THE Lady of the Night
 —OR—
Amelia Makes a Success

CHAPTER IV.
 THE FAIR AMELIA.

It happened to see her one night on the stage—happy night for me!—and a friend took me behind and introduced me. I fell in love with her at once, Nora. We went about together, and well, you know the rest. Of course, I know what you are thinking, dear—that a lady who has appeared on the stage is not quite—er—up to our class; but Amelia is very different to other people of that kind. She is a lady, as you see; the daughter of a clergyman—a dean, I believe. And when you come to think of it, the condescension—if there is any, which, of course, there isn't—was on Amelia's part. Only a week before I proposed to her she had refused the son of a marquis."

Nora, unsophisticated as she was, in some ways almost as simple as the nun herself, knew instinctively that it was all wrong, and that he had been entrapped by an adventuress. She hesitated in a kind of strop, as her father feebly dilated on his great good fortune in securing so beautiful, so accomplished, and so much-sought-after a woman; and she was almost relieved when the door opened and the lady herself entered.

Mrs. Ryall had, with a speed no doubt acquired in the pursuit of her vocation, changed into a cheap and bizarre evening dress, of the Edgeware Road type, with a plentiful supply of obviously false jewellery. She had remarked the eyebrows, and done up her face; and Nora could only look from one to the other, from the woman, bristling with vanity and self-satisfaction, to her father, slumbering proudly and dotingly, with the feeling which possesses one in the middle of a grotesque dream.

"Oh, 'ere you are," said Mrs. Ryall, with an affectation of playfulness, but with a certain sharpness in her eyes. "Is dinner ready?" She went to the fire, and looked round over her shoulder at the shabby room; and as she did so, her thin lips came together with an expression of subdued anger and disappointment. "What an old house this is, and what a dreary place—I mean all round it. Is this what you call an estate? That's funny! Now, I call it a farm, and not a very big one at that—but then I have been used to such big places! And how shabby you have let your furniture get! We really must buy some new things." She looked up at Nora with a spiteful gleam in her eyes. "I wonder how you could go on living in such a place as this!"

Nora had risen, and was going towards the door, but she stopped, and looking straight at her new stepmother, said very quietly, very slowly—"It is my home."

CHAPTER V.
 MRS. RYALL IS DISAPPOINTED.

Nora lay awake that night with a misery too deep for tears. That her father should have married again was bad enough, but that he should have married such a woman, and that he should have done it so secretly and sprung it upon her in such a manner, was almost unendurable. It was well-nigh incredible that her father, weak and foolish though he was, should have been so blind as not to have read the character of the woman at their first meeting, should not have seen what Nora, unsophisticated and ignorant of the world, had been able to discern the moment her eyes had fallen upon the new Mrs. Ryall.

But the thing was done, and Nora had to make the best of it; how difficult it would be to make anything but the worst of it she did not yet realize.

Notwithstanding her sleepless night, she was up as early as usual and about her work. She imagined that Mrs. Ryall would be down in time to give her husband his breakfast, but when Nora returned from the farm she found her father sitting at the table alone and looking rather disturbed, as if he, too, had had rather a bad night.

March broke down as she indignantly related this slight, and Nora turned away with quivering lips and tears perlously near her eyes. At the sight of her young mistress's grief Martha, of course, relented, and taking the now sobbing girl in her arms, she vowed that she would not leave her to the lady, whom, in the stress of her emotion, she designated "a painted cat."

Nora tried to rebuke her, but truth is truth, and the rebuke fell short of effectiveness.

It was a relief to get out of the house, which Mrs. Ryall had already managed to impregnate with anything but a vague scent of patchouli; and Nora sought the shippen, which, by contrast, was sweet with the breath of the cows. She was ashamed of her sex, and she tried to lose the sense of her trouble in her dairy work.

Strangely enough, the advent of her stepmother did not fully occupy Nora's mind. Elliot Graham crossed it more than once; he, like herself, was unfortunately placed, but then he was a man, was free to go where he liked, to take his life in his hands; whereas she was only a girl, must stay where Providence had placed her, must depend on others.

When she went in to lunch she found that Mrs. Ryall had come down. The lady did not improve by her peculiar appearance needed, the glare of the footlights; in the clear light of mid-day the hair and complexion were more obviously faded; and Nora looked at her agitated, amazed that her father could have been so palpably deceived.

"Oh, 'ere you are at last," said Mrs. Ryall snappishly and with a yawn. "I wondered what had become of you. What 'ave you been doing with yourself?"

"I have been at work," replied Nora. "At work! What work?"

"On the farm," said Nora wearily. "I have been in the dairy making the butter; and this morning before breakfast I rode round to see that none of the young cattle had strayed."

"Your mother—" he began, but Nora broke in quietly—"Don't call her that, father; say Mrs. Ryall, or Amelia." Her lips twisted at the word as if it were a difficult one to utter.

"Well, Amelia, then, if you are so particular," he said, coloring, his eyes straying here, "has a bad headache, and Martha has taken up her breakfast. I am afraid," he went on nervously, "that Amelia was not altogether pleased—I mean that she was rather disappointed with the place. Your see, it is so different to what she has been accustomed to, and I suppose the country would look rather—er—shabby. You see, she's been used to such luxury. Of course we cannot alter everything at once, but I suppose we could get some new furniture, carpets, and so on, for some of the rooms?" He glanced round him with a novel air of criticism and discontent. "We are used to it, but I daresay it comes to her as a kind of shock. Of course, she has not complained," he added hastily, with a furtive glance at Nora's grave face, "but she—er—just made a few remarks. What do you say, Nora?"

Nora looked at him almost pityingly.

"I daresay it is shabby, father," she said, "and that we ought to have some new things, but I don't know where the money is to come from."

"Oh, that's all right," he said, with a foolish laugh. "We can get some furniture on this new hire system. I don't understand how it is done, but I daresay Amelia will know all about it." It is extremely probable that Amelia would know. "I will ask her to see about it; it will amuse her and cheer her up. Of course, it is most important that Amelia should be kept in good spirits"—he meant in good temper. "How is the farm getting on? By the way, that's rather a seedy get-up of yours, Nora; Amelia mentioned it last night."

Nora's face flushed, her lips tightened, and there came into her eyes a little flash which was not often seen there, but which her father and Martha always recognised as a danger signal; for with an her good nature Nora was quick tempered.

"Mrs. Ryall—Amelia—will soon get accustomed to my old clothes, I daresay, father," she said; "at any rate, we cannot afford to buy any new ones. What does it matter? Why, father, don't you see that you'll want all the money we can spare, and more, for her clothes?"

It was so incontestable that Mr. Ryall could not dispute it. They ate the remainder of their breakfast in silence. Mr. Ryall occasionally paused to glance at the ceiling, and to listen with more apprehension than loving impatience. Nora got up from the table and went out, but not before Martha had waylaid her and drawn her into the kitchen. Martha had been with the Ryalls since she was a girl; but she wanted to leave that day month, or as soon as Nora could get some one to take her place.

"I don't think as I can stand it Miss Nora," she gasped; "it's not so much having a new missis, but one of that sort! She wants to be waited on hand and foot, and it 'ud take all my time; besides, I'm a-feelin' certain as we shouldn't get on. She—she called me 'wo-man' this morning!"

Martha broke down as she indignantly related this slight, and Nora turned away with quivering lips and tears perlously near her eyes. At the sight of her young mistress's grief Martha, of course, relented, and taking the now sobbing girl in her arms, she vowed that she would not leave her to the lady, whom, in the stress of her emotion, she designated "a painted cat."

Nora tried to rebuke her, but truth is truth, and the rebuke fell short of effectiveness.

Mrs. Ryall stared at her with a mixture of astonishment and disgust. "You mean to say that you do that kind of thing?" she demanded. "Why, that's what you call labourer's work, ain't it? Don't you keep hands, people to do the farm work?"

"We have only one man, with occasional help," Nora explained, "and there is a great deal to do. I have always looked after the farm."

Mrs. Ryall tossed her head. "Well, it seems to me I've been pretty well taken in," she said, with scorn and irritation. "From what your father said, I thought he was a country swell, one of the landed gentry, as they call it."

"He is," said Nora; "the Ryalls have been here for hundreds of years. One of the stones in the old part of the house—it is not used now—is marked 1416. I do not think my father intended to deceive you. But we are very poor."

Mrs. Ryall gave a little snort of contempt. "What's the use of being landed gentry if you're poor?" she said. "I did not ask your father how much money he had got—it wasn't the kind of thing a young girl would ask, was it?—but I expected to come to a decent place, to the regular kind of thing—'ouse, plenty of servants, carriages and horses, and all that."

"I am sorry you should be disappointed," said Nora. "We don't keep a carriage; only a rough country cart, and besides the farm horse there is only the pony which I ride."

