The main function of the C.F.D.C. at the moment is to give capital assistance from the $10 million fund that has been authorized. One of the main problems is distribution. Distribution outlets in Canada are largely foreign dominated and until Canada grapples with this problem the C.F.D.C. is sounding brass and tinkling cymbals as far as assisting the development of a feature film industry is concerned.

It is also the complaint that the greatest difficulty comes from direct competition from the government agencies which have a monopolistic position in film production, that is the National Film Board and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In the committee it was suggested that in view of these inadequacies a series of hearings should be held so the committee could work out a policy to overcome some of the obstacles that have been referred to by film producers.

I submit tonight that it is the function of the C.F.D.C., as the agency authorized by this parliament, to work out such a policy. I trust that under the guidance of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pelletier) with his special responsibilities in this regard, we might establish closer consultation between the C.F.D.C. and the film producers so that the corporation will be able to function as intended by parliament when it approved the legislation.

Mr. Robert Stanbury (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows the act which established the Canadian Film Development Corporation also made provision for an advisory group. The intention of the government at that time was that there should be the closest consultation between the corporation and the film industry, and this is still the intention of the government.

The corporation has been in close consultation with those interested in the feature film industry, contrary to the contention of some who, perhaps, have not been given the attention that they feel they deserve. I can report to the house that Mr. Michael Spencer, secretary of the corporation, has been engaged for some time in talks with the representatives of those groups referred to in the incorporating act as those who should be represented on the advisory board. On February 12, for instance, he met with a group in Toronto, and met with another group in Montreal on February 28. At this time, he is in Vancouver meeting other interested persons there.

I understand it is the intention of the corporation, after Mr. Spencer has completed these consultations, to recommend to the Secretary of State the establishment of an advisory group. I know that the Secretary of State is most anxious to have this group established as soon as possible. Under the act, however, it is incumbent on the Secretary of State to await the recommendation of the corporation before that is done. I hope that the Secretary of State will receive such recommendation in the near future, after consultation has been completed, and that this advisory group will be a useful vehicle for the type of consultation which we all think is very desirable.

VETERANS AFFAIRS—NURSES AT WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON, ONTARIO

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the past several days a number of my colleagues and I have received a large number of letters from registered nurses on the staff of Westminster Hospital at London, Ontario. No doubt hon. member of other parties in this house have received similar letters. In the main, these nurses are complaining about the alleged shortage of registered nurses on the staff of Westminster Hospital. They contend that because of this shortage, they are not able to give the kind of service they would like to give. They also contend that it is difficult to recruit additional registered nurses because of salary conditions, the freeze on employment at the hospital, and so on.

This afternoon I asked the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Dubé) a question about this matter and Your Honour thought it would be better to ask it on an adjournment motion. That is why I am here tonight, and I am happy to see that the Minister of Veterans Affairs is here also. I hope for the sake of those of us who have asked these questions publicly and for the sake of members in all parts of the house who have received these letters and are concerned, that the minister has a satisfactory answer we can communicate back to the nurses in Westminster Hospital at London, Ontario. I invite his comment at this time.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Eudes Dubé (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have also receive this circular letter which was sent to me by a nurse from Westminster Hospital, a veterans' hospital in London, Ontario.

Besides, members from this city had already sent me newspaper clippings about a so-called shortage of registered nurses in that hospital. For the information of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and others who may be interested, I wish first to explain that the number of registered nurses in that hospital has remained reasonably constant over the past two years.

It is true that the number of professional nurses in that hospital has been subjected to some fluctuations, as is the case for the majority of the other Canadian hospitals, including those under my jurisdiction.

While there has been a moderate decrease in the number of full-time registered nurses, this has been compensated for by an increase in the number of part-time nurses employed. The actual number of professional nursing hours of care available to our veterans has not materially changed, and this is the important point.

This institution has an average patient load of close to 1000 of which approximately 400 patients are in the psychiatric wing and 300 in chronic or domiciliary care facilities.

With these groups it is frequently possible to provide essential nursing services with auxiliary nursing staff supervised by a reduced number of professional nurses. There has been no evidence that any patient, even on the active wards, has not received a satisfactory level of nursing care.

On the subject of the nurses' salaries, I am informed that they are much the same as in other hospitals of that city and I have figures to prove it. At Westminster Hospital, salaries are between $5,400 and $6,420; at St. Joseph Hospital they go from $5,340 to $6,429 and at Victoria Hospital, from $5,460 to $6,840.

Just recently, at the beginning of the month, the Professional Institute has been certified as the bargaining agent for the Public service nurses and it is expected that the matter of salaries will be settled shortly.

Bargaining will commence soon and I am convinced that the decisions will be to the satisfaction of all those interested.

BOARDING UP OF HOUSING UNITS—OAKVILLE, ONT.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I asked a question relating to housing in Oakville, Ontario. This involved an issue that I think would be of interest any place in Canada where there is a desperate shortage of housing, particularly housing suited to people's purses.

Proceedings on Adjournment Motion

The case of the boarded up houses on Normandy Road in Oakville was presented on a national magazine television show on Sunday night. This was also dealt with quite thoroughly in the March 10 issue of the Oakville Daily Journal Record. In 1947, there were 37 houses built for military occupation, 10 of which are to be demolished this year. Oddly enough these houses became vacant because of unification. The minister responsible for the unification program now finds himself with the new "hat" of housing on his head. He is faced with the problem of what to do with these 37 homes. The argument has been made that these homes are quickly deteriorating, as they were built originally to last 10 to 15 years.

When news of the projected demolition of these homes became known to people in Oakville, the housing shortage in that area became a very serious issue. A public spirited citizen, Peter K. McWilliams, Q.C., first brought the matter to the attention of the public. He wrote the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) suggesting that these houses be rented on a monthly basis until there was a final decision on the total sale and redevelopment of that particular area. I would add that these houses could possibly be rented to people who could repair them when absolutely necessary.

In the Oakville paper to which I have referred, there have been references to people of humble circumstances who are forced to pay $185 for the monthly rent of town houses, and who find that this is really more than they can bear. So, naturally they regard these boarded up houses as a solution to their problems, if only for the short term. Incidentally, the way we carry out our redevelopment schemes in Canada, it will probably take years before something new could be put in their place.

I hope the reply from the government side will be that some common sense has intervened and that these houses will be available at the monthly rentals suggested under the formula that Mr. McWilliams advanced. This would do something a least to ease the problem in Oakville.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I quote from a letter written by Mrs. Juliana W. Burns which appeared in the March 13 issue of the Daily Journal-Record. She is the wife of a man who earns $90 per week and in her letter she says:

> The houses we could have had are all above our heads rent-wise, when you consider that you have to pay for heat and hydro and the rent is $150 per month that is nearly three quarters of a working man's salary. At this rate we could hardly afford to feed and clothe ourselves, and this is not living, we are merely existing from day to day wondering where our next meal is coming from. We can't move in with relatives as there is no room and the town would only put us out anyway.
> Surely there must be someone somewhere who has something to offer, all we want is half a chance to live normally.

Mr. Speaker, there is someone somewhere who could give the Burns family of Oakville a chance to live at a reasonable rental if only for a short period of time, and that person is the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) or the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux). I hope the reply tonight will be favourable to Mrs. Burns.

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Hellyer) reports that the question refers to 37 houses that were constructed in 1947 to house servicemen returning from World War II. The dwellings were designed and built for a life expectancy of from 10 to 15 years. Prior to completion of construction, the local military command entered into an agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to rent the houses to serving members of the armed forces. That arrangement is still in effect. But, because structural components are deteriorating at an alarming rate, to the point where some are already uninhabitable, and because our engineering reports indicate that rehabilitation would not be economical, a decision was taken that six houses, all of which are vacant, should be demolished.

The Minister of Transport's views on demolition, at a time when every available dwelling is so urgently needed, are well known. Hon. members will recall that the report of the task force made the point rather vigorously. Because of this, and the strong representations made by the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Whiting), the Minister of Transport has asked Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to engage the services of a firm of independent engineering consultants with instructions to make a further assessment of the physical condition of the houses, to advise us on the possibility of salvaging this living accommodation and, if so, the probable per unit and over-all cost.

Mr. Speaker: This house stands adjourned until two o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.21 p.m.

The house met at 2 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-156, an act to amend the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, without any amendment.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a brief statement with regard to the business for today and tomorrow. As I indicated yesterday, we will be calling as the first item of business today the government reorganization bill, with the understanding that we will deal with all parts of that bill which have not yet been passed in committee, except that with respect to regional economic expansion.

It is the intention tomorrow,—and this is where there is a change in the announced business,—to call the government reorganization bill and if agreeable to carry it through to completion by the adjournment tomorrow night. I confirm that the Maritime Freight Rates Act amendment, for which concurrence of the house will be asked for first reading today, will not be called as the first item of business tomorrow, but rather that bill will be called for second reading and further stages on Monday of next week.

As I indicated, I will be seeking a special order of the house on motions tomorrow for the purpose of providing a procedure whereby the government reorganization bill can be brought to completion by the adjournment hour tomorrow.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Would the government house leader clear up a question on the business of the house? I understand he is not asking at this time for an order to complete the reorganization bill tomorrow evening.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I will be asking for that on motions tomorrow.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to confirm there have been discussions along the lines suggested by the President of the Privy Council. It is our understanding that no order is now being asked for tomorrow, but that there will be tomorrow an endeavour to reach the kind of agreement which will make it possible to finish the government reorganization bill by tomorrow night.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

MARITIME FREIGHT RATES

MEASURE TO EXTEND FOR ONE YEAR PROVISIONS OF RAILWAY ACT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask the house for unanimous consent to waive the provisions of Standing Order 48 in order that the bill to amend the Maritime Freight Rates Act could be given first reading today, and therefore be before hon. members.

• (2:10 p.m.)

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, that is acceptable.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Agreed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Transport) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-182, respecting Maritime Freight Rates.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

DEPARTMENT OF COMMUNICATIONS EMPLOYEES AND ACCOMMODATION

Question No. 1,147—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. Since July 1968, how many employees have been assigned to the Department of Communications from (a) the Post Office Department (b) the Department of Transport (c) from other government departments (d) from outside the Public Service?

2. In addition to that occupied on July 31, 1968, by the Post Office Department and the branches of other departments designated for transfer to the Department of Communications, how much office space does the government intend to allocate to the Department of Communications and, how much of this space is to be acquired (a) by purchase (b) by rental (c) by construction and, in each case, at what cost?

3. To date, how much has been expended by the government in connection with the proposed establishment of the Department of Communications?

4. To date, how much has been expended (by all departments of government) in the development of the proposed communications satellite programme, specifically, how much has been spent (a) on preparation of the white paper A Domestic Satellite Communication System for Canada (b) by the Planning Group for Communications (including the cost of the Task Force to autumn 1968 investigating European capabilities for production of component parts (c) in the preparation of the MacIntosh Report (d) in the drafting of the technical reports by RCA Victor and Northern Electric?

5. When is it intended to table the MacIntosh Report?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1. (a) None; (b) 760; (c) 547; (d) None.

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

2. The Department of Public Works, in consultation with the Department of Communications, estimates that there will be an additional requirement for approximately 45,300 sq. ft. of office space that is likely to be provided in leased premises at an approximate rental cost of $207,600 per annum, and an additional requirement for approximately 11,865 sq. ft. of office space that will probably be available in existing Crown-owned buildings at a cost of about $56,360. No additional office space will be provided for the Department of Communications by purchase.

3. $6,400.

4. (a) $19,170; (b) $133,500. In addition to (a) and (b), in 1966/67 the Department of Transport commissioned preliminary studies at a cost of $156,970. (c) $8,391; (d) Expenditures as of Jan. 14/69 on a study respecting the design, development and supply of a Domestic Satellite Communication System for Canada by: (i) RCA Victor are, $175,000; (ii) Northern Electric are, $184,000.

5. In the course of developing its policy concerning satellite communications, the government has had a number of confidential memoranda and papers prepared. The government will determine in due course which of these it is in the public interest to publish.

HUDSON BAY OFFSHORE RESOURCES

Question No. 1,242—Mr. Fortin:

Does the government intend to concur in the agreement between the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec respecting the boundaries of offshore resources in Hudson's Bay?

Mr. J. E. Walker (Parliamentary Secretary to the Prime Minister): The boundaries of the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Quebec with respect to Hudson Bay have been defined by the Boundaries Extension Acts of 1912. These acts define each boundary as "Following the shore of the said Bay". No amendment to these acts is at present under consideration.

INDIAN MONEYS IN SUSPENSE ACCOUNTS

Question No. 1,276—Mr. Simpson:

1. As of January 1, 1969, how much money was held by the Canadian Government in suspense accounts (a) on behalf of individual Indians (b) on behalf of Indian bands?

2. How much of the money held in suspense accounts (a) on behalf of individual Indians (b) on behalf of Indian bands accumulated interest?

3. What rate of interest was paid?

4. Is the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development planning revisions in the administration of these suspense accounts?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Amount of money held in Suspense at January 1, 1969: (a) On behalf of individual Indians: Indian Compensation, $43,292.82; Rental Suspense, nil; (b) On behalf of Indian bands: Indian Compensation, $169,166.05; Rental Suspense, $617,815.47.

2. (a) Indian Compensation, $43,239.98; Rental Suspense, nil; (b) Indian Compensation, $162,454.71; Rental Suspense, nil.

3. 5 per cent.

4. Not at this time.

MONCTON, N.B.—FRENCH LANGUAGE PROGRAMS

Question No. 1,358—Mr. Corbin:

1. How many French-language (a) radio, and (b) television programmes were produced in the studios of Stations CBAF and CBAFT, Moncton, in 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968?

2. How many such programmes were produced in the studios of the private station, CKCW-TV, Moncton, during these four years?

3. How many radio programmes, produced in Moncton, were broadcast by Station CJEM, Edmundston, for the same years (a) general news programmes (b) programmes of a political nature (c) variety programmes?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. as follows: 1. (a) Approximate number of radio programs produced in CBAF studios, based on representative weeks during the years in question: 1965, 3,600; 1966, 3,900; 1967, 4,200; 1968, 4,400. (b) CBAFT had no TV program production studios during the years 1965 to 1968.

I am informed by the Canadian Radio-Television Commission as follows: 2. 1965, Nil; 1966, Nil; 1967, Nil; 1968, CKCW-TV originated four half-hour free-time telecasts for CBAFT during the 1968 Federal Election Campaign.

3. The number of radio programs produced in Moncton and aired by CJEM were as follows:

	General News programs	Programs of a Political Nature	Variety Programs
1965	372	20	4
1966	372	20	6
1967	372	20	32
1968	363	20	40

ESQUIMALT-SOOKE-COWICHAN LAKE-COWICHAN BAY RAILWAY SERVICE

Question No. 1,360—Mr. Anderson:

Are any railway bridges on the Esquimalt-Sooke-Cowichan Lake-Cowichan Bay Canadian National Railway lines closed for safety reasons?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: Two bridges on the Cowichan Subdivision are impassable and out of service. However, service over the subdivision is being maintained by way of Victoria and Youbou.

SASKATCHEWAN—HOMES ON INDIAN RESERVATIONS

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many homes have been constructed on Indian Reservations in Saskatchewan during 1968?

2. What was the cost of these homes?

3. How many of these homes were within the Mackenzie constituency?

4. How many homes does the Department expect to construct in 1969?

5. How many of these homes will be within the Mackenzie constituency?

6. How many homes were built on Indian Reservations across Canada?

7. What was the total cost of these homes?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. During the fiscal year 1967-68, 410 homes were constructed on Indian reserves in Saskatchewan.

2. $2,701,259.

4. During the fiscal year 1968-69, it is expected that 1927 homes will be constructed.

5. 64.

6. During the fiscal year 1967-68, 2005 homes were constructed on Indian reserves in Canada.

7. $16,251,886.

MÉTIS HOMES IN SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 1,373—Mr. Korchinski:

1. How many homes were constructed for Metis in Saskatchewan which involved federal participation or financing in 1968?

2. What was the cost to the federal government?

3. At what locations were these homes constructed?

4. In what other provinces were homes for Metis financed under any federal program?

5. How many homes were constructed in each province?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The below listed answer applies in so far as Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation is concerned. 1. Under a 300-house program being financed through the Federal-Provincial cost sharing provisions of Section 35A of the National Housing Act, the Province of Saskatchewan constructed 35 houses for sale to Metis and Enfranchised Indians in remote communities in 1968.

2. Under the arrangement, costs are shared 75 per cent by the Federal Government and 25 per cent by the Province. The Federal Government's 75 per cent share of the capital cost of the 34 houses is estimated at $138,560. Purchaser's monthly payments are based on family income and deficits representing the difference between monthly payments and the amount required to repay capital costs and pay taxes are shared annually on the same 75 per cent and 25 per cent basis.

3. The houses were constructed in LaRonge, Pine House, Cumberland House and Pelican Narrows.

4. and 5. Recently the Federal Government approved a similar arrangement with the Province of Manitoba under the provisions of Section 35A of the National Housing Act. Under the arrangement the Province is to construct 100 houses for Metis and Enfranchised Indians in remote areas of the Province. As in the case of the Saskatchewan program the Federal Government will bear 75 per cent of the costs. The arrangement was approved in November 1968 and no houses have yet been built.

LINGUISTIC QUALIFICATIONS OF PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYEES

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Caouette:

1. What is the total number of persons employed by the Public Service Commission of Canada as (a) Clerk 1 or equivalent (b) Clerk 2 or equivalent (c) Clerk 3 or equivalent (d) Clerk 4 or equivalent?

2. Of that number, and for each of the above categories, how many speak only (a) English (b) French (c) both languages?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. (a) Clerical and Regulatory, Level 1 or equivalent, 47; (b) Clerical and Regulatory, Level 2 or equivalent, 100; (c) Clerical and Regulatory, Level 3 or equivalent, 139; (d) Clerical and Regulatory, Level 4 or equivalent, 130.

[Mr. Korchinski.]

2. (a) English: Clerical and Regulatory, Level 1 or equivalent, 15; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 2 or equivalent, 46; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 3 or equivalent, 70; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 4 or equivalent, 86; (b) French: Clerical and Regulatory, Level 1 or equivalent, 10; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 2 or equivalent, 4; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 3 or equivalent, 13; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 4 or equivalent, 1; (c) Both languages: Clerical and Regulatory, Level 1 or equivalent, 22; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 2 or equivalent, 50; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 3 or equivalent, 56; Clerical and Regulatory, Level 4 or equivalent, 43.

BANK OF CANADA INTEREST RATES

Question No. 1,428—Mr. Latulippe:

Is the Bank of Canada authorized to increase its interest rates without consulting the government and, if so (a) for what reasons (b) what are the powers of the Directors of the Bank in this regard?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Section 5 of the Bank of Canada Act provides that the Bank shall be under the management of its Board of Directors. Section 8(1) of the Act states that the Governor of the Bank is the chief executive officer of the Bank and on behalf of the Board has the direction and control of the business of the Bank with authority to act in connection with the conduct of the business of the Bank in all matters that are not by this Act or by the by-laws of the Bank specifically reserved to be done by the Board or by the Executive Committee. Section 14 of the Act requires that the Minister and the Governor shall consult regularly on monetary policy and on its relation to general economic policy. It also provides, in the event of a difference of opinion between the Minister and the Bank concerning the monetary policy to be followed, that the Miniser may, after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy which shall be published forthwith and that the Bank shall comply with such directive.

MISSIONS FROM COMOX AIR BASE

Question No. 1,431—Mr. Anderson:

1. What percentage of search and rescue missions from Comox Air Force Base are under (a) visual flight conditions (b) instrument flight conditions?

2. What are the minimum safe altitudes for an aircraft under instrument flight conditions, travelling from Comox Air Force Base to the North (Prince Rupert), the South (Victoria), the West (Tofino) and the East (Prince George)?

3. Can the Grumman Albatross HU 16 B be used safely in its present configuration under instrument flight conditions on search and rescue missions from Comox Air Force Base in any direction considering the possibility of engine failure?

4. Can the Grumman Albatross HU 16 B take off with only one engine operative?

5. What is the average cost to bring an aircraft back to flying status after an engine failure?

6. In terms of dollars, what did the malfunction of a Grumman Albatross HU 16 B at Cold Fish Lake in 1968 cost the taxpayer?

7. How much of the low operational readiness figure of 53.2% for this aircraft is contributed to by (a) engine, accessory or propeller malfunction (b) airframe malfunction?

8. How many hours contour search are carried out annually by Comox Air Force Base search and rescue aircraft?

9. Can contour search in high elevation valleys be carried out without risking the loss of the aircraft in the event of an engine failure?

10. For how long can the maximum 190 feet per minute rate of climb on one engine be maintained?

11. What is the maximum permissible period for full power settings (a) on two engines (b) on one engine?

12. For how long can the aircraft maintain 5,900 feet on one engine without jettisoning exterior fuel tanks or other equipment?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. All actual searches are performed under visual flight conditions. However, it is sometimes necessary to perform mercy flights and to fly to search areas under instrument flight conditions. Taking these factors into consideration it is estimated that 32% of the total flying time performed by Canadian Forces Base Comox Search and Rescue aircraft is done under instrument flight conditions.

2. Prince Rupert, 7,100 feet; Victoria, 5,500 feet; Tofino, 8,000 feet; Prince George, 9,000 feet.

3. The Canadian Forces do not operate the Grumman Albatross HU16B. The HU16B is a United States Coast Guard designation for a version of the Albatross which has different engines and propellers from that of the Canadian Forces Albatross SA16B. The safeness of each operation would depend on variables of flight planning, weather and pay load.

4. No.

5. An engine failure can occur for a variety of reasons ranging from minor to major component malfunctions. Assuming the worst case, which would be an engine change, the estimated maximum cost would be $504 for labour. If the failure involves a complete repair and overhaul this may entail an additional $10,000.

6. There was no Grumman Albatross HU16B at Cold Fish Lake in 1968. However, the cost to repair the Canadian Forces SA16B was $9,773.

7. Because the operational readiness figure of 53.2% was arrived at as a function of crew availability, logistic support, scheduled depot level maintenance and unscheduled unserviceabilities for the Canadian version of the Albatross, it is not possible to correlate this figure with individual component malfunctions without undertaking a costly study.

8. In 1968, 565 hours.

9. Yes.

10. One minute.

11. (a) Five minutes; (b) five minutes.

12. Five minutes.

CITIZENSHIP WAITING PERIOD

Question No. 1,439—Mr. Aiken:

1. For what reason has a period of five years been established as the length of time potential citizens of Canada must wait before being allowed to apply for Canadian citizenship?

2. Is it intended to change the length of this period and, if so, in what way?

3. Is it intended to change the procedures for applying for and securing Canadian citizenship in any other way?

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): 1. A five year period of residential qualification was first introduced in Canada by the "British Nationality and Status of Aliens Act, 1914" which was re-enacted mutatis mutandis in this country. It is said to have been enacted to guard against the cases of persons becoming naturalized in a country requiring little or no previous residence, and then returning to their own country, or settling in some foreign country, with a claim to nationality and protection to which they had not become entitled according to recognized principles of international law by a bona fide change of domicile.

2. All the provisions of the Canadian Citizenship Act are now the subject of review which has not yet been completed. It is not possible therefore to say what changes are intended.

3. See 2 above.

Questions

YARMOUTH, N.S., FERRY SERVICE

Question No. 1,461—Mr. Comeau:

Is the ferry, presently under construction for Lion Ferry AB at Bremerhaven, designed for stern loading and, if so, what steps are planned at Yarmouth to make suitable facilities available for this type of ferry and will they be completed in time for the opening of the new ferry services?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission advises as follows: Investigation is presently proceeding on the probable requirements for a bow loading vessel at Yarmouth and the costs involved in providing such facilities. Any decision on federal participation in this project must await the evaluation of the results of these investigations.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT PRESS RELEASES

Question No. 1,489—Mr. Howard (Skeena):

1. Does the Department of Transport issue documents which are of the nature of press releases, press communiques, news releases or the like and, if so, how many such documents have been issued since July 1, 1968?

2. What has been the cost of (a) printing headings or cover sheets (b) typing the stencils (c) mimeographing or other form of duplicating (d) collating and stapling (e) addressing and mailing the said documents?

3. With respect to the paper used for the said documents, what is (a) its quality (b) the quantity used and the cost thereof?

4. What is the estimate of the number of man-hours consumed in the preparation, production and distribution of such documents?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, 69.

2. (a) $158.70; (b) $270.00; (c) $389.06; (d) $873.08; (e) $3,105.00.

3. (a) No. 7 Bond, 40M; (b) 219,600 sheets at a cost of $433.81.

4. 1,371 hours.

BELL CANADA RATES

Question No. 1,504—Mr. Gilbert:

Has the Government of Canada requested data from Bell Canada in relation to their recent application to the Canadian Transport Commission for increase in telephone rates as stated by the Postmaster General on December 16 last and, if so, what specific data has been requested?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Communications Department is concerned: No request has been made to Bell Canada for information relative to their application for an increase in telephone rates.

[Mr. Pelletier.]

While the application is before the Canadian Transport Commission, the department does not plan to initiate action in this regard. However, as stated on December 16, 1968, the Department of Communications is intent on gathering information on the telecommunications industry so as to be in a position to make rational decisions on such problems.

MONTREAL—SITE OF INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,506—Mr. Robinson:

1. Has the Department of Transport selected a new site for the Montreal International Airport?

2. Have any lands been purchased at this time?

3. When will construction commence on the new airport?

4. What is the anticipated opening date for the new airport?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The Department of Transport has evaluated alternative sites but a final decision has not yet been made.

2. No.

3. Present planning is that initial construction will commence in approximately 18 months.

4. Departmental plans are predicated upon the new airport being operational by 1974.

ATHABASCA, ALTA., POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Question No. 1,516—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. How many post offices have been closed in the Athabasca constituency in 1965, 1966, 1967 and 1968?

2. How many post offices will be closed in the Athabasca constituency in 1969?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. 1965, 2; 1966, none; 1967, 9; 1968, 7.

2. The Frains, Alberta, Post Office is to be closed in the near future.

Note: Further studies are being conducted with a view to closing additional Post Offices within the closing program criteria but no decision has been made on any case as yet.

LONG LINER FISHING VESSEL TENDERS

Question No. 1,549—Mr. Crouse:

1. Did the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development recently call tenders in the Atlantic Provinces for a long liner type fishing vessel?

2. What are the names of the firms bidding on this work, the amount of their bids and the name of the successful contractor?

3. For what purpose will this ship be used by the Department?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): 1. Yes.

Name and Address	Amount of Bid $
Sparton Construction Ltd., Alberton, P.E.I.	18,978

The successful contractor was Sparton Construction Ltd.

3. The vessel is being purchased under the Esquimo Small Boats Assistance Plan for Mr. Celestino Makpah of Whale Cove who will use it for fishing.

QUEBEC PARTICIPATION IN STUDENT LOANS PROGRAM

Question No. 1,562—Mr. Matte:

Does the Province of Quebec receive from the federal government any compensation in connection with the Canada Students' Loan Program and, if so, by what means?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): Section 12 of the Canada Student Loans Act provides for an alternative payment to a non-participating province which operates its own student loans plan. This payment is related to actual statutory expenditures incurred during a loan year by the federal government (e.g. interest payments and loss claims) and is calculated on the basis of the 18-24 year population in a non-participating province relative to that in the participating provinces. Quebec qualifies for payments under this provision, and the following such payments have been made to date; 1965, $74,262.05; 1966, $757,447.99; 1967, $1,230,572.14; 1968, $2,402,552.55.

CHARLOTTETOWN AIRPORT

Question No. 1,563—Mr. MacLean:

1. Is the Charlottetown Airport at present capable of accommodating DC-9 aircraft in regular commercial use?

2. If not, what facilities or additional length of runway is required to make this possible?

3. When will the Charlottetown Airport be brought up to standard to allow the commercial use of DC-9 aircraft, if this is not already the case?

4. What program of improvement is contemplated for Charlottetown Airport for the next three years?

5. Has this program been delayed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes.

2. Not applicable.

3. Not applicable.

4. The following items are programmed for the Charlottetown Airport: (a) installation of a non-directional radio beacon, programmed for fiscal year 1970-71; (b) installation of an instrument landing system, programmed for fiscal year 1971-72.

5. No.

P.E.I.—VOCATIONAL TRAINING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,579—Mr. MacLean:

1. What was the amount spent under the Vocational Training Program in the Province of Prince Edward Island for each of the fiscal years from 1964-65 to 1968-69 inclusive?

2. What is the amount, if any, to be spent in that Province under the Vocational Training Program in the fiscal year 1969-70?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Amounts spent on technical and vocational training in the Province of Prince Edward Island are the following:

	Federal Expenditures in the Province of Prince Edward Island under
	TVT Assistance Act[1] $	Adult Occupational Training Act $
1964-65	419,753
1965-66	271,485
1966-67	202,800
1967-68	1,170,774	905,395
1968-69	279,456	1,618,000[2]

[1] inclusive of contributions to capital expenditures

[2] estimated

2. The amount to be spent in that Province during the fiscal year 1969-70 has not been estimated yet.

SATURDAY POSTAGE STAMP PURCHASES

Question No. 1,587—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. During what hours on Saturday may stamps be purchased at the wickets of Post Offices?

2. Are Canadian quarters (twenty-five cent pieces) of the type minted since August 1968 useable in the stamp vending machines of the Canadian Post Office Department?

3. If not, is it the intention to convert the existing machines or order new ones in which such coins may usefully be inserted?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. At Staff Post Offices with Letter Carrier Service, postage stamps may not be purchased at the wickets on Saturdays, but stamp vending machines are available.

At Staff Post Offices without Letter Carrier Delivery, postage stamps may be purchased during a 4 hour period on Saturdays. Hours of service are determined by the time of receipt of mail.

At Semi-Staff Post Offices, postage stamps may be purchased during a 4 hour period on Saturdays. Hours of service are determined by the time of receipt of mail.

At Revenue Post Offices there has been no change in service. Stamps may be purchased during hours office is open on Saturdays.

At Sub Post Offices, postage stamps may be purchased on Saturdays during the hours observed by such establishments.

2. Yes; these coins are being accepted in approximately one half of the post office stamp vending machines in service.

3. Yes; conversion of the remainder is presently in progress.

*WHEAT EXPORTS

Question No. 1,597—Mr. Woolliams:

1. What were the total wheat exports for the following periods; October 1967-October 1968, November 1967-November 1968, December 1967-December 1968 and January 1968-January 1969?

2. What was the total of demurrage charges paid and/or to be paid by the Canadian Wheat Board on behalf of the producers of Canada to shipowners and others for the months of October, November and December 1968 and January 1969 in reference to those ships that were held in the Port of Vancouver waiting to be loaded with grain for export?

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): 1. Wheat exports in millions of bushels by month in the October 1968 to January 1969 period with exports in the same month of the previous year in brackets were as follows: October 26.0 (19.9), November 23.3 (22.0), December 16.1 (12.9), January 18.8 (19.3).

2. It is not the policy of the Canadian Wheat Board to divulge information in respect to its current operations but the information will be made available through the board's annual report when crop accounts have been finalized. In any event only a few claims have already been submitted and it will be a matter of months before all claims are submitted and settlements finalized.

UNCLAIMED POST OFFICE SAVINGS

Question No. 1,611—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the approximate amount in dollars of unclaimed Post Office Savings as of January 31, 1969?

