"I didn't like to mention his name first, Matthew," he answered. "Yes; I saw him last night. He supports himself by writing for the papers and things now."
"Yes. Anything else?"
"Well—his wife is"——"Stop!" Joseph stopped very quickly, and looked at his brother.
Matthew's face was dark, but presently it cleared, and he observed: "I feel no interest in that quarter. I asked about Jem. I didn't want to hear about her."
"I thought you might be interested to know"—

"That there's a baby?" said Matthew, with a grin that showed his mouth to great disadvantage. "I'm sure I'm delighted!"

dead."
Matthew Bulbous leaped to his feet. He drew back the chair, and looked intently at his brother. "Dead did you say? When did she die? What did she die of? There's no mistake about this?"

"Died yesterday morning. Found dead in her bed. Heart disease, the doctor said. No mistake at all, Matthew, as you may see for yourself if you like to attend her funer-al to-morrow."

for yourself if you like to attend her funeral to-morrow."

"I attend her funeral? I'd see the woman—ahem; well, that sort all end that way. I'm not a bit surprised," he observed, with a deep drawn sigh of relief.

He could not sit on the chair now. He walked about the room with his hands in his pockets. Mr. Matthew Bulbous was powerfully excited, for the liberation of his son was fraught with momentous possibilities. But as Joseph was sitting there, eyeing him with a curious interest, and waiting to be sent away, Matthew had to come back to-him.

"You may come over to Blackheath to-morrow, if you like," he said, "after the funeral. You are going to the funeral, I suppose?"

CHAPTER II.—JEN'S WIFE.

At home every one knew by the maker's coke that something had happened; but no one dared to question him. Not a word did he spack to his wife as to what had taken place. The dinner to Lord Polonius and his daughter was not again mentioned. Perhaps Matthew's intention was to let his wife at the place. The dinner to Lord Polonius and his daughter was not again mentioned. Perhaps Matthew's intention was to let his wife day and the place of the control of the c observation casually made by Lord Polonius quickly changed the expression of his face.

"Of course," his lordship observed, pulling on his gloves, "there is hardly need to mention it, but of course the understanding is entirely upon the assumption that there is no surviving issue of the—the marriage!"

These were ominous and startlings words, because the Earl meant them, and they suggested a possibility of which Matthew had not thought before. But the situation was critical and he was equal to it.

"No, my lord," he answered with confidence, "there is no child of that marriage."

"Ah, that is satisfactory. It rust everything will go on well now," said the Earl; and then he took a gracious farewell of Mr. Bulbous for the present.

Matthew Bulbous went home in high spirits. His old luck had not deserted him after all. He felt himself to be a man who could not fail. He might have known himself better than to have felt beaten by Jem's marriage. Here was the demonstration that he was still the same successful man!

The church bells were ringing as he walked up the trosty road from the station. As a rule, it was a noise he hated; but to right the bells pealed a tune that gladdened his heart.

"Jem's—wife—is—dead!

Jem's—wife—is—dead dead dead I Jem's—wife—is—dead dead dead DEAD!"

So the bells rang out in the clear frosty. sky. Matthew Bulbous laughed, and wished them a Merry Christmas.

At duner, his wife and daughter were struck with the exuberance of his spirits. After dinner, he made Agnes play several "lively" pieces on the piano—an instrument he only loved less than church bells—and said something about buying her a new oce. For the keys gave out the same carol as the bells, no matter what she played.

Later on, he called his wife into his study, and exultingly smounced the greatnews to her. The result startled him. "Matthew!" she exclaimed, with natural horror, "surely you are not rejoicing over the poor creature's sudden death!" "Surely I am, though. Pray, why shouldn't I?" he demanded defiantly.

"I have no enmity," he growled. "She wasn't a fit subject for enmity. But I say what I feel, and I cannot but feel glad. Have you no thought for your son? Are you sorry for his release?"

But his wife, without further word, left the room, and Matthew Bulbous put down

Have you no thought for your son? Are you sorry for his release?"

But his wife, without further word, left the room, and Matthew Bulbous put down his pipe, pushed away the half-consumed toddy, and stared angrily in the fire. When he was angry, it was a sign he was conscious of having made a mistake. Undoubtedly, he was glad of the woman's death, and believed he had a right to be glad; but perhaps the exhibition of his joy was not exactly proper. After all, Jem's wife was dead, and could do no further harm. As the harm which she had done was being happily remedied, it might have been better to ignore the fact that she had ever existed. And considering her miserable life and miserable end her death was probably an unworthy and indecent subject for exultation.