"A pony!" said Mrs. Ryall, "well, that's something. Reginald!" Mr. Ryall had entered sheepishly and had glanced at her face as a man might consult a barometer. "I have been telling Nora—that's an Irish name; you ain't Irish, are you? I do dislike the Irish."

"It's a Scottish name, too," said Nora very quietly. "I am Scottish."

"Well, that's not much better," remarked Mrs. Ryall contemptuously; "but I was saying, Reginald, that you must get me a pony-carriage for that pony of ours. Of course, I shall want to drive out and pay visits, and that must do it there's nothing better."

He glanced nervously at Nora; her face had flushed and then grown very pale.

"Yes, yes, of course," he said; "we'll get a little chaise. I am sure Nora will be very pleased to let you have her pony."

"Her pony!" echoed Mrs. Ryall, raising her eyebrows. "I thought it belonged to the 'ouse, and I suppose it does. 'Ow'er it doesn't signify as long as I 'ave something to drive about in. You can't expect me, a lady born and bred—my poor father was a clergyman, my dear," she informed Nora in parenthesis—"to tramp about the muddy country lanes."

$15,000 Worth of Liquors.

CAMOUFLAGED AS TEMPERANCE BEER, SEIZED AT SYDNEY.

SYDNEY, N.S.W., May 2.—The biggest liquor haul ever carried out in Cape Breton took place to-day when Inspector George R. Ridgout seized a box car of assorted liquors, estimated to be worth at local prices at least $15,000. The shipment consisted of 117 barrels camouflaged as a temperance beverage, but as it was being unloaded 17 barrels of hard liquor were discovered and it is believed a large number of beer barrels consist of top layers of beer bottles over long necks of rum, gin and whiskey. Inspector Ridgout says that the hard liquor seized is of an excellence rarely encountered in these decadent days of prohibition.

It would easily retail here for $9 or $10 a bottle. A feature of the seizure is that all the proceedings have been taken under the Doherty Act, and it is believed to be the first time this law has been invoked here, previous seizures having been under the N. S. Temperance Act.

As a result proceedings will probably be instituted against five defendants, namely, the manufacturers, the National Breweries of Montreal, the shippers, the Patrie Manufacturing Co., of Sydney, the consignee, Michael Nolan, of Glace Bay, and the Canadian National Railways for accepting the shipment. Because it is the first brought here under the Doherty Act the case is expected to provide a legal battle royal, and it is reported the National Breweries will send two lawyers from Montreal to handle their end of the affair.

Eats Better, Sleeps Better, Feels Better

WHY W. M. ANDERSON PRAISES DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Doctors Gave Him a Few Months to Live—Now He Is Better Than He Ever Expected to Be Again.

Monte Creek Hotel, Monte Creek, B.C., May 12th.—(Special)—There is no more enthusiastic believer in Dodd's Kidney Pills anywhere than Mr. W. M. Anderson, a well-known resident here. Mr. Anderson goes so far as to state he believes he owes his life to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I was in a very weak condition, not only from kidney trouble, but also from bronchitis, from which I have suffered for years," Mr. Anderson states. "Two years ago the doctor gave me only a few months to live."

"I commenced taking Dodd's Kidney Pills and also Diamond Dinner Pills, which are a valuable adjunct. I soon found relief and I persevered. To-day I am eating better and sleeping better and feeling better and I ever expected to again."

"And it is not necessary now to take Dodd's Kidney Pills constantly. But I would not be without them for anything."

Ask your neighbors if Dodd's Kidney Pills are not the remedy sick kidneys are crying for.

IN THE GLOAMING.

The gray of evening descends, my little trip will soon be through; I thought to me no terror lends, as my calm journey, I pursue, for I have done my best, my friends, and more than that no man can do. My best was but a trifling thing, I must admit, now that I'm old; I never could rear up and swing the harp that Milton used to hold; it wasn't in my soul to spring such music as from Byron rolled. But I have toiled away with zest, my strains the highest that I knew, and now the sun is in the west, and skies grow dark that late were blue, I know that I have done my best, and more than that no man can do. Old age is tranquil and serene if one can take a glance behind, survey the rocky roads he's seen, the struggle and the weary grind, and know his wreath, however mean, was still the best one he could find. The gods do not their gifts bestow in equal measure to the flock; one man is born to cope the dog, the next must wait for ghosts to walk, one man is built to be a bear, his neighbor is a homely creature. But when it's time to go to rest, the evening come, the errands run, the gifts and talents we possessed are measured by the fruits they've won; unless we've tried to do our best we've failed, however much we've done.

To Restore An Ancient Monastery.
 How the famous mother-house of the Carthusian monks, an old centre of culture and learning, in France, near St. Pierre de Chartreuse, is to be revived, is told by a French correspondent in a London paper.

From St. Pierre de Chartreuse the way leads for a mile or so through an absolute desert—a waste of dark, close-set woods, of dizzy crests and jumbled masses of rocks, where the silence is broken only by the murmur of mountain torrents and the cow bells of an invisible herd.

Suddenly, at a turn in the path, there comes into view, set in a double circle of mauve heights and bright green meadows, that vast monastic city which was the mother-house of the famous Order of Carthusians.

The Carthusian monks were expelled from France by the law of 1901, but until the very eve of the revolution it played the part of the sovereign principality, with feudal jurisdiction over high and low, maintaining its seat of authority in what might be described as a neutral canton between France and Savoy and possessing its establishments all over Europe.

These monks were, in fact, as a close student of their history puts it, in some ways the successors of the Knights of St. John, and right up to our times they preserved the traditions and certain of the prerogatives of the great ecclesiastical feudalism. And this great tradition is not to be lost. Not long after the departure of the monks the University of Grenoble had, with the assent of the state which now supports the monastery, a historical monument, conceived of an idea of reconstructing the Grand Chartreuse, of re-establishing it as an international centre of learning.

This scheme, which was on the point of taking shape when the war broke out, is expected to be carried out next year, and it is hoped to interest foreign universities in it.

Unemployed Appear Before Bar of House.

Unexpected Scene When Committee of Workingmen Took up Position--Demands for Work Made by Members of Delegation--Prime Minister Taken Sharply to Task.

Another unusual scene was enacted at the House of Assembly yesterday afternoon when quite orderly and unexpectedly a committee of workingmen, with whom were Mrs. Julia-Salter Earle, Messrs. Whitty, Squires, Dempsey and Robins, entered the corridor leading to the Assembly Chamber, and passing the inner entrance raised themselves in front of the bar. The House was in Committee at the time, discussing the amendment of the Fracturing Act, an appropriate subject under the circumstances. Mr. Hibbs being in the chair. The spokesman of the delegation, Mr. E. J. Whitty, waited an opportunity and very courteously addressed the chair, explaining the reason for their presence, full details of which speech, as well as those of the other members, are given further along. Outside, hundreds of laborers who had marched to the grounds of Colonial Building with the delegation were massed, whilst inside the House a very animated discussion was going on between the Prime Minister and members of the Opposition and of the delegation.

THE GAUNTLET FLUNG DOWN.
As a spontaneous protest against the continuance in power of the Scoble Government, the demonstration was a revelation. And the sentiments expressed by the whole gathering were of threatening import. The very presence in that place of such a body of men, mainly from the Premier's own district, was ample testimony to the unpopularity of—as he styled himself when speaking—the senior member for St. John's West, and was an unqualified intimation to him to resign at once. But R. A. does not resign like that. Not much. Anyway the gauntlet has been thrown down by the electors and the Prime Minister must pick it up or be forever branded as a political poltroon and

Mr. E. J. Whitty first addressed the House through the medium of the chair. He stated that the Prime Minister had been sending him around with letters to the Council and the Deputy Mayor and all to no avail. He had telephoned the Royal Bank and had been told that as no Minute of Council had yet been passed, the $100,000 loan had not been advanced. He claimed that the Prime Minister had been fooling him, for the Deputy Mayor had said his letter was a "hoax." After a few more remarks in which Mr. Whitty showed up the deplorable condition in which the unemployed of the city were and the manner in which they were being treated, he concluded his address.

The Prime Minister rose to reply to Mr. Whitty. He first read the following correspondence between the Municipal Council and himself:—
Sir,—Yesterday afternoon a Committee, representing the unemployed, waited upon the Council demanding work.
At the present time the Council has no further employment wherein money can be judiciously expended. An avenue of employment is open in connection with the repair of the South Side Road, but the expenditure is such that the Council is not prepared to burden itself with such a liability without accruing advantage.
The Committee intimated that the Government were prepared to undertake this work if they had funds at their disposal. If such is the case, the Council is prepared to return a proportion of the money advanced, not to exceed $15,000, so that the Government may utilize same; provided the Council's liability for this portion is cancelled.

You will realize there are many works in which employment could be given, but these works being under the supervision of our Engineer cannot be undertaken without considerable technical preparations.
If this preparation is satisfactory to the Government, a cheque will be forwarded upon receipt of your communication accepting terms of this letter; if being understood, should you accept our cheque, it will be in part payment of the loan recently advanced.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your obedient servant,
(Sgd.) J. J. MAHONY,
Hon. R. A. Squires, Sec.-Treas.
Prime Minister.

