The admirable educational system of New England, covering the whole area of society, has given them education, whether they be poor or rich; has furnished them with a great deal of useful information, and has quickened their desire for more. American girls will talk with you about anything, and feel (or, what has the same effect, seem to feel) interested in it. Their tnedency is, perhaps is to talk too much, and talk beyond thair knowledge. With the cleverer (or, as they would say themselves, the smarter,) of them, it seemed to me sometimes to make no perceptible difference whether they knew anything of the subject they talked about or not. Mentioning this feature of American character to a Boston gentleman, he said: "It is true-I was struck in England with the silence of the people when they had nothing to say. One time, travelling in the carriage with a nebleman, I asked him his opinion of the ballot. He replied: "I have not considered the matter yet." Yeu might travel all over America, said my friend, 'and never hear a man say that.' But the American girls know a little of everything, and their general intelligence and vivacity make them delightful companions. I had an idea, before going over, that the New England ladies spent their time over intellectual pursuits, to the neglect of household duties. I did not find it so. Comparing class with class, they are quite as good housekeepers as I have seen anywhere. They had need be, for service at present is in a very wretched conditioo in America : so much so, that middle-class families in the country often dispense with eervants altogether. The young ladies can make beds, as well as demonstrate propositions, and their mental philosophy, whatever it amounts to. never interferes with the perfection of the pies. - A Scottish Traveller.

Bed Rooms.

As one-third of our entire existence is spent in our chambers, in the unconscious happiness of sleep, and as good health is impossible without the habitual breathing of a healthy atmosphere, the importance of inhaling a pure air during sleep is self-evident. No sleep can be sound and healthful unless the person is comfortably warm ; and many a man who has gone to bed in health has awakened with a mortal malady, or one involving long-life suffering, by having been exposed to a draft of air upon some part of the body while asleep, either from an open door, an open window, a broken pane or an unetopped

Three things, then, are indispensable to the healthfulness of a bed-chamber, we must be comfortably warm, must not be exposed to drafts of air, and must be supplied with pure air, not very cold. A great deal has been written about sleeping with windows sky-high, so as to let in all out of doors; none but monomaniaes or born fools write thus; we know that many persons have met their deaths by having been exposed by means of an open window to a sudden change in the weather during the night; and certainly the safe side is the best.

In cold weather there should be fire in an open fireplace all night, and air enough will get in at the crevices of the doors and windows to create a current, driving the bad air up the chimney. In summer a lamp or a candle may be burned standing in the fire-place, unless the door of the half is left open; but as mot persone, at least in cities, do not feel safe to sleep with an open door, the lamp is a good substitute. A window may be hoisted, but there are comparatively so few nights during the year to make it safe to do so, that the fire or open door is preferable. There is no advantage of going to bed or undressing in a cold room; all invalids teachings Such are some of the reflections and purposes cherished, as we look after the fast receding form of the year of our Lord 1868 knowing that his departure is final, and that it is vain for us to cry, "Turn backward in thy flight, O Time!" The recollection of past heedlessness and folly is self-abasing; yet we cherish a grateful remembrance of some of the uncounted ble-sings which the year brought to our lot, and are thus led hopefully to extend the hand of greeting to his younger kinsman, expecting that He too will come to us laden with tokens of "good will"

from our Father in Heaven. The past year has been to our country generally, and to us, and our readers individually, and to us, and our readers individually, one of blessing; so that in the retrospect we gratefully acknowledge His Hand who crowned the year with His goodness. But to many, very many, it has been a year of sadness and disapments, it has been a year of sadness and disapments and year of sadness and disapments about affairs in Spain. What form the Government there will assume remains still a matter of the great trial of strength in the hot contest in the main insportance of strength and of the great trial of strength in the other strength and of the great trial of strength and of the great trial of strength and of the great tr pointment; or perhaps of deep adversity and trial.