Matthew Bulbous was a coarsely-bred man, not free from superstition, and at heart a coward. Hence the words of his wife disturbed him, and howsoever he might have despised his son's wife when living, he was not so sure that the dead could be treated with the same impunity. In fact, he uneasily felt that on the whole it was best to leave the dead alone. In the fading embers of the fire, the wasted and rigid face of the poor creature who had already passed before her Judge met his eyes oftener than he cared. With the fire, his energy of mind seemed to sink also, lower and lower as the time passed.

Just as the chimes of midnight startled

Did she know the assurance be had given Lord Polonius, and was she warning him? Did she mean that, to supply her place, he was to get Jem immediately married to glady Jessalinda? There were doubts on this point; it was contrary to all experience of herisex that she should be anxious to be quickly succeeded by another wife, and to place her baby on the bosom of a stepmother. I and it was extremely doubtful whether Lady Jessalinda would consent to dedicate herself to that maternal office.

But he gave his solemn promise to look after the child; and as he spoke the words, there was a knock at the door. Looking, up, he discovered that his visitor was gone. With the instinct of a man of business, his first thought was whether she had heard him make that promise concerning the baby. He would have given a thousand pounds to be certain she had not heard the words. Could she possibly, he asked himself, have heard them, seeing that she was gone when he looked up?

The appearance of the butler at the door, inquiring if his master wanted anything further that night, gave him a considerable start; and he rose to his feet quickly, looking hard at the spot where the visitor had been standing during the late interview.

"No, Perks," he answered, absently, drawing a deen resniration." I believed the place her place her will be shelf and the words and intellectual mind of the representative from Polk County who sits before you to-day. visitor had been standing during the late interview.

"No, Perks," he answered, absently, drawing a deep respiration. "I—I believe I have been asleep!"

Butthe conviction that he had been dreaming did not restore a tranquil mind. All night through his thoughts were hausted with shadowy fears. That face, hidden from physical perception, but still familiar though unaccountable, was no trick of fancy. And he could by no effort rid himself of the fear that the baby might be a dread reality, worse to face than the ill-starred marriage which it sprang from—a reality that would have to be "boycotted" with vigour and thoroughness.

There stood Wilson in night apparel with the back of a chair raised over his head, ready to deliver another blow if necessary; and lying at his feet was a rocking-chair, broken in a dozen places, and mixed with the remainder of the chair whose back he held in his hands. The fragment of furniture slipped from his grasp as his eyes fell on the wreck.

"Mrs. Wilson, do you assert that you saw this rocking-chair running across the room?" he bellowed, turning on his wife.

A curious marriage custom is recorded by Dr. Post as existing in Southern India among some of the more primitive non-Aryan tribes. This consists in wedding a girl to a plant, a tree, an animal, or even to an inanimate object. the notion being that any ill-luck which may follow an actual marriage will be averted by a union of this kind

It gave to each person who attended the funeral a sum of money—$1,000 to each man, and $1,600 to each woman.

It was largely the fashion in the sixteenth, seventeenth and eighteenth centuries with ladies of wealth to have their watches richly incrusted with precious stones, A lady's watch made towards the end of the reign of Queen Elizabeth had a gold case set with two hundred turquoise stones arranged in eight concentric circles with a single one in the middle. On the upper portion of the case was a Tudor rose of crimson and green in translucent enamel, and on the margin crimson and blue leaves and fruit in enamel. On the will of an old miser being opened it was found that he had bequeathed 600,000f., the whole of his hoarded wealth, to the community. This will bring in a yearly revenue of about £1,000,sufficient, it is said, to defany all the xenness of the parish and revenue of about £1,000, sufficient, it is said, to defray all the expenses of the parish, and leave a surplus of about £100 to be expended as the municipality may determing. The only conditions to the bequest are that a stone tower, 90 feet high, with a clock and a huge bell, shall be erected in memory of the testator.

The Largest Babies Ever Born.

The Largest Babies Ever Born.

The largest infant at birth of which there is any authentic record was born in Ohio, January 12, 1879. This remarkable progidy was the son of Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Bates, the father being the "Kentucky Giant" and the mother the "Nova Scotian Giantess." The new-born boy weighed exactly 23½ pounds, was 32 inches in height had a foot six inches in length. The head of the child was 19 inches in circumference, larger than that of the Bates wonder the Tondon Hospital Museum boasted owning the largest child ever born. Their claimant was 24 inches in height and had a head that measured 13½ inches. On October 2, 1881, the wife of a prominent Wasington, D. C., business man gave birth to a child of the following extraordinary proportions: Weight, 22½ pounds; length, 24½ inches; circumference of head, 13½ inches; circumference of head, 13½ inches; circumference of hips, 20½ inches. The leading scientific papers of the time mentioned the fact that it was the largest child ever born with the above exceptions.