2. What will be the disposition of these unclaimed savings?

Hon. Eric W. Kierans (Postmaster General): In so far as the Post Office Department is concerned: 1. $9,760,000.

2. After 31st December 1969, any account with a balance of less than $25, which has been inactive for thirty years or more, will be credited to the Consolidated Revenue Fund, and the depositor will have no further claim in respect of such deposit. Any account with a balance of $25 or more may be claimed by a depositor or his legal representative at any time, except that interest will not be earned after 31st December 1969.

PLUGGING OF OFFSHORE OIL WELLS

Question No. 1,616—Mr. Anderson:

1. What regulations govern the plugging of offshore oil wells drilled by Shell of Canada's SEDCO 135F drilling rig and other rigs off the West Coast of Vancouver Island?

2. How many wells have been plugged in Canadian waters by this company's rig and other rigs since drilling operations began?

3. Do all earlier plugs meet present federal standards?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Acting Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): 1. The plugging of the wells drilled by Shell Canada Limited off the west coast is governed by the Canada Oil and Gas Drilling and Production Regulations. Under the authority of these Regulations, when a well has reached total depth the Company must obtain prior approval from the responsible officers of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for the proposed plugging program. The final design of the program is the result of consultation between Company and Departmental officers. Upon completion of the plugging program, the Company must submit a confirmatory detailed report to the Department.

2. To date, twelve exploratory wells have been plugged and abandoned off the west coast. All of these have been drilled by Shell Canada Limited.

3. Yes.

PILOTAGE RECOMMENDATION 39

Question No. 1,617—Mr. Stanfield:

1. Is it the intention of the government to implement Recommendation 39 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Pilotage, especially with respect to its application to the District of Halifax?

2. When is it anticipated that necessary legislation will be introduced?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): 1. The government has not yet made a decision on whether to implement Recommendation 39 of the Report of the Royal Commission on Pilotage.

2. It is anticipated that revised legislation to replace the present provisions of Part VI of the Canada Shipping Act will be introduced late in 1969 or early in 1970.

LAUZON, QUE., POSTAL STATION

Question No. 1,676—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has the Post Office Department rented accommodation for the opening of a postal station at Lauzon, Quebec (a) if so, what is the annual rental rate (b) who is the lessor and what is his address (c) when will the Department occupy the accommodation?

[Translation]

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Public Works): The Department of Public Works has not rented accommodation for the Post Office Department at Lauzon, Quebec. (a), (b), and (c) Not applicable.

COST OF ARMED FORCES UNIFORMS

Question No. 1,684—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. What will be the cost for each new uniform being provided for the Armed Forces?

2. What will be the estimated total expenditure for (a) uniforms in the year 1969 (b) replacements or second additional uniforms during the years 1969 and 1970?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. The price of one uniform consisting of one cap, one jacket, one pair of trousers, one shirt and one tie is $48.00; however each individual will receive a uniform kit consisting of the following new items, the estimated value of which is $170.00: 1 cap, 2 jackets, 2 pair of trousers, 4 shirts, 2 ties, 1 overcoat and scarf, 1 raincoat regular, 1 raincoat lightweight.

2. See Hansard dated 15 January, 1969, page 4307. Estimated expenditures for new uniforms are as follows: 1968-69, $2,500,000; 1969-70, $11,500,000; 1970-71, $8,000,000; 1971-72, $3,000,000.

*MICHAEL GODFREY, COLLEGE MILITAIRE ROYAL

Question No. 1,686—Mr. Diefenbaker:

1. Has Mr. Michael Godfrey of College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean been denied continuance of his teaching engagement by the Director of Studies, Mr. Benoit?

2. If the answer is in the affirmative, was the real reason the fact that he had given favourable evidence to Mr. David Price when called as a witness before the Cohen Commission?

3. Will the Minister of National Defence give reconsideration to the decision made by said Director?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is that the term appointment of Mr. Michael Godfrey of College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean terminates on August 15, 1969 and will not be renewed.

The answer to the second part is no.

The following is the answer to the third part of the question: The decision of the Director, College Militaire Royal de Saint-Jean, has been the subject of a grievance by Mr. Godfrey which was heard at the deputy minister level and the decision was to deny the grievance. The griever or his representative may challenge the stand taken by the department by seeking a hearing before an adjudicator as prescribed by the Public Service

Staff Relations Act. Since a remedy exists within the framework of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, I have refrained from interfering in the normal process.

BRANDON, MAN.—USE OF E.M.O. TO BREAK STRIKE

Question No. 1,691—Mr. Skoberg:

1. Did the Minister of National Defence approve the use of E.M.O. as a method of breaking a strike of transit workers in Brandon, Manitoba?

2. Has the Minister approved expenditures of E.M.O. money for strike breaking tactics?

3. Has the Minister indicated the position of his Department as to the use of the name, E.M.O., by municipal authorities, when they are contemplating strike breaking procedure?

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): 1. No.

2. No.

3. No.

COMMITTEE ON SCIENTIFIC AND INDUSTRIAL RESEARCH

Question No. 1,722—Mr. Broadbent:

1. How many times did the Privy Council Committee on Scientific and Industrial Research meet for each of the following years: 1965, 1966, 1967, 1968?

2. What was the specific subject under consideration for each of the Committee's meetings for the above years?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): 1 and 2. The arrangements made by the Cabinet for the discharge of the Business for which it is collectively responsible are matters for the Cabinet itself and are not customarily disclosed.

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX

Question No. 1,738—Mr. Beaudoin:

In view of the federal government's decision to take the necessary steps to obtain income tax returns from the 7,117 Canadians who have failed to file such returns, what steps does the government intend to take to ensure that the law is enforced?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Côté (Minister of National Revenue): It is presumed this question relates to the reply given to question No. 1,524 in which it was stated that 7,117 taxpayers were prosecuted for failure to file 1967 income tax returns. If this is the group to which the query relates, the law has been enforced, the delinquent taxpayers have been fined by the courts and the returns have been filed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 26

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FIRING OF A.B.M. WARHEADS OVER CANADIAN TERRITORY—MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I ask for leave, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), to move the adjournment of the house under Standing Order 26 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the urgent situation revealed by the United States defence department that the United States is now seeking Canadian approval to fire anti-ballistic missiles with large thermonuclear warheads over Canadian territory. It is quite clear from the Prime Minister's statements in the house on Monday and statements by Canadian embassy officials in Washington that the United States in deciding to construct this new A.B.M. system did not seek or obtain the Canadian government's permission for such thermonuclear missile flights over Canada, which means that interception would take place over Canadian territory causing extensive nuclear fallout.

Given this fact, plus the broader world danger implications that the construction of this A.B.M. system will further escalate the nuclear arms race, and given the fact that the Prime Minister will be meeting the President of the United States on Monday and Tuesday of this coming week, it is extremely important and vitally urgent that there be a full and comprehensive discussion in the House of Commons prior to this visit in order to evaluate Canada's position in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: In determining whether a matter should have urgent consideration under Standing Order 26, the Speaker is required to have regard to a number of factors. These are specified in sections 5 and 16 of the relevant rule. In particular the matter proposed for discussion must be one which calls for immediate and urgent consideration. The Chair must also have regard to the probability of the matter being brought before the house within reasonable time by other means.

In this instance the proposal is that the house be given an opportunity to debate a question of undoubted national interest on an urgent basis because the right hon. Prime Minister will be engaged in discussions with the President of the United States on Monday next. The business announced for the rest of the week would not provide an opportunity for such a debate.

It seems to me on reflection that this might well be the type of situation where the standing order should operate, so as to permit debate on a national issue in advance of anticipated events. I am therefore prepared to put the motion to the house: Has the hon. member leave to move a motion for the purpose of discussing the matter stated by the hon. member?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The debate on the proposed motion will stand over until 8 o'clock p.m. this day.

• (2:20 p.m.)

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. Yves Forest (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you kindly call notice of motion No. 76?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining notices of motions be allowed to stand.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING BILINGUAL COMMISSIONAIRES IN NATIONAL MUSEUM

Motion No. 76—Mr. Dinsdale:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this House a copy of (a) the letter from the Clerk of the Privy Council dated October 17, 1968, sent to departmental heads and dealing with the implementation of Clause 9 of the Official Languages Bill (b) the correspondence from Mr. André Ouellette, Executive Assistant to the Secretary of State, relating to the matter of bilingual Commissionaires (c) the quarterly report of the General Secretary of the National Museums of Canada, Mr. C. J. MacKenzie to the January meeting of the Board of Trustees of the Museums Corporation.

[Translation]

Hon. Gérard Pelletier (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this motion calls for the tabling of three documents.

The first part involves a letter sent by the Clerk of the Privy Council to all departmental heads.

The second part deals with correspondence originating from my own office.

The third part is in connection with a confidential report by the General Secretary of the National Museums of Canada to the Board of Trustees of the Museums Corporation.

I understand that it has always been a practice of this house to consider documents of this nature as confidential. Consequently, it would not be advisable for me to agree to the proposed motion. Under these circumstances, I must ask the hon. member to be kind enough to withdraw his motion.

At any rate, I would like to suggest that this is a matter of principle which has nothing to do with the contents of the documents concerned.

[English]

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to have permission to have this matter transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that it shall be transferred for debate?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

DISCONTINUANCE OF CHURCH AND OTHER PUBLICATIONS

Motion No. 85—Mr. Orlikow:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of all letters received by the Postmaster General from churches, professional organizations, trade unions, co-operatives, credit unions and private organizations, indicating that as a result of the increase in postal rates they intend to discontinue or curtail their publications.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, at the request of the government perhaps this motion might stand.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FIRING OF A.B.M. WARHEADS OVER CANADIAN TERRITORY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question, the answer to which might provide some information in respect of the discussion to take place tonight. Has the United States sought the approval of Canada to fire anti-ballistic missile warheads over Canadian territory in the event of an enemy attack?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to answer this question I should like to say that the matter of permission has never been raised with Canada by the government of the United States.

Mr. Fairweather: What's going on at the embassy?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, there have been indications of discussions on a number of aspects of this matter between Canada and the United States. Will the Secretary of State for External Affairs indicate whether these discussions were exclusively on an official or military level, on the one hand, or on a political level on the other hand with the minister himself?

Mr. Sharp: The statement made by the departments of state and defence in the United States set out the position quite accurately. This was included in an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail this morning, which reads in part as follows:

"We discuss matters such as these with the Canadians on a continuing basis. A number of aerospace matters pertaining to ABM are under discussions with the Canadians. Since these matters are being discussed, it would not be appropriate to deal in specifics at this time."

That was the only statement made by the United States government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the statement made not only by the United States defence and state departments but also by Canadian embassy officials in Washington, that such discussions are going on, I should like to ask the minister when these discussions began and if they commenced prior to the time President Nixon announced his government's intention of going ahead with an A.B.M. system?

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Sharp: These discussions have been going on for years.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I must remind the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands that a moment ago he moved a motion to adjourn the business of the house for the purpose of discussing the matter about which he is now asking questions. In view of the fact there is to be a debate this evening I suggest we should not accept questions on this subject.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On the point of order that Your Honour has raised—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I did not raise a point of order, I made a ruling.

LABOUR RELATIONS

MONTREAL—CLOSING OF PORT AS STRIKE SOLUTION

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question to the Minister of Labour.

Could he tell us if he intends to recommend, as he suggested it himself, that the Montreal harbour be closed for a year as a means of settling the dispute between the dockers and their employer?

[English]

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, what I said specifically was that if the effects of closing the port of Montreal were limited to the unions and the Shipping Federation, perhaps the closing of this port for a year would bring both parties to their senses. I went on to say that an equally important segment of Canadian society that should be represented at the bargaining table are the importers, exporters and the Canadian people in general who have the right to see that the port of Montreal remains free of labour unrest, and open, for the good of the general economy.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question.

To do that, is the minister considering a year's extension of the terms of reference of the commission set up to study the possibility of reaching an agreement?

[English]

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, a lot of people would like to know what the Minister of Labour intends to do after March 31. They will have to wait.

Mr. Georges Valade (Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct an additional question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the serious situation at the Montreal harbour, I would like the minister to inform the house and the people what measures he intends to take to see that the port is open, and to settle the present conflict at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Speaker, the labour negotiations are proceeding daily before Judge Gold, one of the finest judges charged with industrial relations in this country. The conciliation board is meeting daily, and it would certainly be inappropriate for the Minister of Labour to prejudge the findings of the judge's report.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HIGHWAY SAFETY

RECALL OF GENERAL MOTORS PRODUCTS TO EXAMINE SUSPECTED DEFECTS

Mr. Barry Mather (Surrey): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question, having in mind the fact that General Motors Corporation has recalled an additional one million automobiles in the United States and Canada for possible defects. My question is this: Can the minister say what progress is being made in setting up in-plant safety standard checks in Canada, as was recommended last year?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I really have nothing to add to the answer I gave on February 28, when I indicated that we would be introducing legislation, hopefully next session, in respect of safety standards in Canada, and that at that time the possibility of plant inspection would be considered. In the meantime I might repeat what I indicated then, that is, that in some cases, in fact in most of these cases that are now being reported and where large numbers of recalls are involved, the defects would not have shown up at the time of manufacture even if there had been inspectors in the plant. They are defects which became apparent only after considerable testing in the field.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Minister of Transport inform us whether the owners of these cars have to assume that they can go to any dealer and have these corrections made, or must they wait for a formal invitation to attend at certain places for the corrections?

Mr. Hellyer: I cannot say what the procedure would be in every case, but certainly in the more serious cases I have been informed that the owners will be notified by registered mail and an indication given as to where they should report to have remedial measures taken.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that a number of these vehicles are school buses, does the minister not feel he should take immediate action in connection with these particular vehicles?

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, immediate action is being taken by the manufacturers.

SHORTAGE OF MEDICAL DOCTORS

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but in his absence I direct it to the acting minister or the Prime Minister. In view of some divergence of views on the medical manpower situation, the apparent jungle of indecision and the extreme urgency of this problem if medical schools are to operate during the summer months, would the minister state whether he has discussed this urgent problem with the ministers concerned in the provincial governments?

[Translation]

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall take that question as notice and call the minister's attention to it.

[English]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED IMPROPER CHARGES FOR AUTOMOBILE SAFETY INSTALLATIONS

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I should like to ask him whether his department has undertaken a systematic investigation of the complaints and allegations that the automobile manufacturers are over-pricing in what they are charging for the installation of safety devices in automobiles.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

WOODS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Can he advise the house when he expects to be in a position to table the report of the Woods committee studying labour relations.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): It is my intention to table the Woods report in English and in French no later than next Wednesday in order that all hon. members may have the opportunity to study it over the Easter recess.

TRADE

TEMPORARY CURTAILMENT OF LOG SHIPMENTS TO JAPAN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I want to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and Forestry with reference to a question he answered last week to the effect that the principal exporters of logs in British Columbia had voluntarily agreed to withhold any exports for at least six months in order to meet domestic requirements. I should like to ask the minister whether the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce or any other department of the government is concerned with this voluntary arrangement, or does the minister's own department intend to supervise this matter?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): My own department is following this matter together with the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, which has an official in Vancouver who grants exports permits and keeps a very close tab on the export of logs from B.C. This movement of logs to Japan is being carefully reviewed at all times.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister assure the house, in the event that the voluntary commitments are not kept, that export licences will be withheld?

[Mr. Schreyer.]

Mr. Davis: We will keep the situation under review and take appropriate action if that occasion arises.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MEDICARE—DISCUSSIONS WITH THE PREMIER OF ALBERTA

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house what results are expected from the discussions he had yesterday with the premier of Alberta, Mr. Strom, on medicare? Does he expect some changes to suit that province?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Premier Strom and myself were agreed to disclose the subject, but not the detail, of our discussions. I believe Premier Strom has already indicated that we talked about oil, wheat and medicare; however, it would be inappropriate for me, since he asked me to meet him, to divulge more than was agreed between us.

[English]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As Premier Strom indicated that he is going to table in the Alberta legislature on Thursday a report of his meeting with the Prime Minister, will the Prime Minister give the House of Commons the same report that is being tabled in the Alberta legislature?

Mr. Trudeau: I was shown a report on the oil policy by Premier Strom for my consideration. What he wants to do with it is of course his choice. If he decides to make it public and he has no objection to my doing so I will gladly make it public. I do not know if the house would be interested in having copies tabled and I am not sure it would be the regular procedure for us to table provincial documents. However, if this is what the house desires and if Premier Strom has no objection, I will certainly table the report. However, I wonder how long it will take Premier Strom to have it translated into French.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Further to the Prime Minister's reply regarding Medicare, does he expect the provincial Minister of Health to meet the Minister of National Health and Welfare in order to ascertain if an agreement is possible?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. Such meetings have already begun and I believe they are in progress at the present time. This is one of the reasons why the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not in the house just now. Premier Strom and myself are aware of the two ministers' meeting and may I repeat that it is going on right now.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, in reference to the previous question and to a statement made yesterday by the premier of the province of Quebec, could the Prime Minister tell us whether the province of Quebec has been consulted about those negotiations with the provinces?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there are no negotiations with the provinces. It is for those who wish to take advantage of the federal legislation to negotiate the terms with us as well as the date of its coming into force. On behalf of the government, I am willing to say publicly to Premier Bertrand that the more he will hasten to discuss with us the coming into operation of medicare in the province of Quebec, the more we will be pleased.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Could the Prime Minister tell the house if the province of Quebec has officially refused to participate or if it is willing to discuss the matter with the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to reiterate to the house that before the legislation was passed, the province of Quebec had expressed through its government its intention to participate in the medicare plan. The federal government passed the law as a result of those consultations. Of course, the province is free to change its mind but the federal legislation remains in the statute books and in force.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAINLAND CHINA—DISCUSSIONS IN SWEDEN AS TO RECOGNITION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can tell us how the negotiations are going on in Sweden between Communist China and Canada's representatives with respect to the recognition of Communist China, and whether he might tell us something of the peek-a-boo performance that took place there the other day when the Canadians were required to demean themselves because the Communists were not sure they were entitled to credibility.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The only part of the question to which I can give an answer is the first part, that is that negotiations are going slowly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I asked the second question because I wanted to join the hon. member for York West (Mr. Givens). Did the minister read the other day that the hon. member for York West complained that, when we want to get information, the way to get it is not in parliament but outside in front of the TV cameras?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

BATH-MILLHAVEN FEDERAL PRISON COMPLEX

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, my question arises from the authorization given by the Minister of Public Works on Tuesday, February 25 that restitution be made by Argo Incorporated, general contractors on the Bath-Millhaven federal prison contract for n.s.f. cheques issued for labour by the now extinct subcontractor, D. Leblanc Incorporated.

Since there are also some n.s.f. cheques from the same firm now held locally for services to the personnel of this company, will not the minister also recognize these for restitution?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member is making a submission which he has to assume will be taken into account. If he feels the matter should be discussed further, he might have a second try at putting the question, in view of the fact that it has already been discussed at the time of adjournment, a few weeks ago.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I will bring it up again at ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

REPORT RESPECTING GROCERY PRICES ON PRAIRIES

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Did the minister attend a meeting with the attorneys general of the three prairie provinces on Monday in Winnipeg to consider the implications of the Batten report on prairie retail food prices, as he indicated he would be doing in his reply to my question of last Thursday? If so, can he give the house some indication of what action his department may be directed to take as a result of the discussions?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, actually it was not the three attorneys general whom I met, but rather the three provincial ministers responsible for consumer affairs: The attorney general from Saskatchewan, the minister of industry and tourism from Alberta and the minister of consumer and corporate affairs from Manitoba. I had a most useful meeting with the three ministers, all of whom seemed to approve entirely the action that I was taking.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

JOHN SMITH—REFUSAL TO DIVULGE SOURCE OF INFORMATION

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In view of the support given by all parties in the house to Bill C-15 which would protect the source of information of news reporters, will the Minister of Justice consider the recent sentencing in Montreal of John Smith, by a fire commissioner, for refusing to reveal the source of his information, with the view to granting of a full pardon?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that that matter falls within provincial jurisdiction, under provincial statute. However, certainly the principles involved in that inquiry interest me a great deal. The hon. member will appreciate that since this case is currently before a board I can say nothing more at the present time.

TOMATOES—STABILIZATION OF CANADIAN PRICE

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent-Essex): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. Since Canadian producers will be in a position in a very few days to provide top quality tomatoes for the domestic market, can the minister say whether the government plans to initiate any action to stabilize the Canadian price, now abnormally depressed because of considerable quantities of low priced imports of this commodity?

[Mr. McGrath.]

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): We are aware of significant changes in the price of imported tomatoes and we have this problem under active consideration. However, I am not prepared today to announce any specific steps to deal with it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HARBOURING OF DESERTERS IN CONTRAVENTION OF ALLIANCE AGREEMENTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Some days ago, Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was in two parts. The first was:

> Are there any provisions in Canada's collective alliance agreements which prohibit Canada's harbouring deserters from nations associated with Canada in such alliances?

The second part was:

> Have any discussions been held on this question between the authorities of the United States and Canada?

I wonder whether the minister has a reply to make to these questions today.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The answer to the first part of the question is that the only relevant provision in Canadian collective alliance agreements is that contained in the NATO status of forces agreement. However this agreement is limited in its application to NATO forces on official duty in receiving states, in this case Canada. The answer to the second part of the question is that there have been no recent discussions on the subject between the authorities of our two countries.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

RECONSIDERATION OF DISCUSSIONS ON SPENDING PRIORITIES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance, who no doubt is fully familiar by now with the substantial tax increases announced in the legislature of New Brunswick last evening, including a 10 per cent surtax and a wide range of increases in sales taxes, whether in these circumstances he would reconsider his refusal to discuss priorities in spending with this and other provinces, in a meaningful way.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): We have at all times been willing to discuss priorities. When the hon. gentleman indicates he is willing to give additional revenue by way of tax abatement to the provinces, which is what he is really talking about, is he willing to support further increases in federal taxation, considering he is in favour of balancing the budget?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: I am sure the minister's attention has been drawn to the very serious criticisms of his financial policy contained in the budget of the New Brunswick government, accusing the federal government of inconsistency, lack of willingness to co-operate—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Benson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. This subject is on the agenda of federal-provincial conferences and we discuss these matters there. I have heard the same criticism from the hon. gentleman, with about as much justification.

GRAIN

INTERNATIONAL GRAINS ARRANGEMENT—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PRICES REVIEW COMMITTEE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that officials from both the hon. gentleman's department and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce are representing Canada at the meeting of the International Grain Arrangement prices review committee in London, may I ask whether the minister is now in a position to report to the house on the progress of this meeting?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker, but I expect we shall have a report soon.

Mr. Nystrom: I should like to ask the minister what instructions were given to Canadian officials putting forward representations in London.

Mr. Olson: As the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce pointed out the other day, this is a routine meeting of the kind held from time to time to review prices and other matters respecting the agreement. I do not think it would be prudent for us to make public any discussions which representatives may have had with their ministers.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

HAL BANKS—POSSIBILITY OF RENEWING EXTRADITION PROCEEDINGS

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house whether or not, when he goes to the White House on March 23 and 24, the matter of extraditing Hal Banks from the United States to Canada will be brought up?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe there will be much more important matters to discuss with the President of the United States than the particular case of Hal Banks.

[English]

[Later:]

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is directed to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Since the latest reports from Washington indicate that the government of the United States would now be willing to extradite Hal Banks, if the Canadian government were to make a new application, can the hon. gentleman tell us whether the government has any intention of making such an application?

Hon. John N. Turner (Minister of Justice): The law has not changed since the election, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Hees: Is the reluctance of the government to move in this matter the consequence of some debt or obligation which it feels it owes to Mr. Banks? Yes or no?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECREATIONAL POLICY

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. As he is not in the house, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

The Quebec Minister of Tourism stated on March 13 that a proposal made last January to the Minister of National Health and Welfare concerning the financing of organized leisure was left unanswered; in view of that statement, could the Prime Minister tell us whether his government has made a decision and, if so, what it is?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall have to inquire about this and, when the minister is in the house, I shall ask him to answer the question.

[English]

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION

AVAILABILITY OF COMMONWEALTH TRUST CORRESPONDENCE

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): This question is directed to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the great public concern with respect to Commonwealth Trust, is the minister willing to propose to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation that correspondence with Commonwealth Trust be made available to any provincial commission of inquiry, judicial or legislative?

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of Finance): I would have to take this matter under consideration and discuss it with the Superintendent of Insurance. However I should like to make it quite clear that the matter of Commonwealth Trust is being kept under constant review by the C.D.I.C. Moreover it was not the federal government which recommended that the government of British Columbia put money into the company.

FISHERIES

SEALS—POSSIBILITY OF RE-OPENING HUNT

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries, Mr. Speaker, related to questions raised in the house in the last two or three days. Did the minister receive a communication this morning from representatives of those involved in the seal hunt to the effect that there is in fact a large resource of seals in the gulf north of Prince Edward Island? If so, is the minister taking steps to ascertain whether this information is correct, and possibly to reopen the hunt until the quota has been reached?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): We have rechecked the situation and found that the number of seals in the gulf is very small, roughly one quarter of what it has been in previous years.

SEALS—ACTIVITIES OF FOREIGN SHIPS DURING CESSATION OF CANADIAN OPERATIONS

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the department taken any action as yet against the five Norwegian vessels which were found in Canadian territorial waters as reported to the house yesterday?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): There are presently four vessels inside our territorial waters; they are stuck in the ice. They are not taking seals. Canadian vessels are taking seals in the same area.

TRANSPORT

MEETING WITH HUDSON BAY ROUTE ASSOCIATION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Has the right hon. gentleman received a request from the Hudson Bay Route Association to meet with him, and will he indicate the nature of his reply?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I did receive a request from the association, and because the subject matter concerned the Minister of Transport rather than myself I asked my colleague to meet with them. He intends to do so, soon. This does not preclude a meeting which I may have with them later; I hope to have one this summer, and I have begun to make plans to that effect. But the immediate problem is one which will be dealt with by the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Korchinski: Did the Prime Minister's decision hinge upon a report which was prepared last fall for the Department of Transport dealing with a possible extension of the season next year?

Mr. Trudeau: No, Mr. Speaker. My desire to see people does not hinge on such things as that.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALTERNATIVE TO COMPENSATE FOR CANCELLED WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

Mr. Mark Rose (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration may I direct my question to the Prime Minister. It has to do with the unemployment situation and with representations made by the Association of Canadian Reeves and Mayors. Has the government any alternative program to recommend in place of the winter works program, which was cancelled unilaterally, in order that municipalities may be assisted in various capital projects in the fields of housing and pollution control?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member is asking the minister to make a statement, which I suggest cannot be done at this time.

Mr. Rose: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Your Honour ruled a similar question out of order on March 12. The question was posted to be debated on the adjournment debate of March 17. I raised the matter then but received no reply. I raised the matter again yesterday by way of a question of privilege and received no reply then. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, may I again transfer this question to the adjournment debate, in the hope that it will be debated as soon as possible and that I shall receive a satisfactory answer at that time.

Mr. Speaker: I assure the hon. member that his question will be considered carefully and will be put on the agenda of questions to be considered at the time of adjournment as quickly as possible.

IMMIGRATION

ASSISTANCE TO FRENCH SPEAKING WORKERS

Mr. Roland Godin (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Since in the Quebec City and Montreal areas immigrant workers are subsidized to learn English, can the French Canadians of those areas expect to receive the same advantages soon?

Mr. Gérard Loiselle (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I will answer that question.

I am surprised that it has been asked in that form, but I will take it as notice and the minister will answer it when he is here.

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE

NEGOTIATIONS AS TO FREEDOM IN ARRANGING WORK SCHEDULE

Mr. Louis-Roland Comeau (South Western Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the President of the Treasury Board. Will he say whether, in its negotiations with the Public Service Alliance of Canada, Treasury Board is demanding complete freedom to require employees to work any schedule of hours or shift. Also, is Treasury Board demanding the right to make unilateral changes in present, standard working conditions not covered by a contract, without any negotiations being entered into?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member ought to place that question on the order paper.

GRAIN

WHEAT—DISCUSSIONS WITH ALBERTA PREMIER

Mr. R. R. Southam (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can he say whether he or his colleague, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Pepin), held any discussions with Premier Strom of Alberta during his current visit to Ottawa respecting the serious situation facing Canadian wheat farmers. If so, what determination if any was made?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes. The answer to the second part is that I do not believe private conversations should be made public.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—RECIPROCAL TROOP STRENGTH REDUCTIONS WITH WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES

Mr. Ed Schreyer (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Has he, along with his officials, studied carefully or shown any interest at all in the proposal made last evening by the Soviet Union that there be reciprocal reductions in troop strengths on the part of Warsaw pact and NATO countries?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope this news is correct, because the NATO powers made similar proposals many months ago.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR DAIRY POLICY ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. H. A. Moore (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. Since the Congress on Agriculture will begin its meetings on Monday, will the minister agree to announcing the government's 1969-70 dairy policy this week, so that it may be considered at the congress?

Hon. H. A. Olson (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, dairy policy will be considered at the congress. Indeed, a paper on the dairy industry prepared by the task force has now been circulated. However, I cannot give an undertaking that the specific requirements for the 1969-70 dairy year will be ready by Monday. We hope it will be available before the year begins on April 1. I ought to point out that consideration of these kinds of policies by the agricultural congress are not considerations of day to day operations. Instead, they seek to set down guidelines for the future.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION OF STUDY ON NOVA SCOTIA COUNTIES

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister who will be responsible for regional economic development. Has he received a request from the Minister of Agriculture of Nova Scotia to make public the study on the nine eastern counties of Nova Scotia. If so, what decision has he reached on the matter?

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a letter.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What decision has the minister come to on the question of making the study public?

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I received the letter yesterday and I indicated that we do not think in my department that we should publish those reports. We shall ask for the opinion of the Nova Scotia Minister of Agriculture on this point. If his opinion is in the affirmative, we shall come to a final decision then.

AIR CANADA

UPGRADING OF MEAL SERVICE

Mr. Rod Thomson (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will he investigate the activities of Air Canada with a view to upgrading meals served on flights?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, as I have been waiting since the very beginning to put my question, I forgot it through impatience.

[Mr. Olson.]

CABINET OF THE PRIME MINISTER

REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY ASSISTANT

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he agrees with one of his first lieutenants, Mr. Pierre Levasseur, who is responsible for establishing the regional desks?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question as put is out of order. The hon. member is aware that he cannot ask whether a minister agrees with a statement, an expression or an opinion coming from an official.

Mr. Rondeau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I submit that a certain statement made by one of the Prime Minister's first lieutenants was an insult to hon. members of this house. In fact, he stated that 90 per cent of the hon. members' work in the house could be done by business machines. So, I would like to know if the Prime Minister approves that statement.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question could perhaps be a point of privilege, but I do not think his question is in order at this time.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On this same question—

Mr. Speaker: Is the Prime Minister rising on a point of privilege?

Mr. Trudeau: Somebody raised a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If Your Honour will not permit the discussion to continue, I accept your judgment, but I want to rectify—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggested to the hon. member for Shefford that the question as asked is out of order.

[English]

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

CARRYING OUT OF RECOMMENDATIONS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the minister-to-be of regional and economic development, the present Minister of Forestry and Rural Development. Will he carry out the final recommendations of the Atlantic Development Board to the effect that existing programs, including highway programs, ought not to be allowed to grind to a halt this year while the new department is getting under way in its work?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Marchand (Minister of Forestry and Rural Development): Mr. Speaker, we are presently studying those questions, and as soon as the new department is established, we will take decisions on that matter.