After reading the above letter the Prime Minister explained its purport. He said that when it was brought to him earlier in the day he had advised the men to go back to the Council, and at the deputation's request he put the proposals in writing as follows:—
HOUSE OF ASSEMBLY.
May 13th.

Sir,—I have to acknowledge receipt of to-day's date delivered to me at the House of Assembly. I am advised by the Department of Public Works that the South Side Road to which you refer is not within the Municipality and that neither the Govt. funds nor the Road funds for the electoral district of St. John's West are liable for its upkeep and maintenance. If the pressure of work upon your various departments is such as to make it impossible for you to undertake this much needed work, and if you are prepared to appropriate out of your loan of $150,000 sufficient funds for that purpose, I am prepared as senior member for St. John's West to make arrangements with the surveyors of the Department of Agriculture and Mines and the officials of the Department of Public Works so that this work may be immediately undertaken under efficient business organization, the work done for and on behalf of the St. John's Municipal Council and entirely at their expense.
Very truly yours,
R. A. SQUIRES,
The Sec.-Treasurer
St. John's Municipal Council.

The Prime Minister next said that there was work to be done on a road on the Southside, which required repairing, but as it was within the city limits it was up to the Municipal Council to expend the necessary money. The Council, on the other hand, claimed that an allocation should be made from the St. John's grant to enable this work to be carried out.
Mr. Vinicombe became indignant at the Prime Minister's attacks on the Municipal Council, of which he was a member, and he rose to a point of order. The Prime Minister had said that the Council had fallen down on its job but he would say that it was the Government which had fallen down on its job and not the Council. The Council had foreseen the depression which had come this spring and had asked for a loan during the winter. They had communicated with the Government in the matter and had received no reply.
At this juncture the Prime Minister interrupted and a sharp passage of words took place between him and Mr. Vinicombe.
Continuing his speech Mr. Vinicombe said it was a shame to send the unemployed to the Municipal Council when it was up to the Government to look after them.
The Prime Minister again attacked the Council and declared that he could arrange a more efficient organization in 24 hours than the Council could in five years.

Mr. Richard Squires (no relation to the Prime Minister) spoke from outside the Bar. He declared that if the Council refused to use the money they had he would side track them.
Mrs. J. S. Earle also addressed the House, making quite an effective speech. She said she knew the condition of the unemployed and that the present was no time for rest. These men had families who were starving. In conversation with the Prime Minister she had asked him what he would do if his little boy were hungry. His reply was a most peculiar one from which one could draw many inferences. It was "I'd shoot." Mrs. Earle gave the House a very clear idea of the appalling conditions prevailing amongst the unemployed of the city to-day.
Mr. Bennett spoke at some length on the matter of the Southside Road. He declared that the Prime Minister was not sincere in his statements. Any man who had supported the Prime Minister in St. John's West could get work but any man who supported Bennett could not get a job from the Public Works Department. Squires was siding whilst St. John's West was starving.

Sir Michael Cashin in a brief but powerful address, said it was a pitiful sight to see the Prime Minister trying to explain the situation. Not only was St. John's West starving but the whole country was in a similar condition. The time had come when it seemed necessary to appeal to outsiders to feed the hungry. He promised that if the unemployed did not receive relief by Tuesday that if they came to the House he would see that they were relieved. He was only there to see fair play. Let them come there if they were not relieved and he would clear out the House. Turning to the Government benches he cried, "If their stomachs are empty, yours are full. Go to work, or get out!"
Mr. Dempsey, another member of the deputation, also addressed the House. The Unemployed were sick of conferences. What they wanted was action.
The Prime Minister asked that party politics be left out. Cries of "No party politics" resounded from outside the Bar.

Sir John Crosbie suggested a morning session to discuss the matter.
Mr. Fox said a conference that night would be of no satisfaction. It was finally decided that a conference between the members for St. John's East and West would meet the city Commissioners at 8 p.m. last night. The deputation after this had been finally settled, quietly left the Assembly which then adjourned.

Obituary.
It is with deep regret we chronicle the death of Mrs. Armstrong, beloved wife of Mr. Wm. Armstrong of this city, which occurred at the General Hospital on May 13th. Deceased was esteemed by all who knew her for her charity, hospitality and neighborliness. Left to mourn, besides her husband, are one daughter, Miss Mabel Curran, one step-daughter, Mr. Office, G.F.O., one step-son, and two step-sons, to whom we extend sincere sympathy.

Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir.—In view of the recent controversy, the following extract from a legal book of authority may be of public interest. It is my opinion that Mr. Wilson was right and that he should not have been apprehended. What does Mr. Ayre think?
"In some cases a constable can arrest a person without a warrant, while in others a warrant must be obtained before any arrest can be made. If a constable acts illegally he becomes liable to an action, which must be commenced within six calendar months from the date when the cause of action arose. A warrant is a document issued by a judge, justice of the peace, or stipendiary magistrate, authorizing the arrest of a person alleged to have committed the crime.
A constable may, without warrant arrest a person if he has reasonable grounds for believing that such person has committed a felony, or any person who commits a breach of the peace in his presence. Certain other offenders may be arrested without warrant e.g., any person found committing an indictable offence in the night, i.e., between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m."
As all the arrests in "Officer 666," which is being produced at the Casino Theatre next week, take place between those hours, the management are not going to the expense of getting warrants, because the less they have to spend on production expense will mean the more for the poor children of the city.
Thanking you for space, Mr. Editor,
Yours faithfully,
ADAM NUSANCE,

Damning Indictment of Hon. W. F. Coaker.

Sir John Crosbie Produces a Fourth Cheque for $82,675

Signed by J. Sellars, Payable to Union Trading Co.

The present session of the Legislature has, without doubt, seen more memorable happenings than any other since the introduction of Responsible Government, and yesterday's occurrence was by no means the least of these. There have been interruptions from the crowd, and startling exposures but the scene which took place when the unemployed deputations visited the House late yesterday evening rivals any of these in sensationalism.

The House met at 3.15 p.m. Notices of question were given by several members of the Opposition. The questions on the Order Paper were next taken up.

The Minister of Marine and Fisheries told Mr. MacDonnell that the dredge would not be used this year. He also told Sir M. P. Cashin that there would be no fishery inspectors this year.

The Prime Minister told Sir Michael Cashin that 1700 barrels of local potatoes had been purchased by the Department of Agriculture and Mines.

Sir John Crosbie rose to speak to the proposed Address to His Excellency which was moved by Sir M. P. pleasure at the knowledge that the Auditor General had waked up. He suggested that the matter of road grants be held over for a short while. The Minister of Public Works also spoke briefly on the matter.

After Sir John Crosbie and Sir Michael Cashin had passed some brief comment the Committee rose and reported progress.

The Motion of Sir Michael Cashin's was again taken up and Sir John Crosbie continued his speech. He first asked the Minister of Marine and Fisheries if there were any official cheques in connection with the "President Coaker" affair. He was told that the accounts were supposed to have been gone through by the Auditor General. He also asked the Minister to lay on the table of the House the last cheque paid for freight. Mr. Joseph Sellars absolutely denied having anything to do with the "President Coaker's" cargo. When the Premier tabled the cheques on the previous day he did not think that he (Sir John) knew as much as he did. The underwriter's who insured the "President Coaker's" cargo were according to Mr. Coaker, Dale and Barr. Sir John said that, all his statements were correct. The Bill of Lading was made out in the name of the Government. When the Premier produced the cheques on Thursday he did not know there was another cheque. It was only fair to Mr. Sellars that this matter should be cleared up. The "Little Princess" was loading hull to hull with the same kind of fish, and why was she allowed to go out and have her cargo sacrificed. He did not believe that any Minister of the Crown had acted in such a way before. He had deliberately sold the "President Coaker's" cargo and tried to throw a veil over it through Mr. Sellars. Sir John asked for an explanation as to why Sellars' fish had been paid for at a higher rate than others had paid. The cheque and the insurance business proved satisfactorily that there was something to be hidden. And that was why the Government would vote the matter down. He had a word to say to the Auditor General over these cheques. The Government had tabled three cheques. He had a fourth (at this juncture Sir John had to admonish the Speaker for inattention). The cheque for $82,675 was presented to Mr. Sellars by a man in the employ of the department of Marine and Fisheries. The fourth cheque was that of Mr. Sellars himself in favour of the Union Trading Co. for the same amount. And yet, he was told that Mr. Sellars had bought this fish. If he had had that cheque Thursday, the Premier would never have read out the others (at this point in the proceedings a huge crowd of unemployed advanced to the Bar of the House). Continuing, Sir John said that if the enquiry did not take place he warned the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that something would happen. The public would take the matter into their own hands and that investigation would take place in spite of the Government. This was not a case in which there could be any doubt for all of his statements were proven facts. He was anxious to know what the Government's opinion on the matter was. The Premier did not know who was looking after the "President Coaker's" cargo on the other side. Could we afford to toss about $95,000 like dice. That cargo of fish, said Sir John, would not be sold for the next six months.