Other Canadian dealers speak more hope will be two-rowed barley trade. On Other Canadian dealers speak more hopefully of the two-rowed barley trade. One says: "The two-rowed barley we have handled this season, grown from English seed, has given us the best of satisfaction, and I believe that all that has gone forward to the Old Country would have done likewise had it not been badly mixed."

Another buyer who visited England in connection with his barley business writes: "In November sales were made in Great Britain by sample to arrive of both two.

Britain by sample to arrive of both two-rowed and six-wed. The former was received with much favour by maltsters the latter did not attract much attention. I am not, however, surprised that the demand for export has fallen off, for many sales were filled with shipments quite inferior to the sample; the result was disappointment and resentment on the part of the receivers." He says, further: "It is a mistake to suppose that the English maltster does not require colour; he does, and the bright sample will in every case take the market there, as in the United States. I desire to impress strongly on farmers the necessity of growing from pure seed, and in harvesting and threshing to carefully avoid mixing. I found a very kindly feeling expressed towards Canada, and a marked desire to trade with her. I am convinced that if we can grow as good brack as we have done this year, and if it is kept pure, we will work into a good trade with the English maltsters."

Enough has, I think, been said to show that if the Canadian farmer will exercise the requisite care in the cultivation of this grain, also in threshing and cleaning it for the market, avoiding all mixing; and if the shipper will see that the bulk of the grain he sends is equal to the samples forwarded, there seems no reason to doubt that a satisfactory trade in twe-rowed barley can be established. The maltster in Great Britain is willing to pay a good price for a first-class article.

aboard the "Bully Ruffian" at Bermuda Admiral Watson had made himself extremely popular. He had got about him a staff as jolly as himself, and the jolity of the officers seemed to have communicated itself to the men, so that in the whole squadron and in the forts and in the hotels and cottages, where the guests from all the countries in the world were enjoying Bermuda's wonderful climate, Admiral Watson and his officers and his crew were regarded as the jolliest, most agreeable people on the face of the sea. As for the admiral himself, with his hoarse voice and his 64 years, that seemed to have been all summers, he was, in the language of the women, "the dearest man in the world."

So when the news that old Sir Provo Wallis was dead and that Admiral Watson and the Bellerophon and its jolly crew would have to leave was spread abroad in the harbor and on land there was lamentation everywhere, and when the day came for the Bellerophon to take her departure there we great preparations to give Admiral Watson a rousing farewell.

The yards and rigging of all the eighteen vessels were manned until they seemed to be made of human beings, shoulder to shoulder and one above another. The officers were on deck in full uniform, and over at the fortifications the soldiers were on pade. As the Bellerophon weighed anchor and set out on her long voyage the war vessels begun to salute and the big guns of the fortifications sounded melancholy and echoing expressions of esteem and regret.

The Bellerophon was finally in the midst of the seventeen vessels she had consorted with so long, and was never to see again. All the sailors in her rigging, at a given is signal, cheered as one man, and the sound floated out over the water. Then, at the frising of the flag, the thousands of sailors in the rigging of the seventeen vessels answered this cheer as though the thousand throats were one. Handkerchiefs, caps, hands were were one. Handkerchiefs and smaller hands and gay sunshades. And the officers used the handkerchiefs in quite another

A Rabbi's Explanation of the Meaning of the Three Words.

It is not an unfrequent occurrence that I am asked which of the three appellations given to our people, Hebrew, Israelite, or Jew, be the more correct or acceptable. I have no doubt that one or other among you have had similar questions to answer, nor that you people, the bear of the more some difficulty in shaping of the people of the same of the same oversations, the same did be preferable, or perhaps objectionable. designate the people of the Kingdom of Judah, and the name "Israel," collectively and "Israelite," individually, has to this day remained in common usage.

