The Coronation Postponed. Something more than a sensation was caused on Tuesday by the announcement that His Majesty, King Edward, was dangerously ill having undergone a surgical operation, the coronation and celebration appointed for to-day was indefinitely postponed. The bad news came to Chatham in general form about noon and, later, a despatch from Mr. Hedley Parker, of the New York Herald to La. Col. Call, Newcastle, stated that the King had been operated on for appendicitis and was in a very critical condition. Later in the afternoon His Honor Lieutenant Governor Snowball received the following despatch: OTCAWA, JUNE 24TH, 1902. "Owing to the illness of His Majesty the King, the Coronation has been indefinitely postponed, and proclamation will therefore be issued withdrawing and cancelling the one appointing Thursday a Public Holiday."

asked why he was interested in this more than in other and more notable lighthouses, and was informed that he figured on the coronation as a fact which had escaped his notice.

The King and Labor. It was while sitting on the Royal Commission to inquire into the housing of the poor that the Prince asked that Mr. Henry Broadhurst, M.P., should be introduced to him. Later Mr. Broadhurst was invited to spend a week-end at Sandringham, and he returned to the Palace on Tuesday. "I will not pretend that I accepted his offer of hospitality without anything but the greatest delight. I spent three days at Sandringham and I can honestly say that I was never entertained more to my liking, and never felt more at home when paying a visit than I did on this occasion. I arrived at Sandringham on Friday night, and remained until the following Monday evening. On my arrival H.H.H. personally conducted me to my rooms, made a careful inspection to see that all was right, stoked the fire, and then, after satisfying himself as to the arrangements for my comfort, withdrew and left me for the night. In order to meet the difficulty of the night, a special dress-coat, dinner was served to me in my own rooms every night. Breadhurst's "old charm" made the Labor M.P. welcome. He

The religion he believes in is one which concerns itself with deeds as well as words; and that is why he can appreciate General Booth, Dr. Barnum, Miss Agnes Weston, and other philanthropists. He has inherited from his father and mother a keen sense of duty, and no Heir-Apparent ever worked so long and thoroughly in the performance of those often wearisome tasks which fell to his lot. Since his accession, King Edward has proved that in his hands the power wielded so wisely by Queen Victoria will be administered as conscientiously. Every day he advances in the esteem and favor of his subjects all over the British Empire. His broad sympathies bring him in touch with all sorts and conditions of men, and he has become a household name to the millions. His broad sympathies and circumstances of his subjects than many supposedly well informed officials of his Court.

KING EDWARD VII. SUM-TOTAL OF THE MAN.

Incidents of His Life and Traits that Give Lively Impression and Satisfaction to His Character.

A good judge of the King said of him once: "He has in him all sorts of pleasant impulses, and his things. It pleases him to give pleasure. That is a trait which sets him apart from most men."

Those who have seen much of the King in public will testify that his witness is true and presents an altogether correct picture of the King's good nature. He is "pleased to give pleasure," and spares no personal exertion to accomplish this. An instance of this occurs in the writing, in Black and White. The King was suffering from a cold, but nevertheless was anxious not to be absent from the farewell concert given by Mr. Sims Reeves in the Albert Hall. Accordingly, he appeared in the Royal box, to the delight of the vast audience, and went during the interval into the artist's dressing-room to compliment the veteran tenor on his singing. For some days afterwards Mr. Joseph Arch, who had been present on so interesting an occasion, and sat by the side of the King, wrote him a note of appreciation. The King's liking for the Continent has led to a wide friendship with the members of most of the Royal

Marlborough House, London, home of the King for nearly 40 years. Of course, he is connected with nearly every member of the family relationship. Queen Victoria was called "the grandmother of Europe," and her son lost no opportunity of cementing the bonds between Great Britain and her neighbors. He liked France, and was particularly popular in France, from the early days of childhood when he was taken to the Chateau de Eu by Queen and Prince Albert. On one visit in his boyhood, it is said, the little Prince begged the hostess to give him a pair of shoes, and his sister Eugene to keep him and his sister a little while longer. "But," said the Empress, "they will suit you." "O no," said the Prince of Wales, "there are plenty of us left at home."

When the Emperor and Empress came in their hour of dejection, to England the Prince of Wales showed them every possible attention and had a genuine regard for the poor sick Emperor. He liked the Prince Imperial, and when the young Prince perished so tragically in Zululand, the Prince of Wales hastened to console the widowed and bereaved Empress. He was present when the Prince Imperial was buried at Chislehurst in the magnificent mausoleum which is a standing memorial of the love of a wife and mother.

Other notable friendships. As Prince of Wales he was a good friend to the Cornish miners. Settled in England on a charming estate in Buckinghamshire. He was also on terms of friendship with the Duke of Orleans and Prince Henry of Orleans, but the reprehensible attitude taken by the Duke some years ago caused all our Royal Family to show in a marked way their disapproval of his course, which was as unjustifiable as it was inexplicable. We believe that before Queen Victoria died the Duke's most poignant apology to her and received from her—whose wish was to be at peace with all—a kindly acknowledgment.

The King is an excellent linguist, that when he goes abroad he can adapt himself with the greatest ease and tact to the various countries he visits. His French is as good as a Frenchman's, and his German is almost as exact in its mastery of accent and idiom. His gift of languages has much to do with the King's charm as a host. He can talk from one foreign guest to another, and please each with a respectful compliment in the tongue most familiar to him.