[English]

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the department also make public any plans it has for various sectors of responsibility based on recommendations of the Atlantic Development Board, in order that the work of the new department may be effectively evaluated?

[Translation]

Mr. Marchand (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, those projects have already been drawn to the department's attention. We will study them and decide what to do about them as soon as the department is established.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ANGUILLA—CANADIAN POSITION ON BRITISH ACTION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he state at this time, or on motions later, what position Canada has taken on the apparent invasion of the island of Anguilla by Britain?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we have taken no position.

Mr. Stanfield: That is the usual position.

Mr. Benson: The usual position of the opposition.

CANADA LABOUR (SAFETY) CODE

PROMULGATION OF RAILWAY REGULATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. On Thursday of last week I asked him if he could say when the regulations under the Canada Labour (Safety) Code for the railway industry would be promulgated? Since it was not possible for him to reply on Monday I trust he is in a position to reply today.

Hon. Bryce S. Mackasey (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether the answer will satisfy the hon. member. As a result of his question I asked the department to give me a complete report. It is so complete that it runs to seven pages, and to read it I should have to ask unanimous consent of the house to revert to motions. I assure the hon. gentleman that rapid progress is being made in this field. I have asked the department to discuss the possibility of expanding staff in order that we may proceed more effectively. We anticipate that the entire regulations of the code will be completed within the year.

BANKRUPTCY

SHARING OF LOSS THROUGH INSURANCE PROCEDURES

Mr. Henry Latulippe (Compton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, of which I have already given notice.

In view of the large increase in the number of failures in the commercial field, which also cause many failures in industry, involving small and average businesses mostly, would the hon. minister consider establishing a shared-cost insurance plan similar to crop insurance for farmers, to protect industry and the governments?

[English]

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): No, Mr. Speaker. The provisions of the Bankruptcy Act are now being studied by a special advisory committee. I hope to have their report this year at which time we will be introducing a revision of the Bankruptcy Act. I doubt that the committee will recommend a creditor's insurance scheme similar to crop insurance.

FISHERIES

SEALS—REQUEST FOR REASONS FOR CANCELLATION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Fisheries. In view of the considerable disagreement which seems to exist regarding the actual number of seals in the northern area close to Prince Edward Island and the loss of income to fishermen in that area, is the minister prepared to make a statement to the house tomorrow indicating in some detail the exact reasons for which the hunt has been cancelled? Would he also provide the exact number of seals located in that area?

Hon. Jack Davis (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to communicate with the hon. member in this connection.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It arises from the reply I received today from the Minister of Fisheries, which is similar to his reply to my question yesterday. It is completely and totally at variance with the reply given by his parliamentary secretary in the house on Monday, March 17, which can be found at page 6687 of Hansard. It is also completely and totally at variance with information I have received from Canadian sealing skippers off the Labrador coast. According to the custom of this house, Mr. Speaker, I think the minister owes hon. members an explanation; otherwise he stands accused of misleading the house.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, in relation to the point of order raised by the hon. member for St. John's East, one of the difficulties is that a good deal of information has been communicated at different times to different people outside the house, which has resulted in considerable confusion. It is important that the house have a very full and complete statement from the minister tomorrow.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION

AUTHORIZATION FOR THE ESTABLISHMENT OF A DEPARTMENT OF FISHERIES AND FORESTRY, AND OTHER NEW DEPARTMENTS

The house resumed, from Thursday, March 13, consideration in committee of Bill C-173, respecting the organization of the government of Canada and matters relating or incidental thereto—Mr. Trudeau—Mr. Faulkner in the chair.

The Chairman: House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-173. When the committee rose on the morning of March 14 clause 54 had been called, clauses 20 to 40 and 55 to 70 having been allowed to stand. Shall clause 54 carry?

On clause 54—Definitions.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few comments on this clause. The discovery and transformation of knowledge into viable technologies has clearly made possible enormous gains in human welfare and living standards in all the developed countries of the world. The way in which advances in knowledge and technology bear on the process of economic growth and the rate of increase in productivity is becoming more widely recognized.

What are the factors which determine the economic process? Generally speaking, a person works with an idea which becomes a fact. The fact becomes an invention and from that you have a tool and from that you go on to production. Until the 1920's there was very little research or discovery in Canada. The first major breakthrough medically was the discovery of insulin by Doctors Banting and Best. This is something of which Canadians can be very proud. I refer to it because it establishes a fundamental fact, that we in Canada with our universities and schools are quite capable of taking our place in the research field. There are those who doubt the wisdom of this or tend to copy research done in other countries. I have in mind the drug bill, C-102, which we have been discussing; a great deal of the research may be done in countries other than Canada. Yet one need only look back over the last 25 years to see the drugs that have been developed. One can recall another Canadian discovery, parathyroid extract by Dr. Collip. Those years were a brilliant page in medical discoveries through research.

Some people feel that research is too expensive for a country such as Canada. I say to such people that drug research has risen from zero to the point where approximately $12 million per year is now being spent. In our medical research we are spending $25 million. A great deal of the teaching in universities is done by people carrying on research. If opportunities for research are not available, the universities simply will not be able to get teachers. The capable, qualified men are not interested in teaching alone.

When we look to our neighbour to the south, whence comes most of our competition in manufacturing and other fields, we discover that the number of university graduates in almost any given field in the United States is almost double that in Canada. As long as this situation continues we will be drawers of water and hewers of wood. We must develop and encourage research. Better economic standards are derived from research. We should remember the good that research has achieved in Canada. We should remember the drugs that have been developed in Canada and the lives that have been saved because of research. Economics are tied in with research—the economics of sickness.

Up to 20 years ago about 30 per cent of all the people who developed pneumonia died of it. Many of them were in the 25 to 40 age group. Those of us who practised medicine in those days remember how we waited five to nine days for the crisis to come indicating that the patient had overcome his infection. But even if a patient did recover he sometimes ended up with pus in his pleural cavity and had to be hospitalized to have an operation to remove a rib and drain the pus. Today the pneumonia mortality rate has dropped from 30 per cent to 5 per cent and the morbidity rate has dropped even lower. In a matter of days we can have a patient back at work looking after his own business, and without the necessity of going on welfare. The economics of this are self-evident. This is what we have to consider. We should not be penny-wise and pound foolish.

Our future economic development depends to a great degree on the development of life-saving drugs, not only in the cancer field where the death rate is one out of seven afflicted but in the field of virology. There is also the economic loss due to mental disease. Just the other day an outstanding medical authority made the statement that in Canada 50 per cent of the people are mentally ill to some degree at one time or another.

Today, because of the lack of research and sufficient medical schools, we face a medical manpower shortage. I feel that parliament is becoming callous about this problem, and even some of the people who work in medical practice are becoming callous about it. People are dying in Canada today who would not lose their lives if adequate medical care were provided for them. I will go further on this matter, and I point out that I am not being politically critical. This government passed medicare without due consultation with the medical people across Canada.

I have here a brief report by the Canadian Medical Association which states:

> Following our annual meeting in June our president wrote to the Minister of Health asking that greater flexibility be provided in the federal proposals to allow provincial governments more latitude in the use of private insurance carriers. We also asked the minister to reconsider the universal coverage requirement in his proposed program—

> Following the announcement of the legislation on July 12, a meeting of our divisional representatives was held and a draft of our comments on the bill was sent to our executive committee, C.M.A. divisions and to the Minister of Health and his deputy. We were concerned because some sections of the bill were ambiguous and required clarification. Also our officials determined from a meeting with the Deputy Minister that the method of government administration was much more rigid than we expected.
> The legislation was passed without any meaningful amendment... On November 10, 1967, our president wrote the following letter to the Honourable Mitchell Sharp, then Minister of Finance:
> "We are aware that you are meeting with the provincial treasurers next week and that the financial aspects of the proposed medicare program will likely be one of the subjects under discussion. Our provincial divisions have informed us about the economic problems of their governments in financing such a large undertaking in view of their other pressing priorities."

The Canadian Medical Association made certain suggestions. The minister knows them as well as I do. One of them was that the Canada Assistance Plan be used to provide for some of those people—

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question? First, dealing with medicare, I would like a ruling from the Chair. I do not know what particular relevance it has to the Medical Research Council, but if you rule it is in order and does have some relevance then I would like to ask the hon. member a question concerning it.

The Chairman: I am in the hands of the committee. My suggestion would be that under Part VIII, Medical Research Council, a discussion of medicare should not come up. On the other hand, there was agreement that on the first clause of each part a wide-ranging debate should be allowed. In my opinion this puts the Chair in a rather difficult position to make a ruling. I would simply suggest that we try to avoid a detailed debate on medicare.

Mr. Aiken: On the point of order raised by the minister, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the hon. member was ranging into the question of medicare except as it is related to the Medical Research Council. I did not understand him to be undertaking a debate on medicare, and I think he should at least be able to refer to it.

The Chairman: I think that would be a fair compromise.

Mr. Munro: Then could I ask the hon. member a question? I know he is well able to take care of himself in these matters. If this matter is in order I would ask the hon. member this question. He referred to medicare. My understanding is that he has asked questions in the house indicating that he is desirous of having its coverage extended, and I believe that he and his party supported the measure when it came before the house. Unless I am wrong I understand he supports medicare. Is that correct?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to see the minister get up and state what he stated because he referred in his Hamilton speech, if I remember correctly, to this point. He knows where I stand on that question as well as I do. He also knows what I am getting at. Coming back to what I was saying, I point out that the suggestion was that the Canada Assistance Plan be used to pay the premiums for those 28 per cent to 30 per cent who find it very difficult to meet their medical needs. As the Canadian Medical Association points out:

The governments of Ontario, British Columbia and Alberta have demonstrated a realistic workable approach to the provision of medical care insurance.

• (3:20 p.m.)

It continues:

Mr. Trudeau assumed the leadership of the Liberal Party in April, 1968, and since that time has said very little about medicare. During the election campaign he stated that "medicare was the law of the land".

Farther on we find this:

On July 1, 1968, two provinces—British Columbia and Newfoundland—joined medicare. Eight provinces did not. Four of these indicated that they would initiate medicare programs in 1969, but the remaining four—including the two most populous provinces, Ontario and Quebec—made no commitment and the Prime Ministers and the Ministers of Finance of Ontario and Quebec have indicated on a number of occasions that medicare is far down their list of priorities.

They just cannot afford it. Then it says:

We have never been able to meet with the Prime Minister to discuss with him essential matters of policy—

These are the men with whom the government must work. They are the men who will have to put up with medicare and make it work. I think there will be problems no matter how hard the medical men try to make it successful, but nevertheless the co-operation of that group is essential. They say they have never been able to meet with the Prime Minister. Then they go on to say:

In recent weeks our Association has been greatly concerned with statements in the public press, attributed to federal and provincial government leaders as well as business leaders, relating to the cost of medical services insurance. We think it is time the Canadian Medical Association had an opportunity of discussing the problems and solutions of medical care insurance with you and your ministers.

We would like to refute such public statements as that made by your Minister of Finance who stated: "We need medicare because private enterprise, which serves the country best in so many fields, cannot bring comprehensive coverage at reasonable cost to the bulk of the population." He also implied that the increase in doctors' fees has been the main reason for the rising cost of health care.

There are many reasons for the rising costs of medical care, the chief one of which is the increasing utilization of medical services generated largely by the public, but to some extent by the medical profession. This has been well demonstrated in the United Kingdom and in Saskatchewan. On the other hand, the increases in medical fees have not been greater than increases in the wages and salaries of other Canadians.

We would also like to point out the problems of delivering medical care to the people of Canada, under the universal program your government is advocating, when the supply of the presently overburdened doctors—

I want the minister to take careful note of this.

—will remain constant for some time. It would be much less costly and more to the point to assist those people who are now not covered with medical care insurance because of the lack of funds or other reasons.

I hope you will give us the opportunity, in the near future, to meet with you and your appropriate ministers in order that our Association may present to you the problems of providing medical care to the people of Canada, and some practical solutions to your medical care program.

Mr. Munro: All right, you have put it on the record.

Mr. Rynard: I continue:

To date we have received no indication that the Prime Minister intends to meet with us.

This is not an old publication I am reading. It is dated March 8, 1969.

We believe that our desire to meet with him and senior members of his cabinet is a reasonable request. These are the persons who collectively establish governmental policy on a wide range of matters which are extremely important to the profession—manpower, allocation of funds for hospitals, medical research—

Here we are at medical research.

Mr. Munro: You finally got there.

Mr. Rynard: I continue:

As the voice of organized medicine in Canada we believe that we have a responsibility to present to the Prime Minister and his cabinet the views of the profession on these important matters.

There has been a flat refusal by the Prime Minister to meet with the very men who will be working under medicare. I think even the minister agrees that this is wrong. I see him smiling.

I should also like to say that I read with a great deal of interest the speech the minister made the other night in Hamilton. While it started off as a mythical story there were some points in it that were worth considering, as well as some errors. For instance, he referred to the 1,200—I believe that is the figure, and he can correct me if I am wrong—immigrant doctors. He conveniently forgot, however, to state how many of those doctors are permitted to practise in Canada. He did not mention how many of them have qualifications which are high enough to permit them to practise in the Dominion of Canada. The minister forgot to mention that. He forgot to tell us how many of these doctors have added to the medical manpower of Canada.

I should also like to ask the minister whether he thinks it is fair that we should be educating and training only about two-thirds the number of doctors that are sufficient to look after the people of Canada. I might also ask him whether he thinks it is fair that we should draw doctors from the have-not countries. I should like him to answer this question because it bothers me a great deal. Why we should draw doctors from countries like India and Pakistan where the standard of living is low and where in India, for instance, there is only one doctor for every 7,000 people.

I believe our medical schools are among the best in the world. I do not think we need take second place to any country. I admit there is a very high standard in the medical schools in the United States, but I think our standard is exceptionally good. If we are to admit students from other countries who do not have the necessary qualifications and then turn them loose here to practice, we might ask ourselves, what are we doing to the quality of medicine in this country and what will the end result be? These are the questions to which I should like to have some answers.

The minister went on to state, and I agree with him, that expertise has risen very rapidly. This is a very good statement because it is a statement of fact. About the time of the second world war the number of doctors who were specialists was 20 per cent. I believe the minister stated in his Hamilton speech that the figure is now 50 per cent in respect of those who enter the specialty field. He also mentioned superspecials and so on. It is my hope that the minister will meet with the health ministers of the provinces and the officials of the medical schools so that the cards may be laid on the table. Someone should say that if we are overpopulated with specialists we will do something about it because it is the Canadian people who largely are paying the shot with regard to the cost of operating medical schools. I agree with this, but I also believe the minister should meet with the proper officials and say that there is a problem in respect of medical care which must be met.

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the hon. member have the permission of the committee to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro: May I include a rider that the hon. member talk about the Medical Research Council for a few minutes.

• (3:30 p.m.)

Mr. Rynard: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The whole crux of this matter is involved in the area of research, and it is in this regard I wish to conclude my remarks. It is medical research and associated efforts that result in trained doctors. The minister has allowed a cut-back in the health resources fund which provides the resources for the training of those doctors we so badly need.

I commenced my speech by referring to the finished product. This is what medical research is doing in respect of training doctors. The minister and the government have said in effect that we have enough doctors. This must be their opinion or they would not have brought in medicare.

I was in this house when we created the medical research fund. It was our intention at that time to provide assistance to the university complexes across the country. The hon. member for Nanimo-Cowichan-The Islands was in the house at that time and I recall, if my memory serves me right, that the minister stated the health resources fund would provide the facilities to train the doctors. This was a recommendation of the Hall commission report. We are not training enough doctors and we do not have enough doctors, regardless of what the minister says. Obviously he has not met with the Canadian Medical Association because the members of that body know very well there are not sufficient doctors. Compare the results with countries like Sweden, the U.S.A., the U.S.S.R., etc.

As I said before, many people in this country are losing their lives because they are not able to get necessary medical care in an emergency. We have heard a lot of talk about paramedical services. I was happy to hear the minister admit that we should continue a program along these lines. He discussed this matter when he was in Hamilton recently and I am sure that he and I feel the same way about the need for increased paramedical services.

However, nothing can take the place of a well trained doctor. No matter how well trained an immigrant doctor is he cannot be expected immediately to meet our high standards and way of life. These doctors do not have the background in many cases or the training we have in our medical centres. Our Canadian population is entitled to the best medical care we can give them. It is a fraud and a fallacy to bring in a medicare plan that does not provide the medical care the people are paying for under the plan. There is not one university with a medical faculty not aware of the fact that there are not enough medical men in Canada at the present time. They all realize that our medical manpower is deficient.

The health resources fund was cut back by $37 million in Ontario alone. Buildings have been left uncompleted, plans have been derailed and hospital construction is almost stopped because this government is not prepared to go ahead with its plans to provide money for medical research and the training of teachers necessary to staff our medical schools in order to provide the medical manpower so necessary to the success of the medicare plan.

Mr. Skoberg: Would the hon. member permit a question? Will the hon. member indicate whether he is of the opinion that there is a shortage of doctors in Saskatchewan at this time?

Mr. Rynard: I think there is a shortage of doctors throughout Canada, in almost every province.

Mr. Skoberg: Would the hon. member answer the specific question in respect of the province of Saskatchewan which provided the first complete medicare coverage in North America?

[Mr. Rynard.]

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I was speaking of Canada as a whole. I do not profess to know the situation in the province of Saskatchewan. I should not be expected to know what the situation is there, or whether there are three doctors in Estevan or only one or none. I was speaking of the broad picture across Canada. I expect that there may be a shortage of doctors in Saskatchewan. But let me point out to the hon. member that if my memory serves me correctly, half of the doctors in Saskatchewan were not born in Canada. If there is not a shortage there, perhaps this fact is the explanation.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, it is interesting that the lead-off speaker for the Official Opposition, the hon. member for Simcoe North, instead of discussing the Medical Research Council and problems in respect of medical research in this country, discussed the question of medicare. That is not the matter before the committee today. I do not intend to spend my time discussing the differences I have with the hon. member in respect of medicare. I do want to make one or two short comments about a specific matter referred to by him because I have some personal interest. I have in mind the question of immigrant doctors.

The hon. member said there are 1,500 immigrant doctors in Canada. He implied that their training and qualifications are not as good as doctors trained in Canada. I am not an expert on this subject, but the fact is that the bulk of these doctors work very hard in Canadian hospitals and provide excellent service. Many of our hospitals in urban centres such as Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg could not operate in the efficient way in which they have or provide service without these 1,500 immigrant doctors.

The hon. member for Simcoe North did a disservice to these doctors and these hospitals by the remarks he made. If he does not, he certainly should know that it is not the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare who decides whether their qualifications and training are sufficient or adequate to permit them to practise in any particular province. It is the college of physicians and surgeons in each province that makes this decision. That college in the province of Ontario is very tough. As I have said outside the house, that college has not only been tough but in my opinion it has been prejudiced.

I should like to spend my time discussing the subject before us today, medical research and, under the clause of the bill now before us, the Medical Research Council. The bill gives the council a good deal more independence than it has had up to now, and it also makes permanent the change we made last year in that the Medical Research council reports and is responsible to the Minister of National Health and Welfare rather than to the scientific and industrial research council.

Members of this party have for some years taken the position that not only are we spending too little money on all forms of scientific research but we are making a basic mistake in not establishing a system of priorities. I intend to spend some time discussing our shortcomings in the field of medical research, which are the fault of the government, the cabinet and parliament itself because the government reports to parliament.

The secretary of the Treasury Board recently reported to the Senate committee on science that the amount we are spending on scientific research is too little. I think I would have to agree with him. We have had in recent years the HARP project at McGill university. This project was partially funded at first by the federal government but then those funds were completely withdrawn. The project has been moved to the United States. It is obtaining substantially more money there for its operation than it was receiving in Canada from all sources. The project seems to be going ahead at full speed.

There was the proposal to build an observatory in British Columbia. Suddenly that project was scrapped. There was the proposal to build an intense neutron generator, the ING project. I know there was a good deal of controversy in the scientific community about that project, but it had been recommended by the government. Suddenly it is out. Was there any evaluation by the scientific community of the value of that project compared with others? If there was, there has been no report at all to the scientific community or parliament.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced some time ago that Canada was embarking upon an extensive and expensive oceanographic survey. I said then and I repeat that it is probably a very good scientific research project. But how does its value compare with that of other projects which have been turned down? We do not know. Nobody has been given the task of evaluating these projects. Nobody has been given the task of establishing a system of priorities. I suggest to the minister and the government that to have the Medical Research Council report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, while other projects report to the President of the Privy Council, is a retrograde step.

I want to deal with the problem of medical research. I am sure the President of the Privy Council knows better than I how many detailed technical surveys have been made by various royal commissions and special committees which have reported to the government. I can think of the work done by the Royal Commission on Health Services, the Farquharson report. We had a report early in 1966 prepared by Wood, Gundy and Company Limited and endorsed by over 100 of our most prominent medical researchers, deans of medical colleges and heads of various departments of medical colleges all across the country. All these people have stressed the very serious short-fall in the amount of money and effort we have put into medical research.

Let me read just a couple of sentences from the Wood, Gundy report. The minister can find this passage on page 3. It reads as follows:

> Although financial support has been increasing, medical research in Canada today is being conducted on an inadequate scale. As the Royal Commission on Health Services commented: "available funds lag behind the amounts needed for the support of research."

We were moving in the right direction until this year. We have been increasing in recent years the amount of money made available to the Medical Research Council for distribution to various medical research projects across the country. We have been increasing the amount by 30 per cent a year. That was a very substantial increase. However, it was not as good as it sounds because, while the amount of money given to the Medical Research Council was increased by 30 per cent a year, other research funds which had been available through the Defence Research Board and the Department of National Health and Welfare were reduced.

I have been told by people expert in the field of medical research that had the increase of 30 per cent a year been continued it is likely that in the next three or four years we would have been approaching the amount that is required in this country. But what do we find this year? We find that instead of the 30 per cent increase we have had in recent years the increase has been reduced to 14 per cent. Last year the Medical Research Council received $27 million; this year it is to receive only $31 million.

The decision to reduce the amount of increase was not made because the scientific community, the people conversant with the needs of medical research, reported to the government that they were attaining the position which ought to be attained, one where people carrying out useful medical research were having their needs met; it was made for narrow, purely budgetary reasons because of the government's decision to try to hold the line. This means that research funds which have been available in large amounts from the United States for medical research in almost every medical college in Canada are being reduced to the point where in the very near future they will be almost non-existent. The government of Canada is cutting back very drastically on the increases which obviously it had come to the conclusion would have to be made at the same time.

I was told only this morning by one of the top medical researchers at McGill University that this year the Medical Research Council is approving only about 55 per cent of the applications it is receiving for research grants. I do not say that 45 per cent of the applications are being rejected completely, but where applications are not being rejected the amounts requested are being cut very seriously. This is a disaster and an invitation to qualified people, trained in this country at great expense, to leave Canada and go to the United States where medical research has between 400 per cent and 500 per cent more money available to it than it has in Canada.

I can and will put on the record today some of the conclusions of the Wood, Gundy report which I mentioned earlier. But first I want to give the minister three examples of what this cut-back in the projected funds for research means. I received this information this morning through three telephone calls. I am sure that if I had stayed on the telephone for another couple of hours and called medical colleges across the country I could have cited not three but 30 or 300 similar examples. Let me put on the record some of the things I was told this morning.

I refer to the Department of Pharmacology at McGill University, and Professor Lowenthal, one of the top experts in anti-coagulants.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

The hon. member for Simcoe North can correct me if I am wrong, but I was told last week that about 50 per cent of the people who die do so as a result of heart or blood vessel failure. The use of anti-coagulant drugs is extremely important in saving the lives of people. Professor Lowenthal was persuaded to move from Queen's University to McGill where he is a full professor in biochemistry.

At Queen's University he was receiving grants from the Medical Research Council and the Ontario Heart Foundation. At McGill, where I am sure Professor Lowenthal expected to have at least the amount of money with which to carry out his research that he had received at Queen's University, he finds that while he is still getting the money which he received at Queen's University from the Medical Research Council, the 50 per cent of his research fund which he formerly received from the Ontario Heart Foundation is not available. As a result of the shortage of funds Professor Lowenthal, one of the top people in his field in the country, will be working next year with one arm tied behind his back, thanks to the niggardly policy of the federal government.

I spoke this morning to Dr. Selye at the University of Montreal, a world famous medical researcher. Dr. Selye tells me that of the $800,000 which his department expends only $80,000 comes from the Medical Research Council. Dr. Selye told me about a case which would be ludicrous if it were not so tragic.

At the time of the Russian invasion of Czechoslovakia the government of Canada, with the approval of, I would say, 95 per cent of the people of Canada, agreed to encourage as many Czech refugees as possible to come to Canada. Some of them were doctors and some medical researchers. The Medical Research Council made funds available for some of these medical scientists to do work in Canada. Four of them are working with Dr. Selye at the University of Montreal. The funds with which they are working will be expended in June of this year and the Medical Research Council has told Dr. Selye that they are very sorry but no money will be available for them next year. I do not know what the Minister of National Health and Welfare suggests that these four people should do. Perhaps they should go to the United States where their scientific knowledge and technical abilities will obviously be much more appreciated than they are in Canada. What was the good of bringing them here if we cannot find the funds to let them do the work which they are qualified to do, work which will contribute to the better health and well-being of the people of Canada?

The Department of Psychiatry at the University of Manitoba has a highly qualified psychiatrist who would like to spend his time doing clinical research in the field of mental health. No money is available for that purpose from the Medical Research Council. So one of two things is going to happen: Either that highly trained, highly skilful psychiatrist is not going to do what he wants but is going to stay in Winnipeg at the University of Manitoba teaching part time and, I suppose, practising part time, or he is going to go somewhere where he can do research work which will help the people of the world understand better what causes mental illness and what can be done to help the 10 per cent of our population who are likely to be mentally or emotionally illl. We are inviting him to go to the United States where funds and facilities will be available for him to do the work which he would like to do. I suggest to the minister that what he is doing is certainly a disservice to the people of Canada, if not a disaster.

At the same time that the minister and the government are cutting back on the amount of money available to the Medical Research Council, the minister has announced that the $500 million health resources fund which is to be used to provide the facilities so that we can educate and train more doctors in Canada and which was to be expended in 15 years is to be stretched out over a longer period of time. The minister shakes his head but I am certain he made that announcement, and certainly that is what was understood by the provinces. I say that the provinces, which have the major responsibility for training doctors and for the provision of funds to expand the existing medical colleges and to build new ones such as the one that is being built, I understand, in the minister's own city of Hamilton, expected that the federal government would live up to its commitments. I suggest to the minister that the provinces, in making their plans to expand medical colleges, whether at the University of Toronto, in Manitoba or in British Columbia, and to build new medical colleges such as are being built at McMaster University in Hamilton or at the University of Sherbrooke, had a right to expect the federal government to live up to its commitments. I say that the government and the minister had no right to welsh on their commitments and to shortchange the provinces as they have done.

If I may, I would like to go back for a few minutes to the problem of medical research because we are facing a crisis which will affect not only medical research but the whole program of health services. I am sure I am less of an expert in these matters than the minister, but I have yet to meet anybody knowledgeable about the medical profession or about medical education who does not believe that without sufficient trained and qualified personnel at the medical colleges we cannot turn out enough doctors of the quality needed and who does not agree that we cannot get the necessary personnel for the medical colleges unless we are prepared to pay sufficient salaries to personnel with the ability to do the work which they want to do, namely, medical research. Yet in view of these shortages the government continues to ignore the specific, detailed and concrete recommendations made by every group which has looked at the problem of medical research and the problem of medical colleges in this country.

Let me take a few moments to summarize some of the things which are said in the most recent comprehensive survey that I have seen, namely, the 1966 Wood, Gundy survey. This is what they say:

> —funds available from a variety of sources have been considerably short of those applied for. In 1965-66, almost $29 million of funds were requested by medical researchers for their work from agencies outside the universities (extra-mural agencies)—an amount representing minimum requests in view of the known shortage of funds. Only $21.5 million was made available.

This is what they say. In case the minister thinks my language was too strong, I will put the whole passage on the record as it appears at page 5 of the report:

> The effect on researchers can only be described as demoralising. Research effort is fragmented into small projects, the quality of research is impaired, uncertainty as to the ability to keep research teams together is general, and major new research programs are discouraged. There is a clear need to expand assistance to medical research in Canada if the present unfavourable climate is to be overcome and a longer-term expansion to be brought about.

The minister will, of course, tell me quite properly that we are spending substantially more on medical research in 1969 than in the year 1965-66 referred to in the report. But, Mr. Chairman, in that year we were meeting 70 per cent of requests for research funds while today we are meeting less than 70 per cent, according to the information I have. I therefore suggest that the fact that we are spending more money on research fails to deal with the crux of the problem which is that there is a tremendous shortfall in the effort made as seen by those who are most competent to judge.

The report goes into some detail. It says:

> The capital needs of medical research in Canada for the period to the end of this decade amount to some $150 million. Since the announced size of the health resources fund is $500 million over a 15-year period, it would seem that the capital requirements for medical research—and it would appear, for health facilities as a whole—may not have been fully appreciated.

Today we are slowing down the rate at which we are paying out money from the health resources fund. The report goes on to say:

> A doubling of the present level of research support in Canada would thus be needed to reach an appropriate level of research effort, and projection indicates that a further doubling to just over $100 million a year would be needed by the end of this decade.

Well, we are in the second to last year before the end of this decade and instead of the $100 million which the Wood, Gundy report recommends we are in fact giving to the Medical Research Council $31 million, roughly 30 per cent of what is called for. And, as I say, this report has been endorsed by all the prominent medical researchers and educationists.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Richard): Order. I must remind the hon. member that his time expired some time ago.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words on this subject. I find nothing wrong with the proposal that the Medical Research Council should report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In my view this is a sufficiently specialized field to justify the council reporting to the minister of health. I point out that the Food and Drug Directorate, which has a certain responsibility in connection with the pharmaceutical industry, is at present part of the Department of National Health and Welfare, and that in addition the department is responsible for making grants from the health resources fund for use by the medical teaching complexes which are vitally concerned with medical research. The department is also concerned with the allocation of funds to hospitals, and a certain amount of research is carried out on the basis of these grants. For these reasons I believe it is on the whole in the best interests of medical research in this country that the council should report to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

When the affairs of the Medical Research Council were examined before Christmas it was found that a considerable proportion of its research funds was allocated to studies carried out in conjunction with the universities. The allocation of research projects was done by members of the medical colleges acting as members of the Medical Research Council. I should like to draw attention to certain anomalies and shortcomings which have arisen in connection with the health resources fund and the allocation of money from that fund.

Three years ago the government of the day promised $500 million over a period of years for the building of medical research complexes. This announcement was greeted with enthusiasm by the medical and teaching professions and a great effort was made by all the medical colleges to plan these complexes with a 15-year program in mind. Mr. Chairman, planning takes a minimum of five years to carry out, plus another five, tentatively. And at the end of that time a further period of five years may even be required. So it may take 15 years to plan a medical complex and bring it to fruition. Obviously, if there is any hitch in the program the effect can be doubly detrimental.

Last November the government in an atmosphere of stringency decided that the period preceding reassessment of this project should be shortened and today it looks as though the program of grants to these medical complexes may be reviewed in two years time, at which point funds may be either increased or restricted. I urge the minister to try to project farther into the future in determining what these treatment and teaching complexes are to receive. At the present time there is a great deal of uncertainty as to what may be in store for everyone concerned at the end of two years.