The third appellation, "Jehudi," or, "Jew," originates in the name given by Jacob's wife, Leah, to her fourth son, "Judah," or "Jehudah," meaning praise or thanks to God. For at his birth the mother exclaimed, "This time I will give thanks unto the Lord!" The name was worthily borne by the noble and sturdy son of Jacob, whose record throughout is without stain or blemish. The tribe of Judah, named after him, was the most numerous, enterprising, and valiant among all the tribes of Israel. During the march through the desert Judah's place was in the van of the host. The traditional standard of the tribe was a lion's whelp, with the words: "Arise, O Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered." Later the name "Jehudi," or "Jew," was applied to a member of the kingdom of Judah (after the separation of the kingdom of Judah (after the separation of the kingdom of Israel), even to those not of the tribe of Judah; proof of which we find in the fact that in the book of Esther Mordecai, though the tribe of Benjamin, ig called "Ish Jehudi." a "Jehudi" or "Jew." After the return from the Babylonian captivity all the members of the new State were called Jehudim, Jews or Judeans, the name being extended to the remnant of the people scattered throughout the nations.

So much as to the etymology and historical significance of the names. "Hebrew," "Israelite," and "Jew." From it it appears that among the three the first, "Hebrew," "Israelite," and "Jew." From it it appears that among the three the first, "Hebrew," in the most ancient and remote. And as in ancient days by it the Jew was distinguished from foreigners, so to-day it would appear that in order io point out anything distinctively Jewish the word Hebrew is more properly applied. Thus we speak of a 'Hebrew anguage, Hebrew literature, Hebrew melodies, &c. Otherwise the appellations Israelite and Jew, or Israelitish and

How Animals Bear Pain.

How Animals Bear Pain.

One of the pathetic things connected with this kaleidoscopic nonsense people call life is the manner in which the animal kingdom endures suffering. Take horses, for instance, in battle, and, after the first shock of a wound, they make no sound. They bear the pain with a mute, wondering endurance, and if at night you hear a wild groan from the battlefield, it comes from their loneliness, their loss of that human companionship which seems absolutely indispensable to the comfort of domesticated animals.

The dog will carry a broken leg for days companionship which seems absolutely indispensable to the comfort of domesticated animals.

The dog will carry a broken leg for days wistfully but uncomplainingly. The cat, stricken with club or stone or caught in some trap from which it gnaws its way to freedom, crawls to some secret place and bears in silence pain which we could not endure. Sheep and other cattle meet the thrust of the butcher's knife without a sound, and even common poultry endurs intense agony without complaint.

The dove, shot unto death, flies to some far-off bough, and as it dies the silence is unbroken save by the patter on the leaves of its own life blood. The wounded deer speeds to some thick brake, and in pittiful submission waits for death. The eagle, struck in midair, fights to the last against the fatal summons. There is no mean or sound of pain, and the defiant look never fades from its eyes until the lids close over them, never to uncover again.

Here is an example of this splendid endurance right before us, which proud man in vain tries to emulate. A mule haltered to a post awaiting treatment, one of its hind feet a suppurating sore, the frog festering and running out. Its whole body droops and its eyes are strained and agonizing. The veterinary surgeon standing by says that the lightest touch of that foot to the ground causes the most intense pain, and yet there is no sound, nothing but that patient endurance that astonishes and appals.

Some time after he noticed a grave-looking personage standing near the door with his spectacles gazing intently on the sign. And there he continued to stand gazing and gazing, until the curiosity of the tanner was greatly excited in turn. He stepped out and addressed the individual.

An Opal Worth a Million Dollars.

The most famous opal of history was that which was worn in a ring by Nonius, the Roman Senator, in the days of the Triumvirate. In size it was scarcely larger than the average hazelnut, yet its beauty was such as to render it the marvel of its time. The "money-changers" and goldsmiths of Rome set its value down at $1,000,000.

Marc Antony made overtures for its purchase, in ending, it is believed, to present it to Cleopatra. Upon the death of Nonius history loses all trace of it, there being no record of its transfer from him to away member of his family.

Deeming Hanged.