An instance may be given of the King's readiness to grasp the humor of a situation. Not very long ago a certain very excellent peer, who is an aggressive anti-Ritualist, was conversing with him at the House of Lords. He expressed a pious hope that the Prince would assert his opposition to "all this Ritualism and Romanism." Later on the Prince was seen by another peer looking for something, and the nobleman asked if he could be of any assistance. The Prince said he had forgotten where he had left his hat, said, laughingly, "I am only looking for my miter."

Sir Mountstuart Grant Duff tells of one of his volutions of reminiscences a story which illustrates how observant the King is: "One day Webb, who is the working head of the Drift House, wrote to Mountstuart Grant Duff, mentioned that the Prince of Wales had one day been expressing to him a very great interest in the Eddy-stone Lighthouse." Captain Webb asked why he was interested in this more than in other and more notable lighthouses, and was informed that he figured on the coronation as a fact which had escaped his notice.

He liked the Prince Imperial, and when the young Prince perished so tragically in Zululand, the Prince of Wales hastened to console the widowed and bereaved Empress.

Using possible had been contrived to give the occasion an informal note. The Prince, who afterwards became the Venerable King of Denmark, was traveling on the Continent with his charming daughter, and as if by chance the young Heir-Apparent to the throne of Great Britain happened to join the little party. The couple drew some eight-seater together, but had really very little opportunity of coming to a definite understanding, even if such a result was desirable just at that time. However, what we may term the pourparlers were established, and from that time forth it was known among a few relatives that the Prince of Wales had been engaged to the Princess, and intended to pursue the matter in due course. He was not twenty years of age, so there was no immediate hurry for settling down in married life.

A few words may be written concerning the Princess who was destined to become Princess of Wales. She was the youngest daughter of Prince Louis, daughter of the Landgrave William of Hesse-Cassel. She was born on December 10th, 1842, at the time of first meeting the Prince of Wales seventeen years old. Her father had not then attained to the throne of Denmark, but was simply Commander-in-Chief of the Danish Cavalry. It is not necessary to credit all the stories told of the simplicity of the life led by him and his bride and to the family, and particularly to the aged King. The Queen of Denmark was fond of literature and art, and imbued her children, of whom there were six, with an interest in such concerns. She was one of her family, and particularly to her, came in the summer the relatives of her family, now stretching far over Europe, certain of receiving sensible suggestions.

These will be of British Preference. There in Canada who have been imagining that Great Britain may be induced to put a preference tariff in favor of the colonies are, no doubt, to be disappointed. Great Britain's trade interests are everywhere, but those with her colonies which are not paramount, although they may appear so to some colonial minds which have failed to grasp the magnitude of British trade and commerce. The other day, when the British House of Commons took up the consideration of the amended finance bill, Sir Charles Dilke and other members demurred from the government a statement in regard to their attitude in connection with the coming conference of colonial premiers, which it was stated might change the whole face of policy of the country. The Chancellor of the Exchequer, in reply, repudiated on the part of himself and colleagues, any intention of entertaining any change of policy in the direction indicated and entirely disproved them. He said it was not the policy of the government to attempt the encouragement of trade with the colonies by instituting a tariff war with other countries.

The Proposed New Pulp Mill. It seems to now depend upon local enterprise whether the pulp mill proposed to be established on the Morrison property, near the Chatham water works station, shall or shall not materialize. Mr. R. A. Murdoch, of Chatham, who has been associated with Mr. Moravitz in the enterprise, has recently announced that he has secured the pulp-making plant, which was awarded the gold medal. It is the most modern description and is far in advance of any now in operation anywhere. Mr. Moravitz says that since his previous visit to Canada, in 1896, great advances have been made in the methods of pulp-making, by which the cost of production has been reduced to a remarkable degree. With the new machinery he had secured and the application of the new processes now used, he can turn out pulp of the highest quality far below the cost of manufacture of any existing mill in Canada. He has four Austrian gentlemen of large capital, who are prepared to provide all necessary means to enlarge the proposed pulp mill as soon as Mr. Moravitz and his company demonstrate to them that they can produce pulp of first quality. Mr. Murdoch has, himself, similar assurances from capitalists of Manchester and Glasgow. Seventy thousand dollars, including the town of Chatham's grant of $15,000, has been secured for the establishment of the works and $80,000 more capital is needed and must be subscribed by Chatham or other local people in order to enable Messrs. Murdoch and Murdoch to bring the undertaking to a successful issue. The question, therefore, is: shall the work on all ample areas of lumber lands be already secured so that with the most modern machinery and processes for the conversion of the raw material into pulp also at hand, it would seem to be a pity if the comparatively small amount of capital necessary should not be forthcoming.

College Federation. King of College, Windsor, N.S., which is the oldest college in the Maritime provinces and practically the theological school of the Church of England for New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, will, it is said, amalgamate with Dalhousie University, Halifax. The change is not a popular one, by any means, with the Alumni of King, which voted on the question of federation and defeated it by one majority. The governors of the college are, however, the body to pronounce on the matter, and they decided favorably to federation by a vote of about two to one. The main reason for their action was, no doubt, because the institution had failed to be self-supporting. It received most generous aid, but its requirements have grown and its revenues failed to keep pace with them, other and larger collegial institutions have proved more attractive. The day of the exclusive chartered college has passed in the Maritime provinces, and perhaps it is well that it should be so.