Minister of Marine and Fisheries.—"Some of it is sold now."

Sir John Crosbie.—"At what price?"

Minister of Marine and Fisheries.—"I don't know. I gave orders for it to be sold at 45c."

Sir John Crosbie said the loss on the cargo would be £7000 even at 45c. It would cost the colony $35,000 through the way it had been handled. He asked Hon. Mr. Coaker to table the cheque issued to pay the freight on the "President Coaker's" cargo. He also asked if the Minister would welcome the enquiry.

Minister of Marine and Fisheries.—"I would."

Sir John Crosbie said it was up to him then to get it for the Minister was the man behind the gun. If the Motion were not passed he would go to a higher authority than the Government. He left it now to Hon. Mr. Coaker and his followers to vote for the motion.

Mr. MacDonnell said the situation showed the danger of having a Minister of the Crown acting in a dual capacity. He had not believed the charges against Hon. Mr. Coaker but he was not satisfied beyond all doubt, in their truth. And he saw now that the Minister not only did something wrong, but when he did it he knew he was doing something culpable. He had no doubt that the transaction had taken place with the full connivance of certain members of the Government. Every member who voted against the Motion was taking a share of the blame for the transaction on his own head. He had no hesitation in saying that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries was politically dead. Any member of the House who voted down the Motion laid himself open to the charge of being a party to that deception. Let every member think well before he lent himself to a deception which was undoubtedly the shadiest transaction that was ever made by a member of the House. The Government are only trustees for the people and the fact that it was public money which had been misused put an even worse complexion on the matter. There had been enough talk of getting together, talk when such things were going on. The man who had so shamefully attempted to deceive the House was not the same man who so manfully owned his mistake six weeks ago. He wondered if the Prime Minister knew the story of the swapped cheques when he tabled those other cheques. If he did not know the facts it was nothing to his credit, for he should have known them. If he did know them, he was worse than the Minister, for he did not have the personal interest in the matter which would urge him to let it go. The only way out of it was to have an impartial commission enquire into the matter thoroughly. He, for one, had no confidence in any department of the Government. The only Minister he had had confidence in was Hon. Mr. Coaker and since he had found that he had done wrong, he dreaded to think what had happened in other departments.

Debate was adjourned as he had some observations to make on the Motion before the Chair.

The House then went into Committee of the Whole on the Bill to Repeal the Coalfish Exportation Act.

On motion of Mr. Higgins the debate on this Bill was adjourned.

The Bill to amend the Protesting Act was next put through the Committee stage.

Mr. Bennett spoke at some length on the Bill and said it was a matter of "locking the stable door after the horse had been stolen." Amongst the many important statements made by Mr. Bennett was the charge that we were paying 50c to 100 per cent. more than the Canadians were for food-stuffs. At this juncture the debate was interrupted by a deputation of unemployed which advanced to the Bar of the House. A report of the proceedings from this time on will be found elsewhere.

At 7.15 the Committee rose and adjournment was taken until 3 p.m. Monday.

Civic Commission.
WEEKLY MEETING.

The weekly meeting of the City Council was held last night. Deputy Mayor Mullaly presided. Councillors Ayre, Morris, Peat, Jackson and Viallcombe were present. After the minutes of the last meetings were confirmed the following matters were considered:

A communication was read from the Colonial Secretary stating the Estimates for 1921 submitted by the Council would be tabled at the present session of the Legislature. The Comptroller and Auditor-General asked for what purpose the temporary loan advanced the Council would be used. This information has been forwarded. A letter was read from His Excellency the Governor in relation to the public meeting to be held regarding the War Memorial. The date of meeting will be May 25th. A communication was received from Wood & Co. stating the Pipes ordered for new work which were short shipped last Rosalind, would be forwarded next trip.

Residents of Rennie's Mill Road petitioned against Soon Lee & Co. being given permission to extend laundry at Rawlins Cross. It was decided permit for this erection be refused as the locality is too congested. C. E. Hunt on behalf of McLeas Estate, etc., asked that he be furnished with plan showing land to be appropriated by the Council on Golf Avenue. This was ordered to be forwarded.

On the advice of the Health Officer, J. F. Newman will not be given permit to use outhouse rear dwelling Mullock Street for stable purposes. Request of Tessier & Co. to erect concrete vault at their premises was referred to the Engineer. D. E. Pelley's application for street line, Pleasant Street, will be attended to by the Engineering Department.

The following plans were passed subject to the Engineer's approval: B. Taylor, Springdale St., A. Horwood, Barter's Hill, T. Kennedy, Cochrane St., D. Power, Barron St. Newfoundland Atlantic Fisheries, Ltd. The widening of Waterford Bridge Road (at Tor Cottage), Palks Hill, Golf Ave., etc., is to be immediately proceeded with. The Secretary was instructed to communicate with the owners regarding the matter of compensation for land to be taken. Request of residents of McKay St. for water and sewer extensions to this locality will be attended to as soon as possible.

Prime Minister, Hon. R. A. Squires, J. R. Bennett, W. J. Higgins, C. J. Fox, Members for the Districts of St. John's East and West, waiting on the Council at last night's meeting to discuss labor conditions. The matter was given careful consideration, the members for St. John's stating their willingness to co-operate with the Council in solving the situation regarding the unemployed. The Council will proceed with the opening up of Golf Avenue Monday morning at which about 100 men will be employed. This work was decided upon by the Council a few weeks ago, but owing to the difficulty of arranging for a land transfer, etc., could not be undertaken before. A new road is to be opened along the water pipe line from Portugal Cove Road to Merry Meeting Road, which will employ a large number of men. Another new road is to be opened up from Topsail Road near Cornwall Avenue to Waterford Bridge Road, this will also be the means of giving labor to a great number of men. Regarding the latter roads the Members for the Districts East and West will contribute from the Grants a sum of $28,000.00. The Council will also contribute to this work.

The Prime Minister stated the assistance of the staff of the Mines and Agriculture and the Government Road Inspectors will be given the City Engineers Department, which is over-taxed under present conditions.

In relation to the loan of $150,000, the Prime Minister stated the required guarantee will be given the Royal Bank of Canada immediately, so that the necessary water and sewer pipes might be ordered.

Reports of the City Engineer, Sanitary Inspector, Health Officer, etc., were read. Pay rolls and bills submitted were ordered paid. After the disposal of other minor matters the meeting adjourned at 11.30.

SPREADING DISEASES.
Defective teeth, diseased gums, discharging abscesses, gum boils are positively dangerous because of the spreading of the infection to other parts of the body; indeed that infection can spread to others. More than this, those suffering from these conditions are more likely to contract diseases entirely apart from the infections themselves. Their systems are likely to be permeated with virulent germs and therefore in no condition to make the resistance necessary to ward off these other afflictions.

A Suggestion Worth Adopting.
Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—Sir John Croble, a few days ago, asked a question in the House of the Premier, viz., if he was aware that the Fish Regulations had been the cause of the depression amongst the coopers of the city, and the Premier replied, that he was not. With neither the question or answer have I any comment to make, but I hold my own humble opinion, and also, whatever the cause, the fact remains that the trade is strangled and the process has been going on since last November. Almost the entire membership of the Union, with the exception of a favored or fortunate few, call them what you will as fancy dictates, are idle and have been for many months. Now, Sir, I wish to throw out a suggestion which if acted upon will be the means of at least curtailing such suffering and depression of the necessities which are essential to living, and it is this:
Let the Government apportion a part of the loan of $150,000 to purchasing a few cargoes of fish drums from the coopers of the city; hire a store and place a number of coopers lining them, and if full employment couldn't be given, the men could take week for week, and along with being a relief to the unemployed it would be a business transaction as later on those packages could be sold without any loss. At any rate it would tide over a trying time whilst waiting for the dark clouds to roll by.
In case the Government would raise objections to favoring any one section or business, I might say that at present there are many coopers employed on city work, and of course this is depriving the man without a trade of a job, which would not be the case if they were employed at their legitimate business. In case of the Government not seeing eye to eye with me on this suggestion, I would commend the idea in the interest of my brother chips, to Sir Michael Cashin and Sir John Croble, who might induce some wealthy friends to go into this thing with them, and not alone would it be philanthropy of the highest type, but it would be a good stroke of business.
Come, gentlemen, what about it. Now, Sir, I ask with all due respect that our representatives get busy and earn the undying regard and best wishes of the coopers and those depending on them. Criticism, improvement, or endorsement of this suggestion is invited.
Yours truly,
JAMES J. POWER.