Deeming, the wife murderer, who was also known to be the perpetrator of at least some of the Jack-the-Ripper murders, was hanged at Melbourne, Australia, on the 23rd inst. The jail officials, who were responsible for the condemned man's delivery to the executioner, felt a load removed from their minds when the procession to the gallows formed. Until then they did not know but Deeming would manage to cheat the gallows in some way. There were present at the execution 100 spectators, including doctors, jurors, etc. The chaplain of the jail had been devoted in his attention to the prisoner and had sought by every means in his power to awaken him to a realizing sense of the gravity of his position. Deeming, however, paid little, if any, attention to his exhortation, and toward by his fruitless labors, so his place was taken by other ministers. When the sheriff entered the cell for the purpos of reading the death warrant he found Deeming in a dazed condition and he continued in that condition until the drop fell. His answers to the questions put to him were made in a mumbling manner. The march to the gallows was a very short one. Once there he was asked if he had anything to say. His only response was "may the Lord receive my spirit." The black cap was then pulled over his face and the dangling hook was attached to the noos about his neck. He swayed to and from slightly at this time, but made no other sign until a moment before the bolt was drawn; then he exclaimed, his voice being somewhat muffled by the black cap, "Lord, have mercy upon my soul," when the bolt was drawn, and Deeming was hanging six feet below the scaffold. All of Deeming's writings are in possession of the authorities. It is understood he made a written confession of the Windsor murder. The bulk of his writings, however, are but a repetition of his previous conflicting statements. When the clergyman went to Deeming's cell a few minutes before the time for execution Deeming fell on his knees, wept and cried "Lord forgive me for despatching my wife and family without warning." Deeming left two wills. In the first he leaves £300 to Miss Rounceville, and in the second he disinherits and upbraids

The Principles of Canning Food.

The destruction of germs, and the exclusion of air, are the priciples upon which the canning of food is based, writes Maria Partoa in a seasonable article on "The Canning of Fruits and Journal. If these things be properly Mr. John White, of Tuckersmith, was done, no preservative need be added, similar amount from her, as she is a require long exposure to a high temperature before all the germs are destroyed, while others need to be heated only to he boiling point, and then be boiled for a minute or two. Nearly all small fruits are easily preserved by thoroughly heating, and then canning. The larger kinds require a longer time for the heat to penetrate every part. Some vegetables, such as peas, beans, corn, etc., require a long exposure to a high temperature. Meats are still more difficult to keep, and it is a practise to add a chemical to the water in which the cans stand that the temperature may be raised to a degree even higher than that of boiling water.

The essential things in canning fruit are to have the jars and covers hot, and the ruit boiling hot. The jars, also should stand perfectly level; fill them with fruit and juice, passing a silver knife between the can and the fruit that all the spaces may be filled with the juice. Now pour in syrup until it runs over the top of the jar; seal at once. When the jars are cold, set them in a cool, dry, dark place. Fruit is always better flavored when sugar is put with it; the amount is a matter of taste.

To preserve fruit syrups prepare the fruit as for jellies. Strain the juice and put on to boil. To each pint of juice add half a pound of sugar; boil for fifteen minutes, stirring well. Bottle at seal while boiling hot.

particular sanctum, while I made my way to the church whence I could hear the merry chimes of the village bells.

It was a pretty wedding, though the church, full to the very porch, was so hot and stifling that I was glad to get outside and get a breath of fresh air in the church yard before the ceremony was half over.

The bride was not so young as I expected to find her. After the gushing language of my landlady I naturally looked to see a young girl of about eighteen, fresh and beautiful. I saw instead a grave, lady-like person, whose age would certainly not be less than six-and-twenty, of medium height, wearing a creamy silk dress, a long tulle veil, and a wreath of flowers which, if not orange blossoms, suited the colour and texture of her hair admirably. She walked through the double row of eager spectators ranged on each side of the path leading from the outer gate to the church porch with a careless grace, and what I thought was a proud, slightly-contemptuous curl of the lip. She seemed to me, by birth or education, to be rather above the average cut of the good people of Amesford—a fact she was evidently thoroughly aware of.

I gathered that her father was a soldier, retired on a pension, her mother an ex-lady's maid, and the hyide-groom the village school-master and leader of the choir at the parish church.

It was probably such a wedding as the Amesford folk did not often get a chance of seeing, and they had turned out en masse to do honour to it.

Presently the pealing of the organ and the strains of the wedding march floating softly on the still air announced the conclusion of the service, and the people streamed out of the building to take up their places along the walk, and be ready to pelt the bride and bridegroom with flowers and rice as they passed on their way to the carriage standing in the road outside.

I had noticed, while I had been loitering in the churchyard, a disreputable looking fellow standing near the gate. There was the nervous twitching about the mouth, and the bloodshot, watery look about the eyes which betokened days, and probably nights, of drunkenness and dissipation. He wore a battered top hat, a short frock coat very much damaged, and worn almost threadbare down the front and about the arns, a pair of dirty gray trousers, well fringed around the bottoms, and standing well away from the knees, and boots which were almost heelless, and gaped wide at the toes. A dirty collar, tied round with a soiled silk handkerchief, completed his visible attire. And yet, notwithstanding his seedy, dilapidated appearance and rakish, dissipated look, there was that in his maner and in his talk, when presently he spoke, which induced the belief that he had seen better days.