So far as the medical colleges are concerned, I am told on high authority from a teacher in one of the universities that they are spending approximately 10 per cent on research though it is considered desirable to spend upwards of 30 per cent of available funds on this work. When funds for research are not available, medical colleges lose good men who tend to go to the United States where conditions are better and the tenure is longer. I therefore urge the minister to give those responsible for the teaching complexes an assurance as to what they may expect over the long term. If funds are not likely to be available, they will make plans accordingly.

We are about to embark on a medicare scheme which will require the services of many doctors and paramedical personnel. It seems to me that however we cut back in connection with medical care and activities, the research end should not suffer. In the long run, good research will bring about a reduction of the number of people involved in the actual care of patients or at least, for the level of care we shall need, fewer people will be required. I feel that the change now proposed in the system of reporting to the ministry is a sound one.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, medical research is a subject that has come to the fore today along with, I hope, the Science Council of Canada. Both matters are of extreme importance to Canada.

I am given to understand that because of conditions in Canada, particularly in our medical schools where inadequate funds for research are provided, many of our specialists and graduates with high standing are leaving Canada and going to other countries, particularly the United States, where they can undertake research. In addition, if research funds are not made available we may see more of our medical men leaving Canada to undertake research elsewhere. This has a great effect on the fundamental training of doctors in our universities. I am told that our best medical teachers in the universities want to do research work as well as teaching. In other words, they are not willing to vegetate in their chosen branch of the profession while training new doctors. In addition to teaching facilities they must have available research facilities which I am told are sadly lacking in Canada.

Some hon. members have already said that the budget for medical research this year has been increased by 10 per cent. It is estimated that it ought to be increased by 30 per cent if we are to keep pace with the tremendous growth in medical knowledge. That much money has not been promised and many medical researchers and specialists are worried because they may not be able to undertake research here and will have to leave Canada if they are to do so.

Bearing these factors in mind, may I draw Your Honour's attention to clause 56(2)(a) which says that the council is authorized to:

> —expend, for the purposes of this Part, any money appropriated by Parliament for the work of Council or received by the Council through the conduct of its operations;

Clearly, therefore, under this clause there is provision for the expenditure of money on medical research. The best way of helping our medical schools is by spending money on research facilities for teachers. I therefore ask the minister, what funds will be devoted to medical research under clause 56 and how and when these will be paid? It is necessary for the minister, since we are considering a new set-up for the Medical Research Council, to assure the medical profession and its teachers and researchers that the federal government, through the Medical Research Council or otherwise, will provide funds to allow teachers to undertake research within the medical schools. If the minister can give that kind of assurance, not only will he have reassured the members of the medical profession but he will have boosted the esteem in which the Medical Research Council will be held.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Chairman, I shall try to answer hon. members' questions as briefly as possible. I heartily endorse the remarks of hon. members about the Medical Research Council and Dr. Malcolm Brown. I think these people have done an excellent job and are to be commended.

I will resist the temptation to rebut some of the matters the hon. member for Simcoe North raised. His remarks seemed to apply more to medicare than to M.R.C. I shall be more than happy to face off on that question at some other time, either inside or outside the house. The hon. member referred to the health resources fund. We never hid our belief that it was necessary to limit expenditures under this fund. We regret that this had to be done since we know that limiting expenditures in this field caused some dislocation. The money allocated under the fund was to be spent over a 15-year period and, if certain applications for expenditures were approved, there was a danger that the total amount would be exhausted within a five-year period. But we do not intend, as I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North intimated, to stretch expenditures under the fund beyond the 15-year limit. As I say, we have had to control the fund to make sure it was not exhausted within five or six years. How long present limitations will apply I cannot say; I hope it will not be for too long.

The hon. members for Winnipeg North, Dauphin and Parry Sound-Muskoka, as well as some others, raised the same point fundamentally. They said there would be serious repercussions in this country if there was inadequate medical research in our medical schools and pointed out the demoralizing effect such a lack would have on our medical education institutions. The corollary to that was that some of our promising medical men might emigrate to the United States where, because of more adequate research facilities, they could expand their knowledge and competence. We realize all this and want to encourage medical research as much as possible.

I point out to hon. members that in the period 1960-61 we spent or allocated $2,307,000 for medical research. For 1963-64 this figure was increased to $5,100,000; for 1964-65 it was $6,935,000; for 1966-67 it was $12 million. If we jump two years and come to the period 1968-69 we see that the allocation had more than doubled to $26,943,000. As hon. members can see, there has been a tremendous increase in research allocations, which hardly indicates that this government is not interested in research. The reverse is true. The figures show that within the last couple of years we have given recommendations for increased allocations for medical research the priority they deserve.

In reply to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, I cannot say right now what assurances can be given for the forthcoming year. I can only ask that he take what comfort he can from the remarks I have already made with regard to the emphasis we are placing on this area.

With regard to the last point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North, we agreed there would be a limitation this year on the health resources fund of $37½ million. We wanted that applied across the board for this current year and perhaps in the next year. After that time there may be some alleviation of the over-all ceiling. I think that answers, in a very general way, many of the points raised. With regard to the comments made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North as to some of the serious dislocations that have been caused in terms of rejections by the Medical Research Council, we will look at those and see if anything can be done.

With those few remarks I wonder whether we could get on with the clauses pertaining to medical research.

Mr. McCleave: I have a question to ask the minister involving medical and scientific research. I believe that the minister met a delegation today representing blind people across Canada.

Mr. Munro: Yes, I did.

Mr. McCleave: I know they presented the minister with a variety of requests, but I would be out of order if I referred to them. I will content myself with asking the minister what special work his department is carrying out toward the rehabilitation of blind people.

Mr. Munro: I am pleased to answer these inquiries, Mr. Chairman. I really do not know what relevance this meeting has to the matter before us, the Medical Research Council. They did meet with me and were reminded of the assistance given to them in the past under the category of programs in the Blind Persons Act and how we hope to phase that out. In many provinces it is being phased out and being brought under the Canada Assistance Plan where the arbitrary limit is to be removed and assistance will be given on the basis of taking into account the variance in standards of living in those environments where there are high costs such as in our major metropolitan areas.

The delegation acknowledged that more assistance was being offered because of the Canada Assistance Plan. They felt that because of their unique type of disability and its seriousness compared with that of many others, who suffer from disability they should be treated in a way distinct from other disadvantaged persons. They talked in terms of blindness being almost a total disability. They suggested we could recognize this uniqueness by making a universal payment to blind persons of $75 a month in addition to all the other social assistance programs available to help them. I indicated that all the government could do at this stage was to take the matter under advisement and consideration. We received a brief and are prepared to give it consideration.

Mr. McCleave: I thank the minister for his answer. This is precisely what I would have asked if he had been here earlier. I thought I put it within the realm of what we are discussing. What scientific assistance through medical research is being made available to help the rehabilitation of blind people? Are any special steps being taken by his department in the direction of medical research for the rehabilitation of certain people with blind conditions?

Mr. Munro: I believe we have made available several health grants for this type of research to help rehabilitate blind people in order that they may lead more meaningful lives. In terms of specifics, I cannot give these to the hon. member at the moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the minister.

Would the proposed research council be truly representative of the Canadian people, and to what extent will the French Canadians be represented on it, particularly the French-speaking doctors?

[English]

Mr. Munro: If this answer would suffice for the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, there are many appointments to be made in the very near future. I know the chairman is very much aware of the importance of the representative nature of the council and is taking that into consideration, as I intend doing when the recommendations are made. In terms of participation on the Medical Research Council at the present time, I am looking at the list and I see there is representation from the University of Sherbrooke, Dr. Leclair, and also representation from Laval University. In quickly looking at the list it appears to me that of the 21 members on the council seven are from the province of Quebec and appear to be French speaking. As I say, when making future appointments we will take this into consideration.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 55 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall clause 56 carry?

On clause 56—Functions of council.

Mr. Munro: I have an amendment to move to clause 56, Mr. Chairman. It is really a correction of the French translation of clause 56(1)(a) so that it will correspond more accurately with the English. I therefore move:

That the French version of Bill C-173 be amended by striking out line 5 on page 22 thereof and substituting the following:

"—sciences de la santé, sauf les recherches"—

The Chairman: In order to conform with the practice, I suggest that the amendment be moved by Mr. McIlraith, seconded by Mr. Drury.

Mr. McIlraith: I so move.

• (4:30 p.m.)

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, when I rose previously I was going to ask whether the minister had an amendment which I had hoped might be along different lines. I realize that the wording of clause 56 differs in certain respects from the corresponding clause in Part VII having to do with the National Council of Welfare, but I wonder whether the minister has thought about the same point, namely, that in this case the council seems to be given authority to advise the minister only in respect of such matters relating to research as the minister may refer to the council for its consideration. I remind him that when we were on clause 53 we amended the provisions respecting the National Council of Welfare to give that council authority to put things on its agenda which it regarded as appropriate. Would it not be a good idea to make the same amendment to this clause?

Mr. Munro: I agree with the general observations of the hon. member, but I would point out that the clause dealing with the National Council on Welfare, prior to the amendment, did not have the provision that is found in paragraph (a) of clause 56(1). Paragraph (a) gives authority to the council to act in a very wide way on its own initiative. All paragraph (b) really does is give the minister power to ask for advice on matters upon which he may want advice.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is what I had in mind when I said I recognized the slight difference in wording. But if that is what the minister has in mind, that the two provisions are parallel, I am satisfied.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Clauses 57 to 69 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: We will now proceed to Part XI, Ferries, clause 95, page 40.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I thought we were going right on with Part IX, the Science Council of Canada.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think it was the agreement that we would proceed on to clause 70 under Part IX.

The Deputy Chairman: I am informed that that part of the bill was carried on March 13.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Which part?

The Deputy Chairman: Parts IX, and X, clauses 70 to 94.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I am sure there is some confusion. I was here through the whole of March 13.

The Deputy Chairman: We will try to do some deeper research and inform the hon. member later.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I point out that we are supposed to take a bill clause by clause in consecutive order unless there is some other arrangement, and I submit that no other arrangement was made with respect to Part IX. We did switch the order a bit after we finished the part on Supply and Services last Thursday. We went to the Royal Canadian Mint but we did not deal with the Science Council of Canada. We went from Supply and Services to the Mint. Then we came back to Consumer and Corporate Affairs. Then we had the National Health and Welfare section. That is what we did on Thursday, March 13.

The Deputy Chairman: I wish to apologize to hon. members, who are right on this point. As the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, we switched, and I was present when we switched to clause 71. We are now on Part IX, the Science Council of Canada, clause 70.

On clause 70—Establishment and constitution.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to ask the minister whether he intends to make any statement on this clause. If he wishes to answer questions at the end of the discussion that would be satisfactory.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, as it is the hope that we will complete the balance of the bill, other than the part dealing with regional development, by six o'clock, I do not want to get into the position of talking the bill out and therefore I will try to answer questions.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Chairman, the government, after nearly a year in office, has presented no clear statement of objectives and priorities for the nation. As a result public policy in all areas is haphazard and ad hoc. In short, it is completely inadequate. Nowhere is this process more evident than in the general area of public policy for science and technology.

At present there is tremendous disillusionment, especially in the scientific community, concerning the lack of government direction and co-ordination for fresh and new approaches in the development of science and technology in Canada. This stems from the following unpalatable facts. First of all, there was a series of cancellations in the scientific area, beginning with the cancellation of HARP, the McGill University high altitude research program. It was cancelled in 1966 without any adequate reasons being presented to the Canadian people. The aim of the project was related to an attempt to orbit satellites in space by using large cannon. The project received wide recognition for its simplicity as a scientific principle throughout the advanced world. Following its cancellation it was taken over by a number of American firms and financed by the United States government. At present it gives every indication of being a very successful scientific endeavour.

Second was the cancellation of the intense neutron generator program of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Given other priorities, including a greater emphasis on industrial applied research and development rather than basic research, this may have been the right decision. However, the point is that once again there are no publicly available reasons for justification of the decision. The only reason given for the cancellation of the ING program is that it is considered to be too expensive. When the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources announced cancellation of this program he referred to its relationship on the priority scale to the very many other demands on the national treasury. I ask, what scale of priorities? No one has told us. In fact there is no indication that the decision had any place in an over-all program of scientific priorities or that the money saved here would go toward some other project. Dr. W. G. Schneider, President of the National Research Council, has stated:

• (4:40 p.m.)

There may be sound reasons but, if so, the public has a right to know; I feel when decisions of this kind are made, a rationale should be given. If they are handled in this way it tends to destroy morale. Everyone will always wonder what's going to get the chop next.

The third cancellation was in respect of The Queen Elizabeth Observatory. This project was scrapped even though millions of dollars had been spent on it. Once again the government has refused to release its report regarding the reasons for that decision.

A fourth point is that there is a significant lack of funds required for research into urban problems in Canada. As H. W. Hignett, President of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation told the Senate special committee studying science policy; C.M.H.C. has a mere $10 million revolving fund for assistance in this area. Everyone who is involved in research knows that this is a mere pittance. Government programs for industrial-scientific research and development are completely inadequate.

Last week about this time I devoted a whole speech to this subject so I shall not go over the same ground again except to say it is a fact worth repeating that the federal government is spending over 50 per cent of the money devoted to research and development in the military sector. This is something about which we as Canadians should be deeply concerned. These things, plus additional factors such as the tremendous expansion in government oceanographic research announced in January and the successful satellite research program which is being conducted by the new Department of Communications, clearly reveal that we do not have a coherent, cogent, highly motivated technological and research program in this country.

Senator Lamontagne, hardly an enemy of the government and chairman of the Senate committee, stated that scientists running federal research projects have so little supervision by parliament that they constitute an almost autonomous republic of science. He went on to state that government sponsored scientific research has never been reviewed systematically and said that even cabinet to his knowledge paid very little attention to it except when it was appraising on rare occasions specific and major programs. Senator Lamontagne has discovered in his committee's investigation that there are at least 100 boards and committees comprising about 700 scientists dealing with government research and development. He said that for all practical purposes the supervision and direction of those activities are left to scientists acting in an administrative or advisory capacity. Decisions of social merit and human welfare cannot be left exclusively to scientists no matter how well motivated they may be as individuals.

After this very brief rundown of some unpalatable facts in respect of scientific development I should like to turn to the government's reorganization proposal. As the Glassco commission pointed out as long ago as 1958, there are basic contradictions and conflicts in the institutional environment regarding the determination of science policy in the government. The National Research Council should not be looked upon as the adviser to the government on scientific priorities since it is competing for the very same funds allocated in this area.

The Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research, whose purpose it was to determine priorities, has been completely inactive since it was first established in 1916. It has been estimated that it has met only a dozen times since 1916. The establishment of the Science Council and Science Secretariat in 1965 and 1966 to fill this role has clearly shown severe limitations. The secretariat was to serve two masters, the Privy Council office with advice on scientific matters to the Prime Minister and also the Science Council of Canada as its secretary. This conflict of interest was obvious to all except the government.

The new legislation in the bill before the house merely gives the Science Council the same status and independence as the Economic Council of Canada. In other words, it will now hire its own staff rather than share with the government the staff of the science Secretariat. Thus the council's report will no longer be examined by those who participate in its implementation. The purpose of the Science Council when it was established in 1966 was to offer advice on public policy with regard to science and technology and to examine the role of our scientific effort in relation to Canada's aspirations. However, the Science Council has found itself confronted with the same difficulties in the formulation of objectives as were experienced by the Economic Council of Canada. Goals were established without any view of the relative importance of each and thus, for example, space and water resources programs were given priority by the Science Council in its last annual report merely for the bad reason that detailed proposals for implementation of these programs existed at the time.

As Professor Lithwick of Carleton University pointed out in recent correspondence in Science Forum of April 1968, the evaluation of a particular scientific project must be compared on the basis of whether the results of this form of public investment are more valuable than the returns from an equivalent amount of funds invested elsewhere and not only in scientific research and development. I agree with Professor Lithwick that it is futile to argue as justification for particular projects that we have sufficient scientific manpower or that additional scientists and engineers will be employed, especially when he says that the housing industry is falling short of our minimum needs and our atmosphere and waterways are becoming dangerously polluted. In other words, a very serious consideration of the whole range of social and scientific priorities must be gone into. However, this is not the fault of the Science Council; it is the fault of the government in not assigning priorities in accordance with Canadian needs and aspirations and thereby giving no direction to the great potential role of science and technology in our country to meet these needs.

In recent months the government has considered setting up a ministry of science responsible for co-ordinating scientific research and development programs. At a press conference on August 14 the Prime Minister said that a science ministry was one possible mechanism for co-ordinating and checking on government research and development projects. I see the President of the Treasury Board smiling. He is well aware that the Prime Minister has changed his mind.

Following that one observation the Prime Minister stated he had some doubts about the desirability of asking the President of the Treasury Board to retain cabinet responsibility for science as chairman of the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research. The Prime Minister said that although the President of the Treasury Board knows a great deal about scientific research and was keenly interested, "as President of the Treasury Board he may have divided interests in the amount of money we would want to invest in that and perhaps I would not want to put him in a position of having to argue against himself". I agree.

However, the President of the Treasury Board in two recent speeches has completely ruled out any meaningful institutional changes in research and science policy. He has acknowledged that better co-ordination and direction of scientific effort is needed but feels that modifications in the existing machinery will correct the situation. These modifications include the change in the status of the Science Council and more activities by the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research. The conflict that the Prime Minister discussed in August apparently is no longer an important factor.

One thing is clear: either the government does not know what it is doing in science or it is indifferent to Canada's scientific needs. Immediate action is required on the question of decision-making processes in scientific and technological matters. Three years have passed since the Science Council was set up; five years have gone by since the Science Secretariat was established. The debate on science policy has been going on for nearly a decade with scientists and technologists becoming impatient for results. I think the President of the Treasury Board has encountered a little of this feeling, perhaps particularly during his recent speech in Toronto where he suffered some disillusionment.

The New Democratic Party in 1967 adopted a resolution that the present functions of the Science Council and the Science Secretariat be taken over by the establishment of a department of science and technology with its own cabinet minister. The new minister and his department would be responsible for science policy, ensuring that activities of other departments involved in science would fit into one national policy. This department's responsibility would basically be in respect of a broad point of view, organizing, co-ordinating and controlling all federal science activities, but the minister would have no other departmental operating responsibilities.

This proposal was made some two years ago. It seemed to me to be good then and it seems to me to be good now. This is something the government should have taken up. I should like to hear the President of the Treasury Board, when he gets on his feet in a few minutes, give us his thoughts on the subject. I should like him to indicate why the government did not go ahead with this very reasonable proposal.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few comments on this subject. A lot can be said about the problems of science policy in Canada. A lot has been said in the past about the failure of the government to develop a credible science policy. Much criticism has been directed at the government in respect of the cancellation of several scientific projects which had been started and whose cancellation was regrettable.

We should look forward and in doing so we must admit, first, that the present set-up for advising the cabinet on scientific matters has not worked out properly. I am not going to blame the President of the Treasury Board for this. I am sure he knows as well as anyone in the cabinet the intricacies of the science and research facilities within the government services. He knows very well, as do all of us, that research facilities are divided among the National Research Council, the Defence Research Board and the Science Council, formerly the Science Secretariat of the Privy Council. These services are also being performed by various other government agencies. I would not suggest that all these branches in various departments should be gathered up and pulled together into a new department. This would merely complicate an issue which at the present time is complicated enough.

In respect of pollution control the same situation applies. Many departments of the federal and provincial governments are involved. It would not be good policy to withdraw these activities from each of these departments and put them into one department. However, I do suggest that the scientific community, as far as I can gather, has the dreadful feeling that it is not getting through to the government. These people feel they do not have a minister or a spokesman with no other duty than to advise the cabinet on matters of science, research and technology, someone who would attempt to co-ordinate the efforts of these various groups. I know there is a real feeling of frustration in the scientific community. This was evidenced when these various projects were cancelled. In point of fact the scientific community does not have the feeling that an on-going science policy is being developed.

We are now dealing with the Science Council of Canada which is doing good work at the present time. The council has a number of very eminent members. If its chairman were within the cabinet structure it would be much more effective. I think the general feeling in the scientific community is that there is no voice in the cabinet to speak for it.

It has been said before that there is some conflict of interest. In other words, the President of the Treasury Board in reporting on scientific matters does have a problem in that he cannot argue with himself too much in certain areas because he might win and someone else would lose. To that extent there is a difficult situation. This problem is very much in the minds of various people in the research and scientific community.

The President of the Treasury Board has other very heavy duties. He is not directly responsible for many of the research establishments I have mentioned. They come under the jurisdiction of other ministers who have equal status in the cabinet. Therefore there is in the set-up a lack of direct communication with the cabinet by the scientific community in respect of the development of scientific policy.

The Science Council has published some very good papers. On the subjects they have selected they have carried out a great deal of research and the papers have been well prepared. But there is also the feeling that they are not quite dealing with priorities and are just doing patchwork. In the United States the president has an adviser on science. We in Canada do not have this type of organization, and an adviser to the Prime Minister would not be within the cabinet. An adviser to the cabinet would have to be within it if the scientific community is to feel it is being fairly treated.

I have set out the problems as I see them. I think there must be an answer. There ought to be within the cabinet structure a minister who has no responsibilities other than to report on science and act as scientific adviser. I believe that such a minister does not need a department of government; he needs a small and competent research staff of senior scientists who can advise him.

So far as the bill before us is concerned, the move to upgrade the Science Council and make it a corporation with a structure of its own is a good thing. We certainly would support the principle. However, I ask the minister whether he can straighten out some statements he made recently, or at least was reported to have made, that there was no need for co-ordination of on-going research programs in Canada. The minister said that a minister of science and technology was not required.

Unfortunately we hear these reports second-hand. We get them out of newspapers in many cases. Sometimes the minister provides us with the text of a speech he intends to make. I would like the minister when replying to advise us whether it is the policy of the government not to appoint at this time a minister of science and technology. Second, I ask the minister to advise us whether he did express the view that there was no need and no possibility of a co-ordinated science program which such a department could undertake. If the minister can give us the assurance that the government is seriously considering this question and the lack of a person within the cabinet who has no responsibilities other than to advise on science and technology, he will do a great deal to relieve the fears of many people in the scientific community.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I have been most interested to listen to the comments of the two members who have just spoken, the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. In relation to the amendments proposed in the bill relating to the Science Council and Science Secretariat, I am glad they both expressed approval of them. Therefore securing passage should present no difficulty.

I should like to deal with some observations made in relation to government science policy generally and the kind of institutions, the kind of structure, that might best operate to give the most effective, the most adequate response to scientific needs. I think one thing should be made clear. When the term "science" is used, and it has been used by these two gentlemen—this is particularly so in its use in the bill—it relates to the natural sciences and engineering, technology as it is called, rather than the social sciences or science as representing the accumulation of human knowledge for the betterment of mankind. When I use the term "science" it will be in relation to the natural sciences and technology.

One thing that perhaps should be borne in mind in relation to the current debate is the changing position of science, that is, the natural sciences and technology, and of scientists in North America today. There has been for some time now an inclination on the part of the North American public to regard science as likely to produce the answers to all our current problems and anything, therefore, done for, by or in the name of science is of itself good. There has arisen rather more recently a tendency, particularly in the United States and it is beginning to show in Canada, to question the value of research as such and to ask what are the results of research.

[Mr. Aiken.]

Merely to proclaim that the purpose of the activity is research in itself unrelated to our current needs, our current functions, or indeed our longer-range objectives, is not as accurate as it was a few years ago.

• (5:10 p.m.)

According to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka, the scientists feel that they are not getting through to the government. I suppose this is a manifestation of a lack of support in respect of these questions that are being asked as to the value and relevance of some research that is being done and in particular of the unwillingness of the government and of the public to support all scientific research, regardless of its class, kind, relevance or quality, merely because it is research. This questioning is understandable. I myself think it is a good thing and am very much encouraged by the growing public interest that is being shown in science and technology, not only by scientists themselves who have always had it but by a large spectrum of both the industrial and academic public.

What are our needs? These needs, put into a time framework in terms of science and technology, are both long range and short range, or immediate. The analysis of scientific objectives over the long range and the determination of long range priorities in respect of which we would not expect immediate results is not an easy task for the operating element of the government to undertake. Governments by their very nature are preoccupied, unless they are underworked, with dealing with day to day problems that are certainly not much longer than medium range, and there never seems to be adequate time for reflection and consideration of the longer range perspectives and objectives and the contemplative consideration of how best they can be met and how they fit into a total framework. This, then, was one of the reasons for establishing the Science Council of Canada which was, rather like the Economic Council of Canada, to do in the scientific and technological field what the Economic Council was to do in the economic field for the country, namely, to propound longer-range objectives and the priorities which should be attached to these and to suggest a long-term means of meeting them.

This is obviously a task which cannot be accomplished in a week. If it were as easy as that, the government would long ago have undertaken it itself within its own machinery.

But it is a difficult task that takes time and, more important, one should recognize that once this longer-range framework is established, immediate and specific achievement of it is unlikely. Since by definition it is long range, one cannot expect immediate results from the government or, indeed, immediate action on the part of the government or of the scientific community. If one accepts then that the function of the Science Council is to devise for Canada a framework over the long term into which our scientific endeavours, activities and policies should coherently fit, then I think we will have gone quite a long way to resolving some of the doubts that now exist.

As I have indicated, the perspective which principally engages the government's attention is very much shorter range than that which should be envisaged by the Science Council. I should add parenthetically that the objective in relation to the Science Council is not to have an organ which merely devises long-range policies for the federal government but to have a body which will enunciate long-range objectives in the science field for the whole of Canada, and this includes not only the federal government but provincial governments, the academic community, the industrial community, and anyone else who may be interested. So the Science Council would be expected to talk not merely to the federal government but to Canada, and it does this through the medium of its published reports of which the fourth, I remind hon. members, is modestly described as aiming toward a science policy. The Science Council does not pretend that in its short existence it has been able to formulate and enunciate all the long-range objectives, but it has made some progress in this direction, so that this in effect is a progress report.

So much then for the long-term framework. The federal government, in respect of scientific and technological research activities, is concerned with a rather shorter period. Science, in the sense that I use the word, is a technique which is useful not in itself but as a means of accomplishing in an efficient and orderly way the human objectives that we all seek to reach. To this end everyone who is in charge of an operation of the government, no matter what his job or his station, should envisage the use of science and of scientific research in order to carry out his job more effectively. This means then that science cannot be separated from the day to day operations of the government departments or agencies; it must be an integral part of each and every one of them, and to the extent that the federal government is successful in integrating this scientific approach into the operations of government agencies it has been successful in its scientific policy.

As the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka pointed out, it would be a denial of this principle to try to withdraw and segregate under one head all scientific research within the government. I heartily agree with the suggestion that these are now and must continue to be integral with the operations of all government departments. There are, however, some agencies which are devoted to scientific research as such, including applied research, and they have no other mission. We do not have many of these in the federal government, I am glad to say. Most of the research activities are an important appendage and a useful instrument in carrying out an objective or a mission of government agencies or departments. The large research effort of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources is not made for research itself but to make that department more effective and more able to carry out its basic mission.

But the National Research Council is an exception. Its function is to carry out fundamental research and applied research in a variety of fields which are perhaps not immediately and directly related to government departmental missions. By statute it reports to parliament through the minister appointed as chairman of the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research. So that a number of scientific research activities are carried out in the government, and the problem raised by both the hon. members who spoke is how these should be co-ordinated. One suggestion was that there should be a minister charged with such co-ordination who would have no other activity than this co-ordination. It was suggested that such a minister should be a senior minister, and I take it that that particular adjective is used by the proponents of this scheme in the sense that it conveys a notion of a person with major influence as distinct from one heavy with years and honours but with little else.

Mr. Aiken: I was not referring to the present minister.

Mr. Drury: The problem of co-ordination is a very real one and I think that perhaps the mechanism of co-ordination, at least in embryo, now exists. The problem of relating science and research to departmental missions is a problem of the department. The co-ordination of departments is carried out by the cabinet and, as the Prime Minister has indicated, the modus operandi of the cabinet was made considerably more effective and efficient by assigning to functional committees the consideration in depth of the co-ordination of specific problems.

• (5:20 p.m.)

One of these committees which has been considerably more active recently than in the past is the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research. I suppose it met more often last summer than it had in the previous year or so.

An hon. Member: That could be three times.

Mr. Drury: Well, three times zero is infinity.

The co-ordination of government policies generally is achieved through a structure of cabinet committees reporting to cabinet, the final co-ordinating body. In the field of scientific research and technology there is a committee now in existence and discharging its functions. It has a chairman who in addition to being the chairman of that cabinet committee is responsible to parliament for the National Research Council. At the present time he is also President of the Treasury Board, and it will be recollected that the Glassco commission included in its recommendations, first, the formation of a science council—this has been done—and, second, the appointment of the President of the Treasury Board to be the chairman of that committee. The role of ministerial co-ordinator of science and technology derives from the office of chairman of that committee as the minister responsible for the National Research Council.

I do not argue that the ideal chairman of that committee is the President of the Treasury Board, for the reasons outlined today, but I do say that in the structure of the Privy Council committee on scientific and industrial research as a scientific functional committee of cabinet, with a chairman, one has co-ordinating machinery for the short and medium-term scientific policies of the federal government. I say specifically to the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka that at no time did I express the opinion that there was no need for the co-ordination of on-going programs. Such co-ordination is essential. What I did say was that no need exists for the setting up of another organization to do this work. We already have one for the purpose in the Privy Council committee.

One of its shortcomings in earlier years was the lack of an adequate secretariat. This was one of the reasons for organizing the science secretariat; it was to provide a central body composed of men of considerable scientific talent to advise both this committee and the chairman on scientific matters coming within the co-ordinating functions of the committee.

One should bear in mind that the basic responsibility for scientific research rests with the operating departments, and the apparatus set up should be employed by them as an essential tool in the accomplishment of their main functions. Co-ordination of all this effort is achieved by means of a cabinet committee recently made active. This committee is served by a competent science secretariat which as a consequence of this amendment will be able to devote its entire energies to serving this purpose rather than trying to serve the Science Council on the basis of terms of reference much longer in time. So I think the basic machinery is sufficient—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Continue.

Mr. Drury: I thank the committee for its indulgence. I hope I shall not get into the position of talking out the bill.

Some hon. Members: Filibuster.

Mr. Drury: I shall end in a moment. I do feel that in spite of the cancellation of the HARP project, in spite of the deferment of a highly imaginative project known as ING—the intense neutron generator—in spite of the conclusion drawn that the cost-benefit results of the Queen Elizabeth telescope project would not justify the large expense involved, Canada has been very successful indeed in the field of the natural sciences. I need only draw attention to such federal projects as the Alouette and the Isis, substantial contributions in the field of high and advanced technology, or to the considerable increases made in recent years in expenditures upon research and development within manufacturing industries. I might mention also the substantially increased contribution by the federal government toward research within the universities on which the hon. member commented. All these programs are being increased in the current year, one in which a need for restraint in order to demonstrate fiscal responsibility has to be observed.

The rate of increase in funds for these programs has not been as great as in previous years but, still, there is an increase, and it is my belief that these increases must continue. I trust we can pass into a period when the possibilities of federal assistance will be greater than they are today. Finally, I hope we shall have no difficulty in finishing the bill as a consequence of my speech.