The Liberal Party and Woman Suffrage.
Editor Evening Telegram.
Dear Sir,—The Liberal Party, of which I have the honor of being leader, has already declared itself as strongly in favor of Woman Suffrage. There are no half measures about the Liberal Party. When it endorses Woman Suffrage it means giving women exactly the same political and municipal rights that men enjoy. No limitation as to age or education or any other disability that man is not under. The Party is therefore surprised that the women should be willing to accept anything less. They have fought a clean fight and they have won hands down. Neither of the present parties would dare withhold from them full suffrage. Then why accept anything less. In this case the half loaf is better than no bread policy is a poor one. If they are not content with the half loaf they will be given the whole loaf. If they are content to accept the half loaf they have delayed themselves four or eight years, whereas, if they insist on full suffrage they may be delayed one year, which is no delay at all, but certainly they will get it before the next election. If they do not pity the party that opposes them. Let the women insist on their full rights, equal in every respect to the men and take nothing less.
Let some friend of theirs in the House move an amendment to the present bill so that the Act as passed will give them all the rights to which they are entitled, namely, full political equality with men.
Yours sincerely,
GEO. W. B. AYE.

Assassination of Henry IV. of France.
The cares of Henry IV. of France were aggravated by a presentation of his own approaching fate. Unacquainted with the details of the assassination, dark rumours of conspiracies were floating about, and he communicated to Sully his conviction that he would be murdered on the occasion of the first great public solemnity—and such an occasion was approaching. On May 13, 1610, his consort—Mary de Medicis—had been crowned with great pomp at St. Denis by Cardinal de Joyeuse, and on the 14th, while the King was passing in his carriage from the Rue St. Honoré into the Rue de la Ferronnerie, its progress was arrested by two carts; at this moment a man jumped on to the wheel and stabbed the King with a knife between the ribs. Henry threw out his arms, exclaiming "I am wounded!" and the assassin seized the opportunity to stab the blow more fatally, by repeating the deed. The murderer was seized by the King's suite, and turned out to be one François Ravallac, who had been a novice in the Convent of the Feuillants at Paris, and had afterwards been a schoolmaster in his native town of Angouleme. In his examination he assigned as his motive for the deed, the King's negligence to convert the Huguenots, and his design of making war upon the result of fanaticism, inflamed by the discourses and sermons which he heard; but the Spanish Court, Mary de Medicis, and Concil, gained so much by the act, that there were not wanting some who suspected them to be privy to it, together with the Duke of Epernon, who was in the coach with Henry at the time, and to whom the town of Angouleme belonged. Nay, it was even said that Ravallac, during the last dreadful tortures of his execution, denounced their names, but the papers containing his dispositions were suppressed. These charges, however, rest on no certain foundation.

O'Connell, the Celebrated Irish Leader.
On Saturday, May 15, 1846, Daniel O'Connell, died, an event that is recalled by the disturbances now going on in Ireland against the Government. Born on August 6, 1775, in County Kerry, the son of a small landowner, he sought to stir himself the Irish "agitator" or "liberator." When an Act of Parliament had admitted Roman Catholics to the barister's profession, he became a student at Lincoln's Inn, and as a barister, from 1798, he earned a large income. Eloquent and earnestly advocating the emancipation of Roman Catholics, he called the Dublin Corporation "beggars," and being therefore challenged by Alderman D'Esterre, O'Connell killed him in a duel, but was prevented by the police from fighting another against Sir Robert Peel, baronet, then Chief Secretary for Ireland, and afterwards Prime Minister. O'Connell obtained a seat in the House of Commons, sitting successively for the County of Clare, the counties of Waterford and Kerry, twice for Dublin, and at other times for Kilkenny and Cork, thus remaining a member of that House for eighteen years, and in seven Parliaments; always on the side of the Whigs, as Radicals and Liberals were called in those days. He had been educated at St. Omer's and Douay, but preferred to enter the legal profession instead of the priestly one. Retiring from the arena of political strife, he commenced a pilgrimage in 1824, in quest of devotion, than for health, towards Rome, but had proceeded no farther than Genoa, in Italy, when, with comparatively little suffering, he expired, in his seventy-second year. His heart was embalmed, and carried to Rome; and his body brought to Ireland for interment.

Blackheads indicate your cleansing method is wrong.

BLACKHEADS indicate that the method you are using is not the right method of cleansing for your type of skin. A skin specialist would tell you that blackheads are caused by excessive oil collecting dirt in the pores of your skin. To do away with the cause of blackheads and free your skin from this disgusting trouble, use the following simple treatment:

APPLY hot cloths to the face until the skin is reddened.
Then with a rough washcloth work up a heavy lather of Woodbury's Facial Soap and rub it into the pores thoroughly, always with an upward and outward motion.
Rinse with clean, hot water, then with cold—the colder the better.
If possible, rub your face for thirty seconds with a piece of ice. Dry carefully.
To remove blackheads already formed, substitute a flesh brush for the washcloth in this treatment. Then protect the fingers with a handkerchief and press out the blackheads.

GET a cake of Woodbury's today, at any drug store or toilet goods counter, and begin this treatment tonight. You will be astonished to see how quickly your skin will improve in cleanness. A 25-cent cake of Woodbury's will last for a month or six weeks. The Andrew J. Woodbury Co., Chemists, New York and Perth, Ontario.

BRANDRAM-HENDERSON MEDICAL MALFAZ ST. JOHN'S TORONTO VANCOUVER

TRINITY.

Last week I went back into the distant past, and showed, from the old Church Registers, how and by whom the bodies of our forefathers in Trinity were looked after by the Medical Doctors. I now go back over the same ground, and pay a debt of gratitude to the Divinity Doctors, who for many years, looked after the souls of all the residents of Trinity and elsewhere in the Bay. I do so by reminding our people of whom those Doctors were and by refreshing our memories with their doings, as given in the old Church Registers. Rev. Benjamin Lindsay was the Priest in charge of Trinity in 1753, and all the baptisms, marriages and burials from that date till 1760 were performed by him. His first baptism was on September 7th, 1753, and the child was a daughter of Mr. Benjamin and Ann Tavernor, named Patience. Later he baptized another for the same persons, named Sarah; and a little later a daughter for Andrew Tavernor and his wife, named Elizabeth. Thus, Tavernor is the oldest name in Trinity, found in the Church Registers of that time; and the Christian names of Benjamin and Andrew, have been retained till the present day in the Tavernor families. The last child baptized by Rev. B. Lindsay was James, son of John and Jean Tibbs, Nov. 1st, 1760. Then follows a vacancy of four years. During those years fifty-seven baptisms, seventeen marriages, and seventy-six burials are recorded—some by authorized laymen, and some by visiting clergymen. Then came Rev. James Balfour, M.A., and his first entries in the placed in position, a special service was held to commemorate the centennial of Mr. Clinch's death. The next incumbent was Rev. Aubrey Spencer. His first entries are: "Nov. 17th, 1820. Married, Richard Nurse and Mary Spragg." "January 2nd, 1821. Buried, John Holohan." "Jan. 3rd, 1821. Married, Francis Barnes and Anne Baston, of English Harbor." During his residence of twelve months he baptized seventy-seven persons, and married twelve; and then went to Bermuda, where he became Archdeacon, and held this office till he was elected Bishop of Newfoundland.

Rev. William Bullock succeeded Rev. Aubrey Spencer as Priest in charge of this extensive mission. His first entries are: "Sept. 8th, 1822. Married, James Hobbs and Patience Phillips, of New Bonaventure." On 8th, 1822, Mr. Bullock was married to Mary Elizabeth Clinch, by Rev. J. Burt, of Harbor Grace. He ministered faithfully to the spiritual needs of the people of Trinity Bay, and is remembered to-day as the writer of the hymn: "We Love the Place, O God," etc., which was sung for the first time from manuscript at the opening of St. Paul's Church, and is found to-day in well nigh every collection of hymns for public worship. Mr. Bullock was one of the strongest characters of those who ministered to the spiritual needs of the people in Trinity, and other parts of Trinity Bay.

After Rev. W. Bullock left Trinity, Rev. Thomas Boone, Rev. John H. Martine, and Rev. David Martin, together with Rev. H. J. Fitzgerald, M.A., looked after the spiritual interests of the mission till 1846. Then came Rev. Todd Thomas Jones till 1848. He was succeeded by Rev. Bertram Jones and Rev. Thomas Wood till 1858; and then Rev. Benjamin Smith and Rev. W. G. Crouch were appointed. Rev. Joseph W. Baggs, who taught school here in 1851, was, I think, a perpetual deacon. He rendered assistance to the Priest in charge of the Parish, such as his office as a deacon authorized him to do. He died here, and is buried in the old church-yard. May God be good to them all.

Extracts from the old Church Registers, with notes:— May 18th, 1846. Married, Thomas Oates, of Wareham, Dorset, England, to Hannah Miller, of English Harbor. Witnesses: George Cutler and George Penny.

Thomas Oates, who lived in Green Bay Cove, below English Harbor, died some fifteen years ago. He was the last Englishman in Trinity right who came to this country as a "youngster."