He was looking through the railings with

It was on a lovely morning in June, I remember, two or three years ago, that I arrived, on a bunines journey, at a village in Besez, which for the purposes of this story I will call Amesford.

It was a day of glorious sunshine, and everything looked bright, happy, and gay. The part of the willages seemed to be wearing the beautiful to be the willages seemed to be wearing a day making about the place that my first inquiry of the matrouly hostess of the mine. Why, it's Beasie Blossom had been brought up by the part of all this mirth and frivolity.

"Lord bleas you, sir, don's you know! I thought everybody knew that by this time. Why, it's Beasie Blossom's wedding day, or course," said the good autreed dame. All ashe as perfect picture, she is; and as good a. "I'm sure I hope Mired'ligacom will be happy," I said, reserving the variety of puns which occurred to me as practised for a more appreciative audience. "An I am going to stay at Amesford till to-more row," I added, "perhaps I may have a chance of seeing the bride."

"You will have no time to loss then, sir," said the good lady, as she directed me to the room I was to occupy. "The wedding it to be at eleven punctual, and it only wants a quarter. I was just going to put you should be a seeing the bride."

"You will have no time to loss then, sir," said the good lady, as she directed me to the room I was to occupy. "The wedding the total the said the good lady, as much of the worlds. As I livelithing miss the sight for worlds. As I livelithing had broken him down.

The question remained—what was to be done. It was clear that Bessie had committed an act of bigamy, which, though done innocently and unwittingly, none the less made her amenable to the law. And during the evening news was brought that Mrs. Chandler had been arrested on a warrant, and was in the custody of the inspector of police at the neighboring town, where the Amesford constable had reported the affair as soon as he had disposed of Chandler.

The police-court at the town, where the petty sessions for the division in which Amesford was situated.

The police-court at the town, where the petty sessions for the division in which Amesford was situated were held, was almost as full of Amesford folk the next day as the church had been. There was a charge entered against William Chandler that he had been brawling in Amesford churchyard and that he had no visible means of subsistence. For these offences he was liable to be sent to gaol for three months. But as he would have to give evidence in the bigamy into the dock on a charge of bigamy, and he was duly committed for trial.

I don't know what became of him or his wife. But Bessie was escoyted back to Amesiord in triumph, restored to the arms of the schoolmaster, and, I believe, "lived happy ever after."

HOUSEHOLD.

A Spring Song. When all the world goes sweethearting—
When all the world is young—
In cowslip-time, in blackbird time,
The waking fields among,
Give me thy hand, my dearest love,
And c.me abroad to see;
The land is full of love and hope—
And so is life to me!

The starling's leve, in long, shy calls, Comes from the leafing trees; And thrush and chaffinch swell the tale Adown the moist, warm breeze. See, primrose and anemone

From the soft ground have sprung;
And the green earth is all in bud—

For all the world is young!

Come, let us "smell the dew and rain,"
Now it is everpast;
For every breath is inconse-fraught,
The Spring is here at last!
And gone is Winter's long, dark night,
And fair has dawned love's day.
Sweetheart, we never can grow old—
It must be always May!

A Good Husband.

A most delightful man, who is handsome enough to cause many a maiden's heart to flutter, and who is well enough off to be a suitable cause, in mamma's estimation, for the fluttering was modest enough to affirm that he remained single owing to the fact that he did not feel capable of making a woman happy. This very statement revealed the truth that he would indeed be the man to make one of the best of husbands, and in consequence make a very happy woman of the girl he chose for his wife.

Ourious Portuguese Oustom.

Among the Portuguese at Fayal, where I once spent a winter, writes Colonel Higginson, the young gentlemen were expected to wear black trousers to parties in winter, and white in summer; but to decide on which particular evening summer began was the point of difficulty, so the young men would sometimes go to the house in black, with the white garments under their arms, ready to peep in through the window and take a hasty census of black and white legs. If the latter prevailed they would make their toilet afresh in the bushes outside. It was not a matter of social caste, for they were all of the same caste; it was only a wish not to be singular.

In a little meagre private office down town Mr. Peter Horace sat, with his head resting dejectedly in his hands, and a general air of forlorn despondency in his attitude. He had for forty years loved himself, his money, and his single-blessedness more than anything else on earth; if ever a woman had stirred the religion under his shirt front where his heart is supposed to bear, it was pretty, saucy, gay little Dot Mayburne. And yet he had deliberately engaged himself to marry a plain, prim, elderly maiden who possessed nothing in the world more valuable than a worn-out footstool!