Mr. Schreyer: I have a brief question to put to the minister. My curiosity has been aroused by the provisions of new section 9. I should like to ask why it was considered important enough to propose an amendment to section 9 of the existing Science Council of Canada Act removing from the council discretion as to where it should meet. I notice it is still left to the council's judgment to decide how often it shall meet. Why should it be laid down that it should meet only in one place, that is to say, the capital region? Under the old act it could meet wherever it chose.

Mr. Drury: In default of any specified place of meeting being laid down the council can meet wherever it wishes. The reference to the locus is necessary for legal purposes; the head office is all that is specified as being in the national capital area.

Clause agreed to.

• (5:30 p.m.)

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now move to part XI of the bill on page 40. Shall clause 95 carry?

On clause 95—Commission.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, if the minister wishes to speak I am prepared to yield the floor to him.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I shall ask leave to move an amendment to make a correction only in the French version of the bill.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the subject of ferries and I regret that the Minister of Transport is not in the house to hear me. He may not regard this amendment as a major piece of legislation, and I suppose it is not. Yet there have been altogether too many instances where the minister has not been present to discuss matters relating to transport or housing. That is unfortunate. I wanted to hear him make a statement about ferries and transportation questions that relate to Prince Edward Island. I hasten to add that I will not talk about the causeway. Indeed, since only 26 minutes are left before the supper adjournment I have too little time to put even the basic case before the committee, let alone develop any arguments to show how the matter of the causeway has been completely mishandled. It was all very well for the Prime Minister to backpeddle and say the causeway would not be built.

Very little has been said about transportation difficulties besetting the people of Prince Edward Island and still less about increases in ferry rates. There was a rumour two or three years ago when Mr. Pickersgill was in command that our ferry rates would be increased. The actual increase in respect of vehicles, was in the order of 50 per cent. We know that this is a period of inflation and rising costs. Nevertheless, the people of Prince Edward Island were justifiably upset when the increase of 50 per cent was introduced two years ago. Ferry rates were increased despite the assurance of the then minister of transport and the then government, represented by two ministers in the chamber this afternoon, that responsible authorities—presumably that was the Canadian Transport Commission—would hold a full series of hearings to determine the effect of the increase before the increase was introduced. That assurance was given on many occasions. Of course there were never any hearings and the rates were increased through the mechanism of doing away with the return ferry rate which had been in existence for many years. As a result the people of Prince Edward Island had to bear increased costs. We are told now that there is to be a further increase in rates of about 50 per cent. The total increase will then be 100 per cent of the old rates. And all this has taken place within the last two or three years.

We talk about responsible action to be taken by government departments. When one considers what has happened to Prince Edward Island ferry rates one must be shocked. I find it particularly shocking for the Minister of Transport not to have the decency to be present in the house this afternoon and discuss this matter. Considering the decision not to continue with construction of the causeway project, why has the minister agreed to these ferry rate increases? This is a particular affront to the people of Prince Edward Island. When we are all supposed to be concerned about maintaining good relations between the provinces and the federal authority, this kind of cavalier handling of a basic question related to the economic and social future of this province is really contemptible.

There is little use in my elaborating on this question this afternoon, but I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that the people of Prince Edward Island are profoundly disturbed that this government and the Minister of Transport should, after having cancelled the causeway project, go full speed ahead with an increase in ferry rates that will come into effect shortly for the Northumberland ferry service. The private company operating the other ferry service presumably was not consulted and no doubt it too will revise its rates upward. The new rate structure will hurt the economy of the province and will dampen any optimism our people may have generated for the government's recently announced plan to develop the island. In heaven's name, what is the sense of attempting on the one hand to raise the living standards of the people of Prince Edward Island while on the other hand attacking this vital transportation link with the mainland?

I will speak no more about the matter. I trust that although the Minister of Transport is not here this afternoon he will read my remarks and respond to them in a responsible manner.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be in a vein different from those of the hon. member who just sat down. I want to do something very unusual. I wish to compliment the government and Canadian Pacific Railway for the new ferry it is planned to construct for the service between Saint John, New Brunswick, and Digby, Nova Scotia. I therefore disassociate myself from the remarks of the hon. member who just spoke. I do not mean that I disagree with him; we, too, have many complaints. It is said that it is bad politically to compliment the government in the house, particularly when you are in the opposition. But I say for the record, so that I will not be misunderstood, that the plans the railway company and the government have made to construct a large new ferry for the service between Saint John and Digby are commendable. We have waited a long time for this new ferry. I could take hours in criticizing the government for its delay. At any rate, the ferry will be large and it is what we need. I am glad that Canadian Pacific have agreed to construct the vessel in Canada, and particularly in the Saint John shipyards. I want that clearly understood and on the record.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

I hasten to add that we have many complaints about the port of Saint John and other transportation matters related to Canadian Pacific Railway. But for the record may I say we appreciate the fact that finally we are getting this new ferry for the service between New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, may I move an amendment to correct an accidental omission or variation in the French version of the bill only.

[Translation]

I move that the French version of Bill C-173 be amended by striking out lines 21 and 22, on page 40 of the said bill, and substituting the following:

On clause 100—Acts to be administered by Minister of Communications.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I would like to move an amendment to subclause 1, Mr. Chairman, to add "the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General or the Deputy Postmaster General" because in the period July 12, 1968 to April, 1969 the acts mentioned in Part II of Schedule A were under the jurisdiction of the Postmaster General and not the minister of communications. I therefore move:

That Bill C-173 be amended by striking out lines 9 and 10 on page 45 thereof and substituting the following:

"Minister of Public Works, the Deputy Minister of Public Works, the Post Office Department, the Postmaster General or the Deputy Postmaster General is mentioned or"

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): In clause 100(2) I would like to move an amendment for a similar reason as in clause 100(1). I move:

That Bill C-173 be amended by striking out lines 26 and 27 on page 45 thereof and substituting the following:

"Minister of Transport, the Postmaster General, the Deputy Postmaster General or any other officer of either the Department of Transport or the Post Office Department in relation".

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, would the minister explain to us the effect of this amendment and why it is necessary?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, when the bill was drafted provision was made for a take-over of functions of various departments by the to-be minister of communications. The fact of the matter is that in the past few months these functions have been exercised by the Postmaster General in order to effect a continuity between the operations which have been carried out by the Postmaster General in his capacity as the to-be minister of communications.

Mr. Aiken: The minister will really have two capacities and the two departments have to be included.

Mr. Drury: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Clause 101 agreed to.

On clause 102—Acts to be administered by Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Mr. Bell: I notice in glancing at clause 102 that it deals with the lapsing of the appropriations associated with the Atlantic Development Board. I further notice, and I hope the minister will correct me if I am wrong, that payments may only be made during the 30 days immediately following the 31st March of this year. If this is true it leads me to make the assertion we have been continually making in the house that we are very disappointed there is no method of continuing payments of this nature during the period of transformation from the Atlantic Development Board to the new legislation. I assume this is correct.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps the hon. member might raise this matter with the to-be Minister of Regional Economic Expansion when this department is discussed tomorrow.

Mr. Bell: I thank the minister for his invitation. I assume from the glee with which he offers it that he is in agreement with me. He probably does not mind my saying that we are still starving to death in the maritimes as far as development funds are concerned and the situation is going to be worse unless changes are made by the to-be minister.

Mr. McCleave: I rise on a point of order. I suggest it would be appropriate to stand this clause until we have passed the clauses dealing with setting up the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. If there are amendments tomorrow it would be necessary to reopen this clause in order to amend it. I think it is common sense to stand it until then.

Mr. Drury: It is agreeable that clause 102 be stood until the clauses relating to regional economic expansion are dealt with.

Clause stands.

Clauses 103 and 104 agreed to.

On clause 105—Amendments and repeals.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I make the same request with regard to this clause for the same reason. I do not anticipate there will be any difficulty, but there may be amendments.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, we have some amendments to make to the schedules. In order to meet the hon. gentleman's request in relation to the debate tomorrow, I suggest that clause 102 and Schedule A, Part IV, be stood. These are the references?

Mr. McCleave: Yes.

Mr. Drury: And that under Schedule B the repeal of the Atlantic Development Board Act be stood, the Forestry Development and Research Act be stood and the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act be stood. Possibly we might proceed with the balance.

• (5:50 p.m.)

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Chairman, I followed as the minister listed and I think his list is comprehensive. I think he has made an agreeable request.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clauses 105 and 106 stand?

Mr. Drury: Could we not carry clauses 105 and 106, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. McCleave: Yes, I think we can, Mr. Chairman, but with the reservations that the minister himself has listed and which will be on the record. I think we are agreeable on this side to carrying everything else.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that is the sensible thing to do, to carry clauses 105 and 106. But it seems to me there is going to be some difficulty in trying to carry and stand different parts of the schedules. Perhaps the schedules could stand, it being our understanding that the only reason they stand is in case anything flows from the discussion tomorrow, and I do not mind having that on the record.

Mr. Drury: If the discussion we have this evening will dispose of the schedules, apart from regional economic expansion, we will not spend long on that discussion, but we would like to propose some minor amendments to Schedule B.

Mr. McCleave: I think we can give the undertaking that debate will not be revived outside this particular area and dealing with regional economic expansion.

On Schedule B—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): I have a few amendments to present on Schedule B, Mr. Chairman. I move, seconded by Mr. Drury:

That Bill C-173 be amended by striking out paragraphs 1 and 2 opposite the reference to the Canada Dairy Products Act in Schedule B on pages 53 and 54 and substituting the following:

"1. Paragraphs 2(c) and 2(d) are repealed and the following substituted therefor:

"(c) "grader" means a person designated as a grader pursuant to section 7;

(d) "inspector" means a person designated as an inspector pursuant to section 7;"

2. Subsections 7 (1) and (2) are repealed and the following substituted therefor;

"7. (1) The Minister may designate any person as an analyst or a grader and the Minister or the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs may designate any person as an inspector for the purposes of this act."

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have some doubts about this but I guess we had better let it carry.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Schedule B as amended stands with the understanding we have already arrived at.

The Deputy Chairman: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bell: With respect to all these sections that are being stood I hope that Hansard will record the optimism that the minister and some members from some of the wealthier regions of Canada have that there will be no amendments tomorrow in the regional development debate.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, amendments can have two results, and I am sure the hon. gentleman is not envisaging the kind of amendment which would make him unhappy.

Mr. Bell: You cannot take nothing from nothing.

Mr. Drury: I think we have concluded about all we can do on this bill today, Mr. Chairman, and I would suggest that we might report progress.

Progress reported.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I have the honour to inform the house that a message has been received from the Senate informing this house that the Senate have pased Bill S-30, an act respecting The Perth Mutual Fire Insurance Company, to which the concurrence of this house is desired, and also a message informing this house that the Senate have passed Bill C-154, an act to prevent the introduction or spreading of pests injurious to plants, with an amendment, to which the concurrence of this house is desired.

It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair to resume at eight o'clock this evening, in order to allow the house to study a motion which will be presented by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas), in accordance with standing order 26.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER S-O 26

NATIONAL DEFENCE

FIRING OF A.B.M. WARHEADS OVER CANADIAN TERRITORY—MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER STANDING ORDER 26

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. Pursuant to Standing Order 26 Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands) seconded by Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moves that the house do now adjourn.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, normally one would express regret at bringing members back on a Wednesday night, which is the only evening they have off all week. However, I have no apology to make for asking the house to debate a matter which I think is the most important problem of our age. Certainly, nothing is so important as the survival of the human race.

This is the first time in the history of mankind that man has had the power to commit social suicide. There have been countless wars throughout history. These wars have involved a few thousand, a few hundred thousand or even a few million people; and cities or even entire countries have been devastated. But for the first time in man's long evolution, he now has the power to destroy not only himself but all forms of life. Therefore, nothing can be more important than that we, as members of this house, should concern ourselves about any event which might lead to an escalation of nuclear arms and to a proliferation of nuclear missiles.

This matter came to a head last Friday, March 14, when President Nixon of the United States announced that his administration had decided to proceed with an A.B.M. system known as the Safeguard system. It should be recalled that the whole question of anti-ballistic missiles has been discussed for a long period of time. Many opinions have been expressed for and against in many parts of the world, including the United States. Some people in the United States Senate and the United States Congress have spoken out against the establishment of an A.B.M. system. Sometimes when one expresses some concern about this matter one is accused of being anti-American, unpatriotic or pro-Soviet Union. The fact of the matter is there are a great many patriotic United States citizens who today are questioning very seriously, and criticizing very vigorously, the President's decision with regard to an A.B.M. System.

I notice that the New York Times, in an editorial of Monday, March 17 says this:

> For all the surface persuasiveness of the President's assurances that he seeks to follow the course of moderation, the rationale on which he bases his decision provides fresh evidence that the arms race feeds on itself in a cycle that can never stop short of world annihilation.

The editor goes on to point out that while the President has based his decision on some 67 A.B.M.'s stationed around Moscow, the Pentagon has long recognized that these are already obsolete and that the planned American response involves more than 700 anti-missile missiles and, through the use of MIRV multiple warheads, a probable fivefold increase in offensive delivery vehicles from 1,700 to more than 8,000.

So, many thoughtful people are raising honest questions about this whole matter. Let me very briefly, in my limited time, try to outline the story of the investigations and discussions that have gone on with regard to A.B.M.'s. The first proposal was for a complete A.B.M. system with Nike-X missiles. That was opposed by former defence secretary Robert McNamara. He appeared before the Senate Armed Services and Defence Appropriations Committee on January 26, 1967, and presented a 209 page brief. I shall not take the time of the house to quote from the brief extensively but I believe I could paraphrase his submission by saying that he objected to the proposal, first on the ground that it would not provide real security and that the United States would be spending large sums of money for something which in the end would provide it with little or no security. He argued that the United States security lay in its offensive capacity and its four to one ratio in respect of intercontinental ballistic missiles vis-à-vis the Soviet Union and its possession of the nuclear submarine armed with Polaris missiles.

His second objection before the Senate committee was that the construction of an extensive A.B.M. system could quite easily be the step that would trigger further escalation in the nuclear arms race. As hon. members know, Mr. McNamara, under pressure from the powerful military complex in the United States, finally agreed to what was known as this "thin line system" missile system. This was for use for defence against Mainland China only and not directed at the Soviet Union. Continued pressure from the chiefs of staff and from the industries concerned resulted in the acquiescence and the announcement by President Johnson of what became known as the Sentinel system. This was to surround some of the major cities in the United States with A.B.M. bases. There was so much of an uproar in some of the cities in the United States that in the United States Congress that President Johnson decided to leave this matter in abeyance and dump it into the lap of the incoming president.

President Nixon has for some time been considering what his administration would do about the construction of the A.B.M. system. Last Friday he made an announcement that they were going to construct what he calls a Safeguard system which will not surround major centres of population but will be designed to protect the 11 Minuteman bases situated centrally throughout the United States.

In his statement the president was very careful to say that this decision on his part was not provocative and not meant to lead to nuclear escalation. I cannot do better than quote what was said in the Montreal Star on Monday, March 17 by James Eayrs, who is a well known author and acknowledged authority in respect of foreign affairs. In answering the president's statement that this A.B.M. system would confer protection on the American people Mr. Eayrs said:

> It is likely to confer nothing of the sort. It offers protection only if the Soviet Union stands pat in the face of an addition to American power. Everything known about the dynamics of the arm's race, about the reflexes of its Russian contestants, suggests that the Soviet Union will not stand pat. Mr. Nixon's assurances that "the program is not provocative," that "the Soviet retaliation be retaliatory capability is not affected by our decision," are either naïve or dishonest.

Someone may well ask, what business is it of Canada's what the United States does. I suggest that it is our business. It is our business because any action which could lead to a nuclear holocaust would have terrible consequences for the people of Canada. This was underlined this week by the Canadian chief disarmament negotiator in Geneva, Mr. George Ignatieff, who was formerly our representative at the United Nations, and is now stationed at Geneva. Mr. Ignatieff said:

> —Canada is placed in the most dangerous position of any country by the galloping arm's race between the United States and the Soviet Union. If this race gets out of hand, it could be catastrophic for Canada which lies between the nuclear giants.

In respect of something which is of so great importance to Canada, it seems to me passing strange that the Canadian government should have had no intimation from the United States, and that there should have been no consultation. There can be no doubt about that. Hansard of March 17 at page 6684 records the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) as having said in answer to the question I asked:

No, Mr. Speaker. We were notified of the decision, but there was no consultation in the sense that we might have been in a position to change the decision.

At page 6689 of Hansard for the same day, there is recorded a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the minister's answer. The hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked for similar information in these words:

—will the minister say when he . . . first received notification of the decision by the United States in this regard?

The Secretary of State for External Affairs replied:

Mr. Speaker, we were told of the decision immediately before it was announced.

I must say that many Canadians will feel as I do, that we who are neighbours and friends of the United States, with 4,000 or 5,000 miles of undefended border, have a right to better treatment than that. Canada is not a banana republic. We want to be friends and neighbours but not subservient.

Mr. Sharp: And allies.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We are allies and the minister knows it. We are allies in NORAD and in NATO.

Mr. Sharp: Do you support these things?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I support them and I hope the minister will tell us his view when he gets up to speak.

Mr. Sharp: Do you support them?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I support them, yes. I suggest that we are allies and I would ask the minister when he gets up, and I hope he will, to tell us whether he is prepared to have Canadians be merely subordinates so that when the United States makes decisions it can do so without any consultation or negotiation as to whether they should be allowed to use our air space.

Mr. Sharp: I gather the hon. member is in favour of NORAD and NATO, is he?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Surely we have the right to be concerned about this decision by the United States in view of the fact Canadian territory is involved. As I said before, the missile bases are proposed to protect the Minuteman bases. Some of these will be close to the Canadian border. They will be protected by Spartan missiles with a range of not more than 400 miles. Certainly, all indications are that any interception will be planned over Canadian territory. I agree that the primary concern is not just where the anti-missiles will intercept these missiles. The primary concern is to prevent the escalation of nuclear armament and a nuclear war.

Surely, when the government deliberately designs an A.B.M. system for its own defence that is predicated on the interception of ballistic missiles over a neighbour's territory, the very least it could do is consult with the neighbour prior to making the decision.

An hon. Member: Who is going to fire those missiles?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Have they consulted with the Canadian government? We asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether there have been any discussions in respect of permission or approval for United States missiles to be fired over Canadian territory. All the minister has said is that discussions have been going on for years. That is not the question. The question is, have there been discussions with respect to this particular Safeguard A.B.M. system? The Secretary of State for External Affairs quoted the joint communiqué from the United States Defence Department and the State Department in these words:

• (8:20 p.m.)

We discuss matters such as these with the Canadians on a continuing basis. A number of aerospace matters pertaining to A.B.M. are under discussion—

I underline these words.

—are under discussion with the Canadians. Since these matters are being discussed, it would not be appropriate to deal in specifics at this time.

I think the minister has to tell us whether discussions are going on at the present time regarding this proposed Safeguard A.B.M. system.

Mr. Sharp: Do you want me to?

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I would hope that the minister, instead of interrupting, would give us some information in this respect, because he has been so evasive; he has waffled. This afternoon he tried to mislead the house when he said that this discussion has been going on for years. The discussion of the A.B.M. Safeguard system has not been going on for years. He said the other day they had been consulted. When did discussions start on this Safeguard A.B.M. system? Are they going on now? What decision has the government made with respect thereto?

Some years ago the Prime Minister was a member of a group which wrote an article, a translation of which appeared in the May issue of the Canadian Forum. The article was entitled "An Appeal for Realism in Politics". This was in 1964.

An hon. Member: When did you write yours?

Another hon. Member: Regina.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The article of which the Prime Minister was one of the authors—

An hon. Member: You were the author of the Regina manifesto. That was many years ago.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): —reads in part:

> As regards national defence, there are two points that seem to require urgent attention. First, that our government seems incapable of defining a clear and coherent national defence policy is alarming. Second, the lack of information about defence matters released to the public is very worrying and could prove to be a serious setback to democracy in our country.

That is certainly true; we have not had very much information and we certainly have had no clear statement on government policy. The Prime Minister yesterday, as reported at page 6741 of Hansard, said:

> —I repeat now, that any danger of escalation is something which we would be very anxious to discuss, and if there is evidence of escalation then we would be ready to indicate our disapproval of such escalation.

A.B.M. systems have been discussed for years, and the Prime Minister has not yet made up his mind whether there is any evidence of escalation. This matter has been discussed in the United States Congress, in many parts of the world and before the disarmament committee, but the government has not yet decided whether there is any evidence that this will cause escalation. The government has not yet even decided what to do about its Bomarc missile bases. In 1963 the Prime Minister wrote an article of which I am sure he has been reminded many times. The article appeared in Cité Libre of April 1963. In it the Prime Minister castigated his predecessor for agreeing to accept nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. He said that his present colleagues had made this decision in order to get into office and that they hurried into office with all the elegance of animals heading for the trough.

Where are the nuclear, Bomarc missiles now? They are still at Macaza, Quebec, and North Bay, Ontario; still under United States control. In 1965, the Right Hon. L. B. Pearson told this house and the Canadian people in the election campaign of that year, that if elected his government would negotiate us out of Bomarc nuclear missiles. But they are still here. Is this a clearcut policy? When the Secretary of State for External Affairs rises, I hope he will tell us whether discussions are now going on with respect to the request of the United States for approval to fire anti-ballistic missile warheads over Canadian territory. If so, when did they start, and what answer is being given?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member may only continue with the unanimous consent of the house. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but apparently there is no unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Oh, these nuts. Come on!

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands continue.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I thank the house for its indulgence, Mr. Speaker, and I shall take only a few more minutes. I am sure that members in all parts of the house, and Canadians generally, will be pleased that the right hon. Prime Minister is going to Washington next week. I hope the Prime Minister will tell the President of the United States that we in this house, and the people of this country, are concerned about the decision he has taken, a decision which Mr. James Eayrs in the article to which I referred earlier called "black Friday".

I hope he will tell the President of the United States that we feel justified in being concerned because of our geographical position and our long association with the United States. As neighbours and friends of the United States we feel we might have been given an opportunity to express our opinion. I hope the Prime Minister will tell the President of the United States that we believe there is a serious danger that this action, without providing any amount of security for the American people or ourselves, could trigger a very serious nuclear arms race.

I am sure the Prime Minister realizes that this is one of the most important missions he has ever undertaken. I am sure he realizes that he will go to Washington with the hopes and aspirations of the Canadian people on his shoulders, with the hopes of all humanity who yearn for peace. We hope he will succeed in getting reconsideration of this matter, and that there will be agreement for consultation in the future before action is taken which could affect Canada's safety and welfare.

If the Prime Minister is able to accomplish that, I tell him he will have the gratitude and indebtedness of people in all parts of this country. However, if he does not speak out for Canada and take an independent stand, which I think he is capable of doing, this is a matter which will be on his conscience for a long time.

• (8:30 p.m.)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that seldom does it happen that the leader of a government can say he welcomes debate under this standing order. In this particular case however I say very sincerely that I do welcome debate. This is a most urgent and difficult matter, and before I go to see the President of the United States I am anxious to hear the views of the leaders of the opposition parties on this important subject. I say this because I realize that we are discussing here one aspect of a problem which involves the fate of all mankind. I know it is necessary that we, as the government of Canada must speak about the protection of Canadians, about the protection of our cities, and about the protection we believe our nation deserves. I know, too, that as the government, we must also ensure that the international laws which apply to our air space are respected.

Nevertheless when I answered questions in the house on this subject the other day I said very frankly that in a real sense these were secondary concerns of ours, and I will explain why this is so. We believe that this whole matter is not one in which only Canadians are involved. I echo what the leader of the New Democratic Party said when I say that we believe that this whole matter is one which involves the fate of humanity. It is for this reason that we on this side of the house take the position that before sitting down to bargain with the United States on where the system should be located, on whether they have considered where the fallout would occur, whether or not it would be on Canadian cities, we want to remain free to say that we condemn this system entirely. We want to be free to disapprove of it, which we would not be if we said to them: "Please set it down here or there and please make sure that you do not destroy us in the process of protecting yourselves".

This is the reason that I, and the government take this stand. When I do speak to the President I will not be in the position of asking for a little more protection for Canadians but rather will be able to put questions to him about whether his decision constitutes an escalation and an increase of the danger of nuclear warfare or whether it is merely an operation which adds to the stability of the deterrent system.

Some years ago Canadians did not have such a difficult decision to make. Other countries in history have lived for years in the fear of destruction, although perhaps not nuclear destruction. Wars in other lands very often constituted an imminent danger of destruction to many nations. For us in Canada however, it is the first time that we have been faced with such a problem. It is only four and a half decades ago that Senator Dandurand was able to say to the League of Nations that we in Canada "live in a fireproof house, far from inflammatory materials".

This is no longer the case. Our house is not fireproof and, as we know, inflammatory materials are no longer very far from it. Science has made us all neighbours in this world. The progress of science and technology is such that one nation cannot hope to save itself alone. Talented writers have used various expressions to express this result. Mr. McLuhan speaks about the "global village", and he is right; we are truly living in a global village. Barbara Ward talks about a "Spaceship Earth". I suggest these expressions convey, in a true sense, the feeling of solidarity that we as Canadians have with all nations on this earth.

[Translation]

Consequently, the Canadian government is as concerned about this subject as the members of the opposition and all Canadians.

I repeat that we wish to ensure the security of Canadians and especially that decisions that might affect the future of humanity are not taken without our participation.

I think the debate taking place this evening is intended to determine a policy which will ensure the security of humanity, including that of Canadians.

[English]

How we manifest our concern for humanity, so as to make our desire for survival into an effective policy, is the subject of this debate tonight. There are a few general principles which guide this government in establishing such a policy. The first refers to the stability of the deterrent system. This system exists as a deterrent because of the knowledge on both sides that the other has a destructive power capable of annihilating it. It is the credibility of the system which ensures its stability. This is a fragile and dangerous balance. If the system is to retain its credibility, we must seek to make sure that it does not lose its balance; we must make sure that there is no escalation of nuclear armament systems, no rushing ahead by one of the two centres of military power on this earth, the U.S.S.R. and the U.S.A., so that the other is in fear of being destroyed without having the capacity to destroy its opponent. It is this very delicate balance that must be maintained until we are able through other means to ensure arms limitation and arms reduction agreements which are truly workable and effective.

The second principle is that Canada should continue to participate in the Geneva negotiations, as it has through one of its most able ambassadors, Mr. George Ignatieff, who has been speaking for Canada in these matters. We must continue to do so because we believe that deterrence is a very delicate, sensitive and dangerous system, and we must work with all our energy to seek out other avenues to arms limitations and reductions.

Another principle that we must apply is to attempt to prevent the further proliferation or indeed escalation of nuclear armament systems. To each of the countries concerned, such an escalation is an extremely costly business and can only entail an extremely costly retaliation of the defensive system of the other country. This is doubly serious because it places these great great nations of the world in a less favourable position to meet the other challenges facing humanity, the challenges of domestic poverty and of slowly developing nations, for example. We, therefore, believe this escalation to be a dangerous thing for this additional reason that it prevents countries from solving these other problems. Then again, it is dangerous in itself because the more sensitive these systems get the more complex they become and the greater the danger of accident. Already, we are beginning to wonder whether these systems are not so complicated and intricate that the decision to start a nuclear holocaust will be made by a computer or by some officials who really have not the time in which to weigh all the imponderable elements before reaching a decision.

These are the principles which govern us. But because this government is not yet in possession of sufficient information to make the necessary judgment as to the decision taken last Friday by the President of the United States, we are keeping an open mind on this. The leader of the New Democratic Party says we have evidence of escalation, and he has quoted some evidence. But I think it would be counter-productive in connection with any talks I might have with the President if, before going to Washington, this government took the position that there was escalation; that the United States was guilty; that we were not giving them a chance to explain their point of view, and that we condemn them out of hand.

This is the reason the government is not taking an attitude of condemnation. It is one of interrogation, one of seeking information; it is one of finding out reasons for this action by the United States and then making up our minds.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Trudeau: If, Mr. Speaker, after receiving all the information, we are led to the view that the A.B.M. system constitutes escalation and is conducive to greater peril for mankind, then we shall condemn it. We shall tell the United States that we disapprove. If, on the other hand, we are convinced that the A.B.M. system is necessary though regrettable as a move by the United States, then we shall have to decide whether or not we shall participate in the operation of that system. Let me remind this house that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux), and myself have made clear on several occasions that the space defence system, the A.B.M. system now contemplated, has not been integrated into NORAD but is something outside NORAD. It follows in all fairness that we cannot, while refusing to participate in this A.B.M. system, while taking the position that it must remain outside NORAD, complain that the United States is not consulting with us.

The leader of the N.D.P., who answered a few questions by the Secretary of State for External Affairs must, I think, sense this contradiction. On the one hand, he complains that the Americans have not consulted us, as they should, while on the other hand, his party has on various occasions taken the position that we should withdraw from NATO. I was happy to hear the leader of the N.D.P. clarify his position on this issue. He said in answer to the minister that we were allies in NORAD and NATO, and he supported the idea that we should be friends and allies of the United States. Well, the New Democratic party has obviously reached the conclusion of its external affairs review. We have not reached that position yet, and we still reserve our judgment. We may decide to stay in NATO or we may decide to pull out. We may decide to stay in NORAD or we may decide to pull out. But we shall have to be consistent with ourselves, and if we stay in NORAD we shall have to ask ourselves whether we want it to include some degree of control over, the A.B.M. system, or not. If our answer is we do not, we shall not be in possession of a very strong negotiating point with the United States.

We might, of course, protest that they should not be using our air space or that they should not contemplate exploding anti-ballistic missiles over Canadian soil. However, I repeat, as I said the other day in the house, that this would be a fairly academic consideration, Mr. Speaker, because should the system begin to fire it will mean our efforts to preserve the peace and the safety of the world have failed, and I think the question of national air space would be secondary. I do not mean to say—and I believe I am answering the question which was put to me—that we are not informed. The minister said this afternoon, and I repeat it, that we have been informed to an impressive degree about what the United States is doing. I believe the Minister of National Defence will reveal later in this debate that we have a lot of information on the technological work being done there in the field of deterrents. However, we do not have all the information and, in particular, we do not have a veto over the operation of the system. If this house feels we should participate in decisions concerning this system it may be we shall have to become partners in the A.B.M. system. But this is a decision we are not yet prepared to make.

We want, first, to be convinced that the system is necessary. If it is not necessary we shall condemn it. If not, we shall seek the kind of protection which the opposition suggested we obtain for Canadian cities. I do not believe I should carry on this debate further. Essentially, I am saying we do not yet have sufficient information on the basis of which to reach a decision on the position taken by the United States last Friday. We do not wish, before going to Washington, to judge that position out of hand. Therefore, I believe I shall welcome this occasion as an opportunity to hear what other members of this house have to say. Before any final conclusion is reached, we shall always consider that it is our duty to look for methods of settling disputes through negotiation rather than through any form of escalation of deterrent systems.

Let me, before ending, read to the house a fitting quotation from Madam Barbara Ward, words which are deservedly well known. I quote:

> In the last few decades mankind has been overcome by the most fateful change in its entire history. Modern science and technology have created so close a network of communication, transport, economic interdependence—and potential nuclear destruction—that planet earth, on its journey through infinity, has acquired the fellowship and the vulnerability of a spaceship.
> In such a close community, there must be rules for survival.

It is in search of those rules for survival, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be speaking to the President of the United States next week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Leader of the Opposition): I have some views I should like to express in this debate, one which is obviously of considerable importance.