"Nov. 2nd, 1847. Married, Thomas Northover and Martha Bannister, both of Ship Cove. Witnesses: William Butler, James Butler." Thomas Northover was a genius. Some one complimented him upon his being such a "handy-man," and Thomas said: "Yes, Sir, I makes wheelbarrows, and go-carts, and spinning-wheels; in short I makes everything that makes a noise." He also made a harp, the only one ever made or seen in this district. It never made much "noise," as he never could afford to buy strings for it. It is still in evidence, and it has a place in the memory of nearly every person in Trinity. Thomas also had the first striking clock in the district, and people came to his home from far and near to hear it strike.

"February 12th, 1848. Married, Charles Gent and Mary Ann Granger. Witnesses: Charles Granger, John S. Lockyer."

"October 9th, 1848. Married, at St. Paul's Church, Trinity, by Rev. Todd Thomas Jones, Rev. Bertram Jones, Minister of Christ Church, Bonavista, to Emma Sweetland, of Trinity. Witnesses: Rev. Thos. M. Wood, Benj. Sweetland, Tryphena Sweetland, Fred B. T. Carter and H. Sweetland."

May 10th, 1849. Married, William Hart and Elizabeth Finch, by Rev. Thos. Wood. Witnesses: William Kelson, Ann Kelson, Emily Bayly, John Crose, A. W. Bremner, Eliza Hart, John S. Lockyer."

One of the guests at the Garland Hotel last week, was Capt. Jack Bemister, of Carbonear. Capt. Bemister enlisted for service in October, 1914; was attached to the 1st Newfoundland Regiment, and sent to Ayr, Scotland for training. After nine months in Ayr he was sent to France, and as Lieutenant saw his first fighting at the Somme. He took part in hard service on the Arras front, and whilst going over the top at Monchy was badly wounded. He was then sent to Brighton, England, where he spent nine months in Hospital. Upon his recovery he was sent back to St. John's, where he was given the rank of Captain, and was appointed Quartermaster of the Regiment, till demobilization. Arthur Malmont, of Trinity, was a Private in his regiment, and Capt. Bemister saw him and the other six men who were killed at the same time, a few minutes after they were killed, and arranged for their burial. Captain Bemister speaks in the highest terms of Private Malmont, and was pleased to see the Obituary.

ELIZABETH READ.
There passed away, at 11.30 o'clock, on Thursday night, at the Rectory, Channel, in the 97th year of her age, Elizabeth, relict of the late Francis Read, some time sub-Collector of Customs at Lapolle. The deceased lady had enjoyed most excellent health up to a short time ago, but it was only recently that her condition caused anxiety. Of an amiable disposition and a generous nature, the late Mrs. Read was beloved by all with whom she came in contact, and friends and acquaintances everywhere will regret the passing of one of the sweetest and most genial of women. Notwithstanding her great age, a truly remarkable span of years, Mrs. Read was ever active and possessed the full use of every faculty. Her death removes another landmark from the West Coast. Left to mourn are 6 sons: Rev. H. J., Rector of St. James Church, Channel; Alex., operator at Curliags; Charles, operator at Bonne Bay; George, Sub-Collector at Lapolle, and Philip, voyage master with the firm of LeSelleur, also of Lapolle, to all of whom the writer and the Telegram offer the deepest sympathy.

"On the resurrection morning All the graves their dead restore; Father, sister, child and mother Meet once more."

"May she rest in Thy Word O Lord and grant that eternal light shall shine upon her."

Side Talks by Ruth Cameron

ON PROMISING TO LOVE.

A friend of mine objects to the part of the marriage service in which the parties concerned promise to "love, honor and obey."

You think you have heard that objection before? But wait a bit. It is not the word "obey" to which she objects. She is willing to leave that in. What she objects to is the absurdity of promising to love anyone all one's life.

"How," she says, "can anyone promise to love? You just love people because you do and that's all there is to it. What's the good of promising to love when you can't help yourself one way or the other?"

It is a goodly sounding argument. Is Love Controllable?

There was a time, and not so long ago, when I would have thought there was nothing to be said on the other side.

I am not so sure now. (The older one grows, the fewer things one does seem to be sure about.)

There is so much to be said for the uncontrollability of love, but I think there is something to be said on the other side.

You cannot make yourself keep on loving anyone, but you can prevent yourself from getting into the attitude of mind in which love has a hard time to live.

You cannot love by an effort of the will, but you can keep yourself out of a critical, censorial exacting attitude by an effort of the will.

"How Can She Stand Him?"

A few years ago I met a woman who, almost everybody admires, but who is married to a man whom almost everyone else has little use for. He is not in her class, either in brains or character, and on top of that he is decidedly disagreeable to her. "How can she stand him?" is the question her friends constantly ask each other. They would like to ask her—but her manner, unlike that of many women similarly placed, does not invite that kind of sympathy.

One day, however, she was one of a group who were talking about another woman who also has a disagreeable husband and yet manages to put up with him, and she said:

"She is married to him, she has children, she doesn't want to break up the home, and she probably is just hanging on to the love she had when she married him as hard as she can. There's no use in allowing yourself to dislike anyone when there is no way out you want to take."

If she had been talking about her own case (as doubtless she was) I fancy that is just what she would have said.

Keep the Spirit of Her Vow.

And it helped to explain the fine serenity of her manner and her life. I think that woman was keeping the true spirit of her marriage vows.

It is very easy indeed to let oneself get into a state after marriage in which one feels the right to be aggrieved by every imperfection in the other party's character or ways. It is just as possible, though not so easy, to realize that no one is perfect, that one is not a recording angel but a husband or wife, and to decide to "hang on" to as much of the love one had at the beginning as one possibly can.

Jan Smuts, Founder of New Relationships Within Empire.

"I am here to-day as Prime Minister of South Africa on an equal footing with Lloyd George."

This is one of the most significant of many momentous declarations by Premier Smuts during the recent South African election campaign. It was made in an electoral address at Magaliesburg on Dec. 14, 1920.

Premier Smuts' triumph is rightly hailed as a victory for those desiring the maintenance of the British Commonwealth. His chief opponent, Hertzog, favored an independent republic for South Africa. Smuts favored continued British affiliation.

But it is not the old idea of a British Empire that Smuts favored, and his victory is even more significant on its positive than on its negative side.

Without much friction, Smuts' policy brings the new day nearer, for he is in the position of combating a republican separatist movement at the same time that he is advancing a constitutional nationalism.

Smuts, in this campaign, has added to a reputation that was already unusual. There were many observers in Great Britain during the period 1917-1919 who were convinced and who did not hesitate to say that Smuts was an abler man than Lloyd George.

Without making invidious comparisons, however, it can easily be said that Smuts and Lloyd George were the two ablest men conducting the war for Britain and the Commonwealth. Smuts was the only man coming from the outside who was a member of the "war cabinet."

During the frequent visits of Dominion Prime Ministers and their colleagues, they became members of the "Imperial War Cabinet" which discussed and acted upon war matters affecting the whole Empire. But these Prime Ministers came and went.

Smuts was not the Prime Minister of South Africa at the time, but he came over to represent the Prime Minister, Botha, at the Imperial Conference of 1917. He remained in Great Britain and, despite all constitutional barriers, became a member of the War Cabinet of Great Britain, that body of five men who ruled Britain in war time.

There were scattered objections from constitutionalists that a British Cabinet Minister must be a member of the British Parliament. This was admitted, but Smuts continued to be a member of the British Cabinet for at least a year, if not longer, although he was not a member of Parliament.

The point is that whether this constitutional anomaly was justified or not, Britain needed Smuts' aid so much that it simply couldn't be dispensed with, rules or no rules.

It wasn't only during the war that Smuts had so pre-eminent a place. At the Versailles Peace Conference he was a dominating figure, again sharing the canvas with Lloyd George.

But whereas the latter, publicly at any rate signed the Peace at Versailles without reservations, Smuts signed it only with written and public reservations, criticizing the spirit in which it was framed and also specifically the economic clauses of the treaty.

Without entering into the controversy as to the morality or the expediency of the Treaty of Versailles, one must admit Smuts' prescience in anticipating the criticisms which had poured out against the treaty ever since its signature.

When you speak of Smuts' therefore, you are speaking of a giant. When that giant turns his attention to Dominion affairs, outstanding developments are inevitable.

It will be sufficient here merely to mention some of the details in the platform of which Smuts has been re-elected Prime Minister of South Africa.

Not only does he desire his equality with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, but, in the Pretoria speech during the campaign as well as elsewhere, he declared that the old Empire ceased to exist as a result of the war, and that no longer would there be central supremacy and subordinate Dominions.

In his Pretoria speech, he also declared that South Africa would have power and authority, not only with respect to domestic questions but also over international and foreign relations.

South Africa also, he declared, can be involved in war only by the action of the South African Government and Parliament, and they alone can make peace for South Africa.