I think we have to remember that we are debating in Ottawa and not in Washington. Therefore, certain considerations that might be relevant to people in our position in the United States are hardly relevant here, in Canada. Such questions as whether this system of deterrence gives the best value for money and whether the United States can afford it are hardly questions for us in this country to consider. But there are aspects of the matter which I think we ought to consider. The first, of course, concerns the proper response of Canada to the decision of the President of the United States; the second concerns our ability to respond in an informed and effective way to it. In other words, we are concerned about the degree to which we have been consulted in this matter; in which we are entitled to be consulted.

Some Canadians, I think, are inclined to be suspicious of motives behind decisions made in the United States in respect of defence matters. That is not a particularly fruitful or helpful approach or, indeed, an approach that will be effective in bringing any influence we have to bear on policies of the United States government. We have influence which, because of our interests and geography, I think we should seek to extend.

I am as concerned about Canada's independence and about securing peace in the world as is anyone here, sir; but I cannot see how our interests are advanced by a persistent and almost Pavlovian condemnation of United States actions. In so many words, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) emphasized that we share the same danger from nuclear weapons; we are all in the same boat and we shall all share the common fate of mankind. We all agree with this; but that agreement does not, by itself, take us very far. The Prime Minister emphasized a number of points of importance to his government. He referred to the importance of the credibility of deterrence, the question of preserving what he referred to as the delicate balance of terror and the importance of preventing this delicate balance from being upset. He said we should make sure that one side does not rush ahead. Frankly, I am at a loss to know how we can do this. Let us be realistic. Just how do we make sure that one of the super powers does not rush ahead and upset what the Prime Minister calls the delicate balance of terror. Just how do we prevent escalation of nuclear weapons? How can we do this with the two great nuclear powers? Is it, therefore, realistic for the Prime Minister of this country to say that we must make sure neither side rushes ahead. If we can achieve, through a disarmament conference or any other kind of conference, some form of agreement on this matter, that is one thing. Certainly, we should emphasize the importance of such understanding or agreement. But in considering the question we consider tonight, is it realistic for us as Canadians to say to ourselves, "We must make sure that neither side rushes ahead." I repeat, just how do we make sure, Mr. Speaker?

Naturally, we in this party are deeply concerned about the implications of the President's announcement. I agree with the Prime Minister and the leader of the New Democratic Party that we should not be overly worried about the immediate effect this United States policy will have on us. After all, if nuclear weapons are used not much will be left to be worried about. I recognize that we have a special relationship with the United States, and we cannot escape from it even if we want to. It is based to some extent on geography and proximity but also on a common interest in the security of this continent, the rest of the free world and the less developed countries of the world. That relationship should mean that we can regard the United States as a friend and ally and that we can expect from the United States the consideration that close friendship and alliance involves. I do not ignore the fact that the United States is sometimes wrong. In Canada, we are sometimes wrong. Neither do I ignore the fact that there are occasions when our interests and their interests clash. By and large, however, we have common interests, common aims and common purposes.

We must also recognize the awful responsibilities carried by the President of the United States who must make decisions in this field. He carries the responsibility for the defence not only of his own country but, indeed, for the free world. So, although we must consider the effect United States policy in this field will have in this country, we ought to be more concerned about its effect on the peace of the world and the fate of mankind. The Canadian people ought to know what that decision entails for them.

There is a real possibility that if the U.S.S.R. develops an anti-ballistic missile defence, that any missiles it fires may violate Canadian air space. If we are concerned about the actions of the United States in this field, we ought to be equally concerned about possible actions taken on the other side of the North Pole. I do not see how the United States decision is provocative in the sense that it is likely to cause an outbreak of nuclear warfare. I am not an expert in this field and I am not passing judgment on how effective the missile system is. That is primarily a matter for the United States to decide. But if we consider this matter in terms of whether building that defence system is a provocation to war, the view of my party is that it is not a provocation. That is, we do not think this decision is likely to make the outbreak of nuclear war more likely. On the other hand, there is evidence that it will lead to escalation of weapons and that the U.S.S.R. will increase its capacity to build missiles to pierce any defence system that might be built on this continent.

• (9:00 p.m.)

This anti-ballistic missile defence system may well lead to escalation in this sense, although I do not believe it is provocative.

It might very well be with this kind of system a wild missile or missile sent by mistake could be dealt with by the A.B.M. defence system rather than by massive retaliation caused by a false alarm. It might be argued that the anti-ballistic missile defence system might reduce the possibility of an outbreak of nuclear war by accident. On the other hand, it may lead to an escalation of investment in nuclear weapons.

It is regrettable the President of the United States felt it necessary to make this decision because of its effect on potential United States foreign aid in assisting underdeveloped nations. I agree we should emphasize the importance of efforts in the area of disarmament. I hope the Prime Minister on his visit to Washington emphasizes to the President the importance this country attaches to this and our concern in this regard.

The responsibility for decisions relating to the defence of the United States rests with the United States government, but we are partners in defence, NATO abroad and NORAD on this continent.

But I do not agree with one view expressed by the Prime Minister. As I understood him, we cannot claim any right seriously to be consulted with regard to an anti-ballistic system because we have chosen not to be involved in that system. We are partners in continental defence and as such I think we have the right to be consulted as allies and partners. I do not think we would expect the right to veto a decision taken by the United States with regard to a matter considered vital to the defence of that country, but as partners, I believe we have the right to be informed and to be given an opportunity to express our views on matters relating to the defence of the continent, even though we are not involved in the financing or in the administration of what is proposed. I reject, Mr. Speaker, the position taken by the Prime Minister in this regard.

If we have not been consulted, the Prime Minister should make it clear to the President of the United States that if we are to be partners in defence we ought to be consulted and fully informed. I am not certain as to the degree to which we have been consulted as a neighbour and ally of the United States. I have spoken before about the special relationship between our countries based upon proximity. I emphasize our right to be consulted.

I do not think the government has been clear as to the extent to which there has been consultation at the various stages. The Prime Minister stated there had been minute consultation on the various stages, yet on Tuesday he explained the government was not making a clear statement as there had not been time since the previous Friday to consider all the complex implications. I do not want to be critical. I do not know all the complex implications, but I know the matter of the possibility of an A.B.M. system being established in the United States has been discussed for some years. I find it difficult to understand that the appropriate officials and the responsible ministers in Canada are not fully informed. They have not made a point of being fully informed as to all the implications. I do not understand why the government of this country as a partner in North American defence, has not insisted on having all the necessary information in order to be fully informed on this matter. If it is a fact that we have not been fully informed on these momentous matters, then we must conclude that the relations of this government with the government United States are in a rather primitive state.

I must assume that Canada was consulted or informed to some degree well in advance. If not surely the government would have been frank about this in the house and would have protested the discourtesy of the United States. There has been no protest as far as I am aware. I do not want to be nit-picking, but I do not think it is adequate for the Prime Minister to suggest that Canada has no right to be consulted about this. It must be apparent to the government that we have every right to be consulted.

The Prime Minister stated he has not enough information to make a decision. We know these matters have been considered in the United States for years and that certain information has been given to Canada. I fail to understand why the government of Canada has not insisted upon being fully informed, if in fact this was not done. I want to emphasize that I reject the regrettable position taken by the Prime Minister that we are not entitled to this information. Surely, the government has now learned there are complexities in this matter of consultation.

• (9:10 p.m.)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

Mr. Stanfield: I shall be just a few more moments. I do not think parliament or the country will much longer accept the excuses of complexity relating to government policies, including defence policy. The Prime Minister has emphasized that he has wanted to go to Washington with an open mind. He has wanted to go there untrammelled and he is not going from the narrow point of view of expressing concern about danger to Canada although he has reserved the right to raise this question, but with a free hand to reject the American decision. Mr. Speaker, the American decision has been taken; the American decision has been made. What is the use of going to Washington with an open mind when the President of the United States has already made up his mind? What is the good—

Mr. Trudeau: What is your mind?

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to be perfectly frank with my right hon. friend, the Prime Minister. I am going to sum up for him so that he can understand my position.

Mr. Trudeau: You have not got an open mind.

Mr. Stanfield: I want to be very emphatic, Mr. Speaker, and make it very clear that I think the Prime Minister and the government have a responsibility to the Canadian people to insist upon being consulted. I think the Prime Minister had the right and the duty to insist that Canada should have been fully informed before the decision was taken by the United States.

I want to make it perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, that in my opinion it is not satisfactory for the Prime Minister of Canada to go to Washington after a decision has been taken by Washington, to try to influence a decision now made and which the Prime Minister has known for some time that the President of the United States had under advisement.

An hon. Member: He should be a mind reader?

Mr. Stanfield: One does not need to be a mind reader. All of us know that an A.B.M. system of some sort has been under discussion in the United States for a good long time. So, Mr. Speaker, my own view is that we had a right to be consulted. I think we have a right to consult, and I hope the Prime Minister will make the point in Washington that we do have such a right. I hope he will express regret that the President has felt it necessary to make this decision. But I want to emphasize this, Mr. Speaker, that I do not say the decision is provocative in the sense that it brings nearer the possibility of a nuclear war. I do not take that position. I want to be perfectly clear in this respect with the Prime Minister, but I do believe that the decision is likely to provoke some degree of escalation.

I do not understand what the Prime Minister hopes to gain by going to Washington after the decision has been taken, even if he is going to disapprove of the decision.

Mr. Trudeau: So, I should not go?

Mr. Stanfield: Of course, my right hon. friend should go. There are many other things he should talk about.

Mr. Trudeau: I won't talk about that?

Mr. Stanfield: Let us not quibble, Mr. Speaker. I have tried to be perfectly clear about what the Prime Minister should do and what he should have done before this.

Mr. Sharp: Before the decision was taken?

Mr. Stanfield: Yes.

Mr. Sharp: How would he know?

Mr. Stanfield: He would know, Mr. Speaker, by insisting upon the right of Canada to be consulted, and I think this is one of the points the Prime Minister ought to insist upon in Washington rather than the view he took that we have no right to be consulted with regard to this matter.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I do not think we have any right of veto with regard to this matter. I think the government of the United States in the existing circumstances has the ultimate responsibility of making the decision which it considers necessary to its defence. I think Canada ought to have had an opportunity to influence that decision, but I do not question the right of the United States to make the decision. I am not rising in my place in this house to accuse the United States of doing something that is leading the world nearer to nuclear war because I do not believe that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Stanfield: But I do believe that this is going to lead to escalation. I do believe that the government of Canada ought to have insisted upon consultation and not opted out of its responsibility as unfortunately, I believe, the Prime Minister has done.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Bernard Dumont (Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order. The hon. member for Frontenac is raising a point of order.

Mr. Dumont: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As members of the opposition, could we not express the opinion of the Ralliement Créditiste before hearing the reply of the Minister of National Defence?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): The hon. member for Frontenac.

Mr. Dumont: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I am grateful to the house for giving me the opportunity to express our opinion on a matter very important to us. In fact, we have known here moments nearly as tragic as the Cuba incident and the year 1963 when an election was called on the question of nuclear warheads which were supposed to bring us permanent security.

We, of the Ralliement Créditiste, greatly regret that the United States did not consult Canada before taking the important decision of setting up near our borders the Sentinel defence system which astounds us, because of the danger of collective suicide which it represents.

Mr. Speaker, when I talked this evening with my family, I felt that they were anxious and concerned, so much so that my 17 year-old daughter told me: "But this is sheer madness."

Our youth, Mr. Speaker, is concerned about that Sentinel defence system which will cost some 40 billion and which the president of the United States was compelled to approve. In fact, we realize that our American neighbours have obviously become warmongers. In addition to the wars in Korea, and Viet Nam, we have discussed nuclear war-heads in 1962 and 1963. Now president Nixon is compelled by those financiers who want wars at any cost, to agree to an expenditure of some $40 billion.

Those preparations for war by a country which does not bother about its neighbours and dares to endanger the lives of Canadians is simply outrageous.

As a result of that decision, I think that lesson should not be wasted on us. It applies especially to the old political parties. The Progressive Conservative party was compelled to accept nuclear war-heads, and the program has been continued by the Liberal government.

And today, the president of the United States—because the American elections cost more than $15 million—has to obey the dictates of those millionaires who contributed millions to his campaign and force him to award them contracts. In fact, immediately after the elections, we learned that Western Electric was awarded a $475 million contract, to be let out to 3,000 sub-contractors. The United States can spend $40 billion for war but they seem unable to solve the problems of the Negroes who are considered as outcasts, although they helped build Uncle Sam's country where humanity is supposed to be so flourishing

Far from it. I say that those alleged benefactors of humanity are economically feeding on the lives of the unfortunate victims of those wars, or they want defence systems which tomorrow would lead to the destruction of the Canadian people.

Besides, who has forgotten the horrible sufferings endured by Japan when Hiroshima was destroyed? The horror the atomic bombing provoked in the world did not disturb these vile people who are convinced they are more powerful than God.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot prevent this country from going ahead but we should be able to express our indignation at such aggressive moves because we must be wiser than they are. I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), at the meetings on March 23 and 24, not to follow the exaggeration of the Americans who believe their hunger for domination allows them to organize the world's defence at any cost, even that of the annihilation of Canada.

• (9:20 p.m.)

We Canadians should have the wisdom to build up for peace instead. Only last year a meeting was held in the United States to discuss air and water pollution which practically threaten to wipe out mankind, but they did not manage to solve the problem. Yet, that same country was able to find $40 billion to carry out its foolish Sentinel defence program. This is why I suggest that the Prime Minister should put a bit of wisdom in the minds of those warmongers who may lead mankind to its doom.

As I said earlier, we must build for peace. We have never pushed back that all-powerful country and we are convinced that we shall have to accept its decisions.

We say therefore: Let us build for peace. Let us find solutions to the unemployment problem and to air and water pollution. Let us be an example to the world and let us say to the Americans: You should be more realistic and acquire more wisdom. Let your efforts strive sincerely to ensure peace and security in the world, to abolish war forever.

Hon. Léo Cadieux (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to adopt a literary style to speak about such a serious subject as the one we are discussing tonight.

The Cuban crisis for which the Americans were blamed when they were directly threatened, has been mentioned as well as $40 billion when the amount involved is $6 or $7 billion. The Korean war was mentioned as if it were a blot on the American escutcheon, when the undertaking was initiated by the United Nations. Some mention was also made of the Bomarcs, although they have nothing to do with the question before us.

So, faced with this spate of arguments that have no bearing on our discussion tonight, I feel somewhat out of tune because I wanted to offer the kind of information of which, to my way of thinking, the Canadian people should be made aware in order to be able to assess the situation in a calm and reasonable manner.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot follow in the footsteps of the opposition leaders, to say on the one hand that the American government is free to make whatever decisions it wishes with regard to its security, such decisions being exclusively under its jurisdiction, and, on the other hand, that we should protest because our opinion was not sought beforehand.

I remember when the NORAD agreement came up for renewal, when those same parties wanted the Canadian government to make known in no uncertain terms that it was not interested in participating in anti-missile installations on the North American continent.

Those same people tell us today, after insisting that the government make known its lack of interest: Demand that the American government consult you before making decisions.

Mr. Speaker, I only wish to give some information which I consider necessary, as I said, and I shall not, like my friend, the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas), quote sources which are only critical of the military efforts made in this country or elsewhere for defence purposes and which have never any solutions to offer.

According to them, it is a matter of coining what I call "dirty words". The same tactics have been tried before about the Bomarcs. It has been the case for the CF-104 and the nuclear warheads also. Now it is being done about the ABM system.

I think we should for once think about this and perhaps try and find out whether there is something in this situation which offers some hope. In the light of all these joint efforts by different countries and alliances, we should try to discover what attempts are being made to achieve what everyone of us is looking forward to: a détente and eventual de-escalation and disarmament.

At least we did achieve something recently. For whatever it is worth, this appeal must be heard. It originated from Budapest, from another military bloc and it appeared to intimate that discussions should be undertaken in order to arrive at this de-escalation everybody is hoping for.

Mr. Speaker, we should, to some extent, be reasured by the statement of the President of the United States. There is one paragraph of it I would like to quote in which it is clearly indicated that the U.S. president was indeed trying to avoid this escalation and to have this Safeguard project interpreted as an indication of the desires of the Americans of insuring a détente and of having the time needed to attain this objective.

All the necessary time must be afforded so that discussions will get under way and it is hoped that moderation will prevail. Here is one sentence which I think is very important. It was said by the President of the United States:

> The modified system has been designed so that its defensive intent is unmistakable. It will be implemented not according to some fixed theoretical schedule but in a manner clearly related to our periodic analysis of the threat. The first deployment covers two missile sites; the first of these will not be completed before 1973.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in the face of such wisdom, I am sure that next week, the Prime Minister will find a counterpart as receptive as he is, who has no prejudice either, nor any preconceived ideas, and who has not already taken positions he cannot change, but who is rather anxious to find solutions. Both will have discussed together the possibility that perhaps, through their concerted efforts, they could eventually work toward the promotion of that détente and that disarmament.

Mr. Speaker, I have not much to say. If I may, I would like it to appear in Hansard, because all kinds of concern have been raised by saying that the Americans had never consulted us adequately, and that Canada was uncertain and ignorant of what was happening in the United States.

I simply wish to put in Hansard a few facts which I believe must be known.

• (9:30 p.m.)

[English]

Ever since the early American research on the NIKE ZEUS anti-ballistic missile defence system ten years ago, the Canadian Department of National Defence has taken a close interest in the problems of ballistic missile offence and defence. We have never thought of participating in the offence, but we have been keenly aware that developments in defensive systems could have great significance for us. It was important to know whether Canadian geography would be vital for the defence of North America against missiles, as it is in fact for defence against bomber aircraft. It was necessary to be able to assess the probable effectiveness of defensive systems, and to evaluate dangers to population that would be posed by such systems. Only with such knowledge would we be in a position to judge what was the best course of action for the protection of the Canadian population and for the pursuit of stability on the international scene.

The U.S. government has some limitations on the extent to which it releases information concerning nuclear weapons, and its research in the fields of missiles and anti-missiles is of course highly secret. Nevertheless, the Americans have given us access to a considerable amount of information on the progress of their A.B.M. research, sufficient to permit us to make our own independent assessments of the successive plans.

The plans for the "Sentinel" system were shown to our Minister of National Defence in April 1967, five months before the public announcement by Mr. MacNamara. We have studied the implications of such a system to Canada.

I wish to state that the Canadian government has been well aware of the potential importance of A.B.M. for several years, and has received the co-operation of the United States government in provision of the technical information necessary to enable us to make our own assessments of the benefits, dangers and implications of successive developments.

The objectives of the new United States system have been stated as protection of their land based retaliatory forces against a direct attack by the U.S.S.R.; defence of the American people against an attack from China, and protection against an accidental launching of a missile from any source. They have not requested that any of the defensive equipment be located in Canada. We believe from our analysis that it would be possible for a system located south of the border to afford protection to a number of population centres north of the border, if the defensive plan and the firing doctrine so provide, but we have not requested that this be done.

The new Safeguard system makes use of the same components as Sentinel, which consisted of two radars; the Perimeter Acquisition Radar (PAR) and the Missile Site Radar (M.S.R.) and two anti-missile weapons: The Spartan and the Sprint.

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

An attacking I.C.B.M. is expected to be first observed over the polar regions by the Ballistic Missile Early Warning System (B.M.E.W.S.). It will subsequently be acquired and tracked by the PAR which has a long range capability of more than 1,000 miles. Information is then passed to control posts where computers process the data and, on receipt of a firing order, the M.S.R. guides the Spartan missile to make its intercept.

The Spartan missile has a horizontal range of about 400 miles with a somewhat shorter vertical range. The effectiveness of Spartan depends on the detonation of a very large nuclear warhead in the near-vacuum of outer space.

The Sprint missile complements the Spartan system by making its interceptions lower than Spartan, and can destroy I.C.B.M.s in their final approaches to the target. Sprint has a much shorter range than Spartan, being able to reach about 35 miles from the launch site. Because the intercept occurs at low altitude, Sprint has a very much smaller warhead yield than the Spartan.

If long range "Spartan" A.B.M. missiles, sited near the Canadian border, were fired against ballistic missiles approaching U.S. targets from the north, it is probable that some of their defensive nuclear warheads would explode above Canadian territory. These explosions would occur well above the atmosphere where the Spartans are designed to destroy or neutralize the I.C.B.M. warheads so that they could not detonate. Spartans are programmed to make their interceptions at a high enough altitude to prevent damage to people living beneath the bursts.

In contrast, if the attacking missiles were to penetrate to their intended targets and burst on the ground, very heavy fallout would ensue, which would be spread by the winds over a large area of the United States and Canada. Consequently, from the point of view of fallout, the presence of the defensive system is a distinct advantage if you accept the possibility of a nuclear exchange. Contrary to popular belief the fallout resulting from high altitude nuclear bursts does not constitute a more serious hazard than that to which we have already been subjected during nuclear tests in the atmosphere.

The shorter range Sprint A.B.M. missiles would also be burst at altitudes high enough to avoid serious damage to populated areas on the ground, but it is unlikely that they would have sufficient range to reach as far as the Canadian border in the new Safeguard deployment.

Under unfavourable conditions where the Spartan engages the I.C.B.M. below the minimum designed altitude over Canada, the following harmful effects could be possible, but the possibility of these occurring would be very small: some fires might be started in inflammable material; anyone who had skin directly exposed to the burst might receive burns; some window breakage would be apt to occur, and possible temporary flash blindness might take place.

These results are very minor compared with the casualties which would result in the vicinity of the target, or indeed over a wide area in the event that the attacking missile burst on the ground and produced widespread fallout.

An hon. Member: Would Colonel Blimp rout them?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): You do not understand what I am trying to prove to you.

An hon. Member: We have heard this before.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): You know all about it. You are a critic, but what have you to offer?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister will perhaps remember the Bomarc missile which was going to "cook" the warheads so there would be no fallout. That theory has been completely discredited.

An hon. Member: By whom?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I simply hope—

An hon. Member: By James Eayrs.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): —that the foregoing will prove helpful to the house, and to some people outside the house, in their appreciation of the complexities and significance of what we are talking about in respect of this defensive system. This is the only contribution I wanted to make. I think some factual information is necessary in this particular debate.

• (9:40 p.m.)

Mr. Stanfield: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Yes.

Mr. Stanfield: First of all, may I thank him for giving the house some solid information. I ask the minister whether there is any information that he has felt it necessary to have in this regard that he has not been able to get from the United States.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): Do I understand the question correctly, Mr. Speaker—whether there was any information we requested that we did not get?

Mr. Stanfield: Any information the minister feels he needs to assess this matter which he has not been able to get from the United States.

Mr. Cadieux (Labelle): No, I would not say so. I think we secured all the information that we needed. As a matter of fact, there is a joint committee of the armed forces that has been studying these problems.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we could rejoice that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) will be able to go to Washington with a copy of Hansard for the President.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fairweather: But this is a serious matter and I think it really proves the usefulness of the rule under which we are having this debate. It is perhaps a pity that this parliament has not taken the next step in the educative process and allowed television into the house so that what we do here, badly or well, can be shared with the people of Canada.

The Prime Minister said that Canadians are involved in this and other issues as world citizens in that science has made us all neighbours. Because I understand some things better than I do science, I can recall a speech made by the former President of the United States, President Kennedy, in New Brunswick, when he quoted the poetry of Robert Frost who said that good fences make good neighbours. I presume this is really what is behind the trip of the Prime Minister to Washington; and he goes, I am sure, with the good will of this parliament.

While I am dispensing good will, if that is of any value to anybody, I think it is an opportunity to say how much we welcome back the leader of the New Democratic party, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). In his first really crunching debate he has had some success in getting you, Mr. Speaker, to recognize that it is important for Canada to have the discussion in which we are involved. He said that the problem is the most important one of our age. Perhaps he would agree that we did not come across that truth today; we came across it some 25 years ago when science made the implications of the atom so evident to the world.

It is a difficult debate because I think we cannot be like the Pharisee and stand in this parliament and say: Thank God we are not as other men. That is perhaps a temptation we have often in this country when we think about our relations with the United States. The debate is difficult because really what we are being asked to do is provide some sort of a sound-track for the Prime Minister when he meets next week with the President. I suppose it would be easy to bring out a series of editorials and comments from the United States press, as well as commentators upon that press who are in this country, and make a contribution to our understanding of international affairs. But I have resisted that temptation because I do not think it adds very much to an assessment that we have to make. What information, for instance, could I give that would help the leaders of the two countries next week?

I think it is important to remember that the debate is not by any means over in the United States. In spite of the President's decision, he has not any money allocated, yet, and two of the most important Senate committees, the foreign relations committee and the defence committee, are even now arguing about which one will have the responsibility of considering the President's decision.

I suppose many of us heard Senator Fulbright just this past Sunday in what seemed to me to be a compelling recapitulation of evidence that had been given by three distinguished scientists in the United States which showed, according to the scientists and to Senator Fulbright's comment on what they said, how ineffective really is the A.B.M. system. It is fair to say that many thoughtful people, on the basis of the information they can gather, share that view.

We as Canadian parliamentarians watch the debate, share the concern of the United States and choose our sides even here, as do, presumably, people who have different views even though they are within the same party. But I wonder if we send urgent messages to Washington suggesting that, as a matter of judgment, President Nixon is right or wrong. I am glad that other speakers have mentioned the supremely important work being undertaken by Mr. George Ignatieff at Geneva. It is here that I hope the Prime Minister will be able to remind the President, if in fact he needs any reminding, of where the on-going work of the world needs to be done; because surely nobody, not even the President, can take very much satisfaction in the fact that he felt compelled to take the decision he did last Friday. We wonder at any country being able to commit so much of its treasure, in spite of what the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) has said. I think perhaps he was answering another speaker. But it seems to me that $7 billion is a fair amount of money to spend on an untested system. However, I will leave that to others to judge.

The other thing I think it is important to underline is that escalation, of course, is a two-way manifestation and that just as we worry about what may be happening in Washington, so too our urgent concern must be as to what the response will be in Moscow. I think we want the President of the United States to know that, as was so interestingly put the other day by Mr. Escott Reid, a distinguished citizen of this country, really the major problems that we face as a country, and in fact many people in the world share our concern, in the next 20 years are first those with regard to the People's Republic of China with her 700 million people, now outside the ordinary diplomatic ambit of so much of the world community and outside what should be a world body with universality of membership.

Second, and other speakers have spoken of this, two thirds of the peoples of this earth, if they have any knowledge of this debate about the United States and A.B.M., must wonder about countries that can talk about billions of dollars worth of hardware when they, themselves, in fact have not enough money to feed themselves.

The Montreal Star published a series of articles on its 100th anniversary about the human condition in 1969. One of them, written by Paul Ricoeur contained a paragraph that might be appropriate. He wrote:

War is the most immediate expression of political violence, because it is the most obvious form of it. The phenomenon of war results from the fact that the State exists historically only because it is the result of a particular will, ... States on the international scene, may be compared to individuals, for both are capable of violence; but whereas the violence of individuals is limited by the existence of laws backed by public force, States behave historically as individuals who no longer recognize any law other than their own arbitrary will. They will continue to do so until an international law, backed up by an international force, will impose itself on the wishes of each individual state.

These words could have been said by so many of our leaders. As a matter of fact they were said by the former prime minister, although not in quite the same language, in Mr. Pearson's Reith lectures this spring.

Paul Ricoeur went on to say:

We are very far indeed from this world state which presupposes a major revolution in human relations;—

The tragedy is, it seems to me, that we know that this is so and that we know that it is within the mind and wisdom of man to do this thing. It has been clearly and compellingly stated many times for many years. Paul Ricoeur went on:

—up till now, and for thousands of years, men have identified themselves with the nation to which they belong; and these nations, organized into states, become centres of decision-making and figure on the stage of history as strong-willed and arbitrary individuals. No one knows how humanity will be able to rise above the stage of nation and nation-state and invent "the perpetual peace" dreamed of by the 18th century philosophers.

It may be that the dreams of the 18th century philosophers can become reality, perhaps not in the 20th century but we are fairly close to the 21st.

The Prime Minister mentioned Barbara Ward who, I suppose, better than most other people on earth, articulates the real problems of our day. I thought I would quote what that special person said at Expo in her Noranda lecture, but others will want to speak tonight, so I will indulge in the ultimate vanity and quote no one other than myself from a talk which I gave at a seminar at Couchiching on U.S.-Canada relations. The part I will quote is short, but it seemed to me to be a valid ending to a comment on this terribly urgent issue. This is what I said:

Most of the issues that face Washington and Ottawa are parallel. We have an obsession about this independence bit,—

I must confess that this was said extemporaneously, as will be seen.

—and I think that the obsession's in danger of being elevated into a cult.

A second prejudice I have is about those super lovers of everything which emanates from Washington.

There are two sides to this. There are those who are ready to say: "We are ready. If Washington tells us to do something we salute and march off". There is no place for that either in this country. I went on to say:

> The third prejudice is about those who have the simple view that the world is just a matter of polarization, those espousing communism and those who favour free enterprise.

It is not quite that easy, as we have been reminded many times before.

So, as we pursue this debate on our relations with the United States of America and on the eve of the Prime Minister's visit to Washington, we might remember that sometimes we do not want to be independent of a person who said not so long ago when speaking of international commitments that there were dangers. He said that the first is that of futility, the belief that there is nothing that one man or one woman can do against the enormous array of the world's ills, against misery, against ignorance, against injustice or against violence. He said the second great danger is that of the expediency of those who say that hopes and beliefs must bend before immediate necessity. He said that the third great danger for countries that are pretty self satisfied as we are, is comfort, the temptation to follow easy and familiar paths of personal ambition, financial success so grandly spread before those who have the privilege of education. Those were the words of the late Senator Robert Kennedy, and we do not want to be independent of those views in our search for a sensible and reasonable response to the United States as she faces, as my leader said, awful responsibilities.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate on what I think is perhaps the most important issue that is facing Canada and the world, that is the question of nuclear arms proliferation, where the world goes from here, and the general attitudes and policies that we should follow as a nation in trying to promote a harmonious world.

To begin with, I should like to quote a paragraph from a book entitled "The Violent Peace" which contains a chapter entitled "What is Peace". I think this is a good introduction to a debate of this sort. It reads as follows:

> The choice between peace and war is as basic to mankind as the choice between life and death. In the past few thousand years, man, one of many species, has pre-empted the earth; in the last 100 years he has proceeded from the internal combustion engine to the hydrogen bomb to flights into space. Still, the roots of war are deep in his heart, lodged in fear, ambition, a thirst for vengeance, hate. Since every human being lives with these emotions day by day, the "absence" of them is difficult to conceive. But if true peace is a quality "which passeth all understanding", it is nevertheless the only alternative to death.

I think this, in itself, demonstrates the importance to Canada of a debate such as this. I think it also brings out our responsibility as members of parliament on an issue of this sort to try to dismantle what I call the powder keg that we have in the world today. Many people, especially in my generation, are concerned about this in many different ways and for different reasons, merely because I believe we share some characteristics that were not found in other generations. First of all, today many young people were born after many of the international disasters and troubles that have hit the industrial states, such as the great depression and the second world war. They were born after many revolutions such as the revolution in Russia and the civil war in Spain. They were born into a world that has a fair amount of material wealth and stability. Moreover, they have been born into the nuclear age with all its ramifications. They were born after the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki. They saw the destructive potential of nuclear bombs and nuclear energy; they were made aware of the uncertainty of life and realized the frustration which this brings.

This is why so many young people are protesting. They are protesting against the uncertainty which is being created not only for themselves but for generations which are to follow. Their historical imagination is not bound by the past. Young people have an unhibited sense of the future and it is this concern for the future which sets their standard for the present.

Today we are relying basically on a balance of terror which seems to be threatening the world on all sides. It is ludicrous that we can reach into space when we cannot reach out to fellow human beings to try to understand them, or do much to improve conditions for those who live in deprived circumstances. There are many contradictions in our society. For example, we stockpile weapons—the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) spoke about this tonight—we talk about new weapons and new technology, and we do this in the name of peace, in the name of promoting some kind of stalemate supposed to lead to security. Meanwhile, there is evidence of poverty in our society, evidence of growing disparities in living standards and increasing discrimination. We compromise constantly in the name of efficiency.

An hon. Member: All right. Let us have some answers.

Mr. Nystrom: We talk about communication, yet we refuse to communicate. We talk about co-operation but we refuse to co-operate. We talk about the equality of man, yet we live by the law of the survival of the fittest.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), for example, talked about Canada and the United States having consulted each other for years over these questions. On the other hand, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) tells us we do not have enough information because we have not been consulted. This type of thing happens constantly. For instance, in the Ottawa Journal of March 18 I noticed a little article which said under the heading "Nixon seeks A.B.M. talks with Russia":

> President Nixon informed the 17-country disarmament conference today the United States hopes to start talks with the Soviet Union in the near future on limiting anti-ballistic missile systems.
> His remarks came in a message to the first session of the talks after a seven-month recess.

As I say, there is talk about co-operation but in practice we do not find co-operation. Because of these and other contradictions in our society young people say this amounts to a betrayal not only of their generation but of people in general.

This is the situation which prompted me to take part in the debate tonight. The action we are now discussing is regressive. The A.B.M. system would increase tension in the world, it would increase polarization, it would increase the animosities of the cold war, it would increase hatred and perpetuate fear instead of promoting a sense of security and understanding. It is a betrayal because it runs counter to some of the basic principles of life; the need to understand people, to co-operate with them and to communicate. It polarizes the world, it strengthens the force of regional pacts. It destroys the bridges which have been built toward understanding and toward trying to avoid a nuclear war. It causes the nuclear build-up to escalate and makes the whole country a powder keg. I hope the Prime Minister will confirm the statement he made a few days ago to the effect that the most important issue at stake here was the peace of the world as a total entity. I hope he does so because today, as a result of advances in technology, economics and communications, national boundaries have lost their old significance and nations are becoming increasingly interdependent.

For reasons such as these I believe we should ask a great many basic questions when we consider the A.B.M. system. We should ask what effect this system is likely to have on the military objectives of Canada and the world. We should ask what effect it is likely to have on the security of our country and the world, what effect it is likely to have upon the creation of a saner world, upon progress toward the eradication of poverty and the promotion of understanding and concern for each other. Canada is bound to be concerned about military objectives and the military aspects of the A.B.M. system. This must be so because we are members of NORAD. For this reason I believe we should take part in consultation with the United States. After all, we have a joint security plan and for this reason it is necessary for us to communicate with our neighbours. We should also be concerned by reason of our many political and economic ties with the United States. There is, too, the fact that Canada finds herself unfortunately between the two mightiest nations in the world in terms of military power, the Soviet Union and the United States. There should, therefore, be constant communication and consultation between our two nations as long as we have a joint military and production policy.

Another aspect is that we are close to the United States border, and when that country instals A.B.M. bases on its frontier the implications are alarming. What effect would this have on civilians in Canada? I think we have yet to learn all the answers; the Minister of National Defence, the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs all seem to give us different information on this point. In my view, each of us should be concerned about the kind of choice which might be available between the A.B.M. system and NORAD. We all want to know whether this system will be integrated. We also want to know why we have been ignored in many of the preliminary consultations. In general, a system of the type proposed leads only to escalation instead of to accord and harmony. I should like to quote a paragraph from an article by Jerome Wiesner, former science advisor to President Kennedy:

> We always underestimate our own capabilities and overestimate those of the other fellow. I think this is true of both sides, and it generates what I call a parallax effect. That is, if the Russians build a defensive system, we think it is better than it is, so we overbuild in order to penetrate it, and vice versa. Thus there is the real possibility that when everything is stabilized at some higher level and we are all relaxed because we have become used to it, the potential for destruction will have gone up instead of down.

This is what continuous escalation leads to. I guess there is truth in the old saying that there is nothing to fear but fear itself. It is this fear which contributes to the stockpiling of weapons throughout the world and the proliferation of arms. Worst of all, it polarizes the world community into two separate blocs as the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) mentioned.

What is the over-all effect of the A.B.M. system on national security and on world security? As I have said before, it will be to create difficulties rather than to solve them. We are proceeding on the basis of might being right, rather than in the direction in which the younger generation want to see us move. Why should there be any need for the A.B.M. system? Some would say it is required to preserve the balance of power for the protection of the United States. But whenever a balance is reached there is escalation on one side or the other. The weapons are built up, and some day someone will flip the switch and the powder keg will explode.

• (10:10 p.m.)

The United States has also introduced this A.B.M. system because it is afraid of communism and wishes to combat it this way. Third, and most important, certain industries that supply the military in the United States wish to keep the United States a military nation. May I first talk about my second point, the reason for the United States to introduce this A.B.M. system. As I said, part of the reason is fear of communism. I know hon. members opposite have interjected to the effect, "Does Russia consult us?" Of course, they do not. Russia will never consult us while the present atmosphere of distrust prevails. We ought to create some sort of understanding among the world community. We should try to avoid polarizing the world into east and west, communist and non-communist.

An hon. Member: But they have socialists in Russia.

Mr. Nystrom: That kind of remark coming from one of the hon. members for the Windsor area helps to polarize the world and keeps the world in a state of perpetual fear. That is why we are living today in a state of perpetual insecurity.

Commenting on this question, an article in the Globe and Mail of February 7, 1969, said the following:

—Insurance against a Chinese attack upon Canada is best provided not by its participation in any U.S. so-called 'Chinese-oriented' BMD system (deploying Spartans and Sprints in the point-defense of Greater Vancouver), not by any other military preparations. It is best provided by political measures—recognition of the People's Republic and the conclusion with its Government of a Canadian-Chinese non-aggression pact.

That is what I should like to see happen. We need to bring China into the international community, try to understand her and communicate with her. When you leave a quarter of the world's population outside the international community, you will only have trouble and insecurity in the world.

Instead of spending so much money on weapons we should be spending more money on trying to feed the hungry part of the world and upgrading their living standards. U Thant said that as long as we have hungry people and suffering in the world, we will not have peace and security. If we were hungry in this country, I am sure we, too, would be restless.

Some of our people keep saying that the Chinese are irrational and when they have sufficiently developed their new weapons they will lob them on New York or Washington. I say that we ought to understand the Chinese, bring them into the world community and consult them. Many leading congressmen and senators in the United States are now talking in this direction. They say United States defence policy ought to be revamped.

Writing in the Winnipeg Free Press of February 3, 1968, Air Vice Marshal Bob Cameron had the following to say:

The arguments Mr. McNamara used to oppose his military chiefs may make good theoretical sense. (I happen to agree with them.) But I very much fear that ABM defence is like many other gadgets in the shop window these days. They can be expensive, of doubtful value, and seldom required. But having been invented, they seem to sell.

That may be why the A.B.M. system is being installed in the United States. I sometimes think that maybe the end of the Viet Nam war is in sight and some industrial giants in the United States supplying military hardware may be worried about where they can earn money in future. Producing an A.B.M. system will bring them a great deal of revenue.

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

I ask, where do we go from here? How can we prevent this polarization of the world into two factions? What can we do to make sure that some money now spent on defence goes to feeding the hungry of the world? We ought to work towards the creation of a viable world community. I should like to see us withdrawing from all regional military pacts such as NATO and NORAD. If we do, Canada could become the leader of the middle powers. Our action may even prompt Warsaw pact and SEATO treaty nations to diminish their armed forces. We could be instrumental in building bridges toward understanding and communication in the world. Our action could lead to a better life for all the peoples of the world. That is the direction in which we must go if there is to be a future for us and our children.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister to consider some of these matters when talking to the President of the United States next Monday. I conclude my remarks appropriately by quoting a paragraph from a speech Senator Rabi gave. He said:

> A country is more than its economic capacity or its material possessions. It has a personal, spiritual, psychological side—it is a culture.
> Those of us who are teachers and close to young people know the degree to which they have been alienated by all this expenditure on military things. When they see the government putting out tremendous sums of money for military purposes, and then observe the government's reluctance to invest in the solution of domestic human problems, they see a reorientation of our national policy which they believe is turning us into a garrison state. If I have any trust in the American people, I can't believe they will stand for it much longer.

I plead with the government to re-examine our defence policy and foreign policy in general.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) have replied to most questions that have been raised tonight by the opposition. I intend, in speaking briefly in this debate, to amplify a few points that seem to be relevant. I will speak about three matters which seem to bear upon the question raised by the leader of the New Democratic Party and that will, of course, be the subject of discussion between the Prime Minister of Canada and the President of the United States next Monday and Tuesday.

I should like to make a few brief comments on the international strategic considerations flowing from the announcement of the United States and the effect on east-west relations. I shall also comment on some problems of particular concern to Canada arising from that announcement. It has been asked in this debate and outside this house whether the threat from the Soviet Union and China justifies this new defensive measure. Some speakers have apparently come to the conclusion already that it is not a justifiable measure. The Prime Minister has said very wisely that until he has had an opportunity to discuss this matter with the President of the United States he prefers to reserve judgment.

Many people are understandably concerned as to whether the decision to proceed with an A.B.M. deployment may not itself have an escalatory effect, and so lead to a disturbance of the balance of stability between the great powers without adding to world security. And this is the problem that is of concern to all of us. The Prime Minister indicated in this debate that this is the kind of question he will discuss with the president. Let me remind hon. members what the President said on this question. I think it is important that we should hear the president's explanation, even if we need to be convinced that his explanation is convincing.

• (10:20 p.m.)

The President said:

> —the modified system has been designed so that its defensive intent is unmistable . . . The U.S.S.R. has engaged in a build-up of its strategic forces larger than was envisaged in 1967 when the decision to deploy "Sentinel" was made.

He illustrated with the following points:

> (1) The Soviet have already deployed an A.B.M. system—
> (2) U.S.S.R. is continuing deployment of very large missiles with warheads capable of destroying (U.S.A.) hardened Minuteman forces.
> (3) U.S.S.R. has also been substantially increasing the size of its submarine launched ballistic missile force.
> (4) Soviets appear to be developing a semi-orbital nuclear weapon system.
> In addition to these developments, the Chinese threat against our population, as well as danger of an accidental attack, cannot be ignored.

The President explained that the United States could have increased the number of its missiles and bombers. This, he said, would have been misinterpreted by the Soviets as an attempt to threaten their deterrent, and it would, therefore, stimulate an arms race. He chose instead the A.B.M. option.

What seems to me to be most important is what effect this proposed A.B.M. deployment will have upon east-west relations. One of the most important and encouraging developments in the past several years has been the willingness of the United States and Soviet Union to begin talks on the issues which divide them, particularly on the problems of arms control and on major political differences such as exist in Southeast Asia and the Middle East. Only a few months ago we were all much more optimistic than we are today, before the Soviet and Warsaw Pact invasions of Czechoslovakia, but we are beginning to see hope for the resumption of these talks.

No country has been more active than Canada in pressing the cause of disarmament. I would like to join with others in paying tribute to George Ignatieff, our ambassador in Geneva, who is now heading our talks. I would also pay tribute to General Burns, who retired last week.

We played an important part in the long negotiations leading to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and were among the first countries to ratify it.

It is encouraging that both the United States and the Soviet Union, in their opening statements to the disarmament committee, have shown evidence of serious intention to seek further measures of arms limitation and control. It is obviously in our interests and those of all mankind that Canada should seek in every way to help bring these intensions to fruition. This we will certainly do.

The question that people are naturally asking at this time is whether the prospects for these talks will be jeopardized by the United States decision on A.B.M.'s. On this score, I am not prepared to draw hasty or pessimistic conclusions.

What seems undeniable, however, is that the United States government is serious in its desire to enter into these discussions with the Soviet Union. Just the other day, Mr. Nixon said that it would be the policy of his administration to make the transition from confrontation to negotiation. The President's decision on A.B.M.'s must be seen in the light of his earlier declared intention to seek negotation with the Soviet Union. Moreover, the President, in the course of his official announcement, made the following statement on the question whether the beginning of construction of an A.B.M. system would complicate an agreement on strategic arms with the Soviet Union. This is what President Nixon said:

> I do not believe that evidence of the recent past bears out this contention. Soviet interest in strategic talks was not deterred by the decision of the previous administration to deploy the Sentinel A.B.M. system—in fact, it was formally announced shortly afterwards. I believe that the modifications we have made in the previous program will give the U.S.S.R. even less reason to view our defence effort as an obstacle to talks. Moreover, I wish to emphasize—

I think it is important that hon. members bear this in mind.

> —that in any arms limitation talks with the U.S.S.R. the United States will be fully prepared to discuss limitations on defensive as well as offensive weapons systems.

I interpret this to mean the A.B.M. system itself.

As evidence that we may not be faced with an escalation, the Soviet representative at the opening session of the 18 nation disarmament conference at Geneva yesterday made no reference whatever to the President's decision on the A.B.M., but did indicate the Soviet Union's continuing interest on talks of limitation of strategic weapons. I think we can draw some encouragement that this particular announcement by President Nixon may not have the effects some of us fear.

I now turn to some of the considerations for Canada. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has pointed out, Canada cannot divorce its interests from those of the remainder of mankind in this matter. We are not only talking about the defence of Canada and the defence of our cities, but the effect of fallout from an explosion of a missile which by that time would be fired at us. What we are talking about is whether we can maintain peace in the world. Very often when I listen to debate on defence and foreign policies, it appears as though we were fighting 19th century wars. The whole purpose of any defensive system nowadays is that it shall never be used.

If the A.B.M. will contribute to the stability of the nuclear balance, if it will at the same time not prejudice the talks between the United States and the Soviet Union on the limitation of strategic weapons, the benefits are evenly shared. There are, of course, some preoccupations peculiar to Canada. It has been suggested that Canadian permission might be required because some of these missiles might be exploded above Canada.

As I said earlier today, there has been no specific request to Canada from the United States government asking for permission to use our air space. If they do proceed with their A.B.M. system, I have no doubt but that they will seek our permission, if permission is required. Depending on the nature of the system, our permission may or may not be required. It depends where the system is to be located and how high up the missiles are to be encountered in space. We do not know whether our space is involved. Let me remind the house, as the Prime Minister did, that whatever the legal or scientific position might be, it should not be forgotten that, if it ever became necessary to employ A.B.M.'s over Canadian territory, we would at that moment already be in as great or even greater jeopardy from the missile or missiles which the A.B.M.'s were directed to destroy.

• (10:30 p.m.)

In other words, Mr. Speaker, if this system is ever called to bat the game is over and mankind has lost. The question has been asked whether Canada would have any influence on the employment of these weapons. At this point I asked the Leader of the New Democratic party if he thought we should seek to have influence. I went on to ask him if he wanted us to be allies of the United States.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We are.

Mr. Sharp: As I understood his reply, he supported the proposition that we should be allies and friends of the United States.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): We are, whether we want to be.

Mr. Sharp: Then, he said we are allies in NORAD and NATO. These are the words he used.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is right.

Mr. Sharp: I understand from this conversation that the leader of the New Democratic party has in fact returned to the position that he once took on these matters, and from which he seems to have departed in recent months and years, because otherwise how could we have the influence he wants us to have unless we were allies and friends in NATO and NORAD?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister cannot put words in my mouth. If the minister is going to quote me, I suggest he quote from the blues and not from his memory which may not always be too retentive. When the minister asked me, what I said was that we are allies and friends under both NATO and NORAD. The minister asked me if I supported that. As long as it is an agreement Canada signed of course I have to support it as a member of this house, but I am perfectly prepared to debate with the minister at any time whether or not we should continue to be in those agreements. However, as long as Canada is a signatory to those agreements, then as a citizen of this country of course I must support them.

Mr. Sharp: I am very glad that at least on the one point, the leader of the New Democratic party recognizes that it is within these alliances that we can have this influence. If he wants us to have this influence, all I say is that he should return to the position he took some years ago.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): What is the minister's position with reference to NATO and NORAD? He is in the government. Is the government going to stay in them?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Sharp: I have not questioned our membership in NATO and NORAD.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The Prime Minister has.

Mr. Sharp: No, the Prime Minister has asked questions about whether we should continue in NATO and NORAD.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is what I am questioning.

Mr. Sharp: No, the hon. gentleman, on his part, has taken the view that we should not be in NATO or NORAD.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would request that these remarks be directed through the Chair.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): What does the minister think about NATO?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, through you, I want to ask the minister if he is in favour—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the member asking the minister a question?

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Yes, I am rising to ask the minister a question. I ask him if in his opinion the government should renew the NATO agreement when the question of renewal comes up this year. Since he is asking the opposition where they stand, I would like to know where the government stands.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, we shall make our announcement in due course.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was going on to point out that the leader of the New Democratic party seems to be contradicting the position he has taken on so many occasions. Indeed, if I may I would like to recall some words he used not so many years ago when he said this on April 3, 1939, before the outbreak of the Second World War. Let me read what he said on that occasion, and which still applies equally well today. This was on the verge of a world war that he wanted to avoid. I quote:

> The second principle in collective peace action is the willingness of the nations who desire peace to act collectively, not to maintain the status quo but to act collectively to make any resort to force an unprofitable venture—such collective action will involve sacrifice. I admit that, but I do submit that the sacrifices will be infinitesimal compared to the sacrifices that would follow from another world war—

Those are words I agree with, and I hope the hon. gentleman will support collective action as much today as he did in those days.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a question? Is it not true I was speaking there about the League of Nations, and I would speak the same way now of the United Nations?

Mr. Sharp: You were talking about collective action to make any resort to force an unprofitable venture, and that means the kind of defensive alliances we are in today which do make a resort to force an unprofitable venture.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Don't try to convince us; convince the Prime Minister.

Mr. Sharp: For the past two years there have, in fact, been continuing discussions, largely between officials of our two governments, on United States plans for the Sentinel System, the predecessor of the new system, as described by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux).

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

During these discussions we had the opportunity to express our concern about the implication for Canada of those plans. In particular, we drew attention to the vital importance in any deployment arrangements of ensuring that A.B.M.'s were sited and aimed in such a way as to minimize damaging effects in Canada. We shall now, of course, do this in the new circumstances arising out of the announcement made by the President the other day about the abandonment of the Sentinel system in favour of the new system. Safeguard is a new system based on a revised concept. The Sentinel System was different. We had ample information on that system. We now need to know whether all that information is still relevant to the new system, and we think it probably is with respect to fall out and damage from burst. But this is what the Prime Minister will be discussing with the President next week.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope it will be agreed by all members of the house, regardless of their political persuasions, that as we listened to the Prime Minister tonight, speaking quietly and eloquently about his concern for mankind, we felt re-assured that he will be talking for Canada with the President of the United States on these matters that affect so much the destiny of all of us.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, after listening to the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) tonight I am sure that many hon. members must have been reminded of the debates that took place in the British House of Commons during the 1930's. It was said by many at that time that there could not be another war, that there would be no defence against the bombers of that day. There were many arguments against rearmament and the taking of stronger defensive measures. The result was that Britain did not keep abreast of the times in her defence commitments.

Later, at the Nuremberg trials, the testimony of the German generals revealed that it was this fact that prompted Hitler to start his offensive against the world. It was because Britain in particular was so weak defensively that he waged war. In other words, it was anticipated by Hitler that there was no power strong enough to deal with an all-out offensive by Germany. This deterrent factor is the same issue that we are talking about tonight, a deterrent factor in the name of peace.

I would also like to say to hon. members, particularly members of the New Democratic party, that some of us have to be realistic. We cannot all be dreamers. I would also suggest to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that rather than direct the questions he did tonight to the Leader of the N.D.P. it would benefit Canada much more if he directed his questions to his own Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). They say there is no difference. There is one difference; I think it is mathematically impossible for the leader of the N.D.P. to ever sit in that seat, having in mind the time he has left in this house. The present Prime Minister is supposed to speak for Canada. To my knowledge he has not given the Canadian people the benefit of the decision his cabinet has made in respect of this issue, and in fact in respect of the whole issue of continental defence, in which I think we must all admit we are involved.

I had not planned to take part in this discussion because I do not believe there is any more substance to it than the other favourite topics raised periodically by our socialist friends to my left. But as a result of listening to the tenor of some of the remarks which have been made I feel compelled to rise and place before you a point of view which I believe is shared by a great many Canadians.

I believe we all admit that no one wants another war. Certainly, those who have taken part in a past war would be the last to want to participate in another. No one wants Canada to be a battleground. No one wants bombs or missiles which possibly would be intended for other countries to come down on our own country. We do not want anything of that type to burst over Canadian soil. There is, however, a vast difference between what we want and what could actually happen. The plain fact of the matter is we cannot be our own masters because of our geographical and political position.

Defensive theories have changed since the advent of nuclear arms. These theories have not actually been tested yet. We are, or should be, partners whether we like it or not. Our past commitments have made us partners in a continental defence. The question the Canadian people are asking today is whether we are going to live up to these commitments. I believe that if we are not going to do this then it is time our present Prime Minister told not only the people of Canada but our previous partners about these continental commitments. This house can pass all the pious resolutions it wishes and the government of Canada can make all the self-righteous protests it wants, but the fact remains that the world's dominant nations will not be listening. We are powerless to change the course of whatever events may lie in store for us.

It actually means little to the major powers of the world whether the Canadian Prime Minister makes up his mind tonight, next week or a month from now. I believe it is about time this country stopped pussy-footing. It is about time we stood up and were counted. Either we want freedom enough to fight for it or we do not. Right now, I would wager that no one in the world knows exactly what Canada wants or what we, as a nation, are willing to do. Certainly, I as a member of the official opposition in this house, do not know what the present policy is of this government.

Mr. Stanfield: How could you know; there isn't one.

Mr. McIntosh: In fact tonight, after listening to the speech of the Prime Minister, after listening to the speech of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and after listening to the speech of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) it would seem to me that there has been no co-operation and no co-ordination in respect of what they all believe.

Surely, after the questions which have been asked in this house for the last several days with regard to what the United States authorities have told the Canadian government, this must have been known to the Prime Minister. The Minister of National Defence said he has had this information for weeks. He read it out to the house. He even knew the specifics about the Spartan and the Sprint. He mentioned 400 miles. I am informed that the minimum range of the Spartan is 75 miles. If it is 400 miles then we in Canada should be concerned, particularly western Canadians.

There was never before in our history this uncertainty. In two world wars Canadians fought for those things they wanted and believed to be right. Other nations were in no doubt concerning where Canada stood. I grant that today the face of warfare has changed to such an extent that it may no longer be practical for a small nation such as ours to contribute directly to the expensive and sophisticated techniques of nuclear missile intercontinental warfare. We may be an inconsequential item in democracy's armoury this time, but at least we can do those things which are within our power to do in an effort to assist those who lead the cause in which we believe or are supposed to believe.

We can contribute and we can fight to that extent. There can be no doubt that the United States of America is the champion of those things which we, as a nation, wish to preserve, individual liberty, political freedom, the rule of law and democratic government. Much legitimate criticism can be levelled at our neighbour, but surely no Canadian in his right mind can equate the United States and the Communist colossus equally in terms of Canada's interests. We may have neither the men nor the missiles to give direct assistance in battle, but there are many things we can do to help ensure that our friends and allies have the best chance possible in a showdown. One of the most important of these I suggest is to help and not hinder the United States in those measures which that country sincerely believes are essential to her and our defence.

If it were up to me, I would be in Washington today pressing the United States government to instal more of these anti-ballistic missile sites much farther north, in our northern and Arctic territory. If there must be nuclear explosions of the type suggested by some people perhaps it would be better if these explosions took place over our Arctic or even farther away over Soviet Siberia. I think that would please us in western Canada much more.

There is an unpleasant, mean-spirited theory current today in this country that we can have our cake and eat it too; that is, that we can enjoy all the benefits of having a guardian without doing anything to help him. Some promoters of this theory go even further. They would even hold his arm when it is raised to ward off a blow. This criticism of the United States defence plans is part and parcel of a new and most unsavoury national stance that Canada has adopted ever since 1963 when the present government came to power. This stance has resulted in Canada's reputation abroad hitting rock bottom.

I suggest that the recent public questioning of our relations with NATO have spread dismay and disgust among Europeans and Americans alike. We have given the appearance of wanting all the benefits of a defensive alliance without being willing to pay part of the bill. We only offend by our preaching, our "holier than thou" attitude and criticism. In this instance, we have not even been asked to pay anything. It seems to me that Canada will have to make up its mind whether it is pro-Communist or pro-democratic. I think we should do that soon. India and several other countries have shown the futility of trying to form a third group. We have only one choice, which is to be for or against our own history. If we are for the free world, if we stand with the western democratic nations still, then in God's name let us say so clearly, loudly and in unmistakable terms.

Our present posture of questioning and doubt can do only a disservice to our friends and a greater disservice to Canada. If we do stand with the west, then let us make up our minds to shoulder the burden and the responsibility that that stance entails. We may not like the role circumstances force upon us. We may question methods and quibble about details; but if we stand for what we say we stand for we have no choice but to go along with those who call the shots for our side by virtue of their vastly greater financial, military and political abilities and sacrifices.

If we stand with the west, then we stand with the United States. If we stand with the United States we do our part, even if this part is small and negative, amounting to nothing more than desisting from destructive criticism and petty nagging. It might be well for those who today are carping at the United States for adopting this anti-missile defence system to remember that it was the Soviet Union which set the example in this regard. It was the Soviet Union which erected a similar system around its capital and broadly hinted that additions would soon make their territory invulnerable.

I would simply ask that the critics of the action of the United States consider one question. Where would Canada be and where would those hon. members be if the Soviet Union alone was invulnerable to attack by I.C.B.M.s, and thus able to dictate terms to the free world? It may be that there are some Canadians who wish this were so, and who look for the day of a Communist triumph. They might welcome worldwide domination by the Kremlin. That would at least give some logical basis to some of the arguments and criticism we have heard in respect of United States action.

Those Canadians who sincerely wish to see national freedom and individual liberty preserved have no other choice but to stand or fall with the United States. When your life is being protected it seems not only extremely petty but actually idiotic to quibble about the manner in which your saviour is doing it.

Not very long ago we heard the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) move a motion to adjourn the regular business of the house to consider a matter requiring urgent public consideration. In part he said:

—given this fact plus the broader world danger implication, that the construction of this A.B.M. system may further escalate the nuclear arms race—

This statement made me wonder why he or some other member in his party did not move a similar motion in the early 1960's when the U.S.S.R. announced the construction of its defensive missile system. I think the hon. member was here at that time.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, since I have been asked a question—

Mr. McIntosh: I will let you answer later on, since I have two or three questions to ask.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. The hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek has the floor.

Mr. McIntosh: I should like to answer that question now, Mr. Speaker, but I have several other questions I should like to ask first.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member should either not ask questions or, if he does, he should let an hon. member answer. He asked me why I did not refer to this matter in 1960. My answer is that I was not in the house in 1960.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Order, please. If there is time later, the hon. member will have an opportunity to answer.

Mr. McIntosh: I fail to understand the point of order. I think the hon. member completely ignored the fact that he will have an opportunity later on to answer this question plus the others I wish to ask. In any event, there was no cry from the hon. member at that time about the further escalation of the nuclear arms race, and there was no cry from any other member of his party. There was no protest from that party about the escalation of nuclear power by Russia and other socialist countries when it was announced that the U.S.S.R. had 67 of these Galosh sites deployed near and around Moscow. I did not hear any member of the N.D.P. protest this action at that time.

An hon. Member: They are from Russia, that's why.

Mr. McIntosh: I understand that the system in Russia is called the "Galosh system". Perhaps hon. members on the other side do not have their facts straight. Let me refer to another statement the hon. member made in support of this motion.

It is quite clear that the United States in deciding to construct this new A.B.M. system did not seek or obtain the Canadian government's permission for such thermonuclear missile flights over Canada, which means that interception would take over Canadian territory causing extensive nuclear fallout.

Such a statement means that the hon. member is aware of at least two facts about this matter. First, he is aware that the American Spartan and Sprint missiles are purely defensive weapons. Secondly, he knows that there would have to be something to intercept before they would ever be fired. I should like a member of the N.D.P. to tell this house what these missiles are going to intercept. Perhaps they are going to intercept friendly missiles directed to the N.D.P. I should also like to ask the hon. member, when he insists we demand the United States get Canada's permission to establish their defensive system, whether it is not logical that we demand also that the U.S.S.R. and China get our permission to fire offensive missiles across our territory before they launch a nuclear attack against the United States.

Let me suggest that we should be realistic. As I said at the start and as everyone knows, such an undertaking would never be entertained. This is something that the N.D.P. fails to realize. History reveals that neutrality is respected by an aggressor nation only as long as it suits the aggressor's purposes.

Having regard to the first fact emphasized by the hon. member's motion that the Spartan and the Sprint—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but his time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Béchard): Does the house agree that the hon. member should continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIntosh: I will not be very long, Mr. Speaker, and I should like to thank my colleagues in the house for this courtesy.

The United States is only protecting itself against a form of blackmail from any other country which feels it has a definite system that could not be penetrated by a retaliatory force, or against any nation that might feel by striking the first blow a victory might be secured. The United States is only protecting itself against blackmail. The president himself has said this is the case. The main purpose of the United States Safeguard system is to preserve the credibility of the United States and its capability, which is actually a deterrent. This is what we want.

The Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs made reference to the conference held by the President of the United States last Friday. Some of the points to which I should like to refer have been mentioned by other hon. members. I think it is of benefit to Canada and the Canadian people that the president of the United States made a statement in respect of protection to Canada. Let me read from the statement he made to show what I mean. The president indicated that there is no way we can adequately defend our cities without an unacceptable loss of lives. He also stated:

> The program I am recommending is based on a careful assessment of the developing Soviet and Chinese threats.

He then went on to state:

> Each phase of the deployment will be reviewed to insure that we are doing as much as necessary but no more than that required by the threat existing at that time.

The statement then goes on as follows:

• (11:00 p.m.)

> Since our deployment is to be closely related to the threat, it is subject to modification as the threat changes, either through negotiations or through unilateral actions by the Soviet Union or communist China.
>
> The program is not provocative. The Soviet retaliatory capability is not affected by our decision. The capability for surprise attack against our strategic forces is reduced. In other words, our program provides an incentive for a responsible Soviet weapons policy and for the avoidance of spiralling U.S. and Soviet strategic arms budgets—
> Moreover, I wish to emphasize that in any arms limitation talks with the Soviet Union, the United States will be fully prepared to discuss limitations on defensive as well as offensive weapons systems—
> This is why I am recommending a minimum program essential for our security—

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

> I am announcing a decision which I believe is vital for the security and defence of the United States, and also in the interest of peace throughout the world—
> It is a safeguard against any attack by the Chinese communists that we can foresee over the next ten years.
> It is a safeguard of our deterrent system, which is increasingly vulnerable due to the advances that have been made by the Soviet Union since the year 1967 when the Sentinel program was first laid out.
> It is a safeguard also against any irrational or accidental attack that might occur of less than massive magnitude which might be launched from the Soviet Union—
> The only way that I have concluded that we can save lives, which is the primary purpose of our defence system, is to prevent war, and that is why the emphasis of this system is on protecting our deterrent, which is the best preventive for war.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I believe this debate has been unnecessary and, in fact, insulting.