"We are out for a sovereign status," he declared. "We are opposed to closer union either in the shape of Imperial Federation with legislative powers or an Imperial Council with executive power."

South Africa, according to Smuts, will be an independent sovereign state in friendly association with the British Empire. It will favor the development of the periodic conference system between the various Governments of the Commonwealth.

In the South African Parliament, Smuts has declared that his country will have her own flag.
Already, under its constitution of 1908, South Africa has the power to confine appeals to South African courts, except in admiralty cases which are usually international in character.

South Africa has also the right to amend its own constitution.

In Memoriam.

THOMAS SLANEY.

The very many friends of Thomas Slaney will regret to hear of his death at Camden, N.L., a few weeks ago. Mr. Slaney had reached the advanced age of eighty years, but was yet hale and hearty when he met with a sad and untimely death through being partly smothered with escaping gas as he slept in his room at the hotel. He was removed to Cooper Hospital, where the treatment of leading specialists failed to combat the attack of the poisoning gas, and without regaining consciousness he died there after four days.

The late Thomas Slaney was a coarse-spun, honest fisherman, well and favourably known from one end of the district to the other as an old landmark and a pillar of Church and State. In public matters in his native district he took a leading part, and was always a four-square Liberal and a fearless and bold preacher of righteousness in politics and principles. In church matters, too, he took an active interest, and his dear old Chapel's Cove had none more loyal son than Tom Slaney when he emigrated two years ago to live abroad with his daughter, Mrs. James Aude. The deceased was thrice married. By his first wife, Miss Constance Fardy, he leaves two daughters—Mrs. Patrick Dwyer, Holyrood, and Mrs. John Day, Notre Dame Bay. By his second wife, Miss Kate Curran, one daughter, Mrs. James Aude, 215 Mt. Vernon Street, Camden, with whom he lived at the time of his death. And by his third wife, Miss Mary Flynn, Colliers, C.B., none. His remains now rest in Mt. Vernon Cemetery beside those of his two daughters, who predeceased him, and may his soul rest in peace.

The following nice obituary notice of our deceased friend is clipped from a Camden journal and I would thank you to publish it with an expression of sympathy to his three daughters who are left to mourn his loss.

Deaths—Thomas Slaney.

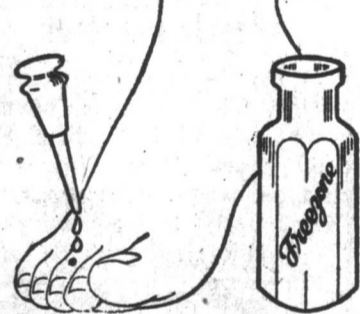

Although comparatively unknown to most of the members of the Sacred Heart congregation, still in his untimely death, and the circumstances surrounding it, Thomas Slaney, who was called by Almighty God to his reward on Wednesday, March 2nd, was a household word throughout the parish. This aged and holy man had already passed the 79th milestone of his life, and filled with years of good works and friendship with the good God, wanted to add to his storehouse of food near the church and be able to attend every exercise both in the morning and in the evening. He engaged a room in a hotel about three blocks from the church. The angel of death had decreed otherwise and when the opening exercises of the mission began this holy man lay cold in death, in the home of his daughter, Mrs. James Aude, of 215 Mt. Vernon Street. This was a most striking example of the uncertainty of death. His funeral took place from the Church of the Sacred Heart on Monday morning, April 7th, when a solemn High Mass was celebrated by Rev. William Pabey, with Rev. Father Jerome, C.P., as deacon, and Rev. J. B. McCloskey, L.L.D., as sub-deacon.

Concert at Rock Harbor.

Editor Evening Telegram.

Dear Sir.—Please allow me space in your most highly esteemed paper to make a comment on so concerning this little place of Rock Hr., as it is seldom anything appears in the columns of your paper from here. We are at present passing through some very dull times, almost as bad as was ever known in the great world's history. But yet the people of Rock Hr. are very energetic and still have the spirit of enthusiasm in them and are looking forward to better times in the future. We cannot expect to have all good times, and prosperous voyages. We must prepare to meet the bad ones some time. The bad voyages are a lesson taught us by invisible teachers, who are endeavoring to make us grasp certain facts, but it seems without success. We are too hard-hearted and will not strive to grasp the ideas taught us.

It reminds me of ancient times relating to the Egyptians who would not let the children of Israel go and serve God. Our hearts will be softened yet. Our eyes will be unveiled and we shall see clearly when it is too late. The people of Rock Hr. are working together with energy and striving to make their little village a success. They have a neat little school here as well as a Church and are at present building a S.U.F. Hall, which, I am sure, will be a splendid building when they get it completed. On Easter Sunday night (March 28th), a concert was held in the schoolroom in aid of the Fishermen's Society. It proved to be a success. Although the night was disagreeable, yet in spite of bad weather a good audience showed up and the schoolroom was just about packed. Also we must thank the residents of Spanish Room for patronizing us so well, and we did our very best to make the performance an enjoyable one, and I feel sure the audience spent an enjoyable night. Doors were opened at 7 o'clock and the programme started at eight, and lasted until 11.30. It consisted of the following: Dialogues, Songs, and Recitation—Opening Chorus (Mtd. Gem of the Ocean); Dialogue, How Sambo made the money; Recitation, Kitty and Ray, by Elizabeth Brown; Song, Poor old Dad, by Ed. Withers; Recitation, He has never done anything since, by S. Dowgen; Dialogue, Scene at a railway station; Recitation, The hand that rocks the cradle; Recitation, The Absent-minded man, by L. Hodder; Song, It's funny what Lager will do, by James Hodder; Dialogue, Pat's Dilemma, or too much of a good thing; Recitation, The story of Jack, by H. B. Stone; Song, Dixie Land, by H. B. Stone; Monologue, Miss Grabber's Boarding House; Song, Name it what you can, by L. Hodder; Dialogue, A busy day with Doctor Jinks; Closing chorus, Good night Ladies; National Anthem.

The acting and reciting was of a classical type. L. Hodder presided at the organ and rendered the music very finely. After the concert the people of Rock Hr. invited the far-off guests to their homes to supply the dinner man; and then they proceeded back to the schoolroom again, where a dance was in progress and kept up until the wee hours of the morning, and I think everyone spent a very enjoyable time.

On the following night a repetition of the concert was given. Unfortunately it proved to be a more disagreeable night than the first. But yet in spite of the bad weather that was prevailing outside a fair audience appeared, the same programme being gone through and likewise a dance. Then the people proceeded to their respective homes after spending a very pleasant time. The sum of $46 was raised, which will go to the aid of the Society of United Fishermen.

Thanking you in anticipation for your valuable space and wishing the people of Rock Hr. every success in future.

Lancashire Witches.

No county in the kingdom was more scandalized by the degrading superstition of witchcraft than that of Lancashire. The term to-day serves but to excite gales, but it is impossible to conceive how different were the sentiments produced by these magical words in the seventeenth century, when the "Solomon of the North" ascended the throne of England, and when, on the proclamation of a general pardon the crime of "witchcraft" was excepted from the common amnesty. A petition from Dr. Des, warden of the Collegiate Church of Manchester, praying to be freed from the revolting imputation of witchcraft, even at the risk of a trial for his life, sufficiently indicates the horror excited by the charge. The first distinct charge of witchcraft in

Mrs. E. Crozier Gains 24 Pounds by Taking Tanlac

Says Her Troubles Have All Disappeared And She Feels Like a New Woman.

"When I began taking Tanlac I only weighed one hundred and four pounds; but now I tip the scales at one hundred and twenty-eight, which is exactly thirteen pounds more than I weighed even before my troubles began," was the statement made recently by Mrs. Elizabeth Crozier, 738 Broadview Ave., Toronto, Ont. "Over a year ago I noticed I was getting in a run down condition. My appetite was very poor, and what little I did eat seemed to do me no good. I was nervous and restless, couldn't sleep any, to speak of, and always felt tired and listless. I fell off over ten pounds in weight, and was so weak and nervous I felt perfectly miserable all the time. "But by the time I finished my first bottle of Tanlac I was eating and sleeping better and my weight was up in weight. When I had finished my fourth bottle, my troubles were all gone, and although three months have passed now, I am still feeling fine. I have a wonderful appetite, everything agrees with me perfectly and I am twenty-four pounds heavier than I was at the time I began taking Tanlac. My nerves are as steady as a clock, and I sleep well every night. Tanlac is just grand."

any way connected with this county is that of the wife of the good Duke Humphrey the Duchess of Gloucester, sister of Roger Bockingbroke, the priest, and Margaret Jordan, the Witch of Eye, who was burnt to death at Smithfield. The duchess, after having been hurled by her ambition and inquisitive crudelity, from the highest elevation to the lowest degradation, became the prisoner of Sir Thomas Stanley, in the Isle of Man, and suffered confinement in the Castle of Liverpool. The practice of witchcraft was indeed so prevalent about this time, that many men of high position, and many learned people became impressed with the belief that they were bewitched. In fact, Ferdinand, Earl of Derby, died under this impression: On May 12, 1612, several persons accused of practising witchcraft were arrested, and in the autumn of the same year, nineteen persons, most of them women, were arraigned at the Assizes at Lancaster. Ten were found guilty, and sentenced to suffer the punishment of death, whilst the remainder were acquitted. At the appointed time the poor condemned wretches died by the hand of the public executioner—victims, no doubt, in part, of their own fraudulent acts; resorted to for the purpose of eking out a miserable subsistence—but, much more, sacrifices offered upon the altars of ignorance and superstition.