An hon. Member: Then why have you taken part in it?

Mr. McIntosh: Let us not be so ungracious and unmannerly as to criticize the man we hire to protect us. That is the situation today. For various reasons, some good and some bad, Canada cannot hope to adequately defend herself; we must rely on another or others. As this is the case, let us help and not hinder them. It is my hope that the Prime Minister, while in Washington this week end, will assure President Nixon that Canada has made up her mind and agrees to the necessity of the A.B.M. system; that we will do whatever is reasonable to make it as effective as possible.

Mr. Ross Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house will be very pleased when I say that I intend to be very brief indeed. The first thing I want to say is that, while I cannot agree completely with the last speaker, in my opinion he hit the nail reasonably well on the head. I congratulate him for bringing this problem to the attention of the house in a way that I consider was most capable.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: I do not want to walk many miles around the question; I want to go in a direct line. I say that if I have the opportunity to be pro-Chinese, pro-Russian or pro-American, I will be pro-American every time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Firing of A.B.M. Warheads over Canada

Mr. Whicher: I say, further, that when we in this country have the opportunity to have people defend us, our way of life, our democracy, our children and ourselves, without costing us a single nickel, we should accept it with no questions asked whatsoever.

This is, of course, a very serious problem. We have in years gone by had the opportunity, if one might call it that, of waging war. Certainly, during the last two world wars we did a very creditable job and, as Canadians, we should be very proud of ourselves. But now the time has come when, because of the great advancement in weapons, we simply must appreciate the fact that not only can we not wage war offensivly but we cannot wage war defensively. We must have the help of our neighbours.

The only major powers in the world today which have the capability of waging the kind of war that we are speaking about tonight are our neighbours to the south, the Soviet Union and communist China. I ask my hon. friends to my left this question: If they had to choose between the Russians and Americans, would they prefer the Russians, or the Americans? I think any member of this house who has any degree of common sense whatsoever would agree that, in spite of the fact that the Americans are not always 100 per cent right, they are much more credible neighbours than any other country in the world could possibly be.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Several ministers and members of the opposition have raised the point that the anti-ballistic missiles which are to be placed on American territory in the next several years are defensive weapons. I ask this question: Is there anywhere in the world, under our way of life, that man does not have the right to defend himself? If somebody goes into your house with a gun and tries to hold you up, do you not have the right to defend yourself by firing back?

This is the question facing our American friends. They are not going to fire the first weapon as far as these anti-ballistic missiles are concerned. They are strictly a defensive weapon. The missiles that may be going over our heads will be either Russian or Chinese. The ones our American friends will put up will be in defence of not only the United States but the whole continent of North America, which includes Canada. I think we should appreciate the situation and should not be wishy-washy about it.

[Mr. Whicher.]

As my friend, the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) said, we can make our choice in life; we can be either pro-democratic, pro-American, or pro-communist. There is no use trying to walk the line which divides these ideologies. We cannot stay on the fence in this regard. We cannot tread on broken glass in this respect. The Czechoslovakians tried that; the Finnish people tried it; the Polish people tried it and the Germans tried it. Is there anybody in this house who would suggest that Berlin would not be in Soviet hands today were it not for the power of the United States? Is there anybody who would suggest that the whole of Europe would not be in Soviet hands were it not for our friends to the south? Thank heaven we have them. Thank heaven these people are willing to put up not only the money but the weapons in order to defend our way of life.

We have an obligation not only to the people of this country, not only to our children, but to those who died in the last two world wars, those who fought for our way of life. I appreciate my hon. friend saying that he is of the younger generation, and of course he is. He suggested that his generation had grown up since the last war. But there are many people in this chamber, and in Canada, who remember the great sacrifice that was made by Canadian troops on land, sea and air to defend our way of life. The Americans are not asking that we do this. They are willing to do it for us. They are willing to not only extract the necessary money from their taxpayers' pockets but to supply the weapons and the men to defend our way of life.

• (11:10 p.m.)

In conclusion, let us remember that this is of course our country, and we must have the say as to what happens in it. We must remember also that this is our continent, that besides being Canadians we are North Americans. If we can justly say that we are North Americans, then we must also remember that our friends to the south are also North Americans and they are not just interested in the defence of the United States. As a matter of fact, they are not just interested in the defence of North America. They have made many mistakes, but this is not one of them by any means. I think they have justly tried with their power, their might and their goodness to defend the democratic way of life all over this world.

I cannot help but think that when a motion such as was given to us this afternoon is made, there is a certain amount of anti-Americanism expressed. I do not blame my friends to the left, although I do not agree with their policies, when they say that the Americans control our industries. I am not critical of that. Nor do I blame them when they say that the Americans control our oil interests. Personally, I could not care less so long as they employ Canadian workmen, pay Canadian taxes and obey Canadian laws. But when they suggest that the Americans are wrong in trying to defend themselves; that they are wrong in employing defensive not offensive weapons, then I say, with all due respect to my friends to the left, that this is anti-Americanism which is not popular in Canada. I hope it is not popular anywhere in the whole world.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I take part in this debate with some trepidation because I cannot for one moment pretend to be an expert in the military technology of missile and nuclear warfare. I take part only as Joe Citizen who represents many other Mr. and Mrs. Joe Citizens in my constituency, who are voiceless and defenceless in matters such as the location of an A.B.M. system and who are, I submit, under-represented. They do not have enough access to information to intelligently decide what decisions they feel should be made. I suggest that this applies to many Mr. and Mrs. Joe Citizens in Canada as well as in my own riding. So, I hope that however inadequate my remarks may be I can to some degree express the feelings of ordinary Joe Citizens.

I do not know who it was who said that wars were too important to be left in the hands of generals. Personally, I have often felt appalled at the kind of statements made by generals on both sides of the Iron Curtain. They have contributed more to the continuation of hatred and mistrust among nations on both sides of the Iron Curtain than any other group of citizens in those respective societies.

I listened to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) express pleasure at the fact that this debate was allowed by you, Mr. Speaker, today. I was, therefore, a little disappointed at the comments made by a member of his party and by a member of the official opposition that this debate was a waste of time, or words to that effect. We all listened with attention to the remarks of the Prime Minister and, if I understood him correctly, he let us know that he and his government, as I inferred from his words, have not yet made up their minds on this matter. He does not wish to take a stand at this time until he is able to get more facts and more information. He will then have a free hand.

If this is the position of the Prime Minister, then I find it passing strange that the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) should spend a great deal of time quoting the President of the United States and quoting statistics defending the A.B.M. system. I have a strange feeling that either a "snow" job is being done on the members of this house by the government or that there are some deep divisions within the government on the pros and cons of an A.B.M. system. I feel there are those, including the Prime Minister, who have some sincere and deep reservations about it, and there are others, including the Minister of National Defence and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp), who do not have reservations about it but who support and applaud the installation of an A.B.M. system.

The Prime Minister said that we are all interested in protecting our people and our cities. I hope he was not trying to give an impression that an A.B.M. system is designed to protect our cities or, for that matter, any of the cities in the United States. I do not think he was, and if he was I hope that sometime soon he will clarify these remarks. As I understand it, the decision made by President Nixon places the A.B.M. system away from U.S. cities. The system is designed to protect their own I.C.B.M. sites and to protect their first and second strike capability. It is not designed to protect Canadian cities, and now it appears the decision has been made that it will not protect American cities. The A.B.M. system is designed to protect the U.S. offensive capability. I submit that it logically follows the A.B.M. system which is proposed is an offensive system. If so, this throws into a cocked hat the entire proposal made by President Nixon that the A.B.M. system will be for defensive purposes only.

A number of speakers tonight have said that they doubted whether the installation of this system would cause an escalation of the arms race. It seems to me there is overwhelming evidence that it will inevitably escalate the arms race no matter how small, minor or thin the system may be, it seems to me that we might assume that the Russian system is bad and that the Russians are ignorant, but we cannot assume that they are stupid. For anyone to suggest that the building and perfection of a modern, up-to-date A.B.M. system in the U.S. will not be immediately followed by similar action on the part of the Russians is a grand delusion. As I understand it, in the late 50s and early 60s when the Americans were constructing their Sentinel system, which was designed to defend cities such as Washington, the Russians were constructing a similar system to protect Moscow. There is not the remotest resemblance between the now obsolete system which surrounds Moscow and Washington and what is now proposed by President Nixon. To hold these up as an example, I submit, is not in accordance with either the history or the facts of the present A.B.M. system. It is not, in fact, the same as the A.B.M. systems that were installed in the late 50s and early 60s around Moscow and Washington. As my leader mentioned today, the obsolete system that surrounds Moscow consists of 67 weapons, as compared to what is proposed by President Nixon which has 700 weapons. I suggest that it is perfectly logical and inevitable that the Russians will also endeavour to instal a thin A.B.M. system of 700 or more weapons. For anyone to suggest that this will not bring about a further escalation is nonsense.

There are certain rationalisations put forward by the President of the United States. It should be noted that he seems to have something less than majority opinion on his side on this issue. One of these rationalisations is that the A.B.M. system should be built to protect the United States from rockets the Chinese might fire. There appears to be an animalistic viewpoint held by military men in North America that the Chinese are not people, and that they do not, therefore, think and react like people. It is passing strange that we should need an A.B.M. system to protect North America against Chinese missiles while at the same time being prepared, as Professor Wiesner pointed out, not to build one if the Russians would agree to follow suit. Surely, this lack of logic is evidence of some kind of insanity. If the system is necessary to defend us against Chinese missiles, it would be most embarrassing if the Russians were to agree to negotiate on the basis that they would refrain from building one if we would also refrain from doing so. What would happen to the China argument in that event?

One has the impression that the military and government mind in the United States maintains this animalistic view that there are Chinese people huddling in caves putting together a rocket made out of nuts, bolts and tin cans with an atomic weapon at the head of it and that as soon as the work is done they will fire it off for two reasons: first, to see whether it works, and, second to hit the United States.

I suspect that when China does develop its intercontinental rocketry the rockets will be aimed in two directions. It is just possible that the U.S.S.R. and the United States might combine their A.B.M. system, and here Canada could play the part of an honest broker. We might arrange for them to meet at the DEW line.

For anyone to suggest there would not be escalation as the result of an A.B.M. system constructed by the United States or by the U.S.S.R. would be to mislead the people of this country. I submit that the reasons put forward by the President of the United States and echoed by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) in this house tonight are illogical, inadequate, irrelevant.

I call as witnesses a number of people who I do not think can be considered unknowledgeable with regard to matters such as this, namely, former Vice-President Hubert Humphrey, Senator Edward Kennedy, Senator Mike Mansfield, Senator McGovern, Professor Wiesner, scientific advisor to the late President Kennedy, and others. There is a list of names as long as your arm of prominent, knowledgeable men with access to the necessary information who have repeatedly stated that in their opinion construction of an A.B.M. system is a continuation of the race to suicide.

As the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) said earlier this evening, the President of the United States has not got this proposition through Congress as yet and it is a fairly even bet that he may not get it through Congress. It would be most embarrassing for the military minds in the United States, and it would be embarrassing for those in Canada who went along with this proposal, if the United States Congress rejected it, if the representatives of the American people voted against this expenditure of billions of dollars on a system which Professor Wiesner says will be obsolete by the time it is finished.

Mention has been made this evening of consultation. The Minister of National Defence questioned the stand taken by our party on the issue of consultation. If we were not a member of NORAD, he asked, how could we expect to engage in consultation with the United States. I submit we could quite properly consult with the United States and make representations as a friend and as a neighbour. We could quite properly be vociferous and firm in our representations if the interests of Canada were affected. It is not necessary to retain membership in NORAD, an obsolete arrangement, for us to take advantage of our friendship with our neighbour to consult on these issues. We need this consultation in order that Canada can make firm and full representations to the United States government in an effort to persuade that government to reconsider its decision to instal the threatened A.B.M. system.

It is not too late. Canada could have a voice which would be listened to with respect and understanding even if her opinions were not shared. The Minister of National Defence, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) could do not only Canada but the nations of the world a great favour. I believe they could even do Mr. Nixon a favour. It might well be that, privately, Mr. Nixon would welcome representations from friendly governments asking him to change his mind so that he could use these arguments against the arguments of the military and industrial complex which have mounted the most unholy pressure on the present and previous presidents of the United States to develop this system—anything to make a buck. And seven billion dollars spent on the A.B.M. system amount to a lot of bucks for a lot of generals and corporations who specialize in perfecting machines to kill. I submit that if Canada were a true friend and neighbour, in or out of NORAD, she ought to make this kind of representation to the President. I add my request that this course be followed, to those of the leader of my party, of other members of my party and, I dare say, of members of other parties in this house as well, because there is certainly no unanimity among the other parties on this issue. I was surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) tonight supporting this missile system since he was a member of a Conservative government which opposed nuclear weapons on Canadian soil. That policy has not yet been officially repudiated, though perhaps it has been repudiated unofficially.

I ask, as a Joe Citizen speaking on behalf of a lot of other Joe Citizens, that the Prime Minister and his colleagues proceed to Washington next week and urge upon the President of the United States in the firmest as well as in the friendliest fashion, that the construction of this system is unnecessary; that it would lead to escalation and lead to increased difficulty in negotiating arms reduction. I would ask, too, that they meet with members of United States Congress who have differing opinions on this subject. It would be well for them to hear the views of Senator Kennedy, former Vice-President Humphrey, Senator McGovern and Senator Mansfield. I may say, for the benefit of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and the hon. member who spoke after him, that these are men who cannot be accused of being "pinkos" or communists or sympathetic to the U.S.S.R. and so forth, the kind of nonsense we have heard so many times in this chamber and outside. We have a real opportunity to make a contribution towards understanding in the world, peace and the reduction of weapons. It is a delusion to think that an anti-ballistic missile system will contribute to the defence of North America. It is not designed to defend North America. It is designed to defend the United States offensive missile capacity, and nothing else.

Mr. Alastair Gillespie (Etobicoke): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late. We have heard many words this evening, some of them thoughtful, some of them quiet, some naive and others angry. Throughout, I think we could detect a yearning for peace, quiet and serenity in the world, reflecting man's frustration in dealing with cosmic forces over which he has no control.

In moving the adjournment motion the leader of the N.D.P. did this house a great service. After listening to his words I thought to myself that that was the only contribution he made. His were brave words—some of them were at any rate. He said we must not be subordinated. Listening to him, I wondered if he understood the idea of deterrence. When I heard the last speaker say that the A.B.M. system is designed to protect United States offensive capacity I wondered if he, too, understood the principle of deterrence. The leader of the N.D.P. reminded us of the nuclear holocaust, the arms race and of our need to participate in controlling it. These were useful reminders. He also spoke as if he were a member of a movement that practised the politics of non-involvement. His sort of argument really, was, "We will determine the ends you must seek but we will not tell you how you ought to arrive at those ends. We will criticize; we will warn you of the dangers, but do not look to us for any suggestions, because we have none." That, it seemed to me, was his position and the position of his party. It was a position of non-responsibility. They alone can indulge in the luxury of offering gratuitous advice.

This evening the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) spoke about the protection of Canadians and of all mankind. He spoke of the fate of humanity, emphasizing reason, not fear; reality and not the Alice in Wonderland world of international affairs that some hon. members preferred this evening. He referred to stability and perspective, to interdependence as opposed to dependence. He spoke of the need for stability of the deterrent system and that if any missile went off, the whole system would have failed. He spoke of the need, in his conversation with the United States President, to discuss the question of preventing escalation of nuclear capability and warned of accidents arising from miscalculation.

A real problem may arise through miscalculation. The A.B.M. system probably may be so automated that human decision will not enter into the question of whether a defensive missile is to be fired or not fired. I hope this point is discussed and clarified. It seems to me that it is possible for an anti-ballistic missile to be fired, without human decision, at a piece of space hardware returning to earth. If that happened it might stimulate concern or even panic in certain quarters, causing an inadvertent escalation of nuclear exchanges. That is what I think the Prime Minister meant when he talked of the dangers of miscalculation.

I do not propose to deal with all matters raised by the Conservative Party here. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) spoke about the question of consultation, regretting the lack of consultation although recognizing that the United States President had every right to make his decision without prior consultation.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) spoke of the notion of sovereignty of air space. We must ask ourselves, how far up does sovereignty extend? Does it extend up to 75 miles above the earth, or up to 35 miles? I hope the Prime Minister will discuss this with the President and perhaps take the initiative in suggesting new approaches to the control and use of outer space.

In this debate we have been reminded that the world order is not one we would choose if we had any choice in the matter. It is dominated by the super powers. We are part of that world order, and its fate will be our fate. We have been reminded of the frightening prospect arising from nuclear miscalculation. There are no instant solutions to the difficulties of our world order. We must remember to take a long perspective when looking at international settlements; that the settlement may take generations to come and that we mus be prepared to pay a price for it. It is easy to say that our NORAD and NATO alliances have outgrown their usefulness and are no longer relevant in today's world. These alliances have maintained the peace of the world for the last 20 years, a peace that could only be maintained by a stability based on recognition of deterrence as we work towards detente.

In closing, I urge the house to recognize the dangers of miscalculation. I hope our Prime Minister will discuss this aspect with the President. I also hope he will discuss with him the whole question of whether A.B.M. systems are likely in any way to restrict the opportunity that may arise for a planned reduction in nuclear armaments. I hope also that he will raise the question of civilian control of these systems and civilian control of the Pentagon. In my view this is a legitimate question for our Prime Minister to raise with the President of the United States. After all, we are members of NATO and NORAD. If we were not, I do not think we would have the same right. Certainly, our voice would not carry the same emphasis. I hope he will discuss the question of stability with the President of the United States vis-à-vis China because there are shifts in the international power balance. Above all, Mr. Speaker, I hope that he says that Canada regards the United States as a friend and recognizes that the security of Canada depends on the security of the United States.

• (11:40 p.m.)

Mr. William Skoreyko (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because I think I have some small contribution to make. I listened with patience to the Prime Minister's (Mr. Trudeau) calm and rational language when making his remarks this evening, although I firmly believe if he made any points they were somewhat vague. On the other hand, the Secretary of State of External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) delivered to this house this evening a sincere and blunt address. After having listened to his predecessor for many years, Mr. Speaker, it was rather refreshing to hear a clear expression of concern in respect of the issue being discussed.

On March 17, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Stanfield) asked a question of the Prime Minister in the following terms:

> I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether his government has studied the decision by the President of the United States to build an anti-missile defence system and if the government of Canada has considered the possible implications for Canada of the President's decision?

The Prime Minister replied that the matter was under consideration and he was not able to make any firm decision on this point. The Leader of the Opposition then asked a supplementary question:

> —is the Prime Minister free to tell the house whether the government of the United States consulted the government of Canada on this matter and whether Canada made any representations to the United States in this regard?

The Leader of the Opposition was concerned whether actual deliberation or discussion in respect of this matter had in fact taken place. We were told this afternoon by a member of the cabinet that discussions had not taken place. The Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) stated earlier this evening that this matter had been under discussion for approximately 10 years. No one has suggested that the A.B.M. systems were weapons of aggression. They are merely weapons of defence. I hope that the Prime Minister will take a positive position on Monday and Tuesday of next week. I wish him well in his deliberations in Washington.

I listened with a great interest, Mr. Speaker, when members of the N.D.P. spoke earlier this evening. I feel there is a great misunderstanding in that party with regard to the issue under discussion. I am not sure they understood what their motion was about this afternoon. The real issue under discussion is whether we want defensive weapons, not offensive weapons. We are not suggesting that we are going to acquire offensive weapons of any nature. We are discussing whether we are going to allow the United States to use ground and air space for installation of A.B.M.'s for self-preservation.

I listened with interest to the young member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom). He described his generation as the generation born after the depression of 1935 and indeed after the last war. He described them as a bunch of gutless homo-sapiens, who could not or did not care to look after themselves. I do not believe that, Mr. Speaker, because I have four young sons who I am sure would defend this country.

Mr. Gilbert: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I am certain that the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville did not use those words. I am sure the hon. member misunderstood and will be glad to withdraw them.

Mr. Skoreyko: I do not see any point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The inference was in his remarks. He could not agree with the decision of the government to take any steps to protect the nation. After all, who were the "reds" to be worried about? The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville seems to adopt the attitude seen in the Yorkville district of Toronto of simply disarming. If an enemy happens to strike, turn the other cheek. The hon. member says, withdraw. He says, "Let's get out of NATO and NORAD. Forget about our defences. If we are helpless militarily, nobody is going to bother us." What kind of reasoning is that? I understand the hon. member is in the teaching profession. If he recalls his history, he will know that militarily adequate countries are no longer in existence.

The leader of that party made the usual speech. He has jumped from policy to policy, riding to riding, and I hope some day he will jump from country to country. I agree with the principle of non-proliferation talks and with the initiative of disarmament talks. Who in this house would suggest that we disarm first and then try to negotiate world peace? It is like walking into a bear pit without a gun.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) stated this evening the A.B.M. installations might contribute to some degree to nuclear world balance. I agree with that principle. Shortly after the last election, the Prime Minister told the people of Canada on a national television broadcast that Canada's participation in NATO and NORAD would be reviewed. A committee of the house is now in Europe visiting the installations. I hope they will visit NORAD at the same time. It is reasonable to assume that upon its return this committee will make appropriate recommendations to this house. I hope their recommendations include suggestions that Canada remain in NATO and NORAD. I hope there will be no suggestion of any significant reduction in those two bodies. Any reductions in NORAD or NATO should coincide with similar reductions and effectiveness within the Warsaw pact alliance. Contrary to the relief of some of our flower-power advocates, the North Atlantic Treaty and NATO should be maintained and we, as a sovereign nation, should live up to our responsibilities in that regard.

When you look at the record militarily of Canada to this point, it is disturbing to note that since December, 1967, our contribution to NATO has been reduced to one army brigade in Europe, two full brigades at home, and one transportable brigade on tap in Canada. The air division has been reduced to six squadrons, running out through possible attrition in the early 1970's. We, as a nation, can afford more and should do more than that. Now, I wish to say something about NORAD, Mr. Speaker.

NORAD is the first two-nation military command to operate on this continent. Its 170,000 personnel at some 400 posts in the United States and Canada have been operating well, and the fact that it has not been called into action is the best reason for its existence. NORAD has worked on the theory that if you are powerful enough no potential enemy would start a conflict. Cuba may have been a reasonable example of that.

On reflection it should be pointed out that the United States and Canada began building up their defences after the outbreak of the Korean war in 1950. The decision was quickly made that co-operation, and co-operation only, was not enough; that what was really needed was a joint defence effort with complete co-ordination to meet the bomber threat of that time—bombers with increasing speeds and greater capacities to deliver lethal weapons with more accuracy.

Since its inception the system has undergone continuing review with respect to modernization, expansion and effectiveness. Antiquated radar systems, which covered only prime industrial targets, have been replaced with the most modern sensor equipment covering the entire continent. The need for this modernization was recognized with the advancement which had taken place in the development of supersonic bombers, rocket ammunition and guided missiles.

The next requirement which was met was the need for information inflow which had to be accurate in respect of immediate identification. The volume of information required new and sophisticated computer systems which would analyse and advise NORAD. This was achieved by a system known as "SAGE". All members who have interested themselves in this aspect of our North American defence system know how well SAGE has functioned, even though information available to members of parliament is limited in scope and often very sketchy.

Today, the threat is not so much that of bomber attack, although I am sure the presence of bombers would be felt. The fact remains that initially the targets would be hit by I.C.B.M.'s and NORAD, I believe, has the facility to deal with these. Today, the threat looms greater in light of newer, more sophisticated intercontinental ballistic missiles.

There have been developments by some other great powers. China has now emerged as a new threat in the nuclear field, and what weaponry that nation may develop is as yet relatively unknown. The fact is that China becomes another valid reason why North American defences should be constantly upgraded, and I for one would gladly support the government in any action it would take to assist the United States in setting up such defences. I support the principle that security and freedom do not come cheaply and, within our ability to pay our contribution to North American defence, in co-operation with our greatest ally, should no longer be minimal.

I think that to some extent we in Canada are greedy people when we do not hesitate to lobby for our share of the defence dollar to be spent supporting our industries, but at the same time we offer only token support for our own defence, and indeed for our survival. This is grossly unfair.

I hold little or no brief for our so-called flower-power advocates who suggest that the United States should be denied air space over Canada. Such a view against North American defence is un-Canadian and indefensible. I am proud to be living next door to a great neighbour whom everyone knows has problems not dissimilar to ours with respect to poverty and urban blight. But the fact is that the United States has the courage to develop defensive techniques which are costly, indeed very costly. If my information is correct the new

A.B.M. system will cost in excess of $5 billion. To deny our neighbour the use of our ground and air space for our mutual preservation would not only be denying Canadians the security which they deserve and cannot afford, but would be turning our backs on the fundamental principles of self-preservation.

Mr. Barney Danson (York North): Mr. Speaker, my words serve only to emphasize those of my colleague from Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) and also to deal with other matters which have been raised in this debate. There are times when one is not so proud to be in this house due to the conduct of people and the quality of debate, but I do not think we can say that about this evening's debate. I think the motivation of it was perhaps ill-founded but sincere. I think that the contribution to it by all has been of high standard, and given with sincerity even if we do not always agree. I am particularly proud of the contributions of the leader of my party, of the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Sharp) and of the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cadieux) for the semblance of reality they brought to a very serious subject.

In my short time here, Mr. Speaker, I have found that one of the easiest areas in which to make simple judgments is that of external affairs. Yet as one gets into it, one realizes that simple judgments are simply not valid. The complexities are indeed great, but it is very simple for those without the responsibility to criticize and almost appear credible.

The eloquence of the leader of the New Democratic party and the eloquence of the leader of the Creditiste party is at times captivating in its simplicity. One could accept their simplistic statements if one did not think about them, but we must deal with realities and the realities are not always pleasant. We have to live in the world as it is rather than how we would like it to be, and this is not always easy.

The Minister of National Defence read an inventory of weaponry that was chilling, but yet this is a fact of life. It reminded me of the time about 25 years ago I was listening in a convalescent hospital to a radio broadcast when Mr. Harry Truman, then President of the United States, announced the dropping of the first atomic bomb on Hiroshima. It opened up vistas of horror that one could barely imagine. Those who at that time realized the significance of this saw that horror and wondered how to cope with it.

The easy answer at that time was that our side had the bomb and we might as well use it before the other side got it. By doing so we would eliminate fewer people than if both sides had the bomb and used it. But fortunately some sanity prevailed and we have through some peculiar system of balances developed an arsenal of weaponry which has kept us at a relative level of peace, at least saving us from total destruction over those years, which is remarkable considering the potential for destruction that exists by error, let alone design.

I really get terribly upset when I hear my hon. friends across the way refer to anyone who shows any sense of reality in this situation, any knowledge about the real effects of this weaponry, the dangers of this weaponry, and is able to list an inventory of it, as a hawk. We do not have an easy answer to this, but we must know what we are talking about. We should forget about this weaponry and direct our energies along more constructive lines. I was thinking of the conference on housing at which Mr. Buckminster Fuller said that we have to do something even though we cannot afford it. He pointed out that when there are things such as wars, we do handle the problem and raise the money. But, unfortunately, that is an oversimplification, because we cannot deal with life and our problems in separate compartments; they are all part of the whole. My friend, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) is delightfully naïve. It is a pleasure to see him in this house with his lovely young fiancee. They have all their lives ahead of them. They deserve a lot of credit for the courage they have in facing a very complicated future.

The answers are not simple. It is so easy to blame things on the faults of past generations. As I said the other day, this generation can and will make mistakes just as we have made ours. It is very easy to have 20-20 hindsight, but it is foresight, courage and realism we need. The concern of all of us here is for peace. I really believe this is the concern of the President of the United States and the people of the United States. We may not agree with their way of going about it, but to try to support debating points over this is really not resolving our problem; nor is it any good to stand by being "ready, yea, ready".

We have a legitimate point to make; that is, that we want to maintain the sovereignty that is ours. As my friend, the hon. member for Etobicoke (Mr. Gillespie) said, we can stand up and express our views because we have stood up and accepted our responsibilities. I believe all of us here are united in one concern. We believe that any further escalation should be avoided; but the crux of this whole debate tonight is that we are not talking about escalation.

If the Russians were to introduce a new system of A.B.M.'s as a result of this system of A.B.M.'s, I think it would be a stabilizing instrument for peace. If we accept the premise that these are defensive weapons, this could lessen the possibility of war. I would like to find some better answer. I think and hope that the answer might be found in Geneva by the efforts of our ambassador, Mr. Ignatieff, who has been mentioned several times tonight. I do not believe that will be simple. I think as our concern is equal in respect of peace and harmony in the world, although the way we go about things may be different, this debate has served a useful purpose in focusing the concern Canada has in respect of this problem. As our Prime Minister goes to Washington I believe the hopes of all members of this house and all people of the country will go with him. He will discuss these problems with the President of the United States with a realism and knowledge which is sometimes not available to us in matters of defence and external affairs.

Our Prime Minister goes to Washington on our behalf, as he said today, in the legitimate interests of all mankind. He can go there with his head held high on our behalf because, when the chips have been down, we have shouldered our responsibilities. I hope we never lose our sense of responsibility in this regard.

Mr. Ray Perrault (Burnaby-Seymour): Mr. Speaker, I intend to speak for about two minutes because I know the hour is very late. Some excellent speeches have been made in this debate. The members are concerned about the issues of peace and war. Most members know that in the real world of 1969 we are very much involved in the fate of the world and indeed the North American continent in the future. It is a deplorable and tragic measure of our failure to establish a climate of trust and confidence that such fantastic amounts are spent by all nations, whatever their ideology, on military weapons, offensive and defensive.

One of the truly great Canadians was the founder of the C.C.F. party, J. S. Woodsworth, the member at one time for Winnipeg North Centre. This evening, as I have been listening to the debate, I have been reading the great war debates which took place in 1939. One cannot help but be moved by what was said by the late J. S. Woodsworth on that occasion. His photograph occupies a place of honour in N.D.P. halls throughout this country and for good reason.

Even this great idealist, this good man, the philosopher of the New Democratic party, which party has sponsored the resolution we have been discussing tonight, recognized that Canada's position in North America imposes certain imperatives. I shall conclude merely by quoting what J. S. Woodsworth said in 1939. On the eve of the great tragedy of the second world war he said:

> Canada is situated on the North American continent. Geographically and economically we are North America. To no small extent the attitude of our great neighbour must be a determining factor in our international relations—

Then, Woodsworth said:

> We have boasted of the unguarded border between ourselves and the United States, but we cannot assume too lightly that this condition will continue forever. We assume that the United States is going to be forever with us. I hope that they will always be sympathetic with us—

He went on to say:

> I believe that the greatest contribution that Canada can make—

Talking about the conditions at the time, he said:

> —is to maintain the most friendly possible relations with the United States.

Woodsworth's words in 1939 I think have meaning in 1969 in the context of this debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to section 13 of Standing Order 26 I am satisfied that the debate has been concluded. I, therefore, declare the motion carried. This house stands adjourned until today at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2, subsection (1).

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 12.10 a.m.