(By the CUB-EDITOR.)

JEM GUNCHEW. Synopsis of Previous Installments. Jem Gunczew, whilst looking for Sairy Snubbs who has been captured by Bad Bill Blood, the outlaw, is himself captured, and is rescued by Sairy. The two make their escape in an old Ford car.

Jem looked back and saw a long string of outlaws mounted on animals ranging from pack horses down to donkeys, following hard upon their trail. Their flight was discovered. Desperately he headed the old Ford up the mountain side. On and on up the steep, precipitous cliffs raced the car, gradually out-distancing the pursuing outlaws. Just, however, as Jem thought they were free from pursuit, there was a loud explosion from behind and Jem nearly swallowed his false teeth from the shock. One of the rear tyres had blown out! For a moment Jem gave up all hope of safety. Then, a brilliant idea suddenly rushed through the sawdust in his head. Taking a wad of chewing gum from his mouth, he spread it over the gaping hole.

(Editor.) "From what I know about blow outs Jem must have had rather a large mouth to carry enough gum to fill one."

Author. "If you didn't have such a large mouth you might be inclined to exercise it less. Do dry up."

Falling on his face in the dust, Jem next applied his mouth to the valve of the tube and blew until nearly every bit of breath he possessed had been forced into the tyre. Then, he started the car and again raced up the mountain side. (Marvelous—Editor.) Well, it's a Western story, Author.

CHAPTER V. RESCUED.

The outlaws were now hard on his heels and no matter how much he pressed the car, they steadily gained on him. Just as they were climbing the steepest part of the mountain, and just as Bad Bill's head was within an inch of the hood, the engine stopped! Jem hastily applied the brakes, but to no avail. Down the steep incline shot the Ford, taking horses and men before it. (How did it turn round?—Editor.) Author. "It didn't. It went down backwards."

Clinging to the top of the hood was Bad Bill, whither he had been thrown by the terrible impact between his horse and the car. Suddenly, there was an awful crash. The car had struck a rock on the level ground.

I sit and think whilst minutes fly
And now and then I heave a sigh Tremendous.
I help my thoughts by drinking fizz.

Whilst into vacancy I stare
In silence.
In vain I court the pensive muse
Although I heap on her abuse

A Bigger Bank Account Pipeless Heating Offers You

The price of fuel CANNOT COME DOWN much next winter, but an Enterprise Blazer Pipeless Furnace will put DOLLARS IN THE BANK for you—dollars that in past years have gone to pay the coal bills.

WHAT USERS SAY:
"Last winter the Enterprise Pipeless saved half my coal."
"I heated the entire house on what it took to heat two or three rooms with stoves."
"Saving money at this rate, my Pipeless will pay for itself in no time."
"We've had twice the heat at half the cost." Read the testimonials.
Letters like these are coming to us in every mail. The wonderful new Pipeless system is cutting the cost of heating in HOMES, STORES AND PUBLIC BUILDINGS all over Canada. AND MONEY IS NOT ALL THAT PIPELESS SAVES. There is practically NOTHING TO THE INSTALLATION—no cost, trouble, dirt or mess. A single hole is cut for the ONE BIG REGISTER and the job is done. ONE DAY is all it takes. NO UNSIGHTLY AIR PIPES to crowd the cellar, spoil the beauty of the home and waste the heat—NO WATER PIPES to freeze—no tearing out of floors and walls. If you buy a Pipeless Furnace TODAY you can be through with the whole job TOMORROW, ready for next winter and the winters of the next twenty or thirty years. On the bitterest winter's day every nook and cranny of your home—even the furthest from the furnace—WILL BE BATHED IN 70 DEGREES OF DELIGHTFUL, COZY WARMTH.

ENTERPRISE BLAZER PIPELESS FURNACE

The new discovery in heating makes a money-saving story. It is all told in a booklet we have published and will gladly send you FREE OF COST. Write today. We will also send you a chart that you can use, if you wish, to draw up a rough layout of your house. The chart makes it easy for you to draw a sketch that will enable our engineers to see your home exactly as it is and tell you just where your furnace should be placed. The booklet, the chart and the advice of our heating engineers are all yours for the asking. There is NO CHARGE at all, nor any obligation on your part. IDLE BRITISH SHIPS.
Following on the recent statement of Sir Owen Phillips that 2,000 tons of British shipping is now idle as an effort is being made by the Imperial Overseas traders to increase the employment of British ships in trade between this country and our Dominions and Dependencies, it is stated that whilst the bulk of the trade is already done in British bottoms, a considerable number of British ships are employed, and the movement of the movement believes there is no reason why most of the should not be replaced by British Shipping.

Famous Austrian Crown Jewels in Litigation.

The question as to the rightful ownership of the famous Austrian crown jewels is to be settled by the courts. These treasures are claimed both by the ex-emperor Charles in his Swiss home and by the Government of the Austrian republic.

Both claimants have their strategic advantages in the legal battle that will soon be started by the Vienna government. Charles, who may not be a great monarch, but seems to be a clever enough business man, has nine points in his favor—he is in possession of the jewels. In the days immediately preceding his downfall he gathered them in his valise, along with as much of the other contents of the imperial treasure chamber as he could carry.

On the other hand, the Austrian republic's title is backed by the peace treaty, which regards the crown jewels as the property, not of the house of Hapsburg, but of the Austrian state, counting them as assets against reparation claims.

Austrian historical and legal traditions, it would appear, lend support to the side of the ex-emperor, for throughout Austrian history the treasures in question have been on record as the private property of the imperial house.

This refers even to the imperial crown itself. In Austria everything, including the country, was considered personal property of the monarch. The kingdoms, dukedoms and principalities composing the Austrian empire proper were designated, "hereditary provinces."

The Treasure Chamber.

The character of the Austrian imperial crown as personal property of the sovereign was indicated by the fact that, together with the other regalia, it was kept not in a state building, but in the private treasury of the reigning house officially described as the treasury chamber of the most serene imperial house of Hapsburg-Lorraine.

Situated in the heart of Vienna, this building, which before the war could be inspected by the public like a museum, housed one of the most astounding collections of gems, jewelry and other objects of value in the world. It was, indeed, rivaled only by the treasure vaults of the late Romanoff dynasty.

From the middle of the eighteenth century the various regalia, gems and other heirlooms of the Hapsburg-Lorraine dynasty were kept in this treasure chamber in glass cases. There were several glass-walled wardrobes containing heraldic robes, all richly ornamented with gold and silver lace and embroidery and gems; there were six large closets filled with fine watches and clocks, many of them several centuries old and still in excellent working condition, some richly bejewelled and of considerable historical interest.

There were several closets filled with vases, bowls, dishes, baptismal fonts, holy water containers and the like, all carved of the finest crystal and smoky topaz. There was silver and gold plate and an enormous variety of most valuable curios.

But most important of all was the section called the "private jewellery of the imperial house." This department included the imperial crown, the crown of the empress, the other regalia and a collection of diamonds, rubies, emeralds and other gems that was the most astonishing hoard of its kind in the world, next, or rather equal, to that of the Romanoffs. It is the treasures listed in this section that will form the main subject of the proposed litigation between the republic of Austria and the ex-emperor.

Art Object of Exquisite Beauty.

The imperial crown is an art object of exquisite beauty and enormous value. It was made under the reign of the Roman emperor, Rudolph II, and bears the inscription "Rud. Rom. Imp. Hung. et Boh. Rex. Contruxit, MDCVII." (Fashioned by Rudolphus, Roman emperor, King of Hungary and Bohemia, 1607). It cost the—for that time—tremendous sum of 700,000 imperial dollars.

The crown's head is of solid gold and consists of two parts—a head-band mounted with gems, upon which are mounted eight lily-shaped ornaments of two different sizes, richly jewelled and topped by large pearls. The biobular cap is divided into two triangular sections, each bordered by an enamelled band, which, again, are hemmed by rows of pearls. The hoop, richly set with gems, is surmounted by a small cross bearing an enormous sapphire of extraordinary beauty.

The imperial globe or apple was made in 1607 of gold and ornamented like the crown. The sceptre was, on the first glance, similar to the crown and globe in workmanship and ornamentation, but hailed, however, from another master and dated from the year 1612.

Next to the regalia proper were included in the section of private jewel-
